of Hamburg, including apparently Denmark. Surrender discussions are understood to be fairly well advanced. They do not as yet apparently include Norway. In Holland a standstill exists in effect through tacit understanding despite the fact that there is nothing further on the military discussions with the Germans there. American G-3 seems to think that the war in Europe may be over by the end of the week, although it is still too early to estimate the Czechoslovakian situation. Surrender is progressing through a series of regional capitulations to but a general surrender may also come at any time.

British Political Adviser ⁷¹ asserts that his Government considers that Keitel's name to a surrender instrument would not suffice and that those of Hitler or Himmler would have been required, but he is not sure what the situation would be under the changed circumstances. There is a view here that General Eisenhower is capable of accepting general surrender on his own responsibility. Steel objects to this view maintaining that the governments should be consulted first.

Foreign Office, on its own suggestion, is sending Steel a copy of the surrender terms ⁷² in German and Russian. In March we requested our EAC delegation to let me have these texts but they were not then ready. I am again asking Ambassador Winant for them.

By agreement with the Soviet High Command Russian officers (General Suslaparoff ⁷⁵) are participating and the Allied position is unconditional surrender to the Russians as well as the Anglo-American side. These conversations may go on thru the night and while there is no assurance the Germans will sign, as they apparently hoped to negotiate a surrender to SHAEF without the Russians, it is believed that after telegraphic consultation with Dönitz they will sign probably tomorrow.

Kesselring also has requested permission to send plenipotentiaries and has been informed they will be received on condition that they prepared to surrender unconditionally simultaneously to the Russians and to ourselves. Admiral Leahy telephoned me and said that the situation on the announcement of V-E Day was terribly confused and he wanted me to know the background of the latest information. He stated that we have an agreement with Stalin and Churchill to make the announcement at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning but Churchill today raised the devil because he said he had to make the announcement right away and wanted to make it at noon today.77 Admiral Leahy said the President declined to do it then and said that he had arranged with Stalin and Churchill to announce it at 9 o'clock and he could not violate his agreement without the assent of Stalin. Admiral Leahy said they had been trying to get in touch with Stalin but so far have had nothing from him except the vague thought that he doesn't know the terms and can't make an announcement as yet. Admiral Leahy said he had heard later through BBC that Churchill was going to make the announcement at 3 o'clock. He said that he also had heard that de Gaulle is going to announce it at 2 o'clock. He stated that nobody has any control over de Gaulle and that this action was typical of him. I agreed with Admiral Leahy and remarked that de Gaulle was acting just like a naughty boy. Admiral Leahy said he spoke to the President about 20 minutes ago and thought it was definite for 9 o'clock tomorrow morning. He said that the only way the thing would be stopped would be for Stalin to ask us not to announce it yet. Admiral Leahy also said that he had been in touch with Eisenhower who said he had made no announcement and has kept it as secret as it could be kept. He said he would not make any announcement until

Moscow, May 7, 1945.

I am in receipt of your message of May 7,50 about announcing Germany's surrender. The Supreme Command of the Red Army is not sure that the order of the German High Command on unconditional surrender will be executed by the German armies on the Eastern Front. We fear, therefore, that if the Government of the U. S. S. R. announces today the surrender of Germany we may find ourselves in an awkward position and mislead the Soviet public. It should be borne in mind that the German resistance on the Eastern Front is not slackening but, judging by the intercepted radio messages, a considerable grouping of German troops have explicitly declared their intention to continue the resistance and to disobey Dönitz's surrender order.

For this reason the Command of the Soviet troops would like to wait until the German surrender takes effect and to postpone the Government's announcement of the surrender till May 9, 7 p. m. Moscow time.⁸¹ public only in minor back page items in the daily press, has been accompanied by no editorial comment of any sort and has not been singled out in any way for the attention of the readers.

It is not possible to be sure of the motives dictating this extreme reserve in releasing news of victories which one might have thought would be highly gratifying to both the Soviet Government and public. The most likely explanation, in my opinion, is that the Soviet leaders, while not daring to withhold the news entirely are not happy over the fact that the big local surrenders have been exclusively to our forces and not to theirs; that they do not wish it to be suggested that the forces of the Western nations are less feared and hated that [than?] the Soviet forces among the peoples of central Europe and that they choose not to draw the attention of their public to the full extent of German disintegration until they are able to announce complete surrender and cessation of resistance on all fronts, including their own, and to attribute this primarily to the heroic efforts of the Red Army.³²

Dönitz was summoned and ordered to arrest Keitel and was informed that until such time as SHAEF named a successor Jodl would replace him.

Dönitz stressed three points: (first) that food situation was extremely serious particularly in the north where flour would run out in 2 days. Since regions in Germany were interdependent it would be necessary to get supplies rapidly moved if starvation is to be averted; (second) there is no coal in north Germany whatsoever. It must come from the Ruhr; (third) money in the bank in north Germany would be exhausted in 2 days. The population would therefore be unable to purchase commodities.

The above led Dönitz to stress the necessity for central German authority in order that essential orders should be issued.

My interview (General Rooks) with Keitel was short and to the point. He took his arrest calmly.

I (General Rooks) summoned Jodl and informed him of his new temporary appointment and told him that all instructions would be issued to him in writing and in the name of the Supreme Commander. He stated he would unhesitatingly carry out all orders given to him. From a copy of a secret SHAEF memorandum captured by the Germans from a British armored car he realized our intention not to permit a repetition of 1918 and he said he would not attempt it.

My (General Rooks) first impressions are: (1) for obvious reasons a great desire to retain a central German authority. Possibility of disturbance and chaos if immediate economic steps are not taken is used to reinforce the German argument that they are the people best suited to issue orders; (2) an intention to execute the capitulation terms to the letter since the Germans think it is the best way to avert chaos and so to again settle down.

Stricture 1 Supreme Headquarters Control Party (OKW) headed by Maj. Gen. Lowell W. Rooks, U.S.A., Deputy G-3 at SHAEF, was dispatched to the headquarters of the German High Command at Flensburg May 10-12. Its mission was to impose the will of the Supreme Commander on OKW in the areas of Germany occupied by the Western Allies, i.e., to take initial steps necessary to implement the act of surrender. To carry out his mission, General Rooks was empowered to issue the necessary orders, supervise their transmission through German Command channels, and compile information about the German Command system. A group of Soviet officers joined the Control Party at Flensburg to participate in the control operation.

All knowledge was denied by Dönitz of the whereabouts of Himmler. [Murphy.]

this matter and criticism is not directed solely against the military authorities. The Department is unable to understand why Dönitz and his group were permitted for so many days freely to continue in their pretense of functioning as a government of Germany.

CONCERN OF THE UNITED STATES REGARDING THE REPATRIATION OF GERMAN OFFICIALS, AGENTS, AND OTHER NATIONALS FOL-LOWING THE END OF THE WAR 22

740.00115 EW/5-1745

Memorandum by the Assistant Chief of the Special War Problems Division (Clattenburg)

[Washington,] May 17, 1945.

A conference was held in the office of the Chief of FC 93 (Mr. Lyon being absent elsewhere) between representatives of FC, SWP 94 and the British Embassy to discuss certain questions which the British Embassy had been asked to take up with the State Department respecting the repatriation of obnoxious Germans throughout the world. The British Government apparently feels that all German technicians and German agents abroad should be repatriated at the earliest possible moment in order to be taken care of under the military regime. It was apparent that the British were not aware of General Eisenhower's 95 statement that he was unable at the moment to accept in the theatre any large quantity of Germans from outside Europe.

It was explained to Mr. Maclean, the British Embassy representative, that the Department was giving urgent thought to a program of repatriation for Germans, that it was not clear whether such a program would have to await the formation of the Allied Control Council and that the majority of the dangerous Germans in Latin-American countries had already been listed by its representatives in connection with the Proclaimed List and internment programs. The belief was expressed that the British listing of dangerous Germans in European countries would be an adequate guide for all concerned. So far as concerns Anglo-American cooperation in representations in the other American republics it was pointed out that the Department would have to rely in the Latin-American countries upon a joint Pan-American program rather than upon any Anglo-American approach. Mr. Maclean readily understood this point.

1097. Embassy believes that interrogation of German personnel proposed in Deptel 810, May 16, 1 p. m. and Paris 2676, May 16, 4 p. m. ⁹⁶ cannot be carried out on Spanish territory where no control or compulsory appearance can be exercised in any way comparable to an area within Allied control. At the latter, compromise of future interviews with person[s] under interrogation and with others could be avoided because of segregation, as well as tipoff of topics suggested by Dept or full disclosure of what matters interest us, with loss of satisfactory answers. For instance former German Military Attaché was recently contacted at his request by Military Attaché and flatly stated he had had no part in espionage. We believe that only severe cross questioning and repeated interrogation would break down his withholding of knowledge he must possess.

Embassy is hopeful that Dept's answers to Embtel 970, May 6, noon, or will provide complete instructions re ultimate disposition of former German diplomatic or other official or semi-official personnel as well as other Germans. It is Embassy's view that this personnel, together with known and suspected agents and all other Germans possible, be returned to Germany. If should any considerable portion of these groups remain in Spain continuance of German influence, Nazi ideology and subversive activities may be anticipated. Removal should be either by expulsion via Gibraltar where suitable questioning could be held or through other Allied control permitting complete and repeated interrogation under suitable auspices. If such procedure is approved it is hoped that funds, shipping facilities and authorization for that purpose will be promptly provided.

The First Secretary of the British Embassy (Maclean) to the Assistant Chief of Special War Problems Division (Clattenburg)

Washington, June 7, 1945.

Dear Clattenburg: Our telephone conversation to-day about German officials in Spain.

In a telegram of May 28th, His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid stated that the question of the disposal of German official personnel was now urgent. The control instituted at the outset was inevitably being relaxed and the only satisfactory solution was that they should all be repatriated, together with as many German agents as possible. If the Spanish Government could be told that arrangements were being made for the early repatriation of these Germans, His Majesty's Embassy and the United States Embassy would be in a stronger position to press for them to be put in forced residence meanwhile.

The Foreign Office inform us that they are ready to authorise His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to make representations, in conjunction with his United States colleague, to the Spanish Government with a view to the Spaniards interning German official personnel. Pending SHAEF's agreement to accept them, early repatriation could not, of course, be promised to the Spanish Government.

We are instructed to inquire your views.

he was to be instructed to make Brit approach to Irish Govt in this sense. He had in fact already made tentative informal exploration and was confident of Irish cooperation. He was also instructed to discuss matter with this Legation. I told him that thus far we had received no instructions re this proposal but would make recommendations to you as follows: Namely, that I saw no American reason for objecting to single-handed approach by Britain, especially in view of fact that certain of the known spies in custody were Brit subjects, but there was one condition that I would recommend you not to waive under any circumstances: To wit, that Irish Govt release both enemy agents and interned military personnel and not simply the latter. The reason for this is that our intelligence should have full opportunity to grill the two known German parachutists Gosrz [Görtz], who was at large in Eire 18 months and Marchner, 6 weeks protected by Irish pro-German elements. I told him that I had positive confidential information that Irish Govt was very anxious to get rid of internees who are causing more serious trouble each day and cost not less than $200 a day. It may be assumed that Irish Govt will not willingly let us have the parachutists; consequently, they should be included or we should not accept internees. He said he was in accord with this and would not accept internees without enemy agents also. I asked him why not let matter ripen to point where Irish would ask us to take these people away. He said political considerations in Parliament made action on part of his Govt almost imperative. I questioned this but, of course, could not press dissent.

Proposal in your 102, June 11 and in above-referred-to circular while doubtless applicable to other neutral countries, we fear would only lead to another refusal here. It would be unfortunate for us to take lead in this matter and get no results. Suggest, therefore, you consider joining repatriation of military internees with proposals in your 102 and circular June 9. Otherwise we have little chance of getting anything but another snub and giving Mr. de Valera 11 another chance to make political capital as upholder of right of asylum. The only card we have except economic pressure, which we think would be unwise unless endorsed by all United Nations and carried through to end, is the nuisance value of those disorderly and expensive internees.

Our idea would be to wait for proposals from Irish and then make these conditions ourselves instead of having de Valera make them.

If you should approve urging the joining of all categories into one negotiation to be timed as local conditions might indicate, it is better that it should not stem from me as I did not mention possibility to Maffey.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, June 18, 1945. [Received June 23—5 p. m.]

A-677. ReDepts 4340, May 31, 7 p. m.¹³ We took up the repatriation of German officials with the Foreign Office on June 2 and we have now received the following reply which is dated June 16:

"You wrote to Sargent 14 on the 2nd June, regarding the problem of repatriating German officials from neutral countries, and emphasized the importance which the State Department attach to urgent action. I may say that we fully agree with the view that this category of personnel should be given the first priority for repatriation, and the recommendations to that effect which we have received from His Majesty's representatives in Lisbon and Madrid are in the same sense as those from their United States colleagues to which you refer. We have proposed independently through the Chiefs of Staff channel that Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Force's willingness to accept all those German officials who can be deported, as soon as arrangements can be made for their despatch, should be confirmed. The additional request for SHAEF's assistance in the matter of transport, which you mention that Mr. Murphy has been asked to make will, I hope, secure results. I understand that both these points have now been taken up with SHAEF by the Combined Chiefs of Staff.

"As regards approaches to the host governments, we are in agreement with Mr. Murphy's opinion that it would be inappropriate to coordinate with the Soviet High Command joint notification of recall to the officials whom we wish to repatriate. We do not consider that the actual form of recall is important, since the German officials who would receive it could neglect to obey unless we have obtained cooperation of the host governments in securing its enforcement. As regards such cooperation, experience of the action taken in neutral capitals in recent weeks regarding the disposal of German official property suggests that the right of representatives of the four Powers (or three Powers where the Soviet Government are not represented) to act on behalf of the Allies in Germany is not likely to be challenged. Action may indeed be somewhat simplified as regards the most urgent cases of Spain and Portugal, and in Switzerland as well, by the fact that there are no Soviet representatives in those countries. We are, however, anxious that the Soviet Government, as well as the French Government, should be kept fully informed of the action which is being taken there and elsewhere whether or not they are able to join in it.

"The coordination with the Soviet Government which I suggest that we ought to attempt to achieve, would be as follows: In the first place the Soviet Government should be invited to approve the principle of representations to all host governments to facilitate the repatriation of German officials, secondly, the Soviet Government should agree to cooperate to this end in Stockholm and also in Kabul (where in fact this matter is already being dealt with in local cooperation between the Soviet representative and his United States and British colleagues); thirdly, the Soviet Government should agree to the ultimate destination of the deportees.

¹⁸ Not printed.

¹⁴ Sir Orme Sargent, Deputy Under-Secretary of State in the British Foreign Office.

"Provided that the third point is satisfactorily covered, the other points seem likely to prove less difficult. But you may share my doubts as to whether the Soviet Government would accept Frankfurt as the destination of all repatriated officials, whatever facilities may be offered to the Russians for interrogation of the deportees at that place, and whatever provision is made for the redistribution of the deportees after interrogation. The alternative plan which I would accordingly suggest is that the Soviet Government should be asked to agree that from countries where they have no relations with the host government, the Germans should be sent back to Frankfurt (or other agreed destinations in the British and United States zones), and that from the neutral countries with which they do have relations, the German deportees should go to the Soviet zone. This would mean that the Soviet Government would receive the Germans from Sweden and Afghanistan only. The plan would, however, have the convenience that there would be no dispute about the distribution of deportees from each place as between the zones, that the Soviet authorities would receive the Germans from foreign countries most accessible to them and that no question would be raised by the governments of neutral countries which have no relations with the Soviet Government about handing over Germans, for whom they are responsible, to Soviet hands. It is, I think, relevant to this suggestion to mention the local arrangement in Kabul, of which you may be aware, and under which the local German officials are already being sent for interrogation to the Soviet Union and presumably for eventual repatriation by the Russian route.

"The Foreign Office agree with the State Department's view that preliminary action to secure the repatriation of German officials need not depend on the concurrence of the Soviet Government, particularly as there are no Soviet representatives in the countries where the problem is perhaps most pressing. We have received a telegram from His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington dated 12th June, which indicates that the State Department have already provided for appropriate immediate action. Lord Halifax reports that the United States representatives at Madrid, Lisbon, Tangier, Berne and Stockholm have received authority to request the host government to hold German official personnel under 'house arrest' or if necessary under 'severe restriction'. He adds that this action is dependent on similar authority being received by His Majesty's representatives. We are accordingly giving this authority and in doing so propose to instruct His Majesty's representatives to invite their French colleagues to act similarly and also, in the case of Stockholm, His Majesty's Minister's Soviet colleague. His Majesty's representatives are at the same time being instructed, if their United States colleagues have authority to join them, to warn the host governments that these precautions against the dispersal of German officials are required pending arrangements for repatriation in which the host government's cooperation will be necessary.

"The next step which I would suggest is that our two Governments' representatives in Moscow should inform the Soviet Government of this preliminary action and invite them to instruct their Minister in Stockholm to associate herself with the representations which are being made. This approach might be accompanied, or if necessary followed, by a suggestion to the Soviet Government that they should agree to take part, where they are represented, in subsequent approaches to the host governments requesting final repatriation of German officials according to the plan as regards destinations which I have outlined. Once Soviet agreement in principle has been obtained to such a plan, it would be possible for the Soviet Government and for our two Governments to act independently in giving effect to it. For instance, the Soviet Government might make their own arrangements for repatriation of German officials from Stockholm so long as their representations to the Swedish Government, for the necessary cooperation, were backed by His Majesty's Minister and his United States and French colleagues. Similarly, the United States, French and British representatives in Lisbon, Madrid and Berne could act at appropriate moments in each country in accordance with the stage which arrangements for transport and reception of the proposed deportees had reached."

149. ReLegtel 142, June 13. Brit colleague informs me that pursuant to his instructions he has requested surrender of German military personnel interned here for repatriation, also of German secret service agents now in confinement. Irish Govt has assented to request for military personnel but refused to give up spies alleging their offense is against Irish Govt.

I told Maffey he had assured me he had firm offer of surrender of spies and that I had so reported to you. He said offer was based on assurance proposed by him that status of spies would not be worse in Brit hands than in Eire. That is they might be kept in prison but would not be executed. This proposed assurance his Govt had refused to sanction. I told him he had not made this condition clear to me. He said he was sure he had mentioned the condition to me. I said it was of course possible but I had not understood it. I told him that what I had forecast has now come to pass and I feared he would accept military personnel as compromise and waive possession of agents who would have important information to give our intelligence. He said the matter was now in the hands of his Govt. I said that I should report compromise which waived spies as unsatisfactory that I would recommend to my Govt waiver of unconditional surrender and acceptance of assurances that spies would not be executed as preferable. I further expressed opinion that the reason given by the Irish Govt for refusing request as to spies was disingenuous and that even with assurances of not executing he would not obtain them. Our conversation was frank but entirely friendly.

The action of Irish Govt would seem to bear directly on the instructions in your 102, June 11.14a We feel it would have been best to treat the whole matter in one negotiation but since it is now too late for this would recommend restudy of proposals as regards Eire with consideration of definite course to be taken if met with non-acquiescence which I would predict. It would seem mistake to have to swallow more refusals by de Valera Govt. GRAY 1061. Dept has had indication of several instances of neutral Govts planning or desiring to make exceptions to general expulsion of German officials when order recalling them to Germany is issued by appropriate Allied military authority.

Dept considers it advisable that all former German officials abroad be returned to Germany for interrogation and screening prior to eventual disposition. Dept would certainly not concur in any exceptions whatsoever involving high officials no matter what the circumstances. Regarding minor official personnel Dept believes same procedure generally advisable but might agree to exceptions should any case arise which seems to you to merit consideration. Full details of any such cases should be reported to Dept but no commitments made pending Dept's concurrence. Dept would however reserve right to request expulsion later should circumstances warrant it of any persons who might now be made exceptions to general rule.

Accordance suggestion your telegram Dept informing missions in neutral countries they should coordinate activities with Brit to avoid duplication.

Question of destination in Germany of Germans whose deportation from neutral and co-belligerent countries will be sought by US and Brit Govts begins to assume importance. Note in this connection Madrid's 322 to Paris for you. Discussion of eventual destination of individuals within Germany based on implication of differing treatment in differing zones will immeasurably complicate task of repatriating obnoxious Germans and perhaps entirely defeat objectives. As you point out Dept and Brit can presently sponsor repatriation to Germany of only those Germans who will be accepted by SHAEF and delivered to areas under control of SHAEF. At this moment Dept proposes merely to state in applicable cases that Germans whose repatriation is asked will be delivered into American and Brit zones. Efforts will be made discourage discussion of further disposition of such Germans. In view probability this effort may not in long run avoid such discussions, your views and those of SHAEF urgently solicited particularly regarding means assuring Germans abroad and Governments being asked expel them that treatment in all zones will be uniform.

5372. Following comment offered your A-677 June 18 numbered paragraphs referring to corresponding paragraph of Foreign Office letter to you June 16:

1. As you and FonOff probably aware SHAEF has undertaken accept officials from neutral countries and to provide transportation upon being given adequate data.

2. Now too late to endeavor to arrange for recall of German officials as prelude to expulsion. American missions Paris and Moscow being requested inform Soviet and French Govts of action initiated. Dept remains convinced that maximum compliance would have been obtained by combination of recall and cooperation local Govts.

3. Dept concurs all three points raised this paragraph.

4. Arrangement to transfer German officials from Kabul to Germany through Russia appears to have failed owing to opposition Afghan Government. Similar Swedish reaction not unlikely as it is duty of host Govt to see retiring diplomats return to countries whence received. Furthermore, FonOff plan for disposition of officials might lead to controversy with Soviets regarding non-officials. Soviets might feel that plan would constitute agreement applicable to transportation to Soviet Zone of repatriated German non-officials from United Kingdom, U S and other places where Soviet is represented. Further comment on this subject is invited. If there were not existent parallel problem of repatriation of non-officials and if obstacles had not been encountered at Kabul, Dept would be disposed to view Brit plan as possessing ideal advantages. Only alternative visible to Dept is endeavor obtain Soviet agreement to proposal that in order to obtain quickest possible compliance of host powers latter be given freedom to extent they seek it to designate route of deportees to Germany.

5. Dept informing missions in neutral countries it assumes that they are inviting their French and Soviet colleagues to cooperate in measures looking toward repatriating German officials.

6. See 2 and 3 above. Following being sent to Embassy Moscow: 17

"In view of potential harmfulness of former German officials stationed in neutral countries, U S Govt in cooperation with Brit Govt has undertaken steps designed to obtain expulsion of such individuals and their return to Germany. It has further requested that such persons be made subject of house arrest or severer measures where necessary.

Coordinating your action with your British colleague who will presumably receive corresponding instructions inform FonOff foregoing and invite it concur in principle that neutral host Govts should be urged to cooperate in effecting fully repatriation of German officials found within their borders.

Inform FonOff we hope that Soviet representatives in Stockholm and Kabul will be instructed to cooperate with our missions along above lines. In view of possible difficulties encountered with host government respecting expulsion of individuals who may have ingratiated themselves some concessions may have to be made respecting route followed by such officials and their initial destination in Germany. However, it would seem that repatriated Germans should follow most direct course of travel to Germany unless for some reason the host Govt being asked to expel them, for reasons of its own prescribes some other course in which case, as matter of realism wishes of that host Govt would have to be met to solve present urgent problem of removal of these troublemakers.

Repatriated officials received into the Brit and American zones in Germany will be assembled for convenient interrogation and processing at a center where they will be at disposition of all Allied authorities. Soviet authorities will be at liberty to interrogate them at this center. It is assumed that corresponding facilities will be established for such officials received in Soviet zone."

156. ReLegtel 154, June 29 to Dept. 19 Yesterday Brit colleague informed me that Irish Govt now imposed condition on release for repatriation of 250 German military internees. Condition was that none of these men should be returned to Russian occupied areas. I told colleague that I considered this a most dangerous proposal inasmuch as it was an obvious attempt to enlist us in discrimination against our Russian ally and in accord with de Valera's evident policy of creating differences between us. Even if the Dept had not issued thru Mr. Grew denial of report of tacit understanding with Britain against Russia I should have felt bound to make strong recommendations against assenting to any condition of this nature imposed by Irish Govt. I said that it seemed less of a disadvantage to leave the internees in Eire than to put ourselves in Mr. de Valera's power by assenting to a discrimination against an Ally.

I gathered from Maffey that he had recommended acceptance by his Govt of verbal proposal and written undertaking of Irish Govt that they should keep the 10 spies in confinement and not release them without Brit approval. I said that I felt this to be a serious mistake since they were held under an emergency powers order which in the nature of things would eventually be repealed. As they were not held by process of law Irish courts would necessarily release them on habeas corpus. It was further probable that for political reasons de Valera could not afford to admit an agreement with Brit Govt to hold these people indefinitely. Consequently, it was better to accept a refusal now as regards the spies than to approve conditions which in the nature of things could not be kept.

has been that of repatriating public officials (Deptel 109 June 29 ²¹ and associated messages). Inclusion German agents in program was contemplated to extent that they might be considered officials.

Second program involves repatriation from neutral and cobelligerent countries of obnoxious Germans as part of Safehaven program (Depoirted June 9).²² It is feeling Dept that there can be included in second program those Germans who should have been included in first but who may escape expulsion for reasons of personal influence or for other reasons.

Return of military internees is clearly duty of neutral on cessation hostilities and is not subject of special program.

SHAEF has agreed to receive public officials from neutral countries and undoubtedly will receive military internees. It has so far not agreed to receive obnoxious Germans as defined in Safehaven program, facilities for reception and processing being temporarily lacking.

In face of foregoing Dept unable authorize merging German repatriation programs for Ireland despite extraordinary situation described your 142. Brit desire to take initiative in negotiating in Ireland regarding these Germans. This appears to coincide with your recommendations.

Brit summary of Dept instructions to missions neutral countries (your 154) quite accurate. Dept desires you take any possible steps to support efforts your Brit colleague obtain removal from Eire of Germans whether military internees, public officials or obnoxious category. Emphasize to Irish Government that as Germany is totally defeated, duties of neutral host are terminated, that in view of widespread knowledge of German offenses against civilization and against hospitality of foreign govts (see Irish argument your 149 first paragraph) no concept of sanctuary for Germans can be expected in world opinion. In case Eire cannot or will not meet her duties to community of nations in respect of these outlaws, US Govt is prepared to discuss situation in Control Council Berlin and elsewhere with a view to action and furthermore to marshal full force of public opinion on this subject.

"Careful consideration has been given to questions raised in Dept's 1496, July 2 concerning repatriation of German diplomats from neutral capitals, and we have discussed matter with Brit Emb which has considerably more background material on this subject. It is our view and that of Brit Emb here that it would be much preferable that this matter be arranged exclusively through Control Commission in Berlin and that no approach be made to Soviet Govt in Moscow on this subject. To make such an approach here would only involve a whole series of Soviet authorities which might otherwise not have to be consulted, and would probably lead to long delays and a number of counter questions. We think it likely that in the end such an approach would create more problems than it would solve. Since I understand that Russians favor expulsion of these Germans from countries they are in, particularly Sweden, I do not think that any approach on our part is needed in order to persuade Russians to instruct their representatives along these lines."

166. Your 113, July 7. Irish reply to British representative regarding unconditional surrender of German interned military personnel requested and promised for July 10 has not been received. External Affairs represents de Valera as too absorbed in constitutional question of declaration of Irish Republic to give promised answer but expect it by July 20. Appreciate your 113 which clarifies our understanding as to various categories of Germans to be requested. Also thanks for helpful instructions as to line to take with Eire Govt. After consultation with British colleague it seems wise not to make approach till after reply as to military personnel is received. I would then take up with de Valera the question of our two programs in the light of his reply to military personnel question.

British colleague appears to regard status of the 10 interned German agents to be held in Irish confinement at pleasure of British Govt preferable to their surrender on conditions. Naturally any conditions not approved by our Russian ally would be unacceptable but I have told him that I could not recommend that we subscribe to view that their offense was against Irish State as one [alone?] and not the United Nations also. They came as enemy agents to assist in the German war effort on neutral soil and may fairly be construed as members of Nazi conspiracy against existence of United Nations. As set forth in my 160, July 9, 6 p. m.²³ there is reason to believe that Irish Govt refuses to release them because of possibility of revelations involving Irish nationals now at large. Interrogation of such persons would be pertinent to Safehaven objectives.

Next last paragraph of your 113 answers our request for a considered joint plan of action in the case of more or less general Irish refusal of our demands. Maffey and I agree that it seems that such action would properly apply to Irish refusal whether in whole or part to all requests whether British or American or joint. We feel that one strong general statement would be preferable to more than one.

- 1. Some assurance will be required that former German officials or agents will not be sent to Soviet occupied Germany.

2. Portuguese authorities will assist us to repatriate only those Ger-

3. Germans who refuse repatriation will be accorded status of politirealize that every German irrespective of his place of residence is just as much under the control of the Allied Control Council for Germany as was previously the case with former German Legations and Embassies; the German surrender was unconditional and the Allied nations therefore must have the right to prevent Germans throughout the world from again putting themselves in a position to renew their harmful activities against the Allies and civilization in general; while we would not question the right of political asylum in normal times it seems clear that Germany by her actions throughout the war up to and including her unconditional surrender has pursued a course which leaves no choice except to deny to Germans the right of asylum anywhere in the world if in the opinion of the Allied Control Council their return to Germany is desirable.

It is my further considered opinion that this case will be considerably strengthened when the Allied Control Council takes a position along these lines and announces that the Govt of the US as well as the British, French and Soviet Govts insist on neutrals immediately acceding to requests for repatriation of German officials and other German nationals.²⁶ Unless the Allied Govts through the Allied Control Council for Germany and possibly by public announcement at Potsdam take a strong position on this matter we will be met with constant juridical objections especially here in Portugal and in the absence of a strong stand the situation may pass entirely beyond our control in respect of Safehaven as well as our security measures. his position is of course delicate and his views are off record and should not be quoted. Subject of course to more complete information and subsequent instructions he agreed with the following suggestions which I proposed as points for a draft to be submitted to you.

1. The United Nations have regarded with satisfaction the Irish Prime Minister's declaration that his Govt in the postwar period was prepared to collaborate. Citations from public addresses.

2. Opportunity for cooperation now presents itself. For purpose of preventing the resurgence of Nazi activity it is necessary that German officials be returned to Germany and the custody of the Allied Control Commission.

3. Regardless of the action of other neutrals the peculiar geographical position of Eire and its constitutional status as associated with the British Commonwealth of Nations according to recent announcement makes full and friendly cooperation by the Irish Govt to be assumed without question.

4. Whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the responsibility of the German people for their recent Govt this question cannot arise in the case of officials who served that Govt voluntarily and who after entering neutral territory were free to repudiate such Govt but continued to serve for pay. As to such the question of diplomatic immunity or international sanctuary cannot arise.

5. It is pointed out that the National Socialist Govt, served by the officials and agents in question, by its acts put itself outside the framework of international law and of the moral order. The judgement passed by the Pope in his recent manifesto leaves this in no doubt. No state recognizing the tenets of moral law, and least of all a state officially recognizing the Roman Catholic Religion, can reasonably take a different view of the Third Reich, which attempted the conquest of the world and which by sacrifice of blood the United Nations have overcome for the salvation of mankind. Quotations from the Pope.

6. The American Govt acting in the name of the United Nations, therefore requests from the Irish Govt delivery for return to Germany of all agents and officials representing the former Govt of Germany now in Eire.

Will restudy these suggestions with British colleague, unless you disapprove, and send by courier.

Our draft was pronounced tentatively as basis for discussion and constructive criticism. Further consideration here inclines us to view that paragraph 1 of our 172 should be based on explicit statement of de Valera that as far as it lay with Irish Govt Eire was externally associated with British Commonwealth. The gist of paragraph 1 would therefore read substantially as follows.

The United Nations regard with satisfaction the recent statement of the Irish Prime Minister that insofar as it may lie with the Irish Govt Eire is externally associated with the British Commonwealth of Nations. With the termination of the war in Europe Irish neutrality is no longer in issue and United Nations in which all states of British Commonwealth have membership may confidently expect the cooperative action implied in such association.

The Portuguese Ministry for Foreign Affairs to the American Embassy in Portugal 37

[Translation]

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its best compliments to the Embassy of the United States of America and has the honor to reply to the note of the 23rd of last month relative to German nationals resident in Portugal.

The Portuguese Government has given to the note under reference the most careful attention with the desire of accurately interpreting its scope and attempting to conciliate the motives which animate it and to cooperate with the Government of the United States for the re-establishment of the moral conditions necessary to the peaceful reconstruction of Europe, with certain fundamental principles which have inspired and regulated international relations.

Within these terms, the Portuguese Government is prepared to lend the good offices which are requested for the repatriation of German officials and agents and will certainly indicate an official who will collaborate with the designated entity in order to cause to be delivered to the German citizens under reference the orders or instructions respecting them coming from the present retainers of German sovereignty, or to remove any difficulties of a material or administrative order, concerning the prompt obedience which must be given to the orders received.

The Portuguese Government understands, however, that it may not go to the point of agreeing to give compulsory execution to the instruction emanating from a foreign sovereignty in this matter, except in the case of former commitments, which will be integrally maintained and respected with relation to war criminals and to extradition of other criminals, in agreement with the respective treaties.

The attention of the Portuguese Government has likewise been drawn, in a very special manner, to that part of the American note which emphasizes that the prolonged stay in Portuguese territory of the German individuals included in the list annexed to the same note may be prejudicial, not only to the interests of the United States, Great Britain and France, but also to the security of Portugal, owing to the fear of the formation in Portugal of a nucleus capable of assisting in the re-birth of National Socialist political activity.

Although the collaboration extended in these matters to the Embassy of the United States of America, and to the Allied countries, has always been characterized by the most comprehensive action of the Portuguese Government, as the representatives of the interested countries will certainly not hesitate to recall, the Portuguese Government formally re-affirms its determination not to consent to any political activity whatsoever on the part of German citizens who eventually may continue to reside in Portugal and to take the necessary steps, including the expulsion from the national territory, in respect of those who, it is convinced, will be elements disturbing to the order and tranquility of the country.

In this respect the Portuguese Government has already ordered the necessary steps for the clarification and verification of the activities referred to in the American note, and will be very grateful to the Government of the United States if it will assist, with the elements at its disposal, to achieve the desired objective.

We were informed of this action as reported to you in our 142, June 13, and 149 June 22 but not consulted and our understanding is that it was purely British démarche and not in name of United Nations. Seven of the eight military internees who broke parole 6 weeks ago are still at large indicating lack of interest on part of Eire Government in their apprehension. But we or United Nations can do nothing but request British to press for action. Furthermore, the British arranged an undertaking with Irish Government by which Eire agreed to hold the ten spies in custody until British Government assented to Their release, therefore, rests exclusively with British Government and not with Allied Control Council.

Could not we request British to regard their action as a tentative expedient pending resolution adopted by Allied Council and subject to be taken over by Council. British and French Missions, as well as this Embassy. A copy of the Aide-Mémoire is enclosed.

In brief, in the Aide-Mémoire the three Missions welcomed the decision of the Portuguese Government to lend its good offices for the repatriation and requested the appointment of a Portuguese official to assist in this task; the right was reserved to renew our representations for the repatriation of all the Germans on the list which had been presented to the Portuguese; the official text of the Allied Control Council's resolution recalling German officials and agents was also communicated in the Aide-Mémoire. The Embassy was obliged to paraphrase the resolution of the Allied Control Council by reason of the fact that the Department's telegram ⁴¹ communicating the resolution to this Mission arrived in secret code.

There is enclosed a memorandum of the conversation which took place between Dr. Mathias and the officer of this Embassy who presented the Aide-Mémoire to him.⁴² It will be observed that Dr. Mathias brought up the question of the support of dependents who might be left temporarily in Portugal, in the event that passenger regulations of the Air Transport Command prevented us from repatriating them at the same time as the principals on our list. For the reason that this question may well come up again, an expression of opinion from the Department would be appreciated.

The Embassy has now received a memorandum from the Foreign Office, dated September 24, 1945,43 designating a captain in the Portuguese Police for Vigilance and Defense of State (P.V.D.E.) to represent the Portuguese authorities in the repatriation program and to work out the details with the representative of the three Missions, the British Passport Control Officer in Lisbon. Each German on the list will receive an individual recall order, drawn up in accordance with the form which is enclosed.⁴³ There is also enclosed a copy in translation of the Foreign Office memorandum to which reference has been made. The three Missions are thus prepared to proceed with the repatriation program in Portugal and, as the Department has been informed, air transport has been arranged from Lisbon to Orly, near Paris. Unfortunately, no arrangements have, as yet, been made for forwarding the Germans concerned from Orly to a collection center in Germany. The Counselor of this Embassy,44 on a recent brief business trip to Paris, took the matter up with the Embassy in Paris, and the Allied Missions in Lisbon are still awaiting word from Paris that transport to Germany has been arranged, before sending any of the repatriates to Orly. Any assistance which the Department is able to give in this matter will be greatly appreciated and will facilitate our program.

It will be understood that having made all of the arrangements which it is possible to make locally, it would be embarrassing for the American, British and French Missions here to be obliged to delay the program, after long drawn out negotiations with the Portuguese, because of failure to secure transportation through to Germany.

Respectfully yours,

The American Embassy in Portugal to the Portuguese Ministry for Foreign Affairs

ATDE-MÉMOIRE

The three Allied Missions have received the Ministry of Foreign Affairs' notes of September 14, 1945 (Proc. 32,3123), in reply to their identical notes of August 23 and 24, 1945, requesting the cooperation of the Portuguese Government in repatriating officials and agents of the former German Government who remain in Portugal. The following observations are made by the American Embassy, after consultation with, and on behalf of the British and French Missions:

The three Missions welcome the decision of the Portuguese Government to lend its good offices for the repatriation in question and to indicate an official who will assist them in their task, and would be grateful if the official in question could be designated at the earliest possible date.

While reserving the right to renew their representations for the repatriation of all the Germans listed in the enclosure to their notes of August 23 and 24, the three Allied Missions have communicated to their Governments the contents of the Portuguese Government's note, which is receiving careful consideration.

The following is the official text of a resolution adopted by the Allied Control Council for Germany on September 10, 1945:

[The text which follows here is in substance the same as that quoted in circular telegram of September 17, 1945, page 808.]

The three Missions will be grateful for the good offices of the Portuguese Government in ensuring, in accordance with Paragraph 3 of the Portuguese Government's notes of September 14, the delivery individually to each of the Germans concerned of the instructions which the Allied Missions will issue, in compliance with the decree of the Allied Control Council for Germany. It is suggested that the details relative to the delivery of these instructions should be settled between the representative of the Missions and the Portuguese officials to be designated.

The Secretary of State to the Swiss Minister (Bruggmann)

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Honorable the Minister of Switzerland and has the honor to advert to the Legation's note of August 30, 1945 ⁴⁹ regarding the desire of the Swiss Government to proceed with the repatriation of various interned German military personnel now in Switzerland.

The Department of State is advised by the War Department that the military forces in Germany are now confronted with tremendous burdens in connection with the care and placement of displaced Germans and other displaced persons. In order to enable the military authorities to absorb the German nationals in Switzerland who should be repatriated in a manner least likely to impose further difficulties, it is desirable that the Swiss Government give assurances that it will repatriate at the same time not only the German military personnel in question but also the German officials and agents who are the subject of the recall order issued by the Control Council in Germany of which the Swiss Government has been notified to the Allied missions at Bern. If such assurances are given, it is hoped that the repatriation of this personnel can be commenced in the immediate future.

STOCKHOLM, December 11, 1945. [Received January 18, 1946.]

SIR: With reference to the Department's telegram no. 2184, December 4, 1945,⁴⁹ I have the honor to report the steps taken to implement the program of repatriating German nationals in neutral countries. On August 3, 1945 Note no. 770, a copy of which was transmitted with Legation's despatch 5990, dated August 7, 1945,⁵⁰ was delivered to the Swedish Foreign Office, jointly with identical notes presented by the British, Soviet and French Legations. With Note no. 770 was appended a list of 435 persons the repatriation of whom was requested by the four Allies. On October 17, 1945 Notes nos. 833 and 834 were presented, copies of which are enclosed as enclosures nos. 1 and 2 respectively,⁵² making known the grounds on which the repatriation was requested and presenting particulars with respect to additional persons, the repatriation of whom was desired.

On October 19, 1945 an informal letter from this Legation, to Counselor Engzell of the Swedish Foreign Office, was presented (enclosure no. 3). With this letter were included further particulars about a number of persons included in the first list attached to Note 770, indicating why such persons were considered "obnoxious" under the terms of the A.C.C. Resolution. A copy of this document is attached as enclosure no. 4. Also attached to this letter was a list of former German nationals regarded as enemies of the Allies who were granted Swedish citizenship during the war, copy of which document is enclosed herewith as enclosure no. 5. The repatriations which have taken place up to this point are summarized in the letter to Counselor Engzell (enclosure no. 4). To the knowledge of the Legation no further repatriations have occurred.

On November 30, 1945 another informal conversation was held between Officers of this Legation and Counselor Engzell. At this conference the Legation was presented with the document, copy of which (in translation) is attached as enclosure no. 6. The document covers less than one fourth of the total names submitted for repatriation, if the individual[s] were German nationals and resident in Sweden. The remaining names are still under investigation by the Aliens' Commission. Engzell stated that the Swedish security police in various parts of the country had been ordered to submit information about German nationals within their district. He added that the Government was not desirous of repatriating some of the individuals, either for humanitarian reasons or because they had been of assistance to Sweden during the war (chiefly as industrial technicians and business managers). As a sequel to these conversations the attached letter was addressed to Counselor Engzell, (enclosure no. 7).

The Swedish Government has refused to furnish a list of German nationals now residing in Sweden. They will, however, furnish information as to residence and citizenship of specific names submitted. It is therefore planned to submit a further list of persons with a request for information as to citizenship and residence, prior to working up detailed dossiers on additional persons. The usefulness of this work, however, is open to doubt, since Swedish police records contain much more complete information on the obnoxious Germans than do the files of the belligerent Legations.

Due to this absence of official information about residence and citizenship, it has become clear that the lists previously submitted included names of persons who no longer were Germans or who no longer were in Sweden. In pressing the Swedes to take action it is planned in the future to concentrate on the "worst offenders" and to interpret narrowly the A.C.C. Resolution calling for repatriation of "obnoxious" Germans.

The question may be raised whether Swedish reluctance to repatriate is based on lack of facts or whether there are not other considerations, particularly, that Government's desire to protect its "right of asylum". The Swedish authorities have indicated that they are, in principle, in agreement with our repatriation objectives. However, in actual fact, the repatriation program is delayed by not only the "right of asylum" but also by factors which may be enumerated as follows:

1. With respect to official Germans there have been some delays by reasons of health, presence of minor children, and other humanitarian considerations.

2. There have been some cases in which the "official" character of the persons involved has not been clearly established to Swedish satisfaction. Examples include minor Consular employees and employees paid by the German Legation but using non-official covers. The Legation is attempting to furnish information exposing the facts concerning the most active of these.

3. Regarding non-official Germans, there is an obvious difference of opinion between the Allies and the Swedes as to the character of occupation or activity which renders a person "obnoxious". The Swedes are reluctant to admit the obnoxious character of persons prominently identified with important and responsible economic activities in the German interests, particularly where such activities have been to the joint benefit of the Germans and Swedes. In those cases where it will be impossible to show either unlawful acts, according to the Swedish law, or public activity on behalf of Nazi organizations, it may be expected that considerable resistance will be met. It may also be expected that humanitarian considerations, such as size of family, health, number and age of dependents, and the length of stay in Sweden, will carry great weight with the Swedes.

The basic reason for the Allied desire to repatriate "obnoxious" Germans is to prevent them from becoming a source of renewed German aggressive power, from developing and advancing their technical and scientific ability, their commercial and business contacts for the purpose of returning at some future date to Germany to put their knowledge and skill at the service of a then unoccupied and inadequately controlled Germany which might desire by force to erase its latest defeat. Alternatively, these "obnoxious" Germans may elect, or be ordered by the future German Government, to remain in Sweden and other neutral countries, there to assist in the rebirth of German military power. In Sweden there are a few German nationals whose repatriation for the above reasons is of importance to the Allies. These persons are mainly business executives, technical experts and scientific research men. Their continued presence here is dangerous to Allied policy. It is also a constant reminder to the Swedes that Germany may soon again have great economic and technical power. This thought may affect Swedish foreign policy.

Their presence also suggests that the Allies apparently are unable or reluctant to enforce their own decisions regarding the treatment of Germans. If acknowledged and notorious Nazis are allowed to remain in Sweden, this cannot fail to be interpreted as a sign of weakness and of a lack of a serious policy on the part of the Allies. Newspaper comment, expressing surprise that notorious Nazis are still in Sweden, has been published. The Allies' efforts to secure their repatriation is barely known to newspaper vendors [editors?].

It is also of importance from the standpoint of equity as well as from the standpoint of satisfying certain segments of public opinion in Sweden that Germans everywhere be given equal treatment. Many Swedes feel that there is no reason why active Nazis, because they happen to have been resident in Sweden on May 8, 1945, should continue to enjoy the comforts of life in Sweden. Such pro-Allied Swedes now think that the Allies are slow to act; they may come to think that the Allies (particularly the United States and Great Britain) simply do not care.

The potentialities for a pro-German and an anti-Allied propaganda activity are substantial. This has already begun to make itself felt in the compassionate campaign of "Pity the poor Germans". The longer the time elapses from the end of the war, and the more the concentration camp publicity recedes in the background, the more possible it will be to intensify a propaganda campaign which in part may be honestly humanitarian, but in fact may become pro-Nazi. The retention of a large number of Nazi German nationals in the country will considerably enhance the effectiveness of such propaganda and will ensure its being given an anti-Allied slant.

The Dagens Nyheter, Sweden's largest newspaper, with a pro-Allied reputation, published the following advertisement December 14: "Business connections resumed with Germany, (British Zone). Reply to Rau-Roesecke." Roesecke is a German national (Proclaimed Listed), Stockholm head of the Deutsche Arbeits Front. His repatriation has been vainly requested twice by the four major Allied Legations.

A considerable part of the foreign news appearing in the Swedish press is still supplied by the Skandinaviska Telegraf Bureau (Proclaimed Listed). The organization was owned during the war by the Deutsche Nachrichten Bureau and functioned as part of the Goebbels propaganda machine in Sweden. Its news now is strictly objective but it is said to be employing news sources who are German nationals. The titular owner is a Swede; he was given DNB's shares (100 per cent) prior to the German collapse. The Swedish position to date has been that the firm now is Swedish and hence not a German asset (SAFEHAVEN) and that any Germans employed there are not obnoxious.

The above facts and arguments illustrate the importance of ensuring the quick repatriations of the worst offenders among the "obnoxious" Germans. The Legation, however, does not believe that these non-official Germans will be repatriated unless some form of sanction is employed. If the repatriation of these Germans, none of whom is, of course, of the international war criminal category, remains a basic part of the Allies' post-war program, and provided that the achievement of said policy does not conflict with other more important policies or affect the attainment of other objectives deemed by the Department to be more vital to the national interests, the following is suggested:

1. The issuance by the Allied Control Commission of a public statement requesting, by name, the repatriation of certain German nationals. It would be indicated that the nationals referred to were in Sweden and that they fell into the category of the worst political and commercial enemies who had actively aided the German war effort. The list, which probably would not exceed 100 names for Sweden, would be agreed on by the four major Allied Legations.

2. The policy of listing all firms retaining in their employ "obnoxious" Germans, or alternatively, the refusal to delete such firms which are listed already.

The French Minister informally predicts that the suggestion outlined above would meet with his Government's approval. A member of the British Legation states that on or about October 2, 1945 he informed London that no more repatriations in substantial numbers could be expected unless "strong measures were employed". He asked for fresh instructions. The officer adds, however, that none has been forthcoming and he believes that his Government would be reluctant to do more than what has been done.

In view of the early abolition of the Proclaimed-Statutory List, it is recommended that such action, which is the minimum which gives reasonable hope of effectuating the A.C.C. Resolution, should be taken promptly if it is to be taken at all. Swedish officials appear to believe that by delaying action they can dissipate the Allies' determination to accomplish their peace aims and that the desire for a return to "normalcy", and impatience with war-time controls, will increase throughout the world with the passage of time.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/12-2045: Telegram

The Chargé in Spain (Butterworth) to the Secretary of State

Madrid, December 20, 1945—11 p.m. [Received December 20—6:52 p.m.]

2573. Embassy received today note dated December 11 from Spanish Foreign Office which because of its implications is herewith transmitted in translation in full.

"The Spanish Government believes that the scope of that communication cannot be other than an invitation to exercise the right of expulsion pertaining to it as a sovereign nation, with regard to persons might be considered dangerous for the peace of the nation and its good relations with the Allied countries. Under such an understanding, the Spanish Government is pleased to state that, for the sake of these good relations and the concord and perfect understanding which it desires should exist with the United States, it is willing, in principle, to take into consideration such indications and to put them into practice with the best good will, seeking the most adequate formula for that purpose.

"Accordingly after adopting that line of conduct the Spanish Government has considered that it was its concern to notify the German officials and nationals that the Control Committee, acting as the Government of Germany, orders them to return to their country and, to this effect, it has hastened to transmit such notification to them. As to the results of this action, it can at once inform the Embassy that a part of the persons concerned are already willing to comply with the summons, both among those who formed part of the official representation of the German Government as well as among those who held a secondary position in the tasks entrusted to them. In view of this, the Spanish Government is disposed to authorize the travel of those to be repatriated.

"As soon as the note under reference was received the antecedents of each of the persons included in the corresponding lists were examined. The result of such examination has been to verify that in fact there are groups of persons whose presence in Spain is not justified and against whom it is right that expulsion orders be issued. The examination reveals, on the other hand, that there are some persons who have resided in Spain for many years and can be considered as incorporated in Spanish life. With regard to such cases, requiring a greater attention and a more careful study, the Spanish Government will request a specific statement of the accusations which there may be against them. Thus without prejudice to additions resulting from a study of each one of the cases, the Spanish Government considers that the repatriation can be carried out as from this date of the persons included on the attached list who as indicated are, in part, those on whom the order of expulsion from national territory falls and in part other persons who, in compliance with the request of the Allied Control Council, have decided to place themselves at its orders and return to their country. Accordingly, accepting the indication contained in the note which is now being answered that the repatriation and the transportation be organized by the Allied authorities, the Spanish Government deems it opportune that the Embassy take the necessary steps to carry out the travel of the persons included in that list.

"The Spanish Government, having accepted the legal capacity of the Allied Control Council to act as the Government of Germany and having acceded in that concept to the invitation which was made, in the name of the latter by the Embassy of the United States, it concerns the Allied powers acting in representation of the aforesaid Control Council, to meet not only the repatriation expenses but also the expenses connected with the internment of the German subjects who find themselves in such situation as a result of the requests of the Embassy and other Embassies of the Allied countries and particularly of those who have been concentrated at Sob, Caldas de Malavella and Molinar de Carranza especially in view of fact that the charity funds which for this purpose were in possession of the extinct diplomatic representation of Germany have been delivered to those Embassies. With that there will be met the urgent need for settling the debts contracted for this reason from the time that aforesaid German diplomatic representation suspended payments thus creating a complicated situation threatening to become more acute if there is not carried out the total and immediate repatriation of those internees aspiring to be repatriated, which internees would like on the other hand to engage in public works which would permit them to support themselves collectively, a matter in which the Spanish authorities see no difficulty."

The British proposal for the allocation as the French zone of the districts of Reinickendorf and Wedding at present forming part of the British sector and including the Hermann Goering barracks situated within the Wedding area was approved. 59

The British and American Deputy Commanders and Political Advisers met in Berlin with the Soviet Commander in Chief on June 29, July 7, and July 10. The date of July 30 for the first session of the Control Council was selected at the date of July 30 for the first session of the Control Council was selected at the last meeting. For documentation on the meeting of June 29, see: Notes of a Conference between Marshal Zhukov, General Clay, and General Weeks, Berlin, June 29, p. 353, and telegram 87, from the U.S. Political Adviser for Germany, June 30, Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 1, p. 135; the meeting of July 7: telegram 130, from the U.S. Political Adviser for Germany, July 7, ibid., pp. 630-633, and pp. 755-756; the meeting of July 10: telegram 157 from the U.S. Political Adviser for Germany, July 12, ibid., pp. 638-639. For an account of all three meetings, see Lucius D. Clay, Decision in Germany (Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday & Co., 1950), pp. 20-33.

The Commanders in Chief of the occupying forces in Germany were: General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower for the U.S., Field Marshal Sir Bernard L. Montgomery for Great Britain, Lt. Gen. Marie-Pierre Koenig for France, and Marshal Georgy Konstantinovich Zhukov for the U.S.S.R.

For a more complete account of the discussion in the Control Council on this subject, see extract from the minutes of the Control Council Meeting, July 30, p. 366. For documentation on this subject, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 1, pp. 598-604, and ibid., vol. 11, pp. 1001-1006. The Council also approved the British proposal regarding the following transfers of small parcels of territory along the Anglo-Russian zone limits: (1) The transfer to the Russian zone of that part of Regierungsbezirk Lüneburg lying in the Province of Hanover lying east of the river Elbe; (2) the transfer to the Russian zone of that part of Landkreis Blankenburg in the Province of Hanover lying east of the river Wormebode; (3) the transfer to the British zone of that part of Landkreis Hohenstein in the Province of Brandenburg in the immediate area of Bad Sachsa as far south as and including the road Neuhof-Tetterbom.

The British representative also submitted a brief memorandum suggesting that each of the control powers have adequate air facilities and proposing that this question should be examined immediately by the Coordinating Committee. As the Coordinating Committee has not yet been organized, Marshal Zhukov urged that the British submit a paper making specific recommendations at the next meeting. This was agreed. At the present time the American sector includes the Tempelhof Airfield but only part of the Gatow Airfield lies in the British sector. The British suggested that all of Gatow be allocated to the British sector and the Staaken Airfield be allocated to the French.

Pending the organization of the Coordinating Committee the four deputies of the members of the Council will act informally as a committee.

It was also decided that each chairman will provide the official minutes (protocol) of each Council meeting a copy of which is to be provided on the following each meeting to the other members of the Council and authenticated by each member or his deputy.

The French representative requested authorization for the entry of material and personnel of his forces into the French sector. This was approved and the deputies were instructed to facilitate the French entry into their sector. General Eisenhower promised full cooperation as did Marshals Zhukov and Montgomery.

Marshal Zhukov referred to the informal meetings held in Berlin on July 7 and July 10 at which time the questions relating to the supply of coal and food for Berlin came under discussion. He stated that up to July 27 a total of 21,600 tons of coal should have been delivered from the Ruhr but that up to that date only 6,100 tons had been received. With respect to flour 15,000 tons should have been received but only 8,000 tons arrived by the date mentioned. He stated that the receipt of other items was in the same proportion. On Zhukov's suggestion the deputies were instructed to meet and study the data on these subjects and to report fully on measures to be taken to correct the situation at the next meeting on August 10.

In the foregoing connection Marshal Montgomery said that according to the information available to him full quantities had been entrained but difficulties had been experienced with the traffic at the Zonal boundary. He suggested that the Berlin Kommandatura 60 should report on this matter. Zhukov, however, insisted that it be handled by the four deputies. General Eisenhower promised a careful investigation of this question.

The British announced also the replacement of Lieutenant General Weeks by Lt. General Robertson as deputy to Marshal Montgomery. The others are: For the US General Clay, for the USSR General Sokolovsky, and for the French General Koeltz.⁶¹

General Eisenhower also extended what he termed a personal invitation to the forces of three Commanders in Chief to visit the American [zone]. He stated that it was possible that in the American zone British, French, and Russian officers might have acquaintances and that if any would like to come to the American zone he would be welcome. He suggested that such officers should make application to their own Commanders in Chief and then send the application to General Clay. The number of visitors, however, would of necessity be kept within reasonable limits in order that they might not prove an excessive burden on the present limited facilities. In making the invitation General Eisenhower qualified it by saving that it was a personal invitation on his part which might be subject to review by his Government but that his purpose was to promote friendship. The Russian and French representatives assumed that there was an implication of reciprocal treatment and suggested that the matter be studied by the deputies. General Eisenhower emphasized, however, that this was not his idea but that he was merely extending a personal invitation as described.

CONL/P(45) 7

[Berlin,] 31 July 1945.

ACTIVATION OF THE CONTROL MACHINERY 63

- 1. The Deputies to the four Commanders-in-Chief in a meeting held at 10 A. M. on 31 July 1945 considered the U.S. proposals on activation of the Control Machinery-CONL/P(45)1.64 As a result of their consideration the four Deputies agreed to the contents of the above paper after making certain amendments. The amended paper is attached hereto.
- 2. In addition the Deputies agreed to the following understanding with respect to the operation of the Control Machinery in Germany:

(a) There is established an Allied Control Council composed of the four Allied Commanders-in-Chief. They meet at regular intervals to decide major problems. They will refer the majority of the problems under consideration to their Coordinating Committee.

(b) Each of the four members of the Control Council will designate representatives who will have offices in one central building. These representatives will serve as the staff of the Coordinating Committee and will constitute sub-committees to study the detailed problem presented to the Coordinating Committee.

(c) In addition each representative on the Coordinating Committee will have his own staff which will not have offices in the central building. This staff will concern itself with accumulating necessary data and preparing studies for its nationals located in the central building. This staff will also supervise the implementation of agreed policies.

- (d) The Coordinating Committee will decide to what agency or to what sub-committee special subjects such as, for example, coal, should be referred. It will be a function of the Secretariat to inform the agency or sub-committee involved, and to explain the nature of the report desired by the Coordinating Committee, the manner in which the report should be prepared, the time and place where it should be submitted to the Coordinating Committee and any other information of a similar nature.
- (e) If it is later decided that German agencies are necessary in working on a detailed problem such for example, as coal, they would be required to report to the coal sub-committee.

(f) The above procedure will be conducted in the manner approved by the Control Council.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/8-1045: Telegram

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, August 10, 1945—7 p. m. [Received August 11—3:05 p. m.]

The Allied Control Council held its second formal meeting today presided by Marshal Zhukov in the absence of General Eisenhower who was detained by bad weather at Frankfurt. This is the first meeting which was held in the new central building formerly the Kammergericht, which as the Dept knows is situated in the US sector close to the center of Berlin.

The meeting approved the American proposals regarding the activation of the Control Council and referred them to the Deputies for practical application.

There was further discussion of the coal and fuel supply for Berlin on the basis of the investigation made by the Kommandatura and by the Control Council. British delegation presented a report which pointed out that there are two aspects to this question: (1) assurance that food and fuel are available (and the report gives reasonable assurance that this will be the case); and (2) transportation to Berlin from the British zone is not moving satisfactorily. Two days are frequently necessary for a train to pass from the British zone to Berlin which is in part due to language difficulties and faulty organization resulting in serious congestion. British suggested that the transportation directorate should assume charge and that Marshal Zhukov issue orders giving priority to food and fuel trains. Zhukov promised that such orders would be issued and suggested that the British report be referred to the Coordinating Committee for further study and Zhukov demanded assurance that food and fuel would be loaded on time stating that he believes that some items were never loaded at all. General Robertson supplied the assurance.

There was a lengthy discussion regarding airfield requirements in greater Berlin. Zhukov inquired whether the British were prepared to take a final decision and receiving an affirmative answer Zhukov proposed that the Gatow airfield be turned over to the British to be shared by the French. The British accepted the allocation of Gatow but stated the opinion that sharing one airfield by two Allies speaking different languages would prove unsatisfactory. British agreed to afford temporary landing facilities to the French at Gatow. The Soviet delegation presented a paper suggesting certain minor alterations of the western boundary of the greater Berlin area which would place Gatow in the British sector and all of the Staaken airport in the Soviet sector. Zhukov also stated his personal opinion that the Americans should be allowed to use the Tempelhof airport alone in view of the heavier American traffic. It was finally agreed to refer the entire problem to the Coordinating Committee for a report at the next meeting, and General Clay emphasized that while we will wish to have the use of Tempelhof exclusively for American traffic our offer of temporary accommodation to the French stands.

Consideration was also given to the French proposal to prohibit wearing of military uniforms by members of the former German armed forces which was also referred to the Coordinating Committee for report at the next meeting.

Consideration was given to a paper outlining the responsibilities of the Control Council under the Potsdam decisions. The Soviet, British, and US delegations stated their concurrence but General Koenig for the French objected that he had not vet received any instructions from his Government which he understood had only yesterday replied to the communication received from the Ambassadors regarding the Potsdam decisions.71 The French stated that they were willing to exchange views with the governments but that General Koenig had no authority to discuss the Potsdam decision at the present time. The American suggestion assigning to the appropriate directorates "the task of making studies and recommendations with respect to the establishment of the following German administrative departments to be headed by State Secretaries: Finance, Transportation, Communications, Foreign Trade, and Industry" (paragraph 9(4)72 of the political principles) was amended, at French suggestion, to exclude the wording "to be headed by State Secretaries." General Koenig said that he was obliged to reserve his opinion on these principles because his Government had not been a signatory to the Potsdam agreement.

At the request of Zhukov the US proposals on vesting and marshaling of external German property any that concerning Allied and neutral property, Germany will be held over to the next meeting.

General Clay and I suggested that there appeared to be no objection now to publication of completer details regarding the activation

Berlin, August 20, 1945—9 p. m. [Received August 20—6:55 p. m.]

329. The Control Council held its third meeting in Berlin today. United States proposals relating to the vesting and marshalling of German external assets and to the removal of Allied and neutral property in Germany were both referred to the Coordinating Committee for further study. On objection from Field Marshal Montgomery no decision was reached on the proposal prohibiting the wearing of uniforms by disbanded personnel of the former German Army. Under this proposal from October 1, 1945, or 30 days after discharge, former members of the German Army and other civilians living on German territory would be forbidden to wear military uniform in its present color and all badges of rank whatever. Montgomery stated that in the British zone this order would affect approximately two million men many of whom would have no other civilian clothing. It would be impossible to dye that number during the period indicated and he said that he would be agreeable only to an order requiring this action to be taken "as soon as possible" in the discretion of the commanding general of each zone. Marshal Zhukov felt that Montgomery overestimates the difficulties stating that this action has to a large extent already been undertaken in the Soviet zone of occupation. Montgomery undertook to give a forecast date of when in his opinion such an order could be made effective. The question was put over until the next meeting of the Control Council.

Marshal Montgomery invited the attention of the Control Council to the congestion and housing difficulties existing in a number of German cities in the British zone especially in the Ruhr area. He said that he was working out a scheme for the shifting of some of this population preparatory for the winter months. In the greater Berlin area Montgomery said that he was reducing the size of the British occupational forces from 10,000–12,000 men to 6,000–7,000 men for the purpose of making housing available to the German civilian population. In his opinion the Council may have to face up to the danger of outbreaks of diseases and epidemics due to appalling housing conditions. The civilian population, he thought, must be better cared for than is the case at present.

General Eisenhower referred to the number of displaced persons from the east to the western zones and the necessity of arriving at an equitable distribution in this respect and pointed out that the American zone at present is extremely crowded. He also referred to the Potsdam decision regarding the transfer of population from certain eastern areas. Lhukov in the discussion insisted that the transfer of these populations must not be deferred for long. He also announced that the Soviet forces in the Berlin sector had been reduced to patrol units. He did not state the number.

Montgomery also reported disturbing trouble in the British zone with displaced persons who have been guilty of numerous acts of looting, murder, and rape. He stated that orders were being given to suppress such malefactors using organized force if necessary. Zhukov announced that similar difficulty had not been experienced in the Soviet zone.

In connection with the supply of food for Berlin, Montgomery again emphasized the unsatisfactory rail facilities between the British zone and Berlin over which must pass all of the imports from the western zone. This line had been double tracked but apparently due to removal of rails it is now being converted to single track line which of course creates congestion and delays supplies in arriving in the Berlin area. The problem is now under study by the transportation directorate.

Robertson. General Koeltz took place of General Koenig, in view of the latter's meeting with General de Gaulle. Marshal Zhukov represented the Soviets.

The meeting approved the order originally suggested by the French and amended by the British, prohibiting the wearing of German uniform or any badges of rank, medals or insignia. General Eisenhower added the provision that uniforms might be worn if dyed to a different color.⁷⁶

The Council took note that the British and Russians had agreed on zone boundaries in Berlin to satisfy British requirement for airfield facilities in Berlin. The Soviet is compensated by corresponding airfield facilities elsewhere.

Marshal Zhukov has submitted to the Council a proposal to establish a committee, attached to the Economics Directorate: to compile lists of enterprises, research institutes, et cetera, which might be employed for war production; to submit proposals for the elimination of those enterprises, and the use of non-specialized equipment for peacetime production; to work out a form of control over remaining enterprises; and to list items whose production should be banned. This proposal was referred to the Economics Directorate.

The members of the Council signed the proclamation to the German people on the establishment of the Control Council with supreme authority for Germany.⁷⁷

The Council approved and passed to the Coordinating Committee for signature, the directive that the legal Directorate develop measures and procedures regarding war criminals under the so-called Jackson Agreement of August 8.78

During the meeting "A clause was removed stating that existing laws in the zones would be retained subject to the paramount authority of the Control Council. General Robertson suggested that this clause would suggest to the Germans the possibility of an appeal to the Council from zone laws. General Sokolovsky did not like use of the word 'laws,' stating that word implied a permanence which the Control Council did not have. On General Clay's suggestion the term 'military laws' was substituted as this term is less permanent." (740.00119 Control(Germany)/8–2945)

The Council approved and signed the letter of the Allied Reparations Commission requesting that the Council be informed concerning the policies of that Commission. The French member signed the letter with special paragraph referring to the reservations of the French Government with regard to the Potsdam Agreement.79

The Council took note of the Secretariat report on the status of the organization of the Directorate. The meeting went off in an unusually short time and no important comments were made.

> Berlin, September 10, 1945—11 p. m. [Received September 10—5:20 p. m.]

490. Fifth meeting of the Control Council took place this afternoon with Marshal Montgomery presiding.

As to British proposal to control movement of populations between the various zones, Marshal Zhukov agreed in principle, but stated that matter is tied up with the question of eventual settlement of German civilians and former prisoners of war as between the various zones, as well as with the expulsion of additional Germans from Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary. He asked that the question be returned to the Coordinating Committee for a complete study covering all factors. This was done.

The Council agreed without comment to the resolution that German inland transport should be reestablished only to the degree necessary to satisfy Allied needs and those of the accepted German civilian economy. This would confine commercial highway traffic to such short-haul traffic as cannot be provided by rail or water.80

The Council agreed without comment to the US resolution recalling German officials and agents and obnoxious Germans from Afghanistan, Eire, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tangiers, and Vatican.81

The Council approved: Transport Directorate's report concerning the causes of transport difficulties in the supplying of Berlin with coal and food, and proposed remedies; 82 the US proposal concerning

It was agreed that the French would take up their request for captured German war material individually with the US, the British and the Soviets.

Marshal Montgomery stated that the British Foreign Office had notified him that for the purposes of the Conference of Foreign Ministers in London ⁸⁵ it would appreciate being advised as to the opinion of the Control Council on the question of free movement in all four zones of Germany for the nationals of the four powers represented on the Council. Marshal Zhukov stated that he would have to study the question and would not even state at this time whether matter should be referred to the Coordinating Committee. Marshal Montgomery stated that he would circulate the proposal and hoped that the members would give their views to their Deputies if possible so that the matter could be considered by the Coordinating Committee promptly.

Directorate's proposed law setting up a German external property commission and vesting in the Commission all right, title and interest in German property abroad, including property owned by German citizens resident outside Germany. The Legal Directorate had approved the text of the law, but the British member of the Legal Directorate had informed General Robertson that he considers the law unenforceable. General Robertson stated that the British Govt is now carrying on negotiations on this matter with neutral govts and feels that the publication now of this law would impede these. He also stated that he had particular doubts as to enforceability as affecting German nationals resident abroad. He hoped for full agreement soon. General Clay stated that law is necessary now as there must be a body to take title now, on behalf of the four powers, to German property, such as that of I. G. Farben, seized abroad. One of the four powers can not do this in its own name alone. Generals Sokolovsky and Koeltz supported General Clay as to the need for this law at once. The Committee decided to send the law to the immediately forthcoming meeting of the Control Council stating that the law was approved by the Legal Directorate and by three of the members of the Coordinating Committee, but that the British member had two reservations: (a) As to the desirability of enactment and publication now and (b) as to enforceability. General Clay then commented that he would report to his Govt his view that the US should act at once in its zone and should invite the French and Soviets to act with 11S.86

At the meeting of the Council immediately thereafter, Marshal Montgomery restated the British position on the above matter, asked for further study. General Eisenhower made a very strong statement as follows: (a) The law had his "emphatic approval", (b) the time was ripe for the Council to take an active part, promptly and concretely in the affairs of Germany as a whole, (c) this was the precise type of case when it should act, and (d) he wished his "very definite" position to be recorded. General Koeltz and Sokolovsky gave strong support, saying that the delay was already too long and that this is one of the most important steps the Council can take. Marshal Montgomery said he would inform his Govt of the positions of his three colleagues and the matter was put off to the next meeting on October 1, with the hope that full agreement would be reached at that time.

⁸⁶ The proposed law on the vesting and marshalling of German external assets under discussion was submitted to the Control Council as CONL/P(45)39 which was transmitted to the Department in despatch 1012, September 26, from Berlin, not printed.

The Council then approved without significant discussion the following matters referred up to it by the Coordination Committee (see my 562, Sept. 18, 10 p. m. 88): (a) Directive on methods of legislative action, so (General Eisenhower's comment that the Coordinating Committee should sign the maximum number of papers on behalf of the Council was noted); (b) directive on official languages and the Council Gazette; 90 (c) directive on exchange of copies of laws and information (General Sokolovsky's suggestion that article 4 providing for exchanges of mutual visits by the legal authorities of the four powers be struck out pending settlement of the general question of freedom of inter-zone movement was accepted); 91 (d) order on elimination of military training; 92 (e) law repealing Nazi laws; 93 (f) report approving publication of the EAC (European Advisory Commission) agreement on additional requirements from Germany,94 with explanatory preface and Section 38 deleted (General Sokolovsky stated that he hoped that the US might agree to publication of this section sometime in the future). 614. I refer to my 569 of September 20, 10 p. m., concerning the sixth meeting of the Control Council, and in particular to the discussion of the proposed law vesting German foreign assets.

The British have prepared a memorandum, classified secret, setting forth their two main legal objections which are: (1) that the Control Council has not been authorized by the four powers so to act; and (2) that the courts of other countries will not recognize the validity of the vesting of title.

The first objection is as follows:

(a) There is only one section of the agreement on control machinery in Germany which might confer this power; namely article 3 (b)

ber 26, from Berlin, not printed.

So In the official minutes of this meeting (CONL/M(45)6), transmitted to the Department in despatch 1012, September 26, from Berlin, the equivalent passage reads as follows: "General Sokolovsky announced that the Soviet Government had agreed that the Control Council should decide questions of reparations in consultation with the Reparations Commission, the Soviet component of which will be situated in Berlin." (740.00119 Control(Germany)/9-2645) For documentation on this subject, see pp. 1169 ff.

subparagraph 2,1 which gives the Council power to reach decisions on the chief economic questions affecting Germany as a whole. The British doubt whether this extends outside of Germany.

(b) Paragraph 18 of section III B of Potsdam Agreement ² is not intended to extend the powers of the Council beyond those already existing and applies only to countries other than the United Nations.

As to the second objection, the British believe: (a) even as to Germans in Germany the vesting law must be shown to be non-confiscatory and as giving adequate compensation. (b) It will not affect real estate. (c) It will not be recognized as to German nationals resident outside Germany. (d) Parts of law providing: for subpoena of witnesses externally; for prosecution of violators outside Germany; and declaring void contradictory non-German law, are clearly invalid.

The British feel that by use of the diplomatic approach, other governments may be persuaded to agree to the provisions which they are not legally bound to recognize. They feel that these agreements should be secured in advance.

As the Department will have noted from my 569 of September 20, 10 p.m., the United States, French and USSR representatives did not concur in the British objections.

28 September 1945.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A CENTRAL GERMAN TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

- 1. Certain proposals for the Establishment of a Central German Transport Department were recently submitted by the Transport Directorate to the Coordinating Committee. These proposals were not unanimously agreed within the Directorate.
- 2. The Soviet, American and British Delegations consider that the decisions of the Potsdam Conference (Section III paragraphs 9 (iv) and 14 °) require that the railways, highways, inland waterways and transport thereon and ports in Germany and such coastal shipping as Germany is allowed to retain, must be treated as the transport unit of Germany's economy and must be controlled as an individual unit for the whole of Germany by the Allied Control Authority through a Central German Administrative Transport Department. This Central Department must be given the executive functions necessary to secure, by means of approved subdepartments in each Zone, that the orders given on policy by the Directorate of Transport are carried out by the German agencies for each type of transport in the Zones.
- 3. The French Delegation dissent from the above proposal. The French Government have hitherto reserved their position on the Potsdam decisions. Even should that reserve be withdrawn, the French Delegation criticize the proposals made above, on the following counts:

⁵ Submitted to the Control Council, October 1; transmitted to the Department in despatch 1141, October 11, 1945, from Berlin, not printed.

(i) Railways. To re-create a unified German railway system would tend to re-create war potential. The eventual German Central Department should therefore co-ordinate within the extent necessary to the carrying of interzone and international transportations, only the action of four networks independently constituted in each zone.

(ii) Inland Navigation. The eventual German Central Transport Department should not be allowed to control Navigation on rivers and canals considered as international.

(iii) Highway Transport. A central organisation would be useless since Highway Transport is only concerned with short-haul. Such an organisation would permit the Germans to reorganise a paramilitary system of mobilisation.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/10-245: Telegram

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, October 2, 1945—noon. [Received 6 p. m.]

666. The seventh meeting of the Control Council was held on October 1, with General Koenig presiding.

The first and principal matter discussed was the proposed law setting up a German external property commission and vesting title of the property in the commission (see my 569, September 20, 10 p. m. and my 614, September $26\lceil 25\rceil$, 11 a. m. $\lceil 1 \ a.m. \rceil$).

General Robertson stated his Government's objections to the proposed law as follows:

a. Legal objections: The proposed law by itself has no effect and will be valid in neutral countries only with the cooperation of those governments and of their courts of law. As the law now stands and without assurance of support by neutral governments, it merely gives Germans in neutral countries a chance to claim that the Council is expropriating and confiscating their property, which is just what they want. The British have already sounded out neutral governments on this matter and these governments have questioned the legal basis for the law. Even if the legal grounds for the law were accepted, the British Government would not welcome the establishment of a precedent that title to property in one country could be affected by decrees of another government. Thus, the proposed law would appear to be valueless and actually harmful from a legal point of view.

b. Tactical objections: The proposed law would be effective if supported by neutral governments. At the present time, British Government is attempting to secure this support by arguing that this property offers some small compensation to the United Nations for the sacrifices they have made for the cause of freedom. Accordingly, all neutral governments should give the law their support on moral grounds. This moral argument which may succeed would be defeated by the present publication of the law commission raising the legal issues. Moreover, far from preventing the concealment of assets, it would give warning and strongly encourage such concealment.

General Robertson admitted that the matter could not be postponed indefinitely, and stressed the value placed by his Government upon unanimity of action by the Control Council, which he said was worth more than any other consideration.

General Koenig recognized the force of General Robertson's arguments and stated he was obliged to refer the matter to his Government which he would do as quickly as possible, recognizing that the matter could not be postponed indefinitely.

General Eisenhower argued: (a) That the four powers had already created one new precedent in international law, namely the Nazi war criminals trials before an international tribunal. Accordingly, he had no objection to setting other new precedents; (b) that the holders of German foreign assets were the "big shots" who must [most?] deserve punishment. It is necessary, from the point of world public opinion as well as justice, to reach these foreign assets so as to prevent such major war criminals from living comfortable lives abroad later: (c) that his reason for favoring the law is that it represents a clear move before world public opinion by the four powers jointly to punish the "big shots" as well as the "small fry". He stated that under section III, paragraph 18 of the Potsdam Agreement, "appropriate" steps are necessary to this end, and it is necessary to determine what these steps are. He was willing to postpone the matter for a reasonable time for study of this question, and meanwhile, to press the four govts for the development of further measures.

General Sokolovsky took a strong position against legal arguments, saying he agreed with General Eisenhower that international law is not a fixed matter. He believed that world public opinion required it. He referred to Paragraph 18 of Section III of Potsdam Agreement which says Council must act, and asked whether we were now to ignore this section and were to wait while the four govts settled things through diplomatic channels. He argued vigorously with General Robertson as to the scope of Paragraph 18.

The matter was referred back to the Legal Directorate, with consultation with the Finance Directorate, and General Robertson stated that he would offer some legal amendments. General Sokolovsky stressed the interest of the Finance Directorate in the matter.

On the Transport Directorate's proposal to set a central transport administration, General Koenig made a statement covering the French concern with this matter and French reservations arising from France's exclusion from Potsdam. He said that only at the current Foreign Ministers' meeting in London had France had an opportunity to exchange ideas with her Allies. General Koenig had been instructed that he could agree to no decision which might prejudice or otherwise affect the settlement of the Rhine-Westphalia regions which were considered at London. He indicated that the French position is that the proposed central administration might affect this question. Accordingly, he was forced to request that the matter be postponed as he could not discuss it. He applied the same reasoning to the companion proposal concerning a central administration of communications and posts. The other members of the Council could therefore do nothing.

(M. de Leusse of the German Section of the French Foreign Office attended the meeting as an observer. In a frank conversation with me after the meeting he stated: (1) that the French want an autonomous govt in the Rhineland and Ruhr; (2) that they probably would not accept annexation of the territory west of the Rhine except the Saar; (3) they consider that it should be treated on the same basis as the giving of eastern German territory to Poland; (4) that they consider this question of very great importance and will hold out for it. He indicated that French opposition to the proposed central administrations is based upon the intention to force consideration of this matter. When I asked him whether this means a delay until the next Foreign Ministers' meeting he replied that France would not delay and would press for settlement through the usual diplomatic channels.)

General Koenig suggested that the agreed three meetings of the Council be changed to two per month, on the first and sixteenth of each month. He pointed out that the machinery is working smoothly, that the Coordinating Committee is doing the hard work and that the Council does not therefore have enough business to warrant three meetings. He admitted that the three meeting system is set up in the agreement on control machinery in Germany, but felt that the Council could make this decision subject to contrary instructions from any of the four govts. Although General Robertson agreed, General Eisenhower feared a poor psychological reaction from the change and thought no change should be made until the govts had decided. General Sokolovsky agreed with General Eisenhower and it was decided to ask the views of the four govts. The Dept's instructions are requested in this matter.¹⁰

General Eisenhower raised the question of the return to Germany of the 150,000 or more Germans now in the United States zone of ¹⁰ In telegram 610, October 5, 5 p. m., to Berlin, the Acting Secretary informed Mr. Murphy that the Department supported General Eisenhower's position and felt that the Control Council should continue to meet three times a month (740.00119 Control (Germany)/10-245).

The question was referred to the Coordinating Committee to consider in connection with the general question of population transfers, with instructions not to delay the matter.

It was decided that the Coordinating Committee should consider the question of an integrated Allied secretariat so as to make a more efficient use of available personnel.

General Koenig raised the question of the desire of the Swiss and Yugoslav Govts to send delegations to Berlin as soon as possible, recommending this strongly to the other members.¹² He was assured that the question is now under consideration. (The matter of the first 16 delegations will be considered on Wednesday, Oct. 3, at the Coordinating Committee meeting. Further delegations, including neutrals (as suggested in the Dept's 569, Sept. 28, 8 p. m.¹³) will be discussed in the Political Directorate. A paper is now in preparation on this matter.)

746. The eighth meeting of the Control Council was held October 10, with General Koenig presiding. Only three matters were considered.

The law to terminate and liquidate Nazi organizations, which passed the Coordinating Committee last week (see my 682, October 4, 3 p. m.¹⁴) received final approval. The Department will recall that property of these organizations is to be confiscated by the military commands and distributed under general directives of the Control Council. This law will be made on October 12 ¹⁵ with a statement showing that it confirms action already taken.

In view of the small amount of business before the Council and the difficulty of reaching Berlin, General Koenig proposed to limit the number of meetings of the Council to two per month, with the possibility that they might be double meetings. General Eisenhower opposed any cut down as a matter of principle, stating that the organization of Germany on right principles is our most important task and that the Council must be continually available to press this and to supervise. Accordingly any change that public opinion might interpret as a lessening of the Council's interest and determination would be dangerous. He offered to make Berlin his permanent headquarters if necessary. General Sokolovsky stated that the organization stage is now over and that more questions of substance are to be expected. General Robertson stated that the British hope for the speedy setting up of the central administrations, and that when these are operating, the Council will have increased business in connection with them. He did not want too great an interval between meetings as General Koenig proposed. In view of the attitude of the other three, General Koenig consented to keep things as they now stand.

General Robertson distributed for information a paper setting forth the text of a British communication to nine governments expected to have commercial relations with the British Zone. This communication explained the provisional interim arrangements for the payment for exports from that zone. General Robertson explained that it was in conformity with the interim principles set up by the Council. General Eisenhower pointed out the necessity of setting up the central administrations from the point of view of exports and imports, with which General Sokolovsky agreed.

820. The ninth meeting of the Control Council was held on October 20 with the French member presiding.

The Council approved and signed a law increasing the taxes on wages, income and corporations by 25% ¹⁶ between October 1 and 31 December.

The Coordinating Committee had sent to the Council a law governing the formation, control and functions of labor unions. Its first paragraph provides that unions will be permitted at a local level and will be allowed to federate and amalgamate. The French member made a statement as follows: (1) That the French Government is in favor of unionism and is reestablishing unions in the French Zone;

¹⁶ Control Council Law No. 3, Berlin, October 20, 1945, Official Gazette of the Control Council for Germany, No. 1 (October 1945), p. 23.

(2) that the French want amalgamation of local unions only on a zonal level, and that any federation on a German national scale should require the special consent of the Control Council; (3) that all political activity by unions should be forbidden. He commented that such political activity would detract from the real purposes of unionism. He argued that his amendments to the above effect did not change the substance of the law under consideration. The other three members of the Council were in strong disagreement with the French position. Marshal Zhukov argued that we already have unionism on zonal basis and that the main purpose of the law is to set unions up on a national scale. General Eisenhower argued that it is the job of the Council to run Germany as a unit and that the members are wasting their time until this is settled. 17

Marshal Zhukov asked for an amendment which would prohibit even nominal Nazis from holding office in a union. The British member argued that Potsdam Agreement had specifically excepted nominal Nazis, 18 but Marshal Zhukov answered that the agreement was not referring to unions in making this exception.

At the suggestion of General Eisenhower, the bill was sent back to the Coordinating Committee.

The Council approved and signed the Legal Directorate's proclamation to the German people on the fundamental principles by reform of the German judicial system.¹⁹ In spite of a desperate effort which the Soviet member of the Legal Directorate had made at the last minute to amend the proclamation to remove the independence of the judiciary and invalidating Nazi sentences on political grounds, Marshal Zhukov stated that the Soviets had changed their minds and no longer objected to the draft proclamation as it stands.

¹⁷ The official minutes of this meeting (CONL/M(45)9), transmitted to the Department in despatch 1191, from Berlin, October 29, amplify the discussions at this point. "General Eisenhower then asked General Koenig if he would be ready to authorize the formation of Trade Unions on a broader basis than that of a zone. On General Koenig's negative reply, as far as the present was concerned, Marshal Zhukov pointed out that the text to be signed would not in any way alter the present situation as Trade Union policy was at present subject to autonomous regulations in each zone. He then affirmed that the majority of the members of the Control Council felt that the organization of Trade Unions on a German nationwide basis would be desirable." General Eisenhower then remarked: "The American delegation, as far as it was concerned, believed that the Control Council ought to treat Germany as a sole economic unit. If it continues to be the case that the Control Council cannot reach a unanimous agreement on this point and that it cannot formulate laws for the whole of Germany, it is preferable to discontinue its activity." Marshal Zhukov then proposed that the Coordinating Committee prepare a plan for the implementation of the Potsdam Agreement, so that the Council could take more active steps to carry it out. This proposal received the enthusiastic support of the British and US members, but the French member stated that he felt bound to refer to the French position as to the agreement which is generally known. The matter was referred to the Coordinating Committee.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, October 31, 1945—6 p. m. [Received 6: 20 p. m.]

896. The tenth meeting of the Control Council was held on October 30 with the French member presiding.

The Council discussed the law on formation, control and functions of trade unions, which had failed to obtain the approval of the Coordinating Committee on account of the unwillingness of the French Delegation to give approval now to the federation of unions on a national scale. The French member of the Council repeated his attempt to get approval of an amendment requiring special Control Council permission for national unionization.²⁰ Marshal Montgomery stated that delay in this matter is causing embarrassment in his zone, and asked that the urgency of the matter be brought to the attention of the French Govt in the hope they would change their position. General Eisenhower stated that with the French amendment added, the law does not change the existing state of affairs. He wished to encourage national unionism now. Marshal Zhukov asked that the French position be given out to the world press as blocking the efforts of the other three in favor of unions. In the light of the French member's promise to submit the matter again to his Govt and to have an answer by the November 10 meeting, and in view of the opinions of the other members that matter should not be given to the press while in the discussion stage, it was decided not to publish this until after the next meeting. General Eisenhower stated that he is generally of the opinion that a course of complete honesty with the press is best.

²⁰ The amendment to the draft law desired by the French provided for the establishment of trade unions on a wider than zonal scale on condition that, in each specific case, their establishment should be examined and approved by the Control Council. According to the minutes of the 10th meeting (CONL/M(45) 10), transmitted to the Department in despatch 1253, November 5, from Berlin, General Koenig indicated his willingness to sign the law immediately if this amendment were included (740.00119 Control (Germany)/11-545).

The Council approved the law on the reorganization of the German judicial system, 21 and the law vesting and marshalling German assets abroad 22 (see Mission's telegrams on the prior consideration of these laws in the Coordinating Committee). The members stated that they all had misgivings as to the effect of the latter law.23

The Coordinating Committee had approved a paper delegating to the Economics Directorate considerable power 24 in connection with obtaining information and issuing directives. The British and French members approved and General Eisenhower suggested that the Council empower the Coordinating Committee to make any delegations within the control machinery which it may see fit. Marshal Zhukov, however, did not agree 25 and asked that the entire matter be postponed until such time as the proposed central administrations had been set up and the Economics Directorate had had further experience. This was agreed and the matter adjourned.

The main discussion was in regard to the paper on advance deliveries on account of reparations,26 (see Mission telegram 883, October 30, 5 p. m.²⁷). The US and British members stated that they were not authorized to agree to allocations of substantially more than 25% to the Soviet Union and that the Soviets should take the matter up on a governmental level if they wanted more than the Potsdam percentage.28 They were both in sympathy with the plan to get deliveries moving as promptly as possible and promised full cooperation.29

Marshal Montgomery offered the Krupp Plant at Essen to the Soviets at once, to correspond to the US offer of two plants. Marshal Zhukov then stated that he had to insist on 50% by evaluation of the plants now listed as available for advance delivery. (The Soviets had previously asked for allocation by quantity of plants.) The basis of his insistence was that Soviet losses on an economic basis were more serious than those of any other Ally and her need is greatest; and that the Council had authority under Potsdam to make advance deliveries in any proportion it desires if the total at the end does not exceed 25% to the Soviets. General Eisenhower replied that he could not now agree to any percentage substantially greater than 25% as he had instructions to allocate 75% to the other claimant countries, but he promised to present the Soviet position sympathetically to his Gov-The British member so stated also. The French member reiterated the French argument that reparations should not be considered independently of restitutions but all agreed that this consideration should not delay the commencement of advance deliveries of reparations.

The meeting then approved the Soviet paper for the rearming of the German police,³⁰ the British delegation having withdrawn its insistence on giving full discretion to the zone commanders.

Marshal Zhukov announced to the meeting that anti-Fascist Women's Committees are being set up in the Soviet zone to help with democratic education programs. These committees are under the Burgomeisters and former party members are excluded.³¹

The chairman announced that the first number of the official Control Council Journal will appear on October 31. It will be in four languages.

Council meeting (see my 896, October 31, 6 p. m.). The French member had then promised to resubmit the question of federation of German unions on a national basis to his Government and to have the answer by the November 10 meeting.

At this meeting, the French member stated that his position was in effect unchanged. He argued: (1) that the World Federation of Trade Unions wanted to send a delegation to Germany to study German unions and that this delegation should give its opinion on the matter before decision was reached by the Control Council; (2) that the question should be adjourned until the manpower directorate had discussed this question with the delegation; (3) that the French were strongly in favor of unionism and that they wished unions to be formed and to amalgamate within the zones at once; (4) that unions should be formed from the bottom up in order to be truly democratic; (5) that this is a slow process and the time for national federation is still some months off; and (6) France is only opposing the national organization for the present but not as a permanent matter.

The other members answered: (1) That unions are already organizing within each zone and need no further permission from the Control Council; (2) that the matter should no longer be deferred; (3) that a national organization is needed to coordinate union organization in the 4 zones; (4) that there is no connection between the question of national federation now and the visit of the Trade Union delegation to Germany; (5) since the French position is unchanged, it is necessary to give a statement to the press to the effect that 3 members now favor a national organization of unions and Council authorization for this is only blocked by the French position. The US member invited the British and Soviet members to meet with US manpower authorities to set up an inter-zonal organization.

After some objection on the part of the French member to the giving out of press releases in matters where the Council disagrees, it was agreed that the press should be informed by a release as suggested above. It was made clear that although the individual members could make their own statements to the press, the official release must be confined to the facts of the matter.

As to advance deliveries on account of reparations, it was decided to postpone the matter to the next Coordinating Committee meeting since neither the US nor the British members had had further instructions from their Governments as to the Soviet claim to receive 50 percent of the factories now available. The French member made a formal statement that his Government could not agree to the inclusion of looted goods in any shipments on account of reparations, even in the case of the proposed advance deliveries.

The Council also approved the law on safeguarding of documents and delivery of conformed copies.33

He announced that he had received bids from Norway, Yugo, Egypt and Greece which he was forwarding to Economics Directorate.

French member reiterated that while he concurred in 50 percent allocation to the Russians, his Govt had always insisted that looted material be withdrawn from such advance deliveries and that he had asked for new instructions in the light of discussion in last Coordinating Committee meeting.

Note stressed that the British action contradicted the decisions of the Potsdam Conference and the declaration on the defeat of Germany and it proposed the despatch of a commission from the Control Council to the British zone to investigate the question of disarmament and liquidation of German armed forces. General Zhukov stressed orally at the meeting that the Soviets in their zone had not tolerated the existence of a single enemy unit.

British member declined discussion pending reference of the matter to Field Marshal Montgomery.

General Clay proposed that if the principle of a commission were accepted, such a commission should be sent to examine the disbandment of German forces in all zones and he mentioned that the US would welcome an inquiry in its zone. His proposal was approved but it was agreed to defer discussion of question to next meeting of Control Council in order to afford Field Marshal Montgomery an opportunity to comment on Soviet note.

Berlin, December 1, 1945. [Received December 2—1:21 a. m.]

- 1154. 1. At thirteenth meeting Control Council held yesterday, Russian member presiding, Field Marshal Montgomery made a vigorous rejoinder to Russian memorandum on the existence in the British zone of German armed units (see my No. 1066, November 21, 11 a. m., and despatch No. 1376 of November 22 45). Matter was disposed of amicably, however, as a result of comparatively moderate and conciliatory attitude adopted by Zhukov at the meeting.
- 2. Montgomery's statement acknowledged existence of German military administrative staffs which he asserted assisted in the work of disbandment which would otherwise have to be done by British personnel. Montgomery referred to US-British agreement under SHAEF.⁴⁶ Combined Command to treat German units as "disarmed enemy forces" rather than as "prisoners of war" who would be technically entitled to the continued application of the Geneva Convention. He decided that none of the German administrative staffs were operational but were maintained under British control. With regard to ex-enemy forces in British zone, other than Germans, Montgomery said he would gladly have rid himself of the Hungarians but that their repatriation had been held up by Russian refusal to grant transit across their zone in Austria. As to sources of information besides press reports which could hardly be accepted as foundation for Zhukov's serious charges, Montgomery mentioned that he was, of course, aware that he had granted facilities to some fifty Russian liaison officers. He had seen some of their reports which were misleading on other matters, and if these officers were responsible for Zhukov's accusations, he could only say that they had abused the warm hospitality accorded them in the British zone. Montgomery expressed acceptance of Zhukov's proposal for an investigating commission providing (a) that it visit all four zones and (b) that this commission be succeeded immediately by others which would concern themselves with all matters affecting the administration of Germany in which the Control Council can properly take an interest.

⁴⁵ Latter not found in Department files.

In replying, Zhukov expressed his high personal esteem for Montgomery and stated that in bringing forward for discussion German military developments in the British zone, he was concerned only in asserting the Control Council's responsibility under the Potsdam Agreement for the complete demilitarization of Germany. He pointed out that Montgomery had not denied the existence of German staff units, even though they were for administrative purposes. He did not entertain any suspicion that the Field Marshal wished to wage war on Russia but he was simply insisting on the disarmament of the Germans. As regards his sources of information, Zhukov said that it is difficult these days to hide anything from eye witnesses. He thought that a series of subsequent commissions of inquiry as suggested by Montgomery would be unnecessary and that the questions which they might deal with could be properly discussed in the Control Council when the need arises.

US member (General McNarney ⁴⁷) indicated that Montgomery had failed to carry out the Potsdam instructions and should have begun by disbanding the top German military organizations. He requested an explanation of Montgomery's preference for this method and of the reasons which prevented a more expeditious means of dealing with the German armed forces. McNarney thought that the proposed series of commissions would create an undesirable organization for investigation and believed they should be strictly limited to matters of major importance concerning the central administration of Germany.

On McNarnev's proposal, it was agreed (a) the British delegation should submit to the Coordinating Committee a complete account of all German military organizations in British zone, (b) should likewise present its plan for disbandment of these forces, including time tables and (c) the other delegations should also be called upon to furnish similar information.

- 3. Control Council adopted report providing for the establishment of the three air zones west of Berlin 48 (see my No. 1126, November 28, 8 p. m., paragraph 7⁴⁹). Air Directorate will be charged with the details necessary to establish these zones as soon as possible. With respect to the other proposed zones, namely from Berlin to Warsaw, Praha and Copenhagen, respectively, Zhukov gave the assurance that these other corridors across the Russian zone will be opened in due course and he said it was his desire that they should be made available as soon as possible. As regards the air corridors west of Berlin, he inquired whether it could be understood that Russian planes could also use them and he said that he would like to have landing rights at Allied terminal or intermediate ports for Russian service teams. Montgomery said he was prepared to grant the Russians all facilities for this purpose and "hospitality of the air". US member subscribed to Montgomery's proposal and these questions were referred to the Air Directorate for study.50
- 4. Control Council adopted with minor amendments, laws on (a) prohibition of military training, 51 (b) rationing of electricity and gas 52 and (c) seizure of I.G. Farbenindustrie property. 53 Directive on de-Nazification was accepted in principle but in view of certain

During the discussions, the Soviet member opposed the creation of the four eastern corridors. He stated since these went beyond limits of Soviet Zone, permission would require governmental decision and that he was informing his Govt. concerning latter proposals. U.S. and British members declared themselves in favor of a complete freedom of transit over Germany of aircraft of occupying powers on a reciprocal basis and General Clay declared that from now on the U.S. would match restriction with restriction. 740.00119 Control (Germany) / 12-1145: Telegram

> Berlin, December 11, 1945—2 p. m. [Received 7:58 p. m.]

- (1) Last week's agreement on the first list of plants available for reparations delivery is generally accepted as having produced a good effect, at least on the Russians (see my 1196 of December 7, 8 p. m. [10 a. m.] ⁵⁴) and fourteenth meeting of Control Council vesterday, US member presiding, was held in an amiable atmosphere and yielded better prospects of a settlement on restitution.⁵⁵
- (2) Stating he had sufficient latitude to solve the problem of restitution, Russian member objected that General Clay's compromise 56 was not sufficiently concrete and he referred to General Sokolovsky's offer to discuss each case of restitution separately (see mytel above and my 1176 of December 4, 7 p.m.⁵⁷). French member said he had not received any new instructions and that in their absence he was bound by the declaration of January 5, 1943 58 which was perfectly clear and had been accepted by other countries than France.

At the 23rd meeting of the Coordinating Committee, November 27, General Clay suggested a definition which limited restitution. This definition is quoted in second paragraph of section numbered (2) in telegram 1126, November 28, 8 p. m., from Berlin, p. 1426.

⁵⁵ The subject under discussion was a report by the Coordinating Committee (CONL/P(45)65) on a definition of the term "restitution." At the 23rd meeting of the Coordinating Committee, November 27, the matter had reached a deadlock. The Soviet member insisted that restitution was "limited to property capable of identification, forcibly seized and carried away from the territory of the country by the enemy." The other members favored a definition which limited restitution "to identifiable goods which existed at the time of the occupation and which were taken out of the country by the enemy, whatever the means of dispossession." Their definition also included identifiable goods produced during the occupation acquired by the enemy by force. The deadlock could not be resolved in discussion at the 24th meeting, December 3, and so was turned over to the Control Council. For more complete accounts of these discussions, see pp. 1426-1440.

⁵⁸ Inter-allied declaration against acts of dispossession committed in territories under enemy occupation or control, Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, p. 443.

Zhukov claimed that the statement of January 5, 1943, was of a declaratory nature intended to warn criminal govts willing to make accords with the Germans. The Cont Coun was the supreme power charged with giving practical application to declaratory documents. The question of restitution was a complicated one and Fascist elements such as Pétain and Laval ⁵⁹ had made voluntary agreements which required further examination. Zhukov suggested that the text to be adopted by the Cont Coun deal only with those matters which were perfectly clear and that all others be left for the Cont Coun to decide on the basis of the Sov offer to have restitution questions discussed separately in each case.

French member pointed out that January 5, 1943 declaration was signed by French authorities who had nothing to do with Pétain and Laval. He said he did not refuse to study the Russian offer but would like a concrete text. This the Soviet member agreed to furnish for the next meeting on the Coordinating Committee.

US chairman summarized the discussion by pointing out that by this next meeting the French may have received new instructions permitting them to recede from their rigid position and that the Russians had sufficient latitude to make concessions which might solve the problem. Stating "This is possible", Soviet member agreed to renewed consideration restitution by the Coordinating Committee.

- (3) Control Council ratified Coordinating Committee's agreement on first list of plants available for advance delivery on reparations (see 1196 above), while accepting the French member's statement that his Govt maintained its position on looted material continued in the plants in question. Agreement will be mentioned in communiqué and it is understood the list of plants will be made available to the press.
- (4) With respect to the establishment of consular offices throughout Germany (see my 1197 of December 7, 9 p. m. [10 a. m.]⁶⁰), Russian member stated this question went beyond his authority but that he had requested new instructions from his Govt which he hoped to receive by next meeting of Control Council on December 20. Matter was deferred for consideration at this further meeting.
- (5) French member made an appeal to Allied authorities concerned to expedite deliveries of wheat to the French zone and of coal from Germany to France. Russian member pointed out that the Russian authorities were not involved, and US and British members promised all possible assistance with regard to the first and second questions respectively.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/12-2145: Telegram

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, December 21, 1945—6 a.m. [Received December 22—6: 20 a.m.]

- 1316. 1. Fifteenth meeting of Control Council yesterday, ^{61a} US member presiding, witnessed a heated flare-up in discussion of the Coordinating Committee's report on German units in the British zone. ⁶²
- 2. Zhukov said he agreed with the terms of the report (see my 1287, December 18, 7 p. m.⁶³), but he had a statement to make. He was prepared to receive into the Russian zone transfers of disbanded personnel from the British zone. He then referred to the some 36,000 troops of other nationalities than German and the statement in the British paper that many of these did not desire to return to their homes. Zhukov said he had no such info and he requested Montgomery to check his reports "carefully and objectively".

He was of the opinion, in any event, that these troops should not be kept in the British zone.

Zhukov then stated he had info that Germans in the British zone, numbering some thousands, were being recruited in the British Army. They were made up of former German armored personnel, aviators, ground crews, engineers, chauffeurs, and Navy personnel, and the centers of recruitment were Hamburg, Kiel, Luebeck, and Muenster. With reference to Russian info that there were some 60,000 Poles in the British zone, Zhukov maintained that in Hamburg 30,000 of these

^{61a} This was the final Control Council meeting for 1945. The meeting scheduled for December 30 was cancelled by agreement at the 11th meeting, November 13.
⁶² CONL/P(45)70, transmitted to the Department in despatch 1607, January 2, 1946, from Berlin, not printed.

Not printed; this telegram reported discussions of the problem at the 27th meeting of the Coordinating Committee, December 17. At that meeting the British member announced a plan for the disbandment of German formations in the British zone by January 31, 1946. He asked for the cooperation of the other zonal commanders to implement the plan and complained about the Russian refusal to grant transit facilities for the repatriation of Hungarians and Rumanians. At the 27th meeting of the Coordinating Committee, the Soviet member also

At the 27th meeting of the Coordinating Committee, the Soviet member also indicated, in connection with consideration of a proposal providing for unrestricted inter-zonal travel by Germans, that while he did not oppose the principle of free inter-zonal travel, he could not agree to its practical implementation at the present time (740.00119 Control (Germany)/12-1845).

were wearing British uniforms. His remarks were not intended to relate to Poles who had fought on the side of the British, and Zhukov said that he raised the question because the recruitment of these particular Polish units was in charge of the former Polish General Staff of the London Govt and was being handled by General Matchek,⁶⁴ the right hand man of General Anders.⁶⁵ Zhukov's personal opinion was that the recruiting and use of such units was undesirable since the British now maintained normal diplomatic relations with the Warsaw Government. In conclusion, Zhukov inquired concerning the purpose of British recruiting of Germans and other nationalities, which he said was not in accord with the primary task of occupation.

Montgomery stated he would investigate the points mentioned by Zhukov and then asked outright that the Marshal confirm that he had said that the British authorities were enlisting Germans in the British Army. Zhukov confirmed that he had made this statement and mentioned a number of places where such recruiting was supposed to have taken place. Thereupon Montgomery said "it is not true" and that he had nothing more to say. With respect to the Poles, Montgomery continued that he was not prepared to discuss in the Control Council his Govt's relationship to the Polish Govt. He recommended that the question of German units should be permitted to proceed along the lines of the report adopted by the Coordinating Committee since this seemed to offer a solution acceptable to everybody.

Zhukov said he was satisfied with the British statement in the report but that he had thought it necessary to bring up the matter of the recruitment by the British of Poles and other nationalities which had fought for the Germans, since as an immediate neighbor of Montgomery's he was "very much concerned".

The Control Council finally approved the Coordinating Committee's report, taking note of Zhukov's and Montgomery's remarks after the latter's statement that he will furnish info for the next meeting on January 10 on the points raised by Zhukov.⁶⁶

3. With respect to the proposal for the establishment by the occupying powers of consular offices throughout Germany Zhukov stated that the Soviet Govt for the time being was not agreeable to the proposed opening of such offices (see my 1231, December 11, 2 p. m.). Zhukov repeated the words "for the time being". It was agreed that each national member should report to his Govt on the present

⁶⁴ Presumably Gen. Stanisław Maczek.

⁶⁵ Gen. Władysław Anders, Commander of the II Polish Corps.
66 Discussion on this subject continued at subsequent Control Council meetings in 1946. Following the meeting of that body on February 11, Mr. Murphy reported in telegram 428, February 12, 1946, 5 p. m., from Berlin, that the exchange between the Soviet and British members "was marked by the obviousness of the Soviet desire to embarrass and irritate the British delegation. Zhukov, regardless of painstaking British effort to explain, persisted in stating that explanations given were unsatisfactory." (740.00119 Control (Germany)/-2-1246) status in the Allied Control authority the proposal with a view to raising the question on the governmental level. (General Clay may possibly report this matter to War Dept, but should he not do so, the report given herewith could be accepted as a basis for our further action, after notification to the War Dept.)

4. The Control Council approved and signed the law on punishment of war crimes 67 (see my 1287, December 18, 7 p. m. 68) and agreed to its release to the press at 6 p. m., Berlin time, December 24.

Uneven distribution and present inadequate handling of situation by German officials at regional and lower administrative levels have led G-5 72 to propose the utilization of German agricultural and food officials and technical personnel by their economic control agency. Gen Clay 73 has concurred in the following recommendations.

screening be used by economic control agency, G-5 Division, as a source of information and to perform the following functions:

(1) Assistance in re-establishing and activating food and agricultural control agencies at regional and lower administrative levels.

While this group will initially be without executive powers it is believed necessary to create as early as possible in agreement with the Russian and French Govts a centralized German agency with responsibility for over-all planning coordination and execution of agricultural and food programs.

It has been recommended that 4 senior agicultural officers (2 Brit and 2 Amer) from SHAEF Economic Control Agency be designated initially to supervise the German administrator and his staff. This proposal pertains primarily to archives and offices, and the top German personnel would be kept under arrest, although for intelligence purposes they also might later be concentrated near the point of collection. The area suggested as most suitable is one that would be in the vicinity of Cassel, and I personally have no objection to the proposal as it might be found convenient to have the ministry centrally located in relation to the final zones of occupation.

To In telegram 3468, June 11, from Paris, not printed, Mr. Murphy reported that forty or fifty key officials of the former Reich Food and Agricultural Ministry had been located. In order to avoid the impression that a ministry was being reconstituted, small groups of these officials had been selected and taken to an assembly area north of Erfurt where they were given a preliminary program of work. They were instructed to devise a program for farm production and food utilization for 1945-46 within ten days, in consultation with Allied technical experts. (740.00119 Control(Germany)/6-1145)

I do take exception, however, to the reason given in a SHAEF paper in support of the proposal which is, namely, that while it is not intended during the SHAEF period to execute military government through any centralized German authority, it is clear from the meeting between the Supreme Commander and the Prime Minister 77 that at least British policy is tending towards the establishment at an early date of some German government (see my No. 2887, May 22, 10 p. m. 78). Pending receipt of the Department's views, I intend to enter a strong reservation on this point, as I do not believe that it is in accordance with our own policy.

In the above general connection I cannot help but perceive some significance in the fact that despite SHAEF's order to Montgomery 79 to place the Doenitz government under arrest 80 as soon as possible, it has been reported to me that as late as vesterday afternoon they were still to be seen walking around the streets of Flensburg. The Goldour staff has approved our decision to maintain the Foreign Office archives at Marburg and to continue to send there such additional archives as are uncovered from time to time.

The center now being established at Kassel will be equipped to handle a maximum of 5,000 persons from the staffs of the various ministries. It is our intention to make use of this opportunity to assemble the major part of the Foreign Office personnel so far located, numbering perhaps 300 persons. As has been previously telegraphically reported to the Department, it has been our intention to assemble Foreign Office personnel for interrogation. All previous efforts to achieve this through SHAEF have been fruitless and the present opportunity is therefore looked upon as the solution of our problem. While Kassel is not in the immediate vicinity of Frankfurt, it will nevertheless be relatively easy of access.

You may be interested to know that our various telegrams and airgrams for data regarding German personalities arose from the following:

Some time ago, Gen. Clay instructed all divisions and offices of the US Group CC to submit names of competent and trustworthy Germans who might be considered for advisory or administrative positions at top levels. Manpower Division was the first one to take action, and before sending the names to Gen. Clay, inquired of the Political Division for further suggestions in the way of additional names and all data we might have on hand regarding the persons proposed. Thereupon a telegram was sent to the Department (my 135, July 9, 7 p. m.⁹⁴), and the reply received within 48 hours was so helpful that the inter-divisional committee charged with making up the overall list asked if we couldn't get similar suggestions and indications from the Department in all the other fields of governmental activities. (My 171, July 16, noon, ⁹⁴ followed.)

You may appreciate that there are no records available to us today in Germany regarding the past activities of many Germans, except information obtained from German ministerial, Party and organization records that have come into our hands. The Embassy and consular records throughout Germany are mostly extinct. I have therefore put out the suggestion that before Germans are considered for senior advisory or administrative positions, unless known to be absolutely trustworthy, inquiry be made of Washington as to what information may be on hand there regarding their past activities. By clearing through the Department as we have been doing in these cases, information of all the United States intelligence agencies is brought forth through the machinery of the inter-departmental intelligence organizations.

Sincerely yours,

During the discussion, General Robertson said that British favored the financing being done on a central basis as soon as practicable. General Clay made a strong statement to effect that Potsdam decided in favor of central administrations of transport and finance; that the logical conclusion from this is that the railways be run and financed on a central and not on a zonal basis, that the armies pay the railways for their use, paying in German marks rather than in Allied occupation currency; and thus that the railways be put on a self-supporting basis. General Sokolovsky 98 raised the question of some lines incurring deficits and others making profits; he suggested that the railways be run zonally to the extent of seeing that deficits were not incurred by zones, but thought matter must be studied by experts. General Robertson suggested that in view of the immediacy of the problem, the Soviets might be requested to extend immediate financial aid as they had done in other similar matters, and that the method of eventual repayment be determined by the Financial Directorate. 462. Third meeting of Political Directorate ² held this afternoon with Mr. Steel ³ presiding.

On matter of proposed pooling of documents and officials in connection with setting up central administrations it was agreed that to begin with the proposed lists would be gotten up only in the five fields of finance, transport, communications, foreign trade and industry mentioned at Potsdam. It was also agreed that the UK and the US having the bulk of documents and personnel, should draw up preliminary lists so that the Coordinating Committee can decide on whether to start on the creation of central administrations at once. I stressed that we expect lists from the Soviets and French as soon as possible, and Mr. Sobolev 5 stated that they would be produced. It was agreed that the personnel lists would be screened to remove the more than nominal Nazis. I suggested that the Kassel area would be the most suitable place for central administrations as the bulk of material already there is great. Mr. Sobolev would offer no opinion.

The Russian attitude, notwithstanding the Potsdam Agreement on pursuit of common policies and a recent instruction by the Economic Directorate to the Food and Agriculture Committee to submit a paper in regard to common policies on agriculture (in connection with which today's Soviet statement was made) may well be related to the recent steps toward land reform in the Russian zone referred to in our 478 of September 8, 11 p. m.⁶ and preceding telegrams.

It is our view that a central German administration would be an important instrument in the carrying out of common policy and would be especially useful in connection with land reform measures.

Memorandum by the French Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

13 September, 1945.

CONTROL AND ADMINISTRATION OF GERMANY 7

On 31st July last the Provisional Government of the French Republic received an invitation to participate in the Council of Foreign Ministers of the five Great Powers.⁸ On the same day they received the text of an Agreement concluded between the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union concerning "The political principles to govern the treatment of Germany in the initial control period".⁹

In replying to these two communications the Provisional Government made various reservations regarding the solutions which were mentioned as applicable to Germany. These reservations refer to the contemplated restoration of political parties throughout Germany and the setting up of central administrative departments headed by State Secretaries whose authority would extend over the whole of German territory.

⁷Paper submitted to the London session of the Council of Foreign Ministers, September 11-October 2, 1945. For documentation on the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, see vol. II, pp. 99 ff.

⁸ Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, pp. 1481-1483.

In replying to the communication transmitting the above Agreement the Provisional Government pointed out that such measures seemed to presume a future evolution of Germany along lines as to which it was at present impossible to say whether they accorded with the interests of European peace and the actual desires of the populations concerned.

So far as they are concerned the Provisional Government fully endorse the principle stated in the opening lines of paragraph 9 of the Agreement concerning the way in which the control of Germany is to be exercised, namely that "The administration in Germany should be directed towards the decentralisation of the political structure and the development of local responsibility". They feel that to prejudge the possibilities of political disintegration in Germany is at the moment premature and will for some time remain problematical; that certain schemes for decentralisation are calculated to produce not merely administrative but also political consequences; that to divide Germany into a number of States would promote the maintenance of security in Europe if it were the result of natural evolution and not an imposed They regret, therefore, that the same paragraph 9 contemplates already the possible re-establishment of a central German Government, the creation of central German administrative departments and the reconstitution of political parties throughout Germany—all of these measures which are likely to revive the trend towards a united Germany and to favour the return to a centralised German State. More especially would they regret to see the Allied authorities replacing their own control, which prejudges nothing, by that of central German administrations set up in Berlin which would look like the first sign of a rebirth of the Reich.

The Provisional Government, further, notes that under the terms of the Potsdam Report the territories situated to the east of a certain line will be handed over to the administration of the Polish State "and for such purposes should not be considered as part of the Soviet zone of occupation in Germany." Thus, these territories are henceforth not subject to the authority of the Soviet Commander-in-Chief in Germany and the Allied Control Commission, Berlin. Still less would they be subject to the authority of future central German administrations or an eventual central German Government.

The Provisional Government do not a priori object to such arrangements, but they must point out that this is the only step so far taken which indicates the intention of the Allied powers to alter the frontiers of Germany as they existed in February, 1938. If at the very moment such a decision is published notice is given of the imminent establishment of central German administrations with powers extending over the whole German territory left after such amputation, these two rulings will very likely be interpreted as confirming the maintenance of German sovereignty over all the areas to which these powers would actually extend.

The Provisional Government, however, have at various times publicly stressed the paramount importance they attach to preventing the Rhineland and Westphalia ever again becoming an arsenal, corridor or base for an attack by Germany on her western neighbours. They feel that the final separation of this region, including the Ruhr, from Germany, is both indispensable in order to cover the French frontier and an essential condition for the security of Europe and the world. They consider it necessary, therefore, that if central German administrations are to be set up, it should at the same time be specified that their authority should not extend to the Rhineland and Westphalia.

In view of the importance to Europe and the world of the German problem the French Delegation would have expected to see this problem at the head of the agenda of the first meeting of the Council of Five Foreign Ministers. In view of the large number of questions on the agenda they do not propose to insist on this problem in general, or that of the future of the Rhineland and Westphalia in particular, being discussed at the first session. They are, however, obliged to state that the French representative on the Allied Control Commission in Berlin will not be empowered to agree to any action prejudging that area's future until the question here raised has been discussed by the five Ministers and decided by the Council.

Berlin, September 23, 1945—5 p. m. [Received 9 p. m.]

597. The ninth meeting of the Coordinating Committee was held Sept. 22 with General Robertson presiding.

The British proposal to set up a central German statistical agency to serve the control authority and such central administrations as are created, was approved in principle and sent to the Economics Directorate for study and recommendation. General Koeltz stressed the danger of such an organization as a possible means of mobilizing and asked that it be strictly controlled, and that a military adviser be attached.

As to the Transport Directorate's plan for a central transport department,10 as provided under the Potsdam Agreement, the French delegation expressed dissent as follows: (a) general objection to central administration of transport; (b) objection to central administration of railways in particular as a crucial war potential; (c) if such an organization be created, it should have no directing authority; (d) French position had been expressed through diplomatic channels, and General Koeltz and not [had no?] authority to change it, however, he hoped General Koenig 11 might have new instructions by the time of the next Council meeting on October 1. General Sokolovsky stated that this had all been thoroughly studied at Potsdam and did not need more consideration. General Clay made a strong reply to General Koeltz to effect that if Control Commission can not establish central machinery, it cannot govern Germany and had better consider itself as merely a means of negotiations.¹² The Potsdam decision is already two months old and should be acted upon, and, lacking unanimous consent matter would be handled on basis of interzonal agreements. Accordingly, it was decided that the question of policy would be presented to the Council in a short document, 13 stating the French position. Meanwhile the Transport Directorate will be requested to go ahead with the work, draw plans, choose personnel, provide space, etc. so as to avoid further waste of time.

On the related question of the IA and C 13a Directorate's plan for a central organ of communications and posts, the French reservation was less strong. General Koeltz asked that matter be sent to Council. saying that France does not consider this, as compared to railways, a war potential question. He hoped that agreement would be reached in the Council. The Directorate's plan will be sent to the Council with a request for its authority to proceed with its execution.

As to the British proposal that free circulation be permitted between all the four zones of Germany to nationals of the four powers. General Robertson explained that this meant that normal restrictions ¹³ The official minutes of this meeting (CORC/M(45)9), transmitted to the Department as enclosure No. 14 to despatch 1013, October 2, from Berlin, record also that General Clay "recommended that a majority report embodying the opinion of the British, U.S., and Soviet members of the Committee be submitted to the Control Council and that the French member should submit a minority report if he so desired." would be applied, such as requiring legitimate business reasons, orders, etc. General Clay said he favored the ending of all restrictions and would permit vacation travel in all zones. He wanted the same freedom given to German officials of the proposed central administrations and to Germans with inter-zonal business. General Sokolovsky repeated the Soviet position that this proposal is premature. Accordingly, the matter was postponed to a somewhat later date, but General Clay's principle that German officials must travel was accepted and the US will submit a separate paper on this.

The British proposal that each power submit for the information of the other three powers information regarding any German zonal administrations or agencies which they may have set up and which may be of value in setting up central administrations, was approved without discussion.

CORC/P(45) 69

DIRECTORATE OF TRANSPORT

ESTABLISHMENT OF A CENTRAL GERMAN TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Report of the Directorate of Transport

1. We were instructed by CORC/P(45)2 ^{14a} (Final) to initiate studies and make recommendations and reports to the Co-ordinating Committee on the decisions reached by the Tripartite Conference held at Potsdam:— ¹⁵

(i) that a Central German Administrative Department shall be established . . . in the field of transport . . . to act under the direction of the Control Council (Section III, Paragraph 9(iv)^{15a}).

- (ii) During the period of occupation, Germany shall be treated as a single economic unit. To this end common policies shall be established in regard to . . . transportation . . . In applying these policies account should be taken, where appropriate, of varying local conditions (Section III, Paragraph 14 16).
- 2. Our examination of this problem has disclosed that there is fundamental difference of opinion between the French Delegation on the one hand and the Soviet, American and British Delegations on the other, concerning the functions to be exercised by the Central German Transport Department and the organization required for that purpose.

- 3. In the view of the Soviet, American and British Delegations the decisions of the Potsdam Conference require that the railways, highways, inland waterways and transport thereon and ports in Germany and such coastal shipping as Germany is allowed to retain, must be treated as the transport unit of Germany's economy and must be controlled as an undivided unit for the whole of Germany by the Allied Control Authority through a Central German Administrative Department to be established for the purpose.
- 4. Accordingly, the Soviet, American and British Delegations consider that the Central German Transport Department must not merely be required to advise the Directorate of Transport on transport policy but must be given such executive functions as are necessary to secure through an approved Departmental organization in the Zones that the orders given by the Directorate of Transport on policy matters are carried out by the various German Transport Agencies in the Zones.
- 5. The French Delegation, on the other hand, propose that the Central German Department, if established, shall be composed simply of advisers who will be responsible for presiding over co-ordinating meetings of technical German delegates representing, for each branch of transport and for each function, the various Occupation Zones.
- 6. The French Delegation consider that in view of the need for the complete disarmament of Germany, the various forms of transport and transport facilities should be organised in accordance with the objections made in the letter which is attached as Enclosure 2. For instance, the various forms of transport should be treated as follows:—

(a) Railways.

(i) In each occupation zone an independent management; carrying on the operation of the network of railways within the Zone and to this end controlling all the necessary facilities.

(ii) Only such German central co-ordinating agencies or secretariats as may be necessary for dealing with commercial, technical and financial questions affecting all Zones, and through services.

(b) Ports, highways and highway transport, inland waterways and inland waterway transport.

The functions of the Central German Transport Department, as suggested by the Soviet, American and British Delegations, could be exercised by the Allied Control Authority direct. If necessary, some German co-ordinating committees should be set up with permanent secretariats.

(c) Coastal Shipping.
Such coastal shipping as Germany is allowed to retain will need to be regulated centrally.

- 7. Accordingly we are unable to submit agreed proposals.
- 8. In Enclosure 1 are set out proposals which, in the opinion of the Soviet, American and British Delegations, are in conformity with the decisions of the Potsdam Conference.

The French Delegation reasons for dissenting from these proposals are given in Enclosure 2.

NOTE BY THE FRENCH DELEGATION OF THE DIRECTORATE OF TRANSPORT

CREATION OF A GERMAN CENTRAL TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

The French Delegation opposes to the proposals of British, American and Soviet Delegations the two following reserves:

- 1. The French Government has not given its agreement to the decision of Potsdam Conference, specially concerning the creation of a German Central Transport Department and maintains this reserve.
- 2. Even if the French Government would cancel the above reserve and agree to the principle presented in the Potsdam Conference relative to the creation of a German Central Transport Department, the French Government would not recommend to the Control Commission the adoption of the text prepared by the British, American and Soviet Delegations, for the following main reasons:—
- (a) Regarding Railways—The maintaining of Reichsbahn unity is not consistent with the disarmament of Germany, as France proved by her own experience when occupied by the Germans. The eventual German Central Department should therefore co-ordinate, within the extent necessary to the carrying of inter-zone and international transportations, only the action of four networks independently constituted in each zone. This system, working in Great Britain and U.S.A. and that worked in France before 1937, is entirely consistent with the principle of Economic unity of Germany.

(b) Regarding Inland Navigation—Interference of the eventual German Central Transport Department into the Control of Navigation on rivers and canals considered as international should be formally excluded.

(c) Regarding Highways Transports—A central organisation would be useless since it only concerns short distance transportations and would afford the Germans to reorganise a paramilitary system of mobilisation.

5749. 1. René Mayer, Acting Minister of FonAff told me at length this morning (repeating what de Gaulle and Bidault have often told me before) that French are very fearful indeed of all actions tending towards setting up a central government in Germany for they are fearful that such a central government will eventually be dominated by the Russians and they will have the Soviets on their frontiers. In this connection he spoke of the recent suggestion for setting up central offices for the control of communications and transportation in Germany. The French have an almost panicky fear of anything looking toward the setting up of a central German government.

General Robertson, while agreeing to the inclusion of these remarks, stated that he felt that this was contrary to the EAC ¹⁹ procedure where a question was referred to the four Govts if agreement was not obtained. General Clay's proposal that German officials of the proposed new central German administration and Germans engaged in approved enterprises such as clergy, doctors, certain factory technicians, and certain buyers and sellers be given inter-zonal passes by the appropriate bodies in the control authority, was approved in principle. General Clay hoped that general categories could be worked out so that passes might be issued within the zones. General Sokolovsky remarked that as soon as approval was given to the central administrations, it made these communications necessary. General Koeltz raised the usual French reservation in connection with the central administrations, to which General Clay remarked that there is a tendency to "tilt at windmills" in the committee without accomplishing enough results.

This matter will receive final consideration in the Council meeting on Monday, October 1. General Clay has telegraphed the War Department, dated September 24,²¹ that if the French still refuse agreement on this matter he deems it essential to set up interzonal machinery with the British and Russians, and requesting authorization to do so. He believes this arrangement would be effective. General Clay fears that unless central machinery is established promptly, it will have to be established in the United States zone alone, thus creating a new artificial political unit. He is afraid this may lead to actual dismemberment.

Occasional statements are made in Rightist circles that France can "forgive but must not forget" and concern is expressed over the extent of General de Gaulle's "generosity". The Communists have as expected taken a position of open hostility to the General's policy. It is clear, however, that the Communists are more concerned by the possibility of strengthening an anti-Soviet western Europe than by the purely Franco-German factors involved. While hammering at the necessity of Germans making reparations of all kinds and underscoring German atrocities, the main Communist underlying concern is well summarized by Humanité headline of today "At Strasbourg new speech of General de Gaulle in favor of so-called western 'fraternity'".

Mr. Couve de Murville will start immediately the Franco-British conversations with the Foreign Office here in London. Mr. de Murville says that their conversations with the Soviet Government will be conducted in Moscow when Mr. Alphand 26 goes there later this month or early in November. De Murville is recommending to his Foreign Office that it be suggested to the State Department through the French Embassy in Washington that conversations on the Ruhr be taken up in Paris with the American experts when they are there for the reparations meetings beginning the 22nd of this month. He says the economic aspects of the problem could be studied at that time and that the Department could perhaps arrange to have someone for the political aspects enter the conversations later or that if I am still here I might be made available for this purpose before I return to Washington.

Both Harvey and De Murville said that while, of course, they expected to have the Soviet Government brought into the conversations at a later stage they were anxious to have our three Governments go as far as we could toward coordinating our ideas before the others come in.

It seems to me that the above suggested plan probably is the best way to work this out as it avoids any question of some of the deputies discussing the matter here without including them all. Harvey and De Murville both said they would be glad to keep me informed of the progress of their talks if you thought it would be useful to do so.

767. The thirteenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee was held on October 12 with General Koeltz presiding.

On several occasions during the past month the Soviet have alleged that the British have failed to supply their share of coal and food to Berlin. There have been differences in figures given and the Soviets have implied bad faith on the part of the British. Accordingly, the British member submitted a proposal alleging that the difficulty was in getting British trains through the Soviet zone to Berlin and asking for American or British control of the line between Helmstedt and Berlin. He stated that at least 16 trains a day were necessary and that an average of only 9 got through during September. The difficulty will be increased during the winter with increases of coal shipments from the Ruhr. He stated that it is necessary to get clearance all the way through from Berlin to the Ruhr so as to relate loading to train passages, and stated that the British had often had to turn back trains at Helmstedt as a result of non-acceptance by the Soviets. Finally he stated that the British could not take responsibility for supply to Berlin if they did not have control of the means of delivery. General Sokolovsky indignantly replied that after August the Soviets had accepted all the trains offered. He gave detailed figures as to the number of trains offered daily since September 1, claiming that the Soviets had been ready to accept more than the number of trains offered on each day. He stated that the British liaison officer at Helmstedt had made no complaints and that this appeared to him to be an unjust attempt by the British to get control of the railway which the Soviets need for the supply of their troops west of Berlin. It was decided to submit the problem to the Transport Directorate for study and to send a joint delegation of officers to Helmstedt to submit a daily report as to trains offered and accepted. The Department will recall that the Berlin-Helmstedt Line formerly was double tracked but by virtue of the removal of the rails by the USSR it is now only single track line. This is largely responsible for present operating difficulties and congestion.

In connection with this argument, General Clay stressed that the difficulty would be alleviated by the establishment of the German Central Administration of Transport. He asked his colleagues individually or collectively to join with the US Zone setting up a German operated inter-zonal transport administration. This would be done through the respective members of the Transport Directorate. French member stated that this would be a good plan but wanted it to be done among the Allies alone and not to involve German directions.29 He felt that such an inter-Allied authority would alleviate present difficulties. General Clay replied that this was an onerous task and concerned merely supply of Germans by Germans and should be undertaken by them. The other members were apparently in sympathy with American member, General Sokolovsky stating that in the Soviet Zone, the control of matters below policy level was in the hands of Germans. The minutes will record that General has invited inter-zonal arrangements on this basis, both in the field of transport and communications.30

Specifically the minutes (CORC/M(45)13) read: "He [General Clay] suggested to each of his colleagues that they should establish contact with the American zone, either individually or collectively, with a view to providing a joint transport organization. He asked that this question should be the subject of very serious consideration and that replies should be given to him at the next meeting." The minutes of the thirteenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee were transmitted to the Department in despatch 1155, October 18, from Berlin. (740.00119 Control (Germany)/10-1845)

In the last meeting of Coordinating Committee (see my no. 767, October 13, 1 p. m.) faced with the French refusal to agree to the establishment of German central administration of transport, General Clay had asked his other colleagues in the next meeting to report whether they were willing individually or collectively to join with the U.S. Zone in setting up a German operated inter-zonal administration. Since the French were under instruction not to discuss the matter in Committee, General Clay announced that he would contact his colleagues individually in this matter outside of Committee.31 The British and Russian members then expressed their strong disappointment that the Central German Administrations were not yet set up in compliance with the Potsdam decisions.³² The British member commented that the fact that the powers might now act outside of the quadripartite organization was a danger signal, that the deadlock should be broken as soon as possible. The French member stated that he would report these sentiments to his Government.

It stipulated that the region should not only be separated from Germany, but from the jurisdiction of the Control Council as well. The French plan also called for dividing the area into three separate units, each to be dealt with differently. The left bank of the Rhine was to be under permanent military occupation. The Saarland was to become a part of the French customs and currency regime, and the Saar mines were to revert to French ownership. The Ruhr district was to be under permanent international control, and the bulk of the report was devoted to details of the organization of a proposed International Ruhr Commission. We have had a further teletype conversation with Mr. Dunn this morning

Mr. Dunn was then told of the French Ambassador's suggestion that he stop over in Paris for two or three days to discuss the French Ruhr-Rhineland proposal. Mr. Dunn replied:

"My understanding is that the French want to talk with American economic experts before the political phases are discussed and I feel that that procedure is essential. There is not much use in discussing the political aspects until we have first had a full discussion of the economic implications of their proposal. I further understand that the French would like to discuss the economic aspects with the experts we will have in Paris for the Reparations Meeting beginning October 29.42 I suggest we go along with that arrangement and then after receiving the report of the economic discussions we have the French Ambassador discuss the political aspects with us in Washington or if you prefer to have the French Foreign Office discuss the political aspects with Caffery. I expect to bring home a report of the Franco-British discussions up to the point they have reached when I leave here. Let me know what you think of this suggested program."

It is my understanding that you do not desire to have Mr. Angell ⁴³ and his associates discuss these economic aspects of the matter in Paris and, if you concur, I will so inform the French Ambassador and also Mr. Dunn.

law on the formation, control and functions of trade unions had been referred back to the Committee from the Council in view of the French attitude toward unions on a German national basis.45 The law permits and encourages formation of unions "within the whole of Germany," and states that "with the consent of Military Govt, trade unions will be permitted at a local level and allowed to federate and amalgamate in larger organizations".

The French member sought to amend this to provide that federation beyond the zonal boundaries would require the consent of the Control Council. He argued: (1) that permission should not now be given for national unions until they have been organized from the local level, and until the Council is satisfied that Nazis have been removed; (2) that this amendment does not change the substance of the proposed law. The other three members stated that they favored unions on a national basis now as a force against the reconstitution of Nazism. In view of the impasse, General Clay invited his British and Russian colleagues to consult with US Manpower authorities concerning interzonal unions.46 It was decided to refer this matter to the governmental level and so to report to the Control Council.

⁴⁶ According to the minutes of the meeting (CORC/M(45)16), transmitted to the Department in despatch 1251, November 5, from Berlin, General Clay "invited the Soviet and British delegations to join with the American delegation in order to allow the three of them to carry out the proposed measures." At one point in the debate General Clay suggested that the law be amended to provide for a national trade union organization "which may extend over Germany as a whole exclusive of the French zone." His proposal was made "in the hope that the kind of action it envisaged might prevent the disintegration of the control machinery." (740.00119 Control (Germany)/11-545)

⁴⁵ A directive on the formation, function, and control of trade unions had been prepared and was considered by the Coordinating Committee at its eleventh meeting, October 3. The resulting discussions were reported to the Department in telegram 682, October 4, from Berlin, not printed. General Koeltz, the French member, wanted the directive amended to show that amalgamation of unions should not extend beyond the zones and should not become national. "General Clay took strong issue on this He stated that this argument underlies the Council's reason for existence and the Four Power this argument underlies the Council's reason for existence and the Four Power Government for Germany. He stated that he would take this position on each question which involved it. He stated that the principles of this directive are already accepted in the US zone and the only purpose of the directive is to make them universal in Germany. He was supported by Generals Sokolovsky and Robertson. General Koeltz then argued that unions are covered by Paragraph 10 of Section III A of the Potsdam agreement, that III A is a political article which stresses the decentralization principle. He stated that France is warmly in support of the decentralization decisions of Potsdam. This reasoning was denied by the others. It was decided to send the matter to the Legal Directorate for proper drafting for final decisions by the Council." (740.00119 Control (Germany)/10-445) Cf. Clay, Decision in Germany, p. 110. 6326. When Angell and Phelps ⁴⁷ made a courtesy call on Alphand latter suggested that while Reparations Delegation is here it might be opportune time for French to present on technical level in detail certain aspects of France's proposed program for control of Ruhr, Rhineland and Saar.

Alphand mentioned his conversations with British in London last week and indicated that Assistant Secretary Dunn had been kept fully informed. He added that he was going to Moscow about November 15 on number of economic matters and hopes at that time to present to Russians explanation of French Ruhr proposals. He expressed hope that prior to his departure French would have opportunity to discuss French Ruhr proposals with us here in Paris. Rueff, French reparations representative, subsequently expressed same hope. They evidently both take position that Ruhr, Rhineland and Saar are an integral part of reparation arrangement.

Chauvel ⁴⁸ also spoke of this to me and said that despite fact that Dunn could not come to Paris and that neither Alphand nor Couve de Murville could proceed to Washington for discussions he believes it would be useful for our reparations people to listen to elucidation of French proposals. He indicated that French feel that their proposals from an economic viewpoint "while perhaps not perfect are at least sound and workable" and therefore that possible economic objections to overall French proposals for control of Ruhr will be removed.

While Dept (which has available memoranda on French proposal) is in best position to gauge utility of providing an audience for French on this subject Minister Angell and I agree that presence in Paris of members of Reparations Delegation including State Dept Officers who are familiar with German and general European economic problems affords an excellent opportunity to obtain more information on French proposal.

Discussions would also certainly be welcomed by French as an indication that we have not adopted a fixed adverse position prior to hearing their proposals.

We understand of course that any discussions here would be solely for purpose of receiving an elucidation of French proposal and would not include discussions at a policy level. If Dept authorizes such discussions Alphand assumes that a formal reply would subsequently be made by US and Soviet Govts as well as by British indicating whether they would be prepared to consider proposal further. If their decisions were in affirmative, French would propose a quadripartite conference at the technical level.

6383. Gen. de Gaulle asked me to come to see him this morning to explain again the French point of view in regard to the setting up of any sort of central govt in Germany. He began by saying that whoever dominates Saxony and Prussia also dominates Germany; that any central govt set up in Germany would inevitably fall into the Russians' hands: that the setting up of a central govt would inevitably tend to the restoration and strengthening of Germany; that France in no event would be a match for a revived Germany within the Russian orbit; that France could not fight Germany under those conditions either alone or with the aid of the British Empire and the US; that a revived Germany would certainly eventually invade France; that France would succumb and all Europe would be Russian. "Besides" he added "we have a lot of Communists here." He said "you are far away and your soldiers will not stay long in Europe. It is hard for you to understand the difference: it is a matter of life and death for us; for you, one interesting question among many others." "The British" he remarked "lack courage and are worn out. We can expect nothing from them in the way of facing the Russo-German combination."

I endeavored to set out the point of view of our military authorities in Germany. He said "I know that for them the setting up of a central administration would make things much easier: Germany would be much easier to handle and to govern, but I repeat for us it is a matter of whether or not France is to continue to exist as an independent nation." He denied that France had made any commitment in regard to taking any part in a central administration. "We were not at Potsdam. A Germany within her 1936–1937 frontiers was once envisaged but since that time big slices have been handed over to the Russians and Poles."

He then went on to speak of the Ruhr and the Rhineland and set out again his often repeated arguments for internationalization of the Ruhr and the setting up of some sort of Rhineland state. He pretended that he could not understand why we have not agreed on this. "Even with Russian participation" he said "it is better to do these things than to do nothing at all."

Then he went on to say "Why not set up separate states, Bavaria, Baden, Hesse-Cassel, Hesse-Darmstadt, and Hanover. After those states are set up if they want to federate well and good—that is an entirely different approach to the problem."

"You are mistaken" he said "if you believe you can prevent the Russians from dominating a German central govt. They have all the useful weapons at hand and they are not over-scrupulous as to how they would use them. For instance, there are Communists in our zone and in yours and in the British. Do not forget how many Communist Deputies there were in the Reichstag before Hitler."

He made some observations about how little coal was coming out of Germany and criticized the British for their inertia and inactivity in getting coal out of the Ruhr mines.

He remarked on my leaving that he intended to write a letter to the "Doyen d'Age" of the recently elected Assembly just before the Assembly meets November 6 "turning in his powers".

Mr. Berard, Counselor of the French Embassy, called this morning to inform the Department officially of French intentions respecting conversations between the two governments on the Rhineland-Ruhr. The substance of his remarks is set forth below:

(1) Mr. Dunn has been completely informed of developments in London (Anglo-French conversations) and has received copies of all documents which have been "established" as a result of these conversations.

(2) This material constitutes the French plan for the Rhineland-

Ruhr region.

(3) Mr. Couve de Murville will arrive in Washington within several days where he will describe the French ideas in detail and will supply any explanations desired. Mr. Berard said that the French Government thought certain misunderstandings had arisen respecting the French proposals and that these misunderstandings had been reflected in the Control Council in Berlin. Mr. Couve de Murville will attempt to make clear the French position on this entire matter.49

(4) The French Government would be highly appreciative if instructions could be given to the United States reparations delegation to listen to what the competent services in Paris have to say on the economic aspects of the Rhineland-Ruhr question. These would be strictly informal exchanges in which the reparations experts could ask any questions and cable the information to Washington. Such an arrangement would not in any way prejudice the holding of the basic conversations here in Washington.

Attitude of France on the Allied Control Council of Germany

Mr. Patterson said that he understood that General Clay had talked to Mr. Byrnes 55 about the French tactics of blocking everything that comes up in the Control Council tending toward the establishment of any central German agencies. He said that General Clav believes that the French have no right to obstruct the work of the Council and that irrespective of the decisions on the question of separating the Ruhr and Rhineland he felt pressure should be brought on the French to cooperate in the establishment of central agencies in accordance with the provisions of the Potsdam Agreement. He said that the whole system of Allied Control Council administration was in danger of breaking down and read from a paper outlining the present situation. Mr. Byrnes pointed out that the French are very touchv owing to the fact that they had not been invited to Potsdam and did not feel themselves in any way obligated by the decisions taken by the three powers there. He agreed, however, that some action would have to be taken. By way of illustration of the difficulties he read a State Department cable just received from Ambassador Caffery 56 giving de Gaulle's very strong views on the vital necessity to France of not creating a centralized Germany and in favor of separating the Ruhr and Rhineland.

We have today received from Foreign Office copy of agreed record of Franco-British discussions on Ruhr and Rhineland (Embassy's 11579, November 5 58) and are sending copies to Paris, Moscow and Berlin. As Dunn took back French record and as copies of agreed record have been sent to British Embassy Washington 59 for and taken to Washington by French negotiators we will not telegraph summary unless requested. We have been promised copies of two additional annexes: a British statement on French economic memorandum and a French counterstatement as soon as they are ready. Foreign Office reiterates that agreed record makes clear conversations were designed merely to elucidate French proposals and that no British view concerning their substance was expressed.

We are told that agreed record is now before Bevin with request for instructions as to how he wishes matter handled from here on. Preliminary and tentative Foreign Office thought is that the proposals bristle with difficulties but that this is true of whole subject of control of Germany's military economic potential and would be true of any other proposals for dealing with Ruhr and Rhineland. They are accordingly prepared to give these proposals serious consideration. They believe proposals open to serious economic objections not so much with respect to Ruhr as to Germany as a whole but are prepared to consider whether political advantages would be sufficient to offset them. One question said to have been in minds of both sides but to have been carefully kept out of record in view of prospect that it would eventually be shown to Russians was that of having Russians participate in administration of territory so far west so strategically located and so industrially important. French thought is stated to be that administrative body would be very small and would not include British also feel that control of German industry would be ineffective unless control of separate industries were supplemented by some form of political control over such areas as Ruhr.

As to problem of Irredentism they sympathize with French statement that Germans will be discontented with any possible settlement of Germany and will inevitably harbor feelings of revenge and that best solution is to deprive Germany by [of?] means of giving that desire for revenge practical expression in new outbreak of aggression.

6676. From Angell 64. Informal discussion was held with French on November 15 on economic questions related to proposed separation Ruhr-Rhineland from Germany. French Government represented by Alphand, De Courcelle, and others. Present for US were Abramovitz, Howard and Schurr. Memorandum covering conversations will reach you via air pouch.⁶⁰ For the most part, French exposition follows lines already revealed in reports of Anglo-French conversations. Following points made by Alphand clarify and amplify previous reports:

1. Areas to be separated, including Saar, Rhineland and Ruhr, should be disconnected from administrative control of ACC 61 immediately.

2. French willing that part of potential Ruhr export surplus be used to help finance necessary imports of rest of Germany during transitional period. Also France proposes that dollars continue to be demanded for sale of part of Ruhr exports. Alphand firm in view, however, that part of Ruhr exports and part of exports of rest of Germany should be transferred on reparation account regardless of existence of foreign trade deficit in rest of Germany. He considers that present arrangement which requires payment for only 80% of value of exports has settled question in principle.

3. French state unequivocally that scope of capital removals to be made from Ruhr area would continue to be governed by Potsdam formula even if area is internationalized. They are aware of severe economic consequences in area. They would offer employment in French coal mines and other industries to unemployed Ruhr residents. Such employment presumably temporary during French labor shortage, but this point not clear.

4. French agree that rest of Germany would face severe foreign exchange situation in short and long run. Willing to contribute part of Ruhr foreign exchange surplus to rest of Germany for limited transitional period only. Thereafter rest of Germany forced to make necessary adjustments. French agreed to compare US and French estimates of magnitude potential foreign exchange deficit of rump Germany at future meeting, probably November 19. [Angell.]

