FRANCIS E. McGOVERN, '90
District Attorney-elect of Milwaukee County, Wis.

This will be Mr. McGovern's second term in the office of district attorney. Failing of the Republican nomination, he ran as an independent and gained a victory. His re-election makes him a likely candidate for the governorship in 1908. Mr. McGovern has gained a reputation that extends far beyond the borders of Wisconsin by his prosecution of graft and criminal cases.

Religion in the University.

"Are University students irreligious?" A statement made by an episcopal canon at a conference at Milwaukee, Wis. during the latter part of September, provoked an immediate storm of discussion. The canon declared that the tendency toward irreligion was on the increase, and urged the appointment of an Episcopal clergyman to work among the students of the University of Wisconsin. The suggestion was adopted and an Episcopal clergyman is now working in the student field.

Certainly, at the present time, the students of the University are not without opportunity for religious instruction and training. Five churches, the Episcopal, Catholic, Presbyterian, Congregational and Baptist have clergymen whose time and effort are devoted entirely to work among the students.

On another page will be found statistics which seem to point out an increasing tendency among college students toward church membership. The statistics, however, are too incomplete and fragmentary to be conclusive; the most that can safely be said is that there is no observable decrease in church membership among college students.

It may as well be frankly admitted that there is a tendency among college students toward skepticism and agnosticism. The study of science with its apparent conflict with religious tenets, tends strongly in this direction. Unquestionably, able and intelligent churchmen, like those now working at the University, can do much to combat this tendency; not that they will make many converts among students not already of their faith; but among those who are co-religionists, they can strengthen the religious feeling, and prevent the slipping away from religious influences which otherwise might take place.

The University of Wisconsin is not a denominational institution. One of its greatest points of strength lies in the fact that it takes its sustenance from the state, and not from any private interest, personal or church. There is no official creed at the University, no insistence upon attendance at church services. All religions and creeds are left free to interest such students as they can. The University extends equal and liberal courtesies to all.

Without decrying in any way sister denominational institutions which depend upon churches for their support, it cannot be denied that the untrammelled, free-from-dogma atmosphere of the University contributes more surely to liberal thinking and broad views than can the atmosphere of a college where one faith is general, where attendance at church service is made obligatory and one opinion on religious subjects is the expectation of the authorities of the University.

A state university does not concern itself with matters of religious belief. Its business is to make good citizens, to develop men of knowledge and power with high ideals of honor and right living. So long as they do not entertain beliefs dangerous to society, they may believe what they please, and unquestionably among the graduates of the University are to be found good citizens who are Protestants, Catholics, Jews and Agnostics. The object of the University is not, then, to instil religious belief. That is left to the churches who are welcomed, but not urged to enter the University field.

The students in the University are not becoming irreligious either for lack of religious training, opportunity, or atmosphere. Under the influence of University education, they are becoming broader, clearer-sighted, and more tolerant of others' views and opinions. Whether this growth means a strengthening or weakening of their allegiance to creed and church is for the churches themselves to determine. The field is open. It is their function, not the University's to see that religious belief and feeling find a proper emphasis in the University.

The Investigating Report.

The University of Wisconsin after a most thorough investigation at the hands of a competent committee made up of members of the state legislature, has been pronounced by that committee to be, with some minor defects, in a thoroughly healthy condition, performing the great service which devolves upon it with a high degree of efficiency. (A summary of the recommendations and the conclusion of the investigators will be found on another page.) The criticisms of the investigators are none of them severe and are directed for the most part to matters of administrative detail. The financial policy of the University is dealt with most severely, and a recommendation made which, if carried out, means the obviation of the financial difficulty which was the original cause of the investigation. The committee recommends an appropriation by the legislature of $250,000 so that the University will not have to borrow money to tide over the months before its income is available.

Closer contact between professors and underclassmen is an important recommendation. Herein lies the advantage often claimed by small colleges over their more bulky sister institutions. It is true that in a university of the size of the University of Wisconsin, the securing of personal contact between faculty members and students is a matter very difficult of consummation, on account of the large number of students in the University. It has been and should be the policy of the University to encourage such contact, for it is the personal relationship which often proves most helpful to the student; personal relations with a well-poised, scholarly, clear-minded professor cannot but help in the up-building of character. We have always believed that the underclassmen should be given the first consideration in this matter of personal contact rather than the graduate students; freshmen and sophomores should have more contact with the leading professors, who are sometimes prone to give their best efforts and personal attention to research work and the instruction of the graduate students.

The committee desires to see instruction emphasized rather than research. This has long been one of the pet ideas of the Wisconsin Alumni Magazine; we contended for it last year editorially, and now we are glad to see our ideas endorsed.

A law requiring the University to keep within the budget is unquestionably a wise measure; moderation in the proposed policy of extension of dormitories until the University is better off financially, is thoroughly sound; in this matter, we are not sure that dormitories will be a good thing in the University at any time. We are investigating the problem from such sources as are obtainable at the present time; and expect to deal with it at length in these columns in the near future. For the present, it is enough to say that there is no great immediate need for these dormitories. Certainly the committee's suggestion is a wise one.

Giving Wisconsin students an advantage over non-residents in the matter of fees seems reasonable and just; Wisconsin tax-payers support the institution; Wisconsin students should not be compelled to pay so high tuition as students from other states.

