PRINCIPLES FOR THE COMPILATION AND EDITING OF "FOREIGN RELATIONS"

The principles which guide the compilation and editing of Foreign Relations are stated in Department of State Regulation 1350 of June 15, 1961, a revision of the order approved on March 26, 1925, by Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, then Secretary of State. The text of the current regulation is printed below:

1350 DOCUMENTARY RECORD OF AMERICAN DIPLOMACY

1351 Scope of Documentation

The publication Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, constitutes the official record of the foreign policy of the United States. These volumes include, subject to necessary security considerations, all documents needed to give a comprehensive record of the major foreign policy decisions within the range of the Department of State's responsibilities, together with appropriate materials concerning the facts which contributed to the formulation of policies. When further material is needed to supplement the documentation in the Department's files for a proper understanding of the relevant policies of the United States, such papers should be obtained from other Government agencies.

1352 Editorial Preparation

The basic documentary diplomatic record to be printed in Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, shall be edited by the Historical Office, Bureau of Public Affairs of the Department of State. The editing of the record shall be guided by the principles of historical objectivity. There shall be no alteration of the text, no deletions without indicating where in the text the deletion is made, and no omission of facts which were of major importance in reaching a decision. Nothing shall be omitted for the purpose of concealing or glossing over what might be regarded by some as a defect of policy. However, certain omissions of documents are permissible for the following reasons:

- a. To avoid publication of matters which would tend to impede current diplomatic negotiations or other business.
- b. To condense the record and avoid repetition of needless details.
- c. To preserve the confidence reposed in the Department by individuals and by foreign governments.
- d. To avoid giving needless offense to other nationalities or individuals.
- e. To eliminate personal opinions presented in despatches and not acted upon by the Department. To this consideration there is one qualification—in connection with major decisions it is desirable, where possible, to show the alternatives presented to the Department before the decision was made.

1353 Clearance

To obtain appropriate clearances of material to be published in Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, the Historical Office shall:

- a. Refer to the appropriate policy offices of the Department and of other agencies of the Government such papers as appear to require policy clearance.
- b. Refer to the appropriate foreign governments requests for permission to print as part of the diplomatic correspondence of the United States those previously unpublished documents which were originated by the foreign governments.

In a statement released to the press on that date the President noted that "the nature of present-day foreign relations makes it essential for the United States to maintain informational activities abroad as an integral part of the conduct of our foreign affairs" (Bulletin, September 2, 1945, pp. 306–307).

The order, effective October 1, abolished the O.S.S. and transferred its remaining activities to the War Department. The President added that the transfer would provide the Secretary of State "with the resources which we have agreed you will need to aid in the development of our foreign policy, and will assure that pertinent experience accumulated during the war will be preserved and used in meeting the problems of the peace." The President further stated that he particularly desired the Secretary of State "to take the lead in developing a comprehensive and coordinated foreign intelligence program for all Federal agencies concerned with that type of activity . . . through the creation of an interdepartmental group, heading up under the State Department, which would formulate plans for my approval." For texts of the Executive Order and of the President's letters of September 20 to the Secretary of State and to Major General William J. # THE UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, APRIL 25-JUNE 26, 1945

INTRODUCTORY NOTE BY THE EDITOR

Historical Note

For documentation on arrangements for exploratory discussions on world security organization (including the Dumbarton Oaks conversations August 21-October 7, 1944), see Foreign Relations, 1944, volume I, pages 614 ff.

The Conference of the United Nations was called to meet in San Francisco on April 25, 1945, for the sole purpose of drafting the charter of a world security organization, and concluded on June 26, 1945, after fifty-one days of debate, negotiation, and drafting. The delegates of fifty governments unanimously approved the Charter of the United Nations, the Statute of the International Court of Justice, and the "Interim Arrangements" for the establishment of the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations in plenary session on June 25. On the following day the Charter was signed by 153 delegates, and a space was left for the signature of Poland, whose government was not represented at the Conference.

The United States Senate gave advice and consent to ratification of the Charter of the United Nations and annexed Statute of the International Court of Justice on July 28. President Truman ratified the Charter with the Statute on August 8 and signed the United Nations Participation Act of 1945 providing for United States participation in the United Nations on December 20. The Charter came into force on October 24, 1945, when the five major powers and twenty-four other signatory states had ratified the Charter. The original Protocol of Deposit of Ratifications of the Charter of the United Nations, signed by Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, was deposited, with the original signed copy of the Charter and the Statute, in the Archives of the Government of the United States.

Conference Structure and Documentation

The Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, supplemented by later agreements, amendments, comments, and proposals submitted by participating governments, constituted the agenda of the Conference. The permanent organization of the Conference comprised four commissions, twelve technical committees, and four general committees. The International Secretariat, headed by the Secretary General of the Conference, provided secretaries and clerical assistance for the committees, as well as translating, documentation, communications, and other facilities for them and the Conference as a whole.

The Charter was drafted in closed meetings of the twelve technical committees and their subcommittees. Recommendations of each committee formulated on the various parts of the agenda assigned to it were submitted on completion of its work to the appropriate commission, and, in turn, each commission, after consideration of the recommendations of its technical committees, recommended to the Conference in plenary session proposed texts for adoption as parts of the Charter. Nearly all of the important records of the Conference were issued in mimeographed form and distributed daily. About half a million sheets were reproduced each day. Documents of the commissions and committees, in general, include agenda, summary reports of meetings, and working documents. Verbatim minutes of the plenary sessions only were freely distributed, although verbatim minutes of other meetings were available for reference.

The principal documents of the United Nations Conference were published by the United Nations Information Organizations (London and New York) in cooperation with the Library of Congress in the 22-volume series entitled Documents of the United Nations Conference on International Organization. The series is available from the United Nations, New York. This material, reproduced photolithographically, without textual editing, from the mimeographed, printed, or photolithographed originals, is presented in the two working languages of the Conference, English and French. The final documents, however, the Charter, Statute of the International Court of Justice, and the Interim Arrangements are presented in the five official languages, Chinese, English, French, Russian, and Spanish. An index covering the complete official documentation is contained in volume 21. This volume provides a chronological legislative history of each article of the Charter, an alphabetical subject key, tables of correspondence between articles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, and a list of abbreviations used. An explanation of the numbering and classification system for Conference documentation is provided in volume 2 of the series, on pages 19, 27, and 31.

Reports of participating governments include the following English versions: Charter of the United Nations: Report to the President on the Results of the San Francisco Conference by the Chairman of the United States Delegation, the Secretary of State, June 26, 1945 (Department of State publication No. 2349, Conference Series 71); A Commentary on the Charter of the United Nations Signed at San Francisco on the 26th June, 1945, presented by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to Parliament by Command of His Majesty (British Cmd. 6666, Miscellaneous No. 9 (1945)); Materials for the History of the United Nations, S. B. Krylov: Volume I, "Framing of the Text of the Charter of the United Nations" (published by the Academy of Sciences of the USSR, 1949); Report on the United Nations Conference on International Organization Held at San Francisco, 25th April-26th June, 1945 (Canadian Department of External Affairs, Conference Series, 1945, No. 2); Commonwealth of Australia, United Nations Conference on International Organization, Held at San Francisco, U.S.A., from 25th April to 26th June, 1945: Report by the Australian Delegates; and United Nations Conference on International Organization; Report on the Conference Held at San Francisco 25th April-26th June 1945 by the Rt. Hon. Peter Fraser, Chairman of the New Zealand Delegation (Wellington, Department of External Affairs, publication No. 11, 1945).

Purpose and Scope of This Compilation

This compilation constitutes a bridge between the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and the Charter of the United Nations. It concentrates on the role of the United States in establishing the legal framework of the United Nations Organization.

The underlying purpose is to present the American Delegation's position in relation to the various issues, discussions, and decisions at different levels, such as informal diplomatic meetings, in Conference committees and subcommittees, and informal meetings of individuals, with emphasis on the why and how, and the atmosphere in which agreements were reached informally among the major Powers on the various issues, rather than on what transpired in the formal meetings of the Conference.

The preparation of United States policy recommendations for a general international organization is traced chronologically from the first of the year to completion on May 2, 1945, and issuance in the documentary form of "Changes in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as Suggested by the United States Delegation", and on May 4 in the form of "Amendments Proposed by the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom, Soviet Union, and China."

Substantive work of the Conference, which awaited availability of the joint proposals of the Sponsors, began on May 7 with study of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and the amendments presented by the Sponsors and other nations at the Conference. From this point on to the signing of the Charter on June 26, the documentation presented herein focuses on four phases of Conference activities: policy development, negotiation, debates, and drafting. The evolution of United States policy on the various subjects may be traced through the minutes of the seventy-nine meetings of the United States Delegation. Informal negotiation outside formal meetings, and coordination of proposed policies of the United States with other major powers, may be traced through minutes of the twelve meetings of the "Big Four" and twenty-nine meetings of the "Big Five", as well as minutes of a series of informal meetings with representatives of the other American This documentation, unpublished heretofore, is coordinated with the published documentation on Conference proceedings by use of footnote citations at the appropriate points in order to trace action taken by the American delegates in the various technical committees of the Conference in accordance with the agreed position established within the delegation as a whole for their guidance.

Many of the records of meetings included in this volume were informal notes rather than official verbatim minutes approved by the participants.

Additional selected documentation printed herein includes extracts from the daily record of Secretary of State Stettinius, memoranda of conversations of the Secretary with other delegates, daily reports of the Secretary to the Department on Conference developments, instructions to the Secretary from the Department, Departmental correspondence, memoranda, diplomatic notes, policy statements, and Presidential correspondence.

Occasional deletions of less important data have been made, necessarily, within certain documents to save space but not without indications in the text.

The documents were gathered from the central indexed files and the office and post lot files of the Department of State, as well as from the Manuscript Division of the Library of Congress, from the Department of the Interior, from the United States Mission to the United Nations, from the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library at Hyde Park, New York, and from various Department of State publications.

Consultations of the United States with the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, China, and France on questions not settled at Dumbarton Oaks and decisions taken at the Yalta Conference; consideration of views on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals submitted by the American Republics, other Governments, members of the United States Congress and the general public; extension of Conference invitations to Governments of 39 United Nations.

Washington, January 2, 1945-4 p.m.

At a fourth meeting of the Secretary with Heads of Mission of American Republics held on December 29 <sup>3</sup> to continue discussions concerning international organization a compilation of memoranda regarding Dumbarton Oaks proposals <sup>4</sup> submitted by nine governments—Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Uruguay and Venezuela—was presented by Coordination Committee for discussion.<sup>5</sup>

&lt;sup>5</sup> In addition to the American Republics, the views of the Governments of other United Nations, as well as various other Governments, were received in a series of informal conversations of Departmental officers with individual Chiefs of Mission in Washington and through United States diplomatic missions abroad; these comments and criticisms were taken into consideration in further review and study of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. For proposals, comments, and amendments proposed by certain participating Governments concerning the Proposals, see volume 3 of the series entitled Documents of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, 1945, published by the United Nations Information Organizations (London and New York) in cooperation with the Library of Congress (hereinafter cited as UNCIO Documents). war <sup>6</sup> to consider major issues and that these meetings of the heads of mission and forthcoming Conference would enable American Republics to attend the general conference on international organization with full understanding of each other's view-points and therefore with greater effectiveness to cooperate in building enduring international peace structure.

Commenting on memoranda from other governments Secretary suggested that all would wish to go to general conference with open minds and as few formal commitments as possible. He noted that if formal positions were taken it would be harder to change later and he urged that a flexible rather than a crystallized approach be kept. He said that it had been sought to make Dumbarton Oaks proposals informal, in recognition of fact that they might require modifications.

Meeting covered comments and suggestions regarding proposed name of new international organization in view of objections voiced to name "United Nations".

Discussion regarding Chapter I centered on question of specific enumeration of principles, viz. assurance of respect for international treaties, juridical equality of nations, respect of territorial integrity, et cetera.

7-23 January, 1945. (Section Six)

Introduction

During these weeks I was busy arranging the big trip to Russia for the Yalta Conference <sup>10</sup> and to Mexico City for the Meeting of Foreign Ministers.

PAN AMERICAN

At the meeting of my Staff Committee on Wednesday, January 10th, I urged immediate action to inform the six Latin American "associated nations" <sup>11</sup> that they might be excluded from initial participation in the forthcoming United Nations Conference, unless they declared war on one or both of the enemies and so qualified as United Nations. I suggested messages be sent at once to our appropriate Embassies instructing them to convey this information. Next day our missions in Montevideo, Asunción, Lima, and Santiago, were instructed to present the situation at once to the respective Presidents or Foreign Ministers and were advised that we had taken similar action toward all the other "associated nations" of South America. Otherwise, as I told the Staff, Stalin might have said "Let us invite the countries fighting the war and bring in the others later."

Secretary Stettinius noted in his Diary for the week of 11-17 March, 1945: "The Yalta Conference was the first meeting between the chiefs of state to which the Secretary of State had been invited and it was of high importance" that his Crimea notes be kept in the vault for a month longer so that "no breach of security should endanger the repetition of such an invitation." His Crimea notes are not found in Department files.

On Wednesday the tenth I told the members of my Staff Committee to speed up preparation of memoranda for the President to take to the meeting of the Big-Three <sup>12</sup>. . . . (By January 19th, I was able to arrange an appointment with the White House for Mr. Bohlen to present the completed binder, including the ten points. <sup>13</sup>)

I told Mr. Rockefeller in answer to his question at a Staff meeting that the memoranda should not only be background, but contain policy guidance. . . .

On the same occasion I explained that if things went well at the Big-Three meeting, I wanted to be able to cable Mr. Pasvolsky to start the machinery for calling a United Nations Conference. Assuming the President could clear up unsettled issues, I wanted to have the make-up of the American Delegation all ready and the proposed date and place agreed upon in advance so that there would be no delay later. I passed on to the Committee my impressions from the President of how encouraged he felt about pressing the American view on voting procedure with Stalin, 4 as well as his general determination to see that we actually got a world organization.

Of course, the major matter outstanding from the Dumbarton Oaks Conference to be considered at the conference was the procedure for voting, <sup>15</sup> . . . I wrote President Roosevelt on the seventeenth <sup>16</sup> informing him the British would accept the proposed compromise formula on voting in the Security Council as sent to the Prime Minister

The preparation of numerous memoranda on a wide range of subjects for the background information and policy guidance of President Roosevelt and the American delegation in their discussions at the Malta and Yalta Conferences (January 30–February 11, 1945), was completed on January 16, 1945. The black binder of material, the so-called "Yalta Briefing Book", was presented shortly thereafter to the President to be taken to the Three-Power meeting.

However, in a meeting which the President had with certain members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on January 11th, 18 he had been said by Mr. Acheson to have gone "fur-of requiring unanimity." The President felt we would probably have to yield to the Russians on this point but that they would yield on their proposals for seventeen votes. . . .

Subject: Second Conversation with the Soviet Ambassador 20 on the Dumbarton Oaks Documents

At the Ambassador's request, we met again today to continue the conversation which took place on January 11.21 Our meeting lasted over two and one-half hours, and the conversation ranged over a large variety of subjects related to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals.

The Ambassador opened the conversation by saying that he had given a great deal of thought to the points brought out in our previous discussion and had re-read the President's proposal. He was puzzled by the reference to Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 1, and proceeded to read that paragraph from the Russian text of the Dumbarton Oaks documents which he had in his hands. I told him that what we had in mind was the question of whether or not the Council should encourage a regional group or agency to undertake peaceful settlement of a local or regional dispute. He thought that was logical in terms of our general formula.

He said that he was anxious to have another talk because, in view of his imminent departure for Moscow, it had occurred to him that this would be a good opportunity to clarify his mind on a number of points.

There ensued another long discussion of the voting formula, which did not, however, bring out any new points. His evident purpose was to fix clearly in his mind our arguments in favor of the formula.

He then asked me if I would be willing to go over with him the other open items,<sup>22</sup> and proceeded to enumerate them as they occurred to him:

1. The International Court of Justice 28

2. Dependent areas and international trusteeships 24

3. Liquidation of the League of Nations 25

4. Initial membership 26

With regard to the Court, he said that he considered the matter settled in substance and that agreement on details should not be difficult to reach. The whole subject is being studied in Moscow on the basis of our documents which were discussed at Dumbarton Oaks.<sup>27</sup>

The discussion of the dependent areas matter was rather lengthy. He said that he had been very much interested in the few informal conversations we had on this subject at Dumbarton Oaks, but had never had the opportunity to make a more systematic examination of the subject. He mentioned the memorandum which Secretary Hull had presented at the Moscow Conference 28 and (as Sobolev had told me in September 29) said that the Soviet Government was very favorably impressed by it. He repeated the statement made by Sobolev that, while the Soviet Government has neither colonies nor experience in colonial administration, it is greatly interested in the subject. He asked me if I would care to outline for him the principal problems in this field as we see them.

I summarized for him the various alternative approaches to such problems as the distinction between trust and colonial areas; 30 the possible declaration of general principles applicable to both; the machinery of international trusteeship for detached areas; the possibilities and structure of regional commissions for colonial areas; the question of international accountability; and the relation between the international organization and the possible regional commissions. I said that our basic thought runs generally in terms of the ideas expressed in Secretary Hull's memorandum, and that we consider our treatment of the Philippines as a desirable type of attitude toward dependent areas.

In reply to his question as to whether all of these problems would have to be discussed at the United Nations Conference, I said that only questions relating to international trusteeship properly belong on the agenda of the conference. Colonial problems as such might be touched upon, but probably ought to be taken up in earnest at some special conference or by some other means.

He inquired whether such a discussion of colonial problems would involve only the colonial powers or also the other important powers. Might it not even be appropriate, he asked, that such a discussion be arranged by the future international organization, since the problems raised might well come within the scope of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council? I said that any one of these procedures was possible.

He then said that he was certain that some trusteeship arrangements for detached areas must be provided for in the Charter, and that the matter really ought to be of direct concern to his Government. After all, he pointed out, as a country at war with Italy, the Soviet Union will have to assume responsibilities with regard to Italian colonies, and it may well have to assume responsibilities with regard to territories detached from Japan.

His next question related to the position of Great Britain and of other countries on this subject. I said that we have a tentative arrangement with the British to exchange documents relating to this question, and it is our intention to make our documents available to the Russians. I said I was sure that the British intended to proceed similarly. I recalled the fact that there are very interesting passages on this subject in the Chinese memorandum. He said that they had found the ideas of the Chinese very interesting and would be very glad to study whatever documents we might give them.

We readily agreed that the initiative on the question of the liquidation of the League of Nations should be taken by the members of the League.

On the subject of initial membership, he repeated that the Soviet Government still wishes the Soviet Republics to be included 39 while it wishes the associated nations, as well as the neutrals, to be excluded. I made no attempt to argue the point, saying merely that we have had no new thoughts on either the Soviet Republics or the associated nations.

He then raised the question of the seat of the organization. We talked briefly about the Pays de Gex idea,33 which he had heard about and found quite interesting, except that a part of the territory would be Swiss. He characterized Switzerland rather contemptuously as a neutral, and not a good neutral at that, and hence ineligible. I asked him what ideas he had, and he said he had none. The subject was not pursued further, except that we explored jokingly the possibility of placing the organization in the Caucasus.

After that he turned to the summary of views expressed by certain Latin American governments 34 which I had given him. He said that he had studied it carefully and thought that there should be little difficulty in accepting some of the suggestions. For example, the ideas of political independence, of territorial integrity (with proper provision for possible adjustments), of peaceful change, of revision of treaties, and of promotion of international law could all be worked into the document. He agreed that many of them could be embodied in the preamble.

He said, however, that he was somewhat perturbed by the various suggestions for strengthening the Assembly and the Court at the expense of the Council, since such changes would completely after the character of our proposals. I agreed. I also agreed that it would be impracticable to make the decisions of the Court enforceable by the Council because the Council would, for one thing, deal only with peace and security, whereas the Court might render decisions on a large variety of subjects. In answer to his inquiry, I explained to him the meaning of compulsory jurisdiction, which he had misunderstood completely.

When he came to the statement that the Latin American countries are against voting by the permanent members on disputes in which they are involved, he again plunged into the subject of how "unrealistic" the smaller countries are in making that demand. I said that we must expect all of the countries at the Conference to urge many ideas of the kind that have emerged in our discussions with the Latin American countries, but that it seems to us that the advocacy of most of them would be greatly weakened by the acceptance of our voting formula. He said he would like to think about that possibility, and then asked if it would be possible for me to give him our analysis of the functions of the Council from the point of view of the voting procedure proposed in the President's formula. I said that I would be glad to put down on paper the points in this respect which I brought out in the discussion.

In conclusion, he again said that our two conversations had been both interesting and useful to him and would certainly be helpful in making his report to his Government. I responded in kind, and we parted on a very friendly note.

ing his forthcoming visit to Washington. Colonel Stanley is expected to be here from January 15 to January 18, inclusive.<sup>37</sup>

Colonel Stanley's visit is concerned mainly with the future program of the Anglo-American Caribbean Commission. Mr. Taussig will have informed you of the questions involved, which he has discussed fully with the Department.

Although the Anglo-American Caribbean Commission is the only topic which Colonel Stanley is prepared to discuss officially, other questions relating to dependent territories generally may become the subject of informal conversations. We propose to have only exploratory discussions with Colonel Stanley, since we are not ready as yet for definitive expressions of view. We understand that he is in a similar position, although we are told that he may make available to us, unofficially, a paper on regional advisory commissions prepared by the Colonial Office but which still requires clearance with the Dominions.

The principal questions which may arise in our informal discussions with Colonel Stanley are as follows:

1. Differentiation in status between trust territories and colonies generally.

British View.—British thinking tends to assimilate trust or mandated territories to colonies generally with single-nation administration and responsibility. They seem to be prepared to accept the principle of consultation through regional advisory commissions.

Our Proposed View.—Our thinking to date favors retention of the distinction between trust territories which have an international status and ordinary colonies. In our usage, "trusteeship" has an international significance whereas the British apply it in a national sense, with themselves as trustees. We favor the establishment of international trusteeship for certain areas and have expressed our willingness to accept the principle of regional advisory commissions for colonial areas.

2. Independence or self-government as the ultimate goal for dependent peoples.

British View.—In British opinion the goal should be self-government within the framework of empire.

Our Proposed View.—Our thinking to date favors independence as the goal of those dependencies capable of enjoying it. We think, however, that permitting such territories the option of freely choosing whether to be independent or to remain within an empire, might be acceptable.

3. Application of the principle of "international accountability".

British View.—The British are apparently willing to accept the principle of limited international accountability for their dependent territories but insist that responsibility cannot be divorced from control.

Our Proposed View.—Our thinking to date has been in favor of the principle of some new form of international accountability for the administration of all dependent territories, colonies and trust territories alike that should gain universal acceptance. The precise form and extent of accountability still remain to be decided.

4. Adoption of a Declaration of Standards.

British View.—The British appear to oppose a general declaration but supported the Recommendation on Social Policy at the Philadelphia Labor Conference.<sup>38</sup>

Our Proposed View.—Our thinking to date has favored a general declaration for the guidance of all authorities administering dependencies.

5. Participation in Regional Advisory Commissions.

British View.—The British are inclined to favor the development of regional commissions, of a strictly advisory nature, for dependent areas.

Our Proposed View.—Our thinking to date has favored the principle of such commissions, but the extent to which the United States should participate still remains to be decided.

6. Relation of Regional Advisory Commissions to the General International Organization.

British View.—The British view is unknown.

Our Proposed View.—This problem still remains to be worked out. There is attached hereto a memorandum setting forth the background of recent work by the Department regarding dependent areas.

[Annex-Memorandum]

JANUARY 13, 1945.

Subject: The Background of Recent Department Work Regarding Dependent Areas

Our broad objectives with respect to dependent areas have been to promote the advancement of dependent peoples through international collaboration in the interest of both the dependent peoples and of the world at large, and, to that end, to encourage and assist dependent peoples to govern and sustain themselves and to attain higher economic and social standards, to safeguard the security interests of dependent areas and the world at large, and to apply the principle of non-discriminatory treatment in dependent territories to the nationals of all peace-loving states.

On March 9, 1943, in a "Draft Declaration by the United Nations on National Independence", prepared by the Secretary of State and his advisers and submitted by the Secretary to the President, 39 a clear distinction was drawn between mandated or detached territories and colonial territories. It was proposed that the former only be placed under international trusteeship. The draft also embodied an earlier British suggestion for regional commissions for colonial areas.40 Perhaps the most significant proposal, however, was the stipulation that colonial peoples should be granted progressive measures of self-government and should be given full independence in accordance with a fixed time schedule. The draft was discussed with the British at Quebec 41 and with the British and the Russians at Moscow.42

British objections to the American proposals were noted at the Quebec Conference in August 1943, at the Moscow Conference in October 1943, as well as during the talks with the Stettinius Mission in London in April 1944.43

The Department's proposals with respect to dependent territories were further refined during the months preceding the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations.44 They have retained the basic ideas of the March 9 Draft Declaration with modifications and elaborations suggested by the Quebec and Moscow Conversations and by the London talks of the Stettinius Mission. The plans are incorporated in the three following documents:45 prepared prior to the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations, see "United States Tentative Proposals for a General International Organization, July 18, 1944," ibid., vol. I, p. 653. The text of the United States proposals was handed on July 18, 1944, to representatives of the British, Soviet, and Chinese Ambassadors, but chapted IX (printed ibid., p. 665) was omitted from the document.

1. "A Draft Declaration Regarding Administration of Dependent Areas", designed to establish minimum political, economic, and social standards for all non-self-governing territories, whether colonies, protectorates, or trust territories.

2. "A Draft Plan for Territorial Trusteeships", designed to supersede the League Mandates System <sup>46</sup> and to be attached to the general international organization. This mechanism would apply to existing mandated territories and to such former Italian and Japanese possessions as may be placed under it.

3. "A Draft Plan for Regional Advisory Commissions for Dependent Areas", similar to the Anglo-American Caribbean Commission, which might be set up in the Pacific and in Africa. These would be independent of the trusteeship mechanism.

Our draft plans on dependent areas have not been revealed to other interested governments. Just before the American Tentative Proposals for a general international organization were transmitted to the British, Soviet, and Chinese governments, it was agreed, at the instance of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to delete the chapter on international trusteeship on the ground that discussion of this chapter might involve difficult territorial questions.<sup>47</sup> The problem of dependent territories, therefore, was not discussed during the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations, although the British, Soviet, and Chinese governments expressed interest in the subject. It was understood, however, that the issue would be considered in subsequent negotiations.

The three documents described above are now being revised in the light of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. They are to be submitted to the President for his approval before being discussed with other governments.

Memorandum by the Secretary of War (Stimson) to the Secretary of State 50

Washington, January 23, 1945.

Here is the list of points I tried to make at our meeting yesterday: 51

FIRST

- 1. The Moscow Conference of November 1, 1943, contemplated two organizations:
  - a. A general international organization based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving states, and open to membership by all such states, large and small" etc.
  - b. An interim consultative organization of the four large powers for "maintaining international peace and security pending the re-establishment of law and order and the inauguration of a system of general security".52
- 2. This recognized the self-evident fact that these large powers who have won the war for law and justice will be obliged to maintain the security of the world which they have saved during the time necessary to establish a permanent organization of the whole world, and for that purpose they will have to consult and decide on many questions necessary to the security of the world and primarily their own safety in establishing that security. I have always thought that this interim Union, and China) on General Security, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. I, p. 755.

Yalta, p. 58.

No record of conversation found in Department files; possibly this was one of regular weekly meetings which was held by the Secretary of State with the Secretaries of War (Stimson) and the Navy (Forrestal).

For the Declaration of Four Nations (United States, United Kingdom, Soviet Union and China) on General Security, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, p. 755.

organization should be formal, subject to rules of consultation similar to Article XI of the old League,<sup>53</sup> and actively at work until the world had gotten stabilized enough to establish and turn loose the large world organization which includes the small nations.

3. The job of the four big nations is principally to establish a guarantee of peace in the atmosphere of which the world organization can be set going.

This will necessarily include the settlement of all territorial acquisitions in the shape of defense posts which each of these four powers may deem to be necessary for their own safety in carrying out such a guarantee of world peace.

- 4. For substantially this purpose, at the end of the last war President Wilson proposed a joint covenant of guarantee by Britain and America of the security of France as the pillar of western Europe.<sup>54</sup> But the mistake was made of not securing that guarantee before the second step of creating the League of Nations whose safety was in large part to be dependent upon such a guarantee. As a result the League of Nations lacked a foundation of security which ultimately proved fatal to it.
- 5. I think we are in danger of making a similar mistake by attempting to formulate the Dumbarton organization before we have discussed and ironed out the realities which may exist to enable the four powers to carry out their mission, and I was much interested to read Senator Vandenberg's recent speech 55 in which he took practically the same ground.
- 6. Any attempt to finally organize a Dumbarton organization will necessarily take place in an atmosphere of unreality until these preliminary foundations are established. The attitude of the numerous minor nations who have no real responsibility but plenty of vocal power and logical arguments will necessarily be different from that of the large powers who have to furnish the real security.

sa Article XI of the Covenant of the League of Nations noted that any war or threat of war was a matter of concern to the whole League and that in case any such emergency should arise the Secretary General should on the request of any member of the League forthwith summon a meeting of the Council. #### SECOND

- 1. An example of one of these difficulties has already appeared in the problem of the mandated islands. You are proposing to include them under your future principles of "trusteeship" or "mandates". They do not really belong in such a classification. Acquisition of them by the United States does not represent an attempt at colonization or exploitation. Instead it is merely the acquisition by the United States of the necessary bases for the defense of the security of the Pacific for the future world. To serve such a purpose they must belong to the United States with absolute power to rule and fortify them. They are not colonies; they are outposts, and their acquisition is appropriate under the general doctrine of self-defense by the power which guarantees the safety of that area of the world.
- 2. For that reason you will get into needless mazes if you try to set up a form of trusteeship which will include them before the necessity of their acquisition by the United States is established and recognized.
- 3. They are of an entirely different nature from the German colonies in various parts of the world, quite unessential to the defense of any protecting power, to which was applied the doctrine of mandates under the League of Nations formula.

THIRD

1. You will find the same clash of fundamental ideas and interests with Russia in regard to certain more difficult problems. She will claim that, in the light of her bitter experience with Germany, her own self-defense as a guarantor of the peace of the world will depend on relations with buffer countries like Poland, Bulgaria, and Rumania, which will be quite different from complete independence on the part of those countries.

Reference is made to the Japanese mandated islands in the Pacific; in the Cairo Declaration of December 1, 1943, President Roosevelt, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek (President of the National Government of the Republic of China), and Prime Minister Churchill stated: "The Three Great Allies... covet no gain for themselves and have no thought of territorial expansion. It is their purpose that Japan shall be stripped of all the islands in the Pacific which she has seized or occupied since the beginning of the first World War in 1914...". (Foreign Relations, The Conferences at Cairo and Tehran, 1943, p. 448.)