740.00119 Control (Germany)/11-2045

Report on the Franco-American Conversations Held in Washington, November 13-20, 1945, Concerning the Future Status of the Rhineland and the Ruhr 62

[Washington,] November 20, 1945.

In the course of the meeting of Foreign Ministers in London the French Delegation circulated on September 14th, 1945 a memorandum 63 setting out its views on the steps of being taken with regard to the control and administration of Germany.

In this paper the French Government recalled that it had been informed on July 31st of the text of the arrangement reached at Potsdam between the American, British and Soviet Governments regarding the "Political Principles which would govern the treatment of Germany in the initial period of control." ⁶⁴ The French Government had since that date expressed reservations about this agreement. These reservations concerned particularly the decision to re-establish forthwith German central administrations set up in Berlin which seemed like the first manifestation of a rebirth of the Reich.

Moreover, the French Government had observed that in the terms of the Potsdam communiqué, the territory situated to the east of a certain line would be handed over to the administration of the Polish Government and would immediately be removed from the authority of the inter-allied Control in Berlin and from the authority of future German central administrations. The French memorandum, without raising objections a priori against an arrangement on these lines, of the French Delegation with officers of the Department of State, held November 19, 1945, it was decided that Mr. Berard of the French Delegation and Mr. Riddleberger of the Department of State would draw up the report on the conversations (740.00119 Control (Germany)/11-1945).

od See Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, pp. 1543-1566; and France, Ministére des Affaires Étrangères, Documents français relatifs à l'Allemagne, Août 1945-Février 1947 (Paris: Imprimerie Nationale, 1947), pp. 7-13.

drew attention to the danger that this arrangement might be interpreted as confirming the maintenance of German sovereignty over the rest of Germany.

The French Government, which has on many occasions given public notice of the importance which it attaches to the future of the Rheno-Westphalian region in particular, asked the Council of five Ministers of Foreign Affairs that, pending the settlement of a definite status for this area, it would be laid down that the area would be withdrawn from the authority of German central administrations if these were later set up.

This proposal was laid before the meeting by M. Bidault, Minister of Foreign Affairs, on September 14th, 1945. It was agreed that a study of the whole of the questions raised by the French memorandum would be pursued through diplomatic channels.

The French Government asked the Governments concerned to state their views on the procedure to be followed in order to carry out this decision.

The British Government suggested on October 8 that in the first stage the conversations should be carried out by the French Government separately and directly with each of the three other Governments. It was agreed that these first conversations would have no other object than to inform each of the three Governments of the French Government's views, without involving commitments on either side.

Exchanges of views took place in London from the 12th to the 16th of October at the British Foreign Office, of which Mr. James C. Dunn was informed as Deputy of the Secretary of State at the Council of Foreign Ministers.⁶⁵

The French Government at the same time expressed to the American and Soviet Governments, through its Ambassadors in Washington and Moscow, its desire to conduct similar conversations with them.

Mr. Couve de Murville was sent by the French Government and entrusted with the task of explaining to the Department of State the point of view of the French Government. In the course of meetings, which were held from the 13th to the 20th of November, this point of view has been described in detail as set forth below, on the basis of documents drafted in London (which were communicated to the American authorities) as well as by supplementary explanations which were given by Mr. Couve de Murville in the course of these conversations.

The French point of view.

The main preoccupation of the French Government is security. After the last war nothing was done to infringe the integrity of Germany and the measures of security which were taken, i.e. military occupation, were only planned for a limited period during which there was in fact no chance of Germany becoming a danger to peace. The maintenance of German integrity implied the maintenance of a military Power whose energies were inevitably directed towards revenge and the recovery of territories which Germany had lost as a result of the war. This error must not be repeated.

In the opinion of the French Government, the security of Europe and of the world demands that Germany should lose the free use of the war potential represented by the industry and the resources of the Rheno-Westphalian area. It is also desirable that these rich resources should be utilized in the general interest. Moreover, the security of the west demands that the Rhineland countries should not be able to reconstitute an avenue, an arsenal and the starting point for an attack directed against France and more generally against the western powers. To meet these preoccupations, the French Government does not propose to have recourse to territorial annexation but to exclude from now on the activity of any central German authority from the Rhineland and the Ruhr and to establish in these areas a régime conducive to the objectives indicated above.

Two general principles can at this stage be set out:

(1) Whatever may be the details of the final arrangements, it is most important that a decision of principle should be taken immediately to the effect that these territories should be permanently separated from Germany and that this should be made perfectly clear to the inhabitants by a public declaration. This decision implies that the areas in question would be removed from the authority of the Allied Control Council in Berlin at a date which remains to be fixed but which should be within the shortest possible time.

(2) These territories should not constitute as a whole a single entity either politically or economically. Different regimes must be worked out for each of the areas involved.

Adequate military forces must be permanently stationed in the German territories on the left bank of the Rhine, including perhaps some bridgeheads on the right bank.

Insofar as this occupation is intended to constitute a covering force for France itself, i.e. up to and including Cologne, it would be for France to see to the military organization of the left bank of the Rhine, perhaps in conjunction with Belgium or Luxembourg.

Further north the problem is not of such direct interest to France but rather to Belgium, Holland and to the United Kingdom if the latter considers it appropriate. The object of the Forces of occupation will be primarily strategic. These forces will constitute the outposts of the general defence system of all territory west of the Rhine.

The Rhineland should not form part either of Germany or of France and must be subjected to permanent military occupation. The establishment of a definite status for this area in accordance with these principles will depend on the development of local conditions. There may be a single State subjected to inter-Allied military occupation or there may be two or three States each occupied by the troops of different Allied Powers.

Subject to their accepting the presence of Foreign garrisons and refraining from militarisation and from attempts to rejoin Germany, the Governments of the State or States to be created in the Rhineland would be free to manage their own affairs.

(b) The Saar.

The Saar mines, whose ownership was granted to France by the Treaty of Versailles ⁶⁶ and was regained by Germany in 1935, ⁶⁷ must become once more French property, with the corollary that the territory of the Saar should be included in the French customs and currency system, since the economies of France and the Saar are almost entirely complementary. The final form of government of the territory would be decided in due course. French military forces should be stationed there permanently.

(c) The Ruhr.

The Ruhr area consists of the coal mines and of the factories associated with them. It has a population of about 5 million inhabitants.

The French Government considers that in order to ensure that the natural and industrial resources of this area shall no longer be exploited for military purposes but rather in conformity with the general interest of humanity, it is essential to treat the area not as part of a State or even of a large territory but as a political entity independent from Germany and subjected to an international political and economic régime.

All the countries concerned should participate in the organization of this régime; the States particularly concerned should participate in the selection of the members of the Government, the other interested Powers in some other way.

The local administration should be appointed, so far as possible, by the local population which could also, in due course, participate in the functions of Government.

An international force would be stationed in the territory and its integrity should be guaranteed by all the Powers concerned.

The Ruhr territory would be open to the trade of all countries. It would be served by the international waterway of the Rhine and would in the opinion of the French experts probably be prosperous. There would be no objection to the Ruhr exporting part of its production to the rest of Germany provided, of course, that these exports did not include any kind of war material. The Governing Commission and the Powers which were in a position to direct the Commission's activities could orientate the production of the Ruhr in any direction which seemed desirable. In particular they could take all necessary measures to ensure that the Ruhr did not unfairly compete with other areas with a similar range of production.

⁶⁷ See ibid., pp. 179–180.

The principles of economic disarmament which may be drawn up by the Control Council would be applied in the Ruhr territory in the same way as in Germany. Part of the probable surplus in the Ruhr trading accounts could perhaps be used for a certain period as partpayment for necessary supplies imported into Germany on the basis that such supplies may be calculated by the Control Council.

The mines and the most important industrial enterprises would be expropriated and turned into an international interest. The exploitation of these mines and enterprises and of the mines belonging hitherto to the Reich should be taken over by international public utility undertakings. The interest of the workers should be safeguarded.

It has been made clear by the French experts that the French proposals have not been put forward on economic grounds and that the decisions to be taken depend essentially on political considerations. These questions are dealt with in greater detail in a French memorandum and in British and French comments which are attached to this report.⁶⁸

Such are the outlines of the French proposals concerning the organization of the Rheno-Westphalian area.

The question has been raised of the date at which these arrangements should be put into effect. The French view was that while it is important to agree, as soon as possible, that the whole of these areas should be separated from Germany, there is not the same urgency in coming to a detailed decision with regard to the future status of the Rhineland.

The Ruhr, on the [other?] hand, raises urgent problems, notably with regard to coal production which interests many Powers. The implementation of the Ruhr régime should be undertaken immediately and could be carried out in stages beginning with economic measures.

The International Régime in the Ruhr.

Detailed study was undertaken of the nature of the régime envisaged for the Ruhr with the following results;

(1) Establishment of the Régime.

The international régime of the Ruhr should be laid down by a decision of the four Powers in occupation of Germany. Belgium, Luxembourg and Holland, as Powers directly concerned, should later be invited to associate themselves with this decision.

(2) Objectives.

This decision shall specify that the object with which this régime is established is to ensure that the natural and industrial resources of the Ruhr are no longer exploited for military purposes but in conformity with the general interest of humanity.

⁶⁸ Not attached to file copy.

(3) Area.

The territory subjected to this régime shall be as small as possible and should include particularly the coal basin and the principal industries associated with it. The limits of the area covered by this definition are shown on a map drawn up by the French experts.

(4) Separation from Germany.

The régime envisaged involves the complete and permanent separation of the territory from the German Reich and the establishment of the territory as an entity in international law to be named the Ruhr Territory. The inhabitants of this territory who possessed German nationality would lose it and would have the right to become citizens of the Ruhr Territory. They could, on the other hand, within a period to be fixed opt for German nationality on condition that if they did so they left the Ruhr Territory.

The Governing Commission or an authority appointed by it for this purpose would lay down rules governing the entry into the Ruhr Territory of all persons who left it on the arrival of the forces of the United Nations or who at that date were not habitually resident there. For the future, conditions for the acquisition and loss of Ruhr Territory nationality would be decided by the legislative authorities of the Territory.

(5) Governing Commission.

The question was asked whether the Ruhr should be governed by a body set up through the United Nations Organisation or by a group of States acting outside the Framework of the United Nations Organisation.

The view was expressed, so far as the French representatives were concerned, that the conception of trusteeship could not be applied to the Ruhr and that it would be better to put the régime under international control established by a special agreement between the Powers concerned.

It is clear that the instrument setting up the new régime should be registered with the United Nations Organization.

The government of the Territory should be entrusted to a Governing Commission composed of nine members corresponding to the following list of ministerial departments:

Political Interior
Finance Justice Education Transport
Posts and Public Works
National Economy Labour and Public Health.

The members of this Commission should be appointed by majority decision of the Powers directly concerned. Their appointments should be terminable in the same fashion. They would be appointed for five years and be replaced by rotation. Retiring members would be eligible for re-election. The Commission would decide the functions of each of its members and those which it would carry out itself. The head of the Commission would be appointed by a majority decision of the Powers directly concerned. He would act as the executive of the Commission.

The character of a political régime drawn up on these lines would be determined by the fact that the Governing Commission was entrusted with a political mission with the object of maintaining international security. The members of the Governing Commission would be appointed by certain Governments acting collectively and would not be regarded as the representatives of these Governments but as the members of a collective body whose functions were of international concern.

It is contemplated that in due course the local population might participate in the exercise of government.

(6) Powers of the Commission.

The Commission should have in the Ruhr Territory all the powers of government. Consequently, it could take all legislative and administrative measures which it might judge necessary. It could in particular maintain or modify administrative institutions. It would appoint and dismiss officials and magistrates, some of whom might if necessary be recruited among nationals of foreign countries.

Justice would continue to be administered by the courts existing in the Ruhr Territory at the entry into force of the new régime except that a new Supreme Court would be substituted for the Reichsgericht of Leipzig. The Governing Commission would be able to modify existing judicial arrangements.

As a consequence of the separation of the Ruhr Territory from the German Reich the Governing Commission would take all necessary measures for the replacement of the Reich by the new territory particularly as regards the ownership of goods which were the property of the Reich and it would take all measures necessary for the complete separation of public services such as railways and posts from those of the Reich.

(7) Gendarmerie, Police and Customs.

The Governing Commission should see to the organization of a Gendarmerie and of a police force of the Territory which could be recruited on the spot and would function under its authority.

It would similarly provide for the frontier police whose personnel would at first be partly recruited outside the Territory. A customs administration would also be necessary whose personnel would be in the main recruited locally except for the high officials.

(8) Armed Forces.

In order to ensure internal security in the Ruhr Territory the States directly concerned would put at the disposal of the Governing Commission a military force, whose numbers have been estimated at 50,000, which would be stationed permanently in the Territory.

The upkeep of this force would be paid for by the Territory.

The different contingents would be placed under a single command.

The Commander-in-Chief would be appointed by the Governing Commission in rotation among the generals of the States mentioned in par. 1 of this section and after consultation with the Governments of these States. He would be directly responsible to the Governing Commission.

Air forces (about ten fighter-bomber squadrons) could be put at the disposal of the Governing Commission without being stationed in the Territory.

These armed forces and the persons attached to them who were in possession of an identity document issued by the military command and all those employed by these forces or in their service should be liable only to the military jurisdiction of the force.

All persons accused of a crime against these forces or members of them could be tried before the military courts of these forces.

The Governing Commission would be the only authority capable of declaring martial law. The nature of such martial law would be decided by the legislature of the Territory.

(9) Foreign Relations.

The United Nations would be able to appoint consuls in the Ruhr Territory. It would be for the Governing Commission to grant them an exequatur.

The Governing Commission could arrange for the protection of Ruhr citizens and interests abroad by appointing consular agents who could be nationals of the territory in which they were to function and at a later stage by the appointment of career consuls.

The Governing Commission could also entrust this protection to one of the Powers indicated in Section 5 above.

The Governing Commission would take the necessary steps to arrange for the independent participation of the Ruhr Territory in technical and administrative international unions and commissions and to negotiate economic treaties affecting the Territory.

(10) Supervision and guarantee of the status of the Ruhr Territory. The supervision of the application of the Ruhr regime would be carried out by the Governments who signed the instrument setting it up (See Section 1 above).

These Governments would receive each year an annual report from the Governing Commission on the manner in which its functions had been carried out, and on the situation of the Ruhr Territory.

These Governments would see that the Governing Commission's activities were in conformity with the objective set out in Section 2 above.

These Governments would work out the directives to be given to the Commission.

They would be entitled to receive claims concerning the Ruhr Territory which might be submitted through diplomatic channels and to deal with them in such manner as seemed suitable.

The above mentioned Governments would guarantee the integrity of the Ruhr Territory and would ensure respect for its status. The scope of this guarantee would be in conformity with the provisions of the United Nations Charter.

The Governments which signed the arrangement setting up the Ruhr Territory would draw up from time to time a list of States which should receive copies of the annual report of the Governing Commission by virtue of their importance either as importers or purchasers for the economy of the Ruhr.

The signatory Governments would receive the observations of these States on the report and could invite one or more of these States to take part in their discussions on this subject.

General Observations

The French proposals are based generally on the idea that the only satisfactory way of ensuring that Germany is never again in a position to wage a war of aggression is to remove from German control the mineral and industrial resources of the Ruhr. If Germany is deprived both of Silesia and of the Ruhr she would almost certainly not again present a danger to security.

The proposals with regard to the occupation of the Rhineland are complementary to the proposals with regard to the Ruhr, the establishment and stability of the international regime for the Ruhr being facilitated by the occupation of the Rhineland, in view of the geographical situation of the two areas. The object of the proposals is to deprive Germany of an area which she has more than once used as a base for invasion. It is not intended that the Rhineland should be intensively occupied. The important thing is that the Allies should have the facility of stationing troops on the Rhine over its whole length.

It would be of great importance to estimate the reactions of the population both in the Ruhr and in the rest of Germany to the introduction of proposals on the above lines but it is practically impossible to do so in advance.

The French view is in general that the Germans will be discontented with any possible settlement of Germany and will inevitably harbor feelings of revenge. It is only by removing the Ruhr from the control of Germany that these feelings could be prevented from assuming practical expression in a new outbreak of militarism and aggression.

If the proposals were to be introduced, the sooner this could be done the better since in the present state of Germany less violent reactions would be expected than when the Germans had recovered to a greater extent.

The administration of the Ruhr would have to be carried out in such a way as to make the new regime as attractive as possible to the inhabitants. This would involve, e.g. allowing them a higher standard of living than the rest of Germany, but it is not intended that the programme of removal of plant for reparations from the Ruhr Territory should be modified if these proposals are put into effect. It would also naturally be desirable to allow the inhabitants of the Ruhr as much freedom as possible in running the affairs of the territory, but it would be most undesirable to hold out any hope to them that they might eventually become independent of international control.

The introduction of the French proposals would not enable the Powers occupying Germany to reduce their forces immediately in case the separation of the Ruhr and the Rhineland might lead to local unrest in Germany. But it would enable the occupying Powers to reduce the duration of the occupation of the rest of Germany, since Germany would, without the Ruhr and the Rhineland, be unable to develop her military power. (This does not take account of the other purposes of occupation, such as the reeducation of the German people and the installation of a democratic government.)

The most dangerous thing would be if a new regime were set up in the Ruhr on the lines of the French proposals and then at a later stage, owing to disagreement between the Controlling Powers or for some other reason, the regime were abandoned. For if this resulted in the reincorporation of the Ruhr Territory in Germany the latter would, at a stroke, reacquire her richest industrial area in a state of far greater prosperity than if it had never been separated.

Supplementary Observations

(a) The American representatives inquired whether, in evolving a plan for separation from Germany, it was possible to (1) combine the Ruhr and the Rhineland in one state, or (2) form an independent state of the Ruhr rather than establish an international regime.

It was pointed out on the French side that a state comprising the Ruhr and Rhineland, with a population of about 15,000,000 inhabitants and disposing of enormous resources, would constitute a powerful state which would be difficult to control and which would inevitably tend to unite again with Germany, once the latter had recuperated. Furthermore, it was emphasized that the Ruhr was not a political entity and possessed none of the characteristics (population, traditions, common aspirations, etc.) which constitute the basis of an independent state. Finally, the French Government considered it would be right that the richest region of Europe should never again be allowed to become an instrument of war, but should be used, under international control, in the interest of common welfare.

- (b) The question was raised by the American participants as to the economic effect of separation of this region on the Central Germany that would remain. The opinion of the French delegation was that considerable economic resources would remain to a Central Germany sufficient for its peace-time economy. As Germany was over-industrialized, the removal of the highly industrialized Ruhr would not be of such consequence for the remnant Germany as might have been anticipated. Furthermore, the French plan envisaged the maintenance of important economic relations between the Rhineland-Ruhr regions and the rest of Germany, including the use of Ruhr export surpluses initially to pay for necessary German imports.
- (c) The American representatives inquired what the relationship would be between the governing body of the Ruhr and the organization which would be over it in which additional states would participate. The reply was given that the precise form could not be worked out until the views of the three governments were known. Presumably, the participating states would agree on the general policy to be pursued.
- (d) Inquiry was made respecting the ownership of Ruhr mines and large industrial plants and also respecting development corporations. The French delegation replied that (1) these properties should be taken away from the former owners, among whom are found the Prussian state and war criminals, in order that they can be removed from German control and utilized for the common good; (2) with this end in view, development corporations especially for coal and steel should be established; (3) the shares of these corporations should be given to Allied countries participating in the regime or with a claim to German reparations.

Other questions asked during the course of the conversations gave an opportunity to the French representative to develop in more detail the views of his Government as expressed in this report.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State

[Washington,] November 20, 1945.

Participants: The Secretary of State

Couve de Murville, Political Director of the French Foreign Office

Mr. de Murville called to see the Secretary at 11:30 a.m. They discussed briefly the trouble de Gaulle is having in forming his Cabinet and the Secretary said he understood how difficult it would be to find an appropriate post for the head of the opposition party.

The Secretary inquired about Mr. Bidault and told Mr. de Murville of his high regard for him, stating he is courageous, intelligent and energetic. The Secretary asked to be remembered to him.

The Secretary mentioned the Council of Foreign Ministers and said that it did not look as though the Council would meet again soon, but that we are still in touch with the Russians on the principal issues and there is still hope for compromise.

The situation in Germany was brought up and Mr. de Murville said that was the very thing he wishes to discuss. The Secretary said the U.S. had agreed to go ahead with the currency, transportation and administrative systems and he did not want to be in the position of not fulfilling our agreement. The Secretary said he expected to communicate with the British and Russian Governments to advise them that the French did not feel they could go along, and express the willingness of the U.S. to go along and install the plan in the other three zones if they wish to.

The Secretary mentioned reparations and said he was not fully informed on this, but it was his recollection that the Commission was to have started its work by Dec. 15th. Mr. de Murville said the work was already under way and that the Soviets have already been given many plants—the Krupp and some others. The Secretary remarked that this is probably all they can move anyway, and that we have had no complaint about reparations.

With regard to restitution, 60 Mr. de Murville said France would want what was taken in France, but did not object to what was being given to other countries.

Mr. de Murville outlined to the Secretary the French proposal for Western Germany—which he said he had discussed fully with Mr. Dunn—and expressed the view that the French disliked having the Russian influence so near to the French frontier. If the decision reached at Potsdam with regard to control of Germany is carried out, it will prejudice the future chances of changing later on to a plan more agreeable to the French. Mr. de Murville mentioned that the French had received no counter-proposal to their proposal and urged that the Secretary give their plan consideration.

The Secretary said he would talk with Mr. Dunn about it, that he is willing to go into it to see if it is feasible and give him an answer.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in France (Caffery)

Washington, November 21, 1945—4 p.m.

5429. For Angell, No. 42. On basis of OSS 70 study reurtel 6676 71 from Angell 64 we estimate additional deficit imposed by Ruhr-Rhineland separation of order of RM 1645 million at 1936 prices. We feel French proposals in fact require either scrapping Potsdam reparations formula or rapid if not simultaneous rebuilding with foreign capital of rump Germany. Only industries in rump area capable of providing exports for long run independence envisaged are machinery and chemicals. Russian removals from that area have almost certainly compromised already necessary long-run level. Although discussions here have not been concerned with economic detail, French appear to underestimate role of Ruhr as capital export area within Altreich which position was normally balanced by internal invisible items (e.g., government and banking services) which would be denied under proposed scheme. This is for your information in technical exchanges and is not to be given the French as Dept view, which has not been formulated on this issue.

Discussions here have been in broad terms with French tendency to admit existence of difficulties but to regard them as soluble and of secondary importance as compared with alleged security advantages. U.S. role in discussions has been purely exploratory designed to elicit basis for report to Secretary. For your guidance head-on meeting of views is reserved for later meeting of major powers.

Washington, November 21, 1945.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: You will recall that at our meeting on November 6 I urged that the War Department be informed of the State

⁷¹ Dated November 18, p. 895.

Department attitude toward the French proposal to internationalize the Ruhr-Rhineland. I also urged that the French Government be pressed to agree in the Allied Control Council to the establishment of German central administrative machinery, as called for by the Berlin Protocol.

The Berlin Protocol requires the Allied Control Council to complete by February 2, 1946 determination of industrial capital equipment unnecessary for the German peace economy and therefore available for reparations.⁷² It is manifestly impossible for the Office of Military Government to negotiate and agree with the other members of the Control Council upon these matters in the absence of guidance from the United States Government concerning the areas of Germany for which a peacetime economy is to be planned. If the Ruhr and Rhineland are not to constitute an integral portion of the German economy it is essential that the Office of Military Government be so informed immediately in order that decisions concerning reparations removals may be made in the light of that fact.

I understand that you have invited representatives of the French Government to discuss the Ruhr-Rhineland question in Washington. However, I hope that you will find it possible immediately to provide the War Department with the policy as to the geographical limits of Germany which would guide the Office of Military Government in making decisions with regard to reparation removals.

With respect to the refusal of the French to agree with the other members of the Control Council to establish German central administrative machinery, I urge that the Department of State bring to bear upon the French Government all requisite pressures in order to effectuate the mandate of the Berlin Protocol. I am of the opinion that unless such agencies are established promptly, there is grave danger of a breakdown of the provisions of the Berlin Protocol with respect to treatment of Germany as an economic unit. Should the French continue to impede development of central German agencies, particularly in the fields of finance, transport, communications, foreign trade and industry, the very basis of the quadripartite administration in Germany might well be jeopardized.

I was gratified that in our meeting of November 6, 1945 you agreed that some action would have to be taken. I should very much appreciate receiving advice from you concerning the steps which are being taken by the State Department to bring about the desired result.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

The Ambassador in France (Caffery) to the Secretary of State

Paris, November 24, 1945—9 a.m. [Received November 26—9:45 a.m.]

6779. From Angell No. 80. Discussion of economic problems Ruhr-Rhineland separation on November 19 and 20 centered on effect of separation on rump Germany. On basis of OSS study we presented view that separation would have most serious consequences German balance of payments. We offered view informally that additional deficit would be between RM 1500 and 2000 million in 1936 prices even if pre-war exports of chemicals and machinery were maintained. We raised question whether this would not, in French view, involve radical revision of reparation program.

Reply was made that situation of rump Germany would certainly be serious but on basis French figures additional deficit would approximate RM 500 million and might be further reduced by exports of surplus electricity. In addition, French stress fact that potential Ruhr surplus will be available to aid rump Germany in transition period.

Difference in estimates due chiefly to French view that rump Germany will have food surplus for export. Discussion of figures leads us to conclude French estimates seriously in error.

Memorandum detailing French estimates reference rump Germany transmitted to us November 22 and airpouched to you. Additional French material with regard to Ruhr industry and trade promised and may be subject of another meeting.

General tenor of French statements consistent with that indicated in urtel 5429 (for Angell No. 42). In particular, French argue that separation need have no serious effect on reparation removals. Alphand, however, stated that French position is attempt to meet anticipated Russian insistence that Potsdam formula be strictly applied. French would be glad to see this formula relaxed, assuming Rhine-Ruhr separation, if other powers agree.

We concur in your conclusions that separation of Rhine-Ruhr area in terms conceived by French would be inconsistent with applications of Potsdam reparations formula to rump Germany [Angell.]

3. In absence of a central German transport agency, US and Russian members considered certain proposals of the Transport Directorate as premature which would have set up a system for the exchange of information on roads throughout Germany and would have provided for the issuance of uniform directives to the railroad administrations. French member explained that the question of central agencies was being dealt with on a governmental basis and that he had no information on results of discussions in London and Washington.⁷³ General Clay stated that the failure to establish a central transport agency had resulted in a severe economic set-back and had reduced the quantities of coal available for liberated areas. He declared US was prepared to enter into tripartite agreement for the establishment of central administrations.74 Russian member made the important statement that he was unable to negotiate such a separate agreement since the Potsdam decisions called for central organs for all four zones. Consideration of report was indefinitely deferred. Similar views were expressed with respect to a proposal for the establishment of a statistical agency. It was withdrawn from the agenda.

French views on Ruhr and Rhineland to the US, but that the very searching questions which State Dept officials had posed had obligated the French further to clarify their own thoughts on German question. - 6913. From Angell No. 100. A final meeting held November 27 on economic aspects Ruhr-Rhineland separation. Present for France, Alphand, Couve de Murville, Rueff.
- a. US conferees expressed concern over effect of separation on rump Germany. Particular attention was called to apparent French error in supposing rump Germany would be food surplus area rather than serious deficit area as US estimates suggest. Point was also made that reparation removal program would require radical revision. Difficult to envisage any substantial removals from rump Germany. Removals from Ruhr also might need reduction because of necessity to procure by foreign exports or domestic production goods and services formerly procured in Germany.
- b. Alphand replied that French view of effect of separation was less pessimistic. It appeared clear however French conferees are prepared to give more serious attention to these problems in future.
- c. French conferees were asked whether they had considered attainment of security objectives in western Germany by measures involving less drastic economic rupture. Alphand appeared to consider present French proposals on economic side essential to success of plan. Couve de Murville gave impression that substantial modification present proposals was possible in direction of maintaining economic bonds between western and central Germany. US conferees explained that such modification would necessarily involve customs and monetary questions and also extremely difficult problems of management of Ruhr industries.

- 2. Following general points are made in connection with technical discussions.
- a. Technical conversations with French experts have resulted in no further elucidation of their views beyond points included above and in earlier messages. French analysis of economic effects on rump Germany and of economic problems of independent Ruhr has not proceeded as far as existing Washington studies. French do not appear to be prepared at present time to go deeply into economic aspects of subject. Hence, we intend to discontinue further discussion unless otherwise directed.
- b. In our view, greatest difficulties caused by plan are effects of separation on standard of living, and possible capital removals from rump Germany. On assumption that commodity exports from rump Germany to outside world (including separated areas) continue on pre-war basis, we estimate probable foreign trade deficit between RM 1.0 and 1.5 billion after allowing for maximum reduction of imports of textiles, coal and food. Deficit would be increased by RM 1.1 billion were Germany deprived of plant and equipment required to produce exports of chemicals and machinery at 1936 level. On the other hand, were exports of these commodities allowed there probably could be little or no removal of plants in these industries.
- c. On assumption that commodity exports from rump Germany continue on pre-war basis, basic difficulty in balancing rump Germany's foreign balance is loss of invisible exports to Ruhr-Rhineland. This suggested that an alternative plan for Ruhr-Rhineland to meet French objectives and avoid foreign balance difficulty would need to be sought along lines of permanent occupation and economic management without disturbing fiscal, customs, monetary and financial ties with rest of Germany.
- d. We urge that any further negotiations on subject of Ruhr-Rhineland be held at earliest possible moment since it is possible to envisage satisfactory determination of extent and character of capital removals without decision on disposition of these territories.
- e. We suggest initiation of general study of effect of separation on removals possible from Ruhr, Rhineland and rump Germany respectively with special attention to foreign trade aspects.

6950. The question of the Rhineland and the Ruhr continues to agitate public opinion in France and the Nationalist and pro-de Gaulle press has given considerable attention to the recent reports of Mr. Byron Price ⁷⁶ and General Eisenhower ⁷⁷ which blame France for blocking efforts to create certain central organizations in Germany. President Truman's press conference of November 30 ⁷⁸ in which he referred to possibility of revising Potsdam Agreement is interpreted with alarm in many circles as forecasting a move by US to eliminate "veto" for any one power on ACC in Berlin. There is also tendency to consider drop in coal shipments from US and Ruhr as pressure tactics.

It is of considerable significance that Socialist leader Leon Blum in midst of important debates on nationalization of credit devotes his leading editorial in Populaire of December 2 to "Franco-American tension". Close summary of this article follows.

Blum refers to "serious reports" from US which may increase tension between France and that great Republic. He points out that this tension contrary to predictions from certain circles is not the result of important place given to Communists in new Govt nor of plans for nationalization of certain industries but is connected with German affairs. American Govt and American people, says Blum, blame France for blocking measures for setting up certain central administrations in Germany which other three Allies consider essential to prevent chaos developing from present disorder.

Chief argument of French Govt, continues Blum, is: "The centralization plan comes out of Potsdam. We were not invited and consequently we will have nothing to do with it." Blum considers this reasoning is hard to defend. France naturally must reserve her right to criticize and question any decisions in which she did not December 2, 1945, p. 885.

This third report on military government in Germany, released to the press November 1, General Eisenhower attributed the failure to achieve a unified system of administration for Germany to the unwillingness of the French to agree to the establishment of central administrative agencies; see New York Times, November 1, 1945, p. 1, col. 4.

take part but she must not consider all such decisions as necessarily wrong and inacceptable.

Blum also questions tactics of Couve de Murville in Washington which he describes as attempting to trade French abandonment of its veto in Berlin for acceptance by US of French views on Rhineland and Ruhr. Such tactics may harm rather than help French chances of achieving its aims.

Blum then argues that administrative centralization of Germany should be studied on its merits. He feels that all difficulties in Germany arise from fatal mistake of creating four zones of occupation instead of setting up a joint Allied occupation. (Emb No. 3832, June 25.79) The Allied Control Commission in Berlin is the only corrective to the harmful system of separate zones and France should do everything in its power to facilitate its work until such time as the Security Council of UNO ²⁰ can take over. In this matter as in all others only internal organization can offer real solution.

While Communist press has given little attention to problem discussed above it has naturally supported Potsdam Agreement and indicated its disapproval of French attitude at Berlin in opposing wishes of "Big Three". Question of separate Rhineland state has been completely ignored and no clear opinion has been expressed on interna[tional]ization of Ruhr.

Mr. Berard, Counselor of the French Embassy, came in this morning to discuss the next steps with respect to the French proposals for the Rhineland-Ruhr. He said that Mr. Alphand was now in Moscow to carry out the same mission which Mr. Couve de Murville had done in London and Washington. The French Embassy here had no information respecting the outcome of these discussions but would inform me when anything was received. It was anticipated that the conversations in Moscow would not take over a week.

Mr. Berard then said that the French Government was of the opinion that when the conversations in Moscow had been completed a four-power meeting should be held to discuss this question in the light of all the information and explanations that had now been provided. The French Government did not envisage a meeting necessarily on

It hoped that the American Government would agree to this procedure and suggested that perhaps it would be possible to designate the respective Ambassadors in Paris as representatives to such a meeting. Experts on the various questions involved could no doubt be attached to the representatives in such manner as each government deemed appropriate.

Mr. Berard said that the French Government would like to have this meeting as soon as possible after the conclusion of the Moscow conversations and that General de Gaulle hoped the American Government would give its sympathetic and immediate consideration to this proposal.

I told Mr. Berard that I thought Mr. Couve de Murville had suggested approximately the same procedure to Mr. Dunn during the course of the conversations here. Mr. Dunn had been called away rather suddenly and we consequently had not as yet given consideration to the question of the possible meeting. I said that we were also awaiting the outcome of the French discussions in Moscow. Therefore, we had not as yet taken up the question of the meeting, but in view of the French suggestions that I would bring it to the attention of the Secretary at once. I told Mr. Berard that after discussions here we would communicate with him again.

Dear Mr. Secretary: On November 21, 1945 I pointed out to you the importance of bringing to bear all requisite pressures upon the French Government in order to effectuate the mandate of the Berlin Protocol with respect to the establishment of central German administrative machinery. Since the dispatch of my letter, the Report of Mr. Byron Price has been circulated by the President to the Secretaries of State, War, and Navy. You will note that Mr. Price recommends that the "full force and prestige of American diplomatic power" be used to break the present deadlock in the Allied Control Council for Germany.

I should like, therefore, to emphasize again the urgency with which the War Department views this matter and I renew my recommendation that all channels open to the State Department in the political and economic fields be used to exert pressure upon the French Government to cooperate in the development of central German agencies, particularly in the fields of finance, transport, communications, foreign trade and industry. I should like to suggest as well that full publicity be given to such efforts in order to mobilize the support of American and world public opinion behind such efforts.

7115. There is increasing concern in all French circles over the tension which has arisen between France and the United States concerning the question of centralized administrations in Germany. Upon the conclusion of Couve de Murville's visit to Washington the French press led the public to believe that the United States had not adopted a definite position of opposition to the French views on the separation of the Ruhr and the Rhineland from the rest of Germany if a workable arrangement could be found, and that we would be willing to sit down at a four power conference to examine the French proposal prior to dealing with the central administration question. In the light [of the?] recent press presentation, however, the French now believe that the United States is taking the lead in trying to persuade a reluctant Britain and a reluctant Russia to set up central administrative organizations immediately in the three zones, thus excluding France.

This belief has, of course, been greatly encouraged by statements attributed to various British officials published in the French press to the effect that the British are anxious to adopt no policy or program in Germany which does not have French approval. Furthermore, concerning the forthcoming Big Three meeting in Moscow 82 the French press has given wide publicity to statements by British officials that "the Big Three meeting was a result of Washington's initiative and that Britain will see to it that no matters are discussed at Moscow which affect French interests". The implication that Bevin will pose in Moscow as the defender of French interests, has thus been pointedly made.83

The Soviet views on the French proposals on the Ruhr and Rhineland, as indicated by the French Communist organ Humanité, have for the past several weeks been reserved but not hostile although the French policy in blocking central administrations in Germany has been mildly criticized as contrary to the Potsdam Agreement. In the past several days there have been significant phrases in several articles hinting that Moscow does not oppose the principle of internationalization of the Ruhr. (The Rhineland is not mentioned.) This morning, however, the Soviet stand is considerably clarified by the following front page headline in Humanité: "In Germany Joukov 84 is against the establishment of a central administration without France". The article then quotes Associated Press despatch stating: "Joukov has informed General Clay at Berlin that he cannot accept the United States proposal announced recently by Mr. Byrnes to establish in Germany a central Tripartite Govt excluding France. Marshal Joukov stated that the Committee did not have the authority to take such a decision. Montgomery for England adopted the same position." (Also Humanité's leading editorial this morning on the coming Big Three meeting at Moscow devotes great space to proving that the Big Three and particularly Russia have always in past istration in Germany.

83 In a memorandum of conversation of December 11, Mr. James W. Riddle-berger reported that Mr. Berard, Counselor of the French Embassy, told him that "The French Government now thought that Mr. Bevin, the British Foreign Secretary, was more and more inclined to favor the French proposals. Berard thought that in the British Foreign Office there still remained a faction which would oppose the French proposals on the old and historic British principle of supporting the weak and opposing the strong on the Continent. He thought, however, Bevin was now inclined to go along with the French ideas." Mr. Riddleberger observed in his memorandum: "I listened to all this without comment." The purpose of Mr. Beard's visit had been to leave with the Department a summary of French press reaction to the Secretary's recent statement on central German agencies and French opposition thereto. meetings tried to improve France's international position. The Joukov statement above is cited as evidence that Russia has no intention of isolating France.)

Thus by the presentation of the alleged Russian and British views on the German question, the French are being led increasingly to believe that while Great Britain and Soviet Russia are sympathetic to the French views on Germany, the United States alone is strongly opposed to them and is doing everything it can to make Britain and Russia oppose France.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of War (Patterson)

Washington, December 12, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: In reply to your letter of November 21, 1945, I am now in a position to give you additional information respecting the French proposals on the Rhineland-Ruhr regions.

A series of meetings with the French delegation, lead by Mr. Couve de Murville, were held during the period from November 13 to 20, 1945. In the course of these conversations the French representatives developed their views and replied to a number of questions put to them by officials of this Department. At the end of the meeting, a joint report was prepared, a copy of which I take pleasure in sending you with this letter. You will observe from the report that no definite statement of the American attitude on these proposals was given to Mr. Couve de Murville while he was here.

It is readily apparent from the report that the French proposals would involve a reexamination of the Potsdam Declaration and its possible amendment. This Government could obviously not agree to any unilateral action on its part which would change the Potsdam Agreement. This point of view was made clear to the French delegation and well understood by them.

By agreement in the Council of Foreign Ministers in London, the French Government was to be given the opportunity of presenting its views in London, Washington and Moscow. The proposals have been presented in London and Washington, but I believe that the discussions in Moscow have not been completed. The Department of State does not desire to express a definite opinion on this question until the French Government has completed its conversations and until the American Government has had an opportunity to discuss the matter with the other signatories to the Potsdam Agreement. Therefore, I cannot at this time give a categorical answer to paragraph 3 of your letter of November 21.

With respect to the establishment of central administrative agencies in Germany, I believe that the War Department has already authorized the American representative on the Control Council to carry out the Potsdam decision with or without the participation of the French.⁸⁷ The French delegation was informed in the course of conversations in Washington that this Government was obligated to implement these decisions and was not disposed to change its position.

I think, therefore, that the American representative on the Control Council should be instructed again to urge the adoption of the Potsdam decisions on the establishment of central administrative agencies as soon as the French conversations in Moscow have been completed.

peace-time economy must be planned, I note your statement that you cannot, at this time, give a categorical answer. In this connection, I invite your attention to a memorandum prepared in the Department of State, entitled "The Reparation Settlement and the Peacetime Economy of Germany",93 which was transmitted to me by the Secretary of State on November 30, 1945. In paragraph 4 of that memorandum, the State Department advised that, for the purpose of determining the industrial capacity of the peace-time German economy, "it should be assumed that the geographical limits of Germany are those in conformity with provisions of the Berlin Protocol, i.e., those of the Altreich, less the territory east of the Oder-Neisse line". This guidance has been transmitted to the Office of Military Government for Germany. In the light of the comment in your letter that you cannot give a categorical answer to the War Department concerning this important matter, I should appreciate confirmation of the guidance furnished in the memorandum transmitted by the State Department on November 30, 1945.

In accordance with the last paragraph of your letter, the War Department will be pleased to transmit appropriate instructions to the Office of Military Government for Germany after receipt from you of advice that the French conversations in Moscow have been completed. However, as I pointed out in my letter of November 21, 1945, and again in my letter of December 10, 1945, in which I called to your attention the recommendation of Mr. Byron Price that the full force and prestige of American diplomatic power be used to break the present dead-lock in the Allied Control Council for Germany, the War Department is gravely disturbed by the danger that continued refusal of the French Government to agree to the establishment of central administrative machinery in Germany may result in a breakdown of the provisions of the Berlin Protocol with respect to treatment of Germany as an economic unit.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: A reply to your letter of December 10 was deferred for the reason that my letter of December 12, 1945 on the subject of the French proposals for the Rhineland-Ruhr region evidently crossed your communication to me. In the meantime, I have received your letter of December 28, 1945 on the same subject.

For your information, I may say that the French proposals were not discussed during the recent Moscow meetings and therefore there has been no further progress on this matter in so far as the American Government is concerned. M. Alphand, who was sent to Moscow by the French Government to present its proposals to the Soviet Government, had not concluded his conversations there at the time of the conference of the three Foreign Ministers. I have now learned that these conversations have been concluded.

The French Government has requested that a meeting of the four occupying powers of Germany be held in Paris in the near future for the purpose of considering the French proposals after having been discussed in London, Washington and Moscow. The Department of State has not replied to this invitation as the Moscow conference intervened.

As the French representative has concluded his conversations in Moscow, I regard it as probable that at the forthcoming meetings in London 94 informal conversations between the four Governments concerned may take place. The French Government has not to date urged this Department for a reply to its proposal for a meeting in Paris. I shall not fail to inform you of any developments that may arise in this question of the Rhineland-Ruhr.

With respect to the third paragraph of your letter of December 28, 1945, I can confirm the guidance furnished in the State Department memorandum of November 30, 1945 respecting the geographical areas of Germany for the purpose of determining the industrial capacity of the peacetime German economy. Unless and until there has been a modification of German frontiers, this Government must necessarily base its policy on the Potsdam decisions and earlier agreements respecting the occupation of Germany.

In reply to the concluding paragraph of your letter of December 28, 1945, I should like to remark that the American Government has made its attitude altogether clear with respect to the present deadlock in the Control Council for Germany on the creation of central German agencies. The American position was explained with force and clarity to Mr. Couve de Murville at the time he presented the French proposals in Washington. However, the Agreement on Control Machinery for Germany stipulates that the decisions of the Control Council must be unanimous.⁹⁵ You will no doubt recall that at the time when this agreement was being negotiated in the European Advisory Commission in London, the War Department was emphatic in its insistence on this principle,⁹⁶ which was, with the approval of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, subsequently included in the agreement.

It should also be recalled that under Article 1 of the Agreement on Control Machinery "Supreme authority in Germany will be exercised . . . by the Commanders-in-Chief of the armed forces of the U.S.A., the U.S.A., the U.S.S.R. and France, each in his own zone of occupation, and also jointly in matters affecting Germany as a whole It seems to the Department of State, therefore, that if it is not possible to obtain unanimity in the Control Council on the question of central German agencies, it would still be possible to create these agencies in the zones controlled by the signatories to the Potsdam protocol. It was for this reason that the American Representative on the Control Council was authorized to carry out the Potsdam decision with or without the participation of the French.

It is still the opinion of the Department of State that the American Representative on the Control Council should be instructed again to urge the adoption of the Potsdam decisions on the establishment of central administrative agencies.

Sincerely yours.

DEVELOPMENTS OF ADMINISTRATIVE AND POLITICAL SIGNIFICANCE RELATING TO THE UNITED STATES ZONE IN GERMANY **

740.00119 Control (Germany)/1-1045

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs (Riddleberger)

Versailles, January 10, 1945.

Dear Jimmie: There has been a slight delay in receiving your letter of December 4 99 as it was mislaid during my absence from London.¹

offissions indicated in the original communication.

For documentation concerning participation by the United States in the work of the European Advisory Commission, which established the zones of occupation in Germany, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 100 ff.; also ante, pp. 1 ff. Documentation relating to the U.S. zone in Germany is contained in Foreign Relations, The Conference of Berlin (The Potsdam Conference), 1945, vols. 1 and II.

This letter, not printed, dealt with several topics. The most pertinent in the present context described the disinclination of the War Department to agree to Murphy's having a large office separate from the Control Council organization. Mr. Riddleberger inquired if Murphy had any strong feelings as to whether his [Murphy's] staff should be in a separate office under him or in the Political Division of the Control Council. (HICOG Files; 1944–49: Ambassador Murphy Correspondence)

¹The U.S. Group, Control Council for Germany, was located in the London area, where it had been activated during October 1944. This body was the U.S.

I am certainly most grateful to you for all the helpful interest you have taken in getting this little show of ours started in life. Things are now much better on the London end. My principal disappointment is our failure to get one of the officers now at AFHQ,2 . . . during these past weeks for duty at SHAEF Main, in France. What has been needed there is an experienced officer who knows the ways and wiles of a large headquarters, specializing on the German business, so that he could be on tap at all times that SHAEF takes decisions regarding Germany. This has been practically every day. SHAEF refers the least possible to Washington and the CCS 3 because sometimes CCS may take months to answer. That's just fine but as the pattern of policy may thus be laid by day to day decisions in the MG 4 field, PWD 5 matters, etc., a member of my staff should be here when I am on the other side. On January 20 the advance echelon of the US Group CC moves over here and some of our personnel will move with the advance party. I spend as much time as possible here but when in London all I have here is a corporal. . . .

Now, about the War Department's objection to giving me a large office which will be separate and apart from the Control Council establishment, it seems to me that the approach is wrong. I would never have emphasized the need of a "large" office. Obviously WD 6 would shrink from that one. All I have said is that there is need for the Department to have its own channel of communication between it and its principal representative in Germany. The position of Political Adviser you will recall is placed in the organization outline of the tripartite control machinery on the top level, as distinguished from the Political Division—one of the 12 divisions.

Most certainly the UK, USSR and France will insist on their Political Advisers having direct communication with their FOs. They have done so in all other areas. The first thing that the Russians did on arriving in Italy was to set up their own radio link with the FO in Moscow.8 I wouldn't talk about size. If we have our own communications privilege, then obviously we shall need staff. Cipher clerks alone will amount to eight or ten at least I imagine. You go on from there and build as you go. If on the other hand, you engage with the WD in discussion about TO, the matter is placed on a military basis and you won't get anywhere. The Department's representative must be on the top level, as well as in the lower bracket and we must fight any tendency to put us entirely in a subordinate position. Unconsciously some army people will do that; others may do it consciously. Don't forget that there may be a tendency on the part of some officers to eliminate civilian participation as far as they can.

It should be remembered too that the Political Division of the CC will be a staff section whose communications should pass through the commanding officer in charge. That means technically that if the latter did not approve the transmission of a given item, he could prevent its transmission. Naturally I don't believe that would happen and certainly with our present relationship in the Group with General Wickersham, the Acting Deputy in charge, there is absolutely no difficulty, but we must guard against the future possibility.

I shall be perfectly happy to work out this problem on the spot and would prefer that no large issue be raised with the WD at this time about it. But, on the point about an independent communications channel between the Department and its chief representative we should be adamant. I am told that OWI ¹⁰ has raised the same question about its representatives, but I think they are in a different category and the Department, as the senior governmental agency, is definitely an exception to the regular rule about channels.

Military developments have thrown out of gear many tentative schedules including our own. In certain respects, looking at the progress made in planning and the personnel available for the American participation in the control machinery—I don't refer only to the State Department personnel but also army and navy, the delay in that connection may be considered an act of charity.¹¹

Yours ever, Bob Murphy

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

[Versailles?] February 11, 1945. [Received February 20.]

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that US Group CC was approached, through SHAEF, by the 12th Army Group concerning the latter's proposal that two military districts in the U.S. Zone be set up instead of the four which are based on existing Wehrkreise as originally planned. Under this proposal the two Wehrkreise into which Bavaria is divided would be combined into a single military district ("District A"), and the other two Wehrkreise, which include the states of Hessen, Hessen-Nassau, Württemberg and Baden, would be combined into a second military district ("District B"). Each military district would be under an Army rather than a Corps command.

The interested Divisions of US Group CC were circularized for their opinion regarding the 12th Army Group proposal, and their views were incorporated into a report to General Wickersham, a copy of which is enclosed. Reference is made in this report to the comments submitted by the Political Division. The complete text of these comments, which may be of interest to the Department, is as follows:

"1. It appears that the question of whether there should be a 4 or a 2 district organization of the U.S. Zone is a matter to be determined primarily by military considerations, although the U.S. authorities in Washington would doubtless be interested in the political results particularly as they affect the program of decentralization in Germany.

2. Under either arrangement apparently Bavaria would be a unified district for military government purposes, which is believed to be desirable from the standpoint of fostering possible Bavarian autonomy.

3. If the 2-district plan is adopted on military grounds, it is believed that certain special steps should nevertheless be taken to encourage decentralization within the district to the west of Bavaria. This western district might be found fairly unwieldy for military government purposes and the populations are not held together by the same degree of local feeling as the Bavarians. It is therefore suggested that within the single district which would be set up for military administrative purposes, autonomy and decentralization might initially be fostered by placing Württemberg, Baden, Hessen and Hessen-Nassau each under separate military government administrations. If consistent with military procedure this arrangement would seem to be desirable from a political point of view." ¹⁸

Paris, February 24, 1945.

DEAR Doc: I think you will be interested in the enclosed paraphrases of a telegram of February 20 14 from General Hilldring 15 in the War Department to Generals McSherry 16 and Wickersham, as well as a reply from General McSherry for General Hilldring sent on February 22.17 These concern a misunderstanding under which General Hilldring seems to be laboring to the effect that SHAEF officers regard the future Control Council as an advisory rather than a policy determining and operating body and that the U.S. zonal authorities would use their own judgment whether they would accept and follow agreed policy established in the Control Council, and also that the U.S. Zone would be run as a separate entity. All of this relates to the post-defeat period. Bedell Smith 18 took vigorous exception to Hilldring's telegram. General McSherry denies that such a situation prevails.

I don't know what is at the root of General Hilldring's misunderstanding but it might be interesting for Jimmie Riddleberger to look into it. General Hilldring has written several letters on the subject to different officers here and apparently persists in the notion that American officers in London and at SHAEF are either sabotaging or misconstruing JCS 1067.18a I don't know where General Hilldring

1527. SfAmb from Dunn.²⁰ Please request your military adviser to make available to you War Department cable no. WARX 40618 of February 20²¹ to Eisenhower for McSherry repeated to SHAEF Rear for information for Wickersham from Hilldring. This cable discusses the questions raised in your 1278, February 5, 11 p. m.²² respecting an apparent divergence of views which has arisen in recent months over American participation in the control of Germany. The replies to the War Department cable cited above are contained in SHAEF Main telegram S-79987, February 22 to War Department 21 repeated to SHAEF Rear for Wickersham and telegram RR-16236 of February 23 from SHAEF Rear to War Department.²³

These War Department cables will help to eliminate any misunderstandings that may have arisen. Furthermore the War Department is in entire agreement with the necessity of strengthening the authority of the Control Council as to nationwide policies and overall directives. This policy of central, coordinated administration and control was agreed upon by the heads of the three Governments at the Crimean Conference.24

> London, March 10, 1945-9 p. m. [Received March 11—1:10 a.m.]

2525. From Heath.²⁵ Attention Ambassador Murphy. General McSherry of G-5 SHAEF and Colonel Kutz 26 of G-3 SHAEF met in United States Group CC this morning with regard to their criticism of the basic plan of United States Group CC as assuming too prominent a role for Control Council, and the United States group, as against the Zone command's responsibility, control and freedom of action. After discussion with General Wickersham, however, agreement was reached that there should be no conflict between United States Group CC and Military Government and other divisions of SHAEF, but they would reconcile all differences through close consultation and cooperation. (Reference my 2325 of March 7, 1 p. m. and Department's 1785 of March 8, midnight.27) On General McSherry's plea, however, that in the initial state it would be necessary to have all orders pass through the military command of the zone, both by reason of the presumed impairment of normal German governmental channels and in order to prevent any sabotage of military government, it was agreed that paragraph 17 of the group's basic plan be revised to specify that only military channels of communication would be used until further instructions had been received. Previously this provision contemplated direct communication on technical matters between the United States element and the Control Council and Military Government of other officers of the United States zone.

General McSherry withdrew some of the criticisms of the basic plan of the group which were quoted in my telegram under reference. It was agreed that a staff study would be made to perfect liaison and cooperation between the American element of the Control Council of which United States Group CC is the nucleus (and the staff of the zone commander). The whole incident was never a conflict between [concerning?] the authority of the Control Council whose supremacy in matters affecting all Germany General McSherry thoroughly realizes, but was a difference as to the extent and manner to which United States Group CC should develop plans for the application of policy in the Control Council period. The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

[Versailles?] April 9, 1945. [Received April 17.]

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a thoughtful memorandum ²⁹ prepared for General McSherry of G-5 Division, SHAEF, by Lt. M. M. Goodsill, USNR, on the subject of certain defects of Military Government in the Aachen area and steps which might be taken to correct these defects. The complaints on which the memorandum comments were contained in certain PWD reports.

The Department will be interested in noting that according to the memorandum, Military Government has concentrated to a great extent on establishing "efficient", functional administration. In the process, mistakes have been made in the appointment of Nazis or other Germans with bad past records and in general insufficient consideration has been given to the de-Nazification objectives of the Allies. Lt. Goodsill comes to the conclusion that in addition to the drafting of clearer and more detailed directives on de-Nazification, the extent to which local German political action will be permitted, and other subjects, it will be necessary to give to Military Government officers a considerable amount of education on the fundamental ideas of our policy toward Germany. There has been too much concentration on functions and administration and not enough on policy.

The memorandum discusses also the necessity of permitting left wing and democratic elements of the German population to make a start at organizing themselves and securing representation in local government, where the field is now too often given as a monopoly to conservative and right wing elements in appointing public officials.

While the memorandum covers only the situation in a very small occupied area, I believe it is significant as foreshadowing on a small scale the political problems which will confront us in the near future on a vast scale.

²⁸ Reference is to two memoranda submitted to the U.S. Group, Control Council, by General McSherry and Colonel Kutz, neither printed; copies were transmitted to the State Department in despatch 212, March 15, from London, also not printed.

²⁹ Not printed.

The necessity of supplying more adequate political guidance to Military Government detachments is receiving our careful attention. Advantage is being taken of the current visit of Assistant Secretary of War McCloy to emphasize the need on the part of the lower echelons of Military Government officers in the field for more personal guidance than is afforded by the mere transmission of written directives filtering down through regular Army channels. The need for more prompt reporting from the Military Government detachments in the field is also emphasized in order that corrective measures where necessary may be taken promptly.

In view of the nature of the assignment of the Department's personnel to US Group CC, I wish particularly to ask that this report be given only the most limited circulation within the Department and that its contents should not be discussed with any outside department or agency in Washington.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

There is also enclosed the final draft ³⁰ of a paper setting forth the outlines of the relationship between the Joint Theater Staff and the US Group Control Council (Germany) when Combined Command has terminated.

All of this has come to a head with the arrival here of General Clay coincident with the visit of Jack McCloy. I must say that I do not detect a movement anywhere to detract from the over-all authority of the Control Council in favor of the Zonal Command.

It will be noted that General Clay has devised the title of "Deputy Military Governor" and in that capacity he would be in charge under the Commanding General (General Eisenhower) and the latter's Chief of Staff (Lieutenant General W. B. Smith) of all Military Govern-

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by Major General Lucius D. Clay

[Versailles?] 11 April 1945.

- 1. A chart is attached ³¹ herewith which shows the relationship of the Deputy Military Governor and the US Group Control Council to the Theater Staff which has been accepted in principle and is to be worked out in detail.
- 2. Under this arrangement the Deputy Military Governor would be adviser to the Chief of Staff and the Commanding General for Military Government within the US Zone of Occupation. For those functions pertaining exclusively to Military Government he would work directly through the G-5 Staff Divisions with the several command echelons.
- 3. In his capacity as Deputy to the Commanding General, he would represent the latter on the Coordinating [Committee of the?] Control Council, and would sit in all important meetings of that Council. He would be in direct charge of the US Group, assisted by a deputy who would remain constantly in Berlin.
- 4. In the initial stages the work of the Group Council will necessarily be devoted to developing working arrangements between the several Zones of Occupation. These working arrangements will undoubtedly be expanded and enlarged until some over-all governmental control machinery has been effected. As this takes place, the center of gravity of government may be expected to shift from the several Zones to Berlin. The proposed arrangement is sufficiently flexible to permit this shift. Moreover, it provides at the same time for full coordination between the Zone and the Group Council in Berlin.
- 5. G-5 Sections would continue their present responsibilities for the staff supervision of Military Government functions and would take over as military needs decrease functions now resting in other Staff Divisions. As an example, G-4 is now pushing war production in Germany. As the need for production for war ceases, the responsibility for controlling production for other purposes in the plants now devoted to war production would shift to G-5.

³¹ Not printed.

- 6. Civilian personnel will be brought gradually into the G-5 Staff Divisions, which would be built up to become operating units if and when the governing of Germany shifts from military to civilian control.
- 7. Eventually, when responsibility for government is shifted to civilian agencies, the Deputy Military Governor, the Group Council, and the G-5 Sections could be carved out of the military command, leaving the latter intact to provide a complete framework for continued control of German government.

The Ambassador in France (Caffery) to the Secretary of State

Paris, April 14, 1945—9 p. m. [Received April 15—11 a. m.]

1881. From Murphy. Following summarizes impressions obtained by Heath and Morris ³² from week's tour of occupied Germany bounded by Frankfurt, Kassel and Cologne areas.

The most serious current Military Government problem is that of displaced persons who are being collected and housed in many improvised camps in some cases under hardly tolerable conditions. Army's main concern has understandably been with offensive operations but it is beginning to solve urgent transportation problem involving repatriation of west European nationals. Providing sufficient transportation can be arranged and our troops meet Russian forces in near future thus permitting direct transfer of Russian nationals I believe this problem can be solved relatively quickly. Meanwhile it keeps Military Government personnel and even some combat troops from undertaking other important tasks. The serious political and humanitarian implications of this acute problem are receiving the urgent attention of the Allied High Command. We may however expect some vigorous complaint from the Russians and possibly other Allies over present treatment of their displaced nationals. Incidentally Russians are by far the most difficult to handle in view of their greater tendencies towards looting of and violence towards Germans. For this and other practical administrative reasons I believe our military authorities have taken the only course in, wherever possible, concentrating and temporarily virtually confining displaced persons.

The second serious situation is that Military Government detachments are badly undermanned; averaging probably only half minimum strength they have insufficient facilities and inferior standing vis-à-vis the combat and supply units. For months SHAEF's Civil Affairs ³² Brewster H. Morris, Secretary of Mission on the staff of the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy).

Division has tried without success to obtain sufficient personnel. With the termination of hostilities this situation should be remedied. Meanwhile existing Military Government detachments are contending manfully with their tasks and achieving fair success.

One minor problem facing certain detachments is that of occasional looting and vandalism not only by displaced persons but by troops despite the army and divisional orders that have been issued. I do not want to exaggerate these regrettable occurrences which are but a small incident of the total picture and undoubtedly a purely temporary phenomenon of the hostilities.

The destruction by aerial bombardment in the large cities such as Cologne and Kassel can scarcely be exaggerated. Nevertheless a percentage of the population continues to live in the large cities. Smaller cities which were bypassed or speedily captured present fewer or even no scars of war. The countryside generally presents an entirely peaceful picture with farmers engaged in spring plowing and cultivating. The population's general attitude is that the war is undoubtedly lost but contrary to some newspaper reports German people are not cringing but bear the difficulties of their present existence with rugged spirit.

In spite of Himmler's 33 propaganda for the werewolves 34 there were only one or two reports of apparent Nazi underground activity in the area visited. Many Germans have accepted active and advisory positions in Military Government without much immediate fear of reprisals. Nevertheless we must shortly provide more adequate protection for them. Otherwise Nazi underground will find many easy targets.

There was no evidence of real political organization apart from the Nazis in the sections visited.

In the Aachen District an experienced Social Democrat has just been named Acting Regierungs President and is trying to see to it that people are put into essential occupations and fed at least until new crops appear in his district. In Frankfurt Acting Bürgermeister Holbach a former Frankfurter Zeitung news editor is supported by advisory council representing the Catholic and Protestant churches, the Communist Social Democratic and Center Parties, a Jew and representatives of I G Farben and Metallgesellschaft concerns. This council was the idea of the local American Military Government officer. An urgent need there and elsewhere is to proceed from a purely local (Land and Stadtkreis) to at least a district Regierungsbezirk Administration since certain localities have surpluses of food or other essential supplies while in others dangerous shortages might quickly develop.

In general the picture is one of establishing preliminary control and denazification. There must be quantitative and qualitative additions to Military Government staff before really adequate control can be established. [Murphy.]

2252. From Murphy. SHAEF joint intelligence committee analyses the attitude of the bulk of the German population thus far as apathetic and docile. It is considered that there is no large scale security problem for the immediate future. No serious act of sabotage has been reported against the vast masses of Allied war material and dumps or against Allied pipe lines and communications. In many cases German civilian population and even field commanders have disobeyed orders to destroy installations.

On the other hand the German people seem utterly unrepentant and sunk in inconceivable ignorance of the deeds of their leaders and the hatred with which Germany is regarded in Europe. They are also indifferent to the plight of foreign workers and displaced persons and manifest arrogant indignation at the suggestion that Germany was responsible for the war and that she should now suffer for her misdeeds. The average German realizes that Germany is militarily defeated but does not admit that she is conquered. Many regard themselves as liberated from the horrors of war imposed on them from above for which they consider themselves not responsible. Children give the V sign to Allied troops and in Duisburg and Essen United States troops were received with cheers. During 10 years of Nazi rule Germans have acquired the habit of shutting their eyes as to what went on in the next street. Few admit knowledge of concentration camps and SS atrocities and they disown responsibility. They seem generally only too anxious to help military government and to rehabilitate their towns. In their eyes the only crime Germany has committed is to lose the war.

Many profess ignorance of events during the past years stating the belief that United States declared war on them and that Great Britain and France were plotting for years to attack Germany. They are grieved when foreign workers loot their goods and have to be fed. Even the Archbishop of Münster ³⁵ is quoted as referring to all displaced persons as Russians and demanding that the Allies should afford Germany protection from these "inferior peoples."

Among the educated groups there is already gloating over difficulties confronting the Allies in their dealings with the Russians and it is clear that they will do all they can to poison Allied-Russian relations and play one off against the other. So far churches show no signs of taking initiative though individually priests have served temporarily in most of small communities as burgomeisters. Herr Zapp, late of notorious Transocean propaganda service in the United States and recently head of the Section for American Affairs in the German Foreign Office, now captured, said that he thought little could be expected from Protestant pastors or even from Catholic priests.

Nazi threats seem to have had little effect on German officials working for the Allies. The assassination of the Mayor of Aachen ³⁶ caused no resignations and no further werewolf incidents have been reported.

Most acute problem still that of the displaced persons of whom over a million are in charge of the Allies. Temporarily food supplies are holding out. [Murphy.]

[Versailles,] May 10, 1945.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a paper issued from Headquarters of the European Theater of Operations on April 29, 1945, on the subject of "The Relationship of the Deputy Military Governor and the US Group Control Council (Germany) to the Theater Staff." ³⁷

From a study of this document, it is apparent that the many difficulties which have surrounded the question of the relationship of the Control Council to the Theater (Zone) Staff have been satisfactorily resolved so far as preliminary planning goes. By combining in the person of Lieutenant General Clay the three offices of Deputy Military Governor, Deputy Chief of Staff, and Commanding General of US Group CC, the Theater Staff as well as the US Group CC would come under the coordinated control of one person. Thus it is anticipated (see Par. 6 of the enclosed paper 38) that if SHAEF is dissolved before the Control Council begins to operate,³⁹ the US Group CC will be regarded as the forward echelon of the staff of the Commanding General of the European Theater of Operations. In such case the development of policy for application in the U. S. Zone will be the responsibility of the Deputy Military Governor through the US Group CC and in coordination with other staff divisions.

³⁷ Not printed.

^{} Paragraph 6 anticipated that if SHAEF was terminated prior to the establishment of the Allied Control Authority "the US Group Control Council (Ger-

Similarly, even after the establishment of the Control Council, the US Group CC, working under the Deputy Military Governor, will develop American policies for presentation to the Control Council and for application in the U. S. Zone when not superseded by agreement of the Allied control authority. (See Par. 9c. 40)

The troublesome question of channels of communication between US Group CC and German officials on the one hand and US Group CC and the Theater Staff on the other has been resolved in a rather liberal spirit by authorizing direct communication as well as the use of theater command channels. (See Pars. 9d, 9c, and 12.)

It is my belief that the arrangements specified in the enclosed paper will satisfactorily coordinate the efforts of the several groups which will be concerned with the development of policies and their execution in the U. S. Zone of occupied Germany and will remove all suggestion of friction or competition between such groups. This Mission was consulted in the drafting of the paper.⁴¹

In reply, Mr. Murphy reported to Mr. Riddleberger on June 21 that General Eisenhower had given his final approval to the proposals. "There are, of course, certain features of this relationship which may not work too smoothly in the beginning. As matters stand now, military government in the zone still rests with G-5 [Civil Affairs Division] ETOUSA. General Clay is Deputy

The Deputy Military Governor will represent the Commanding General, USAF, ETO, and will supervise the US Group Control Council (Germany) in maintaining contact with the other national components for the Allied Control Authority. Pending the establishment of the Allied Control Authority, the development of policies for application in the US Zone, consistent with US views, will be the responsibility of the Deputy Military Governor utilizing the US Group Control Council (Germany) and coordinating with other staff divisions."

⁴⁰ Paragraph 9c reads: "Pending agreement on a multipartite basis, development of policies for Germany consistent with approved US views is the responsibility of the Deputy Military Governor using US Group Control Council (Germany) and coordinating the Theater staff divisions. Policies so developed, when approved by the Commanding General, USAF, ETO, will be utilized by the US Group Control Council (Germany) in its negotiations with the representatives of the other occupying powers and will govern activities in the US Zone, unless superseded by agreement of the Allied Control Authority."

the US Group Control Council (Germany) in its negotiations with the representatives of the other occupying powers and will govern activities in the US Zone, unless superseded by agreement of the Allied Control Authority." In a letter to Mr. Murphy, May 25, James W. Riddleberger expressed the Department's satisfaction with the above proposals. He said that concern over the possible lack of coordination between US Group CC and the Theater Staff had been allayed. "We are particularly pleased with the dual role of the Deputy Military Governor in the scheme and hope that the policy of personal union of corresponding offices in the US Group CC and the Theater Staff... will be extensively put into practice." (740.00119 Control(Germany)/5-2545)

In view of the nature of the assignment of the Department's personnel to US Group CC, I wish to suggest that this report be given only limited circulation within the Department and that if its contents are discussed with any outside department or agency, reference to source be avoided.

Respectfully yours,

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

> [Versailles?] May 12, 1945. [Received May 22—11 a. m.]

A-17. There is given here below for the Department's information the substance of instructions recently issued by SHAEF to the 21st, 12th and 6th Army Groups. These instructions order the rapid establishment of German administrative staffs on regional as well as local levels.

The real purpose of Military Government in Germany is not to take over and carry out the responsibilities of government with Allied military personnel but to set up controls over German Government which will make sure that the functions of government will be carried out by German personnel and civil agencies, excluding those who have, because of close Nazi ties, been removed.

It becomes even more imperative, with the cessation of hostilities, to re-establish German administrative functions doing away with the past political control of such functions.

To bring this about, the following are desired:

1. Regional Teams of Military Government should be activated and employed immediately where such teams have not yet been established, and given the mission to re-establish, at the regional level, the German administrative machinery.

2. It is particularly important that German administrative machinery be set up to permit the handling, in an effective way, of immediate problems at the regional level, to include effective utilization of available transport, distribution of food, and the re-establishment of industrial production to take care of military needs and to provide the minimum essential civil requirements in Germany.

3. Consideration must be given, in re-establishing German administrative machinery, to the most likely boundaries between Zones of Occupation; and re-establishment of these administrative functions

Military Governor and has, you will note, the responsibility of securing coordination directly through the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-5, using both normal command and technical G-5 channels. The Chief of Staff of the Commanding General will, however, exercise a certain command authority in that connection. This relationship will have to be worked out in practice. Colloquially speaking this boils down to the problem of who will be the boss of G-5 ETOUSA." (740.00119 Control(Germany)/6-2145) should permit a separation of administrative responsibility between the respective Zones of Occupation (when established) as the Allied Armies retire to their respective zones.

4. Boundaries of responsible military units should, to the full extent feasible with Army administration, be adjusted to conform to the regional administrative boundaries for Military Government, and to the regional administrative boundaries of the German administrative units.

5. It is essential, in order that the German administrative units may operate with the greatest efficiency possible, that those restrictions which do not permit inter-area travel and communication be lifted to the full extent consistent with military security. As these restrictions are lifted, responsibility for carrying out the functions of civil government under the orders of Military Government and subject to such spot-check system as may be instituted by Military Government, should be exchanged to German administrative agencies.

6. In order that this may be effected, the German administrative agencies so re-established should be given encouragement, and permitted to communicate inter-regionally through the established offices of Military Government, and these latter offices should be given authorization to communicate directly with each other, regardless of the Military Commander to which they are responsible, on problems of civil government.

7. Far more personnel than can be made available from military sources will be required for the successful government of Germany, and it can be carried out only through the prompt creation of qualified German staffs under such controls as will insure, for the treatment of Germany, the full execution of the presently established policies.

3268. From Heath. The matter of permitting political activity in Germany with respect to which the Supreme Commander possesses discretionary authority under CCS 551 42 was discussed in a G-5 SHAEF meeting today in view of questions that have been raised by Mil Govt detachments in the field. The present prescriptions by which these detachments are governed are contained in the SHAEF Directive for Military Govt in Germany prior to defeat or surrender of Nov. 9 (despatch No. 73, Jan 17, 1945 43) and by para 100 of the Handbook.44 These are being followed in the US area in the sense of prohibiting all forms of political activity and to extent indeed that in Munich a notice was posted forbidding any political organization specifying that anti-Fascist organizations were included. On the other hand some detachments in other areas feel that renewal of political activity should be permitted.

G-5 officers feel that it is still too early to allow this by SHAEF instruction. They point out that most of the detachments have not had sufficient experience and that the situation with regard to political movements is as yet too uncertain. At our suggestion however G-5 will consider requesting the detachments to make a survey of the problem with a view to obtaining their opinions as to advisability of renewed political activity (excluding of course Nazi activity) and the consequences that might be expected to follow. It was felt this would have the additional advantage of making detachment officers conscious of the questions they may ultimately have to face in handling political groups. With respect to trade unions G-5 feels that these should be kept as non-political as possible at the beginning and it is studying the question of providing guarantees for this purpose as well as for the purpose of excluding union racketeers. Incidentally there are indications that Brit in some of their areas are following line of paragraph 2 of their counter-proposal to our JCS 1067 46 which subject to considerations of military security permits political activity but forbids public meetings and demonstrations.47 [Heath.]

^{}During the latter part of May and the first part of June, the Political Division of U.S. Group C.C. was moved in stages from Versailles to Hoechst, a district of Frankfurt-am-Main. Mr. Murphy's own office was moved to SHAEF in Frankfurt. This move was necessitated by the gradual closing down of SHAEF headquarters in Versailles, and the transfer of the American element to Frankfurt, where it became Headquarters, U.S. Forces in the European Theater (USFET) after the dissolution of SHAEF on July 14.

tions, United States Army, dated May 24, 1945,49 setting forth the organization for the Military Government of the United States Zone and other areas in Germany in which United States forces are deployed.

The purpose or mission is stated to be the establishment of an organization to apply and administer efficiently approved policy to the Military Government of Germany and to establish the allocation of responsibility within that organization. The plan is to be made effective when Combined Command is terminated and prior to that time it is to be developed as far as practicable without violating existing SHAEF policies.

Within the United States Zone in Germany it is the Theater Staff of the Commanding General, USAF, ETO, which is charged with the execution, implementation and supervision of approved United States and Allied control authority policy. Specifically, within the Theater Staff, G-5 is directed to develop basic policies for, to prepare directives and instructions for, and to supervise for the General Staff. activities pertaining to Military Government control in liberated countries and pertaining to Military Government control and supervision generally over the German civil government within the United States Zone in Germany. In the exercise of these controls and supervision. the fields of activity are:

(1) Local Government, German civil service, public safety, public health, postal services, education and religious affairs.

(2) Public finance, public and private financial institutions, foreign exchange, accounting and auditing, currency and financial intelligence.

(3) German courts, Military Government courts and prisons.

(4) United Nations displaced persons, German refugees and German welfare agencies.

(5) Economic affairs, including supplies for civilian needs, production of food, trade, labor, local civilian road transport and, except as assigned to G-4, production, transportation and communication.

(6) Restorations and reparations, property and preservation and restoration of monuments, fine arts and archives.

In view of the nature of the assignment of the Department's personnel to US Group CC, I wish to suggest that this directive be given only limited circulation within the Department and that if its contents are discussed with any outside department or agency, reference to source be avoided.

SIR: As of interest to the Department, I have the honor to enclose a copy of a communication to SHAEF from the U.S. Military Government Detachment at Heidelberg transmitting a report ⁵⁰ drafted by a German informant which seeks to demonstrate the success of Russian propaganda in Germany.

This report develops logically the propaganda advantage which the Russians at present enjoy and for this reason is worthy of careful study. While nothing is known here concerning the reliability of the German author of the report, it will of course be realized that the arguments he stresses are just those which many Germans would readily employ in playing the Russians off against the Americans and the British. Nevertheless the problem he deals with is recognized as a most serious one and is being closely followed by the Psychological Warfare Division of this headquarters which may shortly transmit its conclusions and suggestions to higher authorities in Washington.

It may be mentioned that less glowing reports of conditions in the Russian area are being brought back by Germans who have recently come across the Allied lines. These are gaining circulation slowly and, of course, do not have the same widespread effect as the Russian radio propaganda from Berlin.

Captain Haskell's ⁵¹ covering letter contains several points of interest, in particular his account of Russian action in explaining to the Germans that the Allies and not the Soviets were responsible for the bombing of German cities. Note has been taken here of Captain Haskell's statement that "a dangerous surge toward communism in the Russian sense has taken place in the last two weeks." This assertion is not considered to be generally valid as regards the Allied area of occupation, but a close watch of political trends in this direction will be kept by the Intelligence Branch of G-5, SHAEF.

Respectfully yours,

[Frankfurt?] June 13, 1945. [Received June 26.]

Sir: I have the honor to transmit for your information a copy of a memorandum prepared by Major Harold Zink on the basis of a visit to a number of Military Government detachments in Bavaria. Major Zink represented the Political Division on a survey party sent out under the joint auspices of the US Group CC and SHAEF to observe the operation of Military Government in Bavaria, especially on the Regierungsbezirk and Land levels.

The survey party, headed by Mr. Lewis Douglas and Major General O. P. Echols, had excellent facilities placed at its disposal and received the fullest cooperation from the Military Government detachments in the field. It spent eight days, with morning, afternoon, and evening sessions on the survey and discussed Military Government problems with approximately one hundred officers, both in group meetings and in individual conferences.

Upon the conclusion of its fieldwork the survey party reported directly to Lt. General L. D. Clay, Commanding General of the US Group CC and Deputy Chief of Staff of SHAEF. It recommended that Military Government be freed from tactical interference below the Army level at the earliest possible time, that experts be sent to make a detailed study of the financial situation, that a commission be sent to Bavaria to oversee and coordinate the denazification program, and that greater effort should be made to acquaint the Military Government detachments with American policies in regard to various aspects of Military Government.

I believe that the attached memorandum may serve to furnish considerable information on a number of problems now confronting Military Government which are of concern to the Department.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

[Enclosure]

Extracts From a Memorandum From Major Harold Zink to Donald R. Heath, Reporting on a Survey of Military Government in Bavaria, 27 May-3 June 1945

[Versailles?] 10 June 1945.

Generally speaking the party encountered a most cooperative attitude. Some reference was made to the time consumed in receiving Congressional parties, with the implication that visitors in general were becoming a nuisance, but the reception accorded this particular party was such that it seemed that the visit was welcomed as being of real assistance. A certain reticence on the part of the Military Government detachments was noticeable; thus when the offer was made by Mr. Douglas of the loan of specialists from the US Group CC to assist the detachments in meeting their problems, little or no response was forthcoming, despite the reiterated pleas for additional personnel.

2. General. The general impression made by the several Military Government detachments in Bavaria was favorable; indeed it was my own feeling in the light of contact with the personnel of the detachments in the past that they are doing a remarkably good job, having recovered more than could be reasonably expected from the low morale occasioned by the long delay in using their services and other factors. The level of the various detachments varies somewhat as is to be expected, with the RB 52 detachment at Augsburg perhaps least effective and the Land detachment at Munich probably the outstanding group. More than the variation among the various detachments is the degree of difference among the members of a single detachment. Some of the individual members impressed the survey party on the basis of their grasp of the problems they are charged with handling, their able leadership, their sound judgment, and their general personal qualities. Others, on the other hand, seemed to have a very slight idea of what they were trying to do, lacked force, and in general seemed inadequate. It is obviously difficult and unfair to judge on the basis of the comparatively brief contact which the survey party had, but some strengthening of the detachments is probably desirable. On the whole, the members of the detachments have little knowledge of German institutions and culture beyond what they have acquired during their training and that is not especially impressive. It would be very valuable if some members at least could possess such background, but the supply of such persons is not large anywhere and particularly limited in the Army. It would be unrealistic to expect any considerable change in this particular, though it might be feasible to see what could be done about securing a single officer with such background for the larger detachments. Col. Chamberlain of the US Group CC, who is at present assisting the Munich Stadtkreis detachment in meeting a more or less acute public safety problem, remarked on the difficulty of proceeding without knowledge of the general political picture in Bavaria over a period of ten years or more and asked for the names of Germans who could be relied on for such information. If we have no officers of our own available with such knowledge, such sources will have to be depended on, but a few experts in our own services to check any such information would be exceedingly valuable. Most of the detachments are distinctly understaffed at least for this initial period when so much is required in the way of organization and additional personnel would be helpful. Some headway is being made in meeting this lack by attaching surplus officers from tactical units to the detachments.

The detachments in the Third Army are confronted with a partial failure on the part of the tactical units to recognize the role of Military Government. The result is that tactical commanders, even down to company level, go so far as to remove Bürgermeisters or order the appointment of German officials. The new directive ⁵³ setting up technical channels for Military Government below the Army level, if put into effect shortly, should correct this situation. The Seventh Army is already distinctly Military Government conscious, offers full cooperation to Military Government detachments, and has already put the above directive into effect.

3. Establishment of German Governmental Machinery. It is probable that Military Government has proceeded more rapidly than was generally expected. At least in many quarters there was an opinion that the operations of Military Government, insofar as they involved setting up German governmental agencies, would be limited to the Landkreise and Stadtkreise during the first few months. However, a few weeks saw the Regierungsbezirk coming into the foreground more or less everywhere and at present the Land Bavaria is in the process of being organized. The opinion has been expressed that due caution should be used in going ahead too rapidly. Moreover, some have interpreted the recent activity in the direction of establishing RB and Land governmental machinery as dictated more by the impatience of Military Government personnel than by actual necessity or prudence. It was the unanimous judgment of the survey party that there is real justification for setting up the German governmental system as far as the Land level, at least to the extent that machinery for handling food, finance, transportation, and probably health, welfare, labor, education, and public safety is concerned. Both food and finance are very serious problems which cannot possibly be handled with any degree of adequacy on the Kreis level. The survey party found that the initial steps in setting up RB governments are being undertaken throughout Bavaria. A Minister President has been named for Land Bavaria 54 together with a Food Director; it is expected that heads of the ministries of Interior, Finance, Education and Religious Affairs, and Economics will be chosen shortly-in the meantime the Minister President is handling the affairs of some of these. A Vice Regierungspräsident has been named at Regensburg and a Regierungspräsident at Ansbach; at Augsburg such a selection was expected within a few days. A great deal remains to be done before any effective German governmental machinery on the RB and Land levels can be expected. Virtually all of the key administrative posts remain to be filled, since their former occupants were Nazis and hence are not available. A certain number of lower and intermediate civil servants are either already functioning or available, but much remains to be done before anything like full staffs can be operating with vetted personnel. The survey party had the opportunity of talking to the Minister President and Food Director of Land Bavaria, the Regierungspräsident of Ansbach, and the Oberbürgermeister of Regensburg. It is obviously difficult to appraise officials on the basis of such contacts, even when a common language is used; the use of an interpreter adds considerably to the hazard. In general these German officials are advanced in age and consequently lack the vigor and resilience that are to be expected at an earlier age. It may be wondered how they will stand up under the terrifically difficult problems which they will be called upon to handle. Yet it is almost inevitable that men of this age group be selected because of the contamination of younger men with Nazi associations. Several of these German officials at least seemed more than a little in the toils of the spirit of German bureaucracy and hence were inclined to think in terms of the past rather than of future requirements. This is unfortunate and will complicate the successful operation of the Military Government program, but it is certainly not surprising. Whether Germans of younger age and less traditional and restricted outlook can be found even after every avenue has been explored is a big question. The present selections are probably as satisfactory as can be expected under the initial circumstances.

5. Political Problems. . . . In no case did we receive any more than passing reference to political problems. It may be that the detachments are not sufficiently conscious of the local situation and that political problems actually are pressing. Our contacts were not such that we were in a position to judge, though we certainly gained the impression that most of the officers had reasonably good local knowledge. In Augsburg it was stated that some local political organizations asked to be permitted to recommend persons for office. They were told that they could not be recognized as parties, but that any lists of names they furnished would be received and indeed welcomed. Such lists were supplied. It was reported that in a few instances political groups had to be informed that no meeting could be permitted at this stage. But there was no indication of any urgency in this field. It should be stressed that the situation is developing rapidly and that such problems may become acute before long. Here again the lack of familiarity on the part of Military Government officers of German political history is a handicap. In those instances where a detachment has an officer responsible for political intelligence there was little evidence that much was being done. Usually such an officer has several other duties which receive his major attention. There seems to be real need to establish some sort of political reporting which will be available to the Military Government officers. At present they do not receive reports even from G-2 55 and OSS. It does not seem probable in the opinion of the survey party that the detachments themselves can be relied on for any organized system of political reporting. In this connection it may be noted that the Catholic hierarchy seems to be distinctly fearful of leftwing activity and tends to lump Social Democrats, Communists, etc. into a single category. The Catholic bishop of Regensburg was outspoken in denunciation of all of these groups and expressed the fear that they would become potent because of the strict policy followed by the United States in contrast to that of the USSR; he remarked on the influence of the Russian broadcasts reporting on the higher food ration, the opening of amusements, the more friendly treatment accorded Germans, etc. in Berlin.

[Washington,] July 5, 1945.

This Government's policies for treatment of Germany are set forth in two basic documents—a general directive to the U.S. Commander in Chief regarding military government of Germany, and an instruction to the U.S. representative on the Reparation Commission. A general directive for Austria has also been prepared by an Informal Policy Committee on Germany 57 consisting of representatives of State, War, Navy, Treasury and FEA, reflect the substantial measure of agreement which has been reached among the executive departments on basic policies toward Germany and Austria. Such agreement was accomplished through a process of thorough discussion of the many questions of basic policy which are involved. This process of extended interdepartmental deliberation, while appropriate in the formulation of basic policies, is not well adapted to the handling of the day-to-day questions which are now arising in increasing volume.

⁵⁵ Intelligence Section.

57 See directive to Commander in Chief of U.S. Forces of Occupation regarding the Military Government of Austria, designated IPCOG 9/2, dated June 23, 1945, Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 1, p. 337.

It is of pressing importance that we establish in Washington an operating mechanism which can rapidly and efficiently provide guidance to the American Commanders in Germany and Austria and to our representatives on such Allied bodies as the Reparation Commission and the European Advisory Commission. Unless such a mechanism is established, we shall be seriously hampered in our negotiations to develop agreed Allied policies toward Germany and Austria.

Accordingly, we recommend that the Department of State and the War Department be authorized to carry out, pursuant to basic policies determined by you, the necessary direction of our activities and negotiations pertaining to treatment of Germany and Austria. The Department of State, by reason of its responsibility to you for carrying out the foreign policy of the United States, would deal primarily with the policy aspects of the questions which will arise. The War Department, by reason of the military responsibility for control of Germany and Austria, would deal primarily with the executive and administrative aspects of such questions. Any proposed modifications in basic policy would be submitted to you for consideration.

The above recommendation would terminate the existing Informal Policy Committee on Germany. It would be the responsibility of the Department of State to consult with other civilian departments and agencies on matters of appropriate concern to them.

I will appreciate being informed whether you approve the above recommendation.

I am informed that the Secretary of War, who is at present out of the city, has discussed this matter with you in person and agrees with the above recommendation.

No. 673

Sir: I have the honor to transmit a memorandum by a member of my staff on observations on the situation in Munich, together with an appendix on the views of leading Social Democrats in Munich. This material throws some further light on potentialities for political action and the balance of forces in Bavaria, though naturally no accurate appraisal of popular support for the tendencies discussed can be made at this time.

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by Mr. Brewster Morris, Secretary of Mission, Office of the United States Political Adviser for Germany

[Frankfurt,] July 16, 1945.

During the recent visit to Munich of Captain Richey ⁵⁹ and myself we had an opportunity to talk to a great many Germans, including ordinary workers and other civilians, political leaders and Germans employed in the Military Government administration.

As regards the present ban on political activity, we were interested to note that except for the Communists (Free Germany group) who are vociferous in demanding that political activity be permitted, practically all other Germans we spoke to favor the present ban. In so doing, they argue that the German people have many more vital activities to concern themselves with at present, in particular the provision of food, housing and the like, and also that following over twelve years of no political activity, the average German is at present totally unprepared for it. In other words, life must first get back to normal.

These views are interesting, though in considering them from the point of view of American policy, we should of course bear in mind the fact that political activity is now being permitted in the Russian Zone, and presumably with a view to giving dominating power to only one group, the Free Germany Movement.⁶⁰

My own opinion is that, though we need not worry about this problem of political activity in the immediate future, there are other more serious reasons for concern. The present economic and social dislocation, and particularly the suffering and possible chaos which will probably develop in the next year or two, particularly next winter, together with our negative, hesitating policy toward Germany, including the field of propaganda, may well tend to swing large masses of the German people to the extreme political camps of both Right and Left. At the same time Russian propaganda will probably continue to paint a rosy picture, giving promises of hope for the future, all of which will help accelerate this movement.

⁶⁰ For documentation relating to political activity in the Soviet zone, see pp. 1033 ff.

As regards Russian propaganda, I was interested to note that although many Bavarians still listen with great eagerness to the Berlin broadcasts and to propaganda apparently disseminated by local Communist circles, some news of the really difficult conditions in the Soviet Zone is beginning to filter into Bavaria, brought back by returning civilians and German soldiers.

Following my observations in the Munich area, I should like to go on record as advocating a relaxation in our present non-fraternization policy. As reported General Smith 61 has just submitted a report to General Clay on the Military Government of Bavaria under the direction of Colonel Keegan, with particular reference to the problems of denazification, appointments of Germans, and public relations, including the American press.62

As regards the Bavarian Freedom Action Committee (FAB), local Military Government authorities believe this movement is now pretty well under control. As a matter of fact, its two leaders are secretly doing some work for Military Government, in the field of denazification and helping round up SS 63 troops in the mountains.

Though the Werewolves appear to be quiet as yet, one or two leaflets have been turned into CIC 64 warning Germans not to cooperate with Military Government and signed by "Adolf Hitler Freikorps." I am attaching a short report 65 on the views of the local leading Social Democrats, and also preparing a separate report on the local Free Germany group.

Clay had appointed an investigating board to inquire into the situation. Brewster Morris, of Mr. Murphy's staff, had been chosen a member of this board and summarized its findings for Murphy. Concerning denazification, the Military Government authorities had failed to carry out effectively the relatively radical policy directive under which they were to operate. Regarding the new appointments of German officials in Bavaria, the various religious faiths had been fairly represented; Communists and Social Democrats were represented more by accident than by design. Finally, the board felt that the public relations of Col. Charles E. The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Hoechst, July 24, 1945—6 p. m. [Received 8:30 p. m.]

212. This office is not a "separate establishment" in Germany as stated in the Dept's No. 138 of July 19, 6 p. m. 66 In effect there will be two offices, that of "United States Political Adviser, US Group Control Council (Germany)" at Berlin "United States Political Adviser, US Forces European Theater (USFET)" at Frankfurt. These offices come under, respectively, the American element of the Control Council and the American Theater Command. When consular offices are opened in Munich, Stuttgart, Frankfurt and Bremen, they will be independent offices as far as the Dept is concerned but by Military Government in Germany they will be considered as under the supervision of the Office of the United States Political Adviser.

The need of opening consular offices in other zones is as great as in the American area and perhaps greater in view of political reporting. As to the feasibility of opening offices in the other zones, it is believed that there will be little difficulty, if any, with the British and French, but based on the history of our efforts to open Consulates in Russia, we can expect difficulty in the latter's zone.

With regard to the use of consular titles, especially in connection with citizenship and notarial services, it is believed that the title will be necessary in view of the pertinent US and state statutes. In this connection see my cable No. 205 of July 23, 1 a. m., 1945, or concerning the opening of four Consulates in Germany. What "venue" should be used in notarizing documents?

While some time in August the Office of the Political Adviser, US Group Control Council will move in entirety to Berlin, at the present time the bulk of the staff is still at Hoechst (Frankfurt) with only a small staff at Berlin. Consideration will also be given to establishing a Consulate in the Berlin US zone to care for consular services.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of an OSS report ⁶⁹ setting forth the views of Konrad Adenauer ⁷⁰ on the Allied occupation policy and of ways in which its execution may be improved.

Adenauer stresses the importance of uniform policies for the government of all zones, and the need for a quick revival of transportation to alleviate the threatened food shortage. To accomplish our mission in Germany he declares that we must set the kind of example we expect to be followed, and that some hope of a modest living, together with opportunities for amusement and education, must be offered the Germans to prevent their further moral and intellectual disintegration.

It is believed that these views, coming as they do from a prominent anti-Nazi and, on the whole, a sympathetic exponent of our point of view, will be of considerable interest to the Department.

305. The following are my comments on the questions raised in Department's 214, August 2, 6 p. m.: 74

For practical purposes, the title of my office has no direct importance to the functions expected of me by the Department, and I prefer not to raise this question with the military at this time but shall do so at the first opportune moment. There is no reason why it should not be referred to [as?] "American Mission to Germany" for administrative purposes.

Officers assigned to my staff should be commissioned as Secretaries of Mission and will be interchangeable between the US GCC (Group Control Council) office in Berlin and PolAd (Political Adviser) office, USFET (United States Forces European Theater), Frankfurt. Those assigned specifically to the Consular Section at Berlin should be given dual status, that is, both Diplomatic and Consular. To avoid misunderstanding with the military, the Consul General in Frankfurt should not be accorded diplomatic status. His functions will be separate from those of the PolAd's (Political Adviser's) office at USFET (United States Forces European Theater), Frankfurt.

It is assumed that the US Political Adviser will exercise supervisory consular functions through the senior consular officer attached to his immediate staff in Berlin.

I have informally discussed with my colleagues, the British Political Adviser, the question of opening Consulates in our respective zones and agree that care must be exercised regarding the titles which would be used for the consular officers in preliminary stage. Under present abnormal conditions consular representatives are dependent on the military authorities for practically every facility, communications, transportation, housing and food. Housing particularly is in short supply. The Control Council has not as yet considered the question of foreign consular representation in Germany but until it does it is desired to avoid publicity referring to the offices which the British and ourselves propose to open in our respective zones as Consulates. Strang and I believe that a designation such as a "Representative of

We could thus start at once assembling, organizing and training consular personnel and setting up offices in Munich, Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Bremen and Hamburg which would perform the customary consular functions. I would appreciate the Dept's advice regarding the availability of consular personnel for Munich, Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Bremen, Berlin and Hamburg.

"... 79 that the Department of State and the War Department be authorized to carry out, pursuant to basic policies determined by the President the necessary direction of our activities and negotiations pertaining to treatment of Germany and Austria. The Department of State, by reason of its responsibility to the President for carrying out the foreign policy of the United States, would deal primarily with the policy aspects of the questions which will arise. The War Department, by reason of the military responsibility for control of Germany and Austria, would deal primarily with the executive and administrative aspects of such questions. by Headquarters, USFET, amending certain sections of the July 7

These amendments were made to bring the July 7 directive into accord with the decisions of the Potsdam Conference, and it is suggested the Department will wish to give them close study. Particular attention is invited to amended Section III of the directive (Encl 2 attached circular 82) which lays down the policies and procedures to be applied with respect to the revival of authorized German political activity in the US Zone. The amended Section III was prepared in consultation with me.

The Department will also find of interest the provisions of the following numbered paragraphs of the USFET circular directive:

Paragraph 3, on questions of policy relating to decentralization, the development of local responsibility and the progressive reintroduction of local self-government.83

Paragraph 9, on coordination between the Länder with respect to uniformity of civil service regulations, procedures and operations.84

Paragraph 7, stating that all practical measures will be taken to reopen all eight grades of the elementary schools by not later than October 1, 1945.

Paragraph 8, providing that any member of the German clergy engaging in unauthorized political activity should in principle be treated in the same manner as any other person guilty of such activity.

Paragraph 9b, stating that the resumption of the civilian postal service in the US Zone should be conducted to facilitate coordinated operation, under central control, of the Reichspost for all of Germany.

Paragraph 12, regarding trade union activity. 85

474. For the Dept's information. In Divisional Directors' meeting this morning, General Clay announced that his goal was to make the US Group CC a completely civilian organization by July 1, 1946. While he was directing all reserve officers desiring to continue in this work to apply for an immediate return to civilian status now, every effort will be made to reduce the present personnel of Group CC to a minimum. He stated that Group CC and Military Govt were overstaffed and that a special manpower board would be appointed to accelerate personnel reductions. At present, some 12,000 officers and men are employed in Military Govt in the zone. General Clay said he thought this number should be reduced to about 6,000 by February 1. Members of both Foreign Affairs Subcommittees and the Appropriations Committee which recently visited Berlin evinced a critical interest in the size of the Group staff.

A-189. Intelligence reports constantly suggest that while all non-Nazi Germans welcome our denazification policy, they are often critical of its application. They feel it is too "schematic" and too rigid with insufficient provision for making numerous exceptions to the general rules. Germans usually feel that many persons who were only nominal Nazis are falling under the axe unjustly and that some ⁸⁶ The new amendment of section I involved no fundamental change in the general and principal objectives of the occupation which were reiterated to be those of governing a defeated nation and the assurance that Germany would never again threaten her neighbors or the peace of the world. The August 27 directive did elaborate upon certain subjects such as denazification and demilitarization, punishment of war criminals and Nazi leaders, and preparation for a democratic Germany.

active Nazis are being missed. They sometimes fail to realize that it is much easier for them to judge the real attitudes of their compatriots than it is for Military Government and that they could be of assistance in precisely this field.

Thus, a rumor has been circulating in Coburg that a new United States order will oust all NSDAP members who joined the Party prior to May 1937. This policy is criticized as being arbitrary and not penalizing those whom it intends to punish. Germans in Coburg say that people who joined the Party in 1933 did so under the influence of a mass movement and without full knowledge of what the Party stood for. Those who joined after 1938 on the other hand were fully informed about Nazism and its operations and acquiesced in all the Party stood for.

In other quarters the foregoing arguments are reversed. Those who joined the Party in later years are excused as having done so under pressure as contrasted with those who voluntarily joined during the early years of the movement.

There is apparently no agreement among Germans as to how far the denazification program should be carried. Two things seem chiefly to irritate them: What appears to their uncritical eyes to be mass discharges and penalties applied to all Party members regardless of individual merits of the case, and the unavoidable lack of uniformity in the application of the denazification policy in different localities.

506. On General Clay's initiative, after discussion with me, a plan whose details will be made public in the near future has been prepared in US Group CC and approved by General Clay for the holding of a series of elections in Germany next winter and spring. This plan calls for the holding of elections in all of the Gemeinde in the American zone in January next for the selection of councillors (Gemeinderaete). Councillors will similarly be elected in each Landkreis in March next while Stadtkreis council elections will be held during May 1945 [1946]. The plan leaves the exact day of the month on which elections should be held to the discretion of the Military Government detachment commander concerned. He must also certify that the proposed election is consistent with military security.

In the period intervening between now and January, election legislation and machinery will be provided by new local government codes now in process of being drafted in each land. Registration of the electors will be based on the present system of police registration.

This plan for holding Gemeinde elections next January has met with opposition from some experts on the grounds that the German people will not yet be ready for such widespread elections at that time and that the dead of winter is an unsuitable time at which to ascertain the political sentiments of the population. Clay has insistently argued for the earlier date and I have concurred, in view of the positive terms of the Potsdam Declaration ⁸⁷ regarding restoration of local self-government and elective principles as rapidly as is consistent with the purposes of military occupation and the fact that the mid-winter elections will concern only the small, and in the main rural, communities in our zone where food and shelter are less of a problem. There is also the practical experience in Military Government that in order to get action and thinking on projects of this sort promptly under way it is sometimes well to set the target date too early.

This measure has not yet been discussed with representatives of the other occupying powers but will be brought up informally in the Political Directorate. It is contemplated as a purely American measure. I shall keep the Department informed of further developments in this matter, and would appreciate its suggestion.⁸⁸ and political problems of Land Württemberg-Baden and to draw up instructions for Military Government official in dealing with problems involving also the parts of those Laender lying in the French zone. Muccio will represent this office on the committee.

Serious administrative problems exist in the Württemberg-Baden area because of the zone boundary which cuts both Laender in two.⁸⁹ The regional military officer favors joint administration and certain local ad hoc joint arrangements have been worked out in Württemberg.

It is believed that three main methods exist for the solution of the problem of governing these two territories, each of which has a background of political and administrative unity. The first of these, joint French and American control of two Laender, involves great difficulties. A second method would be a new delimitation of the occupation zones which would, say, leave Württemberg in the United States zone and Baden in the French zone. This method would undoubtedly be opposed by the military authorities who, as the Dept will recall, resisted the transfer of northern Baden to the French zone on the ground that such action would seriously conflict with communication facilities and necessary supply routes to the eastern military district (Bavaria). A third method would be for the French to turn over their section of Württemberg to the American zone. In this case they would naturally wish unhampered access to their zone in Austria. 90 However, we have not met difficulties in our very extensive crossing of the British zone and it is believed that French transit of our zone could be made similarly free from difficulty.

- 507. Urtel 506, Sept. 12. Dept is pleased to learn of plans for holding of local elections in American-occupied zone in Germany. Following suggestions are submitted for your consideration:
- 1. We believe that Gemeinde elections should be held as soon as possible. In view of possible adverse weather conditions in January, it is suggested that, if electoral plans and stage of organization of political parties were to permit Gemeinde elections should be held in November. Otherwise Gemeinde elections should be held as soon as preparations and weather conditions permit, by March at the latest.

⁹⁰ For documentation pertaining to the establishment of a French zone of occupation in Austria, see pp. 1 ff.

⁸⁹ For documentation pertaining to the establishment of a French zone of occupation in Germany, see pp. 160 ff.

- 2. If in certain Stadtkreise circumstances permit the holding of elections at the same time as in the Gemeinde, it might be useful to hold such Stadtkreise elections at that time rather than several months later. Since the political composition of the electorate in Stadtkreise is likely to differ considerably from that in the Gemeinde, simultaneous elections would enable us to ascertain more readily the present political state of mind of the German population in our zone.
- 3. We would appreciate further information on the matter of registration of electors. We would suggest that qualifications be introduced excluding from suffrage (a) all persons who are clearly transients in the community, and (b) all persons liable to arrest or removal from office under the denazification program.
- 4. We assume that the possibility of determining election results in accordance with method of proportional representation, similar to that used under Weimar Republic, has been under consideration. It is believed that use of proportional representation at present time might help bring about that: (a) no one party acquire too predominant position, (b) no party assume in any way role of opposition to occupation administration, (c) no bloc of parties be formed under coercion.
- 5. It would obviously be desirable if similar elections using similar electoral methods were to take place in the other zones at approximately the same time. If feasible, you should seek correlated action on the part of occupation authorities in other zones and adapt your own election plans thereto.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit, for the Department's information, a copy of a report ⁹³ which Dr. James K. Pollock, Chief of the Governmental Structure Branch, Civil Administration Division, U. S. Group Control Council, made on his inspection trip through the American Zone during the latter half of August, and a Memorandum ⁹³ of the Civil Administration Division, dated 19 September, reporting the action taken thus far on the various recommendations contained in the report. The latter Memorandum is accompanied by two staff studies 94 relating to individual topics taken up in it.

Dr. Pollock's inspection, made after four months of occupation and at a time when the victory in the Pacific had suddenly accelerated the already massive troop movements and forced drastic changes of military personnel and policy, threw a number of problems and shortcomings of Military Government into sharp relief. The main substance of the report lies possibly in its broad conclusion stated in the initial sentence and elaborated in detail later on, that Military Government was less advanced than had been expected. Many—perhaps most—of the difficulties lay in the internal organization and functioning of Military Government itself and did not relate to matters of policy. Of special interest, however, are the observations concerning the participation of Germans in government. In paragraph A.1.c. it is stated in some detail that German administrative officials had been given too little opportunity and responsibility for administration; "too much work is still being done by Americans". On the other hand, it was noted in paragraph A.1.e. that the almost universal judgment of both Military Government and German officials in the matter of elections was to put them off until late spring.

The second paper, listing the corrective measures taken, is largely self-explanatory. The following notes, however, supplement at some points the information given:

- 1. Use of Advisory Committees. This Mission has concurred in provisions for the creation and use of Advisory Committees, to be incorporated in a Letter of Instruction designed to explain and clarify existing directives bearing on political activity. It is the belief of Civil Administration Division that the use of such committees to advise German administrative officials—the Bürgermeister, Landräte, and Stadträte—would be a helpful preliminary lesson in the functioning of democratic local government which could take place prior to the elections.
- 2. Württemberg-Baden Committee. The Committee appointed to study the problems of Land Württemberg-Baden, reported in my secret telegram No. 558 [559], of September 18, 10 a. m. [p. m.], has begun its work. Mr. John J. Muccio represents this Mission on the Committee. The staff study proposing the creation of the Committee, in which we concurred, is attached.⁹⁵
- 3. Landkreis Lindau. The problem of Landkreis Lindau is a minor one compared to some of the others dealt with. It consists in the fact that this Landkreis, until recently an integral part of the Bavarian Regierungsbezirk Schwaben, has been included in the French Zone. Many administrative difficulties have arisen for the people of the Landkreis because all of the administrative connections have hitherto been with Bavaria and Regierungsbezirk Schwaben. Some local Military Government opinion there is thought to favor return of the Kreis to Land Bayern with adequate provisions for French transit to their Zone in Austria. It may be observed that this is very closely connected with the problem of southern Württemberg mentioned in my secret telegram No. 558 [559], September 18, 10 a.m. [p. m.], referred to above.

4. Unification of Land Hessen and Provinz Hessen-Nassau. A copy of the staff study and recommendation on this subject, in which this Mission concurred, is attached. 96

In view of the nature of the assignment of the Department's personnel to U. S. Group Control Council, I wish to suggest that the enclosures to this despatch be given only limited circulation within the Department and that if its contents are discussed with any outside department or agency, reference to source be avoided.

Respectfully yours,

- 618. Reference Dept's telegram 507, September 19. Following comments appear pertinent in connection with Dept's helpful suggestions for holding elections in American zone:
- 1. We are pushing with all possible speed towards the earliest introduction of practical democratic processes in Germany. All plans, however, are retarded by the complete disorganization of German life including communications and transportation. Under the adverse conditions therefore, the drafting, submission, and approval of codes for the Laender and the organization of election machinery cannot be completed in time to hold elections before January at the earliest. Organization of political parties in most parts of US zone is still tenuous and preliminary, and it would appear desirable to allow an interim of three or four months for further organization and political education and for more discussion among the Germans of political issues involved. Reports indicate a continuing state of political apathy, which it would be desirable to overcome before holding elections.
- 2. I thoroughly agree with Dept's opinion that simultaneous elections would give a better composite picture of political outlook of German population. However, it would seem unwise to have elections in urban districts held in midwinter or early spring when food, fuel, and shelter conditions will probably be very bad, with resulting undesirable political tendencies. These effects will be less marked in rural population. Foregoing considerations led to decision to postpone Stadtkreis elections until late spring.

- 3. No policy has yet been decided upon in the matter of suffrage qualification, pending submission of proposed election codes by Laender. Present thinking tends toward grant of franchise to transients, So large a proportion of population falls into transient category that disqualification would result in disenfranchising unfairly large number of Germans. Until conditions permit establishment of legal residence by hundreds of thousands of refugees, it seems fairer to permit all otherwise qualified adults to vote. Suffrage should be on the most democratic basis possible. As for excluding from the suffrage persons liable to arrest or removal from office, the Civil Administration Division of US Group Control Commission [Council] takes the line it would be impracticable to carry out such process at the polls as it would involve examination and investigation of every individual voter. The only alternative would be to exclude all members of the Nazi Party and this would disqualify large numbers of purely nominal Nazis without adequate justification.
- 4. Possibility of using proportional representation methods is, of course, being explored. It is pertinent to point out, however, that proportional representation favors growth of many parties. By preventing predominance of one party, it almost forces formation of political coalition or bloc, which is the very result we seek to discourage. All sides of this question will be given further consideration.
- 5. I shall be very glad to present our plans to the other occupation authorities and seek correlated action in other zones. The complexities of the question and certain differences of views of Four Powers are of course obvious to Department.

576. Dept appreciates receiving detailed information on election plans contained in urtel 618, Sep 25.

Dept is concerned about intention to allow suffrage to persons liable to arrest or removal from office under denazification program. Whatever the practical difficulties may be, we deem it of utmost importance that all active Nazis as defined by the arrest and removal categories be excluded from suffrage. We recognize that it is not necessary to exclude all former members of the Nazi party, many of whom were merely nominal Nazis.

In our view, active Nazis should be formally deprived for the time being of civil and political rights in accordance with familiar practices of German criminal law. Such deprivation should include forfeiture of suffrage, of eligibility to public or quasi-public office, and of right to be designated as jurors or lay justices, as set forth in Depts CAC ⁹⁷–298, Oct. 12, 1944 entitled Treatment and Status of Former Nazis. ⁹⁸

It seems to us essential to successful reintroduction of democratic processes in Germany that those elements of the population should be excluded from suffrage who as active Nazis demonstrated their anti-democratic convictions and who may be expected to endeavor as in the past to utilize democratic procedures in order to sabotage democracy.

We urge reconsideration of election plans in this regard and wish you to report further to us on this matter.

Berlin, October 1, 1945. [Received October 11.]

Sir: I have the honor to refer to my telegram no. 654 of September 30, 6 p. m., 99 reporting that the Deputy Military Governor had announced a USFET Directive dated September 26, 1945, by which, effective October 1, the US Group Control Council (Germany) is designated "Office of Military Government for Germany (U.S.)"; the G-5 Division of USFET as the "Office of Military Government (U.S. Zone)"; and the various Military Government detachments as er Country and Area Committee, Department of State.

An appendix to CAC-298 contained a list of categories of active Nazis. The following definition of an active Nazi was given: "In a general way an active Nazi under the Third Reich may be defined as one who took part in the systematic propagation of National Socialist ideas, helped to formulate Nazi policy or had a major responsibility in its execution, or otherwise worked willingly to promote or to impose the Nazi program." The number in this category, it was speculated, would probably fall between two and three million, perhaps less than the lower figure taking into consideration deaths incident to the war. Nominal Nazis would number several million. (Secretariat Files)

"Office of Military Government for ——". A copy of this Directive is attached.¹

I understand that this is the first step in a general plan of reorganization of U.S. Military Government in Germany separating Military Government from the occupational Military Commands. It will be noted from the Directive enclosed that all instructions to the Commanding Generals in the Eastern and Western Military Districts will continue to be issued through command, technical and functional channels as heretofore. However, it is the intention of the Military Government distinct from military channels.²

Attention is called to paragraph 5, explaining that with the development of central German administrative departments, the establishment of common policies by the Allied Control Authority, and the strengthening of the German Laender administrations, it will eventually be desirable to consolidate the Office of Military Government (U.S. Zone) with the Office of Military Government for Germany (U.S.) in Berlin.

Study is now being given to the desirability of turning over to Germans many of the functions now being handled by Military Government detachments in the field. The Department will be kept promptly informed of developments in this regard.

The Deputy Military Governor has informed me that he aims to move towards making Military Government a civilian organization, with July 1, 1946 as the target for complete conversion. Both General Eisenhower and General Clay have emphasized at recent meetings that the prime purpose of occupation forces in Germany today is to support Military Government, and have also urged the military to depend upon the Political Adviser for guidance. In line with their specific request, I have sent Mr. Parker W. Buhrman as my representative to the Third Army Command (General Patton) at Munich. Mr. John Utter was enroute to the Seventh Army Command (General Keyes) at Heidelberg in a similar capacity when he received his transfer orders. I am now sending Mr. Brewster Morris there temporarily but cannot very well spare him from the vital political work Berlin District and the Ministerial Collecting Center have also rehe is charged with here in Berlin. The Commanding General of the quested that I furnish them a member of my staff to advise on political matters.

In view of the Military Governor's specific instructions that the military depend more and more on officers of the Department of State for political guidance. I anticipate further similar requests from other Army commands. With my present limited staff, I cannot possibly spare any qualified officers for this vital work. I feel strongly that the Department and its Foreign Service should not fail to assist the military at this delicate period of Military Government and expose itself to the possible criticism later of not having cooperated fully with the Army. It is urged therefore that the Department send without delay the ten consular officers slated for posts in Germany, named in its telegraphic instruction no. 376 of August 30.3 Also, that the Department select and send me at least three additional young Foreign Service or Auxiliary officers who have aptitude for political work in involved, delicate situations such as we face here in Berlin today. 680. At the request of General Clay, I made a visit to Munich last week for the purpose of investigating the newspaper reports and other criticisms which had been developing regarding the Bavarian Government's alleged failure to de-Nazify. Most of the newspaper agitation was inspired by Victor Bernstein of PM, Ray Daniell of New York Times, Ed Morgan of Chicago Daily News and Carl Levin of New York Herald Tribune.

It has been apparent for some time past that General Patton ⁵ and members of his staff might not be in sympathy with some features of our policy, especially de-Nazification. At the same time, it has been difficult for Frankfurt and Berlin often to ascertain the facts, due to lack of adequate reporting by the Bavarian Military Government detachment. With our small staff, we have not been able to cover the situation as I would have liked. Recently Parker Buhrman has been assigned to Munich and is rapidly becoming acquainted with the details of the situation.

I spent 3 days in Munich and after conversations with Patton and Military Government officers, as well as with representatives of the

⁵ Gen. George S. Patton, Commanding General, U.S. Third Army, occupying the Eastern Military District in Germany. Announcement had already been made of General Patton's transfer to command of the U.S. Fifteenth Army in Germany.

Social Democrat, Communist and Christian Socialist Union (formerly the Bavarian Volkspartei) groups, I recommended that Minister President Schaeffer be relieved 6 and that immediate action should be taken to improve and strengthen the composition of the Bavarian Government. I suggested that the number of Departments be increased from 5 to 8 or possibly 9. As it has been constituted, it was not representative nor adequate to meet its responsibilities. There have been recently only 3 so-called Ministers in office—that is, Fritz Schaeffer, former Minister President who acted also as Minister of Finance; Karl Lange, Minister of Economics; and Albert Rosshaupter, Minister of Labor. The latter is a Social Democrat; Schaeffer and Lange, Bavarian Volkspartei. I had conversations with these three, as well as with Bruno Goldhammer, ostensibly the leader of the Bavarian Communist group, Joseph Mueller, leader of the Left Wing of Bavarian Volkspartei now called the Christian Social Union, and Wilhelm Hoegner, Social Democrat. After these conversations, I had intended to recommend Rosshaupter as successor to Shaeffer, on the ground that he is the senior member of the Socialist Democratic group with an excellent record, including a long and painful internment in Dachau. General Eisenhower, however, decided in favor of Hoegner. Rosshaupter, it seemed to me, was more eager to form a working coalition of the three Bavarian groups, whereas Hoegner thought that the Communist element would not as yet be prepared to assume the responsibility of office. Before my departure from Munich, Hoegner at my request promised that he would try to include respective elements from the three groups in proportion to their apparent relative popular strength. Goldhammer informed me that he doubted that his committee would be willing to have any of its members participate in the government unless we would agree to postpone the communal election in Bavaria, the target date for which is January 1; he stated the opinion that this date is far too early to permit of satisfactory organization of party activities which up to the present have been limited to the Stadtkreis level. He urged that party had criticized the difficulties caused Bavarian Administration by the progress of our denazification program." (740.00119 Control (Germany)/9-1545)

Subsequently, however, in telegram 57, September 21, 11 a. m., from Frankfurt, Mr. Murphy related that, although G-5, USFET, had been prepared to accept the resignation, the Third Army had apparently "patched matters up." He said that USFET had sent a representative to examine the entire question of Schaeffer's staying on. (740.00119 Control (Germany)/9-2145)

⁶ In telegram 536, September 15, 9 p. m., from Berlin, Mr. Murphy reported General Clay's initial reaction at a U.S. Group Control Council, Divisional Directors' meeting that morning to the news of Fritz Schaeffer's resignation. "He [Clay] had just received telephone news prior to the meeting that Schaeffer had resigned as Minister President of Bavaria. Schaeffer had done a good job and he did not know exactly the reasons for his resignation, but Schaeffer was a conservative, opposed to holding any elections for a period of two years, and had criticized the difficulties caused Bavarian Administration by the progress of activity on a state basis be authorized immediately and hoped that the Communist groups would be permitted to function under a title such as Bavarian Communist Volkspartei.

Hoegner demonstrates eagerness to carry out our policies and vigorously to prosecute the policy of de-Nazification. As the Department is aware, Hoegner left Germany in June 1933 and thereafter resided in Austria and Switzerland. He was assisted returning to Munich from Zurich by the OSS on June 6, 1945.

My investigation revealed that some newspaper versions of the attitude and activities of the Bavarian Government were exaggerated. Schaeffer told me, and this seems to be borne out by the facts, that he personally had examined and approved some 5,000 questionnaires relating to Bavarian public officials, and that our Military Government detachment on review of these had only disapproved one. the Department is also aware, Schaeffer was never a member of the National Socialist Party and, in fact, had been incarcerated himself by the Nazis in Dachau. A detailed report will be made by mail regarding the record of the recent Bavarian Government, and I shall here only mention the fact that during its tenure 49887 Bavarian Nazi officials were removed from office. It seemed to me that the public relations officers of the Third Army had failed to bring out more affirmative information about the accomplishments of the Military Government, and a more serious effort along these lines will be undertaken in the future. I also emphasized that a greater burden should be laid on the Bavarian Government in the execution of our policies and that it be given greater facilities and authority. In the judicial field. I urged that it was particularly necessary to promote the organization of the courts and the prosecution of certain arrest categories. Hoegner has manifested a particular interest in this field, and it is believed that his performance will be satisfactory. As the Department is undoubtedly aware General Patton is being relieved of the command of the Third Army. He will be replaced by Lieutenant General Lucien Truscott.

Berlin, October 5, 1945.

[Received October 22—2:10 p. m.]

Sir: I have the honor to report that on September 24, 1945 in a simple but dignified public ceremony held at the Headquarters of the Regional Military Government, the officers of the German Land Government for the Land North Wuerttemberg-Baden were installed at Stuttgart. The German officials for this Land Government are:

Dr. Reinhold Maier, Minister-President for North Wuerttemberg-Baden and Minister of Finance, Herr Fritz Ulrich, Minister of the Interior,
Dr. Josef Beyerle, Minister of Justice,
Herr Josef Andre, Minister of Economics,

Dr. Theodor Heuss, Minister of Culture, and Herr Otto Steinmayer, Minister of Posts.

In his address to the new German Land hierarchy, Colonel W. W. Dawson, Regional Military Government Officer, charged them with the challenge "Make Democracy Work". Both Colonel Dawson and Minister-President Maier called attention to the almost insurmountable difficulties arising out of the present division of the states of Wuerttemberg and Baden into American and French Zones. In this regard, Minister-President Maier said

"the people of Wuerttemberg and Baden without distinction and unanimously look upon the temporary division of their lands as the greatest misfortune that has come to them and as the bitterest pill they have had to swallow as a result of the war."

The text of the addresses of Colonel Dawson and Minister-President Majer are enclosed. 7

A Special Committee, composed of representatives of the US Group Control Council, G-5 USFET, and Headquarters, Seventh Army, have just made a study of the administrative and political problems arising out of this division and the attempt to organize a single Land Government to administer the two American areas in North Wuert-temberg and North Baden. (See my telegram no. 558 [559], dated September 18, 10 p. m.) The Report of this Committee, on which I was represented by Mr. Muccio, is being submitted to the Department under separate despatch.

The delay in selecting and installing a German Government for the Land North Wuerttemberg-Baden was due to several complexities, arising from the endeavor to adjust local peculiarities to general directives of Military Government. For several months temporary heads of Land departments, first under the French, and since July 13 under American authorities, have been acting as directors of several Land activities. These departments, now incorporated into the German Land Government created by American Military Government, have extended their influences—with the acquiescence of the French—into the French-controlled areas of South Wuerttemberg. This was the first problem encountered. The second arose from the directive that North Baden and North Wuerttemberg are to be administered as one Land. A start has now been made toward integrating North Baden into the territory governed from Stuttgart. This process is at its very beginning and little has thus far been done in terms of actual administration of North Baden from Stuttgart. There are two Military Government detachments, one at Mannheim and another at Karlsruhe, with a Landesbezirk government at each city. Coordination between North Baden and North Wuerttemberg is to be achieved by having the Landesbezirk präsidents from Karlsruhe and from Mannheim represent North Baden in the Land Government with the rank of "ministers without portfolios". These two officials have not yet been selected, so no representatives from North Baden attended this ceremony. A further class of difficulties delaying the organization of the German Land Government arose from the uncertainty as to how to handle the several administrative services which overlap the French and American areas. Further confusing the complex situation has been the constant stream of rumors of changes in the line of demarcation between French and American zones. special problems are discussed in detail in the Committee Report referred to above.

With this installation, we now have two German Government administrations, one for the whole of Bavaria, including the Landkreis of Lindau, and the other for North Wuerttemberg-Baden. As reported in my despatch no. 1052 of October 3, 1945, instructions have been issued for the coordination of the administration of the balance of the area of Hessen and Hessen-Nassau within the American Zone of Occupation into a third Land to be known as Greater Hessen (Grosshessen). The organization of a centralized German administration for this third Land, however, has not yet been undertaken. I shall keep the Department fully informed of developments in this regard.

Respectfully yours,

707. Reference Dept's 576 dated October 1. Dept's views on suffrage qualifications are helpful as this matter will shortly come up for decision on this matter.

⁸ Not printed.

My 618 of September 25 inadvertently referred to intention to grant voting rights to persons in arrest categories. It was intention of course to exclude such persons but not those in removal categories. In compliance with Dept's views, I shall of course advise exclusion of Nazis in automatic removal categories as well as those in automatic arrest categories. The difficulties of enforcing the exclusion of such categories will be obvious to the Dept. Adequate lists which could serve as a basis for challenging would-be voters at the polls do not exist. Brand new election machinery and organization must be improvised in very brief time. Furthermore not all persons in automatic removal categories were active Nazis. In fact under current directives removed persons may be reappointed to office after appeal by Military Government if they are found to be only nominal Nazis. Forthcoming election codes may possibly contain provisions restoring political rights to such persons as are thus cleared.

There is one aspect of the problem which the Dept's telegram does not touch and on which I should like guidance. If persons in the mandatory removal categories are denied the suffrage on the ground that they were active and dangerous Nazis, should not the right to vote be denied likewise to all persons removed from private enterprise under order quoted in my 627 of September 26? The Dept's views would be appreciated.

There is of course the possibility that suffrage may be denied all Nazi Party members, including nominal members. In the Dept's opinion should the latter view be given support?

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a copy of a memorandum ¹⁰ concerning the United States enclave of Bremen which has been prepared by Dr. James K. Pollock, Chief of the Government Structure Branch of the Civil Administration Division, Office of Military Government For Germany (U.S.).

After the original tripartite agreement on zones of occupation had allocated Bremen and Bremerhaven to the United States, certain American Naval officers thought it desirable that, for security reasons. United States forces should occupy the shores along which our seaborne traffic passes in and out of the two ports. As a consequence of representations to the British military authorities, the United States enclave was enlarged to include not only the Stadtkreise of Bremen and Bremerhaven but also two Landkreise from Hannover (Wesermuende and Osterholz) and one Landkreis from Oldenburg (Wesermarsch).11

Dr. Pollock in his memorandum points out that considerable administrative confusion has resulted from the separation of these Kreise from their normal administrative relationships. In the absence of a single German authority for the enclave the only coordination of the activities of these disparate units is that provided by Military Government. That coordination, however, is necessarily limited and incomplete. Consequently, in the operation of various special administrative services enclave boundaries are being disregarded in some cases, such as railways, justice and food and agriculture, while in other cases the use of the enclave boundaries is cutting the established lines of German administrative responsibility.

Virtually all of the administrative problems now confronting the American administration in the enclave arise, in Dr. Pollock's opinion, from the unnecessary expansion of the United States area of occupation beyond the Stadtkreis of Bremen and the dock areas of Bremerhaven.

Dr. Pollock has recommended that all of the territory of the enclave except Bremen and the dock areas of Bremerhaven be returned to the British zone after the necessary arrangements are made for the efficient operation of the ports, and that all the special administrative services be returned in so far as feasible to the system obtaining prior to occupation and subjected to more effective supervision through better liaison with the neighboring British authorities.

Dr. Pollock's recommendations are now being studied by Headquarters, United States Forces European Theater in Frankfurt.12

646. Dept believes strongly that no joint administration of Baden and Württemberg or local ad hoc joint arrangements could be adequate and that it would be desirable in interest of political development of Germany along democratic federal lines if political and administrative unity of Baden and Württemberg were to be reestablished as soon as possible.

New delimitation of occupation zones leaving Württemberg in U.S. zone and Baden in French zone, named as second method in urtel 559, Sep 18, might, it is believed, be approved now by U.S. Informal advices from War Dept indicate that military authorities here are now inclined to consider that transfer of northern Baden to French zone could be arranged without disturbing U.S. communication and supply routes to Bavaria.

Will you explore present views of U.S. military authorities in Germany regarding such transfer?

It should be recalled that this Government at time of signature of protocol on zones committed itself to the French Government in writing to review at a later period the assignment of areas of occupation in light of prevailing conditions and requirements. New delimitation of occupation zones, as indicated above, might be considered first step in such revision.

655. Dept recognizes difficulties in enforcing exclusion from suffrage of persons included under removal categories in denazification program, but feels importance of establishing principle of such exclusion. It is hoped that local assistance of democratic German elements in preparation of list of eligible voters might facilitate enforcing such exclusion.

All persons formally in automatic removal categories, but cleared by military government after appeal and reappointed to office, should in our opinion enjoy full political rights, and provision therefor in election codes appears appropriate.

Dept did not participate in formulation of military government law cited in urtel 627,¹³ and does not know to what extent interpretation of it in practice goes beyond previously authorized military government directives. Dept would prefer that exclusion from suffrage be limited to persons in mandatory removal categories and others removed as demonstrably active Nazis, but leaves to your discretion whether right to vote be denied likewise all persons removed from private enterprise under MG law cited in urtel 627.

Although Dept feels strongly that active Nazis should be excluded from suffrage in interest of democratic reconstruction, it likewise believes that nominal members of Nazi party should not be denied suffrage in order that greatest number of Germans possible may be brought to participate in resumption of democratic procedures.

General Clay has expressed view that to fulfill policies of JCS (Joint Chiefs of Staff) 1067 ^{13a} and Potsdam Agreement looking to continuing control of Germany's capacity to make war it will be necessary to control "German personnel qualified to participate in the reconstruction of that military capacity". He has therefore ordered immediate plans inter alia for treatment of certain categories of individuals not specified in JCS 1067.

Office of Political Affairs has given following views of general problem and of policy for each listed category:

Demilitarization measures should be as simple and inexpensive of energy as will be compatible with effectiveness. Measures in excess of reasonable minimum would incur risks of breakdown of whole enforcement system, unnecessary damage to legitimate German economy, and weariness of American opinion with conspicuous outlay. Hence we should undertake no controls not readily defensible as absolutely essential, as economically enforceable, and as compatible with peacetime sense of justice. Furthermore, since there is no rigorous quadripartite denazification system including expansive personnel controls, far-reaching restrictions in US zone may result in surreptitious flight into more congenial zones.

1. All members of German officer corps; retain under detention general staff officers pending further study (mytel 742, Oct 10 14) but no special restrictions on other officers except possibly exclusion from police.

2. Members of aircraft crews; no special discriminations.

3. Persons skilled in developing, making or using missiles; no special discriminations.

4. Persons possessing advanced technical education: no special restraints on whole class, but reference is made to Dept consideration now pending.

- 5. Persons arrested and then released pursuant to JCS 1067. Mytel 734, Oct 10.15 No special restrictions seem required for persons found by semi-judicial process not to be within the intent of that directive.
- 6. All persons known to be more than nominal Nazis: continued exclusion from positions enumerated in denazification programs plus a single form of surveillance; approval in principle of labor outside Germany of active Nazis, Dept's 629 [626?], Oct 9.16

Judgment of Dept would be appreciated. I repeat that plans are crystallized here very rapidly.

1. Political activity. Political re-education of German people got under way slowly as parties were formed in all large cities of American Zone under directives permitting party activity at Kreis level. In Stuttgart, Frankfurt and Kassel Communists and Social Democrats showed most activity and organization meetings were attended by moderate sized and orderly crowds. In Munich these parties are also organized but political activity throughout Bavaria has been retarded by our own delay in issuing procedural directive to Military Government Detachments. In all four cities mentioned parties also found corresponding in orientation if not exactly in name to Christian Democratic Union in Berlin. They are left center nonclerical parties of both Catholics and Protestants. Parties corresponding to Liberal Democratic Party in Berlin also emerged in Frankfurt, Munich and Stuttgart. These are more conservative center parties without Christian orientation.

Almost without exception parties so far organized have in platforms and meetings avoided doctrinal discussions and joined in demanding adherence to democratic ideals, cooperation with Military Government, intensive concentration on Germany's reconstruction, and thorough denazification of German life. On latter point many parties' leaders like individual Germans throughout zone are critical of alleged indiscriminate removal of Nazis. Others, particularly Communists, take opposite view and criticize alleged slowness of denazification process.

Except for cities mentioned above and some smaller cities where political parties are in process of formation, complete political apathy is reported from nearly every section of American zone. Smaller centers and rural districts are not producing any political activity and there is significant unanimity in reports from Military Government detachments in stressing this fact and in observing that German masses are entirely unready for self-government and ignorant of democratic processes and responsibilities.

So far as the limited activity which developed in September is concerned there further seems to be emerging in the urban centers of the American zone a fairly uniform pattern of two left parties,

This telegram, not printed, was based on intelligence received in July. Concerning political activity the following observations were made: "At end of July the political picture remained virtually unchanged in our zone. No mass movement of any kind had developed anywhere. Relatively small groups continued to crop up, mostly in large urban centers. Available evidence indicates that Germans generally everywhere disinterested in politics due to their extreme preoccupation with vital questions such as food and housing and to mental state following years of Nazi dictatorship and impact of recent total defeat." (Copy obtained from Department of the Army files.)

Communist and Social Democratic, and two center parties, variously named.

There is further tendency for left parties to cooperate closely though not to merge. Communist leaders are generally younger and more energetic than those of other parties though Social Democrats appear to be gaining largest following except in Bavaria where new Christian Socialist Union may succeed former Bavarian Peoples Party as strongest group. Reports indicate similar development in British zone with possible formation of more numerous minor parties particularly in Hannover.

It is significant that Germany's complete political collapse has so far produced no mass sentiment of a revolutionary political nature. Such relatively slight political activity as is described above is largely led and inspired by holdover leaders of pre-Hitler parties. No cleansing convulsion of political reform has yet gripped the German body politic.

Berlin, October 13, 1945.

[Received November 2.]

Sir: . . .

On arriving in Munich on September 25 I immediately contacted Dr. Dorn ²¹ and Colonel Roy Dalferes, head of the Military Government Detachment for Bavaria. On the subject of de-Nazification they told me frankly that sixteen individuals in the Department of Food and Agriculture, Ministry of Economics, and four in the Ministry of Finance who were in the automatic removal category had been allowed to continue in office, but that this had been done on the authority of American officers of the Military Government Detachment and not as a result of concealment on the part of the responsible German officials. They also informed me of the recent removal of Ministerial ²¹ Mr. Murphy had previously stated that Walter L. Dorn "of G-5 USFET, a specialist on German government, had been detailed to Munich to investigate the application of our de-Nazification policy in that area."

Director Karl Fischer who had been retained in office for some time although he was in the automatic removal category. It also appeared that former Minister President Fritz Schaeffer had retained as a private consultant Herr Gessler after Gessler's removal from public office, although the latter also was in the automatic removal category.

It was immediately obvious that public confidence in the Bavarian administration was at an extremely low ebb and that the administration possessed only shadow authority and was ineffective. It is not my opinion that this is entirely the fault of the German officials involved. It should be said in their behalf that they are dealing with American officers, many of whom possessed no knowledge of Germany or the German language and in some cases little knowledge of government. Liaison between the top Military Government officers and the higher German officials was exceedingly tenuous. Schaeffer complained bitterly that he had seen no one in authority for a period of many weeks. There was also obvious a tendency on the part of our Military Government to undertake far too much in the way of direct administration and not by any means an organized effort to place responsibility on the German administration. No real effort had been made to support the organization of a broad based administration. At the time of my arrival in Munich only three Ministers were in office. The result was inevitable that blame for faulty administration and error fell directly on the Military Government Detachment, whereas the responsibility often should in the first place have rested with the German officials.

It should be remembered that throughout this period the Army had the tremendous responsibility of the repatriation of millions of displaced persons, vast redeployment problems, and the necessity of acquainting itself with conditions in a foreign country which many officers had never before visited. Another feature which I believe will grow in importance as time goes on is the number of intrigues among competing German officials which are difficult at times for the inexperienced foreigner to gauge and understand. It is my opinion that we will observe an increasing amount of subtle denunciation of officials who will be described as unreliable, reactionary, fascist, pro-Nazi and the like by political opponents eager for office. ample, in the present instance former Minister President Schaeffer has been variously described as a black reactionary and pro-Nazi. Remembering that Schaeffer was himself incarcerated by the Nazis in Dachau and that even his most extreme opponents could not say that he had ever been a member of the Nazi party, I found that Schaeffer could at the worst be described as an old time conservative whose prototype may be frequently found in American public office. There is heavy evidence of his anti-Nazi record throughout the years. However, it was obvious that his usefulness was at an end, due to public criticism.

Reference should also be made to the numerous comments made in the American press regarding the intervention of Cardinal Faulhaber 22 in Bavarian state politics. I believe that it is true that in the early days of the occupation, Cardinal Faulhaber did make a number of recommendations to our Military Government authorities but it is clear also that our Military Government authorities took the initiative in this matter and sought his advice and counsel. I believe they were justified in this at the beginning because it was necessary for them to gain a knowledge of the personalities in the field and there was no doubt regarding Cardinal Faulhaber's long-continued opposition to National Socialism, which he fought as best he could under the circumstances. As has been pointed out before, approximately 1400 Catholic priests were interned at one time or another in concentration camps and a number of them died there. Discussion of this phase of the matter with Cardinal Faulhaber leaves no doubt in one's mind regarding the latter's views of National Socialism. As a result of my inquiries at Munich I am also convinced that Cardinal Faulhaber will carefully refrain in future from political activity of any sort. I believe that he will be quite content to devote his remaining strength and effort to religious welfare and activity, in which he is of course primarily interested. I believe also that he deserves credit for having honestly cooperated with our Military Government authorities.

Two additional items emerged from these conversations:

- 1. A doubt which may be entirely honest in the minds of some regarding the wisdom of our present policy of de-Nazification which removes from office by classes public officials and members of trade and industry, leaving to them only the possibility of gaining a livelihood as day laborers. The suggestion was made that eventually we must come to a more individual treatment of this question and that the individual should have some kind of hearing, on the ground that the broad and sweeping classification now used overlooks individual circumstances and causes grave injuries.
- 2. Recruiting by the Communist party of former members of the National Socialist party. Munich is full of current rumors to the effect that inducements are being offered to former Nazis to join the Communist party. The explanation is given that the Communists hope to acquire as members selected Nazis who will provide a nucleus of ability and brains and who are blocked under present circumstances from entry into any of the other parties and are only able to obtain work as day laborers.

Mr. Beam,23 who accompanied me on the visit to Munich, pointed out quite correctly that there seemed to be an undue amount of activity on the part of would-be political leaders and not enough on a popular basis. We considered it unfortunate that in the time that has elapsed since the Potsdam Conference and since the telegraphic instruction of August 6 permitting democratic political parties to form,24 not a single party has been established in Munich nor have any political rallies been allowed. The Military Government Office of Munich mentioned that applications had been received from seven or eight political parties but had not been acted upon pending the issuance of detailed instructions by Third Army Headquarters. We saw these instructions in draft form and we objected that they were too restrictive, particularly in that they require all members of a particular party to submit Fragebogen. What our Military Government officers fear most is that Nazis will infiltrate the new parties. We explained, and I believe our officers now understand the point, that the sponsors can be held accountable for the democratic nature of their parties and that in any event active competition between the parties will induce them to present a clear record on de-Nazification.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

A-239. USFET Bi-weekly Political Summary No. 3 for 29 September 1945 contains an interesting evaluation of present German attitudes toward the American occupation authorities. While their generally compliant attitude towards our occupation has not changed, close contact with Americans is said frankly to puzzle Germans as to our personal or national character. They find us quite unpredictable whereas the lines of action of the French and English can be better foreseen by them. In outward appearance and manner we seem better disposed and less severe than some of our Allies but surprise house to house checks, sudden burdensome requisitions or a new and more thorough application of our de-Nazification policy makes them realize that our extreme matter-of-factness covers a determined intention to carry out our policies.

According to the USFET study, the Germans complain of our direct control and contrast it to the general indifference to small details on the part of our Allies. Many people, especially of the middle and upper classes, are impatient of the inefficiency which they claim is demonstrated by new local government appointees and these people profess that they would prefer for us to do all the governing. Counter-balancing such groups are others, including the new German administrators, who would like for us to assume a purely supervisory role.

Many Nazis are said to feel that the network of connections they built up during [apparent omission] years will tide them over the present "period of inconvenience"; they are confident that we are moving quickly towards a "forgive and forget" policy.

Sir: I have the honor to refer to my despatch no. 1075 dated October 8, 1945 ²⁵ transmitting a copy of the Report of a study made of the political and administrative problems of the Land North Wuerttemberg-Baden. Particular reference is made to the statement therein that only a start had been made in carrying out the plan of Military Government to set up a single German administration for the United States occupied areas of North Wuerttemberg and North Baden.

The Director of the Office of Military Government at Stuttgart has now reported that the integration of North Baden and North Wuert-temberg has been accomplished by eliminating the Landes Kommissariatbezirke at Mannheim and Karlsruhe as administrative districts and controlling all of U.S. Baden through branch offices located at Karlsruhe. In commenting on this, the Director of the Office of Military Government points out that in order to differentiate between Kommissariatbezirke and Regierungsbezirke, the Badanese had selected the name "Landesbezirk Baden" to designate their governmental unit. The Landesbezirk Baden is headed by a "Landesbezirkspräsident" subordinate to the "Ministerpräsident" of North Wuerttemberg-Baden. Heads of branch offices at Karlsruhe, subordinate to the Ministries for North Wuerttemberg-Baden set up in Stuttgart, have been designated "Directors".

The Director of the Office of Military Government further reports that the organization of the German governmental structure has presented no problems at the Land level, but that the integration of the Baden Landesbezirk with Wuerttemberg is presenting complications because of the subordination of a pre-occupation Land Government in Baden to a Wuerttemberg-Baden Government. He mentions that the century-old boundaries—customs and language differences—are apparent in discussions between the branches of government, but has noted with satisfaction that a democratic approach to all problems is developing a wholesome, neighborly feeling. He reports that this has been accomplished without disturbing the functional activities of the past governmental structure except that no Land Ministries exist in Baden.

Time only will tell whether Baden-Wuerttemberg rivalries can be subordinated to our aim of unified Land administration. I shall not fail to keep the Department informed of progress made in solving this involved administrative problem.

692. Dept approves your general approach to problem of demilitarization measures and personnel controls, as stated urtel 762, Oct 12. Dept believes, however, that plans for "far-reaching restrictions in US zone" should not be jettisoned because there is no rigorous quadripartite denazification system, but that quadripartite agreement on denazification methods and personnel control should be sought in Control Council. We feel in particular the importance of quadripartite agreement on rigorous treatment of potentially dangerous members of the German officer corps and of active Nazis.

The following comments on policy for six listed categories are suggested for your consideration:

1. All members of German officer corps: Your policy statement does not appear in accord with Army Staff Study, dealing with disposition of potentially dangerous German officers (your despatch 879, Sept 4)²⁶ to which you previously gave your concurrence. Following is condensed statement of Depts views on this Staff Study which are being forwarded to you in air mail instruction: 27

a. Although Dept does not regard exile and dispersal as feasible treatment of whole body of potentially dangerous officers of German Armed Forces, no objection would be interposed if adequate quadripartite plan were devised for detention outside Germany of a number of most dangerous officers, in particular German General Staff Officers.

b. Restrictive measures to be applied to potentially dangerous officers within Germany should be closely correlated, or even assimilated to a program of restrictive measures to be imposed upon active Nazis, in order to emphasize to German people the nefarious association of these two groups.

c. Potentially dangerous officers as well as active Nazis should be formally deprived for the time being of civil and political rights in accordance with familiar practices of German criminal law (reference Deptel No. 576, Oct 1, 1945 and Depts policy study CAC-298, Treatment and Status of Former Nazis ²⁸). Restrictions may also include further measures enumerated in Staff Study under reference.

Minutes of Meeting of the Secretaries of State, War, and the Navy, Held at Washington, October 23, 1945

[Extract]

Present: The Secretary of State

Robert P. Patterson, Secretary of War James Forrestal, Secretary of the Navy

MILITARY GOVERNMENT OF GERMANY

Mr. Patterson stated that General MacArthur 30 and General Eisenhower are in favor of getting our military out of Government in Germany as soon as possible and they feel that the Government of Germany should be turned over to civilian control. The proper agency in his belief to which the responsibility should be given was the State Department. It was essential he thought if the mistakes of North Africa are to be avoided that responsibility be centered in one single Department. If the representatives of each agency in Germany report to separate agencies back here nothing but a mess will ensue. Mr. Byrnes replied that he thought the Army has the best organization and that it would be a great mistake to make the change now. He understood that naturally the Army wants to get out but he hoped that this could be postponed for some time to come. Mr. Patterson reiterated that when the time comes for the Army to leave he feels that only the State Department can take over. He added that while he did not know the Russian attitude the British are in favor of civilian control and already their set up is one-half civilian. Mr. Byrnes said that the State Department is not geared for this. Mr. Patterson thought that a separate unit could be set up and that there is adequate time to do it. He said that he could turn over some of the Army's best men from Civil Affairs and mentioned that General Hilldring 31 would be an excellent man for the job. Mr. Forrestal asked if he would turn over General Clay and Mr. Patterson replied in the affirmative. Mr. Byrnes suggested that this "bad news" be postponed for some eight or nine months. There was general agreement that when the change does take place it must be to a single Department.

Berlin, October 23, 1945. [Received November 2.]

Sir: I have the honor to refer to my despatch No. 1050 of October 1, 1945, reporting the plan to reorganize United States Military Government structure in Germany, and to enclose a directive just received here which was issued on October 5, 1945, by Headquarters, United States Forces, European Theater, entitled "Reorganization of Military Government Channels in Order to Develop German Responsibility for Self-Government".³²

Two significant points are to be noted in this highly important document. Firstly, on the assumption that denazification has been so successful that Germans can be entrusted with a greater share of responsibility in their government, it is provided that military government units will withdraw from direct, active participation in government in Germany in Landkreis, Stadtkreis and, subsequently, Regierungsbezirk levels effective upon the dates cited.³³ Their duties will be taken over by the appropriate German officials in all cases, with the exceptions as to "general policy control" functions stipulated.³⁴

Secondly, with respect to the revised procedure as to channels set forth in paragraph 3 of the enclosed directive, a great step forward has been taken. Instead of having our military government authorities in the three Länder and the Bremen Enclave proceed, as is now the case, through cumbersome Army channels with the resultant loss of time and efficiency, direct communication between them and the Office of Military Government (U.S. Zone), with headquarters at Frankfurt, is to be established. This step ought certainly to make for a more efficient system of control and supervision under the new organization of German local government.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

November 15 and December 15, respectively. In exceptional cases, withdrawal on the Landkreis and Stadtkreis levels might be postponed until December 15.