A new women's gymnasium is very much needed; the increase of the farm institute fund from $12,000 to $20,000 would be thoroughly in line with the progress made in service and usefulness by these institutes; government of the University by the regents instead of by the president, we do not believe to be practicable under present conditions. Only when the regents become paid officials, as is suggested in the report, will they give to the University that time and personal attention which is essential to wise administration. The relief of the president from the burden of non-collegiate administrative work is not only important, but is absolutely necessary, in order to enable him to give the proper attention to the shaping of the policy of the University.

Regulation of athletics and social life in the directions of less football and more democracy is recommended. The committee believes that football has in the past received an undue share of attention. This, true in the past, is not so at the present time. The question of the social life at the University is a very difficult and complex one, that deserves separate treatment. Fraternities have their good and their evil sides; there are dangerous tendencies in them which should be checked. We wish the committee had pointed these out more specifically, and pointed out more clearly specific remedies.

The report scores instructors who sell their pamphlets to students at exorbitant prices. We do not believe this criticism is justified. We have often heard this charge but upon inquiry have never been able to ascertain a single specific instance in which it was true. We wish again that the committee had pointed out specific cases. The members of the faculty have faults enough and afford excellent targets in so many legitimate directions that we are loath to believe this charge without positive and concrete proof.

Taken as a whole, the report of the legislative committee is highly satisfactory to the alumni of the University. The institution is not perfect. But there is no graft or corruption taint about it; and it maintains a high standard of efficiency. The men in charge are doing their best, and they are; for the most part, strong men, of integrity, judgment and ability.

The Elections.

The elections that have just passed are of tremendous importance to Wisconsin alumni. Men with college training, are, above all others, expected to be alive, to look beneath the surface, to use judgment, to be independent, to exercise intelligence, to display discretion when they go to the ballot box—in short, college graduates more than other people are expected to vote right. In Wisconsin, many alumni took active personal part. Everywhere, where there are alumni, it is safe to say their interest was keen.

The great event, of course, was the defeat of Mr. Hearst in New York. We wonder how our New York alumni voted in that election. Mr. Hearst is a problem of surpassing interest. We are endeavoring to persuade one of the New York alumni who is eminently qualified for the task, to write an article concerning him and the tendency which he represents for this Magazine. We would be glad to have other alumni express their opinions on Mr. Hearst. He is an interesting subject.

In Wisconsin, the elections were very significant. Senator Robert M. La Follette, '79, whose prestige suffered a crashing blow when his candidate for the republican nomination for governor met defeat at the primaries, regained much of his former strength, although he has not yet entirely recovered in the popular estimation from that defeat. In four instances he was successful, in no case at the elections was he unsuccessful. Largely through his efforts Francis E. McGovern, '90 was reelected district attorney of Milwaukee county, Congressman Babcock was defeated in the third district and Senator Beach and Assemblyman Foley were beaten.

United States Senator John C. Spooner, '64, made a sort of triumphal tour of the state in the interests of Davidson's candidacy. He seems to have lost none of his former popularity, and was warmly welcomed throughout the state.

Francis E. McGovern, '90, by his victory in Milwaukee, becomes a likely candidate for governor of the state in 1908; Frank L. Gilbert, law '99, attorney general elect has also been mentioned for the same office. Henry Lockney, '97 and Theodore Brazeau, '97, by their election to the state senate, become powers in Wisconsin politics. Both young men, they will go far. John M. Nelson, '92, was elected to congress in the second district by a surprisingly small majority. George W. Levis, law '93, whose campaign was managed by A. R. Hoppman, law '96, made a strong run. Congressman Esch, as was expected, had an easy time of it in his district. John A. Aylward, '84, did not run as strongly as was expected. He is however, the leader of Wisconsin's democracy and is fairly entitled to the position. He will be heard from again in future contests, and should the unexpected ever happen, and the state go democratic, Mr. Aylward and Mr. Herbert H. Manson, '97, the chairman of the democratic state central committee would be in line for the highest offices in the gift of their party.

In California, E. A. Hayes, '82, was reelected to congress by a handsome majority.

Nine alumni take seats in the assembly. Herman L. Ekern, law '94, is a candidate for the speakership. Most of the members elect are young men; one, Lawrence W. Ledvina is from the class of 1906, one, John Detling from 1905, and one, John S. Baker, law '08, has just received his bachelor's degree. Their course in the legislature will be closely watched. Among them are some men of unusual ability. The Wisconsin Alumni Magazine, will at the close of the session, summarize the work of each man, and give credit where credit is due.

Faculty Action On The Prom.

The social committee of the University faculty has reduced the price of tickets to the Junior Prom from $6.00 to $3.00, thereby creating a great how-do amongst some of the fraternity members at the University who threatened to boycott the Prom and do other dire things which are not going to happen.

We think that our attitudes, past and present exempt us from any charge that we are under faculty influence, when we say, most emphatically, that we are entirely in favor of this change. We say this, recognizing clearly that a three-dollar Prom does not mean, as a matter of fact, a more democratic Prom. We do not believe more students will attend, or that a larger proportion of non-fraternity students will attend. The Prom at three dollars merely means the same conditions with a little less elegance and fewer supernumeraries. The price expended for a ticket to the Prom represents, as everyone who has attended knows, only a small portion of the cost of attendance.

Why, then do we favor the change? For this very important reason. The reduction of price means that the University has set the official seal of its disapproval upon extravagance and aristocracy at the state University. Their action marks the first real expression by the University faculty which has come to our knowledge against the spirit of aristocracy and exclusiveness which exists in every University, accentuated, indeed, where fraternities exist, but existing in all or almost all institutions and communities where differences of wealth and station are to be found.