For memorandum of conversation with President Roosevelt, by the Special Assistant to the Secretary of State (Pasvolsky), November 15, 1944, which outlines the President's views in relation to those of the Secretaries of War and the Navy on international trusteeship, see Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 56.

the Navy on international trusteeship, see Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 56.

The President Roosevelt, in a memorandum of July 10, 1944, not printed, reminded the Joint Chiefs of Staff that "we have agreed that we are seeking no additional territory as a result of the war". He added, however, that he was working on the idea that the United Nations would ask the United States to act as trustee for the Japanese Mandated Islands; he assumed that with this authority would also go the military authority to protect or fortify them. The War and Navy representatives argued on the basis of this that the trustee should retain rigid controls over a trust territory when that territory had been designated as a strategic area.

2. It is my suggestion that such fundamental problems should be at least discussed and if possible an understanding reached between the big guarantor nations before you endeavor to set up principles in a world organization which may clash with realities.

For all these reasons I think we should not put the cart before the horse. We should by thorough discussion between the three or four great powers endeavor to settle, so far as we can, an accord upon the general area of these fundamental problems. We should endeavor to secure a covenant of guarantee of peace or at least an understanding of the conditions upon which such a general undertaking of mutual guarantee could be based.

If there is a general understanding reached among the larger powers I do not fear any lack of enthusiasm on the part of the lesser fry to follow through with the world organization whenever a general meeting may be called.

The foregoing constitutes a consideration which I believe to be fundamental yet it is no more than the common prudence one would exercise in preparing for the success of any general assembly or meeting in business or political life.

There is another point, however, which relates to the advisability of raising any territorial questions at all during the course of the war or, at least, until after the Russians have clearly committed themselves to their participation in the Pacific war.<sup>58</sup> Any discussions of territorial matters, whether they be in the nature of security acquisitions, trusteeships or outright territorial adjustments, are almost certain to induce controversies which put at risk a united and vigorous prosecution of the war itself. The introduction of these subjects into any general meeting would be most inadvisable, almost certainly provoke a welter of opinion and great jockeying for position. In my judgment it is fanciful to suppose that the subject of "trusteeships" could be introduced with a limitation of the discussion to the mere form of the trust organization. No such discussion could usefully proceed without a consideration of the nature of the specific areas to be trusteed. Immediately the subject is introduced, the various powers would certainly consider the subject in the light of how it would affect the areas in which they are interested or which they covet.

I feel that for us to raise the subject, on the proviso that no areas in the Pacific in which we are interested could be discussed is even more unwise. This would immediately provoke a sense of distrust and discrimination among the other parties to the discussion which would both call marked attention to our aims and poison the general atmosphere of the discussion.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that we should not bring up the subject of territorial adjustments, including "trusteeships" for discussion in any form, at least until the war is much further along and Russian participation in the Pacific war is accomplished. We should also make a determined effort to avoid a discussion of the subject. I realize that some discussion of territorial matters may be inevitable but we should not bring it up and we should avoid it if we can. The subject of "trusteeships" could certainly be avoided until a more suitable time, on the very sound ground that no satisfactory discussion can possibly take place without full knowledge of the types and character of the territories to be dealt with.

Record of Informal Meeting With Diplomatic Representatives of Certain American Republics, Held at Washington, January 26, 1945, 3 p. m.<sup>59</sup>

[Informal Notes]

In the absence of the Secretary the meeting was convened by the Under Secretary. Mr. Grew, after expressing his pleasure in greeting the Chiefs of Mission, gave a short address in which he stated that. as the Chiefs of Mission were aware, plans had become definite for a conference to meet next month at Mexico City; that during the period before and at the conference he felt that all would wish to give most careful study to the matter of international organization and to the important place of the traditional inter-American system with relation to it; that with respect to the latter it was believed that the way should be paved at Mexico City through exchange of views and recommendations made to take, at the appropriate forum which would appear to be the Ninth International Conference of American States, formal and definitive action to develop and strengthen the Inter-American System in order that it might play its proper role in the postwar world; that a more immediate and no less important matter was to complete at these meetings of the Chiefs of Mission, the exchanges of views regarding the general international organization; that ten American republics had provided most useful and interesting comments on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals—a memorandum from the Honduran Government 60 having just been received in addition to the others previously sent to this government—; and that this government welcomed the opportunity, in order that there might be a full understanding of the various positions, of being informed of the views of the other governments, and to explain the basic reasons which underlie certain provisions of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, not only regarding those questions which have been raised in the memoranda but also with respect to other points which the governments might wish to make.

Mr. Grew then said he would like to add a few further words on the World Organization. He stated that much hard work had been put in at Dumbarton Oaks and the results had been more successful than had been anticipated but that there was a great deal still to be done. He then said that he believed that there were two important points that should be kept in mind.

He stated that in the first place there was much to be learned from history as to the necessity of taking full measures for the preservation of peace. He said that efforts had been made almost from time immemorial to attain this end but that all had failed because they were superficial. He likened the measures demanded for assuring peace to those for the cure of cancer in that cancer could not be temporized with and required the most drastic methods in its treatment. Thus, he said, in the organization for peace and security in the world it was necessary to be prepared to use all means at our disposal, including force; although he hoped, of course, that force would not be necessary.

His second point was that no matter how much hard work—and no work was more important than this—was put into the formulation of the World Organization and whatever plans for the organization emerged from the United Nations Conference some nations would not think them perfect. The world, he said, should not for that reason be discouraged. He said that as an illustration when the American Constitution was drafted there was practically no one at the time who was satisfied with it; yet it has lasted over 150 years, been developed and amended, and has served as a very successful institution. We should, he said, all make up our minds to give the world organization a chance to succeed and an opportunity for it to develop and grow. He admonished that unless we did so and if it did not succeed the next war through scientific developments in the machinery of destruction might well blot out whole peoples and civilizations. We could not therefore permit another war to happen and it was incumbent upon us to draw up by hard work a good document and thereafter support it.

Mr. Grew then reiterated his previous remark that all possible should be done to strengthen the inter-American system.

Mr. Grew concluded his comments by stating that he regretted that due to other important engagements he would not be able to remain at the meeting as he would like to do and that therefore he would ask Mr. Rockefeller to preside in his place.

At the request of the Ambassador of Chile, the discussion began with paragraph 5 of Chapter II. Ambassador Mora read the proposal of his Government to amend paragraph 5 that "whenever disputes affect a Continent or region and do not constitute a danger to the general world peace, the States of other Continents or regions shall not be obligated to participate in operations of a military nature decided upon by the Council and the Assembly". He explained that it would be exceedingly difficult to stir up the feelings of a people in one part of the world over a dispute in another part of the world far removed from it or to make the effort to send troops to intervene in a controversy in some other remote area that had no direct effect on the state sending the troops or which did not endanger world peace, particularly if the Government requested to send troops had had no voice in the decision to send them.

Dr. Pasyolsky remarked with respect to Ambassador Mora's proposal that the proposed charter of the world organization provided that the use of armed forces would be subject to special agreements after the organization is created; the agreements to be negotiated between various states, subject to the approval of the Security Council. He said that the basic objective was to assure the maintenance of peace and security. He pointed out that peace could be said to be indivisible. For this reason, he explained, the Security Council must decide whether a dispute was of local or worldwide significance. Provision was made in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals to encourage regional boards to settle regional disputes 61 but the Council would have to decide whether all nations would give assistance in helping to settle specific disputes or only some nations would be called upon to render such assistance.

THE AMBASSADOR OF MEXICO 62 stated that it was very difficult to decide when a particular dispute might or might not constitute a danger to world peace, and it would be extremely dangerous to leave this decision to a group of countries or a region. He stated that in his belief, when force was used, it should not be that of neighboring countries because this would engender hate and retaliation. He cited the action taken under the League of Nations in handling the Saar plebiscite <sup>63</sup> as a case in point. There the controversy directly concerned France and Germany and it was found best not to use the troops of either country but forces of other nations not directly involved (i.e. Swedish, Dutch, and English forces). He recommended that there be left to the decision of the Security Council the forces to be used in each case. He said that the word "continent" was useful as a matter of descriptive geography, but was useless in a political sense; that while Canada geographically might be said to belong to the Western Hemisphere, politically it was part of the British Commonwealth of Nations; that the only permanent division would be north and south because the equator could not be changed.

THE AMBASSADOR OF HONDURAS 64 spoke in favor of extending to the whole world the principle of Inter-American solidarity in the sense that an attack on one American republic was considered an attack on all of them.

Ambassador Mora said that the discussion had covered his point. He said that he would like, however, to have the subject left open for further future discussion.

Dr. Pasvolsky here suggested that new points raised at the meeting should, because of their difficulty, be studied and discussed later.

The discussion thereafter was led by THE AMBASSADOR OF MEXICO who read aloud the articles of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals beginning with article 1 of Chapter III and who called attention to the suggestions for amendments made in the various memoranda.

Dr. Pasvolsky explained that the term "peace-loving states" used in Chapter III had been chosen as a criteria of membership in preference to other terms in order to emphasize the "peace" aspect of the organization; the most basic concept of the term being that of nations devoted to peace and determined to do what was necessary to make it possible for all nations to live at peace. He said that the determination of which were the peace-loving states (to be settled when the final Charter is drawn up) was involved with the problem of what nations would constitute the initial members, and that it was proposed in as In accordance with provisions of the Treaty of Versailles, June 28, 1919, at the end of 15 years from the coming into force of the Treaty, a plebiscite was held in the Saar on January 13, 1935, to allow the inhabitants to indicate the sovereignty under which they desired to be placed; the electors voted for reunion of the territory with Germany as against union with France or continuation of League administration. The maintenance of order was entrusted to international contingents (among which neither France nor Germany would be represented) composed of forces of the United Kingdom, Italy, Netherlands, and Sweden. (League of Nations, Information Section, Geneva, 1935, The Saar Plebiscite.)

the Dumbarton Oaks document that the Assembly should admit new states on recommendation of the Security Council, it being the joint responsibility of the two bodies to decide whether or not a non-member state should be admitted in accordance with the judgment as to whether such state was a peace-loving state. He mentioned that although the Council could not decide this matter by itself and could only make a recommendation to the Assembly, it was thought it would be better to initiate action in the smaller rather than in the larger body but that the latter of course would not have to admit a state applying for admission. He concluded his remarks on this topic by stating that it undoubtedly would require further discussion.

THE AMBASSADOR OF MEXICO stated that the attaining of permanent peace through cooperation of all States was an ideal to be achieved and that Chapter III should be drawn up with this ideal in mind. He believed that an organization should be worked out now which would not commit the same errors as the one set up after the last war but that admittedly the question of admission of new states was a complicated one.

Chapter IV was then discussed. The Ambassador of Mexico read the comments of his country and Venezuela 66 with regard to this chapter. He pointed out that provision was made in the chapter for the organization to have as many subsidiary groups as necessary.

Dr. Pasvolsky stated that the chapter was designed to give only an indication of the principal organs. He mentioned that the Economic and Social Council could or could not have been included. He explained that the reason for omitting that Council and the Military Staff Committee was to focus attention on the fact that in the Security Council were vested the principal functions of the organization in so far as they related to peace and security; that in the General Assembly were centered those relating to the creation of conditions conducive to peace; and that the International Court of Justice would be responsible for dealing with legal problems. He added that although, as the document now stands, the Economic and Social Council is under the authority of the Assembly, in the final document this could be changed.

Chapter V on the General Assembly was next discussed. Referring to the opening sentence of the chapter ("All members of the Organization should be members of the General Assembly and should have a number of representatives to be specified in the Charter."), Ambassador Castillo Nájera presented the Mexican commentary limiting membership to the General Assembly to three delegates from each country but he stated that he personally believed that more than three might be necessary if the work of the Assembly was divided into more than 3 commissions. He also noted that the other commentaries supported the view that the number of members of each country in the Assembly not be limited.

Dr. Pasvolsky stated that various criticisms had been voiced regarding the limited powers of the Assembly. He explained that in all the discussions he had tried to make clear the point that in building the organization, an attempt had been made to plan it (for effectiveness of action) on the principle that the functions of the organization would not be assigned to two bodies at the same time, but that each would have its own responsibilities. He stated that the word "primary" in connection with the Security Council meant that there would be some functions relating to the maintenance of peace and security which would rest with the General Assembly, and that therefore there had been included the sentence reading . . . "Any question relating to the maintenance of international peace and security . . . and to make recommendations with regard to any such principles or questions." He said the Assembly was completely free to deal in its discussions with any question arising in the field of international peace and security and could take up on its own initiative and make any recommendations it wished to on questions referred to it by the Security Council; that the Security Council also had the right to bring before the Assembly questions with which it was concerned and to make recommendations; that there were however two limitations: (1) responsibility was divided according to the body competent to take actioni.e. in a case where the Council was dealing with a matter serious enough for the Council to be concerned with it, then the Assembly should make it possible for the Council to carry out its heavy responsibility; (2) in the light of past experience it seemed very necessary to establish a system for the maintenance of peace and security which would place primary responsibility for action in a body at all times prepared to carry out this responsibility and one, as the Security Council was designed to be, which would remain in continuous session and not meet only periodically as would the Assembly. said that it was obvious that peace and security would be maintained only if the nations of the world should develop among themselves relations requiring a minimum of adjustments; that most of them must be willing to behave—with only a few law-breakers. He pointed out that obviously if most countries were not willing to support the principles of the world organization it would be a complete failure; that in this respect the problems of international relations would constitute a very important function of the Assembly and that if the Assembly failed to meet them, the Security Council would be powerless.

The Ambassador of Ecuador <sup>67</sup> mentioned that he appreciated hearing the comments of Dr. Pasvolsky on the points that had been raised as he felt that the most useful purpose served by these meetings was an explanation of the meaning and significance of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals which Dr. Pasvolsky was undertaking to impart.

THE AMBASSADOR OF MEXICO, referring to article 1, Section B, Chapter V of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, brought up the question of withdrawal of members from the organization.

Dr. Pasvolsky stated that universal membership was based on the principle that the organization was an association of nations with common ideals and common standards of behavior. They must, he said, be agreed to undertake certain actions as obligations. He stated that States by accepting certain common principles would be thereby eligible to membership in the organization and that therefore membership had not been made to rest on the fact that a nation exists, but rather that a nation lived by certain principles. He stressed that it was clear that if peace and security were to be maintained, all nations must act in accordance with these principles. He said that when, however, a nation did not wish to accept these obligations once it had entered the organization, when it habitually violated obligations, it was no longer a part of the community of nations, but it was not thereby absolved from its obligations. He mentioned that all nations had certain obligations, whether they were members of the organization or not.

With regard to the Brazilian commentary <sup>68</sup> on Section B of Article V as a whole, Dr. Pasvolsky said that the important question was how much authority the organization should have. He said that if we were to assume that the organization would become permanently established over the next 10 years or more, and found that its functions were being well performed and the world was getting into the habit of looking to this organization for authority it might well be that no modification would be necessary. He said that the whole matter could be reconsidered during the transitional period but that it was important not to cast any doubt now.

THE VENEZUELAN AMBASSADOR 69 brought up the question of unanimity. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that there was no provision for unanimity of decision in the Assembly.

The discussions terminated on Section B of Article V and the meeting adjourned at 5:00 P. M.

Mr. Rockefeller stated that if it would be convenient for the Chiefs of Mission the next meeting would be held next Wednesday, January 31, at 3:00 P.M.

Washington, January 27, 1945—11 p.m.

184. ReEmbs 4951, December 21; and 4963, December 22.71 The Department appreciates the importance of the article by H. Malinin which appeared in War and the Working Class No. 24 of December 15. For your guidance if the matter arises for informal discussion, the Department recognizes that the provisions on Regional Arrangements in Chapter VIII, Section C will need further elaboration and definition.

The Department agrees with the point of view that regional "blocs" or "spheres of influence" as defined in the article are undesirable. In other words the Department does not favor regional blocs directed potentially or in fact against other states or associations of states. Similarly it is opposed to the establishment of spheres of influence created by exclusive agreements of rival powers.

The "Security Zones" proposed by Malinin would require close scrutiny. Their acceptability would have to be determined by their conformity with the text laid down in Chapter VIII, Section C. That is, in their purposes and activities they would have to be consistent with the purposes and principles of the organization. In keeping with this consideration their primary purpose should be the maintenance through mutual action of peace and security within the respective regions. It would be an absolute condition of their acceptability that there must be no interference with the independence of the states within the zones.

The second condition put forward by Malinin for the establishment of security zones is open to serious question. According to him demarkation of frontiers and areas as between zones should only be achieved as a result of agreement between the chief powers of a particular continent. While there might be no objection to delimitation of areas by voluntary agreement of the states concerned (not only the leading ones) for purposes of fixing responsibility for security action on a regional basis, it should be recalled that under Chapter

The Neither printed. Telegram 4951, December 21, transmitted the translation of an article, "On the Question of the Creation of an International Security Organization", signed by Nikolai Malinin (500.CC/12-2144); in telegram 4963, December 22, Ambassador Harriman requested the Department's reaction to the article in the event that the question of regional security should come up informally with the Assistant People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union, Maxim Maximovich Litvinov, or other Soviet officials. The article, Ambassador Harriman indicated, evidently emanated from high Soviet circles and the signature "Malinin" was probably a pseudonym for Litvinov. (500.CC/12-2244)

VIII, Section C, Paragraph 3 the Security Council is to be kept fully informed regarding the security aspects of regional arrangements. The firm implication is that all such arrangements should be consonant with the responsibility of the Security Council to maintain peace and security and it is furthermore clear that the Security Council would always have the power to take cognizance of any situation within any region which might lead to a threat to the peace and that no regional arrangement could undertake enforcement action without authorization by the Security Council. Any regional arrangement or understanding which did not make clear provision to this effect would in our opinion violate the intent of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

In the light of a preliminary study the Department thinks it would be unwise to divide the General Assembly of the Organization into four sections. The founding of general international organization upon regional substructures would be of doubtful service to security. While some form of regional assembly committees might possibly be found convenient for certain purposes any definite proposals at this time are regarded as premature. The Department's primary concern is the creation of a strong and effective overall international organization. It is to be feared that the proposal of plans for a decentralization of the international organization or its organs along the lines advanced in the article under discussion would complicate the problem of achieving the establishment of the Organization and would impair its effectiveness. Thus it would appear advisable to postpone any discussion of moves toward decentralization certainly until after the international organization is firmly established.

CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS IN MEXICO CITY AND DISCUSSIONS WITH LATIN AMERICAN AMBASSADORS IN WASHINGTON

Should Prime Minister Churchill or Marshal Stalin raise any question about either of the above subjects, the following background material may be helpful.

Mexico City Conference

The Conference, which will convene February 21, is not a regular Consultative Meeting of American Foreign Ministers. It is being held, however, in accordance with the practice of the American republics to consult together on matters of mutual interest. No such general meeting having been held since that at Rio de Janeiro in January, 1942, 3 a demand for a meeting has been growing during the past year in the other American republics. The agenda for the Conference is as follows:

- I. Further cooperative measures for the prosecution of the war to complete victory.
- II. Consideration of problems of international organization for peace and security.
  - A. World organization
  - B. The further development of the inter-American system, and its relations to world organization.
- III. Consideration of the economic and social problems of the Americas.
  - A. War and transitional Economic cooperation
  - B. Consideration of methods of further cooperation for the improvement of economic and social conditions of the peoples of the Americas with the end of raising their general standard of living.
- IV. Other factors of general and immediate concern to the participating Governments.

Attention may be given to the Argentine problem.

With respect to plans for world organization, it is the objective of this Government to have a full discussion of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals at the Conference, and no commitment inconsistent with the proposals will be assumed by this Government at the Conference.

Discussions with Latin American Ambassadors

This Government has followed the same policy in discussing the Dumbarton Oaks proposals with the Ambassadors of the other American republics in Washington at a series of meetings during the fall and winter which have had the same objective of enabling the other republics to express their views, and of winning support for the proposals.

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Provisions of the proposals

The Dumbarton Oaks Proposals <sup>74</sup> provide that: (1) an international court of justice should be established as the principal judicial organ of the Organization; (2) the court should have a statute which should be annexed to the Charter of the Organization; (3) all members of the Organization should ipso facto be parties to the statute; (4) states not members of the Organization should be permitted to become parties to the statute upon conditions laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation by the Security Council; and (5) the statute should be either (a) the statute of the present Permanent Court of International Justice <sup>75</sup> with such modifications as may be desirable, or (b) a new statute based upon the present Statute.

Present status of the problem

It was suggested informally during the Conversations <sup>76</sup> that prior to the United Nations Conference a preliminary meeting of jurists be held for the purpose of drafting the statute of the court and formulating plans for its establishment, to be submitted to that conference. No definite agreement was reached on this suggestion, and there was no detailed discussion of the content of the proposed statute nor of the possible means by which it might be put into effect. The United States delegation handed informally to the other delegations a tentative revised draft of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice <sup>77</sup> as a possible basis for future consideration.

The preliminary meeting of jurists, and, subsequently, the Conference, will therefore be faced with complex legal and practical problems resulting from the fact that the Permanent Court of International Justice is still an organization in being, and that the adoption either of a new statute or a revision of the present Statute will necessarily involve the interests of states which will not be initial members of the organization. These include eight enemy states or states under armistice, and six neutral states. Since no decision was reached during the Conversations on the time for the proposed meeting of jurists, on its composition, or on its terms of reference, these questions will presumably be decided by agreement between the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and China.

If this matter arises for consideration, it is recommended that the following procedure be favored: (1) the convening of the meeting of jurists immediately upon the issuance of invitations to the United Nations Conference; (2) the meeting to consist of about fifteen jurists selected on the basis of technical competence by agreement among the four powers; (3) their terms of reference to be (a) the preparation for submission to the Conference of a statute for the court, on the basis of the present Statute, leaving for decision at the United Nations Conference the question whether it is to be treated as a revision of the present Statute, or as a new one, and (b) the preparation for submission to the Conference of alternative procedures for putting the statute into effect.

Action at Dumbarton Oaks

The question of the dissolution of the League of Nations and the transition from it to the United Nations Organization was discussed informally by the representatives of the United States, Great Britain, and China at Dumbarton Oaks, October 7, 1944.78 It was informally agreed that papers on the subject should be exchanged, no date being set for the exchange. As this Government is not a member of the League it has preferred to await the initiative of the other Governments in this matter. No papers have been received. A copy of a paper prepared in the Department is attached.79

Action of the League's Supervisory Committee

Early in December 1944 the Supervisory Committee of the League met in London and appointed a committee of three consisting of Mr. Hambro (Norway), Mr. Bruce (Australia), and Mr. Castillo Nájera (Mexico), to select a Conciliation Committee for the purpose of conferring with such group as might be designated by the United Nations Conference to deal with questions arising out of the dissolution of the League and the transfer of functions to the new Organization.

Previous to this London meeting, on November 23 the Mexican Ambassador, Chairman of the Supervisory Committee, expressed the hope to Mr. Stettinius that when the contemplated Conciliation Committee should meet with the designated United Nations group at the forthcoming United Nations Conference, the United States would appoint an expert to consult with the Committee.80 The Acting Secretary made no commitment on this point, but said the matter would be borne in mind.

After the London meeting, on December 23 the Mexican Ambassador informed Mr. Stettinius of the action taken by the Supervisory Committee and stated that the Conciliation Committee would be ready to meet with the designated United Nations group at their convenience. The Secretary made no comment and explained that no plans could be made for such a meeting until a time had been set for a United Nations Conference to consider the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

It is expected that the League Supervisory Committee at a meeting scheduled for January 19, 1945 in London will discuss the matter of the liquidation of the League generally and decide what preparatory work should be undertaken for a further meeting to be held probably in July at which a report will be presented for adoption.81

Recommended procedure

It is recommended that no initiative be taken by the United States with respect to the liquidation of the League. The question should be left for consideration at the United Nations Conference, unless a different procedure is initiated by the United Kingdom and/or by China, both of which are members of the League.

Record of Informal Meeting With Diplomatic Representatives of Certain American Republics, Held at Washington, January 31, 1945, 3 p. m.82

THE ACTING SECRETARY began the meeting with a few remarks. He said that he would like to say first of all that all those who had taken part in the Dumbarton Oaks discussions realized that there were few subjects more important today than that of establishing the postwar organization. He then said that because of the importance of the present discussions on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and of the short length of time before the Mexico City Conference, he hoped that good progress could be made at this meeting toward completing the discussion of the Proposals. He said that Dr. Pasvolsky would be happy to continue his comments on the views advanced by the various governments in as much as several of the Chiefs of Mission present had expressed the wish that Dr. Pasvolsky do so. He said that further comment of the Chiefs of Mission on each subject as it was taken up would be most welcome.

Mr. Grew then said that he would have to request to be allowed to leave the meeting because of other appointments and he turned the meeting over to Assistant Secretary Rockefeller.

THE AMBASSADOR OF CHILE stated that he would like to have a correction made in the minutes of the meeting of December 29, 1944,82a concerning the discussion that took place on paragraph 1 of Chapter I of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. He said that he thought the record of the discussion had not been quite correctly given as regards the inclusion of a statement of the purpose of "assuring respect for international treaties." It was his recollection that although at that meeting no decision was made to include this phrase in the statement of purposes and principles, it was agreed that it was essential and that the only question was as to where it should be inserted. Following a brief discussion on this matter it was suggested by Mr. Rockefeller that Señor Mora and Dr. Pasvolsky discuss the point together and draft a statement for inclusion in the minutes of the meeting today. Señor Mora said he believed it was not necessary to make a statement; that it would be sufficient to record his words in the minutes of the present meeting. The record of Dr. Pasvolsky's remarks in question is as follows:

Dr. Pasvolsky said that in his view the subject of respect for international obligations, including treaties, was inherent in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. He added, however, that it might be worthwhile to discuss at some stage the advisability of enumerating specifically this and similar points, and, if the conclusion reached favors such an enumeration, then decide in what precise place in the final document the point should be introduced.

THE AMBASSADOR OF HONDURAS commented that the memorandum of his Government also suggested that there be a stipulation in the Proposals concerning respect for treaties. He said that it was his recollection that at the meeting on December 29 the question was brought up as to whether or not this concept was included in the principles of International Law and that he at that time raised the question, if it were not, why the American republics had accepted and adhered to this principle. He said that it was then that Dr. Pasvolsky had agreed it would be convenient to include this phrase in the Proposal in some way.

THE AMBASSADOR OF CHILE agreed with the remarks of the Ambassador of Honduras but stated that he had not at the time agreed that the principle of "respect for international treaties" was included in the rules of international law, in as much as international law, not yet being clearly defined, could hardly be said to comprise this principle.

THE AMBASSADOR OF VENEZUELA called attention to a correction to be made on page 6 of the minutes of January 26. He stated that he did not recall having brought up the question of unanimity and believed this remark had been incorrectly attributed to him. With these corrections, the minutes of the last meeting were approved.

Discussion of the Proposals then began with Chapter VI. Dr. Pasvolsky referred to Section A on the composition of the Security Council remarking that several points had been brought out in the commentaries regarding the size of the Council, the number of permanent seats, and specific provisions for representation. He said that as regards the composition of the Council, two broad considerations must be taken into account: The Council must be efficient and effective. and it must be representative. He stated that the provision for permanent seats on the Council was related to the responsibilities in the performance of its principal functions, and was conditioned upon the ability and willingness of the powers who did have permanent seats to carry out the heavy responsibilities that would rest upon them. He said that the provision for the five countries specified as permanent members was related to the fact that those countries now represented the preponderance of military and industrial power in the world.

With reference to the number of nonpermanent states, Dr. Pasvolsky spoke of the original Council of the League of Nations, which had five permanent and four nonpermanent members at its inception, a total of nine which gradually increased until just before the war there were fifteen members on the Council. He explained that at the Dumbarton Oaks discussions it was concluded that one point must be established at the very start: The Council must have more nonpermanent than permanent members in order to avoid a situation in which a decision of the Council could be taken solely by the votes of the permanent members.<sup>83</sup> He stressed the points that the selection of members of the League Council was in general made on the basis of a careful consideration of its being representative of the various areas of the world; that the American Republics were always represented on that Council; and that he could not imagine any situation in which they would not be so represented again. Dr. Pasvolsky thought that it would be inadvisable, however, at this stage to prescribe rules for the selection by the Assembly of nonpermanent members, since other criteria than regional representation have already been proposed.

In reply to an inquiry from the Chairman as to whether there were any further questions, The Ambassador of Chile stated that there were no particular ones but that there was still a great deal to be said. He said that, however, since whatever there was to say had already been said and summarized by the Coordinating Committee, and since decisions were not to be arrived at in these meetings it would not be advisable to repeat what all already knew.

THE AMBASSADOR OF BRAZIL commented on the composition of the Council, suggesting that it was necessary that Latin America be permanently represented on that body. He then referred to Chapter I, paragraph 1, of the Proposals and emphasized the preventative purpose of the Organization.

Mr. Rockefeller and The Ambassador of Venezuela suggested that the remarks of the Ambassador of Brazil should be recorded in the minutes of the meeting. The following are Ambassador Martins' remarks quoted in translation:

At the last meeting of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union, Chapter VI of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals being up for discussion, and Mr. Pasvolsky having declared that it would be desirable to discuss such matters as might be subject of negotiations at the forthcoming conferences of Mexico and of the United Nations, Ambassador Carlos Martins requested permission to make known the viewpoint of Brazil concerning such an important subject.

Ambassador Martins stated that Latin America, from the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea throughout the length of the coasts of the Republics of South America, constitutes the most accessible and effective zone for an attack by the European nations against the United States and the most vulnerable point of the entire continent.

It is intended that the Council of the International Organization should take immediate and effective measures to preserve and maintain peace.

Considering the vulnerability of Latin America, it would be inadmissible to exclude it from a permanent seat on the Council. Such exclusion would be equivalent to exposing the Latin American Republics to all the dangers and consequences of an attack or of a war without giving them any guarantee of permanent participation in the body which is vital for the preservation of peace.

In addition, according to the terms of Chapter I of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, the Council would be empowered to take effective collective measures to prevent and eliminate any threats to peace and, therefore, to take cognizance of all disagreements, essentially of a universal rather than local nature, which might constitute threats to peace.

The present war has shown in a very forceful way the dangers that threaten us when a conflict takes place in any part of the world. Latin America, therefore, cannot be absent from participation in the consideration of all questions when efforts are being made to settle international controversies which might lead to conflicts by peaceful means. The continued cooperation of Latin America in peace as well as in war requires that it be given a permanent seat on the Council.

These reasons become weightier when the action of the Council would envisage not only the maintenance of peace by force, but above all the avoidance of aggression and the outbreak of hostilities.

Referring to paragraph 1 of Section B, Chapter VI, Dr. Pasvolsky again explained the basic theory underlying the proposed separation of functions as between the two principal organs. He said that in order to achieve prompt and effective action by the organization in the field of security, the necessary powers must be assigned to a body which while representing the whole group of nations associated in the organization, will be in a position to act quickly and effectively when the need arises. The role to be played by the Assembly, he said, was to maintain harmonious conditions in which resort to measures for the maintenance of the peace will be less frequent and less necessary. In that connection he mentioned the difficulties created in the League by the fact that the same responsibilities were lodged in two bodies.