³⁴ One of the main functions left to the military authorities was the supervision of elections and the vetting of candidates.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/11-1945

Memorandum by the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the United States Deputy Military Governor for Germany (Clay) 35

Berlin, October 27, 1945.

I have made a careful survey of the Office of Political Affairs to ascertain whether any economies in personnel are feasible but find no possibility of reduction if I am to meet the obligations of my position as Political Adviser to you and the requirements of the Department of State. On the contrary, there should be a small increase here in Berlin. It is to be noted that the Department of State in its budgetary estimate for the present fiscal year anticipated a total staff, officers and clerks on State Department payroll, of 184; actually we have only 104. In addition to civilian personnel we have 13 Army officers and 24 enlisted men.

As you know, because of the anomalous situation obtaining in Germany, the staff under my immediate direction has two different duties: that of forming an integral part of the Military Government of Germany and that of performing, within the framework of Military Government, a number of the functions normally assigned to a United States diplomatic mission abroad.

Within the first category of duties is, of course, the major responsibility of giving you maximum support and assistance, and of procuring information with respect to developments within Germany, remaining in contact with official policies and public opinion in the United States and with policies and opinions in Allied countries. This, it seems to me, is required of the Political Adviser in the interest of his maximum contribution to the Military Governor and the Deputy Military Governor. I am sure you will understand my earnest desire to maintain as competent and as comprehensive a flow of information and reasoned judgment as possible in this responsibility.

As an integral part of the work of Military Government, the Office of Political Affairs is charged with a substantial concern for the political aspects of denazification policies, for the development of German political parties and activities, for the disposition of the German Foreign Office and its records together with other aspects of diplomatic and representation within Germany and outside. The Office also participates in the preparation of the Military Governor's Monthly Report and collaborates with the other offices and divisions in their multiplicity of duties. The task of concurrence from the political point of view in the many drafts submitted to the office requires a number of qualified men who have not only political training but also a knowledge of the various fields in which action is proposed. Since our national objective in Germany is fundamentally a political one, I am equally concerned that the work of the Office of Political Affairs be carried on by a staff of sufficient size to permit us to bring to bear on every question the most informed judgment which is possible.

The second category of functions, that of a diplomatic mission, within the framework of Military Government, places two specialized duties on me and on the Office of Political Affairs. The first of these involves the representation of American interests in property and in citizens, particularly through consular activities. This performance of this duty is considerably behind what I would like and if it is to be done, the Department of State will have to maintain a substantial group of Foreign Service officers in Germany for it.

A further responsibility in this second category of diplomatic functions is that of adequate reporting to the Department of State. This work, whose importance is attested by the fact that it is a statutory function resting on all American diplomatic missions, is, of course, the basis on which the Department of State conducts the foreign relations of the United States. Its importance is further recognized by the fact that it has been an authorized procedure ever since political advisers to our military commanders were appointed. I am, therefore, particularly desirous that I be in a position continuously to report to the Department of State in harmony with you, in those established forms which the Department is organized to use most advantageously, the course of those events in Germany which are essential for wise foreign policy.

The presence of Army personnel in the administrative branch of the Office of Political Affairs seems to me essential as long as military directives and procedures govern American activities in Germany. Officers of the Foreign Service do not have the experience necessary for effecting a smooth integration of the office into military administration. I should feel myself severely lamed without the assistance of competent Army personnel.

Our present clerical staff, the vast majority of whom are on the payroll of the Department of State, are now developing efficiency as a team. They should provide the necessary basis for whatever diplomatic and consular representation will be required for the future. In my opinion this clerical staff will of necessity be augmented rather than reduced as time goes on.

With conditions as they are throughout Europe today, I must keep in close contact with my colleagues in each country in Europe. Almost every problem facing Germany—food, coal, transportation, reparations—is not confined to Germany alone. They overlap into, and are affected by, conditions throughout Europe, and therefore it is essential for me to know of developments in other countries affecting Germany, and in turn, I am called upon to keep my colleagues advised, in addition to the Department of State, of developments within Germany affecting neighboring countries. This function places an additional burden on my staff.

In view of the conditions outlined above, I request that the current personnel limitations, imposed by the Manpower Board, be removed insofar as they pertain to the State Department personnel assigned or to be assigned to the offices of Political Adviser and Political Affairs.

Berlin, October 29, 1945. [Received November 15.]

Sir: I have the honor to transmit a report dated October 25, 1945, received from Mr. Brewster Morris, my representative at Seventh Army Headquarters at Heidelberg, on the subject of "Political Developments and the General Situation in the Stuttgart Area".36

The report summarizes comprehensively the observations and conversations of the reporting officer in the course of his two-day visit to Stuttgart. It is noteworthy that except for variations in the personalities involved, there seem to be in the Stuttgart area the same developing political forces, the same criticisms and the same dangers as exist elsewhere in the American Zone and in Germany.

The Department's attention is particularly invited to certain facts and observations contained in the report. First of all, in Wuerttemburg as elsewhere, the Communists are strongly promoting the idea of a united front as one of the means of creating a single party system which they can control. The idea is not so readily accepted by other political parties in Stuttgart as in Berlin, perhaps chiefly because of the absence of the foreign pressure which Berlin Communists can and do successfully bring to their support. Also to be noted is the fact that there is some reason to believe that the Communist who is on the Board of Licencees of the Stuttgarter Zeitung is successfully making use of his position to spread Communist doctrine.

The report notes also the unanimous opinion in Stuttgart that the plan for local elections in January is unwise and premature. All

German and Military Government authorities whose views were ascertained also felt that the recently published Law No. 8,37 calling for the removal of all members of the Nazi Party from private enterprise, was unwise and is creating great nervousness and uncertainty among the people. This duplicates reports received from other areas. The Communists alone are reported to welcome the law and they do so apparently only because they see an opportunity to use it to promote the introduction of industrial management by the workers. The Department's attention is also invited to the concluding paragraphs of the report which point out the unfortunate effects which the rapid redeployment of such large numbers of our troops is having on the maintenance of order and the authority and prestige of the occupation forces.38

892. With further reference to Dept's 646, of October 10, our military authorities have given careful study to the question of political and administrative unity of Baden and Württemberg and especially to the Dept's reference to the American commitment to the French Govt to review at some future date the assignment of areas of occupation in the light of prevailing conditions and requirements.

While this matter is still under discussion here, informally everyone is unfavorable to transfer of Northern Baden to French administration now. The following points are made:

a. We must have Rhine ports for our own and German needs. We cannot expect successful operation under the French.

b. Transfer further reduces our light industry resources.

c. In any event, we should make no concessions to French in their present position opposing Potsdam decision relative establishment of German central machinery.39

³⁷ See footnote 9, p. 976.

To Govern the Treatment of Germany in the Initial Control Period", paragraph 9, Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1503. For documentation on French opposition to the decision on central machinery, see ante, pp. 861 ff.

³⁸ Mr. Morris commented on the depredations being carried on within Germany by displaced persons. This situation, he felt, was worsened by the redeployment of troops and the deactivation of the lower echelons of Military Government, which caused a general slackening of law and order. He urged a cautious approach in handing over governmental responsibility to the Germans.

For this decision, see the Report on the Tripartite Conference of Berlin, which includes text of the agreement on "The Political and Economic Principles"

d. It is a cultural and liberal area, Baden being most democratic of German regionals and is furnishing liberal leadership for democratic processes.

e. Psychologically, it would make all, including Germans, believe that either we are gradually withdrawing or we are unwilling to stand up to the French, which lowers prestige of U.S. in Europe.

f. While no one here likes present northern Württemberg-northern

f. While no one here likes present northern Württemberg-northern Baden combination, any fear that Germans will not make it work is unfounded because population would make it work rather than go under French control.

It should be said that the present zone boundaries, in practice, have proved to be very unsatisfactory to American occupation authorities. The disregard of political and administrative lines has raised a practice of questionable ad hoc arrangements with the French in order to meet the needs of the population. The situation in Baden is probably worse than in Württemberg, but in both cases the situation in the northern or American portions of the two states is distinctly better than in the southern or French sections. The French policy has been to live off the country, to remove as much as possible for shipment back to France, and to make little effort to restore normal public services. It is considered that as winter approaches the situation in southern Baden and southern Württemberg may become critical.

It is felt that any revision of the present zone boundaries should:

a. Follow administrative and political boundaries.

b. Promote the re-building of a democratic and federal Germany and facilitate the purposes of the occupation.

c. Eliminate existing administrative difficulties and improve the functioning of govt in the areas concerned.

Some of our authorities here, such as Dr. James K. Pollock, who is a specialist on German govt, urge that the French be induced to withdraw from southern Württemberg as well as from southern Baden. turning over these areas to American control. They also urge that the Landkreis Lindau, Bavaria, be restored to American control. They also recommend that Rheinhessen, which is the area around Mainz and a part of Land Hessen, should be included within the American zone. These specialists point out that the city of Mannheim is of particular importance to the American authorities in the field of water transportation; that the city of Heidelberg with its University is a cultural center of value in the re-education of Germany. It is also the largest undamaged city in Germany, a fact of no mean significance in a country where shelter is at a premium. Seventh Army Headquarters are situated at Heidelberg. We would gain little by a transfer of southern Württemberg to our control and we would lose much by the transfer of northern Baden to the French and the French would be giving up areas they are not now dealing with effectively.

Washington, November 2, 1945.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As I understand it from our discussion at the meeting of October 23rd, you are in sympathy with the desire of the War Department to transfer military government in former Axis countries from military to civilian control at the earliest practicable This action would be in conformity with the President's announcement on October 31st, 40 that U.S. military government control of Germany should be transferred to American civilian authorities by June 1st, 1946. This is of course simply an extension to foreign fields of the long-established American policy that the Army should not allow itself to become involved in matters of civil government. As soon as military and security reasons no longer exist, the occupational duties of the Army should be divorced from those relating to civil administration. If this premise is granted, I think you will agree that the State Department is the logical agency of our government through which the civil administration of occupied enemy territories should be accomplished.

The question, then, is one of timing and as to this I appreciate your position that the transfer is not without difficulty and cannot be accomplished overnight. However, in order that the transition may be accomplished smoothly and efficiently it is essential that action be initiated without delay to accomplish the desired result. The first step is agreement on a target date for completion of the transfer, and this we should be able to agree on now. As directed by the President, in the case of Germany, this would be no later than June 1st, 1946. Other necessary steps appear to me to be as follows:

a. The establishment of an administrative agency to furnish the administrative support now rendered by the Civil Affairs Division of the War Department and the Division of Island Governments of the Navy Department.

b. A decision as to the agency of the Federal Government that will replace the U.S. Chiefs of Staff, which under the present arrangement is responsible for the operation of military government in all theaters. In my opinion the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee organization, after it has been formally recognized and after its secretariat has been enlarged and strengthened would be the appropriate agency to assume these responsibilities.

⁴⁰ On October 31, at a press conference, President Truman endorsed and made public a letter written to him by General Eisenhower on October 26. In his letter, General Eisenhower reminded the President that in conversations in Frankfurt (presumably July 26) they had both agreed on the desirability of turning over U.S. participation in the Government of Germany to civilian authority as soon as possible. General Eisenhower, drawing a distinction between the civilian governmental and purely military occupational duties of American forces in Germany, recommended that this be done no later than June 1, 1946. The full text of General Eisenhower's letter is in Department of State Bulletin, November 4, 1945, p. 711. See also Dwight D. Eisenhower, Crusade in Europe (Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday and Co., 1948), p. 441.

c. The substitution of civilian personnel from the highest level to the lowest for the officers and enlisted men who are now conducting military government in Germany, Austria, Venezia Giulia, Japan and

d. An effective organization to procure the thousands of civilians necessary to carry out this personnel replacement program.

You will of course recognize the desirability that the policy of civilianization be adopted by all four governments concerned in the control of Germany, and put into effect concurrently. The War Department will accordingly appreciate the necessary State Department action to obtain the required agreement to the proposal, to take effect at the earliest date that can be mutually agreed upon, in no event later than June 1st, 1946. It is my understanding that the British are in favor of civilian control and that their set-up is already half civilian. The attitude of Russia and that of France are unknown to me.

In carrying out the necessary steps to effect the transfer outlined above, the War Department will cooperate to the fullest extent at all stages, not only in consultation but in any other manner which will contribute to the objective.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

Personal for Ambassador Murphy.⁴¹ Memo has been received from General Bedell Smith 42 that proposal for the cession of all of Baden to the French and all of Württemberg to the US is not favorably considered by USFET (United States Forces European Theater) from a military point of view. Memo points out that main rail, road and inland waterway links are centered in Karlsruhe, Mannheim and Heidelberg and that even if transit rights were negotiated with the French, administrative problems would militate against operating efficiency. At present principal US supply and maintenance installations are concentrated in northern Baden. US forces have gone to great expense to reconstruct port facilities, bridges and warehouses.

⁴¹ Mr. Murphy and General Clay were in Washington November 1–9 for discussions with the State and War Departments on matters relating to Military Government and Control Council policy in Germany. No record of these discussions has been found in Department files.

A French peninsula in the US zone would hamper emergency operations if needed. Release of northern Baden would reduce limited industrial capacity of US zone to the point where latter would be merely an agricultural area. Memo concludes that since French have refused agreement to establishment at Berlin of central German agencies, US attempts to obtain quadripartite agreement would be weakened by conceding such additional territory to the French at this time and that it is untimely to indicate to the Germans that we propose to relinquish any part of present US zone.

948. Consideration is being given to advisability of presenting a proposal to Political Directorate on quadripartite basis concerning establishment of consular offices in Germany by four occupying powers, as well as establishment of such offices by United Nations countries and certain neutral countries. While it would be advantageous to have American consular offices throughout Germany especially in the Russian zone of occupation, present trend of thought in this Mission is that it might be advisable to have such American offices actually established and functioning in American zone and at Hamburg before question is raised on quadripartite basis. The establishment and functioning of American consular offices depend upon arrival of personnel and receipt of necessary supplies which so far have not been forthcoming.

Military missions of 16 "chiefly interested" United Nations countries are now being established in Berlin on a limited basis.⁴³ Although this office has pressed for approval of representation by Switzerland and Sweden, this matter was postponed by Russians until the foregoing 16 military missions have been established. In the meantime, Swiss and some other consular officials who were operating in American zone are being permitted to continue on a temporary and ad hoc basis. Dept's views are requested concerning raising of question of establishment of offices throughout Germany.

Inform Ambassador Murphy.

TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR ADMINISTRATION OF GERMANY FROM MILITARY TO CIVILIAN AUTHORITY

Mr. Patterson referred to Mr. Byrnes' letter of November 3 46 on this subject in reply to his of November 2 and said that he understood that what Mr. Byrnes wished was an orderly transfer. Mr. McClov inquired as to who would pay the salaries after June 1 of those recruited. It was the general opinion that this would involve a transfer of appropriations from the War Department to the State Department or whatever agency might be given the responsibility. Mr. McClov said that the Army is already building up its civilian element in military government of Germany as rapidly as possible. Reference was made to General Eisenhower's letter 47 favoring the changeover to civilian responsibility. Mr. McClov felt it had been unwise to announce our policy of change just at this time since it merely strengthened the feeling that we are abdicating our influence and interest in Europe. Mr. Byrnes said that we might have to do something about the present rapid rate of demobilization.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Franz Schneider, Consultant to the Assistant Secretary of State for Administration ⁵⁰

He ⁵¹ stated that he is getting out a week from next week-end; be announced tomorrow.⁵²

⁴⁸ This telegram reported the tenth meeting of the Political Directorate of the Control Commission held in Berlin, October 18. In discussions of the representation of neutrals in Germany, the Soviet member refused to accept any positive statement in favor of the acceptance of neutral countries. "He maintained a very obstructive attitude even against the suggestion that the Directorate agree to reopen the question after the first sixteen countries had been installed in Berlin." Mr. Murphy reported in telegram 1071, November 22, from Berlin, that no further steps had been taken toward the establishment of American consular offices in Germany. Everything possible had been done, and nothing further could be accomplished until additional personnel and supplies were received from the Department. (125.0062/11-2245) from the Department. (125.0062/11-2245)

O A copy of this memorandum was transmitted to the Secretary of State under cover of a memorandum from Assistant Secretary of State Russell, November 13. In his covering memorandum Mr. Russell wrote: "The general theme of Mr. McCloy's conversation was that the Army, in the civil administration of Germany, had a 'going' administration and that it appeared to him to be a wasteful procedure to throw away the going concern operated by the Army and to create under the sponsorship of the State Department an entirely new organization. Orderly administration would result from the continuance of Army control of the civil government, which control, in the opinion of Mr. McCloy, has been reasonably satisfactory in the past and should show substantial improvement in the future. There is considerable merit in this thought. If the Army is to transfer to the State Department responsibility for civil government in Germany on June 1, 1946, it will mean that the Army, which has been operating this civil government for well over a year, steps out of the picture and the State Department, which will have no background of experience at that time, must step in. It would appear wise to retain the experienced management furnished by the Army if this is at all practicable." (740.00119 Control (Germany)/-11-1345)

⁵¹ John J. McCloy, Assistant Secretary of War.

⁵² Mr. McCloy's resignation as Assistant Secretary of War was announced November 15.

Regrets whole public discussion of change to civilian control, which is demoralizing to existing staffs on both sides of the water.

Regrets Army wants to dump whole business because of a little criticism. Army can do a better job than anyone else now. Regrets Patterson wrote letter to Byrnes 53 day before he, McCloy, got back. He had been handling the matter. Clay apparently got Patterson to sign the letter. Clay and others on Eisenhower's staff had been emphasizing to Eisenhower that his reputation would suffer if he continued to control Civil Government. He, McCloy, had cooled Eisenhower off on the matter on his recent trip; but Eisenhower's associates had shown him articles in PM 54 and convinced him he should act.

He had told the President that he greatly regretted the premature desire to get rid of Civil Government and the President said, "I do, too." He had no idea where the President got the idea of having the new "direct organization under the President". Concluded that it was an idea of his own.

I showed him the brief proposal we laid before Clay.⁵⁵ He said he liked the idea. Then told him Clay's reaction to it. He said some of Clay's points were well taken—guessed the High Commissioner would have to be in Germany most of the time. Recognized the problem of getting policy changed—which was crucial.

After much discussion he agreed that the best thing would be for the Army to keep Civil Government. But it would be awful hard to get that decision reversed now. He was willing to talk to Patterson along that line. But perhaps the most practical procedure now would be to pull for a civilian High Commissioner who would be under the War Department. That sort of a set-up had existed in old Philippine Government. He would talk to Patterson along that line; and suggested that I find out how Secretary Byrnes felt about it.

The Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) 56

Washington, November 16, 1945—6 p. m.

891. Urtel 1001, Nov. 13.57 Dept is in agreement with General Clav's rejection of Committee's recommendation on suffrage requirements whereby only persons in mandatory arrest categories are disqualified. However, Dept does not approve view that all members of the party should be disbarred from the polls, regardless of whether affiliation was nominal or not.

Dept maintains opinion previously presented (Deptels 507, Sep. 19; 576, Oct 1; 655, Oct. 11) that all persons in mandatory removal and exclusion categories as well as in mandatory arrest categories should be denied suffrage. This middle course between two above alternatives has been advocated for following reasons:

1. Articles of Potsdam Agreement dealing with treatment of Nazis 58 are based on distinction between active and nominal Nazis. Such distinction was a part of original US proposal at Potsdam ⁵⁹ and is also incorporated in provisions of JCS 1067. Accordingly, Dept believes that treatment of Nazis with respect to suffrage should be in accord with distinction proposed by US and accepted at Potsdam by other powers. Dept sees no cogent reason for altering in matter of suffrage this general policy of distinction between active and nominal Nazis, and particularly without agreement on a quadripartite basis for such change in policy.

2. To restrict voting disqualification to persons in mandatory arrest categories alone would allow suffrage to larger number of active Nazis in removal and exclusion categories. It seems inconsistent to remove persons from office as active Nazis who have demonstrated their anti-democratic convictions, on the one hand, and on the other hand at the same time admit such persons to participate in democratic electoral procedures. If removal from office is justified, had decided to send the telegram without formal War Department clearance.

⁵⁶ In a memorandum attached to the file copy of this telegram, James W. Riddleberger, Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs, explained to H. Freeman Matthews, Director of the Office of European Affairs, that the draft of this message had been taken to the Civil Affairs Division of the War Department for approval, but because of the difficulty in obtaining rapid concurrence via normal channels and the need for sending the telegram immediately, the State Department officials, on the advice of the Civil Affairs Division officers, who "were all inclined to agree with the substance of the message", had decided to send the telegram without formal War Department clearance.

To Not printed; the Committee referred to was an interdivisional committee of the Office of Military Government, U.S., which had studied draft local government and election codes submitted by Länder in the U.S. zone. Its reason for making this recommendation stemmed "from consideration of the enormous dimensions of vetting process if all Nazis were denied suffrage and from conviction that [it] would be unwise to exclude such a large segment of the population which, in the Committee's opinion, should be reintegrated into normal community life." (740.00119 Control (Germany)/11-1345) it should involve as a corollary deprivation for the time being of civil and political rights, including forfeiture of suffrage.

See Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1503.

⁵⁹ See paragraph 4 of U.S. proposal dated July 17, ibid., p. 776.

3. If nominal members of Nazi party are denied suffrage as well as active Nazis liable to arrest or removal, this denial would assimilate status of nominal Nazis in important respect to that of active Nazis and would unduly increase number of persons excluded from normal community life. Consistent with denazification program, greatest number of Germans possible should be brought to participate in resumption of democratic procedures.

4. Even if practical difficulties in enforcing exclusion of active Nazis from suffrage were so great that certain number of such persons were able to vote, Dept believes importance of establishing publicly principle of such exclusion outweighs considerations of possible irregularities. Local assistance of democratic German elements in preparing lists of eligible voters should facilitate enforcement of exclusion of active Nazis and also review of individual cases where mandatory categories may work injustices.

Plans for election codes should accordingly be amended to disqualify from suffrage all persons in mandatory arrest and removal categories and others arrested or removed as demonstrably active Nazis.

Please present Depts position to General Clay and report outcome. 60

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

> Berlin, November 19, 1945—7 p. m. [Received November 20—8:15 p. m.]

1056. Personal for Matthews. I drafted the following message for the personal attention of the Secretary and I would be grateful if you could find opportunity to discuss the matter with him. It concerns the extent and scope of reporting to the Department by State Department representatives here.

As you know it has not been easy at times to maintain a line of demarcation between what fell into War Department province and what fell into State. I have always emphasized to the military here ments to permit formation of democratic political parties on a Land basis;

see ibid., p. 7.

⁶⁰ In despatch 1444, December 1, from Berlin, Mr. Murphy stated: "On November 17, before the views stated in the Department's telegram no. 891, November 16, could be conveyed to General Clay, he had formally approved a directive which incorporated his own revisions of the committee's recommendations." (740.00119 Control (Germany)/12-145) Subsequently, on November 23, a directive was issued by USFET on Local Government Codes of Election which embodied the suffrage provisions of the November 17 document; the USFET directive is treated in Gillen, State and Local Government in West Germany, 1945-1953, p. 9.
On the same date, USFET authorized Regional Military Government detach-that both departments work hand in hand. I can well understand, of course, General Clay's insistence that all instructions come to him from his own Department. At the same time it is also clear that when the Department of State expresses a view it would come through my channel and that I would convey it to him. I think the Department should very definitely insist upon its right to continue this procedure.

"Personal for the Secretary

"General Clay raises fundamental question of status and jurisdiction of Department's participation in Military Government of Germany, on which I should be grateful for your advice. General Clay informs me that in his opinion I have been reporting to the Department on subjects, particularly in the economic field, which should be exclusively reported by him in his discretion to the War Department. When the Department of State telegraphs to me comment on these problems and other subjects, its views are of course immediately communicated to General Clay. He objects to this procedure and said that the Department is setting up here a species of "political commissariat" which seeks to review and influence the entire range of questions relating to the American participation in the occupation of Germany.

"This is not my view. The Department's Mission here is exceedingly limited by the personnel factor in the first place. It has consistently sought with the utmost loyalty to Generals Eisenhower and Clay—at times when possibly it did not fully agree with actions taken, with or without consultation with the Department's representatives—to support and aid the War Department in its difficult task. In my reporting to the Department, I am guided by the Department's standing instructions and a desire to cooperate fully with our military authorities.

"When General Clay informs me that he is taking orders only from the War Department, I believe that such a position is parochial. The Government's interest in Germany surpasses one department of the Government. Certainly the representatives here of the Department of State, which is, after all, directly charged with our foreign relations, have never questioned a governmental decision whether it reaches them through War Department or other qualified agency.

"The foregoing issue is one which I have tried to bridge with as much tact as I could muster and this has been facilitated by what for me is a happy personal relationship with General Clay. As he feels so strongly about it, I respectfully suggest that a firm decision be taken jointly by you and Judge Patterson so that the Department's Mission here may have its responsibilities and its authority to report to the Department of State clearly defined.

"I have shown the foregoing to General Clay and he is telegraphing his views to the War Department." 61

Mr. Patterson stated that he had asked Treasury for certain financial experts to be employed by our Military Government in Japan and Germany. Mr. Vinson had answered that he could have them only if they were made responsible to the Treasury Department and reported to him. Mr. Patterson replied that this was quite out of line with the policy which had long been established that all must be responsible to the Commander-in-Chief of the theatre in question. He said it would be quite disruptive to have different people answerable to different agencies in this country. He said that he had sent Mr. Byrnes a copy of his memorandum on this subject. 62 Mr. Forrestal agreed that such procedure would be quite disruptive and remarked that he could not have Admiral Ghormlev 63 to continue to report directly to the Navy as he has done occasionally in the past. Mr. Byrnes said that Mr. Vinson had spoken to him on the subject. Mr. Patterson pointed out that he had merely asked for technical and competent personnel which the Treasury could provide and he expected them to fit into the regular Military Government machinery. Mr. Byrnes suggested that the War Department might get personnel from Mr. Eccles of the Federal Reserve.⁶⁴ Mr. McClov said that a somewhat similar situation existed with respect to the State Department and mentioned a recent cable from General Clay on this question. 65 The cable pointed out that the General's personal relations with Murphy were excellent and that it was merely a question of someone down the line in the State Department sending out instructions which were misinterpreted on receipt. Mr. Matthews explained the need for the State Department to furnish Mr. Murphy with guidance in order that he could express a State Department view when called upon for advice by General Clay and others; that he presumed that some people on lower levels in Germany were probably interpreting these guidance telegrams in the sense of instructions to General Clay and to our Military Government, an interpretation which is quite erroneous. It was generally agreed that the situation could be easily ironed out.

Memorandum by the Director of the Civil Affairs Division of the War Department (Hilldring) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Administration (Russell)

Washington, November 26, 1945.

In accordance with our recent conversations concerning an agency to direct the administration of government of occupied territories when military government ceases, the recommendations which follow are furnished. Discussion of the reasons for certain of the recommendations is contained in Annex D.66

Recommendations:

- 1. That a new agency to be known as the Occupied Areas Authority (or other designation) be instituted to be responsible for the administration of occupied territories under the policy guidance of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee. (Annexes A and B ⁶⁷).
- 2. That the Director-General of the new agency be appointed by the President and that he have the position and authority of an Assistant Secretary of State.
- 3. That the selection, if not the appointment, of the Director-General be made as soon as possible.
- 4. That the War Department furnish the funds, either directly or by transfer, for the operation of the Occupied Areas Authority during fiscal year 1946.
- 5. That the Occupied Areas Authority prepare its own budget estimates for fiscal year 1947 and thereafter, and that its budget be included in that of the State Department.
- 6. That the State Department assume responsibility for administrative necessities of the Occupied Areas Authority, such as provision of office space, furniture and supplies, payroll and other services.

⁶⁶ Not printed.

⁶⁷ Annexes not attached to file copy of document.

- 7. That War Department logistical and communications facilities continue to be available for use by the Occupied Areas Authority in territories under its control.
- 8. That Civil Affairs Division organize within the War Department the nucleus of an Occupied Areas Authority (Annex C ⁶⁸); that this nucleus be adapted initially to the processing of German occupational problems and capable of expansion as responsibility for government of other areas is assumed; and that this nucleus be transferred to the Occupied Areas Authority at the time of transfer of responsibility for the government of Germany.
- 9. That the agency now headed by Mr. Darnell for the recruiting of personnel for foreign service be transferred to the Occupied Areas Authority on the date upon which the latter assumes responsibility for the government of Germany, but that it continue within its new framework its recruiting program for service in other areas.⁶⁹

The article is of interest because it purports to show the continued anti-American attitude of German civilians. It is quoted below:

"The security situation is somewhat unstable and potentially dangerous. Posters vilifying the United States, denouncing Military Government policies, and threatening United States officials have appeared in various places. The number of incidents reflecting hostility to the American forces is increasing. Less is heard against fraterni-⁶⁹ Mr. Russell replied to this memorandum in a letter of December 5. He noted his agreement to the outlines of General Hilldring's plan but in an enclosure submitted certain modifications for the General's consideration. While agreeing that an independent organization under the policy direction of SWNCC should be established, and that the War Department should provide it with the necessary supplies and facilities, he felt that the War Department must continue its civil affairs functions until Military Government was terminated. The War Department should assume responsibility, including the provision of funds, for organizing and developing the new organization in the interim period. "In short, the War Department now has the principal responsibilities and competence in the military government field; it must retain this position until it has developed and trained a satisfactory new administrative organization." After the new office had been established, Mr. Russell thought it should become, "the responsibility of the State Department to furnish this Office, and keep current, clear statements of its policies with regard to each of the occupied areas." zation, and more opposition is reported to evictions of Germans from their homes and to the operation of Law No. 8." 70

"It is possible that the trend toward increased boldness will gather momentum in the near future due to the return of released prisoners of war, hardships of winter, nutritional deficiencies, and widespread unemployment coupled with the thinning out of our occupation forces and the proposed withdrawals of Military Government and Counter Intelligence Corps Detachments from all but the larger towns."

"It should be borne in mind that large segments of the population have not had a change of heart. These people continue to hate all democratic institutions and believe that Military Government was established to reduce all Germans to abject poverty to further our own selfish aims. They have become more bitter as denazification progresses and are frantically searching for some loophole through which to escape their compromised past. A resurgence of German national feeling is also notable together with a desire to compare Nazi regimentation and efficiency with the present unsettled state of affairs during the transition. Regardless of their personal sympathies, Germans now tend to be uncooperative in giving information and support each other in elaborate schemes to nullify Military Government measures, to intercede between business associates, and to prevent the collection of evidence in cases of Counter Intelligence interest, reaching a degree of solidarity hitherto unknown."

Respectfully yours,

Memorandum by the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to Mr. Loyd V. Steere, Counselor of Mission, Office of the United States Political Adviser for Germany

[Berlin,] November 30, 1945.

With reference to the attached file, 71 I do not agree with parts of the text.

1. I do not wish to recommend at this time the organization of political parties on a zonal basis and I also do not wish to recommend action now looking to authorization of political parties on a national basis. We are only now on the threshold of organization of political parties on the Land level. Some months must elapse before these feeble beginnings enable the consideration of the larger problem. Our policy continues to be decentralization. While I was fully in accord with the extension of political party activity to the state basis, because obviously the Kreis limitation was unsatisfactory, I do not consider that this is the time to expand to a zonal or national basis. In fact, I see no justification of the zonal basis. We want to eliminate the zones politically. The statement that "Nothing can be more dangerous than to maintain artificial restrictions which are ignored in practice" is an exaggeration. I can suggest a number of things which might be more dangerous. The fact that contacts are developed among the leaders of the regional areas does not, in itself, constitute a violation of Allied regulations. What I want to see first established is a strong and healthy Land organization which would give an opportunity for the units in our area to express their local characteristics. Once that has been successfully accomplished, we can then consider taking another step forward.

⁷⁰ See footnote 9, p. 976.

⁷² See footnote 60, p. 1003.

2. We will also not recommend that consideration be given to the possibility of postponing the scheduled elections as stated on page 3. We are definitely committed to these elections and we will go through with them. The scheduled elections are of an experimental character. We should learn much from this trial run. The practical difficulties are always realized, but there will always be practical difficulties. I doubt very much that the "widespread discontent" mentioned in para c, page 4, will be as violent as it will be in the Spring, after the Germans will have suffered the entire gamut of difficulties they will have throughout the Winter. It does seem to me, in searching for perfection and the ideal, that we might be inclined to lose sight of the progress which is being made. I doubt that any general election has ever been perfect. Under present chaotic conditions in Germany, there is certainly no possibility of holding a perfect election. However, I am convinced that a start should be made at the earliest possible moment if for no other reason than to demonstrate to the German people in our zone that our pronouncements about democracy are not purely academic, but that we mean what we say and intend to put our ideas into practice. From our own selfish point of view, I believe that we will learn a great deal in the small experiment which is proposed for January, as unpropitious as the season may be.

Memorandum by the Assistant Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs (Harris)¹³ to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)

[Berlin,] December 1, 1945.

Subject: The Electoral Codes and the Question of Joint Party Lists.

In comment on Mr. Morris' attached memorandum of November 23: 74

The local government codes as stamped with the Deputy Military Governor's approval on November 17 75 contain no stipulations governing questions such as that raised by Mr. Morris.

The interdivisional committee 76 had discussed the problem of what might be done by way of preventing combined lists and other methods of prejudicing the integrity of the individual political parties. After considerable thought we came to the conclusion that it was not feasible to write into the codes a proscription against joint lists. It would be too easy to circumvent it by the organization of one new party, that is, a party sufficiently identifiable as such to meet the legitimate standards set by Military Government or by arranging that each party would present the same list of candidates.

If the state of preparedness for the elections were more advanced, if the number and structure of political parties were more crystallized than they now are, it would probably be possible to lay down a restriction on party unions, but by all accounts party organization is not sufficiently mature to close the door to new groups or to a consolidation of established groups—even if such a procedure were defensible on democratic grounds.

The interdivisional committee felt very strongly that any group of reputable citizens ought to be able to enter the field and hence it wrote this paragraph which went into General Clay's final directive:

"It is expected that nominations will normally be made by political parties already approved by Military Government. But any group of citizens may organize and nominate a list of candidates, provided the group meets the requirements set up for the regular political parties."

The Committee, however, did write in a prohibition of the old practice of Listenverbindung—a method whereby one party could assign its superfluous votes to another—but General Clay rejected this portion of our recommendation. (A fuller explanation of this point I have made in a draft despatch to the Department, no. 1444, December 1, 1945,77)

These considerations of the difficulties inherent in tackling the problem of joint lists seem to me personally to be formidable and we may burn our fingers if we are not circumspect. I shall, however, undertake to go further into the question and give you a report as soon as possible.

The Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs (Riddleberger) to the Director of the Civil Affairs Division of the War Department (Hilldring)

Washington, December 6, 1945.

DEAR GENERAL: I would like to send a cable along the following lines to Bob Murphy so that he might be informed of the developments which we discussed the other afternoon, but before doing so would wish to be certain that it was satisfactory to you and faithfully represents your understanding of the situation:

"Satisfactory conferences with General Hilldring have confirmed that there is no difference of view between the Departments of State and War as regards the necessity of your continuing to keep the Department informed of important developments in Military Government in Germany through your present independent channels of communication and the equal necessity of your receiving directly from the Department information and policy guidance to enable you to fulfill your duties as Political Adviser. (Urtel 1056, Nov. 19, 7 p. m.)

"In consideration, however, of General Clay's view that instructions and suggestions should reach him through a single channel the Department will henceforth, when it desires to express its view or comments in the form of instructions, address them to the War Department for further communication to the Military or Deputy Military Governor, at the same time cabling you a copy or summary of such communications. You may, in your discretion, make such copies or summaries available to the Military Governor or the Deputy Military Governor.

"General Hilldring has given instructions that such communications from the Department shall be forwarded with a minimum of delay".78

Would you telephone me your reaction to the telegram? I discussed it with Assistant Secretary Russell, who finds it all right if it is all right with you.

Sincerely yours.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

No. 1475

Berlin, 6 December 1945. [Received December 19.]

U.S. Zone.⁷⁹ In this connection, reference is made to my despatch No. 1184, of October 26, 1845.^{79a}

This paper explains the basis of the relationship which will henceforth exist between U.S. Military Government and the German authorities. It mentions that each of the German State (Land) Governments will exercise all powers and responsibilities formerly exercised by the State and in addition, within the State, the powers formerly exercised by the Reich Government. The Minister President and the Ministers of each State will have the right to appoint all officials within the State subject to prior approval from Military Government as to political reliability. This power will not, however, interfere with the competence of such representative bodies as may be later chosen by elective process. Subject to the authority of Military Government, each state is given full legislative, judicial and executive powers, except as the exercise thereof conflicts with actions taken by the Control Council or any central German authority established by the latter. Legislation issued by the German authorities should, however, contain nothing which would indicate, or be construed to indicate, that it had the approval of the Military Government.

Provision is made for the creation of a U.S. Regional Government Coordinating Office corresponding to the Joint Coordinating Staff of the three Minister Presidents at Stuttgart. The instruction mentions that a constant effort must be made to improve the transportation, communication and office facilities available to the German State officials. Special passes are to be given to the Ministers and other German key officials to permit their free and unrestricted passage throughout the U.S. Zone. It is stated that they must be afforded sufficient dignitary [dignity?] of office to impress their responsibility on the German people.

Respectfully yours, rectorate that US proposal for the opening of consular offices throughout Germany was premature (see my 1108 of November 27, 4 p. m. 1). He claimed that consular offices were part of "diplomatic machinery" and asked if such offices were opened by the four powers why similar privileges should not be given other Allied nations. There was no German Govt, he said, Germany was in the first stages of occupation, and consular offices might be interpreted as an establishment of diplomatic relations, which the Control Council had no authority to decide.

General Clay, supported by the British member ⁸² pointed out that consular establishment had existed in Italy alongside of Military Govt, stated that Consuls were not diplomatic officers in normal sense of the term but were intended primarily to help the citizens of their countries. He felt the time had come for this kind of representation and he said that pending quadripartite action he was prepared to exchange consular representatives with any of the four control powers.

Russian member claimed that an analogy could not be drawn with Italy which had abandoned the war and fought on the side of the Allies. He insisted that it was for the govts, rather than the Control Council, to decide whether there should be consular representation and he mentioned that if his colleagues intended to take unilateral action, as suggested by US member, they did so on their own initiative.

In view of the importance of the question, US member, who was chairman, requested Secretariat to place the proposal on the Control Council's agenda for its next meeting ⁸³ and suggested that the members of the Political Directorate inform their Govts that no agreement had been reached in the Coordinating Committee but that the United States, Britain and French are ready to exchange Consuls.

A paper presented by the U.S. member recommending the establishment of consular offices throughout Germany was discussed. While the members representing Great Britain and France supported the proposal, the Soviet member was opposed. He stated that the opening of Consulates in Germany was premature, the occupying powers still had many purely military questions to decide, and the opening of Consulates went beyond the agreements on which the occupying powers operated. My Dear Steel: About a fortnight ago I told you, in regard to your inquiry of the seventeenth of November, addressed to Heath,84 that the consideration being given to land reform in the American Zone did not involve any plans for breaking up estates into small parcels characteristic of the Russian land reform measures.⁸⁵

Our land reform plans were very much in a state of flux at the time I spoke to you—and still are—but, I think, that I am warranted in telling you that our present thinking is in the direction of putting the problem largely in the hands of the appropriate German authorities for the working out of measures which would be subject to Military Government approval.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

> Berlin, December 12, 1945—4 p. m. [Received December 12—2:55 p. m.]

1242. Dept's 962, Nov 29, 5 p. m. 86 There is a good deal of contradictory evidence bearing upon the desirability of starting elections in Jan. This evidence might influence our decision if we were considering the matter for the first time, but since the decision was made by General Eisenhower and announced some time ago, I feel that Military Govt should carry it through. The Dept will also recall that in its telegram No. 507 of Sept 19, it suggested the desirability of holding the elections before Jan.

Admittedly many of the Military Govt field reports indicate fairly consistent political apathy throughout the US zone (as in the rest of Germany) and these reports also reflect the view of German officials that elections should not be held before next spring or early summer.

⁸⁴ Note not printed.

^{}Note not printed.

S For pertinent documentation, see section entitled: "Concern of the United States with developments within the Soviet Zone of Occupation in Germany; quadripartite control of Berlin," pp. 1033 ff. passim.

Not printed; it requested the Political Adviser's comments on reports that a January date was too early for the first elections in the U.S. zone in view of political apathy, lack of organization of the political parties, and German unpreparedness for democratic self-government (862.00/11-2945).

It is pointed out that Jan winter conditions and preoccupation with farming problems will discourage political interest in the rural communities where the elections are to be begun. Furthermore latest available reports indicate that in half the Kreise in the US zone no parties exist at present. At their meeting of Dec 4,⁸⁷ the three German Minister Presidents petitioned General Clay to postpone the elections until about April 1, and they advanced as reasons the lack of political organization and certain administrative difficulties particularly in qualifying voters on the basis of the present exclusion directive.

On the other hand an information control survey based on 500 interrogations in our zone indicated that 52% of the persons approached endorsed elections "in the early months of next year"; 7% desired them earlier and 11% later, while 23% had no opinion. 82% intended to vote; 55% were firmly convinced of how they would vote, and 19% were fairly sure.

It is my belief that a renunciation of our announced intention to hold elections in Jan would be interpreted as a lack of firmness and conviction in our Military Govt program. The absence of parties in certain areas need not be an obstacle, since citizen groups who are properly screened may nominate candidates who may prove to be better community leaders than professional politicians. To the argument that democracy will not be given a fair chance in the scheduled early elections, the retort may be made that we have waited a long time for democracy to develop in Germany and that the desired ideal conditions cannot be envisaged in the foreseeable future. We can look for neither perfect results nor a total justification of democracy in these first elections but I think we should stick by our purpose in proposing them as a useful experiment which may help break down present inertia and serve as a first step in initiating the German people in democratic procedures and an all too belated acceptance of responsibility.

It must be remembered that the Jan elections are local elections for officials in small towns and villages where party politics should not be significant. It was part of our philosophy to make these initial elections reflect the views of voters in individual candidates rather than party issues, thus developing election interest and procedure without creating zonal issues. We consider this important.

[Washington,] December 18, 1945.

It seems to me that we should work out some arrangement by which the State Department assumes full extent of its responsibility with regard to policy to be carried out in Germany. This is a matter of working out some arrangement for close collaboration between the State and War Departments with perhaps final authority and responsibility being taken by the State Department for policy in Germany.

As far as transfer of control in Germany from military to civilian authority, it seems to me that the following considerations should be taken into account:

(1) The present agreement on the part of the U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R., and France is that there shall be military government in Germany with the Central Control Council composed of the military commanders of the four different zones. There was a great deal of discussion which took place between the four governments as to the form of control which would be set up in Germany. The reasoning upon which the final decision was based included the situation which we faced as we came near the final defeat of Germany. It was obvious that no German Government could be recognized or dealt with as there could be no other government set up than one composed of Germans more or less identified with the Nazi regime. As that was repugnant to all the Allied governments concerned, it was decided that the four governments would constitute a military government for at least a considerable period. It was further decided that there would be no German Government created for some time. decision was further confirmed at Potsdam last summer.89 obvious that if military government were to be exercised by the different governments in the different zones, it was essential that the central military control in the form of a quadri-partite control council must be composed of the military commanders of the various zones. You could not have more than one type of authority operating in Germany. It either had to be all military or all civilian and, of course, the situation required that it be military. It was also considered that it would take at least two years to re-establish order and provide for the revival of the most meager economic existence in Germany. As this requires a vast organization it is not possible to accomplish these objectives with other than the military organization which was already in existence when we went into Germany. This military authority, composed of the commanders of the different zones, was directed to operate on the basis of agreed-upon policy decisions which have been entered into between the four governments, after full discussion of each point of the general policy as to the treatment to be accorded defeated Germany. These headings included demilitarization, de-nazification, reparations, restoration of the most meager requirements of life on a basis of a standard of living to be no higher than that of any other European country. The general objectives of the Allied policy in Germany were further discussed and agreed to at the Potsdam Conference. The U.S. Government is committed to carry on in Germany in accordance with these agreements until and unless these basic agreements are modified by supplemental agreements after full discussion among the four Allied Powers concerned. A further reason for establishing military authority in Germany was that the very fact that the authority was military in character was considered to assist in the application of foreign rule in Germany as far as the Germans were concerned, and it was obvious that military commanders, even though of different nationalities, would, by reason of the fact that they are all in the military service, facilitate their dealings with each other and their carrying out of the governmental agreements above referred to. It was also obvious that the discipline and chain of command which exists in military organization was the best possible atmosphere in which to carry forward the difficult task of dealing with a defeated and disintegrated Germany.

 $^{^{88}\,\}mathrm{Addressed}$ to Under Secretary of State Acheson and to Assistant Secretary of State Russell.

(2) In setting up the American participation in the control of Germany both for the U.S. zone and the U.S. participation in the Quadri-partite Control Council, there was never at any time any consideration given to the use of civilians other than the small group headed by Ambassador Murphy, who was attached to the U.S. Military Commander in Germany for the purpose of contributing to him for use in carrying out his duties such political advice and assistance as he might wish to seek or accept from the U.S. Political Advisor. It was expected that as time went on it would be possible to add civilian personnel in the various subsections of the central Allied control machinery, particularly in those positions where technical civilian knowledge and experience was needed and where the Army might not have on hand the persons particularly qualified for specialized work, such as finance, foreign trade, agriculture, rationing, education, and public information. This has been done and there is a considerable number of civilian assistants in the central control machinery now.

(3) The core of the actual operational assistance in dealing with Germany at the present time is, as far as the U.S. zone is concerned, the military government section of the U.S. Forces. This military government organization deals directly with the German problems from the level of small municipals and rural districts, up through the townships and including the provinces or Laender. This is a vast machinery which deals with problems of food transportation, sanitation, public utilities, communication, public order, and executes on the spot the policy determined by the Control Council. It would be impossible to substitute for this existing government system a civilian organization which would be capable of carrying out the responsibilities now being carried on by military government.

to have created decentralized local German administrative bodies which would be capable of carrying out the responsibilities of civic administration under general directives given by the occupying authorities to the German provincial authorities. It would not seem advisable, however, to press forward too fast the creation of local administrative bodies any more than it would be advisable to retard the creation of such bodies. It was always considered that the creation and setting up of the local German administration authorities should begin as soon as it seemed possible to find sufficient responsible non-Nazi Germans to take over these responsibilities, but in any event, it would not be wise to remove the system of surveillance by military government authorities until it became certain that the local German administrations were in fact carrying out their responsibilities along lines of the policies decided upon for dealing with the defeated German nation. We have at present an extremely satisfactory governmental machinery operating in Germany, certainly as far as the U.S. zone is concerned, and it would seem very risky to remove that system and attempt to substitute for it inexperienced administrators, at least before we have had a chance to observe the manner in which the German administrations are carrying out their duties and responsibilities. Certainly, the time which has been heard mentioned of pulling out the military government system in the U.S. zone. about six months from now, would seem to be entirely too short to be sure that the German authorities were properly carrying on their

A further difficulty in transfer from military to civilian control is the question of dealing with the food requirements for the population in the U.S. zone. It is obvious that the U.S. would have to finance the import of food perhaps for the first several years, although this may be taken care of later by the first charge upon German exports. As the U.S. Forces now have the responsibility for dealing with the German situation in the form of occupation troops in Germany and the responsibilities connected with dealing with civilian population are already established as lying with the Army and thus the War Department, it would seem advisable to continue the appropriation for funds necessary to deal with the German population in the War Department budget, as it has been carried in that Department's budget from the beginning of the occupation of Germany; and as this is a continuing responsibility of the War Department, it would be sound logic to continue the appropriations in that Department's budget. It would certainly be very difficult for any civilian agency of this government, including the State Department, to take up with Congress anew the obtaining of appropriations for dealing with the German population.

The Department of State is a policy organism of the Government and has never had operational responsibility and is, therefore, not equipped to carry out operations, certainly not on such large scales as would be required in dealing with the German problem. We have an existing system which is working well and it seems to be highly impractical to change it, certainly within a shorter time than six months from now. We need more time to see how the German problem is working out.

One more thought on the matter of dealing with our other Allies on the Central Control Council in Germany: If we were to change the character of the representation on the Allied Control Council at this time or in the reasonably near future from military to civilian, we would very likely bring into the dealings of the representatives on the Control Council the political background of relationship with the other governments represented there. At present, the military commanders can deal with each other on a straight military basis and on the sole basis of the responsibilities for carrying out the occupation and achieving the objectives of our agreed policies in Germany. When we change from military commanders to civilian commanders dealing with each other in Germany, they will undoubtedly, as political representatives of their governments, find themselves working against the background of perhaps many other situations in the relations of the different governments than strictly and exclusively those problems having to do with our objectives in Germany itself. It would seem advisable for all accounts therefore to go very slowly on the change-over from military representation and authority in Germany to civilian representation.

Washington, December 22, 1945.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: With reference to our conversation on 18 December 1945 regarding the organization in Washington which will handle military government after it passes to civilian control, I should like to reiterate my belief that such organization will function satisfactorily only under the aegis of the Department of State.

The President in his approval of General Eisenhower's letter of 26 October ⁹⁰ emphasized the American principle of keeping the Army out of civil government. The Army cannot be separated from the War Department, and the participation of either in government of occupied countries violates the real meaning of the civilianization which is the expressed wish of the President.⁹¹ It is clear to me that the President contemplates the withdrawal of the War Department as well as its components from the Military Government of Germany just as soon as this function can be turned over to civilians and civilian agencies of our government.

I am convinced that an organization under the policy guidance of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee would be unsatisfactory. It would transform the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee from a purely policy body into an operating agency. It would create in our Federal Government a new operating agency at a time when the President is striving to reduce the number of such independent bodies. But the fundamental objection is that the proposed set-up fails to carry out the President's purpose of wholly civilianizing military government. The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee is and will continue to be two-thirds military, and an operating agency under the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee could not possibly be considered a civilian administration.

The recruitment of high-caliber personnel needed for this important service will be extremely difficult now that the period of the emergency is popularly believed to have passed. It can hardly be accomplished without the backing and prestige of an established department of the government.

By his memorandum of 30 August 1945, the President conferred upon the Secretary of State sole authority in matters relating to the policy to be followed in the Military Government of Germany and Austria. Any agency outside of the Department of State which is designated to administer the military government of those countries will thereby have responsibility without authority, and its ability to discharge its duties efficiently will be materially and inescapably impaired.

It is not the intention nor the desire of the War Department to withdraw abruptly from its present responsibilities for the Military Government of Germany. Civilianization of the Office of Military Government in Germany is in progress. A plan has been drawn for the establishment of a German branch in the Civil Affairs Division, and for its transfer at the proper time to whatever agency is to assume responsibility for the government of Germany. Both here and abroad the transfer will be one of going concerns. The logistical and communications facilities of the War Department will continue to be available in support of whatever agency is to administer military government abroad.

⁹¹ A marginal note at this point reads: "Non concur. 'Civilianization' applies to policy not administration."

If you should decide to lay before the President the question of this responsibility, I should appreciate the opportunity of accompanying you.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs (Benton)⁹²

Judge Patterson did most of the talking at me at lunch today. He seems to feel strongly that the State Department should take the responsibility in the occupied areas, notably Germany. However, he agreed with my theory that the responsibility needs to be decentralized—and cannot be successfully carried by a department or bureau operating here in Washington. The problem, as Byron Price points out in his report, 93 is to choose top personnel for the civilian administration (with which he says President Truman is in emphatic agreement)—and then give power and responsibility to such men, to make decisions and operate in the field. The group working here in Washington would be merely a liaison group, a kind of service organization helping to procure personnel, and in other ways trying to be of assistance under direction and instruction received from the men responsible in Germany. Patterson said he doubted if over fifty men, or at most a hundred, would be required in this central group here in Washington. He suggested that General Hilldring be converted to civilian status, stating that he had a heart condition, and could easily be retired by the Army.

I told Judge Patterson that it was my understanding that Secretary Byrnes did not want this responsibility centered in the State Department. If operating responsibility is sharply decentralized, I asked him whether the key issues didn't boil down to the selection of the high civilian commissioner, and his principal aides (whom Byron Price recommended should have the same status as Under Secretaries)—and the decision as to whether the high commissioner reports to Secretary Byrnes or to Secretary Patterson.

Patterson contends that the Bureau of Insular Affairs was shifted out of the War Department because it is impossible in the War Department to get civilian administration of the kind that is required.

 $^{^{\}rm 92}$ Addressed to Under Secretary of State Acheson and Assistant Secretary of State Russell.

³³ Byron Price, the former U.S. Director of Censorship, visited Germany as President Truman's personal representative to survey the relationship between the U.S. forces of occupation and the German population. See the "Report of Byron Price to the President," November 9, 1945, Department of State Bulletin, December 2, 1945, pp. 885–892.

I do not think that his views were changed particularly by our luncheon, but I am sure that the issue involved in decentralization of authority, into the hands of people in the field, was very much clarified in his mind. I am sure that this is the sound administrative setup. He came back a couple of times to the question, "Who can we find for high commissioner?"

I told him about the particular question involved with the Bureau of the Budget, on the $5,000,000 we are budgeting for information control work in Germany. He insisted that this was sound procedure even if the War Department continued to carry the responsibility. He stated that it was customary among Government departments to assign or delegate people, along similar lines. I told him that I did not think this was consistent, in as much as we do not have any budget set up for Japan, and are merely budgeting for Germany because of our inheritance through the OWI.94 I told him that, if he and Secretary Byrnes and President Truman subsequently decide that the responsibility should be his, for the appointment and control of top civilian personnel in Germany, then I agreed with Don Russell that this budget should be transferred to the War Department. However. if Secretary Byrnes takes the responsibility, of course, we should carry the budget and be responsible for personnel.

The remainder of this memorandum dealt briefly with occupation problems in Japan.] 95

Sir: I have the honor to transmit a report 96 furnished me by my representative in Munich, Mr. Parker W. Buhrman, which reviews an article published in the Sueddeutsche Zeitung, of Munich, written by Minister-President Wilhelm Hoegner on the subject of "Federalism, Unitarism or Separatism".

Dr. Hoegner's views speak for themselves. This is another of several public expressions he has made on this question. Up to the present time his is perhaps the leading voice in Germany for a federal state. It is clear from his own words how deeply influenced he has been in this matter by his residence in Switzerland.

Dr. Hoegner's views on the question of federalism are at variance with those of most other Social Democrats and of the Communists. The idea of federalism has been vigorously, one might almost say viciously, attacked in the Russian-dominated Berlin press. This press, together with the leaders of the Communist and Social Democratic parties in the Soviet Zone, has been campaigning for some time in favor of a "united Germany", and it is clear that this idea, which though vaguely expressed can only mean a unitary as against a federal state, has the blessing at present of the Soviet authorities. The polemics against the idea of federalism, which is only occasionally attached to the name of Dr. Hoegner, proceed on the assumption that federalism means separatism. It will be seen from the attached report, however, that Minister-President Hoegner is very careful to differentiate between these ideas and to renounce separatism most explicitly. It remains to be seen whether his enthusiasm for federalism, a governmental form which administrative developments in our zone have favored and which is well adapted to our policy of decentralization, will meet with any widespread enthusiasm or response among German political leaders. The prospects to date are not particularly encouraging.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to my Despatch No. 1587 of December 27, 1945,97 entitled "Transmitting Military Governor's Report No. 5 for November". In that despatch the Department's attention was invited to the supplementary report on political activity which accompanied the Military Governor's Report for November and which was an innovation.

As the Department is aware, the Military Governor's Report is published and has attracted considerable press and radio interest, both in the United States and abroad. Therefore, a revised edition of the enclosure was prepared for publication. The revision omitted references to personalities involved in party political activity in the different zones in order to avoid possible friction and misunderstand-

[Enclosure—Extract]

Memorandum by Mr. Perry Laukhuff, on the Staff of the United States Political Adviser for Germany

Synopsis

The German public continued generally indifferent toward political life but party leaders were increasingly active in organizing groups and making widespread contacts. Numerous local political parties were authorized in the U.S. Zone, Social Democrats, Communists and Christian Democrats making the most progress in that order. A total of 128 local political parties had been organized in Bavaria by 29 November.

A new directive of 23 November extended permission for the formation of parties to engage in political activities throughout a State (Land).⁹⁸ This development, expected to assist in clarifying and stabilizing political activity, came too late in the month to observe any results.

Regional conferences of the Christian Democratic Union and of the Communist Party were held at Frankfurt following the national conference of Social Democrats at Hannover in October. The Christian Democratic Union is planning a national conference at Bad Godesberg for December.

All parties under formation suffered from internal divisions and differences of opinion which, however, seldom broke through to the surface.

The differences among the four parties in Berlin became sharper and more evident, with a resultant weakening of the "united bloc" of parties, despite an intensive Communist campaign in its support.

Election codes were submitted to Military Government by the governments of the three States in the U.S. Zone during November and were approved with some modifications. The legal basis has thus been laid for the conduct of the communal elections scheduled for January.

211. In an undated letter ⁹⁹ "calling attention to the detrimental situation to French occupational forces and the citizens of Baden caused by the American occupation of Karlsruhe," General Koenig ¹ wrote General McNarney ² suggesting that discussions be initiated for the inclusion of Karlsruhe and the remaining part of Baden within the French occupation zone. General Koenig mentioned that in conversations with General Eisenhower he had formed the opinion that the U.S. authorities were prepared to give up Karlsruhe at the end of the winter when the port of Bremen would be ready to care for traffic to the American zone.

It was agreed in USFET that the French request should be rejected for the following reasons: A concession of this kind would be inopportune in view of French intransigence on the establishment of central German agencies; cession of the territory would have a detrimental effect upon the program for the holding of local German elections; and the port of Karlsruhe is still necessary from a G-4 point of view for the handling of supplies for the American zone and accordingly General McNarney on December 26 ³ addressed a letter to General Koenig stating that he was unable to begin direct negotiations with respect to a change in zonal boundaries and recommending that the normal diplomatic channel be employed. General McNarney added that the port of Bremen has yet to reach the point where both redeployment and imports can be handled for the entire US zone.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Administration (Russell) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] January 2, 1946.

1. Problem

The Department of State and War Department have not been able to agree on the organization required in Washington to give policy guidance for the administration of the German occupied area. Likewise there is a difference of opinion on how and when civilian control will be established to replace military government.

2. Background

- (a) The War Department in a letter of November 26 from the Director of the Civil Affairs Division to the Assistant Secretary of State for Administration proposed that an inter-departmental agency to be known as the Occupied Areas Authority under the guidance of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee be established in Washington.
- (b) The State Department in a letter of December 5 from the Assistant Secretary of State for Administration to the Director of the Civil Affairs Division 4 agreed to the general features of the War Department's plan but suggested certain changes.
- (c) The War Department then materially altered its position and urged that the State Department take over the complete responsibility for the administration of Germany by expanding its departmental organization in Washington and by creating the necessary field organization in Germany. This view was expressed by Secretary Patterson in a conference in his office on December 18, attended by Messrs. Acheson, Dunn, Riddleberger, Collado, Schneider and Russell, and was followed up by a letter from Secretary Patterson to Mr. Acheson of December 22.
- (d) On December 19, following the meeting in Judge Patterson's office, Mr. Acheson explained to the President our position, emphasizing the impracticability of the State Department taking over the administrative functions now performed by the Army in Germany. The President agreed heartily and subsequently, in a Cabinet meeting, he expressed himself accordingly. This provoked a loud protest from Secretary Patterson. It was thereupon agreed that a decision should be delayed until your return.
 - (e) Judge Patterson in his letter of December 29, 1945, to the Secretary of State (attached as Tab A)⁶ restates his position that the Department of State should accept responsibility and make the necessary organizational changes to supervise the government of Germany when placed on a civilianized basis. An early decision is urged.

3. Discussion

- (a) The memorandum of August 30, 1945 (Tab B)⁷ which the President approved established a sensible basis for the control of Germany which should not be hastily changed and which was predicated upon two sound principles:
- 1) "The War Department by reason of the military responsibility for control of Germany and Austria would deal primarily with the executive and administrative aspects of the questions which will arise." This means that within Germany there must be centralization of administrative responsibility and for the present this must be with the Army.
- 2) "The Department of State by reason of its responsibility to the President for carrying out the foreign policy of the United States would deal primarily with the policy aspects of the questions which would arise . . . The Department of State would consult with other civilian departments and agencies on matters of appropriate concern to them". This means the use of machinery such as or very similar to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee for the development of policy direction for German control.
- (b) The War Department now proposes that these principles be abandoned and that the decision shall be made now that on June 1, 1946, the State Department shall assume responsibility for administration in Germany. This proposal is based on the doubtful assumption that effective German local government machinery will be established by June 1, 1946. Irrespective of whether such machinery is so established it must be conceded that a considerable period of time must elapse before we will know that such machinery may be relied upon and that Army supply and transportation facilities are no longer necessary.
- (c) Control of Germany at the present and for an indefinite and uncertain future period involves considerably more than mere policy direction of a political character. Until effective German governmental responsibility can be established and can prove itself, German control involves specialized operating functions requiring highly technical skills in the fields of health, sanitation, transportation etc. Moreover, all admit that for some considerable period imports are essential to our operations in Germany and this presupposes a supply organization equipped to procure, transport and distribute the imports. For the State Department to undertake the complex and diverse operating responsibilities inherent in German control would require the assumption of operating responsibilities entirely alien to its previous operations and for which it has little experience. On the contrary, few of these responsibilities are new to the Army. The Army has a supply organization; it has experienced organizations to handle health, sanitation, transportation, supply and other problems. It has accumulated experience of decades in directing such operations. It now has a large administrative organization and rapidly shrinking volume of business. Until conditions in Germany become normal the occupation forces are an essential part of German control. There must be unity of control in the field and so long as the occupation forces are needed the control of Germany in the field should be centralized in the Army.

- (d) The plain fact is that the Army became panicky over the idea that military government in Germany was becoming a liability. This is the basis for the War Department's desire to unload the job on the State Department—and not the various rationalizations which have been offered in Secretary Patterson's letter. The job is temporary, we hope; the Army now has it in hand, it has the organization and experience to do a better job than any other agency, and fear of criticism should not be allowed to throw the job into less competent hands. Former Assistant Secretary of War McCloy who headed the supervision of military government while he was in the War Department shares this view.
- (e) While Secretary Patterson holds that the War Department must be divorced quickly and completely from the control of Germany, he makes no similar demand with regard to Japan. Military government there under the policy direction of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee and the State Department apparently can operate without objection. And now the Moscow agreements provide that policy for the control of Japan shall be set by an Allied Commission and that administration shall be by the supreme military commander on a strictly U.S. Army basis.
- (f) The crux of the problem is the phasing of appropriate control machinery which will reflect the improvements and changes in the internal situation in Germany. The following time table is suggested:

Situation

Policy Guidance Organization in Washington

Organization in Germany for administration & supervision of occupied areas

First Stage: Invasion and occupation of Germany

War Department (with political and foreign policy decisions made by State Department) Military government under military commander

Situation

Second Stage: Resuscitation of German economy requiring supervision and participation of Army supply, transportation, sanitation, and law enforcing facilities

Third Stage: German government reestablished with decreasing need for U.S. military forces and facilities to supplement German economic system and local law enforcement agencies.

Fourth Stage: German government and economic system reestablished sufficiently to make U.S. Army supply, transportation and law enforcement facilities unnecessary.

Policy Guidance Organization in Washington

Interdepartmental organization for policy guidance under leadership of representatives of Department of State and with participation of State, War, Navy and other departments and organizations such as Treasury in matters requiring expert knowledge and experience. Same as Stage 2.

State Department (normal and existing organization machinery) Organization in Germany for administration & supervision of occupied areas

Military government will train civilians to replace gradually military personnel in control positions. Administration continues under Army control.

High Commissioner with civilians in principal administrative roles; considerable reliance on Army participation continues but military commander and forces are subordinate to High Commissioner and his civilian control organization.

High Commissioner will have civilian staff sufficient for supervision of German methods and policies. Need for U.S. Army neglible.

4. Recommendations:

(a) That you support the phasing and organizational arrangements for control of Germany as outlined in paragraph 3, (f), above.

(b) That you secure acceptance of the understanding that the present situation is that of Stage 2 and that Stage 3 may start on June 1, 1946, and will last at least through the winter of 1946/1947.

(c) That the attached letter s be sent to the President as a basis for a decision.

meetings of the Laenderrat of the United States zone of occupation and to enclose herewith a series of papers ¹⁰ relating to the third meeting of this body in Stuttgart on December 4 and to subsequent decisions of Military Government growing out of that meeting.

The opening session of the December meeting was devoted to a brief address by General Joseph T. McNarney and to a statement by Lieutenant General Lucius D. Clay in which the Deputy Military Governor set forth his policies with respect to a number of problems of concern to the Ministers-president. Of particular interest to his German auditors was his announcement of the import of food from the United States to the extent necessary to provide an average ration of 1550 calories for the United States zone of occupation. I attach as Enclosure No. 1 the texts of the speeches of Generals McNarney and Clay.

The working sessions of the Laenderrat were attended only by the Ministers-president, several of their ministerial colleagues and a very small number of representatives of Military Government. I attach as Enclosure No. 2 a report which, in its first part, contains a tentative summary of the discussions. Enclosure No. 3, in turn, presents a translation of the official German texts of all the proposals adopted at the meeting. This document likewise indicates the action taken by Military Government up to December 17, 1945, in response to these proposals.

Three points of possible interest to the Department arose in the discussion of the report of the Food Committee. (1) The Minister-President of Greater Hesse, Dr. Geiler, proposed the establishment of a central executive office of food and agriculture for the three Laender of the United States zone in order more effectively to solve the paramount problem of the day in Germany. This suggestion was vigorously combatted by Dr. Hoegner, Minister-president of Bavaria, whose strong decentralist convictions as a matter of general principle were in complete harmony with his resolution that Bavaria would not be made, as he expressed it, the milch cow of the other Laender. (2) Permission was requested for the German authorities of the United States zone to negotiate for the purchase of live stock with the German authorities of the British zone and with Austria. response to this request General Clay has subsequently informed the Ministers-president that import requirements for the zone must be addressed to the several Land detachments. This expression of the manifest need for the restoration of Germany's economic unity, however, has led the Deputy Military Governor to a consideration of how trade over the zone boundaries can be arranged before the present difficulties with respect to a central German administration can be overcome. It is his hope that this problem of inter-zone trade can be discussed with the British Military Government administration in the near future. (3) Request was likewise made to withdraw requisition rights from UNRRA except in cases of emergency and to curtail the privilege of "foreigners" (displaced persons) by giving them the same rations as the Germans receive and by halting the requisitioning of houses. The argument supporting the request states, "If the foreigners are not willing to depart with transportation, they should be in the same position as the Germans concerning their obligation for working." General Clay in a telegram dated January 5, 1946, rejected these representations.

Discussion of the report of the Evacuation Committee again gave rise to complaints by the Ministers-president about the unwanted strangers in their midst and to the formally expressed desire that the departure of these foreigners be speeded. The Ministers-president likewise asked for the expeditious return of displaced Germans to their homes in other zones without reference to the head-for-head policy of the Allied Control Authority. And, finally, they requested a revision of the Potsdam decisions with reference to the transfer of Germans from the East.¹¹ The supporting argument for this last request refers to the food situation and "to health, peace, security and order in Germany." General Clay, in reply to this series of requests, has pointed out the difficulties due to weather and transport which impede our efforts to remove the displaced persons as rapidly as possible but he has at the same time given a negative answer to the specific proposals.

In giving attention to questions of political interest the Ministerspresident submitted a proposal whereby prisoners of war now engaged in reconstruction work would be exchanged for former active Nazis. General Clay received this suggestion with interest but his subsequent study has led him to the conclusion that there exists no legal basis for such action.

With regard to the projected Gemeinde elections the three Ministers-president were unanimous in their desire, engendered by the technical problem of properly qualifying voters, to postpone this step until springtime. As the Department is aware, however, no change of plans has resulted from the Laenderrat's plea. An additional proposal would have restricted candidacy for office to the persons nominated by licensed political parties but that recommendation has likewise been rejected in favor of allowing lists without formal party sponsorship to contest for office. General Clay, however, has authorized the Land governments to establish a percentage requirement for election high enough to prevent the reappearance on the German political scene of a series of splinter parties. There are available as yet no reports as to how this problem of minor parties will be resolved within the generally accepted framework of proportional representation.

Of the other topics of discussion reflected in the previously cited enclosures I shall refer only to a consideration by the Ministers-president of the problem of denazification. As the minutes indicate, Dr. Geiler of Greater Hesse proposed that the three Land governments prepare a uniform denazification law and submit it to the appropriate Military Government authorities for approval. Dr. Hoegner of Bavaria replied that his government had already submitted a draft law to the Land Detachment of Bavaria and he invited his colleagues of the Council to endorse the Bavarian program. After an extended debate Dr. Hoegner agreed to suspend independent action for 10 days to allow the ministers of justice of the three Laender to work out a common proposal. I have received a copy of this latter document only in the past few days and shall make the further development of this question the subject of a separate despatch.

In the interest of affording the Department a critical assessment of the Laenderrat during the first two months of its existence I append as Enclosure No. 4 a copy of a report prepared on December 10 by Dr. James K. Pollock who is head of the Regional Government Coordinating Office, the agency of Military Government responsible for advising and supervising the Laenderrat. Dr. Pollock here states his conviction that the idea underlying the creation of this instrumentality of government has been proven sound and that the organization has operated very satisfactorily considering the difficulties under which it has had to function. The weaknesses and confusions which he observed in the meeting of December 4 are being overcome, 12 in his judgment, and he looks forward with optimism to the subsequent development of the Laenderrat not only as a mechanism for the better administration of the United States zone but also as a possible means of resolving problems which extend beyond the boundaries of the zone.13

¹² In his analysis, Mr. Pollock noted particularly that assignments had been given to the Länderrat faster than it was able to handle them, for which he offered the following reasons. "First, the German officials both in the Council itself and in its committees had to get acquainted with each other, and get accustomed to free discussion. Second, they were not sure for a time just what their authority was going to be. Third, the delay in securing a Secretary General acceptable to Military Government necessitated placing the secretarial work in temporary hands. Fourth, the absence of adequate office space and secretarial help delayed the work of the secretariat."

I attach as Enclosure No. 5 a directive of December 20, 1945,14 in which the Deputy Military Governor has specified the character and functions of the Laenderrat and the Regional Government Coordinating Office in the light of experience accumulated up to that time.

As a contribution to the Department's biographical files, I transmit as Enclosure No. 6 a brief note on the personal history of Eric Rossman who was elected Secretary-General of the Laenderrat at the December meeting.

Respectfully.

Dear Doc: The Soviet build-up of the Free Germany Committee 15 and the growing use of German officers (Paulus-von Seydlitz 16) in broadcasts to the German army added to the rumors of an extensive Russian program for the use of German prisoners of war in the postdefeat administration of Germany focus attention on the complete absence of any similar American preparation. In a mild way the British are doing a small amount of sifting of German prisoners of war in an effort to find individuals who may be of utility to them later in administrative positions as well as executive positions in business and industry.

As matters now stand we have lined up nobody on whom we could rely in the post-defeat period. This has the advantage of freeing us from any obligation towards individuals or organizations. Once in Germany we undoubtedly will have time to make our own selection after careful investigation.

By contrast the Russians may make far more rapid administrative strides and develop more quickly not only an orderly public administration but industrial and agricultural production for their own benefit 17—if that is their objective.

278. The last few weeks have produced political developments of considerable importance in Germany, indicating that the Russians are rapidly and energetically carrying out a positive program which they presumably hope will set the pattern for all of Germany and result in the establishment of a "bloc of anti-Fascist democratic parties" similar to those which have appeared in so many countries in eastern and southeastern Europe under Russian influence and control. Zhukov's ²⁷ order number 2 of June 10 ²⁸ authorized political activity, stressing necessity for unity of anti-Fascist forces. Meanwhile intelligence reports indicated arrival in Berlin of key figures from Free Germany Movement in Moscow.

German Communist Party was officially reconstituted on German soil by issuance of manifesto dated June 11,29 signed by 16 individuals, under leadership of Wilhelm Pieck, all of them identified with former KPD,30 Free Germany Movement Moscow, or recently established Berlin administration. This manifesto merely carried forward general present Free Germany propaganda and tactical line, and called for formation of a bloc of all anti-Nazi democratic parties.

First joint meeting of representatives of new Communist Party and Social Democrats allegedly occurred Berlin on June 19 and on June 21 manifesto ³¹ was issued in name of newly constituted Social Democrat Party, calling for unity of anti-Fascist forces to cooperate in liquidation all Nazi remnants, cooperation with occupation forces, fulfillment of reparations demands, and establishment of a new German democracy, thus giving scope to ultimate realization of most of Free Germany movement's objectives.

Two new center political parties then emerged, called Liberal Democrats and Christian Democrats. Announcement was made on July 18 of first joint meeting of representatives of the above four new parties, great importance of which was underlined by Communist leader Pieck who claimed that leaders had decided "of their own free will" to form this solid united front.³² Liberal Democrats and Christian Democrats then issued party manifestos,³³ which though more vague and conservative than those of Communist and Social Democrat Parties, apparently fit in pretty well with present general objectives of German Communist Party. Intelligence suggests these two parties are as yet comparatively inactive.

Though little is yet known about individuals in control of these new Social Democrat, Liberal and Christian Democrat Parties, it is presumed they were carefully selected on account of their willingness to cooperate in this bloc which is of course entirely in accordance with present general Russian tactical line abroad.

Russians have supplemented above political policy with establishment of United Trade Unions led by Otto Brass, former left-wing Socialist and a comparatively old man presumably hardly in a position to control developments in this field.

Likewise, Central Youth Committee, cultural union for the democratic renovation of Gemany, and Central Committee for victims of Fascism have been set up, in accordance with usual Russian and Communist technique.

Frankfurt, August 13, 1945—9 p. m. [Received August 14—2:42 a. m.]

291. The political situation in Berlin is one we intend to follow closely, particularly since political activities have been permitted to develop more rapidly here and because of the effect they may have throughout Germany. We have not yet had an opportunity to make a thorough survey of leaders or opinion, but the following first impressions have been gained in conversations with our Military Government officers in Berlin and with certain Germans believed to have a responsible and objective point of view.

Before we and the British entered Berlin the Russians allegedly transferred to their sector the central offices of the four political parties which had emerged under their auspices. There is evidence that they have also tried to induce, with varying success, certain party leaders and administrative officials to reside in Russian sector of city.

So far the Russians seem to have been even more interested in assuring Communist control of Berlin municipal administration than in promoting Communism as a political party.³⁴ Besides securing certain key appointments such as Deputy Lord Mayor and Heads of Education and Social Affairs Department, we note that Wilhelm Pieck, KPD chief, heads the Berlin personnel office, thus enabling him to pass on all municipal appointments. Many mayors or deputy mayors for various sections of Berlin are also Communists, thus providing Russians with continuing source of information and control even in American and British sectors of city. Our Military Government reports that these individuals do not hesitate to bring all possible pressure to bear on their non-Communist colleagues. Through an apparent Russian inadvertance we recently obtained copy of letter from Pieck to local Russian military commander urging removal of Social Democrat Mayor of Neukölln,³⁵ which is in American sector, and charging inter alia that he had developed too close relations with the Americans.

³⁴ In telegram 376, August 27, from Berlin, Mr. Murphy transmitted a report that just after the termination of hostilities in Europe, the Russians flew ten reliable German Communists to Berlin. They were under orders to set up a municipal administration in which the top positions were to be occupied by weak non-Communists and the deputy positions by reliable Communists. All chiefs of personnel offices were to be Communists. Mr. Murphy concluded that the composition of the Berlin and provincial administrations followed this pattern "to a high degree." "Russians have presumably adopted it as window-dressing to avoid giving impression of Communist domination, and because it puts them in happy position of exercising control without bearing primary responsibility." (740.00119 Control(Germany)/8-2745)

In recent discussions for an advisory council for Greater Berlin, Russians have likewise endeavored to assure that this body will be Communist-weighted.

Leaders of Social Democrat Party and Christian Democratic Union (see my 278 of August 8, 8 p. m.) have impressed American contacts so far as relatively independent and democratic individuals. While Social Democrats are willing to cooperate with Communists in this new four-party bloc, they admit in confidence that they entertain real doubts as to long term possibilities of real cooperation. Actual present cooperation between the four parties seems best at top levels, and in particular it is said that old enmities and jealousies between the two workers parties still persist at lower levels, though to a lesser degree among the younger Social Democrat elements.

Social Democrats Berlin newspaper ³⁶ seems to be rather closely identified with present Communist party line. Apart from a certain affinity in social aims, this may be a manifestation of the close obligation to the Russians in matters of physical and material control under which all parties lie and which seems to be in part responsible for their nominal union in an anti-Fascist front which, based on experience in eastern and southeastern Europe, seems likely to result in considerable real control by the Communists.

Christian Liberal Union and Liberal Democrats seem relatively weak and inactive. Former is apparently made up of remnants of Center Party, which was never strong in Berlin, the Confessional Church ³⁷ and persons associated with July 20 plot. ³⁸ Liberal Democrats are composed of much the same elements and according to one source this party was developed under Russian auspices after Christian Liberals had shown too much independence and initiative. It also seems possible that Russians encouraged development of two center parties in order to weaken this sector of the political stage.

³⁵ Martin Ohm. The ostensible reason for removing him was his past association with Nazi affiliated organizations.

Das Volk.
 The Bekennende Kirche, a Protestant church organization founded in 1934 to resist the church-state policy of the National Socialist Party.
 The attempted assassination of Adolf Hitler in 1944.

It is noteworthy that Communists are said to be enlisting many small Nazis in same way that Nazi SA ³⁹ won support in 1932 from former Communists.

Despite considerable activity by all four parties, and especially the two Leftist ones, Berlin inhabitants, like the Germans in American occupation zone of Germany, seem generally disinterested in politics at present, due to their extreme preoccupation with vital questions such as food and housing, and internal apathy following extended Nazi dictatorship and impact of recent total defeat. Berlin parties may therefore be described as generals without armies.⁴⁰

Local observers believe that were free elections to be held today, Communists would do very badly and Social Democrats pretty well. This would be due largely to recent Russian excesses such as looting and raping, together with exaggerated, overbearing and even stupid behavior of Communists. Latter apparently realize this and are therefore presently concentrating on retaining administrative power. In this connection, one source reports that a local Russian commander recently somewhat lightheartedly undertook a poll in township outside Berlin, result of which was to give substantial majority for Social Democrats and negligible minority for Communists.

Many reports, including open admissions from certain Germans involved, indicate that Russians are engaged in organizing a central German administration for their zone,⁴¹ the purpose of which is envisaged to be that it would give them a better bargaining position in the composition of a central government for all of Germany, or serve as a Russian-controlled organ for the eastern area in the event that a national government could not be agreed upon by the four Allied powers concerned.

⁴⁰ Mr. Murphy reported in telegram 294, August 13, from Berlin, that in contrast to the political parties the new Free German Trade Union League appeared to have gained a great number of members in a short time, not only in the Soviet zone, but also in all sectors of Berlin. He attributed this growth in part to the worker's apparent feeling that "if the Soviet Military Government favors trade unions they had better join." Mr. Murphy reported also that the League was highly centralized and that its leaders "insist on unity and are building one federation to take in workers, salaried employees, and public officials of all political parties and orientation." In addition there were central administrative agencies for Health, Education, and Justice. The order also appointed the German officials who were to be presidents of each agency, and provided for the creation of comparable agencies for the Soviet sector of Berlin. No. 817

Berlin,⁴² August 20, 1945. [Received September 4.]

SIR: I have the honor to enclose, for the Department's information, a copy of the report ⁴³ prepared by Lt. Col. Richmond, Local Government and Administration Officer in Military Government Detachment A1A1, which takes care of the American Sector of Berlin and in practice constitutes the G-5 Section ⁴⁴ of the American Element of the Kommandatura.

This report deals with an apparent attempt by the German Communist leadership to remove from office the mayor of Neukölln, one of the boroughs in the American Sector. It is interesting for several reasons. As indicated in pargraph 4a of the report, the Personnel Office of the Berlin Magistrat, which is run by Wilhelm Pieck, leader of the German Communist Party, approached the local Russian commander, General Gorbatov, on the grounds that the mayor of Neukölln had "established close relations with the American Army Commandant" and was "trying with his help to free himself of the influence and control of the anti-Fascist parties." By the latter phrase, Pieck of course meant the present four-party bloc which is dominated by the Communists and left-wing Socialists. Paragraph 8 of the report gives further evidence of the reasons for this move, when the Communist Party's headquarters in speaking of two of the mayor's assistants, points out that "as persons near to the Bürgermeister, and therefore in close contact with the Americans. (they) would energetically oppose our activities in the Neukölln District."

This is an interesting example of some of the problems facing American Military Government in Berlin, which will obviously call for considerable patience and tact. Colonel Richmond's recommendation that an attempt be made to discharge Pieck from his office, as well as the First Deputy Lord Mayor, who is Karl Maran, another KPD leader, is not of course likely to be carried out at the present time.

This mission hopes to report more fully on the Berlin Military Government picture in the near future.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

349. As already reported the two most active and influential political parties which have emerged in Berlin and the Russian occupation zone are the Communists and Social Democrats (see my 291, August 13, 9 p. m.). We have now had an opportunity to interview several members of Social Democrat Central Committee, results of which are summarized below:

There are definitely two wings to the party. Left Wing, typified by Gustav Dahrendorf, is for 100% cooperation with Communists, and seems just as anxious as Pieck and other Communist leaders to see outright merger of the two parties just as soon as rank and file can be educated thereto. This wing consists largely of more youthful members of party and their views on many issues, such as reparations and loss of territory to Poland and Russia, are thoroughly identified with those of the Communists. While generally opposed to return of émigré political leaders, they maintain the KPD leaders who have recently returned from Moscow are in a "special position." They also support recent reintroduction of Arbeitsbuecher 45 and establishment of Obmaenner 46 under Russian auspices, both of which steps seem to have disturbed many of the more democratic Germans. On the whole this Left Wing might well be regarded as fellow travelers. Right Wing, typified by leaders such as Max Fechner and Otto Ostrowski, follows pre-Hitler Social Democrat pattern, looks to the west for political inspiration and still desires a democratic Socialist Germany. These leaders claim that Russians and Communists are not presently worrying much about the two center parties but are instead applying all possible pressure on Social Democrats, whom Communists obviously regard as their main political rival and problem. Right Wing believes its following is stronger than that of Left Wing, especially in Berlin and the Russian occupation zone. These leaders are most anxious to: (a) hold as soon as possible local party elections in Berlin, believing that the wide majority which they would receive under present conditions, due to general discrediting of Communists by Russian excesses, would greatly strengthen their position, both in their party and vis-à-vis the Communist-dominated Berlin municipal administration; and (b) establish contact with Social Democrat leaders in American, British and French occupation zones and with certain émigré leaders such as Hans Vogel in England.

Right Wing leaders report following examples of Russian and Communist pressure and tactics. Two days before Allies entered Berlin, Russians forced them to move central party headquarters from American into Russian sector. Communist interpreters and other minor employees have been planted in this office, and party leaders are not supposed to see Americans without such individuals or Left Wing Social Democrats being present. Though nominally free to hold independent party meetings, they fear to do so, due to continuing cases of Russian objections, even from American and British sectors of city. Their newspaper Das Volk is only allowed to appear in 100,000 copies, though Communists have been permitted to print 150,000 of theirs, and Das Volk is subject to more stringent censorship than any other Berlin paper. Wilhelm Pieck and other Moscow German Communist leaders entered Berlin with the Red Army, and were at once given key positions in new municipal administration and allowed to organize as political party, Social Democrats only receiving permission to do the latter at a later date. Communists allegedly still dominate Berlin administration, even somewhat in (American Military Government British and American sectors. contacts have already confirmed this to my mission.)

These Right Wing leaders do not appear any more anti-Russian than before, but seem determined to do their best to prevent German working class from becoming dominated by undemocratic political leadership subservient to Moscow. This Berlin Social Democrat Central Committee is now pretty well organized through the Russian zone, though Right Wing realizes its control as support decreases out in the provinces, due to complete Russian occupation there.

It seems clear that if Left Wing elements should succeed in securing control of this newly organized Social Democrat Party throughout Germany and forcing through a full merger with the KPD, Communist political objectives might be realized without much difficulty. Another tentative conclusion which may be drawn is that German Social Democrat Party, like many other European socialist parties, is in some danger of splitting in two on the specific issue of cooperation and amalgamation with the Communists. Both Right and Left Wing leaders seem determined to prevent such a development, and it seems likely that the group which ultimately secures the party leadership will be able to swing most of the rank and file with it.

Berlin, August 22, 1945. [Received September 5.]

A-160. Here are further notes on the Free German Trade Union League (FDGB) in Eastern Germany. Refer to my Despatch No. 786 dated August 16, 1945, 47 and my telegram No. 298 dated August 14, 1945.48

Jakob Kaiser, the Christian trade union representative on the Berlin executive committee and one of the leaders of the July 20 plot, stated the following to officers of my staff: Of the eight members of the Berlin executive, four are Communists, Otto Brass, Roman Chwalek, Paul Walter, and Hans Jendretsky. Hermann Schlimme and Bernhard Geering are Social Democrats; and Ernst Lemmer, a former Democrat, represents the former Hirsch-Duncker unions.⁴⁹ Otto Brass is old and merely a figurehead. He and the other Communists take their orders from Walter Ulbricht, who is the real leader of the KPD. The non-Communists wanted Schlimme to be president. Kaiser knows about Hans Jahn's connections with OSS but has no personal acquaintance of Jahn.

As currently organized, the Berlin executive is limited in its activities to this city. The decision to restrict its geographic scope corresponded to the desires of the Communist members but had been opposed by the others. Kaiser stated that the non-Communists functioned under considerable pressure but would not give further examples. The regional executives outside Berlin, he added, were self-appointed, like the Berlin committee. When questioned about newspaper reports of one hundred per cent organization in various shops, he answered that pressure was no doubt applied and that democratic methods were not being used.

In spite of this situation, Kaiser strongly supported the centralized organizational structure of the League, saying that it was necessary to unite the force of organized labor. Under further questioning he admitted that he and the other leaders were influenced to a certain extent by the example of the German Labor Front,⁵⁰ and did not feel that German workers were yet able to integrate a decentralized organization. Again Kaiser asked when he and the other democratic leaders could go into the Western zones of Germany to organize workers there. He felt that he and his friends would be able to rally the workers in the Rhineland more effectively than the Communis[ts.]

Franz Neumann of OSS, who has seen Otto Brass, Eichler (president of the Berlin Metal Workers Union), Schlimme, and others who are old friends, has expressed a somewhat different point of view. He is convinced that Brass is in full mental and physical vigor and, though he may be a nominal member of the KPD, retains an independent viewpoint and is a firmly democratic trade unionist. From his examination of the lists of officers of the 18 Berlin unions in the League, he is satisfied that they are led in the main by sincere and experienced Social Democratic unionists. Moreover, he believes that if union elections are held they will be fair. In short, he thinks that the Western Allies can do business with the FDGB. However, he objected to the idea of forcing the Berlin executive to add members from the West, as these might then be viewed as agents of the occupying powers. Better in his view would be to arrange a meeting of labor leaders from all Germany, where common problems could be discussed and an organizational plan worked out for Allied approval.

If Hans Jahn becomes its provisional president, continued Neumann, then the Berlin League could be counted on to be entirely cooperative. Jahn is really an anti-Communist, and he and Oldenbroek ⁵¹ were even more responsible than Citrine ⁵² for blocking at the February Congress the Soviet plan to dominate the World Trade Union Federation. This information Neumann gathered from talks with Citrine and other trade union leaders.

Of the dozen odd members of the Central Committee only one, Gustav Dahrendorf, apparently favors outright merger of SPD 53 with KPD, and thus the Right Wing definitely seems to control party leadership. Latter estimates party already has some 50,000 members in Berlin, as compared with 100,000 in 1932, and claims some 20,000 members outside Berlin in Brandenburg province. No figures yet available regarding party membership in other parts of Russian Zone.

Present Central Committee was provisionally confirmed by meeting of about 1500 party functionaries in Berlin two months ago, but leaders hope and plan that when they can make contact with Social Democrats in British, American, and French occupation Zones, party can be democratically organized and central Vorstand ⁵⁴ selected by proper voting procedure.

As regards development of present bloc of the four so-called anti-Fascist parties, SPD leaders state there was nothing else they could do at the time, due to: occupation of Berlin by Russian troops alone; KPD manifesto with its insistence on such a bloc; and fact that public sentiment, particularly among the workers, definitely favored unity of anti-Fascist forces.

Cooperation between SPD and KPD is at present best at top levels and also far better on theoretical than practical issues. In fact many SPD lower administrative officials are by now pretty well fed up with Communist methods of "cooperation". SPD leaders here believe their rank and file is definitely against merger of the two parties and becoming increasingly so.

As regards the Communists, SPD leaders provide following information. Ulbricht seems to be the dominating personality rather than aged Wilhelm Pieck. Ulbricht's wife is Zhukov's translator. KPD leaders who have returned from Moscow impress their SPD contacts as no longer thinking and acting as Germans but more as Russians. Chief figures in Berlin municipal administration are: Maran, Pieck, Jendretsky and Winzer, all of them Communists. Otto Brass, aged but nominal head of Russian-sponsored Trade Union movement, is now a member of KPD, and Chwalek, another Communist who stands very close to Ulbricht, is the main Communist figure in Trade Union Committee. Berlin radio administration contains many Moscow BDO 55 figures, who were placed there to give impression of unpolitical personalities. 448. American Military Government found on entering Berlin that Russian-created municipal administration had replaced former Nazi Blockleiter system with similar organization consisting of so-called Haus and Blockobmaenner. These individuals were almost entirely Communists and included many former concentration camp inmates. Though at first they undoubtedly performed certain useful and necessary functions, such as helping locate Nazis, distributing food cards, and mobilizing labor for street clearance work, it was clear that their status and activity also provided KPD with both detailed intelligence regarding most Berlin inhabitants and means of bringing considerable pressure to bear on such inhabitants. Among other things Obleute issued so-called certificates of political reliability exempting holder from certain unpleasant common tasks, and decided ration scale to which individual inhabitants were entitled.

It has been obvious for some weeks that system had developed into one of considerable tyranny. Military Government received many complaints of arbitrary behavior by the Obleute, alleging for example that this system was just as objectionable from viewpoint of individual rights and liberties as under the Nazis. At least one case has been reported of an Obmann forcing the inhabitants of a particular house in American sector to attend a KPD rally at which anti-American sentiments were expressed.⁵⁶

By means of despatch 928, September 10, from Berlin, Mr. Murphy transmitted to the Department a memorandum by a member of his staff on the functioning of the Obleute system. In his despatch Mr. Murphy commented that the memorandum showed the Obleute system to be "as pernicious as that of the 'Leiters' under the Nazis." He felt that the memorandum also "clearly reveals the apparently disproportionate degree to which members and followers of the Communist Party control the municipal administrations in the American sector, either by weight of numbers or by being placed in strategic offices. This is a situation which may be slowly rectified with the passage of time and particularly if local elections should be held and should reveal that the Communist Party lacks majority support." (740.00119 Control (Germany)/9-1045)

An example of how Communist propaganda has praised and supported this system was given in my telegram No. 428 September 1, 1945.⁵⁷

I believe that our Military Government authorities have therefore acted wisely in issuing orders a few days ago for the liquidation of the Obmaenner system in American sector.

456. From several sources we have received reports that Russian plans for establishment of a German administration for Russian occupation zone are virtually complete (compare my 29 [291], August 13, 9 p. m.). Besides providing machinery for centralized control of northeastern Germany, it is possible, of course, that such an administration, or at least some of its key figures and departments, might be useful to the Russians later on in Allied negotiations for creation of central German Ministries, helping our eastern Ally to push forward her own already tested candidates. Some local contacts allege Russians may go ahead and set up central German administrative machinery on their own responsibility, but I see no reason to fear such a development in view of establishment and present functioning of the Allied Control Commission.

Key figures in the new Russian zonal administration will allegedly be the following: Ministry of trade, Buschmann, little known politically but described as strongly pro-Russian asbestos business man operating in Balkans during war; Justice, aged Eugene Schiffer, former Reich Justice Minister presumably picked on account of his moderate political views and age; Industry, Skrzypczinsky, described as young parlor Communist industrialist; Finance, Gleitze, about whom little known except that allegedly former trade union statistician; Labor, Wilhelm or Bernard Koenen, presumably the latter, but in either case a reliable Communist leader; Education, Wandel, described as publisher of present KPD organ Deutsche Volkszeitung, and possibly identical with Paul Wandel who signed Moscow Free Germany appeal; Railroads and Canals, Dr. Wilhelm Fitzner, Ebert's 59 son-in-law and SPD lawyer from Frankfurt on Oder and

The above list indicates that this administration will consist largely of reliable Communists or other elements presumably susceptible to Russian control. Russians will also doubtless resort to tactic of selecting strong reliable Communists as deputies to aged or politically colorless chiefs of particular departments. For example, Gustav Dahrendorf, Left Wing Socialist, has been mentioned as possible deputy for Fuel and Power Ministry, and this tactic would almost certainly be applied to Ministry of Justice which always looms large in Communist plans.

457. German Communist propaganda for the division of large agricultural landholdings under the slogan "Junkerland must become peasantland" has hit a new high in the last few days (see for example my 428, September 1, 1945 60). The present bloc of four political parties has been pressed into service in this connection by having editorials appear simultaneously in their newspapers and trade union organizations have also been used to voice these demands. Latest press articles, expressed most vociferously in the Berlin KPD paper and in the Berliner Zeitung, have underlined the theme "What are we waiting for?" and "Action now—dont dawdle any more".

It is of course true that most democratic opinion in Germany desires the eventual realization of this program. Russians and their Communist satellites are probably pushing it with idea of: winning KPD support from the peasant beneficiaries; and providing land and occupations for some of thousands of German refugees now streaming in from territories east of Oder River, as well as factory workers being left without jobs due to Russian removals of plant and machinery, both in form of reparations and unrecorded seizures. Its effect on food production in northeastern Germany, which is already precarious enough, may well be serious and for this reason alone leaders of the two center parties and some leaders of KPD party admit it should probably not be carried out too drastically at the moment. Due however to present press censorship and workings of political party bloc, such sentiments cannot well be expressed openly.

Present press and general propaganda buildup is probably intended to present whatever action Russian authorities may take in their zone as being fully in accord with the plainly expressed desire of all progressive Germans. There is reason to believe that Russians have just about completed plans for establishing a German administrative apparatus (reference to my 291, August 15 [13], 9 p. m.) for their occupation zone, in which a reliable Communist Edwin Hoernle, will allegedly head Ministry of Agriculture, and it may be that this machinery will be used to carry out the above program.

The available but scanty intelligence suggests that Russians have not yet really started to carry program through, though it is noted that Moscow radio broadcast in mid-July that all big estates in Saxony would be broken up by autumn and at meeting of Brandenburg province trade unions held a few days ago it was stated that action had already been taken in some places on the projected division of large estates.

This whole problem is an interesting example of an objective which appears most desirable in the long run from the viewpoints of both American policy towards Germany and the wishes of democratic Germans, but which is now being pushed hastily forward with the aid of the political bloc and press censorship system established by the Russians prior to arrival of western Allies in Berlin.

established for province of Saxony,62 it may be expected that other provincial administrations in northeastern Germany will issue similar decrees in the very near future. Though this program seems highly desirable from viewpoint of destroying power of large landowners who have played such an important part in German militarism and Nazism, there are grounds for opposing the drastic and speedy way it will now apparently be carried through, for it will probably result in a further decline, for a year or so at least of vitally important food production in this part of Germany. There is also reason to expect that KPD may endeavor to win peasant support through this move, as suggested by Pieck's reference, cited in press telegram under reference, to those "anti-Fascist" and "democratic" elements who will get priority in land distribution and by having actual distribution carried out by "locally elected" land committees acting under the supervision of the provincial governments. It is also worth noting that, although press and propaganda buildup claimed that all four political parties desire carrying out of this program now, the two center parties can at the most be described as reluctant fellow travellers on this issue and we know, for example, that at latest meeting of four party representatives 4 or 5 days ago, Dr. Koch, LPD leader, flatly refused to go along any further on the party bloc's current press campaign for land reform until he could have an opportunity to discuss the whole question thoroughly with his party central committee.

of regional administration 64 to me informally, stating that it had been found necessary for practical reasons of administration to place more responsibility on the Germans for the public administration of this territory. He denied that in authorizing the setting-up of this administration the Soviet authorities entertained any thought of creating a nucleus of a new central German national government. He said, among other things, that one of the purposes the new organization would serve is the destruction of the old framework of the Prussian state administration. The central administrative units concerned, that is Brandenburg, Mecklenburg, Pomerania, Saxony, Silesia and Anhalt, are thus taken out of the Prussian state organization framework and operate relatively as autonomous units directly responsible to the Soviet Military Government authorities. Sobolev's opinion this action is in harmony with the policy of decentralization, which he states the Soviet authorities respect.

I asked Sobolev whether he thought that the establishment of a central German Government was a matter of the very distant future or whether he believed that it might occur sooner, say within a year. He replied that he thought that it would be years before a central German Government could be reestablished. I also inquired whether the Soviet authorities had any immediate plans for the holding of municipal elections and he replied in the negative.

⁶⁴ On September 13, the Soviet Military Administration announced the establishment of the central administrative agencies in the Soviet zone. munist tactics in handling present land reform issue (see my 521, September 14, 5 p. m. 65).

Just before Saxon Provincial Government issued its decree, local four party representatives met at Halle to consider land reform question. CDU (Christian Democratic Union) contended it should be put before all four Allies and decided on that basis, rather than by Russians alone acting in their occupation zone. Local Russian commander at once warned that any such attitude on part of CDU would be regarded by Russians as indicative of "lack of confidence" in Soviet occupation power.

Two days ago, Berlin KPD committee summoned Hermes and other CDU party leaders to meeting at which they demanded that CDU endorse Communist land reform program, which is now being carried out in Saxony. Hermes refused and tells us that though the political bloc of four parties is still "carrying on" situation has become "very difficult" as result of tension which has developed from way Communists have pushed through land reform program without real consideration by or agreement with the other three parties.

Hermes hopes that the British, Americans and French share his view that land reform issue should be decided on an Allied basis, but points out that his party alone can do little to halt the present tide.

Dept considers that it would be desirable to request information of Russians on details of projected land redistribution, including anticipated effect on agricultural output and possible contribution to resettlement of German refugees from the East. In making this inquiry we should avoid conveying impression that we are opposed to land reform or even that we feel its execution should be delayed.

⁶⁶ Not printed. In this telegram Mr. Murphy requested the Department's views as to whether the Russians should be questioned in the Control Council on the land reform program. He suggested that reference could be made to the Potsdam Declaration's intent to insure uniform treatment for all Germany, and to the effect the reform program might have on food production in northeastern Germany. "Viewed from the Potsdam agreement, there is some reason to feel that the Russians should have at least consulted us before launching this program in their occupation zone. It may be that, providing they succeed in pushing this through without a murmur from any of the other three occupation powers, they will embark on other similar 'reforms', such as nationalization of banks and insurance companies, large industries, et cetera." It should be pointed out that JCS 1067/6 67 directs utilization of large landed assets to facilitate accommodation and settlement of Germans and others or to increase agricultural output. Dept is of view that application of uniform land reform measures throughout Germany would be highly desirable and that an effort might well be made in Control Council to negotiate uniform policies.

Soviet removals of transportation and industrial equipment from Berlin have several times been mentioned at Kommandatura meetings but Soviet representative has taken a firm stand "on his rights" saying only the Council could make a decision to suspend any proposed removal. We have been asked for policy advice and suggestions how to terminate removals. I plan to inform Berlin district commander that while Berlin Protocol 68 imposes no specific quantitative limitation on Soviet right to remove capital equipment from USSR zone to meet its reparations claims, it does impose general limitation that removal shall leave adequate resources to enable German people to subsist without external assistance and provides that there shall be maintained in Germany average living standards not exceeding the average living standards of European countries. Logical implication is that standards in Germany will not necessarily be inferior to average standards in European countries. Protocol further directs that Germany shall be treated as an economic unit. This unity of treatment would appear to be especially necessary in Berlin, the only area in Germany directly under quadripartite government. Arbitrary, uncoordinated and excessive removals of productive equipment from the Berlin area would be contrary to limitations on removals and economic and social objectives in protocol outlined above.

As a result of manner in which land reform has been pushed through by Russians and their Communist satellites, and certain other issues recently handled by the four-party bloc (for example, KPD and SPD refusal to discuss advisability of reopening banks in Berlin and the Russian zone), the two center parties have become little more than reluctant fellow-voyagers in the bloc. Both Hermes and Koch, Christian Democrat Union and Liberal Democratic Party chiefs, inform us confidentially that time may soon come when their parties may have to give a flat "no" to future bloc proposals, even though such action may lead to drastic hindering of their party activities in northeastern Germany and to their being branded by Communists as "reactionary Fascist" elements. This is one reason for their strong desire to establish contact with political leaders of the center in western and southern Germany, where they feel the political faiths they represent will be able to express themselves much more freely than Russian press and radio censorship permits in this part of Germany. (We are studying this whole problem of permitting CDU, ILP and SPD leaders in Berlin to send representatives into our occupation zone, which we feel would be beneficial to both them and to their political colleagues there. So far KPD has never approached either my office or local Military Govt on this or any other project.)

Within the present four-party bloc here there is obviously a subbloc, consisting of SPD-KPD cooperation against the two center parties. In fact the SPD seems to hold the real balance of internal political power in Germany. Sooner or later this party may have to face issue of a possible merger with KPD. So far neither party has formally approached the other in this matter, though it seems clear that KPD leaders are considering such a step, presumably dependent on Russian orders, and left wing Socialists such as Dahrendorf definitely favor such a merger. OSS has just obtained an interesting report from source allegedly close to Russians and Communists according to which Russians now realize that KPD has little popular support, in this part of Germany at any rate, and are therefore seriously considering dropping it as a political party, and instead pressing for an immediate merger of SPD and KPD, which they would hope to control through KPD and left wing leadership, together with their already effective press and radio censorship. SPD leaders assure us confidentially they would not even consider such merger until a nationwide party congress could be held, which would probably not be possible for at least a year, and also probably until they can establish contact with Socialists in France and Labor Party in Britain. seems possible however that extreme Russian and KPD pressure, as well as policies of the center parties, might change this attitude.

As regards land reform, SPD leaders say that despite statements attributed to them in Russian-controlled Berlin press, they did not entirely support the present program, fearing its possible effects on food production and that the five hectare farms to be created will be too small for practical purposes, especially in Brandenburg's poor soil.

Both Hermes and Koch emphasize that as far as their parties are concerned, land reform was carried through by force and continual pressure. For example, two days after they refused to endorse as a four-party press declaration a very "fiery" statement apparently drawn up by Communists and backed by both KPD and SPD, Marshal Zhukov summoned them to his office and accused them of being "Junker-Schuetzer", adding that in contrast, he has [was?] "entirely satisfied with the SPD" on this issue. All four parties subsequently agreed on relatively calm press endorsement containing no reference to specific details of the program, such as possible indemnification for non-Nazi landowners, on which there had been disagreement within the bloc. Koch believes Communists will follow up settlement of this question with new demands, possibly for nationalization of large industries or for participation in industrial management by trade unions.

According to British intelligence, Catholic priests are being instructed to support the Christian Democrat Union wherever it appears in Germany.

591. In reading our telegraphic summaries of Berlin press (such as my 589, Sept 22, 10 p. m. ⁷⁰), Department should bear following in mind:

Ever since these newspapers began to appear following the capture of Berlin, the four political party organs and the Berliner Zeitung have been subject to considerable Russian censorship. This presumably causes little trouble for either the KPD organ Deutsche Volkszeitung or the Berliner Zeitung. Though the latter is published by the Magistrat (Berlin municipal administration) and is allegedly non-political, it rather clearly expresses the views of dominant element in Magistrat, i.e., the "Communists." However, the three other party papers are not able to express their views freely. Censorship is both negative and positive, in that papers are even instructed to carry certain articles. In fact censorship is apparently based largely on views identical with those of the other political party, the KPD. All these five papers are permitted to accept only articles passed by Russian censor, which means in practice that all of the foreign items emanate from Tass. Russian censorship is based largely on facts that papers are published in Russian sector of Berlin, and have to obtain their newsprint from Russian-controlled sources. The three non-Communist papers have to appear in much smaller formats than either the Deutsche Volkszeitung or the Berliner Zeitung, and also receive newsprint sufficient for much fewer copies than either of these two.

We are studying this whole situation with a view to taking appropriate action, through the Kommandatura or otherwise, to try and ensure each political party here freedom and equality in expressing its views.

598. Following obtained from apparently reliable source (former German Ambassador Von Kemnitz ⁷¹) regarding land reform in Saxony Province, where Russians and Communists first took action on this program.

Dr. Huebener, President of Provincial Government apparently more or less a figurehead for Communist-dominated administration, states confidentially that the decree on land reform was placed before him in its final form by local Russian commander, with instructions that he need only to sign it. In other words, he was permitted to take no part in its preparation, which was presumably the work of his Communist deputy Siewert.

At four-party meeting held in Halle just before signing of this decree, Russian commander first persuaded CDU (Christian Democratic Union) representative to withdraw his objections by tactics mentioned in my 515, September 14, 1 p. m., and then persuaded LDP representative to do likewise by asking him whether he wished his party to be "only one" of the four opposing this program which had been so obviously demanded by the anti-fascist forces of Saxony.

According to our source, the local committee to execute the program is being selected by calling together peasants, farm workers et cetera and confronting them with list of candidates already selected by KPD and thus no opportunity to vote otherwise. Source adds that though many small farmers and agricultural workers naturally want their own land, there is considerable apprehension due to way program is so obviously being pushed through under Russian and Communist direction. It is also apparent that KPD is trying to gain many new members by telling potential recipients of land that if they support their local committee and join the KPD, they will receive preferential treatment.

Finally, source describes agricultural situation in his home area near Halle as chaotic and almost desperate, in view of drastic removals of livestock and farm equipment by Russians, as well as probable effect on total food production to be expected from so suddenly breaking up the larger food producing units. In this connection, it is worth noting that Time and Life correspondent John Scott, a few days ago asked Edwin Hoernele, KPD leader and Minister of Agriculture in new Russian zonal administration, as to effects of land reform on food production and was assured that it should actually increase it as it would "spur the peasants on to greater efforts in bringing in the harvest this year".

This statement appears somewhat optimistic, but at least this is presumably the current Communist stock reply on the subject.

I discussed the general subject of land reform informally with Sobolev a day or two ago. He told me the responsibility for carrying out this much-needed reform has been left up to the Germans themselves and that its primary objective is to deprive the Junker class of their holdings which serve as a basis for their war-making potential.

623. Judging by recent issues Berlin newspapers (telegram No. 589, September 22 72), the Communists may be preparing the ground, now that land reform issue has been carried through, for the realization of their general objectives in the field of industry, which in the first instance will presumably consist of the establishment of works councils to participate in industrial management. SPD contacts report that Communists have not yet raised this question with the other three parties. However, we know of at least one case in American sector of Berlin where following sudden appearance of an outsider trade union Communist leader last week and his lengthy speech to the workers in the National-Krupp-Registrier-Kassen plant, a new Betriebsrat 73 was at once "elected" after speaker had told workers that in future not a single decision would be taken by the management without the concurrence of their works council.

Recent speech by Wilhelm Pieck and other items included in my 613 to Department ⁷⁴ summarize well the present Communist line. Pieck's speech indicates that land reform has now been decreed for entire Russian occupation zone, even though we have not seen decrees for either land Saxony or Thuringia in the press. KPD (German paper) emphasis on necessity of liquidating power of capitalist monopoly interests is worth noting, as is also the continuing call for closest cooperation between the two leftist workers parties. 708. At Oct 4 meeting of Kommandatura a proposal was considered and strongly urged by the Russians to permit the Provisional Committee of the Free Trade unions of greater Berlin to hold a city-wide conference 75 for purpose of electing by secret ballot a governing board, the delegates to the conference to be previously chosen by secret ballot elections in the shops. The elected governing board would then draw up and submit to the Allied Kommandatura the organization's constitution and rules governing selection of Verwaltungsbezirk 76 trade union committees.

As the Dept is aware, the Freier Deutscher Gewerkschaftsbund ⁷⁷ came into being last June under Russian occupation and the Provisional Committee thereof was elected more or less by acclaim. The committee is comprised of four Communists, two Social Democrats and two Christian Democrats. It has shown a strong desire to expand its activities throughout Germany but was precluded from doing so in the American and British zones by reason of our so-called grass-roots policy. It did, however, operate for a time quite freely in the Russian zone outside Berlin but now ostensibly confines its activities to Greater Berlin.

The question of trade union elections had been raised at the Kommandatura meeting September 20. In telegram 578, September 21, from Berlin, Mr. Murphy reported that the Russian representative on the Kommandatura had inquired of the British representative why British authorities had failed to sanction trade union elections scheduled to be held in the British sector on September 23. The British representative explained that the trade union officials had failed to offer the requisite proof that the elections would be held on a fair and democratic basis. (740.00119 Control (Germany)/9-2145) At the Coordinating Committee on October 6 the matter was again discussed. Mr. Murphy reported in telegram 710, October 7, from Berlin, that the British representative had then explained that the Oberbürgermeister had been unable to give assurances that the elections would be conducted in a democratic manner. "General Sokolovsky [the Russian representative] stated that Marshal Zhukov had provided for the election before the Allied arrival in Berlin, and that the matter was not within the competence of the Oberbürgermeister. The discussion was rather acrimonious, General Clay pointing out that the four part government in the Kommandatura could administer matters as it saw fit, and give suitable orders [to] the Bürgermeister. The matter was left to the Kommandatura." (740.00119-Control (Germany)/10-745)

The committee has been strongly urging the Kommandatura to permit elections and regularize the existence of the confederation which has been formally recognized only by the Russians but permitted to function within the other three zones. The Social Democrat members have remarked privately that despite the fact that trade unions should be non-political in nature, they feel that elections held under apparently free conditions would be manipulated by the Communists to insure a dominant position for themselves.

Apparently aware of this possibility, the Kommandatura, under British urging but with American and French support, in letters dated Sept 17 and 28 laid down stringent conditions under which elections might be approved. These included advance submission for approval of the proposed constitution and by-laws as well as detailed plans of the election machinery. The Provisional Committee submitted much of the desired information which was considered at Thursday's meeting of the Kommandatura. The Committee's report explained why it was impractical to submit the text of the proposed constitution and by-laws in advance and gave assurances as to the democratic nature of the proposed elections which the British, strongly supported by the French, considered too vague and general. Deadlock ensued when the Russian representative contended that the committees had met the conditions prescribed by the Kommandatura and the British continued to press for advance submission of the constitution, et cetera. American representative found himself in a rather central position, agreeing that it was not practical to submit an advanced draft constitution until personnel had been elected to prepare such a draft and holding out only for complete details of the election machinery to insure that the procedure would be fully democratic. The meeting adjourned with the British member proposing that a completely new set of conditions for the election be drafted and the Russian stoutly maintaining that all the original conditions had been satisfactorily met and the matter was referred back to the Kommandatura labor committee. The prevailing American opinion is that neither view is wholly acceptable but that further delay in our approval of elections would permit the Russians to contend that the Americans who are advocates of democratic procedures are actively opposing free elections.

5901. In a conversation on October 4 with the Labor Office of the Berlin Mission Hans Jahn stated the following with regard to trade unionism and labor political affairs in Germany: Jahn had by the middle of September completed a tour of all the major cities of the American, French and British Zones of Germany where he saw trade unionists and gave them instructions and advice for organizing. In the British Zone the organization of unions has just begun although there and elsewhere the railroad workers have organized illegally without Military Government authorization. In Bavaria no trade unions were permitted as of the time he was there. Throughout all three zones the railway workers are ready to form a regional or wider union now if this is permitted.

In all these localities the union movements are led by old men usually pre-Nazi unionists. Jahn feels it one of his primary tasks to develop a union educational system to train young leaders.

He has also been visited by many friends from the Russian Zone. There is no democracy in the unions there and apparently cannot be. Politically the Communists have lost much strength which the Social Democrats have gained. He believes that the Social Democrats would get 75% of the votes in the entire Soviet Zone if elections were held tomorrow. Knowing this the KPD is pressing the SPD for a merger. But "serious" Communists have told Jahn that Russia has embarked on an imperialistic course with which they cannot agree. The position of democratic minded leaders in the Berlin Union Federation is almost as difficult as that in the Soviet Zone. Otto Brass is definitely a Communist but is weak and old. Hans Jendretski is a strong Communist while Paul Walter is weak. Roman Chwalek a strong man has been drawing away from Ulbricht and is in danger of being spirited away. Schlimme the strongest of the Democrats has liver trouble and cannot be as active as he otherwise might be. Jahn believes that the western Allies should be prepared to evacuate democratic leaders from the Berlin area in case their lives are endangered in the future. He also discussed with Oldenbroeck and others what would happen if the western Allies decided to withdraw from Berlin.

As a result of Jahn's appeal the Danish Trade Unions are preparing to ship food this winter to keep the "best" leaders in Germany alive. The Danes are negotiating to purchase American Army trucks for this purpose. The Swiss Union plans to do likewise and also to ship prefabricated barracks. However the delivery of these things may take two or three months and Jahn would like some Allied aid in the meantime.

He is certain that many thousands will starve in the Russian Zone of Germany this winter. The Russians have taken 78% of the railway switching and signal equipment, have removed much rolling stock, and have torn up one track of every double track railroad in the zone, he explained.

Following is summary of observations made by group of five members of the Industries Division, US Group CC, while on a tour of industrial plants in the vicinity of Leipzig in Soviet zone of occupation during late September. Specific plants visited were the I. G. Farben plant at Bitterfeld and the Synthetic Gasoline plant at Leuna. The tour was prearranged with the Russian authorities and at no time were the observers in a position to travel without being escorted by Russian personnel.

Observations: 1. Very few Russian troops were seen on the way and the number in the cities likewise appeared very small. 2. Practically no livestock was seen in the fields with the exception of a few horses. 3. No double track railroads were evident, the second tracks having been removed. 4. Numerous workers in the fields, consisting mostly of old men and women. 5. No signs of ill treatment of Germans by Russians though it was evident that the Germans feared the occupation troops. 6. No evidence of current looting by the Russians. In fact, observers were given impression that Russians paid standard prices for German merchandise and services. 7. In the plants visited, Russians seemed to hold great respect for German technicians and were doing everything possible to get into good graces of Germans. 8. Observers believed that Russian troops were living entirely off the land. 9. Many families of the occupying troops were present. 10. I. G. Farben plant at Bitterfeld for commercial chemicals had received very little damage. It was producing at about 10 per cent capacity for use in the Russian zone. 11. The Leuna Synthetic Gasoline plant was damaged considerably and was producing at about 15 percent of capacity for use by the Russian Army. 12. Russians stated that considerable difficulty was experienced because Americans had removed all plant operation and production records as well as experienced key personnel during initial stages of occupation. 13. Russians did not intend to dismantle these plants but indicated they were interested only in newer and better equipment.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

> Berlin, October 21, 1945—2 p. m. [Received October 21—11:25 a. m.]

- 825. Reference mytel 708, October 7, 11 a.m. The October 18 meeting of the Kommandatura discussed a paper prepared by its Labor Committee on the calling of a city-wide delegates convention of the Free German Trade Union League. The Labor Committee had on October 16 agreed on the following points:
- 1. No approval of election of delegates until receipt of a reply from the Oberbürgermeister to the Kommandatura letter of October 9.
- 2. Elections to be conducted according to the following general principles.

(a) Right of vote for all members.
(b) Vote by secret ballot.
(c) Right of unrestricted nomination of candidates.

- (d) One delegate per 100 members.
 (e) The elected directing committee will serve for not more than a year.
- (f) Election rules must be approved in advance by the Kommandatura.
- (q) All details on the election procedure will be given to the press and to radio Berlin in advance.
- (h) The Kommandatura will accept the League's assurance that these measures will be applied, but Military Government will hear complaints and take appropriate action.
- (i) Within 6 months the elected committee will present to the Kommandatura a constitution and regulations governing all official positions.

The Labor Committee has failed to reach agreement on two points:

- 3(a) That at least 5 days should elapse between the nomination and the election of delegates. The Russian representatives did not want to specify a time period.
- 3(b) That the Kommandatura approve the elections of delegates which have already occurred, provided they took place in accordance with approved principles. This was proposed by the Russians and refused by all others. Nobody except the Russians had previously known that such elections had taken place. Just prior to the Kommandatura meeting a reply by the Oberbürgermeister to the October 9 letter was received, which all except the Russians considered unsatisfactory. It was tentatively agreed to deal directly with the Trade Union League in the future. The Kommandatura informally accepted the points agreed to by its Labor Committee, and after considerable discussion fixed on a waiting period of seven days between the nomination and the election of delegates. With regard to point

3(b) the British, American and French generals declined to accept elections held without Kommandatura approval and by rules which were not submitted in advance. General Smirnoff admitted that in some cases new elections should be held, but asked that he be given time to think it over. The Kommandatura agreed to return the paper to the Labor Committee which was directed to work out detailed election procedure. The matter was placed on the agenda for the next Kommandatura meeting October 25.79

It appears likely that a satisfactory agreement will be reached in due time and that the convention will be held. The Russians, who had wanted to rush through the formalities in order to introduce German delegates into the World Trade Union Congress in Paris, may now be willing to repudiate the previous elections and concur with some detailed requirements for new elections, even though in really free voting the Communists would presumably not obtain a majority. The Russians believe that the American manpower officials genuinely favor the holding of the convention, but they appear to be unsure about the British and French intentions. The British are going to insist on extremely detailed and specific guarantees of democratic procedure, and the French go along with this view. Colonel Banford, the Chief British Labor Officer for Berlin, has not yet allowed any factory elections, he states, because he has not had time to supervise them. The American manpower officials are anxious not to be put in the position of opposing democratic trade unions, but are equally concerned to see that the unions are democratic. They will continue to try to bring the British and Russians together.

866. Now that the land reform has been almost completed the KPD and the Free German Trade Union League in the Soviet Zone of Germany have thrown into high gear a drive for social revolution in the industrial and commercial fields. Refer to my despatch 786 of August 16, 1945 ⁸⁰ and to recent press telegrams, particularly 589,

Telegram 856, October 26, from Berlin, reported on the discussions in the Kommandatura, October 26. It was finally agreed that each commander would draw up a statement of his position and that all four papers would be submitted to the Control Council. Pending Control Council action, the Kommandatura would make no further effort to reconcile the different views. (862.5043/10–2645)

⁸⁰ Not printed, but see footnote 47, p. 1044.

Sept 22.81 Their disciplined and wide-spread campaign both in propaganda and in action is now concentrated on the following immediate objectives:

1. Election in all plants of works councils which will have an equal vote with management in all matters, and enactment of a new works council law. The initial appeal of the FDGB in June discouraged for the time being the further formation of works councils but called for democratic worker representation in directing economic reconstruction. In the succeeding months the KPD and SPD Berlin press reported instances of trade union participation in factory management and actual operation of abandoned plants. On Aug 29 Walter Ulbricht (KPD) in a comprehensive program speech to the FDGB local conference at Halle announced the new line, saying: "After the fall of the Hitler rule the workers and salaried employees in all parts of the Reich created works councils or committees naturally these works councils can be successful only if they support themselves on the organization of the Free Unions in the enterprises and if leading trade union officers also belong to the works council." The workers, continued Ulbricht, must have a vote in management (Mitbestimmungsrecht) beginning with the single enterprise and including the highest point of the central economic organization. The works councils should bring the experience of workers, employees and technicians to bear in production planning and negotiations, of management with state authorities, help denazify management and liquidate concerns and cartels, and prevent secret war production. The Deutsche Volkszeitung immediately began the campaign for works councils and reported various meetings which demanded them, but the other Berlin papers remained silent on the subject. On Sept 17 a conference of 600 shop stewards at Erfurt laid down detailed rules concerning the election and functions of works councils. The initial issues of the newspaper Die Freie Gewerkschaft Oct 9, 12, 16, 19 and 23 are filled with articles calling for workers representative bodies and report numerous factory meetings which demanded works councils with managerial power. The second delegates conference of the FDGB for Province Brandenburg on Oct 7 unanimously resolved in favor of a works councils law which will secure fully the rights and democratic freedom of those who work. Conference of the metal workers and other individual unions have passed similar resolutions. As a result of this campaign it has just been announced in the Berlin press Oct 23, that the Thuringian Govt has passed a new works councils law which adequately secures the interests of the workers vis-à-vis management. Other laws of a like character will probably be promulgated soon in the rest of the Soviet Zone.

2. Radical breaking-up of large concerns and elimination from managerial positions of all Nazis and militarists and of those who allegedly delay reconstruction. The effort is being made in KPD and FDGB propaganda to include all industrialists in these categories. Ulbricht keynoted this theme in his Halle speech. Schlimme SPD in Die Freie Gewerkschaft of Oct 16 wrote: "The leaders of the German economy stand in great part next to the political and military originators of the world catastrophe and are small and hateful before the courts of the Allied Powers. The bourgeoisie, embodied in capitalism, have with the help of National Socialism dug their own grave. It is the trade unions in which all the forces for reconstruction of the economy and the state are to be found." Moericke, President of the FDGB for Province Brandenburg, said at the Oct 7 conference: "Not the employers, no, the workers, eager to build, brought about the reopening of enterprises and carried through under great sacrifice, without counting the cost." Then the conference resolved that all monopolies and concerns, especially those of mining and heavy industry, as well as all enterprises whose directors are gone, should be expropriated by the state, and that the German economy should be centralized in accordance with the Potsdam Agreement. Numerous individual employees have been singled out for special attack and not a few have been forced out and replaced by trade union leaders and others. Moreover, the local organs of the FDGB are helping to administer many abandoned enterprises, including all the lignite mines and briquette plants of central Germany.

3. Trade union participation in chambers of commerce and industry, other industrial groupings, public enterprises, and state economic offices. This part of the program has to a large extent been achieved. The FDGB has helped develop reconstruction programs for various industries and participate in all state economic planning in the Soviet Zone. Its local committee outside of Berlin handle all the labor placement work formerly done by the labor offices (Arbeitsämter). According to a reliable source, the new plan for a unified social insurance system for the Soviet Zone in the preparation of which the FDGB participated and which is now before Gundelach, provides that the FDGB should have sole control, just as the unions in the USSR manage its social insurance scheme.

The above developments reinforce other indications that within a few months the Soviet Zone of Germany will be virtually a socialized state, which will exert great pressure in the direction of similar changes in western Germany.

⁸² Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Echols, Assistant Deputy Military Governor; Brig. Gen. Bryan L. Milburn, Chief of Staff, Office of Military Government for Germany (U.S.); and Maj. Gen. James M. Gavin, Commanding General, U.S. Sector, Berlin District.

Americans will ask that it be referred without discussion to the Manpower and Political directorates acting jointly. Refer to my 708, October 7; 825, October 21; 856, October 26; 83 and 915, November 2.84 The only unsettled issue is whether or not to recognize delegates elections which have already been held, provided they took place in accordance with the agreed principles reported in my 825, October 21.

Apparently between September 10 and September 23, elections occurred in every district of Berlin except Charlottenburg. At General Gavin's order, those elections in the American sector are now being investigated. Since the Western forces agreed to accept previous Russian rules when they entered Berlin and never proclaimed that trade unions needed their permission to meet and organize, the FDGB was not acting illegally in holding elections and indeed the Russian request to the Kommandatura to allow the convention might therefore be regarded as gratuitous. However, some of the elections were not democratic. Jacob Kaiser states that the FDGB Provisional Committee, including the Communists, is willing to declare all previous elections null and void. Presumably the Communists had previously consulted Russian MG, *55 before taking this position.

Several alternative American positions present themselves. (a) Hold out for declaring all previous elections null and void and starting over again; (b) Agree to General Gavin's solution of letting each commander satisfy himself that the elections in his sector will have been democratic; (c) Begin with (a) and, if the Russians are adamant, retreat to (b); (d) If prior investigation discloses that most elections were democratic, accept the Russian proposal. This would probably not be agreed to by the British and French.

It seems important to reach quadripartite agreement soon and to permit the convention, lest the Western Powers appear to oppose democratic trade unions as the Russians have already tried to make it appear. The Department's reaction at the earliest possible moment to the alternative solutions would be appreciated. The question may come up at the November 6 Coordinating Committee meeting and may be discussed there.

Mr. Donald R. Heath, Chargé of Mission, Office of the United States Political Adviser for Germany, to the Secretary of State

Berlin, November 5, 1945.
[Received November 19.]

Sir: I have the honor to report that there has been in recent days a considerable increase in the amount of public discussion, particularly in Berlin, of the "united front" or political bloc formed by the four political parties which exist in Berlin and in the Soviet zone of occupation. The Communists are prosecuting a vigorous campaign for the retention and extension of this device throughout Germany.

The current discussion appears to have been touched off by the statement on page 3 of Monthly Report No. 2 of the Military Governor, U.S. Zone, that "The device of a political bloc will not be encouraged in the U.S. Zone, as it runs contrary to traditional American concepts of political activity and vigorous political life in a democratic sense". (Reference is made to my Despatch No. 1054 of October 4, 1945.86) This sentence was given a considerable amount of publicity in the American press and was accepted by the German Communists as an attack on the united front in Berlin. The Berlin press has recently contained numerous editorials and statements praising the united front as the only acceptable instrument of democratic political life and condemning those who oppose it as friends of Fascism and enemies of democracy. This campaign is clearly inspired by the Communists. The Allgemeine Zeitung, which is the overt American newspaper, has responded to these attacks by various indirect references to the defects and questionable value of the united front.

As illustrative of the Communist tactics and arguments, there is attached a copy of the Berlin Press Review for October 30, 1945, 7 which is issued by the Information Services Control Section of the Headquarters, Berlin District Command. Attention is invited first to the editorial from the Tägliche Rundschau (overt Soviet newspaper) as summarized on pages 1 and 2. Particularly in the last three paragraphs the editorial discusses and defends the Soviet one-party system as having its basis in the classless nature of Soviet society which permits the Communist Party to represent the interests of the entire nation. The article refers to the "limited conception of the western people of a true democracy". It is apparent that the pressure for a united front is only an interim tactic designed to pave the way ultimately for a one-party system in Germany. It is not difficult to foresee which party is expected to succeed the united front.

Attention is also invited to the first item from the Deutsche Volkszeitung (Communist Party newspaper) summarized on pages 2 and 3 of the enclosure. This item describes a front-page editorial by Walter Ulbricht, the foremost German Communist leader. Ulbricht strongly champions the united front as a fundamental necessity for the final overthrow of Fascism. He openly asserts the desirability of influencing the "anti-fascistic democratic powers" to a realization of the need for establishing a united front. He characterizes as reactionaries those elements within the parties who are against the united front. Rather significantly, he threatens those parties who might disassociate themselves from the united front with "unavoidable" defeat in the coming elections. These tactics naturally have their effect upon the other political parties in an area in which Communist leaders can count upon more than mere persuasion for the support of their demands. They would be less effective in other areas.

Attention is invited finally to the item on page 4 of the enclosure which summarizes a speech made at a political rally of the Communist Party (apparently in Berlin). This speech was reprinted by the Deutsche Volkszeitung. Two interesting points were made by the speaker, Fred Oelssner (possibly identical with Alfred Oelssner, former Communist Party secretary in Breslau). First he cleverly attacks the statement quoted from General Eisenhower's report, without in any way referring to the report but asserting that "it should be a self-evident law of democracy for any democrat not to force one's own conception upon others." He thus diverts attention from the fact that the united front in fact represents a method of forcing one's conceptions upon others. Secondly, he asserts that whoever opposes the unity of the democratic forces in Germany, "seeks to rescue German imperialism and militarism, and acts against democracy and peace". He naturally again omits mention of General Eisenhower in this connection.

A further illustration of the Communist campaign in favor of the united front may be drawn from a front-page editorial in the Berliner Zeitung (organ of the Berlin Magistrat, Communist dominated) on October 27, 1945, which repeats most of the foregoing assertions and arguments.

The occupation authorities in the U.S. Zone are continuing both formally and informally to discourage and prevent the formation in the U.S. Zone of a "United Front" of the German political parties. DONALD R. HEATH Respectfully yours.

1051. Referring to our 632 of September 27 ss and our 640 of September 28 89 and Department's 612 of October 5,90 US overt Berlin Allgemeine Zeitung terminated publication November 11.

88 Not printed; it reviewed the information control situation and requested the Department's guidance on long-range objectives in this field in Germany (740.00119 Control (Germany)/9-2745).

⁸⁹ Not printed; in it Mr. Murphy expressed two misgivings concerning American press policy, particularly in Berlin: first, the practice of withdrawing United States operated newspapers as German licensed papers were established; second, the practice of placing licensed newspapers under the control of groups which reflected a wide range of political opinion rather than that of a single party or group (862.918/9-2845).

Not printed; it contained comments designed to clarify the Department's ideas on long-range information policy in Germany. The pertinent ones are here listed: primarily, the information control program was aimed at eradicating Nazism and promoting democratic political development; nevertheless, no undue haste should be taken in turning over information activities to Germans; publication of newspapers by single parties or groups was definitely to be preferred to publication by groups of parties; finally, it was felt that publication of Allgemeine Zeitung, the overt United States paper in Berlin, should be continued, as Mr. Murphy had urged, until it could be replaced by a Berlin edition of the planned United States zonal paper. (740.00119 Control-(Germany)/9-2745)

With suspension of Allgemeine Zeitung in Berlin, US is left without overt paper here except for twice weekly delayed shipment to Berlin of 50,000 copies of US all-zonal army newspaper Neue Zeitung published in Munich.

US licensed Der Tagesspiegel has daily run of 300,000 copies under German editorship.

British Berliner publishes 300,000 copies thrice weekly.

French Kurier has run of 150,000 thrice weekly.

Average daily circulation in Berlin of combined US, British and French newspapers now approximately 540,000, roughly one third daily output of Soviet-controlled Berlin press.

In contrast Soviet-controlled Berlin press now has daily run of between 1,650,000–2,000,000 copies of which over 1,000,000 copies are sold in Berlin.

Additionally are 700,000 copies of new Soviet authorized illustrated weekly Der Freie Bauer aimed at agricultural and peasant populations and prominently featuring the Soviet campaign for land reform.

Combined daily output of three Communist papers published in Berlin totals 1,100,000–1,400,000 copies. Output of other non-Communist papers under Soviet censorship and often required, to support Soviet viewpoint totals additionally 550,000–600,000 daily.

Above emphasized sharp lead of Soviet-controlled press over US, French and British press in Berlin.

1072. It appears that the drive for social change in the Soviet Zone of Germany, reported in my 866 of October 28 has already begun to pass from words to action. Though solid facts on status of property relations are scanty, and though many de facto changes have not yet been legally established, it seems clear that urban eastern Germany is now experiencing the beginning of social revolution. Perhaps the most important change so far is psychological. Radical workers, supported by Soviet MG, seem to be in ascendancy, employers are under restraint, and the workers are taking possession of the economic instruments of power.

John Scott on November 15 wired Time, Inc., that best estimates say 90 percent of board members and managers of economic enterprises in the Soviet Zone fled when Red Army came or were eliminated as Nazis within a few weeks thereafter. According to Scott, in perhaps half of cases works councils put factories back into production, and these councils are becoming most important factor in economic life of Soviet Zone. The "big five" banks are still closed and Soviet MG has created municipal cooperative and state banks to replace them. In spite of these changes and Soviet removals of equipment, the Ministers for the Soviet Zone reported to Zhukov in a conference November 12–14, that industrial production is about 20 percent of 1938 levels. This figure seems doubtful, however.

According to Hans Jahn, title to most of the enterprises now managed by works councils or trustees has not been transferred and still theoretically belongs to former owners. Die Freie Gewerkschaft recently has reported several instances in Berlin where alleged Nazi owners have returned and usually been refused permission by the workers or the city authorities to resume their directing positions but were not expropriated. When any industrialist returns with a Soviet MG certificate that he is not a Nazi, he is reinstated with full property rights.

FDGB, KPD and SPD press campaign to identify big business as such with Nazism and militarism has continued. The first consummation of the campaign occurred November 14 when the Govt of Bundesland Saxony, where land reform is complete, officially proclaimed: "The principal guilt for the criminal Hitler war policy rests on German monopoly capital, which for decades, ruthlessly employing its economic power position, used state organs to carry out private capitalist interests. The only possibility to prevent German monopoly capitalism from plunging the world into the misfortune of a new war for the third time is the economic disenfranchisement of the German monopoly capitalists and the use of their means of production for the welfare and interests of the entire people." The proclamation decreed the expropriation without indemnity and state ownership of all the property of Friedrich Flick within Saxony. No judicial process preceded this act. On November 17 the Land Saxony Govt proclaimed the taking over of all the hard coal mines there. has also acquired a good part of the inland shipping fleet. As of October 1 the Wilhelm-Gustloff Werke were made a workers' cooperative by the Thuringian Govt.

Thuringian works councils law of October 10, 1945, just received, provides, as did the German law of 1920, that two members of works council shall sit on control board (Aufsichtsrat) of each company having such a board, and shall have two votes. No employment or dismissal can be made without approval of works council. Disputes over such questions shall be settled in labor courts. Works councils shall cooperate in production programs and receive quarterly reports from management, and eliminate Nazi ideology among employees, negotiate grievances, supervise execution of safety rules, cooperate in setting up and managing social services, and cooperate closely with the FDGB committee. The law virtually states that the FDGB shall be the only union in Thuringia, while Soviet MG will not permit any employers' associations in its zone. Campaign for works councils with voice in management continues undiminished elsewhere in Soviet Zone. Under title "Building Workers Create New Legal Foundations", Die Freie Gewerkschaft, November 6 reported three collective agreements in Berlin embodying provisions similar to Thuringian law. In addition, one agreement provided that all shop rules needed works council approval and another gave works council right to participate with management in discussion on production with German and Allied officials. Proposed contract presented to Aschinger Firma Berlin by food workers union would give works council two out of three votes on directing board and enlarge present two man control board to six, one of whom would represent works council, one trade union, two city govt. This proposal is now being negotiated.

Hans Jahn states railroaders union now has equal voice with management of Reichsbahn from bottom to top in Soviet Zone.

Washington, November 23, 1945—4 p. m.

912. Reurtel No. 937 of November 4. The Department suggests that the United States should support the position of declaring previous elections null and void, and of holding new elections. If necessary, the United States should agree to accept the results of previous elections, but only for a short interim period which should be followed by the holding of new elections according to the general principles agreed upon by the Kommandatura's Labor Committee as reported in your 825 of October 21.

The Department does not consider General Gavin's proposed solution adequate as it fails to provide guidance on what should be done in the event that a commander is not satisfied as to the democratic nature of the elections held in his district. It also violates the principle of unified policies and procedures on trade union affairs throughout the districts.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, November 30, 1945. [Received December 18.]

Sir: I have the honor to report that Mr. Louis Wiesner, Labor Officer on my staff, recently called on Walter Ulbricht, who is a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany and is the real leader of that Party. Mr. Wiesner has prepared a very interesting memorandum, reporting the conversation which took place and the impressions which he obtained, and a copy of this memorandum is enclosed.

The impression which emerges from the enclosed account is that Ulbricht is a forceful leader, hostile to the United States and its occupation forces, and prone to demagogic and inaccurate assertions rather than objective discussion. This attitude, so far as can be ascertained, appears to be typical of the higher leadership of the Communist Party of Germany.

The Communist leaders appear to pursue a definite policy of avoiding contacts with the American authorities. It is very difficult to arrange interviews with them and they have studiously rejected or avoided all social invitations, both by members of my own staff and other American officials. These remarks apply both to Ulbricht and to Wilhelm Pieck, the nominal head of the Party. On the other hand, there are a few Communist leaders such as Dr. Leo Skrzypczinsky, head of the Department of Industry in the Soviet Zone of occupation, who circulate rather freely at Allied social functions. It would appear that these men are put forward because of their pleasing personalities as a kind of propaganda measure.

Respectfully yours,

[Enclosure]

MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION—November 13, 1945

Participants: Walter Ulbricht, member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Germany.

Louis A. Wiesner, Office of Political Affairs, OMGUS.

Walter Ulbricht is the real chief of the KPD today. A dynamic and very energetic and forceful man, he refuses to be interviewed in the ordinary manner and insists on talking, in German with a pronounced Russian accent, about the points he wants to put across. Throughout this interview, conducted in his own well-appointed though not luxurious office, he exuded a self-confident awareness of his present power and made no attempt to conceal his hostility toward the United States and, especially Great Britain. Though Ulbricht showed himself very well informed and boasted of his knowledge, he mixed fact with fancy in an unabashed fashion and seemed to take no notice of my corrections.

The interview developed out of my telephoned request that Ulbricht furnish me a copy of the Thuringian Works Councils Law of October 10, 1945. When I called at his office to get the text, he had only the proposed law put forward by the Erfurt works councils convention of September 17, but assured me that the Thuringian law would not differ appreciably from this proposal.

Ulbricht stated that the new works council policy meant only a reversion to the Weimar Republic status and that works councils would have no power to make collective contracts on wages and hours. Works councils are necessary to represent all the employees in a plant, since not all workers will belong to a trade union. Without the initiative of the works councils many enterprises would never have resumed production.

Works councils, continued Ulbricht, have been demanded everywhere in Germany and have been elected wherever the occupation authorities would allow them. This remark led Ulbricht to a torrential denunciation of the "undemocratic" policies of the British and Americans in Germany. The Western Powers, he said, are not allowing trade unions to be formed, except in a few isolated instances. I contradicted this statement, saying that unions are being permitted and are being formed throughout the U.S. Zone. Neither are the British and Americans allowing political parties, except in Bavaria, he continued. When I corrected this also, he said that local political groupings are not parties; they are no better than "singing societies". Of course, Ulbricht added with a smile, the parties, especially the KPD, are organized illegally on a broader basis. The British and Americans do not allow public meetings (again I corrected him) or party newspapers, and yet they expect the Germans to vote in elections within a short time. How can a people vote intelligently when there are no means to present the important issues publicly? Only in the Soviet Zone is there any real freedom or democracy. Then there is the matter of eliminating fascism and militarism. In this too the British and Americans are not sincere. Wehrmacht officers go around Hamburg wearing the Knight's Cross. Nazi war criminal industrialists and landowners are still running their factories and restates in the West, while they have been eliminated and the economic basis of imperialism destroyed in the East. As examples he cited the directors of Siemens and AEG 92 in the British Zone and the general manager of Telefunken in the American Zone, who, he said, remain in their positions. Moreover, we have not cleaned the Nazis out of public administration, while in Berlin's city government there are no more Nazis. The British and Americans only talk about democracy but do not practice it. They pursue a "Kolonialpolitik" and ignore the decisions of the Berlin Conference. Of course, they can do this because Germany is defeated, but it is not democracy.

I pointed out that the Americans are at least as thorough as the Russians in their denazification and that no Nazi would long remain in a position of power in our Zone. Right now, I added, quite a number of Nazis are employed in the Berlin city administration. With regard to parties, our policy is to start them on a local basis and let them expand only after they become firmly established. After seeing twelve years of Nazism, we are not as confident of the democratic instincts of the German people as Ulbricht seems to be, and perhaps we also have a different conception of democracy. From talking with people in Berlin, I do not have the impression that reading the newspaper has as yet instilled into them democratic ideas.

Asked about his opinion of the current controversy over the Berlin trade union convention, Ulbricht said that he had nothing to do with it. Warming to the subject, he added the following remarks: Here again the British especially have shown that they are not democratic. Over the radio and in their newspapers the British have announced that they want new delegates' elections because the previous ones resulted in an unfavorable party balance. It is good that the British have been so frank that everybody knows where they stand. Though in some cases the elections may not have been conducted properly, the anti-fascist workers understand democracy and know the people they elected. The previous elections were not held in violation of an MG law, and there is no reason to hold new ones. As Major Kramer had suggested to me, I then told him that the Americans had investigated the elections in their Sector, found that some had been undemocratically conducted, and decided that, at least in the U.S. Sector, new elections must be held. As the unions have recruited many new members since September, these elections on the basis of one delegate per hundred members would mean more delegates from the U.S. Sector than before. Ulbricht denied this, stating that only the FDGB Provisional Executive could increase the number of delegates. A certain colonel had told the FDGB Executive that the Kommandatura had decided to send Allied officers to supervise all elections. Under no circumstances would the FDGB hold such supervised elections. I replied that the colonel was in error but that, unless new elections were held, at least in the American Sector, the convention would not be allowed. Ulbricht rejoined that it would occur

Thanking Ulbricht for giving me so much of his time, I then withdrew.