We have always believed it to be a part of the faculty's duty to strike at this spirit whenever they addressed the students. We have looked to President Van Hise to make some utterance on the subject, but he has said nothing. This, however, is a question which we shall discuss later at length.

We believe strongly that the faculty acted wisely in reducing the price of the Junior Prom from six to three dollars.

A Question for the Alumni.

"If you were at present a student in the University, would you prefer to have a voice in the management of your University's athletic affairs under a schedule from which Michigan, Chicago, and Minnesota were eliminated, to a condition of faculty management under a schedule which included Michigan, Minnesota, or Chicago?"

This is a problem which does not now confront the student at the University. It should. We would like to see the faculty present this question to the students and upon their answer base their action. The good intentions of the faculty are undoubted. That they wish for the continuance of a sane, healthful athletic policy is certain. They have at the present time an exceptional opportunity. By allowing student self-government under a limited schedule, they can strike a decisive blow for the development of responsibility in the student body, and at the same time thoroughly disprove the oft-repeated charge that they do not understand the undergraduate point of view and are out of sympathy with the students.

The writer was surprised, upon reading the rules which at present govern athletics at the University, given on another page, to see how little power the students actually have at the present time. Truly, only the semblance of power is theirs.

Alumni who in their day were wont to take an active part in the management of athletics, will wonder at the seeming lack of spirit exhibited by students of the present generation who become enthusiastic over a condition of faculty rule. But they forget the fact that the present condition of faculty management was absolutely necessary after conditions existing last year. Abuses, serious and extensive, had crept in. Faculty supervision had proven a failure. Recognizing clearly that faculty management was a necessity this year, we believe very strongly that the students should be given back the management of their athletic affairs, under faculty supervision, at the earliest possible date. Student government means responsibility, which means growth, and character building.

The management of athletic affairs at a great University is not a small problem. It demands nerve, absolute integrity and thorough efficiency. The spirit as well as the letter of all agreements as to rules, etc., entered into in good faith, must be observed absolutely. The financial management must be sound and business-like. There must be no compromise of principle for the sake of victory, no athletic pets. The square deal must prevail all around; to the University, to the athletes and to the students. This is proper management.

So long as the faculty retains the power, it means that they do not trust the students to properly manage their athletic affairs. There is no better training for the assumption of heavy responsibilities after graduation than the assumption of responsibilities by students in the University. We shall speak plainly. The principle of graft has become a national issue. Its exponents are to be found in quarters, high and low. Modern University ideals, certainly the ideals of our own University are absolutely and unalterably opposed to it in any form. The best training that students can have in fighting graft, is to have to fight it in the University, to have the management of athletics, with the large financial problem which it involves, and conduct it on the lines we have indicated. Compromise, for the sake of passing advantage, again, is pointed out as a national weakness. What better training for fighting compromise on principle than is afforded in the University. Let us suppose the eve of an important game. A player is badly needed.

On account of some rule easily evaded, he is not eligible. How easy the compromise which permits the man to play. This is the kind of thing which we believe the students should have to fight, and not have the faculty fight it for them.

You say the students will fail. Perhaps, but better to have them fail while trying to govern themselves than have faculty government. Communities fail. Weak or corrupt men gain power. Yet the power to overthrow them is resident in the community whose moral sense is sound. Victories for good government are achieved. The analogy is plain. Give the students back their power. They may elect the wrong men on the athletic council. But the moral sense of the University community is absolutely sound. They will achieve honest, efficient student self-government. And, besides there is always the faculty, to act as restrainers, if the wrong men are elected by the students.

This year, faculty management was a necessity. Next year, give the students back their power, under a limited schedule. Let them show their mettle. Another year, and allow for the arranging of a big game. Student self-government under faculty supervision is important. It is vital. It means the making of strong, fearless, resolute men who do not compromise on principle. It is more important than schedules. It is bigger than football. We have little doubt what the alumni answer would be to the question propounded at the beginning of this editorial. "Better self-government under a limited schedule than faculty government with a dozen big games."

The Close of the Football Season.

The University has just finished the most successful football season of the last four years; every game played was won, and at least three of the games were against opponents who would have been deemed dangerous at any time. The first class Western teams, Michigan, Minnesota, and Chicago were, indeed, studiously avoided. It is doubtful if the Varsity team could have beaten any of these three teams; but we believe the team of this year would have done as well in holding Chicago and Michigan to low scores as have any of the teams of the last four years.

The team of this year, without a taint of professionalism, played good, clean football, and were supported with surprising enthusiasm by the student body, whose spirit was no whit diminished by the fact that the "big" games had been cut out of the schedule. Those who predicted a tremendous drop in football interest, did not see their predictions verified. There was, indeed, no frantic enthusiasm, but good healthful exultation over hard-earned triumphs well-won.

Dr. C. P. Hutchins, the coach of the team, deserves much of the credit for the showing of the Badger team. He seems to have won the confidence of the men, and the respect of the student body who see in him a gentleman first and football coach afterward. He seems to stand for clean sport. Dr. Charles McCarthy, '04 and Earl Driver, '03 rendered efficient aid to Coach Hutchins before the important games.

Some of the men on the team had difficulty over the matter of standings but managed to make up their back work so that at no time was the team seriously crippled.

Some question was raised over the assistance given Coach Hutchins by McCarthy, Lerum and Driver. However, as these men lent their aid without pay, there was no violation of the spirit of the rules.