Dr. Pasvolsky said that the question raised in this paragraph was related to another point involved in the first paragraph of Section D of this Chapter on Procedure, i.e., that of the continuous functioning of the Security Council. He said that since, as pointed out by the Ambassador of Brazil, the primary function of the organization would be one of prevention, and the factors in the process of prevention were constant alertness, constant knowledge of what was happening, and a constant readiness to take hold of the situation before it went too far, such functioning was possible only in a body capable of being in continuous session. He pointed out the value of continuous meetings so indispensable to the performance by the Council of the duties assigned to it: i.e., they would provide the participants with the opportunity of working together on problems of mutual concern without being delayed by the necessity of calling special meetings. special meetings would, however, permit the governments of the various members to be represented, if they so desired, by persons other than their permanent delegates.

THE AMBASSADOR OF CHILE repeated the recommendation of his Government,<sup>84</sup> that the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security be vested in the Council only during the periods when the Assembly was not in session.

Further discussion of paragraph 4 was deferred until consideration of the Court should be started.

In connection with paragraph 5, Dr. Pasvolsky called upon General Strong, so who explained that the problem of trying to specify all regulations of armaments was extremely complicated, involving as it did, considerations of such matters as production, distribution, use, character, and size of armaments. He said that considerations of what would constitute the field of armaments had for years plagued the League. Therefore, for the purposes of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, it had been decided that it would be much better to plan for a system of regulation and leave to the conference when called the decision as to limitations to be imposed in that particular field. so

As regards the additional paragraphs 6, 7, and 8, proposed in the Chilean memorandum (the first two of which had already been covered in general terms), it was decided, since paragraph 8 deals with the obligations to provide armed forces, requiring special agreements. that discussion of this point should be postponed. The same decision was made regarding the additional paragraph 9 on nonparticipation of members. It was also felt that Panama's comment on Section B as a whole did not require any discussion.

Dr. Pasvolsky explained that the Venezuelan comment <sup>87</sup> on Section B as a whole related to the long statement he had made before on the distribution of power between the Assembly and the Council and that obviously the whole question would have to be considered as a part of the broad problem of distribution of powers.

It was agreed that discussion of Section C, Voting, would be premature at this time.

With reference to Section D, Procedure, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that the first point had already been discussed together with the observations made by the governments of Mexico and Venezuela.

There followed a short discussion between Dr. Pasvolsky and the Ambassador of Mexico with reference to Mexico's proposal for paragraph 4. The Ambassador expressed his belief that a proposal such as that made by his Government was obviously just because a country had the right to defend itself in any matter of interest to it, and that the decision in this matter should be left to the country concerned. It was agreed that this was an important question requiring further consideration.

Chapter VII on the Court was next briefly touched upon. Dr. Pasvolsky stated that considerations of jurisdiction must be discussed in connection with the statute to be prepared for the Court. Referring to paragraph 3 of this chapter, he said that in as much as there was agreement that the statute should be either the existing one continuing in force or a new one, the question again had been left open and would come up in connection with the discussion of the definitive statute. He said that the fundamental principles connected with the Court were: (1) there would be a Court; (2) it would be a part of the general organization and would operate on the basis of a statute which was part of the basic charter; (3) all members of the organization would ipso facto be parties to the Court; (4) nonmembers might be permitted to adhere to the statute, but decision on when they would be permitted to do so would be made by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Mr. Sandiffer was requested to comment on the difference between alternatives (a) and (b) in paragraph 3. He stated that in the first alternative the principal question involved was whether the legal continuity of the Court should be maintained. One way to establish the Court was to take the present statute, revise it, and continue it in existence, on the basis of that statute, with such revisions, additions or changes as might be necessary. This would have the advantage of maintaining the organic continuity of the Court. As regards alternative (b), he explained that a new statute might be drafted, based substantially on the present one and of the same general framework. There would be no great departure from the present statute of the Court; this statute could be put into operation without having to go through the procedure of revision and of securing the consent of all the existing members.

THE AMBASSADOR OF MEXICO expressed an opinion that the fact that two alternatives had been included in paragraph 3 evidenced that the framers of the Proposals themselves had not yet reached a definite decision, and that since it was the fundamental principle which must be borne in mind, nothing would be accomplished by going into a lengthy academic discussion on the subject at this time.

Dr. Pasvolsky clarified a point in connection with the commentary by the government of Brazil. He stated that the statute of the Court was to be annexed to and be a part of the Charter of the Organization, which meant that any country adhering to the Charter of the Organization would automatically adhere to the statute of the Court. He agreed that the Brazilian Government was right in saying that if left to a future agreement, it would lead to a contradiction.

Discussion of the proposals ended here and the meeting was adjourned at 4:35 p.m. It was agreed that the next meeting would be held on Monday, February 5, at 3:00 p.m.

Record of Informal Meeting With Diplomatic Representatives of Certain American Republics, Held at Washington, February 5, 1945, 3 p. m.<sup>88</sup>

[Informal Notes]

In the absence of the Under Secretary the meeting was opened by the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Rockefeller.

The discussion began with Chapter VIII. In referring to the comments made by Mexico and Venezuela on paragraph 1 under Section A, Pacific Settlement of Disputes, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that those of Mexico again raised the question of whether the General Assembly should have the power of investigation. He believed that that body was under the present proposals empowered to investigate. He stated that the particular kind of investigation mentioned in paragraph 1 was solely for the purpose of determining whether or not a particular situation or dispute was of such a nature that its continuance was likely to endanger peace or international security. He referred again to the chapter on the Assembly in which that body was given the right to study and make recommendations concerning any situation likely to impair the general welfare. He said that in the light of the next paragraph (2) of Chapter VIII it was not necessary to specify that the Assembly would have the right to investigate.

With reference to the point raised by Venezuela, i.e. whether or not excessive investigation might not be undesirable, Dr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the Security Council will have to exercise its functions with a great deal of common sense. He said however that Venezuela's comment was a very useful kind of statement in that it constituted a warning of the difficulty which might be caused, under certain conditions, by too much investigation.

With reference to the commentary made by Mexico on paragraph 2, that there was a contradiction between this and the first paragraph,

Dr. Pasvolsky said that if the interpretation he had just given was correct, it would seem then that the contradiction was more apparent than real.

THE AMBASSADOR OF CHILE stated that as no definite agreement was to be reached in these meetings, his government would reserve the right to present its views on the different points under discussion at the time when a definite agreement on the Dumbarton Oaks proposals was to be reached.

Mr. Rockefeller at this point introduced the question of whether it would be advisable to make available to the press the commentaries on the Dumbarton Oaks proposals which have been made by the various Latin American countries, saying he understood that some of them had already been given out. Following a discussion on this subject it was agreed that each government should decide whether its comments should or should not be made public.

Continuing with paragraph 3 of the document, Dr. Pasvolsky referred to the Chilean commentary <sup>89</sup> which proposed adding "investigation" and "examination" as means for the solution of disputes. He called the attention of the Ambassador of Chile to the fact that this paragraph related to settlement of disputes by means of the parties' own choice; that investigation would obviously have to be made by somebody else; and that the use of the word might lead to misunderstanding. He said it was difficult to define "examination". He said that presumably the process of investigation and examination would be performed by the Council or some other agency and that since the process of investigation was included in the chapter as a whole it is questionable whether it should be included in the peaceful means of each country's own choice.

Referring to Costa Rica's commentary **o on this paragraph (3), Dr. Pasvolsky explained that the member countries assumed the basic obligation to settle differences by peaceful means and therefore it should not be necessary specifically to state that they were required to do so. The question again to be considered, he said, was whether at this stage of the procedure the Security Council should require, rather than simply call upon, the countries in a dispute to settle it—since requiring would mean some form of action. He added that in this part of the chapter, i.e. Section A, the Security Council was not given the power to impose a solution, but only to facilitate the solution.

With regard to the Mexican commentary on paragraph 3, Dr. Pasvolsky stated he believed the proposal made by Mexico was included in paragraph 5 which stated that the Council should be empowered at any stage of the dispute to recommend appropriate procedures and methods of adjustment.

With reference to the Uruguayan comment,<sup>91</sup> Dr. Pasvolsky said that a question might not be solved by arbitration and yet be of such a nature that it could not be handled by the Court because of its not being a justiciable question.

Returning to paragraph 3, the last sentence of which was considered unnecessary by Venezuela, Dr. Pasvolsky explained that the reason for its inclusion was to call attention to the fact that the Security Council should have authority to encourage countries to resort to means of their own choice. The sentence is not essential but its retention seems desirable. The question needing further study was whether the last sentence was unnecessary as it stood, and if retained, whether or not it should be strengthened, perhaps by substituting a provision for requiring the countries to settle their disputes.

DR. PASVOLSKY stated that paragraph 4 defines the obligations of the parties when they fail to settle a dispute under paragraph 3. With reference to Venezuela's commentary on this paragraph (4) which draws a distinction between justiciable and nonjusticiable disputes, he said that not much could be said on this now until the question of compulsory jurisdiction of the Court was settled.

Dr. Pasvolsky then pointed out that Mexico's commentary on paragraph 4 raised the question whether or not cases could be referred to the Court by the Assembly or the Council, which again was involved in the problem of jurisdiction. Mr. Sandifer corroborated this statement.

Referring to paragraph 5, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that the Council did not have to wait until a dispute was referred to it before it could recommend methods of adjustment; it could step into the situation in the event that the parties refused to utilize the various means of their own choice or in case it considered that the situation was being aggravated. He explained that the paragraph related to two kinds of situations: (1) those in which the parties appealed to the Council or (2) those for which the Council felt that it should recommend procedures.

With reference to Mexico's commentary on paragraph 5, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that he thought that this point was covered in paragraph 1 of Section B: He said that if the parties to a dispute failed to settle their differences in accordance with means of their own choice or on recommendations of the Council, the Council had to determine whether or not such a failure constituted a threat to the peace, in which latter case it was empowered to take whatever measures were necessary for the maintenance of peace and security. As regards the commentary made by Venezuela as to when the Council should intervene, Dr. Pasvolsky thought that intervention by the Council should not be limited to the situation in which the parties had failed to reach a settlement, but that it should have the authority to intervene if it considered that the procedures under paragraph 3 were not being carried out with sufficient vigor.

Touching again upon paragraph 6, he stated that the assumption there was that a justiciable dispute would go to the Court, and other types of dispute to the Security Council. In case of question as to whether a dispute was justiciable, he said it was intended that the Court would decide whether it should take jurisdiction. The Council could also request the opinion of the Court on legal questions connected with other disputes.

Referring to the Brazilian commentary on this paragraph Dr. Pasvolsky stated that here again two questions were involved: (1) could the Council refer a dispute to the Court and (2) could it refer a case to arbitration? He said it was important to keep in mind that at this stage the Council could recommend procedures and methods and not employ methods itself unless the parties to a dispute asked the Council to settle the case for them, in which event the Council would become an agency of mediation. With reference to the first question, he said that discussion must be deferred until the statute of the Court was determined; as to the second, that the Council had inherent rights in the matter but if it was found desirable to specify methods which the Council must employ, then that might be considered.

He explained that the point raised by Venezuela in connection with paragraph 6 brought up the question of whether the procedures described under paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 should be under the Assembly as well as the Security Council. The Venezuelan commentary on the same paragraph, Dr. Pasvolsky pointed out, related to the question of compulsory jurisdiction and therefore must also be held over for discussion in connection with the Court statute.

Paragraph 7, he said, referred to a problem which needed to be very thoroughly explored in later detailed discussions, particularly with respect to who should determine whether a particular matter lay solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the state concerned. He referred in this connection to Mexico's commentary to the effect that this paragraph should be eliminated. He inquired of the Ambassador of Chile what was meant by the phrase "already solved by treaties in force" as used in Chile's commentary on the paragraph in question. The Ambassador replied that it referred to the same question, already discussed, of respect for treaties.

Passing to Section B, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that Uruguay's commentary on the first paragraph was in line with the Proposals. With reference to the Venezuelan commentary, he said that this involved a point already discussed: whether or not the Council should be given the duty of executing decisions of the International Court; this in turn being bound up with the kind of Court there will be.

Dr. Pasvolsky pointed out that paragraph 2 under Section B broadened the power of the Council and made it general. He pointed out that in paragraph 1 a transition from peaceful settlement to enforcement procedure was indicated. He stated that the commentary of Mexico on this paragraph referred to the question previously discussed: the distribution of power between the Assembly and the Council.

Dr. Pasvolsky then explained that paragraph 3 related to measures which the Council could use short of those involving armed forces. He stated that this was one of the places where measures had been enumerated, and that in doing so difficulties were created for the reason that all appropriate measures might not be stipulated, as illustrated by Mexico's commentary on this paragraph which suggested financial and commercial measures. It had been thought that these were included in economic measures.

Dr. Pasvolsky referred to the commentary of the Costa Rican Government on paragraph 4 and said that he was in full agreement with the statement made therein that use of armed forces collectively under this system was not an act of war.

Passing to paragraph 5 he stated that it established a system by which the Council would have placed at its disposal forces to be used for carrying out enforcement measures. With reference to Chile's commentary which would change the phrase should contribute to may contribute, he said that there was not very much difference between the two, unless it were one of principle. If it was meant that some of the members did not have to contribute, that would make a difference. He felt however that it was the joint responsibility of all members of the Organization to contribute.

The Ambassador of Chile stated that this referred to the Chilean Government's view with respect to the form in which the nations that were a part of the organization should contribute armed forces to avoid a violation of international peace and security. Senor Mora said that Chile had maintained since the beginning of the discussions that all nations should not be bound in all cases to contribute armed forces. He felt that there were some cases in which some nations should not contribute or should be exempted from contributing armed forces. For example, in the case of a conflict arising in another continent, which did not threaten world peace, those nations which were very far away should not be compelled to contribute. So, the phrase "should contribute" ought to be substituted for the one now appearing in the Charter of the Organization.

DR. PASVOLSKY remarked that this question rests on the concept of who could determine whether a conflict was of world-wide or purely local significance. The Ambassador of Chile agreed that since this was a broad question, it was subject to further discussion.

As regards the statement of Guatemala <sup>92</sup> on paragraph 5 Dr. Pasvolsky said that this was involved in the concept of the special agreements to be negotiated.

With reference to the Mexican commentary he explained that this was a matter of domestic concern and responsibility in each country, although it was quite clear that if the Council was to be capable of performing its duties, it must know what it could count on—hence the reason for providing that the Council be given information in advance by each country on specified amounts and facilities at the Council's disposal.

With reference to the Venezuelan proposal regarding paragraph 5 Dr. Pasvolsky made two comments: (1) the obligation to furnish armed forces and facilities would be on the basis of the special agreement or agreements to be concluded; (2) the question of mutual assistance is dealt with in paragraphs 10 and 11. He explained that the thought underlying these three paragraphs was that they would, in conjunction, take care of the sort of situation envisaged in the Venezuelan proposal; if not, it would be necessary to discuss the matter further.

Dr. Pasvolsky said that the comments on the next paragraph (6) had already been discussed.

As regards paragraph 7, he said that it related to the question raised by Chile as to who should determine what countries would carry out the decisions of the Council. He inquired of the Ambassador of Chile whether he thought that the special agreements would specify obligations in that respect. The Ambassador of Chile answered in the affirmative, stating that this same problem appeared in connection with paragraph 10 later on; with respect to which paragraph his Government thought that the phrases "according as may be possible" and "in conformity with the Charter" should be added, since the possibility of some countries not being able to give assistance should be kept in mind. He added that it should be made clear when they should give assistance and when they should not.

In explanation of Chile's comment on this paragraph, i.e. that "the sense of the final part of this number needs to be clarified", he said that this introduced the question of the specialized agencies to be established—some of which were already in existence, some projected. He said that it was clear that the Council might determine on measures which could be nullified or impaired by the decisions of some special agency. If the Security Council undertook economic sanctions, the member governments should see to it that a specialized agency did not take measures contrary to those of the Council. He further explained that the relation between the general Organization and the specialized agencies would be made specific in the agreements to be negotiated.

Before touching on paragraph 9, Dr. Pasvolsky referred again to paragraphs 10 and 11 on mutual assistance, and read Chile's commentary on paragraph 10. He explained that the question of how much assistance each Member should provide in connection with the situation envisaged was left open, presumably for agreement among the countries concerned. As regards Mexico's proposal on paragraph 10 he remarked that the points therein were covered in the Dumbarton Oaks document.

With reference to the commentaries made on paragraph 11 he stated that they raised the important question as to how far the Security Council itself should be authorized to go in solving these problems; that here again the Proposals were left open, since the measures to be taken would have to be on the basis of agreement among the countries concerned.

Returning to paragraph 9, Dr. Pasvolsky requested the comments of General Strong and Admiral Train.

GENERAL STRONG stated that in considering paragraphs 5, 6 and 9 of Section B, Chapter VIII, paragraph 5 and Section B, of Chapter VI it should be borne in mind that these paragraphs set forth in a general way the purpose to be realized by establishing the Military Staff Committee referred to in paragraph 5, Section B, Chapter VI, the general intention having been to reduce to a minimum the burden of maintaining armaments and at the same time providing for the maintenance of international peace and security. He pointed out that the requirements for the Military Staff Committee first appear in paragraph 5 of Chapter VI in connection with the establishment of a system for regulation of armaments, and continue in paragraph 5 and 6, Section B of Chapter VIII, which provided for the furnishing of quotas of national contingents to be placed at the disposal of the Security Council and for furnishing facilities and assistance. Gen-ERAL STRONG explained that, assuming that quotas have been established, then under paragraph 5 the Military Staff Committee would be the planning agency concerned with the furnishing of forces to the Council, regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament. Provisions in this connection had purposely been made of a general character for two reasons: (1) Because the implication of the general principles laid down, which are highly technical, should be discussed after the Charter had been established and the actual organization of the Security Council and the Military Staff Committee completed; (2) because it was believed that no useful purpose would be served now by attempting to outline the multiplicity and complexity of the problems that would face the Council and the Committee when that time comes. Mentioning the rather complete studies made by the Preparatory Committee at Geneva of some of these questions, General Strong expressed the opinion that that work could be accepted or modified or some simpler measures could be taken. He stated that the principal function of the Committee would be one of advising the Council on all technical questions relating either to regulation of armaments, the utilization of forces placed at the disposal of the Council, and possibly considering ultimately the question of disarmament.

Admiral Train emphasized the fact that a very important duty of the Committee would be one of advising the Council on regulations as to the amounts of armaments, forces, facilities, etc. to be furnished. He further remarked that General Strong had not covered the point brought out in the Chilean commentary on paragraph 9. that whereas the Dumbarton Oaks document stated in that paragraph that "any member of the Organization not permanently represented on the Committee should be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires that such a state should participate in its work", the government of Chile proposed that members of the Organization not permanently represented on the Committee be invited to join it when the case or the measures that may be taken with respect thereto concern it or are bound to affect it. Admiral Train stated in this connection that paragraph 9 of the Dumbarton Oaks document took care of the Chilean proposal in that any country would naturally be consulted on a matter affecting it.

The discussion continued on Section C on Regional Arrangements. In discussing the Chilean commentary on paragraph 1, which proposed the addition of the words "functioning" and "continental" and the substitution of "agreements" for "arrangements", he said that it was difficult to see how the words "systems" and "agreements" were more specific than the words "arrangements" or "agencies"; that certainly the word "arrangements" included "agreements". He believed that a great deal of thought should be given to the word "continental" with respect not only to the addition of the word but also of some other word in addition to "regional". He said that "continental" would be the broadest interpretation of the word "regional".

THE AMBASSADOR OF CHILE stated that this amendment was submitted by his Government to broaden the scope of this article and that the word "functioning" was used in order to stress the fact that the agreements should really function and not be purely theoretical. He said that the use of the word "continental" was suggested merely as a wider term, in as much as a continent may comprise several regions. He believed in this respect that his government had in mind the inter-American system which applied to the whole continent. He then said that there could of course be some qualification to this concept, as with respect to Canada not being included in the continent in the sense of its relationship with Great Britain.

Costa Rica's commentary on paragraph 1, Dr. Pasvolsky said, was precisely the reason for introducing this provision for regional arrangements, since regional arrangements may be useful in facilitating understanding for common purposes.

He remarked that the Guatemalan commentary referred to Inter-American arrangements.

He said that since the Venezuelan commentary raised the question of precise definition, this was a matter to be discussed further in the light of whether or not it would be advisable to prescribe precise criteria of what constituted a regional arrangement compatible with the purposes of the Organization. Dr. Pasvolsky explained that limitation of the field of application, was a problem covered in part in the proposals themselves and obviously the question remained open. He said that regional agencies would be completely free to engage in the processes of peaceful settlement, and the Security Council should encourage settlement of disputes by local agencies. Referring to paragraph 2 on limitation of enforcement measures, he explained that here the thought was that enforcement action should be entirely under the authority of the Security Council which should decide when a regional arrangement or enforcement action should take place. He stated that the Chilean commentary related to the question previously discussed, i.e. who decided that problem.

Dr. Pasvolsky remarked in connection with the Venezuelan commentary that this related to the problem of voting which was to be considered later.

He stated that paragraph 3 was very important since, in order to perform its duties effectively, the Council would have to be completely informed of activities undertaken or contemplated; and that the Brazilian comment related to the point already discussed: who decided whether a question endangers the peace of more than one region?

He said that it would perhaps be better to consider the Mexican comment later.

Referring to the Uruguayan commentary on Section C as a whole, which emphasized the fact that regional organizations should not engender opposition between continents and not represent isolation, he stated that this point was fundamental to the whole idea. With respect to the two specific proposals by Uruguay he explained that the basic thought of those proposals had been included in the Dumbarton Oaks document and that they again raised the problem of how much rigid definition should be in the Charter and how much should be left to the wisdom of the people who run the Security Council "after we are gone."

THE CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES OF COLOMBIA 98 stated that he would like to comment on this chapter, although his government had not, up to the present time, made any specific observations regarding the Dumbarton Oaks proposals. He then said that from his government's point of view the fundamental point in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, as regards the countries of Latin America, was the one relating to the regional arrangements, that is, the adjustment of the Pan American system and its relation to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals. In Colombia's answer to Mexico's invitation, it was stated that in order to establish Latin America's capacity to relate the Pan American system to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, it would be both desirable and convenient first to discuss the Pan American Organization, and that there should be consideration of means of making it more effective, more efficient and adaptable to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals. For this reason Colombia had suggested that in the agenda of the Mexican conference first consideration should be given to the adaptation of the Pan American system.

The Ambassador of Honduras stated that if the adjustment of the Pan American system with the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals was to be considered, this question should be studied before going any further. He said that he wished to make this observation because it was stated in paragraph 1, Section C that regional arrangements could be undertaken provided that they were "consistent with the purposes and principles of the Organization". He said that the views expressed by the representative of Colombia brought to light an existing discrepancy, for if the regional arrangements were not in accord with the purposes and principles of the Organization, nothing could be done. It was therefore, he said, essential to deal in one way or another with this question as expressed by the representative of Colombia in order to reconcile it with the already established principles of this Organization. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that clearly this was a very important question.

Chapter IX was next considered. Dr. Pasvolsky explained that this chapter concerned the problem of international stability and the creation of conditions conducive to good relations among states. He said that no machinery had been set up here because it was thought that the whole subject was too new. At the same time it was thought very important to make specific reference to this function of the General Assembly by making clear that the Assembly, whether through the Economic and Social Council or through other mechanisms, would give its attention to this important question.

THE AMBASSADOR OF BOLIVIA 94 stated that he would like to make a minor comment. He said that he felt that the wording of paragraph 1 weakened the effectiveness of the Council in that the phrase "other humanitarian problems" implied that economic and social problems were also humanitarian problems, whereas in the modern sense of the words, economic, and especially social, problems have no relation with humanitarianism. He explained that this last concept refers to men's feelings, and since economic and social problems have nothing to do with men's feelings they should be solved without any humanitarian implication. He added that even modern medicine has ceased to be a humanitarian problem.

Referring to the commentary of Costa Rica regarding paragraph 2, Dr. Pasvolsky explained that the International Labor Office was thought of here as one of the specialized organizations provided for, to be brought into relationship with the general Organization by means yet to be determined by the Organization in agreement with the Labor Office itself. He also said that the relationship to the Organization of other specialized organizations and agencies that might be created was contemplated in the paragraph.

With respect to the Venezuela comment on paragraph 2 he remarked that this again raised the question of whether the problem should be determined now or left for future development. He said that since the agencies and organizations envisaged here would vary in character and size, the problems of relationship with the general Organization would differ.

Referring again to paragraph 1 under Section A, Dr. Pasvolsky said that "promote" did not mean "intervention". This, he said, was a problem of encouraging the creation of conditions under which respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms exists, and if necessary, of the general Organization's making recommendations, but not of interfering in the internal affairs of other countries.

As regards Section B, Composition and Voting, and the number of member countries to be represented on the Economic and Social Council, he explained that the number had been fixed at 18 because the specialized agencies to be created would be widely representative and therefore coordination should be in the hands of the highest representative body in the world, i.e. the General Assembly.

In answer to the inquiry of the Ambassador of Costa Rica, Dr. Pasvolsky then explained again that the International Labor Office was thought of as one of the specialized agencies and that the determination of the terms on which that and other agencies would be brought into relationship with the general Organization was left for the future. He added that since the International Labor Office is now the principal existing agency of the sort, the terms of the relationship between it and the general Organization might be worked out at the United Nations Conference.

He remarked that the selection of members of the Economic and Social Council was left entirely to the Assembly. It was thought best not to set up any criteria in this connection. It was contemplated, however, that permanent membership for any country would not be provided. As regards the question raised by Venezuela he stated that the Economic and Social Council would not undertake to settle any question but would hand it over to the Assembly which obviously could be assembled at any time if a serious problem arose.

With respect to Venezuela's comment on Section D, paragraph 1, he said that the basic thought underlying the paragraph had been that the commissions to be set up by the Economic Council would consist of experts chosen for their competence and not necessarily for their national origin. It would be perfectly clear however, as was the case with the League of Nations, that the members of the commissions would be selected in such a way that competence should be considered not only on the basis of ability but also of knowledge of conditions and situations in the various parts of the world. He said it was safe to assume however that the proposal contained in the Venezuelan comment would be taken into account in setting up the commissions and other bodies created by the Economic and Social Council.

In connection with the Venezuelan comment on the second paragraph of this Section which is the same as for the second paragraph of Section A of Chapter IX, Dr. Pasvolsky said that there was the possibility of trying to establish the means of relationship between the existing bodies and the general Organization, at the United Nations Conference, or the whole question might be left for future determination.

Mr. Rockefeller expressed the gratitude of the group as a whole for Dr. Pasvolsky's exposition of the various items which had so far been discussed.

The next meeting was scheduled for Friday, February 9 at 4 p.m. The meeting adjourned at 5:40 p.m.

Memoradum by the Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs (Durbrow) to the Chief of the Division of International Organization Affairs (Sandifer)

[Washington,] February 5, 1945.

The Polish Ambassador 95 called this morning and left the attached memorandum outlining the Polish Government's preliminary views 96 regarding the Dumbarton Oaks proposals.

The Ambassador stated that he felt it might be helpful to submit this memorandum in advance in order that you might study it and thus be in a better position to discuss details with him at a later date. He emphasized that the ideas as expressed in the memorandum were submitted on an informal basis and were of a preliminary nature and that they did not represent the final views of the Polish Government on this question.

The Ambassador states that as soon as you had had an opportunity to study the document he would be pleased to come to the Department to discuss them with you and any of your associates.97

SUMMARY OF THE POLISH COMMENTARY OF FEBRUARY 5, 1945, ON THE DUMBARTON OAKS PROPOSALS

The Polish Government, in a memorandum of January [February 5, 1945,98 presents its "preliminary observations" on the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, but reserves the right to present at a later date, when its official views are requested, suggestions and proposals which will "go further" than those put forward in the present document.

For agreement at the Yalta Conference regarding the reorganization of the Polish Government, see section VI of the report of the Conference, February 12, 1945, Conferences at Matta and Yalta, p. 973; see also protocol of proceedings of the Conference (section VII, Poland), released to the press on March 24, 1947,

The Soviet Union announced recognition of the Lublin Committee as the provisional government of Poland on January 5, 1945; for President Roosevelt's attitude on this anticipated action, see telegram 153, December 30, 1944, to Marshal Stalin, ibid., p. 224.

<sup>97</sup> In a memorandum of March 27 to the Acting Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs (Thompson) Mr. Sandifer stated:

&quot;In view of the present status of the Polish Government in London in relation to the San Francisco Conference, it would hardly be worthwhile to discuss the memorandum with the Ambassador now. I am sorry not to have returned it sooner." (500.CC/2-545)

In general, the Polish Government takes the position that the Dumbarton Oaks proposals are not, in every respect, an improvement on the League Covenant, and in this connection, makes specific reference to the predominance of the Great Powers under the current proposals, stating that it would "welcome any modifications of the present Dumbarton Oaks text which would improve the situation of the smaller states and assure to them a role corresponding with their rights, interests and place in the world". To this end, the principal changes proposed in the Polish memorandum are:

1. Increase in the number of non-permanent seats on the Security Council to ten;

2. Adoption of a majority rule, including a majority of the permanent members, for council decisions (it is stated, however, that the application of the principle of unanimity would not be "unwelcome", provided this includes the non-permanent members);

3. Denial of a vote to any state party to a dispute before the Security Council or to any state accused of failing to act in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

4. Obligatory representation of states not members of the Security Council when matters specially affecting their interest are under consideration by the council;

5. Removal of all limitations on the right of the General Assembly to discuss any question referred to it by a member state or by the Security Council:

6. Restoration of rights and privileges of suspended members to rest with the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security

7. Representation on the Military Staff Committee of member states, other than the Great Powers, whose permanent collaboration with the staff committee is deemed necessary by the Security Council.

Another group of Polish suggestions appears to stem directly from apprehensions with respect to the future security of Poland. In this connection, the Polish Government suggests the following changes in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals:

1. Deletion from the text of any reference to adjustment of international situations, restricting the organization's activities to international disputes (Chapter I, paragraph 1; Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 6; Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraphs 1, 2, 5, and 7);

2. Inclusion in Chapter I of a reference to the aims enunciated in Article 6 of the Atlantic Charter (all nations to have the means of dwelling within their own boundaries in freedom from fear and want);

3. Amendment of Chapter II to include the principles of respect for territorial integrity and political independence and of non-aggrandizement and non-intervention;

4. Amendment of Chapter II to include respect for treaty obligations and repeated reference to this principle in connection with the admission of new members (Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 2) and pacific settlement (Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraphs 1, 3, and 4);

5. Express recognition in Chapter II of the right of any state to oppose unauthorized use of force against it, subject to immediate reference to the organization;

6. Limitation of the assistance pledged the organization in Chapter II, paragraph 5 and Chapter VIII, Section B, paragraph 5 to that compatible with political independence and economic resources;

7. Deletion of all provisions with respect to disarmament and the regulation of armaments (the Polish draft, however, has only deleted these provisions from Chapter V, Section B);

8. Investigation of disputes by the Security Council, under Chapter VIII, Section A, to be contingent upon the request of a party to the dispute, and one party to a dispute to have the express right to request the council to give effect to the resulting settlement, award or judgment if the other party fails to observe it (omission of paragraph 2, Section A, Chapter VIII in the Polish draft deletes all reference to the General Assembly in this section);

9. Amendment of Chapter VIII, Section B, paragraph 7 to exclude from the procedures provided in this section disputes which concern the territorial status of member states;

10. Deletion of the last sentence of paragraph 1, Section C, Chapter VIII, relative to the settlement of local disputes regionally.