Berlin, December 3, 1945. [Received December 18.]

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a memorandum of conversation ⁹³ with Gustav Gundelach, the German Minister of Labor and Social Welfare for the Soviet Zone. This conversation dealt principally with social insurance, labor courts, and works councils. Please refer to my telegram no. 1072, dated November 22, on the social revolution in the Soviet Zone, my despatch no. 1287, dated November 19, on the Berlin social insurance system, and my despatch no. 1435, dated December 1,⁹⁴ transmitting the text of the new Thuringian Works Councils Law.

What Herr Gundelach said confirms other evidence that, without regard for their lack of a clear popular mandate, the Soviet-appointed German governments are formalizing many of the social changes initiated by the Communist and trade union leadership, whose representative character is also open to question. This procedure contrasts with the American MG policy of discouraging revolutionary changes as long as the German people cannot express their desires freely. The technique used in the Soviet Zone is to make it appear that changes inspired from above are being carried out as a result of popular demand. Whether any or all of these reforms actually do correspond to popular desires is not known.

Since social insurance and labor courts are both being discussed now by quadripartite committees of the Manpower Directorate, it may be that uniform policies on these matters can be applied throughout Germany. The differences between the Soviet and the Western views on employer associations form one of the principal issues in the discussions about labor courts. However, works councils are not being discussed on a quadripartite basis, and so a widening gap between practices in Eastern and Western Germany in this field is to be expected, in spite of the American encouragement of shop-steward (works council) elections as a basis for trade union organization.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

1204. On December 6, provisional executive of the Free German Trade Union League of Greater Berlin formally decided to request Kommandatura to permit entirely new delegates elections, and also agreed on election rules. Reference my 937, November 4, and my despatch No. 1435, December 1.95 Agreement was in answer to Kommandatura questionnaire and will probably be delivered December 8. It provides for one delegate per 400 members and for nomination lists not indicating party affiliation of nominees. Ulbricht concurred and presumably Russians also. Undoubtedly the talks with British Trade Unionists and with Charles Zimmerman,96 all of whom expressed doubts as to democracy of FDGB, had much to do with the decision.

American, British and French members of Kommandatura Labor Committee are delighted and willing, if proposed election rules are democratic, to approve plan quickly. The reaction of higher British and French manpower officials is not yet known.97

1344. December has produced important developments in the socalled united front of the four political parties operating in Berlin and the Russian zone. Some months ago both Hermes (CDU) and Koch (LDP) predicted that an eventual showdown might be expected between their parties and the Russians (see my 583, September 21, 1 p. m. [midnight]). This has now occurred as regards both parties, at least to the extent of producing changes in party leadership.

The following comes mainly from SSU 98 and G-2 99 sources, which obtained the information directly from German (CDU) sources:

Case of Hermes and the CDU is far and away the more important of the two, in view of the much greater influence of this party, as a result of which it has constituted a far greater obstacle than LDP to realization of Russian and Communist objectives through framework of the United Front. My 1345, Dec 28 i summarizes account of last weeks developments in Russian controlled press, indicating how this has been presented to the German people as spontaneous move by progressive CDU elements to oust their reactionary leaders. tails given in second paragraph below, however, throw added light on the apparent sequence of events. Russian decision to eliminate Hermes from CDU leadership aimed at both liquidating this unpliable political leader and teaching his party a lesson, was presumably brought to a head by: (a) CDU continued refusal to endorse land reforms as carried out in Russian zone, even to extent of refusing to participate in four-party appeals for help to the newly-settled farmers; and (b) Fact that Hermes organized a CDU conference in first half of December at Bad Godesberg in British, rather than Russian zone. CDU had also been critical of recently launched education reforms in Russian zone. A more basic consideration may well have been the outcome of recent Hungarian and Austrian elections.² any rate, Russians allegedly brought pressure to bear on certain selected CDU leaders in province Saxony, hinting at possible arrest if latter would not play ball and promising long desired local CDU newspaper, cars and real estate in case of compliance. CDU Saxony leaders, especially Herwegen, apparently agreed and came to Berlin to demand change in party leadership. So-called founders meeting of CDU took place here on Dec 21, at which Hermes and Schreiber were allegedly forced to resign by direct order from Zhukov. Kaiser was informed that he and Lemmer would take over party leadership. Kaiser loath to do so under the above circumstances and has said that he will do so only if Russians agree to leading party members being informed of true story of party crisis and Hermes' forced resignation and if Russians indicate clearly extent to which they will in future permit free party activity by CDU. All representatives present at this Dec 21 meeting spoke regretfully of Hermes' resignation, except Herwegen, who made provocative speech. Entire front page of Dec 21 issue of Die Neue Zeit, announcing resignation of Hermes at CDU meeting, was furnished by Russians and had to be printed by editor without change. Similarly, entire first issue of CDU newspaper in Saxony which appeared on Dec 18 was written by the Russians.

British are providing Hermes with airplane transport to their zone, and have informed Zhukov of their so doing. Hermes plans to carry on party activities there, together with CDU elements already active in western Germany.

If Kaiser sticks to above position, he may not long remain as new CDU leader, as questionable that Russians will agree to his terms. We understand that Lemmer's journalistic record under Nazi regime is not absolutely pure and Russians may be using their knowledge of this fact to induce him to go along with their present plans for CDU and its new leadership. Also worth noting that according to Hermes, Russians have all along tried to bring pressure to bear on him through fact that they hold his son as prisoner of war and last September Zhukov assured him son would then be released. Fact that Hermes eventually became persona non grata to our eastern Ally is quite understandable, in view of his opposition to certain recent policies, such as land and education reforms as launched in zone. In these cases, as well as in way Hermes was removed from his position as CDU leader, Russians used their customary tactics of working through Germans rather than taking direct action themselves. Change in LDP leadership was not nearly as important as the above. Though there is good reason to believe that resignation of Koch about Dec 1 was due in part to Russian pressure, there also seems to have been real dissatisfaction within party circles over his leadership. While Koch has courage and ideas, he was obstinate and his personal relations with party members were apparently never very close or warm. He has been succeded by Kuelz, who impresses us as an even older and weaker personality than Koch, who on account of his greater pliability and apparent vanity should prove more tractable and agreeable. A few days after Koch's resignation LDP joined the other three parties by moving its headquarters from British into Russian sector of Berlin, apparently because of failure to obtain from British coal for office heating and fact that Russians had promised such fuel to them.

Unity of working class; elections in American zone; and manner in which workers parties should help in creation free trade unions.

Lengthy resolution ³ was approved and signed by those present without distinction as to party affiliation. After stressing accomplishments to date since Hitler's downfall towards working class unity, resolution warns that power of trusts still unbroken and consequent dangers of reactionary influences can only be guarded against by United Workers Party in alliance with peasantry and creative intelligentsia. Further steps towards unity must therefore be taken. Wherever elections take place combined election programs shall be drawn up. Members of both parties will agree in comradely fashion on political positions to be filled within local governments on basis of equal qualification. In this way elections will become not a contest between SPD and KPD, but a united fight of both workers parties for workers majority. Organizations of both parties throughout Germany are called on to carry this out.

This shall be first step towards political and organizational unification of workers movement. Historic moment to prepare for this has now come. Conference has, therefore, established joint committee to study program of such a united party. Minimum program should be completion of democratic reconstruction of Germany through creation of anti-Fascist democratic parliamentary republic with farreaching political industrial and social rights for workers. Maximum program should be realization of socialism through establishment of working class political rule in sense of teachings of developed Marxism as laid down Communist manifesto, Eisenach program of German social democracy and Kritik of Marx and Engels of Gotha program.

This united party shall stand for protection of all truly national interests of German people which is possible only through their being led back to community of peace-loving nations. Party shall be true to idea of proletarian internationalism and promotion of fast ties with workers' movements in bourgeois countries as well as Soviet Union.

Resolution also emphasizes further development of unity of action on all questions and joint and active discussion of ideological question among all groups and local organizations. A joint journal on "unity" will be published under direction central committees of both parties.

December 24 issues of both newspapers carry supplementary articles giving text of special section of same resolution regarding coming elections in American zone, announcing that SPD and KPD have agreed to put forward joint election program and to use basis of equal qualification for offices to be filled. This joint program will include land reform, nationalization of concerns belonging to war criminals and of public utilities and educational reform to give equal opportunity to all.

Berlin, December 30, 1945—1 a. m. [Received 3:42 p. m.]

1357. For the last fortnight or so there have been intense negotiations between Berlin SPD and KPD leaders, consisting, according to SPD reports obtained by local G-2, chiefly of strong and persistent pressure from KPD for merger of the two parties, or at least joint action regarding coming elections in American zone. These negotiations have now borne fruit as indicated in my 1356, December 29.

Main points of interest in this joint declaration are as follows: It is evident that Berlin Social Democrats have conceded much ground to present apparent Communist desire for immediate merger of the two parties. In so doing they have presumably widened the rift which has been developing between them and SPD elements in western and southern Germany, which, according to latest public declarations, are opposed to any present merger with Communists.

The part of the resolution referring to elections is clearly aimed at influencing next few months program for American zone though it remains to be seen how SPD leaders there will respond. While the latter do not admit that Berlin committee has any authority over them, it is obvious that for psychological and historical reasons, this statement will have some effect in SPD circles everywhere. It will of course serve as clear directive to Communists there.

Resolution also indicates what has been fairly apparent for some weeks, namely that KPD has now swung back considerably towards the left, i.e., as concerns Socialism and private property. Regard for certain degree of capitalist economy which was for example apparent in Communist program and propaganda issued last summer has now been replaced by frank call to the goal of Marxist Socialism and proletarian internationalism.

Among other things this resolution, particularly those sections dealing with party merger and Socialism as goals, may presumably induce some of present SPD adherents to desert the party. CDU expects to gain as a result.

NEGOTIATIONS IN THE EUROPEAN ADVISORY COMMISSION AND THE ALLIED CONTROL COMMISSION FOR GERMANY REGARDING THE REPRESENTATION IN GERMANY OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS AFTER SURRENDER AND THE ESTABLISHMENT OF FOUR-POWER CONTROL IN GERMANY 6

740.00119 EAC/5-445

Memorandum by the United Kingdom Representative on the European Advisory Commission (Strang)⁶

E.A.C. (45) 47

Representation of Foreign Countries in Germany After Surrender

I circulate to my colleagues, for consideration by the European Advisory Commission, a memorandum making proposals for the representation of foreign countries in Germany after surrender. I hope the Commission will be able to give early consideration to these proposals.

W[ILLIAM] S[TRANG]

London, 30 April, [2 May?] 1945.

[Annex]

Representation of Foreign Countries in Germany After Surrender

1. After the German surrender, the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the Provisional Government of the French Republic, will be represented in Germany by their respective Com-received May 8.

manders-in-Chief in their capacity as members of the Control Council, and their staffs. It has been agreed in Article 8 of the Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany that "The necessary liaison with Governments of other United Nations chiefly interested will be ensured by the appointment by such Governments of military missions (which may include civilian members) to the Control Council, having access, through the appropriate channels, to the organs of control." Such United Nations' Governments will thus be represented in Germany by their military missions. It has not yet been decided which Governments shall be so represented.

United Nations chiefly interested

2. The United Kingdom Delegation proposes that an invitation to the United Nations accepted as "chiefly interested" to appoint military missions to the Control Council should be sent jointly by the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and France. Such an invitation should be sent not later than the issue of the "public statement" provided for in paragraph 9 of the Report by the European Advisory Commission 8 covering their Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany (E.A.C. (44) 11th Meeting). The U.K. Delegation would suggest that this invitation should be addressed to the Governments of:-

> Australia Belgium Brazil Canada China Czechoslovakia Greece India

Luxembourg The Netherlands New Zealand Norway Poland South Africa Yugoslavia.

Other United Nations

3. Representation in Germany by military missions does not seem justifiable in the case of the remaining United Nations. At the same time, it would seem impossible to refuse them representation of any character, more particularly if, as we suggested below, neutral states are to be allowed some degree of representation. The United Kingdom Delegation accordingly suggests that the Governments of these remaining United Nations should be invited to nominate "Civil Agencies" to represent them in Germany. It would be undesirable to accord the title of diplomatic mission to these agencies, as a diplomatic mission normally enjoys a higher status than that of any other foreign agency in the country of residence. It would clearly be impossible to give a higher status to the representatives of the minor Allies than to those of "the United Nations chiefly interested", which would be represented by military missions.

Neutral States

4. There remains the question of the representation in Germany of meutral states. The United Kingdom Delegation, basing its view in part on experience gained in Italy, takes the view that on the whole the convenience of having neutral representatives in Germany to look after their national interests on the spot would substantially outweigh any inconvenience that their presence might cause. The United Kingdom Delegation accordingly proposes that neutral missions should be allowed to remain in Germany; but they too should be classified as "Civil Agencies". Those neutral states e.g. Chile, which have no relations with Germany, could not be placed in a worse position than those which have maintained relations. They should therefore be permitted on request to enjoy the same facilities as those determined for other neutral states.

Privileges and Immunities

5. The military missions of the United Nations chiefly interested will not be entitled to deal with any German authorities except through or with the permission of the Allied Control Machinery. The same restriction should a fortiori be placed on the Civil Agencies of the lesser Allies and of neutral states. They should, however, be entitled to a certain measure, to be determined by the Control Council, of the immunities normally enjoyed by diplomatic representatives; e.g. immunity from local taxation and arrest. The representatives of Allied states, whether in military missions or Civil Agencies, should have the right to communicate with their Governments by bag and cypher. This right should not however be granted to the Civil Agencies of neutral states, at any rate in the early stages.

Consulates

6. The only consulates which will be found in Germany on the conclusion of hostilities will be those of ex-enemy and neutral states. The treatment of the former is outside the scope of the present memorandum. As to neutral consulates, the United Kingdom Delegation takes the view that they might well prove an embarrassment to the Commanders of forces of occupation and that it would therefore be desirable to close them down at the earliest possible moment. If it were later found convenient that certain foreign states should have representatives in other parts of Germany, the necessary steps could be taken by permitting the military missions or Civil Agencies of such states in Berlin to nominate local agents. These should not have the title of consul, as that would raise numerous technical difficulties, e.g. their exequatur.

Austria

7. The position in Austria ⁹ is in many respects different, as there have of course been no diplomatic missions in Vienna since before the war. But the United Kingdom Delegation proposes that the representation of foreign countries in Austria after Germany's surrender should, in the early stages at least, be broadly speaking on the same lines as is proposed above for Germany.

lowing position with respect to Belgian inquiry and British memorandum:

(1) Military missions of chiefly interested United Nations should enjoy privileges and immunities usually accorded diplomatic missions and their personnel

(2) Members such missions should have full freedom in performing their functions limited by fundamental principle that they may not deal with any German authorities except through or with permission of control machinery of the Allies. They should also enjoy freedom of movement on understanding that temporary restrictions may have to be laid down by Control Council as result of conditions in Germany, especially practical difficulties of providing transport, food and housing

(3) There is no objection to appointment of civilian experts to these military missions, although Control Council may restrict total number of personnel serving on such missions

(4) We should permit other United Nations not included in list of chiefly interested United Nations (paragraph 2 Brit memorandum May 2) and neutral countries to nominate "agencies" (rather than "civil agencies" referred to in UK memo) represent them in Germany

(5) Control Council will determine extent of privileges and immunities to be granted such agencies. Use of code and uncensored pouch should be accorded missions and agencies of all United Nations,

Dept deems particularly important that agreement be reached in EAC as soon as possible on joint Four-Power invitation to chiefly interested United Nations requesting appointment of military missions to Control Council.

For further guidance in EAC discussion of Brit memo, we make following suggestions:

¹⁴ Robert D. Murphy, United States Political Adviser for Germany.

(1) List of chiefly interested United Nations (par. 2 Brit memo) is acceptable. Invitation is to be sent Poland, however, only when there is a single Polish government recognized by Four Powers. 15

(2) Determination of mode of access to Control Council and of other procedural arrangements connected with work of military missions should be left to Control Council.

(3) Determination of scope of functions of agencies (par. 3, 4 Brit memo) as well as of procedural arrangements connected with their work should be left to Control Council.

(4) It should, however, be agreed that an agency of one country may be permitted to look after the interests of other countries upon their request. In this way agency of one South American country might look after interests of several small states which may not wish to establish agencies for themselves. Otherwise undue burden may fall upon US officials.

Memorandum by the Informal Policy Committee on Germany to the Secretary of State 17

Washington, 13 July 1945.

The Informal Policy Committee on Germany has considered the United Kingdom's memorandum on "Representation of Foreign Countries in Germany after Surrender" (E.A.C. (45) 47) (SWNCC 125/D 18) and is in general agreement with the proposals outlined therein, subject to the following comments:

a. With regard to representation by military missions of the United Nations "chiefly interested":

The list presented by the United Kingdom memorandum of smaller United Nations deemed to be "chiefly interested," as that term is used in Article 8 of the Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany, is dom memorandum of May 2, E.A.C. (45)47.

¹⁸ For documentation regarding the negotiations between the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union relative to the establishment of a Polish Provisional Government of National Unity, see vol. v, pp. 110 ff.

¹⁶ Informal Policy Committee on Germany. ¹⁷ According to document IPCOG 6/2, dated 17 July 1945, the Informal Policy Committee on Germany, by informal action on 13 July 1945, approved IPCOG 6/1 which recommended forwarding this memorandum to the Secretary of State acceptable, inasmuch as the list includes all those states which have actively participated in the European war and which have been given a special recognition by advance notification of the declaration of 5 June. No invitation should be extended to Poland, however, until such time as there is a single Polish government recognized by the four occupying powers.

The invitations should be sent jointly by the four Powers as soon as feasible. The British proposal to send the invitations not later than the issue of the "public statement" provided for in paragraph 9 of the EAC report covering the Control Machinery Agreement is no longer pertinent since this "public statement" was issued on 5 June.

The Control Council should determine the time when the military missions may arrive at the seat of the Control Council, should make arrangements for their appropriate reception, and should determine their mode of access to the Control Council as well as all other procedural arrangements connected with the work of the military missions. The military missions should be accorded the privileges and immunities usually enjoyed by diplomatic missions and their personnel.

b. With regard to representation of other United Nations:

Insofar as representation of other United Nations may be desired by these countries or may serve to facilitate the work of the Control Council, the Control Council should be authorized to provide for the representation of other United Nations in Germany by means of agencies. The Control Council should determine the appropriate time for the arrival of the members of such agencies at the seat of the Control Council, the scope of the functions of such agencies, and their mode of access to the Control Council, as well as other procedural arrangements connected with their work, including the status of their members in the matter of privileges and immunities.

In cases where a country may not wish to look after its own interests, an agency of one country may be permitted to look after the interests of another country.

$c.\ With\ regard\ to\ representation\ of\ neutral\ states:$

The Control Council may permit neutral states to establish agencies to represent their interests in Germany, under whatever specification of functions or restrictions as may be deemed desirable by the Control Council.

¹⁹ For text of the declaration regarding the defeat of Germany and the assumption of supreme authority with respect to Germany by the Governments of the United States, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and France, signed in Berlin on June 5, 1945, see TIAS No. 1520, or 60 Stat, pt. 2, 1649.

With regard to the naming of Chile as an illustration of a neutral state (par. 4 of U.K. memorandum), it should be pointed out that Chile became a member of the United Nations on 14 February 1945.

d. With regard to Austria:

The same policy as expressed for Germany should apply to Austria in the initial stage, subject to decisions of the governing body of the Allied Administration for Austria to alter it to meet more rapidly changing needs in the different circumstances of Austria. When an Austrian government, provisional or otherwise, is recognized by the four occupying powers, the governing body of the Allied Administration for Austria should determine when diplomatic or consular representatives of other nations may be accorded to the Austrian government.

Inasmuch as IPCOG statement was drafted in collaboration with War Dept and represents approved US policy, it is believed that authority to close down neutral consulates is contained therein and that Dept need not request War Dept for special instructions in this regard.

On reviewing matter of closing down neutral consulates in US zone at earliest possible moment, Dept now believes that such action should not be taken independently, but should be coordinated with similar action on part of other occupying powers. P57/7/45

LONDON, 27 July, 1945.

The Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany approved by the four Governments and the Agreement on Control Machinery, in Austria ²³ recently submitted by the E.A.C. to the four Governments, provide that: "The necessary liaison with governments of other United Nations chiefly interested will be ensured by the appointment by such governments of Military Missions (which may include civilian members) to the Control Council [Allied Council] having access through the appropriate channels to the organs of control".

The Commission now recommends:—

1. that invitations to appoint such Military Missions in Germany and Austria should be sent jointly by the Governments of the U.K., U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. and the Provisional Government of the French Republic to the following Allied Governments:—

Australia India
Belgium Luxembourg
Brazil The Netherlands
Canada New Zealand
China Norway
Czechoslovakia Poland
Denmark South Africa
Greece Yugoslavia

2. that each Allied Government to whom an invitation is issued should be free to decide the composition of its own mission, subject to the right of the Control Council to impose a limit on the total size of the mission;

 $^{^{22}}$ Transmitted in despatch 24640, August 3, 1945, from London; received August 8. The European Advisory Commission dissolved without giving consideration to the question of foreign representation in Germany.

- 3. that such mission should enjoy freedom of movement within the Greater Berlin area and, by agreement with the Commander-in-Chief concerned, within each zone;
- 4. that such missions should have the right to communicate with their governments by bag and cypher;
- 5. that the Control Council should determine the degree of diplomatic privilege and immunity to be enjoyed by such missions;
- 6. that the Control Council should be invited to make the necessary arrangements for the early arrival in Berlin of such missions;
- 7. that United Nations Governments other than those specified in (1) above should be permitted on request to nominate civil agencies to represent them in Germany and Austria, such agencies to have lesser status than the Military Missions;
- 8. that neutral governments should be permitted on request to maintain civil agencies in Germany and Austria;
- 9. that these civil agencies would not be entitled to deal with any German or Austrian authorities except through or with the permission of the Allied Control Machinery;
- 10. that the Control Council should determine the degree of diplomatic privilege and immunity to be enjoyed by civil agencies which should not in any case be greater than that enjoyed by the Military Missions.

Brit addition in draft agreement (P57/7/45) of Denmark as country entitled to representation by military mission is acceptable.

Brit draft agreement deals with representation both of chiefly interested United Nations by military missions and of other United Nations and neutral countries by civil agencies. If difficulties arise in negotiations regarding representation of other United Nations and neutral countries, we suggest that separate and prior agreement be sought on representation of chiefly interested United Nations by military missions and that invitations to appoint such missions be issued as soon as possible.

Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Greece, India, Luxemburg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa and Yugoslavia. The reason for the suggested priority of acceptance of military missions is the acute lack of housing, food, fuel, transportation and communications in Berlin. In view of the inability of the Allied authorities in Berlin to provide immediately for representatives of all countries who might desire to establish missions, we considered justified the suggestion that priority be given those who had actively participated in the war against the Axis.

520. Urtel 562, Sep 18. In Depts opinion, the Allied Control Authority should not deal directly with governments which have no missions accredited to it. Dept recognizes that dealings between Allied Control Authority and such governments could be conducted through Governments of Occupying Powers. Such an arrangement, however, would be cumbersome. Accordingly, although we appreciate difficulties connected with reception of foreign representatives, we believe it desirable that as soon as possible after reception of military missions, arrangements should be made for acceptance of representation from other United Nations and neutral countries in form of agencies (Deptel 317 Aug 21).

Dept is of opinion that all missions accredited to Control Council should conduct their affairs through offices of Political Directorate.

certain neutral countries and from United Nations other than those sixteen to be represented by military missions:

1. It is to be anticipated that many of the smaller of the United Nations, in particular those in Central and South America, will not hasten to send representatives to Germany at present even if given the opportunity.

2. Staffs of representation could be limited to two or three persons of all ranks, thus keeping very small the total number of persons involved.

3. Responsibility for obtaining accommodations and necessary supplies might so far as possible be placed primarily on the foreign representatives themselves. In this regard Dept has already been advised that Swiss and possibly Swedish Governments would be glad to make all physical arrangements for their representatives in Berlin, would utilize their own properties and would transport to Berlin at their own expense all supplies required by their representatives and their staffs. After such offers, it is very difficult for Dept to justify refusals to admit Swedish and Swiss representatives on grounds of restricted housing and supply conditions, and will become more difficult if accommodations and other facilities are provided United States business men desiring to visit Germany in accordance with recommendations reported in urtel 609, Sept. 25.39

Procedure outlined for communicating with countries not represented at Control Council through diplomatic channels of power presiding at the time is acceptable. Dept assumes that it would be kept fully informed of all such communications between Control Council and foreign governments and receive copies of texts thereof.

Dept perceives no objection to Allied Secretariat serving as channel of communication between Control Council and military missions.

The Coordinating Committee of the Allied Control Authority for Germany, on behalf of the Control Council, has approved a report, prepared by the Political Directorate, proposing that applications to accredit mission to the Council from the following countries be accepted: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Greece, India, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa and Yugoslavia.

The list is confined to the 16 United Nations most immediately interested in current problems connected with Germany, or entitled to prompt representation by their contribution to German defeat.

The missions will be permitted to come to Berlin under the following eight conditions: (1) that each Allied Government whose application to accredit a military mission is accepted should be free to decide the composition of its own mission, but that the number of nationals of all ranks belonging to each mission should be limited to 10. This would not preclude the employment of a reasonable number of locally engaged domestic staff; (2) that it would be possible to find accommodation Berlin for 16 missions provided that they are limited to 10 members each plus a reasonable number of locally engaged domestic staff. Houses and offices could be for at least four missions in each sector of Berlin, but as no suitable undamaged houses or offices are at present available, it will take some time for the necessary repairs to be effected; (3) that each Govt. accrediting a mission should be asked to send one representative to Berlin immediately to investigate the accommodation available and to make all necessary arrangements with the visitors and administration section of the Allied Control Authority for the arrival of his mission; (4) that the members of these missions, while present in any zone of sector of occupation, will enjoy the same privileges and immunities from the jurisdiction of German courts the imposition of German taxes or the acts of German authorities as members of the Allied Control staffs. All members of these missions, both military and civil, will be subject to the military or Military Government laws made applicable by each zone or sector commander for members of the Allied Control staffs; (5) that these missions should enjoy freedom of movement with [in] the Greater Berlin area and, by agreement with the Commander in Chief concerned. within zone; (6) that such missions would have the right to communicate with their Governments by bag and cypher; (7) that each Government accrediting a mission should be asked to provide its members with all transport they require; (8) that the Allied military authorities in each sector should supply the members of those missions accredited in their sector with rations, currency (Allied military marks), petrol and oil against repayment.

It was arranged to send to Germany Department of State and Foreign Office teams under the leadership of Mr. Perkins and Mr. Robert C. Thomson, re-spectively. nical Industrial Intelligence Branch in London to effectively put into operation for the American side of the Grey List Panel the listing and exploitation of intelligence targets in Germany. The Department will doubtless receive a copy of this plan through its representative on TIIC.⁴⁷

In his covering letter Mr. Powell wrote:

"Also, you will note that we have not included Working Party "E" in the Technical Intelligence Branch. The reason for this is that we do not know to what extent TIIC is planning to coordinate intelligence targets for various U.S. Government agencies, such as the Department of State, Justice, Commerce, FEA, and the Library of Congress, etc., which are interested in Item 28 of the Black List, Sections 30, 31, and 32 of the Grey List.

However, it would be our suggestion, if only from the standpoint of good organization, that this field be coordinated under THC machinery rather than to have it coordinated by some other Government agency such as the State Department."

Item 28 of the Black List, referred to above, is the section for "Documents and Personnel". Sections 30, 31, and 32 of the Grey List are the groups to be covered by Working Party "E" and includes: (30) Business Institutions; (31) Governmental and Party Organizations; (32) Education, Religious Affairs, Fine Arts and Monuments. (See Target Categories for Grey List Panel annexed to Grey List Panel Minutes for meeting of January 19th, which will be forwarded to you with other CIOS Minutes ⁴⁸).

Mr. Powell's suggestions are in line with those which I made in my memorandum to Mr. Allison of December 27th,⁴⁹ forwarded to you in a letter from Mr. Daniel Hanley.⁵⁰ If the whole range of intelligence in German Archives with respect to financial, economic, cultural and other activities in addition to those of a diplomatic and political nature is to be exploited, obviously there must be close cooperation between all the interested agencies in the selection of targets and the organization of teams to investigate them. That can much better be done at the base in Washington than it can be here.

I have discussed the situation with Mr. Allison and we are in agreement that he and I are not in a position to undertake the involved specialized work of taking a leading part in setting up and administering an organization for the collecting of intelligence from the wide range of governmental, party and business archives which it is contemplated will be covered by Working Party "E". We feel that the interests of the Department will be best served by organizing its own team to examine the major German diplomatic and political records, encouraging FEA, OSS ⁵¹ and perhaps other agencies to undertake the survey of financial, economic, cultural and other archives for which they are probably better organized and staffed. OWI ⁵² might be the best agency to study German propaganda records. I feel, however, that the Department should act promptly in determining the extent of its interests and making sure that they are covered either by its own representatives or by those of some other agency. A committee in Washington, such as Mr. Powell and I have suggested, would seem to serve that purpose, but, of course, it is not for us here to try to determine the organizational set-up in Washington.

At this end, I think it will be well for me to be a member of Working Party "E" of the Grey List Panel, but if practical to avoid becoming chairman or team organizer or deputy chairman or organizer. The work of the Grey List Panel here will probably continue after the collapse of Germany and I should be free to leave as promptly as possible for Berlin with the Department and Foreign Office teams. I should think that when the proposed German economic section is set up in the Embassy here, it should be in a position to play a leading part in the economic phases of CIOS work with respect to German archives.

I hope preparation in the Department for organizing a team to work with that of the Foreign Office is going forward so that when the big moment comes we will not be caught unprepared. The Foreign Office is at an advantage in that they are so much closer to the field of action. Their team members have been designated and are in consultation with the leader, Mr. Thomson, but can continue at their present assignments until called.

On January 16th Mr. Thomson and I discussed our plans with Mr. Hilary Jenkinson and other officers at the British Monuments, Fine Arts and Archives Branch (Interior Division) Control Commission for Germany. I enclose a memorandum ⁵³ of the conversation sent to me by Mr. Jenkinson, which gives some indication of how our plans are developing, especially on the British side. It will be noted that the Foreign Office has provided for microfilming facilities. They believe they are in a position to do the work for both the British and American branches of our joint team, although they may wish to ask us for assistance in the form of securing materials, etc., should difficulties occur in the field. You will note in the memorandum mentioned above that the problem of clerical assistance has not been settled. I raised the point, and there seems to be doubt whether we can depend on the military service for such aid.

Lieut. James S. Beddie, U.S.N.R. is anxious to join our team and I hope that the Department has done all it can to secure his assignment for that purpose. The fact that we are asking for the return of one of our own men whom we released to the Navy should be a strong point in favor of the proposal.⁵⁴

I am enclosing a list of additional targets placed on the Black List at the proposal of the War Department.⁵⁵ The State Department will also be interested in these targets and the interest of Military Intelligence suggests the possibility of securing assistance from that source in forming our team. It will be noted that three of the Foreign Office team are British Army officers, one at least, and perhaps all, being intelligence officers.

From now on I will occasionally write reports direct to you, as Mr. Allison is finding himself swamped with other work. We have been in complete agreement and I have felt that there was no occasion to present my views separately from his.

Sincerely yours,

E. R. Perkins

Memorandum by Mr. E. Ralph Perkins and Mr. Robert C. Thomson, Leaders of the Department of State and British Foreign Office CIOS Teams, Respectively

[Extract]

London, March 20, 1945.

Objectives for the Combined Teams of the British Foreign Office and the U.S. Department of State in Searching German Archives

The Foreign Office and the Department of State have found that their interests in locating and microfilming German archives are so similar that it has been decided to have their teams work together in closest cooperation, members of each team to consider themselves as working jointly for the interests of the two Governments. These teams are under the general agency of the CIOS, and will cooperate with other CIOS representatives working on targets of mutual interest. CIOS leaders may not, however, divert our team members for use in investigating CIOS targets other than those for which these teams are specifically sent out or targets of opportunity arising therefrom. (See CIOS minutes 11th Meeting, 31 January 1945, par. 4, page 6 as corrected in minutes of the 12th Meeting, 14 February, par. 1, page 3.56) With this reservation, team members will bear in mind their responsibility to proceed in harmony with CIOS directives, and, of course, to comply with all applicable military regulations in their zone of operations.

It may be assumed that the Foreign Office and the Department of State have a general interest in the whole range of information regarding German financial, economic, political and military affairs both as to domestic conditions and activities abroad. Obviously with the limited personnel available, we must restrict the field of our own study of German archives. Numerous other agencies of our two Governments will be making studies of German records for their own purposes and their reports will be available to the Foreign Office and Department of State. Our teams might well confine their efforts to a study of such major Government and Nazi Party records as deal with German international relations in the fields of diplomacy, politics and broad economic policies.

The finding of evidence on war crimes and Nazi investments and flight of capital abroad, as well as any study of propaganda methods, cultural activities, means of maintaining control in Germany, tracing of enemy agents abroad, fifth column activities, etc. will be the primary responsibility of other agencies, but the combined teams should always be on the alert for information which may be of value in these fields as well as in their own spheres of special interest. Such finds should be reported immediately to the team leaders who will notify the appropriate authorities. In like manner we may expect to receive from other investigators notifications of items of interest to us. For this reason it is important to maintain friendly contact with other teams working in fields similar to ours.

Documentation within even the limits proposed above is, of course, vast and will require months of work in examining and microfilming if the German Archives, or any substantial part of them, can be located and preserved for exploitation. With this in mind, it is important that the interests of the two offices be determined so that records which may be of immediate value will be given first attention by the combined teams.

Do not believe that Thomson's optimism in finding what he wants is especially justified, since the most interesting information is probably not on record. There are, however, four small packages with the documents containing notes on conversations between Hitler and Mussolini which should be of considerable interest. The documents were transported in as good order and sequence as was possible under the circumstances but it will still take considerable time before they can really be properly arranged and indexed.  ⁶³ Pierre Laval, French Chief of Government at Vichy.
 ⁶⁴ Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Molotov, People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union.

Brit Govt. Thomson refused to consider any separate deal with his Govt. and said he would report the matter to the American authorities. Collins collaborated with Thomson in all that followed. On Monday May 14 Thomson, Collins and Von Loesch proceeded to the neighborhood of a country house named "Schoeneberg" accompanied by Captain A. M. Folkard of the Local American Command. They went to the spot where the microfilms were buried in a steep ravine. There they dug up a large can containing the documents. Later Thomson met a microfilming unit of the Brit RAF ⁶⁵ and with the aid of their reading apparatus examined some of the films. They fully corresponded to the informant's description and will doubtless supply information of value which may not be obtainable elsewhere. Thomson has brought these films with him to SHAEF Main.

Thomson and Dr. Perkins will fly to London on May 19 to supervise the development of these microfilms by the Brit Air Ministry. It is planned to provide copies for the Dept State, the Brit FO and the Control Commission. The original films will later be returned to Marburg to become part of the archives of the German FO being collected at that place. [Murphy and Perkins.]

2813. From Murphy. Our present plan for the disposition of German Foreign Office archives is to assemble them so far as possible at Marburg. (See my 2694, May 7 [17], 8 a. m. and my 2770, May 18, 10 p. m.) This plan is based on the idea that (1) all Foreign Office archives should be assembled for greater convenience of examination, (2) they should be assembled in the SHAEF area for security reasons, (3) they should be kept in Germany for convenience of access to all interested governments.

The Dept may wish to consider, however, and discuss with the British Foreign Office whether considerations of the security of these highly important archives and their continued availability in the unpredictable future may warrant their complete transfer to the USA or Great Britain. In such event they could be studied at leisure with complete freedom from possible German interference and with no regard for the possible termination of Allied occupation.

In any case it is apparent that expert and reliable supervision of these archives is urgently needed. I, therefore, urge that the Dept in agreement with the Brit seek to secure an archivist who could be placed in permanent charge of the records at Marburg. For this purpose there has been suggested to us a man named Posner who was formerly employed by National Archives and now believed to be on Archives Mission in Italy. I understand information about him could be obtained from Director Fred W. Shipman of Roosevelt Library at Hyde Park.

I would appreciate expression of Dept's intentions in this important problem. [Murphy.]

5291. ReDepts 4091, May 24. The microfilms of German FO documents are now undergoing preliminary examination in London and prints are being made for the FO by the Air Ministry. There are 9,725 pages of documents to be gone through, and because of technical differences between the German film and British film it is not possible to make a new microfilm directly from the German one. Prints first have to be made and from these prints a new microfilm is being produced. One copy of the new film is to be left in the FO and one copy will be delivered to the Embassy, probably by May 28, for forwarding to the State Dept.

⁶⁶ Louis Mason Drury, State Department representative on CIOS.

Because of the nature of these documents the FO has expressed the opinion that no further distribution should be made until after the FO and the State Dept have had an opportunity to examine the documents fully. Dr. Perkins has made a hasty survey of approximately one-fourth of the total number of documents, and on the basis of this sampling he is convinced of their highly secret nature. Documents he has examined contain comparatively full reports of conversations between Hitler and Ribbentrop and Matsuoka 67 during his visit to Berlin in March and April 1941 at which time the Germans strongly urged that Japan attack Singapore. Perkins has also seen records of conversations between Hitler and Ribbentrop and Molotov in which an attempt was made to convince the Russians that the tripartite Axis aimed only at expansion to the south and was not directed against the Soviet Union. The documents contain the text of agreements made between Germany and the Soviet Union in Sept 1939.68 There is also among the documents ample proof of close collaboration between Germany and the Spanish Govt under Franco. A letter dated Feb 26, 1941 from Franco to Hitler includes a pledge of his friendship and the urgent recommendation for the closing of the Straits of Gibraltar. 69 There is an agreement signed in 1943 70 for the defense of Spanish territory and German aid in case the Allies attempted to occupy any Spanish territory as they had French North Africa.

When these films were brought to London for processing it was planned that a copy of the new microfilm would be made available to Ambassador Murphy's office. As stated above, the FO after preliminary survey of the documents feel that the original distribution should be strictly limited. This is based on the fact that the documents are of purely political character concerning the foreign policy of Germany, that they contain information regarding certain of our present Allies and that they would not be of apparent interest or use in current administration of a defeated Germany. The FO has received a request from the political section of the British element of the Control Commission similar to that received by us from Ambassador Murphy's office. According to the FO, copies of the new microfilm will not be distributed to any other British agencies until after the FO has made a thorough examination. However, it was made clear by the FO that it considers these documents a joint State Dept-

The most important contents of the box were records, draft and final, of meetings during 1939 to 1944 between Hitler, Ribbentrop and other Nazi leaders on the one hand and Axis and satellite personalities on the other, at which Schmidt and occasionally Loesch served as official interpreters. The Leader of Department of State CIOS Team (Perkins) to the Chief of the Division of Foreign Activities Correlation (Lyon)

[Hoechst,] June 18, 1945.

DEAR MR. LYON: We are in a stage of transition between scouting for archives and the exploitation of records already found. From now on the work will be chiefly a research and microfilming job. That should be kept in mind in selecting any possible reinforcements for our team. . . .

The amount of German records relating to governmental and Nazi party activities abroad is, I believe, much more than it was generally expected would be preserved. At Marburg we have some 425 tons of German Foreign Office records which we have only begun to exploit. The documents are in huge piles badly mixed, so the work of merely sorting is immense. At the SHAEF Documents Center at Fechenheim near Frankfort are documents of the Legal Division of the Foreign Office which were seized at Ravensburg, contained in 91 bags, 41 boxes and two drawers of file cards. Also at Fechenheim are ten boxes, some of large size, containing records of the German commission for the French armistice, and other documents. At the Heidelberg Documents Center are the extensive records of the Auslands Institut and also a collection of Aussenhandelsstelle records. A pile of Reichskanzlei documents of some 1000 cubic feet was placed in a basement room in the Seventh Army Documents Center at Munich when I was there recently. I understand these are being moved to Heidelberg. Doubtless other collections which the Department will wish us to examine will be reported from other documents centers.

Sincerely yours,

Emb has now received letter from FonOff stating Soviet Amb is pressing for final answer on this matter, but in view of fact that United States has same rights and interests in these archives as Brit, FonOff wishes to obtain Dept's agreement to its reply. Subject to Dept's approval FonOff propose to begin reply by saying that press reports seen by Mr. Gousev regarding arrival in London of carloads of German FonOff documents are unfounded in as much as all original German FonOff documents which have been discovered by SHAEF forces are still in Germany among large mass of miscellaneous German archives located at different places under SHAEF control. FonOff would go on to say that it presumes German state archives of similar type and value have been located by Soviet forces in their area of occupation. Facilities for examination in each case doubtless depend on exigencies of military administration and progress of sorting on the spot. FonOff would then add that only relevant material which has reached London consists of certain microfilm copies which are being processed and sorted by a technical dept preparatory to thorough examination and, where worthwhile, translation. Soviet authorities have no doubt similarly taken copies of German archives in their possession as matter of routine. In view of early stage of work done on Brit side FonOff have not even taken initiative of proposing discussion between Allied powers on exchange of copies of documents under their control and in circumstances it would appear premature to send experts to London in order to take advantage of any reciprocal arrangement which may be made in due course.

FonOff letter to Emb adds that it hopes shortly to be approaching Dept with proposals on whole subject, but that in meantime it considers it necessary to send a reply to Soviet Emb and it would appreciate it if urgent consideration could be given by Dept to the terms as given above in which it proposes to draft reply. If Dept desires inclusion in FonOff reply of reference to fact that the documents in question are under joint United States—United Kingdom control FonOff states it would have no objection to amending its draft accordingly.

Dept's views urgently requested.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

No. 545

[Berlin,] June 30, 1945. [Received July 17.]

Sir: I have the honor to present herewith a report on the present status of the project for assembling and exploiting the records of the German Foreign Office at the Castle at Marburg. This report is based on observations made by Mr. Perry Laukhuff ⁸³ during the course of a visit to Marburg on June 26, 1945.

The actual site of the collection center which was chosen at an earlier date by Mr. Brewster Morris and others of my staff is Marburg Castle. This fine stone structure is, except for the relative inaccessibility of its location, quite suitable for the purpose of storing and making available any large collection of archives. It has, as a matter of fact, been used to house various German collections of archives for the past one hundred years. The fact of its location high above the town of Marburg from which it can be reached by only two steep narrow and winding roads has made somewhat more difficult the removal thence of such a large volume of archives as have been involved in the present operation. This difficulty has been reasonably well overcome however.

The mass of documents now in the castle is believed to comprise between eighty and ninety percent of the Foreign Office records. It includes practically all of the records, except for the most secret ones, up to the year 1943. Records subsequent to the year 1943 have in some cases been destroyed and in other cases scattered to various points in Germany from which it is our intention to obtain their removal to Marburg as soon as practicable. Most of the records now at Marburg were, as explained in my top secret despatch number 327 of May 1, 1945, 44 uncovered in the area of the Harz Mountains in Thuringia.

In volume the collection is estimated to amount to some 425 tons and it may be more descriptive to state that the documents arrived at the castle in 237 trucks. The greater part of the papers have been uncrated and are stacked in six or seven very large rooms in the form of the packages in which they were wrapped before being evacuated from the Foreign Office. Some comparatively small part of the archives became unwrapped in one way or another and are in a completely confused and disordered state. A small part of the packages contain documents which were partly burned during air raids on Berlin.

Although each package carries a number, the crates did not arrive in any orderly sequence and furthermore the key to the numbering system has never been found. Consequently, the Department's representative, Mr. Gardner Carpenter, who was at first our only representative at Marburg, was faced with the staggering task of sorting many thousands of bundles of documents by subject matter. Up to the present time, the British and American group working on the documents have managed to arrange in some order by subject matter approximately half of the assembled archives and are carrying forward this work as rapidly as possible. Wooden shelves have had to be built to accommodate the documents.

At the same time as the process of sorting and arranging the documents is carried forward, progress is also being made in picking out some of the more important and more recent documents for microfilming by two RAF microfilm units. These units are capable of microfilming possibly 1500 pages a day on the average and it has been estimated by one of the British representatives at Marburg that the process of microfilming only the more important documents will go on at this rate for more than a year.

Mr. Carpenter has recently been joined by Mr. Krumpelmann. At the present time the British staff, aside from the crews of the RAF units, consists of Colonel R. C. Thomson, Captain Frame and Lt. Forward, all representing the British Foreign Office. As I set forth in my telegram number 33 of June 22, 9 a. m., 55 I believe it is very desirable and important that our staff at Marburg be increased by the addition of three or four competent investigators if this work is to be pushed forward with satisfactory rapidity. Arrangements are now being made for two investigators from the OSS to go to Marburg to work on documents particularly connected with Far Eastern affairs. Their reports will be made to me as well as to the OSS, and I believe the arrangement will be of considerable assistance to us.

In view of the great size of the collection and the importance of having continuity of supervision over an extended period of time, I desire to renew the recommendation which was contained in my telegram from Paris number 2813 of May 19, 11 p. m., suggesting the appointment of a full time American archivist, to have general supervision over the arranging and maintenance of the archives and to facilitate their investigation by visiting research workers.

The State Department and Foreign Office representatives at Marburg now have working under their supervision five minor employees of the German Foreign Office headed by Consul Achilles, who have been of very great assistance in the work of sorting and arranging the records. They have been carefully observed and supervised and Mr. Carpenter is confident that they do not constitute any danger to the collection. The Department's observations in this regard as set forth in its telegram number 2398 of May 29, 8 p. m., ⁸⁵ are being borne in mind. With reference to this same telegram, the arrest of Baron von Griesheim and Wilhelm Nagorka was immediately ordered. Subsequent careful interrogation and investigation by the 12th Army Group Counter Intelligence has lead to the conclusion that Baron von Griesheim is not the same person as the Abwehr Major Baron von Griesheim mentioned in the Department's telegram. The archivist von Griesheim appears to be an unobjectionable person and my office has accordingly requested his release and return to Marburg.

The American and British staff at the castle are assisted also by fifteen Italian prisoners who do the heavy work of moving the records.

Mr. Laukhuff himself had so much difficulty in obtaining admission to the castle twice in the course of his brief visit that he is convinced that the military arrangements for guarding the premises are entirely adequate!

No account of the work which has been accomplished at Marburg would be complete without more than passing reference to Mr. Carpenter. He has been indefatigable and unremitting in his labors on a task with which he had to cope absolutely unaided for some time. He has displayed ingenuity and initiative in dealing with this task under physical conditions which were at all times difficult and which were complicated by the constant shifting of military units attached in Marburg, upon whom he was dependent for food and assistance of all kinds. The burden of administrative detail has been very great in addition to the primary responsibility for receiving, storing and assorting the immense volume of records. I cannot commend him too heartily for his services in this period, during which he was for a variety of reasons deprived of all assistance and direction from other members of the CIOS teams sent out by the Department. For some time past he has had the invaluable cooperation of Colonel Thomson and I am glad to say that the project is functioning very smoothly, if informally, as a joint American-British project.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to inform him that His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have now examined the question of utilising the German political and diplomatic archives under the joint control of the Foreign Office and the State Department, or in custody of British or American services or the Control Commission authorities in Germany.

- 2. His Majesty's Government consider that selections from all documents may be used at the trials of alleged war criminals. As the United States Government has already agreed, through the Combined Intelligence Committee, that documents made available by the C.I.O.S. could be utilised, a large quantity of extracts from captured documents has already been processed in the Foreign Office and they are now on their way to the Quadripartite authorities responsible for prosecutions. His Majesty's Government consider, and assume that the United States Government will agree, that the Foreign Office should retain discretion to determine which documents ought to be disclosed in evidence. This responsibility falls naturally on the Foreign Office inasmuch as it is being used as the repository of the evidence, and possessing, as it does, the most accessible collection of copies of the documents.
- 3. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom propose that the Soviet and French Governments should be informed generally of the range of documents (including the microfilm of German Foreign Office archives for the period from 1933 to 1944, a copy of which is in the hands of the State Department) and that they should be offered access on a reciprocal basis to the collections on which British and United States investigators are now working exclusively. This offer, which should be made jointly or concurrently by the two governments, would contain the added condition, apart from reciprocity, that any of the four governments should retain discretion to disclose any documents over which they had rights of discovery or custody to any other Allied government that might ask for them, e.g. in connection with proceedings against its own quislings. His Majesty's Government are particularly anxious to be able to communicate certain documents relating to Quisling 87 to the Norwegian Government at the earliest possible moment, and the Norwegian Government, who have learned of the documents in the joint possession of British and American authorities, are pressing His Majesty's Government for access to them in view of the imminent opening of Quisling's trial.

 $^{^{\}rm s7}$ Vidkun Quisling, Minister-President of the puppet government set up by the Germans in Norway in 1940.

4. His Majesty's Government have also considered the question of publishing German political documents but they take the view that the formulation of a policy should await more complete knowledge of the contents of all documents in possession of the Allies.

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)

Washington, September 28, 1945—3 p. m.

564. Dept is taking up with the War Dept. questions raised urtel 575, September 21, seconcerning archives held at ministerial collecting center. Dept feels that for present Foreign Office archives as well as archives of other ministries dealing with German overseas activities should continue to be exploited under present British-American investigative procedure. This is also true of records of such German agencies as Ausland Organization, Auslands Institut, Ibero-American Institute, NSDAP so and intelligence records of German commercial firms such as Farben, Telefunken, North German Lloyd, Hamburg-American and others. It is believed more desirable and practicable to work out during the next few months a document sharing program based upon actual needs and genuine reciprocity. To date Dept has no evidence of reciprocity in this matter on part of either the French or Russians.

It seems highly questionable whether any useful purpose would be served at this time by making German Foreign Office documents relating to British-German and American-German pre-war activities available to other Allied Governments. Dept is nevertheless fully aware of the needs on the part of the Allied Control Commission to centralize for administrative purposes those records which are essential to the successful administration of German domestic affairs.

Foreign Office archives and archives of other German organizations, public and private, operating overseas as mentioned above should be exploited fully with the view to uncovering all remnants of the German political, military, commercial and propaganda penetration machine in foreign countries. No plans should be made to return these archives to the Germans or to make them available for other secondary purposes until the primary objective has been reached. Dept will request War to prolong guarding of archives until such time as the investigative utility of the archives has ceased to Materials collected by political division investigators from Foreign Office, DAI and related files and transmitted by you have been invaluable to Dept in dealing with Argentina and neutral governments on Pan-German penetration problems. Any relaxation in the exploitation, protection and guarding of these archives at this time will have an extremely adverse effect on Dept's program dealing with the German threat abroad.

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the British Ambassador and refers to the aide-mémoires of August 6 92 and August 20, 1945, conveying the views of the British Government with respect to the use to be made of the German archives taken at Marburg by forces under the command of the Supreme Commander Allied Expeditionary Forces.

- 2. The Department of State is in complete agreement that all the useful material from the German archives should be made available to the authorities responsible for the prosecution of war crimes but believes, however, that documents in the joint possession of United States and British authorities might profitably be examined by both the United States and British Chiefs of Counsel for the prosecution on the understanding that all materials having a political implication would be considered jointly. The Department of State has consulted Justice Jackson and is advised that he will consult the British prosecutor respecting the particular captured German documents to be offered in evidence at the forthcoming Nuremberg trials. Justice Jackson has also advised the Department of State that where a delicate case arises, he will, if there is time, consult the Department before using the document. Justice Jackson is of the opinion that this matter is not likely to cause difficulties, but as an additional safeguard in the case of the documents referred to in paragraph 4 below, the Department is requesting him not to use any documents to which his British colleague makes objection without prior consultation with the Department of State.
- 3. The United States Government submitted to the European Advisory Commission a draft directive which reads in part as follows: "You will take all necessary measures to make available for the purpose either of the prosecution of the war in other theatres or of military government, or for the needs of other United Nations agencies, ⁹² Aide-mémoire of August 6 not printed.

4. The Department of State appreciates the reasons which prompt the British Government to wish to restrict the circulation of certain documents referring to the Duke of Windsor's passage through Spain and Portugal in the summer of 1940,94 but cannot discount the importance, for the history of the war, of the German and Spanish maneuvers for a negotiated peace at that time. This Department therefore believes that the safeguards concerning the Marburg collection, suggested in paragraph 2 above, would in large measure forestall any publication to which the British Government might object. A preliminary investigation, furthermore, suggests that it would be unlawful for the Secretary of State to authorize the delivery of the documents to the British Government or the destruction of the passages in question, without Congressional authorization and attendant publicity. The British Government is assured, however, that the Department of State will take all possible precautions to prevent any publicity with respect to the documents in its possession relative to the Duke of Windsor without prior consultation with the British Government.

Colonel Newton also told them that some FonOff records were being exploited by a British-American team at Marburg and he felt certain that some important records had been destroyed by the Germans. After being pressed further to see these records, Colonel Newton suggested that further information could be obtained through the normal diplomatic channels, since he himself was neither familiar nor directly charged with the details. archives, and some other members of his staff in their custody, it is probable that the Russians are quite fully informed as to the extent and general contents of these archives.

We and the British are in agreement that these documents should be screened if possible before release to Russians and French. With the present British and American staffs, this screening will require not less than one year. According to Mr. Michael Creswell, British FonOff representative recently here, the British FonOff believes that the State Dept and itself should decide very soon as to the ultimate disposition of these documents, namely, whether they should be sent to Berlin for use of the Allied Control Council or whether they should be removed to the United States or United Kingdom to be worked upon by historians and scholars. The FonOff is in favor of the latter solution with the plan eventually to accept the participation of Russian and French experts in the study of these documents.

At the present time, the bulk of the FonOff archives, including those up to the year 1933 and the 60,000 volume FonOff library, is at MCC near Kassel. Approximately 150 tons are still at Marburg being actively exploited by a team of five British military officers and four American auxiliary State Dept officers. One British and one American officer are handling the documents at MCC.

Up until the present time, nothing has been found which in our opinion might be embarrassing to the State Dept. The British while not pointing to specific cases, feel that certain documents should not go out of British-American control.

Two possible lines of action seem to be open:

- (1) Transfer all FonOff archives, except the library to either the US or UK. This would transfer responsibility of the Military Govt for the documents to the State Dept and FonOff but would hardly satisfy the Russians who are aware of the existence of these documents.
- (2) Continue the exploitation of these documents by British and American teams at MCC, excluding all other participation until fully screened. As documents are screened, they could be released [apparent omission] examination by French and Russians. The FonOff library could be released immediately. Eventually, all documents could be moved to Berlin. This will require a firm policy on the part of the State Dept, British FonOff and the Office of Military Govt. It might be used to develop a more reciprocal attitude on the part of the Russians, who thus far have not released to us any similar documentation which they may have captured in their zone.

We should receive definite telegraphic instructions from the Dept without delay and I recommend that this second plan be adopted.

Washington, October 22, 1945.

A-396. Re your despatch #6150 of September 28 90 concerning Swedish Government's request to examine individuals and documents in Germany regarding German and Swedish Nazi activities in Sweden during war, final action on this request will have to be made by Allied Control Council but Department is opposed in principle to granting such requests. If Swedish request were granted it would presumably set precedent for similar request by Spanish, Portuguese, Irish and Swiss governments. Inasmuch as several high ranking members of certain neutral governments played an active part in assisting Germans prior to and during the war it would seem highly undesirable to make German documents relating to such neutral governments directly available to them inside Germany. In view of above, Department takes the following position:

1. Department considers it inadvisable to make German records relating to Nazi activities in neutral countries available to investigators of neutral governments by permitting them to examine documents and interrogate individuals inside Germany.

2. Department prefers to make available to neutral governments such findings of our investigators in Germany as may have a direct bearing on present domestic security in the neutral countries concerned.

3. Department believes Swedish request under reference should be denied in accordance with points 1 and 2 above.

838. Reference my 823, October 21, 1 p. m. and Department's 564 of September 28. In a long discussion this morning on subject Foreign Office documents, General Clay informed me that he had recently told the British General Robertson 1 that he, Clay, had no objection to the transfer of German Foreign Office documents to British occupied area and British jurisdiction. General Clay feels that having given a definite promise to the British he cannot agree to change this unless he is reversed by higher authority. In describing the reasons for his promise to the British. General Clay said that he had invited the Russians and French to inspect all documents at the MCC near Kassel on a truly quadripartite basis. When the British objected to showing Foreign Office documents, he saw as a solution the transfer of these documents into the British zone of occupation where the British would assume responsibility for safekeeping and the United States continue its right of complete access. General Clay feels that in this way the United States will continue to operate on a strictly quadripartite basis as far as documents are concerned and the British be forced to accept full responsibility for refusal to participate in a quadripatite exploitation of Foreign Office documents. He feels that British are entitled to elect such action by virtue of the joint nature of enterprise. He pointed out that these documents happened to be in the American zone by British-American mutual agreement. I understand General Clay's viewpoint quite clearly, knowing his strong desires to develop a sound and workable quadripartite basis for military government in Germany. However, I did call to his attention certain disadvantages in the decision he has taken, namely:

(a) The Russians are fully aware of the existence and present location of these documents. Any shifting of the documents into British control with continued participation on our part and to which the Russians are excluded might well be the basis of suspicion that we have not dealt honestly with them. The fact that the documents are in British control hardly relieves us from responsibility as long as we participate with the British in the exploiting of these documents.

(b) In addition, I feel that turning over these documents to the British would in some sense be an admission that we are unable to cope with the problem.

(c) The requirements of statutory prohibition against alienating or destroying archives should be complied with before such transfer is made. See title 44 US Code section 380. (On this point, General Clay stated as his opinion that the documents were under jurisdiction of the Allied Control Council and not the United States.)

So far as we know or anticipate, there are no documents in the Foreign Office collection which will prove embarrassing to the United States. From our present viewpoint there should be no objection to permitting Russian and French participation. However, in order to meet the British view, I suggested in my 823 of October 21 that these documents be screened, including necessary sorting, prior to release on a quadripartite basis.

My suggestion, however, did not envisage any disposition of the documents which would result in destruction or continued impounding detrimental to legitimate access for political or historical studies pending final determination of policy with respect to the whole of the German Foreign Office archives. I am therefore reluctant to agree with General Clay's decision to alienate immediate control of these documents until I see clearly what will be done with them. Unless the Department desires to take steps to reverse the decision of General Clay, these documents will be transferred to British jurisdiction. The views and decision of the Department are requested.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

It is understood that, under arrangements made between the British and American authorities in Germany, the German Foreign Office archives at present at Kassel and Marburg may in due course be transferred to the British Zone of Germany.

² Not printed; in the last paragraph Murphy stated that he was requesting that access to German Foreign Office records be limited for the time being to British and American authorities unless directed otherwise by the State Department or his own office (840.414/10-1645).

His Majesty's Government would like meanwhile to reach agreement with the United States Government on responsibility for, and access to, these archives in that eventuality.

Firstly, they hope that the United States Government will continue to share the rights of His Majesty's Government in these archives just as His Majesty's Government have hitherto shared the United State Government's rights in them and that they will continue the present exploitation on an Anglo-American basis.

Secondly, they propose acceptance by His Majesty's Government and the United States Government of the principle that access should be granted to other Allies and that access should not be restricted to documents related to war crimes, which were the principal subject of the first three paragraphs of the State Department's Aide-Mémoire of October 11th.

Thirdly, they propose that His Majesty's Government should reply to individual applications for access from other Governments by a statement that the archives in question are the joint interest of His Majesty's Government and the United States Government and that the request would be considered on this basis. Before granting access His Majesty's Government would then consult the State Department or the United States authorities in Germany in each case.⁴

His Majesty's Government consider that the fact of their having custody and control of administration of these archives would enable them to safeguard any documents which they or the United States Government wish to reserve from outside inspection.

As regards reciprocity, there are, so far as His Majesty's Government are aware, no equivalent political documents in the other Zones of Germany. Any views the State Department may care to express on this aspect would, however, be welcome.

lin as soon as possible. I am assured that these archives will be safe here and can be jointly exploited in accordance with Department's standing instructions by British and American authorities much more effectively and more expeditiously in Berlin than at Marburg.

In connection with foregoing it should be noted again that Foreign Office archives at Marburg are subject to fire hazard, and in my estimation are insufficiently safeguarded. The safeguarding at Marburg will continue to deteriorate as redeployment continues. Furthermore, the archives at Marburg are not being properly exploited. The British are making no concerted effort toward that end (perhaps because of their hope that these archives will eventually be transferred to British zone or to the US or UK) and the Americans are unable to exploit the archives properly because of lack of facilities at Marburg, lack of personnel and other conditions peculiar to Marburg. American microfilm units and all the desirable facilities now installed at MCC will be transferred to American sector in Berlin where they will be available for joint British-American exploitation of Foreign Office archives. Such American units and facilities cannot be made available at Marburg.

In recapitulation, I urge that Department promptly authorize transfer of all Foreign Office archives to Berlin especially since the security and safeguarding of these irreplaceable historical archives are now an American responsibility, which responsibility cannot be fulfilled properly if the archives remain at Marburg.

The French Ambassador has now been informed that as only a very few documents were found by the British forces and as the majority are in the American Zone, Mr. Bevin would consult the United States Government concerning the conditions they consider to be necessary as regards access.

While Mr. Bevin is most anxious to go as far as possible to meet the wishes of the French Government, he is apprehensive lest the work of microfilming at Marburg be retarded by the visit of a French team and by a subsequent visit by a Soviet team which would no doubt follow. He is inclined to think that the question of French participation in the exploitation of these documents should be postponed until the documents have been installed in a permanent institute. Meanwhile, he would like to give the French access, as distinct from the right of joint exploitation, to all the material which has already been microfilmed, of which prints have already reached London and Washington. He would be prepared to let the French and, if they desired, the Russians, see these prints in London with the exception of a small number which it might prove necessary to withhold.

His Majesty's Ambassador is instructed to invite the concurrence of the United States Government in the proposals in the preceding paragraph and to enquire whether, among the microfilms already in London and Washington, there are any which the United States Government would wish to withhold from either the French or the Russians.

His Majesty's Ambassador is instructed to stress the urgency of this matter since if the United States Government agree, it is desirable that His Majesty's Government should make immediate arrangements in London for installing the photographs in a suitable establishment to which Allied Governments would be given access.

The Secretary of War (Patterson) to the Secretary of State

Washington, December 24, 1945.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As you doubtless are aware there has been gathered in Marburg and near Kassel in the U.S. Zone of Germany a large collection of German Foreign Office and other German ministerial records. These records have been exploited for a period of six months by United States and British investigators. The existence of these records has been made known to the Russians and French.

The Military Governor of the U.S. Zone of Germany has advised the War Department that, in the interest of quadripartite cooperation and the efficient administration of Germany, these records and similar records which may be in other zones should be made available for joint use by the four occupying authorities. Since it has been informally indicated that the Department of State does not now favor the quadripartite use of the ministerial records in the U.S. Zone, the Military Governor has been requested by the War Department to refrain from taking any action in this matter until further notice. It is our understanding that the Department of State prefers that these records be screened before they are made available to the Russians and the French, in order to avoid possible embarrassment to the British Government. Unfortunately, at the present rate of exploitation, it has been estimated that eighteen months would pass before this screening could be completed.

Wholehearted quadripartite cooperation in Germany is not only essential to the successful execution of our occupational mission but is directly related to the much more important objective of a peaceful solution of world-wide problems. At Berlin and Vienna a unique record of international cooperation has already been achieved. It is the view of the War Department that considerations of quadripartite cooperation far outweigh the disadvantages which it has been suggested might result from making these German ministerial records available for joint use by the four occupying authorities. The War Department therefore desires to authorize the Military Governor of Germany to initiate a quadripartite program for the use of German ministerial records by offering to make available those now in the U.S. Zone, subject to such arrangements with the British, Russians and French as he may consider properly reciprocal and appropriate. Furthermore, this proposal is in conformity with JCS 1067/6.11 Paragraph 6 (e), which makes the disposition of such records a matter for decision by the Control Council.

¹¹ JCS 1067/6 was the same as IPCOG 1, April 26, 1945, p. 484.

In order that the Military Governor may receive guidance, in anticipation that the Russian and French members of the Allied Control Authority will soon raise the question of the availability of these records, an expression at an early date of your views on this matter will be appreciated.

MURPHY

840.414/12-2445

The Acting Secretary of State to the Acting Secretary of War (Royall)

Washington, January 21, 1946.

My Dear Mr. Royall: With reference to the letter of the Secretary of War, dated December 24, 1945, dealing with the German ministerial records, I wish to point out that the position of the State Department has not been properly understood regarding the disposition of the German archives. The Department of State has at no time looked with disfavor upon the quadripartite use, in general, of the ministerial records in the United States zone. The Department has, however, maintained that the German Foreign Office archives, in particular, and archives of other ministries dealing with German overseas activities should be exploited fully under present British-American investigation procedure, before being released to other powers.

The State Department is in hearty accord with the War Department that whole-hearted quadripartite cooperation in Germany is essential to the success of the occupation and related to the objective of a peaceful solution of world-wide problems. The State Department would withdraw at once its instructions regarding the German Foreign Office archives, were it to believe that they jeopardize in any way the successful fulfilment of the quadripartite task in Germany. The Department is, however, of the opinion that the German Foreign Office archives and related records concerning German overseas activities have no bearing on the re-establishment of the central German administrative agencies, authorized in the Potsdam Agreement, 2 except perhaps in the field of foreign trade. With respect to this field, the Department will instruct its representatives to make available from the German Foreign Office archives and related records under investigation any material which might be useful to the central German administrative agency for foreign trade at the time when that agency is being established.

The State Department has agreed to the removal of the German Foreign Office archives to Berlin under conditions which will assure continued Anglo-American control and exploitation. Subsequent to this agreement, the State Department has received vigorous representations from the British Government objecting to this transfer. One reason advanced by the British against the transfer of the Foreign Office archives to Berlin is that such a move might pre-judge the question of the release of this material to third parties. The State Department has informed the British Government that joint Anglo-American exploitation will be continued at Berlin, and that no documents will be released to representatives of other powers except by joint Anglo-American decision in accordance with suitable procedures agreed upon by this government and the British Government.¹⁴

In so far as the Foreign Office documents were, as stated in a recent British note, "captured during the SHAEF period and are, therefore, a joint capture in which the United States Government and His Majesty's Government have equal rights", the State Department believes that legitimate British rights and interests should be respected. It accordingly believes that British-American exploitation of these documents should be continued and screening procedures employed before eventual release of the document material to the French and Russians. Such release, moreover, should in the Department's opinion be based on the reciprocal access of British and American representatives to German documents of special interest in the custody of the French and Russians. The proposed method of joint British-American exploitation and exchange with third parties on a reciprocal basis is in conformity, it is believed, with the War Department's policy in the exploitation of the German military archives and in the exchange of technical information about German war material.

¹³ See Foreign Relations, The Conference of Berlin (The Potsdam Conference), 1945, vol. 11, pp. 1477 ff.

The State Department accordingly recommends to the War Department that the United States Military Commander in Germany be authorized to initiate a quadripartite program for the use of German ministerial records by offering to make available all those now in the United States zone pertaining to the central German administrative departments to be established under the terms of the Potsdam Agreement. Such offer should be subject to whatever arrangements with the British, Russians or French the U.S. Military Commander may consider properly reciprocal and appropriate. This offer should not include the German Foreign Office archives and related records at present under joint British-American exploitation.

Because of the State Department's responsibility for the conduct of this Government's foreign relations the Department regards the German Foreign Office archives as of special interest to it. The Department has found information already obtained from these documents of great value and considers their further exploitation to be of real importance to this Government. It believes furthermore that the work should be accelerated as a matter of urgency. The Department has agreed to the removal of these archives to Berlin on the understanding that American micro-film equipment and all necessary facilities for a more rapid and effective exploitation would be available at Berlin. The State Department would therefore be grateful if the War Department would instruct the U. S. military authorities in Berlin to assist in all ways possible, as a matter of urgency, the exploitation of the German Foreign Office archives, in particular, by providing micro-film units and other facilities as may be required.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

With reference to the British Embassy's aide-mémoire of October 26, 1945 and December 12, 1945 and the Department's aide-mémoire to the British Embassy of January 15, 1946, 15 the State Department wishes to transmit herewith its tentative views regarding the principles and procedures to be followed in connection with making the German Foreign Office archives available to representatives of other powers:

1. The State Department accepts the general principle stated in the British Embassy's aide-mémoire of October 26, 1945 that access to the German Foreign Office archives should be granted to the other Allies and that such access should not be restricted to documents related to war crimes.

- 2. The State Department further agrees that applications for access to these archives from other governments or requests for the release of copies of documents should be decided jointly by the United States Government and the British Government.
- 3. The Department believes that joint British-American exploitation of these documents should be continued at Berlin and screening procedures employed before eventual release of document material to representatives of other powers. The Department recognizes that the British Government may wish to withhold for the time being a small selected number of these documents. The Department is prepared to review with the British Government at some future time the proper ultimate disposition of documents thus withheld.
- 4. The release of German Foreign Office documents to representatives of other powers should take place on the basis of a genuine reciprocity in sharing of German document material, particularly with regard to German documents of special interest in the custody of the French and Russians.
- 5. The Department sees no objection, if the British Government desires to grant representatives of other powers access in London to microfilm copies of German Foreign Office documents. The Department is not at present aware of any particular documents which it would wish to withhold from representatives of other powers.

America, the United Kingdom, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics warrant such a move. Upon the collapse of Germany you should point out to the Foreign Office the urgent necessity of immediately obtaining access to the information mentioned in the reference telegram so that this material might be made available through you to the United Nations in order that the enemy's intelligence network may be destroyed.

Should there be no official surrender announced over the air but a gradual deterioration, the Department will inform you when to proceed. You should not take action before such notice.

It is not desirable to approach the protecting powers, Spain and Switzerland, at this time. However, upon collapse or surrender of Germany that country will have no moral right to insist upon the immunity of the archives in question, since the espionage and propaganda activities carried on by diplomatic and consular officers of Germany involved an abuse of immunity. It will be to the advantage

Obviously this has a most important bearing upon measures for preventing another World War, and in such measures neutral nations, as well as the United Nations, have a vital interest. The Legal Adviser (Hackworth) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Holmes)

[Washington,] April 17, 1945.

General Holmes: This office has not given a written opinion on the position of the Allied Governments following unconditional surrender. However, I think that the Allied Governments would have all the rights of a military occupant, plus such additional rights as may be provided for in the terms of surrender. This presupposes that there will be a signed instrument. I do not consider that the Allied Governments would have the rights and obligations "of a successor Government" under the terms of surrender. Such a situation would ordinarily result only from annexation or transfer of sovereignty.

Military occupation has the effect of suspending the exercise by the local government of customary sovereign rights, except to the extent that their exercise is permitted by the military occupant. His orders and decrees are supreme during the period of occupation.

The terms of surrender that have been prepared for Germany are sufficiently broad in scope to give the Allied Powers authority to take possession of German diplomatic and consular establishments in neutral countries. But it remains to be seen whether there will be any authority in Germany willing or competent to subscribe to the terms of surrender. There is also the question as to whether neutral countries would, without explicit authorization from Germany, be willing to turn over such establishments so long as there is a prospect that there will eventually be a German Government with which they might be required to reckon.

I see no objection to the proposed telegram to SCAEF ¹⁹ attached at the back of these papers.²⁰

Mr. D. D. Maclean—Second Secretary, British Embassy and

Mr. O. S. Straus-FC

At Mr. Matthews' (EUR) ²² request that our program be correlated with the British, Mr. Maclean was asked to come to the Department.

Accordingly, a meeting was held in Mr. Culbertson's office at 5:00 p. m. on April 25 and at this time Mr. Maclean was informed that it is the desire of the Department that Great Britain assist in the attempt to obtain information contained in German embassies, consulates, and other governmental offices in neutral countries. Mr. Maclean was familiar with the Department's circular telegram of March 31, 3 p. m. since the Foreign Office in London had been informed of the context through the Minister at Dublin ²³ and the Ambassador at Lisbon ²⁴ since our Minister and Ambassador respectively, had conferred with their British colleague on the spot.

Mr. Maclean was informed that telegrams were prepared and were ready to send out to the American Legation at Stockholm and to our missions in the other American Republics instructing them to act in this matter in conjunction with their British colleagues and that similar instructions had been drafted to our missions in the remainder of the active neutral countries. Mr. Maclean approved of the cooperative action and stated that he would immediately telegraph the Foreign Office at London in this sense. Accordingly, at the end of the meeting the Department's telegrams were released to our missions in the other American Republics and to the American Legation at Stockholm.

At the same time Mr. Maclean was informed that the Department felt that the Soviet Government should be apprised of the action proposed in the Department's circular telegram of March 31. Likewise, the Department felt that the Soviet Government should be invited to have its representatives in Kabul and Stockholm associate themselves with their American and British counterparts in an effort to obtain the desired information. Mr. Maclean agreed to the procedure and stated that he would relay this information to the Foreign Office at London.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

Subject: German Official Property in Neutral Countries

His Majesty's Government have some reason to believe that instructions may have been issued to German Missions abroad that the fall of Berlin should be a signal to burn all the archives.

- 2. The Heads of His Majesty's Missions in European neutral countries have been requested to inform their United States colleague accordingly and have been authorised to support him in any representations which he makes to Governments still entertaining German Missions.
- 3. The French Government have also now spontaneously proposed that French representatives should join in any approach to neutral Governments on this question.
- 4. Meanwhile, in a further telegram despatched to His Majesty's Missions concerned, the Foreign Office have drawn attention to the following considerations—(Paraphrase)
- A. Legal basis of representations. Some formal document assuming powers to act on behalf of ex-hypothesi defunct German Government may, according to our reports, be required by e.g. Swiss and Portuguese Governments. Hostilities will be brought to an end either by signature of an instrument of surrender or by a unilateral declaration issued by Allied Governments on basis of a complete German defeat. In either case document will provide assumption by four Allied powers of supreme authority with regard to Germany including all powers possessed by the German Government. It will thus enable Allies to issue subsequent orders to German Missions in neutral countries. But, while our representations might assume that such a document could be available and request the action to be prepared by Host Governments in anticipation of a situation which such an instrument would record, it is questionable whether we should promise to furnish it. The question of timing is vital because it would, in practice, be quite impossible to present such a document in due form to Host Government after the event and yet before German Missions concerned learned of their Government's final collapse and forestalled the action to be taken by Host Governments at our request by destroying or dispersing what we hoped to find. Neutral Governments must therefore be prepared to commit themselves to action at a moment to be defined by us and allow us to substantiate grounds for such action later. His Majesty's Representatives will, if the State Department agree, be authorized to use these arguments at their discretion.

B. We must decide what German establishments should be covered by proposed action. For our own part we should like to include all diplomatic and Consular Missions in country concerned and all semiofficial establishments such as Nazi Party offices in Spain. Details could perhaps be left to Allied Representatives in each capital to decide individually.

C. On the other hand we deprecate extending action to Embassy in Rome now in custody of protecting power. We do not suspect Swiss of intending or permitting sabotage if anything of value remains. Moreover we do not at any rate at this stage want to take any action to discourage protecting power from provisionally continuing its duties.

D. His Majesty's Ambassador in Lisbon has recommended, apparently with the concurrence of his United States colleague mentioning to Dr. Salazar ²⁵ the prospect of securing Nazi loot in German Missions. We should prefer to give no hint that Host Governments would profit by any assets or valuables discovered, as this might commit us to an undesirable policy over general Safehaven questions. ²⁶

E. We have considered, as a possible parallel method to approach to Host Governments, an attempt to use contacts through third parties with possible collaborators in German Missions to induce the latter to preserve documents from sabotage or even facilitate our entry into Missions' premises. It is doubtful whether there is time for this method to be used widely though it is being tried already in certain cases. State Department may agree that, for it to be successful, collaborators would have to be offered some effective inducement.

However, since you still recognize the German Government as diplomatically extant, I feel that there no longer exists a possibility of finding the archives in a condition that would be of use to the United Nations, and I suggest that both of us enjoy our sleep without having immediate nocturnal action on our minds.

I hope to get to the country for a few days next week for a bit of rest, and if you will notify my secretary, Mr. Montgomery Colladay, when you are ready to act in this matter, he will notify the various representatives of the United Nations on my behalf. This Legation can always reach me by telephone, and in a very short time I can be in Dublin.

The purpose of this letter which I sent by hand at opening of business Monday May 7 was to minimize the importance of obtaining possession of the German premises after the refusal of the Irish Government to cooperate with us and also to register on the record my claim as to the promise of Mr. Walshe on behalf of his Government to turn over German property to me as soon as VE-day was announced. I had only his word as against mine.

This morning I made an appointment to see him at 11:30 o'clock. In view of the official announcement of the Irish Bureau of Information telegraphed to you en clair yesterday as No. 111,³¹ I was uncertain whether Irish Government was prepared to evade Walshe's promise to me and insist on acting as protecting power for German interests as German Minister requested. However, Walshe made no objection and promised to deliver keys and inventory to me at 4 p. m. today. He asked me to give him a receipt of some sort and suggested a formula which after consultation with Maffey I adopted as follows:

"Dublin, May 10, 1945.

I am authorized by my Government to inform the Irish Government that the United Nations have assumed the powers and property of the Government of Germany. I am, therefore, now prepared, on behalf of the United Nations, to take over the premises of the German Legation located at 58 Northumberland Road, Dublin, and the contents thereof.

I also notified French Minister and obtained his approval to formula. Am sending Colladay and McEnelly ³² who, with Brigadier Woodhouse of British representation and a Vice Consul from French mission together with a representative from External Affairs with Walshe informed me that he understood from Germans that there was nothing left in safe but a small sum in cash and the Legation accounts, that is no codes or confidential data. This is as was expected.

I further claimed and was accorded possession of the JU 88 airplane which landed at Germanston on May 5 with 3 German noncommissioned officers (ReLegtel 107, May 7, 4 p. m.33)

The Ambassador in Brazil (Berle) to the Secretary of State

Rio de Janeiro, May 28, 1945—9 p. m. [Received May 29—6:30 p. m.]

1677. Depcirtel May 26, 4 p. m. Respectfully request Dept again review instructions as applied to Brazil.

Brazil is not party to terms of surrender; and certainly has assented to nothing which would transfer Brazilian rights to four Allied Powers.

Brazil claims these archives, and a lot of other German property, as her own, by right of capture and as victor over an enemy country. Nothing has happened giving third parties rights thereto; and she would certainly not only object but bitterly resent any assumption that the four Allied Powers had become vested with right to German property in Brazil seized by Brazil.

Embassy believes Dept's circular under reference is accurate statement of position as respecting German property held by neutrals such as Switzerland and possibly in Allied countries subject to Allied military occupation; but does not believe that there is any justification in law or in fact for asserting position as against Brazil. Further it is unnecessary since Brazil has already promised access to information in question. There is indeed not the foggiest justification in international law or our present relations for demanding anything more and in practice this will, in Embassy's opinion, get us what we want.

Joint demand here by four principal Allies for possession of these archives would provoke immediate explosion. Therefore ask reconsideration of instructions. If Dept decides to make demand on Brazil for German property seized here based on mere military force of four principal Allies, Embassy would prefer to have nothing to do with it and leave it to negotiation in Washington. It was Germany who surrendered, not Brazil.

matters in consequence of the representations recently made to them in respect of German archives and German public property in Switzerland.

- 2. In the view of His Majesty's Government similar difficulties are to be anticipated in other neutral countries including Spain and Portugal. As indicated in Mr. Maclean's letter to Mr. Clattenburg of June 7th,^{42a} His Majesty's Government see no alternative to holding the host government responsible for the functions in regard to German citizens which were previously performed by German consular officers and which are not dependent upon the Allied Control Authorities in Germany.
- 3. But in order to exercise these functions the host governments may reasonably require the use of German consular archives and probably also German consular premises and may claim that the control powers cannot have it both ways.
- 3 [4]. A refusal on the part of the host governments to deal with quasi-Consular matters would, in the view of His Majesty's Government, place the Allied Governments concerned in an awkward position. There can be no question as yet of independent agencies representing the Control Council in Germany functioning in neutral countries. Furthermore if the host governments obtain an excuse for disinteresting themselves in local Germans, this may prejudice the success of future action to secure the repatriation of Germans whom it is desirable to have recalled or expelled.
- 4 [5]. In these circumstances, if the State Department agree, the Foreign Office propose to concede provisionally to the host governments the full use of German archives for quasi-Consular functions (provided the Allied powers concerned retain right of access) and also use of the German premises where necessary. The Allied right of control would not thereby be abandoned. Indeed, emphasis on "control" instead of "custody" seems desirable in general. The concession would not affect diplomatic premises or archives.

EXCELLENCY: The Aide-Mémoire no. 1848/-/45 of June 11, 1945 from your Embassy and the earlier letter of June 7 to an officer of the Department from Mr. Maclean ⁴³ touch upon an emergency situation which has had the most careful attention of this Department, namely the urgent need of utilizing in the common interest of our governments the power over Germans living abroad which is inherent in the archives and selected functions of German diplomatic and consular offices now generally held in trusteeship for the Four Powers which have assumed the supreme authority in Germany.

In as much as the power referred to will be quickly dissipated if not promptly used, it is the view of this Government that the maximum and quickest possible utilization of the advantage now obtained should be sought. It is therefore proposed that the United States and British Governments immediately invite all the United Nations to join with them in opening and operating under the auspices of each such government in its own territory Interim Offices for German Affairs which will perform the services outlined in the attached annex 45 under the limitations stated therein. Such offices would likewise be opened at their capitals by each of the Powers assuming the control in Germany. It is furthermore proposed that our governments proceed forthwith, with the assistance whenever possible of the French and Soviet Governments, in the implementation of a corresponding program in neutral countries with the difference that the offices would be directed by the representatives of the Four Powers who are locally available. Such Interim Offices for German Affairs would thus immediately be opened in Spain, Portugal and their possessions as recommended by our missions at Madrid and Lisbon.

With regard to Switzerland and Sweden, it is the firm opinion of this Government that those governments should be urged to transfer the functions of such offices to the representatives of the Four Powers at the earliest possible moment. Arrangements in the remaining neutral countries and possibly in Argentina and Italy should follow the same general pattern.

It follows from the foregoing discussion that the United States Government is not disposed to concur in a suggestion that quasi-consular services for Germans be assigned in Spain and Portugal to the authorities of the local governments.

In view of the pressing questions daily being placed before us by our missions throughout the world and the danger that the normal pattern of control over Germans living abroad may break down if prompt action is not taken, it is hoped that the British Government may find it possible to concur in the proposals made in this note and in the annex ⁴⁵ hereto. The appropriate officers of this Department are ready and anxious to participate in discussions with representa-

A copy of this note is being sent to Ambassador Winant for circulation to the European Advisory Commission for its consideration.

DISCUSSIONS REGARDING PROCEDURES AND SCOPE OF THE UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR THE INVESTIGATION OF WAR CRIMES AND THE SETTING UP OF THE INTERNATIONAL MILITARY TRIBUNAL*

740.00116 E.W./1-2645: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, February 6, 1945—11 p.m.

920. For Deputy Commissioner Hodgson.⁴⁸ The Department assumes that you have seen my statement to the press of February 1 ⁴⁹ regarding the punishment of war criminals (your 921 of January 26 ⁵⁰). In view of the confusion and misinformation that have resulted from speculation and unauthorized statements regarding the work of the Commission and the attitude of different members, the Department considers that regularization of the release of information by the Commission, confined to the limits of my statement and indicating that action is being taken to effectuate the objectives stated

⁴⁶ The proposal for interim offices for German affairs was further discussed in an aide-mémoire from the British Embassy dated August 29 and one dated October 16, and in a memorandum from the Department of State to the British Embassy dated November 7, none printed. In its memorandum of November 7, the Department stated that the United States Political Adviser for Germany was being informed with the view of having the agreed suggestions referred to a Control Council subcommittee.

After prolonged discussion at the Directorate level of the Allied Control Authority, approval was given at the 92nd meeting of the Coordinating Committee, December 3, 1946, to a plan for the establishment of Interim Offices for German Affairs (740 00410 Cortect) (Corners v.) (12, 1949)

⁵⁰ In this telegram Hodgson reported that the majority of the members of the Commission were of the opinion that the work of the Commission should be publicized; they also expressed a "strong desire to revise present policy which they believe has resulted in criticism of the Commission and its members and impaired its usefulness." (740.00116 E.W./1–2645)

by the President and summarized by me, would be desirable. Discussion of the juridical theory on which we are to proceed should be postponed, since this matter is not yet settled. The publication of lists of war criminals other than those whose names are now well known to the public might well tend to defeat the purposes of the United Nations by enabling such persons to cover their tracks in one way or another. Consequently, such lists should not be published, but every effort should be made to avoid the impression that the Commission is operating mysteriously.

You should avoid the giving of any impression that you are holding back or in anywise endeavoring to stifle the release of legitimate information.

The British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Acting Secretary of State

His Majesty's Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the Embassy's Aide-Mémoire dated October 30, 1944,⁵¹ which was left with the Legal Adviser to the Department of State on that date, concerning various proposals made by the United Nations War Crimes Commission in London and to the Aide-Mémoire dated December 27, 1944,⁵² concerning a draft directive regarding the functions of theatre commanders in relation to war criminals.

- 2. Since the delivery to the Department of State of above mentioned Aide-Mémoires, officials of the Embassy have had the advantage of informal discussions on the subject of war crimes and war criminals with the Legal Adviser of the Department of State and with other officials of the United States Government.
- 3. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom believe that the time has come when a general discussion of the subject between representatives of the United States and of the United Kingdom would be mutually advantageous. Lord Halifax, therefore, has pleasure on behalf of His Majesty's Government, in inviting to London Mr. Green H. Hackworth, Legal Adviser to the Department of State, Brigadier General John Weir 53 of the United States War Department, and such other officials as they or Mr. Grew may designate, for the purpose of holding such discussions. His Majesty's Government hope that the meeting may, if possible, take place in London on or about March 15th next.

⁵³ Director of War Department's War Crimes Office.

- 4. His Majesty's Government consider that the proposed discussions could profitably include such matters as the trials of war criminals, the suggested International Criminal Court, the proposed mixed military tribunals, and the procedure to be adopted for dealing with lists of war criminals produced by the Commission.
- 5. As regards other matters concerning the pre-surrender period in Western Europe, these appear for the most part to be covered in practice by action taken by the Supreme Headquarters of the Allied Expeditionary Forces and by Allied Force Headquarters, by the draft directive which it is hoped the Combined Chiefs of Staff will issue very shortly,⁵⁴ and by the existing liaison arrangements between S.H.A.E.F.⁵⁵ and A.F.H.Q.⁵⁶ and between other competent Allied authorities. There seem few other questions relating to this period which require discussions between the United States and the United Kingdom, but no doubt such questions as the establishment of a channel for exchange, between the United Kingdom and the United States, of information on war crimes and war criminals could also be considered advantageously at such a meeting.
- 6. There is, however, one outstanding question, namely, whether the Governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom should try to establish some form of liaison with the Government of the Soviet Union in the pre-surrender period for:
- (a) the mutual collection and exchange of information about war crimes; and
- (b) the apprehension, and possibly the exchange, of war criminals whose custody is desired by either side.

A case in point under (a) is the over-running by Soviet forces of Stalag Luft III at Sagan where fifty British and Allied air force officers were murdered by the Germans in March of 1944. The principal difficulty in connection with such arrangements is the manner in which the other Allies would be brought into any such liaison arrangements. The Government of the Soviet Union might feel disinclined to participate in a wide arrangement embracing a number of the Allies, but, on the other hand, if the United Kingdom and United States were to make arrangements with the Government of the Soviet Union on their own account alone, the other Allies who, as stated below, have suffered very severely in the matter of war crimes, might be offended. This matter is being urgently considered in the United Kingdom and Lord Halifax hopes to send to Mr. Grew shortly some proposals in this regard. This matter could also be discussed further by the representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom at the proposed meeting in London.

- 7. Some thought has been given to the advisability of inviting representatives of the French Provisional Government and the Soviet Government to participate in the proposed discussions in London, but His Majesty's Government see some difficulty in inviting the French Government to participate without giving other Allies an opportunity also to take part. A number of such other Allies have, in the view of His Majesty's Government, suffered in proportion, at least as heavily, if not more heavily, than have the French, from the atrocities committed by war criminals, and it might provoke great resentment among them if they were excluded, in favour of the French alone, from conversations on proposals emanating from the United Nations War Crimes Commission. His Majesty's Government also feel that at the present stage the Government of the Soviet Union would be unlikely to accept any invitation to take part in talks at a technical level on war criminals and therefore no invitation is, at the present time, being issued to that Government to participate in the discussions. His Majesty's Government are of the opinion that if it is decided to try to establish such liaison and mutual assistance with the Soviet Union, as is mentioned in paragraph 6 above, the matter would best be taken up through ordinary diplomatic channels and that there is no need for special discussion with the Soviet Union about it. Therefore the invitation to the proposed discussions is being limited to the Government of the United States. If it appeared that the Government of the Soviet Union or the French Government could assist at any stage in the discussions, appropriate representatives of such Governments could, of course, be consulted separately.
- 8. The Government of the Soviet Union have asked that the requirements concerning the handing over of war criminals should be discussed by the European Advisory Commission and His Majesty's Government are preparing a draft directive ⁵⁷ which it is hoped will shortly be discussed by the Commission. It is understood that United States authorities are also at work on a similar draft directive. ⁵⁸ The discussions at the European Advisory Commission on these two directives will enable the United States Government, His Majesty's Government, the French Government and the Government of the Soviet Union to state their views on all matters relating to war criminals and arising in the post-surrender period, except possibly the question of the form of trials and such matters as the proposed International Criminal Court and the proposed mixed military tribunals.

- 9. The question of major war criminals was, as Mr. Grew will be aware, touched upon at the Crimean Conference and has been referred to the three Foreign Secretaries for further consideration.⁵⁹
- 10. In these circumstances, it does not seem possible to discuss at the present stage any post-surrender matters relating to war criminals with the Government of the Soviet Union other than the discussions which will take place in the European Advisory Commission.
- 11. Lord Halifax will be glad to be informed, as soon as is conveniently possible, whether Mr. Hackworth, General Weir and other representatives of the United States Government will be able to visit London on or about March 15, 1945, for the purpose of the discussions above described.60

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to President Roosevelt

[Washington,] March 17, 1945.

The British are urging a meeting in London between officials of this Department, the War Department, and the British Government 61 in an effort to iron out a number of questions relating to war crimes.

On February 14 Acting Secretary Grew sent a letter to Joe Davies 62 in New York expressing the hope that he would be able promptly to make his contemplated trip on this same subject. The next morning a letter was received from him, which crossed Mr. Grew's in the mail, stating that he would be tied up for several weeks on account of illness.

A general program for the handling of war crimes was the subject of conferences between officials of this Department, the War Department, the Attorney General, and Judge Rosenman prior to your departure for Yalta.63 Their recommendations were, I think, laid before you. The proposals contemplated the setting up of an international tribunal for the purpose of trying the principal German leaders and their associates for joint participation in a broad criminal enterprise and laying the foundation for subsequent trials of members of the Gestapo, SS, etc., on charges of complicity in the basic criminal plan.

see Conferences at Matta and Yatta, p. 938.

of In his reply of March 30, Mr. Hull informed Lord Halifax, "that Judge Samuel I. Rosenman, special counsel to the President, who is now in Europe, has been charged with the responsibility of discussing with British officials in London the questions raised in the Ambassador's note. He will be joined by Brigadier General Weir and Colonel R. Ammi Cutter of the War Department . . . Mr. Hackworth will be unable to go to London . . ." (740.00116 EW/3-645)

⁶² Joseph E. Davies, Chairman of the President's War Relief Board. 63 See Conferences at Malta and Yalta, pp. 402-413.

They also contemplated the trial of individuals for individual atrocities. The subsequent trials would take place before occupation or other appropriate tribunals. I understand this plan was not discussed at Yalta.64

In as much as the war crimes program is more or less bogged down and in as much as we have assured the public that we have definite plans in mind, we should take prompt steps to get things moving in the right direction.

Judge Rosenman is well informed on the subject. I suggest that you authorize the Department to have him look into the whole situation in London and discuss the proposed plan and other current questions relating to war crimes with the British officials.

I also suggest that the Department be authorized to ascertain whether the Secretary of War may not desire to have someone from his Department join Judge Rosenman in the discussion.

May I have your approval.65

DEAN ACHESON

740.00116 EW/3-2745

Memorandum by the Legal Adviser (Hackworth) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson)

[Washington,] March 27, 1945.

Mr. Acheson: As you may know, hearings have been going on before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on the Joint Resolution introduced by Mr. Celler requesting the President to appoint a commission "to cooperate with the United Nations War Crimes Commission, or any other agency or agencies of the United Nations in the preparation of definite plans for the punishment of war criminals of the Axis countries" (H.J. Res. 93).66

In his statement before the Committee which is set forth in the Appendix to the Congressional Record for March 22, 1945 (p. A1480) Mr. Celler said:

"Right under our noses there seem to be numerous agencies set up to meet the problem of war criminals. The Navy Department has 79th Cong., 1st sess. (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1945).

⁶⁴ At Yalta the question of war criminals was dealt with in par. VI of the Protocol of Proceedings, signed by Messrs. Stettinius, Molotov, and Eden on February 11, 1945. "The Conference agreed that the question of the major war criminals should be the subject of enquiry by the three Foreign Secretaries for report in due course after the close of the Conference." (Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 979.)

arginal note appears, "D.A. ok F.D.R." By telegram 2294 of March 24, Judge Samuel I. Rosenman, Special Counsel to the President, was informed of the President's decision and told that two officials from the War Department would the president of the President's decision and told that two officials from the War Department would be president. join him in London with copies of the proposed plan (740.00116 EW/3-2445).

66 Hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, its Division of War Crimes under Admiral Gatch; the Army, under General Weir, has its Division of War Crimes, as has the State Department. What do we know about them? Is there any coordination among them? Are they, and to what extent, working in conjunction with the United Nations War Crimes Commission, now operating in London, or are they proceeding independently? Congress and the people are kept in the dark. Should Congress and the people continue in ignorance?"

After quoting from Mr. Grew's statement to the press on February 11 [1],⁶⁷ Mr. Celler said:

"Unless Congress takes a hand in the proceedings, the purpose of Mr. Grew's statement will evaporate in an atmosphere of apathy, indifference, and back-stage maneuvering."

With reference to the Commission proposed in his Joint Resolution, Mr. Celler said:

"The proposed commission can be composed of some of the members of this committee or in combination with other congressional committees to work in coordination with the United Nations War Crimes Commission, to keep abreast of its work, to keep the Congress informed and through the Congress the people. Remember the punishment of war criminals is inextricably interwoven with the peace."

We are informed by an officer of the War Department who has been attending the hearings that amendments will be proposed to the original resolution as introduced and that apparently there is much sentiment in favor of establishing some sort of a Congressional committee to keep itself informed on the war crimes situation insofar as security regulations permit.

The existence of such a Congressional committee might of course be highly embarrassing, since it would desire publicity and since planning for the execution of war crimes policies involves confidential negotiations with other governments.

Contrary to the Committee's belief that nothing has been done, the truth is that the matter has received active consideration by officials of the War Department, the Justice Department, the Department of State, and Judge Rosenman from the White House. They submitted certain proposals to the President who recently approved our requesting Judge Rosenman to discuss with the British Foreign Office these proposals and various questions which the British have invited us to discuss with them. He will be joined in London by two officers from the War Department. The discussions will be highly confidential since other countries, notably the Soviet Union and France, have not been invited to participate.

A committee to keep Congress informed would undoubtedly give rise to difficulties in this and other countries.

It is hoped the discussion in London will result in understandings which can, without too great delay, be made public. These understandings, if our views prevail, will be broad in scope and will reveal the active and constructive steps looking to the prosecution of war criminals which can be put into execution as soon as the military situation makes it feasible to proceed.

It is to be borne in mind that the War Department and we think the Navy Department do not desire to begin actual prosecution while so many of our men are in enemy hands. They fear reprisals. It is also to be borne in mind that what Mr. Celler's resolution has in mind would be wholly inconsistent with what the military people think should be our policy as regards publicity.

The war crimes program is not a unilateral understanding. It must be worked out with other governments. One difficulty lies in the fact that people do not understand the functions of the United Nations War Crimes Commission which are limited to investigation and to the making of recommendations to the governments.

The trouble in Congress appears to be traceable to the statements made by Mr. Pell.

Do you not think that the situation should be discussed with certain leaders of the House with a view to discouraging the creation of such a committee?

GREEN H. HACKWORTH

740.00116 E.W./4-745: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, April 7, 1945—9 p. m. [Received 9:05 p. m.]

3564. For Hackworth from Rosenman. Please repeat to Secretary of War Stimson and Attorney General Biddle.

War crimes discussions have been proceeding with Lord Chancellor, ⁶⁸ the Attorney General (Sir Donald Somervell) and the Judge Advocate General (McGeagh). General agreement has been tentatively reached that

(1) the United Nations War Crimes Commission plan for a grandiose international criminal court created by treaty is not practicable but some non-treaty tribunal must be provided and announced before any rejection of the War Crimes Commission proposal;

(2) that individual offenders will so far as practicable be returned to the scenes of their crimes for trial in accordance with the Moscow

Declaration; 69

⁶⁸ Viscount John Allsebrook Simon.

⁶⁹ Anglo-Soviet-American communiqué, November 1, 1943, Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, p. 755.

(3) that trials of other offenders will be before military courts, such courts being mixed military tribunals of two or more Allies where for some legal or political reason a mixed tribunal is preferred by the Ally having primary jurisdiction.

Discussions are still proceeding on the problems of (a) the major war criminal and (b) the "common enterprise" approach outlined in memorandum of Secretaries Stettinius and Stimson and Attorney General, dated 22 January 1945.70 The Lord Chancellor and the Attorney General seem inclined to accept the general principles of the "common enterprise" theory (much in accordance with the substance of the 22 January memorandum which, of course, has not been shown to them). With respect to the six or seven principal Nazi leaders, the Lord Chancellor represents that there is substantial British support for a wholly political disposition of these leaders, possibly without any hearing whatsoever. The Lord Chancellor, however, suggests a middle or compromise ground of approach which is described by him in a letter of 6 April 71 paraphrased in part at the end of this cable.

A copy of this letter is being sent by courier to you and to Mr. McCloy ⁷² at SHAEF. He will be here next week. I would be interested in having at the earliest possible moment any comments you, Secretary Stimson or Attorney General Biddle may have. ⁷³

Personally I feel that much is to be said for the Lord Chancellor's suggestion for a separate method of dealing with the top six or seven Nazi leaders. I would approve it if we can get British acceptance of the common enterprise proposal along lines of 22 January memorandum and subject to the following three comments

(1) the court to try the six or seven leaders should be military;

(2) the court should pass sentence and determine punishment, possibly subject to approval by the four major governments through the Control Council for Germany;

(3) the document of arraignment must have such adequate and reasonable documentation that oral testimony will be unnecessary to prove the accused guilty.

Because of the risk to Allied nationals in German hands, complete secrecy is desired. The British representatives will promptly explore the matters outlined above with the War Cabinet. Question of best ^{1949),} p. 3.

This letter, together with a letter from Mr. Rosenman to Lord Simon of April 6, and a memorandum of Mr. Rosenman's of the same date, were enclosed in a letter from Mr. D. Sommers to Mr. Hackworth of April 10, none printed.

To John J. McCloy, Assistant Secretary of War.

To In telegram 2824 of April 11, Rosenman was informed that Mr. Stimson was out of town and Mr. Biddle not prepared to give his views at the moment. The Department was "therefore under the necessity of suggesting that you defer for the time being presentation of your counter proposals regarding the top leaders . . .". (740.00116 EW/4-745) method and appropriate time of approaching Russians and French is being further explored.

Follows abbreviated paraphrase of parts of Lord Simon's letter:

I send you an outline of a method of dealing with Hitler, Mussolini and other arch criminals, designed to furnish an appropriate mode of dealing with them in a way which avoids summary execution without trial, on the one hand, and a long drawn out state trial with endless witnesses to be cross-examined on the other.

The Allies would draw up a "document of arraignment" in somewhat general terms and an inter-Allied judicial tribunal (possibly including some members not professional judges) would report upon the truth of this arraignment after Hitler and company had been given the opportunity to challenge before the tribunal the truth of its contents, the opportunity of being heard, and, of producing documents and witnesses. The function of the court would be to report to the Allies whether the arraignment or any part of it had been disproved. The Allies themselves (as the Moscow Declaration announced) would then determine the punishment.

Strongly I feel that no judicial tribunal can have the responsibility of the sentence, but that is different from saying that a special tribunal could not say impartially and judicially whether the arraignment is disproved. If the sentence is left to judges they must, of course, act on their own judgment without executive prompting. This is the Anglo-American tradition. I would never consent or allow British judges to carry out the orders of any combination of Governments. My plan puts the ultimate responsibility of deciding about Hitler and company upon the Allies themselves. This must be so for the ultimate fate of Hitler may influence world history for years. By calling on Hitler and company to disprove, if they can, a carefully drawn arraignment, the substance of trial before sentence will be secured.

The document of arraignment would set forth the real offense which the world feels these major criminals have committed, that is the Nazi policy of world conquest and the methods employed to achieve it. Mussolini's share would also be alleged. One count would be the treatment of Jews in Germany and elsewhere. The arraignment would be supported by the principal documents, e.g. Mein Kampf, or passages of Hitler's speeches, but the whole point would be that these men would be arraigned by broad descriptions of what they have done (as the whole world knows) and that they would be left to meet this arraignment, or any part of it, if they could.

The following considerations strongly support this plan in my view:

(a) Trial would not be for "war crimes" in the technical sense and no discussion would take place as to whether what was charged was a crime by any law. The issue would be, can Hitler prove to an impartial court that the facts alleged are untrue.

(b) The plan would include the Nazi infamies such as the attempted annihilation of the Jews. Hitler could not say that international law does not forbid a ruler to maltreat his own subjects.

(c) If Hitler and company deny the jurisdiction of the court and refuse to take any part, they will have been charged with facts known to the world as true. The fact that an impartial tribunal was prepared to hear him would justify any sentence to history.

(d) If he challenges the arraignment in an interminable speech, this will not in the end affect approval of this judicial pronouncement. To deal with the man judicially you must offer to hear what he has to say, so far as it is relevant.

(e) History may be distorted, and it would be helpful to have the Foreign Offices of the principal Allies and others prepare a document with considerable, but not excessive, documentation, making a record for all time of the grounds upon which we dealt with the man.

I have been much impressed by the word I have received of Mr. Stimson's strong feeling that there should be a judicial proceeding before execution. However, I have been worried by the prospect of a long trial in which all sorts of things were discussed, legal or historical—leading to controversy and debate in the world at large, with unpredictable reaction. I regard it as the first condition for the success in this most difficult matter that there should be agreement between your Government and ours.

In sending this description of the plan, I do not write with authority of the War Cabinet, though the Government members with whom

I have talked view with favor the suggestion.

The number of individuals dealt with under this plan would be quite limited; only those the public knows as principal leaders. Concerning the intermediate class of chiefs and members of the Gestapo and the SS, I appreciate the value of your suggestion based on an allegation of conspiracy in a common criminal endeavor. I will study the document which sets out this scheme in more detail.

(End of paraphrase.)

Memorandum of Conversation, Held in San Francisco May 3, 1945

PRESENT

⁷⁴ Anthony Eden, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Chairman of the British Delegation at the San Francisco Conference.

To Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Molotov, People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union, Chairman of the Soviet Delegation at the San Francisco Conference.

- 1. The Secretary stated that the U.S. policy on War Criminals had been established and that the President had just recently appointed Mr. Jackson, Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court as the U.S. representative to take charge of the prosecution of the trials of War Criminals. He said that the President had asked Judge Rosenman to come to San Francisco to take this matter up with the representatives of the four major powers involved in the European war. This meeting had been called for this purpose. The Secretary asked whether it would be appropriate to have Bidault, the French Foreign Minister at this meeting or whether he should be asked to another meeting later today or tomorrow. It was agreed that Bidault could not reach the meeting in time to participate in the discussion, and that it might be possible for the foreign secretaries to leave these matters in the hands of technical representatives with whom the French representative could associate himself.
- 2. Judge Rosenman stated that he had been sent here by the President to place the U.S. proposals for the treatment of war criminals before the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, U.S.S.R., and France who with the United States were the four powers represented on the Control Council for Germany. He realized that this question was not germane to the business of the San Francisco Conference and that he had been sent here merely because of the opportunity which was presented while the four Foreign Ministers were here. He realized that this was not an official meeting of the Foreign Minis-He stated that the U.S. Government had reached a decision in regard to the plans of the Treatment of War Criminals and also with regard to the organization to handle these matters. In the Moscow Declaration, it was stated that war criminals would be returned for trial to the country in which his crime was committed. The Declaration had also mentioned that in the case of crimes which had no geographical location, the proper procedure would be left for further discussion with the Allies. The U.S. is very much interested in settling these matters and feels that an agreement must be reached promptly.
- 3. Judge Rosenman summarized the American proposal as follows: We believe that there should be organized an international military tribunal rather than a civilian tribunal. This court should consist of one representative of each of the four powers represented on the Control Council for Germany. There should also be organized immediately a committee of one representative of each of the four powers to start collecting evidence and preparing for the trials to come. It was our thought that the representatives on this committee would act in the capacity of council to try the cases before the international military tribunal. The President had already appointed Justice Jackson for this purpose.

- 4. Judge Rosenman said there were several categories of criminals concerned:
- (a) there were the top Nazis. We had formerly considered these to be Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, Mussolini, and two or three others. It now looked as though we might not have to concern ourselves with these men.

(b) there were also the criminals which were going to be returned to the country where their crimes had been committed.

(c) there were others whose crimes were not geographically located.

(d) there would be numerous others who had committed crimes but could not be proven because of the fact that the witnesses were dead or there was no evidence still in existence. He gave, for example, the case of Gestapo and SS troops who had undoubtedly committed crimes but we would not be able to prove them.

(e) It was the U.S. belief that these crimes must be sought out and punished, not only to punish the guilty for its moral value but also because these men would certainly provide the nucleus of a future

Nazi party and would lead any future uprising.

- 5. Judge Rosenman stated that we had a plan which we felt would solve this difficulty. We proposed to place on trial the Nazi organizations themselves rather than the individuals and to convict them and all their members of engaging in a criminal conspiracy to control the world, to persecute minorities, to break treaties, to invade other nations and to commit crimes. We are convinced we can convict these organizations of these crimes. Once having proved the organizations to be guilty, each person who had joined the organization voluntarily would ipso facto be guilty of a war crime. While we do not necessarily want to put all the guilty persons to death, we would definitely want to sentence them at least to hard labor to rehabilitate the countries which the Germans had despoiled.
- 6. Judge Rosenman stated that we had prepared a memorandum on our views to be submitted to the four powers. The Russian translation had been made which, however, should be checked. He handed copies of these memoranda to all present. Judge Rosenman stated that we had also prepared a draft memorandum of agreement 77 which he desired to present to the other Governments as a basis for discussion with the four powers. He also handed out copies of these.
- 7. The Secretary stated that before we proceeded further, he wanted to settle the matter of bringing the French into these discussions. Mr. Molotov and Mr. Eden stated that they had no objection to bringing the French in. Since it was impossible to bring Bidault into this meeting, the Secretary suggested that he was seeing him at 5 p. m. this afternoon and asked whether it would be all right for him to inform him of all that had taken place at this meeting and to ask him to appoint a French representative who could meet with our experts. This was agreed.

- 8. Mr. Eden stated that his colleagues in London had been considering this matter of war crimes for some time. Their position was that the major war criminals, the top 7 or 8 Nazis, should not be tried by judicial procedures. Their position had, however, recently changed greatly due to the fact that many of these top Nazis had already been killed and no doubt many more would be killed within the next few days. The War Cabinet still saw objections to a formal state trial of war criminals for the most notorious Nazis whose crimes had no geographic location. If, however, their two great Allies definitely wanted a judicial trial of such men, the British were willing to bow to them in the matter. They would, however, like to review the proposed procedure. The War Cabinet favored the proposed procedure as outlined by Judge Rosenman for a criminal conspiracy to convict members of the Gestapo and other similar Nazi organizations. They would like to review the proposals in detail. He stated that the British understood that the normal military courts of the four Allies would be used to take care of the ordinary war crimes committed inside Germany. This would take care of a large number of cases. There would also be a large number of cases of criminals who would be returned to the country where their crimes were committed. felt that the smaller the number of people who were dealt with by a formal state trial, the better.
- 9. Mr. Molotov stated that he felt Judge Rosenman had made proposals on a matter of great importance and that we should pay great attention to them. He reserved the right to express the views of his Government on the documents which had been submitted, stating that it was difficult to make any comment on such short notice. He asked for time to study the documents and thought that after they had done so, it might be appropriate to have the experts discuss the questions.
- 10. The Secretary stated that the proposals Judge Rosenman had made had the full support of the American Government and suggested that the three Governments appoint representatives to meet as soon as possible to discuss these matters on a technical level. When they had reached the point where other Foreign Ministers meetings would be useful they could be called. Mr. Molotov appointed Mr. Golunsky and Mr. Arutiunian 78 to represent him. Mr. Eden appointed Sir Wm. Malkin to represent him, and the Secretary appointed Judge Rosenman and Mr. Hackworth to represent the U.S. (Mr. Dunn to take Mr. Hackworth's place if the latter did not get well in time). He said he would tell Bidault of this meeting and would advise the others later of the name of the French representative.

Judge Samuel I. Rosenman, Special Counsel to President Truman, to the Acting Secretary of State

Washington, May 15, 1945.

Dear Mr. Grew: As you know, I participated with Mr. Stettinius in San Francisco in the presentation to the British, the Russians and the French of proposals with respect to the prosecution of the German war criminals. Each of the participating representatives has referred our proposals to his own capital for instructions. Though the urgency of the matter appeared to be appreciated by all, some delay must necessarily be anticipated before an agreement is reached on all the points that are involved.

One of the elements in our proposal is that each of the four nations designate a representative to act as its chief of counsel in the preparation and presentation of charges. Mr. Justice Jackson is already at work on our behalf. In many respects, the preparation of the charges is the most difficult part of the task, calling as it does for the examination of all the evidence that has been collected and the adoption of measures to obtain such further evidence as may be necessary for the purpose.

It would greatly facilitate the advancement of the enterprise if the other nations involved would follow the example of the President in designating Justice Jackson by promptly appointing a representative with responsibility comparable to Justice Jackson's for the preparation of the cases. It would thus be possible for the four chiefs of counsel to undertake immediately the consultation and organization that will be necessary if cooperative action is to be achieved, as contemplated in the Moscow Declaration and as the present proposals of the United States explicitly provide.

I therefore suggest that a note be transmitted to the British, the Russians and the French calling attention to our proposals already submitted to their representatives at San Francisco by me, and stressing the urgency of getting the preparatory work under way at the earliest possible time. The note should advert to the President's appointment of Justice Jackson to represent the United States in this endeavor and suggest the desirability of similar designations by each of the other nations involved.⁷⁹

An instruction along the lines suggested by Rosenman was sent to the American Embassies in London (No. 4014), Moscow (No. 1114), and Paris (No. 2217), on May 21. It suggested that the respective governments send representatives to Washington to proceed with the negotiations. (740.00116 EW/5-2145) In his reply, telegram 5143 of May 23, Ambassador Winant reported that the Foreign Office agreed that the matter was urgent and suggested that the proposed negotiations could be carried out in London more expeditiously (740.00116 EW/5-2345).

This suggestion was approved by Mr. Stettinius with whom I discussed it in San Francisco. For your information, I attach a copy of the Executive Order appointing Justice Jackson and also of the draft agreement submitted in San Francisco. The designation of representatives is provided for in Article 22 of this draft.⁸⁰

With kindest personal regards,

Very sincerely,

This Govt is advised that Brit Govt has designated Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, Attorney General, to join with Justice Jackson and French and Soviet representatives in preparing and prosecuting charges against certain war criminals. It is also informed that French Govt will make similar appointment shortly. Except for fact that Brit and French Govts have indicated that they accept in principle the US proposals submitted by Judge Rosenman to Brit, French and Soviet representatives in San Francisco, agreement on terms of draft protocol to govern trials has not yet been reached between the four Govts, as it particularly concerns conduct of trials.83 The US Govt therefore suggests that the Soviet Govt immediately appoint a prosecutor to meet with Justice Jackson and Sir David Maxwell Fyfe and any prosecutor French Govt may name at earliest possible date, together with any other representative whom Soviet Govt may desire to appoint to complete negotiations on draft protocol. It is suggested that such meeting take place in London. US Govt understands that an invitation for such meeting from the Brit Govt 84 will be issued at once if acceptable to the French and Soviet Govts.

6729. From Justice Jackson. Your cable 5383, July 3.85 Negotiations of agreement trial principal war criminals progressing slowly due difficulty Russian understanding our system of law and our difficulty comprehending theirs. British and French in substantial agreement with us. Russians, however, present complete counterproposal of dozen typed pages.⁸⁶ On its face their proposal rejects substance of ours and substitutes many trials by Russian procedures largely in Russian-controlled territory and after surrender of our prisoners to tribunals instead one main trial at Nuremberg as suggested by Clay.87 Some difficulties have disappeared on negotiation after Russians understand our proposal. Today we reached stage of referring all to subcommittee for drafting.88

Deep difference in legal philosophy and attitude, however, is difficult to reconcile and even after words are agreed upon we find them understood to mean different things. We insist on trial by methods acceptable our people as fair but are trying to adopt enough of their proposals to result in a Four Power agreement. Too early to be sure we will get it but by no means hopeless to do so.

Unless we can get substance of our proposal shall want further instruction. Only alternative then will be to agree on general principles as to substantive law governing crimes and to let each set up own tribunals and try own prisoners by its own system of procedure. This would be easier for me and faster. But think desirable give example unity on crime problem if possible.

Am rather appalled at thought of Big Three trying to discuss subject so technical and involved and one where details so important. Mr. Dean of British Foreign Office explains British suggestions 89 as not intending detailed discussion but rather as intended to allay Russian suspicion that prosecution is being evaded.

I have taken position all except international cases are beyond terms of my authority and except to advise my own Govt whether we have objections in any case, the question of surrender prisoners is not before us. This is likely to become very delicate problem as demands probable for surrender persons who are not war criminals but politically objectionable. You will need to decide what terms to impose and what showing will be required of criminality. As suggested cable to Grew re Czechoslovakian demand for turn-over of Frank a uniform policy needed as to all prisoners and demands from all countries. Beginning of summary.

Memorandum begins by reference to United Nation's declaration of January 5, 1943,99 and calls for determination of "a general economic policy towards Germany which will balance, for the better protection of Allied interests, the relation between economic activities maintained for purposes of reparation and activities which must disappear for security reasons, without prejudging the economic status of certain parts of German territory which may be subjected to a special regime".

Section 1 calls for restitution of identifiable objects; of "identical" objects when the original ones cannot be found; and of "equivalent" objects in the case of artistic and cultural objects, gold and precious metals. Section 2 calls for assigning to the despoiled states a priority upon German resources. Before there if [is] any general compensation for the Allies, the stolen goods, in the broadest sense of the term, should be restored to the invaded countries; this priority for the invaded countries would be limited automatically to the assets found in Germany upon surrender. Some deviation from this priority might be found necessary in order to meet German needs for transport and supply, but the distress of the victim should have precedence over that of the robber.

Section 3 proposes four principles of regulating transfer of German assets. (1) Assets subject to transfer would include factories and equipment, transport equipment, patents, processes of production and labor, skilled and unskilled. (2) The transfer will be rapid and will be limited only by the requirements of the forces of occupation. (3) German proprietors of transferred goods will be compensated in Reichsmarks placed at the disposal of the beneficiary Allied governments. (4) Unsatisfied balance of claims of despoiled nations will be regulated as part of the general problem of reparation for war damage.

Section 4 defines "spoliation" as covering (1) "the seizure, confiscation or requisitioning by the Germans of goods, rights and interests of any kind not recovered in the liberated territories", (2) "the 'purchase' by the Germans of goods, rights and interests of any kind, regardless of the manner of fictitious payment adopted by them (payment in national currency extorted from the occupied power, assignment to an unbalanced clearing account, et cetera)". This definition includes goods, rights and interests owned abroad by the United Nations or their nationals and seized by the Germans in whatever manner.

An inter-Allied office should be created to enforce these principles, charged with safeguarding stolen goods, receiving the requests of the Allied nations and taking action on them. Relations between it and the reparation, deliveries and restitution division under the Control Council for Germany would have to be defined. While waiting for each despoiled country to present a complete picture of damage suffered, the French delegation urges earliest possible agreement on the principle of restitution. End of summary.

Washington, January 18, 1945—midnight.

- 418. Department has had under consideration the British proposal for a Restitution Commission, reference your despatch 19457, November 24, 1944,⁵ and your 312, January 9, 1945 (Comea 147). Comments of Department are as follows:
- (1) Although Department's 10731, December 27, 1944,6 indicated discussion here with respect to reparation was not yet sufficiently advanced to permit statement of a position, no doubt was intended by the Department's 10731 to be cast upon the principle of restitution of identifiable looted property. It is agreed here that this principle should be supported, and you are authorized to indicate our adherence to that principle.
- (2) On the other hand, the question of replacement, in so far as that term is more broadly construed than merely the replacement of looted and unrecoverable or destroyed works of art and similar unique objects, is closely related to the general problem of reparation on which discussion is still going forward here. You should, therefore, withhold comment on any replacement proposals other than those limited to the class of unique cultural objects above outlined.

(3) The Department finds the British proposal for a Restitution Commission generally consistent with the restitution policy already forwarded to you in the document on reparation and restitution.⁸ Department's comments on portions as to which it has doubt are as follows:

(a) It should be definitely provided that the Restitution Commission will be a sub-commission of whatever Reparation Commission is eventually set up. This should not require postponement of establishment of a Restitution Commission, since the two can be integrated at any time after the Reparation Commission is set up. See Paragraph 4 of the British proposal.9

(b) The British proposal (Paragraph 5) indicates that property should be restored to each interested government representing its nationals from whom property was looted. Department feels it preferable to establish a rule of return of looted property to the government having jurisdiction over the situs from which property was taken, in order that any controversies with respect to ownership, liens, etc. may be adjudicated in the place, and as nearly as possible under the circumstances, which would have been normal had the looting not taken place. For example, a share of stock belonging to an American national living in Paris would be returned to Paris rather than to Washington. The status quo ante looting would thus be restored as nearly as could be.

(c) Although the principle of restitution of all identifiable looted objects is endorsed, it is felt that in practice there may be considerable difficulty in extending restitution beyond such classes of property as works of art, securities, capital goods such as machinery, etc. Although the general principle of restitution should be applicable to such items as rolling stock also, it is agreed that special considerations may make it desirable to put these items under the jurisdiction of a separate organization. It may be desirable to point out that the Restitution Commission should concentrate on such objects as these, rather than attempt completely to restore all looted property of whatever description which may theoretically be identifiable and returnable. Other difficulties in the phrase "identifiable looted property" also are not discussed in the British document, as, for example, whether restitution will extend only to objects in existence prior to German occupation, what standard of identification should apply to mingled or improved looted objects, gold, and so forth. These problems might be handled either in the Restitution Commission's terms of reference,

⁸ Presumably reference is to a memorandum approved by the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy on August 4, 1944, entitled "Summary: Report on Reparation, Restitution, and Property Rights—Germany" (ECEFP D-37/44); for text, see Foreign Relations, 1944 vol. 1, p. 287. For further elaboration of U.S. planning on establishment of a Restitution Commission, see Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 196.

This paragraph of the British proposal indicated that the Restitution Commission could be readily "worked into" any potential Reparations Commission for Germany, but that "the differing character of its work would result in its remaining more or less an autonomous body." (740.00119 EAC/11-2444).

or by the Commission itself, but it should be pointed out that they exist and may prove a fertile ground for debate. With respect to definition of "looting", see sub-paragraph 3 (e) hereinafter.

(d) Although the rule of return of looted property to the situs from which the looting took place will probably dispose of many problems with respect to the jurisdiction of the Restitution Commission, it should be emphasized that the Department does not agree with Paragraph 6 of the British document, in so far as that paragraph indicates that the Commission should make final and binding determinations of ultimate rights as between the Allied Governments. is entirely possible that there may be disputes between the Allied Governments with respect to tangible property and, even more likely, with respect to intangible ownership rights arising out of such property as securities. The attempt finally to adjudicate ultimate rights in a situation of this sort would make the Restitution Commission a center of controversy and it would seem that the Commission would better be able to fulfil its functions if it can merely return such property to the place from which it determines it has been looted, without going into the equitable rights between the Allied Governments concerned with respect to each other. Moreover, it is not clear that the British proposal excludes adjudication on such questions as the ultimate rights when securities (for example) of a Czech corporation, owned by a Frenchman, have been purchased by the Germans from the Frenchman with franc funds derived from the levy of occupation costs. It is not thought desirable that the Restitution Commission in such a case do anything more than return the securities to the place from which they were taken, without going into the question of the significance, in terms of legal consequences, of such a return.

(e) It will be noted that we are using the term "looting" broadly to include any transfers of the sort proscribed by the United Nations' Declaration of January 5, 1943 with respect to Axis acts of dispossession.

(4) Comment with respect to the French proposal on restitution, reference your 313, January 9, 1945 (Comea 148), will be contained in a later message. Preliminarily, it may be indicated that French proposal seems substantially more broad than would be our proposal with respect to restitution. The French proposal seems to call for replacement in a sense of reparation in kind from any assets found in Germany upon surrender. This is substantially broader than our principle of restitution of identifiable looted objects, together with replacement for strictly limited classes of unique objects, such as works of art. The Department believes that the French proposal can be favorably commented upon only to the extent of our restitution proposals as above outlined and that to the extent that it goes into broad questions of replacement or reparation in kind, comment should be deferred pending determination of the general reparation problem. Department is agreed on desirability of early agreement on the principle of restitution but prefers at this time that the principle be limited in the manner above stated.

As the problem of restitution may become urgent with the capture of additional German territory, and as the Moscow Conference may not meet for some time, Department believes that the European Advisory Commission should continue to handle this subject provided that its agenda is such as to permit it to give prompt consideration to this problem.

Department is firmly convinced (1) that restitution should be confined to identifiable property (2) that the concept of replacement should be limited to works of art and similar objects as indicated in our telegram no. 418, of January 18 (3) that any restitution agency should be closely linked to whatever reparation body may be established. If in your opinion there is a strong probability that these principles will be accepted by the representatives of the other three governments it is suggested you take the first opportunity to propose that EAC deal with this question and that you press for early consideration.

The decision to invite France to be represented on the European Advisory Commission last November was based in part on the realization of France's vital interest in the solution of the German problem. In as much as reparation questions have been under discussion in the EAC, it would seem logical for France to be represented in the new organization to be set up to deal with that particular problem and this Government would be disposed to agree to French participation. All available evidence would indicate that they feel themselves free to take whatever they find there which they need, and that they are proceeding to do so. His Majesty's Government is of the opinion that arguments in favour of French representation on the Reparations Commission to be established in Moscow are so strong that they feel justified in proposing that the question be reopened with the United States and with the Soviet Governments in spite of the disagreement on this subject at the Crimean Conference.¹⁴

The principal reasons that occur to His Majesty's Government are as follows:

(a) The French Government will have a zone of occupation in Germany and will be represented on the Allied Control Commission. They will thus be in the physical position to influence the execution of reparation policy and if confusion is to be avoided it will be essentia! that they should be associated from the start with the formulation of that policy. Any reparation policy that was not pursued on lines agreed by the occupying powers would be doomed to failure.

(b) If the French are excluded they will have what will seem to many countries a justifiable sense of grievance. This might assist them in taking the lead among the smaller European Powers and in organizing opposition to the decisions of the Great Powers. Such a development would have a serious effect on the ability of the Great Powers to organize Germany and Europe on lines which would avoid general friction.

(c) France has a peculiarly vital concern in policy towards Germany. Reparation is only a part of such policy but it looks very large in the eyes of the continent of Europe and is closely connected with many other aspects of the policy towards Germany which will require willing French co-operation.

(d) France is represented on the European Advisory Commission on whose agenda some of the questions connected with reparation already stand. She is thus entitled to raise these questions in the European Advisory Commission and can hardly be kept in ignorance of what is happening in the Moscow Commission.

These arguments seem to constitute an overwhelming case in favour of French participation in the Moscow Commission from the start. Problems being considered in the European Advisory Commission and to be considered by the Moscow Commission are so interconnected that unless the parties concerned are the same nothing but confusion and delay can result. Whatever view is held on the contribution of France to the war or on her claims to reparation, such confusion and delay in settling these major issues are to be deplored on every ground and His Majesty's Government find it difficult to understand what advantage there can be in a policy which causes great administrative difficulty while increasing the alienation of the French Government. They therefore urge most strongly that the United States, Soviet and United Kingdom Governments should agree without delay to invite the French Government to take part from the start in the work of the Moscow Reparation Commission.

His Majesty's Government is also making representations in the above sense to the Soviet Government.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] March 16, 1945.

Participants: Mr. Henri Bonnet, French Ambassador
The Secretary
Mr. Dunn

The French Ambassador, Mr. Henri Bonnet, came in this morning and left with the Secretary the attached memorandum ¹⁶ of matters which he stated are of great interest to the French Government at the present time and on which they would be glad to have the views of this Government. I told the Ambassador that all these questions would receive prompt study and that we would communicate with him just as soon as we could on each subject.

He then brought up the question of the French representation on the German Reparations Commission, set up in Moscow as a result of the Crimea Conference. He said that the French Government and people considered that France had suffered severe devastation during the war and they would not be able to understand why France was not included in the discussion of the reparations to be obtained from Germany. He made a very strong plea in this regard. The Secretary said that it could not be considered that France had suffered anywhere nearly as much as Russia had suffered, and that he himself had seen, in flying over Russia and in visiting certain portions of it on his recent trip, startling evidences of the extent of damage and devastation caused by the Germans in that country. The Ambassador admitted that the French damage had not been as great as the Russian, but he insisted there had been such losses in France that it would be a very difficult thing to explain to the public if France were not to be a member of the Commission in Moscow to assess the German reparations. The Secretary stated that there was no thought on the part of this Government or any other government, as far as he knew, to do other than favor French participation in whatever reparations could be obtained from Germany; that the matter of reparations [representation] on the Commission was one which would have to be taken up with the governments represented at the Crimea meeting.¹⁷

Draft Memorandum To Be Sent by President Roosevelt to the United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations (Lubin) 18

Washington, March 22, 1945.

Subject: United States Policy on Reparations

In implementing the Reparations Protocol ¹⁹ that was agreed upon at Yalta, you should be guided by the following general principles as representing the policy of the United States Government in this matter:

I. The basic principle, which is controlling under all circumstances, is that reparations should contribute to the maximum extent in eliminating Germany's war potential and making Germany economically weak.

II. Reparations should aid in rehabilitating, strengthening and developing industries in the devastated countries of Europe as part of a broad program of reconstruction for these countries and should assist the liberated countries and England to expand their exports.

 $^{^{17}}$ Subsequently, in telegram 1229, March 29, 5 p. m., Ambassador Caffery was informed that French Ambassador Bonnet had been told that the American Government was "favorable to French membership (on the Reparation Commission in Moscow) and that he could so inform his Government." (740.00119-EW/3-2945)

III. With respect to a minimum standard of living for the Germans, it should be borne in mind that the peoples in the devastated countries of Europe have priority and no policy should be adopted designed to maintain the German standard of living above that of any other country of Europe.

In accordance with these principles, you should undertake to secure an agreement in Moscow on a program embodying the following specific objectives:

- A. To the maximum extent possible, reparations should be taken from the national wealth of Germany existing at the time of collapse, including the removal of industrial machinery, equipment and plants, particularly the metallurgical, electrical and chemical industries (including all industries producing synthetic oil, synthetic nitrogen and synthetic rubber), ships, rolling stock, German investment abroad, shares of industrial, transport, shipping and other enterprises in Germany.
- B. Delay in determining the total amount and division of German reparations should not prevent the immediate removal of plants, equipment and raw materials from Germany and the confiscation of German assets abroad, as parts of a program of reparations and restitution.
- C. To the extent that reparations are collected in the form of deliveries of goods over a period of years, such goods should be of such a nature and in such amounts as not to require the Allies to take any steps designed to maintain, strengthen or develop the German economy or to develop a dependence of other countries on Germany after reparations cease.

This policy can best be realized by making recurring reparations over a period of years, after the removal of plant, equipment, etc.,

(i) As small as possible in relation to the reparations to be paid in the form of industrial plants and equipment.

(ii) Primarily in the form of natural resources, such as coal, metallic ores, timber and potash, and not in the form of manufactured products.

(iii) In as small annual amounts as possible.

(iv) Over a period of approximately ten years. (The period recommended in the Russian proposal made at Yalta.20)

(v) Arranged to taper off toward the latter part of the reparations period.

D. We are opposed to any reparations program which for its achievement would require the United Nations to take widespread.

Memorandum by the Adviser on German Economic Affairs (Despres) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton)

[Washington,] 24 March, 1945.

Transportation

The attached memorandum from the White House ²¹ represents the most extreme statement which I have yet seen of the Treasury doctrine with respect to economic treatment of Germany. ²² It calls for pulverization of German industry, and it opposes any attempt to assume comprehensive control over the German economy. The resolution of all this with reparation is achieved by emphasizing reparation through transfer of existing wealth rather than current production. It essentially ignores the fact that the Russians are resolutely determined to get large reparation, including, of necessity, substantial reparation from current production. Moreover, the subject memorandum takes no account of the need for keeping our impositions on Germany within limits which will obviate the necessity for permanent outside relief to Germany.

Mr. Stettinius, in arranging for Mr. Lubin's appointment, emphatically took the position that he would represent the Department of State in undertaking this assignment. In conformity with this principle, it would seem appropriate that Mr. Lubin's instructions should come from the Secretary, though with Presidential approval, rather than from the President directly. On the assumption that the letter of instruction would be prepared here, Mr. Luthringer has drafted a short policy statement for inclusion in such a letter. A copy of this draft statement is attached. It seems to me to provide much sounder guidance to Mr. Lubin than the memorandum received from the White House. I suggest that the policy statement to be contained in Mr. Lubin's letter of instruction should be considered by your new Germany Committee ²³ and by Mr. Lubin.

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the Chief of the Division of Financial Affairs (Luthringer)

[Washington,] 24 March 1945.

It was agreed at the Yalta Conference that Germany must pay in kind for the losses caused by her to the Allied Nations in the course of the war.²⁴ The primary purpose of the Reparation Commission should be the formulation of a general program for the exaction of reparation and the establishment of the policies under which this program is to be implemented.

The principal interest of the United States in reparation is not to obtain as large a share as possible for this country; it is rather to assure that the reparation program will not jeopardize the economic and security objectives of this country with respect to Germany. The position of the United States on the various issues involved may be summarized as follows:

- (a) This Government would oppose any reparation program which would entail the continued existence of industrial capacity in Germany considered to be dangerous to the security of the United Nations.
- (b) Another important interest of the United States is to prevent a reparation program of such magnitude as to face us with the alternative of permitting mass starvation in Germany or assuming sustained responsibilities for relief of the German people. It should also be made clear to the Reparation Commission that consideration of the amount of reparation to be fixed should not be based on an assumption that the United States will finance reconstruction in Germany.

- (c) Similarly, it is to the interest of the United States to see that payment of the costs of the occupation of Germany and payment for such minimum German imports as may be determined to be essential receive priority over reparation. In seeking to establish this principle, it will be necessary to secure agreement as to what shall be included in occupation costs as distinct from reparations.
- (d) Each United Nation should retain and dispose, as it sees fit, of German property within its territory, the proceeds to be applied against its reparation claim. Agreed principles should be formulated to achieve the disposal of German property in neutral countries.
- (e) In order to prevent reparation from furnishing a pretext for rehabilitation of the German economy, this Government favors a short reparation period, preferably five years and in any event not over ten.
- (f) The United States will not wish to receive labor services as reparation. It is the policy of this Government that labor supplied by Germany for reparation should be recruited primarily from Nazi groups. It is anticipated, however, that you will probably be unable to obtain agreement with this policy. This Government will in any event insist that Nazi labor should be segregated from general reparation labor and that the latter be obliged to serve for only a short time and under safeguards.
- (q) It is anticipated that the representatives of the U.S.S.R. will press for the definitive establishment of the total sum of the reparation obligation and for agreement on detailed schedules of reparation deliveries even in the absence of knowledge of the extent to which the German industrial plant will have been destroyed at the conclusion of hostilities. If a definite sum is agreed upon, it is of prime importance that it should be low enough not to interfere with sharp restriction of German production for export of metals, machinery, chemicals and electrical equipment, as part of a program of economic The combination of reparation exactions and economic disarmament measures imposed on Germany should be such as to leave Germany with enough means to provide low subsistence standard for her population, without outside relief. Any agreement on detailed schedules should be made conditional on the extent of damage to the German industrial plant, and such schedules should be subject to revision whenever they are found, in actual practice, to be excessive.
- (h) It is not the objective of the United States, however, to prevent reparation deliveries until the facts concerning extent of destruction are known or until there is final agreement on apportionment of reparation payments. It is accordingly suggested that one of the first tasks of the Reparation Commission be the formulation of a plan for the establishment of an interim advisory body to recommend the allocation of such commodities and equipment as the military authorities shall determine to be available for removal from Germany. Records should be kept of all deliveries made on reparation account under the interim arrangement and such deliveries should be made without prejudice to the final allocation of reparation shares.

The reparation program will be intimately related to the question of economic disarmament of Germany and to the restitution of property looted by Germany from Allied Nations. Discussion of these two matters will take place in the European Advisory Commission in London concurrently with the discussion of the reparation question at Moscow. In order to provide for the proper integration of reparation policy with policies in these related fields, it will be necessary that the Department and Ambassador Winant in London be kept fully informed as to the progress of the work of the Reparations Commission.

1027. In a talk with Maisky ³¹ yesterday I told him that Dr. Lubin was ready to leave shortly for Moscow. He asked whether I knew when the British were coming. I could give him no information on this and as he had none, he seemed puzzled why Lubin should come before the British. I would appreciate being informed what information the Department has regarding the British plans and also the plans of the French, now that they are to be admitted. I suggest that Lubin and his party do not come to Moscow at least until the British. I request that I be urgently informed whether he is leaving on the 10th as I am now insisting that his quarters be available on that assumption.

The Russians have shown little willingness to implement a number of the Crimea decisions and I therefore see no reason why we should show eagerness in expediting decisions on reparations, which is one subject to which the Soviet Government is most anxious to get us committed. I recommend that Lubin be instructed, that he should, of course, work earnestly in studying and analyzing Maisky's figures, but to indicate no opinion or take no commitment until the United States Government decides as a matter of over-all policy what position we wish to take on this question in which the Soviet Union is most anxious to get our cooperation. On the other hand, in his studies he should show at all times a sympathetic approach towards the Soviets' desire to obtain large reparations from Germany.^{31a}

2663. From Lubin. Concerning the problem of restitution, I have read your cables 3141 of March 27 and 2107 of March 1.32

I am very much disturbed by the suggestion that discussions on restitution should not be raised in Moscow. Personally I cannot see how it will be possible completely to separate the two problems, particularly in so far as plant, equipment and productive facilities are concerned. I can readily see how we can separate the restitution of art objects and financial securities from reparations. To handle all aspects of restitution independently in London through the EAC, however, might involve conflict of authority and all sorts of difficulties particularly in those instances where machinery may be found in a plant which it may be decided to move to a liberated area as part of reparations.

In so far as productive equipment is concerned I urgently recommend that the policy suggested in the Department cable number 418 of January 18, 1945 under paragraph 3a be accepted by the E.A.C. This paragraph, as you remember, recommends that it be definitely provided that the restitution commission should be a sub-commission of the Reparations Commission. This should not require postponement of establishment by E.A.C. of a restitution commission, and, in practical effect it is not likely that there would be any real difficulty on the principles to be followed by a restitution commission so far as works of art and securities are concerned. It would mean that so far as problems of plant or plant facilities are involved, the decisions of the Restitution Commission would be recognized as being subject to over-all reparation policy. I understand that the Department's reparation document in any event always contemplated that the right to obtain restitution of such identifiable looted property as machinery and rolling stock would be subject to decisions based on over-all necessity. A reparation decision to transfer a plant to one claimant should not, in other words, be frustrated by the absolute right of another claimant to remove a vital and irreplaceable machine, which is a minor part of such plant.

The one thing that I wish to avoid is conflict of authority and possible difficulties in the future when the actual transfer of reparations items take place. I cannot see how such difficulties can be avoided if the restitution of productive equipment is handled by a body independent of the Reparations Commission.

³² Latter not printed.

On the other hand, they can be avoided by explicit agreement that the operating Restitution Commission which will presumably eventually be set up in Germany will both organizationally and in operational authority be a body subsidiary to the similar operating Reparation Commission.

Department concurs in above. [Lubin.]

3470. For Despres ³³ from Knapp. ³⁴ Following is summary of British views on work of Reparation Commission elicited in informal conversations with Turner, ³⁵ Hall-Patch and Playfair. ³⁶

The British think of the Commission as an ad hoc chartering body which within a period of months should draw up a basic reparation program for submission to member governments and then dissolve. They appear to contemplate rather vaguely a permanent commission with much wider alien representation which would consult with the occupation authorities in Germany in the implementation of the program. They regard the Commission's work as of utmost importance and plan to send a very strong technical mission; for example, both Turner and Playfair will probably go, although they recognize that there will be most pressing demands for their services by London in the coming months during which the control machinery will be set up and commence functioning in Germany. At the same time, the British hope to be able to circumscribe the agenda at Moscow rather closely. In particular, they would prefer to see other basic elements in the economic treatment of Germany, notably policy with respect to economic security, negotiated in London through EAC. They recognize, however, the very great difficulty of so confining the Moscow discussions or alternatively of reconciling and harmonizing separate negotiations in Moscow and in London.

The British are anxious to hear more about the constitution of the United States Mission and Hall-Patch expressed the hope that Mission might travel by way of London and have some preliminary discussions with the British here.

The British are much concerned at the anomalous absence of France from the Commission and appear to hope that something can be done about it, especially in view of the obvious impact upon the reparation program or [of] the French proposals for economic partition in the west.

The British appear to be quite satisfied to accept Russia's proposal for her share in reparation,³⁷ but seem firmly convinced that the total sum proposed by Russia cannot be extracted within a 10 year period. They are of course particularly critical of the extravagant Russian estimate of the value of capital equipment which might be removed. When this figure has been written down to a fraction of the Russian estimate [apparent omission]. The balance, according to British views, can only be paid by a prostrate Germany within 10 years if a deliberate policy of restoring Germany's industrial strength is pursued. In short, the British believe that a program of reparation from current output on this scale conflicts with economic security objectives. It appears that British experts, particularly Playfair, drafted a very strong statement on this subject at the time of the Yalta Conference which was approved by the War Cabinet and read out at one of the Yalta sessions by Mr. Churchill.³⁸

The British also point out that until measures of territorial truncation and partition are decided upon it is impossible to judge the burden of a given reparation demand. The judgment described above is based on the assumption that Germany will remain intact, except for East Prussia and Upper Silesia.

The British are much concerned that value of labor services is excluded from the Russian formula. They fear that this exclusion will encourage unbridled demands for German labor.

The British are also at a loss to explain the inclusion in the Yalta protocol of reference to shares in German industry as a medium for reparation.³⁹ They have given considerable study to this proposed solution for reparation and economic security problems and have completely rejected it on grounds familiar to us. Turner suggested the possibility however, that if a definite sum for reparation is fixed and if it proves impracticable to attain this amount over a 10 year period, delivery of some kind of German securities with some pro-

The reference above to French proposals for economic partition in the west is not meant to imply that the British have any clear idea what these proposals are. Apparently the French have been unable thus far to present a coherent proposal, and the British believe that there is a cleavage of this issue between the French military and French civilian element. deal with return of identifiable property taken by Germans is being discussed in EAC and that early consideration by the Reparations Commission in Moscow of interim program and machinery for reparation exports is expected. The Department lays stress on its desire to retard crystallization of independent policies in advance of agreement with the Russians.

I have no desire to enter into the question of what supplies it may be desirable to remove from Germany to other areas of western Europe. which is clearly a responsibility of SHAEF. I do wish to stress, however, that we would only be penalizing ourselves if we were to go on the assumption that by voluntarily restricting our own policies in these matters we could exercise any influence on the policies of the Russians during this interim period. We have no reason to doubt that the Russians are already busily removing from Germany without compunction anything which they find it to their advantage to remove. We have heard of numerous examples of this sort of practice. many instances such removals are probably considered by the Russians as restitution, although there is no evidence that the items removed are restricted to those which can be proved to have been previously removed from USSR. Red Star, official press organ of the Red Army, has made it clear furthermore, that Russian soldiers are to regard material treasures captured in Germany as state property and that there will be no hesitation in turning the productive facilities of the occupied territory at once to Russian uses. There is little that is reprehensible or even surprising in this; but the point I wish to emphasize is that the Russians do not dream of placing any restraints on their policies in this respect out of a fastidious regard for possible further international engagements, and we would accordingly not be justified in assuming that any forebearance on our side would serve to retard the crystallization of an independent Russian policy along these lines.