The football season of 1906 was an entire success. A healthy but not hysterical interest, a winning team that has nothing to be ashamed of, a coach who has won the confidence and respect of the alumni, faculty and the student body. are its features. Faculty management has "made good." Gentlemen of the faculty, we congratulate you.

ZONA GALE, '95,
whose new book Romance Island appeared this month.

Alumni Teaching in Wisconsin High Schools.

The University appointment committee secured positions for a large number of University graduates since the close of the last school year. Fully 100 of the graduates of the 1906 class were placed in high schools and graded schools.

Of the graduates of previous years, many left their old positions and secured new ones through the efforts of the committee.

In no profession is there more changing about, especially during the first few years of work than in teaching. Of the positions held as given below by members of last year's graduating class, probably not over 40 per cent. will occupy the same positions again next year. This is due, not to any inefficiency on the part of the teachers, but to the fact that they are constantly looking for better positions, the girls are getting married, and many of the men discontinue teaching to take up professional study or to go into business.

The appointment committee of the University acts as a clearing house for communities desiring teachers, and applicants for positions.

Seniors desiring places as teachers enroll with the committee, and in almost all cases, places are found for them, either directly or by recommendation. The committee is able to do this work on account of its close relation to the schools of the state. Albert W. Tressler, the active member of the committee, is the University inspector of schools. Through his position, he is familiar with the needs and demand of the schools in all parts of the state. Many school communities look to the University appointment committee for their teachers each year.

On the other hand the committee has the University record of each applicant for a position, and is thus able to supply the needs of the schools and suit the capabilities of the applicants with considerable accuracy.

The efforts of the committee are not confined to the state, and an increasing number of alumni are placed in schools outside of the state each year.

The following list includes a considerable number who have secured their positions either directly through or by the recommendation of the appointment committee:

Joseph Medill Patterson, the young millionaire socialist whose meteoric career in Chicago politics last year, ending as it did in his conversion to the doctrines of socialism, attracted national attention, has enrolled as a student in the short course at the University of Wisconsin. Mr. Patterson is a grandson of Joseph Medill, founder of the Chicago Tribune, and is a graduate of Yale. After completing his college course he returned to Chicago, where he was appointed commissioner of public works by Mayor Dunne. He at once began a vigorous crusade against numerous private interests which had encroached upon public property without authority, and succeeded in collecting thousands of dollars of rental for the City of Chicago. In the midst of his work of reform, he became convinced of the hopelessness of the struggle under present conditions, and tendering his resignation to Mayor

Dunne, announced his espousal of the cause of socialism.

Mr. Patterson is the second young millionaire to take advantage of the instruction of the short course in agriculture at the state University. Last year Fred Pabst, son of the late Capt. Fred Pabst of Milwaukee, resigned his position in the management of the great brewery interest with which his name has long been associated, and decided to take up the raising of blooded horses as his occupation. Accordingly he entered the short course last winter, and took special work in the breeding and care of horses. Upon completing his work last spring, he purchased a ranch of several thousand acres in Dakota, and imported hundreds of the finest Russian horses. Since then he has been busily engaged in developing this new line of work, which promises to prove an exceedingly profitable one.

Martin of the firm of Martin & Juneau, land platters was the real founder of Milwaukee. This paper was generally commented upon by the press throughout the state as tending to disprove the generally accepted theory that Solomon Juneau was the founder of the city of Milwaukee.

John R. Reiss, a former regent of the University, died at Sheboygan, Wisconsin, on October 20. Mr. Reiss was a University regent from 1886 to 1892. He was secretary and treasurer of the Valroth Mfg. Co. of Sheboygan. Mr. Reiss was a republican in politics and served at one time as a member of the Republican State Central Committee.

"Swinburne's Poems" is the title of a new book by Dr. Arthur Beatty, instructor in English, published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., of New York City. It is a critical analysis of Swinburne whom Dr. Beatty considers the greatest of living poets.

Professor Nevin M. Fenneman has recently had published by the United States Geological Survey a book on "Oil fields of the Texas-Louisiana Gulf Coastal Plain."

Professor E. A. Ross, of the department of political economy was the guest of honor at a reception given on November 10 by the Young Women's Auxiliary of the University Settlement in Milwaukee.

President Van Hise attended the meeting of the National Association of Agricultural College Experiment Stations of which he is president, at Baton Rouge, La., during the early part of the month. After leaving Baton Rouge, he went to Washington, D. At the meeting of the National Academy of Science held in Boston, November 20-22, he read a paper on "The Origin of the Ores of the Cobalt Silver District of Ontario."

President Van Hise and Professor George C. Comstock, director of the graduate school, represented the University at the national meeting of the Association of American Universities held at Cambridge, Mass., November 22-24, and Professor Comstock read a paper on "The Duties That Should be Required of Graduate Fellows." President Van Hise is vice-president of the association.

W. J. McElroy, of the board of regents, president of the Milwaukee county bar association, acted as toastmaster at a banquet to the circuit judges of Wisconsin in Milwaukee on November 15. Judge E. Ray Stevens, formerly lecturer in law at the University, responded to one of the toasts.

Recent issues of the Saturday Evening Post contained extensive writings of Professor Stephen M. Babcock of the agricultural department, and Dr. Charles McCarthy lecturer in political science. Both articles were of a highly laudatory nature.

University Investigation.

Recommendations and Conclusion of the University Legislative Investigation Committee, Made Public November 27th, After an Investigation of 9 months.

Recommendations.

Students should be brought into more direct contact with members of the faculty.