Two other significant amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals advocated by the Polish memorandum are:

1. Inclusion of the Economic and Social Council among the principal organs enumerated in Chapter IV.

2. No provision for expulsion (Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 3: Section C, paragraph 2).

Record of Informal Meeting With Diplomatic Representatives of Certain American Republics, Held at Washington, February 9, 1945, 3 p. m.99

[Informal Notes]

The meeting was opened by Assistant Secretary Rockefeller who first welcomed Señor Soto Harrison, Ministro de Gobernación of Costa Rica, as a guest at the meeting. Mr. Rockefeller then said that the discussion would begin with Chapter X of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals on the Secretariat and he asked Dr. Pasvolsky to continue his comments on the Proposals.

With reference to the Venezuelan commentary on paragraph 1 of Chapter X, Dr. Pasvolsky said that in drafting the Proposals it had been thought best to leave the elaboration of details relating to the Secretariat either to the full United Nations Conference or to future determination by the Assembly; that it had obviously been necessary to provide for the existence of the Secretariat and for a chief administrative officer; and that the question of whether or not the naming of assistant secretaries should be incorporated in the Charter would be a matter for discussion at the conference in connection with whatever other elaboration might be desirable. Referring to the suggestion that the names of three instead of one candidate should be submitted, he remarked that this was a matter also to be discussed in connection with the procedure to be established. He said that it had not been thought necessary at this stage to amplify this point because it was a matter that would be discussed anyway by the conference in terms of how much of the future regulations should be embodied in the Charter.

In connection with paragraph 2 which proposes that the Secretary General "should act in that capacity" with regard to the General Assembly, the Security Council, and the Economic and Social Council, Dr. Pasvolsky explained that it had been necessary to provide for a single chief administrative officer, but that since obviously one man could not do the whole job, assistant secretaries would be necessary. He said that the term for which the Secretary General would be elected had not been specified, the thought having been that this was a matter which should also be discussed and determined at the Conference itself. As regards the Mexican commentary to the effect that the Secretary General be elected for ten years, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that many considerations were involved in this proposal and that if the Secretary General were a good man, it would be desirable to keep him for a long term.

Dr. Pasvolsky stated that the provision in paragraph 3 was something new, in that the Secretary General is given the right to bring to the attention of the Council any matter which may threaten international peace and security. He said he understood by the Venezuelan comment on this paragraph that the Secretary General should have the same right with regard to the Assembly, and commented that the right of the Secretary General to bring matters before both the Assembly and the Security Council might be considered in connection with proposal to increase the powers of the Assembly.

Referring to the Commentary on the Chapter as a whole, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that the first point related to the seat of the Organization which of course had not yet been determined or discussed; and that the next point was procedural and again a question of whether or not the Charter itself should contain this type of regulation or whether it should be left for future determination.

The next point, he said, related to diplomatic immunities and privileges, which again was a question that had been left out of the Dumbarton Oaks document because it was believed it was something to be discussed in connection with the drafting of the Charter, and that since it did not raise a serious question of principle, it had been left for later discussion. Referring to the question raised at a previous meeting as to why the Secretary General should be elected by the Assembly and the Council, he explained that the answer was that the Secretary General would act as such not only to the Assembly but also to the Security Council. Therefore both bodies should participate in his selection, particularly since under paragraph 3 of this Chapter he was given rather extensive powers in connection with the right to bring to the attention of the Council and the Assembly questions relating to peace and security.

Dr. Pasvolsky explained that Chapter X was a skeleton chapter in which a great deal of material would need to be filled in later.

THE CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES AD INTERIM OF MEXICO 1 said that there seemed to have been omitted in the commentaries on this chapter that of his government regarding registration and publication of treaties by the Secretariat. Mr. Pasvolsky informed him that he would find that the commentary was included on page 53 of the document and suggested that the matter be discussed when page 53 was reached.

Referring to the two commentaries on Chapter XI,2 Dr. Pasvolsky remarked that the first proposed that amendments be adopted by a 2/3 majority vote; the second, that ratification should be by a 2/3 majority vote; and that he imagined both were related to the same part of the article since the recommendation for an amendment was to be made by a 2/3 vote of the General Assembly. He explained that the mechanism proposed here is that amendments should be adopted by a 2/3 vote of the Assembly and ratified by members of the organization having permanent membership in the Security Council and by a majority of the other members of the Organization; that it would be possible to make the same requirement for ratification as for initial adoption, which in effect was a recommendation; but that it had seemed best that ratification by a majority vote would expedite the process of amendment. He said that in considering the matter it should be kept in mind that there had to be a certain amount of flexibility in the amending of the document; but that at the same time amendment should not be made too easy. It had been thought that a 2/3 vote of the members of the Assembly was a necessary safeguard and also that ratification should be by a somewhat larger than a simple majority vote. Dr. Pasvolsky explained that it was of course open to discussion whether or not the majority should be 3/3, and that the question would have to be decided in terms of whether or not this represented too much rigidity or too much flexibility with respect to amendments—a question which was a matter of judgment.

Reference apparently is to the Costa Rican proposal (memorandum of December 5, 1944, doc. 21, G/7(h), UNCIO Documents, vol. 3, p. 274) and the Venezuelan proposal (memorandum of October 31, 1944, doc. 2, G/7(d) (1), ibid., pp. 189, 220).

Passing to Chapter XII, Dr. Pasvolsky remarked with reference to the two provisions for transitional measures that it was open to discussion whether they would become a part of the Statute or be embodied in special protocols and that they had been introduced in this Chapter because of the necessity of completing the essential structure of the plan. He stated that paragraph 1 related to the fact that there would be two interim periods in the process of establishing the system envisaged in this document: between now (or whenever the Conference took place) and the ratification of the document and therefore, the time when the Organization could be set up a period during which there would be a hiatus from the point of view of some sort of machinery for the maintenance of peace and security. He said that the hiatus was in part filled by the language of paragraph 5 of the Moscow Declaration which provided that pending the establishment of a general system of security, the signatories to the Declaration would consult with one another and, as the occasion arose, with other States as to measures necessary for joint action on behalf of the community of nations for the purpose of maintaining peace and security. He stated that the second interim period would exist between the time the Organization was established and went into effect, and the negotiation and putting into effect of the special agreement or agreements relating to the provision of armed forces and facilities.

With reference to the Mexican commentary to the effect that the four Powers signatory to the Declaration of Moscow mentioned in Article 1 be obligated . . . <sup>2a</sup> to adhere to the principles and aims stipulated in the Pact of the General International Organization, Dr. Pasvolsky said that that important point was inherent in the fact that the paragraph (1) would go into effect after the ratification of the Charter of the Organization, and would be taken care of by the fact that presumably the Signatories of the Four-Nation Declaration would by that time have ratified the Charter and therefore would be obligated to adhere to the principles and aims of the Organization.

Touching on point 3 of the Mexican commentary providing that a time limit should be fixed, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that this was a point which needed consideration, as to whether we wanted to provide a period during which the agreements would go into effect. We felt that there was a great deal to be said on both sides of the question.

Dr. Pasvolsky then referred to the last sentence of the Venezuelan commentary on paragraph 1, i.e., "...2a It is evident that if it were possible to include a general agreement as an annex to the Statute, it would be unnecessary to establish the aforementioned duty, for the Pact would begin to function in its entirety without waiting for any new agreements." He remarked that that of course was correct, the difficulty being in anticipating that the special agreements could be negotiated at the same time as the general Charter is put into effect. He said that if so, so much the better. However, he said, the question of armaments would still be left open. He explained that it had not seemed likely that even the special agreements for the provision of armed forces would be set up at the same time as the general Organization. Moreover, since it had been thought wise to make the special agreements subject to the approval of the Security Council which was to be given very heavy responsibility, it was considered advisable that the Council at least should participate in the discussions relating to the provisions for armed forces.

Referring to the second transitional provision in the Chapter, he remarked that that related to another subject: the question of whether the General Organization envisaged here would from the outset be given authority and power to take the action necessary with respect to measures such as the terms of surrender of the enemy countries. He explained that it was considered that the responsibility for taking these measures should continue to rest with the Powers responsible for setting up the machinery for such action. He said that whether or not the two lines of action should be merged later, i.e. those of the Governments having responsibility for action with those of the General Organization was a matter for later discussion, but that it had been thought that initially they should not.

Dr. Pasvolsky then explained that the Mexican comment on paragraph 2 called for a clarification of what was meant by that rather brief paragraph. He said that obviously the whole question as to whether it should be amplified and clarified was important.

After giving his interpretation of the Venezuelan comment on paragraph 2, Dr. Pasvolsky remarked that the intent of the paragraph was precisely the opposite, i.e. not to make the Organization as such responsible for that particular set of duties. He said that the responsibility for carrying out the measures growing out of the termination of the war rested on the nations responsible for bringing the war to a successful conclusion. He explained that the problem of "the revision of treaties or situations that may prove to be dangerous or unjust" had already been discussed and taken care of in two places: in connection with the right of the Council to deal with situations, and with the right of the Assembly to make recommendations with respect to situations which might impair the general welfare. He said that this commentary raised the very important issue as to whether or not it is desired to give the Organization at this stage the right to impose settlements. Nobody had as yet proposed that the Organization be given any such powers, which come very close to being those of a super State.

Dr. Pasvolsky commented on the suggestions for three additional paragraphs to this Chapter made by Chile. He remarked that the first belonged in the category of amplification and clarification, stating that reference had been made there to both paragraph 1 and 2 of the Chapter, which opened up a question rather difficult to discuss now, it being a very large one.

Referring to the new paragraph 4 proposed by Chile, Dr. Pasvolsky said that the Document was based on the theory that all peace-loving nations were eligible to membership in the Organization, and that their admission to membership would be the responsibility of the Council and of the Assembly. A provision that the Organization should invite all States would need consideration from the point of view of whether or not that would mean the right of each state to be automatically included or that the Charter Members would determine future membership. He explained that the present setup provided the principle of eligibility for, but not of automatic, admission.

Dr. Pasvolsky stated that the question raised in the new paragraph 5 proposed by Chile was one of the problems left open as to the procedure by which the Organization should be set up, clearly a matter for discussion at the Conference. That this was in the same category as the questions referred to in the Note beginning immediately after Chapter XII.

Continuing with the proposals in the Note, Dr. Pasvolsky stated that the topics Publication of Treaties, Seat of the Organization, and Official Languages were in the same category in that they had not been considered at Dumbarton Oaks and certainly would be taken up in the process of formulating the actual Charter.

The question of Dependent Areas, he said, had been left out of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals not because it was considered inappropriate, but because it would need to be discussed as part of the process of completing the document, as it had been thought that the final Charter would need to contain some sort of machinery for dealing with this problem.

He stated that the topic, Dissolution of the League of Nations, raised a question which was initially the primary responsibility of the members of the League. It would be presumptuous for non-members to try to tell the League how to act. He remarked that it was anticipated that the League would either be merged with the Organization or dissolved, or some sort of transition for handling that problem would be made and that the whole question could not arise until there was a new Organization.

As regards the last point, Convocation of the General Assembly, Dr. Pasvolsky said he imagined it belonged in the same group of questions raised by the question of the establishment of the Organization; that one of the provisions to be agreed upon would have to relate to the question of how the General Assembly would be convoked, and by whom; that the Organization could not begin to function until the General Assembly had its first meetings, and that one of the first acts of the Assembly would be to elect the non-permanent members of the Security Council and all members of the Economic and Social Council. He concluded by saying that all of these questions had been left open in the document and would of course be put on the Agenda of the United Nations conference when it convened.

Dr. Pasvolsky said that this concluded his comments on the Proposals unless there were any further specific questions concerning them.

MR. ROCKEFELLER thanked Dr. Pasvolsky on behalf of the participants of the meeting for his assistance. MR. Rockefeller then asked if there were further comments, particularly with respect to the last six pages of the document.

Attention was here called to the two points of the commentary of the Venezuelan Government regarding the statute of the court, appearing on page 62 of the document.

Dr. Pasvolsky stated that the first raised the very important question of whether the revision of treaties is a judicial or a political process. He believed that interpretation of treaties is judicial, whereas revision of them is customarily regarded as a political process. He stated again that the whole problem of the mechanism of treaties will need to be explored at the conference, and said that the second point made by Venezuela was clearly something to be discussed at the conference.

Mr. Rockefeller then stated that it had been suggested some weeks ago that it might be advisable to select for further consideration some of the most important points that had been raised at the meetings and he asked the Brazilian Ambassador or Chairman of the Coordinating Committee to comment. Señor Martins said that there had been prepared a memorandum 3 of the "principal aspects of the Dumbarton Oaks plan regarding which the other American republics desire change" and he presented the memorandum to the meeting. This question was then discussed at some length but no conclusion was reached. It was decided that the Chiefs of Mission of the eleven American Governments which had submitted memoranda on the Proposals should meet in the Department of State on Tuesday, February 13, to study the matter. The meeting adjourned at 4:45 p. m.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in France (Caffery)5

Washington, February 11, 1945—11 p.m.

546. You are instructed to communicate to the Foreign Minister 6 without a moment's delay the substance of the following and to cable me at the earliest possible moment the reply of the French Government.

(Begin communication) The communiqué to be issued at the termination of the present meeting of the representatives of the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union will contain an announcement to the effect that the three governments have agreed on the voting procedure in the Security Council<sup>8</sup> and that the United Nations Conference for the purpose of formulating the charter of the United Nations Organization for the Maintenance of Peace and Security will be called for April 25, 1945 at San Francisco, USA. The communiqué will also announce that the other two governments have authorized the President of the United States on behalf of all three governments to consult the Republic of China and the Provisional Government of France.

The foregoing is the substance of the communiqué.

The points on which the President has been authorized to consult the other two Governments are the following:

It is proposed that the invitations be issued by the Government of the United States for itself and on behalf of the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, the Republic of China and the Provisional Govern-

to his March 12 off-the-record meeting with the press: "I was asked about the duration of the United Nations conference and said that my best guess was a month. In answer to speculation about the significance of the opening date, April 25, when a USSR agreement with Japan would expire, I told the press group that the date was purely coincidental. For instance, I had suggested at Yalta that Wednesday was always a good day to begin a conference." erence was to the 5-year neutrality pact between the Soviet Union and Japan which was concluded April 13, 1941, entered into force from April 25, 1941, and was denounced by the Soviet Union on April 5, 1945. This agreement did not expire April 25, 1945, but would continue in force another 5 years from April 25, 1946, unless denounced by one party a year before this expiration date. ment of France. The invitations are to be issued to those nations which were signatories of the United Nations Declaration <sup>10</sup> on February 8, 1945 and those associated nations, <sup>11</sup> including Turkey, which will have declared war by March 1, 1945.

It is further proposed that the five inviting governments would consult prior to the conference on the provisions to be included in the Charter for setting up a trusteeship system for existing mandates, for territories which may be detached from the enemy after this war, and for any other territories which may be voluntarily placed under trusteeship. Neither the preliminary consultation nor the discussion at the United Nations Conference would deal with specific territories, but would be restricted to the formulation of principles and provisions for machinery. The question of specific territories to be placed under trusteeship would be made subject to subsequent agreement.

The President has directed me to consult the Provisional Government of France and to express his earnest hope that it will concur in these proposals. The matter is extremely urgent because the Governments of the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union have arranged for the issuance on Monday night, February 12, for publication in the morning newspapers on Tuesday, February 13, of the communiqué referred to at the beginning. (End communication)

You should impress upon the French authorities that the matters under consultation are to be held entirely confidential until publication of the invitation is arranged.

The French Ambassador <sup>12</sup> called at my house at my request this Sunday evening at 10:30 and I read to him, for his information, the telegram being sent this evening to Ambassador Caffery (No. 546, February 11, 11 p. m.) setting forth plans for the United Nations Conference. I emphasized to the Ambassador the great urgency of the matter and expressed the hope that he might feel like sending a flash telegram to his Government urging that a reply be given to us at the earliest possible moment. I pointed out that after the communiqué agreed upon by the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union is issued on Tuesday morning, February 13, there will be great speculation in the press with regard to the details of the agreement on voting procedure in the Security Council. We therefore hoped that our consultation with the Provisional Government of France could be carried through with the greatest possible dispatch.

The Ambassador asked me several questions regarding certain points in our communication which I clarified for him and he then expressed serious doubt as to whether a reply from his Government could be forthcoming within several days. He said that the question of voting in the Security Council, as well as other points, would have to be submitted to the Council of Ministers in Paris and that this would take time. It was also pointed out that according to press reports General de Gaulle, was absent from Paris. Mr. Bonnet also pointed out the adverse feeling on the part of his Government which had been aroused by the fact that General de Gaulle had not received an invitation to attend the Big Three Conference.

I once again urged the Ambassador to do his best to ensure our receiving a reply from his Government at the earliest possible moment.

298. For the Secretary of State.

- 1. I discussed this morning with the [Secretary's] Staff Committee the question of our making public the fact that the voting procedure accepted at the Conference was proposed by us. It is the unanimous and emphatic opinion of the Committee that such a statement, if made at all, should be made at the time that the text of the agreed provisions is made public. To announce that the proposal was ours before we can announce what the proposal is would invite a press attack which could, and in our opinion should, be avoided.
- 2. Further we raise for consideration the question whether the statement should be made at all. While we realize, of course, that there were compelling reasons in the minds of the President and yourself for your decision, we feel strongly that the statement would place upon this country the onus of criticism on the part of those, here and abroad, who will not be satisfied with the solution of the problem.

Specifically, the international organization described in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals would not constitute, in itself and of itself, a guarantee against all wars. The Department hopes that the criticisms and comments of the proposals will be made with these considerations in mind.

To change this basis now and send out invitations before this group of nations have had an opportunity to declare war by March 1 would seriously disrupt existing arrangements.

You may be sure that we shall make every possible effort to issue the invitations as soon before March 1 as we can bring this group of nations within the definition qualifying them to receive invitations.

322. No. 67. For the Secretary. I called the French Ambassador in today and told him that it was absolutely essential that we issue the invitations to the Conference at San Francisco as soon as possible and that we hoped very much indeed that France would join as one of the sponsoring nations. I pointed out that we had as yet received no reply from the French Government although China had accepted sponsorship and the three other nations were ready to go ahead with the invitations. I told the Ambassador that it would be difficult for us to delay acting on the invitations very much longer and it might be that within three or four days we would have to issue them even if we had not heard from the French Government. The Ambassador said that he had already warned his Government that we might have to act without France as I had intimated to him in a previous conversation that we could only wait a reasonably short time to hear from France and we hoped that it would not become necessary for us to go forward without her.

The Ambassador went on to say that he had the impression that France's not being invited to the regular meetings of Foreign Ministers <sup>28</sup> was probably causing some difficulty in the French attitude toward sponsoring the invitations. He felt quite sure that his Government would come along before very long and he expressed the earnest hope that the four other nations would not issue the invitations before hearing from France as it would add immeasurably to the difficulties of the present situation and that he felt although he had no authority or instructions to say so that issuing the invitations without France might result in France not going to San Francisco.

I was insistent that the Ambassador lay before his Government the necessity for giving us a reply to the question of joining in the invitations even though that reply might be made pending the receipt of further clarifications which he had already requested.<sup>29</sup>

I thought you should know of the difficulties we are having in connection with the issuing of the invitations.

- 128. [From Secretary Stettinius.] Please deliver the following message from me to the [White House] Map Room for forwarding to the President.<sup>30</sup>
- 1. Despite active efforts by the Department to expedite the matter, France has still not expressed agreement with the Dumbarton Oaks proposals as completed at the Crimea Conference. China accepted the new provisions immediately. You will recall that all of us at Yalta felt that the consultation with France and China should be concluded as promptly as possible so that the voting procedure provisions could be published and invitations to the San Francisco Conference be issued with a minimum of delay. We feel it particularly important that the publication of the voting provisions and the issuance of the invitations not be delayed later than the opening of the Mexico City Conference, regardless of whether France has by then agreed to be a fifth sponsoring power. Consequently, I have asked Grew to obtain British and Russian consent for our taking these steps on February 21, even though the consultation with France has not been completed by that time. I am making arrangements to have invitations to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco issued by you from the White House on the evening of February 21, and in order that we may have complete unity of the United Nations represented in Mexico City I will, in your name, include in my opening remarks the invitation to the United Nations Conference which will, of course, include the voting procedure in the Council, making clear that you are speaking for the Soviet Union, Great Britain, China and, if possible, France.
- 2. I had a pleasant visit today with the Governor of Trinidad, Sir Bede Clifford, on my way to Mexico City. Sir Bede asked that I send you his warmest greetings. - 1. I believe that the French should be allowed additional time to consider the invitation to act as a joint sponsor of the San Francisco Conference and to concur in the proposals on voting procedure. However, I recommend that we seek approval by the British, Soviet and Chinese Governments of the issuance and public release on March 1 of the invitations to the Conference as agreed upon and containing the text of the proposals on voting procedure. If France has not accepted by that time then such invitations would be sponsored by the four governments instead of by five as originally contemplated. This date is selected since it was agreed at the Crimea Conference—and has been so reported to the French—that invitations are to be issued to those nations which were signatories of the United Nations Declaration on February 8 and to those associated nations, including Turkey, which will have declared war by March 1.
- 2. Also I recommend that we propose to the British, Soviet and Chinese Governments that in the event France accepts sufficiently in advance of March 1 to make it feasible, we will issue the invitations prior to that time, making clear, however, that subsequent invitations to the associated nations and to Turkey can be issued up to March 1.
- 3. In light of the foregoing, I recommend that Ambassador Caffery be informed of the substance of our contemplated proposals to the British, Soviet and Chinese Governments as outlined in paragraphs 1 and 2 above, and that he be advised to bring this information to the attention of Bidault and de Gaulle in such manner as he would consider best calculated to bring about favorable action by the French.
- 4. At the time of the public release of the text of the voting procedure, we recommend that I release a statement in explanation and interpretation thereof. Such statement would be communicated to the British, Soviet and Chinese Governments (and to the French if they accept) for their information. The text of this proposed statement is contained in a telegram that will follow.<sup>31a</sup>
- 5. Your immediate approval is respectfully requested of the procedure outlined in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 above since it will facilitate our action here. Memorandum of Telephone Conversations, by the Acting Secretary of State

[Washington,] February 20, 1945.

Subjects: Invitations for United Nations Conference;

Announcement of Voting Procedure

Participants: Mr. Alger Hiss;

Acting Secretary, Mr. Grew

Secretary Stettinius;

Acting Secretary, Mr. Grew

I telephoned Mr. Alger Hiss at Mexico City and said that with regard to the question of issuing invitations to the United Nations for the forthcoming conference at San Francisco, we had gone into it very fully. I stated that, in the first place, it would have been physically impossible to have gotten clearance from London and Moscow for a deadline for the announcement. I added that the White House had received word from Judge Rosenman that the President does not want the announcements made of the voting procedure until he himself has approved the text of the release. I told Mr. Hiss that the instructions from the President on this point were definite. said that I had been in touch with the French Ambassador regularly and had been doing everything in my power to get an answer; France had asked for certain clarifications, to which I had gotten out a reply in 24 hours,<sup>32</sup> and we were hopeful that we would get a definite answer in the next day or so. I said that if we went ahead with the invitations, I did not believe France would come in at all. To begin the United Nations Conference in this way would, I thought, be almost fatal. I went on to say that I had gone over the matter with Justice Byrnes, who stated he was not one hundred percent but one thousand percent in favor of our position. I told Mr. Hiss when he inquired if we could get an answer by February 22 that I did not think we would be able to get an agreement from London and Moscow by that date. I said that I was going to send to the President a message suggesting that if France does not reply before March 1, then we ought to select that date to issue the invitations whether she comes on board or not. Mr. Hiss thought that this would be a good idea. He wondered, however, if we ought not hold up the transmission of the Secretary's message to the President. I replied that if he were referring to the message sent from Guatemala,33 I was afraid that it had already gone out. Mr. Hiss thought it would be a good idea to send a follow-up and then go on with the recommendation about March 1.

When I asked Mr. Hiss if he thought the Secretary would approve this, he replied that he was sure of it. If he did not call right back, Mr. Hiss said it would mean that the Secretary approved. I told him that, naturally, I wanted to come along with the Secretary on everything possible, but I did not want the conference started with a black eye.

(It was ascertained that this telegram had not yet been transmitted to the President, and it was accordingly withheld.34)

When Mr. Hiss telephoned later, he said that with regard to France, the Secretary was glad that his message had gone straight through to the President and the Secretary did not want to countermand it. Mr. Hiss said that the Secretary wanted me to call Ambassador Caffery in Paris as soon as possible and say that France must agree within the next twenty-four hours. I stated that this was impossible since we had no direct telephone communication with Paris. Mr. Hiss added that the call could be made through SHAEF 35 from the Pentagon Building. Mr. Hiss added that the Secretary thought it was essential at the outset of the conference that the whole thing be made clear and public along the lines indicated in the telegram which reached the Department today. Mr. Hiss said that he had told the Secretary what I had said about France, but the Secretary had said that we had given the French Government all this time, and they could come along whenever they made up their mind. I told Mr. Hiss I did not see how we could deliver such an ultimatum in the light of instructions received from the President and that since I was in charge of the foreign affairs of this Government, I would not take this responsibility. Mr. Hiss asked if I would like to speak with the Secretary and I said I thought I had better.

I told Mr. Stettinius that I was faced with a very difficult problem; that while I knew he wanted to issue the invitations to the nations assembled at Mexico City, and disclose the voting procedure, the President's instructions, through Judge Rosenman and also Justice Byrnes were quite explicit. If we put France in a hole and delivered an ultimatum, de Gaulle would almost certainly refuse, and we would have a black eye at the very outset of the United Nations Conference.

The Secretary asked how long it would take France to comply, to which I replied that I had been at the Ambassador constantly trying to get an answer. Mr. Stettinius said that when they left the Crimea, it was understood that an answer would be forthcoming within forty-eight hours, and nearly a week had elapsed since that time. I stated that France had asked for certain clarifications on six points, I had answered these points and the French Government had perhaps received our answer today. I added that we expected a reply within the next day or two. The Secretary said that representatives of twenty republics were meeting in Mexico to discuss the world security organization, and the first question which would be asked would be with regard to the voting procedure. He said that it would be most helpful if we could say that France was going to be a sponsoring member in issuing the invitations to the United Nations for the San Francisco conference, and could make our voting procedure public forty-eight hours hence. I asked the Secretary if he could not make known the voting procedure quietly by talking to the delegates there, but he replied that he did not think he could do that. I asked the Secretary how we could get around making our proposal to France not appear as an ultimatum, to which the Secretary replied that he thought France could be persuaded calmly that the three powers hoped that she could comply in the interest of harmony among the United Nations. I said that I had repeatedly put all this to the French Ambassador and the Ambassador had stated that while he realized the situation perfectly, it was very difficult to proceed since the Ministers on the Council did not know anything about the matter and it would take a little time. The Ambassador had stated further that he hoped very much to get an answer any minute.

The Secretary then said that he would leave the entire matter in my hands for me to work out in any way I felt best, adding that I should ignore the wire he had sent to me this morning regarding an ultimatum to France, and that anything I did would be entirely satisfactory to him.

I asked Mr. Stettinius again why he could not get in touch with the various delegations there and tell them confidentially about the voting procedure rather than make the announcement in his speech. Mr. Stettinius said that this would detract tremendously from the value of his speech.

I told the Secretary that if France comes through I would immediately give him a flash, but I added that we would have to consult with London and Moscow or they would be perfectly furious. The Secretary said that I should advise him of any formula that I worked out and he would abide by it.

Washington, February 20, 1945-9 p.m.

686. News stories in today's New York Times and Herald Tribune and the Baltimore Sun by Harold Callender, Sonia Tomara and Philip Whitcomb, respectively, and apparently arising from a report by Bidault to the Foreign Affairs Committee of the French Consultative Assembly, together make it appear possible that the Provisional Government of France will not take part in the San Francisco Conference unless "it obtains satisfactory information about aims and the agenda". These reports also make it appear that a chief stumbling block in French acceptance to participate is the interpretation of the "trusteeship system". Moreover Callender's report has the relevant substance of our cablegram to you (reDeptel 546, February 11) covering this and some of the other subjects therein.

Apart from the fact that these reports state the term "trusteeship" does not readily translate into French, they also claim France is afraid that under the proposed trusteeship system (1) French rights in Syria and Lebanon would be affected, (2) any of their claims to the Rhineland might be prejudiced, and (3) questions may arise of "strategic bases", the latter of which particularly "aroused deep suspicions on the part of the French". In the event of a French decision not to participate in the San Francisco Conference we are particularly concerned that such an eventuality should not occur because of our failure to furnish full information regarding proposals to be studied there.

Therefore, should a convenient opportunity arise will you please again stress to Bidault and de Gaulle that in connection with the proposed trusteeship system neither the proposed preliminary consultations among the five powers nor the discussions at the United Nations Conference would deal with specific territories but would be restricted to the formulation of principles and provisions for machinery. Any question of the specific territories which may be placed under the trusteeship system would in each case be dealt with by subsequent agreement.

You should also recall to Bidault and de Gaulle that the five sponsoring nations are to consult each other prior to the United Nations Conference with a view to presenting agreed proposals as to machinery for dealing with trusteeships. As soon as France has agreed to become one of the sponsoring nations, we would expect to begin consultation among the five powers on this subject.

Referring to my radiogram to you yesterday, paragraph 4, the following is the text of the public statement that I propose to make in explanation and interpretation of the voting procedure at the time it is made public.

"The Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and China, and the Provisional Government of France have now agreed to propose for consideration at the San Francisco conference the following voting procedure for the Security Council:

'1. Each member of the Security Council should have one vote. 2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters should be made by an affirmative vote of seven members. 3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters should be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VIII, Section A and under the second sentence of paragraph 1 of Chapter VIII, Section C, a party to a dispute should abstain from voting.'

The practical effect of these provisions, taken together, is that a difference is made, so far as voting is concerned, between the quasi-judicial function of the Security Council in promoting the pacific settlement of disputes and the political function of the Council in taking action for the maintenance of peace and security.