Nor do I consider that we would be justified, from the standpoint of American interests, in banking on the achievement of early agreement with the Russians concerning restitution and reparations. While the establishment of a Restitution Commission may indeed be under discussion in EAC I am told by the British that that body has not met since the end of January and I do not have the impression here that the Russian interest in the establishment of such a commission is sufficient[ly] lively to warrant hope that it will be functioning at any early date. As far as the Reparation Commission is concerned it is not expected that its work will be completed in the near future and furthermore it is only to make recommendations to the respective governments. Therefore the crystallization of our policy in the interim period should not be delayed awaiting the results of the Commission's work.

Altogether, therefore, I do not think that SHAEF should go on the assumption that the interim period which must elapse before agreement can be reached on these two questions with the Russians will be brief; and I think we must reckon that as long as it lasts Russian action with respect to the removal of property of all sorts from Germany will be governed solely by what Moscow conceives to be the interests of the Soviet Union.

816. ReEmbs 1003, April 1, 5 p.m. This Government is glad to learn that the Soviet Government considers it expedient to include a French representative in the Reparation Commission. Please inform Soviet authorities that since Commission will be established in Moscow we will expect them to extend the invitation to the French in behalf of the participating Governments.

With respect to the inclusion of representatives of other countries in the Commission, it is the view of this Government that the membership of the Commission should be identical with that of the European Advisory Commission which is concerned with related questions. Other states could be invited to send representatives to sit with the Commission when matters of direct concern to them are under discussion as is the case with EAC. This Government considers that it would not be equitable to invite additional states to participate as full initial members unless all states concerned were to be included.

US Government hopes that before questions of direct concern to Poland are raised in the Commission, the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity will have been established.⁴⁵

Please communicate substance of foregoing to Molotov.

London, April 8, 1945—midnight. [Received April 9—5 a. m.]

3590. Comea 211. For Mr. Lubin. After careful consideration of your message, Department's 2663, April 5, 7 p. m., and after reviewing ⁴⁵ For documentation on this subject, see vol. v, pp. 110 ff.

Department's instructions on restitution, I believe there is no insuperable problem involved in working on reparation in Moscow and on restitution in the EAC. Discussing restitution separately from reparation may actually facilitate reaching an agreement in principles and preliminary machinery of restitution along lines advocated by the Department in its 418, January 18, midnight, its 1220, February 16, midnight, and its 1795, March 8, midnight. Early working agreement also appears urgent to the military now burdened with conflicting claims for restitution and to liberated United Nations.

I have always understood that any restitution commission would be closely linked with the Reparation Commission when established. Within Germany the four power control machinery will in any case have operational responsibility for giving effect to both restitution and reparation programs.

As you have noted the Foreign Office also hopes to reach an early agreement on restitution. It is not clear whether the French will be ready to discuss restitution in EAC if they do not participate in the Moscow talks. The Russians have not taken a position on the separate discussion of restitution.

Your message makes particular reference to 2 types of cases on borderline between restitution and reparation: 1, a case in which it is better to leave a looted machine in situ in order not to disrupt a larger plant of which it forms an essential part; 2, transfer of an identified looted object to a reparation claimant instead of returning it to the government of the owner claimant. In the first case, the Allied Control authorities in Germany would have power to defer removal; an Allied Government could also defer its return pending appeal to the restitution commission. In the second case, the good grace with which an owner claimant would relinquish his claim in favor of a reparation claimant would depend on whether agreement had been reached on an overall ratio for balancing damage recovered thru restitution against damage made good thru reparation.

One approach broadly stated to the general question of compensation is to lump both restitution and reparation claims in one account, treating all property found in the enemy country whether looted property or not as a single fund for meeting reparation claims according to a single agreed ration. Under this concept a restitution program would deal only with return of unique cultural objects. A different approach is to attempt to restore to owner claimants (or their governments) as much looted property as practicable particularly productive equipment leaving it to reparation to balance out inequities between restitution-receiving countries. I have understood that the second approach to restitution is advocated by the Department.

3629. ReDepts 1220, February 26 [16],47 paragraphs 1 and 2.

- 1. In regard to the alteration in the United Kingdom restitution memorandum reported in Embassy's 648, January 18, Coulson 48 told Mosely and Penrose informally that United Kingdom officials agree that the return of property which has been the subject of official sequestration by Germany should be dealt with directly by the governments representing the former owners. The alteration of paragraph 7(1) of the restitution memorandum does not imply any change in this position.
- 2. United Kingdom officials are giving further consideration to the question whether a rule should be established to return looted property to the government having jurisdiction over the sites from which the property was taken (reDepts 418, January 18) 3(b) and the question whether the Commission should make binding determinations of the respective rights of Allied Governments concerning property in dispute (reDepts 418, January 18) 3(d). It does appear that United Kingdom officials conceive of a restitution body as adjudicating claims of title rather than determining original location. We will inform the Department of the results of further consideration of these points by United Kingdom officials as soon as possible.

1110. In conversation with Vyshinski ⁴⁹ this afternoon I told him that Lubin and his staff were ready to leave for Moscow but were awaiting word as to the British plans. Our latest information indicated that the British would be ready to leave around first of May. I then informed him that I had written Mr. Molotov today a letter ⁵⁰ in accordance with Department's 816, April 7, 7 p. m. regarding the extension by the Soviet Government of an invitation to the French and expressing our views regarding Yugoslav and Polish participation at this time and that of other interested nations.

Vyshinski said that although he had not been authorized to discuss this question formally with me it was his feeling that the time had come to invite the Yugoslavs and the Poles to Moscow to participate in the reparations discussions. They had suffered more and therefore had greater rights. I said that we believed that there would be difficulty with other western European nations if all were not invited at the same time. I referred to Norwegian and Dutch losses during the war, especially shipping, to their contribution to the war effort and stated that we did not wish to differentiate between Germany's enemies. Vyshinski maintained that Poland had suffered most and had made a greater contribution to the war effort than Norway and the Netherlands. He stated that "he believed his Government would insist that Poland and Yugoslavia should not be placed in a worse position than France" in so far as reparations were concerned.

I stated the question of Polish participation at this time involved political considerations and said that I hoped that the Soviet Government would not press for Polish participation until the next new Polish Government had been formed. Vyshinski maintained that because of the proximity of Poland to Germany it could be of great help in the reparations discussions; in any event they would not hinder them. He made it quite clear that the Soviet Government would press for Polish and Yugoslav participation in the discussions.

I emphasized the importance of the four nations now participating in the EAC first coming to agreement on the basic questions of reparations such as the amount and character before bringing into the discussion other nations. I pointed out certain overlapping questions as between the Reparation Commission and the European Advisory Commission.

From this conversation I cannot say whether the Soviet Government will extend an invitation to the French unless the Yugoslavs and Poles are included.⁵¹ Under these circumstances I strongly recommend that Lubin does not leave Washington until these matters are settled to our satisfaction.

3781. Comea 216. At the close of last night's meeting of the EAC the French representative distributed to the members a statement urging immediate negotiation on problems of restitution. Full text by air.⁵²

Summary of French statement. Referring to United Kingdom, French and United States memoranda on restitution (EAC papers 44/28, 53 45/3, 54 44/31 55 and 45/22 56) and to press reports of large stocks of gold and art works uncovered by United States forces in Germany, Massigli 57 urged EAC to agree urgently on general principles to be adopted in regard to restitution. End of Summary.

In the discussion the Soviet Representative asked for certain clarifications of the concept of restitution. He asked if restitution covered both property taken by force and property handed over voluntarily to the Germans by persons and organizations; if both state and private property were included; and if restitution covered the subject of compensation for property not found and recovered. In reply Strang stressed the need for limiting restitution to return of identifiable specific objects, and for returning objects to the governments rather than to individual owners. Massigli brought out briefly the French view that restitution should be extended to cover replacement. It was agreed to discuss restitution at the next meeting of the Commission April 16.

determined by the extent of the devastation suffered by a particular country. The U.S., the U.K., the USSR, and France are the four countries which will be responsible for the occupation and control of Germany. Since these four powers will be primarily responsible for the execution of the reparations program it seems appropriate that they should be responsible for the initial formulation of the program. Moreover, it does not seem to us that the inclusion of France in the Moscow discussions need place Yugoslavia and Poland in a "worse position than France" insofar as allocation of reparations are concerned if this was what Vyshinski meant to imply. On the contrary, it seems to us that there would be a far greater likelihood of discrimination in this regard if certain of the Allied countries not participating in the occupation of Germany were included in the discussions and others excluded on some arbitrary basis of differences in degree of devastation suffered.

The Department suggests that you discuss this question again with the Soviet Government on the basis of the considerations cited above.⁵⁸ Lubin has requested us to advise you that he will not leave until

1. Although there was apparent agreement on the point that restitution may be worked out in EAC on the terms suggested in Department's 2663 April 5, I am disturbed by the last paragraph of your reference telegram.

I fully agree that all property in enemy country should not be lumped together for reparations purposes. On the other hand while the Department's policy has been to advocate restitution of all identifiable looted property (subject to qualifications known to you) I understand that the Department still deems it desirable that the restitution of productive equipment should be treated as a separate category and should be limited by reparations principles. While productive equipment like other looted property may be considered in EAC, it should be borne in mind that the problems of possible conflict with or subordination to reparations principles are particularly acute where such equipment is concerned. For this reason as well as the possibility that on the basis of the French views restitution of such property is likely to merge into replacement or even into reparations in kind, the principle of the restitution of large amounts of productive equipment should be avoided as far as possible.

- 2. Is it possible for you to judge possibility that Russians may object to separate discussion of restitution in EAC? This possibility would be relevant to preparations for Moscow talks.

- 1. Coulson in a personal conversation informed Penrose that United Kingdom officials have considered the points concerning United Kingdom views on restitution which Mosely and Penrose informally raised.
- 2. United Kingdom officials, he said, now agree that a restitution commission cannot be charged with the determination of individual ownerships since this would necessitate placing the commission above national courts of justice. They agree that the objective of a restitution commission should be to determine to which government's jurisdiction of a given object should be restored, after which individual claims would be made in each case through the courts of that government.
- 3. United Kingdom officials agree that in practice this will generally lead to the restoration of looted property to the situs from which it was taken but they would prefer not to adopt a specific provision to that effect. They point out that dispute may arise not only on ownership but also in some cases on the situs from which certain types of property were taken. In such cases they consider it to be the function of a restitution commission to obtain agreement as to which government is to undertake the responsibility of deciding the individual ownership. They believe that if the provisions are drafted in fairly general terms, the prospects of obtaining such agreement will be maximized, since the commission would not be bound in every case to resolve the question of situs where evidence was conflicting, and might find it easier to obtain agreement on some other basis.
- 4. In regard to the questions which we raised on the provision in the United Kingdom memorandum for making the decisions of the commission final and binding upon governments, Coulson agreed that the first part of paragraph 6 of the memorandum will need to be redrafted. He said that the United Kingdom did not propose to prepare any further paper on the subject to put into EAC but would agree to the necessary amendments to the memorandum during the discussions in EAC. He is himself starting to redraft paragraph 6.

Washington, April 27, 1945-7 p. m.

- 3315. Reurtel 3781, April 13, Comea 216. It is noted that the question of looted gold may come up in the EAC discussions on restitution. The gold question may be accentuated by the discovery of the Reichsbank gold by the Third Army. For your guidance, the Department's views are as follows:
- (1) The Gold Declaration of February 22, 1944 ⁶² indicated explicitly that United Nations subscribing thereto would not recognize the German title to gold taken from the occupied countries.
- (2) The reparation documents prepared in the Department, of which you have copies, indicated that looted gold found in Germany would not be subject to restitution but would be prorated. (See final report of Interdivisional Reparation Committee, ECEFP D-19/44,63 Part 2, page 10; and Summary: Report on Reparation, Restitution, et cetera, ECEFP D-37/44,64 page 11 para (g)).

⁶³ Not printed.

⁴ Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 287, 295.

- (3) It seems necessary to revise the views of the Department as expressed in the reparation documents, since the public announcement that transfers of gold would be regarded as invalid would seem to mean that looted and identifiable gold found in Germany is still regarded as the property of the persons or countries from whom it was taken. It does not seem politically or otherwise feasible to attempt to prorate gold which is thus declared to be the property of Allied countries.
- (4) For purposes of your discussions with EAC, therefore, you should adhere to the principle that gold, like other property, is subject to restitution if identifiable. However, it seems important to make the point that in this case especially restitution should be limited to the returning of identifiable looted property and should not be extended to cover the replacement of looted gold by gold which cannot be identified as having been the property of the country in question. Since the application of the restitution principle as above defined may result in one country recovering its stock of gold while another does not, Department believes gold recovered in Germany should be presumed to be unidentifiable unless convincing evidence to the contrary can be presented.

You should use any of the arguments in Department's telegrams 816 and 856 69 which you deem appropriate, reiterating especially that your Government sees no reason why any of the United Nations other than members of the German Control Commission should be included in the first instance in the Reparations Commission or why preference should be shown to any one nation which has suffered at the hands of Germany. Hall-Patch, in a conversation with Penrose this afternoon, expressed his personal agreement with the suggestion that the United Kingdom Delegation to the Reparations Commission should not leave for Moscow until the question of the composition of the Commission has been settled, and that its time of departure should be arranged to coincide with that of the United States delegation. He added that he would have to clear the matter with Ministers but he was almost certain that they would agree (reDepts 3347, April 28, 7 p. m.⁷⁰).

Dated April 7 and April 13, pp. 1192 and 1196, respectively.</sup>

- 2. Hall-Patch said that United Kingdom officials consider it to be essential to concentrate first on obtaining agreement among the four controlling powers before bringing in any of the Allies. During this stage Hall-Patch thinks it would be undesirable to invite any other European Allies to Moscow. Since reparation affects all the other Allies in some degree so would be difficult to invite one or a few without inviting all of them. When four-power agreement is reached the question will arise what machinery for consultation with the other Allies shall be adopted to discuss the agreement with them and to decide (a) allocation among them of the overall allocation to be made available to them, (b) the organization and timing of deliveries. For both (a) and (b), Hall-Patch said, there must be some form of machinery on which all the Allies concerned are fully represented. For (b) he thinks that semi-permanent machinery will be necessary. Though the control authorities will deal with the extraction of reparation from Germany they cannot by themselves determine the organization of deliveries at the receiving end. As regards (a) he doubts whether allocation between the other Allies should be dealt with on the body about to sit in Moscow. Possibly, he added, it can be done on the body that will have to be set up under (b), but these matters will have to be considered carefully.
- 3. The conclusion from this conversation is that it seems probable that the United Kingdom will agree with all the points mentioned in Department's 3347, April 28 including the points raised in Department's 970 to Moscow with the exception of the last sentence in the penultimate paragraph of Department's 970 to Moscow. The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, May 3, 1945—1 p. m. [Received May 3—12:05 p. m.]

1448. I note from a recent information telegram that a new directive on German reparations is being completed. The following tentative conclusions on Russian attitude toward reparations, based on what we have seen thus far of Soviet practices in general and reparations practices in particular may be useful to the Department in this connection. They are, of course, open to revision in the light of subsequent experience; and they refer to probable actual Soviet practices rather than what the Russians may be induced to agree to on paper.

- 1. By the time any reparations settlement can be arrived at a considerable portion of existing German assets will already have been removed from the Soviet zone in the guise of war trophies or otherwise. All available evidence from the Balkan countries and from areas already occupied by the Russians in Germany plainly shows that the Soviet Government intends to proceed unilaterally regardless of existence or non-existence of a reparations agreement in removing industrial plants, equipment and materials in enemy countries to which it has access and which it feels might be useful to the economy of the Soviet Union or satellite areas.
- 2. We will probably never be able to obtain really detailed or reliable information concerning these removals. Soviet reluctance to disclose information regarding economic operations by Soviet authorities is rooted in both tradition and policy and has been amply apparent both in the experience of this Embassy and in the discussions for the establishment of various inter-Allied economic controls in Europe. Attempts by the Commission to determine or control Soviet actions in the Soviet zone of occupation will probably meet with opposition and suspicion on the Russian side. Supervisory activities by representatives of the Commission in the Soviet zone, if permitted at all, will be obstructed and such representatives will not readily be granted freedom of movement and access to information.
- 3. The Russians will consent to make available reparations deliveries from their zone to Western countries only, if at all, on a strictly quid pro quo basis. They will regard the Reparations Commission primarily as an agency for strengthening Soviet economy at the expense of defeated enemy countries. They will insist that the sacrifices of the Soviet Union and Soviet satellite countries in eastern Europe have far outweighed those of the Western countries. They will probably take the position that the Commission should concentrate on the question of how to make available deliveries from the Western zones to Eastern Europe. Unless the latter are withheld as a bargaining lever the Russians will probably balk at agreeing to any important deliveries from their zone.
- 4. If counter deliveries are worked out on this basis the Russians will demand a considerable disproportion in their favor. This again will be based on the thesis of greater sacrifice of the Eastern European countries.
- 5. The Russians may be expected to accept enthusiastically the principle of dismantling German industrial equipment since that is one of their basic war aims. They will not await a reparations settlement before taking steps in this direction in their own zone and will not readily submit, at a later date, to guidance from any Reparations Commission in this respect. A good deal of the industrial plant in the Soviet zone which has not been destroyed during the war may prove to have been already dismantled by the time a permanent reparations body begins to function. Again there may be difficulties in getting accurate information on this subject. It is possible that the Russians make here a sharp distinction—and demand that the Reparations Commission do likewise—between the areas which have already been allotted to Poland by the Soviet authorities and the remaining territory of Germany.71

6. The Russians can hardly be expected to accept our thesis that reparations should be derived principally from German assets existing at the termination of hostilities. They have made clear their determination that the standard of living in defeated countries is not to surpass that of the victors. Since it will not be possible for years to raise the Soviet standard of living to that of central Europe, the implementation of this policy will mean the imposition of heavy tribute, open or disguised, both during and after the period of Soviet occupation.

Moscow, May 4, 1945—2 p. m. [Received May 4-11: 30 a. m.]

1458. ReDeptel 970, April 28, 7 p. m. Roberts received yesterday a letter dated May 2 from Vyshinski on the subject of reparations. This letter is in reply to one addressed to Vyshinski on April 14 by Clark Kerr, voicing objection to the inclusion on Reparations Commission of representatives of Poland [and] Yugoslavia in the Commission.

In his reply Vyshinski takes strong stand in favor of inclusion of these countries, stating that the Soviet Government deems that Polish and Yugoslav representatives "must take their places on the Commission from the very beginning of its work simultaneously with the representative of France." He then points out that this question, especially in view of recent events, [is] assuming a particularly urgent and acute character. He finds it urgently necessary to work out a plan on the basis of the principles adopted at the Crimea "in order to avoid possible divergencies in action on this question . . . ⁷³ which would render still more difficult the solution of the already sufficiently complicated economic questions of postwar Europe." He ends by requesting the British Government to appoint its representative without delay and thus not to delay initiation of the work of the Commission.

I have not yet received a similar letter. My letter of April 30 ⁷⁴ sent to Vyshinski in pursuance to Department's telegram under reference probably reached him just about the time his letter to Roberts was being drafted. It may have caused him to delay final drafting of a similar reply to Ambassador Harriman's letter of April 9 ⁷⁵ on this subject. In any case, I expect that I will receive shortly a letter similar to that addressed to Roberts.

The Acting Secretary of State to President Truman

Washington, May 7, 1945.

Dear Mr. President: After several very helpful talks between Mr. Edwin W. Pauley and officers of this Department, the purpose of this letter is to bring to your personal attention, with great respect and in full deference to your own wishes and decision, certain considerations regarding Mr. Pauley's mission which we believe to be of fundamental importance. In the absence of Secretary Stettinius, ⁷⁶ I should be remiss were I to fail to reflect to you what I know to be his views, so that you may have these views before you in coming to whatever decision you may think best.

As I have said to Mr. Pauley and wish to assure you, there is no personal issue whatever involved in this matter. Mr. Pauley has assured us of his intention to work in close harmony and cooperation with the Secretary of State on a basis of mutual helpfulness, especially in matters involving negotiation with foreign countries or having to do with the implementation of our foreign policy under your direction.

The purpose of this letter, therefore, is to lay before you certain principles of organization and procedure which, as I have said, the Secretary of State regards as of fundamental importance in undertaking the responsibilities and in carrying out the duties, under your direction, with which he is charged.

In the letter of April 27 ⁷⁷ Mr. Pauley is designated as your personal representative to represent and assist you in exploring, developing and negotiating the formulae and methods of exacting reparations from the aggressor nations in the current war; to represent you in this matter in dealing with other interested nations; to represent the United States and the President personally as a member of the German Reparations Commission; and on all matters within his jurisdiction to report to you personally.

77 Quoted in letter of September 14 from Mr. Pauley to the Secretary of State,

I am sure that you would be the first to recognize the harmful results of any implication that these instructions were intended to remove from the responsibilities of the Secretary of State the supervision, under your direction, of negotiations with foreign nations in this important field, or the formulation for your consideration of the policies and methods to be employed, which must of necessity be closely integrated with other phases of our foreign policy. The President has, in fact, charged the Secretary of State with the direct responsibility and duty of implementing, under your direction, the Crimean agreements of which the subject of reparations is an important part.

The question then inevitably arises whether the Secretary of State, unless our representative on the Reparations Commission is directed to act under the supervision of the Secretary, to report to him, simultaneously with such reports as you may wish Mr. Pauley to send directly to you, and to be guided by the Secretary's instructions subject to your direction, can properly and adequately fulfill the responsibilities and duties thus conferred upon him. Confusion has resulted in the past and would inevitably arise in future if there were to be any diffusion of the representation of the United States in dealing with foreign countries and in the formulation and supervision, under the President's direction, of the foreign relations of the United States.

These responsibilities, as they relate to the post-defeat treatment of Germany including reparations, the Secretary of State has been carrying out in close cooperation with the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments and the Foreign Economic Administration under an authorization from President Roosevelt, which you reaffirmed on April 27 at the time the draft "Directive to Commander-in-Chief of United States Forces of Occupation Regarding Military Government in Germany" was submitted to you for your approval.⁷⁸

As in the case of all Ambassadors, Mr. Pauley is the personal representative of the President. Yet unless, as in the case of other Ambassadors, Mr. Pauley's negotiations with foreign countries were to be carried on under the direct supervision of the Secretary of State, interpreting the foreign policy of the United States as formulated by the Secretary under the direction of the President, to whom the

Should the foregoing considerations meet with your approval, you may wish to consider the insertion of a clarifying clause in your instructions to Mr. Pauley. If however your decision is to leave the letter of instructions to Mr. Pauley as it is, please be assured that your wishes will be loyally and cheerfully observed by all of us in the Department of State.79

Faithfully yours.

Memorandum by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State, of Conversation Held at San Francisco, May 7, 1945

Present: Mr. Molotov 80 Ambassador Harriman

Mr. Bohlen Ambassador Gromyko 81 Mr. Pavlov 82

Mr. Molorov After an exchange of amenities, Mr. Molotov inquired whether Mr. Pauley expected to leave for Moscow. He added that his Government attached the greatest importance to the work of the Reparation Commission and hoped it would soon get started.

Mr. Pauley replied that he hoped it would be soon and that studies were being made in the State Department and elsewhere and a report had been submitted to the President on the subject of Reparations.83

Mr. Molorov remarked that the British had not yet appointed their representative.

Mr. Pauley then said there were a number of current pressing problems involving reparations which were facing us at this time. He said that because of our decision to have a world reparation policy for Germany in our zones of occupation, all demands and requests for Conference on International Organization.

⁷⁹ In memorandum of conversation dated May 7, Acting Secretary Grew stated that the President had read this letter when it was handed to him at their meetring that morning and then said that he would work the matter out before Mr. Pauley left (740.00119 EW/5-745).

So Mr. Molotov was Chairman of the Soviet Delegation to the United Nations

⁸¹ Andrey Andreyevich Gromyko, Soviet Ambassador to the United States, was a member of the Soviet Delegation to the United Nations Conference on International Organization.

⁸² Vladimir Nikolayevich Pavlov, Personal Secretary and Interpreter to Marshal Stalin, Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Soviet Union. See instructions for the U.S. Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations, May 18, p. 1222.

German material or equipment which our Commanders were receiving from other European countries had been refused since we felt it would be a mistake to pursue separate policies in the different zones of occupation.

Mr. Molorov replied that a good overall basis had been established in the Yalta Agreement and all that was necessary was for the Commission to get to work.

Mr. Pauley replied that he was familiar with the discussions at Yalta.

Mr. Molorov then said in that case Mr. Pauley was aware of the fact that the Soviet and American representatives at Yalta found it easy to agree but that there had been difficulties with the British.

Mr. Pauley said that he hoped that the Commission in Moscow could come to a complete agreement very quickly and then possibly move into Germany because there were a number of practical questions which could be best examined on the spot such as the problem of evaluation and the consideration of the minimum needs of the German civilian population. He, therefore, hoped that the meeting in Moscow could be completed quickly and the Commission adjourned to some mutually acceptable place in Germany.

Mr. Molorov said that he felt they should start in Moscow and get on with the implementation of the Crimea decision but that if the Commission then considered it desirable to proceed to Germany there would be no serious objection. He added, however, that he must again point out that the Commission had not even started its work in Moscow and inquired whether Mr. Pauley saw any difficulties in the way of the Commission getting to work.

Mr. Pauley replied that in so far as the U.S. Government was concerned there were no difficulties and he hoped that soon he could start for Moscow.

Ambassador Harriman mentioned the desire of the British and American Governments to have France represented on the Moscow Commission. He said that this was not only logical since France was to be a member of the Control Council for Germany, but he felt it would also speed the work very much since in Germany itself France would be involved as a member of the Control Council. If France was not represented at the first phase it would only mean that long explanations of what had happened in Moscow would have to be given to the French Government.

Mr. Molorov replied that the Soviet Government was not against French participation but felt that Poland and Yalta [Yugoslavia] had no less right to be represented than France. He added that in his opinion, it would be best to go forward on the original Crimea provision which provided for the three powers on the Moscow Commission.

Mr. Pauley then said that while in our zones we were adopting the principle of not allowing any German material which might fall in the category of reparations to be transferred from Germany, we had reports that in the Soviet Zone, German material and equipment were being moved to Russia.

Mr. Molorov said that he assumed that whatever was needed for the prosecution of the war was being taken.

Mr. Pauley said that now that the war in Europe was over he presumed that the need to remove this material and equipment would no longer be present.

Mr. Molorov said he did not think the need would stop as quickly as that and inquired whether the U.S. Government did not think it was important to the Soviet Union to keep up its war production. He added that the Soviet industry had suffered very greatly during this war.

Mr. Pauley replied that the U.S. also had great need since it still had the war in the Pacific to win but nevertheless for the sake of unified policy we had refrained from allowing any German material to be moved from our zone of occupation to other countries. He said he assumed from Mr. Molotov's remarks that there would be no objection, however, if the Commanders in our zone desired to remove material which could be used for the war.

Mr. Molorov said he assumed the U.S. Commanders were taking what they needed for war. He added that in regard to removal in the Soviet zone, he had no detailed information and, therefore, could not give any concrete answers on the subject. He added that he felt if the Commission could get to work quickly they could work out an agreed policy on this question of present removals which he personally felt was a very small matter.

Mr. Pauley in conclusion said that he hoped to leave as soon as he could complete the final work of preparation.

Moscow, May 8, 1945—midnight. [Received May 8—6:50 a. m.]

1516. ReEmbtel 1458, May 4, 2 p. m. Roberts has replied to Vyshinski's letter of May 2 stating that the Soviet Government is aware of the reasons which prevent the British Government from accepting a Polish representative on the Reparations Commission at this stage. Even if an acceptable Polish Government had been formed by the time the Commission met, the British Government could not agree to participate in the work of a commission where Poland and Yugoslavia were represented while other countries like Norway, Greece and the Netherlands, whose claims the British Government considered no less good, were excluded. The British Government accordingly adhered to its view that only the four powers who will be controlling Germany should have initial representation on the Commission.

1061. Pauley and Lubin are planning a hasty inspection of some of the industrial areas of Germany on their way to Moscow in order that they may have a realistic picture of what is available for reparations claims. They propose inviting Maisky to accompany them as well as the British representative on the Reparations Commission.

It is their belief that in order that the work of the Reparations Commission may yield the maximum results, it is necessary for them to visit all four zones under the direction of the Control Council that are to be occupied.

You are instructed to get in touch with Maisky and extend to him the invitation to accompany Pauley and Lubin. In discussing this with Maisky you should make it absolutely clear that Pauley and Lubin feel that they should also have an opportunity to get a quick picture of the conditions of the plants and equipment in all zones including that to be occupied by Soviet forces. Four or five advisers will accompany Pauley and Lubin on their trip of inspection. Their plans call for them to leave on or about May 20 for Paris. A similar invitation is being sent to the British representative on the Reparations Commission.

⁸⁴ This message was repeated to London as Department's telegram 3763, with the addition of the following paragraph: "Please extend similar invitation to British representative, making same explanation as Moscow is instructed to make to Maisky." (740.00119 EW/5-1345)

am not wiring about them officially for fear that I might unwittingly put statements on record which are counter to your views. I hope you will not mind, however, if I put my thoughts frankly before you in this manner for whatever use you can make of them.

- 1. Preparations for arrival of Reparations Commission. In accordance with your message, Department's 1057, May 12, 6 p. m. 55 I will endeavor to see Maiski at once. I will also press the visa applications mentioned in Department's 1060, May 12, 7 p. m. 56 and will take up the proposed visit to Germany. I am afraid, however, that this will lead the Russians to think that we will give way on the admission of Poland to the Commission if they just hold tight. I believe our best chance of getting Russian concurrence to our views on the composition of the Commission would be to show no further interest in plans for the movement to Moscow and housing of our delegation until they come around on the question of participation.
- 2. Increase in size of reparations delegation. The increase in the size of this delegation to 30 people seems to me to indicate a certain misunderstanding as to the realities of this question. I gather from this that we are still proceeding on the expectation that we are going to sit down at a table with the Russians and work out a settlement on the basis of careful study and consideration of the various factors involved; and that out of this will arise detailed, realistic decisions which we can jointly put into effect. If Mr. Pauley comes over here with such expectations, his visit, in my opinion, will be dogged with frustration, will cause trouble for this mission, and will constitute a further burden on Soviet-American relations.

I strongly doubt that there can be any detailed joint study here of the real factors involved in the reparations settlement. The Russians are going to advance global demand, probably in staggering figures, for payment and service to the Soviet Union, and they will ask that the lion's share of this come from the other zone [s] of occupation. Their demands will be formulated backstage among themselves, on the basis of considerations which will never be revealed to us, but which will certainly be political rather than economic. Any efforts on the part of foreign delegations to pull discussion down to a basis of economic equalities will be met with repetitious orations about what the Germans did to Russia. In the end, it will come down to a simple horse trade. How much are we going to make available to the Russians from our zones, and what price are we going to demand for it? These are points which we and the British ought to make up our minds about before we come here. Once we get here we shouldn't need any 30 people to drive the bargain with the Russians.⁸⁷

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, May 14, 1945—9 p. m. [Received 11:35 p. m.]

1578. Pursuant to instructions contained in Department's 1061, May 13, 1 p. m., I called on Maisky this afternoon and transmitted to him the invitation to accompany Pauley and Lubin on tour of German industrial areas. Maisky replied by raising questions about the purpose of the trip. What was it proposed he asked, that the participant in the tour should ascertain? The Crimean decisions for example, had foreseen the removal from Germany of certain German national property for the purpose of destroying Germany's military potential. Were the participants in the tour to examine German industrial plants from the standpoint of their possible removal or from the standpoint of their possible reconstruction? Before we could decide what plants should be removed, we would have to decide what constituted Germany's military potential.

I said that while I did not have instructions on this point I thought I could speak for those concerned in our Government in saying that there was no intention that the persons participating in the tour should be limited in their examination by any specific questions. I said I was sure that the tour would be entirely without prejudice to subsequent discussion of any and all questions relating to reparations in the Commission; that it was merely to give the members of the Commission a vivid first-hand impression of the physical facilities which st Ambassador Harriman sent his reply via Department telegram 1111, May 20, 11 p. m., to Moscow. The pertinent portions are here quoted: "The following are my brief comments on your numbered points. I will expand upon them when I return to Moscow: 1. As you now know, it has been decided to conduct the initial reparations discussion on the original tripartite basis in accordance with the agreement at Yalta and therefore there is no question of admitting Poland to these discussions. 2. I feel we have nothing to worry about in regard to the size of the reparations delegation. The principal point is that Mr. Pauley's instructions are very firm and while we may not reach any agreement I have no fears about us giving in." (740.00119 EW/5-1445) they would later have to discuss and of the conditions surrounding their possible use or removal; and that each member would be free to make such utilization as he cared to of his individual observations in the subsequent deliberations of the Commission itself.

Maisky inquired when the tour would begin and how long it would last. On this point too, I told him I had no definite information; that I assumed it would begin sometime between May 20 and the end of the month. I gave it to him as my guess, subject to confirmation from Washington, that it could be completed in 10 days or 2 weeks at the outside.

Maisky undertook to let me know his answer on this subject when he had had an opportunity to discuss it with his Government.

The talk then turned to the question of the delay in the convening of the Commission and to the question of its composition. Maisky expressed the view that it had been a mistake to introduce the question of widening the composition of the Commission after it had once been decided at the Crimea, and he reiterated the proposal recently made to the British that the Commission should undertake its work as a tripartite Anglo-American-Russian Commission, and that the question of the admittance of the French and other powers could be examined while the Commission was working.

I replied to this by repeating our view that it was desirable that the Commission should have the same composition as EAC, to which its work was closely related, and as the Control Council [in Berlin. I pointed out to him that the Control Council would have to work, as far as I knew, as a Council; that its decisions would require the assent of all the participating governments; that if the French Government were not represented on the Reparations] so Commission it might not be willing to recognize the decisions of that Commission in its own zone of occupation or to cooperate in making them valid for Germany as a whole through the Control Council. I said I thought if we were to have full cooperation of the French in this respect, it was desirable that they should have a part in forming the decisions in the execution of which they, as members of Control Council, would be asked to cooperate.

To this Maisky replied by asking me whether it had been decided what the French zone of occupation was to be. When I said that I was not informed on this point, he said that he thought it would be very small and implied that he did not think it was very important whether the French cooperated or not. He pointed out particularly that the French zone would probably include the Saar Basin and that the Saar industrial facilities would in point of fact revert to the French anyway, no matter what formal decisions might be taken.

⁸⁸ Bracketed insertion on basis of copy in Moscow Embassy files.

He implied by this that they were not so important from the standpoint of a reparations agreement. (I invite particular attention to these statements in connection with the German industrial districts which have been allotted to Poland in the east.)

Maisky showed considerable concern at the delay in the convening of the Commission and expressed the fear that if this delay continued, a number of the countries interested in receiving reparations from Germany would take unilateral action to get what they could. In this respect he mentioned particularly Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia. He thought it highly undesirable that this sort of thing should begin. I told him that I agreed with him thoroughly on this point, but thought the danger greater in the case of those countries which had zones of occupation in Germany than in the case of those which did not; I too felt it important, I said, that there should be an early overall preliminary agreement on German reparations which the Control Council in Berlin would be in a position to apply to all areas of Germany.

Maisky inquired as to whether Mr. Lubin and Mr. Pauley would be coming on to Moscow after their tour. I said I thought they would. He then returned to the question of the composition of the Commission and stressed the desirability of getting on with this. I pointed out that we were still waiting for a reply to Mr. Harriman's letter of April 9 89 and that the next move lay with them. Maisky did not say so directly but he made it evident that at the present time he had no authority to recede from the position they had taken and that further exchanges of notes would therefore not be helpful. Since I could see that he was wondering whether the plan of Mr. Pauley to arrive here in June would mean that we were prepared to open conversations on the tripartite basis, I told him, in parting, that I was sure that our Government hoped that by the time Mr. Pauley arrived we would have had opportunity to complete our discussions and come to an agreement on the composition of the Commission.

Sent to Department as 1578, repeated to London, for EAC, as 201, to Paris, for Murphy as 116.

I understand that both Mr. Pauley and Mr. Lubin informed you that it was their determined intention to conduct their negotiations on reparations matters in constant consultation and with the advice of the Secretary of State and in accordance with the foreign policy of the United States. I am further informed that they will undertake to transmit all requests for directives directly to the Secretary of State and will inform him in advance of any communications to me which have any bearing upon our foreign policy.

I can assure you that both gentlemen have the greatest desire to work in close harmony both with the Secretary of State and all other government agencies including the War Department which will be responsible for the administration of the United States zone of occupation and for representing the United States on the Control Council.90

Memorandum by the Chief of Counsel for the Prosecution of Axis Criminality (Jackson) to the United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations (Pauley) 91

[Washington, May 14, 1945.]

Re: Draft of Instructions.

A part of this draft affects the trial of war criminals. Section 4 from this point of view is open to serious objections.

Section 4 d provides that "compulsory labor service should be required only from war criminals and individuals definitely determined by appropriate process to be members of the Gestapo, the S.S., the Sicherheitsdienst 92 der S.S., leaders of the S.A., 93 or leading collaborators, supporters of and participants in the Nazi party or administration".

This subjects persons to compulsory labor service for mere membership in these organizations. That would make it farcical to conduct

⁸⁰ On May 15, the Acting Secretary of State transmitted President Truman's letter to the Secretary of State under a covering note in which he made the following comment: "While the arrangement now laid down may not be completely satisfactory to us, nevertheless I think we have gained a great deal and the fact that we have registered your position with regard to your responsibility the fact that we have registered your position with regard to your responsibility in matters of foreign policy will probably reflect upon such decisions as may be taken in future cases." (740.00119 EW/5-1445) trials concerning the conspiratorial character of those organizations or the guilt of their membership. The only purpose of a trial is to determine whether these organizations are of such a structure and character that membership should warrant punishment. All of this is prejudged by the instrument in question. 4 d should not go farther than to read substantially as follows:

"Compulsory labor should be required only from convicted war criminals and that for the period and in accordance with the conditions of their sentence." 94

Beyond this, it is not my business what may be done about reparation through use of labor. But as I said to you, I think the plan to impress great numbers of laborers into foreign service, which means herding them into concentration camps, will largely destroy the moral position of the United States in this war. As Harriman pointed out to us, the treatment of this labor is bound to be "appalling" by American standards. In a year or two, there will come drifting out of Russia tales of oppressive treatment of this labor, which I fear will be all too well-founded, and which in my judgment will arouse sharp condemnation by American sentiment, with serious results to those who have favored it. I feel sure that President Roosevelt's commitments at Yalta 95 did not contemplate the sort of thing that is now being considered. What the world needs is not to turn one crowd out of concentration camps and put another crowd in, but to end the concentration camp idea.96

been appointed and that no date has yet been fixed for the departure of the delegation.

- 2. We understand confidentially that United Kingdom officials have pressed for the appointment of the head of the delegation but the Prime Minister 98 will not move in the matter until Eden returns. Preoccupation with the election matters appears to be retarding this appointment since Ministers from whom the head would be selected may have to engage shortly in election campaigns. Hall-Patch will urgently press the matter on Ministers again and particularly on Eden when he returns.
- 3. Hall-Patch seemed somewhat surprised at the inquiry on the date of departure of the United Kingdom group. Following Penrose's conversation with him on April 30 (see Embassy's 4389, April 30, 8 p. m.) he obtained ministerial agreement that the United Kingdom will follow the same policy as the United States and put off the date of departure of the United Kingdom Delegation until the difference of view with the Soviet on the composition of the Reparation Commission has been resolved (see last paragraph of Department's 3347, April 28, 7 p. m.⁹⁹) Hall-Patch added that as far as he was aware there had been no indication of a change in the Soviet attitude.
- 4. As regards the proposed departure of Pauley, Lubin and a part of their staff from Washington on May 20 Hall-Patch said that some preliminary interchange of views between them and the United Kingdom group would be welcomed here, provided it could be done confidentially so as not to arouse Soviet suspicions. However, until the head of the United Kingdom group has been appointed, such interchanges would have to be carried on among officials only.
- 5. Hall-Patch emphasized that unless the proposed departure of Pauley, Lubin and their group from the United States can be carried out secretly, the chances are that the Soviet will put pressure at once on the United Kingdom Government to send its delegation to Moscow. The Soviet may also feel in such circumstances that it has a tactical advantage in the dispute over the composition of the Reparation Commission if the main part of the United States delegation is already on the way to Moscow. He asked what plans were being made regarding publicity or secrecy and whether it was practicable in any case to withhold knowledge of the departure of Pauley, Lubin and their party. It is clear that he feels considerable concern on this point.
- 6. We would appreciate a reply as soon as possible on the points raised in the immediately preceding paragraph.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, May 17, 1945—5 p. m. [Received May 17—1:40 p. m.]

- 4929. Department's 3763, May 13.1 It seems to us that it would be wise before we approach the Foreign Office for the purpose of inviting the UK representative to join Pauley and Lubin in "a hasty inspection of some of the industrial areas of Germany on their way to Moscow", to have the following points made clear.
- 1. Does the instruction in Department's 3763, May 13 represent a reversal of the instruction in Department's 3347, April 28, final paragraph; ² if so, it seems necessary that we should first notify the Foreign Office that such a reversal has been made and give reasons for it. Please note that at the request of the Department we asked the Foreign Office and they agreed to postpone the departure of the UK Delegation until our differences with the Soviet on the composition of the Reparations Commission had been resolved. (See last paragraph of Department's 3347, April 28, 7 p. m. together with Embassy's 4389, April 30, 8 p. m.) It seems from Hall-Patch's conversation with Penrose yesterday and from Moscow's 1578, May 14 to the Department that these differences have not been resolved.
- 2. After obtaining UK agreement to follow the US policy in these matters, we were disturbed to learn from Moscow's 1578, May 14 to the Department repeated to us as 201, May 14 that on instructions from the Department the Soviet have already been informed of the proposed date of departure of the US Delegation, though the UK have not been informed that the Department's plans to which the British agreed at the ministerial as well as the official level have been changed. This situation may be prejudicial to our efforts here to facilitate Foreign Office agreement with the Department's wishes.
- 3. A further question that seems to us to need clarification before we approach the Foreign Office is whether the Department is prepared to begin discussions in Moscow on a tripartite basis if the Soviet agree to withdraw their demand for participation by the Yugoslavs and the Lublin Poles ³ but at the same time refuse to agree to the inclusion of the French. We gather from Moscow's 1578, May 14 to the Department that Maisky personally seems to favor such a procedure, though officially the Soviet demand for the inclusion of the Yugoslavs and the Lublin Poles still stands.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan)

Washington, May 17, 1945—7 p. m.

1090. Reurtel 1578, May 14, 9 p. m. It is requested that you communicate to Maisky the following information with respect to (1) our present views concerning representation on the Reparation Commission, (2) purpose of the proposed trip of Pauley and Lubin to Germany and (3) approximate arrival date of Pauley and Lubin in Moscow.

In view of Soviet opposition to initial participation of France in the reparation discussions, we are prepared to begin such discussions on a tripartite basis. We continue, however, to regard the question of French participation as of key importance, and we expect that the issue will be given renewed consideration at an early stage in the reparation discussions. We remain of the view that unless France participates in the formulation of an agreed reparation program, the execution of the program on a coordinated basis within Germany may be seriously hampered by French opposition in the Control Council. Moreover, we do not consider French zone as of negligible economic importance, and we wish to avoid unilateral action with respect to reparation on the part of any of the Allied countries.

The purpose of Pauley's and Lubin's hasty inspection of German industrial areas is to obtain a quick, first-hand impression of German resources available for reparation claims, as a background for their discussions in Moscow.

Pauley and Lubin expect to devote about a week or ten days to this inspection tour and then to proceed at once to Moscow. They should arrive in Moscow in the first week of June. Their tour of German industrial areas will not be concerned with the problem of rehabilitating industrial plants.

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, May 18, 1945—5 p. m. [Received May 18—5 p. m.]

1649. At his request, I called on Maisky this afternoon.

Just prior to seeing him I received Dept's 1090, May 17, 7 p. m. Maisky began by handing me a note which set forth once more the Soviet position on the composition of the Commission, proposing that it undertake its work as a tripartite commission and leaving open the possibility of further discussion in the Commission itself of the question of composition. Substance of this communication is going forward by separate message. I told Maisky that we were prepared to begin the discussions on the tripartite basis and that I would give him a letter to this effect. I repeated the views stated in the second paragraph of the Depts telegram under reference.

Maisky then took up the question of the proposed visit and said that the Soviet Govt considered that a visit to Germany by the members of the Commission as a group would hardly be advantageous before the reparations discussions had begun. The Soviet Govt recognized the possibility, he said, that such a visit might be desirable at a later date when the framework of the Russian reparations agreement had been substantially completed by the members of the Commission, in accordance with the Crimea principles.

I told him that I thought that Mr. Pauley and Mr. Lubin would be making their own tour in any event, and gave him the information concerning the probable duration of the tour and their date of arrival in Moscow.

Sent to Dept as 1649; rptd to London as 209.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, May 18, 1945-8 p. m.

3948. Most of the points raised in your 4867, May 16, 4 p. m. and 4929, May 17, 5 p. m. have been dealt with in our 1090 to Moscow May 17, 7 p. m., repeated 3895 to London May 17, 7 p. m.

The decision to begin reparation discussions on tripartite basis was agreed to by Eden in conversation with Pauley at San Francisco.⁵ Eden also stated that he would inform Pauley promptly regarding their expected date of arrival in Moscow. In view of the foregoing, we are hopeful that appointment of the head of the British delegation and other arrangements for British delegation may go forward in such fashion as to permit the discussions to start in Moscow early in June. In the event of British acceptance of our invitation to join in quick tour of German industrial areas, this would undoubtedly provide opportunity for some informal exchange of views on reparation questions.

[Washington, May 18, 1945.]

- 1. It was agreed at the Yalta Conference that Germany must pay in kind for the losses caused by her to the Allied Nations in the course of the war. The primary purpose of the Reparation Commission should be the formulation of a general program for the exaction of substantial reparation and the establishment of the policies under which this program is to be implemented.
- 2. It is and has been fundamental United States policy that Germany's war potential be destroyed, and its resurgence as far as possible be prevented, by removal or destruction of German plants, equipment and other property.

While cooperating with the other powers in implementing the basic purposes of the Yalta Agreement, the U.S. representative will bear in mind that whatever plan is formulated by the Reparation Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Reparation Plan) should be in conformity with the economic and security objectives of this country with respect to Germany. The position of the United States on the various issues involved in this respect is summarized in the following paragraphs.

- 3. In determining the size and character of reparation in accordance with points a and b of paragraph 2 of the Reparation Protocol⁷ and the allocation thereof among the various claimant nations the following principles are advocated by this Government:
- a. The Reparation Plan should assist in the elimination of industrial capacity in Germany considered to be dangerous to the security of the United Nations.
- b. The Reparation Plan should aid in strengthening and developing on a sound basis the industries and trade of the devastated non-enemy countries of Europe and of other United Nations, and in raising the living standards of these countries.
- c. The reparation burden should be distributed in so far as practicable so as to impose equality of sacrifice upon, and result in an equal general standard of living for the German populations of each of the zones under the control of the respective occupying nations.
- d. This Government opposes any reparation plan based upon the assumption that the United States or any other country will finance

7 Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 983.

⁶ This document, prepared in the Informal Policy Committee on Germany and approved by President Truman on May 18, was designated IPCOG 2/2, to distinguish it from two earlier versions known as IPCOG 2 and IPCOG 2/1. IPCOG 2/1 had been approved by President Truman on May 10, but paragraph 4d was revised subsequent to consultation with Justice Jackson; see the May 14 memorandum by Mr. Jackson to Mr. Pauley, p. 1216.

directly or indirectly 8 any reconstruction in Germany or reparation by Germany.

e. The Reparation Plan should not maintain or foster dependence of other countries upon the German economy.

f. The Reparation Plan should not be of such a nature as to promote or require the building up of German economic capacity.

g. To the maximum extent possible, reparations should be taken from the national wealth of Germany existing at the time of collapse, with primary emphasis upon the removal of industrial machinery, equipment and plants, particularly the shipbuilding, metallurgical, machine tool producing, electrical machinery, and chemical industries (including all industries producing oil and oil products, synthetic nitrogen and synthetic rubber), ships, rolling stock, patents, copyrights, and German foreign exchange assets including investments abroad. Capacity for the production of component parts that enter into the production of the industries noted above should also be eligible for removal. Reparation in kind should not include arms, ammunition, and implements of war. (This Government favors the inclusion of German ocean-going merchant tonnage in the shipping pool until the end of the war against Japan and its division on some fair basis thereafter, and negotiations with other governments are inprogress on this subject.)

h. To the extent that for political reasons it may become necessary in the negotiations to agree that reparations be collected in the form of deliveries of goods from current production over a period of years, such goods should be of such a nature and in such amounts as not to require the maintenance of the German war potential or the continued dependence of other countries on Germany after reparations cease. Accordingly, recurring reparations, over a period of years, should be:

(1) As small as possible in relation to the reparations to be paid in the form of industrial plants and equipment; and

(2) Primarily in the form of raw materials and natural resources, and to the smallest extent possible in the form of manufactured products.

- i. The removal of plants and equipment shall take place regardless of the fact that they are owned in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, by United Nations nationals. Where plants or equipment which are owned in whole or in part by a United Nation national are to be so removed arrangements shall be made, if practicable and desired by the government of such national, for the owner to retain his interest in such plant and equipment after removal. If not practicable or so desired, Germany shall furnish to the government of such national adequate reparation to cover the interest of such national.
- j. It will be inevitable that the German standard of living will be adversely affected by the carrying out of the Reparation Plan. However, the reparation exactions should be held within such limits as to leave the German people with sufficient means to provide a minimum subsistence standard of living without sustained outside relief; but under no condition should this limitation operate to require the retention in Germany of means to support basic living standards on a higher level than that existing in any one of the neighboring United Nations.

- k. The Reparation Plan should not put the United States in a position where it will have to assume responsibility for sustained relief to the German people.
- 4. It was agreed at Yalta that reparation in kind is to be exacted from Germany, partly through the "use of German labor". In negotiations on labor reparation with the other powers in the Reparation Commission, the United States representatives will be guided by the following principles:
- a. The United States will not accept reparation in the form of labor services.
- b. Both compulsory and voluntary labor services furnished as reparation should be used outside of Germany only for reconstruction and repair of war damage and not for current production operations except for fuel and food.¹⁰

c. This Government is strongly of the view that persons other than those specified in d below as deserving of punishment should not be called upon to perform compulsory labor service outside Germany.

- d. Compulsory labor service should be required only from those judicially convicted as war criminals, including individuals determined by appropriate process to be members of European Axis organizations, official or unofficial, which themselves have been adjudicated to be criminal in purpose or activities.¹¹
- e. Agreement should be sought along the following lines with regard to compulsory labor service:
 - (1) Except for persons tried for specific crimes, and convicted and sentenced to lifetime punishment, the period of compulsory labor service should be limited to a definite span of years.

(2) The standard of living and conditions of employment should conform to humane standards.

- (3) The Reparation Commission or Agency should periodically survey the living and working conditions of compulsory workers and the uses made of their services.
- f. Apart from persons deserving of punishment as defined above, German labor for reparations should be recruited only on a voluntary basis.
- g. The net value of the services of both types of labor shall be included as reparations.
- 5. The first charge on all approved exports for reparation or otherwise (other than removals of existing plant and equipment) shall be a sum necessary to pay for approved imports. Accordingly, to the extent necessary to pay for such minimum German imports as may be determined to be essential, recipient countries should be required to pay for German exports, except removals of existing plant and equipment. Imports for which payment will be sought shall include supplies imported by the occupying forces for displaced persons and German civilians.

- 6. Without the approval of an appropriate Allied body there shall be no re-export to third countries of goods received on reparation account.
- 7. In order to prevent the treatment as war booty or as reimbursement for occupation costs of exports from Germany which should properly be considered as reparations deliveries, agreement should be sought on the scope of war booty and reimbursement for occupation costs. Agreement should also be sought on the scope of restitution in relation to reparation.
- 8. The governments participating in the Reparation Commission will retain control over the disposition of German property located within their respective borders. These nations will seek agreement with other countries in which German assets are located designed to eliminate continued German control of such assets and prevent their eventual return to Germans.
- 9. The United States will expect to assert a claim for reparations before the Reparation Commission in accordance with the principles of the Yalta Protocol in order to preserve its rights to its proper share of payment for losses caused to it by Germany in the course of the war. Pending the furnishing of a more exact claim at a later date the United States representative shall reserve the right to claim delivery of reparations in a total amount to be determined. The United States will desire to receive as much as feasible of its share of reparations in the form of foreign exchange assets including German investments abroad.
- 10. As an interim program, pending the formulation of more definitive arrangements, this Government would favor formulation of an immediate program by the Reparation Commission along the following lines:
- a. During the initial period following the collapse of Germany each of the four occupying powers—Great Britain, Russia, France and the United States—may remove from its zone of occupation in Germany plants, equipment and materials (including current output) of such a nature and not in excess of such amounts as may be determined by the Reparation Commission. It shall be our policy to press for inclusion in such an initial removal schedule the categories of plant, equipment and materials (excluding ocean-going merchant tonnage) described in paragraphs 30, 31 and 32 of the "Directive to the Commander in Chief of the United States Forces of Occupation Regarding the Military Government of Germany" 12 and in paragraph 3 g above.

- b. The decision as to whether or not the removal of particular plants, equipment or materials out of a zone in Germany is consistent with the purposes of occupation would be made by the commander of such zone, subject to the following conditions:
 - (1) There would be constant consultation between zone commanders.
 - (2) In making a decision as to removal the zone commander would be responsible for carrying out any relevant agreed policies which may be formulated from time to time by the Control Council.

(3) The Control Council would have an opportunity to consider any particular removal and could veto it.

- (4) Regular reports should be made to the Control Council of transfers for reparation account and the Control Council should keep appropriate Allied agencies currently informed.
- c. During this initial period any one of the four occupying powers could allow, if it so desired, any other United Nation entitled to reparations in the form of removals from Germany to take out of its zone plants, equipment and materials of such a nature and not in excess of such amounts as may be determined by the Reparation Commission. Such removals would be subject to the policy and conditions specified in sub-paragraphs a and b above.

 d. Records should be kept of all deliveries made on reparations

d. Records should be kept of all deliveries made on reparations account under such interim arrangements and such deliveries should be made without prejudice to the final allocation of reparation shares. The Reparation Commission should determine the principles for valuation of such deliveries.

11. The Reparation Plan should include provision for the early establishment of a reparation agency including representatives of such governments as have suffered devastation or substantial damage. This agency, after detailed study of Germany's capacity to pay and examination of claims to reparation by the various claimant nations, shall develop a long term plan for the delivery of reparations. This plan shall set forth a description of the reparations to be delivered and their physical allocation to the various claimant nations. It shall contain a time schedule indicating the rate at which deliveries are to be made to the several governments over a stated period of years. The reparation agency should be given continuing responsibility for drawing up at regular intervals detailed schedules of the amounts and kinds of reparations items to be delivered and should have authority to determine the allocation of specific items among claimant governments.

In lieu of the establishment of the reparations agency referred to above the Reparation Plan may provide that the Reparation Commission, appropriately expanded by the addition of representatives of other claimant governments, may be continued in existence and utilized for the same purpose.

The occupation authorities should be responsible for the execution of the plan within Germany. In the execution of the plan, the Control Council should have the authority to withhold from transfer as reparations specific items the removal of which in its judgment would reduce the available economic means below the minimum required to meet the other purposes of the occupation. After review by the Control Council and in the absence of agreement, the zone commander if he believes that any specific item should be retained within his zone may with the specific determination of his government that such item is essential for the purposes of the occupation withhold the removal of such item. The zone commander may, of course, withhold the removal of such items pending such determination.13

The long term plan referred to above should not be approved by the U.S. representatives on the Reparation Commission or Agency until it has been submitted to and approved by the United States Government.

The Control Council should advise the Reparation Agency (or Commission) from time to time as deliveries are made. The Reparation Agency (or Commission) should keep a record of all such deliveries, and should place appropriate values on the respective amounts delivered.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews)

[Washington,] May 18, 1945.

Mr. Balfour 14 called this afternoon at his request and left with me the attached aide-mémoire 15 with regard to the proposed departure of Mr. Pauley and Dr. Lubin for London. Mr. Balfour explained orally that while the British Government would be delighted to see Mr. Pauley and his party, he wondered whether their departure to London prior to a definite understanding with the Soviet Government as to just who would participate in the Reparations commission discussions might not be misunderstood. I said that personally I felt that a clear understanding with the Soviet Government should be reached certainly before the British and American members of the Commission proceeded to Moscow but that I thought Mr. Pauley's plans for departure to London were so far advanced that it would be difficult to change them. I said, however, that I would be glad to present the British Government's views to Mr. Clayton who had been handling the question.

 John Balfour, British Minister in Washington.

Mr. Balfour then said that if a postponement of Mr. Pauley's trip to London would be difficult to arrange, his Government hoped that at least Mr. Pauley and his party would stay in London until the question of the composition of the Reparations Commission is cleared up. He said that there would be many things to discuss in London and that while the British Government was somewhat handicapped at present owing to the fact that the top member of their commission had not yet been selected, he thought the appointment would be made very soon. Mr. Balfour also expressed the hope that the British would be present with our representatives during any discussions with the French at Paris. I told Mr. Balfour that I would be glad to pass on his aide-mémoire and his suggestions immediately to Mr. Clayton.¹⁶

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in France (Caffery)

Washington, May 21, 1945-8 p. m.

2222. For Caffery and Murphy. Pauley, Lubin and a portion of their large staff left Washington on May 20 for short visits in London and Paris and a rapid tour of German industrial areas.¹⁷ They plan to arrive in Moscow during first week of June to begin reparation

¹⁶ On the following day, Mr. Matthews received a telephone call from either Mr. Balfour or Mr. Makins of the British Embassy in which further concern was expressed on the imminence of Mr. Pauley's departure and the proposed brevity of his stay in London. After consultation with Mr. Pauley, Assistant Secretary Clayton informed Mr. Makins that Mr. Pauley would leave on May 20 for London as scheduled but could then prolong his stay there if it appeared useful. (740.00119 EW/5–1945)

In their report on German reparations to President Truman, under date of September 20, covering the period February to September, Messrs. Pauley and Lubin summarized the results of the trip to Germany, May 30-June 5. The British sent four members of their technical staff on reparations to join in the field trip; the Soviet Union did not participate. To study the industrial situation, the staff was divided into six teams, each pursuing a different course, thus enabling the Mission to see virtually all parts of Germany under United States and British occupation. "The field teams," said the Pauley-Lubin Report, "came back with completely harmonious conclusions on the German economy insofar as reparations are concerned. Though the war damage was recognized as extensive, it was evident that (1) German capacity for war production was still largely intact; (2) extensive removal of plants and machinery were both possible and desirable; and (3) there were also available for shipment as reparations timber and other raw materials but only if transport, food and shelter problems were first met." (740.00119 EW/9-2045) discussions. In view of Soviet opposition to initial participation of France in reparation discussions (unless Poland and Yugoslavia are also included) we have indicated our willingness to begin such discussion on a tripartite basis with the expectation that the issue of French participation will be given renewed consideration early in these discussions. This matter was discussed with Eden, who agreed that reparation talks should not be further delayed by the disagreement concerning French participation.18

For your own background following is gist of policy guidance to Paulev: (1) Reparation program should be closely geared to industrial disarmament of Germany and to rehabilitation and development of countries devastated by Germany. (2) To the fullest possible extent reparation should be obtained by removal of capital equipment to Allied countries and from German investments abroad. Removals of existing capital equipment desired by Allied countries should be limited only by the necessity of leaving Germany with enough resources to support herself at a low level without sustained outside relief. (3) Continuing reparation from current production should be held to a minimum and should consist primarily of raw materials such as coal. (4) The first charge on any German exports from current production or from stockpiles should be a sum sufficient to pay for approved, essential imports. (5) Although many points regarding reparation in form of labor services remain unclear, it seems to be agreed that only persons determined to be deserving of punishment should be required to perform compulsory labor outside Germany as part of the reparation program. Labor reparation might also be derived through recruitment of other Germans on a voluntary basis.

With respect to the partly related problem of immediate exports from Germany the Department is of the view that an enlarged program of exports of supplies and equipment urgently needed in liberated areas 19 should be developed as rapidly as possible. In order to expedite such exports, particularly to Western European countries. Department believes that allocation should for the present be handled on some completely informal basis and should not be made to depend upon early organization of allocating machinery under European Economic Committee, 20 nor upon rapid development of interim program by the Reparation Commission at Moscow. Possible methods of dealing informally with this problem are now under discussion with War Department here.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser on German Economic Affairs (Despres)

[Washington,] May 24, 1945.

Participants: Mr. Armand Berard, Counselor, French Embassy

Mr. Bonbright (WE) ²¹ Mr. Despres (A-C)

At Mr. Bonbright's invitation, Mr. Berard called upon Mr. Bonbright and me at my office this morning. I told Mr. Berard that in the light of Russian unwillingness to invite the French to participate in reparation discussions we had advised the Russians, after consultation and agreement with the British, that we were prepared to begin discussion of reparation on a three power basis, with the expectation that the question of French participation would again be considered at an early stage in these discussions. I then traced in some detail the background of negotiations over this question, beginning with Yalta, in order to make clear that we had persistently urged French participation and had retreated from this position only when the disadvantages of allowing the reparation discussions to be further delayed over this issue seemed to us compelling. I told Mr. Berard of Mr. Pauley's plans, including his intention to spend a few days in Paris. I mentioned that Mr. Pauley would undoubtedly wish to avail himself of this opportunity to discuss with French officials their views regarding reparation and related questions.

Mr. Berard stated that the French Government's reaction to this news would undoubtedly be very strong, and that General de Gaulle 22 in particular and the Government in general would regard this as evidence of a continued refusal to grant France her proper place as a major power in the shaping of the European settlement. He said that during the San Francisco Conference, his Government had come to feel that the position of France was perhaps beginning to receive genuine recognition, but that this decision regarding reparation discussions would be interpreted as indicating that the status of France was still ambiguous. German reparation was a subject in which the French had a particularly strong interest and their own special views. The reaction of some of the people in the Government would be that if France was not to be included with the other three powers in the initial consideration of such questions as reparation, she should perhaps abandon any attempts to participate in Allied deliberations and carry our [out] her own policies on a unilateral basis. Mr. Berard said that the inclusion of France was not at all comparable to the inclusion of Poland and Yugoslavia in the reparation discussions and that the bad effects of the decision to go ahead on a three power basis put forward by Mr. Berard, but we pointed out that as a practical pate at a later stage, after many of the basic decisions had already been taken.

²¹ James C. H. Bonbright, Assistant Chief, Division of Western European Affairs.

Mr. Bonbright and I expressed sympathy with the point of view put forward by Mr. Berard, but we pointed out that as a practical matter the conclusion seemed inescapable that there was at present no satisfactory alternative to the course which we had reluctantly taken. It was felt that if reparation discussions did not begin soon, this matter would be dealt with unilaterally by the occupying powers, and that three power discussions were therefore better than none at all.²³

The British Minister (Makins) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton)

Washington, May 27, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Clayton: I enclose a memorandum of the preliminary views of His Majesty's Government concerning the employment of German labour as a form of reparation.

- 2. This matter was raised informally with Mr. Eden in San Francisco by Mr. Pauley and Mr. Eden undertook to ascertain the preliminary views of His Majesty's Government on his return to London.
- 3. Mr. Eden would like to know the opinion of the United States Government on this subject, and I should be very glad of an opportunity to discuss the question with you in the near future.
- 4. I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. McCloy ²⁴ as I understand that he took part in the discussions at San Francisco.

Yours sincerely, ROGER MAKINS

[Enclosure-Memorandum]

THE USE OF GERMAN LABOUR AS REPARATION

1. His Majesty's Government consider that no objections should be raised to the use of German labour as reparation, although they themselves will probably seek such labour as they require only from among German prisoners of war.

²⁸ The substance of this conversation was transmitted in telegram 2341, May 26, 6 p. m., to Paris for the information of Messrs. Pauley and Lubin. In the first line of paragraph 2, the word "stated", used in this memorandum and in the draft of the telegram, had been changed in telegram 2341 as it was despatched to "expressed the personal opinion". (740.00119 EW/5-2645)

- 2. His Majesty's Government were at first attracted by the idea of selecting German reparation labour only from among ardent Nazis such as members of the S.S. and the Gestapo, but on further consideration they very much doubt whether it would be practicable to make a selection on this basis from prisoners of war in our hands. Moreover, many countries may well prefer not to have to deal with a labour force composed entirely of active ex-Nazis.
- 3. His Majesty's Government attach importance to the point that no fresh impressment of German labour should be undertaken after a given period, and that this period should be the shortest possible, perhaps no more than six months from the cessation of partisan hostilities. They consider that there is little hope of settled conditions in Germany while the threat of deportation hangs over its citizens, and experience in occupied Europe suggests that this threat is one of the strongest incentives to the establishment of a resistance movement.
- 4. A point of considerable difficulty is whether an attempt should be made to reach any agreement between countries employing German labour on conditions of employment. They realise that it would be difficult to keep check on the observance of such an agreement, but they incline to the view that once labour is recognised as a form of reparation, all countries which make use of it should sign a declaration regarding the conditions under which such labour would be employed. This declaration would lay down certain minimum standards as to food, lodging, medical treatment, work, pay and period of service.

2393. For Pauley. Immediately after the Department had informed the French Embassy of present plans to begin reparation discussions on the tripartite basis agreed upon at Yalta (as reported in our 2341 of May 26 to Paris,²⁵ repeated 4205 to London and 1153 to Moscow), Ambassador Bonnet called on Mr. Grew and emphatically reaffirmed that exclusion of the French from initial participation in the Reparation Commission would arouse strong dissatisfaction on the part of his Government.

²⁵ Not printed, but see footnote 23, p. 1231.

In the course of your conversations in Paris, the Department considers that it would be desirable (1) to emphasize to French officials that we have persistently urged French participation in the Reparation Commission, in exchanges with the Russians on this matter, (2) to suggest that the French Government should press their case directly with the Russians, and (3) The President has expressed concurrence with the view of the Department that you should propose early in your discussions at Moscow that France be invited to participate in the deliberations of the Reparation Commission.²⁶ The case for French participation is set forth in Department's 856, April 13, and 1090, May 17 to Moscow (see also Dept. 816, April 7 to Moscow).

The Aide-Mémoire mentions their previous understanding that the U.S. delegation would not proceed to Moscow until the question regarding the countries to be represented on the Commission had been satisfactorily settled with the Soviet Government. After stating the case for French participation and calling attention to Russian eagerness to make progress with reparation talks while showing uncooperativeness on many other questions, the British Aide-Mémoire asks whether we would agree to hold up the arrival of our representatives in Moscow until further pressure had been brought to bear on Soviet Government concerning French representation.

In reply, we stated verbally that the Yalta protocol on reparation ²⁸ provided merely that the three Governments should participate and that while we had done everything possible to obtain inclusion of the

The pertinent section of his memorandum of conversation reporting the talk reads as follows: "I asked the President if he had any objection to our instructing Mr. Pauley upon his arrival in Moscow to press further for the inclusion of France in the Reparations Commission. I pointed out that when we had previously brought up this matter the Soviet Government had taken the position that if France were to be invited we should also invite Poland and Yugoslavia. I further pointed out that France, having a zone in Europe and as a member of the Allied Commission, was in a different category from either Poland or Yugoslavia and that if we should open membership to those two countries there was just as much reason why Belgium and Holland should also be included. The President said he had no objection to sending the proposed instruction to Mr. Pauley but he doubted if it would meet with success as the Soviet Government would no doubt continue to press for the inclusion of Poland." French and still hoped to do so, we did not feel, in view of the commitment made at Yalta, that the talks could be delayed indefinitely over this issue. We also said that the U.S. representative on the Reparation Commission had discussed this matter with Mr. Eden some weeks ago, and that in this discussion there had been agreement that reparation talks should not be further delayed over the question of French participation.

Please communicate the foregoing to Mr. Pauley.

In recent conversation with Maiski, Kennan pointed out that large portions of Soviet Zone of occupation had been turned over to Warsaw Govt and questioned the effect this might have on collection of reparations from this territory by the Control Council. Maiski stated he did not think this a serious problem. Dear Mr. Makins: Following our conversation on June 2,29 the question of making another approach to the Soviet Government regarding the matter of French representation on the Reparation Commission was again considered in the Department. We have concluded that the Soviet Government probably would not yield on this issue at present, and that a reopening of the question before the Reparation Commission meets, while failing to accomplish the desired result, might adversely affect other discussions now in progress. The United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations (Pauley) to President Truman

Berlin, August 4, 1945.

My Dear Mr. President: As you know, we have in our possession at Frankfurt over two hundred million dollars worth of gold captured in Germany by the armed forces of the United States.

A considerable portion of this gold can probably be identified as having been removed from various of the liberated countries of Europe.

Although it has not yet been determined what disposition will be made of this gold, at least the following two possibilities will shortly become the subject of active discussion:

- (a) Restitution of any identifiable gold to the specific countries from which it was removed.
- (b) Regarding the gold (or at least that portion which is identifiable) as a common pot,⁴⁴ and distributing it equitably among those liberated countries which lost gold as a result of enemy action.

From a strictly legal standpoint, I understand that it would be possible for the United States to regard this gold as war booty. Although I have not been pressing for such a treatment of the gold, I do feel that if such gold, or part thereof, is restored to the liberated countries, whether on a straight restitution basis or under the "common pot" formula, arrangements should be made so that any claims which the United States has against such countries will become in effect a first lien on the gold to be restored. This lien should apply not only to satisfy our existing claims but also to assure payment of obligations which the claimant countries will shortly incur for the import of food and other essential supplies.

This will mean that, while we recognize the paramount right of the liberated countries to the gold, our continued possession of it would be for the purpose of satisfying our claims against such countries and that such possession should not be released until our existing and immediately prospective claims are satisfied.

Respectfully submitted,

EDWIN W. PAULEY

740.00119 Control (Germany)/8-545

The United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations (Pauley) to the Commanding General of the United States Group, Allied Control Council for Germany (Clay)

Berlin, August 4, 1945.

My Dear General Clay: In the Protocol agreed upon by the Tripartite Conference in Berlin are found the political and economic [&]quot;For a definition of the so-called Gold Pot theory, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 938, footnote 4.

principles to govern the treatment of Germany in the initial period of Allied control.⁴⁵ In this same Protocol is likewise found the Plan for Exacting Reparations from Germany.⁴⁶

You will agree, I am sure, that with the adoption of the foregoing political and economic principles, together with the Plan for Reparations, the major responsibility of the Allied Commission on Reparations have been discharged. There is left with you and the Control Council, as I firmly believe there should be left, the whole problem of administering the reparations plan and of deciding how, when and what production facilities shall be removed from Germany as reparations. The principles adopted in the Protocol are inevitably of a very general character, which means that the particular determinations can only be made by the Control Council and the Zone Commanders in the light of the facts as ascertained by the Control Council and the Commanders.

Under Section 6 of the Reparations Agreement it is provided:

"The determination of the amount and character of the industrial capital equipment unnecessary for the German peace economy and therefore available for reparations shall be made by the Control Council, under policies fixed by the Allied Commission on Reparations, with the participation of France, subject to the final approval of the Zone Commander in the Zone from which the equipment is to be removed."

Section 7 provides the same procedure for "interim removals". Under Section 3 of the Agreement, it is provided that:

"The reparation claims of the U.S., the U.K. and other countries entitled to reparations shall be met from the Western Zones and from appropriate German external assets."

And Section 5 of the Agreement required:

"The amount of equipment to be removed from the Western Zones on account of reparations must be determined within six months from now at the latest."

This means that the Allied Commission on Reparations has only two remaining important functions. First, it must submit general policies to guide the Control Council in its determination of the amount and character of industrial capital equipment unnecessary for the German peace economy. Second, it must seek agreement among the nations dependent upon reparations from the Western Zone[s] as to the division of reparations among them.⁴⁷

 ⁶ Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, pp. 1481-1485.
 6 Ibid., pp. 1485-1487.

[&]quot;On August 16, Mr. Pauley in a letter to General Clay deleted this paragraph in a second version of his August 4 letter enclosed therewith. He explained that certain of his colleagues had disagreed with the statement that the Reparations Commission had only two remaining functions. Rather than make an issue of it, Mr. Pauley said, he would prefer to remove the paragraph. This was the only change made. (740.00119 EW/8-1645)

A careful analysis of the economic and political principles incorporated in the Berlin Protocol reveals that the policies that must guide the Control Council and the Zone Commanders in determining the amount and character of reparations removals have been clearly defined in Paragraph 3 of the Section on Political Principles and Paragraphs 11, 14, 15, 18 and 19 of the Section on Economic Principles. Clearly, therefore, there is no present need of any further fixing of policies by the Allied Commission on Reparations unless new problems arise or some question occurs to you which has not as yet been dealt with.

Regarding the claims against the Western Zones of the "other nations" it is to be noted that the date which you and the Control Council will assemble in order to fulfill that section of the Protocol requiring "the amount of equipment to be removed from the Western Zones" to "be determined within six months" is precisely the same data which the Allied Commission on Reparations will need in attempting to negotiate an agreement as to what constitutes a fair division of reparations among all nations entitled to reparations from the Western Zones. In collaboration with the representatives of the U.K. and France, I shall endeavor to ascertain the extent and character of the claims of the remaining claimant nations, and I would hope that your data on what is available for reparations could then be brought to bear in negotiating a proper agreement between these claimant nations.

The whole question of reparations is inseparably interwoven with the "import and export programs for Germany as a whole"; the "elimination of Germany's war potential"; "Germany's approved post-war needs"; the "maintenance of goods and services required to meet the needs of the occupying forces," and "displaced persons in Germany"; and "essential to maintain in Germany average living standards not exceeding the average of standards of living of European countries." These determinations under the economic principles contained in the Protocol are all properly vested in the Control Council. This means that there is little left for the Allied Commission on Reparations to do except to resolve future policy questions which have not yet arisen and to render such assistance as may prove necessary for you and the Control Council in interpreting matters of Reparation policy.

Accordingly, I plan to leave in Germany only a small nucleus of the staff which has been working with me on the whole reparations problem. This group will need to have very close relations with two of your organization units. The first of these is the Economic Division under Brigadier General Draper, which Division I understand includes the work of Colonel Jefferson who heads Reparation, Deliveries and Restitution. The second is the Legal Division under

Charles Fahy. I would hope that all normal contacts between what will remain of the American Delegation on Reparations and your office may be established and limited in this way. If this arangement seems wise to you it would be most acceptable to me as it will avoid confusion and duplication.

As the next step in effectuating this program may we not make arrangements now for the appropriate conferences between your staff and mine beginning on Monday, August 6th.

Very truly yours,

EDWIN W. PAULEY

Paris, August 6, 1945—6 p. m. [Received 7: 31 p. m.]

- 4731. 1. Following is translation of memorandum dated Aug 2 received from FonOff on subject of restitution of French property:
- 2. "General Koeltz, Chief of the French Military Mission for German Affairs,⁴⁸ received a letter from General Clay, his American colleague on the Control Commission, in which it was stated that the procedure proposed by the French Govt for the problem of immediate restitution was considered inopportune. The American general stated to Gen. Koeltz that instead of the Tripartite Commission contemplated by France, his subordinates would be glad to consider the question informally with French representatives.
- 3. The French Govt through its Ambassadors in Wash. and London has on several occasions already called the attention of the American and British Govts to the great interest which France attaches during the present period of reconstruction to the immediate recovery of French material and other looted French goods which are in grievously short supply in France. Because of the opposition shown by the Russian Delegation on the European Advisory Commission toward the creation of an international restitution commission the French Govt recently proposed to Washington and to London the adoption of a practical and expeditious procedure which would consist either in the establishment of direct contacts among the French, British and American representatives on the Control Commission or in the assignment of an official especially charged with recoveries who would be accredited to the British and American military missions within their respective zones. The replies which have come so far from Washington and London indicated that the competent authorities 'are currently studying the French suggestion'.

4. In bringing the foregoing to the attention of the American Ambassador the Minister of Foreign Affairs has the honor to emphasize again the urgency involved in a favorable solution of this question of restitutions. The French Govt will not, in fact, accept in so far as it concerns France, the theses supported by the Soviet Govt (and repeated albeit with certain mitigations by the American and British communications referred to) according to which the problem of restitution would constitute merely an aspect of the vaster problem of reparations.

5. In practice such a conception which has no legal foundation will by the delays it will inevitably entail result in rendering almost impossible the identification and recovery of the stolen goods. Delays in this matter have been too long protracted in the opinion of the competent French authorities, authorities who have been met with objections all the more incomprehensible since they request in the last analysis only the opportunity to search out and bring back truly French goods in the zones occupied by Allied and friendly armies.

6. The French Govt believes it to be its duty to take this opportunity of drawing the American Embassy's attention to the risk that is run of serious repercussions on French opinion in the long-run when delays and obstacles of all sorts are placed at this time by the Allies in the way of satisfying the Govt of the Republic's most essential and legitimate requests. Information recently published by the American press on the reparations agreement, according to which the French portion was fixed without consultation with France at less than one per-cent of the real damage suffered by the country, has produced the effect of a scandal. The Embassy will easily understand that under these conditions France can less than ever afford to renounce the right to take back immediately while there is yet time all that belongs to her in the Allied Zones of occupation.

7. The Minister of Foreign Affairs would be grateful if the American Embassy would bring the attention of the American Govt to the matter set forth in the foregoing."

Moscow Embassy Files: 711.9 Reparations Commission II

The American Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union (Molotov)

Moscow, August 6, 1945.

DEAR MR. MOLOTOV: I have just been requested by Ambassador Pauley to transmit to you the following communication from him on the subject of the future activity of the Reparations Commission.

"Paragraph 6 of the section dealing with Reparations of the Berlin Protocol provides that the determination of the amount and character of the industrial capital equipment unnecessary for the German peace economy and therefore available for Reparations shall be made by the Control Council under policies fixed by the Allied Commission on Reparations with the participation of France, subject to the final approval of the zone commanders in the zone from which the equipment is to be removed. Paragraph 7 of this same section provides for the same procedures as respects advance deliveries. A careful analysis of the economic and political principles incorporated in the Berlin protocol reveals that the policies which must guide the Control Council and the zone commanders in determining the amount and character of the foregoing removals have been clearly defined in paragraph 3 of the section on political principles and paragraphs 11, 14, 15, 18, and 19 of the section on economic principles. I am sure that you will agree that these policies already embody those that we had tentatively agreed upon in Moscow for the exaction of Reparations.

"Clearly, therefore, there is no present need of any further fixing of policies by the Allied Commission on Reparations. The Allied Control Council, together with the zone commanders, can thus proceed immediately with the task, assigned to them by the Chiefs of State, by administering the Reparations plan and of determining the extent and manner of removals from Germany as reparations. Accordingly, I submit that the only matter remaining at the present time for the agenda of the meeting of the Allied Commission on Reparations to be held in Moscow on August 7 is the formalizing of such policies as have already been decided upon by the Chiefs of State in the political and economic principles of the Berlin Protocol."

Ambassador Pauley has requested that this communication be brought to the attention of Mr. Maiski.

its series of notes ⁵¹ on particular items of looted property with similar strongly worded note on restitution in general.

Before learning of your and Pauley's memorandum we had considered asking Allied Commission on Reparations to adopt principles on restitution as part of general policies governing reparation, but now assume this device for early agreement and announcement is excluded. If matter is to be pursued in ACC, should Dept take action here to secure an appropriate JCS ⁵² directive to General Eisenhower. ⁵³ If however you do not anticipate expeditious action by ACC, we urge you to consider advisability of Dept initiating intergovernmental negotiation for identical directives to zonal commanders on this subject. This procedure would particularly recommend itself if you anticipate Russian objection and are prepared to proceed with implementation of your principle in three Western zones.

Further question arises in our minds regarding wording of proposed Principle on Restitution attached to August 1 memo. If Dept prepares JCS directive for immediate communication to General Eisenhower or as basis for inter-governmental negotiation would you agree to broadening language so as to provide restitution of communications and power equipment, such as that looted from Netherlands electric system and PTT.⁵⁴ Other refinements of lesser importance might also be adopted, such as substitution of "power-driven" for "heavy" in describing industrial and agricultural machinery, in order to eliminate ambiguity.⁵⁵

2818. From Pauley. British representative ⁵⁶ here looks with favor on a proposal of ours for invitations to countries entitled to reparations from the Western Zone[s] of Germany. In the draft ⁵⁷ of this proposal the USSR is not included as an inviting country but we will submit this suggested invitation to them for their consideration with a statement that if they desire we shall be glad to have them join with us as an inviting power. Of course, if they do not desire to sponsor this invitation with us we will still make it clear to them that they will be invited to the proposed conference. In any event we believe that we must proceed immediately to discharge our responsibility for canvassing those nations who are entitled to reparation deliveries from the Western Zones of Germany.

Inasmuch as the Berlin Protocol ⁵⁸ requires a determination of what is to be removed from Western Zones within 6 months and for interim deliveries even sooner we are unwilling to delay proceeding with other nations waiting upon the USSR. These other nations have a right equal to that of the USSR to select and receive interim or other deliveries as quickly as the USSR.

Immediately upon the arrival of the French we shall submit this proposal to them for approval. The draft of the proposal is being forwarded in my immediately following telegram.

Draft Memorandum to Various United Nations.

1. On August 1, 1945 the heads of Govt of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics signed a protocol on German reparations a copy of which is enclosed. Particular attention is called to paragraph 3 of the protocol which reads as follows:

"The reparations claims of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries entitled to reparations shall be met from the Western Zones and from appropriate German external assets."

- 2. The Govts of the Provisional Govt of France, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America being the three powers with zones of occupation in Western Germany invite the Govt of to supply by Sept. 15, 1945 data relating to the reparation claim of the Govt of against Germany and the value of pre-war German assets situated in its territory. Suggestions as to the nature of the data to be included and the form in which they are to be presented are set forth in the annexes A and B to this memorandum. 61
- 3. The data under reference may be submitted through regular diplomatic channels. It is suggested that two copies of the data requested be supplied to the diplomatic representatives of France, UK and US, respectively.
- 4. It is contemplated that a conference will be arranged for the conclusion of a general agreement on the allocation of reparation deliveries from the Western Zones of Germany among the countries entitled thereto.

1793. For Pauley. Dept is in receipt of Soviet request that this Govt arrange return to Soviet State Bank of Soviet currency uncovered by US forces, presumptively looted by Germans.

Re disposition of paper currencies issued by invaded United Nations and uncovered by Allied forces in Germany and Austria, this Govt proposes such presumptively looted currency be returned to country of issue, receipt of currency to cancel all claims of receiving country based on physical looting of returned currency by Germany. Such delivery of currency would be separate from reparation settlement.

Re disposition of all other non-German currencies uncovered in Germany and Austria, this Govt suggests these currencies be held as German foreign assets in trusteeship for ACC Germany by military now having custody, pending final decision on disposition of such currencies under reparation settlement.

Please seek agreement to foregoing in Reparation Commission.

In this regard, British Govt. previously suggested handing to countries of origin allied currencies uncovered in Germany upon agreement by recipients to remain accountable for currency so returned in accordance with principles to be agreed upon re treatment of such currency as restitution or reparation. Current views of British Govt on this subject are being ascertained.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, August 11, 1945—11 a.m.

6784. For Clayton. French Emb has presented another note to Dept 62 requesting restitution of Belgian gold which was entrusted to Bank of France in 1940 and which Bank of France was compelled subsequently to surrender to the Germans.⁶³ A similar note was presented in London and probably in Moscow.

Dated August 7, not printed.
 See telegram 3630, August 2, 5 p. m., to Paris, p. 1239.

It is evident from this note and previous ones that French feel very strongly on this question.

French propose that we issue instructions to General Eisenhower so that restitution question may be negotiated in Control Council. French are anxious to discuss disposal of gold uncovered in all four zones because they believe part of Belgian gold remained in Berlin and fell into Russian hands.

Telegram from Pauley to President, State, Treasury and FEA, August 5,64 abandons his earlier view that gold captured by US forces should be regarded as war booty but proposes that any scheme for restitution of such gold should include provision that any claims of US against recipient countries, including claims for payment of supplies furnished to them, would become "first lien" on gold returned. Proposal appears to be based on unilateral determination by US of disposition of gold captured by our forces.

Dept considers US mere trustee of gold in Germany and believes unilateral determination of its disposition highly inadvisable. Dept is also strongly of opinion no conditions should be attached to return of gold. Any attempt to satisfy US claims out of looted gold to which despoiled countries have just title would seriously prejudice our relations with these countries. Furthermore, US has no greater legal or moral basis for asserting a lien against such gold than for attaching gold earmarked for foreign account in New York.

As you know Dept favors gold-pot policy under which available gold would be distributed pro rata among claimant countries in accordance with established gold losses. Dept has been anxious to begin negotiations on this policy but has been in doubt as to procedure owing to lack of authoritative interpretation of clause in Terminal agreement ⁶⁵ by which USSR renounced claim to gold captured by "Allied troops" in Germany. We assume from context that Allied troops means those formerly under SHAEF command and not Russian forces. But has USSR renounced interest in disposition to be made of gold captured in West and have UK and US explicitly or implicitly renounced a voice in disposition of gold captured by Russian forces? In the case of German foreign assets the Control Council retains the power of disposition despite the reciprocal renunciations of claims to such assets.

In our view, only if Control Council is empowered to discuss disposition of all gold in Germany, including that captured by Russians, would it be appropriate to instruct General Eisenhower through JCS to negotiate US proposal in that body. If Soviet has waived voice in disposition of gold captured by SHAEF forces, we would propose to present the agreed US position through diplomatic channels to the British and perhaps the French. French claim to participate in decision of this question appears to us rather tenuous if basis of Terminal bargain was that he who captures gold has right to determine its disposition. Also admission to decision of such an important party at interest raises question of representation by other gold losers.

Dept would appreciate your interpretation of Terminal agreement and your views on Pauley proposals and Department's suggestions. If you consider it advisable, you might ascertain informally British views as to appropriate status of France in any eventual negotiations.⁶⁶

The United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations (Pauley) to the United States Deputy Military Governor for Germany (Clay)

[Berlin,] August 11, 1945.

In connection with the Berlin Protocol, there are certain matters of interpretation as regards reparations which may prove to be of assistance to you and the Control Council.

First of all, although the Protocol contemplates that removals for reparations shall be conducted on a zonal basis in the sense that Russia and Poland shall receive reparations from the Eastern Zone and all other nations only from the Western Zones, it was not intended that this division of reparation shares should prevent the operation of Germany as a single economic unit. As a matter of fact paragraph 14 of the Economic Principles of the Berlin Protocol provides specifically that:

"During the period of occupation Germany shall be treated as a single economic unit. To this end common policies shall be established in regard to: 67

(f) reparation and removal of industrial war potential.

As I view it this means that the Allied Control Council should make every attempt to arrange for reparation removals throughout Germany on a uniform basis both as to type, kind, and extent of such ⁶⁶ For the reply to this cable, see telegram 8243, August 14, 8 p. m., from London. Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, p. 937.

⁶⁷ Omissions indicated in the original.

removals. Obviously unless this policy be followed, serious deficiencies are likely to occur in some zones while others may have a surplus. Such inequalities would inevitably make for wide difference in the standards of living between the zones and might place undue burdens on manpower in one zone and cause unemployment in another. Moreover, if too much be removed from some zones, it may result in the removal of too little from other zones in order to pay for imports which would not be required under a unified program of removals applied to Germany as a whole.

A second matter on which interpretation may prove helpful relates to Paragraph 4 of the reparations section of the Berlin Protocol which provides in part:

- "4. In addition to the reparations to be taken by the USSR from its own zone of occupation, the USSR shall receive additionally from the Western Zones:
 - (a) 15 per cent of such usable and complete industrial capital equipment, in the first place from the metallurgical, chemical, and machine manufacturing industries, as is unnecessary for the German peace economy and should be removed from the Western Zones of Germany, in exchange for an equivalent value of food, coal, potash, zinc, timber, clay products, petroleum products, and such other commodities as may be agreed upon."

The commodities to be delivered under the foregoing arrangements may be used for a variety of purposes. They may be used by the occupying forces. They may be delivered as reparations to some of the claimant nations. They may be sold for export. They may be used for consumption within the zone to which they are shipped. Indeed, it would seem to be only a matter of common sense that if any of the zones receiving deliveries of the foregoing commodities proved to be deficient in any of these items, it would be better to use them within such zones rather than to import them. I stress the flexibility of the arrangements. It is left to you or the Control Council to decide whether the commodities which the Soviets agree to deliver should be used in the Western Zones, or exported for the reparations account of countries entitled to reparations, or exported, or treated as exports, for which payment must be made in acceptable currency to pay for necessary imports.

There is still another question upon which some interpretation may be useful. This relates to the valuation of both the capital equipment removed from the Western Zones and the food and materials delivered from the Soviets. Since the removals of capital equipment from the Western Zones must be completed in approximately 2½ years, while the period of deliveries of commodities from the Soviets may be extended over five years, it is essential that fluctuations in quantities due to changes in world prices be avoided. The pricing formula originally suggested by USSR at the Crimea Conference was based on the average prices for the year 1938 plus 15%. This seems quite satisfactory to me provided it is applied to all deliveries both from the Western Zones and from the Soviets throughout both periods of such deliveries.

I would add one more thought. Inasmuch as the Berlin Protocol requires that the determination of the total amount of removals from the Western Zones shall be made within six months and that interim deliveries may be made even sooner, it is my view that procedures must be provided immediately to invite all nations entitled to reparations from the Western Zones to submit the amount and character of their claims. These other nations have a right equal to that of the USSR to select and receive reparation deliveries, including interim deliveries. I am making every endeavor to provide means whereby all nations may have an equal opportunity to secure suitable reparations regardless of whether their claims be large or small. Until these means are perfected, it would appear that great care should be exercised in allowing any particular nation to remove any substantial quantity of capital equipment before the needs of all nations have been made known.

The Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, August 13, 1945—11 a. m. [Received 12:01 p. m.]

2872. From Pauley for the President, for the Secretary of State. I returned to Moscow with part of my group in an effort quickly to complete a few formal matters for the Reparations Commission. After waiting several days during which the Soviets failed to call a meeting I was finally informed by Mr. Molotov that Maisky was being taken out of Reparations and supplanted by K. V. Novikov. We have had two meetings with Novikov in addition to one I had with Molotov. The Soviet Government still maintains that the amount and character of Reparation removals should be determined by the Reparations Commission in Moscow and wishes me to inform you of their position. We hold fast to the language of paragraph 6 of article 4 of the Berlin Protocol which states flatly that the amount and character shall be determined by the Control Council under policies fixed by the Reparations Commission. Obviously these policies on Reparations are sufficiently defined for the present in the Berlin Protocol and the next work on Reparations must be handled by experts in Berlin. The British and French share our views and the British stated they would depart on Tuesday. I have stated that we will depart on Wednesday. The Soviet Government completely ignores our responsibilities to other nations and my views concerning our duty to afford all nations an equal opportunity to participate in removals from the Western Zones.

The Soviet Government when asked if they had a plan to submit as to the amount and character of equipment to be removed stated that they did not have but would try and prepare one in 2 weeks. This will probably mean a considerably longer period and nothing can be gained by remaining Moscow inasmuch as the immediate future work of Reparations consists of determining the amount of removals in the Western Zones and getting all other nations entitled to Reparations into an agreement. This is so important to other nations that we certainly cannot afford to waste useless time in Moscow. I have also stated to Novikov that since paragraph 14 f of the Berlin Protocol provides that common policies for Germany as a whole shall be adopted on Reparations the amount and character of Reparation removals from the Western Zones must be measured in part in the light of removals from the Eastern Zone and that this will have to be weighed by the Control Council before definite amounts of removals are fixed from the Western Zones. Novikov responded that we have no right in the Eastern Zone or information concerning it. Apparently there is some disagreement within the ranks of the Soviet Government on this subject since in discussions with Molotov he appeared to agree with my point of view. The matter however is up to the Control Council at least for the present. I am leaving Wednesday morning for Berlin both to complete setting up a small organization to work with General Clay and to discuss with the French and British procedures for inviting other nations to submit their claims.

to their participation in conference here in Moscow. Rueff has stated that he would like to know what the French are going to receive as reparations before he agrees to the Berlin Protocol. I pointed out that this was still a matter of negotiation between ourselves, British, French and other nations entitled to reparations from the Western Zones and that he, like ourselves and the British, would have to take his chances in that respect. He is also extremely anxious to have us arrive at a definition of restitution. Since I have always felt that the question of restitution should be resolved by the Reparations Commission I introduced a definition of restitution for discussion. The definition I submitted in [is?] the last one prepared by Clayton, modified in accordance with the State Dept's wire numbered 1770. August 8.71 The Soviet representative was not willing to discuss restitution and stated that while he would take it up with his Govt he thought it might be better handled by some Govt agency other than Reparations. Rueff objects to our definition primarily because it does not include gold and securities. I told him that inasmuch as the Soviets had waived any right to gold this was a matter which could be later discussed outside of Moscow with the French, UK and other interested nations. I strongly recommend to Secretary of State that we not restitute gold or securities until final agreements have been made respecting all reparations and an export-import plan formulated to enable the United States to receive payment for current imports such as those now being taken from Army stocks for delivery to the British and French in order that coal can be produced. I am fearful that if we do not watch our step we will again find ourselves in the same position as after the last war when we paid for reparations going to other countries. I would appreciate information from you as to whether any arrangement has been made for payment of coal 72 which is being shipped out of Germany and for food and coal from the United States to Western Europe. 1815. Personal to Pauley. Reurtel 2818, Aug. 9.  $^{^{71}}$ Same as telegram 6679, August 8, 6 p. m., to London, p. 1245. 72 For documentation pertaining to the German coal situation, see pp. 1521 ff.

It is not envisaged under Berlin protocol that US, UK or France will participate in division between USSR and Poland of reparations from Eastern zone of occupation in Germany. USSR equally has no reasonable claim to a voice in the distribution of shares from western Germany, beyond safeguarding the share already assigned to it. Maximum role of USSR in proposed conference should be that of observer if the Soviet Government should so request.

United States against such countries are settled.⁷⁵ I have also noted that your telegram of August 13 (No. 2881 from Moscow) renews this recommendation on looted gold in somewhat different form and includes a recommendation for imposing similar conditions on the restitution of looted securities.

We have given the problem much thought and careful study in the light of the following factors:

(a) The United States has no moral or legal basis for laying claim to or attaching this or any other gold belonging to foreign countries in settlement of past or prospective debts;

(b) The United States is bound by its adherences, given without reservation, to the United Nations' declaration with respect to Axis acts of dispossession of January 5, 1943; ⁷⁶ the gold declaration of February 22, 1944; ⁷⁷ Bretton Woods resolution VI; ⁷⁸ and resolution VI [?] of the Conference on Problems of War and Peace held at Mexico City. ⁷⁹ In these declarations, which were sponsored by the United States and to which the United States invited the signatures of other nations, the United States is solemnly pledged to support the restitution of looted property;

(c) An attempt by the United States to lay claim to gold belonging to countries with which it maintains friendly relations would seriously prejudice those relations. Particularly is this the case since the United States now owns the greater share of the world stock on moneresolution VI is presumably in error; resolutions XVIII and XIX dealt with control of enemy property. For texts, see Final Act of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, Mexico City, February-March, 1945 (Washington, Pan American Union, 1945) p. 55.

The Maraphase of Mr. Pauley's message to the Secretary of State contained in War Department telegram VX 31504, August 18, from Berlin, offered the following further comments on the gold restitution question: "In connection with message number 8243 [Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 937] to you from Clayton there can be no doubt but that it was planned that all rights to any gold in either the western zones or in their own zone would be renounced by the Soviet Government. The increased percentages of deliveries alloted to them in the western zones was the consideration governing this decision. The ability to collect it is, of course, a different problem.

countries from which it was looted without reservation, condition, or encumbrance. This Government recognizes, however, that German disposition of some looted gold, and the impossibility of identifying the origin of other gold, require for the sake of equity a modification of the simple principle of restitution of identifiable looted objects to the jurisdiction from which they were removed by Germany. The necessity for such modification and the content of paragraph 10 of the Reparations section of the Berlin Protocol ⁸⁰ have resulted in the advocacy by the United States of the policy of pooling all gold found in Germany and Austria by Allied troops (British, American, French and Soviet) into a common pot. This gold would then be divided among countries which can establish the fact of German looting of gold from their jurisdiction, other than USSR, in proportion to their established losses.

This Government is similarly committed to a policy of restitution of securities looted by Germany from occupied countries of Europe, without reservation, condition or encumbrance. To the extent that the jurisdiction from which some securities have been removed cannot be established, an equitable principle of distribution must be devised among the UK, USSR, US and France to achieve rough justice in dividing these securities among the countries from which they were looted.

This Government is anxious that steps should be taken at the earliest possible date to restore gold and securities, as well as other types of property, to the countries from which they were removed by Germany. I would appreciate learning from you whether you consider it likely that negotiations with your colleagues on the Allied Commission on Reparations are likely to lead to early agreement on principles and procedure. If so, you are authorized to propose to your colleagues a formulation of the gold-pot policy and of the principle of restitution of securities described above. The Department is considering certain aspects of the gold-pot policy on which agreement would have to be reached: (1) the scope of the treasure to be included in the pot, e.g. whether SS accumulations of precious metals from concentration camps, monetary silver, etc. should be lumped with monetary gold; (2) the eligibility of Austria, Italy and the satellites as claimants on the gold-pot, and whether their treatment should be identical with that of liberated countries; (3) how looted gold which Germany illegally sold during the course of the war should be recovered and whether recoveries of such gold should be added to the pot. If you consider that the Reparations Commission can usefully attempt to deal with this problem, the Department will communicate its views on these points to you.

I am well aware of the difficulties confronting you, however, and if in view of the Soviet position reported in your no. 2881 you do not believe that the Reparations Commission will be able to dispose of the question of restitution of gold and securities please let me know so that we may examine the possibility of settling these matters through other channels of negotiation with the occupying powers, or by unilateral settlement for the US zone of occupation.

The United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations (Pauley) to the United States Military Governor for Germany (Eisenhower)

Berlin, August 19, 1945.

My Dear General: The attached Proposed Principle on Restitution was prepared by and has the approval of the State Department. I submitted it for the consideration of the Allied Commission on Reparations in Moscow on August 12, 1945. No action was taken, however, since the Representative of the Soviet Government on the Commission indicated he was unauthorized at the present time to discuss restitution as a matter which necessarily fell within the jurisdiction of the Commission.

In the meantime, you as the U.S. Zone Commander are authorized in so far as the U.S. Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations is concerned to conduct removals on the basis of this definition without any further or additional approval as heretofore required from Moscow on June 27, 1945.⁸¹ However, in any case where "restitution" of property, other than art objects, of the character defined in this proposed definition is requested by any allied government, any removal of such property should be made only if the government of the receiving country agrees, by executing a formal receipt stating that the property in question may ultimately be deemed "restitution", "reparation", or an "export" for which payment shall be made in an acceptable currency. Unconditional "restitution" of art objects is authorized by a memorandum previously submitted by Assistant Secretary of State Clayton and myself.⁸²

I will appreciate it if you will keep the necessary administrative records on any removals of the foregoing character which may be made and forward to me a report on this subject from time to time.

Sincerely, EDWIN W. PAULEY

(a) Upon application by any Allied Government, restitution may be made of the following categories of property, wherever found, if such property is identifiable and was removed from occupied territory by the enemy by whatever means:

munication and power equipment;

Washington, August 20, 1945—12:30 p.m.

White House No. 336. Reference your cable August 5th ^{84a} about turning over gold captured in Germany to the various liberated European countries, I am informed that the State Department is opposed to asserting any lien on this gold. The State Department apparently is of the opinion that the gold captured in Germany should be distributed pro rata among countries having claim to gold in accordance with proved losses of gold.

I think that in these matters the State Department opinion should prevail.

In view of the fact that the Berlin Conference has set up the Council of Foreign Ministers to handle the matters of major importance which require clearance with the other Allies, and in view of the fact that the fundamentals of agreement on reparations were reached at that conference, I think it would be preferable that, in ⁸³ Subsequently, War Department telegram 70762, September 27, from the Civil Affairs Division of the War Department, informed General Clay in Berlin that Mr. Pauley agreed that interim restitution should not be limited to these categories although most goods were expected to fall within them. the future, you communicate directly with Secretary Byrnes on these matters. I feel that he should handle them directly, in the same way as other matters of foreign policy are treated.

I do remember that our original arrangement was that you report directly to the President. But under existing circumstances I think it would expedite matters and relieve me of considerable work if you would submit matters in the first instance to him.

With kindest regards and sincere appreciation for all the work and efforts you have been exerting.

The Chargé in France (Fullerton) to the Secretary of State

Paris, August 20, 1945—11 p. m. [Received August 21—1:05 p. m.]

5046. From Pauley. I discussed with Bidault, French Foreign Minister, and Rueff, the reparations representative, question of reparations and restitution along with Hugh Fullerton of our Embassy. I pointed out the difficulty of proceeding with reparations plan until the French had officially accepted the Potsdam Protocol and that such acceptance should be had prior to the three Western Powers' invitation to other claimant nations was sent. He said that they were willing to accept the Potsdam Protocol with certain reservations. These reservations being:

- 1. A general agreement on restitution which definition would include all identifiable objects in Germany, particularly rolling stock and machinery from not only the Western Zones but from the Russian Zone. Rueff stated that he had pressed the matter while in Moscow and had some encouragement that rolling stock might be returned from the Soviet Zone.
- 2. Specifically did they want included gold, valuables, securities which had been taken and could be identified and if the total taken from France were not located for restitution, he would want an equivalent amount returned. I explained the US policy on gold as instructed by you in yrtel 7664 so in which he seemed greatly interested. I also explained that when he used the words "or equivalent" that that meant to me restitution in kind and that was not looked upon by my Govt with favor particularly when it was applied to gold as all the countries could not expect to secure more than the total amount captured. He said before his Govt expressed a definite opinion on this, he would have to see the figures of the other claimant nations as well as the total amount of gold disclosed by the United States and other Allies.

3. He also stated that as a condition to the acceptance to the Protocol, he wanted the French holdings in Rumanian oil companies to be restored as taken, this meaning stock ownership in companies rather than physical equipment. I explained that the United States and Britain had similar problems in Rumania and our position 86 I felt sure would be the same as theirs and that such a reservation need not necessarily be a condition of their acceptance of the Potsdam Protocol insofar as it dealt only with USSR's claims in Rumania.

4. He also stated that his acceptance of Potsdam Protocol was dependent upon the satisfactory program of advance or interim deliveries. I pointed out interim deliveries was covered by paragraph 7, article 4 of the Protocol ⁸⁷ and the procedure outlined for interim deliveries was the same as outlined in paragraph 6 above, which states plainly the amount and character of removals are to be determined by the Control Council and furthermore we were anxious to formulate a program through the Control Council as quickly as possible. conclusion of the meeting was that French will acept the Protocol tentatively but not officially until the claims of all other nations are decided, including the French, and they know exactly what they are going to get both in the form of reparations and restitution.

With regard to the draft memo 88 to be sent to various United Nations, they have proposed several changes which they are not prepared to give me officially in writing, but say these are additions to the "suggestions with regard to presentation of data concerning reparations claims" in Annex A. I expect them to deliver tomorrow these items officially. [Pauley.]

Dept recommends inclusion of Denmark in list based on participation of Danish underground in own liberation, under direction of SHAEF, effort in Greenland, and adherences to United Nations' declarations thru Minister in US, which with declaration of war against Germany, were ratified by Danish Govt as first act after liberation.

The numeration used here indicates that the document being referred to is the Potsdam Communiqué, not the Protocol; for text, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, pp. 1499, 1506.

^{}For documentation regarding the concern of the United States over the removal to the Soviet Union of oil equipment from American-owned firms in Rumania, see vol. v, pp. 647 ff.

Dept assumes that any Indian claims to reparations will be presented by British Govt. Same assumption applies to Palestine, should British Govt heed request of Jewish Agency made May 22 and affirmed by World Zionist Conference of August 13 (Embtel 8225 from London, repeated to you ⁸⁹).

After extensive consideration Dept has concluded that none of the Latin American republics should be invited. All of these republics whose candidacy might have been considered on the ground of their participation in the war effort have sufficient German assets in their country to cover their reasonable claims. We agree with you that their claims should be given consideration in connection with the Control Council's program for mobilizing German foreign assets rather than in a reparation conference, and full consultation will be had by this Govt with other American republics in accordance resolutions Mexico City Conference. 90 Other American republics will be informed of action you are taking and reasons for non-invitation will be fully explained. Dept feels that we owe a special explanation to Brazil in view of its special position as an active belligerent but feels able to justify its exclusion on the ground that Brazil would not in any case share in the general distribution of reparation deliveries from Germany.

At a meeting early today the British and French (Waley and Rueff) informed me that they had decided to go to Moscow at Novikov's request to receive the so-called USSR plan on reparations. A cable from Rueff's people in Moscow stated that Novikov had informed them that his plan would be ready on Tuesday next.92 Both the British and the French have resolved to maintain the same position that we have always held, namely, to refer to the Control Council the plan to be submitted by Novikov. They will also refer to the Control Council any other matters which may involve or affect the determination of the amount and character of reparation removals as provided for in paragraph 6 of article IV of the Reparations protocol. 93 They are hopeful of securing the Soviet approval of our interpretation of this matter while they are in Moscow. They further hope that by securing such approval the matter of who is to formulate the plan of removals will not have to be submitted to the Council of Foreign Ministers in London for decision as suggested by Novikov.

They also hope to persuade Novikov to discuss restitution and war trophies and reach an agreement with him on the definitions for these two items.

Inasmuch as the determination of what shall be removed from Germany as reparations is already before the Control Council and since we are relying on the United States representative on the Control Council to proceed with the determining of what is to be removed, I have arranged with Lieutenant General Lucius Clay to send a representative to Moscow to receive the Soviet plan and partake in any

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Brazil (Berle)

Washington, August 28, 1945—9 a.m.

2089. The US, France and UK today presented identic notes 94 to the Missions of Belgium, Netherlands, Luxemburg, Denmark, Greece, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Union of South Africa, India and Egypt 95 inviting them to submit by October 1 certain information relative to their claims for reparation against Germany and to include a statement regarding the value of German assets subject to their control. None of the American republics were included in this invitation because it is felt that the problem of disposing of German external assets in the Western Hemisphere should under the terms of Resolutions 18 and 19 of the Mexico City Conference 96 be the subject of consultation among the American republics. Moreover, it was considered that the problems of the war devastated nations whose claims will undoubtedly exceed German assets already under their control are distinguishable from those of the other American republics. The war devastated nations will require assets from Germany itself to achieve even very partial satisfaction. The claims of the American republics, on the other hand, can in most instances be satisfied in their entirety out of assets already subject to their control.

You should explain to the Brazilian Government that despite its participation in the war no invitation was extended for the foregoing reasons. You should explain confidentially that the procedure herein suggested is the most satisfactory for the situation of the American republics.

⁹⁵ An identic note was also sent to the Norwegian Ambassador.

 $^{^{96}}$ See Final Act of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, p. 55.

You should add that US will shortly propose inter-American discussions for the purpose of establishing principles regarding legitimate claims against German assets and for the disposition of German assets in excess of local claims in accordance with post-war reconstruction and rehabilitation needs in war devastated countries.

You should explain to the FonMin ⁹⁷ that the case of Brazil was given particular study and that this Govt wishes the Brazilian Govt to know that the Brazilian Govt's special position as an active belligerent was not overlooked. However, the amount of German external assets located in Brazil is sufficient when taken in relation to the war damage suffered by Brazil so that it is extremely unlikely that Brazil would receive any compensation by way of reparation deliveries from Germany or in any way other than use of the German assets located within Brazil.

It is hoped that the Brazilian Govt will appreciate the fact that the US Govt has considered its interests in this regard and will agree that the solution suggested is the one most favorable to Brazil's interests.98

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, August 30, 1945—10 p. m. [Received 11 p. m.]

409. At the request of the British representative to the Allied Reparation Commission who is in Berlin en route to Moscow for the meeting of the Commission, scheduled for August 31, General Clay and I met informally with him and the French representative. Waley said that he would like to obtain help and guidance from the Control Council regarding the amount and character of things which are to be removed from Germany under the Potsdam Agreement. Waley also referred to the letter which has now been approved by the Control Council for transmission to the Reparation Commission on the subject of removals.⁵

Waley submitted the draft of the text of an agreement ⁶ to be proposed to the Government for the creation of an Inter-Allied Reparation Commission to which all countries entitled to receive reparation from the Western Zones shall be invited to appoint members. According to this draft, the seat of the committee would be at Berlin or at such other place in Germany as it may determine in consultation with the Control Council. Its functions would be:

(a) To receive from the Control Council lists of the material available for reparations;

(b) To receive from the countries entitled to reparation, lists of the material which they desire to receive;

⁵ See telegram 411, August 31, 1 p. m., from Berlin, infra.

⁶ Sent to the Department with despatch 885, August 31, from Berlin, not printed.

(c) To allocate material between the countries entitled to receive reparation:

(d) To ensure the equitable application of the plan as between the different countries;

(e) To perform such other functions as are entrusted to it under the reparation plan.

Clay informed Waley that while personally he saw no objection in principle to such an arrangement, he had no instructions from his Government and could not answer officially. Clay pointed out the material and practical difficulties relating to housing, communications, transport, etc., now prevailing in Berlin and doubted whether suitable accommodations could be made for this additional organization. Waley said that the British view was that this new agency could well sit at Paris or London, but that since its work would be closely related to that of the Control Council close association between the two agencies would be indispensable.

Waley also stated that it was the obligation of the Control Council to inform the Reparation Commission regarding what is administratively possible to deliver under the heading of restitution. French representative Rueff also asked a number of pertinent questions regarding plans for the restitution of agricultural and industrial property. Clay replied that he was without instructions from his Government on the subject of restitution and that as far as he knew there is as vet no approved definition. Clay referred to the formula which has been communicated to him by Ambassador Pauley of which Waley had a copy, but stated that thus far he had received no instructions from his Government. Both French and British representatives said that they urgently desired an expression of opinion regarding deliveries of objects of art, gold, securities, and industrial machinery. Waley felt that this matter should be dealt with in stages and asked whether instructions from the American Government could not be cabled to Ambassador Harriman in time for the forthcoming meeting.

Rueff urged a three-way agreement on the delivery of the captured gold, all of which is stored in the American Zone. Waley emphasized that in the British view only gold identifiable as owned by the claimant could be returned under the heading restitution. The balance would be for division under the law of averages as reparation. He said that he appreciated that the American policy under the goldpot theory differed from the British position.

Rueff also raised the question of a definition of war booty but both the French and the British finally agreed that it would be best to avoid raising the issue during the forthcoming meeting.

Sir Percy Mills 7 also raised a firm objection to the recent Russian proposal to the Control Council for advance delivery of a considerable list of industrial equipment from the Western Zones.⁸ Clay is requesting the War Department to supply foregoing and I should appreciate the Department's comments.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

As the State Department is aware the Governments of Belgium, Norway, Greece, The Netherlands, Luxembourg, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Denmark, Egypt, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India have now been invited by His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, the United States Government and the French Provisional Government to submit claims for reparation from the three Western Zones of Germany as provided by the Potsdam Agreement.

It is, therefore, necessary to consider urgently the constitution and function of an Inter-Allied Reparation Commission which will be responsible for implementing the Reparation Agreement insofar as the functions concerned are not performed by the Control Council.

Attached is a preliminary paper, which has yet to be submitted for Ministerial approval in London, proposing the establishment of such an Inter-Allied Reparation Commission.

His Majesty's Embassy is instructed to state that this paper by no means represents the final views of His Majesty's Government and that as no reparation deliveries even of an interim nature can easily be made until machinery exists for handling them it is in their opinion a matter of some urgency to agree on what this machinery should be. They have, therefore, in mind to submit a document along these lines during the forthcoming discussions in Moscow and the purpose of communicating the draft informally to the United States Government (and the French Provisional Government) at the preseral Koenig.

¹¹ The copy of this letter in Department files is not signed. At the fourth meeting of the Allied Control Council General Eisenhower presided and Marshal Zhukov represented the Soviet Union; Field Marshal Montgomery was absent due to illness, however, and his place was taken by General Sir Brian Robertson; see telegram 408, August 30, 9 p. m., from Berlin, p. 833.

12 General Koeltz represented France at this meeting in the absence of Genent time is to enable the latter to send any comments they may wish to their representatives at the Moscow talks.

His Majesty's Embassy is instructed to draw particular attention to paragraph 6 of the draft. It had originally been the view of His Majesty's Government that the voting system must ensure that the Controlling Powers have the last word. They are, however, reluctant to propose plural votes for themselves and rather than this at present prefer to propose that each member should have one vote, subject of course to paragraph 6 (2). There remains, however, the danger of one or all of the Controlling Powers, on the basis of a majority vote of such a body, finding themselves bound to some decision which, as Controlling Powers, they would be reluctant to accept. A possible solution would be to insert a new sub-section (3) of paragraph 6 which would provide that, once a reparation plan including percentages had been agreed, the vote should be according to percentages. This should ensure that the Controlling Powers would be in a position to out-vote the others on any question in which a conflict of interest between the Controlling Powers and the other Powers concerned arose. Such an arrangement would appear to be equitable from the point of view of a reparation claimant.

Paragraphs 8 and 11 of the draft are subject to discussion in greater detail with the British representatives on the Control Council.

His Majesty's Government are in some doubt about the Poles. It could be argued that there is no obligation to recognize a Polish claim to membership as the Poles are only entitled to a fixed percentage of the Russian share. On the other hand the Poles are certainly interested inasmuch as they are due to receive deliveries, under the terms of their agreement with the Soviet Union, from the Western Zones and His Majesty's Government see no harm in inviting them to be members if they desire.

Washington, August 31, 1945.

[Enclosure]

The Governments of the United Kingdom, United States, U.S.S.R. and France are agreed that as soon as a general reparation plan has been accepted by all the Allies concerned it will be necessary to create an inter-Allied Reparation Commission to which all countries entitled under the plan to receive reparation shall be invited to appoint members in order to carry out following functions.

August 1945.

3160. From Draper for Pauley and Clayton.

1. Reparations. (a) Control Council agreement on letter to Reparations Commission has not broken deadlock. (b) At meeting last night, Novikov still insisted strongly Reparations Commission prepare plan which understand means standard of living and level of industry with application to many industrial categories. He stated Soviet plan would be presented Commission 5th September. (c) Waley and I strongly pressed for Council determination character and amount of equipment for reparations. Rueff supported but indicated willingness to compromise. I stated I was prepared to receive Soviet plan and refer to U.S. side of Council for study. No indication Novikov will change position which he stated was Soviet Govt position. (d) In informal discussion today with Waley and Rueff, both advanced desirability some compromise solution. Waley apparently has authority from his Govt to agree to joint determination both plan and character and amount of equipment by Commission and Council provided Soviets agree that the work be done in Berlin, but contemplating possibility formal meeting of Commission in Moscow to give final Commission approval. (e) Proposing leave Moscow

Friday. 18 If no solution reached, there is likelihood that one of the members of the Commission may refer problem to Council Foreign Ministers London next week 19 for settlement, and I suggest delegation be prepared to deal with question. Novikov, Waley and Rueff all will be there. (f) Unless instructed otherwise, I will continue to take position that the Control Council under the Potsdam Agreement is charged with the responsibility of determining the character and amount under policies fixed by the Reparations Commission and that the plan referred to in paragraph 11 20 was in effect the Reparations Agreement expressed in section IV of the Berlin Agreement. Also, that I am not prepared to discuss the merits of the Soviet plan here but will refer to the US member of the Control Council for study. I see nothing but confusion and divided responsibility ahead if the compromise is accepted. Ambassador Harriman concurs.

- 2. Restitution. Soviet member indicated restitution not part of Soviet reparation plan and preferred restitution discussion be in Control Council or alternatively Council of Foreign Ministers or diplomatic channels. French desire question discussed here. British willing. I took no position, being without instructions. Please advise your reaction British draft 21 if you desire discussions here, as French may be able persuade Novikov to consider question.
- 3. Inter-Allied Reparations Agency. (a) Novikov stated that the Reparations Commission should allocate plants determined to be available for removal to the Soviets on the one hand, and to the other 3 powers on the other hand. The Soviets would then make their own arrangements with Poland, and the other 3 powers should similarly make their arrangements with other Allies entitled to reparations. (b) Soviets are not interested in membership on any reparations agency including the smaller powers, nor a membership on any three power agency to determine percentages for division of the 75% of removals, although might be willing to sit on latter board as observer if pressed. (c) Above proposal would mean that Reparations Commission in allocating plants would have to represent the interests of smaller nation claimants. British and French appear inclined to accept this arrangement which appears reasonably workable. Have you any objection? (d) In informal discussions today, Waley suggested prompt organization Inter-Allied Reparations Agency, starting with 3 representatives to form organization committee, US, British and French, with a permanent Secretary General and 2 Deputies.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, September 4, 1945—8 p. m. [Received September 4—7: 10 p. m.]

447. The following is a paraphase of a telegram sent today by General Clay to the War Department on the subject of restitution policy:

"We desire a clearer definition of United States restitution policy. We have been advised by Pauley by letter ²² of his views that we should begin restitution not only of cultural objects but also of livestock and agricultural implements, transportation rolling stock. As there appears to be no tripartite or quadripartite governmental policy covering this question, the carrying out of his letter would of course, be unilateral on our part. In our opinion the following principles should govern: we should make restitution of identifiable articles taken without payment by Germany to the extent that (a) such restitution will not result in relief needs in Germany which would lead to the US financing in part such restitution and (b) such restitution does not interfere with agreed reparations program. Because of administrative difficulties in any other procedure, all claims for restitution should be submitted in consolidated lists by the governments concerned. Preliminary evidence should be given as to the location of the items claimed for restitution and the circumstances connected with the removal by the Germans of these items. Administratively it would be impossible to permit missions from the countries concerned to scour Germany to find items produced in their country and then build their restitution cases.

It is our view, moreover, that rolling stock, livestock and agricultural implements required for a minimum economy in Germany and which if not available would result in increased imports into Germany, would militate against the ability of Germany to pay reparations and would inevitably result in calls on the US for relief. It is also our belief that the State Dept should list the countries entitled to restitution. These countries should be required to submit their lists of the claimed items and quantities promptly, and after each list has been examined by the zone commander concerned, the several countries should be permitted to send small missions into each zone for identification of these items and to arrange for return of the items. Serious misunderstanding would result from separate policies in the several zones. We do not understand that the French have as yet opened the gates to identifying missions from other countries, but we are not advised as to French policy in their zone.

Furthermore, we believe that this should be a quadripartite policy and propose to place this before the Control Council. Prompt advice is requested since this question is pressing. Since art and cultural objects are already being returned to the liberated countries, the above does not apply to these items."

The Dept's comment will be appreciated.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

Washington, September 6, 1945—7 p.m.

1964. From Clayton. ReEmbtels 3140 of Sept 2 and 3160 of Sept 4. Following represents Dept's views on future of Allied Commission on Reparations (ACR) and its work. Please communicate these to Draper for his guidance at remaining meetings of ACR, which it is hoped you are attending. Please also advise Draper that Dept thinks it would be unfortunate for him, as US representative on ACR, to leave Moscow, prior to departure of French or Brit representatives.

1. In US view, future meetings of ACR should be held in Berlin alongside Allied Control Council (CC), to permit free and rapid exchanges between ACR and CC in task of CC in fixing amount and character of industrial capital equipment unnecessary to the German peacetime economy and therefore available for reparations, under policies determined by ACR. A shift in locus from Moscow to Berlin is also required because of fact number of questions concerning reparation remain for determination by representatives of US, UK and France. Such determination cannot be made effectively in Moscow.

2. US Govt now holds view that ACR should continue in existence until all principles and policies required for reparation plan have been provided and until review of CC plan mentioned in para 3 below has been completed. US delegation will assemble in Europe for future meetings of ACR after appropriate notice.

3. ACR should work in Berlin, close to CC, in order to be able to advise CC as requested by CC, or as it may choose on its own initiative to do from time to time, on policies relating to the reparation settlement. CC is likely to require policy guidance on number of specific points. In addition, final CC plan should be submitted to ACR, prior to February 1, 1946 to enable latter to judge how closely plan conforms to policies laid down by ACR.

4. US Govt is not prepared to have ACR act or make recommendation on Soviet proposal to be submitted to ACR on September 5. US view, participation of Soviet Govt in determination of amount and character of reparation removals from western zones in Germany, whether by ACR or CC, awaits Soviet cooperation in treatment of Germany as a single economic unit for purposes of reparation and removal of industrial war potential. This means that Soviet removals of industrial capital equipment from Eastern zone must be based on plan arrived at among four powers, which will treat each zone as part of a unified Germany with respect to future standards of living and ability of Germany after reparation removals to subsist without external assistance. Concrete evidence that Soviet removals from eastern zone will be based on a common plan, or will conform [ex?] post facto to such a plan, must be forthcoming in form of Soviet submission of data on removals made to date, and willingness to permit mixed commissions of industrial experts which Soviet would send into Western Germany, to enter eastern Germany. USSR is unwilling to collaborate on four-zone plan for reparation removals along these lines, and to treat Germany as an ecomonic unit, it will be impossible for CC to make determination of amount and character of reparation removals from western Germany in accordance with provisions of protocol. Under these circumstances, only course of action remaining would be for powers occupying western zones to make such determination for themselves.

5. If Soviet Govt is unwilling to collaborate in formulation and administration of four-power reparation plan as described in preceding para, US favors continuation of reparation negotiations primarily on tripartite basis of UK, French and US representation, with consultation with Soviet representatives on few remaining quadripartite questions.

6. US holds view that although CC has control and power of disposition of German external assets, USSR will dispose of assets in Rumania, Hungary, Bulgaria, Finland and Eastern Austria without reference to US, French and UK elements in CC; and US, French and UK elements in CC will dispose of all other German external assets without reference to USSR element.23

7. US favors creation of Inter-Allied Reparation Agency proposed by Brit Govt and including representation of all claimants to reparation from Germany. Believes creation this agency, however, can wait until meeting of claimants to reparation from western zones, other than USSR and Poland, which will fix shares. Should CC be ready now to submit to ACR lists of industrial equipment now available for interim reparation deliveries, US would favor earlier creation of agency. US is opposed to Soviet scheme whereby ACR would allocate industrial capital equipment initially between USSR and Poland on the one hand, and all other claimants on the other. US cannot support any proposal which would give USSR preferred position in securing reparation from western zone of Germany.

²² See paragraphs 8 and 9 of section III of the Protocol of the Proceedings of the Berlin Conference in Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, p. 1486.

8. Subsequent telegram on restitution will follow.

I have not been attending recent meetings of ACR as Novikov, Soviet representative, has no discretion to negotiate and only reiterates previously stated Soviet Govt position. Brit Aide-Mémoire of August 31.32

Please attend meeting at Brit Treasury (Waley's office?) September 20 11 AM as US representative on organizing committee of Inter-Allied Reparation Agency (IARA) (Mosely) and Deputy Secretary General protem of IARA (Pincus).

Meeting is for purpose organizing IARA. As such it should draft proposed invitation for participation in IARA by various countries (see para. 3 of instructions below), to be approved and issued by three Govts, set in motion arrangements with Allied Control Council (ACC) for seat of Agency, facilities to be granted IARA by ACC, etc, arrange for time and place of convention of IARA, etc. Following are Dept's comments on Brit Aide-Mémoire and instructions to you in representing US at meeting:

- 1. US shares Brit views with respect to urgency of establishing machinery for allocation of such interim deliveries as ACC may be able to provide and for final deliveries under final reparation plan. US primary interests in organization of IARA are speedy organization and provision for full participation of smaller claimant countries. If French and Brit representatives are in agreement on some point which does not conform to US views as expressed below and does not affect two major interests of US just noted, you are given latitude to agree. On points substantially affecting these interests of US, where you cannot reach agreement with Brit and French representatives, please ask Dept for instructions.
- 2. Dept agrees with functions of IARA as laid down in para. 1 of memo attached to Brit Aide-Mémoire. Most important function of IARA at present however, is speedy collection of lists of plants and equipment desired as reparation by countries entitled to receive reparation. You should therefore suggest that invitation from US, UK and France to various governments to participate in IARA should include provision that representatives of countries bring to first meeting of IARA preliminary lists of types of whole plants, particular plants in western Germany and types of separate industrial machinery and equipment which they would like to receive as reparation from Germany. This provision should make clear that these lists, submitted prior to allocation of percentage shares to reparation from Germany and fixing of total of capital removals from three western zones, are required as basis for allocation of interim deliveries and involve no obligation of IARA, Reparations Commission or ACC to deliver in accordance with request. Further, it should be made clear that administrative difficulties make it impossible to permit separate national missions to inspect German plants in preparation of such lists.

You should explain to Brit and French representatives that US attaches importance to early gathering and compilation of these lists by IARA to form a basis for allocation of interim deliveries, to bring other claimants to reparation on a par with USSR which already has submitted such list to ACC (See Deptel 7652 to London of Sept. 6 33), and possibly to aid ACC in preparing its list of capital equipment available for interim deliveries. Dept would hope to have lists received by IARA in formal session, compiled and submitted to ACC by October 15.

- 3. It is noted that Egypt and Denmark have been omitted in Brit Aide-Mémoire from list of countries to be invited to participate in IARA. It is assumed this omission is inadvertent. If not, you should express Dept view that all countries invited to participate in conference to fix shares should participate in IARA, even if it is believed that their ultimate share in reparation will be very small. Any initial exclusion would be unwarranted as prejudgement-of country's claim. Dept would not object to including Poland. Dept. attaches great importance to invitation to USSR and feels that US, UK and French representatives in Moscow should take occasion of issuance of invitation to express view informally that IARA is only body which will allocate reparation deliveries from western zones.
- 4. Provision of one vote for one member is entirely satisfactory to US assuming voting applies to terms of reference, procedures, policy issues, etc. but not to actual allocation of specific plant and equipment which should be handled under some automatic procedure, such as that suggested in paragraph 6 below. It might be useful to add express provision that decision is taken by majority vote of members present, and that if member government is entitled by lot or other arrangement to choice of plant and equipment or to take some other decision by itself under IARA auspices at particular point in proceedings, failure to be present will lose for such country its voice at that point in proceedings, and will not delay business of other countries.

Dept. does not share Brit concern that controlling Powers may be bound by majority vote to decision they are reluctant to accept. ACC and Zone Commanders have veto power over what is removed and no interest or concern in allocation of property they have decided is removable.

5. Terms of reference of IARA should be submitted to countries invited to participate as proposal for discussion rather than charter to which adherence is requested. This is probably implicit in Brit proposal. Invitation should also make clear that IARA is technical agency and should suggest that representatives be technically qualified persons.

- 6. Dept believes organizing committee and/or secretariat should consider now proposal to be made to first full meeting of IARA on IARA machinery for allocation. Some proposal such as selection of an order of choice by lot and exercise of all first choices in order before second choices are made may be appropriate. Problems of valuation should also be explored. Ambassador Pauley has suggested that Soviet proposal of 1938 prices in Germany plus 15 percent (on capital equipment) is manageable,³⁴ and that value should be that in situ, not in receiving country or as junk. Separate valuation procedures probably required for whole plants and collections of assorted machinery.
- 7. You should not, pending further instructions, discuss problem of whether shares to reparation will apply to total of plant and equipment removals, external assets, war booty capable of civilian use, ships, etc or separate for each category. This question will be discussed by conference of powers to divide shares to reparation in October. Object should be to concentrate primarily at this time on interim deliveries capital equipment.

For Murphy: Please communicate substance of foregoing to General Clay for his information, and ask him whether he can send Dept, Pauley and Mosely and Pincus copy of Soviet list of plants desired from Western Germany as interim deliveries and submitted to ACC.

Ambassador Pauley concurs in the foregoing instructions.

Sent to London as 8004. Repeated to USPolAd, Berlin for Murphy as 476. Repeated to Paris as 4334, and Moscow as 2014.

The United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations (Pauley) to the Secretary of State

Washington, September 14, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: On April 27 the President addressed to me the following letter:

"My dear Mr. Pauley: I hereby designate you to act as my personal representative, with the rank of Ambassador, to represent and assist me in exploring, developing and negotiating the formulae and methods for exacting reparations from the aggressor nations in the current war.

"In this matter, you will represent me in dealing with the other interested nations.

³⁴ See the letter from Mr. Pauley to General Clay, August 11, p. 1251.

"At the Crimea Conference, it was agreed that Germany would be obliged to the greatest extent possible to make reparations in kind for the damage caused by her to the Allied countries. It was further agreed that a commission would be established to consider the question of the extent and methods for collecting such reparations.

"I wish you also to represent the United States and me personally as a member of that commission.

"In all matters within your jurisdiction you will report to me personally and directly.

"May I express my gratification at your willingness to assume this important but arduous mission.

"Very sincerely yours,

Harry S. Truman"

Although German reparations will continue to be a problem for the United States and the world for years to come, I believe that insofar as my part of the job is concerned I have completed my task, namely, that of representing and assisting the President in exploring, developing, and negotiating the formulae and methods for exacting reparations from Germany.

The bulk of my staff handling German reparations have already been released. I am preparing for submission to the President and to you an orderly history of my mission, together with the documents involved, in such shape as to be of the greatest value to the Department.35 In the meantime I would greatly appreciate it if I could get a concurrence from the State Department to the "Memorandum on the Provisions of the Berlin Protocol Relating to Reparations" 36 which was submitted to your department some time ago. As I have already indicated in previous communications, I feel that it is important in the interests of the program that these guiding instructions for General Clay be completed as soon as possible.

In continuing the work on German reparations, certain matters will require your early attention. These include:

(1) Shares of Other Nations

As you know, invitations to fifteen claimant nations were sent out through the Department on August 28 in accordance with the agreement between the United Kingdom, the United States, and France. The task remaining in determining the shares of these other nations is thus the analysis of the data submitted by these countries, the development of a preliminary table of percentages, and, finally, the holding of an international conference for the purpose of reaching an agreement on percentage shares. You will wish to consider inviting the Soviet Union as an observer at this conference.

This memorandum, not printed, comprised Appendix 30 to the Pauley-Lubin Report.

the United States, February to September 1945", was forwarded to President Truman with an accompanying letter from Messrs. Pauley and Lubin dated September 20, 1945. The Report as such has not been published, although part V is printed in Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, p. 940. 35 This history, entitled "A Report on German Reparations to the President of

(2) Creation of a Permanent Reparations Agency

It has already been agreed that an Allied Reparations Agency will be required as part of the administrative structure for reparations. It is proposed that such an agency shall include representatives of all the chief claimant nations and that it shall have its permanent seat in Germany, possibly in Berlin, where it can work intimately with the Zone Commanders and the Control Council. The chief functions of the permanent Reparations Agency would be to allocate specific plants, properties, and commodities to specific claimants and to settle disputes with reference to such allocations.

(3) United States Reparations Claims

The Government of the United States in common with all other nations will be required to prepare a tabulation as a justification for its reparations claim. The United States claim should be prepared by the State Department with such aid as it may wish to secure from the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments, and other affected agencies.

The purpose of the United States justification of reparations claims is to furnish the material which will be required both to substantiate the United States demand for a share of reparations and to form the basis for determining a general formula for proposed application to all of the governments involved.

(4) United States Requirements

The Government of the United States must be prepared in the near future to indicate specifically what types of commodities and what types of assets it will demand from Germany on reparations account. Now that the war with Japan also is concluded, the American requirements are greatly different than they were in May when a canvass was made of the United States demands as seen by the Commerce Department, the Foreign Economic Administration, the War Production Board, the War Department, the Navy Department, the War Food Administration, etc.

(5) Current Deliveries as Reparations

The problem of current deliveries as reparations is one which cannot be settled until the Control Council has announced the results of its program for German deindustrialization and until the outlines of the export-import program for Germany are in hand. As soon as these two programs are available it will be necessary to decide whether current production will be available to pay reparations and if such production is available it will be necessary to decide over what period of years production for reparations account will be required.

Although my duties in connection with German reparations have been fulfilled, under the terms of my appointment by the President it is also my responsibility to represent and assist him in exploring, developing, and negotiating the formulae and methods for exacting reparations from Japan. In order for me to carry out this task, it will be necessary for me to have all information available to the government on this subject and the attitude of the State Department. I would, therefore, appreciate the Department's furnishing me as quickly as possible with the information and data available to it and to other agencies of the government with respect to this matter; and a statement of the views of the Department.

In my conversation with the President this morning, he is most desirous that I proceed with this work and complete it at the earliest possible moment. This will, of course, involve a trip to the Pacific areas involved in the near future.38

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN W. PAULEY

8077. Secdel 39 68. Dept understands French will bring up question of restitution of looted property in Council of Foreign Ministers. Reinstein 40 on your staff is acquainted with background of restitution question.

Dept sympathetic with French view that restitution should be accelerated. Restitution of works of art from US zone of occupation in Germany now proceeding. General Clay recently requested clearer definition of U.S. restitution policy 41 and stated his view that restitution of identifiable articles taken without payment by Germany should be made to extent that such restitution (a) does not interfere with agreed reparations program, and (b) will not result in relief needs in Germany which would lead to U.S. financing in part such restitution. Clay proposed claimant governments be invited to submit lists of looted property and be permitted after examination of such lists to send small missions to assist in identification and return of looted property. At suggestion of Dept and with Pauley's approval War Dept has sent instructions to Clay approving his restitution proposal for immediate application in U.S. Zone with modifications making clear that (1) it is unnecessary to investigate question of payment by Germany for property taken from occupied countries. (2) interference with agreed reparation program will be avoided by maintaining system of receipts and records, and (3) restitution of looted property should not be delayed on ground return of such property would give rise to import requirements. Moreover under these instructions restitution will for present be confined to United Nations and will not include gold, silver and securities regarding which U.S. policies are being formulated. Similar instructions going to General Clark 42 in Austria. Dept is inviting Govts of United Nation countries to submit lists of looted property with some indication of priority attached to return of individual items or categories of items in terms of reconstruction needs.

Meanwhile Dept also proposing directive on restitution for issuance by JCS to be submitted to CC, Germany and AC, Austria for agreement on application in all zones of occupation. This draft directive also confines restitution for present to United Nations and makes no provision as yet for immediate restitution of gold, silver or securities. Also no provision made yet for replacement in kind for work[s] of art because Dept considers decision on this question can wait until it is ascertained what proportion of looted art can be found and returned.

In view of these developments and fact that Marshal Montgomerv 43 has also received instructions on restitution French should be urged strongly to submit their views on restitution to Control Councils in Germany and Austria for negotiation.

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

> Moscow, September 18, 1945—1 p. m. [Received 1:45 p. m.]

3303. Translation of text of letter dated Sept 16 from Soviet Foreign Office:

"Acknowledging Mr. Harriman's letter of Sept. 7,44 on the question of reparations, the Soviet Government expresses its readiness to approach the United States Government concerning those proposals which correspond with the decisions taken at the Berlin Three-Power

See telegram 3212, September 8, 6 p. m., from Moscow, p. 1285.

⁴² Gen. Mark W. Clark, Commanding General, United States Forces in Austria; United States High Commissioner for Austria; United States Representative, Allied Council for Austria.

⁴³ Field Marshal Sir Bernard Montgomery, Commander in Chief, British Forces of Occupation in Germany; Military Governor, British Zone in Germany; British Representative, Allied Control Council for Germany.

Conference and may hasten the fulfillment of those decisions. At the same time, the Soviet Government regards it as its duty to declare that it cannot agree with those proposals of the United States Government which conflict with the decisions of the Berlin Conference. Thus, the Soviet Government takes the position that a change in the decisions taken at the Berlin Conference cannot be effected unilaterally by any given government. These changes may be effected only by joint decisions of the three governments which took part in the Berlin Conference.

Proceeding to concrete questions, the Soviet Government considers it necessary to point out the following considerations:

1. The Soviet Government does not object to the proposal of the United States Government that further meetings of the Allied Reparations Commission should be transferred from Moscow to Berlin.

2. Likewise, the Soviet Government agrees that the Allied Reparations Commission should work in Berlin in close contact with the Control Council. It stands to reason that the decisions about the amount and character of industrial equipment, subject to reparations, must be taken by the Control Council, as provided for in paragraph 6 of the decisions of the Berlin Conference on Reparations from Germany.

Moreover, the Soviet Government considers that for obtaining the fulfillment of the decisions adopted by the Conference on the question of reparations, a date should be established for acceptance of the final plan of reparations by the Control Council earlier than Feb. 1, 1946, as proposed in your letter.

3. The Soviet Govt recalls that in accordance with proposals of the American Delegation, the Berlin Conference established a different procedure for collecting reparations in the Eastern (Soviet) Zone and in the Western Zones. In the Eastern Zone this problem has been charged to the Soviet authorities and in the Western Zones to the Allied authorities. Evidently, however, in the Eastern as well as in the Western Zones, as was decided at the Berlin Conference, a common policy of the Allies must be carried out in relation to reparations from Germany as a whole, taking into account the necessity of maintaining in Germany an average standard of living, not exceeding the average standard of European countries.

In order to accomplish the above, the Soviet Govt will supply the Control Council and the Allied Reparations Commission with the necessary information on the presence of equipment which has been left in the Soviet Zone of occupation and will also give mixed commissions of specialists the opportunity to become familiar with this equipment on the spot.

It follows, however, from the preceding, that there is no necessity for drawing up a single plan of reparations collections for all four zones, as is mentioned in your letter. The Berlin Conference not only did not contemplate the drawing up of such a four-zone plan (it accepted the principle proposed by the American Delegation of collection of reparations by zones—an Eastern Zone and Western Zones), but established one procedure of reparations collections in the Eastern Zone and another in the Western Zones.

4. Regarding the proposals of the British Govt concerning the creation of a small, new inter-Allied agency, which, as you state, is also supported by the US Govt, the Soviet Govt considers it necessary to state that, in its opinion, this question is the decision of the appropriate interested Govts, mentioned in paragraph 3 of the decisions [of] the Berlin Conference on Reparations from Germany, noting for its part, moreover, that the creation of such a new agency was not provided for at the Berlin Conference. Indeed, the question of distribution of reparations between the Soviet Union and Poland on the one hand, and between the United States, Great Britain and other countries having the right to reparations on the other, in the opinion of the Soviet Union, should be left to the decision of the Control Council, in the order established by paragraph 6 of the Berlin decision on reparations.

5. Regarding the proposal of the United States Government as to the order of disposition of German external assets, the Soviet Government has no objection to your proposal insofar as it affects the Soviet Union.

6. Finally, the Soviet Union considered it necessary to hasten a decision of the question of advance deliveries of equipment to account of reparations, which was provided for as a special item (paragraph 7) of the decisions of the Berlin Conference.

In view of the foregoing, the Soviet Government has given instructions that at the Council of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London the following proposals be presented:

1. To transfer the Allied Reparations Commission from Moscow to Berlin for the purpose of hastening the fulfillment of the decisions of the Berlin Three-Power Conference on Reparations from Germany.

2. To commission the Control Council in Berlin, in close contact with the Allied Reparations Commission to define not later than December 1, 1945 the amount and character of industrial capital equipment subject to removal from the Western Zones of Germany to the account of reparations and also to approve the list of enterprises the equipment of which should be transferred to the Soviet Union in fulfillment of paragraph 4 of the decisions of the Berlin Conference on Reparations from Germany.

3. To commission the Control Council not later than October 15 to approve the list of enterprises, the equipment of which should be transferred as advance deliveries, in accordance with paragraph 7 of the decisions of the Berlin Conference, so that the exportation of that equipment may be begun not later than

January 1.

4. To propose without delay to the Control Council to send to the Western Zones of Germany a mixed commission of specialists for the preparation of materials needed by the Control Council for the purpose of executing the measures set forth in points 2 and 3 above.

Accept, Mr. Chargé d'Affaires, my assurances of high esteem." A. Y. Vyshinski.

Text of note attached is as follows:

"1. We should agree to the Allied Commission on Reparation being transferred from Moscow to Berlin on the understanding that the function of the Commission will be to determine policies and principles whenever asked to do so by the Control Council, and to approve the determination made by the Control Council when it has been made. We should wish to make it clear that the determination of the character and amount would be made by the Control Council and that the percentage of industrial equipment to be removed from various industries will be dealt with in the first instance by the Economic Directorate and the committees which it has appointed, and that the Russians will cooperate fully in this work. In other words, we shall want to make it quite clear that the function of the Allied Commission is to settle principles and not to determine or take any part in determining the percentage of industrial equipment to be removed from various industries.