Recommends that the legislature appropriate $250,000 to the University fund income for the purpose of increasing the general fund, and that each year's budget be approved by the governor, secretary of state and state treasurer and that the board of regents require that all expenditures be within the budget thus approved.

Declares in favor of extension and correspondence school work when the finances of the University warrant it.

Recommends that research work be encouraged only so far as that can be done without detriment to the instruction to which the students are entitled.

Recommends that limited dormitory system be inaugurated.

That woman's gymnasium be installed and present department in Chadbourne hall used for this purpose be abandoned.

That legislature make appropriation of $20,000 annually for farm institute fund.

Recommends that president of the board of regents require his appropriate committees to familiarize themselves with the details of that part of the business over which each committee may have jurisdiction.

That board of regents take the necessary steps to prevent members of instructional force from requiring students to purchase books and syllabi at an exorbitant price.

The committee secured evidence as to the effects of athletics, fraternities and social functions upon student life. "The impression is quite generally in the University and more so throughout the state that football has received undue attention. Granted that this form of exercise has merits in offering an opportunity for unifying the student body, cultivating a spirit of loyalty to the institution and advertising the University. All these arguments together do not justify the hazard of life and limb to which players are exposed; then, too, whatever benefits may be gained by the players, the active participants, it does not justify the time and attention and extreme prominence given to the play. As an exercise only a few students enjoy its benefits."

Fraternities are charged with cultivating exclusiveness and a spirit of aristocracy that is un-American and out of harmony with the democratic spirit that ought to prevail in democratic institutions supported by the state. "A fraternity is a limited society, and by its very nature too exclusive."

"Friends of fraternities justify the exclusiveness on the ground that it leads to forming close and lasting friendship and affords social intercourse with those of like taste. It is evident, however, that abuses have crept into these organizations, such as using undue efforts to secure members, without regard to qualifications and a tendency to shield fellow members in their lapses and delinquencies and foster an objectionable aristocratic bearing.

"Some of the social functions, especially the "Junor Prom," are open to the same objections as the fraternities with the added objection that only students in financial condition considerably above the average can participate in such social events."

"The committee deemed it wise, however, to leave these matters to the regents and faculty."

Conclusion.

"The state of Wisconsin is justly proud of its University. It stands for the highest ideals in economic and practical effort. In its faculty are men of wide fame whose reputation in the realm of thought attracts students from every quarter of the globe. The success that has attended its labors in bringing the most practical sciences into the services of the people is most gratifying, as it is profitable to the state. The man who does brain work and the man who does hand work, the theorist and the practical man, each and every one is today profiting by the investigations, experiments and the practical problems that have been undertaken and given a practical interpretation by the University. During the last decade its growth has been surprisingly rapid and the expense of maintenance correspondingly great. The methods of administering the affairs of a small institution will not altogether apply to a larger. The latter demands closer oversight and more minute division of responsibility. To the failure to make methods of administration keep pace with growth is due most of the defects discovered by your committee, and it is for the purpose of rectifying these defects and thereby strengthening this great institution in the estimation of the people as well as to its proper work as a University that the foregoing recommendations are made."

Religion in Universities

An authorized interview with

PROFESSOR WILLIAM A. SCOTT.

Director of the Course in Commerce at the University.

"A year ago, I had occasion to look into this matter carefully, with the object of reading a paper on this subject before a conference held in Chicago. This paper was published in The Biblical World of July, 1905. The investigation took the form of a letter to the heads of state universities in the middle west, requesting information as to the proportion of students who are members of churches and attend regularly; the percentage of graduates who enter the ministry; religious work for students done under the direct auspices of the universities; and the religious work undertaken among the students by the churches. The replies revealed the fact that the universities do not systematically collect data regarding the religious affiliations of the students. The data sent consisted in some cases of estimates but in others it was collected by the students in Christian associations, and may be regarded as approximately accurate.

"The estimated percentage of church membership in these institutions for that year varied from 40 to 93 per cent., the great majority being about 50 per cent. If to these were added those who class themselves as church adherents, the percentage would be 70 per cent. A careful religious census taken of the eight leading universities in 1897 showed that 55 per cent of the total enrollment were church members. The percentage of four of these universities as reported to me was 59, and the average for all eight was 60. In only two cases were comparative statistics from year to year given, and these reveal the interesting fact that the percentage of church membership among students, while varying greatly from year to year, is clearly on the increase, the percentage of one university during 1905 being 55.2 as against 49, the highest previously reported.

"Few of the presidents returned an estimate of the percentage of students who attend religious services with some degree of regularity. With the aid of the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of the University of Wisconsin and the leading ushers of the Madison churches I have reached the conclusion that from 35 to 50 per cent. of our students attend some sort of religious service regularly. I have no way of estimating the number of students who do not, at least occasionally, attend some sort of religious service, but I believe it to be small.

"The number of students entering the ministry from these institutions is apparently not large. One president answered, "certainly not more than one per cent" another five per cent. At the University of Wisconsin during the period 1891-1901, twenty-nine students entered the ministry. This number would have to be doubled to include those who take up some form of religious or philanthropic activity as a life work.

"In all institutions in the middle west, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A. and various other religious societies have branches. Everywhere the percentage of students enrolled in the Y. W. C. A. is greater than in the Y. M. C. A. For the year 1905 the enrollment in the latter organization varied from 8 to 32 per cent., and the enrollment in the former varied from 25 to 79 per cent. In all cases in which comparative statistics were given, they indicate a growth in the membership of these organizations proportionately greater than that of the institutions in which they are located, and that the strictly religious features of their activity are reaching constantly increasing proportions of the student body.