Where the Council is engaged in performing its quasi-judicial function of promoting pacific settlement of disputes, no nation, large or small, should be above the law. This means that no nation, large or small, if a party to a dispute, would participate in the decisions of the Security Council on questions like the following: (a) whether a matter should be investigated, (b) whether the dispute or situation is of such a nature that its continuation is likely to threaten the peace, (c) whether the Council should call on the parties to settle a dispute by means of their own choice, (d) whether, if the dispute is referred to the Council, a recommendation should be made as to methods and procedures of settlement, (e) whether the Council should make such recommendation before the dispute is referred to it, (f) what should be the nature of this recommendation, (g) whether the legal aspects of the dispute should be referred to the Court for advice, (h) whether a regional agency should be asked to concern itself with the dispute, and (i) whether the dispute should be referred to the General Assembly.

Where the Council is engaged in performing its political function of action for the maintenance of peace and security, a difference is made between the permanent members of the Council and other nations for the practical reason that the permanent members of the Council must, as a matter of necessity, bear the principal responsibility for action. Unanimous agreement among the permanent members of the Council is therefore requisite. In such matters, therefore, the concurrence of all the permanent members would be required. Examples are: (a) determination of the existence of a threat or breach of the peace, (b) use of force or other enforcement measures, (c) approval of agreements for supply of armed forces, (d) matters relating to the regulation of armaments, and (e) matters concerning the suspension and expulsion of members, and the admission of new members."

In the event that France does not accept the proposal the introductory sentence to the foregoing text will be modified accordingly. Your approval of the foregoing statement is respectfully requested.<sup>38</sup>

217. From Secretary Stettinius. Have received your 338.39 Will, of course, support your position in this as in all other matters. I want you to understand why I am pressing this matter so strongly. I am in a difficult and awkward position, having been elected this morning as Chairman of the Commission of World Organization at the Mexico Conference.

The matter of the voting procedure is on the minds of all delegates. From the standpoint of frank and fair dealing, feel that I must be able to discuss all angles of the world security proposals at the earliest possible moment. I am still hoping that somehow between now and tomorrow night at the time I will deliver my address that Caffery will be able to explain in Paris the fact that 20 republics are meeting to discuss the world security organization and that the French delay is proving most embarrassing to the United States and we ardently hope that they will give their prompt consent. I know that you and Jimmy 40 will do everything within your power to help me here in this difficult matter. [Stettinius.]

806. For Assistant Secretary Dunn. Bidault says that in any event France will attend the San Francisco meeting. He says that his personal views on the voting procedure are not different from the procedure proposed. He said: "There is just one point that is now holding up a little in regard to the sponsorship (we have sent telegrams today to Washington, London, and especially Moscow in an endeavor to clear it up quickly) and that is: Does Dumbarton Oaks as modified at Yalta clash with the recently signed Franco-Soviet treaty?" 41

In other words: The French are not sure about the score at any point nowadays; in this specific case they are not sure about the Russians and this is a polite endeavor to smoke them out.

He made the usual aside: We were not at the Dumbarton Oaks Conference, the Chinese were; we were not at Yalta et cetera, and are forced to ask for some explanations.

He said that he might be interested in the preliminary talks—explanations, exchange of views—you mentioned in regard to the Dumbarton Oaks procedure.

He assured me again that he would do his level best to clear up the sponsorship matter at an early date.

366. For Secretary Stettinius.

1. Since, in accordance with your instructions (paragraph 3 of your 45, February 16, from Dakar 42), no invitation is to be issued to Treaty of alliance and mutual assistance between the Soviet Union and the Provisional Government of the French Republic, signed at Moscow, December 10, 1944. For text, see Department of State Bulletin, January 7, 1945, p. 39. For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. IV, pp. 937 ff.

Secretary Stettinius stated to the press on December 18, 1944, that "on the first reading this Government could find nothing in the pact that remains contrary or counter to the ideals of the world organization" and noted that the pact specifically mentioned the international organization (Radio Bulletin No. 303, December 18, 1944). Under Secretary Grew stated in an address on January 17, 1945, that after careful study of this pact, and various other international pacts recently concluded between several European nations, "we are satisfied that they were concluded in the spirit of what we all are trying to achieve through the Dumbarton Oaks proposals." the London Polish Government to attend the San Francisco Conference, I am proposing to issue a public statement along the following lines if the question is raised (as it undoubtedly will be) when the invitations are made public:

Begin text. At the Crimea Conference it was agreed 43 that a Polish Provisional Government of National Unity is to be established through a reorganization on a broad democratic basis of the Provisional Government now functioning in Poland with the inclusion of democratic leaders from Poland itself and from Poles abroad. Furthermore, it was agreed at that Conference that when a Polish Provisional Government of National Unity has been properly formed in accordance with the steps that were outlined there, the Governments of the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union would establish diplomatic relations with it. It is our hope that by the time the United Nations Conference meets at San Francisco on April 25 the projected Polish Provisional Government of National Unity will have been formed and diplomatic relations with it will have been established by the major nations. In that event, an invitation to send representatives to the San Francisco Conference will, of course, be extended to the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity. End of text.44

He said that his Government was making similar representations at London and Moscow.<sup>58</sup>

We replied that the San Francisco Conference is a conference of United Nations; that the United Nations are those which have subscribed to the Declaration of January 1, 1942; that to be eligible to sign that Declaration a nation must be (1) "at war" and (2) "rendering material assistance and contributions"; that Iceland clearly is eligible as far as (2) is concerned but is not formally at war. We stated further that all the nations represented at San Francisco will have qualified as above indicated and therefore we do not feel it would be fair to those nations to make an exception in the case of Iceland, even though we appreciate greatly the definite contributions made by Iceland to the prosecution of the war. Finally, we said we hoped very much that Iceland would see her way clear to qualify as a United Nation.

held with the Government of China and the Provisional Government of France with respect to (a) the text of the proposals on voting procedure in the Security Council of the general international organization proposed at the Dumbarton Oaks Conference, and (b) their joining the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union in sponsoring invitations to a conference of United Nations to be called to meet in San Francisco on April 25, 1945. While the Government of China has accepted the text of the voting procedure and has agreed to join in sponsoring invitations to the San Francisco Conference the Provisional Government of France, despite earnest and repeated representations from this Government on behalf of all three Governments participating in the Crimea Conference, has so far not indicated its agreement.

2. The Government of the United States believes that while the Provisional Government of France should be allowed some further time to consider the invitation to act as a joint sponsor at the San Francisco Conference and to concur in the proposals on voting procedure, there is, however, urgent need for making the text of the voting proposals public and for giving the United Nations as much time as possible to prepare for the Conference. Furthermore, in view of the fact that the French Provisional Government has had since February 12 to consider this matter, it would seem that the procedure regarding consultation agreed on at the Crimea Conference has in fact been carried out. Therefore, this Government proposes for the concurrence of the Governments of Great Britain, Soviet Union and China that it issue the invitations to the Conference on behalf of itself and the other three governments on March 1 at 12 o'clock noon, Washington time, the text of the invitations to be made public at that time simultaneously by the four governments in Washington, London, Moscow and Chungking. Representatives of the Government of the United States will be instructed to present the invitations formally to the Foreign Ministers of each of the United Nations in their respective capitals at that time. This date is selected since it was agreed at the Crimea Conference that invitations are to be issued to those nations which were signatories to the United Nations Declaration on February 8, 1945 and those associated nations, including Turkey, which will have declared war by March 1.

3. In the event that the Provisional Government of France agrees (a) with the proposals on voting procedure in the Security Council, and (b) to join in sponsoring the invitations to the San Francisco Conference by February 28 at 12 o'clock noon, Washington time, the Provisional Government of France would be included as one of the five governments sponsoring the invitations and would join in the simultaneous release on March 1 referred to in the preceding paragraph. On the other hand, if the Provisional Government does not indicate its agreement by February 28 at 12 o'clock noon, Washington time, then an invitation to the Conference will, of course, be issued to it as one of the United Nations.

4. The agreed text of the invitations to be issued is contained in the telegram immediately following along with the list of the United Nations to which it will subsequently be issued. In the event that the Governments of Egypt, Iceland, Uruguay, and Turkey declare war by March 1, invitations will also be issued to them. The same consideration will apply to Saudi Arabia if the sponsoring Governments agree to the inclusion of that country. End communication.

You should tactfully impress upon the Foreign Minister that this Government assumes that in view of the agreement on procedure reached at the Crimea Conference this proposal will be accepted by his Government and that it will join in the simultaneous release of the text of the invitation. You should also stress that the matters under consultation are to be held entirely confidential until publication of the text of the invitations. Please cable at the earliest possible moment the reaction to the foregoing communication, repeating your reply to the appropriate Amembassies so that Washington, London, Moscow, Chungking, and Paris are all kept informed of the progress of this proposal.

Your 871, February 24, 4 p. m. 67 For your confidential information the following is a communication which we have transmitted to Amembassies London, Moscow and Chungking 68 with the request that it be communicated immediately to the Foreign Minister. If in your judgment it would be helpful you are authorized in your discretion to convey the substance of that communication to the French Foreign Office.

(Begin communication) While the Provisional Government of the French Republic has agreed to participate in the San Francisco Conference, it has stated that it could not join in sponsoring the invitations to the Conference "if it were not specified in the text of the invitations that France wishes the adoption of certain amendments" to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals and that "those amendments will serve as a basis for discussion at the San Francisco Conference". The texts of the proposed amendments are unknown, the formal reply from the Provisional Government merely stating that the list has been prepared and will be submitted "shortly".

The views of the United States Government covering the foregoing are as follows:

1. The assurance that France will participate in the San Francisco Conference is highly welcomed.

In telegram 317, February 27, 6 p. m., from Chungking, the Chargé in China (Atcheson) reported a statement by the Chinese Political Vice Minister (K. C. Wu) that the Chinese Government would go along with us in all these matters (500.CC/2-2745). For the Soviet response, see telegram 570, February 27, midnight, from Moscow, p. 98.

2. Obviously, the Provisional Government of France, as every other Government participating in that Conference, will be free to present comments and proposals for consideration at the Conference. It is not, however, believed that the Governments sponsoring the Conference could accept the conditions of the Provisional Government that the invitations specify that its proposed amendments be accepted "as a basis for discussion" at San Francisco. To do so would be contrary to the agreements reached at the Crimea Conference, subsequently approved by the Chinese Government, that the Dumbarton Oaks proposals—as supplemented by the text of the provisions on the voting procedure in the Security Council—should serve as the basis for discussion at the San Francisco Conference.

3. It is the view of this Government in jointly sponsoring the San Francisco Conference—as we assume that it is the view of the British, Soviet and Chinese Governments—that, prior to the issuance of the invitations, there must be mutual agreement among the sponsoring governments upon the proposals that are to serve as the basis for discussion at the San Francisco Conference. Such agreement in the form of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals as supplemented at the Crimea Conference now exists on the part of the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China.

4. It would appear to be clear from the nature of the message from the Provisional Government of France that the latter is, in fact, not willing to become one of the sponsors of the invitations to the San Francisco Conference without a change in the proposals which are to serve as a basis for the San Francisco Conference. While this Government under normal circumstances would be willing to continue consultations with the French for the purpose of obtaining the agreement of the Provisional Government, such consultation might well prove lengthy and protracted, with the result that the issuance of invitations to the Conference would be greatly delayed and the date thereof indefinitely postponed.

5. In the light of the position of the Provisional Government of the French Republic as thus set forth in its communication, it appears to the Government of the United States that the four sponsoring powers must reluctantly accept the decision of the Provisional Government and proceed with the issuance of the invitations on March 1, 12 o'clock noon, Washington time, in the name of the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and the Republic of China as previously proposed (my 752, February 23,

6. This Government is further of the opinion that at the time the text of the invitations to the San Francisco Conference is made public the position of the Provisional Government of France regarding the foregoing matters should be fully and sympathetically explained by this Government to the press.

7. It should be added that the Provisional Government of France stated in its communication to this Government that as regards the establishment of a "trusteeship" system, the Provisional Government is not in a position to pronounce itself on this question before receiving

Memorandum by the Chairman of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee **O (Dunn) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] 26 February, 1945.

Subject: International Trusteeships

Reference is made to your identical letter of 30 December 1944 to the Secretaries of War and Navy 71 on the subject of international trusteeships, setting forth developments in this regard since the letters exchanged last August between the Joint Chiefs of Staff and yourself.

In their letter of 3 August 1944,72 the Joint Chiefs of Staff expressed the opinion that:

"From the military point of view, it is highly desirable that discussions concerning the related subjects of territorial trusteeships and territorial settlements, particularly as they may adversely affect our relations with Russia, be delayed until after the defeat of Japan."

The Department of State now proposes that preparations be made to discuss the general principles of international trusteeships and the appropriate machinery therefor, leaving for future discussions all questions of specific territories. In support of this proposal it is stated:

- a. That the Soviets, British and Chinese desire and will press for such discussions.
- b. That the question will have to be discussed at the general conference, and that in all likelihood a chapter on general principles and machinery will have to be included in the final charter of the United Nations.
- c. That it is entirely possible in dealing with this subject, to separate the formulation of general principles and of provisions for machinery from consideration of specific territories, the latter subject to be left for future determination.

Upon receipt of your letter, the proposal was submitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. The Joint Chiefs have again considered the matter and have expressed the opinion that there is no objection, from the military point of view, to the proposed discussion of international trusteeships, provided such discussions:

- a. Give full consideration to the future defense needs of the United States.
- b. Exclude direct or indirect discussion of the disposition of any territory under the sovereignty of the United States, or any Japanese territory occupied by United States forces.
- c. Consider no agreement that may eventually give to any foreign nation claim to any control of the "Japanese Mandated Islands" north of the Equator.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff further emphasize the fact that all studies and discussions of this subject should give full consideration to the policy, approved by the President 23 November 1943, that the Bonins and all Japanese Mandated Islands lie in the "Blue Area" described as "Required for the direct defense of the United States . . ." 73

It is understood that, since the receipt of your letter, there has taken place within the State Department consideration of draft proposals, for possible discussion by the United States, Great Britain, Russia and China, relating to the general principles of international trusteeships and the machinery for their effectuation. It is further understood that appropriate military and naval representatives are taking part therein.<sup>74</sup>

The Secretaries of War and Navy are in accord with the desirability of endeavoring to formulate at the earliest possible moment proposals of this character which will recognize the basic military and political factors involved and are satisfactory to this Government as a basis for discussion with the other Dumbarton Oaks powers. If there are to be no direct acquisitions of security outposts by the United States or the other principal powers, such proposals should include a type of trusteeship, in respect to all or any part of these areas, which will assure the security interests of the several agreeing nations. As you point out, it is not unlikely that we shall be obliged, sooner or later, to enter into a discussion of this matter with other nations, and it is imperative that this Government explore the subject thoroughly among ourselves before considering it with others. It is hoped, therefore, that this work will proceed expeditiously, and the War and Navy Departments stand ready to be of any assistance that they can. You are assured that, when it has reached a point where there is a draft-or perhaps alternative drafts-suitable for submission as a basis for discussion within this Government, the War and Navy Departments and the Joint Chiefs of Staff will promptly supply their suggestions and recommendations covering the security interests of the country.

Until this project has advanced to a stage where it is possible to say that this Government has formulated its own position in reasonable detail, it seems to be premature to attempt to decide finally whether or not we shall institute discussions with other nations in this regard. If we are able to agree within our own Government upon proposals which we would be willing to discuss with other nations, then in the opinion of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy such discussions should be limited to the principal powers which took part in the Dumbarton Oaks conversations, and only after full examination and complete agreement among those powers should the subject be opened for consideration by a general conference of the United Nations.

In accordance with the views expressed above, it is suggested that the State Department proceed as promptly as may be possible with the drafting of its proposed paper on territorial trusteeships for possible discussion with the principal powers. As soon as this paper is received, arrangements will promptly be made whereby you will receive the views of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

> London, February 26, 1945—3 p. m. [Received February 26—12:18 p. m.]

1970. We saw Sir Alexander Cadogan at the Foreign Office this morning at his request. He had with him Ambassador Massigli and Chauvel 76 who accompanied Bidault to London.

Cadogan explained that the French had proposed a change in the text of the invitation to the San Francisco Conference. Chauvel at this point said that his Government had informed Ambassador Caffery that it agreed in principle to act as one of the sponsors of the San Francisco Conference but that at the same time his Government

The French Foreign Minister spent three days in England as a guest of the British Government; conversations dealt chiefly with preparations for the San Francisco Conference.

had suggested that in the body of the invitations a clause be inserted to the effect that the French Government reserves the right to put forward certain amendments to the proposals for the establishment of a general international organization. (ReDept's 1409, February 23.)

Cadogan then said that to meet the French view he proposed, as an alternative, changing the wording of the second paragraph of the text of the invitation to read "the above named governments suggest that the conference take as a basis for discussion the proposals for the establishment of a general international organization, etc., etc., etc.". This wording, Massigli and Chauvel said they thought would be acceptable to their Government but they would have to refer the matter to Paris for final answer.

Cadogan asked us to inquire urgently of the Department whether either the French suggestion for amending the text of the invitation or his proposed change is acceptable to the Department. He also asked us to inquire whether the Department would not consider holding up the issuance of the invitations for a day or two beyond March 1st in case agreement on the wording of the text could not be reached immediately.

In asking us to make this inquiry of the Department Cadogan explained in the presence of Massigli and Chauvel that the Foreign Office regarded the text of the invitation as it stood as affording ample opportunity for proposing amendments during the Conference.

1481. Please communicate immediately to Mr. Eden the following message from the Secretary in Mexico City:

"I enjoyed my conversation with you a few minutes ago. The purpose of my call was to appeal to you to impress upon the French the importance, from the standpoint of future world harmony, of their joining with the other four powers in sponsoring the San Francisco Conference. Second, that I am being placed in a very difficult and embarrassing position with 18 Foreign Ministers meeting in Mexico City where I have been a week, and it has not been possible for me to discuss with them any details of the voting procedure or the plans for the San Francisco Conference; that the Mexico City Conference will be completed in the next 2 or 3 days and from the

2015. British Embassy Washington telephoned Foreign Office this morning and said that the French proposal (which was outlined in paragraph 2 of our 1970, February 26) had been turned down by the Department 77 and that the alternative proposal which had been made by Cadogan (and which was quoted in paragraph 3 of our 1970, February 26) had been turned down by de Gaulle. British Embassy added that a third proposal had now been worked out in Washington which was acceptable to the Department.<sup>78</sup> Under this proposal the present text for the invitations (that is, as quoted in the Department's 1409, February 23) would be used but with the understanding that the French Government would be free to issue unilaterally a statement reserving the right to put forward amendments to the proposals for setting up a general international organization.

If this third proposal too is turned down by the French, Foreign Office says there would seem to be no other course open but for the American, British, Soviet and Chinese Governments to proceed with the invitations as sponsors of the Conference. the invitation to the Conference should be sent out by the United States Government in its own name and in the name of the Governments of the Soviet Union, Great Britain and China. The Soviet Government agrees to the invitations being sent out at noon on March 1 Washington time and to the simultaneous publication by the four Governments in the four capitals of the text of the invitation as submitted with my communication, with the proposed modifications. It is a reply to Secretary Stettinius' message contained in Department's 1481 of February 27:

"My dear Ambassador, Many thanks for your letter of today's date which I have just received, enclosing a message from Mr. Stettinius. As you know, the French asked for 24 hours' delay before giving their answer, but this was received in the Foreign Office after lunch today and we at once sent the telegram to Moscow which was agreed between your staff and mine.

I think it would be inadvisable for Mr. Stettinius, whatever his difficulties in Mexico City, to issue the invitations and to publish the voting procedure before the Russians have agreed to the amendments to the invitation now suggested by the French and have also said that they agree that the French should make a unilateral statement.

So far as I am concerned, I regret this delay but I do not see, in view of the French attitude, how it could have been avoided. In any case I would repeat that it is even more important to preserve harmony between the five sponsoring powers and to obtain general agreement that the French should be a sponsoring power also than it is to explain the position to Latin America.

If, however, as we hope, we get a telegram early tomorrow morning from Clark Kerr saying that the Russians agree, there should be ample time for Mr. Stettinius to issue and publish the invitation, and to have a profitable discussion with the representatives of Latin America in Mexico City, before the end of the conference in that town.

I should be greatly obliged if you could pass on my views to Mr. Stettinius as soon as possible and add that he has all my sympathy in the difficulties with which he is now contending.

Yours sincerely.

Bidault himself is on the spot here because he obtained the approval of de Gaulle and the Council of Ministers for the Cadogan formula under an impression he said he had received at London that it was acceptable to the Russians, although I warned him that the Russians had to be consulted first. There was opposition in the Council of Ministers to approving that formula but Bidault won out with de Gaulle's support. to the San Francisco Conference on March 5, noon. I stated that the text of the invitations would be that contained in the Department's 406, February 23, midnight,<sup>14</sup> unless we were advised before noon, March 4, of the willingness of the French Provisional Government to join as a sponsoring nation as a result of conversations which I understood were proceeding between the Soviet and French Governments on the matter.

In reply I received this morning a note from Molotov dated March 5 stating that the Soviet Government continued to support the form of invitation which was worked out in the Crimea Conference as described in my letter and that it had no objection to the date of issuance.

Molotov continued that no special conversations had been carried on between the Soviet and French Governments on this matter, although the following had taken place:

General Catroux had called on Dekanozov 15 last evening and had been informed of the Soviet position with respect to the amendment to the second paragraph of the invitation as proposed by the French Government. The Soviet Government could not agree to the amendment for the reasons set forth in my 605, March 2, 6:00 a. m., and also because it was undesirable to weaken the Dumbarton Oaks decisions which were made in the interests of postwar security. Catroux then expressed the personal wish that the time set for the final reply of his Government be extended somewhat in order that his Government might find it possible to give a definitive reply, it only having received from him preliminary information on the question. Although Dekanozov could not give a final answer to this request, Molotov stated in his letter that there were no objections on the part of the Soviet Government if the United States and British Governments should agree to postpone the date of issuance and release of the invitations one or two days.

Upon the receipt of the Department's 497, March 4, 4:00 p. m., <sup>16</sup> I informed Molotov this morning that we were proceeding to release and issue the invitations today at 12 noon and stated that my Government assumed that the Soviet Government would simultaneously release the text in Moscow. Memorandum of the Acting Secretary's Press and Radio News Conference 19

[Washington,] Monday, March 5, 1945.

[Extract]

Mr. Grew continued that, at the Crimea Conference, it had been agreed that the Republic of China and the Provisional Government of the French Republic would be invited to sponsor invitations jointly with the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union. He said that consultations had been held with the Government of the Republic of China, and that the Government of the Republic of China had agreed to it. Mr. Grew said that the Provisional Government of the French Republic had agreed to participate in the Conference, although it had not participated in the conversations at Dumbarton Oaks, and that now it had declined to join in the sponsoring of the invitations to the other United Nations. A correspondent asked the Acting Secretary if he anticipated that invitations would be sent to any countries not listed, and remarked that he had Poland specifically in mind. Mr. Grew replied that he would give the correspondents the following statement for background:

It is true that while Poland is a member of the United Nations, an invitation to the San Francisco Conference is not being extended at this time to either the London Polish Government or the provisional government now functioning in Poland. The situation is somewhat as follows:

You will recall that at Yalta it was agreed that "the provisional government which is now functioning in Poland should . . . be reorganized on a broader democratic basis with the inclusion of democratic leaders from Poland itself and from Poland abroad", and this new government would then be called the "Polish Provisional Government of National Unity."

<sup>19</sup> Acting Secretary Grew informed the Ambassadors in the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, France, and China (telegram 1665, March 4, 5 p. m., to London, repeated as 498 to Moscow, 372 to Chungking, and 877 to Paris) that the statement with respect to an invitation not being issued to Poland at the present time would not be released to the press but, instead, the Acting Secretary would, in response to press questions, give the correspondents the substance of it for background but not for quotation or attribution to the Department or any official thereof. (500.CC/3–445) For text of statement proposed, see telegram 366, February 22, 9 p. m., to Mexico City, p. 83.

Steps are now being taken to follow through on the agreement reached at the Crimea Conference to reorganize the present government along the above lines. Ambassador Harriman at Moscow is working on this with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov and the British Ambassador, and these three form a commission on the question.

When the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity has been properly formed in accordance with the agreements made at Yalta, this Government, Great Britain and the Soviet Union will establish diplomatic relations with the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity. By the time the San Francisco Conference meets on April 25 it is our hope that the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity will be in existence and that the major nations will have established diplomatic relations with it. Of course, in that event the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity will receive an invitation to send representatives to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco. End of background.<sup>20</sup>

A correspondent asked the Acting Secretary if it could be assumed that no invitation to the conference would be issued to any Polish group if at that time the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity were not yet in existence. Mr. Grew replied that he believed his statement to the effect that if the new Polish Government were in existence, it would receive an invitation to the Conference, covered the situation.

A correspondent asked whether this new Polish Government would have to be recognized by the major nations before the issuance of this invitation, and Mr. Grew replied that, off the record, he would say that the new Polish Government would be recognized prior to that time. End of off the record.

Mr. Grew then called attention to his background statement which he had just given to the corresponds [correspondents] (see above) in which he had said that it was our hope that the new Government of Poland would be in existence and that the major nations would have established diplomatic relations with it. He explained that by major nations he meant the sponsoring powers.

"The Provisional Government of the French Republic had been happy to accept the invitation to act with the Governments of the United States of America, Great Britain, of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and of China among the inviting powers at the San Francisco Conference.

The French Government desired in this respect that the proposed formula for the invitation include the indication that the Dumbarton Oaks plan would be considered as the basis of discussion for the conference, which was equivalent to specifying the possibility of amendments.

The French Government regrets that it has not been possible for the Governments of the United States, of Great Britain, of the USSR and of China to agree on the acceptance of such a formula within the time limit they had set.21

Firmly attached to the principle of collective security the Provisional Government of the French Republic as it made known to the Government of the United States of America on February 23,22 will participate in the work of the conference. The French delegation, faithful to France's traditional views, will cooperate to the fullest extent in the elaboration of the new pact."

923. Your 1040, March 5, 9 p. m.24 The article by Harold Callender from Paris in the New York Times which appeared March 6 made the flat statement, attributed to official sources, that when you conveyed the invitation to the French they thought you were speaking for not only this Government but also for the British and Soviet Governments, and it was not until Bidault went to London that he discovered otherwise. While mindful of your recommendation that no statement be made temporarily, Callender's story—if not denied was surely leading to further speculation as to this Government's role in the whole affair. Therefore, late in the afternoon of March 6 in response to a question from the press, a spokesman for the Department speaking for background purposes only and not for direct quotation or attribution to the Department made a statement on this point. This question and answer are contained in the telegram immediately following en clair.

924. QUESTION: Reports from Paris indicate that the United States Government did not make clear to the Provisional Government of the French Republic the basis upon which it was conducting with France the consultations in connection with the Provisional Government's joining the other four Governments in sponsoring the San Francisco Conference. Could the Department of State throw any light upon the facts as related in this report?

Answer: Following the Crimea Conference, when Ambassador Caffery on February 12 presented the invitation to the Provisional Government to join in sponsoring the San Francisco Conference it was made clear that the United States Government was authorized to extend the invitation on behalf of itself and the British and Soviet Governments. The French reply—which was received almost two weeks later—was immediately transmitted by the United States Government to the other sponsoring Governments, including China, which had already stated its acceptance.

The Provisional Government was at that time informed by Ambassador Caffery that it was necessary for the United States Government to request the views of the other sponsoring nations with regard to the conditions laid down by the Provisional Government. During the ensuing days Ambassador Caffery continued to keep the French Foreign Office fully informed concerning the progress of the consultations.

Moreover, these reports allege that this was the real question underlying the French attitude in refusing to sponsor invitations to the San Francisco Conference. And in this same connection questions may be raised by the British, the French, the Soviet or the Chinese Governments as to whether there is a similar conflict between the Act of Chapultepec <sup>29</sup> just adopted by the Foreign Ministers of the American Republics at Mexico City, and the Dumbarton Oaks proposals.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE ...

On February 26 the Ambassador of the United States in Moscow handed to the Soviet Government an Aide-Mémoire containing a draft of a public declaration by the American Government <sup>30</sup> in connection with the question of the invitation of representatives of Poland to the Conference of the United Nations in San Francisco. On February 28 [27?] in reply, an Aide-Mémoire of the Soviet Government was delivered to the Embassy of the United States in Moscow, <sup>31</sup> in which it was stated that the question of the invitation of Poland to the Conference in San Francisco requires additional discussion.

At the present time the Soviet Government deems it necessary to communicate the following in connection with this question:

The Soviet Government agrees that if by the time of the convening of the Conference in San Francisco the Provisional Government which is acting in Poland now is reorganized and a provisional Polish Government of National Unity as provided by the decisions of the Crimean Conference is created, an invitation to send its representatives to the conference indicated should be sent to this Government. At the same time the Soviet Government considers that if, due to the complication of this question, the reorganization of the Polish Provisional Government is not achieved or completed, then the representatives of the Provisional Polish government now acting in Warsaw should be invited, as those of one which exercises power over all the territory of Poland and enjoys the support of the Polish people. As is entirely comprehensible, the absence of the representatives of Poland from a broad international Conference like the one at San Francisco could not be explained.

The Soviet Government considers as absolutely necessary the immediate discussion of the question mentioned by the Governments of the United States, the Soviet Union and Great Britain and the coming to an appropriate decision, keeping in view the circumstance that India, or such small countries as Haiti, Liberia, Paraguay, although they are not in diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union, have been invited to the conference in San Francisco, without objection on the part of the USSR.

A similar Aide-Mémoire is being forwarded to the Government of Great Britain.

The Polish Ambassador (Ciechanowski) to the Secretary of State 32

[Washington,] March 11, 1945.

Sir: Acting on instructions of my Government, I have the honor to bring the following to your attention:

1.—The Polish Government learned through the press and radio on March 5th, 1945, that the United States Government, acting on its own behalf and on behalf of Great Britain, China and the USSR, sent out invitations to thirty-nine States to take part in a Conference of the United Nations, convened on April 25th, 1945, at San Francisco, for the purpose of preparing a general international organization for the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Polish Government notes that it has not received an invitation to take part in this Conference, despite the fact that it is one of the original signatories of the United Nations Declaration of January 1st, 1942.

2.—Considering that the Polish Nation was first to take up arms against German aggression on September 1st, 1939 33 and that from that day up to the present moment it incessantly continues to fight in Poland and abroad on land, on sea and in the air; considering also that, in thus carrying on the fight in defense of ideals, the Polish Nation having fought longest has sustained in proportion to its possibilities greater sacrifices in human lives and property than any other nation; considering further that the war which started for Poland has created among the free nations of the world that feeling of solidarity which gradually led to the concept and the creation of the United Nations; and, finally, considering that at San Francisco the United Nations are to work out a permanent world organization of peace for the purpose of making aggression impossible in the future, and, that such an organization should be based on the respect of laws and of the sovereign equality of peace-loving nations,—the Polish Government, as the only legal and independent Representative of the Polish State, most emphatically and insistently asserts its inalienable right to take part in the world conference on security and most categorically protests against being omitted in the invitations to the said conference.