2. We shall refuse to agree to the proposed date of 1st December 1945 49 and insist on maintaining a period of 6 months laid down at Potsdam, which makes the date 5th [1st] February 1946. The Control Council will determine what equipment is available for removal and the Allied Commission will decide what part of this is to go to Russia and Poland.

3. We shall refuse the proposed date of 15th October; 50 the Potsdam protocol says 'As soon as possible', and we shall refuse to depart from this phrase. The Control Council will decide what industrial equipment is available for advance deliveries, presumably by selecting items from the Russian list and adding other items such as available machine tools. We feel that in advance of a general determination, the amount which can be decided to be available for advance deliveries should be very restricted indeed. We shall have to consult the other powers entitled to reparation as a preliminary to the Allied Commission settling which of the items available for advance deliveries are to go to Russia and Poland.

4. We shall support the view that mixed commissions of specialists cannot be sent to the Western Zones unless they are simultaneously sent to the Russian Zone with the same freedom of access as may be granted in the Western Zones." 51

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, September 20, 1945—5 p.m.

8245. For Secretary of State. Dept would appreciate your early comment on following draft directive on restitution which Dept proposes, if you approve, to submit to War Dept for issuance by JCS.54

"1. This directive is issued to you as Commander-in-Chief, US Zone of Occupation, Germany, and US member of the Control Council for Germany.

You will seek to obtain agreement in the Control Council to the application in the other zones of occupation of the policies laid down in this directive. If, in your judgment, it appears impossible to obtain quadripartite agreement, you will explore the possibilities of a tripartite agreement applicable to the three Western zones and make appropriate recommendations to the JCS.

You will proceed with the application of this directive in your own zone even prior to agreement, provided, however, that restitution of property defined in paragraphs 2(c) and 2(d) will be effected only when the return of such property is certified by the appropriate representative of the claimant country to be urgently required for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of his country. The restitution or distribution of items subject to restitution shall not be delayed on the ground that they are needed to meet the requirements in any zone of occupation.

Trems Subject to Restitution

2. Without prejudice to the formulation of a definitive restitution program, the following categories of property shall, as an interim measure, be subject to restitution in accordance with the provisions of this directive:

(a) All currencies of United Nations occupied by Germany;
(b) Works of art, books, artistic or historic archives, and other artistic, historic, cultural or religious property identified as having been looted or acquired in any way by Germans from United Nation countries during German occupation;

(c) Heavy and power-driven industrial and agricultural machinery and equipment, rolling stock, locomotives, barges and other transportation equipment (other than sea-going vessels) and communication and power equipment identified as having been looted or acquired in any way by Germans from United Nations during German occupation;

⁶⁴ This draft directive, dated October 9, was submitted to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (SWNCC) for consideration on October 12 and designated SWNCC 204.

(d) Other goods, valuables, materials, equipment, livestock and other property found in storage or otherwise in bulk form and identified as having been looted or acquired in any way by Germans from United Nations during German occupation.

PROCEDURES FOR RESTITUTION

- 3. Your government will transmit to you from the governments of the USSR, France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Greece lists of property claimed to have been taken from their countries during the period of German invasion or occupation. Such lists will include wherever possible all relevant information regarding the circumstances and date of removal of such property by the Germans and the reported location of the property in Germany.
- 4. After examination of these lists you will indicate to your government which of these countries should be invited to send missions into your zone for the purpose of (a) substantiating claims for the restitution of property mentioned in paragraphs 2(a) to (d), (b) receiving information regarding the location of property which has been the subject of restitution claims by their government, (c) identifying any such property to be restored or distributed in accordance with the provisions of this directive. You will furnish such missions facilities necessary to the proper discharge of their functions in your zone.
- 5. You will take steps in your zone to uncover and secure possession of all paper currency of United Nation countries invaded or occupied by Germany, and to deliver such currency to the government of the country of issue without the necessity of proof that it was looted or otherwise acquired from that country during the period of German invasion or occupation.
- 6. You will take steps in your zone to uncover and secure possession of property covered by paragraphs 2(b), 2(c) and 2(d), mentioned in lists submitted by claimant governments, and to restore such property to the government of the country from which it was taken.

General Provisions

- 7. You will require the claimant governments to give receipts for items received by them in accordance with the provisions of the directive. These receipts shall contain a brief description of the item received and its condition, and a waiver of any further claim as reparation or otherwise based upon the removal of the item concerned by the Germans or the exaction of funds used by the Germans to pay for it.
- 8. You will keep a complete record of items returned or distributed in accordance with the provisions of this directive; and you will submit to the Control Council and your government bi-monthly reports on the progress of the restitution program.

9. The cost of administering this program of restitution shall be counted as part of the costs of occupation which will be met by the German people.

10. A similar directive is being issued to CG, USFA,55 although any property uncovered in Austria and subsequently removed to Germany shall be regarded as uncovered in Germany."

The Acting Secretary of State to the Chargé of the Soviet Union (Novikov) 56

The Acting Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and refers to the United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943 57 regarding forced transfers of property in enemy-controlled territory and to the several communications 58 received from the Embassy on the subject of the restitution of Soviet property looted by Germany and now located in Germany or Austria.

Pending agreement on the scope of restitution among the occupying powers of Germany, the Government of the United States has instructed the Commanders-in-Chief of the United States zones of occupation in Germany and Austria to undertake an interim program of restitution to the governments of the United Nations from which the property was removed of identifiable looted property urgently required for relief and rehabilitation, other than gold, securities and currencies. In order to expedite the return of this property from the United States zone, and to alleviate the burden of administration falling upon the military authorities, it has been decided to proceed by asking the governments of United Nations which have been occupied by Germany to submit lists of property looted by Germany and known or believed to be located in Germany or Austria. Following the receipt of these lists, which may be submitted seriatim and which may indicate priorities in the urgency of return, it is intended, where necessary, to invite the United Nations concerned to send small missions to the United States zones of occupation in Germany and Austria for the purpose of identifying such of the listed property as each of the occupying authorities may have been able to discover in his zone.

Accordingly, the Government of the United States invites the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to submit to this Government one or more lists of property believed to have been looted by Germany from the Soviet Union, or from United Nations nationals in the Soviet Union, which the Soviet Government has reason to believe may be located in the United States zones of occupation in Germany or Austria. These lists should, so far as possible, refer separately to property believed to be in Germany and in Austria. They should further contain as much description of the property as possible and as may be required to enable the occupying authorities to identify the property, and should include all available information as to the location of the property. Since the Soviet Government may desire to indicate an order of priority of return, it is suggested that the lists include property which has already been the subject of earlier communications to this Government. The lists may include looted gold, securities and currencies, although the restitution of these will have to await intergovernmental agreement.⁵⁹

London, 20 September, 1945.

Sir: On behalf of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, I have the honour to submit the following representations, for the consideration of the Government of the United States, regarding the reparations due to the Jewish people from Germany and her allies.

2. The problem of requiring Germany and her satellites, in the measure of the practicable, to make good the losses they have inflicted on the nations and individuals they have assailed and despoiled, is engaging the consideration of the United Nations. The Jewish Agency for Palestine, as the representative of the Jewish people, desires to draw attention to that aspect of the problem which affects the Jewish people, and in particular to their relation to Palestine.

⁶⁰ In a circular telegram, October 18, 8 p. m., the Department informed its representatives in the interested countries that henceforth they should transmit lists submitted to them directly to Berlin and Vienna rather than send them through Washington (740.00119 EW/10-1845).

3. The first declaration of war by Germany (and subsequently by her associates) was made against the Jewish people, and it took a special form. Its aim was not conquest and enslavement, but the complete physical extermination of the Jews, the utter destruction of their spiritual and religious heritage, and the confiscation of all their material possessions. In executing their declarations of war, Germany and her associates murdered some 6,000,000 Jews, destroyed all Jewish communal institutions wherever their authority extended, stole all the treasures of Jewish art and learning, and seized all Jewish property, public and private, on which they could lay their hands. It has been estimated that the monetary value of the material losses thus inflicted upon the Jewish people may amount to over The mass murders, the human suffering, the annihi-£2,000,000,000. lation of spiritual, intellectual, and creative forces, are probably without parallel in the history of mankind.

This war against the Jews has created a three-fold problem—of reparation, of rehabilitation, and of restitution.

- 5 [sic]. The problem of restitution embraces the buildings, plant, equipment, money, securities and valuables of various kinds taken from Jewish institutions and individuals, as well as Jewish cultural, literary, and artistic treasures. In so far as the owners, whether institutions or individuals, have survived or left successors, their claims to restitution must rest upon the same footing as the claims of citizens of the United Nations, and should be treated on the basis of equal rights.
- 6. But many of the institutions have been swept away, and will never be restored, while considerable numbers of Jews have been murdered and left no heirs. Much Jewish property was deposited in non-enemy countries, and the owners have disappeared, leaving no successors. It should need no argument to prove that property by crime rendered masterless should not be treated as bona vacantia, and fall to the governments which committed the crimes, or to any other governments, or to strangers having no title to it. It is submitted that the provisions for heirless property falling to the State were not designed to cover the case of mass-murder of a people. Such properties belong to the victim, and that victim is the Jewish people as a whole. The true heir, therefore, is the Jewish people, and those properties should be transferred to the representative of the Jewish people, to be employed in the material, spiritual and cultural rehabilitation of the Jews. A separate memorandum on the subjects of restitution and indemnification will in due course be submitted jointly by the Jewish Agency for Palestine and other Jewish organisations. In what follows, the Jewish Agency proposes to concentrate on the inter-connected problems of reparation and rehabilitation.

- 7. Of the surviving Jews of the European Continent, some may desire to settle in their countries of origin, and some to seek a new life in other countries of the Diaspora, but the vast majority desire to make their permanent home in Palestine. Such assets as may be recovered by way of indemnification, under paragraph 6 above, for property confiscated or destroyed, or deposited and rendered available by the extinction of ownership, for the several purposes of Jewish rehabilitation should be applied to all these tasks. In so far as they are applied to the settlement of Jews in Palestine, they should be placed under the trusteeship of the Jewish Agency for Palestine.
- 8. But the means likely to be derived from this source will fall far short of what is needed for the rehabilitation of Jews anxious to settle in Palestine. The main part of the funds for this purpose should, in justice, be provided from the reparations due from the enemy states for the infinitude of murder, suffering and destruction which they have inflicted on the Jewish people. The principle of reparation, within the limits of practicability, has been accepted as just by the United Nations, and the Jewish people invoke it in full confidence that their claim calls for special recognition, as it is not covered by the present plan for the distribution of reparations, in which only States are to be the beneficiaries. The specific claim on behalf of the Jewish people is put forward in view of the moral obligation resting upon the United Nations to use their best endeavours to solve the problems created by Germany's war of aggression, one of which is the Jewish problem as it presents itself to-day in large parts of Europe. That the United Nations are mindful of their responsibility for assuming the collective protection of the victims of racial and religious persecution is shown by numerous resolutions of UNRRA, 60 by the agreement of the Four Powers on war crimes, 61 and to some extent also by the Statute of the Inter-Governmental Committee for Assistance to Refugees. 62

⁶⁰ A list of Resolutions of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, organized topically, can be found in George Woodbridge, UNRRA:

- 9. It is therefore submitted that a proper percentage of the reparations to be obtained from Germany should be allotted for the purpose of the resettlement in Palestine of Jewish victims of racial and religious persecution, and granted, in the form of suitable assets (e.g. plant, machinery, equipment, and materials), to the Jewish Agency for Palestine, as the body charged by international authority with the duty of developing the Jewish National Home.
- 10. Included in the general question of reparations is the specific problem of the German Colony in Palestine, which since 1933 has embraced the Nazi doctrines. The Jewish Agency has already represented to His Majesty's Government that the members of this Colony should not, on release from internment, be allowed to reside in Palestine, but should be returned to Germany, and that their property should form part of the reparations due by Germany to the Jewish people.
- 11. The Jewish Agency for Palestine therefore makes the following submissions:
- (a) That with regard to the problem of Jewish property forming the subject-matter of indemnification and restitution, in so far as the individual or communal owners of such property cannot be traced, the title should pass to the representatives of the Jewish people, the realisable assets to be employed for the rehabilitation of Jewish men, women, and children.

(b) That in so far as such assets are to be employed in rehabilitating in Palestine the Jewish victims of racial and religious persecution, they should be entrusted to the Jewish Agency for this purpose.

(c) That the Jewish people should be allotted a proper percentage of reparations, to be entrusted to the Jewish Agency for Palestine for the rehabilitation and resettlement in Palestine of Jewish victims of racial and religious persecution.

(d) That the Jewish people's share of reparations should include the assets of German Colonists in Palestine.

Mr. Goldmann stated that a copy of the letter had been given to Secretary of State Byrnes while he was in London at the First Session of the Council of Foreign Ministers. Mr. Acheson assured Mr. Goldmann that the request would be referred to the proper officials in the Department and that he would be contacted as soon as possible.

I agree that it should be discussed in the Allied Control Councils in Germany and Austria rather than here. Since I understand that the Soviets have proposed this, it should be possible to get the British and French to agree to this procedure. Reinstein will discuss the matter informally with Waley and Rueff and inform you.

I approve fully of the directive sent to General Clay which is described in your telegram.⁶⁵ I consider it important that the return of identifiable looted property be started as soon as possible. [Byrnes.]

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, September 24, 1945—7 p. m.

8387. For Reinstein. Dept sees no objection to your communicating substance of Soviet FonOff letter of Sept 16 (3303 of Sept 18 from Moscow to Dept repeated to London for Harriman as 462) informally to Brit and Fr (reur Conference system query 69).

⁶⁰ In a teletype conference, September 21, Mr. Reinstein asked if he might transmit to his French and British counterparts the text of the Soviet note of September 16 (740.00119 Council/9-2245).

You may also add informally that agreement of Soviet Govt to:
a) moving Reparations Commission to Berlin; b) informing Reparation Commission and Control Council of equipment left in Eastern Zone; c) permitting mixed commissions of specialists into Eastern Zone to become familiar with this equipment; d) suggested procedure for handling external assets is welcome to Dept; that Dept agrees that Berlin Protocol did not provide for Control Council determination of equipment to be removed from Eastern zones.

Remaining point of disagreement, since Secretary agreed on desirability of expediting determination of amount and character of equipment removable as reparation, is in allocation of 25 per cent of equipment from Western Germany due USSR under Protocol. Dept feels strongly that procedure suggested by Soviet Govt, initially for allocation of this 25 per cent by Reparations Commission, currently by Control Council, in advance of allocation of 75 per cent to all other claimants, gives USSR preferred position in allocation, and adversely affects interest of other claimants. British suggestion that Control Council allocate between USSR and Poland on one hand and other claimants on other, but only after consultation of US, Brit and Fr members with other claimants is agreeable to Dept in principle but appears clumsy in operation. (Embtel 9698 of Sept. 20.)

Please also note that Soviet letter to Kennan and Soviet memorandum to Secretary (urtel 9629 of Sept 18⁷²) give different dates for export of equipment from Western zones as advance deliveries, determination of which Soviet Govt wants made by Oct 15. Memorandum states deliveries should begin not later than Nov 1. Letter states deliveries should begin not later than Jan 1. Can you or Mosely ascertain from USSR delegation which date is correct, and advise Murphy for Clay.

Finally, you will note Dept's suggestion to Murphy in Deptel dispatched today and repeated to London,⁷³ that final determination and its date will lose importance if Control Council furnishes successive lists of equipment eligible as advance deliveries. Please ascertain from Fr and Brit reps whether their elements in Control Council are likely to follow General Clay's lead if he adopts Dept's suggestion on this point. Brit view that advance deliveries should be held small quantities prior to final determination runs counter to this.

Sent to London as 8387; repeated to USPolAd Berlin for Murphy as 536. Repeated to Moscow and Paris.

Washington, September 24, 1945—7 p.m.

535. Reference is made to Deptels 412,74 430 75 and Embtel 88 76 from Moscow. Following is for info and for communication to Clay. Secretary states that USSR asked at first session Council Foreign Ministers (CFM) to discuss German reparations, submitting memorandum 77 as follows:

- (a) Whereas no practical steps have yet been taken to implement decision of Potsdam on German reparations and particularly advance deliveries:
- (b) Therefore CFM should fix definite schedule for determination by Control Council of equipment removable from three western zones (not later than December 1); advance deliveries (not later than Oct 15); actual export of equipment eligible as advance deliveries (not later than Nov 1) (FonOff letter to Moscow Embassy 18 states Jan 1);

(c) CFM should ask Control Council to approve list of enterprises, equipment of which to be made available to USSR as its 25 per cent of deliveries from Western Germany;

- (d) CFM should ask Control Council to dispatch immediately to western zones mixed commissions of specialists to prepare material required by Control Council in carrying out determination of advance deliveries and final amount and character.
- (e) USSR is willing to have Reparation Commission move to Berlin.

Secretary stated he did not want to discuss German reparation at present sessions CFM, but agreed that determination of amount and character of removals should be expedited. He stated he would issue instructions that this be done. Accordingly, Dept has asked War Dept to instruct US Group CC to proceed urgently with compilation of lists advance deliveries and to make every effort to expedite final determination. War Dept instruction asks US Group CC to select plants specially constructed for and devoted by Germans during hostilities entirely to production of arms, ammunition, implements of war, aircraft (and air engines) and sea-going ships as first list of equipment eligible for advance deliveries and to follow this by further lists from metals, chemicals, machinery and other industries directly required for making war, as these can be eliminated from industries

 Telegram 430, September 10, 5 p. m., to Berlin, was a repeat of telegram 7761 to London, summarizing the discussions which had already taken place concerning the respective roles of the Allied Commission on Reparations and the Allied Control Council in the formulation of the German reparations plan (740.00119-Council/9-1045).

required for minimum peacetime economy. Dept suggests that date of final determination may lose importance if Control Council issues successive and full lists of equipment eligible for advance deliveries during October and November.

You will note in Embtel 88 of Sept 18 that Soviet Govt is also agreeable to supplying Control Council and Reparation Commission with information on presence of equipment left in Soviet zone of occupation and will also give mixed commissions of specialists opportunity to become familiar with this equipment on spot. Dept suggests that since Reparation Commission's reconvention in Berlin must wait until deputy to Ambassador Pauley is chosen and sent to Berlin (probably end of October), US element in Control Council receive information from Soviet as offered.

Dept's views on mixed commissions, now that Soviet Govt agrees to their dispatch east as well as west, is that General Clay should press in Control Council for their early constitution and dispatch, possibly one for each zone. Consideration should be given in Control Council to inclusion of specialists from countries claiming reparations but not occupying powers on commissions, possibly two different countries being represented along with four occupying powers on each commission, making eight countries on four commissions. Country representation can be arranged in Control Council. Dept and Murphy will invite named govts to supply specialists to commission to visit US zone.

Sole remaining point of disagreement between USSR position and that of Dept is in allocation machinery for filling Soviet 25 percent share in reparations from Western Germany. Soviet originally asked that initial allocation be made by Reparations Commission, 25 per cent to USSR, 75 per cent to all others. Reply to Aide-Mémoire in Embtel 88 from Moscow states USSR wants Control Council to make original 25 per cent-75 per cent allocation. Dept feels strongly USSR should join Inter-Allied Reparation Agency for allocating with all other claimants and should not have favored position resulting from initial allocation between Soviet and all others. Point will doubtless be taken up with Brit and Fr reps in London, in discussion of organization of IARA. Meanwhile Dept feels that Control Council should not act on Soviet submission of list of plants desired as advance deliveries in so far as allocation of these plants to USSR is concerned. Dept repeats request for reporting of list by you to Dept and to London.79

- 1. Dept is puzzled by attitude taken by Waley in your preliminary discussions. Receipt of Brit note of Aug 31 on IARA, and Brit invitation to organizing meeting, suggested to Dept that Brit favored early constitution of IARA as means of allocating such deliveries as were made. Since then, even before receipt of reply from Soviet Union s1 to Aide-Mémoire, 2 Dept has been pressing for large advance deliveries, made seriatim, which would narrow problem of final determination of amount and character of reparation deliveries to marginal cases and reduce pressure on Control Council at end of 6 months period. It was hoped Brit interest in organization of IARA indicated sympathy this view. ACC thus far unwilling to allocate coal or other exports. Advance deliveries must be allocated. Hence Dept's support of early establishment IARA.
- 2. Waley's position that inviting governments should establish statutes of IARA is not acceptable to Dept. His alternative that invitations might request comments on proposed statutes and special conference if substantial disagreement developed is agreeable.
- 3. Dept is opposed to inclusion of restitution in IARA. Agency viewed as consisting of technical representatives acquainted with industry, whereas restitution is political problem. Dept still holds that ACC should deal with restitution, and has adopted such course of action.
- 4. Dept position on omission of Denmark unchanged, and US is unwilling to prejudge Danish claim to reparation by failing to extend invitation to IARA. Omission of Egypt does not concern Dept, since their inclusion to conference to divide percentage shares was made at suggestion of Brit.
- 5. Formula by which Control Council would place valuations on capital equipment available for reparation is agreeable to Dept. If Reparation Commission fails to meet to lay down policies for guidance of Control Council on this point prior to submission of first list of advance deliveries, Dept suggests adoption of cost less depreciation as basis of valuation.
- 6. US would prefer far less formal arrangement for secretariat and agency than that implied in Brit proposals re payment of expenses and salaries of officials. US willing to assume share of expenses of Agency. But would prefer to see salaries of all participants paid by the member countries, and question of salary scale for secretariat and members left to individual countries. Under this procedure, members pay would be no concern of agency, nor would that of their assistants. Similarly, professional personnel in secretariat would be supplied by member governments. Only secretarial, clerical and housekeeping assistance, and rent and expenses of building would be shared among governments. This procedure would keep delegations of governments truly small. There is also involved the question that US cannot obtain an adequate delegate to IARA at salary of $8,000, and would prefer $10,000 or $12,000. Dept feels that whole salary scale is too low to attract appropriate US personnel.

- 7. More time and consultation in Dept is required before definitive answer can be given to your request for instructions on automatic procedure for allocation vs. Brit proposal of using first secretariat, and then referring disputes to committee of five. Initial reaction here, however, is that Brit proposal involves excessive dictation to smaller claimants by US, Brit and France, and at same time undermines completely our objection to allocating initially to USSR in Control Council. It was thought that IARA organizing committee could devise appropriate mechanism for automatic allocation procedure. A further suggestion in Dept, additional to random selection of order of choices and use of all first choices before second choices occurred, was system of bidding with chips or "reparation units", divided among claimants in proportion to share of total reparation, which would be used to bid for items in separate batches of equipment. Your fear that countries would elect equipment which could more economically be used elsewhere is not considered compelling, since emphasis in reparation removals is firstly on industrial disarmament, secondly on the damage suffered by countries during war and thirdly on reconstruction aspects of reparation. If a country is prepared to use up its share to reparation in taking equipment out of Germany, even though such equipment actually has little or no value to that country, US view is that it should have such equipment, provided other countries obtain full opportunity to other equipment on equitable basis. Brit interest in "planning" allocations may be more economical; it is doubted whether it is likely to lead to as harmonious relations internationally.
- 8. As already noted in a separate telegram, Dept feels that Waley's suggestion that Control Council allocate to USSR after US, Br and Fr members had consulted 14 other claimant countries involves a procedure so clumsy as to be unworkable. Dept would prefer automatic machinery for allocation in IARA and USSR participation.

Granted that it might be undignified to invite USSR, participation could be allowed for and Control Council instructed by US, UK and Fr delegates to submit lists for advance deliveries to IARA, in which instance USSR would join. If, however, allocation in IARA is to be made by dictation by US, Br, and Fr, there is no objection in Dept to allocation of 25 per cent initially to USSR in Control Council without consultation with other claimants, since reason for opposing initial allocation to USSR falls to ground.

London, September 26, 1945—1 a.m. [Received September 25—11: 40 p. m.]

9968. Delsec 60, September 26 from Reinstein.

- 1. Divergence of opinion between US and British on invitation to USSR and on allocation procedure seems to me so great that I doubt feasibility of reaching agreement on invitations for establishment of Inter-Allied Reparations Agency this week. Rueff planning to leave for Paris Thursday.⁸³ We will meet again tomorrow and Thursday if necessary.⁸⁴ If adequate instructions reach me in time we will attempt to draft invitation for submission to three governments. If not I will suggest Rueff return to London next week for further discussions. Should this be necessary I urge that Kindleberger fly to London to participate in discussions.
- 2. Department's continued insistence upon invitation to USSR ignores formal refusal in Soviet note to Kennan quoted in Moscow's 3303, September 18 to Department. Allocation by Allied Control Commission as between USSR and Poland on one hand and other claimants on other is USSR suggestion not British. As I have previously reported Waley considers Soviet participation highly desirable but does not regard it as possible to obtain. Until this issue is resolved it is impossible to go forward with organization of IARA. Failure of USSR to join IARA seems to me will probably necessitate revision in our thinking on a number of problems possibly including exchange of mixed commissions. I regard it as desirable that Department review entire situation carefully before making decision.

- 3. Other principal issue is that of allocation procedure. I interpret Department telegram 8390 84a as meaning this question is being considered further. I do not regard arguments in paragraph 7 of 8390 as persuasive. IARA is allocation agency. Decision on what is to be removed from Germany will be made by Control Council under policies laid down for it. Appropriate allocation of equipment to be removed from Germany as between claimant countries seems to me to have nothing to do with question of economic disarmament of Germany which presumably will be carried out no matter which countries receive equipment. Criteria for allocation should therefore be economic. Plan suggested in paragraph 8 of Department telegram 8390 does not seem to me likely to contribute to European reconstruction.
- 4. I do not understand reference to coal in paragraph 1 of your telegram. British attitude is that under Potsdam agreement reparations are at present confined to capital equipment and foreign assets with current output largely mortgaged for payment of imports. Proposed terms of reference of IARA are to deal with capital equipment. External assets could be handled by it by decision of three controlling powers as well as current output if current output is to go to reparations. With reference to your question regarding British attitude see telegram 85 reporting on meeting on IARA today which suggests change.
- 5. Paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of Department telegram 8390 noted restitution will be discussed in CFM tomorrow.86 You will be informed of results.
- 6. Suggestion in paragraph 6 of your telegram regarding secretariat does not appear to me to be feasible and does not accord with British and French ideas. Is Department able to commit itself to a contribution to IARA?
- 7. Department telegram 8390 just deciphered reached me too late for today's meeting with Waley and Rueff. I shall attempt to arrange teletype conference for 2100 hours London time Wednesday September 26. Failing instructions I shall act as outlined in paragraph 1 above. [Reinstein.]

- 1. British suggest with reference to allocation of shares in reparations from Western Zones other than to USSR and Poland, there should be a preliminary meeting of representatives of 15 claimant countries at technical (official) level prior to formal conference, They suggest such a meeting take place at London around November 7. I agree strongly on desirability such a meeting.

- 1. Dearborn and I attended third meeting of IARA organizing committee on 25 September. Since neither Rueff nor I had yet received instructions on the matters referred at previous meeting progress was limited.
- 2. Draft note to Belgian Govt, text of which is being telegraphed separately, 89 was agreed to subject to French reservation on seat and my reservation of countries to be listed.
- 3. Waley suggested there is a strong probability that around the middle of October the coordinating committee will declare a substantial volume of equipment to be available for interim delivery and that there will be similar periodic declarations thereafter. Necessity for obtaining comments of claimant Govts delay resulting from failure to agree on invitations and time required for negotiation with Belgian Govt and allowance of reasonable time for designation of representatives indicate impossibility of holding first meeting early as October 15. This would confront occupying powers with necessity of allocating themselves. British suggested invitations might be issued without fixing date and place of first meeting and claimants asked to submit immediately to three Govts lists of equipment desired. Allocation could, if necessary, be made on basis of work of experts.
- 4. Nigel Sutton has been selected by British as Secretary General. Before war he was in business in Paris and during war has been in Political Intelligence Dept FornOff. He will be available in London for discussions between 5 and 10 October although not free for full time work until the middle of November. I think it highly desirable that the US should have a deputy secretary general available for joint work in London by 5 October and for meeting of British, French and as elements are scheduled in Paris for 10 October. De Seynes will be available on the French side.

- 5. It was agreed that the salary of the deputy secretary general should be 2,000 pounds to be fixed in terms of Belgian francs. Traveling expenses from the US self, family and household effects would be paid.
- 6. It was agreed delegates to IARA should [be] paid by their Govts and secretariat from funds of agency.
- 7. Waley suggested that the US, UK and French Govts should make an advance contribution of 5,000 pounds each to the funds of IARA in order to enable it to get under way. I said I would seek instructions but was uncertain whether we could make contribution in advance of establishment of agency.

10081. This is Delsec 77 from Reinstein.

- 1. Dearborn and I attended fourth meeting of Interallied Reparations Agency Organizing Committee on 27 Sept.
- 2. Waley suggested that in view of the difficulties in securing agreement on the precise terms of reference procedure and membership of IARA it might be well to postpone settlement of these matters and leave them to proposed conference of officials on 7 Nov. Both Denmark and Egypt would be invited to conference. His draft of invitation is being sent as separate telegram. Revised memo would be submitted as attachment.
- 3. The conference of officials would discuss terms of reference and procedure of IARA as well as shares in reparations. Invitations to IARA would be sent to Denmark and Egypt. If conference resulted $^{^{60}}$ Telegram 10096, September 28, 4 p. m., from London, informed the Department that the draft was being revised and would not be telegraphed at present (740.00119 Council/9–2845).

in their exclusion from shares in reparations they could then be excluded from IARA without embarrassment. I indicated that the US would probably not insist on a renewal of the invitation to the USSR although I had not yet received final instructions.

- 4. This seems to me a sensible proposal which goes a considerable way towards meeting our objections to excessive dictation to the smaller countries. I do not think it would delay the substantive functioning of IARA although its formal constitution would be postponed. It could probably not be established until late in November or beginning December. I suggested that the invitation to the conference should indicate that it is expected that IARA will come into existence very shortly thereafter and that the member governments should have staff ready to participate.
- 5. I promised to try to obtain instructions by Saturday 29 Sept on Waley's new proposal. It is hoped meeting on that afternoon can agree to the proposed conference of officials and to the form of the invitation thereto.
- 6. The problem of restitution remains the outstanding cause of disagreement. Waley agrees that as much as possible should be left to ACC and zone commanders but doubts that latter are best fitted to settle conflicting claims to looted property. He thinks such questions should be settled by an agency on which all claimants are represented and is strongly opposed to the creation of a separate international agency merely for that purpose. I expressed the US position but think he has a point in regarding IARA as a logical arbiter. It was agreed that issue could be postponed until Nov meeting.
- 7. Rueff urged that an executive committee should be set up not later than 10 Oct to start looking into the staffing and housekeeping problems of IARA. Waley agreed to supply a British member of such a committee by 10 Oct. It is highly desirable that a US member should be available.
- 8. Rueff stated that his Govt had agreed to Brussels as the seat for IARA. Since the British refuse to consider Germany because of lack of accommodation for even their own MG ⁹¹ officials Brussels was agreed.
- 9. It was agreed that the proposed meeting of 10 Oct concerning the French share in reparations should take place in Lisbon and not in Paris as originally scheduled.

There is serious question in my mind as to whether the approach to the German reparations problem taken by the Department in its recent communication to the Soviet, British and French Governments correctly reflects the spirit of the Potsdam Protocol or is likely to produce any tangible results. I wish to discuss the entire matter with you in detail as soon as possible after my return to Washington. Meanwhile I think you should defer making any arrangements with respect to Mixed Commissions entering either the Eastern or Western Zones.

I do not consider the proposed arrangements described in Secdel 84 93 with regard to the selection of a deputy for Mr. Pauley satisfactory. It seems to me that it will be difficult to obtain a man of the proper stature and competence to serve in the capacity of deputy. Furthermore anyone serving in such capacity would probably find himself at a considerable disadvantage in his relations with the other members of the Allied Reparations Commission. I suggest that if the President approves you put the matter frankly to Pauley with a view to dividing the German and Japanese reparations work. [Byrnes.]

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

655. Reference our despatch No. 998, dated September 22, 1945, with which were forwarded copies of the report on "A Minimum German Standard of Living in Relation to the Level of Industry". This report concluded that, on the basis of a period "3 to 5 years hence", the various objectives of industrial disarmament, standard of living, and German absorption of the costs of occupation constitute an "insoluble" problem in view of territory losses and population transfers.

This report is now being considered by the Level of Industry Committee under the Directorate of Economics of the Allied Control Authority. From discussions that have taken place to date, it becomes clear that policy decisions must soon be arrived at concerning the extent to which de-industrialization will be pursued, the amount of exports that Germany will be allowed in order to obtain essential imports, and in general the standard of living that will be within the reach of the German economy. Quadripartite decisions will have to be made in terms of specific industries—as, for example, the domestic capacity of steel ingot production. If the Department's views have been formulated in terms of specific industries, I should be immediately advised in order to present such views at the appropriate time.

As part of the specific industry problems, overall policies will tend to evolve around two general issues. The first issue will be as to how far we are determined to pursue de-industrialization if it becomes obvious that at least for the next year or two this will require enlarged costs to the US in terms of assistance that will need to be given to Germany to limit starvation, disease, and unrest, if not to support our own military forces. The second issue relates to the problem of the relationship of the German economy to the rest of Europe. It is gradually being realized by officials here that any wholesale transfer

In other words, it is becoming clearer that extreme, ill-considered de-industrialization of Germany may well have the effect of creating and extending chaos in Europe. I should appreciate the Department's views.

The French have proposed that the Control Council be directed to make a determination of the property to be restored and to complete deliveries within a period of 2 years as in the reparations agreement. The Soviets have blocked every attempt to work out a formula under which the Control Council would be directed to take any form of action or any time would be fixed within which action should be taken.

and accompanying memorandum to Governments with potential claims to German reparations were agreed subject to the approval of the Department and with respect to IARA facilities in Germany of General Clay.

Note No. I

The Governments of the French Republic, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America are informed that the Control Council in Germany are likely in the near future to determine that certain capital industrial equipment in the western zones of Germany will be available for advance deliveries in accordance with paragraph 7 of the agreement on reparation reached at the Potsdam Conference. It is understood that the equipment available is likely to consist mainly of plants of the metal and chemical industries and of machine tools and similar equipment.

The Three Governments would be glad to know whether the blank Government desires to put forward a request to receive any type of such plant or equipment or any individual plants by way of advance deliveries or otherwise and to state to which of their needs they attach most importance and urgency. It is of course to be understood that the share of any Government which does not put forward any request for advance deliveries will not be prejudiced when the time comes for allocating capital industrial equipment available for reparations in accordance with paragraph 6 of the agreement on reparations reached at the Potsdam Conference. The Three Governments will bear in mind all requests received but can of course give no assurance that it will be possible to make plant and equipment availability by way of advance deliveries or otherwise.

NOTE NO. II

The Provisional Government of France and the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America have invited the Government of blank to supply by October 1, 1945, data relating to the reparation claim of the Government of blank against Germany and the value of prewar German assets situated in its territory.

(2) The Three Governments now invite the Governments of blank to appoint a representative to a meeting of officials to be held in London on November 7, 1945 to consider the data supplied by the governments concerned and to prepare the way for an Inter-Governmental Agreement on the allocation of reparation receipts as between these governments.

(3) The Three Governments further suggest that this conference of officials should make recommendations to their Governments in regard to the appointment of an Inter-Allied Reparation Agency. A memorandum on this subject is enclosed which might form the basis of discussion. The Three Governments consider that the agency should if possible start its work by December 1st, 1945.

MEMORANDUM RELATING TO INTER-ALLIED REPARATION AGENCY

(1) The Governments of the French Republic, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America propose the establishment of an Inter-Allied Reparation Agency (hereinafter referred to as The Agency) to which the countries entitled to reparations from Germany other than the USSR and Poland shall be invited to appoint members. It will be recollected that the share of those two countries has been otherwise dealt with.

(2) The functions of The Agency will be:

(a) To receive from the Control Council in Germany lists (with valuation) of the industrial capital equipment available to member Governments for reparation under Articles 6 and 7 of Section IV of the Potsdam Protocol.⁹⁷

(b) To receive from the Member Governments lists of the industrial capital equipment from the western zones which they desire to receive as reparations under the above mentioned Articles

6 and 7.

(c) To allocate material between the Member Governments,

(d) To ensure the equitable application of the plan as between the different Member Governments insofar as this is not a matter for the Control Council to decide,

(e) To perform such other functions as are entrusted to it in regard to the allocation of reparation.

(3) The President and Secretary General of The Agency and the Chairman of the Committee of Five referred to below will be appointed by the Governments of the UK, USA, and France.

(4) The Secretariat General will draw up programmes for the allocation of material between the member countries taking into account their respective needs and will submit their programmes to The Agency. In case two or more countries desire to receive the same material the matter will be referred to a Committee of Five of which the delegations to The Agency representing the Governments of the UK, the USA and France shall be permanent members. The other two members shall hold office in rotation for a period of 2 months and shall be the delegates of the other Member Governments chosen in the alphabetical order of the names of the countries concerned in the French language. The decisions of the Committee of Five shall be final, each member having one vote.

(5) On all questions other than those referred to in the preceding paragraph and in paragraph 7 the Committee will decide by vote, each delegate being entitled to one vote.

(6) The question of fixing the seat of The Agency in Brussels is under discussion with the Belgian Government. The Agency will also have an office at such place or places in Germany as may be agreed with the Control Council.

(7) Each Member Government will meet the expenses of its own delegation. The common expenses of The Agency [other than those met by the German Government in accordance with] 98 paragraph 8 below will be borne by the Member Governments in proportion to their shares in German reparations. The annual budget of The Agency will be subject to the approval of The Agency and for this purpose the voting power of each Member Government will be in proportion to its share in German reparations.

(8) (i) The Control Council and the Commanders in Chief in their several zones will be requested to ensure to The Agency to its members and to the staff of The Agency and of its members (other than German nationals and other persons recruited locally) the following facilities:

(a) The free provision at the cost of the German authorities of such local services and local currency as may be required in Germany for their accommodation and transport and approved by the zone commander concerned.

(b) Their exemption from all German taxation including customs duties;

(c) Their exemption from exchange restrictions and from suit and legal process in any German court;

(d) The inviolability of their premises and their archives subject to the right of search where a crime has been committed under Military Government law.

- (e) Appropriate freedom of communication by cypher and otherwise with their respective Governments to the same extent as that enjoyed by Military Missions attached to the Control Council.
- (ii) The above facilities shall only be granted to any of the personnel specified in this paragraph when his name has been notified to the Control Council.

(9) All other facilities which the Agency may require in Germany shall be the subject of agreement between it and the Control Council or the Commander in Chief in their respective zones.

10. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 8 the personnel mentioned therein shall be subject in each zone to the same regulations as apply in that zone to officers of corresponding rank, status and nationality in the service of or attached to the Commander in Chief of that zone or the Control Council. The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Acting Secretary of State

London, October 4, 1945—8 p. m. [Received October 5—3 a. m.]

10342. This is Delsec 107 from Reinstein.

1. With the conclusion of the meeting of the Foreign Ministers Council it appears possible to make a full reply to Department's telegram 8377 [8387], September 24 and to report on the results of the conversations I have had with Waley and Rueff. I have felt it desirable to do so at length so that full information may be available to Department prior to departure of reparations group for London and Berlin meetings.

- 2. As indicated in Embassy's telegram 9629, September 18,99 the USSR on September 14, submitted a proposal to direct Allied Control Commission, Germany to fix the amount and character of equipment to be removed from the Western Zones by December 1 and to fix dates for the determination and commencement of equipment to be furnished as advance deliveries. (Document CFM 45 (15) [C.F.M. (45) 15].) Soviet proposal also provided for transfer of ACR to Berlin and sending of mixed commissions of experts into Western Zones. Soviet proposals re dates were opposed in a British paper (CFM 45) [C.F.M. (45) 45]. British also opposed immediate sending of commissions proposing instead exchange of information of removals from Soviet zone for list of equipment available in British zone. After examination this data, British prepared for entry of specialists representing interested countries into British zone conditioned upon entry of specialists into Soviet zone. (This proposal was made prior to my furnishing British with Soviet reply of September 16 to our proposals of early September given in Moscow's 3300 [3303], September 18 to Department.) French submitted paper (CFM 38) [C.F.M. (45) 38]² calling for action on restitution as part of reparation proposal.
- 3. As a result of Secretary's conversation of September 16 with Molotov 1 latter agreed to drop proposal on dates. When subject came up on September 26 [25] (minutes 21 meeting 4) Molotov introduced a substitute resolution providing simply that ACR should move to Berlin and that Allied Control Commission, Germany should be instructed, in collaboration with ACR to accelerate work on reparations plan and in particular advance deliveries in order that date set in Potsdam Protocol should be met (CFM 53) [C.F.M. (45) 53]. French attempted to attach, as condition to approval, provision for restitution and replacement but eventually agreed to separate discussion of restitution. Soviet proposal was then adopted.
- 4. Restitution was considered both by Council and deputies on several occasions. On September 27 (24th meeting) Conference

Not printed; this cable transmitted the text of the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers, entitled "Reparations from Germany"; for text of memorandum, see C.F.M. (45) 15, September 14, vol. 11, p. 158.

¹Dated September 22; for text, see ibid., p. 325.
²Dated September 20; for text, see ibid., p. 285.

³ See memorandum of conversation by Mr. Bohlen, September 16, ibid., p. 194. ⁴ Ibid., p. 384.

⁵ Text of this document, not printed, contained only minor differences from the proposal as contained in the minutes of the 21st meeting, September 25.

Foreign Ministers agreed Allied Control Commission Germany should examine urgently restitution problem, taking into account United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943 6 on Axis acts of dispossession and instructed deputies to consider and report before end of session on French proposal for a 2-year period for effecting restitution. As indicated by Delsec 85,7 Soviets blocked every attempt to work out a formula under which any requirements would be placed on Allied Control Commission to take action on grounds that they needed advice and information from their economic experts before they could engage in any discussion on restitution. Matter is still pending before deputies as unfinished business. Soviets also blocked our effort to raise question of restitution in Austria. Soviet tactics of delay adopted in face of warning from Secretary in Council meeting that failure to settle restitution question might cause difficulty when reparations plan comes before Allied Control Commission, where French concurrence will be needed.

- 5. Replying last paragraph Department's telegram 8377 [8387], British position appears to have changed in last several weeks. Waley's letter of September 17 to Dunn quoted in Delsec 35 s and his early conversations with me indicated a clear position that interim deliveries should be very small. Later he began talking of extensive advance deliveries. I believe that this may reflect ministerial consideration of the question. Dept's attention is directed in this connection to differences between paragraph 3 of September 17 letter and paragraph 5 of British paper of September 22 (CFM 45) [C.F.M. (45) 45]. Listing of plants available for removal from British zone, including Krupp Works at Essen (refer CC 16875, September 29 [28] from USG/CC to War s) is also significant.
- 6. French position is tied up with restitution and with their desires concerning Rhineland and Ruhr. Our impression was they did not realize strength of their position in influencing reparations program through veto right in Allied Control Commission. However, they now appear to have grasped the point. Question remains how far they will be prepared to go in exercising their veto right in opposition to the USSR. In general, impression I received from talks with Alphand ¹⁰ is that French hope to see establishment of Rhineland-Ruhr state which would be joined in some form of economic union with France and are opposed to removals from this area to USSR. As a result of Soviet objection to consideration of Rhineland-Ruhr question by deputies, it was agreed French paper on this subject (CFM 17) [C.F.M. (45) 17]¹¹ should be discussed through diplomatic channels with eventual resubmission to CFM. French and British have agreed to discuss economic aspects of matter next week probably beginning October 8. French desire discussions to take place in Paris but British are insisting upon London. It is our plan to join for purpose of listening to French views and reporting to Department.

7. Waley informs me Mark Turner now in Berlin has reported that economic directorate will submit to coordinating committee on October 15 or soon thereafter a first list of plants available for removal as advance deliveries. List will be comprised of 13 plants in Soviet list (refer CC 16875) plus 13 more from US Zone. This will bring a number of pending issues immediately to a head, among them the following:

a. Who will determine division between USSR-Poland and other claimants? Waley states British Representative will take position this is matter for ACR.

b. What part is to go to USSR? British fear USG/CC will take position all should go to USSR and hope that Department will see that any position taken by USG/CC will reflect US Government position. I have not informed Waley that USC/CC has raised question with Washington.

c. Question of valuation. Waley now feels that ACR should lay down policy.

- d. Question of compensating deliveries by USSR. Waley appears to feel these must come from outside Eastern Zone in view of (a) agreement that Germany is to be treated from economic viewpoint as a whole and (b) limitation of reparations under Potsdam Agreement to capital equipment and foreign assets. He states that failure to insist on this viewpoint will undermine efforts to carry on interzonal trade. Any goods taken from Eastern Zone by Soviets should be paid for by them under first charge principle. Although I realize that interpretation place[d] on Potsdam Protocol by Clayton and Collado is different (Embassy's telegram 8296, August 16 to Department, 2 repeated Berlin as 80) I have not discussed point with Waley since I have attempted to confine my activities on reparations to discussion of Inter-Allied Reparations Agency and to reporting questions and views of British and French to Department, is [in] conformity with Department's instructions.
- 8. As I informed Despres and Kindleberger in teletype conversation of September 26 British propose following additional items for discussion at forthcoming meeting of ACR:
- a. In determining what capital equipment is to be left in Germany, should any allowance be made for producing goods for delivery as reparations?

¹¹ Dated September 13; for the text, see vol. 11, p. 177.

¹² See Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, p. 938.

b. In calculating equipment needed for producing for export, will exports be figured only at amount necessary to cover import requirements or will allowance be made to cover service on pre-war debt? Waley is under definite instructions to raise this question.

c. US memorandum on labor services. 13 British intend, I believe merely to record their disagreement with our views.14

- 9. In the light of foregoing Waley believes ACR should meet in Berlin at a very early date, if possible about October 16. Rueff informed me that Novikov inclined to even an earlier meeting. Rueff and Waley attempted to arrange meeting with Novikov to discuss this matter after closing of CFM meeting but were unable to do so. Waley takes position calling of meeting is responsibility of Novikov as chairman.
- 10. As separately reported to Department, French are anxious that restitution and gold be discussed at projected talks of British, French and US elements of ACR scheduled to begin in London, October 10. British would like to have preliminary discussion of disposition of German Foreign assets and related questions. Among items they mentioned are whether German assets in eastern Austria to be taken by Soviets include those in British, French and US sectors of Vienna, what disposition to be made of German assets in western Austria, and disposition to be made of currency captured in Germany.
- 11. I have not been able to ascertain whether and to what extent British and French positions have been affected by conclusion of CFM meeting. Just prior to final meeting of CFM I discussed with Waley question of future action if CFM should adjourn without reaching agreement. His personal view was that action on reparations should go forward and that it would be mistake to allow Soviets to receive impression we are obstructing implementation of reparations agreement although (as indicated in preceding paragraphs) he envisages that discussions with Soviet will involve points on which there must be hard bargaining. Waley emphasized strongly necessity for full US participation in forthcoming meetings and difficulties which might result from delay of US in sending representatives, both from viewpoint of relations with USSR and from viewpoint of extremely tight time schedule confronting us.
- 12. Both Waley and Rueff seemed uncertain as to status of CFM decisions on reparations and restitution in the absence of a signed 10363. This is Delsec 110 from Reinstein. Reference Secdel 142.16 Department's fear that lists of equipment available for advance delivery may be issued before machinery for allocation of reparation deliveries has been established seems well grounded. However, in view of large number of unsettled issues regarding allocation to USSR listed in another telegram 17 reviewing reparations problem which I am sending tonight, I doubt whether we will be in a position to know how much can be allocated other claimants until the beginning of November. Under the circumstances, delay in organizing Inter-Allied Reparations Agency may not cause great difficulty. Availability of equipment for allocation may hasten agreement on shares and agency.

Reference telegram (urgent 8610, September 28). Did not reach here until October 3 and consequently your views were not available to me at October 1 meeting. I understand Rueff is still in London and will attempt to discuss your views with him and Waley tomorrow. War 73742

[Washington] 5 October 1945.

Subject is advance reparation deliveries urad CC 16875 Sept 29 [28]. 45.20 This is interim reply.

- 1. Decision has been reached in London negotiations concerning inter-Allied Reparation Agency -IARA- that initial allocation of industrial equipment removed from Western Zones of Germany as between Russia and Poland on the one hand, and other claimants on the other, will be made by Control Council. Further sub-allocation among claimants other than Russia and Poland will be made by IARA. However, State Dept opposes present allocation or delivery to Russia of any industrial equipment from Western Zones, pending -a- Appointment United States member IARA, who would act as your advisor on allocations by Control Council, -b- Receipt by IARA of lists of plants desired by other claimants, -c- Progress in resolution of counter-delivery issues—see Para 4 below—and formulation of valuation principles. For your information State Dept will review this matter with Secretary Byrnes on his return to determine whether he has made any commitments to make token deliveries in anticipation of regular allocation and delivery procedures.
- 2. Although you refer to 3 plants in US Zone included in original Soviet request, urad lists only 2-BMW 21 and FAK-.22 Request information as to 3rd plant.²³ With respect to these and other plants declared available in United States Zone request that you transmit exact identification of properties concerned, E. the United States for Germany, established in Berlin on October 1, 1945, to succeed the United States Group, Control Council for Germany.

Not printed; it stated the position of the United States Group, Control Council, that no plants could be made available for advance reparations deliveries until the question of the body making the allocation of reparations from the Western Zones between the Soviet Union and other claimants had been settled. It also indicated that the United States had already ordered dismantling of 5 plants in its zone in anticipation of their use as advance reparation payments and reported that 11 more would be made available. The British had listed 13 plants as available. Of this total of 29 plants, 13 were included in the Soviet list dated August 23, 3 from the United States Zone, and 10 from (Copy obtained from the Department of the Army files) the British Zone.

whole plant in Munich, or the whole complex of which Munich is the parent plant? 24

- 3. Pending decision on these allocation matters State Dept approves your action in declaring plants eligible for advance deliveries and urges you continue this process. It is contemplated such lists will serve not only as basis for advance deliveries but also will facilitate final determination called for Art 4 Para 6 Berlin Protocol.²⁵
- 4. Interpretation Art 4 Para 4 a Berlin Protocol concerning sources of Russian products to be exchanged for 15% removals from Western Zones allocated to USSR is considered to be matter for Reparations Commission. It is recommended that you ask Control Council to seek guidance Reparations Commission on this point. For your information State Dept recognizes that Para 4 a of Protocol is ambiguous and standing alone does not necessarily preclude counter-deliveries from Russian Zone of certain products enumerated Para 4 a. State Dept opposes Russian view that reciprocal deliveries should originate exclusively in Eastern Zones of Germany inasmuch as list of specific commodities for counter-delivery includes such items as coal, petroleum and zinc which cannot be derived from Eastern Zone.
- 5. War Dept efforts secure valuation experts and economists subject of separate cable.
- 6. You should make all possible progress in determination by Control Council general valuation principles. In event of disagreement you may wish to seek guidance Reparations Commission. Please transmit general valuation principles you propose.

8821. For Reinstein. Following are Department's comments on notes and memorandum to potential reparation claimants as given urtel 10246 (Delsec 95).^{25a}

British zone) which have already been listed as available for reparation delivery by zone commanders. This list would give claimant countries some idea of equipment that is available, and would help to expedite interim deliveries. Attachment of this list would require some obvious changes in Note No. 1, including statement to the effect that it is hoped that additional lists will be available in the near future. List under reference should be in possession of British and of US Embassy in London.

- 2. Following comments relate to memorandum on Inter-Allied Reparation Agency accompanying notes.
- (a) In Section (2)(d) we are puzzled by expression "equitable application of the plan as between the different member governments in so far as this is not a matter for the Control Council to decide." No "Plan" is previously mentioned in the memorandum and meaning of the term is very vague. This Section should either be made unambiguous or omitted.

(b) In Sections (4) and (5) when referring to method of voting, did you intend to say decisions should be reached by majority vote? As text now stands, impossible to tell whether decisions will be reached by majority vote or will require unanimity. However, if this question has been intentionally left vague, Department agrees to present wording.

10426. Delsec 111. From Reinstein. Following supplements Delsec 98, October 2,27 on fifth meeting regarding Inter Allied Reparations Agency and completes reports on points discussed with British and French.

²⁶ Omission indicated in the original telegram.

2. Reference paragraph 3. Department's telegram 8390, September 24. Restitution issue has been left for later consideration, reference is to restitution being meanwhile eliminated from draft memorandum. French feel strongly Inter Allied Reparations Agency should handle restitution questions. British suggest it should handle cases where there are conflicting claims. I asked whether it would not be possible to avoid questions of conflict by adopting policy proposed in our early restitution documents in Washington of returning property to jurisdiction from which taken, leaving question of ownership to be unraveled at that point.²⁸ British and French thought this would greatly reduce number of questions, but believe that some would still be left, including such matters as what to do with bearer securities discovered in Germany, origin of which was uncertain.

My view, which I did not express at meeting, is that Allied Control Commission Germany should not be placed in position of arbitrating issues between Allied Governments. Its job is to run Germany and it should not be saddled with legal or political problems which are not a part of that job. Whether or not the solution of conflicts should be made a function of Inter Allied Reparations Agency or some other agency depends partly on how well Inter Allied Reparations Agency operations are carried out and how it is set up. British feel strongly we should not create a large number of agencies for dealing with various segments of the problem of dividing what we get from Germany. Consequently they favor placing the function in Inter Allied Reparations Agency.

- 3. Both British and French recognize their definitions of restitution are not entirely practical. Rueff indicated informally that French recognize distinction must be drawn between goods shipped to Germany which in fact were commercial exports and removals which constituted looting. I offered no comment except that American proposal to limit restitution to certain specific categories of goods was designed to meet these practical problems.
- 4. Department's suggestion that cost less depreciation be used as basis of valuation of equipment removed from Germany (paragraph 5, Department's telegram 8390) met with little enthusiasm. While any system of valuation which could be applied in a more or less uniform fashion would be useful in terms of making an equitable distribution, the British are concerned lest basis used result in under valuation. It was pointed out that German depreciation allowances have usually been rather large. Under valuation would have bad political effect and would place us in a disadvantageous position for negotiating Soviets for compensating deliveries. The entire subject seems to me to require further study.

- 5. British propose now that salary of Secretary General be 3000 pounds and those of deputies be 2500. This should make it possible to raise salary scale of subordinate personnel in line with paragraph 6 of Department's 8390. Department should bear in mind these salaries are to be tax free.
- 6. Department's comment with reference to 1 a Department's 8549 ²⁹ not communicated to British and French. Recent discussions here have not envisaged that delegates would necessarily have to spend full time at Inter Allied Reparations Agency headquarters. Insofar as Deputy Secretary General of US origin is concerned, I have not considered it appropriate to make comment proposed by Department. This official will be employee of Inter Allied Reparations Agency and not US Government. While consultation between him and US element of USCC [ACC] may be desirable, I doubt whether we should go into the subject at the present time.
- 7. Department's comments on 1 b of Department's telegram 8549 were communicated to British and French.
- 8. As separately reported, British anxious for preliminary discussion of questions relating to German foreign assets. Playfair urges that Rubin ³⁰ come to London if possible for October 10 meeting.
- 9. As separately reported, British feel allocation between USSR-Poland and other claimants should be made by ACR rather than Allied Control Commission. I have not discussed the point in meetings, but I agree with this viewpoint. As indicated in paragraph 2 I do not feel that Allied Control Commission should be required to settle issues between Allied Governments. Department's position on method of making this allocation not clear to me since last paragraph of Department's telegram 8388, September 24 31 and paragraph 8 of Department's telegram 8390, September 24 appear to be contradictory.
- 10. British and French expect US to be prepared to discuss what use it intends to make of its share of reparations in October 10 meeting, particularly if we will be willing to cede part of our share to other claimants.
- 11. Regarding organization of Inter Allied Reparations Agency original British ideas envisaged quite a substantial organization. As result of discussions ideas have become more modest. Dearborn and I feel that staff of Inter Allied Reparations Agency could probably be kept fairly small. Memorandum prepared by Dearborn on size and composition of staff is being telegraphed in clear.³² Our thought is that Secretary and Deputy should be persons of considerable skill, both from technical viewpoint and ability to compose differences. Success of organization will depend to a large extent on them. Remainder of staff will be primarily technical. Salary scale now envisaged should make it possible to get qualified people. US delegate and US staff should be closely tied in with American representative on ACR. It might be possible for American member of ACR in fact to serve as US delegate on Inter Allied Reparations Agency, with a Deputy representing him in the event there are conflicting meetings. Suggest Department consider this.

12. I should appreciate being informed of the Department's plans with respect to US Deputy Secretary General. It would be desirable for the person who is to act in this capacity to proceed to London in the near future, possibly proceeding to Berlin for consultation with Allied Control Commission in company with British and French representatives. Task to be accomplished by Inter Allied Reparations Agency and size of staff needed will depend in part on how and what Allied Control Commission will do. Only someone from Washington could presumably indicate possibility of recruiting staff from US at this time.

Control Council and to submit a fresh proposal in the Allied Commission on Reparation when that body reconvenes. This proposal would retain the initial provision regarding neutral property ³⁵ but would provide for compensation to affected Allied owners through their Governments as reparation from Germany. It would further make clear that Allied or neutral property should only be removed or destroyed when necessary to accomplish reparation or economic disarmament programs, i.e. not when the purposes of these programs could be served equally well by removal or destruction of Germanowned plants.³⁶

Dept rejects Russian thesis reported in your 579 of Sept 21 37 that all foreign-owned business enterprises in Germany should be eliminated since they had contributed to German war potential. The United States and other countries, unlike Russia, engage in foreign private investment as a normal form of international economic intercourse. The incidental advantages which were thereby conferred upon the German war economy are no more deserving of criticism than those arising out of other forms of foreign intercourse with Germany, including ordinary commercial trade. Specifically pre-war investment in Germany by U.S. firms constituted in principle no greater contribution to German war potential than Russian trade with Germany during the pre-war period, or for that matter during the period of the war up to June 1941.38 Incidentally, while Russian proposal to compensate Allied owners by means of reparation from Germany is consistent with principle proposed above for application in a more limited sphere, their proposal to compensate neutral owners out of German deposits in neutral countries (understandable in view of their having waived any claim to such deposits) obviously could not be accepted by this Government.

³⁵ In the letter from Mr. Clayton to Mr. McCloy, October 10, the United States position was stated as follows: "With respect to neutral property in Germany removed or destroyed in the course of the reparation and economic disarmament programs, we shall instruct the U.S. Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparation to advocate our original proposal, namely that compensation should simply be paid in Reichsmarks for the benefit of the neutral owner." 8980. For Reinstein. Dept appreciates your exhaustive and informative reports on reparations discussions with British and French.

- (1) Regarding time schedule, Dept finds it impossible to make absolutely firm commitments because of great difficulty being encountered in recruiting suitable personnel. However, matter is receiving serious attention and Clayton and Secretary working on the problem. Progress being made and you may receive definite report within few days.
- (2) Regarding allocation between USSR-Poland and other claimants (Delsec 111, Para 9 39), Dept considers immaterial whether this is done in Allied Control Council or in Reparations Commission. If Allied Control Council allocates, US representative will receive guidance of American delegate to IARA as envisaged in Deptel 8549, Sept 27. In fact, if valuation of equipment takes place in Control Council, allocation in ACR may be preferable since valuation decisions may then be made independently of allocation.
- (3) Regarding part of interim deliveries to go to USSR, War Dept in consultation with State has drafted, and by now probably dispatched, a telegram to Eisenhower 40 instucting him to defer deliveries of available plants to USSR pending, (a) appointment of US member of IARA; (b) receipt by IARA of lists of plants wanted by other countries; (c) resolution of problems of reciprocal deliveries and valuations.
- (4) Question of reciprocal deliveries by USSR. Dept would like to see these come from outside eastern zone. However, it regards Waley's argument (b) (Para 7d, Delsec 107⁴¹) as invalid. Moreover, types of commodities stated in Berlin Protocol suggest deliveries from both inside and outside eastern zone; for example, petroleum, coal, from outside and potash, from inside. While Dept willing to take position that reciprocal deliveries should come from outside eastern zone, it may not be possible to make this position stick.
- (5) On restitution, interim directive contained Deptel 8245, Sept. 20, has been submitted to War Dept for transmittal to Eisenhower. Dept still feels strongly that restitution should be handled in Allied Control Council. As viewed here, there should be relatively very few cases of conflicting claims between Governments and most of these should be susceptible to settlement by negotiation between investigatory missions sent into Germany by various claimant countries and respective zone commanders under aegis of Control Council.

- (6) Dept agrees with you that US delegation to IARA should be closely tied in with American representative on ACR. Similar to your suggestion, it has been contemplated here that No. 2 man on ACR might serve as US delegate on IARA.
- (7) Re Para 8a, Delsec 107. Dept would oppose any allowance being made for production of goods on reparation current account.

Re Para 8b, Dept would oppose any allowance for exports to cover service on pre-war debt.

Re Para 8c, Dept believes problem of labor services will require fuller discussions than that contained in earlier US statements made available to other powers.

"Reference your W-74072,⁴⁴ Hoover's study represents only the opinion of his committee as you were advised on his return to Washington. It has not been approved by this office pending correlation with industry studies now under way. It was placed before quadripartite subcommittee as a basis of discussion only, with full understanding that it did not represent a finalization of US views but would provide a basis for discussion of principles so that details could be agreed quickly as industry studies are completed. However, there can be no challenge of identity of report as the directive to Dr. Hoover contemplated obtaining his considered and unbiased views based on analysis of all available data under terms of Potsdam.

Present status of study is that each industry group is gathering complete data on existing capacity in Germany and estimated capacity required for minimum economy. These studies are scheduled for completion by 1 December to be presented in appropriate quadripartite subcommittees. Finalization of our views and quadripartite consideration of proposed standard of living can not be completed until all industry studies are in. Daniell's implication that Hoover was instructed to take as starting point guaranteed German minimum standard of living not understood. The Board was instructed to recommend (a) the general standard of living, using formula laid down at Potsdam; 45 (b) broad categories of end items required for this economy; (c) estimated imports, by categories and by value, to maintain this economy; (d) sources of exports required to pay for imports; (e) general percentage required to maintain German peacetime economy in basic industries. Hoover was further advised that standard of living in Germany should not exceed average of surrounding countries and that exports essential to finance imports were to be obtained from light industry and from industrial sources not directly connected with war potential. No guaranty of maintenance of this standard of living was implied and exports in the light industry field were figured at high levels to permit rigorous destruction of heavy industry as contemplated in report.

Soviet point of view as described by Daniell is unknown to me.⁴⁶ Both Soviet and ourselves are using rule of thumb to determine industrial resources available for advance reparations. We have already reported 16 large plants in this category and others will be reported periodically. Only difference of views known to exist in Economic Directorate relate to turnover now to Soviets of plants declared available for reparations. Our instructions do not permit such turnover until machinery has been established to allocate between western claimants and the Soviets under terms of the Potsdam agreement. However, we do not anticipate full agreement with Russians as their views with respect to standard of living to be left in Germany may be extreme. Our views are fully dictated by the Potsdam Agreement and comply with it in both spirit and letter. However, these possible differences in degree of execution rather than in principle have not yet come into conflict.

I know of no way to proceed in determining reparations program other than by calling for studies of the type of the Hoover report. Its entire purpose was to apply the Potsdam formula. I do not know where Daniell got his figures with respect to steel production.⁴⁷ However, they are not accurate and our own official figures have not yet There is no objection to release of Hoover report been established. provided it is stated that it is study presented to this office for consideration and used as a basis for discussion in quadripartite subcommittees, which has not yet received official approval either of this office or of quadripartite subcommittees. Emphasis should be placed on its conclusion that further destruction of industrial capacity than contemplated in report can be accomplished by further decrease in proposed standard of living and that ultimate decision in this respect must be quadripartite. Any prophecies with respect to effect of this report on reparations are entirely premature at this time. The extent of reparations, which must be determined by 1 February 1946 at latest, will show how the reparations policies agreed at Potsdam are to be carried out in detail."

740.00119 Control (Germany)/9-3045: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)

Washington, October 12, 1945—8 p. m.

- 663. Personal for Murphy from Clayton. Following is reply urtel 655 49 concerning appropriate extent of industrial removals from Germany and German post-war economy.
- 1. Dept has examined report on minimum German standard of living forwarded with your Despatch No. 998 50 and regards that report as an inadequate basis for finally determining either the appropriate level of industrial production or removals from Germany or for judgment on their consequences for U.S. or European position.
- 2. On difficult technical issues involved in calculation of basic structure of post-war German economy Dept believes Control Council should avoid hasty conclusions and continue study exploring alternative means of achieving a satisfactory foreign trade balance. Your attention is invited to a more detailed interim study 51 completed by EOU 52 London Embassy and forwarded USGCC which is based on zonal statistics, and may therefore be more directly useful to the Control Council. A further analysis under direction of Dept in Washington which will incorporate results of earlier studies should be completed within a month. This report which will include recommendations on levels for particular industries, will be forwarded to you on completion. Suggest U.S. position be reserved until receipt and consideration of this report. This should not exclude continuance of exploratory discussions, for reasons indicated below should in no way limit or deter advance deliveries.
- 3. Principal objection of Dept to report is that conclusion as opposed to analysis is seriously misleading. Report does not prove that large scale removals are incompatible with permitting post-war Germany a standard of living approximating European average. It is clear that very large removals can take place from available German capacity in western zones in respect of such industries as steel, machine-tool using industries, and chemicals, much expanded 1938-1944, before reaching level of industry required for pre-war German peace-time needs let alone levels envisaged in Berlin Protocol. (See EOU Report noted Para 2, above and Table III Hoover Report 51). Hoover Report fails to make clear that such an excess is available, even should apparent foreign trade deficit be met by additional exports from these industries rather than by reduced imports or removal of occupation costs. However, in view of questions about size of necessary imports, status of occupation costs, and size of realizable exports from industries of low military importance, it is not yet clear that additional exports from metal-fabricating and chemicals groups will be necessary to achieve foreign trade balance.

- 4. The large deficit in foreign trade which emerges in Hoover Report is based on particular technical assumptions which require further examination. Specifically, it appears possible that exports may have been estimated too conservatively, and that food imports of different constitution and lower value may prove consistent with the standard of living objective. In addition the size of the deficit is heavily affected by the assumption that costs of occupation incurred outside Germany will be fully met out of foreign trade proceeds. This whole question is under examination by Dept and subject to later decision. Present view does not favor collection of occupation costs from foreign trade proceeds.
- 5. Dept does not believe that large removals in accordance with Berlin Protocol over the next year or two will give rise to need for increased U.S. assistance. Evidence indicates that, at present, and over the next several years, the supply of available industrial equipment will not be the limiting factor on German economic recovery. Other limitations will prevent the reactivation of a large proportion of German plants. The revival of the German economy over the short period appears contingent, primarily on improvements in coal and raw material supply, transport, on expansion of inter-regional and inter-zonal trade, and in general on efficient reorganization of German economy.
- 6. To the extent that the immediate revival of industrial production may depend on industries which will be subject to some removals (for example, steel), a selective earmarking of plants for retention might be considered. Just as it is clear that some steel and machine-tool capacity can be removed without prejudicing the appropriate final level, it is clear that some can be retained. The revival of particular plants should, of course, be related to immediate or foresee-able domestic peaceful needs.
- 7. For reasons given below, we cannot agree that program of removals will have a marked effect on progress of European economic recovery as a whole either from short-term or long-term point of view.
- (a) In short run, economic recovery in Europe as in Germany is determined by availability of coal, transport, raw materials, and food, rather than productive equipment. As long as this condition exists, reactivation of industry in United Nations must have priority over that of German industry. Germany can make maximum contribution to short-term economic recovery of Europe by maximizing exports of coal and other products of extractive industry and by selective rehabilitation of certain German consumer goods industries like textiles. It is not envisaged that removals will prejudice shipments of goods in above categories to rest of Europe.

- (b) In long run reparation removals will not bring about substantial reduction in European capacity as a whole but will bring about a shift in relative industrial strength of Germany and of rest of Europe. Moreover, prescribed reduction in German standard of living and German industry for purpose of determining removals for reparation should not necessarily be regarded as permanent. Whole question of restrictions on German industry will presumably be considered anew in framing of peace settlement; and it is assumed that within such limitations as may be imposed in a peace treaty, the Germans will be free to expand their standard of life. In that process, it is believed that German thrift, energy and organizing skill will be more important determinants than past removals of industrial equipment, although it is realized that removals may well affect rate of recovery after conclusion of peace treaty.
- 8. Dept suggest that in further studies of this question emphasis be placed on (1) means of reducing Germany's necessary imports; (2) possibility of larger exports from industries not of military importance; and (3) maximization of removals after allowance for minimum necessary exports from industries of military importance such as metal-fabricating and chemicals industries. It is view of Dept that removal of a large portion of such industries will prove possible under any reasonable scheduling of imports and exports. Dept requests you keep it constantly advised of progress of these studies.
- 9. In short, Dept believes, on basis of all evidence available including Hoover report, that large industrial removals from Germany are compatible with and required by other U.S. objectives in Germany and elsewhere in Europe. [Clayton.] order for appointment of mixed commissions to inspect industrial capital equipment, paraphrase of which follows.

2. Begin paraphrase. It is desired to hasten determination of industrial capital goods which will be removed as reparations from Western Zones in Germany. To this end mixed commissions will be established to conduct in four zones of Germany field examinations upon following bases.

3. Soviet Zone. A commission, consisting of one delegate appointed by each occupying power (a total of four), shall inspect industrial capital equipment which USSR advises will remain in Soviet Zone after reparations deliveries and in addition all available pertinent records. Purpose is to determine productive capacity of this equipment in ascertaining level of industry necessary to German peace economy envisaged Potsdam Agreement.

4. UŠ, UK, and French Zones. To ascertain value, productive capacity, and availability for reparations of industrial plants and equipment in three Western Zones, one commission for each zone is authorized to undertake the necessary field examinations of equipment and records. Each commission shall have seven members selected as follows: Each occupying power will designate one member for each commission and jointly, through Economics Directorate, powers will appoint to each commission an additional three members to represent those countries recognized as reparations claimants. These latter three members will be chosen from a group of nine to which Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Greece, Netherlands, Norway, and Yugoslavia may nominate one representative each, to which Belgium and Luxembourg together may nominate one delegate and to which Australia, Canada, India, New Zealand, and South Africa jointly may nominate one delegate.

5. Each recognized claimant country will be requested through appropriate channels by ACA ⁵⁶ Secretariat to make nominations suggested above by October 1945 and names of members nominated will be transmitted to Economics Directorate. Latter, after approving nominations, will assign to each commission for Western Zones three of these nominees as outlined above.

6. Representative of nation occupying zone in question shall be chairman of commission. Subject to appeal to Economics Directorate, Chairman shall decide any disagreements which may arise in any commission. End paraphrase.

7. Department's comments and recommendations urgently requested so formation of commissions may proceed without delay.

767. The thirteenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee was held on October 12 with General Koeltz presiding.

The Reparations, Deliveries and Restitution Directorate had, in late September, sent to the Committee an agreed plan 57 for immediate restitution of "easily identifiable" property on cases of urgent necessity on an interim basis. At the last two meetings, Russian member 58 had blocked this paper, which the others all support, on the basis that it was under discussion at London.⁵⁹ At this meeting, he claimed that the definitions of "restitution" and of the property involved are not clear, and that there is a question of facility of transport. French member explained at length: (a) that the document only covers restoration of easily identifiable stolen articles; (b) that this is an interim procedure intended only to cover clear cases; (c) that any case where doubt exists would be dealt with later; (d) if any mistake is made there is provision for its correction; and (e) the procedure only covers situations where there are no transport difficulties. He stressed the moral effect of the delay on public opinion in the looted countries. General Sokolovsky stated that Russia had been looted more seriously than other countries, and suggested that French industrialists had helped the German war effort. Since the discussion was obviously fruitless, the matter was referred back to the RD and R Directorate for study with the statement that the French, British and US members agreed to the urgency and importance of the paper.

The Soviet delegate had submitted in August a paper ⁶⁰ naming 40 industrial plants in the western zones and requesting that they be turned over to the Soviets as advance reparations. The Economic Directorate subsequently reported that 15 of these plants are now available for advance deliveries and named another 15 plants as also available.61 No allocation of these plants to any country was suggested in the Directorate's report. General Clay made it clear that other plants might become available later and agreed to General Sokolovsky's request that representatives be sent to examine those listed. General Sokolovsky then indicated that he understood that all the listed plants were to go to the USSR under the Potsdam Agreement, arguing (1) that the entire report was based on the Soviet paper; and (2) that only the Soviet is entitled to advance deliveries of reparations under the Potsdam Agreement. The question was raised as to whether the Control Council has the right to make allocations of property as reparations. General Clay stated that while the Council can decide what is available generally he did not think it could make allocations. French and British had the impression that the Reparations Commission should make the allocations but were not certain. General Sokolovsky referred to an earlier meeting for the Council at which he had announced that the Soviet Government consented to the matter being decided by the Council in Berlin in consultation with the Reparation Commission. 62 On the basis of this statement he apparently believed that the Council could now allocate the factories listed to the Soviets. In view of the confusion and of the seriousness of this matter, the three western members agreed to ask instructions of their governments at once. The Department's instructions are urgently requested. Does it authorize allocations by the ACC of industrial equipment available for reparation?

802. The fourteenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee took place on October 16 with the French member presiding.

The principal discussion of the coordination [Coordinating Committee? meeting concerned the Soviet claim for advance deliveries on account of reparations and the Economic Directorate's report that 30 factories are available. The British member stated that the British Government would agree that the Control Council have the authority to allocate property as between Russia and Poland on one hand and the western countries on the other. General Clay stated that that had been his position at the last meeting. The French member stated that his Government agreed that Council may do this with the assistance of the Reparations Commission. This had been the Russian position at the last meeting.

The British member then stated as follows:

(1) It is clear that the Reparations Commission will not meet for some time and it is desirable to expedite this matter;

(2) The British do not agree with the Soviet statement that only the Soviets are entitled to interim reparations under the Potsdam Agreement, but believe that all claimant countries are so entitled;

(3) Some indication is necessary of what each claimant country wants;

(4) Some sort of evaluation of available property is necessary;
(5) The Control Council must decide whether plants can be subdivided and if so to what extent. He therefore proposed as follows:

(1) That a list of available factories be circulated to all claimant countries with the instruction that within two weeks they formulate lists of those they want;

(2) That a committee of the Economic Directorate make recommendations within two or three weeks as to (a) what units of allocation should be used, and (b) broad assessment showing the relative value of the units so decided upon;

(3) That the Council make allocations on the basis of these facts, one quarter to Soviets and three quarters to the western governments:

(4) That the Finance Directorate work out a system of more precise evaluation (the British would accept one similar to the Soviet system in the satellite countries);

(5) That a complete inventory and evaluation then be made;

(6) That provision then be made for inspection of packing and shipping.

The Soviet member then made a somewhat bitter speech about the two and a half month delay on the Soviet claim for advance repara-He claimed that the British member was back to discussing general principles again and all that had been done on the Soviet claim was wasted, and the claim put back on an indefinite basis. He stated that this claim is in conformity with Potsdam and that by now reopening the whole problem of reparations the other members are reopening the Potsdam Agreement. Finally he stressed that the Soviet claim was the only claim made for advance reparation deliveries and that it had a right to be examined and settled, but he denied that he had ever said that only the Soviets had a right to advance deliveries.

The British member replied with some warmth that it was unfair to accuse the British Delegation of delaying matters in this way when the whole matter of method and allocation had been under discussion on the governmental level. Until this was settled the Council could make no progress. He stated that his proposal is intended to speed matters up. The US member made a statement that the US does not agree that the Soviets alone should receive advance deliveries and wished to protect the interest of all its Allies. On the other hand, the US has urged the speediest action in the Reparations Commission and elsewhere, and will cooperate in any agreement that will expedite action. It was agreed (for Reinstein in London) that the British proposals will be studied with expedition.

- 4858. 1. Subject of this message is allocation of plants available for advance deliveries from western zones Germany under para 7 reparation section Berlin Protocol.
- 2. On Oct 5 General Clay was informed ⁶⁷ that agreement had been reached in London that initial allocation of industrial equipment removed from western zones as between Russia and Poland on the one hand, and other claimants on the other, will be made by Allied Control Council.
- 3. Clay has reported that in Oct 12 meeting of Control Council ⁶⁸ there existed confusion on this subject, apparently owing to fact that British and French representatives on CC had not yet been notified by their governments of the London decision.
- 4. Dept has since learned from Reinstein in London that British have instructed their group CC that Control Council should make such allocation. Clay is again being instructed today to press for agreement in Council to this effect.
- 5. Since French are the only power on Control Council blocking agreement on this point, you are requested to approach foreign office with a view to having them instruct their representative on CC to concur. You should point out:
- a. Any fear that the Council would unduly favor the Soviet Union in making such allocation is groundless. Clay was informed in Oct 5 telegram that Dept opposes present allocation of delivery to USSR of industrial equipment from western zones pending (a) appointment of US member of IARA who would act as Clay's advisor on allocations in Control Council; (b) receipt by IARA of lists of plants desired by other claimants and (c) progress in resolution of counter deliveries issue and formulation of valuation principles. Thus the American representative would certainly not agree to large scale deliveries to USSR to the detriment of the interests of other claimants.

b. The French obviously have a veto power by virtue of their membership on Control Council.

c. Blockage on interim reparation deliveries by French and counterblockage by Russians of restitution is leading to impasse in Control Council. French, by being reasonable on question of advance delivery allocation can break the vicious circle without actually sacrificing anything. On the other hand, continued blocking of agreement on this point can only serve to heighten USSR suspicions that western powers do not take seriously question of advance deliveries, and to increase already existing tension.

War 77595. Signed Warcad. Subject is determination of reparation removals from 3 western zones and advance reparation deliveries reurads Oct CC 17566 CC 17588. 69a

- 1. State Dept while adhering to position that no extensive advance deliveries should be made to USSR-Poland until substantial progress is made in resolution of questions mentioned in para 1 of War 73742 Oct [5] agrees that immediate token deliveries of one or two plants of modest size such as BMW Number 1 plant in city of Munich should be made to Russians as evidence of our intention to carry out the program. If such token deliveries are made complete inventory of such equip removed by Russians should be made in agreement with Russians to permit subsequent valuation.
- 2. Token deliveries to claimants other than USSR-Poland and substantial deliveries to USSR-Poland must await ascertainment of types of plant and equip wanted by all claimants and arrival of United States member of IARA to advise you on advance deliveries. Note sent by US, UK, and French govts inviting reparation claimants to Paris conference 9 Nov to establish inter Allied Reparation Agency—IARA—and determine reparation shares stated that 3 govts were prepared to entertain requests for any type of plants or equip made available for advance delivery and that equip available was likely to consist mainly of plants of metal or chemical industries and of machine tools and similar equipment. State Dept has requested Murphy to transmit to United States diplomatic missions in countries invited to Paris conference on reparation shares lists of plants declared avail-ob Dated October 14, not printed; in this telegram General Clay suggested that some token advance reparations deliveries be made to the Soviet Union as evidence of good faith pending full clarification of details on the agreement that the Control Council allocate industrial equipment between the Soviet Union and Poland on the one hand and other claimants on the other. able by the ACC for interim delivery so that such missions can supply govts concerned with more concrete info on reparation availabilities.

- 3. Control Council should make allocation of plant and equip as between USSR-Poland and other reparation claimants. State Dept has received info UK member CC is being instructed accordingly. State Dept instructing AmEmbassy Paris to urge French Govt that French member CC also be instructed to this effect.
- 4. State Dept believes functions of proposed mixed commission should be clearly defined. First functions should be to determine where necessary (a) productive capacity in particular industries left in Russian zone, and (b) existing productive capacity of particular industries in three western zones. This function might be discharged both by analysis of existing statistics or data made available by zonal authorities and by investigating individual plants and should have objective of providing factual info, under uniform definitions of capacity, required for determination of difference between actual existing capacity and capacity to be left to Germany for minimum standard. After final determination for reparations removal purposes of amount productive capacity surplus to minimum peacetime needs in each industry, which can only be done by ACC in light of German peace economy envisaged in Berlin Protocol, mixed commission might advise on selection of plants which should make up surplus capacity available for removal. Until final determination of amount and character of industrial equip available for reparation, info on individual plants supplied by zonal authorities should be sufficient for selection of plants available for advance deliveries. State Dept believes mixed commission with functions as defined above should not include representatives of IARA.
- 5. State Dept believes another mixed commission of different character, consisting of valuation experts and including, if desired, representatives of non-occupying powers represented on IARA, is required for limited technical task of valuing individual plants declared available for delivery in accordance with uniform principles of valuation which should be agreed previously in ACC. State Dept urges you propose in ACC that plant and equip should be valued at 1938 replacement cost in Germany plus 15 percent less depreciation. British member ACR has proposed this as basis and Russians should be agreeable since they are applying same principle in reparation settlements with other countries. State Dept suggests that principle be applied to individual plants to determine (1) removable portions i.e. in technical sense—of any plant, (2) procurement cost of such equipment in terms of 1938 prices and (3) appropriate discount for depreciation and war damage, if any. Zonal authorities should first set value on plant in accordance with these principles and mixed commission should then review this valuation in order to ensure uniform application of valuation principles in all zones.

6. State Dept agrees with proposal made by British member ACR that Russian reciprocal deliveries should also be valued at 1938 prices in Germany, with 10 percent addition for raw materials and 15 percent addition for manufactured goods, and suggest you propose this in CC. State Dept is taking position Russian reciprocal deliveries should go into reparation available for reparation claimants on three western zones and should therefore be apportioned by IARA. It is expected that United States will claim substantial portion of such deliveries in forthcoming conference on reparation shares and that United States share will be made available to meet import requirements of United States zones in Germany and Austria as well as other supply commitments of United States. State Dept believes Russian reciprocal deliver'es should commence as soon as value of interim reparation deliveries to USSR reaches a total agreed upon with USSR. As soon as this agreed total is reached USSR should commence reciprocal deliveries up to 60 percent of value of this total, taking into account that such reciprocal deliveries must be spaced over longer period than reparation deliveries to USSR. Suggest you ascertain character of commodities which USSR is prepared to make available as reciprocal deliveries. United States and British view is that such deliveries should be made from sources outside Russian zone. though as indicated in para 4 of War 73742 it is doubtful USSR can be made to accept this view in entirety.

Berlin, October 22, 1945—3 p. m. [Received October 22—1:08 p. m.]

828. General Clay has telegraphed Warcad regarding advance reparations as follows:

"British have presented following proposal in Coordinating Committee:

(a) That list of plants reported available should be circulated to countries entitled to reparations with request they indicate within 14 days plants in which they are interested;

(b) That Economic Directorate should report within 21 days after field examination, a recommended unit of allocation for each plant, that is, whether a part of the plant or the whole plant would be considered as a unit in effecting deliveries, and also establish a relative value for each unit as an approximate assessment pending agreement on final evaluation;

(c) The Coordinating Committee, taking these relative values, would allocate to the extent of 25% to the Soviet Union, including Poland, reserving 75% for other claimant countries; and

(d) In the interim, action towards accurate valuation will be expedited.

It is believed the proposed procedure would serve to expedite advance deliveries and that some procedure of this type is essential to indicate good faith on the part of all concerned and to get reparations actually moving.

I propose to support this measure. It appears to accord fully with the procedures proposed by the State Dept in their cable number 678 of October 17 to Ambassador Murphy. 70 It will be noted, however, that under the British proposal the data requisite for allocations would be available in approximately 21 days. In view of the desire of the State Dept for our representative on IARA to participate in these allocations, in which we are in full agreement, it might be embarrassing to us if this procedure is approved not to have our member of IARA available here in Berlin by that time. In its cablegram to Ambassador Murphy, the State Dept suggests our diplomatic missions to which copies of the list should be furnished. If the British proposal now before the Coordinating Committee is approved, Ambassador Murphy will be asked to send the lists of plants in the Western Zone reported available to these diplomatic missions by the quickest method possible. If the British proposal is not accepted, we will propose the immediate circulation of these lists to countries concerned through diplomatic representatives without awaiting establishment of operating procedures for allocations. We anticipate that this question will come up in meeting of Coordinating Committee on October 22, at which we will support the British proposal. I have discussed with Murphy who agrees with me that British proposal is within our policy."

cases the return of the equipment is urgently needed for the rehabilitation of essential industry in the liberated territory.

- 2. Pending settlement of the outstanding problems of restitution it is proposed that interim measures for the return of certain property be put into force forthwith to assist the United Nations concerned with the rehabilitation of their industrial and economic life. These measures are of a purely temporary character and it is important that the whole question of restitution of looted property be settled as a matter of great urgency.
- 3. It is proposed that the interim measures be first applied to identifiable plant, equipment (other than shipping and inland transport units) and valuables (other than gold, silver, currency, and works of art) in respect of which there is satisfactory evidence that the property was located in the territory of the Ally concerned and was the subject of an act of dispossession by the enemy. Only property falling within this class and which
 - (a) is easily identifiable

(b) is urgently needed by the claimant country and

- (c) can be moved without wasteful use of transport would be dealt with in this interim program. The excluded categories (including in particular works of art which are already the subject of restitution in certain zones) will be the subject of separate papers which will be submitted at a very early date.
- 4. Each Zone Commander in Chief should receive from the claimant country a list containing detailed information for example serial numbers and specifications or other identification marks where appropriate of the property which was stolen and removed by the Germans and which according to that country is now located in that particular zone. According to the information which the occupying authorities have in their possession or according to the declarations received from the Germans each Commander in Chief should also prepare his own lists. The restitution of property which has already been identified need not be deferred until these lists have been prepared.
- 5. The Zone Commander in Chief will check the lists received and will immediately permit visiting missions from Russia France Belgium Luxembourg the Netherlands Denmark Norway Czechoslovakia Yugoslavia Poland and Greece to visit their zone for the purpose of inspecting and identifying property of a nature covered by this proposal. These missions which on grounds of practicability must be limited in number and in size are to be organized by the respective governments and arranged direct with the Commander in Chief in each zone.

- 6. Requests for the visits of missions will be made through liaison officers to be established by claimant countries at the HQ of each Commander in Chief. These liaison officers will be responsible for making all necessary arrangements with the staff of the Commander in Chief including feeding, billeting and transportation etc of the missions during their stay in Germany and for ensuring that any rules issued by the Commander in Chief are observed.
- 7. The missions will visit Germany as representatives of the claimant governments and not as representatives of firms or any individuals of such countries.
- 8. If the Commander in Chief is satisfied that the property claimed falls within paragraph 3 and that identification has been established he will authorize its immediate return to the claimant country unless the property must be retained as a matter of military necessity. Each Commander in Chief will submit to the Reparations Deliveries and Restitution Directorate of the Control Council monthly reports of the property identified and of the restitutions completed in his zone during the previous month.
- 9. The claimant country through its liaison officers will make the necessary arrangements for packing, loading and transporting the property to be removed through the Military Government authorities. Where practical difficulties exist the Commander in Chief may assist with transport and packing. Costs of transportation within Germany and of labor and materials necessary for packing will be borne by Germany. The question of the responsibility for loss or damage in packing and transportation should be referred to the Finance-Directorate.
- 10. The representative of the country concerned will at the time of transfer give an official receipt for the property on behalf of his government. This receipt will state
- a. That in the event of the property coming within the ambit of any general restitution procedure that may later be established by the Allied powers his government will agree to the transfer being submitted for confirmation by a restitution commission or other international body which may be established to deal with these matters and will abide by its decision.
- b. That in the event of such confirmation the transfer will be subject to all the conditions laid down for restitution deliveries generally and
- c. That in the event of property not coming within the ambit of such restitution procedure the transfer shall be dealt with in accordance with such procedure as may be established for other deliveries.

New subject: The French reservation:

The French Delegation while recognizing that the above scheme is a valuable step towards the restitutions that the nations which havebeen plundered ardently desire to see carried out speedily, nevertheless considers that is $\lceil it \rceil$ must make the following reservations:

1. The categories provided for in article 3 are far too limited and exclude or do not explicitly include property the return of which is most urgently necessary to the economic life of the plundered countries particularly means of transport animals and furniture.

The French delegate has however noted that the Directorate has decided to consider at its next meeting the possibility of increasing these categories of property.

2. The procedure laid down for identification and restitution of property would only allow of the recovery of a very limited number of plundered articles if it required as a first condition an exact knowledge of the place at which these articles are.

Appreciable results will only be arrived at if, while limiting the number of experts of the different nations, more extensive and more thorough inquiries are set on foot new subject as stated in our cable CC 17817. This proposal was sent by the Directorate to the Coordinating Committee and returned by them at Russian request for definition of restitution and clarification of categories referred to in paragraph 3. Discussion now proceeding on definition of restitution and clarification of paragraph 3.

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations (Angell)

Washington, October 24, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Angell: I take pleasure in informing you that the President has approved your designation by the Department of State as the Representative of the United States Government on the Allied Commission on Reparation for Germany, with the rank of Minister. You are succeeding Mr. Edwin W. Pauley, who in letters to the President and me on September 20 ⁷⁵ and September 14, 1945, respectively, relinquished his responsibilities in the field of reparations from Germany and turned over his duties to the Department of State. In making this appointment, it was understood that you could not commit yourself at this time for more than six months' service.

In your capacity as the representative of the United States, you will attend meetings of the Allied Commission on Reparation for Germany and cast the vote of the United States. You will also represent this country on matters relating to reparation from Germany both in reaching such understandings and agreements with the representatives of the U.S.S.R., British and French Governments as may be required, and in ad hoc conferences of countries claiming shares to reparation from Germany, irrespective of whether or not they are represented on the Allied Commission on Reparation.

The representative of the United States on the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency, Mr. D. M. Phelps ⁷⁶ of the Department of State, will be your deputy on the Allied Commission on Reparation. In his contacts with the Allied Control Council he will act solely as your deputy. In his capacity as representative on the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency he will keep you fully informed of all important developments.

opments and activities, and will advise with you on any important matters of policy.

In all these discussions and negotiations, you will of course be responsible to me and will be guided by my instructions. In this matter, you may rest assured, I shall give you full scope for the exercise of judgment and shall not require that you seek guidance on points already covered either by the instructions of the Informal Policy Committee on Germany, or my previous instructions to Ambassador Pauley. You may expect to receive before your departure for Europe a statement of the Department's views on a number of specific matters which have been raised for the agenda of forthcoming scheduled meetings which you are expected to attend. These will be communicated to you by Mr. Seymour J. Rubin, Acting Director of the Office of Economic Security Policy. Within the limits set by these and earlier instructions, you are free to reach agreement with the representatives of other countries on questions of reparation policy where such agreement reflects the spirit if not the exact letter of United States policy as communicated to you. Where you feel obliged to give way to the wishes of other countries, or significantly to alter the intent of the instructions given you, I shall ask you to refer to the Department.

It will be your responsibility to present the claim of the United States for reparation, both at the preliminary meeting with the French and British at Paris and later at the conference of all claimants to reparation, to be held at Paris on November 9, 1945 and to recommend the reparation shares to be received by the various claimants. You are to keep me fully informed of discussions regarding the relationship of the American claim and share to the claims and shares of other nations. You will receive instructions regarding the extent to which the amount of reparation allocated to the United States may vary qualitatively and quantitatively from the claims presented.

You will be authorized to discuss the distribution among the various Western reparation claimants of the German external assets available for reparations in countries not entitled to retain German external assets under Article III, Section 18 of the Potsdam Protocol. Your representatives should maintain appropriate and close liaison with the Allied Control Commission and the Department regarding the steps to be taken by the Allied Control Commission to obtain jurisdiction over German external assets, and with the Department and the American Missions in the various countries not entitled to retain German assets with respect to matters of valuation, transfer and distribution of proceeds.

An interim directive on restitution has been sent to the Allied Control Council, and it is anticipated that further discussions on this subject, under policies to be established, will be held there. The Department will furnish for your guidance a statement of restitution policy to be used in discussions of this topic in the Paris meetings of the Allied Commission on Reparation, and policy formulated in this manner, and approved by the Department, will be sent to the Allied Control Council for further negotiation, if necessary, and for adoption as an operating directive.

You are also authorized to present at the meetings of the Allied Commission on Reparation in Paris the United States views concerning reparation and restitution to German victims of Nazi persecution.

It will be your responsibility at the quadripartite meetings in Berlin of the Allied Commission on Reparation to discuss and to present the United States views on such questions of policy or of interpretation of the Berlin Protocol as may arise. Questions of policy or interpretation of this sort may arise, for example, with reference to the amount and character of industrial equipment which shall be permitted to remain in Germany or which shall be removed as reparation, the principles of reparation from current production and stocks, the application of the "first charge" principle to occupation costs of the occupying powers, the principles of valuation to be applied to the industrial capital equipment to be removed from Germany as reparation, the commodity deliveries to be undertaken by the U.S.S.R. to the three western zones in return for 15 percent of the capital equipment to be removed from the three western zones (the principles of their valuation and their source), the compensation of allied owners for property taken for reparations, and other policy matters on which you have been or will be given instructions.

The Allied Commission on Reparation should provide to the Allied Control Council any policies and principles required for a reparations plan. Such policy guidance may be given either at the request of the Allied Control Council or upon the initiative of the Allied Commission on Reparation. It is the United States view, although no international agreement exists on the point, that the plan for removals of industrial equipment formulated by the Allied Control Council should be submitted to the Allied Commission on Reparation in order that it may judge how closely the plan conforms to the policies established by the Allied Commission on Reparation. In order that a consistent United States position may be maintained on the Allied Control Council and the Allied Commission on Reparation, it will be your

The United States member of the Allied Control Council will be requested to work closely with you so as to enable you to fulfill this responsibility.

I hope this explanation, together with previous and forthcoming specific instructions to your predecessor and you respectively, will enable you to get off to a flying start in this complex and difficult field of negotiation in which interests of the United States are so vitally at stake. I wish you and your staff all success.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, October 25, 1945—noon. [Received 12:48 p. m.]

- 842. At the fifteenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee on 23 October the matter of advance deliveries on account of reparations was discussed. Specifically, the questions were:
- (a) The Economics Directorate's report that 30 factories in western Germany are now available for delivery; and
- (b) The British member's proposal on a method of evaluation and allocation of plants between the Soviets and Poland on one hand and Western claimants on the other (see my 802 of 18 October, 2 [3] p.m.).

British member stated that the allocation of reparations among Western claimants would be handled by a special authority and thus would not be the duty of the Control Council; that Western claimants would be notified of available plants through diplomatic channels; and that so far only France had filed bids other than the original Soviet requests. General Clay offered amendments as follows:

- (1) That the preliminary approximate assessment of plants should be based on the 1938 Reichsmark valuation as shown by the company's records less depreciation and bomb damage;
 - (2) A simplification of the process of accurate evaluation; and
- (3) That the Zone commanders be given the job of making the accurate evaluation and inventory at the time of packing the material.

The primary argument arose from the Soviet attempt to get immediate delivery of a maximum number of plants at once from the western zones. The Soviet member argued:

(1) That the Soviets should be allocated at once 75 percent of the plants now declared available since the Potsdam Agreement does not require the Soviet share to be kept at 25 percent at all times during the allocation process;

(2) That this would constitute a negligible proportion of the total number of plants eventually to be allocated out of the Western Zones;

- (3) That the Soviet requests for factories were filed over 2 months before any other requests and should therefore receive prior treatment;
- (4) That to hold up the Soviet bids until the Western claimants had filed their requests would be unfair to the Soviets as causing undue delay;

(5) And, that Soviet needs and war losses are greater than those of the Western claimants.

In reply the British member argued that the Council is a trustee for all Western claimants and cannot allocate plants to the Soviets before it hears which plants the Western claimants want; and that the delay in the filing of Western claims was caused by the failure of the Four Powers to decide until very recently where such claims should be filed. The discussion became somewhat acrimonious, with the Russian member asking that the minutes record that the British member was seeking not only to block the implementation of Potsdam but also to prevent others from doing it, and that the present British proposals are merely intended as a means of shelving the original Soviet demands for plants.

In an attempt to reach a compromise, General Clay suggested:

(1) That the proposed procedure be amended to provide that in all allocations for advance deliveries, the Soviet be allocated not less than 25 percent, based on preliminary evaluations; and

(2) That, as a symbol of the Council's desire to begin at once with the destruction of war potential as well as to make allocations to Russia, two factories be allocated to the Soviets within the next few days. On this point the British refused to concur in allocation until procedure had been approved. The French member made a similar suggestion that in cases where Western claimants make no bid for a plant within 2 weeks, it be allocated to the Soviets.

After very prolonged discussion, the meeting decided to refer the matter to the Reparations Deliveries and Restitution Directorate to draw up an agreed procedure in the light of the amendments proposed, as a matter of urgency. The British member finally agreed, also to General Clay's suggestion as to the two factories, after arguing that he could not do so unless the entire procedure were agreed to.

5005. For Angell Number 1.

- 1. While memo on external assets 79 states that further facts on German property in Austria are required before US position can be fixed definitively, Dept believes you should have general statement of principles, to be later modified in light of facts, for discussions on subject which British want to initiate. Dept's tentative views are that creation of economically self-supporting and independent Austria as per Moscow Declaration 80 is consideration outweighing desirability of obtaining additional property for reparation pool. Punishment of Austria via reparation removals is of course not involved. For these reasons, Dept holds in principle German property in Austria should primarily remain there as part of Austrian economy. Exceptions may and probably should be made of post-1938 factories which are devoted almost entirely to war purposes and which cannot be converted at reasonable expense to civilian uses; and of plants which clearly involve uneconomic use of resources. Dept does not favor at present any suggestion of leaving German property in Austria whilst transferring title to foreign ownership as reparation payment. Such transfers, it is felt, would unduly burden Austrian balance of payments and prejudice growth of economically independent state.
- 2. Dept has approved two proposals made by Clay respecting reparation transfers. First, it approved suggestion that ACC transmit to various countries entitled to claim reparation from Germany lists of plants declared by ACC eligible for advance deliveries, requesting answer to be made in 14 days whether such countries are interested in receiving any such plants as reparation. This replaces Dept's earlier idea that USPolAd circulate such lists; if adopted, it will involve USSR recognition of right of other countries to contest USSR claim to listed 40 plants as advance deliveries. Second, Dept approved proposal that after ACC declared factory available for advance deliveries, field survey of factory should be made to determine whether factory be removed for reparation as single unit or whether it is capable of being divided into several units which could be allo-

871. In connection with the status of negotiations in the Control Council on interim restitution deliveries, you should see cables to AGWar (Adjutant General War Department) CC-17885 ⁸¹ and CC-17920 of October 23.

It should be emphasized that the agreement on restitution in the Control Council will be a zonal procedure and present discussions do not provide for any central arrangements covering all of Germany, except on monthly report by zone commanders.

The problems of looted property located outside Germany and the adjudication of disputed claims will not be covered by any Control Council agreements that are presently envisaged. It is presumed, that final policy and organizational arrangements be formulated at the earliest possible moment. It is noted that this matter is on the agenda for the meeting of United States, United Kingdom and French members of the Allied Reparations Commission in Paris and it will undoubtedly receive sufficient priority to be resolved.

The French representative on the RD and R Directorate has stated that the French attach importance to restitution equal to that being urged by the Russians for advance interim reparation deliveries. The Russian representatives have not entered fully into the discussion of restitution arrangements. In fact their representative on a special committee for formulating procedures for the location, identification and return of cultural works refused to participate in the discussion even on a technical basis although he was accompanied by two specialists in this field. The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

883. The seventeenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee took place on October 29, with the French member presiding. It had been convened specially to consider the question of advance deliveries of plants on account of reparation.

The French member first raised the question of the effect upon reparations of the restitution question. He stated that his Government's position is that no decision of reparations should be taken without a decision on restitution, and he asked: (1) For an agreement that looted property in a factory slated for reparations delivery be set aside and kept for restitution; and (2) that a program for restitution be submitted by November 5. He also stated that in one factory in Bavaria under consideration [for] reparations, there are 1200 machine tools taken from France by force. He thought there were many other examples. The other members agreed in principle that looted property should be returned to its owners but they did not agree that this question should take priority over reparations. United States member stated: (1) That he was opposed to allowing restitution problems to delay advance delivery of reparations; (2) that looted property subject to restitution should be defined and this would take a long time; (3) that there was over 200 million dollars of United States owned property in Germany whose existence would not be allowed to delay reparations matters; (4) that an entire assembly line should not be broken up in order to take out a few looted items. The British member argued that a distinction should be made between property which had always been in Germany and had formed part of Germany's industrial equipment. The United States member agreed with this distinction. It was agreed that the French member would reserve his position while the meeting considered the reparations question.

The meeting then proceeded to consider the report on method of making allocations for advance deliveries, prepared by the Reparations Directorate.⁸⁴ It was agreed that the list of factories already available for advance deliveries should be sent to those countries who claim reparations out of the Western Zones, and that those countries must indicate within 14 days after the date the list is sent out (probably October 31) those plants in which they are interested. The message to those countries will also state that two factories in the US Zone have been offered to the Soviets (see my No. 842, of October 25, noon). I am informed that the United States member of the Economics Directorate offered to the Russians the BMC [BMW] plant No. 1 at Munich and an underground plant near Heidelberg. Both make aircraft engines. Soviets said they wished to inspect several before they accepted and the matter is temporarily at a standstill.

The meeting approved the clause instructing the Economics Directorate to recommend units of allocation (i.e. whole plant, part of plant, et cetera) and the United States proposal that preliminary valuation be based upon 1938 reproduction cost less deterioration and war damage. (The British stated they had 1945 official tax valuation for 90% of the plants in their zone but it was feared that depreciation was not uniformly calculated.)

The principal argument of the day concerned the Soviet claim to receive 75% or 22 of the 30 plants declared to be available as advance deliveries. This was to be irrespective of valuation of the plants. The British, French and United States members stated that they were not authorized to agree to any allocations substantially in excess of 25% to the Soviet Union and that they could not consider allocations on a basis other than value. The British member urged the Soviet member to recognize the claims of other countries and to agree to a compromise whereby the Soviets would take 25% now and agree to reserve their claim for additional allocations. The United States member urged that the whole question of percentages in allocation be left out of this paper so that the other steps in the procedure could promptly be put into operation. The Soviet member stated he would compromise on a 50% allocation to his country and supported his position on the ground that the United States sponsored Allgemeine Zeitung had quoted a BBC broadcast to the effect that the Council had allocated to the Soviet Union the 14 largest plants in Western Germany. (The news story had in fact appeared on October 28 and is apparently based on a report from Stuttgart picked up by correspondent Twitty of the New York Herald Tribune.) The Soviet member stated that Soviet prestige was thereby involved in the eves of world public opinion. After considerable argument in which the US member suggested delaying the whole matter until the Nov 10 meeting of the Council, it was agreed to submit the paper to the Oct 30 meeting, leaving out the clause about percentage of allocation and inserting a note as to Soviet claims to 50%.85

The paper agreed also contains a clause that the Finance Directorate shall work out an agreed basis for final evaluation and that shipment can take place on the basis of the preliminary evaluation. When the basis for final evaluation is reached, the necessary readjustments will be made.

6351. No. 10 from Angell to Dept: 6 from Angell to Berlin: 2 from Angell to London. At meeting October 31 French joined me in supporting general gold pot principle. Waley first argued for identification principle but subsequently accepted our position.

British and French expressed warm conviction that US Govt has information on identification of gold by country of ownership which has not been given them. As a result of my conversation with Murphy and Clay I told French and British that to best of my knowledge all information available to us had been transmitted to them. Please determine whether any data now available including that secured by Bernstein 86 has been withheld. I assume that assayer's report has already been given to French Embassy.

Waley inquired whether Danzig and Poland should be allowed to participate in pot. Consensus of meeting seemed to be that Potsdam waiver by USSR of claim to gold should control irrespective of whether gold pot is regarded as restitution or reparation and consequently that Danzig and Poland should not share in gold pot.

When we discussed Italy, Austria, Hungary and Albania, in relation to gold pot Waley agreed with us that they should receive restitution of monetary gold. French indicated reluctance to permit these countries to share in gold pot.

⁸⁶ Col. Bernard Bernstein, Director, Finance Division, OMGUS.

Regarding Italian and Hungarian gold I concurred in suggestion by Waley that these countries be allocated their respective shares in gold pot shares to be set aside for disposition in accord with final peace settlement with these countries. I said that if Council of Foreign Ministers had come to definite understanding that Italy is to receive restitution then Italy should participate in gold pot. Waley agreed with these principles. Please advise on any CFM understanding on restitution for Italy.⁸⁷

I also stressed right of Austria to participate immediately in gold pot pointing out Potsdam Agreement on Austrian economic independence ss and that insofar as I know peace treaty settlement with Austria is not contemplated.

Rueff stated that he was not in position to agree that Italy, Hungary and Austria should be brought into pot at all but he would request instructions from his Govt.

We discussed procedure for implementing gold pot if agreement is reached on countries entitled to share. Consensus was that any agreement reached should be transmitted to our Govts for confirmation. Each of three occupying powers would then notify its zone commander to put gold pot agreement into operation. In practice of course this would mean that JCS would direct USGCC ⁸⁹ to act in premises.

6392. From Angell. No. 18. With further reference to your 5093, (for Angell, No. 4) November 1, 5 p. m., ⁹⁷ I assume that question as to adoption of narrowest possible point of view with respect to reparation removals implies considerable reduction in contemplated volume of removals. My views, which are shared by members of my staff, are as follows:

- 1. I seriously question whether use of reparations as a pressure weapon would secure the fuller political and economic cooperation of other occupying authorities. I am rather of opinion that such a revision in our basic policy would further complicate matters.
- 2. Inadequate implementation of objectives of reparation chapter of Potsdam Declaration would seriously prejudice our relations with Russia.
- 3. Such a revision of our established policy would also be contrary to the interests of devastated members of the United Nations who are looking to plant and equipment removals for badly needed rehabilitation and development. In this connection we think it important that the current concern over German economic situation should not overshadow the critical situation in liberated areas which is not, as with Germany, a recent development but rather one of several years' standing.
- 4. Present serious economic situation in Germany would not be alleviated by failure to designate for removal plants unnecessary to maintenance of minimum peace time economy. It appears rather that improvement in German internal situation is largely dependent on such factors as administration, increased supply of coal, raw materials and transport. Admittedly, actual rate of physical removals would have to depend upon availability of transportation.

In the discussions of the preparatory conference on the gold distribution question both the UK and France raised the question of the inadequate character of data supplied by the US in regard to identifiability of gold recovered in the American Zone in Germany. Waley said that the treatment given British observers by Colonel Bernstein and associates had been "most discourteous".

The French representative although not commenting on the character of treatment received by French observers in American Zone confirmed that their observer had been informed that official detailed report of gold holdings had been transmitted to Treasury in Washington.

In view of the fact that I had no gold data other than those already communicated to British and French after being informed by General Clay and Ambassador Murphy that they knew of no other data, I informed both British and French that each of their Govts had received all information available to my own Govt regarding this key question. It was therefore a matter of some embarrassment when the French representative at the end of the meeting gave us a detailed statement previously unknown to my group of the disposition by destinations of Belgian gold (turned over to Germans by French). He said French observer had obtained data on informal basis from Bernstein's staff and that he understood that it had been transmitted to Washington.

The informational situation on gold is such that it is capable of raising questions of our good faith as well as impairing our ability to anticipate positions to be taken by other govts in this controversial question. As illustration of latter we would have been able to anticipate French position on our "gold pot" thesis had we known that Belgian gold with exception of minute amount was not in lot of gold recovered in Germany.

While the question of responsibility for this situation is one for Dept to determine, it is essential in connection with future course of negotiations here that I receive immediately all present and subsequent information at disposition of Treasury and Bernstein regarding assayers reports, Reichsbank records and other information relevant to gold distribution question. Inasmuch as conference will have to deal with this question I perceive no reason why full information should not be transmitted to representatives all claimants.

Telegraphic reply requested. [Angell.]

6418. From Angell No. 23. At November 5 meeting I proposed distribution of currencies as outlined in Repmem 13.99 French and British were firmly of opinion gold coin, including that minted in US and neutrals, should be distinguished from currency and included in gold pot. (See my 16, November 3.1) Otherwise, there was no serious objection to Repmem plan. French felt they must reserve temporarily question of Italian currency and gold.

I recommend that I be authorized to agree that all gold coins found in Germany, including those minted in USA and neutrals, go into gold pot for distribution among nations entitled to participate in pot. [Angell.]

6420. From Angell No. 29. Russian compensating deliveries for 15% of surplus equipment from Western Zones discussed briefly with Waley and Rueff. I presented tentatively view of Repmem 8 ² that deliveries should be used entirely for reparations to claimants on Western Zones. Waley view was that western side ACC should use what is necessary to peace-time economy in Western Zones and declare surplus available for reparation. Waley cited British and American concern over lack of food in Berlin as one of reasons for this provision of Protocol.³ Rueff view not firm.

Subject has been discussed at length within our delegation. Position as stated by Waley with respect to use of compensating deliveries in Western Zones is in my opinion sound for following reasons:

1. History of provision in Berlin protocol does not support implications of paragraphs 1 and 2 of Repmem 8. President Truman in report on Berlin Conference described compensating deliveries from Russia as "a means of maintaining a balanced economy in Germany and providing the usual exchange of goods between the eastern part and the western".4

2. Direct use of compensating deliveries by western side ACC for peace-time economy in Western Zones provide maximum reduction of supply commitments of western occupying powers without necessitating increase in German exports to offset imports into western zone as suggested in paragraph 3 of Repmem 8. Suggestion that these deliveries be considered as imports would require increased productive capacity in western zone for offsetting exports.

It is also my opinion that portion of compensating deliveries not needed for consumption in Western Zones should be regarded as exports and therefore subject to first charge principle.

I urgently request your instructions on above. [Angell.]

[Extracts]

Berlin, November 7, 1945—6 p. m. [Received November 9—1:30 a. m.]

963. The 19th meeting of the Coordinating Committee took place on November 6 with the Russian member presiding.

The main argument of the day arose from the two papers from the Reparations, Deliveries and Restitutions Directorates on restitution. The first is the paper on interim restitution deliveries of easily identifiable property in clear cases which was blocked by the Soviet member in early October on the contention that the definition of property to be restored was not clear. (See my 767 of October 13, 1 p. m.) second paper gives a final definition of property to be restored.⁶ The French member pressed urgently for both papers. The US member stated that although he had no objection to the definition, he could not give his final consent as a long-term matter without the authority of his Govt. The British member objected to the general terms of the article on replacement of destroyed or damaged works of art and unique objects, suggesting that these be replaceable only "when practicable" and under conditions set by the Council. He also suggested excepting securities as well as gold from the plan for interim deliveries.

On the other hand, the Soviet member was dissatisfied with the whole definition generally and made it appear that he intended to limit the scope and to block the whole program so far as he could. He argued 1) that the present definition does not exclude the many cases where citizens or firms in occupied countries legally sold property to the Germans for reasons of profit and thus strengthened Germany; 2) that restitution should cover only property taken by force; 3) that the Govts of the four powers had never given to the Control Council the right to settle questions of restitution and that it was only being discussed to accommodate the French; 4) that the words "necessary repairs" in the definition were too vague; 5) and that there were many "general considerations" which should be considered; (he did not say what they were). He appeared deliberately to misunderstand the remarks of the French member and dragged in extraneous arguments. When pressed by the French and British member to submit his own text of a definition, he avoided agreeing even to this until the end. The French member in reply stressed: 1) that property apparently "purchased" by the Germans without force was in fact paid for with stolen money and should be returned to the French Govt; 2) that the paper had already been delayed 6 months since the German defeat; 3) that all but the Soviet member of the Committee agreed and even the Soviet member of the Directorate had agreed to the definition. The UK member referred sympathetically to the French argument that restitution is connected with reparations.

A compromise was reached under which: 1) the US member will submit his position after receiving instructions and the Soviet member will submit a text; 2) United Nations interested will be invited at once to submit lists of looted property to zone commanders of the zones where the property is believed to be; 3) the property when located will be held in custody by these commanders until final decision is reached.

As to advance deliveries on account of reparations, it was stated that neither the US nor the British member had had further instructions from their Govts as to the allocation to the Soviet Union of more than 25%. The French member made a statement that his Govt could not accept the compromise suggested earlier by the British that looted goods in factories set aside for reparations be compensated for in similar goods. The French position remains that the looted goods themselves must be restored to their original owners.

6488. From Angell No. 37. For Departmental distribution only. Following are further comments and background interpretation of certain aspects of the development of the reparation share problem reported in my No. 36 of Nov. 7 [8].

- 1. I am greatly encouraged by the substantial measure of agreement which has been reached in a very short time among the British, French and American reparation representatives. There has been a marked disposition on the part of each of the three delegations to approach this problem with a conciliatory and objective attitude and with an effort to give full weight, not only to the claims of the other two major powers, but also to the position of the 14 smaller nations who will convene with us beginning Nov. 9. I believe that, unless the home govts of the tri-partite representatives raise objections, it is probable that the general conference of Nov. 9 will be able to proceed with its work unimpeded by any substantial disagreement among the three sponsoring powers. I believe that the agreement which we have tentatively reached is in substantial accordance with my instructions as set forth in the Repmems. I hope that the Dept will weigh carefully these factors in the situation before sending me instructions which would create a need for a lengthy reexamination of the problems by the tri-partite representatives at this late date.
- 2. With reference to the percentages suggested in my telegram under reference, it should be emphasized that these shares are of a tentative nature. If the results of the 17-power discussions point to the conclusion that smaller powers should have a somewhat larger share of reparations, this could possibly be accomplished by transfer of a few percentage points from the shares of the sponsoring powers.
- 3. With reference to the shares in external assets in the neutral countries, I and my staff are in agreement that the inclusion of the small countries provides an opportunity for bringing more forcefully to the attention of neutral countries the justice and equity of the proposed disposition of these German assets. It is apparent that the diplomatic approach of the three major powers to the neutrals will be strengthened if the beneficial interest, no matter how small in the case of the other individual countries, is widespread and encompasses a large percentage of the United Nations. Waley and Rueff fully concur with this position. It is not contemplated, of course, that there would be any modification of the general plan to have the diplomatic approach made by the three large powers, but rather that supporting action by the 14 other claimants guided by the major powers can be of important auxiliary assistance. Such action might, for example, include a declaration of the 17-power conference at Paris and informal support by the individual powers. [Angell.] CAFFERY 5221. For Angell Number 20. Your No. 10, Nov. 1, from Angell to Dept,8 repeated to London as 783, to Berlin as 185. Re your question on CFM discussion of restitution for Italy. This question was not discussed by Council, but was referred to deputies for consideration. Brit submitted document 9 which provided that Italy should have same treatment in connection with claims on Germany as United Nations in respect to restitution of identifiable property and restoration of property in Germany. Brit paper further provided that gold restored to Italy should be used toward payment of post-armistice relief debt.

Subject was discussed informally with representatives of Brit FonOff, Treasury and TED 10 on Oct 17 by Mosely and Reinstein of US Delegation. Brit explained that their proposal covered both Italian gold recovered at Fortezza in northern Italy and gold removed to Germany. They believe gold at Fortezza to be clearly identifiable as Italian and therefore recoverable by Italy, under their restitution formula. Gold removed to Germany would be restored if identifiable. Under Brit formula, Albanian and Yugo gold claims against Italy would be dealt with by returning such gold wherever discovered if identifiable. To extent not recovered these would presumably become general claims. (Albanian claim is for about $10 million of gold held by Bank of Italy on earmark for Bank of Albania. Yugo claim is for $10 million gold looted by Italy.)

US position was set forth as follows. Gold at Fortezza has continued to be property Bank of Italy and should be returned there. Italy should be required to make full compensation to Yugo and Albania on their claims, taking assignment against Germany if gold had been removed to Germany. For these purposes Italy to have full rights of Albania and Yugo in claiming against Germany. With respect to Italian gold removed to Germany, US position still to be determined. Regarding use of gold for payment of relief debt, Brit were informed US view was that this debt should be cancelled as part of general reciprocal waiver of war claims other than certain specified ones to be dealt with in treaty. Views set forth were based upon treaty draft prepared in Dept prior to London Conference and 5244. For Angell Number 15. As you know, US Govt has taken position in discussion of Italian Peace Treaty that any reparation demands on Italy should be confined to removal of such equipment for production of war material as is surplus to Italian needs in light of armament provisions of treaty and cannot readily be converted to peace time use. It seems unlikely that much equipment could be removed under this formula. Furthermore, what is removed would probably not be susceptible of use for reconstruction purposes by countries which suffered from Italian aggression.

US position regarding Italian reparations based upon manifest impossibility of extracting reparations from Italy without increasing economic distress there and imposing further burden on those contributing to Italian relief and reconstruction particularly US. However, it would be highly desirable that some recognition be given to claims of Greece and Yugo, countries which suffered most notably at hands of Italy, and Dept is of opinion that some weight might be given this factor in determining Greek and Yugo shares in German reparations.

Dept appreciates that introduction of factors other than those relating to war against Germany, at least in formal way, would undoubtedly greatly complicate negotiations for determination of shares in German reparations. However, since percentages will in final analysis be determined by negotiation, you will probably have opportunity to lend support to Yugo and Greek claims without necessarily bringing matter up in such way as to confuse question of statistical basis upon which allocations might be made. Exact manner in which subject shall be dealt with left to your discretion. Furthermore, while it is desirable that Greeks and Yugoslavs should, at some point, be given to understand we are seeking to obtain some weighting of their claims against Germany in light of Italian inability to pay reparations, Dept must likewise rely upon your judgment as to timeliness of any discussion of matter with Yugo and Greek representatives.

You may find it advantageous to discuss matter in near future with Brit and French. In doing so, you will appreciate that foregoing ideas relate only to Greek and Yugo shares. Dept does not feel that position of any other countries is such as to warrant consideration of their claims against Italy in connection with determination of shares in German reparations.

5246. For Angell Number 25. Reurtel No. 29, Nov. 5.¹³ Dept still believes you should seek adoption of view that Russian compensating deliveries should be considered reparation and urges following in support of its position:

1. Collado 13a has reported that in conversations with Russians at Potsdam it was made clear such deliveries would be regarded as reparation.

2. Since deliveries of industrial capital equipment from three Western zones to USSR-Poland reduce amount of equipment available for reparation to other claimants, it is logical and just that any compensation made for this reduction should go to other reparation claimants.

3. Use of compensating deliveries to reduce imports into Germany would not make it possible to reduce amount industrial capacity retained for export because Germany could only count on this source of supply for brief period.

4. If Russian compensating deliveries when used to meet needs in Germany are not considered imports and therefore not taken into account in allocating proceeds of German exports in accordance with contributions of all occupying powers to cost of imports, then share of US, UK and France in export proceeds would be correspondingly reduced.

Dept proposes that occupying powers should claim in IARA major share in Russian compensating deliveries as reparation so that they may use their shares to meet import requirements for their respective zones in Germany and Austria. Such arrangement would reduce procurement from other sources of supply and interim financing burden on occupying powers and make it possible for US to meet any eventual loss on German imports from reparation share rather than US Treasury. It is, however, in interest of US, UK and France to consider all supplies brought into their zones of occupation, no matter from what source, as imports and therefore qualified for payment out of export proceeds to extent such proceeds are available.

6543. From Angell No. 42. French position on application of gold pot to ex-enemy countries following:

- 1. Italy. French appreciate arguments based upon economic desirability of restoring a portion of Italy's gold. French would appreciate additional information regarding disposition of Italian gold allegedly found at Brenner. Is it in Allied hands? Has it been included in the pot? With these questions in mind France is disposed to accept principle that Italy should participate in gold pot provided these "conditions" are met.
- (1) All Italian gold wherever located is put into pot. If Italy has already had some gold returned to her by Allies even if that gold never left Italy its return should be charged against Italy's share of
- (2) That Italy restore to France out of Italy's share of pot 15 tons of gold. According to French they were obligated in 1941 under duress to allow Italy a drawing account supported by gold for financing deliveries of war material to Italy. France considers this a restitution claim against Italy. France's claim does not go into gold pot which is confined to claims against Germany.
- (3) That the US and UK join France in strong demands upon Switzerland that Switzerland return to Germany for inclusion in pot 110 tons of Belgian gold received by Switzerland after prospect of United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943 ¹⁴ but before the gold declaration of following year. ¹⁵ In French view earlier general declaration regarding looted property was sufficient to put Swiss on notice. (Oliver ¹⁶ understands that Schmidt ¹⁷ has discussed this question with Rubin.)

¹⁴ For text of the United Nations declaration regarding forced transfers of property in enemy-controlled territory, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, p. 443, or Department of State Bulletin, January 9, 1943, p. 21.

The For text of the United States declaration on gold, February 22, 1944, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 11, p. 213, or 9 Federal Register 2096. Similar statements were issued by the British and Soviet Governments.

¹⁶ Covey T. Oliver, Associate Chief, Division of Economic Security Controls, and Counselor to the U.S. Delegation to the Paris Reparations Conference. ¹⁷ Presumably Orvis A. Schmidt, Director, Foreign Funds Control, U.S. Treasury Department.

If these conditions are met French agree to immediate Italian participation in disposition of gold. Otherwise they would insist that Italian right to restitution be deferred for peace treaty settlement. Rueff later indicated privately he would withdraw third condition.¹⁸

- 2. Austria. France does not consider that Austria is entitled to participate in gold pot. Reason advanced is that Austrian gold reserve was taken at Anschluss and incorporated into Reich monetary system. Gold was presumably consumed in German economic development of Austria. I feel that Rueff is not personally happy about this conclusion or the reason advanced to support it. I made the obvious point that French position here seemed unduly theoretical and in contrast to what France had termed its practical approach to Italian problem. I also stated that even on theoretical grounds French argument was unconvincing. Rueff stated French would be prepared to discuss this farther.
- 3. Hungary. France does not consider that Hungarian gold should be returned at all. However, they will agree to Hungarian participation in pot provided that disposition to Hungary of its share is held in abeyance until there is a peace settlement with Hungary. To preserve a previous argument of mine I took the stand that whole amount of Hungarian gold, rather than its pot portion would have to remain undistributed.
- 4. Albania. The Albanian gold should be restored in full by Italy to Albania out of Italy's share in pot. This is regarded by French as similar to 15-ton claim of France against Italy.

Ref Dept's No. 21.¹⁹ I urge speedy clearance of pot principle. Otherwise I cannot continue to take such a strong position supporting pot. Should clearance not be obtained, I can still withdraw in view of complications which French have injected. From Deptel No. 20 for Angell ²⁰ I infer that French position regarding inclusion of Italian gold found in Italy would not be acceptable to Department. Department's comments and instructions urgently requested. [Angell.]

6558. From Angell 47. Waley submitted following informal note on UK views regarding reparation labor.

Reparation Labor.

- (a) Any Allied country holding German prisoners of war should be entitled to use them for any of the types of work laid down in the Geneva Convention.
- (b) If an Allied country has not enough prisoners of war in their hands to meet their demands, it can request another Ally to transfer some of its prisoners. But in that case the transferring country would be entitled to lay down conditions on the kind of work that war prisoners might do.
- (c) If an Allied country still finds it impossible to meet its demands for reparation labor from any source, the possibility of enrolling German civilian labor and the conditions under which such enrollment should take place should be discussed with the Allied Control Council for Germany.
- (d) The question of international supervision of the conditions of work of reparation labor will not arise until civilian labor is enrolled. Memorandum which I am submitting to Waley and Rueff as follows:
- (a). Action will be necessary at the Paris Conference with respect to the following matters.

1. Labor services, whether of PW's or of civilians should count as part of the reparations received by any country using such services. Accounting for such services should start from the end of hostilities.

2. The value to be assigned to labor services for reparation accounting purposes, the period over which such accounting should take place, and the agency to be responsible for making the necessary determinations of wage rates and costs of maintenance, should be the subject of discussion and agreed recommendations.

3. Reparations labor should be limited to the following sources: German prisoners of war, compulsory labor by judicially convicted war criminals, and voluntary civilian labor provided use of this category proves necessary and practicable.
4. The Paris Conference should recognize that the categories of persons eligible for service, the numbers to be made available, and terms of their employment will be subject of later decision and announcement by France, UK and US.

5. The three powers should take the occasion of any agreement with respect to reparations labor to announce that such labor will be utilized only for purposes which will aid directly in the rehabilitation of war-torn countries and only for limited periods under humane conditions.

(b). In addition to the matters requiring action at the Paris Conference the US makes the following proposals:

1. Questions concerning the availability, type of work, term and conditions of employment and methods of enrollment of civilian labor from the Western Zones should be settled jointly by the UK, France and US. If agreement is reached the concurrence of the USSR should be sought. With respect to these questions the US holds the following views:

(a) Compulsory labor service should be required only from those judicially convicted as war criminals, including individuals determined by appropriate process to be members of European Axis organizations, official or unofficial, which themselves have been adjudicated to be criminal in purpose or activities. Except for persons tried for specific crimes, and convicted and sentenced to lifetime punishment, the period of compulsory labor service should be limited to a definite span of years.

(b) Insofar as compulsory labor is used for reparation purposes, arrangements should be made for international survey of the living and working conditions of such workers and of the uses made of their services.

(c) Both compulsory and voluntary labor services furnished as reparation should be used outside of Germany only for reconstruction and repair of war damage and not for current production operations except for fuel and food.

(d) The number of persons to be made available as reparations in each category of labor should be subject to the approval of the zone commander. Similar questions concerning use of PW's should be settled by each Allied country for such German PW's as that country itself holds. If a country transfers prisoners to another country for reparation labor, the transferring country should be entitled to define conditions of employment and maintenance. The three powers, France, UK and US should, however, seek to establish a uniform policy with respect to use of German prisoners.

The Ambassador in France (Caffery) to the Secretary of State

Paris, November 12, 1945—11 p. m. [Received November 13—11:40 a. m.]

6559. From Angell 46. At Tripartite meeting on November 9, use of German labor as reparations and manner in which this subject should be handled by 17-power conference was discussed.

French Delegation raised following objections to treatment of subject by 17-power conference:

1. The principles involved have been inadequately explored by the major powers.

2. Labor, like current production, was not covered in Berlin Protocol as source of reparations, and therefore is outside scope of Paris Conference.

3. Question of whether labor shall be considered as reparations and charged to reparation account must be considered on quadripartite basis inasmuch as (a) Soviet reparation account would be subject to similar charge and (b) Berlin Protocol is based on principle Soviets would receive 50% of total reparations and Soviets might, therefore, request share of labor services from Western Zones corresponding to 25% of capital equipment.

4. At Yalta, industrial removals, external assets and labor were listed as sources of reparations but only first two were mentioned in connection with establishment of Reparation Commission.

5. It is difficult to evaluate labor services on a comparable basis with industrial removals.

French Delegation appeared to be advancing every possible reason so as to avoid necessity for decision on labor question at this time, although Rueff agreed that the question cannot be ignored as benefit to country using German labor. French position suggests that they wish to obtain their full share of other reparation items with subsequent determination of their additional share of labor services. Waley's views were as follows:

1. Use of German labor should be considered as reparation and should reduce country's share of other reparation items.

2. Soviets not involved in question of whether labor from Western Zones shall be considered as reparation. Berlin Protocol based on principle that Soviets could get 50% of capital removals plus whatever labor they might obtain from Eastern Zone.

3. Paris Conference should decide how receipt of labor shall affect global reparation shares.

4. Receipt of labor services should be kept in mind as a background factor in making appropriate reduction of global reparation share, instead of attempting to evaluate labor services and subtract value from country's global share. His preference appeared to be based on evaluation difficulties inherent in latter procedure.

I expressed the view that the subject of labor as reparation cannot be ignored and will undoubtedly be raised by 1 of the 14 other powers. I stated that at the very least, the Paris Conference should decide upon method for accounting for labor services in event it is decided, by whatever body, that labor should be regarded as reparation.

With respect to the conditions of employment of German labor, which all agreed is not subject for Paris Conference, Waley submitted informal note on his Government's views. (See immediately following telegram from Angell No. 47.21)

²¹ See telegram 6558, November 12, 11 p. m., from Paris, supra.

In addition Waley commented orally as follows:

1. The UK strongly desires to avoid impression Allies are employing slave labor. Therefore, humane terms of employment should be established as a condition of type of reparation labor. This policy should be widely publicized.

2. The work performed by either transferred PW's or civilian labor should be restricted to such works as reconstruction, and should exclude commercial types of work since these involve competition with countries not using German labor.

3. In response to my comment that the memorandum took no stand on whether civilian labor should be obtained on a compulsory or voluntary basis, Waley stated that it was his general feeling that it would be advantageous to place the arrangement on a voluntary basis.

French agreed in principle with British memorandum with following comments:

(a) France is now using PW's for dangerous task of de-mining, which is perhaps not in accord with Geneva Convention but is provided for in armistice.

(b) France intends to have employers pay commercial wage rate for services of PW's which in their view would take care of commercial competition point.

(c) French labor will not at present time, because of strong feeling toward Germans, permit use of German labor beyond PW's.

French stated that 550,000 PW's were being used within France and that 70,000 were waiting transfer from French zone of occupation. Former figure does not check with figure in Repmem 12 ²² of one million PW's transferred to France under Facs 240.²³ We are cabling USFET ²⁴ for up-to-date information on this point.

Waley requested United States' views of his memorandum, and suggested that it would be desirable, if agreement can be reached among the three western occupying powers on the principles which should govern the conditions of employment of German labor, that concurrence of Soviet Government be requested in response to Waley's memorandum and statement of British and French views on labor as reparation. I propose to submit following memorandum to Waley and Rueff as statement of my views which I am prepared to submit to my Government (see following telegram from Angell No. 47).

If one assumes France will use in neighborhood of one million German laborers and that French reparation account is charged therefor at reasonable net value, French share of industrial removals and external assets would be substantially affected. In view of French position as stated above and possible effect upon Paris Conference of impasse over issue of effect of labor on share of other reparation items, a serious problem is presented. I shall continue to explore ground for agreement with Waley and Rueff. My preliminary feeling is that, if any agreement at all is to be reached with the French on this matter before the conclusion of the Paris Conference, it will be necessary for us to compromise by assenting to a fairly low value for labor services for reparation accounting purposes.

I urgently request Department's comments and instructions. [Angell.]

5312. For Angell No. 26. In teletype conversation Nov 12 Clay and Murphy requested permission War and State Depts to allocate to USSR 50% by value of plants on first list of advance deliveries. Dept stated it had no objection to allocation 50% of list by value in principle, provided that no allocation of specific plants on list was made until comments of countries possibly entitled to claim reparations from western zones on this list had been received. These comments due Nov 14 in response to telegraphic from Murphy, and were requested in form of cable to Murphy, copy to Angell.

Clay is prepared to hold up allocation of specific plants including Fischer Ball Bearing plant at Schweinfurt and ship building plant at Bremen until Nov 15. If you receive expression of interest in plants on first list which you know or suspect has not been communicated to Murphy for Clay, please advise Murphy for Clay of this interest prior midnight Nov 14.

Clay has suggested that over-all division between USSR and western claimants should be based not on conflicting claims to specific plants but on equitable division industry by industry. Dept has asked him delay formulating proposal of this character until it is learned whether both USSR and western claimants desire cross section of reparation removals, on theory it is possible in certain industries no conflict will arise.

Clay is bearing in mind needs and desires western claimants. At earliest date possible to advise him firmly these needs and desires, suggest you communicate with him on this problem.

6598. From Angell No. 59.

- 1. At tripartite meeting on November 13, I submitted following referendum on treatment of reparations from current production and commodity stocks in the Western Zone.
- a. In placing [planning] the amount and character of capital equipment to be retained in Germany no provision should be made for reparation from current production. This proposal is consistent with the provisions of the Potsdam Declaration (III, B, 15, b and IV, 6).²⁵
- b. Any surplus of current production or stocks above minimum requirements for (1) the German domestic economy, (2) exports to pay for necessary imports and (3) other prior charges, should be made available for reparation during a limited period to be determined by the Governments of France, the UK and the USA.
- c. Any current production made available for reparations to claimants other than the USSR and Poland should be allocated according to a formula established by the present conference.
- to a formula established by the present conference.

 d. In view of the present German foreign trade deficit, existing commodity stocks should be exported only for cash.
- 2. It was agreed that only item c required formal consideration by the present conference.
- 3. Waley expressed general agreement with all points in our memorandum.
- 4. Rueff presented the view that if the possibility of reparation from current output were restricted to a "limited period" there would in fact be no such reparation. He felt this would also be the interpretation of the smaller countries and that this fact would be the cause of considerable disappointment.
- 5. Both Rueff and Waley pressed me for a statement of our position with respect to the period during which we would propose to make German surplus production available for reparation. Waley stated that the UK favored a period of 10 years with review of situation after first 5 years. Alternatively the UK favored a period of 6 years without qualifications. Rueff expressed no view.
- 6. Rueff and Waley also desire to know whether we favor treating occupation costs and accumulated import deficits as prior charges. Since these matters are now subject of departmental review I reserved our position. Waley stated that the UK wished to treat as

- 6601. From Angell, No. 56. Following agenda adopted in meeting of Conference delegates on Nov 13 and released to the press:
- I. Allocations of reparations (a) shares (1) relative importance of data (2) comparability of data (b) Inter-Allied Reparations Agency (IARA).
- II. Assets available for reparation (1) capital industrial equipment (2) merchant ships (3) foreign assets (4) current production and stock.
- III. Assets not available for reparation (1) restitution including gold (2) war booty.

In first discussion of agenda Nov 10, Czechoslovakian, Yugoslavian, Belgian and Dutch Delegations all insisted that Conference first consider restitution, that restitution must take precedence over work on distribution of shares of IARA. Arguments advanced that (1) if restitution is not satisfactorily handled share in reparation for some countries might be less than value of looted property not recovered: (2) that reparation for one United Nation might be in property actually owned by another United Nation. In this connection Belgian delegate mentioned plants in Germany wholly owned by Belgian nationals which might be subject to removal. Delegates of all four nations stated that no progress had been made on the restitution problem although much easily identifiable property was known to be available and, furthermore, that the occupying powers had not allowed experts to enter Germany for inspection and identification of property. Belgian delegate also mentioned that the unsatisfactory situation on restitution has repeatedly been brought to attention of US, UK, and France and that no positive action had as yet been taken.

Delegates of these countries were finally convinced that determination of shares of reparation and plans for the establishment of IARA were the most urgent problems and concurred in placing them in first place on the agenda. It was agreed that the agenda adopted could be varied at the suggestion of the Conference President and that items not on the present agenda could be added later. [Angell.]

- 1. No plants beyond three now set aside for Soviet Union should be allocated until possible to examine statements which other claimants have been asked to submit by November 14 in response to request that they indicate extent of interest in any plants declared available for reparation.
- 2. Until examination of such statements impossible to determine whether or not USSR-Poland should get more than 25 percent of plants. If possible to allocate more than 25 percent to USSR-Poland without disregarding expressed interest of other claimants, Dept has no objection in principle to such allocation.

- 1049. 1. The 21st meeting of the Coordinating Committee, Russian member presiding today disposed of a long agenda expeditiously and smoothly.
- 2. On first point respecting advance deliveries on account of reparations, US member stated he was authorized to accept Soviet reservation claiming 50% of such deliveries of plants from the Western Zones. As regards the three plants originally allocated to Soviets.

⁸⁰ Both dated November 12, pp. 1381 and 1382, respectively.

US withdrew Bayerische Motorenwerke factory at Munich, since French had protested it contained large number of tools stolen from France by force. A second plant was withdrawn because it was not on Soviet list of claims. In place of these two factories US offered to the Soviets 50% of ballbearing works at Schweinfurt and 75% of shipyard at Bremen. General Clay stressed that these offers would be contained in 25% ultimate total available to the Russians in reparations. He pointed out that US has filed no claims against the first list for advance reparations, except for certain parts of the dye works at Ludwigshafen.

Soviet member thanked General Clay for his statement.

British member expressed sympathy with Soviet position, stating however, that his Government would like to examine bids received before final decision. He considered that if the demands from other countries were reasonable the latter should not object to 50% allocation to Russians on advance deliveries. British member insisted that any allocation in excess of 25% should, however, be adjusted in future allocations. He asked for opportunity to examine General Clay's proposal in greater detail.

French member agreed essentially with British position but stated he must reserve final approval until Coordinating Committee made known its decision regarding looted property.

General Clay then stated that if French took this position he must reserve his decision on looted property as long as French reserved their position on the establishment of central administration for Germany. French member let this remark pass. General Clay then stated he had a declaration to make for the record, namely, that US had made clear its understanding for the interests of other countries by not claiming any reparations until the claims of other countries were satisfied.

Coordinating Committee agreed to put question of advance deliveries on agenda of next meeting of Control Council.

At a later point in the discussion, Coordinating Committee decided to permit the Economics Directorate to notify interested countries through diplomatic channels as soon as particular plants became available for advance delivery, without waiting to include therein composite lists. On British proposal Economics Directorate will also be requested to present recommendations concerning advance deliveries as between Soviet Union and the western nations. French member announced that he had received the claims from the Belgian and Dutch Governments, the former having submitted its total demands for advance deliveries

4. On the subject of restitution of looted property, (see my 984, November 10, 10 a. m.³¹) French member referred to gesture by his Government in renouncing priority of restitution over reparations and objected that on the subject of identifiable looted objects, Soviet compromise proposal spoke of compensation and US proposal only provided for restitution of such objects in very rare cases. French member submitted new paper, summary of which will be sent in separate telegram,³² which will be considered at next meeting of Coordinating Committee.

The French Chargé (Lacoste) to the Secretary of State

No. 929

The Chargé d'Affaires of France ad interim in the United States presents his compliments to His Excellency the Secretary of State and, referring to the note of the Embassy, No. 898, under date of November 8,33 has the honor to invite his attention to the following matter:

The Division of Reparations and Restitution in Berlin, in its session of November 12, studied the question of deliveries of factories as payment on account of reparations.

The draft submitted to the Division by the Representative of the Government of the United States provides:

1. That equipment not previously claimed by the plundered State shall be delivered with the factory to which it belongs, when the said factory is allocated under the head of reparations;

2. Whenever a factory, which is available for delivery to one of the Allies under the head of reparations, has not been allocated, the plundered and identified equipment shall be returned to the owner

E Telegram 1050, November 17, 9 p. m., from Berlin, summarized the French request for despatch to France of materials from Germany needed for industrial recovery (740.00119 EW/11-1745).

Solution Not printed; in this note M. Lacoste reviewed the discussion which had taken place concerning restitution at the seventeenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee on October 29, a report on which is contained in telegram 883, October 30, 5 p. m., from Berlin, p. 1364. The note also reiterated the French proposal that restitution take precedence over reparations and requested that in drawing up any inventory of equipment for reparations delivery, a distinction be made between material of Allied and German origin so that the former might be treated as subject to restitution. (740.00119 EW/11-845)

³¹ Not printed; in this telegram Mr. Murphy reported that the Coordinating Committee had agreed at its nineteenth meeting on November 6 on the text of a message to be transmitted on behalf of the Allied Control Council to the interested United Nations inviting them to submit to the zonal commanders lists of materials to which claims for restitution were to be made (740.00119 EW/11-1045).

State if it claims it before the dismantling and on condition that the absence of such equipment does not seriously reduce the productive capacity of the factory;

3. The allocation of compensation in case restitution, after having been justified, cannot be made.

In view of the inability of the French Authorities to send to the spot, within a very brief time limit, experts to search for and identify the plundered equipment, the French Government deems that these conditions render illusory in fact the restitution provided for.

The French Government feels obliged, under these conditions, to call attention to the observations which this Embassy was charged with presenting in note No. 898 of November 8. It takes the liberty of emphasizing again in this connection that the Declaration of January 5, 1943,34 to which the United States and France are signatories, stipulated that all the property of which Germany took possession by pillage or through transactions which were apparently legal, must be returned to the United Nations. The French Government deems that the said Declaration, based upon a respect for law and justice, was not modified by the Potsdam Agreements.

The French Government contests the principle according to which only the equipment taken from the United Nations by force must be returned, to the exclusion of that which the Reich acquired for a consideration and by contract. It points out in this connection that it is not possible to establish differences between these two methods of acquisition, force having usually been employed directly or indirectly in the second case. It continues to think that reparations cannot have priority over restitution. It deems it contrary to equity to contemplate the retention in the German factories of stolen equipment, the absence of which is cruelly felt by the economy of the occupied countries. The maintenance in Germany of a minimum standard of living, provided for by the Potsdam Agreements, cannot be achieved, it feels, at the expense of the countries that have been pillaged by the Reich. The French Government deems it pertinent to point out that the plan set forth on November 12 by the American Delegate in the Division of Reparations and Restitution would, if it were put into effect, arouse considerable agitations, not only in France, but also in the other countries formerly occupied.

The Representative of France in the Division in Berlin has already agreed to limit requests for restitution to identifiable property, and to renounce claiming compensation for property which is not recovered. To go farther in this direction, the French Authorities feel, would be to compromise the right to restitution which was guaranteed to France by the Declaration of January 5, 1943.

³⁴ See footnote 14, p. 1379.