"Take Illinois as an example. Between the years 1896-1904 the registration of the university increased 280 per cent. During the same period the membership of the Y. M. C. A. increased 400 per cent.; attendance upon its religious meetings more than 300 per cent., and upon its Bible classes 1000 per cent.

"A statement regarding the presence of the Christian Spirit in State Universities was sent me by President Andrews of the University of Nebraska and is confirmed by my own observations and experience. It was as follows:

"What strikes me as of vastly greater importance than any statistics is the singularly strong and beautiful character exhibited by the overwhelming majority of our faculty members and our students. I know of no other such exemplification of what, in common, I suppose, with almost all reflecting people, you would regard the essential of Christianity. All manner of vice is frowned upon. Exhibitions of vice are rare; unbelief, in the Tom Paine sense, unknown. Our university supports almost entirely a college settlement in the poorer part of the town. Last September the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. together published 1500 hand books for distribution among students. During the past year the Y. M. C. A. wrote fifty-five letters of welcome to prospective students.

"They sent committees to meet all trains during registration week. A card catalogue of suitable rooming and boarding places was kept; 200 students were assisted to find rooms and boarding places; thirty-five young women were assisted in securing room mates; twenty-nine young women have been helped in securing employment; 200 calls were made the first six weeks on freshman girls; seventy visits with flowers were made to sick girls; regular weekly gospel meetings were held with an average attendance of seventy. Systematic Bible study is conducted, with a present enrollment of 150 women; in the weekly mission study classes there are seventy-five. I am impressed more and more that effective Christianity has brighter prospects in the state universities than anywhere else in the world!

"Until recently the Christian Church has not done much in the way of working this promising field. Special Bible classes have been held; occasionally a special organization for work among students has been formed, or a denominational house constructed. In some cases special student pastors have been in the service for several years, but in Madison this method of procedure dates back a few months only. At the present time four of the churches of the city have made provision for special pastors and three of them are on the ground and at work. The question of denominational houses has been much agitated in this state but so far without tangible results.

"In conclusion, I wish to express my conviction that existing religious conditions in state universities are not such as to warrant alarm on the part of religious people. On the contrary, I believe them to be as thoroughly wholesome as those of any community in the world in which people of various ranks and classes mingle freely together, and much more Christian than the average American community. I believe further, however, that these communities offer the most promising field for efficient work of the right sort now open to the Christian church, and I sincerely hope that the time is not far distant when it will enter this field with enthusiasm, and work it with all the energy and intelligence it possesses."

English and the Young Woman

By WARDON A. CURTIS, '89.

Complaints of our mother English are rife these days. A whole host has arisen to charge it with the alleged low estate of English and American literature. Men with noble thoughts to express are more plentiful than ever, they say, as witness themselves modestly offered in evidence, but the medium to express these thoughts has been so vitiated, so debilitated, that only an imperfect and unsatisfactory understanding of them can be imparted to reader or hearer. It is asserted that English is an outworn tongue, enfeebled by age. If it is asserted that it has become vulgarized by prosperity, that as the speech of the greatest commerce, the greatest political rule the world has ever known, it has been t'inged and stained, has acquired the inevitable coarseness of the overfed, as if Miltonian sentences were ever taken down by stenographers and Shakespeare's dactyls were to be found in the quarter-page type-written screeds business allows itself. There are those who in their utter despair advocate the abandonment of English and the use of Latin; of French, language of the finest modern prose, if indeed too thin and twanging for sonorous poetry; and there are even those who second the preposterous proposition of George Moore, the Irish novelist, to adopt Irish as the literary tongue of the British race.

That there is some measure of reason for the Jeremiads over the decadence of English, most of us believe. That in general the effect is assigned to the wrong cause, is true. Our modern literature is undergoing one of those century-end periods of stagnation so curiously to be found in a survey of the whole literary history of our race. The language is not responsible for these recurring lapses. Yet it must be acknowledged that words sicken and die, that verbal jewels of one age lose their lustre in the next and that these processes are still active. Yes, our grand heritage of English speech is exposed to a greater danger than it ever encountered before. Its power as an instrument of expression, its nicety, its exactness, its very grandeur is in grave peril. Over those varying shades which have been its boast, the high lights and shadows, passes a smearing hand, blurring it all into a uniform dull-colored smudge, a hand we would kiss, but never could smite as it deserves, the hand of the Young Woman.

The Young Woman of the past as we find her embalmed in literature, was calm and stately in demeanor and speech. Perhaps that was almost as much a conventionalized type as the man of Greek sculpture and equally unlike the real average Young Woman. In the centuries ago, the literary man lived by the favor, the patronage of some nobleman. It is the patronage of the Young Woman that keeps him alive to-day. Women are the readers, young women. They buy the books. No author of fiction can disregard the Young Woman. Directly and indirectly, she is the cause of all this disquiet of George Moore, this unrest of the worthies who would fain have Norman the fashionable tongue of Englishry once more. Were the Young Woman of to-day like the Young Woman of the past, were she more temperate, let us say more tempered in speech, more restrained, George Moore and his friends would have no cause to examine into the pathology of modern English. But she is all superlatives, all hyperbole, fitting the strongest words, the strongest figures of speech to the most trivial facts. She piles up intensive modifiers, even repeats them thrice, four times. Arbitrator of the elegancies of life, the men who dance attendance upon her, copy her fashion of speech, even as they order their manners and dress to meet her approval. And so forceful words lose their force. How describe a nation's agony, when the very words we would use have just indicated the Young Woman's vexation over the delayed arrival of a new hat from the milliner? What force have terrible, awful, horrible, grand, glorious, magnificent, majestic, and their compeers any more? Descended to the use of describing—can we say describing?—a box of chocolates or a muddy crossing. You are trying to portray a storm. What a pitiful sense of impotence comes over you. You understand the feelings of those who advocate Irish and French as our literary language. You have the words, you can describe it as it would have been described twenty-five years before, but you know you have not made an impressive picture. The terrible rushing of the wind, the awful din of the raging elements, how shall you tell them; this word terrible, this word awful, flat as dishwater, their force evaporated, gone, staled by their constant employment and abuse. All our superlatives have been emasculated. Our adverbs have the dry rot.