- 3.—The Polish Government begs to state that the fact that Poland, whose constitutional President <sup>34</sup> and Government are recognized by all the United Nations as well as by all neutral nations with the exception of one Power only, is not invited to the Conference at San Francisco,—is the first disturbing example of the application of the right of veto on the part of the Big Powers exercised by them even before the United Nations have agreed to and carried out the suggestions to be submitted to them relating to the future establishment of a world security organization.
- 4.—The Polish Government has already presented some preliminary amendments to the proposals prepared at Dumbarton Oaks 35 and intends fully to participate in the working out of an international security organization.

Under the circumstances, the Polish Government is deprived of the possibility of presenting at the Conference its final views both in relation to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals and to the proposal respecting the voting procedure in the Security Council formulated at the Crimea Conference.

Minutes of the First Meeting of the United States Delegation, Held at Washington, Tuesday, March 13, 1945, 11 a. m.36

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of persons (15) present (6 delegates and 9 Departmental officers) and preliminary announcements by the Secretary on arrangements for delegation meetings and for the Conference.

The Secretary said that he had outlined to the President the question of the publicity policy for the Conference. He had explained the need of a liberal and progressive policy in this respect, to which the President had agreed. The Secretary suggested a formula along the following lines:

(1) The plenary sessions of the Conference would be open to the public, including the press, radio, and newsreels;

(2) The meetings of commissions would likewise be open to the public;

(3) The Chairman of the Conference would hold a press conference every day at noon to keep the press fully posted on developments;

(4) All other matters would be private. This would include meetings of subcommittees, the executive committee, and the steering committee.

THE SECRETARY said that an arrangement along these lines had worked well at Mexico City, and that at his press conference here yesterday the correspondents had passed a resolution expressing approval of the Mexican arrangements and expressing the hope that similar arrangements could be made at San Francisco.

Senator Connally questioned having the meetings of Commissions open to the public on the ground that this would lengthen the Conference. Commander Stassen thought that while it might lengthen the Conference the price might be worth the benefits resulting from such a policy.

At this point as a result of a question concerning the commissions, Mr. Hiss explained briefly the tentative organization charts. He said that there probably would be five commissions as follows: (1) General Structure, (2) Security Problems, (3) Economic and Social Problems, (4) Judicial Organization and Legal Problems, (5) Trusteeship Arrangements. He pointed out that in addition there would be an executive committee consisting of the chairmen of the various delegations, a steering committee, and subcommittees of the various commissions.

<sup>36</sup> The United States delegation held 12 meetings in Washington, at the Department of State, before its departure for San Francisco on April 18; in San Francisco it held 67 meetings at the Fairmont Hotel, the first on April 23 and the last on June 23.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked what was meant by "trusteeship". It was explained that this had reference to the treatment of certain dependent territories, including the League mandates.<sup>37</sup> He inquired whether the people would be satisfied with such a title for this subject. Representative Eaton inquired whether "trusteeship" would include the treatment of colonial problems.

The Secretary explained that at the San Francisco Conference it would be possible only to deal with arrangements for handling former League mandates and certain areas to be detached from the enemy powers. It would not be possible to deal with particular areas and there would be no consideration of the allocation or treatment of specific territories.

Senator Vandenberg said that this suggested one important matter which ought to be cleared up in the minds of the public; that is at San Francisco we would be dealing only with the creation of an organization—we would not be dealing with specific problems of the peace settlement, such as territorial dispositions. Senator Connally agreed with this and said that there was considerable confusion in the public mind as to the purpose of the Conference. There was general agreement that it was important to clarify the purpose of the Conference whenever opportunity offered.

Returning to the question of trusteeship, Representative Bloom inquired whether the proposals under consideration contemplated taking over the League mandates. Mr. Hiss said that this was so, but not as to the disposition to be made of specific mandated areas.

COMMANDER STASSEN expressed his approval of the use of the word "trusteeship", and there was general agreement with this view. Representative Bloom said that he had only brought the question up for the purposes of clarification.

Representative Eaton inquired what this meant as to the disposition of the League of Nations. The Secretary pointed out that the League's Supervisory Commission had at a meeting in December appointed a committee of three members to negotiate with the new organization with respect to the disposition of the League's property and functions. ** Mr. Pasvolsky said that the members of the League present at San Francisco might pass a resolution providing for the liquidation of the League. Senator Connally remarked that it was self-evident that we could not have two general organizations in being at the same time.

THE SECRETARY said that the President had told him that he did not want alternates to the Delegates. The President had had some fifty or more suggestions for additions to the Delegation. He did not want to appoint any additional delegates or any alternates. This met with general approval.

At this point the meeting was adjourned to enable the Delegates to go to the White House.

Upon reconvening, a number of points concerning arrangements for the Conference were discussed.

[Here follows discussion of arrangements for Conference, such as transportation, office space, etc.]

Publicity Policy

Two questions as to policy with respect to publicity were raised: One as to statements by the Delegates at the Conference, and the second, statements preceding the Conference. It was agreed so far as the Conference period was concerned that no public statement should be made without consulting with the Delegation and the statements themselves would be released by the Delegation's press officer. As to the period preceding the Conference, there seemed to be a consensus of opinion that there should be no effort to put "a lid" on statements now. This should be left to the discretion of each individual. There was some feeling that a public statement should be made to the effect that any Delegate should have the right to make public statements preceding the Conference, such statements having been shown to the other Delegates. No agreement was reached on this point.

Upon the request of the Secretary, the Delegates approved his making a public statement as to the liberal publicity policy to be followed with respect to proceedings of the Conference.

Committee of Jurists

The Secretary informed the Delegates that there had been an informal agreement at Dumbarton Oaks and later during informal conversations at Yalta that a committee of jurists should be convened prior to the Conference.<sup>39</sup> He said that we were taking steps to consult the other sponsoring governments with a view to inviting all the governments participating in the Conference to send representatives to a committee of jurists to meet two weeks or so before the Conference. Mr. Hackworth would represent this Government.

- 1944. With a view to the preparation of the statute of the international court of justice, as projected in Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals,41 please communicate the following immediately to the Foreign Office, stressing the urgent need for agreement on the procedure for dealing with this matter.
- 1. The statute of the international court of justice envisaged under Chapter VII, paragraph 3, of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, must be prepared by joint action of the interested states either in advance of or at the United Nations Conference, which is to meet at San Francisco on April 25, 1945.
- 2. It was suggested informally during the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations that prior to the Conference a preliminary meeting of jurists be held 42 for the purpose of drafting the statute and formulating plans for the establishment of the court. No definite agreement was reached on this suggestion, however, and there was no detailed discussion of the content of the proposed statute.
- 3. As a result of informal conversations during the course of the Crimea Conference,43 it was understood that the United States should take the initiative in bringing about the convening of a committee of jurists prior to the Conference at San Francisco.
- 4. The Government of the United States feels that, in principle, a small expert group of jurists (possibly 15 or 20) selected by agreement among the sponsoring Governments might perhaps represent the most effective body for drafting the statute. However, in view of the pressure of time and the desirability of avoiding any impression that the sponsoring Governments may be seeking to exclude equal participation by other Governments in this important matter of general concern, it is believed that it would be preferable to invite each of the Governments participating in the United Nations Conference to name a representative on the committee of jurists.
- 5. The Government of the United States recommends that the four Governments sponsoring the San Francisco Conference agree on the following procedure:

A. That the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, and China, by common agreement, convene a committee of jurists to prepare a draft statute of the international court of justice, as envisaged in Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

B. That the committee of jurists should meet in the United States, preferably at or near Washington not later than April 9.

C. That each of the Governments invited to participate in the United Nations Conference should be invited to appoint one representative to the committee of jurists; and that each representative might be accompanied by not more than two advisers.

D. That the Government of the United States should be authorized, after agreement has been reached, to issue invitations on behalf of the sponsoring Governments to the Governments invited to participate in the committee of jurists.

E. That the terms of reference of the committee of jurists be to prepare a draft statute on the basis of Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

F. That the draft prepared pursuant to paragraph E be submitted to the Conference for consideration.44

[Washington,] March 14, 1945.

Ambassador Hurley <sup>46</sup> has suggested that you might wish to send the attached telegram <sup>47</sup> to Chiang Kai-shek in regard to Chinese Communist representation on the Chinese delegation to the San Francisco conference. We have discussed the matter with General Hurley and find ourselves in full accord with his suggestion and with the objectives which have prompted him to make it.

Briefly, the suggestion is that you invite Chiang's attention to the advantages which might flow from the inclusion of representatives of the Chinese Communist and other political parties on the Chinese delegation to the San Francisco conference. Two advantages are mentioned: the favorable impression on the conference and the impetus to political unification in China.

The Secretary of State to the Chargé in China (Atcheson)

Washington, March 15, 1945—8 p. m.

447. Please deliver a close paraphrase of the following message from the President to President Chiang Kai-shek:

"I have received from Ambassador Hurley a detailed report in regard to the situation in China and the various problems facing you and I am encouraged to learn that progress is being made.

In connection with the forthcoming United Nations security conference to be convened at San Francisco on April 25, for which the National Government of the Republic of China is a sponsor, General Hurley has informed me of the suggestion made to him by the Chinese Communist Party that the Chinese delegation be composed of representatives of the Kuomintang, the Democratic Federation, and the Communist Party on a basis of equality. I fully concur in General Hurley's reply to the effect that the conference at San Francisco is to be a conference of national governments and not of political parties.

At the same time, I would like to let you know that I can anticipate no disadvantage that would arise from the inclusion in the Chinese Government's delegation of representatives of the Communist Party or other political parties or groups. In fact, there might be distinct advantages in such a course. Undoubtedly a very favorable impression would be created at the conference and this democratic gesture by you might prove of real assistance in your task of unifying China.

As you no doubt know, the major political parties in this country will be represented on the United States delegation and I believe that Canada and other nations are following a similar course.

I send you my personal greetings and good wishes and earnestly hope for your continuing good health.

Franklin D. Roosevelt"

The President opened the conversation with a reference to the Yalta Conference, saying that he had had a successful time. He then said, apparently referring to our last meeting at luncheon, "I liked Stanley". He thought that Stanley was more liberal on colonial policy than Churchill. He then asked me if Stanley was going to San Francisco. I said I did not know. The President said he hoped he would. I told him that, although Stanley was hard-boiled, I felt there was a genuine streak of liberalism in him, and that under his leadership, the British would make some substantial changes in their whole colonial policy. I told the President of the £120,000,000 appropriation that Parliament had made for Colonial Development over the next ten years, and gave him some little detail of the debate in Parliament (February 7, 1945).50

TRUSTEESHIP

I outlined to the President the discussion on the above subject between the General Staffs and the State Department as it had developed in the Committee on Dependent Area Aspects of International Organizations. I outlined the agreement that had been reached on the general category of strategic areas, and told the President that the military had indicated that they would interpret strategic areas as an entire area—for instance, all of the Japanese islands, north of the Equator, that might come under the administration of the United States. I told him that under their interpretation, the entire group of islands irrespective of whether they were fortified or not would be exempt from substantially all of the international agreements pertaining to civilian populations; that the military had been unwilling to agree to divide strategic areas into two categories closed areas and open areas.

The President said that he would favor these two categories and that the open areas should be subject to international agreements.<sup>51</sup> He said that if the military wanted, at a later date due to change in strategy, to make all or part of the open area a closed area, it should be provided that this could be done with the approval of the Security Council.

The President then asked me, "What is the Navy's attitude in regard to territories? Are they trying to grab everything?" I replied that they did not seem to have much confidence in civilian controls. President then asked me how I accounted for their attitude.

I said that I thought that the military had no confidence in the proposed United Nations Organization. The President replied that he thought that was so. I told the President of the letter that Admiral Willson showed me addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, referring to the need of sending representatives to San Francisco in order to protect themselves against "the international welfare boys". The President then said that neither the Army nor the Navy had any business administering the civilian government of territories; that they had no competence to do this.

I then referred to the Cole Bill 52 which would turn over the administration of all our territories to the Navy. The President said that he had not been informed about this bill, and appeared to be interested.

I told the President about the conversations I had been having with the Under Secretary of the Interior, Abe Fortas, regarding the possibility of the United States, at an auspicious time, volunteering to have our own territories report to the Organization, and also to respond to requests from the Organization for specific information. The President said he would approve of this and that it might provide a useful trading point at San Francisco.

ARABIA

The President said that one of the most important goals we must have in mind for the post-war world is to increase the purchasing power of great masses of people who now have a negligible purchasing power. He said a case in point was Arabia.

He spoke of his meeting with Ibn Saud.53 The President said that he had told Ibn Saud that essentially he, the President, was a businessman; that he had been the head of a big insurance company—the Maryland Casualty; that as a businessman he would be very much interested in Arabia. He told Ibn Saud that he knew considerable of the history of Arabia and had always been interested in that country; that Arabia needed irrigation projects; that it had plenty of water about sixty feet below the surface; that it had oil; that, using their own oil for fuel as operating pumps, they could develop an irrigation system in Arabia. He said that he told the King that if he, the President, were in the pump business, he would regard Arabia as a great potential market, and that the development of irrigation projects would increase the productivity of the land and considerably increase the purchasing power of the country which would be of great benefit to the world.

CARIBBEAN BASES

I told the President of my recent trip to the Caribbean bases with General Brett,<sup>54</sup> and outlined in brief to him the substance of my report to the State Department.<sup>55</sup> The President reacted to the report by saying, "We must keep the bases active and leave no room for doubt that we are there to stay."

possessions of the United States by the Navy Department, introduced by Representative W. Sterling Cole of New York; no action was taken on this Bill.

THE PEOPLES OF EAST ASIA

The President said he was concerned about the brown people in the East. He said that there are 1,100,000,000 brown people. In many Eastern countries, they are ruled by a handful of whites and they resent it. Our goal must be to help them achieve independence—1,100,000,000 potential enemies are dangerous. He said he included the 450,000,000 Chinese in that. He then added, Churchill doesn't understand this.

INDO-CHINA AND NEW CALEDONIA

The President said he thought we might have some difficulties with France in the matter of colonies. I said that I thought that was quite probable and it was also probable the British would use France as a "stalking horse".

I asked the President if he had changed his ideas on French Indo-China as he had expressed them to us at the luncheon with Stanley. He said no he had not changed his ideas; that French Indo-China and New Caledonia should be taken from France and put under a trusteeship. The President hesitated a moment and then said—well if we can get the proper pledge from France to assume for herself the obligations of a trustee, then I would agree to France retaining these colonies with the proviso that independence was the ultimate goal. I asked the President if he would settle for self-government. He said no. I asked him if he would settle for dominion status. He said no—it must be independence. He said that is to be the policy and you can quote me in the State Department.

The aide-mémoire states that if this is not achieved or completed by that time, the Soviet Government considers that the Polish Provisional Government now acting in Warsaw should be invited. Immediate discussion of the question is stated to be necessary and it is pointed out that the Soviet Government has not objected to India or such small countries as Haiti, Liberia and Paraguay being invited to the Conference although they are not in diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. We understand that a similar aide-mémoire has been delivered to the British Government.

We propose to instruct Harriman to inform Molotov that this Government could not agree to an invitation being extended to the Provisional Polish Government now acting in Warsaw as we believe that such action would make even more difficult the establishment of the Provisional Government of National Unity on the broad democratic basis that was agreed to at the Crimea Conference.<sup>58</sup> He will be authorized to state that we share Mr. Molotov's views as to the importance of having Poland represented at San Francisco and consider this an additional reason for expediting the formation of the Provisional Government of National Unity. Harriman will be instructed to point out that the case of the countries mentioned by Mr. Molotov which are not in diplomatic relation with the Soviet Union would not appear to be parallel as there are no rival governments of these countries recognized by any of the United Nations. In the event that a new Government has not been formed before the San Francisco Conference, the Soviet and American Governments would be in the position of recognizing different Polish Governments and the view of this Government is that Poland could not in these circumstances be represented. The United States Government would be agreeable, however, to the issuance of an invitation if the new Government should be formed while the San Francisco Conference is still in session.

Please discuss the foregoing with the ForOf and inform the Dept urgently of the British views. Please inform Schoenfeld.

two points which he feels are important. We believe we can do this.

The first point is to work more language into the charter on the subject of justice; the second is to write into the charter a provision empowering the organization to review and possibly make recommendations on past arrangements. This is to meet the point which is of overwhelming importance in his mind that otherwise the new International Organization would in effect freeze the status quo existing at the end of the war which, in his opinion, would have resulted, at least partially, from decisions made because of military expediency without complete regard for justice.

The Senator expressed the opinion that if we could get these two thoughts into the document, in addition to his personally going along, it would remove a considerable part of the opposition on the part of Senator LaFollette, and that there would be only negligible Republican opposition to the charter when it was presented to the Senate.

60</sup> Dated March 16, not printed; this telegram (repeated to Chungking as No. 618) summarized the Secretary's note to the Soviet Ambassador (500.CC/3-1645).

The note from the Secretary of State to Ambassador Gromyko was transmitted on March 17. The Chinese Minister and Counselor of Embassy, Liu Chieh, was informed on March 19 of this action taken by the Department; he said that this answered the question he had previously raised and that he was sure this action would be entirely satisfactory to his Government (500.CC/3–1945).

&lt;sup>62</sup> The Dumbarton Oaks Conversations were held in two phases: The first, from August 21 to September 28, 1944, by representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union; and the second, September 29 to October 7, by representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom, and China. a General International Organization and would be held for further consideration at a later stage. The three points are as follows:

The Charter should provide specifically that adjustment or settlement of international disputes should be achieved with due regard for principles of justice and international law.

The Assembly should be responsible for initiating studies and making recommendations with respect to the development and revision of the rules and principles of international law.

The Economic and Social Council should specifically provide for the promotion of educational and other forms of cultural cooperation.

The desirability of proceeding with issuing invitations for the United Nations Conference immediately after agreement among the sponsoring powers on the voting procedure in the Security Council made it inexpedient to consider any other changes in the Proposals prior to issuance of the invitations. However, this Government feels that the matter should now be brought to the attention of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

This Government sees no objection to the incorporation of the substance of these three points in the charter of the general international organization to be prepared at San Francisco, and hopes that your Government will give the matter serious consideration. We will welcome your views on this subject."

Problem arises in connection with the Yalta agreement to the effect that the five governments with permanent seats in the Security Council should consult each other prior to the United Nations Conference on providing machinery in the world charter for dealing with territorial trusteeships. However, since France is not a co-sponsor, a question arises as to her inclusion in the preliminary consultations.

The Chargé in China informed the Department in telegram 459, March 19, 8 a.m., that the Chinese Government was in accord with Departmental thought on the question of trusteeships conversations (500.CC/3-1945).

For the observations reported by the Ambassador in the United Kingdom, see telegram 2791, March 17, 7 p. m., p. 138.

On the Secretary's invitation the two Ambassadors were received at about ten minutes after ten in the Secretary's office. The Secretary opened the conversation by referring to Ambassador Gromyko's request made earlier in the week 69 for a memorandum on tentative arrangements for the San Francisco Conference. The Secretary then handed to Ambassador Gromyko a copy of a memorandum on that subject and handed another copy to Lord Halifax.70 A copy of the memorandum is attached hereto.71

The Secretary then said that it had occurred to him that there would be so many questions relating to the arrangements during the next few weeks that it would be very helpful if an informal steering committee composed of himself and the two Ambassadors could be formed.<sup>72</sup> He said that perhaps the Department could undertake related consultation with the Chinese Ambassador. He emphasized that he was making this suggestion from the point of view of convenience of the other sponsoring governments and he made it clear, in response to inquiries, that the committee would deal with questions of procedure and arrangements rather than of substance. It was agreed, however, that if the committee were established it would serve as a means of transmission and communication on matters of policy connected with the Conference.

Ambassador Gromyko said that the proposal seemed to him to be a good idea and Lord Halifax also indicated his agreement. They both said that they would take the matter up with their Governments and let us have a prompt reply. It was further understood that each of the Ambassadors would nominate a deputy for liaison with the Department on these matters.

The Secretary said that through the proposed informal steering committee and liaison with the nominated deputies of the Ambassadors it would be possible to go over maps, charts and other plans for the arrangements and later to discuss which countries might be proposed for various commission and committee positions. He said that he thought it would be helpful if the sponsoring governments could agree on these matters in advance of the Conference.

<sup>72</sup> The so-called "Informal Organizing Group on Arrangements for the San Francisco Conference", composed of the Secretary of State and the British, Soviet, and Chinese Ambassadors, held its first meeting April 3, 1945, the second April 10, and last April 13.

Ambassador Gromyko asked who would take the initiative in calling meetings of the committee and the Secretary suggested that Mr. Hiss would be asked to undertake this responsibility. This seemed to be agreeable. In this connection the Secretary said that he had in mind that the Conference might select Mr. Hiss to act as Secretary-General.

The Secretary then said that, in the event that the two Governments agreed with his proposal, he hoped that it might be possible to have a prompt meeting of the steering committee. He explained that he would be away next week and he said that he hoped that a meeting of the committee could be arranged in his absence. It was agreed that as soon as the two Ambassadors have received comments of their respective Governments they would notify the Department and a meeting might be arranged immediately thereafter, if there seemed to be sufficient pending matters to warrant a meeting at that time. It was also agreed that in any event, as soon as they had received the comments of their Governments on the memorandum which had been handed to them, they would meet with appropriate officers of the Department.

At this point the Secretary said that he wondered whether the Ambassadors would not be agreeable to having the Chinese Ambassador join in as a member of the proposed committee, assuming that the committee will be agreeable to the British and Soviet Governments. Ambassador Gromyko asked whether any consultation on this matter had yet taken place with the Chinese Ambassador and the Secertary replied in the negative, saying that he had wished to take up the matter first with Lord Halifax and Ambassador Gromyko. Ambassador Gromyko indicated that he assumed there would be no objection to participation by the Chinese Ambassador in the committee if it is established. It was understood that he would ask his Government about this aspect of the matter also. Lord Halifax pointed out that the Chinese are one of the sponsors and indicated that he thought the Chinese Ambassador should participate in the proposed committee if it is created.

Ambassador Gromyko asked whether the Secretary had yet formulated proposals with respect to committees and subcommittees of the commissions. The Secretary replied in the negative and said that we hoped to have more concrete proposals on this point before the next meeting on the subject of the Conference.

Memorandum Prepared in the Department of State 73

TENTATIVE SUGGESTIONS WITH RESPECT TO ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE SAN FRANCISCO CONFERENCE

Following the return of the Secretary of State from the Conference at Mexico City tentative proposals concerning the organization of the Conference at San Francisco have been formulated by the Department for the consideration of the other sponsoring Governments. We shall hope to communicate additional and more detailed proposals shortly.

1. Procedure of Conference meetings

We anticipate that the normal conference proceedings will be followed, with plenary sessions and meetings of principal commissions, committees and subcommittees.

We consider that it would be desirable to have four principal commissions which would, respectively, cover the following major topics: (a) general structure and powers of the United Nations organization including international trusteeship matters, (b) maintenance of peace and security, (c) economic and social cooperation, and (d) judicial organization.

We anticipate that the initial meetings of the Conference would be held in plenary session and that after the organizing of the Conference has been completed the Conference would resolve itself into meetings of the commissions. The commissions in turn, after agreeing upon their own agenda and such general discussions as they might desire, would resolve themselves into committees and subcommittees. We would anticipate that most of the discussion and drafting would take place in these committees and subcommittees. Coordination and joint periodic review by the heads of delegation would be achieved by the steering committee and the executive committee referred to in the next paragraph.

2. Officers of the Conference, Steering Committee and Executive Committee

We think it might be desirable if the Conference were to have a president and three vice-presidents, these positions to be held by representatives of the four sponsoring powers. The presidents of the four commissions mentioned above might appropriately be selected from among representatives of other major nations. Representation for still other participating nations would seem to be desirable as chairmen of committees and subcommittees of the commissions and as rapporteurs.

The Enclosure to a letter of March 15, handed to the British and Soviet Ambassadors on March 16, not printed.

We suggest that there be a steering committee, composed of chairmen of all delegations, to make determinations of policy and to decide matters of special importance relating to conference arrangements and that there might be an executive committee of perhaps eleven members composed of the president and vice-presidents of the conference together with the presidents of the four commissions and three other chairmen of delegation. The executive committee would be responsible for preparing recommendations to the steering committee and would be assisted by a coordination and drafting committee composed of a deputy for each member of the executive committee.

3. Information policy

We have indicated publicly in answer to inquiries from the press our confidence that the Conference will follow a liberal information policy <sup>74</sup> and, having in mind the successful information policy followed at other Conferences, we have said that it is our view that plenary sessions and sessions of the full commissions should be open to representatives of the press and to such members of the public as space may permit.

We anticipate that the Conference will have a chief press officer who might have associated with him press officers representing members of the executive committee.

We consider it desirable that the President of the Conference, assisted by the Vice-Presidents and possibly chairmen of commissions, hold regularly-scheduled daily brief meetings with the press.

4. Secretariat

We consider that the Secretariat should include representatives of various of the participating nations. We have been thinking in terms of management, administrative and clerical personnel being furnished by this Government, the principal secretaries of the commissions and their committees and subcommittees to be named by other participating Governments.

[Washington,] March 17, 1945.

The Soviet Ambassador came in this morning to inform the Department of the number of persons in the Soviet Delegation to the San Francisco Conference. He said it was to be composed as follows:

12 advisers and experts

90 assistants, secretaries, and staff, making a total of 122.

The Ambassador then went on to say that the number of persons which would compose the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics would amount to a total of thirty persons. I remarked that no invitation had been issued to the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics to attend the Conference and that no provision had been made for a delegation from those entities. The Ambassador then stated that according to the agreement made at the Crimean Conference, 75 these two Republics were to be initial members of the International Organization, and that they would be expected therefore to be present at San Francisco and take their place among the participants in the drawing up of the charter. I said that I was not familiar with the details of any arrangement which might have been made at the Crimean Conference in this respect, but that in my own opinion if the two Republics were to be "initial members" of the new Organization, I did not myself see how that would justify their being present at the Conference at San Francisco as they could not be "initial members" of an organization until the organization was itself constituted; and that of course the International Organization would not be constituted and begin to function until at least a certain number of the signatories to the charter had had their adherence to the charter ratified according to their constitutional processes, and there had been an opportunity to convene the representatives of the states which had joined the Organization for the purpose of having its initial meeting. The Ambassador said that it was his understanding, and he believed that of his Government, that the agreement to consider these two Republics as having the right to "initial membership" entitled them to participate in the Conference at which the charter of the Organization would be drawn up. He asked whether the representatives of the governments at the Conference would not have full powers and would not be expected to sign the charter in the name of their governments. I said that that was our expectation, whereupon he gave as his opinion that initial membership involved the signing of the charter as an original member of the Organization and that it was therefore necessary for these two Republics to be present at the Conference to participate in the discussions leading to the conclusion of the instrument or statute founding the Organization and to exercise their rights as "initial members" of the Organization by signing the charter at San Francisco. I again stated that I myself could not see how it was possible to become a member of an organization until the organization was constituted; that it was after the organization was set up and functioning that the exercise of membership began; that the countries represented at the Conference would not necessarily all be members of the Organization; that it was conceivable that some countries present at the Conference would not ratify the adherence to the Organization indicated by the signature of their representative and therefore the act of participating in the Conference was not directly related to the question of membership; that they were two separate things. The Ambassador stated that in any event he had been instructed to inform us as to the size of the delegation from the Ukraine and White Russia and that the plans for attending the Conference included the sending of such personnel to San Francisco.

I explained to the Ambassador that I was not in a position to discuss this matter definitively with him, as I was not precisely informed with respect to the arrangement he had referred to and that I would be very glad to report to the Secretary the information he had given me and that he should consider that our conversation on the subject of the representation of the two Republics was unofficial and informal and that any further discussion on the matter would have to be referred to the Secretary for clarification.

The attached draft statement of arrangements for international trusteeship is submitted to the Secretary's Staff Committee from the Inter-Departmental Committee on Dependent Areas for consideration and approval prior to its clearance with other interested departments and with the President.<sup>77</sup> Following such clearance, this document will be transmitted to the other governments as our part of an exchange of documents on this subject.

This committee (whose State Department representatives were appointed on January 5) held its first meeting on February 2 and its last on March 15. For information on the interdepartmental consideration of trusteeship, see Postwar Foreign Policy Preparation, pp. 387 ff. and 428 ff.

&quot;The above-mentioned draft statement (SC-79), as amended at the final meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee on Dependent Areas on March 15, was recorded as the ninth draft. The Secretary's Staff Committee gave its approval on March 20 before the paper was submitted to the Secretaries of War and the Navy and the Joint Chiefs of Staff for clearance. President Roosevelt informed Secretary Stettinius, orally, on March 29 that they would review the trusteeship paper within a week or ten days.

The Inter-Departmental Committee is also considering: (1) a draft declaration regarding the administration of dependent areas; and (2) a draft plan for regional advisory commissions.

The overriding importance of the trusteeship question and the shortness of time make it essential that the paper on trusteeship be transmitted at the earliest possible date.

It is understood that the British Embassy has a paper covering the three subjects (trusteeship, draft declaration, and regional commissions) which they would be ready to give us as soon as it is cleared with the Dominions and, presumably, whenever we are ready to exchange papers with them.

A telegram has been sent to our missions at London, Moscow, and Chungking 78 proposing that discussions at the technical level be held shortly after the first of April and suggesting that France be invited to participate in the exchange of papers and in the discussion thereof.

ANNEX I

CHAPTER ____

ARRANGEMENTS FOR INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP

(Note 1: This draft deals with principles and mechanism only and makes no assumption about the inclusion of any specific territory.)

(Note 2: If included as a chapter of the Charter of the Organization, the provisions of this draft would need to be harmonized with the other provisions of the Charter.)

Section A Purposes

- 1. The Organization should establish under its authority a system of international trusteeship for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder.
- 2. The basic objectives of the trusteeship system should be: (a) to further international peace and security; (b) to promote, in accordance with the provisions of a declaration of principles to be agreed upon, the political, economic, and social advancement of the trust territories and their inhabitants and their progressive development toward self-government; and (c) to provide for non-discriminatory treatment in trust territories for the economic and other appropriate civil activities of the nationals of all member states.

Section B

Scope and Method of Establishment

1. The trusteeship system should apply only to such territories in the following categories as may, by trusteeship arrangements, be placed thereunder: (a) territories now held under mandate; (b) territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of this war; and (c) territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.

2. The trusteeship arrangements by which territories would be placed under the trusteeship system should in each case include:

a. a statement establishing the title in the Organization as trustee;

b. the designation of the administering authority, which may be either a member state or an international mixed commission;

c. the designation, where strategic considerations are controlling and in the interest of security, of certain territories, or parts thereof, as strategic areas for the purposes of the trusteeship system;

- d. a statement of the respective rights and responsibilities of the Organization and of the administering authority, taking into account, in giving effect to the basic objectives of the trusteeship system, the geographical situation of the territory, its political and economic characteristics, and its designation as a strategic or non-strategic area;
- e. appropriate provision for non-discriminatory treatment for the nationals of all member states, with such exceptions in strategic areas as may be required in the interest of security.