The French Government does not doubt the attachment of the American Government to the principles that dominated the Declaration of January 5, 1943 concerning the restitution of stolen property. Under those conditions it charged the Embassy of France with insisting again and in the most pressing manner that there be sent to the American Delegate in Berlin, if possible before November 20, instructions which, taking into consideration the ideas advanced by the French Representative, would permit France and other plundered countries to regain, in larger measure, possession of the property of which they were despoiled in open or thinly disguised disregard of international law.

Mr. Francis Lacoste is happy to avail himself of this occasion to renew to the Honorable James F. Byrnes the assurances of his very high consideration.

6677. From Angell No. 65. Meeting of heads of delegations on November 16 began discussions of "Memorandum Relating to Inter-Allied Reparations Agency" which was submitted to smaller powers in connection with invitation to Paris Conference.³⁵ Phelps attended for Angell who was engaged in unsuccessful attempt to fly to Berlin for weekend visit with Murphy and Clay.

[Here follows inconclusive discussion of paragraph 2 of the memorandum relating to the functions of the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency.]

It was decided temporarily to postpone discussion on IARA functions and to discuss remainder of IARA memo.

Paragraph 3 of memo was accepted.

With respect to paragraph 4 of memo Netherlands delegate submitted proposed amendment (see my immediately following telegram No. 66 ³⁶). Basic reasons given for proposal were to give smaller countries greater voice in committee and to establish practical rotation scheme giving time for development of working relationships between Big Three and delegates of smaller powers on committee. South African delegate approved proposal but suggested, because of possibility of several members of committee being claimants and therefore not entitled to vote, that there should be a minimum quorum of four; or committee members who were claimants should nominate successors to sit on committee to decide between conflicting claims.

Belgian and Yugo delegates supported Netherlands proposal and strongly favored regional grouping as offering economic and political opportunity for regional cooperation. Yugo delegate suggested, in view of possible three to three decision in committee of six, that there be four instead of three regional groups of smaller powers each with representative on the committee, thus making a committee of seven.

Greek and Norwegian delegates opposed Netherlands proposal on ground that 6-month period of rotation would bar smallest powers from sitting on committee until major task of reparation allocations was finished. Greek delegate also opposed regional groups because proposal involved political decisions outside scope of Conference and possible dangers. Indian delegate favored original proposal of Big Three as more international in character than regional proposal of Netherlands but stated that he would not oppose Netherlands proposal, if 6 months were reduced to 4 months, since regional proposal was strongly favored by many of the countries for reasons of sentiment and prestige.

Views of Big Three were requested on Netherlands proposal. Waley stated that Big Three would request considerable portion of reparations and should be correspondingly represented on committee and that Big Three conflicting claims with respect to very large plants should not be settled by a few smaller powers. Waley was sympathetic to proposal that claimant should not be judged in own case but offered no concrete proposal. Phelps expressed sympathy with right of party in interest to present case before committee and with proposal that interested member should not be judge in own case. He reserved expression of US views on regional blocks. He also suggested possibility that instead of sending question back to assembly in case of tie vote in committee, that might send disputed item back to Secretariat for further study and possibly inclusion in new program.

Rueff pointed out that original Big Three proposal was compromise between voting by head and voting by reparation share and stated that original proposal was more democratic than voting by share. He also stated that settlement of Big Three conflicting claims by smaller powers would not be satisfactory to Big Three. Although Netherlands proposal attractive to the mind he felt it was not practical in application and had dangerous political consequences.

Depts views are urgently request[ed] on Netherlands proposal especially with respect to (a) regional grouping of smaller powers (b) abstention from voting of interested members despite possibility of consequent loss of Big Three preponderance in committee (c) election of successors for adjudication of conflicting claims if claimant members abstain from voting (d) whether committee larger than five is acceptable.

At close of meeting Rueff proposed reversal of decision by agenda committee on order of items so as to permit discussion of restitution before allocation of reparation shares. This proposal is another indication that Rueff is taking advantage of smaller powers position on restitution to further French aims in this matter. French have stated their position on restitution as an alternative between (a) obtaining full restitution prior to obtaining full share of reparations or (b) obtaining larger share of reparations in light of unsatisfied French restitution claims. Decision of delegates on Rueff proposal to discuss restitution immediately was temporarily held up by US proposal that comparative tables prepared by statisticians for various claimants should be examined at once in order to determine whether further work by statisticians is necessary to facilitate comparison of various claims. Rueff agreed subject to understanding that discussion on restitution would begin as soon as possible and that discussion on allocation of reparation shares would not be extended unduly. [Angell.]

6680. From Angell. No. 67. Conference resumed discussion November 17 (see mytel 65 38) of memorandum relating to IARA (Inter-Allied Reparations Agency).

- 1. Paragraph 5 was accepted.
- 2. Paragraph 6. The words "in particular to assure the required liaison with the ACC and Commanders in Chief" were added to meet proposal of Yugoslavian delegate.
- 3. Paragraph 7. Yugoslavian delegate proposed that common expense of IARA be borne according to "shares received" instead of according to "shares allocated". After considerable debate former adopted with 9 to 7 vote. Nine votes included Big Three. In view of narrow margin, decision regarded as tentative only and further discussion likely. Conference agreed to adopt same words in clause on voting on budget.
- 4. Paragraph 8. Yugoslavian, Czechoslovakian, Belgian, Dutch and Indian delegates strongly insisted on inclusion of additional provisions permitting IARA staff and, especially, missions of member govts to enter zones for purpose of inspecting plants and for other work connected with IARA. All but Indian delegate strongly emphasized that they had received unsatisfactory treatment by ACC, that they wished inspection of plants to be a matter of right, that they could not be expected to select from lists of plants without opportunity of inspection, and that each govt should be permitted to send technical missions into zones for this purpose. The feeling of the smaller nations, particularly those with a large stake in restitution, that they have been unnecessarily excluded from the occupied areas when their immediate interests demand access has been the most persistent false note of this conference. All are fearful that reparations deliveries will include restitutible items and that other items subject to restitution are losing value rapidly. IARA discussions have been used as a vehicle to press claims for access to occupied areas. Dutch and Belgian delegates were told of recent decision taken by USFET to allow teams from these countries to enter US zone for purpose of identifying items subject to restitution. Waley, Rueff and I expressed sympathy with points of view expressed but pointed to inherent practical difficulties such as transportation and living quarters, and necessity of consulting govts with respect to any proposal for access to Western Zones.

5. It was agreed after debate that delegates would consult their respective govts on the proposition that ACC and zone commanders be requested to provide opportunity for sending into Germany staffs of national delegations to IARA and IARA staff necessary for tasks envisaged in proposed IARA charter, likewise to provide necessary transportation facilities.

It is understood direct approach through diplomatic channels would be used by the govts for obtaining entry for national missions.

6. The proposal of the smaller powers for access to Western Zones is reasonable if the scope of activities is limited to fulfillment of tasks envisaged in IARA charter. Intelligent selection cannot be made unless inspection of plants is possible. Whether such inspection should be arranged directly by a claimant govt with zone commanders or through IARA is open to question. The Ambassador in France (Caffery) to the Secretary of State

Paris, November 19, 1945—7 p. m. [Received November 20—12: 55 a. m.]

6699. From Angell No. 69.

- 1. The following countries have changed more or less substantially the statistical data originally submitted for reparations claims purposes: Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Greece, India, Norway, US, Yugoslavia.
- 2. For purposes of study have tried numerous formulae for combining data and eliminating undesired items from original submissions. Formula least unsatisfactory for present purposes is unweighted average of each country's percentage, as stated, of (a) direct war damage, (b) war expenditures during hostilities plus occupation costs, and (c) military man years including prisoners of war.
- 3. Application of this formula to unscreened data as now revised by submitting countries yields following rounded overall reparation shares in percents: US 26, France 21, UK 25, others 28. These results discussed informally with Waley but not yet with Rueff or others.
- 4. Have explored screening of data submitted to eliminate or adjust items which seem overstated or inappropriate. Preliminary examination suggests following:
- a. Elimination of damages to monuments and cultural and historical objects from claims for direct damage as follows: For France 1 billion dollars, for Yugoslavia 3.6 billion dollars.

b. Reduction of direct damage claims as follows:

(1) France 20% because property damage was valued at new replacement cost with no allowance for accrued depreciation at time of damage and because some unit costs were unreasonably high;

(2) Czechoslovakia and Greece 10% each, for similar reasons;

and

- (3) Norway 50%, because ship losses seem seriously overvalued and because items relating to occupation costs and to undermaintenance were placed under heading of direct damage.
- c. Elimination of prisoners of war from military man years.
- 5. This adjustment of revised submissions and use of formula proposed in paragraph 2 above would give following rounded percentages for overall shares: US 27, France 18, UK 26, others 29. Other formulae which are almost equally defensible in theory, however, yield markedly different results. Seems clear that arithmetic and formulae alone will not solve shares problem. Moreover, noncomparability within several categories of raw data and long time which would be required to get better figures make exact arithmetical basis impractical to achieve.

- 6. In private talks with Rueff over past week, prior to receipt of urtel to Angell 28,39 I had already indicated my belief that probable French recoveries from restitution plus labor reparation plus French removals from French Zone would justify giving France a lower share in global remaining reparation pot than statistical formulae seemed likely to suggest, and that in any event, in light of growing body of information available, I thought that percent of 21 for France previously discussed was too high.
- 7. In further private talk with Rueff and me yesterday, Waley presented instructions from his Government to request as overall percentage US 30, France 15, UK 30, others 25. These proposals rest on a defensible statistical basis for UK and for small countries, but on same basis for US are too high and for France too low. Waley based this revision of his earlier proposals on much the same grounds I had previously given Rueff outlined in paragraph 6 above. Rueff insisted his Ministers would not consider seriously such a proposal for France but agreed to present it to them. He also argued French share should equal or exceed total for smaller countries.
- 8. I have not yet presented all of proposals in urtel to Angell 28 to Rueff or Waley for tactical reasons, but have indicated US would consider reduction of its statistical share. UK does not want to benefit therefrom, but Waley suggests benefit be spread ratably among other countries.
- 9. As practical compromise, lying between extreme UK position in paragraph 7 above and formula results in paragraph 5 above, and after reduction of US share to level you indicate, suggest as overall shares US 20, France 18, UK 28, others 34. Since the shares discussion will be very active by middle of week and is now stalled by lack of agreement among Big Three, propose to use substantially these percentages as ultimate objective in discussions with heads of delegation unless otherwise instructed. Reconciliation of conflicting views, however, may require some flexibility within range of one or two points either way for each major group, subject to minimum of 20 for US.
- 10. Am already fairly near agreement with Waley on relative size of individual small country shares within whatever percentage is allotted them in total. No further discussion has taken place on percentages for plant removals. [Angell.]

5401. For Angell No. 32. Dept endorses points 1 and 3 urtel no. 33, Nov 7 40 but wishes formal agreement to this effect concluded in ACC Germany since these are restitution questions for which ACC is proper forum. Dept also endorses point 2 but formal agreement on disposition of satellite currencies found in Germany should be concluded in quadripartite Allied Reparation Commission since this is matter of German external assets to meet Soviet reparation claims as provided for in Potsdam Agreement.

Agreement reached by you should therefore cover only points 4 and 5 which are properly questions of reparation from western zones. Dept approves these except that point 5 should be modified so that currency issued by uninvaded United Nations shall be regarded as in the nature of German assets in those countries as have recognized reparation claims against Germany and be delivered only to such countries for disposition in accordance with the procedures regarding German assets within their borders. Agreement should require treating currencies of uninvaded United Nations with no recognized reparation claims against Germany same as neutral currencies under point 4 and you should not recede from this position.

"My Government points out that the Potsdam Agreement clearly suggests that the 15% of the plant and equipment removed from the Western Zones as reparations which Russia will receive is something more than her proper share and would otherwise have gone to the Western Powers. In view of this and particularly in view of the fact that paragraph 19 of the economic principles specifically excludes from the first charge all equipment removed from the Western Zones and the products delivered by Russia against her 15% my Government have reached the conclusion after careful consideration that goods delivered by Russia against her 15% should be regarded as belonging to the other claimant powers and that either the goods themselves or the cash proceeds from their sale should be distributed by IARA (Inter-Allied Reparations Agency)."

Since this view is consistent with US position and with indicated views of French, I consider matter settled in principle. Shall attempt to secure UK and French concurrence to an agreed memorandum.

5426. No. 34 for Angell. Urtel 6543, Nov 11, No. 42 from Angell.

1. Italy Italian gold valued about $25 million found in northern Italy is now in Allied custody at Rome. Gold has not been included in pot.

Re French "conditions"

- (1) Dept opposed to inclusion in pot of all Italian gold wherever located. Dept does not regard $25 million of Italian gold uncovered in northern Italy as properly belonging in pot since this gold never removed from Italy by Germans.
- (2) Dept does not understand nature of French claim against Italy for 15 tons of gold. Please request Rueff for more info on this. Was gold actually paid to suppliers of war material to Italy? From what country was such material delivered?
- (3) Dept willing to make three-power approach to Swiss concerning Belgian gold received by Swiss after United Nations declaration of Jan 5, 1945 [1943] ⁴² and is canvassing procedures that might be followed.

Dept is willing to have immediate Italian participation in pot. Dept will not, however, oppose French insistence that restitution to Italy of Italian share in pot be deferred until peace settlement.

2. Austria Dept believes Austria should participate in pot. U.S. policy is not to recognize any acquisition of Austrian property by Germany since Anschluss. View is that United Nations declaration of Jan 5, 1943 regarding forced transfers of property to which French National Committee was party covers German post-Anschluss acquisitions in Austria. Reestablishment of Austrian independence should be under as favorable conditions as possible. Recovery by Austria of part of gold taken by Germans would contribute to creation of such conditions.

- 3. Hungary Dept's view is that Hungary should participate in pot and that disposition of Hungarian share be held in abeyance until peace settlement. For bargaining purposes only you may take position that whole amount Hungarian gold should be kept out of pot, if French prove reluctant to permit Hungarian participation.
- 4. Albania Dept agrees Albanian gold should be restored in full by Italy. Dept views this as similar to Belgian claim against French for Bank of Belgium gold delivered to Germans. On basis of present info Dept fails to appreciate French 15 ton claim as similar.

5427. No. 18 for Angell. As previously indicated no understanding on restitution for Italy reached at CFM (Deptel 5221, Nov 8, for Angell No. 20) but Brit held that Italy should be treated as United Nation in this and other similar respects. (Urtel 6351, Nov 1, No. 10 from Angell.) Dept prepared to support policy of restitution for Italy and satellite countries with proviso that actual return of identifiable properties to these countries should be effected by the military only after program of restitution to liberated Allied countries well developed. Full share in gold pot for Italy and Hungary concomitant of such policy.

Dept agrees that Austria should participate fully in gold pot and that Albanian claim against pot should be fully admitted. Dept approves proposal that Italian, Hungarian and Austrian shares in pot be set aside for time being probably until final peace settlements are made with these countries.

Potsdam arrangements which provide that USSR will take care of Polands reparation claims not regarded as pertinent to question of whether Poland is to participate in gold pot. Dept regards gold pot as operating on principle of restitution and that Danzig and Poland fully entitled to share therein. Dept's view is that Potsdam waiver by USSR of claim to gold in Germany does not affect rights of Poland and Danzig in this regard.

You are authorized to agree to inclusion in gold pot of all gold coins found in Germany (urtel 6418, Nov 5, No. 23 from Angell) except for coins of numismatic value which should be restituted directly if possible.

Gold pot now completely cleared in this Govt as Treas has given final concurrence. Distribution of gold now in pot should proceed immediately after agreement is reached on such distribution. Dept prefers not to await recovery of looted gold from Switzerland and other countries before proceeding with distribution. Please ascertain Brit and French views on this point. Although it might be argued that recovery of Belgian gold is more important than immediate distribution, Dept prefers not to delay for such reason.

You will wish further to consider possible procedures in implementing gold pot. Dept's view is that allocation of shares in pot is for determination by U.S., Brit and French Govts, not by military authorities. Determination of shares will require presentation of claims by Govts of countries from which Germans looted gold together with proof of such looting. Nature of invitation to submit such claims and method of processing claims should be referred to Dept after being worked out with Brit and French. You may also wish to consider presenting gold pot proposal to IARA meetings with view to obtaining reaction of interested Govts.

That German external assets in those countries which remained neutral in the war against Germany be removed from German ownership or control and liquidated or disposed of in accordance with the authority of the powers occupying Germany and the net proceeds of liquidation or disposition made available to the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency for distribution on reparation account; and
- 5. 6758. From Angell No. 77. November 19 meeting resumed discussion (my Angell No. 65 46 and 67 47) of memorandum on IARA. Paragraphs 9 and 10 adopted, leaving unsettled three major questions:

(a) IARA restitution function (paragraph 2), (b) Committee of Five (paragraph 4), and (c) entry into Western Zones of IARA staff and of national delegations (paragraph 8). Subcommittee appointed to draft IARA charter subject to later resolution of above questions.

Comparative tables and explanatory footnotes prepared by statisticians from submitted data (see mytel No. 20 48) were basis of subsequent discussion. Belgian delegate proposed (1) recalculation of data on standard basis; (2) selection of categories for use in comparing claims and making final allocation (3) elimination of overlapping, and common procedure for conversion of values into 1938 dollars.

Waley and I stated scientific recalculation of data would take months and proposed instead statisticians be instructed to expand footnotes explaining methods used by each country in computing various data already submitted. Waley emphasized difficulty of revising downward any claims published. I stressed doubts that conference could develop any scientific formula equitable to all, necessity of examining formula on bases of common sense and equity, and advantage of sacrificing some accuracy in figures to greater speed.

Meeting unanimously approved procedure suggested with understanding (a) that subcommittee statisticians also standardize conversion of values in 1938 dollars and (b) that each delegation submit report on steps taken to avoid overlapping especially as between occupation costs and material damage.

Meeting then undertook examination, continued on November 20, of table I of categories of claims measured in monetary term, to assess importance to be given each in determination of shares.

- I. Damage to and loss of property.
- 1. Direct damage
- a. Own territory. All agreed on importance.
- b. Territory of other claimants, and Reference is to telegram 6397, November 4, 7 p. m., from Paris, in which Mr. Angell reported on a tentative agreement reached with Messrs. Waley and</sup> Rueff on basic categories of monetary and non-monetary claims to be exacted against Germany (740.00119 EW/11-445).

- c. Other locations. Some delegates stated inability to enter enemy territory and ascertain true facts. In view of guess work involved in estimates, generally agreed that great weight could not be attached to categories (b) and (c).
- 2. Undermaintenance. With exception of Dutch, French and Czech delegates, generally agreed that this category important but very difficult to estimate. Waley said British figure if inserted would be four billion dollars. I stated US figure would be many billions if included, abnormal depletion of US natural resources would have to be included, and suggested in view of difficulty of evaluation small weight should be given this category. Dutch delegate stressed accuracy of his country's figure, and real damage caused by exploitation of equipment by Germans in occupied countries in contrast to addition of new equipment in non-occupied countries. Czech stress[ed] close relation to direct damage in his country. Rueff likened undermaintenance to domestic disinvestment on same footing as British foreign disinvestment, and proposed inclusion as additional item in weighting of direct damage for occupied countries. Indian [delegate] and Waley opposed distinction between occupied and unoccupied countries. Finally meeting agreed "to bear in mind" in allocation of shares.
- II. Cost of occupation by Germany. New Zealand delegate inquired whether correct to interpret category as monetary evaluation of decline in standard of living resulting from diversion to Germans of current production. Rueff confirmed this interpretation. Waley stated that to this extent occupation costs should not be [basis] for reparation claim since closely parallel to decline in standard of living sustained by fighting powers not appearing in data submitted except indirectly in bugetary war costs. Waley, however, admitted real cost to occupied countries. Rueff adroitly thanked Waley for apt statement on delicate question and expressed agreement with Waley's statement that category represented important cost to occupied countries.

New Zealand delegate on November 20 referred back to this category and expressed disagreement with suggestion that cost of occupation be given weight comparable with war damage and expenditures. Cost of occupation called negative factor in winning war as it represented supplies furnished enemy. Rueff stated reasoning sound if purpose of reparation to reward war effort but disputable if purpose to provide reparation. Rueff stated Waley's views reflected faithfully opinion of majority of delegates.

III. Budgetary war costs. Rueff, speaking as French delegate expressed gratitude of occupied countries to big powers whose tremendous war expenditures helped in liberation. He stated relative weight for direct or indirect war damage and war expenditures would have great effect in determining reparation shares. War expenditures ought to have large weight but Potsdam Agreement concerning reparation in kind meant repair of damage. Whereas, damage leaves lasting traces, war expenditures may increase productive facilities. Should take into consideration only such consequences of war expenditures as drop in standard of living and domestic or foreign capital disinvestment. Potsdam also emphasized reconstruction of countries devastated and real meaning of reparation is to repair such damage. Should therefore give less weight to budgetary expenditures than damage. Rueff apologized for what might be construed as attack on US position and repeated gratitude for US war effort.

Waley read from memorandum of Crimea Conference to effect that reparations should be received in first instance by those countries which had borne main burden of war, suffered heaviest losses and organized victory over enemy. These principles underlay Potsdam Agreement and represented view of British Government. Both war effort and losses should be given full weight.

On November 20 I stated US position on budgetary war expenditures as follows:

(1) allocation of reparation should be guided by principles determined at Crimea and underlying Potsdam;

(2) US subjected itself to tremendous economic and financial dislocations, mobilized large part of population in direct war effort, used up enormous reserves of natural resources, and incurred gigantic public debt burdening taxpayers for decades;

(3) budgetary war cost is rough but simple measure of material, economic, and financial burdens assumed by US and likewise by other countries, notably Great Britain and British Empire countries;

(4) US prepared to consider very seriously in distribution of reparation reconstruction needs of occupied countries and direct damage and other losses suffered by all countries.

Rueff replied in conciliatory vein and stated that within framework of Crimea and Potsdam, Conference should retain war damage which has permanent effect on a country's economy. Waley stated that budgetary expenditures are rough and ready measure to which great weight should be attached. Rueff agreed. Belgian delegate, emphasizing reluctance to take position between powers suffering from German occupation and powers who fought and liberated occupied countries, made strong plea that if reparation is to rebuild European civilization, which might otherwise disappear, first task of reparation is to make good loss of productive capacity in occupied countries.

Opinion of US Delegation is that my speech had effect of restoring balance between war damage overemphasized by Rueff and budgetary war costs, without prejudicing ultimate allocation of shares, including portion of US theoretical share, with great weight on reconstruction need.

Indian delegate inquired concerning 5 billion dollars entered by France for prewar budgetary expenditures. Rueff stated figure included exception war expenditures after Hitler's accesses to power and represents effort to prepare for brunt of first German offensive. Yugoslav stated figure included by Yugoslavia represented only prewar expenditures for equipment surrendered to or seized by Germans.

Waley suggested omission of pre-war expenditures in view of difficulty of obtaining comparable figures. Rueff said if majority of delegates supported Waley on pre-war expenditures, should also omit post-war expenditures as even more difficult to defend. I pointed out that US war expenditures continued at high rate even after end of hostilities, but proposed, in view of reasons given by other delegates, that pre- and post-war expenditures should be given substantially lesser weight than expenditures during hostilities. Proposal accepted by Conference, Rueff stating that he concurred with reservation that proposal was unfavorable to countries which made exception defense effort before hostilities.

IV. Pensions. Waley gave number of reasons for rejecting this category as one of worst items for achieving comparability in view of variation from country to country depending on rate of interest, pension laws, etc. Conference agreed to rejection subject to Yugoslav transfer to budgetary war costs of dollars 1.8 billion representing salaries paid or to be paid to Yugoslav officers and soldiers and not properly placed under pensions.

V. Other claims. Conference agreed to eliminate this item in view of impossibility of statistical measurement, with Greek, Dutch and Yugoslav reservation that appropriate items included would be transferred to other categories.

Foreign disinvestment. Waley emphasized that UK sustained unique and serious loss in huge overseas debt incurred in war effort and urged that factor be given great weight in consideration of budgetary war expenditures of which it is a part. Indian delegate repeated argument made in opening speech at Plenary Session to effect that a given amount of war expenditure in India with its low pre-war standard of living had much greater impact on economy than same war expenditure in Europe, and especially US which had higher standards of living. In asking that Conference take this factor into account he stated that he would not press his argument on statistical basis as previously proposed but would leave matter to good sense of Conference. "Should neither Murphy nor Angell have received by midnight November 14 indication of interest in listed plants, State Department has no objection to allocation entire lot to USSR", and "no objection here to allocation of 50 percent of value of list to USSR at this time, but allocation of specific plants in list would, it is believed, better wait until receipt of indications from other countries by November 14. You are, of course, fully authorized to allocate plants to USSR even when they are specifically desired by other countries."

Based upon the above statements in the Teletype Conference, General Clay agreed in principle to the allocation of 50 percent of the value of the list to the USSR. This was agreed by British but subject to final action being delayed until all indications of interest on the part of claimant nations have been received. The transmission of these claims has been delayed in several cases.

Paragraph 2 of Department's telegram under reference received subsequently appears to withdraw somewhat from position taken TWX Conference, but was received too late for consideration and I do not believe that we can now in good faith change.

2. Re abstention from voting of interested members, Dept suggests for your consideration possibility that if conflict of claims arises between one member on committee of 5 and one member not on committee, member on committee would withdraw; if conflict arises between two members on committee, no withdrawal take place; if conflict arises between two or more members on committee and one or more members not on committee, one or more members not on committee be added to committee for purpose of adjudicating claim.

Some such formula may, it is suggested, preserve some measure of Big Three representation and provide for full statement of bases for conflicting claims in any tangled dispute.

3. Dept not inclined to favor election of successors if claimant members on committee of 5 abstain from voting.

4. Dept prepared to accept committee of 6 rather than 5.

5. Dept not sympathetic to Neth proposal that smaller powers serve on committee for six months on grounds mentioned by Greek and Norwegian delegates.

6. In case of tie in committee of 5 or 6, Dept sympathetic to Phelps' suggestion that matter be referred again to secretariat before coming again before committee and eventually assembly.

6805. From Angell No. 87. Further with respect to accounting for labor services.

- 1. In view of British refusal to support US view that labor services be charged against reparation share of employing countries in category of remaining assets, I consider that it is not practicable to attempt to maintain present US position.
- 2. As an alternative I propose to adopt Waley position that labor be taken into account by rough adjustment of share of French and other countries that now use or may use large quantities of labor.
- 3. On this basis, I would not envisage any change from proposed French share suggested in my recent communications.⁵⁴ Following considerations support this position:
- a. Prisoners transferred thus far were given to French without stipulation as to charge against reparation share. Therefore, only future labor service is properly to be considered.
- b. Labor likely to be surplus both with respect to German requirements after capital removal and to demands of claimant countries for German labor. French share ought not to be charged at full rate for such surplus labor.
- c. Use of labor services already given some weight in reduction of French share from level indicated by statistical considerations to present proposed share.
- 4. This proposed treatment of labor would be without prejudice to US right to define conditions and terminal date for use of PWs trans-

Dept agrees acceptance Waley position that labor be taken into account by rough adjustments shares of French and other countries, but has difficulty seeing without figures how this would fail to affect proposed French share previously suggested by you. At minimum it is suggested that you alter the distribution of 16 percent of industrial capital equipment given up by US as between French and other countries to take account labor services of PW's, in view of fact that division this 16 percent, 6 for French and 10 for all other claimants than Brit, was already generous to France.

- I. Man years allocable to war effort (a) armed forces; (b) munitions industries; (c) other war activity.

Waley proposed less weight be given pre-war man years, POWs not measure of war effort, and (b) and (c) important but too difficult to get comparable statistics. Rueff questioned historical wisdom of giving less weight to preparation for war and stated POWs material loss and therefore basis for reparation. Indian, New Zealand and Australian delegates stressed inseparability of (a), (b) and (c) in countries totally mobilized for war, but suggested less weight for POWs. Belgian view that loss of manpower through diversion to war effort, whether POWs or underground activity, should be given considerable weight.

II. Loss of potential income (a) deportation (b) forced labor inside territory.

Waley proposed account be taken of (a) only to extent of lasting effect on productive capacity of individuals and no separate account be taken of (b) unless account also be taken under II of similar loss to non-occupied countries of manyears devoted to war industries. Rueff agreed on same effect for occupied and non-occupied countries. Czechs proposed account be taken not only of extent of contribution but also how far a country in position to contribute to war effort. Greeks proposed deletion of I (b), I (c) and II from table II and inclusion in third, roll of honor table.

III. Loss of life.

Yugoslav delegate explained high civilian figure as result of early, widespread, and ill-armed insurrections against enemy, fierce Yugoslav resistance and German brutality, executions and exterminations, and bombardments by Germans and Allies. Indian referred again to loss of life in Bengal famine as consequence of war and stressed indivisibility of armed and civilian losses of life.

IV. Disability. Rueff said comments on III also apply to this category.

In summary Rueff said (1) no agreed conclusion reached on relative weights except on importance of loss of life; (2) some delegates emphasized war effort, others war damage; (3) French view supported by probable majority including Belgium, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and possibly India.

Discussion of weights provisionally closed and subject of restitution opened. Waley submitted British views, said these views implicitly rejected theses that claims for replacement have priority and that claims for particular goods looted should be met by distribution from similar goods in proportion to losses.

I restated my position that subject was before ACC being discussed by other US representatives, therefore I could not express either agreement or disagreement with views expressed by other delegates, but would be glad to transmit such views to my Government. Alphand stated basic accord with British view with minor qualifications (a) burden of proof on enemy to show legality of act of possessing goods during occupation; (b) replacement of looted works of art.

Yugoslav proposed agreement on categories of looted goods to be restituted or replaced in proportion to losses without lessening reparation share. Czech said injustice in Waley's views since cow stolen but not identifiable remains in Germany for benefit of Germans, and he proposed replacement without charge against reparation. Belgian and Dutch delegates sympathetic to Yugoslav and Czech views. Greek agreed with British view. Norwegian unwilling to extend legal theory of restitution since extension would give losses incurred through German scorched earth activities importance secondary to pilferage.

Alphand proposed as compromise that each country claim categories of non-identified looted goods important to economy and that priority be given in deliveries of similar goods as reparations. Proposed further that reparation quotas be increased to take account of non-identified looted goods and that other categories be added to Waley's shipping and rolling stock for allocation as reparation in proportion to losses.

French, Czech, Belgian, Dutch, Yugoslav, Luxembourg delegates instructed to submit views in writing. [Angell.]

5511. For Angell No. 40 from Byrnes. Dept has had long discussions with General Clay on reparation problems and is sending to you by air pouch copy of memo of conversation of Nov 3.57 Dept has discussed with Clay question of tasks of Allied Commission on Reparations in relation to Allied Control Council. Gen Clay has expressed view that ACC has, on representations of previous US representative on ACR, been given task of implementing reparation agreement and policies contained in Potsdam Protocol. Clay feels that last two substantive pghs of your letter of instructions 58 create in effect a double set of operating mechanisms covering same field and covering operations as well as policies and that this double coverage makes impossible the adequate fulfillment of task previously assigned to ACC. He also feels that discussion in Paris in tripartite meeting of matters which are to be raised at a later state at quadripartite meetings in Berlin is not good procedure and is not consistent with the attempt to work out quadriparite government in Germany.

Dept feels that you will recognize desirability of not negotiating in Paris on such matters as restitution (except with respect to gold) which have been referred to the ACC. The question of gold has of course been put on a tripartite basis by Russian acknowledgment of lack of interest and there is no objection to discussion of this matter in Paris.

In view of fact that ACC has responsibilities for carrying out reparations agreement under policies provided by ACR and that certain of such policies are provided in Potsdam Protocol, and with view toward providing satisfactory basis for working relations between you and Clay, Dept proposes to amend last two substantive paragraphs in your letter of instructions so as to read as follows:

Begin paraphrase: "It will be your responsibility at the quadripartite meetings in Berlin of the Allied Commission on Reparation to discuss and to present the US views on such policy questions as may arise, either with respect to interpretation of the Berlin Protocol or with respect to policy matters not treated in the Protocol. Such questions as labor reparations, the source of reciprocal deliveries called for from the USSR under the protocol, etc, will, as policy matters not handled in the Potsdam Protocol, be discussed by you in the ACR. In addition, you should, as the US representative, be ready to discuss in the Commission any questions of policy or policy interpretation of the Potsdam Protocol which may be referred to the Commission by the ACC or by any of the participating governments. It is anticipated also that you and your staff will hold yourselves ready to discuss with the American member of the ACC such questions affecting reparation policy or operations as he or his staff may raise with you or your staff.

The ACR should provide to the ACC any policies and principles required for a reparations plan. Such policy guidance may be given either at the request of the ACC or upon the initiative of the ACR. In order to coordinate the US position on overall reparations policy which you may assume in ACR and the position with respect to plans for removal of industrial equipment which the US representative may take in ACC, it is the desire of your govt that close liaison be maintained between you and the US representative in ACC, which desire will also be transmitted to the US representative on ACC. Overall policies affecting reparations will of course be reviewed in the Dept of State and will be taken up with you as well as with the US member on the ACC." End paraphrase.

Clay has expressed his complete confidence in your ability and in his being able to cooperate closely with you on all matters. However he and War Dept are anxious that no possibility should exist of dual responsibility in this field and that responsibilities should be fixed in accordance with above statement. It is believed that above does not substantially affect your duties as previously intended in your letter of instructions although language is less broad and not subject to inference that you would in fact review all actions of ACC.

This cable being transmitted for comment to Gen Clay. Please cable your reactions. Dept is extremely anxious that workable arrangement, on both your side and on side of Generals Clay and Eisenhower, be worked out and believes that above formulation will be adequate for this purpose.

5534. For Angell No. 54.

- 1. Dept approves your proposals re separate percentage shares for industrial capital equipment and remainder reparation category and reprocedure on presentation to heads of delegations.
- 2. Reference allocation of merchant ships, 59 War Shipping Administration, acting on assumption ships were regarded war booty, previously unwilling to turn over to other Allies more than about 38 percent of its one third share in German merchant marine which, if British surrendered same percentage, would have given other Allies 25 percent share in total German fleet. If British agree to consider ships reparation, WSA now prepared to surrender claim to about 60 percent of U.S. share since this action would entitle U.S. to larger share in other reparation assets. While still insisting that British surrender some part of their one third share to other claimants WSA believes U.S. willingness to forego large proportion of its share would reduce size of contribution British would need to make to pool for other claimants and facilitate British acceptance of U.S. view ships should be considered reparation. WSA apprising British Ministry of Transport of these views. According to present plan WSA will reach agreement with British regarding percentage of U.S. and U.K. shares of merchant marine to be turned over to IARA for allocation. Understood that while IARA would not decide on portion German merchant marine to be retained by U.K. and U.S., value of ships so retained would be included in IARA reparation accounting.
- 3. Re valuation of ships for reparation, Tripartite Merchant Marine Commission in Berlin has adopted somewhat arbitrary method of valuation for purposes of three-way division on which Dept will supply information if desired. Dept believes this method of valuation may require modification for purposes of reparation accounting to ensure that ships are valued in same way as industrial capital equipment. Please discuss this point with Waley.
- 4. Reurtel 87, Nov. 25 60 and Dept's 47, Nov. 27 [26],61 on labor reparation Dept fails to appreciate reasons for position that taking into account PW labor services would not necessitate change in French Question is one of equity as between reparation claimants enjoying fruits of PW rehabilitation labor and these claimants not enjoying such economic benefits. Fact that PW's were not allocated to France on explicit understanding their services would be valued therefore regarded irrelevant. Contention PW labor should not be valued because surplus to needs of economy might be applied also to industrial capital equipment. Fact that you already made some reduction in French statistical share regarded irrelevant since statistical calculations could yield widely varying shares depending on weight given to each factor entering into calculation. Rough estimates made in Dept indicate French reaping benefits in form PW labor services out of all proportion to other claimants. If PW services are valued for one-half year at only one-third of gross annual wage for unskilled labor on basis 8-hour day, value of PW's to France (800,000 PW's) would be 230 million Reichsmarks, to U.S. (350,000 PW's) 100 million, to U.K. (250,000 PW's) 72 million and to all others (35,000 PW's) 10 million. If France obtains additional PW allocations bringing total to 1,770,000 value of all PW services to France on above basis would reach 500 million Reichsmarks. Dept, while appreciating difficulty of your position, believes these or similar calculations would easily justify reduction of several percentage points in French share of remainder category and allocation of this to claimants other than three big powers. If you cannot get such reduction in French share of remainder category, Dept suggests you follow instructions in Dept's 47. If French prove unyielding you may point out that they are dependent on U.S. authorities for additional PW allocations.

- 5. Impossible for you to enter into any agreement regarding terminal date for employment of PW's. U.S. position must be agreed upon by State and War and then negotiated on quadripartite basis either in ACC or at intergovernmental level.
- 6. Regarding your proposal on restitution of rolling stock, Dept assumes your suggestion is that rolling stock declared by ACC surplus to needs of Germany's minimum peacetime economy should be put in restitution pool like gold and distributed as restitution rather than reparation among claimant countries in accordance with their established losses of rolling stock. This proposal runs counter to instructions on which U.S. authorities in Germany are now acting and if approved by conference should be regarded as purely advisory to occupying powers.
- 7. With reference to war material susceptible of civilian use turned over to liberated countries under war booty agreements, Dept understands your experts are now in touch with CALA 62 regarding accounting problems involved. Dept suggests you propose that value put on such material by IARA be included with value of German assets in countries in question, thus avoiding problems involved in establishing new subclass of reparation. If, however, you have already acted on proposal made by Dept in teletype conversation Nov. 24,63 you may proceed on that basis.

8. Reurtel 73, Nov. 23,64 following comment re draft on German external assets is in confirmation Surrey's 65 teletype conversation:

"Pgh 1. and 2. Satisfactory.

"Pgh 3. Recommend inclusion words 'subject to any agreements to be made between such countries or between IARA and such countries' be placed after words 'external assets within their respective juris-Arrangements are being made for reparation discussions in Inter-American Economic and Social Council 66 now convened in Washington, which discussions will look toward possible pooling of external assets in other Am republics and use as a common fund for benefit of other Am republics, with possible surplus to be turned over to IARA (latter contingency not considered likely). Chief purpose is to put pressure of other Am republics on Argentina to yield German external assets. Consequently your draft pgh 3 should be revised as suggested above to make possible such arrangement with Inter-American Economic and Social Council.

"Pgh 4. If phrase 'net proceeds of liquidation or disposition made available to the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency' permits some payment of external assets to neutrals to satisfy their pre-war claims this pgh is satisfactory. Thus net proceeds might be proceeds after deduction amount to go to neutrals. At this time we do not wish neutrals to be advised that they may receive such satisfaction since they will then in course of proposed negotiations claim this as matter of right. We wish to reserve this inducement for negotiations to be used only if necessary to obtain agreement on our over-all objectives.

"Pgh 5. This is considered most desirable as providing basis to request other countries to go along with Great Britain, France and US in granting inducements and imposing sanctions in order to achieve our objectives vis-à-vis neutrals in proposed negotiations. As stated by teletype, Dept expects to transmit cable on inducements and sanctions this week."

- 9. Dept's comments on proposed conference recommendations on monetary gold (urtel 74, Nov. 23 67) follow:
- "a. Dept assumes that gold coins to be included in pot will not include gold coins of historical value (Deptel 5427 Nov. 21 No. 18 for Angell). Words 'or Austria' should be inserted after 'found in Germany' in para 1 since Hungarian and other gold found in Austria should be included in pot. Phrase 'to which restitution claims could be asserted' should be omitted since otherwise recommendation would appear to exclude from pot bona fide German gold not subject to restitution claim.

"b. Words 'to Germany' at end of para 2 should be deleted and following substituted 'by way of looting by Germany or removal to Germany or Austria during the period of German occupation'. This change will permit inclusion in pot of gold which former Hungarian Govt removed to Germany and which was not lost to Germany.

"c. There should be inserted after words 'the Powers occupying Germany' in both paras 4 and 5 words 'and which under the Potsdam Agreements are concerned with gold found in Germany'. This would preclude Soviet participation in implementation of gold pot agreement since Soviet Union in Potsdam Protocol renounced claims to gold uncovered by Allied forces in Germany and presumably will not contribute any gold uncovered by it to gold pot.

"Words 'through German acts of spoilation' should be deleted and words 'by way of looting by Germany or removal to Germany or Austria'.

- "d. Text of recommendation contains no reference to gold looted by Germany and subsequent[ly] transferred to third countries. Dept believes reference to such gold desirable together with indication that any such gold subsequently recovered from third countries will be included in gold pot. You may also wish to consider proposing to conference that declaration concerning such gold be issued by conference to back up any three power approach that may be made to countries known to have received looted gold from Germany."
 - 10. Content of urtel 75, Nov. 23 68 approved.
- 11. Content of urtel 76, Nov. 23 69 approved, though you may point out that in view of extremely limited postwar economic resources of Germany little likelihood of satisfaction of prewar claims exists.

able difficulty has been experienced, however, in defining what constitutes looted property. The United States government has recently instructed its representatives in Germany to support a definition of restitution advanced in the Reparation Deliveries and Restitution Directorate of the Allied Control Council which would provide for restitution of (1) property which existed at the time of occupation or invasion and was subsequently removed to Germany, and (2) property which was produced subsequent to invasion and was acquired by the Germans as the result of an act of force.

United States representatives in Germany have also been instructed to support, in accordance with the above-mentioned definition, the restitution of looted property contained in plants declared available for reparation and to advise this government urgently of the procedure which they propose to follow in determining whether plants declared available for reparation contain, in fact, any such looted property.

It is hoped that these arrangements will enable the French government to recover a substantial portion of the property wrongfully acquired by the enemy. Reparation will, of course, be available for satisfaction of claims arising from the looting of property which cannot be recovered through restitution.

6851. From Angell No. 91. Have received after 24-hour delay Dept's undated telegram No. 5494 not marked for Angell.⁷¹ Telegram arrived subsequent to initiation of conversations with Waley and Rueff on basis of quotas proposed in teletype conversations of November 23 and 24 ⁷² which were approved by Dept for such presentation in absence of other instructions. French share proposed in teletype, of 22% for capital equipment and 16% for other reparation items, was arrived at after rough allowance for probable French receipts of labor and for other relevant factors.

Resulting reduction in French share is believed reasonable in circumstances though it probably does not make full allowance for probable French use of labor. Believe that in absence of protest by smaller powers, US has no strong interest in insisting on full reparation accounting for labor. Moreover in absence of British support and lack of clear US position on length of service of PWs our power to take stronger position is questionable. Hence believe no further reduction in French share should be required. Waley concurs and would recommend acceptance of our present proposals to his Government. French likely to accept present proposals but would strongly resist further reduction and would seek to reopen whole basis of quota determination. Long delay would result. In understandings with the French I would make clear that US position would have to be reconsidered if question of labor is raised by smaller powers, but that I will not myself raise question in conference. With this reservation urgently request immediate authority, even if only preliminary, to agree to French shares as proposed in teletype without further reduction. Work of Conference at standstill till agreement among Big Three on our desired shares is reached.⁷³ [Angell.]

Clarifying instructions from State Dept to Angell now in process of dispatch for comment are being sent you for comment separately. Meanwhile State Department has issued instructions to Angell to avoid negotiations and agreements on number of specific points where possible conflict might arise, in particular restitution other than gold, to ensure that area of possible conflict is narrowed to minimum.

State Dept does not fully agree with point you make on labor State Dept concedes that fixing terminal date under which PWs should be returned to Germany after hostilities in accordance with Geneva Convention, recruitment of civilian labor, in Germany for purpose of labor and its valuation are matters of quadripartite decision which are not to be taken up in Paris, and has so informed Angell. State Dept believes, however, that duty imposed on Angell to negotiate allocation of reparation shares among countries entitled thereto other than USSR and Poland, requires him to take PW labor allocated under Facs 240 76 program into account. Rehabilitation labor performed by PWs confers benefit on receiving country. Unequal distribution of benefits therefrom must be taken into account in distribution of reparations benefits. In view French opposition, it is unlikely that benefits from Facs 240 program for distribution of rehabilitation labor by PWs will be explicitly valued at Paris Conference, but they may affect percentage allocations of reparation benefits. In State Dept opinion, however, explicit or implicit valuation of PW services rendered Western European reparation countries has no proper relation to allocation of industrial capital equipment to USSR and Poland now being carried out by Control Council and therefore is not a matter for quadripartite negotiation. (Re last sentence CC 19295) State Dept will appreciate amplification your views relation between evaluative labor for reparations and efforts to democratize Germany, especially as concerns appraisal of benefits from PW labor in considering reparations for Western Europe.

In State Dept opinion, as yet no important conflict has arisen between Angell mission and tasks assigned Control Council by governments. State Dept hopes you will recognize Angell's task is made difficult by fact that smaller countries have been drawn into reparation matters for first time by Paris conference and are accepting opportunity thus afforded to give vent to opinions on many aspects of question. Under circumstances impractibility of restricting talk to subjects appropriate for three-power discussion must be recognized. Agreements arrived at, however, will conform to proper jurisdictional lines.

In light of foregoing, State Dept believes it of utmost importance you continue your negotiations in Control Council."

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

Berlin, November 28, 1945—8 p. m. [Received December 1—2:18 a. m.]

- 1126. (1) Twenty-third meeting of the Coordinating Committee. Russian member presiding, was held yesterday and gave rise to a certain acrimony on the questions of restitution and decentralization of German economy.
- (2) Economics Directorate produced a report 77 containing on the one hand a Russian definition of restitution and a US, British and French definition on the other. Russian definition, which was essentially the same as that brought forward at last Coordinating Committee meeting (see 1092 of November 24, 6 p. m.78), was that restitution is limited to property capable of identification, forcibly seized and carried away from the territory of the country by the enemy. Alternative definition was that restitution will be limited to identifiable goods which existed at the time of the occupation and which were taken out of the country by the enemy, whatever the means of dispossession; it would also include identifiable goods produced during the occupation acquired by the enemy by force. French member pointed out that in this latter respect the alternative definition was narrower than the Declaration of January 5, 1943,79 which envisaged restitution of goods sold to the enemy with the consent of the victim country and/or pointed to the conciliatory attitude of his delegation in accepting this narrower interpretation. He referred to the positions taken at the current Paris Reparations Conference, by the US, British and French representatives. This provoked a question by the British member as to which body would furnish a definition and he stated his understanding that responsibility in this regard rested with the Control Council.

General Clay emphasized the urgent need of reaching a definition and pointed out that the intent of the present discussion was mainly to set a limit on restitution and that progress could later be made with respect to procedure. He suggested a compromise along the following lines:

"Restitution will be limited in the first instance to identifiable goods which existed at the time of the occupation of the country and which were taken out of the country by the enemy through use of force. Also falling under measures of restitution are identifiable goods produced during the occupation and whose acquisition was accompanied by an act of force. All other articles removed by the enemy which existed at the time of occupation are eligible for restitution to the extent consistent with reparations and the minimum economy to be left Germany."

French member pointed out French public opinion could not accept the leaving of certain important looted articles to the remaining German minimum economy, but he stated he would seek his Govt's views on General Clay's suggestion for presentation the next meeting. Russian member likewise requested time for consideration. British member expressed sympathy with French position and mentioned he would accept whatever definition is agreeable to the French.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff to General Clark and General McNarney 80

Washington, 29 November 1945.

Warx 85965. 1. This directive,^{$1} received from the State, War and Navy Departments, is issued to you as Commander in Chief, U.S. Zone of Occupation, Austria (Germany) and U.S. Member of the Allied Council, Austria (Germany).

You will seek to obtain agreement in the Control Council to the application in the other zones of occupation of the policies laid down in this directive. If, in your judgment, it appears impossible to obtain quadripartite agreement, you will explore the possibilities of a tripartite agreement applicable to the three western zones and make appropriate recommendations to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

You will proceed with the application of this directive in your own zone even prior to agreement, provided, however, that restitution of property defined in Paragraphs 2 c and 2 d will be effected only when the return of such property is certified by the appropriate representative of the claimant country to be urgently required for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of his country. The restitution shall not be delayed on the ground that items subject to restitution are needed ss A draft of this directive had been approved by informal action of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee on November 13 and designated SWNCC 204/2; concerning SWNCC 204 and SWNCC 204/1, see telegram 8245, September 20, 5 p. m., to London, p. 1299.

to meet the military or civilian requirements in any zone of occupation provided that in the case of transportation equipment restitution may be so phased as not to reduce available transportation below that required for military deployment and for purposes of the occupation, including the removal of industrial plant and equipment for reparation.

ITEMS SUBJECT TO RESTITUTION

2. Without prejudice to the formulation of a definitive restitution program, the following categories of property shall, as an interim measure, be subject to restitution in accordance with the provisions of this directive:

a. All currencies of the United Nations occupied by Germany;

b. Works of art and cultural works of either religious, artistic, documentary, scholastic or historic value including, as well as recognized works of art, such objects as rare musical instruments, books and manuscripts, scientific documents of an historic or cultural nature and all objects usually found in museums, collections, libraries, and historic archives, identified as having been looted or acquired in any way through commercial transactions or otherwise by Germans from United Nation countries during German occupation;

c. Heavy and power-driven industrial and agricultural machinery and equipment, rolling stock, locomotives, barges and other transportation equipment (other than sea-going vessels) and communication and power equipment identified as having been looted or acquired in any way by Germans from United Nations during German occupation;

d. Other goods, valuables (excluding gold, securities, and foreign currencies other than those mentioned in Paragraph 2 a), materials, equipment, livestock and other property found in storage or otherwise in bulk form and identified as having been looted or acquired in any way by Germans from United Nations during German occupation;

e. In the case of property mentioned in c and d above which was produced during the period of occupation, restitution shall be made only if the claimant government submits adequate proof that the property in question was acquired by Germany through an act of force.

PROCEDURES FOR RESTITUTION

- 3. Your government will transmit to you from the governments of the USSR, France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Greece lists of property claimed to have been taken from their countries during the period of German invasion or occupation. Such lists will include wherever possible all relevant information which will aid in the identification and location of such property.
- 4. After examination of these lists you will indicate to your government which of these countries should be invited to send missions into your zone for the purpose of (a) substantiating claims for the restitution of property mentioned in paragraphs 2 a and d, (b) receiving information regarding the location of property which has been the subject of restitution claims by their government (c) identifying and receiving any such property to be restored or distributed in accordance with the provisions of this directive. You will recommend appropriate time and the size of the mission. After approval, details can be arranged by the respective governments direct with you as commander in chief of the United States Zone. You will furnish such missions facilities necessary to the proper discharge of their functions in your zone.

- 5. You will take steps to deliver all paper currency of United Nation countries invaded or occupied by Germany, now in your zone, to the government of the country of issue without the necessity of proof that it was looted or otherwise acquired from that country during the period of German invasion or occupation.
- 6. You will take steps in your zone to uncover and secure possession of property covered by paragraphs 2 b, 2 c and 2 d, mentioned in lists submitted by claimant governments, and to restore such property to the government of the country from which it was taken.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

- 7. You will require the claimant governments to give receipts for items received by them in accordance with the provisions of the directive. These receipts shall contain a brief description of the item received and its condition, and a waiver of any further claim as reparation or otherwise based upon the removal of the item concerned by the Germans or the exaction of funds used by the Germans to pay for it.
- 8. You will keep a complete record of items returned or distributed in accordance with the provisions of this directive; and you will submit to the Control Council and your government monthly reports on the progress of the restitution program.
- 9. The cost of administering this program of restitution shall be counted as part of the costs of occupation.
- 10. Any property subject to restitution uncovered in Austria and subsequently removed to Germany shall be regarded as uncovered in Germany.
- 11. After final determination of the amount and character of reparations removals, to be made by 2 February 1946, there should be no restitution on any items of equipment of key importance to plants retained in Germany as essential to minimum peacetime economy.

- 6864. From Angell No. 94. For General Clay OMGUS. In discussion at the Reparation Conference here of the functions to be performed by the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency, question has been raised as to whether functions relating to restitution should be included.
- 1. It is felt that, as a general rule, the govts of countries claiming restitution should deal directly with the zone commander concerned. Question has been raised, however, as to the method of deciding between conflicting claim to restitution in kind in cases where two or more countries claim the same object and have notified such claims to the zone commander concerned. Is it your view that all such conflicts should be decided by the zone commanders, or alternatively should they be referred to the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency? In the latter event, should conflicts be referred only at the request of the zone commanders, or also on the initiative of any claiming government?
- 2. Question has also been raised whether the zone commander should (a) be required or (b) entitled at his discretion to refer to the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency or some other arbitral body, in case of conflict between his view and that of any claimant govt as to whether goods claimed have, in fact, been removed from an Allied country and if so whether this was the result of an act of force or the result of a regular and genuine contract.
- 3. The American, French and UK delegates have agreed to request the views of the three zone commanders on these points. I would greatly appreciate it if a reply could be received before the end of the present week. The British and French delegates are similarly consulting their Govts and zone commanders.

Norwegian delegate, seconded by Dutch, objected strenuously to my written proposal submitted to meeting of heads of delegations, that countries holding ships would have first choice of ships they wished to retain under pooling of losses formula. Waley had previously approved written proposal in tripartite discussion but did not support me at conference meeting and later apologized in presence British Ambassador, alleging he had not caught point in reading proposal and was in profound disagreement with it. Statement in my proposal that any US agreement regarding ships would be subject to congressional action encountered no noticeable opposition.

Waley suggested later that if US had particular ships "such as Europa" in mind, this be explained to Norwegians, Dutch, etc., on the side. I believe this is practicable if US interest in particular ships is narrow and can be stated now with sufficient specification.

with Waley and Rueff, within US Delegation, and with Dutch and Belgian delegates. Numerous solutions explored for handling items appealed from majority vote of assembly. Basic difficulties arise from attempts to blend notion of arbitration by disinterested persons and notion of participation in committee (whether of 5, 6 or 7 members) of all interested claimants. These difficulties include:

(a) Techniques for implementing principle that no claimant should sit as judge in own case, or alternatively that all claimants should participate thereby necessitating selection among interested small power claimants if number exceeds available positions;

(b) Elimination of big power domination of committee without at same time giving small powers preponderance and authority to decide disputes concerning only Big Three.

(c) Techniques for selected non-claimant small powers to sit on committee and for affording reasonable opportunities to all small powers to participate in committee decision.

There is widespread inclination to favor arbitration of appeals of claimants from majority decisions of assembly if practical solution along these lines can be found. Arbitration would have advantage of simplicity and speed if simple technique were adopted for selection of arbitrator and if arbitrator selected already had necessary background information for making allocation of items among claimants.

With these considerations in mind, Waley, Rueff and I have informally and tentatively agreed on following arbitration provision: Delegates of govts claiming item appealed from Assembly shall select an arbitrator from among delegates of non-claimant govts. If failure to agree on selection US delegate would either act as arbitrator or appoint delegate of non-claimant govt as arbitrator. In event US is claimant president of IARA would appoint as arbitrator delegate of non-claimant govt. Arbitrator would have authority to make final allocation to one of claimants or to send item back to secretariat for resubmission to Assembly as element in another program.

SWNCC File

Memorandum by the Acting State Department Member (Hickerson) to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee *6

[Washington,] November 29, 1945.

THE PROBLEM

1. To determine the action to be taken with respect to a request from the French Government for captured enemy war material now in the hands of American forces in Europe.

⁸⁶ This paper was designated SWNCC 113/7.

FACTS BEARING ON THE PROBLEM

- 2. On October 15, 1945, by Note from the French Embassy,⁸⁷ the French Government requested that pending submission of their detailed requirements instructions be issued to suspend the destruction of enemy war material in the American zones of occupation. This request was supported by the Secretary of State and pursuant thereto instructions were issued on October 30, 1945, to the Commanding General, USFET, to postpone further destruction of such material until further notice from the Joint Chiefs of Staff.
- 3. On October 23, 1945, the French Embassy transmitted the detailed lists of French requirements of German equipment.* These lists have presumably been made available to the War Department through the French Military Mission. At that time the French Government likewise indicated that similar requests had been addressed to the Governments of the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union.
- 4. The problem of disposal of captured or surrendered enemy war material was treated in SWNCC 113/5.87 The basic recommendation was that such captured material should be destroyed with the exception of material convertible to civilian use needed for operational purposes (except aircraft); material needed to satisfy requests for trophies or scientific research; material identifiable as having been captured from another United Nation; and war material pertaining to ships and vessels of the Germany Navy. The Commanding Generals were instructed to try to reach quadripartite agreement on this policy but, in any case, to put it into effect in their own zones by October 15, 1945.
- 5. The Commanding General, USFET, replied that the question of disposal of captured war material had been presented to the Allied Control Council before receipt of this instruction, and that it had been agreed that it would be the responsibility of each Zone Commander to dispose of such material as war booty. It was stated that the British had ordered destruction of all weapons and dangerous items in their zone, although they had agreed to discuss transfers of specific items to the French. The Russians had indicated that similar material was being destroyed in their zone. The file does not appear to indicate what action was taken in Austria.

87 Not printed.

SE Lists not printed. On December 20, in a note to the French Embassy, the Department of State requested the submission of a new set of consolidated lists of requirements; it also indicated that the United States Government was considering the policy of meeting French needs by transfer of surplus American material (851.24/12-2045).

Discussion

6. a. In a communication dated November 5, 1945, supporting the French request, the French Military Mission in Washington indicated that the task which now falls to France is:

"1. To participate in the occupation of Germany;

"2. To place herself in a position to satisfy the demands which may be formulated by the organization responsible for the maintenance of collective security;

"3. To insure the security of the ensemble of French territories;

- "4. To provide instruction for recruits, trained personnel of the Reserved Army, maintain obligatory military service, which is, even though of short duration, a very important factor of democratization in our country."
- b. In the same communication, the French Military Mission indicated that if the request for German equipment was granted:
 - "1. Maintenance will not be requested subsequently; "2. German factories will not be called upon to help;
- "3. The maintenance of this material will be insured either by French means or by cannibalization;
- "4. Finally, this German material will be replaced by French material as soon as our economy permits."
- 7. The problem discussed herein does not relate to material which is susceptible of civilian use but relates only to munitions and other war material. Property which is susceptible of civilian use has been dealt with in other communications to the War Department, which has authorized the transfer of such material either to Allied nations or the use of such material for civilian purposes within Germany. Nor does the problem relate to vessels of the German Navy and stocks of armament, ammunition and supplies appertaining thereto, which were included in the French request but which are being considered separately.
- 8. The earlier decision in favor of the outright destruction of captured or surrendered war material was based primarily on the desirability of reducing to a minimum German industrial plants capable of producing war material, and on the desirability of avoiding the difficult political questions which allocation to other nations might entail. On the other hand, it is the policy of the United States Government to assist in the reestablishment of a strong France in order that the country may serve as a bulwark of democracy on the continent of Europe and be in a position gradually to assume an increasing share of responsibility in the occupation of Germany and in maintaining the peace.
- 9. It is the opinion of the Department of State that the latter consideration outweighs the arguments on which the previous policy was based, particularly in view of the fact that it should be possible to obtain firm commitments from the French Government, along the lines of the statements by the French Military Mission quoted in paragraph 6 above, which would preclude them from looking to German industry for maintenance or replacement, and in view of the understanding that German plants capable of producing war material will, in large part, be destroyed or removed from Germany.

10. At the same time the question arises whether the French requirements could not be met, in large part or in entirety, out of surplus stocks of American equipment now in Europe. If so, it is suggested that it might be preferable to enter into an arrangement with the French Government to take over such stocks instead of the stocks of German equipment which they have requested.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- 11. It is recommended that, in the absence of military objections:
- a. The French requests be met insofar as possible out of American stocks which can be declared surplus in Europe.

b. Such portion of the French requests as cannot be met out of American stocks be met out of captured German war material.

- c. As soon as determination is made under subparagraphs a and b above, the Federal [Foreign] Liquidation Commissioner institute negotiations with the appropriate French authorities for the disposal of the equipment in question at a consideration which should approximate its scrap value.
- d. A definite time limit be indicated to the French Government within which they should take over the stocks.
- e. The Commanding General, USFET, be immediately authorized to proceed with the destruction of captured German material in excess of the French requirements as communicated to this Government, in accordance with previous instructions. (SWNCC 113/5)

John Hickerson

[Since further investigation indicated that it was not feasible to meet fully the French requests for material from captured German supplies, particularly due to the poor condition of the latter, it was decided in 1946 to renew authorization for destruction of captured German material and to use United States surplus stocks to meet the French requests (SWNCC 113).]

"The Conference recommends that as regards assets in the territory of Germany or her Allies or in territory which was at one time occupied by Germany or her Allies which are in whole or in part the property of one of several of the United Nations or of their nationals, whether physical or juridical persons, the following principles should be adopted:

1. The rights of each of the United Nations and of their nationals over this property shall be respected. Assets which are wholly the property of the United Nations or of their nationals shall, therefore, be excluded from the lists of assets available for allocation as reparation.

- 2. Assets which are only in part the property of a signatory government or its nationals shall, if they are allocated as reparation, be offered in the first instance to that government. If several signatory governments are interested in the same assets, account shall be taken of their respective shareholdings when allocation is made. Any proportion of such assets over and above that belonging to the United Nations or to their nationals shall be charged the sum to reparation account. If necessary, adjustments shall be made between the United Nations.
- 3. If for reasons of security it is necessary for an asset belonging to one or several of the signatory governments to be removed from Germany, the signatory government or governments concerned shall be bound to remove it within a stipulated time."

6931. From Angell No. 105. Following is report on negotiations on reparations share for non-repatriable persons.

- 1. On November 12 I transmitted proposal to Waley and Rueff following lines of Repmem 3.92 Proposal dispatched to you on November 20.93
- 2. On November 19, Waley transmitted reply of British Government in form of departmental comment on our proposal.⁹⁴ UK reply dispatched to you November 20.95 British express general sympathy but doubt workability of scheme. Main points of reply follow:
- a. British agree that allocation of non-monetary gold is appropriate. Desire to restrict allocation of external assets to portion of proceeds of such assets in neutral countries. Object to allocation of agricultural machinery since such machinery would have to be drawn from current production and favorable foreign balance not anticipated for long time.

b. British desire that categories of persons eligible for aid under scheme should be defined as narrowly as possible. In this connection they point out that Germans and Austrians deprived of nationality by Nazi legislation are not properly speaking stateless since validity of this legislation is not recognized.

c. British object to suggestion tentatively put forward in US proposal that Inter-Governmental Committee be considered as possible agency to administer fund for non-repatriables since future of Inter-Governmental Committee is under negotiation. Suggest board of trustees to work under general supervision of Commission of Economic and Social Council of UNO. 96 Such board of trustees to work in conjunction with organizations such as Jewish Agency and others.

d. In event that US makes proposal to conference, Waley is instructed to attempt to have proposal referred to representatives of three western controlling powers for further examination.

⁹² Repmem 3 not printed. The United States note of November 12 proposed to aid three classes of persons who suffered heavy losses by reason of Naziinduced action: German nationals who fled Germany, not intending to return, but who had not yet acquired other citizenship; nationals of countries occupied by Germany who had been transported by the Germans or forced to flee and were now unable to return; persons who had been stateless before the war and who suffered property losses due to German action during the war. United States suggested that two percent of the total pool of resources available for reparations be set aside for the relief of such persons. In particular, nonmonetary gold seized in Germany as well as other German assets were to be placed at the disposal of an international agency to be entrusted with the problem, perhaps the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees. ⁶⁵ Enclosure to despatch 3793, November 20, from Paris, not printed. W United Nations Organization.

- 3.97 Our impression of British attitude, based on this reply and on comments by Warren 98 concerning negotiations on Inter-Governmental Committee is that British are fundamentally opposed to plan on general ground that it may discourage voluntary repatriation and commit British to general aid for non-repatriables with attendant complications for British Palestine policy.
- 4. I made reply to Waley by letter of November 29 with copy to Rueff.⁹⁹ In this letter I attempted to deal with specific problems raised by British and to restate basic United States proposals as follows:

a. Agreed to restrict fund to non-monetary gold and portion of proceeds of German external assets in neutral countries. Dropped suggestion for deliveries of agricultural equipment and possibly other capital equipment after consultations with representatives of refugee organizations in Paris.

b. With respect to persons eligible for aid under scheme, I put forth view that scheme should not be limited to persons who are stateless in strictly legal sense. I explained that United States position was that scheme should cover all persons who are non-repatriable because of political views or racial origins. The United States would not wish to create conditions which would force return of persons who would face physical danger or economic starvation in former countries of residence. With respect to German and Austrian refugees, I stated United States view that such persons should not be forced to return to live among people who had persecuted them bitterly and been responsible for the murder of their relatives and political associates.

c. Explained that United States was not committed to view that proposed fund be administered by Inter-Governmental Committee. Indicated that United Kingdom suggestion of board of trustees under Economic and Social Council would be acceptable provided proper provision is made for liaison between proposed board and other agencies with related functions and provided interim arrangements are made until UNO machinery begins to function.

d. Recognizing fact that scheme involves numerous administrative problems which might require solution by major interested powers after Paris Conference, I urged that Conference take action with respect to general principles of scheme, as follows:

(1) That a share of reparation of agreed size should be allocated for the rehabilitation and resettlement of any non-repatri-able victims of Germany;

(2) That the share so allocated should be satisfied out of the non-monetary gold seized in Germany, and also from a portion of the proceeds of German external assets in neutral countries

 $^{\rm o7}$ Portions of items 3 and 4, garbled in the original, have been supplied from copy in Council of Foreign Ministers files (Lot M–88, box 2060).

³⁶ George L. Warren, Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons, Department of State, had been United States delegate at the Fifth Plenary Session of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, held in Paris, November 20–22, 1945.

plus any surplus of German assets in countries which do not receive reparation;

(3) That the classes of persons who are eligible for aid under the scheme should likewise include the nationals both of Germany and of ex-occupied countries who suffered loss by reason of German action, who also require aid, and who in addition cannot be returned to their countries within a reasonable time because of past persecution or prospective physical or economic dangers;
(4) That the share allocated for these purposes should be administered by an international agency;

- (5) That the funds should be used not for the compensation of individual victims, but at the discretion of the agency to further the rehabilitation or resettlement of persons in the eligible classes.
- 5. Explained general lines of US proposal November 30 to Messrs. Gottschalk and Gray, representatives of American Jewish Committee. Latter expressed view that US proposals would be most unsatisfactory to Jewish organizations. They would object to a scheme which has appearance of affording general solution of problem of refugees while actually providing very little aid per capita. They suggest as alternative to restrict scheme to non-repatriable persons who have been victims of Nazi concentration camps. Germans and Austrians now living in Germany and Austria would continue to be excluded. Under this definition, they estimate persons eligible would number between 100,000 and 200,000 including Polish DP's who have served in Nazi concentration camps.

I am inclined to sympathize with this view for reasons stated above and on following grounds:

a. Value of proposed share so small that it is urgently necessary to concentrate benefits on most needy refugees.

b. Former inmates of concentration camps are in general most needy group.

- c. Such restriction would automatically exclude non-repatriable persons in Germany who sympathized with Nazi and aided German war effort. Such exclusion desirable both on grounds of equity and to increase political acceptability of scheme. Request authority to use concentration camp criterion if such criterion is acceptable to other delegations.
- 6. Prefer proposal in paragraph 5 to that in paragraph 4, d, (3). Please advise Department's preference. If Waley will not concur, will present to Conference alone.
- 7. It may prove more acceptable to other delegations to allocate absolute rather than percentage share to non-repatriable persons. In this event would propose non-monetary gold plus $15,000,000 out of proceed of German external assets in neutral countries. Request concurrence.
 - 8. Reply desired soonest. [Angell.]

Berlin, December 4, 1945—7 p. m. [Received December 5—10:21 a. m.]

1176. (1) Twenty-fourth meeting of the Coordinating Committee, US member (Gen. Echols ⁴) presiding, reached a deadlock yesterday on restitution. (2) Russian member proposed deletion, from Clay's compromise definition, of the sentence "all other articles removed by the enemy which existed at the time of occupation are eligible for restitution to the extent consistent with reparations and the minimum economy left to Germany". (See my No. 1126, November 28, 8 p. m.) He suggested the substitution of point 3 from the Soviet definition which stated in effect that in the case of property destroyed or worn out by the enemy, the right of replacement by identical or comparable property should be restricted to objects of a unique character such as works of art, etc. (See my 1126 of November 28, 8 p. m. and my 1092 of November 24, 6 p. m. 5)

² Similar protests had been conveyed to the Department of State by the Greek Embassy in the form of notes dated November 20 and 27, neither printed.

Pointing out that Clay's compromise was more restrictive than alternative definition agreed upon by French, British and US in the Economics Directorate (see my 1126, November 28, 6 [8] p. m.) and that it was far removed from the Declaration of January 5, 1945 [1943], French member regretted it was inacceptable to his Govt.

US member indicated that since it was impossible to reach a definition, the question should be referred to the Governments. British member felt that in view of the delay which might result from this procedure a renewed effort should be made in the Coordinating Committee. He pointed out that the delegations were bound by rigid instructions from their Governments which in turn had tied themselves down by specific texts and he suggested that if the Governments gave their delegations a certain latitude, agreement could probably be reached. French member stated that continued discussion might involve further concessions from the French, British and US Delegations and he would like to see a conciliatory gesture from the Russians, of which there has been no indication as yet. He proposed that the three Governments which were in agreement might be asked whether they would authorize tripartite restitution agreements between their zones.

In reply to a question whether he would consent to informing his Government concerning the current discussions, Soviet member stated he kept his Government "fully informed each time," and in reply to a further question as to whether he could request his Government for latitude in instructions, Soviet member said he could give no answer.

British member stated he must emphasize the seriousness of the failure to reach a definition on restitution, which must have an effect on the question of reparations. He said he would submit the matter to the British Government and he appealed to the other delegations to do likewise. In his view the divergence was not great.

It was agreed that the question be put on the agenda of the Control Council meeting of December $10^{\,7}$ for information and also on the agenda of the Coordinating Committee of December $12.^{\,8}$

- 5681. For Angell No. 68. Dept believes you should strongly oppose Belgium and Netherlands proposals (reurtel Angell 102 ⁹).
- 1. Selection of actual plants must be left to ACC on quadripartite basis since they have responsibility for shaping future German economy. Severe restrictions such as outlined in proposals would retard whole reparation program.
- 2. Prcposals put premium on pre-war property claims against Germany as opposed to all others. While quantitatively most important claims such as budgetary costs, destruction, deaths, etc. will be settled by a small percentage, under subject proposal pre-war claims to actual German property would be settled nearly 100 percent. Moral aspect also poor as proposal gives undue weight to pre-war trading and investments with Germany over destitution caused by war.

5682. For Angell No. 46. Deptel 5244, Nov 9 for Angell 15: urtel 6602, Nov 15 from Angell 54.10 Since German reparations shares of small countries are to be negotiated within residual percentage available for distribution after shares of U.K., U.S. and French reparation receipts from Germany agreed upon, Dept feels that it should be possible to secure some recognition of Greek and Yugoslav claims against Italy when these small countries' shares are determined without reopening whole question of French share of German reparations. Since any benefit Greece and Yugoslavia might derive from such recognition would be within residual and since French share of German reparations will have been previously agreed upon, such additional support of Greek and Yugoslav claims as contemplated by Dept could have no effect on French share. Dept feels that, in any case, recognition of claims against Italy in manner suggested for Greek and Yugoslav claims should be confined to small countries and not extended to major powers which will claim major share of reparations from Germany.

⁹ See telegram 6930, December 1, from Paris, p. 1436.

¹⁰ Latter not printed; in this telegram Mr. Angell expressed the belief that any discussion of weighting the Greek and Yugoslav claims against Germany in the light of Italy's inability to pay reparations would elicit from France a request for similar weighting of its claims. He also inquired whether any potential Albanian claim should be so weighted. (740.00119 EW/11-1545)

Dept's view is that any claim Albania might be invited to submit against Germany should not be weighted to take account of possible Albanian claim against Italy. Albania not devastated by Italy as were Greece and Yugoslavia; rather, Albanian economy was recipient of various Italian improvements in that country.

"2. That each country participating in the reparation settlement proposed by the Conference accept its share of reparation with the understanding that by such acceptance it has waived, on behalf of itself and those persons entitled to its protection, all claims which might be made against Germany, the Allied Control Council and France, the United Kingdom and the US in consequence of the incidence of the industrial removals policy in the Western Zones of Germany upon property within Germany in which such country or those entitled to its protection may have had an interest, direct or indirect."

See in this connection mytel 102.¹³ Even should it be decided that United Nations' interests removed will not be charged to reparation, share of interested country if allocated thereto and that interested country will be compensated if removed property allocated elsewhere, suggested provision as protection against miscellaneous claims for loss of earning power, quasi-tort claims re negligence in removals operations, etc.

Only possible objection I see would exist if Department completely abandoned position that US should in some way claim outside of reparation settlement for US interests removed. Since I consider that Clayton-McCloy letter ¹⁴ and Repmem 15 ¹⁵ are definite renunciations of this position, I recommend inclusion of above provision.

Characteristically, Waley reacted against above on ground that fairly complicated, unnecessarily specific and would provoke protracted discussion in full conference. He averred, jestingly perhaps, that would take 10 days to clear such a proposal in London. A sub-

Mytel 74.²² Conference recommendation on monetary gold, was amended to include specific reference to Austria, Hungary and Italy in conformity Deptel 54 to me.²³ Czech delegate has strong political objection to mentioning Hungary in final act at all, lest there be an implication from association that Hungary is getting some sort of favorable treatment. So far drafting suggestions designed to make clear disadvantageous results for Hungary of participation in pot have not convinced Czechs. They may, however. He does not object to similar inferences of respectability re Italy and Austria.

Yugoslav objection more serious because Soviets apparently have been consulted and have reacted. Yugoslavia asserts that Soviet gold renunciation at Potsdam ²⁴ applies only to gold found in pre-Anschluss Germany and hence that ultimate disposition of Hungarian gold found in Austria cannot be prejudged in part by applying pot reduction coefficient to it. Yugoslavia attempted similar argument re Italy, arguing that to bring Italy into pot would prejudge final settlement in which USSR vitally interested. This was successfully countered by argument that Italian gold in Germany is not identifiable and that pot was therefore only available device for determining Italy's portion, fate of portion thus fixed to await peace. Arguendo, we stated Potsdam renunciation must have been understood to cover all gold found by Allied forces in "Grossdeutsches Reich" including Ostmark.

Since, however, it appears that Yugoslavia cannot recede without Soviet clearance, Waley has suggested to me that Hungarian gold, which is all identifiable by transaction of capture, be reserved in toto. If future developments permit, a portion of Hungarian gold could be distributed to pot participants. He agrees that Austria and Italy must be included because of lack of identifiability re their gold. I believe omission of Hungary could speed settlement here and hence agree with Waley.

- 1196. (1). At twenty-fifth meeting of the Coordinating Committee held yesterday, US member presiding . . .
- (2). A long and at times embittered discussion, which was characterized by Russian hard bargaining, took place on the allocation of the first list of plants available as advance deliveries on reparations account. Agreement had been obtained in Economic Directorate on part of list representing allocation of roughly 86,628,000 RM value to the western nations and 52,658,000 RM to Russia and Poland. In reply to French observation that some of the plants contained looted material, Russian member made the significant statement that his Government was prepared to discuss the question of looted material in every case with a view to its possible return. Gen. Clay declared that until quadripartite agreement on restitution is reached the US zone commander will reserve his right to determine restitutable property.

Coordinating Committee then turned to rest and most important part of the first list, upon which agreement had not been reached in Economic Directorate and which contained valuable machine tool plants. Russians renounced any claim to Krupp Essen and openly declared their interest in machine tool plants to replace those destroyed by the Germans in Russia.

British member accused the Russians of wishing to pick only the plums and stated that as part of a fair bargain the British had in mind reserving for the Western Powers such plants as Schiess-Defries and the metallurgic plant at Dinslacken. General Clay made a compromise proposal which was debated in private by the experts. The latter's conclusions which were finally adopted by the Coordinating Committee provided for the following allocations: To Russia and Poland—Krupp plant at Borbeck, Dinslacken metallurgical plant, and 13 million RM value of Schiess-Defries; to the Western nations—Blohn and Voss shipbuilding plant at Hamburg, BMW factory No. 1, and 3 million RM value of Schiess-Defries. Rough total values, including the plants from the first list agreed upon in the Economic Directorate mentioned above were estimated as follows: To Russia and Poland 115,260,000 RM; to the Western nations 120,500,000 RM. Krupp Essen is to be allocated later, but the British made a strong reservation for keeping the railway repair shops in their zone for a period of at least 2 years to aid in transport repair.

7075. From Angell No. 130. Discussion of quotas with French has reached an impasse over charging PW labor to reparation. After further consultation with his Government Rueff now states that agreements under which German PW's are provided to France by US contain no provision for payment or for charging them to reparation account. Also contends that US gave France PW's partly from generosity but partly to avoid cost of feeding them, and that PW's should in any event not be considered a reparation asset. Therefore opposes any charge now to French reparation share.

- 2. Please wire copies of PW agreements immediately if obtainable or adequate summary of provisions.
- 3. Repeated firm proposal to Rueff for B quotas ²⁵ of US 28, UK 28, France 16 and for A quotas ²⁶ of US 12, UK 28, France 22. Stated that French quotas would be regarded by US as embodying a roughly adequate charge made in advance for all German PW's we transfer to French, as long as we leave them in French hands. Reserved right of US to withdraw PW's later. Stated we would support and defend this position in conference, and that we would make comparable adjustments in quotas of any other countries to which we gave PW's, but also reserved our rights to review our position if conference support could not be obtained for this treatment of PW labor. Waley strongly supported our proposal. He agreed that PW's should be charged to reparation, and argued that our proposal was actually very favorable to French. Rueff is reporting proposal to his Government but indicated he thinks it not acceptable for reasons given in paragraph 1.
- 4. We propose to stand firm on our proposal pending [official reply by Rueff. Urgently request, however, immediate reaffirmation even if preliminary of previous authority to vary quotas in major categories by one or two points. If necessary and sufficient to reach tripartite agreement, may wish to raise French B quota] ²⁷ to 17 or 17.5 and reduce others to 27 or 26.5 in B quota. Waley now authorized to agree to 17 and could easily go to 17.5. Must be recognized failure to reach tripartite agreement will involve lengthy and difficult course in Conference.

²⁵ Category B embraced industrial and other capital equipment removed from Germany, as well as merchant ships and inland water transport.

²⁶ Category A included all forms of German reparation not in category B.

5. Meanwhile following problem has arisen over treatment of German assets situated in United Nations. Certain United Nations, notably Belgium, Netherlands, Norway, Denmark, Egypt and Luxembourg have more than enough such assets to exhaust their B quotas as presently calculated and might thus have to make payments back to IARA unless A quotas were reduced by the excess over their B quotas. This would probably result merely in failure by most such countries to declare total of assets or in subsequent unreasonable reductions in reported total assets through deduction of exaggerated claims against assets. Following possible solution has been worked out by Waley and me to meet these administrative and accounting difficulties.

Each United Nation at Conference would be permitted to retain all assets situated within its territory and would be required to render accounting to IARA. Surplus over country's B quota share in external assets in United Nations (calculated on basis present estimates of net value of such assets) would be roughly absorbed by reduction in country's B quota share of other categories (external assets in neutral countries, Russian reciprocal deliveries, etc.) and by corresponding reduction in country's A quota (plant and ships). Effect on Netherlands, for example, would be to reduce calculated B quota from about 4% to about 2.5% and A quota from about 5.8% to 3.5%. Above procedure creates a disposable surplus of A and new B quotas available for distribution to other countries not having surplus over unadjusted B quota share in external assets in United Nations, rough account being taken of amount of such assets held relative to unadjusted quota. US and UK would not propose to benefit from distribution of surplus quotas.

External assets held in United Nations would then form separate category to which no quotas apply, each country receiving its own assets, and new B quotas as adjusted would apply to totality of external assets in neutrals, reciprocal deliveries, etc. (B quota percentage as calculated prior to above adjustment for foreign assets held would be used, as explained above, only to determine any excesses of such assets held.) Believe this new basis has many inherent practical advantages from administrative standpoint.

6. In addition under above procedure roughly two or three additional points could be made available to France in B quota and corresponding additional points in A quota. This increase of French B quota to 18 or 19 might help to end present impasse over labor described above. Although new B quota applies to smaller totality of items (external assets in United Nations, having been excluded as noted above), higher French B quota would be politically advantageous for them and higher French A quota would mean slightly greater share in plant. New French B quota of 18 or 19 would provide for same adjustment for labor as French B quota of 16% on old basis.

- 7. Waley not at present authorized to lower new French B quota of 17 or 17.5 basis but might if necessary be able to obtain authority for 18. I would not propose greater adjustment as French quota on new basis than Waley would agree to in advance. Recognize that French might refuse new basis suggested but might at same time attempt to retain new B quota offered for application on old basis.
- 8. Urgently request immediate authorization, even if preliminary, to make proposal along above lines in lieu of or as alternative to adjustment in paragraph 4 if such proposal appears to be necessary and desirable.
- 9. In order to place problem of share for non-repatriables before conference, I shall make following recommendation today without reply to my telegram from Angell No. 105.²⁸
- (a) Allocation of share of dollars 25 million for rehabiltation and resettlement of non-repatriable victims of Germany;

(b) share to be satisfied from all non-monetary gold and portions of proceeds of German assets in neutral countries;

(c) classes eligible to include nationals of Germany and formerly occupied countries who suffered loss by German action, who require aid, and who cannot be repatriated in reasonable time, but excluding persons determined to have voluntarily aided Germans in war;

(d) administration by board of trustees of 5; one each to be appointed by France, UK, and US; two to be appointed by assembly of IARA from other countries. Board to be responsible to IARA initially but to be transferred to UNO auspices as soon as possible;

(e) non-monetary gold to be available immediately;

- (f) claims of individual refugees against future German Government to be preserved.
- 10. Waley will support this proposal in principle but will urge that size of share and organization and functions of administering agency be referred to France, UK and US to formulate proposals for submission to other governments.
- 11. Urgently request comment on above and on desirability of further limitation of eligibles through use of concentration camp criterion or other restriction. [Angell.]

- 1. Introduced proposal regarding share for non-repatriable persons at meeting of heads of delegations December 8, as permytel from Angell No. 130.²⁹ Debate postponed until Dec 10 but indication is that proposal will meet strong opposition. Major objections likely to be:
 - a. Dissipation of reparation pool in general.
- b. Share per head for non-repatriables may be greater in some cases than that for injured nationals of govts represented.
- c. Fund may use unduly large portion of proceeds of external assets in neutral countries.
- d. Fund may be construed to benefit German collaborators or political opponents of existing govts.
- 2. To secure action by Conference, it may prove necessary to accept British suggestion that Conference agree to principle of US proposal but charge US, UK and France with formulation of concrete plan for submission to interested govts.
- 3. Even this may prove unacceptable to Conference. In that event, would Dept specifically authorize acceptance of lower US share in B quota as suggested in Repmem 3,30 to finance most, if not all, of proposed fund? It should be realized that 25 million dollars may be approximately 4 percent of residual B quota assets as adjusted to exclude external assets in United Nations jurisdiction.

Following is our reply urtel 105 33 drafted last week but not despatched owing to oversight:

"1. Dept not inclined favor Gottschalk and Gray proposal (urtel 105, para 5) to restrict benefits of reparation for victims of Nazi persecution to non-repatriable concentration camp denizens, since people of German and Austrian nationality who were found in concentration camps and wish to leave Germany and Austria and needy refugees now abroad should not be excluded from benefits. Believe it satisfactory to leave determination classes of persons aided in rehabilitation and resettlement to Board of trustees or other intergovernmental body charged with responsibility of distribution reparation on understanding such persons must be: a. true victims Nazi persecution;

b. needy in terms future economic position.

"2. Gottschalk, Gray view that allotment of share must not be construed as solution of problem shared by Dept. Should be made clear that reparation cannot compensate victims fully, that occupying powers, United Nations, (thru UNRRA ³⁴ and otherwise), and private charities thruout world recognize their obligations. Because reparation will consist largely of payments in kind and will leave Germany with economy capable only of paying for essential imports, Germany cannot be made to compensate in full victims of Nazi persecution who have left or will leave Germany. Proposal therefore is simply to add small amount liquid assets, which can be made available, to supplement other arrangements. Restitution of property taken from victims of Nazi persecution will, of course, be made in Germany, but can hardly be expected to benefit refugees substantially.

"3. Dept favors allotting absolute sum rather than percentage share to victims Nazi persecution. Believes sum should be nearer 50 million than 15 million dollars plus non-monetary gold you propose. Any figure less than 30 million plus non-monetary gold regarded here as contributing too little to solution to be acceptable.

"4. Dept agreeable British proposal of Trustees under UNO, with your provision of interim arrangement.

"5. Whatever sum or share is set aside should be in liquid assets. Agency handling fund should not be put in position of claiming equipment in IARA or of requesting share in stocks or current output."

- 1. Discussion unclear regarding external assets in individual United Nations exceeding individual B quotas. Do you mean these assets exceed amount which would be derived by applying B percentage to external assets only? Or do you mean these exceed individual share of total amount which would be derived from reciprocal deliveries, external assets, and other non-plant reparation?
- 2. Our view is that B pot should not be subdivided. Thus in former case excess holdings external assets should reduce share of reciprocal deliveries, etc. by corresponding amount. Do not reduce plant quota until share of all other assets exhausted.
- 3. In latter case excess holdings external assets should reduce share of plant and equipment by corresponding amount. If excess so great as to wipe out plant claim, grant adjustment to permit some plant reparation.

⁸⁷ See telegram 7075, ecember 8, 2 p. m., from Paris, p. 1448.

4. Anxious to avoid situation in which other countries would obtain increased share in non-plant assets other than German assets in United Nations at expense of US. Any offsetting reduction in their share in plant assets would not benefit US since latter in no position to take more than 12 percent of plant assets. US share in all non-plant assets should remain 28 percent. Furthermore, desirable that Belgium, Netherlands and other former occupied and devastated countries cited Para 5 urtel 150 [130] maintain their share plant assets substantially unreduced in order to assist rehabilitation their economies.

7122. From Angell No. 139.

1. First debate on share for non-repatriable persons took place-December 10. General concern expressed about definition of persons eligible. Sharp opposition voiced by Yugoslav and Czech delegates to aid for nationals of formerly occupied countries. Nationals of such countries who refuse to return are considered enemies of present democratic governments and of suspect loyalty to country during war. In order to satisfy conference that aid will not be extended to persons of anti-democratic sympathy, I proposed to amend clause defining eligible classes as follows:

"That persons in the classes described below should be eligible for aid under scheme provided that they cannot be repatriated within a reasonable time, that they require aid for their resettlement or rehabilitation and that they are not found to have voluntarily supported the German war effort:

- a. German and Austrian nationals including:
 - (I) Those who are now refugees from Germany and Austria and,
 - (II) Those still resident in Germany and Austria who were deprived of their citizenship under Nazi laws and who do not desire to remain in Germany or Austria.
- b. Nationals of countries formerly occupied by the Germans who cannot be repatriated within a reasonable time and who were victims of Nazi persecution. In order to exclude persons whose loyalty to the United Nations is doubtful, aid shall be restricted to nationals of formerly occupied countries who were victims of German concentration camps."
- 2. Informal talk with Czech and Yugoslav delegates indicates that paragraph 1, b, will not be acceptable to them. I hope, however, that it may satisfy remainder of conference. If further opposition develops to this and other aspects of scheme, I shall attempt to secure acceptance of principle of scheme in accordance with suggestion in mytel from Angell No. 131,³⁸ paragraph 2. However, it may be necessary to provide that specific programs of aid for nationals of formerly occupied countries be subject to veto of such countries. I am conscious of political aspects of this suggestion. Authorization of Department for such provision urgently requested if acceptable. Further delay at present stage of conference will make action difficult.

- 3. With respect to urtel for Angell No. 84,³⁹ paragraph 3, I do not consider it feasible to suggest higher sum than dollars 25 million ($25,000,000). This sum believed consistent with original instructions Repmem 3 ⁴⁰ which suggested 1 or 2%.

French and British consider that IARA (Inter-Allied Reparations Agency) charter and understanding regarding division of shares should be cast in some form known to international law for binding inter-governmental undertakings. This raises an internal question regarding manner in which US will signify its adherence to results of this conference. introduced and supported, I recommend that I be authorized to agree to a final act organized as follows:

1. Final act to open with a conference recommendation reading "the Paris Conference on Reparation recommends that the Governments represented at the Conference conclude the agreement on reparation from Germany, on the establishment of an inter-Allied reparation agency and on the restitution of monetary gold, which is set forth below".

2. Preamble of Agreement referred to reads:

"The Governments of blank, in order to implement the protocol on German reparation between the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, signed at Potsdam on Aug 1, 1945,⁴³ in order to obtain an equitable division among themselves of the total assets available to them as reparation from Germany (hereinafter referred to as German reparation), and to settle an equitable procedure for the restitution of monetary gold, in order to establish an inter-Allied reparation agency, have agreed as follows:"

3. Under the heading of "Reparation From Germany" the agreement would contain material on division of shares and the various unanimously agreed papers along lines my Repmem instructions, 44 as amended and modified with Dept approval.

4. IARA charter and gold pot sections respectively would follow.

5. The penultimate section would read: "This agreement shall come into force as soon as it has been signed by Governments collectively entitled to not less than 50 percent of the aggregate of shares in category 'A' (all forms of reparation other than plant removals and ships) of German reparation."

6. Document would be concluded by signature clause reading: "The signature of each contracting Government shall, for the purposes of the present agreement, be deemed to cover its colonies, overseas territories and territories under its protection, or sovereignty, or mandate.

In witness whereof, the undersigned, duly authorized by their respective Governments, have signed the present agreement, prepared in English and French, the two texts being equally authentic, in a single copy, which shall be preserved in the archives of the Government of the French Republic."

I would sign only conference recommendation quoted paragraph 1. After appropriate Washington action, Dept would instruct Ambassador here to sign 6 and formally bind US. I have put this matter to Dept because I believe it had hithertofore been assumed in Dept that my actions here would require no more by way of implementation in US than have the recommendations of various inter-American conferences. Final act now under consideration calls for additional US action, such as that for executive agreements, to bring it into force. Please instruct with greatest urgency. [Angell.]

1248. For Minister Angell, with reference to Paris 229, November 29, 11 a. m., 45 and 253, December 10, midnight to Berlin. 46 I am informed by General Clay that he personally had no objection to I.A.R.A. being given the responsibility for adjudicating disputes between two claimant governments for the same item claimed as restitution. He does not understand, however, how such claims could arise. All definitions of restitution being considered in the Control Council envisage positive identification, prior to their restitution, of items claimed in restitution. Before he will approve delivery, the Zone Commander manifestly must be satisfied with respect to such positive identification. Therefore, if responsibility for delivery has been accepted on the ground that item has been positively identified, later claims would be after the fact and could only create difficulty. It would be an error to allow Missions indiscriminate search for property with a view to establishing identity. The U.S. proposal envisages that the claimant Mission, prior to arrival, would submit list of property and assumed location in Germany. The arrangement for determination of ownership based on positive identification must enable prompt decisions to be made to avoid undue interference with reparations and the reestablishment in Germany of a minimum economy.

Disputes between claimant governments with regard to identification would indicate the inability of these claimants to make positive identification and deliveries would not be made in such instances.

Determination as to removal of the claimed item by force would provide a more likely claim for dispute. Definitions under consideration of the Control Council make removal by force a governing factor in deciding restitution. General Clay believes that here the Zone Commander must take the final decision or else the task administratively will become long drawn out and will interfere consistently with reparations and in execution will create difficulties and friction.

⁴⁵ See telegram 6864, November 29, 11 a.m., from Paris, p. 1430.
⁴⁶ Not printed; in this telegram Mr. Angell had inquired of General Clay whether he understood correctly that the latter desired to have the zonal commander rather than IARA settle disputes between two claimant nations over identifiable restitutable items. He also indicated that the British zone commander preferred to let IARA handle not only claims involving conflict between two governments but also those between a government and a zone commander. Mr. Angell felt that only the former type should be dealt with by IARA. (USPolAd file)

General Clay and I both would be glad to have from your group a Liaison Officer, M. Dearborn or anybody else appointed by you being entirely satisfactory.

He would also be delighted at the earliest opportunity to have a visit from you in Berlin.

7138. From Angell No. 147.

A. At meeting of heads of delegations, December 12, French, Yugoslav, and Czech delegates submitted following alternative text of recommendation on non-repatriable persons:

"The Paris Conference on Reparations recognizes that there are a large number of persons who have suffered heavily at the hands of the Nazis, who now stand in dire need of aid to promote their rehabilitation, but who will be unable to claim the assistance of any government receiving reparation from Germany.

"The Conference, therefore, recommends:

"1. That a share of reparation of 25 million dollars be allocated for the rehabilitation and resettlement of non-repatriable victims of German action or the action of other Fascist governments.

- "2. That the share so allocated be satisfied out of all of the non-monetary gold found in Germany and a portion of the proceeds of German assets in neutral countries which are available for reparation; that in addition there be made available for this purpose funds deposited in neutral countries by refugees from various European countries, or possible other Nazi victims, who have since died and left no heirs, and which funds are now blocked by the governments of those neutral countries.
- "3. That the classes of persons eligible for aid under this scheme should include:
 - "(a) Needy refugees from Nazi Germany and Austria and from any other country under Fascist rule who cannot be returned to their countries within a reasonable time because of reigning conditions

"(b) Needy German and Austrian nationals now resident in Germany and Austria who were victims of Nazi persecution and who do not want to remain in Germany or Austria, and who will leave those countries within a reasonable time

"(c) Nationals of countries formerly occupied by the Germans who cannot be repatriated or are not in a position to be repatriated within a reasonable time and who were victims of Nazi persecution. In order to concentrate aid on the most needy and deserving refugees and to exclude persons whose loyalty to the United Nations is doubtful, aid shall not be granted to the nationals of a formerly occupied country without prior approval of that country's representative on the Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees.

"4. That the funds made available for these purposes be administered by the Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees.

"5. That the non-monetary gold found in Germany be placed at the disposal of the Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees immediately.

"6. That the funds be used, not for the compensation of individual victims, but to further the rehabilitation or resettlement of persons in the eligible classes.

- "7. That nothing in these proposals be considered to prejudice the claims which individual refugees may have against a future German government, except to the extent that such refugees have benefited from the funds provided from German non-monetary gold or German assets in neutral countries."
- B. Yugoslav delegate proposed following amendment to paragraph: 3, (c): After the word "Country", add: "who were its nationals at the time of its annexation or occupation by Germany or its entry into war,"
- C. Waley proposed that after the preamble the text should readroughly as follows:

"The Conference, therefore, recommends that the Governments of the United States, France, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, in consultation with the Inter-Governmental Committee urgently frame a practical scheme, to be submitted for the approval of the governments here represented, along the following lines:"

There would then follow the text of the proposal set out under section A, above.

D. I made the following points in discussion:

1. That it is not practicable to make a large increase in the number of persons eligible without an increase in the funds allocated.

2. That it is doubtful whether the refugee funds blocked in neutral countries and belonging to deceased persons without heirs can, in fact, be secured for the funds because of legal difficulties.

- 3. That I could not agree without further instruction that aid should not be granted to nationals of formerly occupied country without prior approval of that country.
- E. The new text was referred to a committee composed of US, UK, France, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia. From today's discussion, it appears highly probable that Conference will accept any text which can be agreed in this committee.
 - F. I submit following recommendations:
- 1. That victims of Fascist states other than Germany be excluded from scheme unless fund is raised to dollars 40 million out of potentially liquid assets.

- 2. That frozen funds of refugees without heirs be dropped from the text because of reason given in section D 2, above. I believe also that Jewish community would have legitimate objection to allocation of these funds for general use of non-German refugees, even if they could be secured.
- 3. That we accept veto of interested government with respect to aid for refugees from formerly occupied countries. Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, acting for themselves and also for Poland and USSR, will accept persons in Class 3 (c) of the text only subject to such veto. It should be remembered also that Polish Jews are the only substantial class of persons deserving aid and subject to the veto. Veto may be used against them. In that case, however, fund would be concentrated on German and Austrian victims now residing inside and outside Germany and Austria. Such concentration would make possible greater allocation of other private and public funds for Polish Jewish refugees.

4. That we accept the Inter-Governmental Committee as Administering Agency.

5. That we accept Waley's proposed amendment if necessary in order to secure British support for scheme. I consider that, if text provides allocation of funds and covers other questions now included, reference of scheme for implementation to a committee of countries in consultation with Inter-Governmental Committee will not unduly delay action and will produce more practicable scheme than we can frame in hurried atmosphere of Conference.

6. No further action possible until arrival of your instructions covering points above. Since Conference will turn tomorrow to consideration of shares and final act, utmost speed in reply is essential.

7140. From Angell No. 143. Following "Proposed Recommendation on General Principles for Allocations of Plant and Equipment by the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency" was adopted at December 10th meeting.

["]The Paris Conference on Reparation recommends:

1. That claimants shall endeavor to submit comprehensive programs of requests for related groups of items, rather than submitting requests for isolated items or small groups of items. The work of the Secretariat will be more effective, the more comprehensive the programs which claimant Govts submit to it.

2. That in the allocation by IARA of items (other than ships) declared available for reparation, the following general principles shall serve as guides.

A. Any item or related group of items in which a claimant country has a substantial pre-war financial interest shall be allocated to that country if it so desires. Where two or more claimants have such substantial interests in a particular item or group of items, the criteria stated below shall guide the allocation.

B. If the allocation between competing claimants is not determined by paragraph A attention shall be given, among other relevant factors, to the following considerations:

I. The urgency of each claimant's needs for the item or items for rehabilitation or reconstruction purposes, and for the general revitalization of the claimant's economic life;

II. The extent to which the item or items would replace property which was destroyed, damaged or looted in the war, or which requires replacement because of [excessive] wear in war production, and which is important to the claimant's economy;

III. The relation of the item or items to the general pattern of the claimant's pre-war economic life and to programs for its post-war economic adjustment or development;

IV. The requirements of countries whose reparation shares are small but which are in need of certain specific items or categories of items.

C. In making allocations a reasonable balance shall be maintained among the rates at which the reparation shares of the several are satisfied, subject to such temporary exceptions as are justified by the considerations under paragraph (B) (I) above."

This document was submitted by the United States Delegation. Item 2–B–IV was not initially included. Australian, New Zealand and Indian delegates objected to 2–B–I and II and stated that if these provisions were rigidly applied, non-European countries with small reparation shares might secure practically nothing desired in A category. New Zealand delegates argued that non-European nations with small shares were less able to protect their interests than countries near Germany; also that non-European nations could use only certain particular items of removals and therefore should be given priority. The Conference delegates recognized some validity in these arguments and agreed to insertion of 2–B–IV.

Regret that due to inadvertence this document was not forwarded to the Dept for comment before final consideration and approval by the Conference. Criteria under consideration were mentioned in my telegram from Angell 93, November 29, but Dept's reply (urtel 5778, December 11) was not received until late on December 12.47

Members of the US Delegation feel strongly that IARA needs some guidance on criteria to be followed in making allocations. I wished particularly to secure general acceptance of item 2-A, and to induce constructive thinking in regard to requests for allocations before IARA became active. Unreasonable requests for removals may now have been forestalled by discussion of criteria in the Conference.

I consider, and Phelps fully concurs, that the US position is amply protected by the fact that 12 percent was retained in category A even though Repmem 1 ⁴⁹ suggested only 10 percent and an even smaller-percentage will probably be needed; that priority will be obtained on removals in which the US had a substantial pre-war property interest; and that a reasonable balance must be maintained among the rates at which the reparations shares of the several claimants are satisfied (item 2-C). Furthermore, these specialized or unique items which are most likely to be desired by the US will probably not be those items for which a request can reasonably be justified. [Angell.]

Item 2. With respect to restitution question, French member said he had not yet received his new instructions but he understood they were on the way. Soviet delegation presented their promised new draft definition ⁴⁹ which was a combination of their original definition and Clay's compromise.⁵⁰ Russians suggested amendment of paragraph 2 of Clay's compromise would read as follows:

"Restitution will be limited in the first instance to identifiable goods which existed at the time of occupation of the country and which were taken out of the country by the enemy through use of force. Also included under measures of restitution are other identifiable goods produced during the occupation and which were acquired by the enemy by an act of force. As regards all other articles taken away, the question will be discussed in each particular case by the Control Council which will take account of the compatibility of restitution with the satisfaction of reparations and the minimum economy to be left Germany."

Russians suggested no change be made in paragraph 3 of their original proposal reading substantially as follows:

"In the case of property destroyed or worn out by the enemy, the right of replacement by identical or comparable property is restricted to objects of a unique character such as works of art, et cetera (the question of gold and precious metals being left out of discussions)."

General Clay insisted that in the light of the new suggested paragraph 2, the words "claims for replacement" be substituted for "right of replacement" above.

Consideration of the question was deferred to Coordinating Committee's next meeting.⁵¹

Item 3. Coordinating Committee adopted plan for the immediate interim restitution of identifiable works of art and other cultural objects taken by the Germans from liberated territories. Plan confirms steps which have already been taken by the American authorities to return such objects.⁵²

Part III. Restitution of monetary gold. Entry into force. Signatures, to cover colonies, et cetera.

Annexes

I. Interpretative recommendations

II. Unanimous resolutions by the Conference

1. On German external assets in the neutral countries.

2. On gold transfers to the neutral countries.

III. Resolutions by certain delegations

1. Resolution on the subject of restitution

1a. Further resolution on restitution.

- 2. Resolution on reparation from existing stocks and current production.
- 3. Resolution on the subject of the property in Germany of a United Nation or its nationals.
- 4. Resolution on captured war material.

Part I

- 1. Shares in reparation.
- A. German reparation shall be divided into the following categories: Category A, which shall include all forms of German reparation except those listed in Category B.

Category B, which shall include industrial and other capital equipment removed from Germany, and ships.

- B. Each signatory Govt shall be entitled to the percentage share of the total value of Category A and the percentage share of the total value of Category B set out for that Govt in the attached table of shares.
- C. Subject to the provisions of paragraph D, each signatory Govt shall be entitled to receive its share of ships determined in accordance with section 4 below, provided that its receipts of ships do not exceed in value its share in Category B as a whole; and each signatory Govt shall also be entitled to its Category A percentage share in German assets in countries which remained neutral in the war against Germany. The distribution among the signatory Govts of forms of German reparation other than ships and German assets in countries which remained neutral in the war against Germany shall be guided by the principles set forth in section 3 below.
- D. If a signatory Govt receives more than its percentage share of certain types of assets in either Category A or Category B, its receipts of other types of assets in that category shall be reduced so as to ensure that it shall not receive more than its share in that category as a whole.
- E. No signatory Govt shall receive more than its percentage share of either Category A or Category B as a whole by surrendering any part of its percentage share of the other category, except that with respect to German assets within its own jurisdiction, any signatory Govt shall be permitted to charge any excess of such assets over its

A category percentage share of total German assets in United Nations either to its receipts in Category A or to its receipts in Category B.

- F. The Inter-Allied Reparation Agency, to be established in accordance with Part II of this agreement, shall charge the reparation account of each signatory Govt for the German assets within that Govt's jurisdiction over a period of five years. The charges at the date of the entry into force of this agreement shall be not less than 20% of the net value of such assets (as defined in section 5 below) as then estimated, at the beginning of the second year thereafter not less than 25% of the balance as then estimated, at the beginning of the third year not less than 33½% of the balance as then estimated, at the beginning of the fourth year not less than 50% of the balance as then estimated, at the beginning of the fifth year not less than 90% of the balance as then estimated, and at the end of the fifth year the entire remainder.
- G. The following exceptions to paragraphs D and E above shall apply in the case of a signatory Govt whose share in Category B is less than its share in Category A:

(I) Receipts of ships by such Government shall not reduce its percentage share in other types of assets in Category B except to the extent that such receipts exceed the value obtained when that Govt's Category A percentage is applied to the total value of ships.

(II) Any excess of German assets within the jurisdiction of such Government over its Category A percentage share of German assets in the United Nations shall be charged first to the additional share in Category B to which that Govt would be entitled if its share in Category B were determined by applying its Category A percentage to the forms of German reparation in Category B.

H. If any signatory Govt renounces its share or part of its shares in German reparation as set out in the attached table of shares, or withdraws from the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency at a time when all or part of its shares in German reparation remain unsatisfied, the shares or part thereof thus renounced or remaining shall be distributed ratably among the other signatory Governments.

At second meeting today Canada surrendered ratable share received from United States renunciation of B quota and surrendered in addition same proportion of B quota as we surrendered. Canadian B quota of 4.7 in above table of shares thus reduced to 1.5 and placed at disposition of three inviting powers.

Only adverse reactions to shares received so far are from Egyptian and Danish delegates, whose complaints we are not disposed to view seriously, and from Belgian delegate. Means are being explored to give Belgian satisfaction. Will keep Dept advised. [Angell.]

7161. From Angell No. 148. Will require greater flexibility in negotiation of fund for non-repatriables than is clearly requested in mytel from Angell No. 147.56 French, Czech and Yugoslav delegates may insist on inclusion of refugees from Fascist countries other than Germany. This would increase eligibles by 200,000 Spanish refugees in France according to our information. At same time it may be impossible to increase fund from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 as suggested in mytel from Angell No. 147. What would be lowest sum acceptable assuming that Spanish refugees must be covered? We are not in position to judge how many Spanish refugees would, in fact, be deemed to require aid.

On further reflection, I consider acceptance of veto by interested governments of aid for nationals of formerly occupied countries a difficult matter. Department will be conscious of possibility that acceptance of such veto may prejudice US position with respect to UNRRA aid for displaced persons from eastern European countries. While acceptance of veto is desirable in narrow context of problem of aiding resettlement of non-repatriable victims, a decision on this point clearly involves wider aspects of US policy.

If veto by interested government with respect to aid for nationals of formerly occupied countries is unacceptable to Department, it may be possible to restrict scheme to German and Austrian victims both inside and outside Germany. Would such restriction be acceptable? What would be lowest sum acceptable in that event? What would be minimum sum if Spanish refugees are covered?

Saturday December 15 is likely to be last opportunity to secure conference action on this proposal. We are arranging teletype conversation with Washington for Friday evening December 14 Paris time. "1. WSA cannot afford risk of failing to retain Europa through arbitration procedure in event of claims being advanced by other nations. Accordingly they consider informal agreement on this point with Brit, French, Dutch and Norwegians essential.

"2. In cases where the US Govt believes that American citizens may have a legal or equitable interest in a vessel WSA states it should be agreed that such vessel will be allocated to the US share and similar treatment accorded to other nations. Similar arrangement reached in Tripartite negotiations on merchant ship division.

"3. Allocation will be in accordance with relative gross global tonnage losses calculated either on gross tonnage or d.w.t. basis and not in accordance with losses by category. Assume Brit not requiring US commitment that losses in particular categories will be considered in IARA allocation. Losses should be calculated on ownership basis, not on flag basis, for an agreed period and with provision for reconciliation of data on losses. For purposes of division and calculating

"4. Valuation of Tripartite Commission will be accepted with addition of 15 percent.

"5. All ships allocated by Tripartite Commission to UK and US will be put into IARA irrespective of fact whether or not they were captured or acquired through capitulation.

6. Value of ships allocated will be charged against plant and equipment quota.

"Very tentative WSA calculations indicate UK and US shares of global ship losses 45.3 and 20.7 percent respectively on gross tonnage basis or 45.5 and 21.3 percent respectively on D.W.T. basis. WSA calculations not confined to ship losses arising out of European war. Believe agreed figures on ship losses should be worked out by subcommittee of IARA but WSA considers any attempt to attribute ship losses to European as distinct from Far Eastern war impossible and undesirable. However in this connection consideration might be given to terminating losses on VE-day for purposes of this division."

Washington, December 14, 1945—8 p. m.

5875. For Angell No. 86. Dept has heretofore interpreted Soviet gold renunciation at Potsdam ⁶¹ as covering all gold found by Allied forces in Greater Germany. Question whether Hungarian gold should be in pot has therefore been regarded one for settlement without reference to Soviet Govt. Upon reexamination of question (Reurtel 7026 Dec 6 from Angell No. 123) whether Soviet renunciation in fact covers gold found in Austria, Dept feels that Soviets are in position to advance strong argument re their continued interest in Hungarian gold. Context of statement re Soviet renunciation of claims to gold is reparations section of Potsdam Protocol throughout which term "Germany" can have relevance only to Germany of pre-1938 borders.

Dept feels it advisable therefore to avoid discussion at Paris whether Potsdam covers gold found in Austria and to adopt suggestion that Hungarian gold be reserved in toto for the present and that, if future developments permit, portion of Hungarian gold could later be distributed among pot participants. If participants desire, conference recommendation on monetary gold could include specific reservation by pot participants to share in any future distribution of Hungarian gold that may be made available for this purpose. Apart from question whether Soviets renounced claims to gold uncovered in Austria, Dept appreciates that Hungarian gold was removed to Austria by officials of former Hungarian Govt and of Hungarian National Bank and taken into custody by U.S. forces, not actually looted by Germany.

Since further debate on possible Soviet interest in gold found in Austria should be avoided, it would be preferable also to omit in conference recommendation textual reference to gold found in Austria. Dept appreciates such reference was inserted at its suggestion (Deptel 5534, Nov 27, for Angell, No. 54) made largely with an eye to inclusion of Hungarian gold and that you may find it difficult now to propose omission of this reference. However, deletion may be proposed on ground that such reference unnecessary if Hungarian gold not initially included in pot. Dept also aware that gold other than Hungarian was found in Austria by U.S. forces, although it has no info re value of such finds. However, Dept feels that no further differentiation should be made of gold now at Frankfort. Reservation of Hungarian gold may avoid discussion of this point.

Argument regarding identifiability Ital gold should be avoided since identifiability not relevant to gold pot operation and info available to Dept on gold shipped by Reichsbank to Merkers and transmitted to you by air pouch indicates that Italian gold may constitute largest portion of Merkers gold identifiable.

5884. For Angell No. 75. Dept agrees addition section to statement set forth urtel 75,66 as outlined urtel 118 (6996 of Dec 5) with following changes:

- a) Phrase "those persons entitled to its protection" should be qualified by addition words "at the time the loss occurred". This qualification required to prevent apparent satisfaction claims of persons who have suffered losses as Germans and are now US citizens. It may be noted that reparation removal of property of persons recently become US citizens would be regarded as satisfied by Germany under this formula, despite fact no claim has been made in Annex A for such losses. This acceptable to Dept.
- b) Alter phrases "against Germany, ACC and Fr, UK, US" to "against Germany, ACC and the powers occupying Germany" and "incidence of industrial removals policy in western zones of Germany" to delete words "western zones of". Potsdam protocol provides that reparation removals from western zones for certain countries are in satisfaction reparation claims against Germany, not simply against three western zones. Omission of USSR from occupying powers listed and eastern zone from relevant portion of Germany appears to leave open question of settlement of claims against USSR for removals of foreign property from eastern zone. If this is intended, Dept disapproves.

Basic principle underlying consideration of claims submissions by all govts is that losses arising out of Japanese war are not to be taken into account by Paris Conference in allocating reparation from Germany. Principle suggested by WSA would reopen entire question of greater share which Australia, New Zealand, India, United States and other countries should receive in German reparation by reason of great contribution to Japanese war. 7216. From Angell No. 161. French and Yugoslavian Delegations each submitting a memorandum to the Conference with proposals on treatment of United Nations' property interests in German industry. These proposals are in part similar to those of Belgian and Netherlands memorandum (mytel from Angell No. 102, December 1 ⁷⁸). After lengthy discussions of these three memoranda, agreement was reached by a number of interested Delegations (mytel No. 155, December 14 ⁷⁹). The following should be noted in reference to the agreed draft:

- 1. It was adhered to by all United Nations with substantial property interests in Germany other than the United States and United Kingdom. Both Waley and I took the position that the various questions involved must be considered on a quadripartite basis in ACR (Allied Commission on Reparations). (Mytel from Angell No. 112, December 6.80)
- 2. It was recognized that plants in which United Nations have a property interest could be used for reparation purposes when necessary for reasons of security.
- 3. It was suggested that property in which a United Nation has a substantial interest (over 48%) should, insofar as possible, be excluded from removals.
- 4. If a plant in which a United Nation has a property interest is removed it was stated that equitable compensation should be granted to United Nation concerned as a charge on the German economy.

The provisions of this memorandum leave entirely unsolved the question as to whether a United Nation property interest in a plant removed from Germany shall be maintained, either through a failure to charge the amount of the property interest to the reparations account of the nation which receives the plant, if it is allocated to the nation which has the property interest, or through some form of compensation if the plant is allocated to another nation. Interpretations of this memorandum, particularly item 5, vary greatly.

Markedly dissimilar positions taken by the Yugoslavs and the Belgo-Dutch were in some manner compromised in this memorandum which was prepared in the Drafting Committee on which the United States and the United Kingdom, for obvious reasons, were not represented. This memorandum received very little discussion in meetings of the heads of delegations and Item 5 was not clarified. In conversation with members of the Belgian Delegation it appears that, in their understanding, a charge against the Belgian reparations share will not be made, if a plant in which Belgium has a substantial property interest is removed and allocated by IARA (Inter-Allied Reparation Agency) to Belgium. The meaning of the words "as a charge on the German economy" is obviously subject to widely different interpretations.

The question of a charge to reparation share must finally be resolved either by ACR or by IARA. Decision on this point has only been postponed. Nevertheless some progress was made through this memorandum which, in most respects, is not in conflict with the policy stated in Repmem 15.^{$1}}

There will be no reference to this question in the final act proper. The agreed memorandum will be included in Annex III of the Final Act, and, like restitution, will be put in the form of a request to the United States and the United Kingdom to bring the views expressed to the attention of their appropriate authorities. Following revised US text provisionally adopted by Conference subject to drafting changes and consideration of Czech proposal to add new provision (3) relating to United Nations held credits in form of currency and bonds issued by Germany and not reflected in occupation costs or other reparation claims.

Settlement of wartime claims against Germany.

(A). That, without prejudice to the determination at the proper time of the forms, duration or total amount of reparation to be made by Germany, and without prejudice to the right which each signatory government may have with respect to the final settlement of German reparations, the signatory governments agree as between each other that their respective shares of reparation, as determined by the present agreement, shall be regarded by each of them as covering all its claims and those of its nationals against the former German Govt and its agencies for all claims which are not otherwise specifically provided for, of a governmental or private nature against Germany arising out of the war, including cost of German occupation, credits acquired during occupation on clearing accounts and claims against the Reichskreditkassen; provided that the reparation settlement shall not be considered as affecting (1) the obligation of the appropriate authorities in Germany to secure at a future date the discharge of pecuniary claims against Germany and German nationals arising out of contracts and other obligations entered into, and rights acquired, before the existence of a state of war between Germany and the government concerned or before the occupation of the country concerned by Germany, whichever was earlier, and (2) the claims of social insurance agencies of the signatory governments against the social insurance agencies of the former German Government.

I propose to make following statement to Conference concerning my understanding of this text.

"In order to avoid possible misunderstanding at a future time concerning the meaning of paragraph A of Section 2, on the settlement of wartime claims against Germany, I should like to state for the minutes my understanding as to its meaning, and I would appreciate being informed whether my colleagues confirm this understanding.

"The primary purpose of paragraph A, insofar as it relates to wartime claims, is to record the agreement between the signatory governments that all claims, of whatever nature, by a govt for reparation from Germany are, in effect, consolidated into a single claim which has been considered at this Conference, and furthermore that the German reparation which is made available to each govt in accordance with its agreed quota shall be the sole source of satisfaction of its consolidated reparation claim against Germany. If this were not the intention of paragraph A, a legion of reparation claims by individual govts would continue to exist and be presented for satisfaction outside the framework of the reparation program envisaged under the Potsdam Agreement. Under such circumstances, the reparation quotas we have been discussing would be meaningless because the quotas would have no relative significance whatever, and the work of the Paris Conference would be valueless.

"At the same time, certain of the govts not represented on the Allied Control Council have contended that, inasmuch as it is the Control Council, under the direction of the four occupying powers which in practice determines the forms, duration and total amount of German reparation, they are not prepared to renounce their reparation claims against Germany in advance of the actual receipt of their respective shares in the total amount of reparation to be made by Germany. To meet this contention, which I believe is a just one, paragraph A provides that the acceptance of the reparation quotas by the various govts represented at the Conference shall be without prejudice to the rights which the signatory govts may have with respect to the final settlement of German reparations.

"Under this paragraph, therefore, each signatory government is entitled to receive, in satisfaction of all its reparation claims against Germany, its quota, and only its quota, in the total of German reparation available for allocation among the signatory governments collectively. But the acceptance by a government of its quota does not prejudice the right it may have with respect to the final settlement of the reparation to be made available by Germany."

French, Belgian, Dutch, Egyptian and other delegates supported with exceptional vigor and heat independent text submitted to Conference by Yugo delegate which expressly reserved right of each government to present claim against future German Government for unsatisfied balance of its total reparation claim. This I stated was unacceptable. Above revised US text adopted only after strenuous debate. Yugo, Belgian and Dutch delegates declined to accept wording such as "without prejudice to right each government may have with respect to final determination (or settlement) of forms, duration, or total amount of German reparation." They insisted on right of participation along with ACC in determination of forms, duration or total amount of reparation or of political participation in final reparation settlement. Former regarded by me as unacceptable. Latter is implied in phrasing adopted.

Believe text acceptable on basis of principles set forth in above statement which I shall make to Conference. Acceptance of principle of single source of reparation very important and it is certain that, with possible exception of UK, delegates will not renounce rights with respect to final reparation settlement. The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, December 20, 1945—2 p. m. [Received December 21—10:16 a. m.]

1299. A Soviet representative on the Reparations Deliveries and Restitution Directorate at its meeting on 6 December, stated that the Soviet Delegation was interested to know what categories of goods the Allies will wish to receive as reciprocal deliveries from the USSR for the 15 percent of industrial plant and equipment made available to the USSR-Poland as reparation deliveries from the Western Zones. Although the US representative expressed the opinion that this question should be raised in the Economic Directorate, the matter is left open and further discussion is contemplated at future meetings of the R. D. and R. Directorate.

It has been noted from Agwar message No. W-77595, 22 [20] October that the United States expects to claim substantial portion of reciprocal deliveries to meet import requirements in Germany and Austria as well as the other supply commitments of the US, and it is assumed that this has been under discussion at the Paris Reparation Conference.

Some indication as to types of materials desired will be given in the R. D. and R. Directorate. Selections will be made from those listed in the Potsdam Protocol and food products will be emphasized. All discussion and presentations will assume as unquestioned that deliveries will come from outside the boundaries of Germany as administered by the Control Council. I should appreciate receiving urgently any specific recommendations which the Department may have as regards materials to be requested as reciprocal deliveries, and also any suggestions which Minister Angell may have as a result of the discussions at Paris. In recommending priority for reciprocal deliveries, it would be especially useful to know what proportion of the reciprocal deliveries is likely to be included in the US reparation share.

If any substantial proportion of reciprocal deliveries are in the form of raw materials which are used to produce commodities for consumption in all four zones in Germany, the question of allocation against reparation shares would appear to be a complex one. Question is raised whether or not it would be acceptable under US policy to have materials allotted against our reparation share which would be used in this manner without provision of some offset against other western occupying nations. To the extent that reciprocal deliveries are used in this manner, it also appears that the Soviets will benefit inasmuch as there seems to be no way of charging amount against her reparation account. If the materials were priced and charged as approved imports, this would seem to nullify their character as reciprocal deliveries and place them in the same category as imports provided by other occupying nations, i.e. wheat shipments now being made by the US. Inasmuch as IARA (Inter-American Reparations Agency) will allot reciprocal deliveries, I should like to know also to what extent it is considered desirable that it participate in the indication of priority materials and the arrangements for effecting deliveries, unless this point is covered in the IARA charter which has not yet been received here.

Sent to Department as 1299, repeated to Paris for Angell as 179.

1301. Further to my 1078 of November 23.85 Restitution Missions from France and Belgium have now arrived at OMG (US zone) and are actively engaged in identification and removal of looted materials.

 $^{^{88}}$ Not printed; in this telegram Mr. Murphy reported that only Poland had responded to the Department's circular note of September 20 by submitting a list of looted property which it desired restituted (740.00119 EW/11-2345).

More than 100 fine blooded race horses have been returned to France from Bavaria and some special machinery needed for processing rubber products has been returned to Belgium. Two thousand tons of various industrial and raw materials have been shipped from Bremen to the Netherlands and approximately 10,000 tons have been located and are awaiting transportation from that port.

Invitations to send Missions have been issued to Poland, Norway and Luxembourg since my previous telegram. The head of the Czech Restitution Mission is now en route from Praha to Frankfurt.

The procedures and general arrangements appear to be functioning smoothly and the Missions which have arrived have expressed their satisfaction as regards assistance which they are given. It is to be expected, however, that the transportation of materials will become increasingly difficult throughout the winter months, especially as regards Czech and Polish properties. Shortages of rolling stock and coal will make rail transport difficult except for the most urgently needed materials. Difficulties are already being encountered because of winter weather. Visits of Mission to identify and take charge of properties are hampered by snow on roads and premises on which property is located, especially plants which are not in operation and which contain looted machines and equipment.

With reference to my 1079 of November 23,86 no replies have been received from our Missions located at Paris, Luxembourg and Athens nor have I received any lists of property for the three countries to which these Missions are accredited. (Lists have been received as indicated in my 1078.) Copenhagen and Moscow reported on 26 November that no lists of property had been submitted. Lists have been received from Brussels, Praha, Belgrade and Oslo. The Dept should note that once the Restitution Missions arrive at Frankfurt. subsequent lists are being submitted through these Missions directly from the govts concerned. Unless the Dept considers it desirable, I do not plan to make any representations as regards this procedure inasmuch as the handling of claims is facilitated thereby.87 With reference to Luxembourg and France, no additional inquiries regarding lists are being made. As regards Greece, however, our 1079 has been repeated via the Dept in addition to regular servicing direct to Athens. If Dept has information on Greek lists, we would appreciate being advised. This telegram being repeated to Vienna for AusPolAd's 88 information. I suggest that similar communications between Vienna and the Dept be repeated here for my information.

This connection, recently issued statement re implementation Potsdam formula ⁹⁰ shd be significant. Dept recognizes there may be verbal difficulties re jurisdiction ACR and ACC but feels strongly such diffs as may appear on paper are in fact being reconciled even now, and will be reconciled entirely when you discuss with Gen. Clay. Essential fact is that members your staff—Abramovitz, ⁹¹ Ozer, ⁹² Dietrich, ⁹³ et al.—will be utilized by OMGUS in course of preparation of removals plan. Feb 1946 deadline in particular makes clear such competent tech staff as you have will be relied on heavily, and there will be no substantive question of jurisdiction which will trouble you.

Re your specific questions Dept has not completely abandoned position re review ACC removal plan, but feels combined operations on this plan along lines above given will in substance take care of review questions, and if 4-power agreement is obtained in Control Council, 4-power ratification by govts rather than ACR will be sufficient. May be more important to provide for review by ACR of points on which ACC agreement cannot be reached. Policy guidance direct to OMGUS can, under present arrangements, go only through regular War Dept channels, but again necessity for utilizing all available and competent personnel and coordination of policy in Dept shd prevent any diffs. 5991. For Angell #111. Questions re gold found in Austria in urtel 7162 Dec 14 (From Angel #150) 94 discussed in Deptel 5875 Dec 14 (For Angell #86). As indicated therein Dept averse to reserving other than Hungarian gold from pot and feels general discussion by Conference of Soviet interest in gold looted by Germany but fortuitously located in Austria should be avoided.

In practice, Hungarian gold may be distinguished from other gold since former not actually looted by Germans. Differentiation solely on this basis would probably be desirable to avoid analogous treatment of other gold merely because it was uncovered in Austria.

You may wish to examine this problem informally with Brit and French before definite position is taken in this matter. Urtels 7026 Dec 6 and 7162 Dec 14 give no indication of French attitude re Hungarian or other gold found in Austria. In view of French interest in pot Dept presumes French most concerned with maximizing amount of pot gold.

[Extract]

Berlin, December 22, 1945—3 p. m. [Received December 22—7 a. m.]

1323. 1. The Coordinating Committee yesterday at its 28th meeting, US member presiding, initiated an important discussion regarding the level of German industry. Since no agreement was reached a special meeting will be called on December 29 to consider the question.

2. Paper which provoked discussion was a report from the Economics Directorate on the level of the German electric power industry. Since it was soon realized that no progress could be made without taking up the level of the German industry and in particular that of heavy industry, the Coordinating Committee immediately entered upon consideration of this subject. Discussion was lead by Sokolovsky and Clay, the latter insisting that an immediate decision was necessary in order to permit the establishment of a reparations program by the set date of February 1. The two points of view of the Russian and US Delegations were expressed essentially as follows:

Russian statement. Sokolovsky pointed out there was no disagreement on the German living standard as envisaged at Potsdam on German agriculture, light industry or method of calculating electric power. Main divergence was on the relation of the latter question to heavy industry, excepting mining. Russian standpoint was that heavy industry should be strictly limited to what is necessary for minimum living standard decided at Potsdam; quantities beyond these needs would constitute war potential. As regards exports for needed imports, these should be covered by the production of German light industry and mining. A capacity of 11,000,000 tons steel would be double of what is needed for peacetime economy and would consume a disproportionate amount of electric power. Soviet Delegation favored the export of German coal, potassium, and zinc, but not the export of German steel or machinery. The capacity suggested by the US would leave Germany with a production in excess of that of other European countries, such as Poland and France.

US statement. In an able presentation of the American case, General Clay pointed out that the German peacetime steel capacity was 25,000,000 tons and that the highest current proposal (British) would take away 15,000,000 tons. US suggested average was 7.8 million tons and with the resultant reduction of over 18,000,000 tons, the German steel industry could hardly be in a position to make war. The US position was based on the knowledge that the US Govt will not continue to finance German food imports much longer, and that for this purpose a German export level was essential. The Soviet view did not take account of the increased density of population in Germany nor of the intention in all events to control the types of steel produced, to limit the size of forges, plate rolling mills, and to prohibit certain kinds of alloy steel essential for war purposes. General Clay pointed to the relatively small divergence between the US and Soviet figures on allowable steel exports, represented respectively by 1,100,000 tons and 600,000 tons. With regard to Sokolovsky's claim that German steel production would exceed the level of other European countries, General Clay emphasized that the delivery of steel mills on reparations account from Germany will increase production in other European countries.

An interchange then took place during which Sokolovsky maintained that Germany would still be capable of making war, to which General Clay replied that it could not be a very big war. With respect to controls, Sokolovsky pointed out the failure of these methods following Versailles, to which General Clay replied that Russian participation in such controls was then lacking. Sokolovsky then said he was willing to make a compromise along the following lines: The Economics Directorate would be instructed to work out a German level of industry taking into account the average level of production and consumption in central Europe. After an overall balance had been established, production of certain branches of German industry could be increased to cover exports. At the same time the capacity of all branches of heavy industry, excluding mining, should not exceed the average European level and should in no event be allowed to constitute a war potential. General Clay regarded this formula as an extension of the Potsdam principles which he could not discuss and he said he was primarily interested in figures.

British statement was limited to reference to their figure of 10.5 million tons and to the remark that their position had been fully explained in the Economics Directorate. French Delegation, whose figure of 7,000,000 tons was very close to US proposal of 7.8 million tons, stated it would like an opportunity to consider the question further before continuing the debate. (In informal conversation later, members of the French Delegation claimed the conclusions of the discussion reinforced the French position for the internationalization of the Ruhr and Rhineland heavy industry.)

General Clay stated the American Delegation would not accept responsibility for failing to reach fundamental decisions necessary to meet the deadline of February 1 for a reparations program, and at his suggestion a special meeting of the Coordinating Committee was called for December 29.95

[Murphy]

Mr. Murphy summarized the content of this cable in his telegram 109 to Moscow, suggesting also that informal discussions of the level of industry question by the Foreign Ministers might be helpful in arriving at a compromise solution. He concluded by saying: "I am convinced that the United States and French position on steel tonnage is sound and also that the United States, French and British position on electric power is also justified, especially when one considers the question of payment for United States food imports into Germany and the other considerations with which you are familiar. I have urged that Allied decision and unity in this field are far more important than the figures themselves."

Mr. Murphy's telegram, however, arrived in Moscow after the departure of Secretary Byrnes' party, according to telegram 4309, December 28, 7 p. m., from Moscow. (740.00119 Control (Germany)/12-2845)

The raising of this question at a later date would not be regarded by the French Govt as affecting either the general reparation settlement or the informal understanding in (1) above.

In latter part of Conference, Yugoslav delegate worked on extremely amiable terms with us on most matters, was very conciliatory and helpful, and at critical point of final quota discussion made an important address to Conference which may well have prevented wrecking of Conference by Belgian delegate's disruptive speech (see mytel from Angell No. 177 97). Quotas proposed for Egypt although small are believed more than just in relation to war effort and war damage of other countries as judged by their submissions of statistical data and other available evidence. At last moment before end of Reparations Conference Greek delegate sent President of Conference letter saying he could not sign Final Act of Conference because proposed Greek reparation quotas were unjust, failed to recognize adequately Greek suffering from and contribution to war and were in general unacceptable. This action taken without warning was both discourteous and unwarranted by any information provided by Greeks themselves here in relation to data provided by other countries. Refusal to sign produced very bad impression on Conference since up to that point Greek delegate had given impression he would sign and since agreement of other countries except Egypt on quotas had been achieved after long and difficult discussions.

Shares as proposed by US, UK and France presented to Conference on December 13 (my telegram from Angell No. 152 98) but discussion withheld until December 18 when all delegates other than those of the inviting governments, New Zealand, Canada and South Africa discussed their shares. Serious objections were stated by delegates of Belgium, Albania, Luxembourg and Egypt. Mild protests were made by delegates of Denmark, Greece, Netherlands, Yugoslavia and other countries. Gutt ⁹⁹ spoke for Belgium and states that share did not adequately represent Belgium's contribution to the war effort and that it was politically unacceptable to Belgian Parliament as it was too low in relation to shares of Netherlands and France. He protested strongly against entire lack of information on the procedure used for the setting of shares; and demanded, as a minimum a one percent increase in B category. Albania, Egypt and Luxembourg delegates stated that their objections were based upon a lack of real appreciation of their war efforts and that their quotas were only symbolic. The meeting adjourned with a comment by Rueff that the remarks of the various delegates would be taken into consideration in the apportionment of the 3.2% Canadian renunciation.

At subsequent meeting on December 19 the adjusted shares were presented after distribution of Canadian renunciation and a renunciation of 0.8% by South Africa. The distribution was made largely on a proportionate basis. (This distribution not sent to the Department.) The Belgian share was increased only 0.4% in B category as a greater increase not considered justifiable. No changes were made in the A category. At this meeting Gutt was not only obdurate but most unreasonable. His tactics were greatly resented by many of the delegates present. His opposition to the contemplated share distribution, together with support by Albania, Egypt and Luxembourg threatened completely to disrupt the Conference. Most reasonable and effective comments by Yugoslav delegate, likewise by Netherlands delegate, avoided complete breakdown of Conference.

The meeting was adjourned temporarily and delegates of inviting powers and of Yugoslavia met privately with those of Belgium, Luxembourg, Albania, Egypt and Greece. Gutt still remained obdurate and finally US, UK and France each reduced its share in category B by 0.15% so that Belgian share could be increased in total by 0.50% of which 0.10% was released to Luxembourg as promised in Gutt's previous address to Conference. Additional 0.05% was released by US, UK, and France to make possible increase of Greek share in total by 0.25%. Some adjustment was likewise made in shares of other countries through voluntary reductions in order to provide small increases in shares of those countries which were most dissatisfied. Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia both contributed to an increase in the Albanian share. Final shares indicated in my telegram from Angell 172, December 22.1 [Angell.]

7352. From Angell No. 184. Purpose of this telegram to explain final text on shipping adopted by Paris Conference, which will be cabled to you in Final Act in day or two. It was not possible in short time available to reach agreement on all points in urtel for Angell No. 102, Dec 14,² in part because of lack of instructions for other delegates. Our objective was therefore to settle in Final Act as many problems as could be agreed upon and not to prejudge settlement of other problems by special IARA Shipping Committee. Task made difficult by fact that certain WSA conditions urtel No. 102 would have required substantial revision of shipping provisions tentatively adopted 2 weeks before by Paris Conference subject to US reservation concerning priority in choice of ships held by it.

Was unable to obtain agreement to inclusion of following additional provisions in ship section of text finally adopted:

"(A) Any German merchant ship in which a signatory govt and its nationals have a substantial legal or equitable interest shall be allocated to such govt, if it so desires; (B) If the allocation between competing claimants is not determined by paragraph (A), account shall be taken of the quality and character of the tonnage lost and of the special needs of the various claimant countries."

Norwegian objected to paragraph (A) on ground that it would not favor Norway obtaining whaler it desires and that financial interest criterion should be subordinated to paragraph (B) criterion. British would accept paragraph (A) only on condition that they receive whaler units.

Norwegian firmly insisted on criteria in paragraph (B) which Conference had tentatively adopted subject to above noted US reservation. Believe paragraph (B) constitutes an equitable and desirable principle, and indicated personal willingness to support it if subordinate to paragraph (A) criterion. Since US could not accept this paragraph without paragraph (A), however, it was necessary to omit both paragraphs from Final Act and defer settlement of allocation criteria to meeting of IARA Shipping Committee. Norwegian delegate stated for record at final meeting heads of delegations that he would sign Final Act with expectation that IARA Shipping Committee would adopt paragraph (B) criterion of allocation. Urge Dept to work out with WSA acceptable IARA allocation principle which would give fullest possible effect to para (B) criterion consistent with importance attached by Dept & WSA to criterion of legal or equitable interest.

In addition, IARA Shipping Committee will also be required to handle following problems on which agreement could not be reached in Paris Conference in time available:

- 1. Determination of losses on flag or ownership basis. British insist on flag basis, US and Norwegians insist on ownership basis. Norwegians question whether shareholding by nationals of one country in corporation whose ships fly flag of another country should somehow entitle former country to count losses of such ships in its own losses.
- 2. British, Norwegians, Dutch, Yugoslavs, Belgians and French objected strenuously to notion that shipping losses in Far Eastern war should be considered as basis for reparation from Germany and made statements for minutes of Paris Conference to this effect.

British willingness to accept paragraph 5 Deptel for Angell No. 102 only on condition that genuine prizes taken during war are excluded, as not being "allocated by Tripartite Commission" (my teletype conversation December 183), does not appear to be acceptable to WSA (Dept teletype conversation Dec 183). Consequently believe this question has not been definitely decided and must come before IARA Shipping Committee later.

Have already advised Dept concerning Europa (mytel from Angell No. 173 4). [Angell.]

affords Denmark excuse for nonaction. Wassard of Danish Foreign Office should be able to indicate to his Govt the great emphasis placed at Conference on importance of effective elimination of German interests within countries invited to Conference.

- 3. Suggestion in paragraph 2 London's telegram 12570, December 1 to Dept 6 764 to Paris (first seen by Oliver December 19) would have been incompatible with sovereignty issue involved and attitude traditionally adhered to by US, UK and Canada, inter alia, re assets vested by respective APC's.7 In obtaining inclusion of paragraph A of quotation in Final Act US delegation was forced to maneuver between (a) countries which did not wish to see any charge against reparation for German assets in their jurisdiction (Egypt, South Africa, Albania, Denmark); (b) those desiring the charge against reparation to be net of whatever liquidation under local law might consume (Netherlands, Belgium, France, Canada and India); (c) suspicions of Yugoslav delegate that all proposals made by anyone else reflected schemes to avoid charging any part of such assets against reparations: and (d) efforts of British APC (Gregory) to resist deduction of claims of bona fide unsecured creditors from value to be charged against reparation share. If US had not opposed Brit on (d) Canadian would have joined ranks of countries in (a) or (b) and others predisposed to those positions would have stood firm.
- 4. Overall effect of article 8 [6] re German assets in countries represented at Conference is to favor vesting, as distinguished from mere sequestration. Moreover, article 8 [6] establishes standards of conduct which should be useful points of reference for Safehaven operations as well as for IARA.

7386. From Angell No. 192. Part III of Final Act, transmitted by No. 183, December 26 from Angell, and minutes of Conference meet, it is believed, points of Deptels Nos. 86 December 14 10 and 111, December 21 for Angell. US was successful in obtaining deletion of "or Austria" after "Germany" in paragraph A. "This arrangement" in paragraph C is designedly ambiguous in order to include countries other than those participating in this conference, should that be decided at some future time. Paragraph D means that shares which may or may not go to Italy and Austria will be determined when pot is divided.

By common agreement, Hungarian gold found in Austria will be governed, insofar as this Conference is concerned, by following statement in the minutes:

"The disposition of the gold surrendered by representatives of the Hungarian Govt and of the National Bank of Hungary to the United States Forces operating in the territory of Austria is entirely reserved from the application of the agreement on gold. Included in this reservation are all questions relating to the manner in which this gold may be distributed, what countries may share in any such distribution, and what rights, if any, may be conferred on Hungary to share in the pool under the provisions of paragraph D. If the gold covered by this statement for the minutes is not put into the pool, Hungary will not be entitled to count such gold as a part of its gold losses for the purposes of the agreement on gold."

The last sentence of above statement was inserted at dogged insistence of Czech delegate. Both he and Yugo delegate ruefully saw too late that anxiety of latter to protect possible Soviet interest had cost them a present receipt of Hungarian gold. In fact, some of Yugo's tractability during latter phases of Conference may be traceable to his realization that, despite his suspicions, my original proposal was actually of greater benefit to his country than what finally evolved from his objection.

Phrase "wrongful removal" in paragraphs A and C grew out of Czech desire for assurance that pot claim would include gold lost to Czechoslovakia after occupation by wrongful action more sophisticated than physical seizure. Context in gold agreement and historical fact ensure that Austrian and Italian participation in pot will not be precluded by this phrase. Since Hungarian case is entirely reserved, it is understanding here that no objection could be made to bringing Hungarian gold into pot on ground that its removal to Germany was not wrongful. [Angell.]

7387. From Angell No. 193. Although article III, part 1 of Final Act (transmitted by No. 183 from Angell ¹²) bears little superficial resemblance to provision suggested by mytel 118, December 5 from Angell ¹³ and approved by Deptel No. 75, December 16 [15] for Angell, ¹⁴ it is a mutation thereof and fulfilled important function of forestalling official claims that otherwise might cloud title to property removed from Germany.

Waley initially objected to paragraph set out mytel 118 (as amended to include Dept's suggestions) and insisted that protection not extend beyond renouncing diplomatic support for claims of lien-holding nationals of nations represented at Conference. French were inclined in tripartite meetings to be alarmed by British intimations that removal would not eliminate private ownership claims of British nationals. Hence Rueff at first favored US proposal.

In 17 Power Committee of heads of delegations, US proposal ran into difficulty, because of resolution 3 in Annex of Final Act. Belgian delegate pointed out that it would be inconsistent with position taken in that resolution for countries joining in it to renounce their right to make diplomatic representations to occupying powers re treatment of assets of their nationals in Germany. France having participated in this resolution, French Delegation felt compelled to agree with Belgium, as did all other Governments enumerated in resolution 3.

In meantime US Delegation had realized that its earlier suggestion contained serious lacunae regarding claims against the receivers of property declared available for reparation by ACC and allocated by IARA. Accordingly, receiving governments and their nationals were included along with CC and occupying powers (including USSR) among beneficiaries of waiver. After it became clear that broader proposal would fail of adoption for reasons above given, American Delegation encountered no opposition to retention of what is now substance of article III. It will be noted that CC and occupying powers are indirectly protected, inasmuch as article implies that signatory governments renounce protection on theory that removals action approved by CC is not wrongful.

All governments represented at Conference understand that article III applies only to official action generally subsumed under "protection of interests". The article does not purport to cut off whatever rights private persons may be able to assert judicially or administratively. Legal Division of OMGUS may wish to consider effectiveness of legal formalities within Germany prior to removal to bar successful assertions of private claims in jurisdiction to which property removed. Belgian delegate who is an authority on continental law, asserted informally that in most western European countries registered lienholders and proprietors of items of property removed from Germany can successfully pursue private remedies against receivers of property removed from Germany.

7389. Angell No. 194. Russian reciprocal deliveries considered as reparation inasmuch as Western Powers entitled to reparation secure such deliveries in lieu of plant and equipment. (From Angell No. 42.15) Reciprocal deliveries are included in category A of agreement proposed at Paris Conference, of which the US secures 28%. This does not necessarily mean that 28% of reciprocal deliveries will be received, since according to Final Act "if a signatory government receives more than its percentage share in certain types of assets in either category A or category B, its receipts of other types of assets in that category shall be reduced so as to insure that it shall receive not more than its share in that category as a whole". Nevertheless, it is probable that US will receive approximately 28% of reciprocal deliveries. Such receipts may be (1) exported to the US; (2) sold to other nations; or (3) used in the American zone of occupation. In the latter event the materials should be priced and charged as approved imports just as any other product owned by the US or its nationals and imported into Germany under the first charge principle. (Urtel No. 1299, December 20, to Department, repeated to Paris for Angell as No. 179.)