And so the hunt for new words, strange words, garish words, for strange and uncouth figures of speech, the straining after effect so much anathematized by the best critics. Not, as so many would have it, an affectation, but a struggle begotten by a real need, the struggle of those trying to put forth their thoughts luminously, forcibly.

O, Young Woman, behold your work. It is not commerce, not temporal power that has dried out the juices of our language. The moiety of society, as sweetheart, wife, or mother, the inspiration of all that shall live in the arts, conserving force of all nations, cherishing and nourishing, if not creating the best in art, in this busy nation our only leisure class, English is in the hands of woman to still further ruin it, or to restore it to its pristine strength. Away with your very, very, verys, of your fulsome thanks when one has but answered you at the telephone, your awfuls and terribles over a belated street car, your grands, gloriouses, rages, storms, killings, and a thousand and one abuses of our language of which you are guilty.

How shall we rebuke her? When? Shall we, seeking an auspicious occasion, begin with one of the very many young women we would be willing to find in our arms in a waltz, or indeed, in any other contingency, shall we begin with her and then?

"Don't you think the floor is very, very slippery? Just terrible. It was awfully, awfully nice of you to bring me here to-night, don't you know? What a frightful dress! Oh, there is Mr. Jones. I think he is the grandest thing. He is a simply elegant dancer, perfectly magnificent. Isn't it a glorious waltz, just nice."

We give her hand a reproving pressure and hiss into her startled, shell-like ear; "Woman, murderess of style, poisoner of the wells of purest English, assassin of our mother tongue, stop!"

We would like to do this, but we shall never dare.

Lines to a Mountain Eagle

By RAYMOND B. PEASE, '00.

Proud bird of the mountains, that breasts the pure air

And soars into infinite solitudes there,
I watch thee afar from my lone mountain height,

And I glory, I glory with thee in thy flight.

All the morn have I climbed tow'rd
the tow'ring peak

Of this mountain-monarch so rugged and bleak,

And now, though I know that my journey is through

I long still to climb in the sun and the blue.

But here must I cling to this uppermost stone

And watch where in triumph thou soarest,—alone.

Yet I shout thee my challenge,—“Up higher, nor rest

Till the mother-air lends thee no longer her breast!

Up, up past the clouds and the red
lightning's gleam,

Till far from man's vision thou reignest supreme.”

My spirit is with thee, thou monarch of air,

Though my body is fettered to earth,
for I dare

And I long to strive upward, to live in the sun

And to know the pure realm mighty effort has won.

So I climb to the sky, and I answer
thy cry

In a voice that rings up in exulting reply,—

“Sail on in the blue, proud bird, bold and true,

We are comrades together,—my spirit's with you!”

Morning.

By Kathryn Hall, '04.

Swiftly, e'en now, the steeds of Dawn sweep by,

Sending the dark, unwilling mists,
before,

And in their wake, on rainbow-wings, do fly

The dew-bespangled hours, the gray world o'er:—

Naught the primeval stillness doth displace

Save distant, long-drawn note of chanticler—

Serene and smiling is fair Nature's face,

For dove-eyed Peace still broods o'er far and near:—

But soon, too soon, the busy marts
of men

Will hear the demon Strife, his work ne'er done,

For lo, the brightness in the east, and then

The road-way, coppered by the rising sun,

Turning, with golden touch, Night's sad array

Into the glory of another day.

The New Football Rules

An interview with DR. CHARLES McCARTHY, formerly Assistant Coach of the University Football Team.

(Dr. McCarthy wrote this article at the opening of the football season. It is interesting to note how well his predictions have been verified.

"The new rules will work great improvement in the game of football but you need not look for any decrease in the number of accidents."

This is the statement of Dr. Charles McCarthy, director of the Wisconsin legislative reference library and formerly assistant coach of the University of Wisconsin football team. Dr. McCarthy was one of the greatest football stars of the East some years ago, was the captain of the strongest eleven that ever represented Brown University and has the record of making more scores against Yale and Harvard than any individual player who ever faced the crimson or blue line. In the west he is looked upon as a most fair and reliable official at championship games and as an authority on the great college game.

"The ten-yard rule," he said, "will surely open up the game, and will make the element of the 'unexpected' more prominent. It will also make the game more spectacular, which will be an improvement from the point of view of the spectators and will doubtless tend to maintain the popularity of the sport with people generally, and this popularity counts for much in gate receipts.