Section C

Structure and Procedures

- 1. The functions of the Organization with respect to the trusteeship system should be exercised, as specified in Sections E, F, G, and H, by the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council, each acting by a two-thirds vote of those present and voting, and, with respect to matters concerning strategic areas, also by the Security Council, acting with the concurrence of all of the permanent members.
- 2. The Trusteeship Council should be composed of specially qualified representatives designated (a) one each by the states administering trust territories, and (b) one each by an equal number of other states named for three-year periods by the General Assembly, initial designations being so arranged that one-third would expire each year. The Trusteeship Council should make provision for appropriate representation of international mixed commissions administering trust territories. It should make arrangements for representatives of appropriate specialized organizations or agencies to participate in its deliberations, without the right to vote.
- 3. The Trusteeship Council should have the technical assistance of a permanent staff which should constitute a part of the Secretariat of the Organization.

Section D

Territorial Charters

1. As soon as practicable after the trusteeship arrangements for a territory are completed, the administering authority thereof should submit to the General Assembly the territorial charter for the administration of that trust territory. This territorial charter should be drawn in accordance with the general terms of the trusteeship arrangements and should set forth the rights and obligations of the parties concerned and the fundamental rights of the inhabitants. This charter should become effective on approval by the General Assembly and should constitute a part of the organic law of the territory.

2. The terms of each territorial charter should take into account the stage of development of the people and other relevant factors.

Section E

Concurrent Powers of the General Assembly, the Trusteeship Council. and the Security Council

The General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council, and, in the case of strategic areas, the Security Council, acting concurrently, should have authority:

a. to alter the trusteeship arrangements;

b. to amend the territorial charters within the scope of the respective trusteeship arrangements;

c. to remove an administering authority for failure to fulfill the terms of its trusteeship arrangement or of the territorial charter, and to arrange for the designation of another administering authority;

d. to determine the conditions which must be met for the attainment of self-governing status; and

e. to terminate trusteeship over any territory when these conditions have been met.

Section F

- 2. The Trusteeship Council, subject, in the case of strategic areas, to such provisions in the respective trusteeship arrangements as may be required for security purposes, should also be empowered:
- a. to call for and examine reports from the administering authorities;

b. to interrogate representatives of those authorities;

- c. to review periodically the financial position of each trust territory;
  - d. to conduct periodic inspections in the trust territories.

Section H

Powers of the Security Council

The Security Council should have authority to exercise such other powers in addition to those specified herein as may be vested in it by any trusteeship arrangement.

Section I

The revenues of each trust territory should be employed exclusively for the administration and development of the territory. Any additional amounts required for these purposes should be provided by the administering authority, with such assistance in obtaining financing, when necessary, as may be arranged by the General Assembly. The costs of supervision by the Organization should be provided in the budget of the Organization.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, March 17, 1945—7 p. m. [Received March 17—5:42 p. m.]

- 2791. The following observations were made today by an official of the Foreign Office regarding the status of various questions now under discussion between London and Washington concerning the San Francisco Conference:
- 1. Syria and Lebanon: Taking into consideration the views of the American Government, the reported concurrence of Russia and China,<sup>79</sup> and the interest expressed by the Arab States (reEmbtel 2527, March 11, 3 p. m.<sup>80</sup>), the Foreign Office is inclined to favor participation of Syria and Lebanon in the San Francisco Conference, but feels that it would be advisable to clear the proposal with the French who have recently been badgering the Foreign Office on this subject and are apparently apprehensive of being faced by a fait accompli. Information to this effect has already gone forward to the British Embassy at Washington for transmission to the Department, and the Foreign Office has under preparation a further communication suggesting that, provided the other sponsoring powers are agreeable, the American Government, as the inviting power, should approach the French on the matter.<sup>81</sup>

- 2. Consultations regarding International Court of Justice: The Foreign Office is in general agreement with the views of the Department (reDeptel 1944, March 13, 11 [10] p. m.) on this subject and a reply to the Embassy to that effect has been drafted, including the added suggestion that, if the work of the jurists is not completed by the time the Conference begins, the scene of their activities would be transferred to San Francisco.
- 3. Polish participation: The Foreign Office not only shares the views of the State Department regarding the non-participation at the at In telegram 1116, March 21, 10 p. m., to Paris (500.CC/3-2145), Acting Secretary Grew informed Ambassador Caffery that the French Embassy in Washington had been informed that the British were giving the French an opportunity to take the initiative in suggesting that these two nations adhere to the Declaration and that they be invited to San Francisco; the French Counselor (Lacoste) indicated on March 23 that the French Government desired to take the initiative in proposing that Syria and Lebanon be invited to the Conference (500.CC/3-2345). In telegram 69, March 23, 8 p. m., to Beirut, Acting Secretary Grew informed the Minister in Lebanon (Wadsworth) of a planned public announcement that an invitation was being extended to Syria and Lebanon to participate in the Conference and that the French Government took the initiative in proposing this move (500.CC/3-2345). For press releases of March 28 regarding the adherence of Syria and Lebanon to the Declaration by United Nations, see Department of State Bulletin, April 1, 1945, p. 575. The Minister in Lebanon was instructed in telegram 79, March 29, 3 p. m., to deliver immediately-to the Governments of Syria and Lebanon an invitation to the Conference (500.CC/3-2945).

Acting Secretary Grew informed Ambassador Winant in his telegram 1847, March 10, 1 p. m., that this Government perceived no objection to an invitation being extended to Syria and Lebanon (740.0011 EW 1939/3-1045). Approval by the Chinese and the Soviet Governments was reported in telegrams 404, March 11, noon, from Chungking (500.00/3-1145), and 782, March 16, 8 p. m., from Moscow (740.0011 EW 1939/3-1645). On March 16, Mr. Michael Wright, of the British Embassy, reported to the Department that the British Government favored admission of the Levant States to the United Nations and invitation to the Conference (500.00/3-1645).

San Francisco Conference of the present Polish Provisional Government in Moscow (reDeptel 2018, March 15, midnight) but might even be inclined to go further in taking a strong stand in that respect. A reply to the Embassy indicating general agreement but including certain suggestions as to detail is under consideration and will be delivered shortly.

4. Trusteeship: The first reaction of the official consulted was that the Foreign Office would doubtless agree to the inclusion of the French in these consultations (reDepts 2049, March 16, midnight) and also to their being conducted on a technical level with Washington as the site. He was doubtful, however, whether the pressure of work here and personnel limitations would permit the arrival of the British delegation until after the first week of April. He indicated that the British delegation might be headed by the Under Secretary of State for the colonies.

Dependent Peoples. I reported during my Staff Committee meeting of March 30 that President Roosevelt had agreed to review our statement on arrangements for international trusteeship within the next week or ten days, and I asked that Mr. Hiss have the statement ready to present to the President as soon as possible. Secretary Stimson phoned me later in the morning that he and I should get together to talk over the intricate problem of trusteeships. We agreed to meet with Secretary Forrestal in Stimson's office on Monday, April 2 at 11 a. m. This appointment was duly kept, and I took Assistant Secretary Dunn with me. By the time the Staff Committee met on April 6 I had to report a very serious difference of opinion among State, War and Navy Department officials regarding trusteeships. Both the War and Navy Departments were taking the position that the United States should announce it was going to keep the Pacific Islands which had been won during the campaigns against the Japanese.84 I advised the Committee that I was going to send a short memorandum to the President presenting both sides and pointing out the importance of my discussing it with the President and reaching a decision promptly.85

On April 7, President Roosevelt sent me for my information a letter from Secretary Ickes,86 who took the view that, while we should be "the administering power for the Japanese mandated Islands," we should not insist upon "complete sovereignty" because this would give an opening for the British—for example—to claim absolute title to areas in the Middle East which would injure our security interests as well as commercial interests involved in "our great stake in Middle Eastern oil". He felt also that we should reach at San Francisco "an agreement on the subjects of mandated territories and dependent areas".

Washington, March 19, 1945.

Sir: The Department of State Bulletin of February 18, 1945, in reproducing the report of the Crimea Conference, announced that an international conference would be called to meet at San Francisco on April 25, 1945, to prepare the charter of a general international organization to maintain peace and security. Also Latvia would have to live under this organization after peace and normal life are again restored in Europe. Thus it would be quite in order for Latvia also to participate in the elaboration of such a charter bearing on its future life. In almost all declarations issued in result of the con-meetings of April 2 and April 6, see memorandum by the Chief of the Division of Dependent Areas (Gerig), April 7, p. 204, and the extract from the Diary of Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., 8-14 April, p. 209.

See memorandum of April 5 by Secretary Ickes to President Roosevelt, p. 198.

Acting Secretary Grew informed the Secretary's Staff Committee on March 20 that the trusteeship matter had been discussed in the President's Cabinet and there had been agreement that there should be no annexation but de facto control over the Pacific Islands. For President Roosevelt's comments on trusteeship at a Cabinet meeting of March 9, see The Forrestal Diaries, p. 33; see also memorandum of the President's last press conference, April 5, post, p. 196.

Mr. Cootes stated in an attached memorandum: "In handing me the attached note, the Latvian Minister stated that he knew it would be difficult to comply with the request contained in his note but that he was sending this note to the Secretary as indication of his desire to do everything possible for the Latvian people." In a note of April 2, not printed, the Secretary acknowledged receipt of the Latvian note.

ferences of the great democratic powers it has always been emphasized that all peace loving nations, big and small, would freely participate in the post-war peace organization. Actually, it can be understood from the texts of these declarations that all peace loving countries would be welcomed into such an international peace and security organization.

Latvia has always been a peace loving country, and following the invitation expressed in Article 3 of the Declaration by United Nations, immediately on January 4, 1942, announced its willingness to ioin the United Nations.89 In this connection it offered them all possible assistance in winning the war and turned over to the United States Government all its merchant vessels in the Western Hemisphere. Those Latvian vessels that have not been sunk by German U-boats are still conveying goods for the United Nations. The Latvian nation has also conducted an underground struggle against the Nazi invaders under the guidance of the Latvian Central Underground Council.

Unfortunately, Latvia does not have a government in exile, as its legal President and the legal cabinet members were deported to the U.S.S.R. in 1940,00 and at present it is still occupied by foreign military forces. However, on the basis of the Emergency Powers issued to him by the legal Latvian Government, Mr. K. Zarine, Latvian Minister in London, has authorized me to participate in any international conference taking place in the Western Hemisphere.

Taking into consideration all the above facts, I have the honor to inform you that Latvia would be willing to participate in the San Francisco Conference in case it were invited to do so, and I would act as its legal representative.

On the transmittal chit of the British Embassy, Mr. Dunn wrote: "Answered orally by me March 22, 1945." According to an attached memorandum of March 22, by Mr. Raynor, Mr. Dunn's oral reply was along the lines of telegram 2234, March 23, noon, to London, p. 150.

connection with the San Francisco Conference. I have now received from the Soviet Ambassador in London <sup>92</sup> a personal message from him dated March 13 in which after informing me that he would lead the Soviet Delegation although its full composition had not yet been decided, he goes on to say "I take it that the Ukrainian Delegation and the Delegation from White Russia will be able to participate in the work of the Conference right from the start".

- 2. It is not clear whether this means that M. Molotov expects delegations of the two republics to take part automatically with the invited nations in the work of the Conference, or whether he is proposing that they should turn up in San Francisco in the expectation that the Conference will co-opt them at the outset of its work so that they can then take part in the proceedings.
- 3. The first alternative would be inconsistent with the wording of the English text paragraph 1 (2)<sup>93</sup> of the secret protocol of the Crimean Conference, although I am told that the Russian text might be read as slightly less conclusive on this point.
- 4. As regards the second alternative, we, for our part, contemplated that actual participation in the work of the Conference would be confined to delegations of those states which had formally been invited. The Russians from the first argued at the Crimean Conference that the Soviet Republics ought to be given "membership" then and there, but at the Fourth [Fifth] Plenary Meeting on February 8 President Roosevelt explained that there would be technical difficulty in including two republics amongst the states invited to attend the Conference, and Marshal Stalin agreed to the formula which was adopted by the Conference and formed the basis of paragraph 1 (2) of the secret protocol.
- 5. My inclination is to remind Molotov of the agreement reached at the Crimean Conference and to point out that it will be for the states invited to the Conference to approve the proposed membership of the two republics, who would then be able to take their full share in the work of the organisations at the first meeting of the general assembly.
- 6. But it looks as if the Soviet Government are determined to send representatives of the two republics to San Francisco and it would in any case be impossible to prevent individuals going as members of the Soviet Union Delegation. We cannot foretell at what stage in the Conference the claim of the two republics to membership would be granted, nor indeed can we assume that we can put this through the Conference as the idea will not appeal to many states. Assuming that membership were granted at a fairly early stage, the Conference could presumably decide whether or not representatives of the two republics could be allowed to take part in the remainder of its proceedings. I should not however propose to mention this in any reply to M. Molotov.

I talked to Ed Stettinius this morning over the telephone, 95 and he spoke of a matter which I think should be brought to your attention. It refers to the question of the two Soviet Republics being proposed for admission to initial membership in the International Organization with our support in accordance with the discussions at Yalta. It appears that this matter is known to quite a number of people, including some of the Press, and we know ourselves that the British and the Canadians here know of it and have no doubt spoken of it to their friends. In these circumstances it would seem highly advisable that you call together the American delegates to the Conference before you leave town,96 tell them the facts of the situation, and ask their advice as to how this matter should be dealt with. It would seem possible to tell the delegates that in order to accomplish other things of very great importance there seemed to be no reason why this minor request should not have been agreed to, and the delegates might also be informed that you are in possession of letters from both Marshal Stalin and Prime Minister Churchill 97 that, if so desired, the United States might also avail itself of an opportunity to arrange for additional representation by its outlying territories.98

It would seem advisable to inform the delegates because, if by any chance the story should break publicly, it might cause considerable embarrassment to the Government, and there is no telling of the effect it might have on some of the delegates, particularly if they had not been informed beforehand.

The Secretary was at his farm, "The Horseshoe".
 President Roosevelt was to go to Warm Springs, Georgia.

I have called a meeting of the delegates in my office at ten o'clock, Friday morning, March 23rd, and, if convenient to you, we could come to the White House for a very few minutes after the meeting here or at any time convenient to you. I do agree with Ed Stettinius that it would probably be most advisable to deal with this matter before you leave town Saturday evening.

The Secretary of State to the Polish Ambassador (Ciechanowski)

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Poland and has the honor to acknowledge the Embassy's note of March 11, 1945 concerning the fact that the Polish Government has not received an invitation to take part in the Conference which will be convened at San Francisco on April 25, 1945.

As the Embassy is aware, the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China agreed last month jointly to sponsor the Conference referred to in the Embassy's note under acknowledgment. The invitations to the Conference have been extended by agreement of all the sponsoring Governments. It will also be recalled that at the Crimea Conference the three participating powers agreed upon steps looking to the establishment of a new provisional Polish Government, pledged to the holding of free and unfettered elections as soon as possible on the basis of universal suffrage and secret ballot, which would be called the "Polish Provisional Government of National Unity".

Fully appreciating the importance of Polish representation at the San Francisco Conference, the United States Government earnestly hopes that it will be possible to establish the new Polish Provisional Government before the Conference is convened, and that the Governments sponsoring the Conference will agree to extend an invitation to it.

482. I have received a letter from Soong dated today March 22, in reply to my letter of March 19 which I handed him on that date and which was based on Department's circular of March 16, 9 a. m. [p. m.]: 1

"I am in receipt of your letter dated March 19, 1945 and beg to inform you that during the Dumbarton Oaks Conference three proposals were made by the Chinese delegation concerning (1) the settlement of international disputes according to law and justice (2) codification of international law and (3) educational and cultural cooperation, to which the American and British delegations both agreed.

The form in which these three proposals were finally phrased and endorsed by the American and British representatives at Dumbarton

Oaks will be found in the record of the discussions held.<sup>1a</sup>

The Chinese Government wishes to take this opportunity to request the Government of the United States to transmit, either on behalf of China alone or preferably jointly if this course meets with approval of the United States and British Governments the above proposals to all the governments invited to the San Francisco Conference with a view to having them embodied in the final charter of the new international organization.

As a co-sponsor of the United Nations Conference the Chinese Government does not wish to make additional comments on the Dumbarton Oaks proposals before the conference is convened."<sup>2</sup>

Conference. The British Government has suggested that in the event that the Committee should not complete its work prior to the opening of the Conference its deliberation should be continued at San Francisco.

Please bring this to the attention of the Foreign Office and emphasize the urgency of the matter. In view of the short time remaining before the opening of the Conference, it is essential that invitations be issued soon to enable representatives of governments at a distance from Washington to arrive in time for the meeting.

MEMORANDUM

On the 9th of March the Soviet Government approached the United States Government on the question of inviting Poland to the International Conference at San Francisco. In this connection, the Soviet Government expressed its opinion that if, in view of the complexity of the question, the reorganization of the Polish Provisional Government is not accomplished in the near future, the representatives of the presently functioning Polish Provisional Government in Warsaw, which is exercising authority throughout the entire territory of Poland and enjoys the support of the Polish people, should be invited to the Conference at San Francisco.

Up to the present time the Soviet Government has not received an answer concerning this question. Nevertheless, on the 15th of March Mr. Stettinius made, at a press conference in Washington, a statement <sup>7</sup> which is understood to mean that Poland will be represented at the Conference at San Francisco only in the event that a reorganization of the Polish Provisional Government is realized before the Conference. Such a statement, published in the entire press, regarding a still absent answer to the proposal of the Soviet Government of March 9th, creates a situation with which the Soviet Government is not able to reconcile itself.

At present, the Soviet Government declares that it awaits a prompt reply to the proposal it has made regarding the inviting of Poland

[Washington,] March 23, 1945.

The Soviet Ambassador called at my home last evening at 8:30 at his request and left with me the appended memorandum s repeating the former request of the Soviet Government that Poland be invited to attend the San Francisco Conference.

I asked the Ambassador whether this memorandum was being likewise delivered to the other sponsoring powers, Great Britain and China. Mr. Gromyko said that he did not know.

I said that we would give full consideration to this memorandum but in the meantime I wished to say, in a purely informal way, that I thought it would be difficult to invite Poland to attend the conference until the proposed unified government had been set up. As things stand at present, Soviet Russia recognizes the Lublin Government while we recognize the Government in London, and it seems obvious that the establishment of the unified government should precede the issuance of invitations.

RELATION OF PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS TO THE CONFERENCE

THE ACTING SECRETARY opened the meeting by stating that Mr. Stettinius had asked him to call this special meeting to discuss an important question that had arisen in connection with the San Francisco Conference. . . .

THE ACTING SECRETARY said that the point to be taken up at the Secretary's request concerned the relation of private organizations and groups in this country to the San Francisco Conference. In this connection two documents were distributed: Draft of Letter to be Sent to Various Private National Organizations and a list entitled Private National Organizations.<sup>10</sup>

THE ACTING SECRETARY pointed out that a great number of private organizations and groups want to be represented in San Francisco and that there were good reasons why many of them should be there. However, it was felt to be unfortunate to overload the official Delegation with such representatives, although the possibility had been considered of recognizing official representatives of a number of these organizations as official advisers to the Delegation. If this plan were adopted, however, the Delegation would reach tremendous proportions.

THE ACTING SECRETARY stated that the thought in the Department now was that each organization named on the list of private national organizations would send one representative to San Francisco to be there for consultation as this might prove desirable. These representatives would not be official members of the American Delegation, but a full system of liaison would be set up to keep them closely in touch with the progress of the work. The representatives would be consulted from time to time as appropriate.

Senator Vandenberg urged that, if proper emphasis was put upon the fact that the United Nations Conference at San Francisco was to be a "peace-keeping" show and not a "peace-making" show, then a large number of organizations seeking representation would not be interested. Representative Eaton agreed that a clear statement of what the Conference was to do would alleviate the situation.

THE ACTING SECRETARY asked Mr. Hiss to note that a statement along the lines suggested by Senator Vandenberg and Representative Eaton should be prepared.

At this point the meeting was adjourned to enable the Delegates to go to the White House.<sup>11</sup>

THE ACTING SECRETARY asked Mr. MacLeish if he would be responsible for drafting the statement under discussion. Mr. MacLeish asked whether the decision taken by the Delegates implied that the number of official advisers would be increased. There was general agreement that this was not implied. Mr. MacLeish stated that he had one thing further in mind which he thought should be emphasized:

the people of this country, indeed the people of the world had been invited to discuss the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and think about them. The statement that was now to be drawn up, he felt, should not discourage them in any way from continuing to discuss and to think about the Proposals, nor should it play down the San Francisco Conference. In a real sense, he said, that Conference was the people's show. We would have to give the impression that they could come to it yet not invite them—a difficult thing to do.

Senator Connally added that the statement should stress the impracticality of delegates conferring with large numbers of representatives due to their heavy duties and schedules. Representative Bloom agreed that the statement should not play up the role of the people at the Conference at the expense of the Delegates so that the Delegates would be unable to perform their primary responsibilities at San Francisco.

The meeting was adjourned by the Acting Secretary at 12:30 p.m.

2234. Gromyko recently called on Mr. Dunn <sup>13</sup> and informed him that the Soviets were planning, in addition to their general delegation, to send delegations to San Francisco representing White Russia and the Ukraine. Mr. Dunn expressed surprise at this telling the Ambassador that it did not follow the decisions reached at Yalta as he understood them but as he had not been there he would refer the whole matter to the Secretary.

The Secretary felt strongly that this was not in accordance with the decisions reached at the Crimea and after talking this matter over with the President,<sup>14</sup> who also concurred, called Gromyko in <sup>15</sup> and told him very definitely that this went beyond the Yalta decision and was entirely inconsistent with our understanding of it. The Secretary told the Ambassador that he was basing his remarks on our records of that Conference and that he was speaking for the President as well as himself. The Secretary asked Gromyko to inform his Government of our feeling in this matter which the Ambassador promised to do at once. The Secretary gained the impression in his discussion with the Ambassador that he may not have been requested by his Government to take this up officially with us but that point is not certain.

For your own secret information what we did agree to at Yalta was that if the Soviets should raise at San Francisco the question of these two republics becoming initial members of the organization that we would support such a proposal. The British agreed to do likewise. The question of the two republics being represented at San Francisco was actually discussed at the Conference and a negative decision reached.16

Mr. Stettinius telephoned me this afternoon and asked me to request your authorization for a short statement along the following lines to be used in the event that some announcement is made or that the news breaks in some other way on the subject of the representation of the two Soviet Republics in the International Organization.

At the Crimean Conference the Soviet Government stated that they intended to propose at the San Francisco Conference that the two Soviet Republics which had suffered most in the war, the Ukraine and White Russia, should be included among the list of original members of the Assembly when the Organization was established. It was agreed at the Conference that Great Britain and the United States would support this proposal. This is a matter for the nations convened at San Francisco to decide.<sup>20</sup>

Washington, March 23, 1945—midnight.

2267. The Department has received from the League of Nations, the Permanent Court of International Justice, the International Labor Organization, the Interim Commission on Food and Agriculture, and the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration requests that they be invited to send representatives to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco. All these are inter-governmental organizations. There have also been formal and informal inquiries from non-governmental international organizations.

We believe that a clear distinction should be drawn between intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental international organizations. The latter should not be invited or encouraged to send representatives, but no obstacles would be placed in the way of their voluntarily sending representatives to San Francisco.

As regards inter-governmental organizations, the Department would appreciate being advised whether the other sponsoring governments would have any objection to this Government making arrangements for unofficial representation at San Francisco of the abovenamed organizations. Such representation would be limited to not more than two or three persons for each organization. These are organizations which will eventually be liquidated or modified as a result of the creation of the proposed United Nations organization or which may be brought into formal or informal relationship with the new organization.

Please take this matter up with the Foreign Minister and inform the Department as promptly as possible of his views concerning this matter.

214. Ambassador Gromyko has just informed the State Department of the composition of the Soviet delegation to the San Francisco Conference. While we have the highest regard for Ambassador Gromyko's character and capabilities and know that he would ably represent his country, I cannot help being deeply disappointed that Mr. Molotov apparently does not plan to attend. Recalling the friendly and fruitful cooperation at Yalta between Mr. Molotov, Mr. Eden, and Mr. Stettinius, I know the Secretary of State has been looking forward to continuing the joint work in the same spirit at San Francisco for the eventual realization of our mutual goal, the establishment of an effective international organization to insure a secure and peaceful future for the world.

Without the presence of Mr. Molotov the Conference will be deprived of a very great asset. If his pressing and heavy responsibilities in the Soviet Union make it impossible for him to stay for the entire Conference, I very much hope that you will find it possible to let him come at least for the vital opening sessions. Since all sponsoring powers and the majority of other countries attending will be represented by their Ministers of Foreign Affairs, I am afraid that Mr. Molotov's absence will be construed all over the world as a lack of comparable interest on the part of the Soviet Government in the great objectives of this Conference.

lines with regard to certain questions of organization and procedure at the San Francisco Conference:

1. Conference Structure

The Conference would meet initially in plenary session during which the organization of the Conference would be determined. We believe that it would be desirable for the Conference to resolve itself into four or five principal commissions.

The Commissions would agree upon their own agenda and such general discussions as might be desirable after which they would resolve themselves into committees, totaling probably ten or twelve, and such subcommittees as may be deemed necessary. As is customary most of the discussion and drafting would take place in the committees and subcommittees.

2. Officers and Standing Committees of the Conference

It is believed that the officers of the Conference, including those of the commissions and committees should be selected on as widely representative basis as possible.

Determinations of policy and decisions on matters of special importance relating to Conference arrangements might be entrusted to a Steering Committee composed of the Chairmen of the delegations. There might be established also an Executive Committee of probably eleven members.

3. Information Policy

In answer to numerous inquiries this Government has indicated publicly its confidence that the Conference will adopt a liberal information policy.<sup>30</sup> We have expressed the view that the plenary sessions and the meetings of the full commissions should be open to representatives of the press and to the members of the public so far as space will permit. This is the policy followed successfully at recent international conferences.

It is anticipated that the Conference will have a Press Office staffed by experienced press relations officials and assisted by representatives of the delegations.

Considering such factors as are now known this Government is formulating its plans on the basis that the Conference will be in session from four to eight weeks.

Please emphasize to the government to which you are accredited that the foregoing observations are of a tentative character and that the Government of the United States will welcome any comments which the other participating governments may wish to offer.

The Soviet Ambassador (Gromyko) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] March 25, 1945.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: In accordance with instructions of the Soviet Government I request you to bring the following to the attention of the Government of the United States of America.

The Crimea Conference took a decision regarding the calling of a conference on April 25, 1945 at San Francisco for the creation of a world international organization for the maintenance of international peace and security. It is fully evident, that the states participating in the conference at San Francisco will appear as charter members of the new organization.

In accordance with the proposal of the Soviet Government, the Crimea Conference took the following decision:

"When the conference on a world organization takes place, the delegates of the United Kingdom and the United States will support a proposal for the admission to charter membership of two Soviet Socialist Republics, namely, the Ukrainian and the White Russian." <sup>32</sup>

This decision leaves no doubt that the question of the admission of the Ukraine and White Russia to charter membership should be raised at one of the first sessions of the conference at San Francisco and that, after the favorable vote of the conference, the representatives of these two republics should be guaranteed full participation in the proceedings of the conference mentioned, in the category of charter members of the world international security organization. viet Government does not see any necessity to repeat here the arguments set forth by it in support of the above mentioned decision at the Crimea Conference; however, it considers it opportune to recall the statement of Mr. Churchill at the Crimean deliberations 33 to the effect that it is illogical to invite to the conference at San Francisco all the small countries, which have contributed almost nothing toward victory and only at the last moment have declared war, and, at the same time, withhold an invitation to the two Soviet republics which have made such great sacrifices in the struggle with Germany.

It follows from the above that the Soviet Government cannot agree with the interpretation of the decisions of the Crimea Conference which is given by the Government of the United States of America, namely, that the Ukraine and White Russia should not participate in the conference at San Francisco and that only after the San Francisco Conference, when a suitable decision will be taken, will they be able to participate in the Assembly of the organization.

The Soviet Government insists that in conformity with the decision of the Crimea Conference, the Soviet Ukraine and the Soviet White Russia be guaranteed participation in the Conference at San Francisco as charter members.

London, March 26, 1945—7 p. m. [Received 10: 50 p. m.]

Regarding the Department's proposed instruction to Harriman, Eden feels that the draft instruction as outlined in the Department's 2018, March 15, midnight, should meet the case very well with the one exception that it is his view that our inability to invite the Warsaw Government flows as a matter of principle from our general attitude toward it and he therefore suggests the omission of that part of the first sentence of the second paragraph of the Department's telegram 2018 reading "as we believe that . . . at the Crimea Conference".

Eden confirms that the Foreign Office received a communication from the Soviet Ambassador here similar to that delivered to the Department and he tells me that the Soviet Ambassador was left in little doubt that the British would not agree to the suggestion of the Soviet Government.

Eden adds that he now proposes sending the Soviet Ambassador a formal reply to the effect that His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom agree that Polish representation at San Francisco is most important but that in their opinion this could only be accomplished by a united Polish Government formed in accordance with the decision reached at the Crimea Conference. It is therefore hoped that such a government may be formed in time to send representatives to the Conference. The note will add that His Majesty's Government could not in any circumstances agree to extending an invitation to the present Provisional Government in Warsaw since the policy agreed upon in the Crimea would be thereby stultified. It will also be stated that no analogy is perceived between the position of Poland, which at the present time has two rival governments disputing for recognition, and the position of the other governments to which reference was made in the Soviet Government's communication.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I have the honor to transmit the following message addressed by the President of the Republic of China to the President of the United States:

"I am grateful to you for the suggestion contained in your telegram of March 15th 36 which reached me through your embassy on March 22nd, to made [make] our Delegation to San Francisco as representative as possible. The Government has today appointed a delegation of ten, of whom six are members of the People's Political Council. Washington, March 27, 1945—noon.

1192. Please consult Bidault immediately regarding French participation in preliminary conversations on trusteeship questions to be conducted within the terms of reference agreed on at Yalta, namely, that only machinery and principles should be formulated now for inclusion in San Francisco Charter leaving for subsequent agreement which territories within the specified categories will actually be placed under trusteeship but that no discussion of specific territories will take place during preliminary conversations or at the Conference.

Department's hope is that the preliminary conversations with five governments participating, should be held in Washington early in April probably around the eighth.

You might make known that British, Soviet, and Chinese have indicated readiness to participate. British sending Under Secretary for Colonies,38 and Chinese sending Wellington Koo. Soviet representatives undetermined.