Presumably much of the US portion of reciprocal deliveries will be used in the US zone in substitution for raw materials and foods which would otherwise be imported. Therefore, authorities in US zone are in the best position to determine the types of raw materials and foods which would be most useful. IARA will assemble information from all member nations on types of materials which they desire as reciprocal deliveries and will later arrange actual deliveries. This problem will be considered by Secretariat as soon as IARA is established by Assembly when it convenes. No discussions on types of materials desired as reciprocal deliveries were held during Reparations Conference.

It is assumed that the procedure will be as follows:

(1) IARA will indicate what types of materials and what quantities are desired by countries members of IARA;

(2) Agreement will be reached in ACC on what will be delivered by Russia;

(3) ACC will inform IARA of the types of products and amounts which have been made available;

(4) IARA will allocate the available products to the various claimant powers in accordance with their shares in category A;

(5) Each claimant nation will then indicate through IARA to ACC the procedure which should be followed for disposition of its share.

In this connection it should be recognized that the US, UK and France secure in the aggregate 72% of category A, and Canada, the Netherlands, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia an additional 17% of category A. Therefore, information on the products desired could be largely ascertained through inquiry of these countries. If immediate action is desired, suggest discussion and preliminary agreement among US, UK, France.

- 4318. [To Berlin:] Reurtel 102, November 28, to Warsaw and 102, December 15 to Moscow.¹⁷ Embassy has no information of efforts undertaken by Polish representatives for restitution of Polish property from Russian zone. Following comments may, however, be of interest:
- 1. We doubt that any serious search for or registration of Polish property has been carried out in Russian zone. If Russians have permitted Polish representatives to visit Russian zone and move items to Poland it is probable that this was done for political effect and that Russians having little feeling of responsibility for economic rehabilitation permitted Poles to take pretty much what they liked.
- 2. In considering number of items which could not be found we suppose Poles have taken into account factors of wartime destruction, scorched earth tactics and Russian removals.
- 3. We should be interested to know whether Poles regard as property subject to restitution items taken from former German territory now turned over to Poland. This might explain their high estimate of numbers of items believed to be in Russian zone. This estimate of 66,000 items in Russian zone seems to be very much out of line with your statement that no Polish property had been located in US zone. Items removed from German territory now allotted to Poland would, of course, be difficult of identification.
- 4. It is our impression that any Polish initiative taken with respect to such matters must be regarded as at least approved and probably engineered by Russians for Russian purposes. If Poles are pressing for despatch of Polish representatives to our zones this is very possibly being done primarily for Russian intelligence purposes. In any case we feel no request of this nature should be granted without adequate quid pro quo.

Berlin, December 31, 1945—midnight. [Received January 2, 1946—1:15 p. m.]

1363. See our telegram 1323, December 22, 3 p. m. Despite compromises by all members, the Coordinating Committee was unable, at its special meeting of December 31,19 to reach final agreement on the level of German steel industry.

Sokolovsky pointed out that Russian figures were from League of Nations handbook of 1938 which gave the European population without Germany at 270 million, with European steel production outside of Germany (not including exports and imports) at 20.3 million tons, thus giving consumption of steel per capita at 75.2 kg. On the basis of German population of 62 million, this would indicate an annual level of German steel production at 4.66 million tons. General Templer 20 replacing Robertson (who was ill) stated that British Delegation strongly believed it was not economically sound to determine steel figure divorced from other industrial figures. Clay supported the British position in favor of an overall analysis and pointed out that if an industry by industry basis were used it might be necessary to build up certain industries in Germany which have been below level of rest of Europe. Sokolovsky stated that Soviet is primarily concerned with steel industry because of its relationship to war potential.

Clay pointed out that the Coordinating Committee previously agreed to a figure of the present population of Germany at 65 million. Sokolovsky agreed to use the 65 million figure, thus raising the Russian proposal to 4.9 million. French member pointed out that it has also been agreed that an additional 6½ million German refugees will return to Germany by the spring of 1946 and thus the population figure should be approximately 71 million. Sokolovsky refused to use that figure.

French member asked why Germany had not been included in calculating the overall European average. Aside from this point, he argued that needs for reconstruction would require European steel production well over 1938 levels increasing the average above 75.2 kg. Sokolovsky argued that 1938 European steel figures included non-German production for war and thus the 75.2 kg. average might be considered too high.

British member argued that steel production figures must be calculated taking into consideration not only war potential aspects but the additional Potsdam directive that Germany is to be allowed a level of industry to allow its existing without external assistance.

Clay proposed a compromise of 5.5 for internal German consumption subject to future agreement on exports. Assuming export figure of .7 the British agreed with Clay's proposal assuming a total annual production of 6.2 million. British asked an annual review of this figure and also that "productive capacity" of 9.0 million tons be allowed to remain. Clay and Koeltz both refused to accept the productive figure of 9.0 million tons but otherwise agreed with the British.

Clay argued that to obtain an agreed annual production there would have to be probably 20% additional capacity to allow for maintenance and repairs. This would be especially true as the newer and more efficient plants would be the first ones removed for reparations. The British favored a higher percentage, the French somewhat lower and the Russians reluctantly admitted a 10% figure might be appropriate. Clay asked that the matter of the figure be left to a quadripartite committee of experts.

British argued that 6.2 million annual production would not be sufficient to allow a balanced German economy and that British favored productive capacity of 9 million tons but would compromise to 8.

Sokolovsky agreed to minimum production of 5.0 plus agreed exports which left the Soviet figure 0.6 million tons below the 6.2 proposal.

At a further attempt at compromise Clay proposed annual production of 6.0 million with capacity of 7.2. After a recess the British agreed to 6.0 annual production and reduced the British capacity figure to 7.5 with annual production to be reviewed each year by the Control Council "in light of existing export-import program and the approved needs of Germany" after French and American agreement, the Soviet refused to increase from its future of 5.6 plus 10% for additional capacity. Sokolovsky pointed out that while he considered 6.0 too high, he neither rejected nor accepted the figure but would have to have time for consideration. Clay pointed out that pending agreement on the steel figure and on the general level of industry, further progress on reparations would not be possible.

At the close of the meeting the British summarized their plan for Germany industry. The proposal provided for elimination of armament plants and aircraft manufacturing plants, elimination of entire German merchant marine and of certain industry with production and control of others. The British proposed:

- (1). Reduction in value of industrial output by over one-third that of 1938.
- (2). Reduction of output of metals and engineering by 60% of that of 1938.
- (3). Reduction in private and consumer expenditures 30% of 1938 levels.
 - (4). Reduction in German diet by 20 to 25% of prewar.
- (5). Reduction in expenditures on textiles, books and shoes by 35% of prewar level.
- (6). Reduction in housing until by 1949 would be 30% below prewar.
- (7). Reduction of trade to allow for 3 billion reichsmarks of imports (presumably based on the 1938 value of the reichsmark) and 3.2 billion exports allowing a surplus of .2 billion which would be used toward costs of occupation.
- (8). Destruction or removal from each and of all capacities above minimum requirements. The above assumed no further territorial changes, and with an industry level related to agricultural level.

Clay stated that each country should submit its plan by January 10th and warned that the stumbling block might well continue to be steel with the American delegation reserving the right to revise its steel figures by that time.

Sokolovsky sarcastically referred to the British plan as safeguarding British interests through the elimination of aviation and shipbuilding and the maintenance of heavy industry which would allow Germany to fight on land but not on sea and in the air. Sokolovsky stated that a 20 to 35% curtailment of industry is not sufficient as German losses have amounted to this already, and therefore, in effect there would be no further curtailment.

General Clay deserves commendation for skillfully conducting the above compromise effort, which I believe will result in an agreement on steel tonnage at next meeting of Coordinating Committee. Sokolovsky and Ivanoff²¹ privately have assured Clay and me that the 6 million figure will be acceptable.

be garbled". Wording as received by Dept should be checked against article VI of Final Act as transmitted by No. 183 from Angell.30

Paragraph A in No. 190 incorporates these ideas: Local choice of procedures, differentiation between effect of German nationality and enemy character (by definition) of owner, permanent elimination of German enemy ownership, such assets to be charged against reparation share and value charged to be a figure net of specified prior deductions. Basic idea of article VI paragraph A of Final Act was transmitted to Dept by No. 73, Nov 23, from Angell.³¹ A companion tel, No. 72 32 raised with Dept at above early date problem of how net figure to be charged against reparation shares would be determined. From No. 73 [72] it will be seen that British originated suggestion that what should be deducted in determining net value of assets should be defined.

An enumeration of deductions was contained in Waley's first draft final act. Waley's suggested deductions, however, did not include claims of unsecured creditors; and it was on this point that Canadians, Indians and ourselves felt obliged to disagree with him for reasons explained in paragraph 3 of No. 190 from Angell. Dept having made no reply to problems raised by No. 72 of Nov 23, matter was raised again by paragraph 8 of Dec 14 teletype conference.33 Dept conferees were against Dutch proposal that each country should charge against its share only whatever might be left after liquidation in accordance with its own law. Teletype reply from Dept added "writeoffs of gross assets are desired but must be defined." Such definition is precisely what we had been attempting. Wording substantial[ly] as in final act had been transmitted by No. 72 [73] and again by Dec 14 teletype. Thus, No. 105 from Dept 34 introduced an entirely new concept, one completely unacceptable to countries listed in groups (b) and (c) of No. 190. Moreover, it was not clear to us that a 5% deduction would adequately cover us, considering our interest in a large share of German external assets in neutrals. Canadians balked completely, stating that 2% of gross was permitted Canadian custodian as expenses of administration alone and that difference between 2% and 5% would certainly not cover other legitimate deductions which should be made before charging value against reparation share. Problem created by this last minute suggestion of Dept was explained to Dept conferees in paragraph V of teletype of Dec. 18.33 Final paragraph Dept conferees reply was taken as authority to disregard suggestion in 105 from Dept in view of difficulties regarding obtaining any agreement on point, other than one that would leave each country entirely free to fix the figure to be charged against its reparation share in any way it might see fit. Rather awkward wording of paragraph A results from sensitivity during final phases of conference of Egyptian and others, who felt that niceties required clause regarding charging assets against reparation shares to follow rather than to precede clause recognizing power of signatory governments to administer the assets. Meaning of paragraph A, however, is exactly that set out in Nos. 72 and 73 from Angell.

Paragraph E of Final Act spells out in sufficient detail to satisfy Yugoslav delegate a general exhortation to signatory countries to uncover cloaks and nullify cloaking transactions. We had so frequently led in rejecting or recasting Yugoslav proposals couched in English different from what we would have said, that we did not consider it wise to insist upon our federalese regarding German assets. Hence we permitted first sentence of paragraph E to include a phrase having same meaning as our term of article "cloaking". We rather hoped that inclusion of "cloaking" in second sentence would prevent Washington from misunderstanding.

SECTION A. REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE TRIPARTITE NAVAL COMMISSION

- 1. The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America, agreed at the conference held at Berlin between 17 July and 2 August, 1945, to "constitute a Tripartite Naval Commission comprising two representatives for each Government, accompanied by the requisite staff, to submit agreed recommendations to the Three Governments for the allocation of specific German warships and to handle other detailed matters arising out of the agreement between the Three Governments regarding the German fleet." 39
- 2. As authorized by the above agreement, a Tripartite Naval Commission comprising two representatives of each Government was established. The representatives were:

Admiral G. I. Levchenko	U.S.S.R.
Engineer Rear Admiral N. V. Alekseev	U.S.S.R.
Vice Admiral Sir Geoffrey J. A. Miles, K.C.B	U.K.
Rear Admiral W. E. Parry, C.B	U.K.
Vice Admiral R. L. Ghormley, U.S. Navy	U.S.A.
Commodore H. J. Ray, U.S. Navy	U.S.A.

- 3. The Tripartite Naval Commission met in the city of Berlin, at the Headquarters of the Allied Control Authority, between 14 August and 6 December, 1945.
- 4. The Tripartite Naval Commission established a Technical Subcommittee to prepare lists of German naval ships and craft subject to allocation. The members of the Technical Subcommittee were:

Engineer Rear Admiral N. V. Alekseev	U.S.S.R.
Engineer Captain First Rank V. I. Golovin	U.S.S.R.
Lieutenant Commander G. R. G. Watkins, D.S.O.,
D.S.C., R.N	$\mathbf{U}.\mathbf{K}.$
Captain A. H. Graubart, U.S. Navy	U.S.A.
Lieutenant G. A. Ivers, U.S. Naval Reserve	U.S.A.

- 5. The Tripartite Naval Commission agreed that a combined inspection of German naval ships and craft should be made simultaneously by representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, and the United States of America. The inspecting parties examined German naval ships and craft in Germany, Poland, Denmark, Norway, the United Kingdom, Canada, the United States of America, and the ports of Liepaja (Libau) and Königsberg.
- 6. The Triparite Naval Commission requested their respective Governments to arrange that German naval ships and craft in neutral ports should proceed to the nearest German ports for inspection.

³⁹ Quotation is from the Protocol of the Proceedings of the Berlin Conference, August 1, 1945; for text, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, pp. 1478, 1487.

7. The inspecting parties submitted to the Technical Subcommittee lists of German naval ships and craft, divided into three categories of operability:

Category "A": Naval ships and craft operable with no repairs.

Category "B": Naval ships and craft operable after repairs requiring up to six months.

Category "C": Naval ships and craft which were inoperable or those ships and craft whose construction or repair could not be completed within six months.

- 8. The Technical Subcommittee listed by types the German naval ships and craft in categories "A" and "B", and divided the ships and craft into three equally balanced groups. These recommended allocations were presented by the Technical Subcommittee to the Tripartite Naval Commission.
- 9. The Tripartite Naval Commission considered and accepted, subject to certain British reservations (stated in Section C), the recommendations of the Technical Subcommittee. Allocation of the three groups was made by the drawing of lots. Thereafter, bilateral exchanges of individual ships and craft were made as desired. (Appendix 1⁴⁰)
- 10. Due to unforeseen and abnormal conditions such as reduction by seventy-five percent of fuel and power, working conditions in damaged buildings during winter months, minimum rations for labor, and scarcity of spare parts and material, the Triparite Naval Commission agreed to interpret the time limit established in the naval provisions of the report of the Berlin Conference for the completion or repair of German ships and craft specifically as it applied to twenty-four destroyers and, in general, to other ships and craft in category "B", to mean that within the said time limit those ships should be repaired sufficiently to steam, and that sufficient available spare parts and materials be placed on board to effect a complete refit after the ship reached a port of the nation to which it was allocated.
- 11. The Tripartite Naval Commission agreed that German ships and craft listed in category "C" and all unallocated submarines should be destroyed. Stores and spare parts not available elsewhere may be taken from ships and craft specified in paragraph 8 of Appendix 2 before their destruction, up to the allowance of the relevant German naval rate books. The Tripartite Naval Commission further agreed to request their Governments to arrange that German naval ships and craft in category "C" at present in the territorial waters of other countries be sunk or destroyed by the governments of the countries concerned. (Appendix 2 41)

- 12. The Tripartite Naval Commission prepared a list of ships and craft which were originally classed by the Commission as components of the German navy and were later determined to fall within the category of merchant ships, and which were, therefore, not subject to allocation by the Commission. (Appendix 4 41)
- 13. The Tripartite Naval Commission accepted a list, prepared by the British representatives, of warships and merchant vessels of allied registry under British cognizance which had been requisitioned by the German government and used for military purposes. The Commission agreed that these ships and craft should be returned to their nation of registry in the name of the Three Governments. The British representatives agreed to accept responsibility for the accuracy of the list based on the best evidence available, and for the execution of the transfers without prejudice to any subsequent legal proceedings which my [may] be raised. Should any of these ships and craft subsequently be determined to be of German registry they shall be subject to allocation by the senior naval officers in Germany representing each of the Three Government. (Appendix 5 41)
- 14. The Tripartite Naval Commission was unable to establish exactly the location, condition, and ownership of various ships and craft which had appeared on lists of the German navy. The Commission agreed that the senior naval officers in Germany representing each of the Three Governments should be directed to continue until 15 February 1946 the search for these ships and craft, and to obtain further information about them. (Appendix 3 41)
- 15. The Tripartite Naval Commission agreed that stores shall be supplied to German ships and craft recommended for allocation, and agreed upon the allocation of responsibility for this supply. Stores, in this connection, include armament stores, supplies and spare parts, and technical documents. (Appendices 6, 7, and 8)⁴²
- 16. The Tripartite Naval Commission considered the disposal of German naval river craft. The Commission agreed that these craft do not come under the cognizance of the Tripartite Naval Commission.

SECTION B. RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE TRIPARTITE NAVAL COMMISSION

The Tripartite Naval Commission agrees and recommends that:

1. Specified ships and craft of the German surface navy and submarine fleet be allocated in accordance with Appendix 1.43

⁴¹ Not printed.

⁴² None printed.

⁴³ Not printed, but for a summary list of the ships allocated, see the memorandum by the Chairman of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (Dunn), January 2, 1946, p. 1519.

- 2. German naval ships and craft not allocated be destroyed in accordance with Appendix.44
- 3. Search for further information on the location, condition, and ownership of German naval ships and craft (enumerated in the second list of Appendix 3 ⁴⁴) should be continued until 15 February 1946, and that any such ships and craft discovered be allocated by the three senior naval officers in Germany representing each of the Three Governments in accordance with the naval provisions of the report of the Berlin Conference and the provisions of the report of the Tripartite Naval Commission.
- 4. Upon approval of the report of the Tripartite Naval Commission, but not later than 15 February 1946, the Three Governments request simultaneously that German naval ships and craft in category "C" at present in the territorial waters of other countries be sunk or destroyed by the governments of the countries concerned in accordance with appendix 2.
- 5. The list of warships and merchant vessels of allied registry which had been requisitioned by the German government and used for military purposes be accepted. The Commission further recommends that these ships and craft be returned to their nation of registry, in the name of the Three Governments, by the British Government, in accordance with Appendix 5.
- 6. German naval ships and craft recommended for allocation be provided with armament stores, supplies and spare parts, and technical documents in accordance with Appendices 6, 7, and 8.
- 7. German naval river craft be excluded from consideration by the Commission.
- 8. Each Government inform the other two Governments of the completion of transfer or destruction of ships and craft for which it is responsible, including the transfer of German naval ships and craft in categories "A" and "B", the destruction of German naval ships and craft in category "C" and of unallocated submarines, and the transfer of warships and merchant vessels of allied registry.
- 9. The Tripartite Naval Commission be dissolved on the date of approval of this report.
- 10. After the dissolution of the Tripartite Naval Commission, the senior naval officers in Germany representing each of the Three Governments be authorized to handle jointly any matters which may arise from the agreement between the Three Governments regarding the German fleet.

[&]quot;Not printed.

- SECTION C. RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE TRIPARTITE NAVAL COMMISSION SUBJECT TO RESERVATION BY THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM
- 1. The Tripartite Naval Commission recommends, subject to reservation by the representatives of the United Kingdom set forth in paragraph 2 below, the allocation of German naval floating cranes and sheerlegs, naval barges and lighters, naval harbor servicing vessels, and naval tugs of four hundred and fifty horsepower and under, as indicated in paragraph 4 below.
- 2. The representatives of the United Kingdom state that German naval floating cranes and sheerlegs, naval barges and lighters, and naval harbor servicing vessels do not form part of the German surface navy (see paragraph 1 of part A of the naval provisions of the report of the Berlin Conference 45) but should be considered as part of the equipment of a naval shore establishment and, therefore, are not subject to allocation by the Tripartite Naval Commission. The British representatives further maintain that non-seagoing tugs are also part of the equipment of a naval shore establishment and are not, therefore, subject to allocation by the Commission. For the purposes of the Commission, the British representatives agree to tugs of over four hundred and fifty horsepower being considered as seagoing and, therefore, subject to allocation. The tugs Kvasefjord, Sperling, Tromsdalen, and Bornhoved, although under four hundred and fifty horsepower, are considered an exception to this principle and hence subject to allocation as seagoing.
- 3. The representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America disagree with the assertion of the representatives of the United Kingdom, and agree that these ships, craft, and equipment are a part of the German surface navy and, therefore, are subject to allocation by the Commission.
- 4. If the Three Governments agree that these vessels, craft, and equipment are subject to allocation, the allocation shown in Appendix 9 46 is recommended by the Commission.
- SECTION D. DISAGREEMENT OF THE TRIPARTITE NAVAL COMMISSION
- 1. The Tripartite Naval Commission disagrees on the subject of German naval floating docks.
- 2. The representatives of the United Kingdom refuse to consider the division of German naval floating docks for the following reasons:
 - a. Floating docks are not part of the German surface navy and should, therefore, not be divided by the Tripartite Naval Commission, but should be allocated elsewhere, probably by the Reparations Commission.

46 Not printed.

⁴⁵ Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1487.

b. Floating docks are very valuable equipment and should not be divided by anybody by any arbitrary rule.

c. A sunken floating dock can usually be raised and with its long life of usefulness is potentially of much the same value as a similar one now affoat.

- d. The floating docks in question vary in age and equipment, and the proposal to divide them on the basis of tonnage lift is unfair. They should be divided on a valuation basis after expert inspection. No inspection of any kind of German floating docks has so far been made by the tripartite naval inspecting parties with the exception of a partial inspection of some docks in Norway and Denmark.
- 3. The representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America disagree with the statement of the representatives of the United Kingdom, and agree that German naval floating docks are a part of the German surface navy and, therefore, are subject to allocation by the Commission. They maintain that no more detailed appraisal is required for the allocation of naval floating docks than was required for the components of the German surface navy recommended for allocation; they maintain that sunken naval floating docks are properly excluded from a proposed allocation because they cannot be repaired within the time limit imposed by the naval provisions of the report of the Berlin Conference; they further maintain that tonnage lifting capacity is a suitable basis for allocation.
- 4. The Tripartite Naval Commission, being unable to come to an agreement on the subject of German naval floating docks, refers this question to the Three Governments for decision. A complete list of German floating docks, showing whether they are considered naval or commercial, appears in Appendix 10.47

SECTION A. REPORT OF THE TRIPARTITE MERCHANT MARINE COMMISSION

1. The Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, and the United States of America, agreed at the Conference held at Berlin between the 17th July and 2nd August 1945 that "The German Merchant Marine, surrendered to the three Powers and wherever located shall be divided equally among the U.S.S.R., the U.K., and the U.S.A." 51 For this purpose the three Governments agreed to "Constitute a Tripartite Merchant Marine Commission comprising two representatives for each Government, accompanied by the requisite staff, to submit agreed recommendations to the three Governments for the allocation of specific German merchant marine ships and to handle other detailed matters arising out of the agreement between the three Governments regarding the German merchant ships."

2. As authorised by the above agreements, a Tripartite Merchant Marine Commission comprising two representatives of each Government was established. The representatives were:-

Admiral G. I. Levchenko	U.S.S.R.
Mr. A. A. Affanasiev, N.K.M.F. ⁵²	U.S.S.R.
Vice Admiral Sir Geoffrey J. A. Miles K.C.B.	U.K.
Sir Andrew Common M.W.T. ⁵³	$\mathbf{U.K.}$
Vice Admiral R. L. Ghormley U.S.N.	U.S.A.
Mr. Thomas F. Dunn W.S.A. ⁵⁴	U.S.A.

- 3. The Commission met in the City of Berlin, at the Headquarters of the Allied Control Authority from 1st September to 7th December 1945.
- 4. A special committee was established for deciding all practical matters connected with the division of the German Merchant Marine and for preparing recommendations for the distribution of the vessels between the three Powers. In addition, a Technical sub-committee was formed to inventory the vessels comprising the German Merchant Marine and to compile the lists of these vessels, as well as a Sub-committee for their valuation according to the method adopted.
- 5. The representative of each of the three Governments assumed the responsibility for submitting lists of all German ships known to them and these lists were corrected by the Technical sub-committee as further information came to light. On the basis of these lists the Commission compiled the first basic lists of the German merchant ships available, divided in four categories viz: a-Passenger Liners, b-Cargo Liners, c-Tankers and Special ships, d-Dry Cargo vessels. Each category of vessels was subdivided in two groups:
 - 1. Large vessels-Passenger ships over 1600 GRT and Cargo ships over 2300 DWT
 - 2. Small vessels—Passenger and cargo ships under above-mentioned tonnage.

⁵¹ See Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1488.

Sa Ministry of War Transport.

⁵⁴ War Shipping Administration.

Vessels under 1600 GRT or 2300 DWT were listed separately as it was considered that the requirements of the Allied Control Council could be met out of this tonnage.

6. The basis adopted for division was a valuation of the tonnage at 1938 building prices.

The Committee worked out the values, taking into account type, size, speed, and age of the vessels also the type of machinery.

The method adopted was, of necessity, somewhat arbitrary, but it provided a practical means of assessing the relative values of the vessels to be distributed. Passenger vessels were valued separately. The values were assessed before it was known to which Power the vessel would be allocated.

7. On completion of the first Basic lists on September 18, 1945, inspection parties comprising representatives of the U.S.S.R., U.K., and the U.S.A., were sent to the ports in all zones of Germany, and to the United Kingdom, Denmark, Norway, Poland and Holland. Instructions were given to the representatives of the three Powers to inspect the German merchant vessels in the United States ports.

The inspection parties inspected the German merchant vessels which lay in the ports at the time of inspection. Some of the vessels mentioned in the first Basic list were not inspected as they were at sea. The inspection parties found a number of vessels not mentioned in the first Basic Lists.

Many vessels of small tonnage (Coastal ships) were not inspected as time did not allow of this.

According to the condition of the vessels, their machinery and cargo gear as recorded in the inspection reports, the values were adjusted and the final agreed lists were compiled.

- 8. The Commission discussed the question of the vessels, which according to the order of Allied Supreme Commander, were sunk with Chemical warfare ammunition. It was agreed that nine vessels, which were already sunk at the time of the discussion were to be excluded from the lists of the German merchant marine to be divided and to be included in the List of Sunken ships with a notation to this effect. It was agreed to leave the other six vessels the loading of which with Chemical warfare ammunition had begun, in the list of the German merchant marine to be divided and to include them in the share of the United Kingdom.
- 9. The Commission at its first meeting addressed a letter to the Allied Control Council for Germany asking for information about the tonnage necessary to the needs of the German Peace economy.

On November 21st, 1945, the reply of the Allied Control Council was received, requesting the reservation for the needs of the German peace economy of 175,000 tons carrying capacity of the German merchant marine (see appendix 3 56).

In order to meet this request, the Commission reserved 200,000 tons DWT, i.t. 175,000 tons carrying capacity (see appendix 4 ⁵⁶); the Commission then worked out its recommendations for the division of the German merchant marine between the three Powers (see appendix 1 ⁵⁶).

- 10. The Commission discussed the following questions, arising out of the decision of the Berlin conference regarding the German merchant marine:
 - a. Sunken vessels.
 - b. Merchant vessels that were owned by the Allies and Neutrals and seized by the Germans.
 - c. Repair and re-conversion of the vessels to be divided.
 - d. Supply of the ships to be divided, with spare parts, stores, fuel and food.
 - e. Provision of the vessels to be divided with the necessary shipping and technical documents.
 - f. Delivery of vessels divided between the three Powers.
 - g. German merchant ships under construction in Sweden.
 - h. German merchant ships which may be found in the future.
 - i. German Sea Fishing Fleet.
 - j. German port facilities and dredging fleet.
 - k. Inland Water Transport.
 - l. Compensation for use of vessels prior to delivery.

SECTION B. RECOMMENDATION OF THE TRIPARTITE MERCHANT MARINE COMMISSION FOR THE DIVISION OF THE GERMAN MERCHANT MARINE

The Tripartite Merchant Marine Commission agrees and recommends to the three Governments that:—

- 1. The German merchant marine surrendered to the three Powers be divided equally among the U.S.S.R., the U.K., and the U.S.A., according to the attached list (see appendix 1 ⁵⁶).
- 2. In conformity with the decision of the Allied Control Council (see appendix 3 56) 175,000 tons carrying capacity, i.e., 200,000 DWT, of the German merchant marine be reserved for German peace economy in accordance with the attached list (see appendix 4^{56}).
- 3. All the German Merchant vessels sunk within five miles of the coast of Germany (see appendix 5 ⁵⁶) be destroyed before the end of 1946.

⁵⁶ Not printed.

Each of the three Powers, represented on the Commission, shall report to the others when this has been done.

In the case of the few vessels mentioned in appendix 5, sunk in the coastal zones of countries other than Germany, a formal request for their destruction shall be sent to the Sovereign Powers concerned.

- 4. Vessels not of German nationality (see appendix 6 ⁵⁷) be placed in the custody of the Allied Control Council for Germany, pending return to their owners on proof of title.
- 5. The Commission discussed the question of the German merchant vessels that were in construction in the Swedish shippards at the time of capitulation of Germany.

As the information about this question is insufficient, the matter be taken up through the normal diplomatic channels.

- 6. As regards German merchant ships which are subject to the Berlin Agreement and which may subsequently be found when the agreement about the division of the German merchant marine is in force, independently of the flag under which these ships may be, the three Governments take in such cases all appropriate measures through the normal diplomatic channels to secure an immediate delivery of these ships to the Allied Control Council for Germany, and the principles of the agreement for the division of the German merchant marine be applied to these ships.
- 7. The repair of damage caused by War or Marine Risks during use, running repairs effected for the benefit of the user, and running repairs effected while in use before delivery, be for the account of the user and not be charged to the recipient power.

Special fittings, as in the case of troopers, be for the account of the user. Passenger accommodations fitted for troop carrying have to be re-converted to their previous state at the expense of the country which made the fitting.

Capital restoration repairs and repairs to damage caused by war or marine casualties suffered by vessels prior to the Surrender of Germany, also improvements to crew accommodation be paid for by the Government to which the vessel is allocated to the Government in whose country or zone the repair has been or will be effected. Where repairs have been or will be effected in Germany the cost be borne by Germany and charged against the Reparations' account of the recipient power.

The custodian power shall facilitate the repair of a vessel in Germany allocated to the other powers to the extent of making her seaworthy to sail or be towed before German repair facilities are radically reduced in accordance with the Allied Policy agreed at Berlin.

In the U.K. repair facilities will also be granted but no special priority can be given.

- 8. All spare parts, stores, furniture and equipment on board be handed over at the time of transfer to the recipient power and anything removed from the vessel by the custodian power or its agents be returned.
- 9. All available documents on board or in the possession of the custodian power or its agents be handed over at the time of delivery. Plans known to be available in the builders yards be handed over also.
- 10. On transfer the custodian power shall certify to the recipient power the authority under which delivery is made.
- 11. The physical delivery of the vessels be started immediately on ratification of the report and recommendations of the Commission, and it is hoped that delivery can be begun by 20th December 1945. Between the signing of the report and ratification information on locations of ships to be transferred be supplied to the recipient powers and vessels be concentrated in nominated agreed ports. Representatives of each of the three Powers in the ports of delivery be instructed to give every possible assistance to the recipient power.

Every effort be made to complete the delivery of the ships by the 20th January 1946.

All other matters relative to the delivery of German merchant vessels lying in ports of Powers represented on the Commission or of zones occupied by them be dealt with bi-laterally between the Sovereign Nations concerned, in other ports they be arranged direct between the recipient power and the country concerned.

- 12. If any German vessels, allocated under the division lists to one of the three Powers be lost or damaged before the physical delivery to the said Power, while in service by another Power, this last Power is under the obligation to give to the Power to which the vessel was to be delivered a vessel of similar type from its own list or to repair the damaged vessel at its expense.
- 13. As the Commission failed to reach agreement on the disposal of the German fishing fleet, dredger fleet, port facilities, Inland water transport and compensation for use of vessels prior to delivery, it was agreed to recommend to the three Governments to decide these questions separately without connecting them with the division of the German merchant marine.

14. The Tripartite Merchant Marine Commission be dissolved on the date of the ratification of this report and recommendations.

After the dissolution of the Tripartite Merchant Marine Commission, the Senior Naval Officers in Germany, representing each of the three Powers, assisted by the Representatives of Narkommorflot, the British Ministry of War Transport, and the U.S. War Shipping Administration, where necessary, be authorised to handle any questions which may subsequently arise out of the agreement between the three Governments regarding the German merchant marine.

[Final approval by the three Governments of the reports of the Tripartite Naval and Merchant Marine Commissions was not forthcoming during 1945. Subsequently, certain changes were made in them to meet reservations by the signatory powers, as well as to cover omissions from and additions to the original lists of ships. INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN ESTABLISHMENT OF EXPORT-IMPORT MACHINERY FOR GERMANY AND IN GERMAN COAL PRO-DUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

862.50/8-1845: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)⁶⁵

Washington, August 18, 1945—2 p. m.

298. Subject is procedure for procurement and financing of German imports from U.S. proposed by General Hilldring ⁶⁶ with concurrence of Generals Somervell ⁶⁷ and Clay ⁶⁸ (urtel unnumbered Aug. 10 ⁶⁹).

of the Office of Financial and Development Policy, with the following addition: "Dept understands informally from CAD [Civil Affairs Division, War Department] that Hilldring in discussions of his proposal in London has encountered firm opposition not only from British War Office but also from "Treasury and State Dept officials there'. Should we interpret this to mean that while favoring Clay's having 'a considerable measure of control over supplies imported from the U.S.' (urtel 8296 Aug. 16) you are now resisting Hilldring's specific proposal [?]" (862.50/8–1845) For text of telegram 8296, see Foreign Relations, The Conference of Berlin (The Potsdam Conference), 1945, vol. 11, p. 829. Mr. Clayton was in London as head of the United States Delegation to the Third Session of the Council of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration as well as to hold discussions with British officials on commercial and financial policy.

⁶⁶ Maj. Gen. John H. Hilldring, Adjutant General, War Department.

⁶⁷ Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, Commanding General, Army Service Forces.
68 Lt. Gen. Lucius D. Clay, United States Deputy Military Governor for Germany; Commanding General, United States Group, Control Council for Germany; United States representative on the Coordinating Committee.
66 Not printed.

This proposal was resisted by Dept officers in discussions with War Dept in Washington at end of July but Dept was subsequently requested by Clayton not to continue opposition if proposal was adopted by War Dept. Subject is still under discussion in War Dept and between Hilldring and Clayton in London.

Dept officers were not impressed by Hilldring argument that unless all supplies for any zone in Germany allocated for procurement in U.S. were purchased by War Dept and consigned to Commanding General USFET, 70 U.S. would be unable to secure reimbursement for cost of imports into its zone from proceeds of exports from other zones, notably the British. British have accepted throughout inter-governmental discussions the principle that proceeds of exports from all zones should be pooled to pay for German imports, and this principle is incorporated in paragraph III 19 of the Berlin protocol.⁷¹

Furthermore Dept officers believed that the fundamental reason for Hilldring's proposal was that Clay desired to have an additional bargaining weapon vis-à-vis the other zone commanders in negotiations for the exchange of interzonal surpluses (e.g. coal from the Ruhr). They felt that Clay would in any case have large and sufficient bargaining power in that he, through his representation in CRAB,72 would be screening and passing judgment upon all import requirements of the other zones whether procured in U.S. or elsewhere. Issued was therefore simply one of how much power to vest in a U.S. field representative.

Foregoing is for your background information.

to become dependent on Clay for supplies from US required in British zone. If programming and billing of imports is to be handled zonally, British position is that they will undertake procurement and initial financing of all imports needed for their zone.

General view here is that initial negotiations in Control Council are proceeding most satisfactorily, and that prospect is favorable for quadripartite agreement on many aspects of control of Germany. However, I believe that question whether Germany will actually be treated as an economic unit will be resolved only gradually, and that final outcome will be rather mixed. Although there will be no tight frontier between Eastern and Western Germany, economic inter connections during occupation probably will be considerably less pervasive than can be established among Western Zones. example, it is unlikely that quadripartite arrangements for programming and financing of imports for all of Germany can be quickly negotiated. It now seems unwise to avoid combined arrangements among Western Zones. Lack of coal and industrial raw material in U.S. Zone makes it impracticable for US to maintain indefinitely our position that strictly zonal approach is only admissible alternative to quadripartite program.

Undoubtedly questions concerning trade and barter will continue to arise during the period in which the Control Council is considering the creation of a quadripartite Export-Import Control agency. Small transactions of this nature have undoubtedly been consummated in the past by local Army commanders without reference to this or other headquarters. Such transactions have largely been in the nature of barter deals but have allowed vitally needed goods to move across frontiers.

7288. Brit Emb here has communicated to Dept telegram from Marshal Montgomery to War Office 77 on subject of German coal

⁷⁶ Brig. Gen. William H. Draper, Chief of the Economic Division, United States Group, Control Council.

⁷⁷ A copy of the telegram was transmitted to the Department under cover of an aide-mémoire from the British Embassy dated August 24, 1945; neither printed. Field Marshal Sir Bernard Montgomery was Commander in Chief, British Forces of Occupation in Germany; Military Governor, British zone in Germany; and British representative, Allied Control Council for Germany.

directive,⁷⁸ asking for authority (1) to place an "adequate" interpretation on the extent of civil and military coal requirements necessary to ensure the safety, security, health, maintenance and operation of the occupying forces, and (2) in particular, to regard coal for military requirements, certain transportation requirements, necessary public utilities, production and processing of food, production of building materials for essential shelter, production of medical and sanitary supplies and similar fundamental requirements, as a first charge on the production of German mines.

In supporting this request, Montgomery expresses doubt that it is practicable to keep industry in Germany suspended over a long period and a belief that the carrying out of the present directive would result in wide-spread unemployment which he implies should be avoided.

Montgomery also suggests the appointment either by the Brit Govt, in consultation with American and French Govts, or by ECO ⁷⁹ of a commission, including leading coal producers and transportation authorities, who would be instructed to examine the entire coal position in Germany with the Combined Coal Committee of CRAB.

Covering note by Brit Emb reports that preliminary opinion in London favors granting zone commanders latitude in application of coal directive which Montgomery desires.

Dept understands Brit ministers are considering Montgomery's message August 27, and accordingly suggest that you communicate to FonOff US views as given below, as promptly as possible.

While it may not be possible to achieve the goal of 25 million tons set in directive, this Govt continues opposed to making any amendment either by formal action or interpretation in the directive which clearly established principle that greatest amount of coal possible be made available for export and that use of coal in Germany should be minimum necessary to protect occupying forces and redeployed Allied forces. There will be distress and unemployment in many parts of Europe under best of circumstances and purpose of directive was to put Allied countries in a position substantially superior to that of Germans. In paragraph 6 of coal directive, British, French and American Govts all specifically recognized that "the carrying out of the above policies with respect to German coal may cause unemployment, unrest, and dissatisfaction among Germans of a magnitude European Coal Organization; for documentation on interest of the United States in the formation of a European Economic Committee and a European Coal Organization, see vol. II, pp. 1411 ff.

which may necessitate firm and rigorous action" and promised that "any action required to control this situation will be fully supported".

The interpretation which Montgomery suggests and which was specifically discussed and rejected prior to issuance of directive might, in effect, place Germany in a favorable position relative to liberated areas, particularly in so far as it contemplates using coal in Germany for purpose of avoiding unemployment in that country.

This Govt, however, is entirely willing to supply experts to assist Marshal Montgomery in achieving the necessary volume of coal production in Germany. This Govt is also disposed to favor participation in appointment of commission of experts which would examine on the spot ways and means of raising coal output in Germany provided an effort is made to select not only experts on coal production and transportation but also experts on other factors such as labor, housing, etc, affecting coal production. This Govt does not consider appointment of such a commission by ECO advisable.

Berlin, August 30, 1945—8 p. m. [Received August 30—3:15 p. m.]

403. Reurtel 333, August 23, 7 p. m. CRAB and its various subcommittees have ceased to operate on theory that the various functions should be transferred to quadripartite organizations yet to be formed. At present, matters involving the three Western Zones are being handled on an ad hoc personal basis between the Military Govt officers concerned. There is no operating procedure for consultations and meetings. Thus our telegram 335 so did not envisage use of CRAB facilities.

However, formation of quadripartite organizations and principles of "agreed imports" is currently being delayed by Soviet insistence upon prior clarification of reparations problems.

Sir Percy Mills ⁸¹ of the British element has already indicated, in the Economic Directorate of the Control Council, that the British, in the absence of quadripartite action, favor a tripartite approach to a variety of problems including exports and imports. This would seem to imply a willingness to allow exports from the British zone to be utilized to cover part, at least, of the trade deficit which appeared likely from the American zone. Inasmuch as imports from neutrals and from United Nations, as well, appear to be prohibited under the terms of the Potsdam Agreement, until they become "agreed imports" through appropriate action by the Control Council, we are in the process of attempting to obtain a clarification of British views and of reactions within US Group CC (Control Council) and will cable further.

In the meantime it would seem desirable that Joint Chiefs of Staff 1067 article 41 (C) ⁸² be amended to avoid the US prohibition on exports to others than United Nations.

487. The Economic Directorate last week approved a compromise interim export-import plan, the essentials of which are as follows:

Pending the formulation of the export-import plan which is to be approved by the Control Council in accordance with paragraph 2 (reference should be to paragraph 1 of a paper of 6 September ⁸³ referring to paragraphs 14, 15, and 19 of the Berlin Declaration which was used as a basis for discussion at the Directorate meeting), the proceeds from exports should be credited to a special account of the Control Council and shall be used for payment of imports of each respective zone.

Payment for imports into one zone for the account of exports from another may be made only by decision of the Control Council, or as may be agreed between any zone commanders.

In the preparation of an export-import plan, the exports and imports of each zone made before the time of completion thereof will be taken into consideration.

The export-import plan shall be submitted for consideration before 31 October 1945. If the plan is not approved by that date then interim arrangements shall be reviewed.

Provisional prices of exports of goods, raw materials and merchandise shall be fixed by the commander of each zone pending conditions of final settlement. Payment should be made at the rate of not less than 80 percent of provisional prices.

Serial Se

Provisional prices to be fixed by the zone commanders should be applied in the first place to all deliveries from 1 August 1945 and should be submitted forthwith to the Coordinating Committee. End of plan.84

Opinion here is that it will be difficult to treat Germany as an economic unit and to conduct foreign trade on a quadripartite basis under the above plan. Unless the Dept advises to the contrary, it would appear advisable for US, Britain, and the French, if possible, to establish provisional agencies to facilitate inter-zonal and foreign trade pending the formulation of a final export-import plan on a quadripartite basis. This is desirable because of the urgency [urgent] necessity of getting exports started. It should be made clear to the Russians that the inter-zonal agencies for Western Germany are for the interim period only and will be discontinued once an agreed trade mechanism has been established. It is believed that the provisional agencies for the Western Zones can be set up within the framework of the interim quadripartite plan outlined above.

Would appreciate an early expression of the Depts views with reference to the last paragraph of my 335 of 21 August, as well as views concerning interim trade with Austria. Fred Winant 85 plans to leave for Salzburg and Vienna September 16 to discuss export-import trade with Austria.

However in view of early stage of operation of export-import plan, such matters have not yet been handled. 606. Reurtel 530 Sept 15. Dept opposes any allocation of coal from Western Germany to meet requirements of Soviet Zone. Any such allocation would be at the expense of exports of coal from Western Germany, since coal requirements for Western Zones have already been placed at a minimum figure. This Govt attaches the utmost importance to coal exports from Germany to meet critical needs of Allied countries and is now shipping coal across the Atlantic to help meet European needs. Demands on US would be increased by any allocation of German coal to Soviet Zone. We consider that deficits in Soviet Zones should be met directly from Silesia, not indirectly from Pennsylvania. Polish Govt has informed us that Silesian coal is immediately available, substantially in excess of Poland's present export commitments, provided transportation by rail, rather than through Baltic ports, is arranged. Allocation of Western German coal to USSR Zone is inadmissible until there is complete agreement for pooling resources of all zones and a fully developed quadripartite import, export program. Moreover, such a quadripartite program would surely include provision for import of Silesian coal into Germany. USSR has so far adhered to strictly zonal approach on supply matters, even insisting on this approach with respect to apportionment of supply responsibility for Greater Berlin.

states that the State Department is informed that Silesian coal is available subject to transportation. We have taken the position that Quadripartite Government requires Quadripartite action on allocations. Under existing machinery allocations of coal to US and other zones requires Quadripartite approval including Russian member Coal Committee. Actual allocation made to Soviet Zone for November was 100,000 tons of coke and 50,000 tons of hard coal against allocation of 200,000 tons of soft coal briquettes from Soviet to Western Zones. Most of latter is allocated to US Zone. If we tried to make exception to Quadripartite procedures in case of coal it would obviously invite counter-exceptions and make progress in Quadripartite negotiations more difficult and perhaps impossible. Question of Silesian coal has been raised several times in Economic Directorate by US member. Russian member is investigating with expressed intention of importing Silesian coal to Soviet Zone if available and transportation permits. He indicates that up to this time he has not been informed that Silesian coal is actually available for this purpose. This matter will be pressed, as we fully recognize the advantages of using Silesian coal in Eastern Germany from both transportation and coal export point of view.

753. There is given below the text of a preliminary draft of the United States proposal regarding establishment of Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany. These tentative proposals were drawn up in the office of Fred Winant and after having been informally shown to Economics, Political and Finance Divisions are being turned over to the Russian representative. If the Department wishes to cable comments or criticisms of the proposals, there will be sufficient time as the matter will have to be submitted to the Economic Directorate even if it should obtain immediate clearance by the Export-Import Sub-Committee.

Paragraph 3 d refers to funds which have been derived under the existing agreement (see our telegram 487, September 10, 9 p. m. and 593, September 23, 3 p. m.). This paragraph is not designed to allow zonal commanders to determine trade patterns nor to avoid quadripartite agreement on imports.

"1. Establishment of Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany. There is hereby established an Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany which shall be an agency of the Allied Control Authority. The Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany will consist of a board of directors and an executive officer. The board of directors will be composed of the members of the Export-Import Sub-Committee or persons designated by such members; the executive officer will be chosen by and operate under the direction of the board of directors; assistant executive officers will be appointed by the zone commanders in each zone. The salary of the executive officer and the assistant executive officers will be fixed by the board of directors and will be paid out of the proceeds of German exports.

2. Functions of Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany.
The functions of the Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany are:

a. To authorize and if necessary to arrange for the sale of exports, including the collection, storage, transportation and delivery of goods, and the receipt of payment therefor.

b. To authorize and if necessary to arrange for the purchase of approved imports, including the transportation and delivery of goods, and payment therefor.

- c. In consultation with other interested agencies of the Allied Control Authority, to formulate from time to time and to submit export-import programs for approval by the Control Council or its authorized agency. The first tentative program is set forth in paragraph 4 and 5 below, covering the period from 1 November 1945 to 30 June 1946. The preliminary data on which this program is based will be reviewed in the light of the latest available information, and a revised program submitted by 15 December, 1945, to cover the period from 1 January 1946 to 30 June 1946. Thereafter programs will be reviewed quarterly and submitted semi-annually or more frequently as directed by the Control Council.
- d. To collect and analyze data necessary for the preparation of export-import programs; to maintain records of import and export transactions; to prepare and submit such reports as may from time to time be required by the Allied Control Authority.

e. To exercise such other functions as may be delegated to it in order to insure the proper financing and implementation of approved export-import programs.

f. To organize its operations and employ such personnel in addition to the executive officer as may be necessary to the discharge of the foregoing functions.

3. Statement of policy.

It is agreed:

a. That in order to provide funds for approved imports, payment will be made at the rate of not less than 80 percent of the established price of all exports from current production and stock, beginning 1 August 1945.

b. That such payment will be made to approved banks for the account of the Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany in United States dollars or any other currency acceptable to the Control Council or its authorized agency, at prices fixed on the basis of policies established by the Control Council or its authorized agency.

c. That any funds credited to the special account of the Control Council set up in paragraph 4, CONL/P(45)32, approved by the Control Council on 20 September 1945,88 will be transferred to the account of the Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany. Payments made from this special account and obligations incurred by the special account will be taken into consideration in such transfer.

d. That the funds derived from such payments and transfers will be used by the Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany to discharge obligations arising out of import programs which have been approved by the Control Council or the zonal commanders, as authorized in paragraph 4, CONL/P(45) 32, approved by the Control Council, 20 September 1945.

e. That on matters pertaining to financing the Allied Export-Import Authority for Germany will operate under policies established by the Finance Directorate.

f. That as soon as practicable a central German administrative department will be set up in the field of foreign trade. At that time the functions of the Allied Export-Import Authority, set forth in paragraph 2 above, will be transferred to the extent deemed advisable, to the German department and thereafter the Allied Export-Import Authority will control and supervise the operations of such department."

use in Germany be referred to the coal sub-committee of the fuel committee for investigation and report as a matter of urgency.

Since the Eastern Zone of Germany is understood to be short of hard coal, it is suggested that special consideration be given, in view of the proximity of Silesian coal and the consequent saving in transportation, to the purchase and importation of Polish coal by the USSR for use in the Eastern Zone as a charge against exports in accordance with the principles laid down in paragraph 19 of the report of the Berlin Conference.

It is also recommended that the Transport Directorate be requested to cooperate with the coal sub-committee on the investigation of this matter, with respect to its transportation aspects."

The Economic Directorate has had two meetings since this memorandum was presented. (Note my 692, October 5.90) The Soviet representative who at first indicated lack of knowledge on the question advised the Directorate at its meeting on October 12 that the matter was being actively discussed with the Poles and implied that Soviet-Polish bargaining was going on. In the meantime the Soviet representative has not agreed to the American proposal that the quadripartite coal sub-committee, in conjunction with Transport Directorate, investigate and report on this matter.

The American representative on the coal sub-committee believes that no action can be taken by that sub-committee prior to the issuance of instructions from the Economic Directorate. This is due to the fact that the terms of reference of the coal sub-committee refer to production and distribution of German coal. This has been interpreted in a narrow sense with the result that coal outside the present German borders has not been considered by that sub-committee. This position also reflects a certain reluctance within OMGUS to take action on matters involving external relations. So long as the Soviet representative delays the order proposed to the coal sub-committee, it is probable that there will be no progress made toward obtaining this coal within the Control Council.

As related to this subject, the United States proposal concerning the establishment of an Allied export-import authority has now been informally distributed to the other representatives on the export-import sub-committee and whereas the representatives of the other three nations indicated agreement in principle, it is too early to determine what their official reactions will be (see our telegram 753, October 11, 9 p. m.). Accordingly, no export-import mechanism has yet been established to facilitate the Silesian coal transaction.

4. No irrevocable commitments should be made for future deliveries of such exports in view of possibility that they may prove useful bargaining weapon in negotiations to recover German assets in neutral countries.

Dept would be willing to modify Para 41c of JCS 1067 only if foregoing limitations were retained. Dept also believes that in view of the policy considerations involved no substantial trade relations with neutrals should be authorized by any zone commander unilaterally but that agreement on any proposed trade arrangements with neutrals should be sought on a quadripartite or at least a tripartite basis, even if such arrangements involve exports from and imports into only a single zone.

You are requested to ascertain present state of plans for trade with neutrals and to report your views as to whether modification of Para 41c in manner outlined above would be desirable at this stage.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

Berlin, October 23, 1945—2 p. m. [Received October 23—11: 38 a. m.]

833. Personal for Clayton.92 In our 788 of Oct 16, replying Dept's 640 of Oct 10, 1 p. m., 93 we outlined the situation regarding coal exports from Germany. On my return to Berlin I would like to add one thought for your consideration. On the American side we have been pushing for compliance with the presidential directive with all the authority we could muster. That authority, however, is limited by virtue of the fact that the physical control of the bulk of German coal as well as industrial equipment is in the hands of others. of us here wonder whether it is fully comprehended by the Dept that when the decisions were made at Yalta and by the Govts, determining the zones of occupation,94 that power to implement American wishes in respect of coal production and export as well as removal of industrial equipment on reparations account passed from direct American control. With the Silesian coal beds going to the Soviet Union and Poland, the Ruhr deposits to the UK, and the Saar deposits to France, the Americans were left locally without a single blue chip. We have in our American Zone, as you know, less than 2 per cent of German coal. Also the amount of industrial equipment is not large in comparison with other zones. Yet much of the American approach to this subject, both on the governmental level and in the press would lead to the impression that the determination of these questions rests exclusively in the power of the American representatives. As you know, General Eisenhower and General Clay can and do present our views as forcibly as may be desirable but the physical control of these properties rests with somebody else.

> Berlin, October 31, 1945—10 p.m. [Received November 2—8: 42 a. m.]

904. After a 9-hour session on October 30, the Fuel Subcommittee has reached an impasse on December coal allocations and has referred the entire matter to the Economic Directorate.

The Soviet representative has asked for an increase of Ruhr hard coal and coke from the November allocation of 150,000 tons to 350,000 The Soviet does not contemplate any increase of its November allocation of 200,000 tons brown coal briquetts to the American Zone in Germany and the American-French Zones Austria.

The American representative pointed out that, based upon calories (BTUs 95) the Soviet Zone would have a consumption of coal for all purposes over twice that of the American Zone and 25 percent over the British Zone despite the greater population and industry in the British Zone.

The bottleneck on coal distribution remains transport and not production. A 6-million ton stock pile exists in the Ruhr. Accordingly, even if production could be increased, it would not serve to satisfy the Soviet needs. The Soviet reaction is that the increase should be obtained from coal that would otherwise be exported to the Western European nations. The Soviet representative argued that the "economic unit" formula requires that needs for all zones be satisfied prior to export.96

The French position was to request an increase of exports from one to one and one-half million tons and to repeat—in terms of economic unit formula—that France does not feel bound by the Potsdam Declaration.97

The Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)

Washington, November 2, 1945—8 p. m.

794. From Clayton. Reurtel 833, Oct 23. I appreciate that lack of physical control over German coal resources makes it difficult for us to exert direct and effective influence on production and distribution of coal. However, fact that coal is of key importance to economy of Germany and liberated areas makes output and allocation matter of legitimate concern to all occupying powers. In this connection we must continue to stress that:

(1) US, UK and France jointly issued coal directive, thus evidencing their common interest in problem;

(2) Ruhr coal must be treated as a national rather than a zonal resource in the context of provision of Berlin Protocol calling for treatment of Germany as economic unit;

(3) Coal is now and will continue for some time to be almost only German export, proceeds of which are earmarked for payment of imports into Germany to which US has made and is making large contribution;

(4) US has substantial interest in volume of German coal exports to Western Europe owing to our own exports of coal to this area and our desire to speed economic recovery in Western Europe;

(5) US as well as all other occupying powers have full right to participate in allocation of coal in Germany because of determining effects of such allocations on German standard of living and reactivation of German industry.

We agree, of course, that the administration of production in the Ruhr is and must remain primarily a British responsibility. We intend to offer, however, as much assistance as possible, although fully aware of the limitations under which that assistance must operate. We are proposing, as you know, to have appointed in each zone coal commissioners who together would constitute a tripartite coal commission for Western Germany.

With respect to transport of coal from the Ruhr, I hope that the most vigorous possible efforts will be made over the coming months to solve the difficulties which appear to limit the shipment of coal from the Ruhr. In this connection, I would appreciate knowing whether all possible effort is being made to mobilize railway cars immobilized on lines as result of destruction of track and bridges; also whether possible to assist British in clearing waterways with loan of US Army equipment. Please note also ECITO 98 recommendations repeated to you as London's 620, Oct. 10.99 I hope you can supply more detailed analysis of the coal transport position with an evaluation of the relative importance of the various limiting factors in producing the present bottleneck.

Dept stressing once more to French importance of expeditious return of coal wagons to Ruhr, and Dept also pointing out that their unwillingness to approve central transport organization for Germany is obstacle to effective mobilization of transport for movement of coal. AmEmb, Paris has advised Dept, however, that French were until recently sending more wagons to Ruhr than they were receiving, and ECITO also reports wagons being returned more promptly from outside Germany than from Germany.

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Representatives 2

Washington, November 8, 1945.

Below is a text of a note which has been delivered to the missions in Washington of the following countries: Norway, Denmark, Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Greece, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Turkey. London and Paris will please notify the respective Foreign Offices.

"The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Honorable the Ambassador of (name of country) and has the honor to make the following communication on the subject of exports from the United States zone of occupation in Germany.

It was decided at the Potsdam Conference that, in order to prevent Germany from becoming a financial liability to the countries providing her essential imports, means had to be found to provide funds to pay for such minimum imports as were agreed by the responsible occupying authorities to be necessary to the German economy.

Paragraph 19 of Part III of the Protocol of the Conference, therefore, contains the following provision:

'Payment of reparations should leave enough resources to enable the German people to subsist without external assistance. In working out the economic balance of Germany, the necessary means must be provided to pay for imports

⁸⁹ No message corresponding to this number has been found in Department

approved by the Control Council in Germany. The proceeds of exports from current production and stocks shall be available in the first place for payment for such imports.'

In implementation of this provision, the Control Council in Germany reached an agreement on September 20, 1945, that the Occupying Powers should require payment for exports from Germany at the rate of not less than 80% of the price set on such exports by each Zone Commander.3

In accordance with the above-mentioned decision reached at Potsdam and the implementing agreement made in the Control Council, it will, therefore, be necessary to require payment for all exports from the United States zone of occupation other than exports of capital equipment made available as reparations and looted property subject to restitution. Payment will be received on behalf of the Control Council and will be in United States dollars for the time being, although in special cases it may later prove possible to arrange for payment in some other currency acceptable to the Control Council. Payment will normally be required in full and, in any event, at a rate not less than 80% of the established price, on the understanding that if payment is not required in full it will be without prejudice to any future requests for further settlement, and that such arrangements will be kept under constant review and altered as conditions require or permit. Provisional prices will be fixed by the Commander-in-Chief of the United States zone and bills will be presented to the government of the country receiving the goods on the basis of delivery at the German frontier or under such arrangements, in special cases, as may be convenient. Prompt payment will be required in accordance with normal commercial practice. The requirement for payment will be applied to all exports subsequent to August 1, 1945."

6481. For Clayton.

Yesterday evening final paragraph of Dept's 5132 of November 2 (sent to Berlin as 794 and repeated to London as 9666) was discussed with Alphand.4 On first point Alphand confirmed Embassy's understanding that difficulty does not lie in French failure expeditiously to return empties to Ruhr. On second point Alphand took note of our desire to implement central transport organization for Germany but indicated clearly that this was not a point on which they were now prepared to give way.

See telegram 487, September 10, 9 p. m., from Berlin, p. 1527.
 Hervé Alphand, Director General of Economic, Financial, and Technical Affairs, French Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

Alphand countered with information that at Frankfurt meeting late last week General Bedell Smith proposed to Monet appointment of three-man coal expert committee 5 one each from US, UK and France, which would in effect have complete responsibility for coal production and transportation within three Western Zones, each, however, reporting individually to his zone commander and through him to his Govt. Bedell Smith is stated further to have informed Monnet that if the French agreed, General Eisenhower would recommend urgently to the President that two other govts be invited to join in creating the committee. French are apparently enthusiastic and M. Bidault has strongly recommended to de Gaulle acceptance of proposal. Alphand views this as first forward step with respect to German coal since Truman directive and further that coordination of coal transport in three Western Zones envisaged in committee proposal removes necessity consideration for coal purposes at this time of central transport organization in Berlin.6

Alphand also expressed regret that Angell ⁷ lacked Washington instructions to discuss with Foreign Office economic aspects of French position of Ruhr, Rhineland.

gomery's telegram about the directive on German coal. (Re Department's 7288, 25 August.) The question has required very careful consideration and I am now able to give you the views of His Majesty's Government.

- 2. "There is no intention on the part of His Majesty's Government or Field Marshal Montgomery to depart from the principle that so long as there is a serious shortage of coal in Europe the needs of the civil populations of the liberated countries must have preference over the needs of the civil population of Germany. On this point there does not seem to be any difference between the British views and those of the US Government.
- 3. "Nor does it seem that there is any difference between us (although you do not specifically mention the point in your letter) on the necessity of providing some coal for local use in Germany, to meet which the words 'civil and blank' were (at our suggestion and with your agreement) inserted in the last sentence of paragraph 2 of the directive so that it read 'blank subordinate only to the civil and military requirements necessary to ensure the safety, security, health maintenance and operation of the Allied forces blank'. The difficulty arose in deciding what are the minimum civil requirements necessary for this purpose. Since you wrote I have learned that the Combined Coal Committee has been dissolved and that a coal subcommittee has been set up under the Economic Directorate of the Allied Control Authority, among the duties of which will be the allocation of German coal for internal use and for export. You will also be aware that the Coordinating Committee of the Allied Control Authority in Berlin have instructed the Economic Directorate to study the directive on coal production and distribution addressed to Field Marshal Montgomery and to submit a report to the committee at the earliest possible moment.
- 4. "Meanwhile we are informing Field Marshal Montgomery that in the practical application of the directive he is entitled to exercise the powers of discretion normally enjoyed by a Commander in Chief in the field provided always that the needs of the civil population in the liberated territories concerned have preference over the needs of the civil population of Germany and that the general standard of coal consumption in Germany remains below that in those liberated territories.
- 5. "We note that the US Government welcome the proposal for a commission to be appointed to study on the spot various matters concerned with the production of coal in the Ruhr. His Majesty's Government are in agreement and also share the view expressed in your letter that the appointment of such a commission by ECO is inadvisable.

His Majesty's Government are instructing the Commander in Chief of the British zone to set up a commission with broad terms of reference embracing the points you mentioned. He is also being instructed to consult with the Commanders of the American and French zones about the arrangements for the Commission, with particular reference to the appointment by those commanders of American and French representatives as members of the Commission.

His Majesty's Government propose that the Commission should report in the first place to Field Marshal Montgomery and that copies of this report should be sent simultaneously to the US and French zone Commanders. They suggest that the question of reference to the Allied Control Council should be left open for further discussion.

6. "In taking this course His Majesty's Government are determined that no practical measures should be neglected that may enable the Commander in Chief of the British zone to increase the production of coal and exports to liberated countries. We hope therefore that the US authorities will cooperate in the arrangements we propose to this end."

Following comment on Ronald's letter to Blaisdell is offered:

- a. Reply indicates that pending comment by Economic Directorate of the Allied Control Authority on Prime Minister's coal directive (and presumably the parallel directives issued by the heads of the US and French Governments) the directive is suspended by British Government insofar as it requires a specific export target. It will be recalled that Montgomery's reply to directive questioned ability to meet export target of 10,000,000 tons by end of year and additional 15,000,000 tons by 30th April. The new instructions to Montgomery described in letter to Blaisdell have neither affirmed original target nor indicated desirability of any alternative target. Only criterion now affirmed for determining export volume is that general standard of coal consumption in Germany shall be below that of liberated countries. Responsibility for determining whether or not this test which is subject to wider latitude of interpretation has been met is apparently delegated to Montgomery. Inferential negation of specific export target would render meaningless the parallel directive from President to Commanding General US Zone, since coal exports must come chiefly from British zone.
- b. It should be noted that total German coal exports to France, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg, Denmark and Norway 4 months July-October amount to approximately 2,000,000 tons. It is indicated that German allocation for December delivery to these countries will be less than 900,000 instead of 1,200,000 as earlier projected by former Combined Coal Committee of CRAB.
- c. It does not seem to us that suggested commission, as UK now proposes to constitute it, would serve any significant purpose. Initial Montgomery suggestion was the British Government name a commission outside of BAOR [Board?] to examine production possibilities. US welcomed this in principle but proposed that commission should be jointly named by UK, US and French Governments, that it have broad terms of reference with respect to production and transport of coal in 3 western zones of occupation and that because of urgency of problem the commission should report directly to the 3 zone commanders. A commission named by Montgomery, even though including US and French nominees, and reporting to Montgomery on British zone only would constitute little more than an internal review of matters that are presumably already under frequent review by approximately the same personnel. Commission of this character would indicate that Ruhr supply was mainly a UK interest rather than a matter of urgent concern to all occupying powers as emphasized in Department's 9666 of November 2.10

- d. It is suggested that a high level overall survey of problems concerning production and transport of German coal is no less urgent than it was last August and that this approach should again be urged upon the British. In the 9 weeks, however, since US proposal was made to UK significant new developments have occurred which should now be taken into account. Allocation of German coal is now a quadripartite responsibility and Soviet has bid for Ruhr coal for its zone of occupation. Under these circumstances it would seem appropriate that despite current deadlock in Berlin on coal allocation, German coal supply position in all important aspects should be jointly explored by representatives of 4 controlling powers and that their terms of reference should embrace all 4 zones. It is suggested that an approach of this character might help overcome some of the difficulties that have resulted in current impasse. In considering all aspects of German supply position the proposed 4 party inquiry should fully examine possibility of importing Silesian coal for those areas of Germany for which it is the nearest source of supply. In the light of its findings and within the framework of the principles set forth in the directives issued by the heads of the US, UK and French Governments, the proposed commission should recommend a new export target.
- e. Presumably the proposed civilian coal adviser to the Commanding General US zone (see Department's 9390 dated October 24 11) would be the appropriate US member of the proposed commission.
- f. It would be desirable if the proposed inquiry could be initiated at the highest level and it is to be hoped, therefore, that the matter might be included in the forthcoming talks between the President and the Prime Minister.¹² In the meanwhile, it is suggested, if you concur in these recommendations, that nomination of US representative to commission to be named by Montgomery be declined for reasons stated above and that explanation of our position be given to UK in Washington and here.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, November 16, 1945—4 p. m.

10028. To Blaisdell.

- 1. French Government through its representatives in Washington has expressed serious concern regarding recommendations of American, British and Soviet representatives on Quadripartite Coal Subcommittee in Berlin on Oct. 28 to reduce Dec allocation of coal for liberated Europe from previously set figure of 1,200,000 tons to 900,000-1,000,000 tons. (See Berlin cable CM-In13103, October 28—theater CC 18205—and War Dept. cable to Berlin CM-Out 82168 of Nov. 8, 1945.13)
- 2. Concern of French regarding this matter, expressed in note of November 9 14 presented to Dept. by French Embassy and in discussions between Dept. and French representatives on November 13, comprised following points:
- a. Fear that recommendation of Oct. 28, which was to come up for decision on Nov. 10, constituted a departure from policy laid down by President Truman in directive of last July, whereby all necessary steps were to be taken to maximize production of German coal and its transport to Western Europe. French representatives referred in this connection to possibility that authorities in Berlin in making recommendation may have made too liberal allowance for minimum winter requirements necessary for safety of troops (see para 7 of

b. Proposed change in allocation would mean serious deficit in coal which French had hoped would be available to them, and this would

- affect seriously their industrial program.
 c. Expectation that proposed change in allocation would result in more coal being made available to Germans than to peoples of liberated Europe. French representatives cited in this connection certain figures telephoned to them from Paris which purported to show that as result of change average amount of coal per head in month of Dec. would be higher in Soviet and British zones than in U.S. and French zones and also higher than average in France. It was stated that neither French Government nor French public opinion would be able to understand such a state of affairs.
- 3. French representatives requested Dept. to send instructions to American representatives in Berlin reaffirming that policy of this government with respect to allocation of German coal remained same as in the July directive of President Truman, and suggesting that decisions to be taken in Nov 10 meeting be changed accordingly.

¹³ Neither printed.

¹⁴ Not printed.

- 4. In discussions with French representatives, Dept. took following position:
- a. There had been no change in policy laid down in the directive. Reference was made to discussions during General Clay's recent visit to Washington to confirm fact that there had been no change in policy laid down in directive of July, and that American representatives were fully aware of this fact.
- b. Recommendation made by Amer, British and Soviet representatives on Oct. 28, had been motivated not by change in policy or shortage in actual or anticipated production of coal but by expected transport bottlenecks which would prevent deliveries of German coal to liberated Europe in excess of 900,000 to 1,000,000 tons. Reference was made in this connection to terms of cable of Oct. 28 and to situation which had arisen with respect to allocations and liftings in month of September. It was further stated that Dept. believed that recommended allocation for month of Dec. would not preclude larger amounts being delivered to liberated Europe if transport facilities should permit greater movement of coal.
- 5. In view of reasons of preceding paragraph Dept. told French representatives that it was not necessary to send instructions to Berlin along lines suggested by them. Instead Department proposed to: (a) instruct American member of ECITO to urge that ECITO take all practical steps with view to reducing present transport impediments to greater movement of coal out of Germany into liberated Europe (b) advise American representatives in Berlin of concern of French Government regarding allocation for December.
 - 6. In connection with first proposal (para 5 (a) Dept. suggests that:
- a. Amelioration of transport facilities for movement of coal out of Germany into Western Europe be made special item of agenda of projected meeting of ECITO in Brussels towards end of November, and
- b. in view of late date of this meeting, ORMOA ¹⁵ be asked to investigate forthwith for purpose of presenting concrete suggestions to ECITO meeting in Brussels.

The Trade and Commerce Branch, Economic Division, OMGUS, would be glad to have approval to deal with neutrals consistent with four conditions suggested by the Dept. However, [it] is believed by the Trade and Commerce Branch that quadripartite or tripartite machinery is not currently organized and operating in a manner to allow it to clear proposed agreements by a zone commander with a neutral country. It is suggested as an alternative that details of such transactions be supplied to the other powers on the Trade and Commerce Committee of the Allied Control Authority without, however, asking for approval prior to the making of the trade arrangement. In view of the probable limited nature of trade with neutrals and in view of the restriction as set forth in the fourth consideration of the Dept. these agreements with neutral countries would not include any substantial sales or long term commitments. On this basis we agree with the position taken by the Trade and Commerce Branch and believe there should be immediate modification of paragraph 41 c.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff to the United States Military Governor for Germany (McNarney) ^{16a}

Washington, 24 November 1945.

War 85123. Wark 82652 17 refers.

1. Quadripartite arrangements governing exports from and imports into Germany in accordance with agreements reached at Potsdam should be agreed upon and put into effect at the earliest possible date.

17 Not printed.

^{16a} The Joint Chiefs of Staff dispatched this telegram after receiving notice of Department of State approval, supplied by H. Freeman Matthews, Director, Office of European Affairs.

- 2. Pending quadripartite agreement with respect to the arrangements governing German imports and exports, you will:
- a. Make available to each of the other Zone Commanders in Germany information with respect to indigenous resources available in your respective Zones of Occupation, import requirements and actual imports into such zones, export from such zones, and such other information as may be pertinent in order that common standards of living throughout Germany may be obtained, equitable distribution of essential commodities among the Zones of Occupation may result, and imports necessary to carry out the aims of occupation may be minimized, requesting, but not requiring, that the other Zone Commander reciprocate with similar information.

b. Enter into arrangements with the U.K. Zone Commander, and, if possible, the French Zone Commander, and also, if possible, the Soviet Zone Commander, to the following effect:

1. Each Zone Commander shall determine the import requirements for his own zone on the basis of full utilization of indigenous resources, including maximum authorized production, and maximum possible interzonal exchange of surpluses.

2. All Zone Commanders participating in the arrangements shall establish machinery for joint screening and approval of zonal import requirements in order to insure that such requirements are calculated on as nearly a uniform basis as possible and that aggregate requirements approximate the net deficit of all zones involved.

3. After screening and approval, each Zone Commander shall submit to his Government the zonal import requirements agreed upon, together with available information concerning requirements for zones the commanders of which have not participated in the screening and approval arrangements, in order that his Government may be advised simultaneously of the aggregate imports for Germany as a whole and the zonal division thereof.

4. Exports from the respective zones out of current production or stocks, excluding interzonal transactions, shall be paid for in full by the recipients and the proceeds pooled to defray the costs of imports into Germany. Until termination of the present interim payment arrangements agreed within the Control Council on a quadripartite basis, Zone Commanders may, however, postpone immediate payment of a percentage, not exceeding 20% of the purchase price.

5. Exports from the respective zones, excluding interzonal transactions, will be made only to those recipients who are paying in accordance with (4) above for all exports from current production and stocks from any zone in Germany.

6. Prices for such exports from Germany shall be fixed on an individual commodity basis by agreement among the Zone Commanders in Germany participating in the arrangements.

7. All proceeds from exports shall be pooled and prorated among the occupying powers whose Zone Commanders participate in these arrangements in Germany in proportion to their contribution to the financing of German imports. The contribution of the occupying powers to the financing of German imports shall include not only their respective contribution to current imports approved in accordance with these arrangements, but also their respective outlay (and that of Canada) on imports provided to meet needs in Germany prior to the consummation of such arrangements. Pending agreements between the Zone Commanders participating in these arrangements as to the basis for recognizing contribution to past imports in the distribution of export proceeds, such proceeds shall as an interim measure be used in the first instance to defray the contribution of the occupying powers to current imports provided under such arrangements.

8. In order to facilitate this pooling and distribution of export proceeds, such proceeds shall so far as possible be collected in currencies required for the purposes of such distribution. In particular, sufficient US dollars or other freely convertible currencies shall be collected to meet the pro rata share of occupying powers whose outlay for imports has been made in free currencies. In special cases, however, justified by exceptional supply, transportation or other considerations, any Zone Commander may permit exports from his zone against payment in goods, the importation of which is to meet requirements approved under these arrangements, or in non-convertible currencies with which such goods may be currently acquired, reporting any such action to the other Zone Commanders participating in these arrangements. It is the intention that such transactions should not be entered into in cases where the importing country is able to pay in convertible currencies.

- 9. The above outlined arrangements shall continue in effect until the cost to the occupying powers whose Zone Commanders participate in the arrangements of imports into Germany shall have been fully met out of the proceeds of German exports; but this is to be without prejudice to quadripartite arrangements and adjustments which may subsequently be made.
- 3. Identical instructions are being transmitted to the UK Zone Commander in Germany.

The Control Council has advised not only the French but all recipient countries of Western Europe that exports could be increased from Dec allocations of 900,000 tons to 1.2 million tons, if additional wagons and locomotives can be made available. Control Council makes blanket allocations to Western Europe and follows ECO (European Coal Organization) allocations as between various countries concerned. Accordingly the offer was not limited to France.

This appears to be a matter for ECO consideration and the Dept's cable and this cable are being repeated to London.

The Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)

Washington, November 29, 1945—8 p.m.

971. Dept anxious to ascertain exact status of discussions regarding establishment and functions of Allied Export-Import Authority and formulation of export-import program referred to in urtel 753, Oct 11. Information also required on steps taken in each zone to implement ACC decision of Sept 20 to require payment for exports from current production and stocks, in particular on prices being charged for exports, amount and foreign exchange composition of payments, if any, collected up to present for exports from each zone, extent of cooperation by French and Russians in implementing scheme and difficulties experienced in carrying out decision.

Dept has given some thought to export policies and procedures and urges you discuss following proposals with General Clay for purpose of transmitting comments to Dept:

1. In order to stimulate economic recovery outside Germany, in particular in liberated areas and ultimately to increase exports from Germany to a level sufficient for payment of approved essential imports occupying authorities should (a) take active steps to uncover particularly in plants which are or may be declared available for reparation or are likely to remain idle or almost wholly idle for some time, stocks of raw materials, semi-finished and finished goods (excluding industrial equipment made available on reparation account) which are not required in near future for minimum needs in Germany, (b) investigate possibility, taking into account requirements for labor, transport, coal and power involved, of producing and making available for export substantial quantities of potash, salt, timber and any other products of extractive industries which may be obtained in Germany and are required for economic recovery abroad, (c) investigate possibility of reviving selected industries and crafts such as textiles, leather goods, ceramics and toys which in view of demand abroad and required input of raw materials and power might be expected to produce substantial exports, and (d) submit recommendations on (b) and (c) above to govts of occupying powers.

2. Export authorities in Germany should transmit any information on export availabilities to governments of occupying powers (e.g., through USPolAd ¹⁹ to Dept), to military missions of non-occupying powers in Germany, and, through such channels as are available to occupying powers, to AC, ²⁰ Austria and such other govts as the export authorities agree should be notified. Governments of occupying powers should be permitted to transmit this information at their individual discretion to any other governments which may be interested in such exports. Same channels should be used for transmitting to export authorities in Germany inquiries from abroad, regarding availability of different types of goods for export. In declaring goods available for export, export authorities in Germany should supply full information on grade, quality, price and conditions of purchase of such goods and make possible, where necessary, inspection of the goods by interested governments or importers accredited by them.

- 3. Export authorities in Germany should decide, after consultation with the governments of the occupying powers, whether goods declared available for export should be subject to allocation among claimant countries, in view of the importance of the product to the economies of such countries and prevailing conditions of supply and demand. Whenever it is decided to allocate any particular commodity or product, the export authorities should seek guidance on allocation from a committee consisting of representatives of the staff of the political advisers to the occupying authorities and of the military missions of European United Nations in Germany (i.e. Norway, Denmark, Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugo, and Greece). The representatives of the occupying powers on this committee should represent or arrange for the representation of the interests of Austria and UNRRA, 21 and they should also be free to advance claims to allocation on behalf of any other countries which, according to list above, are not represented on the committee. It should be noted that this arrangement is in substitution for recommendations from EECE 22 because above committee would be more representative. Present ECO 23 function respecting allocation of coal from Germany should, however, be left undisturbed.
- 4. Goods available for export not subject to allocation should be either offered at specific prices and other conditions of purchase or sold at bids which in opinion of export authorities in Germany would provide highest return in terms of approved essential imports into Germany.
- 5. Exports to neutrals should be on terms set forth in Depts 701, Oct 22, with modification suggested urtel 1044, Nov 17, to apply until agreement reached on Allied Export-Import Authority and quadripartite export program, and with further modifications designed to make the conditions of payment conform to those outlined in para. 6 below. Dept prepared to seek modification of JCS 1067 in this sense.

For documentation on interest of the United States in the establisment of a European Economic Committee and a European Coal Organization, see vol. 11, pp. 958 ff.

6. Interim arrangement for payment of German exports approved by ACC Sept 20 should be replaced by agreement requiring full payment of all exports from stocks and current production in currencies which can be used to pay for current approved imports into Germany and to reimburse occupying powers (and Canada) for their past outlay on such imports, with proviso that in special cases justified by exceptional supply, transportation or other considerations and by inability of importing country to pay in convertible foreign exchange, payment might be accepted in goods constituting approved imports into Germany or in inconvertible currencies which can be used for purchase of such imports. Such arrangement would necessitate agreement ensuring that there would be no substantial exports of stocks under guise of war booty and that there would be no reparation from current output at least until after prior charge on export proceeds such as payment of approved imports and externally incurred occupation costs were met. On latter point agreement would presumably have to be reached in quadripartite Reparation Commission.24 Meanwhile Dept wishes to ascertain whether in fact Soviet Union is now obtaining stocks of goods and current output from its zone and whether these are regarded as war booty, reparation, or commercial imports from Germany.

7. Until it becomes possible to establish an exchange rate between the Reichsmark and foreign currencies and admit private importers into Germany, trade transactions between Germany and foreign countries should be handled by official agencies both in Germany and in importing country. Dept is discussing with US Commercial Company arrangements whereby USCC would (a) receive, record and transmit to export authorities in Germany inquiries from US and countries without own channels of communication with Germany regarding availability for export from Germany of various types of products, (b) advise US representative on advisory allocation committee suggested in para 3 as to US claims to any German export product which is subject allocation, and (c) arrange for purchase of any German exports on behalf of US and any countries not represented in Germany for which we may wish to make arrangements.

Dept would appreciate prompt comment on these proposals so that appropriate instructions on export policies might be despatched through War Dept. Such instructions would call for provisional application of policies in US zone pending negotiation of agreement on such or similar policies in ACC in connection with export-import program for Germany as whole.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, December 7, 1945—7 p. m. [Received December 7—6:43 p. m.]

1195. Reference Department's cable 971, November 29, 1945, 8 p. m., concerning export-import policy for Germany. Proposals for the establishment of an Allied export-import authority became stalled in the Trade and Commerce Committee and in the Economic Directorate and have now been referred to the Coordinating Committee, where it is hoped at least some discussion can take place. In the meantime, OMGUS Trade and Commerce officials are attempting to work out a system with the British which will allow exports from one zone to be used in a common pool to pay for certain imports into either zone. At the same time, however, American officials are exerting every effort to obtain the establishment of an Allied export-import authority. To date we know of no instances where exports from any of the zones have been paid off in US dollars.

In paragraph 6 the Department refers to exports of stocks under guise of war booty as well as exports for reparations from current output. The Soviets have removed considerable amount of stocks as war booty and according to unofficial but reliable information continue to receive current production of goods such as textiles, presumably as reparations. To our knowledge there is no such thing as commercial German exports to the Soviet. Accordingly, we urge that the Reparations Commission consider as a matter of urgency the establishment of specific arrangements which would require payments for exports on a genuine quadripartite basis.

Information contained in the Department's cable has been available to officials in OMGUS and their reactions will be cabled as soon as available.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

Washington, December 11, 1945—8 p. m.

2503. In July this year the President, Prime Minister, and de Gaulle issued directives to respective zone commanders in Germany emphasizing the necessity of export of coal from Germany to liberated areas.

Although some progress has been made production-wise, transportation difficulties and lack of coordinated action among zones have caused deliveries to liberated areas to fall far below expectations. During this time there has been much discussion concerning appointment of special civilian coal advisers who could form a coal commission representing all zones thereby securing proper coordination and integration of operations.

To date, most of these discussions have taken place among the three western powers. We believe, however, that any action in this direction should include the Eastern Zone of Germany as well.

We have now reached agreement with military authorities here that Civilian Coal Adviser shall be appointed in U.S. Zone responsible directly to Deputy Commander for all coal production and movement problems to maximize exports of coal from Germany.

Directive is now being cleared and upon approval President will request Joint Chiefs of Staff to issue it. At same time Secretary of State will issue invitation to governments of USSR, United Kingdom and France to take similar action and issue comparable directive to their zone commanders. Directive provides for coal adviser to work with similar officials in other three zones on all problems concerning production, movement, and export of coal. Also provides for free access of movement of zone advisers in U.S. zone and it is expected that directive issued by other three governments will include similar courtesy.

We anticipate final approval of directive within next week at which time formal invitation will be directed to other governments as mentioned above.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in France (Caffery) 25

Washington, December 27, 1945.

6047. 1. The President has asked the Joint Chiefs of Staff to issue the following directive to the Commander of the U.S. Zone in Germany.²⁶

"In order to assist in obtaining the maximum production and export of coal from Germany an outstanding United States coal production expert will be designated by the Secretary of War to act as adviser, to the Deputy Military Governor, Office of Military Government (US) Germany.

It is desired that such expert report and be responsible directly to the Deputy Military Governor; that he be authorized, subject to the Deputy Military Governor's control, to take directly such steps as may be required in the U.S. Zone to accomplish the maximum production and export of coal from Germany and to disregard the normal channels or echelons of command in the U.S. zone when necessary to the attainment of that objective; and that you make available adequate facilities for the performance of his mission, including such special assistants as may be required. Procedure to be used by such expert for dealing with military, governmental or civilian agencies outside the U.S. Zone shall be as prescribed by you.

 $^{^{25}\,\}rm This$ message was repeated, $mutatis\ mutandis$, in telegram 2641 to Moscow and telegram 11096 to London. $^{26}\,\rm Gen.$ Joseph T. McNarney.

The governments of the United Kingdom, France and U.S.S.R. will be invited to designate civilian coal production experts with similar relation in responsibility and authority within the military government organizations in Germany of the United Kingdom, French and U.S.S.R. Governments. It is desired that the four coal production experts coordinate the efforts of the four zone commanders in Germany to produce, distribute and export coal. To that end, you will cooperate with all such coal production experts by permitting them free access to all areas in your zone and by affording full facilities to them for the purpose of increasing coal production and improving its distribution.

In the event important conflicts arise between demands for production, distribution and export of coal and other demands of your military government responsibilities or your responsibilities for the redeployment of troops, you will submit such conflicting demands through established channels for the decision of your government.

The Governments of the United Kingdom, France and USSR will be advised of the appointment of a U.S. coal expert and of the issuance of this directive and it will be suggested that similar directives be issued by these governments to their commanders in Germany in connection with their appointments of civilian coal production experts."

2. You are requested to prepare and deliver a note to the French Government embodying the substance of following:

Since the issuance in August 1945 of the coal directive by the heads of the governments of the United Kingdom, France, and the U.S. to their respective zone commanders, the U.S. Government has become convinced that further steps must be taken to insure that all possible progress is made toward the attainment of the objective of maximizing exports of German coal to liberated areas.

Although the coal directive previously referred to concerned only the operations in the three western zones, it is the view of the U.S. Government that the problem of export of coal is of direct concern to all four of the occupying powers.

Each zone commander, therefore, must be familiar with and interested in all the problems concerning the production and movement of coal in all the zones in Germany.

The U.S. Government views this problem as having such great importance that it has determined to appoint an outstanding civilian adviser immediately to assume the responsibilities, under the direct authority and supervision of the Deputy Zone Commander in the U.S. Zone of Germany, for all problems relating to coal production, movement, and export in Germany with which the U.S. Zone Commander is concerned, both in the U.S. Zone and elsewhere. Accordingly, a directive has been issued by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the U.S. Zone Commander in Germany which outlines the duties and responsibilities of this civilian coal expert. A copy of the directive is attached. It will be noted that this directive contemplates that comparable appointments will be made by the governments of the other occupying powers.

Accordingly, the U.S. Government suggests that the Government of France make a similar appointment and issue a comparable directive to the Zone Commander of the French Zone in Germany. It is hoped that powers and facilities for the coal advisers from other zones similar to those contained in the U.S. Directive can be provided. This suggestion is also being made to the governments of USSR and UK.

The early appointment of coal advisers for all the zones, with authority and responsibilities comparable to those of the adviser being appointed in the U.S. Zone, would provide an Advisory Commission capable of assisting all the zone commanders in solving the difficult problems of production and movement of coal in all of the zones of Germany.

3. Department feels the urgency of the problem warrants your personal delivery of this note to the Head of the Foreign Office and suggests that you advise him of the emphasis which this Government is placing on this suggested course of action. Obviously, the coal adviser in the U.S. Zone cannot operate effectively unless similar appointments are promptly made in the British, French, and Russian zones. Department feels that the coal production and movement problem in Germany is one of mutual interest and responsibility to all zone commanders and this plan for achieving the proper coordination reiterates our determination to treat Germany as an economic unit.

Berlin, December 28, 1945—9 p.m. [Received December 30—2:12 p.m.]

1348. Reference Department's 971, November 29, 8 p. m. General Clay's comments are as follows:

"Relative to the paraphrased cable from the State Department concerning the export-import program for Germany, my views are:

"Paragraph 1. Concur.

"Paragraph 2. Concur.

"Paragraph 3. This office does not believe that paragraph 3 is feasible or that the proposed procedure would develop a satisfactory export program. The Allied Control Council or, in the absence of quadripartite agreement, the Zone Commander, must be free to sell goods to those countries which are able to pay for the goods in an approved currency. Moreover, the delays involved in an allocation procedure would interfere seriously with efforts to reach agreement and to conclude same. It is also believed that normal business machinery should be utilized at the earliest possible date and artificial governmental machinery will never provide a satisfactory means for the development of an export-import program. Moreover, freedom to sell for the highest price possible is essential and is not in keeping with the allocation procedure.

"Paragraph 4. Suggest the word 'prices' be substituted for 'bids'. "Paragraph 5. Concur, execpt that the limitations appear unnecessary.

"Paragraph 6. While this office would be inclined to concur in principle, it must be pointed out that acceptance of a barter program by the United States would be to the decided disadvantage of the US

Zone. The US Zone has little to export in comparison with other zones. Manifestly, its share of revenue from export in other zones would be greatly reduced if those zones could dispose of substantial quantities through barter to meet their own particular needs. For example, if the English could barter coal for essential commodities for the British Zone, the revenue available from sale of coal to be made available to other zones would be substantially decreased.

"Paragraph 7. It is difficult to comment on this paragraph as to the question of the utilization of private importers as compared to government agencies is one which must be resolved in Washington, and apparently is involved in the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act'.²⁸ It is the view of this office that private importing and exporting companies should be permitted to conduct business operations in Germany at the earliest possible date. Such companies would have great flexibility in buying in Germany in an approved currency but could not provide approved currency but could provide commodities in kind. These business enterprises would obviate the necessity for barter.

"In general, it is the view of this office that arrangements must be made at the earliest practicable date for direct negotiations for both exports and imports between approved German agencies and foreign business enterprises under the supervision of Military Government. It would not appear possible for Military Government to provide either the quality or quantity of personnel necessary to the transaction of a large export import program. The establishment of an elaborate allocation machine separate from Military Government with the United States Commercial Company as an advisor to the allocation machine, might well develop into such conflict of opinions that it would nullify a healthy export import program which will stand on its own feet to provide Germany with a minimum economy. If this is our objective, we should plan to use normal methods at the earliest possible date and to permit direct negotiations between the Allied Control Council and/or the Zone Commander and prospective buvers in the interim. Manifestly, some government agency in each country concerned will have to be utilized for the completion of the individual transactions."

DISCUSSIONS RELATING TO DECARTELIZATION, DECONCENTRA-TION, AND HANDLING OF THE GERMAN PUBLIC DEBT

800.602/8-2845: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)

Washington, September 11, 1945—6 p. m.

444. Urtel 387, Aug. 28.²⁹ The Dept. concurs with the objectives and administrative framework advanced in U.S. group CC ³⁰ proposed law on cartels and combines.

If your negotiations with British, Russians and French would not be unduly delayed or compromised Dept. suggests that Art. 5.a. be rewritten as follows. "Excessive concentration of economic power, whether in the form of a cartel, syndicate, trust, monopoly, combine, concern, corporation, partnership or otherwise, foreign or domestic is hereby declared contrary to the policy of the Allied occupation powers." The Control Council would implement this policy by passing specific decrees disestablishing specific combines.

Dept. believes action should follow immediately on prohibiting cartel and cartel-like organizations in Germany and German participation in international cartels. After illegality of these organizations is affirmed a policing operation will be required. Combine policy however will require highly skilled affirmative remedy.

Dept. interprets Art. 37 of JCS 1067 31 and present draft law to mean that immediate steps should be taken by the Control Council, or by commission proposed by draft law, to prepare detailed plans for the dissolution of the more important German combines. Dept. desires that as a matter of rule it be given opportunity to review and comment upon these plans while they are in process of formulation and negotiation. Dept. will provide a list of combines which might serve as basis for early detailed study.

You are requested to inform the Dept. of the personnel requirements in this operation both for the U.S. group CC and your own staff.

In near future Dept. will forward tentative suggestions prepared by Cartel Committee for techniques of disestablishing German combines.

ACHESON

²⁰ Not printed; it transmitted the text of a United States draft law which had been considered by the Coordinating Committee, composed of the deputies of the four Military Governors who sat on the Allied Control Council for Germany. The draft law called for dissolution of German domestic cartels and combines as well as prohibition of German participation in international cartels. This policy would be carried out principally through the establishment of a quadripartite Commission for Economic Decentralization (800.602/8-2845).

612. For Matthews.³² At the last meeting of the Finance Directorate, September 21, the Russian member, Maletin, made some interesting observations regarding the German national debt. He remarked that 90 per cent of the 400 billion Mark national debt is the result of war; that Germans have used loans as source of financing the war. Therefore decision as to payments must be of a political character. To decide to make payments on it, he believes, will assume payment for war losses to the German people. Such treatment would also serve to support German faith in Nazi government which borrowed the funds. In Maletin's opinion the Allied Control Council should not take on the responsibility of debt at the expense of reparations. There would be no physical possibility of payment without resort to loans. He suggested that the 1933-34 German payments amounted to 8 billion interest and 7 billion amortization, or a total of 15 billion. The 1944-1945 total was 13 billion, artificially lowered by reformation of debt and postponement of payment. If the responsibility for the old debt would be accepted the total amount required for annual payments would exceed 15 billion. Could this be done, he asks, without prejudice to reparations? In principle, the Russian representative maintained, there is no obligation to reorganize. To do so would be to contradict the Berlin Conference agreement requiring the Germans to bear responsibility of participating in the war.33

The French representative proposed to divide the problem into two parts, i.e., the old debt and the new debt; then study the effect of payment of all, part, or none of the old debt. He would also authorize issue of relatively short term new debt at Laender or large city level for the necessary rebuilding of utilities, investing new deposits, reducing cash in circulation. According to information in French Zone, situation favorable to issue loans against fresh money.

Berlin, September 27, 1945—8 p. m. [Received 8:10 p. m.]

637. In view of the over-all political implications involved, the following submitted for the Department's information and comment.

Private banks are operating in the Western Zones of Germany on a fairly unrestricted basis in terms of both old and new accounts. In the Soviet Zone private banks have not reopened and reports indicate that some sort of a state, or at least municipal, banking system is emerging. In Berlin, private banks have not reopened even for new accounts. A municipal bank, or Stadtkontor, has been established with 21 branches throughout the city.

Allied military authorities have deposited 100 million Marks in the Berlin Stadtkontor. The bank now makes only loans of a purely commercial character (no industrial loans) all of which are first approved by the Finance Division of the Berlin Kommandatura.³⁴ There are insufficient funds to satisfy extensive borrowing needs of enterprises located in Berlin but of national character.

The continued operation of private banks in the western zones with closed head-offices in Berlin and with no Reichsbank or central clearing system is an anomalous situation. The Soviet view is that all German banks are insolvent because of their huge holdings of the Reich debt. (For the official Soviet view as to the value of such debt, see our telegram 612, September 25, 4 p. m.) The American Military Government detachment in Berlin, apparently reflecting Kommandatura views, feels that the problem of opening Berlin banks is outside their scope and is a matter for Control Council action.

It is generally believed that reopening of headquarters of private banks will require (1) some compromise on the amount of devaluation of the Reich debt. There has been no explicit devaluation in the Western Zones although the ultimate need for such action is generally realized. (2) A central clearing system and (3) a central currency issue. These matters are under consideration, but little positive progress has yet been made in the Finance Directorate of the Control Council.

Private German bankers in Berlin believe that the Soviet intends to establish a system of municipal, industrial and provincial or Agrarian banks in the Soviet Zone, including Berlin. These institutions would monopolize all financial transactions and through control of credit could run the entire economy—within the area concerned—without the need for formal nationalization. If such development should occur, the question arises as to whether a compromise central banking system could be established which would allow the continuation of private banking in the Western Zones.

There are already indications that some bankers in the Western Zones are attempting to establish a makeshift central system in the West. For example, the Dresdner Bank is attempting to establish a central office to cover the Western Zones with Departments modelled after the Departments of the former Central Bank in Berlin.35 agreeing in principle, asked further time to study the matter. The meeting agreed to defer action on CORC/P (45) 97 until their next meeting."

The Department is aware of the numerous recent proposals for quadripartite (and unilateral) action in regard to seizure or confiscation of property in Germany ranging from Wehrmacht lands and war plants for reparation, through property of Nazi organizations and of war criminals, to large farms, and to other private property, where in some cases many stockholders are involved. The Department's views regarding the policy it believes should govern such measures, having in mind the various categories of owners and types of property involved, as well as the various kinds of action proposed ranging from simple requisition to confiscation presumably without compensation, would be appreciated.

Department will have noted that Soviet and French representatives have consistently favored more drastic forms of action; whereas the British have been reluctant, and even unwilling, to depart from traditional conceptions of private property. American officials on the other hand are torn at times between the above views and the Department's guidance would be helpful.

802. The fourteenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee took place on October 16 with the French member presiding.

The Committee first considered the proposed law prohibiting cartels and excessive concentration of economic power in Germany, the full text of which was contained in my 735, October 10, 1 p. m.⁴² The suggestion of the American member to withhold final approval of the law pending its consideration by the State Department was denied on the grounds that the law had been unanimously approved in the Economic Directorate and that it was believed to be thoroughly in accord with Washington policy.

In the discussion, however, in spite of the law's having been approved by the Russian member of the Economic Directorate, General Sokolovsky criticized it and suggested it be amended to include specific criteria for designation industrial concerns subject to the law. He thought that any firm whose output exceeded a definite fixed percentage share of the total German production of any commodity or whose annual turnover of employed exceeded some definite figure should come under the operation of the law. The British member felt that the setting of such specific criteria would be difficult. General Clay agreed with the Russian criticism and proposed that firms whose production accounted for 10% of total German production of any commodity, or whose annual turnover exceeded 25,000,000 RM or which employed over 3,000 employees be subject to the operation of the law.

It was finally decided to return the law to the Directorates for further study and the inclusion of as precise criteria as could be agreed upon. If these could not be speedily agreed upon, then a legal text of the present draft was to be prepared to be followed by more specific administrative regulations.

Suggest that advice needed by Regional Economic Offices be obtained if necessary only from individual Germans or from temporary ad hoc committees called in on specific problems. Such committees should not have opportunity to agree in advance on answers to problems submitted. Formation of associations will cut off Economic Offices from dissident advice as membership will in effect become compulsory by pressure of groups. 844. Reference teletype conference of October 24 concerning proposed law on decentralization of German economic power and urtel 708, October 22, 9 a. m. 46 Legal Directorate meeting in which proposed suggestions will be discussed has been postponed until Saturday.

It is essential that I be immediately informed on whether it is the Dept's determined policy that article I of the proposed law—as quoted in our telegram 735, October 10, 1 p. m. ⁴⁷—should be changed in terms of the suggestions from Washington in the Teletype Conference to the effect that "any one of the following factors should constitute an excessive concentration of economic power" (and thus are forbidden and must be eliminated).

A. The engaging, directly or indirectly, by any business unit in enterprises or activities of a dissimilar character or covering distinct stages of production.

C. The employment by any enterprise or activity of or more employees in any single line of commerce.

D. The production by any enterprise or activity of a commodity exceeding an annual turnover of RM (Reichsmarks).

General Clay has already suggested that A above should be considered not as mandatory, but instead only as a factor to be considered. The Dept will realize, of course, that if the American representatives are forced to insist upon B, C and D above as mandatory provisions, it may well jeopardize early agreement for any decentralization law because of British opposition.

If B, C and D above are to be mandatory, it is essential that the Dept give at least its advice as to the figures to fill in the blank spaces.

869. The sixteenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee took place on Oct 26 with the French member presiding.

As to the law vesting and marshalling German external assets which had been held up in the past by British objections, the British still objected to the clauses: (1) covering property of German nationals residing outside Germany; (2) covering property of German businesses or corporations; (3) giving the proposed External Property Commission the right to add to the categories of persons affected; (4) covering property transferred to nominees or trustees. The British member made it clear that he did not object to the purpose of these clauses but merely feared that they would be ineffective legally. The other three members shared the British misgivings but felt the matter sufficiently important to warrant the effort. As a result of the attitude of the others, the British member agreed to the full text of the law. General Clay stated that he felt the British willingness to comply with the opinions of the other members was a hopeful sign for the success of four-part govt in Germany.⁴⁹

Washington, October 30, 1945—noon.

764. Urtel 844 Oct 26. Following is Dept's reconsidered position which you are requested to negotiate.

Standards to be suggested for Article I your draft shall apply only to organizations which have assets in excess of 10,000,000 RM, based on 1938 RM valuation.

Dept believes it essential that definite standards be set up to determine what constitutes an "excessive concentration of economic power", since it would be just as difficult to negotiate such standards in subsequent administrative rulings and decrees as in present draft law.

⁴⁹ For approval of the law on vesting and marshalling by the Allied Control Council, see telegram 896, October 31, 6 p. m., from Berlin, p. 848; for prior consideration by the Control Council, see pp. 832–842, passim; for application of this law outside Germany, see vol. II, pp. 852 ff.

Dept believes it is essential that substance of A. and B. of Dept's version of Article I be considered as the factors constituting an "excessive concentration of economic power".

Dept suggests that A. should read as follows:

"A. Engaging directly or indirectly by any business unit in enterprises or activities of a dissimilar character or in distinctly different lines of commerce."

It should be noted that this statement omits reference to "distinct stages of production" as mentioned in A. of urtel 844.

Dept suggests that B. should read as follows:

"B. The owning or controlling by any enterprise of more than 25% of the total productive capacity in any single line of commerce." Dept suggests 25% as provisional, and expects that OMGUS, which has more facilities for on the spot investigations exercise its own discretion in this matter.

Dept now believes that C. and D. of Dept's version of Article I should not be included in present draft law unless opposite govts insist.

Dept believes that spirit of Article V ⁵⁰ in your draft will require change in view of suggested mandatory provisions in our Article I.

proved by Legal Directorate 30 Oct cabled AGWar ⁵⁵ for Clay 31 Oct and now repeated to you as follows:

"Control Council law No. blank entitled Prohibition of Excessive Concentration of German Economic Power. In accordance with paragraph 12 of the Potsdam decisions, ⁵⁶ and for the purpose of preventing Germany from endangering the safety of her neighbours or again constituting a threat to them or to international peace, and in order to destroy Germany's economic potential to wage war, and in order to facilitate Germany's reconstruction on a peaceful and democratic basis, it is essential that German economy should be decentralized by the elimination of all excessive concentration of economic power as exemplified, in particular, by cartels, syndicates, trust combines and other types of monopolistic or restrictive arrangements which could be used by Germany as instruments of political or economic aggression.

Participation by Germany in international cartels and similar arrangements is forbidden.

The Control Council therefore enacts as follows:

ARTICLE I

a. Excessive concentrations of German economic power, whether within or without Germany and whatever their form or character, are prohibited and must be eliminated.

b. Unless expressly exempted by the Economic Directorate of the Allied Control authority, the following shall be deemed excessive concentrations of economic power within the meaning of this law:

1. Every enterprise controlling, directly or indirectly, more than blank percent of the total German production or other economic activity in the industry or field to which it belongs;

2. Every enterprise controlling, directly or indirectly, a volume of business (as expressed in annual turnover) of more than blank million Reichsmark;

- 3. Every enterprise employing, directly or indirectly, more than blank persons.
- c. It shall be the duty of the Economic Directorate to determine by general or special order whether other enterprises or activities, not enumerated in paragraph b above, constitute excessive concentrations of economic power within the meaning of this law. In making such determinations the Economic Directorate shall give due consideration to the following factors:
 - 1. The percentage of total German production or other economic activity which the enterprise or activity controls in the industry or field to which it belongs.

2. The volume of business it controls, directly or indirectly, as expressed in annual turnover.

3. The number of persons employed by it, directly or indirectly.

⁵⁶ Reference is to paragraph 12 of the political and economic principles to govern the treatment of Germany in the initial control period; see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. π, pp. 1483 and 1504.

- 4. The character of its production and the nature of its activities.
- 5. The nature and extent of its participation in any contract, agreement, combination, practice or other arrangement or relationship of a restrictive or monopolistic character, e.g., such as tend to create special privileges in the purchase or sale of materials, restrictions upon production, distribution or prices, allocation of territories, or the exclusive exchange of patents or technical information.
- 6. Any other factors bearing on the war potential resulting from the concentration of economic power.
- 7. Any grouping of enterprises or activities of dissimilar character or covering distinct stages of production.
- d. The Economic Directorate may exempt in whole or in part, and on such terms and conditions as it may deem appropriate, any arrangement, act or thing prohibited by this article, if it finds that such exemption is consistent with the declared purposes of this law and is also required to further some other declared objective of the occupying powers.

ARTICLE II

Participation, directly or indirectly, by any German person, in any cartel, combination, enterprise, activity or relationship in restraint of international trade or commerce is hereby declared illegal and prohibited. This provision shall not be construed, however, to prohibit ordinary agency agreements and simple transactions of purchase and sale.

ARTICLE III

The Economic Directorate is authorized to take such action in regard to the elimination of enterprises or activities forbidden by this law as it finds necessary and consistent with the principles and purposes set forth in preamble including the elimination, the redistribution or removal of property, investments and other assets and the cancellation of obligations of cartels, syndicates, trusts, combines and other organizations of a monopolistic and restrictive character, or any suitable action.

ARTICLE IV

The Economic Directorate is empowered to require German persons, or any defined categories thereof, to file information regarding their business activities, relationships, or properties, domestic or foreign; and it may examine the records, papers and activities of all such persons.

ARTICLE V

The Economic Directorate is empowered to make such surveys and investigations as it deems appropriate for the fulfillment of this law.

ARTICLE VI

The elimination of excessive concentrations of German economic power as provided herein shall be completed by 31 Dec. 1946.

ARTICLE VII

Any person violating this law, or any order, decree, regulation, or directive issued pursuant hereto shall upon conviction be fined not more than Reichsmarks 100,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years or both.

ARTICLE VIII

As used in this law:

a. The term 'persons' shall include any natural or legal person, or body of persons, public corporation or governmental agency; and b. The terms 'enterprise', 'activity', and 'relationship' shall include every kind of economic, business or financial instrumentality and activity, whether in the form of a cartel, trust, combine, stock company, concern, aggregate of firms or bodies, or otherwise, and whether related by agreement, combinations, association, or understanding.

ARTICLE IX

The Economic Directorate is empowered to delegate to such subcommittees or other agencies as it may create or designate for the purpose, all or any of its duties or powers herein provided. The Directorate may in its discretion review and modify or set aside any determination by any such subcommittee or agency, and may revoke or modify its delegated authority at any time.

While property of convicted war criminals. Nazi party and affiliated and associated organizations thereof, as well as property of Wehrmacht should be confiscated without indemnification, Dept doubts wisdom of sweeping confiscation of property of industrial corporations. Such confiscation without indemnification would cause undue hardship and injustice in many cases and is not essential to policy of dispersion of control and ownership being applied in German industry and banking. Stockholdings or other ownership interest of industrialists and bankers who had responsible part in preparing and organizing Germany for war might well be confiscated. In case of I G Farben, such approach would require exploration possibilities confiscation stockholdings Schmitz, 58 Ilgner, 59 other large stockholders responsible for planning and execution of industrial, commercial phases German aggressive war, but seizure or vesting, with indemnification (probably in reichsmarks or new German Govt bonds), of holdings of persons not so responsible. Since plants and assets I G Farben already vested, confiscation of part, vesting of remainder of stock would put corporate body in hands ACC. 60 thus facilitate ultimate disposition of property at such time as I G Farben shall have been broken down into smaller independent individual entities, in accordance with whatever recommendations may be made on subject of cartels and combines.

tain acrimony on the questions of restitution and decentralization of German economy.

- (3) A long discussion ensued on the draft law on the decentralization of German economy (see my 802, October 18, 2 [3] p.m.). There was general agreement on the top figure to be set for any particular German enterprise, namely, employment of 3,000 workers, 25 million marks turnover and 10% of total business in the line of enterprise. Issue that arose was whether a particular undertaking exceeding these limits should be automatically closed down. British member maintained that turnover limit was unfair in view of possible price rises and also that departure of one industry from the field of competition might result in mandatory closing of the others. He contended that an enterprise exceeding the limits should have recourse to the Control Council which would determine whether dangerous concentration of industry existed. This view was strongly opposed by the US and Russian members and General Clay stated he would have to advise the US Govt and await further instructions.
- (4) Draft law on the seizure and control of I. G. Farbenindustrie, which was based on US proposal (see my 767, October 13, 1 p. m.⁶¹) was adopted and sent to the Control Council following certain clarifying amendments regarding the creation of a committee consisting of control officers each appointed by their respective zone commanders. Article (I) of law provides that all plants, properties and assets of any nature situated in Germany which were, on or after May 8, 1945, owned or controlled by I. G. Farbenindustrie, are hereby seized and the legal title thereto is vested in the Control Council.⁶²

Washington, December 20, 1945-8 p. m.

10966. Quadripartite discussions proceeding for several months in Allied Control Council re law for deconcentration of control of German economy in accordance with Potsdam decisions, para. 12. US, French, and Russians have agreed on following mandatory standards to define excessive concentrations of economic power: Employment of more than 3,000 persons, annual turnover exceeding 25,000,000 RM, and control of more than 20 per cent of total productive capacity by a given firm in the industry to which it belongs.

Other discretionary standards for guidance of Economic Directorate in making determinations in particular cases as to excessive concentration also included. Proposed law contains escape clause providing exemption from application of measures at discretion of Economic Directorate.

British members ACC have refused to accept any mandatory standards. You are requested to discuss this refusal with appropriate members British Govt to determine Govt's reasons for this position and to suggest modification. It should be made clear that Dept does not insist upon any of the three standards mentioned above. Others could be suggested, such as "no enterprise in Germany shall own or control more than one establishment unless it can be demonstrated that considerations of technical efficiency are substantially involved".

⁶⁴ Not printed; for summary, see footnote 35, p. 1562. ⁶⁵ Telegram 1143, December 27, 6 p. m., to Berlin, informed Mr. Murphy that the War Department had been apprised of his opinions and that the State Department had requested from the War Department "a reasoned statement of the case for total repudiation including evaluation of consequences for banking, insurance, and other institutions holding large portion of assets in form of government debt." (862.51/12-745)

It should be explained to British that purpose of Depts position in supporting mandatory standards is to establish clear presumption in outstanding cases of large combines that deconcentration will be carried out. Dept believes this to be minimum undertaking in view of US Govts repeated and firm declarations on subject and in view of public disclosure of pre-war and war activities of many German enterprises.

Since discussions in ACC on this subject have been broken off, Dept requests your urgent attention.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, December 22, 1945—5 p. m. [Received December 23—11:08 a. m.]

13432. Dept's 10966, December 20, 8 p. m. Question of mandatory standards on German economic concentration discussed today with Burrows of German Dept, Lincoln of Economic Relations Dept and Ritchie of Control Office for Germany and Austria. That [They?] indicated instructions had just been sent BritEmb Washington to urge Brit viewpoint on Dept.

We were assured categorically and repeatedly that British Govt fully shared our objective on deconcentration and that its objections to mandatory standards arose solely from administrative viewpoint; i.e. they did not want a law passed which they considered unenforceable and which would impose an unnecessarily heavy administrative burden on control authorities. They maintained that any mandatory standards tight enough to be really worth while would catch many unexceptionable firms, that size alone did not make an enterprise objectionable, that attempts to enforce a law containing mandatory standards would be administratively impracticable and thereby lead to ridicule in Germany. They also attached importance to point that discretionary standards would require 4 power agreement to shut down an enterprise whereas mandatory standards would require all enterprises including unobjectionable ones not meeting them to be shut down at once with 4 power agreement required to reopen them. This they assert would freeze German economy unduly and unnecessarily. They advocate beginning by shutting down most obviously overconcentrated enterprises and proceeding progressively to close down next largest and so on down.

After stressing views given in penultimate paragraph of Dept's 10966 we suggested that apparent unanimity of purpose should make agreement possible despite apparent flat deadlock on question of whether or not law should contain mandatory standards. Making clear that we were speaking personally and with no idea whether Dept would agree we suggested possibility of strengthening article 5 of Economic Directorates draft (CORC/P) 45 (113 annex A) 66 to provide that Dept's criteria would constitute prima facie case for deconcentration of any firm not meeting them. They agreed to explore this line, expressing informal opinion they might be able to agree if it were understood criteria merely established basis for positive 4 power action to close enterprises rather than actually prohibiting them subject to exemption by agreement of 4 powers.

We suggested and they agreed that best place to work out agreement was Berlin and that it would be desirable for both Dept and FonOff, after British case had been presented in Washington, to issue new instructions to their representatives in Berlin with view to finding agreement on tightest possible administratively practicable law.

Owing to holidays there had been no opportunity for British officials to discuss matter with others in British Govt. They nevertheless indicated willingness to attempt to meet us along three different lines which they suggested. One was to utilize standards specified by Dept as basis for prima facie case (as suggested in Embassy's 13432), second was possibility of working for 6 months under law without mandatory standards with agreement to consider at end of that period new law containing mandatory standards based on experience gained in interim period. We did not encourage this approach in belief that it would be preferable to work out agreed permanent law now. Third ⁶⁶ A copy of CORC/P (45) 113 Appendix A, was transmitted to the Department as an enclosure to despatch 1497, December 11, from Berlin, neither printed. was to agree promptly on specific list of firms which should be deconcentrated or deconcentrated ⁶⁸ in any event. Martin thought we could produce list of from 100 to 200 firms. Britain thought they could produce list of from 12 to 24 firms.

Britain suggested that if law were passed without mandatory provisions all German firms be required to submit within 14 days information upon basis of which control authorities could begin deconcentration of largest firms. They also recognized necessity of providing in law (as is apparently not done in either draft) not merely for deconcentration of industry but for preventing its subsequent reconcentration.⁶⁹

REPORT OF THE AIR DIRECTORATE CONCERNING THE CREATION OF A SYSTEM OF AIR CORRIDORS TO BE USED FOR FLIGHTS IN THE RESPECTIVE ZONES OF OCCUPATION IN GERMANY

- 1. Because of the increasing number of flights between the Greater Berlin area and the respective occupied zones of the four Allied Powers in Germany and because their flights must often be undertaken in conditions of poor visibility or at night, involving risk of collisions; there is a real need to ensure safety of flights over the occupied zones and the Greater Berlin Area by means of a system of air corridors under strict rules of flight for all aircraft using the corridors.
- 2. The Aviation Committee has prepared and submitted a paper to the Air Directorate, based on the requests from the American, British and French representatives for the setting up of a system of air corridors, and designed to satisfy the requirements of the Four Powers for flights over the occupied Zones.
- 3. The Aviation Committee of the Air Directorate proposes six air corridors over occupied Germany as follows:—

Berlin-Hamburg
Berlin-Hannover (Bückeburg)
Berlin-Frankfurt on Main
Berlin-Warsaw
Berlin-Prague
Berlin-Copenhagen

each twenty English miles wide (ten miles on each side of the centre line of the corridor) which could be used by aircraft of the four Allied Nations with full freedom of action.

4. During discussion of this subject at the Meeting of the Air Directorate:

(a) The representative of the United States expressed agreement with the proposals of the Aviation Committee and recommended that a report compiled on the basis of data worked out by the Aviation Committee, should be submitted to the Coordinating Committee.

(b) The British representative agreed that it was necessary to produce a document for submission to the Coordinating Committee but that this document should include a proposal on the freedom of the air west of a line drawn North and South through Berlin. If this could not be agreed he requested the addition to the list of air corridors proposed by the Aviation Committee of a seventh corridor Bückeburg-Prague.

(c) The French representative remarked that an indispensable condition of the free use of the air corridors must be adherence to the rules of air communications.

- (d) The Soviet representative stated that the Air Directorate could request the Coordinating Committee's confirmation of the air corridors Berlin-Hamburg, Berlin-Bückeburg, and Berlin-Frankfurt on Main, necessary to provide for the needs of the occupation troops in the zone of Greater Berlin. Regarding the air corridors Berlin-Warsaw, Berlin-Prague, and Berlin-Copenhagen, as well as the seventh corridor Bückeburg-Prague proposed by the British representative, they are corridors for the usual inter-state traffic and are not related to securing the needs of the occupying forces in Berlin, therefore the question of their creation can be discussed by the Air Directorate only on the decision of higher Authority. Moreover present rules of flight in the second group of air corridors are suitable to all and do not need to be changed. In the opinion of the Soviet representative, flights along all corridors must be made in complete compliance with the rules of flying safety to be compiled by the Aviation Committee and approved by the Air Directorate.
- 5. After studying this question, the Air Directorate, at its 13th Meeting (DAIR/M(45)13, Item 99 (b)) decided:
- (1) "... " to submit to the Coordinating Committee for approval the proposals of the Aviation Committee concerning the air corridors West of Berlin: Berlin-Hamburg, Berlin-Hannover (Bückeburg), Berlin-Frankfurt on Main.

(2) "to submit for decision in principle by higher authority at the same time as the proposal of paragraph (1), the question of the establishment of corridors leading North, East and South from Berlin and of a corridor Bückeburg-Prague.

(3) "to instruct the Aviation Committee to compile rules for safety of flight along the corridors referred to in paragraph (1). These rules will be obligatory for all aircraft flying along the corridors listed in paragraph (1)."

⁷¹ Omission indicated in the original.

GERMANY 1579

6. Consequent on the above, the Air Directorate requests the Coordinating Committee:

(1) To confirm the proposals for the establishment of air corridors West of Berlin as follows: Berlin-Hamburg, Berlin-Bückeburg, Berlin-Frankfurt on Main, each twenty English miles wide. Flight over these routes (corridors) will be conducted without previous notice being given, by aircraft of the nations governing Germany.

(2) To instruct the Air Directorate to compile rules of flight and means of safeguarding flights along the corridors stated in para. (1) above.

- (3) To decide in principle or transmit for consideration by appropriate higher authority, the question of the establishment of the air corridors over occupied Germany, Berlin-Warsaw, Berlin-Prague, Berlin-Copenhagen and also the air corridor Bückeburg-Prague proposed by the British representative, as indicated in annexed Map* A). Flights over these routes (corridors) will be conducted by aircraft of the nations governing Germany without previous notice being given.
- 7. The above proposals are framed to meet the requirements in the immediate future as far as they can be now foreseen. It will nevertheless be necessary to give further consideration to these questions, from time to time, in accordance with the future development of International air communications.

309. Proposed Air Routes for Inter-Zonal Flights.

The meeting considered CORC/P(45)170.

General Robertson 73 explained that it was absolutely essential for the British to have air corridors both for flights from Berlin to Bukeburg [Bückeburg], Headquarters of the British Army of the Rhine, and from Berlin to Hamburg, where this headquarters had a number of branches.

GENERAL CLAY 74 also pointed out that the Berlin-Bukeburg [Bückeburg] air corridor was important for the Americans since it enabled them to maintain their connection with Bremen.⁷⁵

General Sokolovsky 76 then stated that he was not empowered to settle questions concerning other air corridors mentioned in the paper. viz.: Berlin-Warsaw, Berlin-Prague, Berlin-Copenhagen and Bukeburg [Bückeburg]-Prague, as these required decisions at governmental level.

On General Sokolovsky's proposal

The Meeting:

(309) Approved CORC/P(45)170 and agreed to submit it to the Control Council for confirmation of that portion which deals with air corridors from Berlin to the West.

REPORT OF THE AIR DIRECTORATE ON THE CREATION OF A SYSTEM OF AIR CORRIDORS FOR FLIGHTS BETWEEN THE ZONES OF OCCUPATION IN GERMANY

At its Twenty-third meeting the Coordinating Committee considered the report of the Air Directorate on the creation of a system of air corridors for flights between the Zones of occupation in Germany and approved the creation of the three following air corridors from Berlin to the west:

Berlin-Hamburg, Berlin-Bückeburg and Berlin-Frankfurt-on-

As regards the request of the Directorate for a decision on the question of creating corridors as follows:

Berlin-Warsaw, Berlin-Prague, Berlin-Copenhagen and Bückeburg-Prague, the Coordinating Committee decided that this question did not fall within its competence and must be settled at the Governmental level.

In accordance with Conclusion 309 of the Minutes of the Coordinating Committee meeting of the 27th November (CORC/M(45)23) the attached document 78 is submitted for the consideration of the Control Council at their Thirteenth meeting on the 30th November, 1945.

110. Proposed Air Routes for Inter-Zonal Flights.

The Meeting had before them CONL/P(45)63.80

Marshal Zhukov ⁸¹ recalled that the Coordinating Committee had approved the establishing of three air corridors, namely, Berlin-Hamburg, Berlin-Bückeburg and Berlin-Frankfurt-on-Main.

FIELD MARSHAL MONTGOMERY ⁸² expressed the hope that in due course the question of establishing the remaining air corridors would be settled satisfactorily.

GERMANY 1583

General Koenig 83 approved the paper in principle and shared the opinion of Field Marshal Montgomery.

Marshal Zhukov expressed himself confident that in due course the other air corridors would be opened. He added that he would like to make a proposal on this paper. He assumed that his colleagues would give the Soviet military authorities the right to fly along these air corridors into the Western zones and would consent to put at their disposal appropriate airfields for landing Soviet aircraft, or at least allow Soviet ground staffs on terminal and intermediate airfields along the proposed air corridors to facilitate the servicing of Soviet aircraft. The reason which Marshal Zhukov gave for the necessity of establishing Soviet airfields in the Western zones was the work of dismantling plants for deliveries on account of reparations when it comes to sending Soviet experts to organise that work.

FIELD MARSHAL MONTGOMERY stated that in his zone he would afford every facility for Soviet aircraft.

Marshal Zhukov said that he would like to clarify his declaration, namely, he proposed that appropriate airfields should be placed at the disposal of the Soviet authorities in the Western zones, or that permission should be given for Soviet ground crews for the servicing of Soviet aircraft to be stationed at these airfields.

FIELD MARSHAL MONTGOMERY proposed to refer the proposal made by the head of the Soviet delegation to the Air Directorate for examination. He asked whether his understanding was correct that the question of the three air corridors from the Western zones to Berlin was settled and that the organisation of these air corridors could be started immediately, without awaiting the results of the examination of the Soviet proposal.

Marshal Zhukov observed that he considered the paper accepted and expressed the hope that the proposal of the Soviet delegation on placing airfields in the Western zones at the disposal of the Soviet authorities would meet with full sympathy on the part of his colleagues.

The Meeting

(110) (a) approved the establishment of three air corridors from Berlin to the Western zones as defined in CONL/P(45)63

(b) agreed to refer the proposal of the Soviet delegation on the placing of airfields at the disposal of the Soviet authorities or the setting up of Soviet ground crews in the Western zones to the Air Directorate for study.

136. Report of Decision by Coordinating Committee on Air Corridors (CORC/P(45)170-(CONL/M(45)13-Conclusion 110).

The Directorate took note of the decisions of Control Council in CONL/M(45)13.

The Chairman expressed the opinion that action should be taken as soon as possible to place the approved corridors into operation, to coordinate the airways system in Germany, and also to fulfill the request by the Soviet authorities. All members of the Directorate agreed with this opinion.

In the course of a lengthy discussion it was established that the question of rules of the air for the approved air corridors, and the question of the Soviet request for certain facilities at airfields along the approved corridors were problems of equal importance.

All members of the Directorate agreed that both of these problems are of such an urgent nature that there must be a minimum of delay in implementing the decisions of the Control Council.

The Chairman, summarizing the exchange of views, pointed out that the two requirements would be considered as separate problems and that the Committee on Aviation would be instructed to begin work immediately on both of the problems.

Accordingly,

The Air Directorate decided:

(136) a—to note the decisions of the Control Council and to comply therewith.

b—to instruct the Committee on Aviation to prepare for submission at the next meeting of the Air Directorate the rules of flight and requirements for navigational aids for airplanes using the approved corridors.

c—to instruct the Committee on Aviation to prepare for submission at the next meeting of the Air Directorate concrete proposals for the Soviet servicing parties at airfields in the Western Zones.

Report of the Aviation Committee, Air Directorate, Concerning the Organization of Berlin Air Safety Center

ORGANIZATION OF BERLIN AIR SAFETY CENTER

1. The purpose of the Organization

The organization of the Berlin Air Safety Center, as it is described in this paper, should not be regarded as inflexible or complete. This organization can be amended as experience dictates.

The Berlin Air Safety Center has been founded to establish security of flights of aircraft in the Control Zone during bad weather conditions and at night.

This should include:

a. Prevention of collisions of aircraft.

b. Prevention of unnecessary delay in air movements.

c. Establishment of a proper service for search for those aircraft which are in need of help or such a service.

2. Definition

The Berlin Air Safety Center is a central organization under a coordinated control established by representatives of the U.S.S.R., United States of America, Great Britain, and France for unified control over flights of all aircraft in the Zone of the Control Center.

3. General Proposals.

- 1/ Under the designation Berlin Control Zone is understood the air space height up to 10,000 feet above sea level in a radius of 20 English miles from the building of the Allied Control Authority. Also an air space height of 10,000 feet above sea level in agreed air corridors which go out in a radius from Berlin to the borders of the territory of occupied Germany.
- 2/ Under control of the Berlin Air Safety Center will be all the aircraft which will accomplish flights, or which propose flights, under adverse meteorological conditions or at night.
- 3/ Under adverse meteorological conditions we understand the following conditions: visibility of less than 5 kilometers, height or ceiling of less than 300 meters.
- 4/ The nations will retain command and operative control over their aircraft as up until now.
- 5/ The crew of an aircraft which approaches the Control Zone during flight under adverse meteorological conditions, or at night, should establish communications with the Berlin Air Safety Center and inform them of the position of their flight and request instructions for the flight in the respective zone. Such communications may be established through the national airfields concerned.

- 6/ The instructions of the Berlin Air Safety Center, as far as time is concerned, direction and height of the flight in the Control Zone during flight under adverse meteorological conditions, must be complied with and fulfilled by the crews of all aircraft of any nationality which are in the Control Zone or in approach to the Control Zone.
- 7/ The Berlin Air Safety Center will be in the building of the Allied Control Authority.
- 8/ Clearance for flights and instructions will be given by the Berlin Air Safety Center upon request with a view to securing the safety of the flight and expediting air traffic.

4. Functions of the Berlin Air Safety Center.

- 1/ To have regularly renewed information about the weather conditions and flying facilities over the territory of Germany. To be posted on weather forecasts.
- 2/ To regulate air traffic of aircraft under conditions of bad visibility or at night within the Control Zone or upon entering the same, giving the time, direction, and height of flight in the zone, thus securing the vertical and horizontal diversion of aircraft necessary to avoid collisions.
- 3/ To inform the air crews of aircraft approaching the Control Zone, or located in it, about weather conditions and the air situation, giving, if required, and necessary, direction to detour regions with difficult atmospheric conditions, and available free routes to the Control Zone, and airfields in case of forced landings, and other recommendations.
- 4/ To receive reports from airfields located within the Control Zone about landings of aircraft made at these fields.
- 5/ To coordinate search for aircraft on request by airfields in those cases where the aircraft is overdue one or more hours past the estimated time of arrival at this airfield.
- 6/ To be constantly informed about the conditions of airfields, radio means, navigational facilities, as well as other aids for flight security located in the Control Zone.
- 7/ To inform the airfields located within the Control Zone about proposed landings of aircraft on same, and to receive confirmation from the administration of these airfields about the readiness of the airfields to accept arriving aircraft.
- 8/ To receive information from airfields and also from aircraft in flight about proposed flights over Control Zone or about landings on airfields within the Zone.
 - 9/ To compile necessary operational and statistical reports.

5. Scheme of Organization

- 1/ The staff of the Berlin Air Safety Center will be composed of representatives from the four Allied nations.
- 2/ The Director of the Berlin Air Safety Center shall be that of the nation in the chair of the Control Council, and shall be appointed from the Chief Controllers (deputy directors) presented by each nation.

- c. Report of the Committee on Aviation on the Soviet Proposals Concerning the Fulfillment of the Decisions of the Control Council in that Part Which Deals With Airfields or Accommodation of Airfield Detachments in Western Allied Zones of Occupation. $(DAIR/P(45)72)^{87}$

DAIR/P(45)72 was submitted for the Directorate's consideration. THE CHAIRMAN stated that the Soviet proposal had been referred by the Committee on Aviation to the Air Directorate for guidance and instructions.

GENERAL KOVALEV pointed out that this paper outlines the basic principles of the establishment of the Soviet airfield points in the Western The minimum number of personnel for establishment of these points is adopted with the purpose of not burdening the respective Allied authorities with the presence of large numbers of such personnel. However, this leads to the necessity for some part of the aircraft servicing work to be carried out by Allied personnel with the possible equivalent compensation for this work to be made in the Zone of Greater Berlin. Further, General Kovalev stated that the paper did not foresee all the minor details which he hoped would be successfully worked out with each nation separately. In conclusion, he pointed out several minor inaccuracies in the English translation.

AIR MARSHAL WIGGLESWORTH expressed his desire to assist in coming to a speedy and amicable solution to this problem. At first sight it appeared to him that the proposals called for the provision of British personnel to meet some of the requirements of the Soviet detachments, and that the number of personnel necessary could not be estimated until further details of the Soviet requirements were known. might involve a British manpower problem which would require more detailed consideration. Also the Soviet proposals involved certain technical and administrative problems on which he desired expert advice, and therefore he asked for the consideration of the paper to be deferred in order that the experts could study the questions connected with it. This would inevitably mean a reference to the R.A.F. authorities in the Zone, but the Air Marshal gave his assurance that the utmost effort would be made to obtain a quick decision. He agreed in principle to the granting of lodger rights at the appropriate airfields in the British Zone to the Soviet Air Force detachments, as soon as the actual requirements were established in terms of:

- (a) Permanent facilities
- (b) Temporary facilities and he invited General Kutsevalov and General Kovalev or their representatives to visit the British Operational Headquarters to discuss the details of these Soviet requirements. During the course of the discussion, Air Marshal Wigglesworth thanked General Kovalev, as the representative of General Kutsevalov, for the prompt action taken by the latter to open the newly agreed corridors.

General De Sevin stated that the French Air Force was prepared to offer every possible assistance to the Soviet Air Force for the mutual benefit of everyone. He pointed out, however, that because of the technical details involved it would be necessary to have more time to study the paper.

THE CHAIRMAN gave assurance that the United States wants to assist the Soviets wherever possible. He stated that the Soviet proposal had been sent to the Headquarters of the U.S. Air Forces for further study of the technical details involved.

General Kovalev thanked all the Directors for active participation in this question, the discussion of which was directed to the positive solution of this question, and the General noted that the request of the Soviet Union concerning the technical and material servicing of the aircraft obviously would be very insignificant because the supply base would be the Berlin Area. In conclusion, General Kovalev pointed out that, as there were no objections in principle to the Soviet proposal, he considered that this question should be decided as quickly as possible.

THE CHARMAN, summarising the exchange of views, pointed out that the Soviet proposal would be sent to the Committee on Aviation for them to commence study as soon as information regarding the technical details in the Western Zones, and more detailed information regarding the Soviet requirements, had been obtained.

Accordingly,

The Directorate decided:

- (141e) a. to postpone final decision concerning the question of Soviet proposals on the setting up of facilities for Soviet aviation until its next meeting so as to have time to study these proposals in detail.
- b. to direct the Committee on Aviation to study in detail the Soviet proposal concerning the setting up of facilities for its aviation on flights to the Western Zones of occupation and to submit its recommendations as to principles involved in the Soviet proposal at the next meeting of the Air Directorate.
- c. to direct the Committee on Aviation to prepare concrete proposals for the implementation of the above established principles when the necessary studies have been made by the zonal authorities, for consideration no later than the Twentieth meeting of the Air Directorate.

DAIR/P(45)71 Revised

FLIGHT RULES FOR AIRCRAFT FLYING IN AIR CORRIDORS IN GERMANY AND BERLIN CONTROL ZONE

Section I

GENERAL

- 1. a. Object. To ensure the maximum safety in flight of all aircraft flying in corridors and in the Berlin Control Zone under all conditions.
- b. Definition. Definitions of terms used in this paper are contained in Section V.
- 2. Air Corridors in Germany. The following air corridors have been established:

Frankfurt-Berlin Bückeburg-Berlin Hamburg-Berlin

Each of the above corridors is 20 English miles (32 kilometers) wide, i.e., 10 miles (16 kilometers) each side of the center line. It is probable that from time to time additional corridors may be established, and these rules apply equally to any such corridors.

- 3. Berlin Control Zone (B.C.Z). The Berlin Control Zone is defined as the air space between ground level and 10,000 feet (3000 meters) within a radius of 20 miles (32 kilometers) from the Allied Control Authority Building, in which is established the Berlin Air Safety Center (B.A.S.C.).
- 4. Berlin Air Safety Center (B.A.S.C.). The Berlin Air Safety Center has been established in the Allied Control Authority Building with the object of ensuring safety of flight for all aircraft in the Berlin area. The Safety Center regulates all flying in the Berlin Control Zone and also in the corridors extending from Berlin to the boundaries of adjacent control zones. The functions of the Berlin Air Safety Center are as follows:
- a. To maintain up-to-date information on the state of the weather over German territory and in other Control Zones.
- b. To regulate air traffic in the Berlin Control Zone (in conditions of bad visibility and at night) by fixing the time, course, and height of flight, and ensuring the vertical and horizontal separation of aircraft necessary to avoid collision.
- c. To inform crews of aircraft in or near the Berlin Control Zone of the weather conditions and the situation in the air, giving, if necessary, recommendations on courses to detour areas with bad meteorological conditions, or give routes in the limits of the Berlin Control Zone and other recommendations.

- d. To receive information from airfields located in the Berlin Control Zone on aircraft landings thereon.
- e. To co-ordinate search for aircraft on request by airfields in those cases where the aircraft is one or more hours overdue.
- f. To be constantly informed of the conditions of airfields, radio facilities, and navigational and other aids for flight security, situated in the Berlin Control Zone.
- g. To inform airfields located within the Berlin Control Zone about proposed landings of aircraft on them and to receive confirmation from those airfields about their readiness to accept arriving aircraft.
- h. To receive information from airfields, and also from aircraft in flight, about proposed flights over the Berlin Control Zone and about landings on airfields within the Zone.
 - i. To compile necessary operational and statistical reports.
- j. To obtain clearance for aircraft wishing to proceed to other recognized Control Zones.
- 5. Control of aircraft traffic by the B.A.S.C. is normally exercised through the appropriate national airfields in the Berlin Control Zone.
- 6. Aircraft Flying to and from Berlin Under Visual Flight Rules (VFR).
- a. Arriving aircraft will contact the airfield of destination in the Berlin Control Zone at a distance of 75 miles (120 kilometers) from Berlin, giving their estimated time of arrival, altitude and other information as appears necessary. (This communications contact is not mandatory but is desirable). The airfield at which the aircraft arrives will inform the B.A.S.C. of such arrival.
- b. Departing Aircraft. The airfield clearing departing aircraft in the Berlin Control Zone will inform the B.A.S.C. of each departure.
- c. Aircraft without two-way radio or whose radio has failed are free to fly into or out of the Berlin Control Zone in accordance with Visual Flight Rules (Section III).
- d. When aircraft are departing to another Control Zone, the airfield of departure will obtain clearance through B.A.S.C. in case Instrument Flight Rules are in force at the airfield of destination. Should this be the case, the B.A.S.C. will obtain clearance from the Control Zones at destination.
- 7. Aircraft Flying to and from the Berlin Control Zone Under Instrument Flight Rules (IFR).
- a. Aircraft flying into and out of the Berlin Control Zone will operate under Instrument Flight Rules (IFR), (Section IV), when the visibility is less than 3 miles (5 kilometers) or the ceiling is less than 1000 feet (300 meters).

- b. Incoming aircraft will be required to contact by radio the airfield of destination when not less than 75 miles (120 kilometers) from the Berlin Control Zone. Airfield of destination will inform B.A.S.C. accordingly, which will issue an air traffic clearance and such other information and instructions as appear necessary for safety.
- c. All landings, under instrument flight conditions, will be controlled by the airfield of destination, which will have previously obtained all necessary instruction and information from B.A.S.C.
- d. Departing aircraft must be cleared through B.A.S.C. which will approve the flight plan as filed or indicate such changes as may be necessary to ensure adequate separation.
- 8. Aircraft Crossing Corridors. Aircraft will call whenever possible, the appropriate communications station, and obtain clearance prior to crossing a corridor. When aircraft are unable to receive clearance to cross corridors, they will cross at a magnetic heading of 90 degrees to that corridor and at an altitude appropriate to the quadrant in which the heading lies. (See paragraph 26)

SECTION II

GENERAL FLIGHT RULES

- 9. Aircraft shall be flown at all times in compliance with the rules contained in this Section and in addition shall comply with either the Visual Flight Rules or the Instrument Flight Rules.
- 10. Preflight Action. Prior to commencing a flight, the person in command of an aircraft shall familiarize himself with information necessary for the proper operation of the aircraft enroute and on the airfields which may be used.
- 11. Airspace Restrictions. Aircraft shall not be flown over areas, particulars of which have been duly published and where flight is restricted by a state, except in accordance with the terms of such permission as may be granted by the appropriate authority.
- 12. Reckless Flying. An aircraft shall not be operated in a negligent manner or in a reckless manner so as to endanger life or property of others.
- 13. Landing and Take-off Rules. The person in command of an aircraft operated on or in the vicinity of an airfield shall comply with the following rules:
 - a. Observe other airfield traffic for the purpose of avoiding collision.
- b. Conform to or avoid the pattern of traffic formed by other aircraft in operation.

- c. Make all turns to the left, when approaching for a landing and after taking off, unless otherwise prescribed by the appropriate authority or instructed by airfield control.
 - d. If airfield control is in operation,
- (1) Maintain a continuous watch on the appropriate radio channel, or if this is not possible, keep a watch for such instructions as may be issued by visual means.
- (2) Obtain, either by radio or visual signal, such authorization for his movements as may be necessary for the protection of airfield traffic.
- e. If airfield control is not in operation, landing and taking off shall, insofar as practicable, be into the wind.
- 14. Air Traffic Control Instructions. The person in command of an aircraft operated in areas where air traffic control is exercised shall comply with Air Traffic control instructions received.
 - 15. Right-of-Way Rules.
 - a. General
- (1) An aircraft shall not be operated in such proximity to other aircraft as to create a collision hazard. Flight in formation is prohibited. An aircraft which is obliged by the following rules to keep out of the way of another shall avoid passing over or under the other, or crossing ahead of it, unless passing well clear of it.
- (2) The aircraft which has the right-of-way shall normally maintain its course and speed; nevertheless, nothing in these rules shall absolve the person in command of an aircraft from taking such action as will best aid to avert collision.
- (3) Proximity. Aircraft shall be flown at least 500 feet (150 meters) apart except by pre-arrangement of the pilots in command of the aircraft.
 - b. Converging.
- (1) An aircraft shall give way to another aircraft of a class different from its own in the following order:
 - (a) mechanically-driven aircraft;
 - (b) airships;
 - (c) gliders;
 - (d) balloons.
- (2) When two aircraft of the same class are at approximately the same altitude, the aircraft which has the other on its right shall give way, nevertheless, mechanically-driven aircraft shall give way to aircraft which are seen to be towing another aircraft.
- c. Approaching Head-on. When two aircraft are approaching head-on, or approximately so and there is danger of collision, each shall alter its course to the right, as soon as visible to each other, and at a distance not less than 1500 feet (500 meters).

d. Overtaking. An aircraft which is being overtaken has the right-of-way and the overtaking aircraft, whether climbing, descending or in horizontal flight, shall keep out of the way of the other aircraft by altering its course to the right, and no subsequent change in the relative positions of the two aircraft shall absolve the overtaking aircraft from this obligation until it is entirely past and clear. This alteration of course should be made when the overtaking aircraft is not less than one mile (1500 meters) from the overtaken aircraft.

Note: An overtaking aircraft is an aircraft which approaches another from the rear on a line forming an angle of less than 70 degrees with the plane of symmetry of the latter, i.e., is in such a position with reference to the other aircraft that at night it should be unable to see either of that aircraft's forwardlights.

e. Landing.

- (1) Aircraft, while landing or maneuvering in preparation to land, have the right-of-way over other aircraft in flight or on the ground or water.
- (2) In the case of two or more mechanically-driven aircraft approaching an airfield for the purpose of landing, the aircraft at the lower altitude has the right-of-way, but it shall not take advantage of this rule to cut in in front of another which is descending in a straight line for the purpose of landing, or to overtake that aircraft.
- f. Taking Off. An aircraft about to take off shall not attempt to do so until there is no apparent risk of collision with another aircraft.
- g. Emergency Landing. An aircraft which is aware that another is compelled to land shall give way to that aircraft.
- 16. Minimum Safe Altitudes—Except when necessary for taking off and landing in an emergency or when otherwise ordered, aircraft shall be flown:

- b. When elsewhere than as specified in paragraph a, at an altitude of not less than 500 feet (150 meters).
- 17. Towing Objects. The person in command of an aircraft shall not permit anything to be towed by such aircraft, except in accordance with requirements prescribed by the appropriate authority.
- 18. Dropping Objects. The person in command of an aircraft shall not permit anything to be dropped from the aircraft in flight which might create hazard to person or property on the ground or water.
- 19. Parachute Descents. Parachute descents, other than necessary emergency descents, shall not be made unless authorized by the appropriate authority.

- 20. Acrobatic Flight. No aircraft shall be acrobatically flown so as to endanger air traffic; furthermore, the performance of acrobatics over certain areas may be subject to the consent of the appropriate authority.
 - 21. Additional Rules for Night Operations.

a. Lights

(1) Aircraft in Operation—By night all aircraft being operated shall display lights.

- (2) Aircraft Not in Operation—By night at all airfields used or available for night flying, all aircraft parked or moving on the Movement Area or in dangerous proximity thereto, shall be clearly illuminated or lighted, or the area which they occupy marked with obstruction lights.
- b. Flights within Control Areas or Control Zones. All aircraft being operated at night within control areas or control zones shall be flown in accordance with the Instrument Flight Rules or as otherwise authorized by B.A.S.C. or other Air Traffic Center.
- 22. Authority of Person in Command of an Aircraft. The person in command of an aircraft shall be directly responsible for its operation and shall have final authority as to disposition of the aircraft while he is in command, which shall include the maintaining of discipline of all persons on board.
- 23. Notification of Arrival. A person in command of an aircraft making a flight for which a Flight Plan has been filed shall be responsible for ensuring that an arrival message is submitted immediately upon landing for transmission to the appropriate agency.

SECTION III

VISUAL FLIGHT RULES (VFR)

- 24. Within Control Zones. An aircraft operated within a Control Zone shall be flown at least 2,000 feet (600 meters) horizontally and 500 feet (150 meters) vertically from all clouds, and with a flight visibility of at least 3 statute miles (5 kilometers), unless
 - a. otherwise authorized by B.A.S.C. or other Air Traffic Center; or
 - b. flown in accordance with Instrument Flight Rules.
- 25. Within Corridors and Control Areas but Outside of Control Zones.