"But it is not to be reasonably expected that the percentage of casualties will be reduced. The new game will be a running, dodging, fast and hard tackling play. It is not the straight plunges that cause injuries generally. It is when a man is tackled while running fast that he strikes the ground hard and breaks bones. Then, too, it is not the heavy line man with 'a ton of beef' who gets hurt. It is the little fellow who runs fast and has unlimited pluck. And that is just why I say you need not look for fewer accidents in this new game. It will be the little fellow who will have the chance now. The day of the ox-like big man with nothing but weight to commend him as a sportsman is gone and the teams must have a larger percentage built from the light, fast, shifty men. These are the fragile ones. They will get hurt, I think, more frequently and probably worse than did the big fellows. Think of the big games you have seen, where players were hurt. It was usually the back-field man who was down and who had to leave the game. Of course the tackles were often worn out with getting the brunt of the line plunges, but the accidents that were bad happened when a speedy man was thrown violently while running."

Dr. McCarthy expected large improvement in the technique of the game. He said the new rules, requiring longer gains, would make it necessary to kick with greater frequency and there would be all kinds and descriptions of kicks—long punts, short kicks, side kicks and kicks over the line. Probably various players on the team will be used to kick the ball and in various emergencies will the boot be called into play.

"It will be a good thing for the sport, however," said Dr. McCarthy, "for it means the passing of the day when football meant to find a few big men and hurl one of them against the line and over, slamming him upon his nose for a yard or two, and repeating this process three times for the necessary five yards. The light, fast man will have a show now, and better than that, the man with the head, who can take advantage of the opportunity offerred, the opportunity that the coach may never have conceived. The defense will have to be quick and shifty, ready to stop any kind of a play. Nor will the good line-bucker be barred, but he must be fast. The team with the fast ends and backs and good kickers will win."

"But how about the chances of Wisconsin, with only two veterans back?" was asked.

"All the better for that," replied Dr. McCarthy. "It is a new game, and Wisconsin has as good a chance to develop the kind of a team required as has any school, for they will all have to begin over again, right at the beginning. A team of veterans will not be a great advantage and it may be a positive handicap, for these old players will be harder to teach the new game than new men will be. Wisconsin's chances ought to be good. Of course it's all up to Director Hutchins. He has full authority and full responsibility. He is supreme in the department of athletics and will have to make good, the same as a professor of Greek would be required to make good."

Progress of the University

A number of instructors and assistants were appointed at the monthly meeting of the executive committee of the regents of the University, on October 8. Dr. Howard C. Bradley of Yale was appointed assistant professor of physiological chemistry; Florence M. Gage, '98, instructor in pharmacy and plant chemistry; John R. Price, instructor in electrical engineering in place of George C. Shaad, resigned.

The following named assistants were appointed: August W. Weber, Wisconsin, '01, education; August F. Sievers, Wisconsin, '06, pharmacy; Raymond Schulz, Wisconsin, '06, Milwaukee, pharmaceutical chemistry.

These were appointed instructors in the dairy school: J. W. Moore, Madison, head instructor in cheese making; Francis A. Schwingler, Avoca, Wis., assistant instructor in cheese making; Arthur W. Laabs, Curtis, Wis., assistant instructor in cheese making; J. C. Brown, Madison, instructor in milk testing; Matthew Michels, Garnet, Wis., instructor in farm dairying; Henry Boerschinger, Phlox, Wis., instructor in boiler firing; L. S. Berry, Grafton, Wis., assistant instructor in farm dairying.

The University library force was increased by these additions: Helen Schaefer, Cambridge, Ind.; Stanley Skidmore, Baltimore, Md.; Leila M. Weillepp, Cisco, Ill.

The resignation of Frank Rabak, '04, instructor in pharmaceutical technique, was accepted.

The regents of the University of Wisconsin at their quarterly meeting on October 16 decided to develop the extension and correspondence courses. Adequate appropriation was made for these departments, and it was decided to appoint an additional field organizer to take charge of the development of the courses in engineering and applied sciences.

Professor G. C. Sellery of the department of history was chosen director of the summer session. The resignations of Professor Augustus Trowbridge of the department of mathematical physics, who has accepted the chair in that subject at Princeton university, and of Professor D. C. On November 3, the University of Wisconsin defeated the University of Iowa in a hard fought game by a score of 18 to 4. At the end of the first half, the score stood 4 to 0 in favor of Iowa. Iowa scored by a drop kick from the field from the thirty-yard line in the second half. Wisconsin assumed the offensive from the start and maintained it to the end of the game. Clark, full back, played a star game for Wisconsin. A large crowd of rooters attended the game and much enthusiasm was manifested over the victory.

On November 10, Wisconsin defeated the University of Illinois in a well-played game at Urbana by a score of 16 to 6. Wisconsin made one touchdown, in the first half and a dropkick and touchdown in the second half. Illinois scored about the middle of the second half. Illinois was obliged to use many substitutes to replace men who were taken out on account of injuries. All the Wisconsin men played the game through. Half-back Rogers played a star game for Wisconsin. Two hundred cardinal rooters accompanied the team to Urbana. The team was giving a rousing reception upon their return to Madison, and only the early hour at which they came into the city on the following Monday morning prevented a great outburst of enthusiasm.

On November 17th, Wisconsin defeated Purdue in a rather loosely played game at Camp Randall by the score of 29 to 5. Purdue scored on a fumble in the second half. Wisconsin assumed the aggressive at the opening of the game and maintained it throughout.

The faculty of the University has voted that no party the total price of which is more than $3 a couple shall be given in any University building.

The Freshmen won the annual Sophomore-Freshmen track meet at Camp Randall on November 5th.

Almost one hundred young ladies, students of the University, attended the 18th annual state convention of the Y. W. C. A., November 9-11, at Beloit, Wis.