Should French Government raise question referred to in your despatch no. 1148 30 to effect that it feels unable to take position before having complete information on nature and methods of application of proposed trusteeship system you might reply that it is precisely this question which is the subject for consideration at the preliminary conversations.40 We hope have papers ready shortly prior to conversations and understand British may also.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Leo Pasvolsky, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

On instruction from London, Mr. Makins 41 raised with me the question of how the subject of the liquidation of the League would be handled at the San Francisco Conference. He asked for our reaction to the possibility that the Conference might wish to adopt a resolution on the subject, and inquired whether it would be possible for the British Government to make a suggestion to us on this subject. That suggestion, in effect, would be that prior consultation on this matter take place in Washington before the Conference opens.

I said to Mr. Makins that the British Government was, of course, free to make any suggestions, and that we would be glad to give it careful consideration. Speaking informally I said that our thought has been that the problem of the liquidation of the League is one that concerns primarily the members of the League, and that it was difficult for me to see how the Conference itself could adopt a resolution on this subject. I said that I could visualize the possibility that those governments participating in the Conference which are also members of the League might wish to issue some sort of pronouncement in their name and that the only matter which might concern the Conference as a whole might be some statement or some provision authorizing the new organization, when established, to negotiate with the League.

Mr. Makins said he would report to the Ambassador, and he thought that the British Government would wish to make their suggestions in writing.

MEMORANDUM

It is recommended that at the San Francisco Conference the four inviting powers should retain their character as sponsoring governments in the presentation of suggestions and recommendations which they may individually or severally have to bring before the Conference. This will make for a more orderly procedure and avoid the appearance of lack of support by the sponsoring governments of the agreements already reached.

Such a procedure would be in keeping with the spirit which has enabled the principal United Nations to act in agreement on the many basic and fundamental questions represented by the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

In order to implement this procedure it is proposed that the four sponsoring governments should agree among themselves that any substantial changes which any of them may have to suggest to the Conference should only be brought forward after consultation among the four governments.

This should not be construed, however, in a restrictive sense. Each government should be free, in the course of commission or committee discussions, to make recommendations and suggestions designed to improve the charter so long as they are within the framework of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Moreover, each government would obviously have the right, in the course of such discussions, to comment without prior consultation on proposals or suggestions which may be advanced by other participating governments.

Washington, March 29, 1945.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of March 25 in which you reiterate the request of your Government that delegations representing the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the White Russian Soviet Socialist Republic participate in the discussions at San Francisco once these republics have been accepted by the Conference as original members of the new organization.

I should like again to set forth the understanding of the United States Government of the obligations which it assumed on this point under the Crimean decisions. As clearly stated in the agreed Protocol of the proceedings of the Conference the United States Government agreed to support at the San Francisco Conference the proposal that these two Soviet republics be admitted to initial membership of the world organization when that organization was established but no obligation whatsoever was assumed in regard to the question of the presence of representatives of these republics at San Francisco. This specific question was not raised by the Soviet delegation at the Crimean Conference. Except for the personal observation of Mr. Churchill referred to in your note, this question was not taken up in the general discussion or in connection with the definite list of countries to be invited to the Conference.

Furthermore, it must be pointed out that it remains for the Conference to decide whether to accept the Soviet proposal which the United States and British Governments have agreed to support concerning the admission of these two republics as initial members of the proposed organization. Pending the decision of the Conference on this point there would appear to be no grounds at this stage for raising the question of the representation of the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics at the Conference itself.44

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The Government of the United States welcomes and fully shares the views of the Soviet Government with respect to the importance of Poland's being represented at the San Francisco Conference and is happy to agree to the extension of an invitation for participation therein to the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity as soon as it is formed in accordance with the Crimean decisions. It is hoped, therefore, that the Commission composed of American, British, and Soviet members, which is now seeking at Moscow to achieve the broad democratic basis for the government specified by the decisions of the Crimea Conference, and the transfer of the government to be constituted and to send representatives to San Francisco.

While most careful consideration has been given to the opinion expressed by the Soviet Government in its Memoranda of March 9 and March 22 to the effect that if, in view of the complexity of the question, it is impossible to form in the near future the new government, representatives of the Provisional Polish Government now functioning at Warsaw be invited to attend the Conference at San Francisco, the American Government finds itself unable to agree to the extension of such an invitation, since representation by the present Provisional Polish Government now functioning in Warsaw would not be in harmony with and might in fact conflict with the decisions of the Crimea Conference. Thus representation by Poland at San Francisco should in the opinion of the American Government be reserved for the Provisional Polish Government of National Unity agreed upon at Yalta rather than be accorded to one of the groups from which the new government is to be formed.

It is further the opinion of the American Government that the desire mutually shared by the American and Soviet Governments to have Poland represented at San Francisco should serve as an additional and potent reason for the Commission at Moscow to expedite its present deliberations. However, in the event that the formation of the new government can only be completed after the opening of the San Francisco Conference, the American Government is prepared to consider sending the new government an invitation while the conference is in session.

"Marshal Stalin to President, 27 March.

We extremely value and attach great importance to the forthcoming Conference at San Francisco, called to found the international organization of peace and security for peoples but circumstances have developed in such a way that Mr. V. M. Molotov, really, is not able to participate in the Conference. I and Mr. Molotov regret it extremely but the convening, on request of the deputies of the Supreme Soviet, in April, of a session of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR where the presence of Mr. Molotov is absolutely necessary, is excluding the possibility of his participation even in the first meetings of the Conference.

You also know that Ambassador Gromyko has quite successfully accomplished his task in Dumbarton Oaks and we are confident that he will with great success head the Soviet delegation in San Francisco.

As regards various interpretations, you understand, this cannot determine the decisions which are to be made."

The British Ambassador tells me that on a call on Vyshinski on other matters he mentioned to Vyshinski that it was his personal opinion that the Soviets were making a mistake in not having Molotov go to the San Francisco Conference. Vyshinski, with whom it is usually possible to discuss frankly almost anything, flared up and told Clark Kerr that it was a mistake for Clark Kerr to have mentioned the subject as it was entirely the affair of the Soviet Government who represented them at San Francisco.

I am reporting this unusual incident as it, taken with other evidence, may shed light on the Soviet attitude towards the San Francisco Conference.

Memorandum by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State for White House Liaison, of a Meeting at the White House, Thursday, March 29, 1945, 11:45 a.m.

Present: The President, Secretary of State, Mr. Grew, Mr. Mac-Leish, Mr. Dunn, Mr. Bohlen, and Admiral Leahy

1. Issuance of Statement Regarding two Soviet Republics

The Secretary told the President that the news of the Yalta agreement concerning the two Soviet republics had been published and that in order to avoid dangerous and misleading interpretations it was his advice that some statement should be issued. He said that Mr. MacLeish had some clear ideas on the subject and he would ask him to tell the President about them. Mr. MacLeish then briefly outlined the short statement which he had in mind, namely, that the Soviets had raised the question at Yalta and announced their intention to propose at San Francisco the admission of these two republics as initial members of the organization and that the British and American representatives had signified their willingness to support this proposal. The final decision, however, on this complicated question would be made by the Conference. The President authorized Mr. MacLeish to work with Mr. Daniels 49 in drawing up the proposed statement to be shown to him before issuance.

2. The President's Plans in regard to the San Francisco Conference

The President said he had been thinking over the question of the best time for him to come to San Francisco—whether at the beginning to open the Conference, at the end, or at some other time. He said, that Mr. Early had suggested that if the Conference ran into real difficulties it would be quite dramatic for him to go out there and "wave the magic wand". The President said, however, that he was dubious of this proposal since there was no certainty that he would be able to "wave the magic wand" and resolve the difficulties. He asked the Secretary's advice on this point. The Secretary's reply was that in his opinion it would be preferable for the President to come out and open the Conference and welcome the delegates to the United States. The President said he agreed with this and said he thought he would do just that.<sup>50</sup> He said that his present plans were to return from Warm Springs sometime around the middle of April and leave for San Francisco on the 20th. He said he had splendid accommodations fixed up for him at Oakland and he would remain on his private car and only leave it to go to the Conference and make his address. He added that he thought in his speech he would draw on history and would recount the words of the New York Convention in ratifying the Constitution. He said the wording of the ratification expressed "full faith and confidence that the Constitution would be amended to include a bill of rights". He said he thought he would use this as an analogy in addressing the Conference and point out how it had been necessary to change the United States Constitution from time to time and that the world charter which the Conference was called upon to draw up could likewise be changed and improved, but that the main thing was to get it started and let it develop. At the Secretary's suggestion the President asked Mr. MacLeish to prepare the first draft of a fifteen minute speech for him and send it down to Warm Springs. Mr. MacLeish then left to work out with Mr. Daniels the proposed statement on the two Soviet republics.

3. List of Consultants to San Francisco Conference

The Secretary explained to the President that numerous requests were being received from various American organizations that their representatives should participate in the San Francisco Conference. He said that after most careful study the Department had drawn up a list of organizations which could send one man each to San Francisco in a completely unofficial capacity as consultants or observers. These representatives would have no connection with the United States delegation which would be the only body authorized to speak for the United States but would have an opportunity to present their views to the United States delegation. He said that several Congressional members of the delegation thought that even this arrangement would make for a great deal of complication but were prepared to accept it if the President approved. The President went over the list and asked a number of questions about the organizations listed and inquired whether their representatives would have the right to appear before and participate in committees. The Secretary said they would not have this right and could only express their views to the United States delegation. Mr. Grew explained that a special liaison office would be set up for this purpose. The President approved the list submitted by the Secretary and the general procedure outlined and asked that he be furnished the names of those representatives of the other Government departments who had been designated as observers. In reply to the question as to whether he had told Rabbi Wise that the Zionist organizations could send representatives the President said that he thought they would have the same right as anybody else.

 $<sup>^{51}</sup>$  President Roosevelt was informed by the Secretary in a memorandum of April 7 that Mr. MacLeish would have a draft speech ready by April 12 and would send it to him promptly (500.CC/4-645).

4. Messages to the Prime Minister

The Secretary then put before the President the draft of the two messages to the Prime Minister <sup>52</sup> which the President read with close attention and asked a number of questions on various points. He finally approved and signed both messages without change. (Mr. Bohlen has copies of these messages which he is holding for the Secretary.)

Minutes of the Third Meeting of the United States Delegation, Held at Washington, Friday, March 30, 1945, 11 a.m.

[Informal Notes-Extracts]

The Secretary opened the meeting by stating that there were many who did not like the recent development connected with the Soviet proposal for representation of certain Soviet republics in the General Assembly. He pointed out, however, that the President was faced with a leak and that it had been necessary to release the information at this time. He urged that the Delegation go forward and use its wits and its courage to find answers for the difficult problems that had to be faced. He indicated that he was prepared to have a frank conversation with respect to any matter that the delegates wished to discuss.

Senator Vandenberg asked if there were any further unexpected disclosures to come. The Secretary replied that there were none, except that there were certain military matters about which he was not free to speak. Representative Eaton asked if agreement had been reached at Yalta to hand over the control of German education to the Soviets. The Secretary replied in the negative and Mr. Hiss concurred.

Senator Connally said that the most serious criticism of the White House statement would be in terms of its timing, but that he did not feel that he could complain at the position taken in that statement. Senator Vandenberg said that he was not complaining, but he wondered whether this revelation meant the reopening of other aspects of the proposals.

THE SECRETARY assured Senator Vandenberg that there was nothing agreed to at Yalta in connection with the general international organization that the Senator did not now know. He asked Mr. Hiss if this statement was accurate. Mr. Hiss replied in the affirmative. The Secretary added that the reason that the President had felt that this matter should not be previously disclosed was his desire, if possible, to have further discussions with the Soviets that might possibly lead to a modification of their position. Reprenstative Bloom indicated that he had been somewhat embarrassed by not having been kept fully informed on this subject. Senator Connally said the matter came down to a question of timing and that the President could not be justifiably criticized for having made this announcement. Senator VANDENBERG indicated that he disagreed with the position taken in the White House statement but that he did not think it was worth while arguing about it at this time. He noted that in talking with the President on this matter the President had left the impression that, while the President was himself personally committed to the position, the Delegation itself was not bound.

THE SECRETARY explained that he hoped the Delegation would make a recommendation to the President as to how to dispose of this problem. Since the President would be away for a short time he thought it would be particularly appropriate for the Delegation to struggle with this question now.

Senator Vandenberg remarked that he wanted it clearly understood that he was in accord with the Secretary's initial statement that nothing should be allowed to interfere with the final result of establishing the organization. He was merely trying to point out, he said, that a little more candor would be very helpful.

Senator Connally said that it was essential for the Delegation to act as a unit when it went to San Francisco and that the delegates would have to hang together. Senator Vandenberg noted that each individual still retained his own vote on the Delegation. Senator Connally replied that what he had in mind was that it would not be wise for members of the Delegation to throw monkey wrenches into the works before the Delegation had had time to formulate its own views.

THE SECRETARY reassured the members of the Delegation that there was nothing that they did not know, nothing that had been left in the closet, except, as he had said, certain military decisions which he could not discuss.

Senator Vandenberg stated that, while it was possible to gloss over this whole matter, he believed that the public reaction would be serious and that the newspapers in particular would inquire why this decision was not announced in connection with the other Yalta decisions. The Secretary agreed that the public reaction would be adverse.

Representative Eaton indicated that he seriously questioned the basic nature of the Proposals under contemplation. He felt that we were now engaged in slaughtering thousands of men and expending billions of dollars in an attempt to destroy the enemy only to be coming out with a plan for the domination of the world. He felt convinced that the substance of the plan for world organization was the domination of the world by four or five of the great states. He indicated that he would prefer to try to lay the firm foundations for the peace after the necessary adjustments had been made to settle the issues of the war.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON thought the justification for the United States having three votes on the grounds that Great Britain had six votes was fallacious. He said that the Dominions had declared war for themselves, would terminate their part in the war as they saw fit, now sent their own ambassadors, and were in fact free and independent nations.

Representative Bloom asked whether the President himself was actually in favor of the 3-3-6 formula. The Secretary replied that the President's position is that, if Russia insists on three representatives and the Conference accepts this position, then he would insist upon three votes for the United States. Senator Vandenberg thought that the tenor of the anouncement was that this Government was now committed to the Soviet proposal. The Secretary replied that the decision was left up to the Conference itself. Senator Vandenberg felt that this should have been made clearer in the announcement. The Secretary then asked Mr. MacLeish to read the White House statement.<sup>53</sup> Mr. MacLeish read as follows:

"Soviet representatives at the Yalta Conference indicated their desire to raise at the San Francisco Conference of the United Nations, the question of representation for the Ukrainian Soviet Republic and the White Russian Soviet Republic in the assembly of the proposed United Nations organization.

"The American and British representatives at the Yalta Conference were requested by the Soviet representatives to support this proposal when submitted to the conference of the United Nations at San Francisco. They agreed to do so, but the American representatives stated that if the United Nations organization agreed to let the Soviet republics have three votes, the United States would ask for three votes also.

"The British and Soviet representative stated that they would have no objection to the United States and its possessions having three votes in the Assembly if it is so desired.

"These conversations at Yalta related to the submission of a question to the San Francisco conference where the ultimate decision will be made."

THE SECRETARY noted that the statement emphasized that the matter was open for decision by the Conference.

 $<sup>^{53}</sup>$  Press release issued by the White House, March 29; see Department of State  $Bulletin,\ April\ 1,\ 1945,\ p.\ 530.$

THE SECRETARY announced that he had a number of important matters to raise at this meeting and that he thought discussion should now turn to them.

1. President To Open Conference

THE SECRETARY explained that he had discussed with the President the President's plans with regard to the Conference and that the President had said that he would do anything that we felt was the proper thing to do. . . .

It was generally agreed that announcement should be made that the President would open the Conference and that the question of his closing the Conference would be left open.

2. List of Advisers

THE SECRETARY reported that he had talked over with the President the list of advisers for the United States Delegation. A copy of the List of Advisers (March 29, 1945 54) was distributed to each member. . . .

3. Unofficial Observers From National Organizations

A classified List of Private National Organizations was then distributed to the members.

THE SECRETARY said that he had talked over with the President the whole question of representation of national organizations at San Francisco and that, while the President realized the difficulties of the plan previously suggested by the Department, he had felt it would do considerable harm if no recognition was given to the leading national organizations. The President favored limiting the list to about 30 organizations and allowing each of these organizations to send one representative. Of course each organization would pay the expenses of their representative. There would be a liaison office to facilitate communication with these representatives, and they would be free to attend the plenary sessions and the commission meetings, but they would not be listed as advisers.

4. Assignment of Members of the Delegation to Commissions

THE SECRETARY stated that one further matter that he thought should be discussed at this meeting was the tentative assignment of delegates to the several commissions of the Conference. A list entitled Tentative Assignment of Delegates 55 was then distributed to the members. . . .

THE SECRETARY asked whether it would not be well to designate one representative from the Delegation to be the spokesman on each commission. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that the real work would be done in the committees since the commissions would be open to the public and that it would be vitally important to assure at all times that a delegate from the United States was present at any meeting of a committee. He added that, if one member of the Delegation was designated to act as spokesman of each commission then the other delegates would serve as alternates, but that he thought it was most important to designate a spokesman for each committee. Senator Connally wondered if what the Secretary had in mind was the designation of a chairman from the Delegation for each commission. The Secretary agreed with this interpretation. Representative Bloom said he assumed that, if a delegate assigned as spokesman to a committee was unable to attend, a substitute would be appointed. Mr. Acheson replied in the affirmative.

It was then generally agreed to postpone a decision on the assignment of members of the Delegation to the several commissions until the Tuesday meeting.<sup>56</sup>

5. Secretary's Statement at Press Conference Concerning Proposal for Representation of Certain Soviet Republics in the General Assembly

THE SECRETARY announced that he would have to proceed immediately to a press conference at which he would be asked questions concerning the Soviet proposal for the representation of certain Soviet republics in the General Assembly. He asked the members of the Delegation what they would think of the following statement that had been prepared:

"I have nothing further to add to the White House statement of yesterday on the Soviet proposal with reference to representation of certain Soviet republics in the General Assembly of the proposed United Nations Organization, except to point out: That the United States representatives at Yalta reserved to the United States Delegation at San Francisco the right to raise the question of United States representation in the General Assembly, should the issue of increased representation in the Assembly be presented to the Conference and should the United States Delegation wish to exercise that right. The Dumbarton Oaks Proposals remain, of course, as stated in the invitation, the basis for the work of the San Francisco Conference."

Senator Vandenberg and Mr. Dunn agreed that this statement might only accentuate the adverse reaction. The Secretary suggested that in place of this statement he might simply say that the matter had been discussed with the Delegation and was under consideration. Senator Vandenberg said that when the President had talked to them about this Soviet proposal he had left the impression that the Delegation was not committed to it. He had said that if he were there he would vote for the proposal, but that the impression was left that the delegates were free agents and that he even wanted them to act as free agents.

THE SECRETARY stated that it was now the responsibility of the delegates to be as resourceful as possible in seeing that this hurdle was surmounted before the San Francisco Conference.

THE SECRETARY thought that it might be wisest to "duck" the matter in the forthcoming press conference. Senator Connally agreed that the more that was now said in the paper the more the disturbance would be accentuated. He advised the Secretary to emphasize that the matter was left entirely to the discretion of the Conference and that its solution would depend upon future developments. THE SECRETARY thought he might say simply that the President had made a statement on this matter and that he had nothing at the moment to add to this statement. Senator Vandenberg urged that he go one step further and indicate that the matter was open for decision at the Conference. Mr. Hackworth suggested that the Secretary state that the question of Soviet representation was open for decision at the Conference, but that the question as to whether the United States would also ask for three representatives was up to the delegates to decide.

Mr. Acheson asked the Secretary whether the American Delegation was free or not free to make its decision on this question. The Secretary replied that, as the statement said, the American representatives had agreed at Yalta that if the Russians proposed representation for three Soviet republics in the General Assembly the President would support the proposal, but that if the Conference accepted the Soviet proposal then we would insist on three votes for ourselves. Mr. Acheson thought the Delegation was then free to decide whether it wished to insist on three representatives. Senator Connally added that he did not believe the President would withdraw from his commitment.

It was then generally agreed that the Secretary should quote directly from the statement by the President that the ultimate decision was to be made by the Conference.<sup>57</sup>

The British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Secretary of State

Washington, March 30, 1945.

Sir: I have the honour, on instructions from His Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to communicate to you herewith a summary of a report by the Committee of officials set up in London to study the problems which will arise when it becomes necessary to wind up the League of Nations.<sup>63</sup>

2. I am to explain that His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom wish to avoid any confusion resulting from the simultaneous existence of the League and the new World Organisation and they are anxious to arrange for the formal dissolution of the League as speedily as possible after the San Francisco Conference.

- 3. While there is no question of the League as such continuing in any form there are certain technical services, experienced international officials and valuable records which might with advantage be taken over by the new Organisation. Similarly the new Organisation might with advantage take over the financial assets and liabilities of the League, which is in a sound financial position.
- 4. His Majesty's Government do not favour any arrangement whereby the new Organisation would be committed to take over all existing League functions, assets, and liabilities. It would be for the new Organisation to decide what it was proposed to take.
- 5. In order to facilitate progress, His Majesty's Government earnestly hope that the convening Governments will agree that a resolution should be presented to the San Francisco Conference indicating willingness to take over certain non-political functions, assets and liabilities of the League, on terms to be agreed; and appointing a committee to negotiate with the League on these matters.
- 6. You will observe that the Report does not deal with the Permanent Court, the International Labour Office, or the Permanent Mandates Commission, all of which call for separate examination.
- 7. A similar communication is being made to the other convening Governments, and also to the French Provisional Government.

I have [etc.] Halifax

[Enclosure]

SUMMARY OF REPORT

- 1. The establishment of the new World Organisation will involve the disappearance of the League of Nations, but this result will not be produced automatically. Some formal step will be necessary.
- 2. It is desirable that useful non-political functions of the League (together with experienced staff and records) should be transferred to the new World Organisation where this seems advantageous to the new Organisation.
- 3. Some arrangement must be made to wind up the finances of the League, which has certain assets and liabilities which it may be desirable to transfer to the new Organisation.
  - 4. The Committee make the following recommendations:—
- (i) The League should be wound up in a dignified and orderly manner as soon as possible after the formal establishment of the new World Organisation. The initiative with regard to the transfer of such functions, assets and liabilities as it is agreed should be taken over should come from the new World Organisation. The necessary arrangements for transfer should be made as far as possible during the period before the new World Organisation is fully established.
- (ii) It is desirable that the non-political activities of the League which are still being continued on a reduced scale should be maintained until the new Organisation is in a position to take them over.

(iii) The transference to the new Organisation of the League Departments responsible for carrying out the main non-political activities would not be difficult. Only a small nucleus of experienced officials remain in these Departments. The services of many of them would be valuable to the new Organisation, as would also be those of some experienced League officials now engaged elsewhere. The value of the League's records and archives needs no emphasis.

(iv) Some reorganisation of the present system of international drug control and of international health organisation is probably necessary, but it seems best to transfer the existing functions of the League to the new Organisation before embarking on major changes.

(v) It is for consideration whether the best course would be to transfer the functions of the League High Commissioner for Refugees to the new Organisation or to the Inter-Governmental Committee on

Refugees.64

(vi) The future of the League Organisation for Intellectual Cooperation and with it the Paris Institute of Intellectual Co-operation must be considered in relation to the proposed United Nations Organisation for Educational and Cultural Reconstruction and to the suggestion that a permanent International Education Organisation should be established.

(vii) All of the League's remaining non-political work—activities with regard to economic, financial and other social questions, communications and transit; suppression of slavery, treaty registration, etc.,—could be transferred to the new Organisation so far as may be desired without any obvious difficulty.

(viii) In view of the existence of a large number of international treaties, conventions and agreements which attribute powers and duties to the League a most unsatisfactory situation will arise on the dissolution of the League unless measures are taken to transfer the functions conferred on the League by these instruments, to the new Organisation. This will involve

(a) the agreement, expressed in some appropriate form, of the parties to each instrument and

(b) the acceptance of the functions in question by the new Organisation.

Each of the instruments in question must, generally speaking, be dealt with separately. We feel, however, that the process of obtaining the consents of the parties would be much facilitated and accelerated if this were done under the auspices of the new Organisation and with the assistance of its Secretariat.

(ix) The question of transferring to the new Organisation the functions of the League arising out of the Protocols, General Bonds and Loan Contracts of the League Loans, which owe their origin to the various schemes of financial reconstruction undertaken by the League between the wars, is one of some complexity. It is considered, however, that it would suffice if agreement to the transfer of functions were obtained only from the League and the new Organisation, and simply notified to the interested parties.

(x) The present financial position of the League is sound. In addition to substantial fixed assets in the form of land, buildings and equipment, there are considerable liquid assets in the various funds built up by the League which should be sufficient to provide for an orderly liquidation provided that the present financial position of the League does not deteriorate in the interval.

(xi) The Committee which it is suggested should be set up by the League to arrange the transfer of functions to the new Organisation should be given the necessary authority to liquidate the finances of the League. This Committee should make arrangements for meeting the outstanding liabilities of the League, and for the future administration of the Pension Funds. When all claims have been met, and drafts on the Working Capital Fund made good, the assets outstanding should be distributed among Members with due regard to their record of contributions.

- (xii) It is hoped that it will be possible to transfer the League buildings, its unique library, etc., to suitable international bodies, which may or may not be associated with the proposed United Nations Organisation. If that Organisation does not require them and if the International Labour Organisation should return to Geneva, the latter might take over the League buildings. Failing their transfer to the new Organisation, the International Labour Organisation, or some other suitable body, it will be desirable to set up a body of Trustees to manage the Library, buildings, and any other special assets which serve international purposes.
- 5. The following procedure is suggested for bringing the League of Nations to an end, and to effect the transference of its functions, assets and liabilities to the new Organisation.
- 6. A suitable resolution should be passed at the San Francisco Conference indicating willingness in principle to take over certain non-political functions of the League and certain of its assets and liabilities, on terms to be agreed. The resolution would also appoint a committee for the purpose of negotiating with the League and would invite the League to appoint a corresponding committee. Subsequently a meeting of the League Assembly would be called at which a resolution would be passed welcoming the initiative of the United Nations and appointing a negotiating committee to meet the committee appointed by them and to co-operate in drawing up the neces-The results of these negotiations would be sary instruments. submitted for confirmation to the appropriate body of the new Organisation, and to a second and final meeting of the League Assembly, at which a resolution would be passed confirming and giving effect to the agreement reached, and providing for the signature on behalf of the League of any necessary instruments for this purpose. Finally the resolution would announce the dissolution of the League of Nations and the release of its members from their obligations under the Covenant.

7. In making these recommendations account has been taken of the political factors which may complicate the transference of the League's functions to the new Organisation. For a decision in the Assembly a unanimous vote is necessary, and if unanimity does not exist the most that can be obtained is a recommendation to the Members of the League. Much will depend on the attitude of the smaller State Members of the League to the new Organisation as it takes shape at San Francisco. If their attitude is not unfriendly and there is a general desire to make the most of the opportunities which the establishment of the new Organisation will present, we do not expect any serious difficulties. It should be possible to ensure the compliance of ex-enemy States which are still nominally Members of the League. Neutral States, which will not become original members of the new Organisation, will it is hoped, not be likely to prejudice their chances of being admitted later by ill-considered action during the obsequies of the League.

MEMORANDUM

The Soviet Government has taken note with satisfaction of the proposal set forth in the Memorandum of the Department of State of March 28 <sup>65</sup> to the effect that the representatives of the four inviting powers should have prior discussion among themselves of, and should concert, proposals and recommendations which each of them might desire to put forward at the San Francisco Conference. My Government considers that such joint prior discussion and concerting should, in the interests of lasting cooperation among the inviting powers and of the success of the Conference, be extended also to proposals and recommendations put forward at the Conference by any other delegations.

[Washington,] March 31, 1945.

The Secretary of State to President Roosevelt 66

[Washington,] April 2, 1945.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: At a press conference on Friday last, 67 correspondents submitted some thirty odd questions in writing, precipitated by the Herald Tribune story on the Soviet proposal for additional votes in the Assembly. The Department has given careful consideration to the preparation of a draft statement which follows in this message. 68 We believe it accurate and have reason to hope that this method of handling the matter may allay press concern. We feel strongly that we should take this occasion to settle positively the position of this Government on additional votes in the General Assembly.

Dean Acheson has discussed this matter with Connally, Vandenberg, and Bloom. Connally feels that we should state at this time that we do not intend to exercise the right reserved to the United States to request two additional votes in the General Assembly. Vandenberg agrees that the most desirable result would be a single vote by the United States in the General Assembly, even though the USSR has three and is inclined to go along, but feels that it may be desirable to leave the whole matter open in view of a renewal of public comment about "six British votes". Bloom is willing to go along, but his private judgment is that it is better to leave the matter open. If it is decided not to take the flat position that we do not propose to exercise the right reserved, all three delegates would agree to a statement to the effect that the Delegation will decide in its discretion whether or not the United States will advance the proposal.

In discussing the question of trusteeship with Colonel Stimson and Jim Forrestal, I raised the question of this statement and showed them copies. They approved of the statement and approved also of an announcement that this Government does not intend to request additional seats in the Assembly.

The pressure on this matter is becoming intense, and I very much hope to have your views in time for me to make a statement this afternoon or tomorrow noon at the latest. 69 I am leaving for Chicago late Tuesday, expecting to return on Thursday.

I will telephone Bill Hassett 70 this afternoon in the hope that I may be able to secure your views either directly or through him.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD R. STETTINIUS per A. MacLeish

My Dear Pasvolsky: In connection with the arrangements for the San Francisco Conference you will remember that we spoke on March 28th <sup>71</sup> about the procedure which might be adopted when it becomes necessary to wind up the League of Nations.

We subsequently received instruction to make a formal communication to the Secretary of State on the subject and Lord Halifax accordingly addressed his note No. 150 of March 30th to Mr. Stettinius. I enclose a further copy of this note for your convenience.<sup>72</sup>

We have now been asked by the Foreign Office to suggest that it would be desirable to reach an understanding on the best procedure for handling this matter before the Conference opens, and they would therefore be very grateful if the State Department were willing to arrange for preliminary discussions to be held in Washington before the Conference opens. Such a discussion might take as its basis Lord Halifax's note of March 28th.

The Foreign Office further suggests that, in addition to representatives of the sponsoring powers, it would be advantageous to invite a representative of the French Provisional Government.

The Foreign Office are prepared to send an expert to Washington to participate in any discussions which may be held.

We should be very glad to have the views of the State Department on this proposal at the earliest possible date.<sup>78</sup>

Yours very sincerely,

MEMORANDUM

TENTATIVE SUGGESTIONS CONCERNING THE ALLOCATION OF COMMISSION AND COMMITTEE POSITIONS AT THE CONFERENCE

It is hoped that by April 9 it will be possible for us to have agreed upon the composition of the Executive Committee, and the allocation of Chairmen, Rapporteurs and Secretaries of the proposed four commissions and twelve committees of the San Francisco Conference.

Consideration should be given, of course, to the personal qualifications of the individual delegates as well as to questions of geographic location and national power and prestige. Since our information about the composition of the several Delegations is not yet complete, the suggestions made below are necessarily highly tentative.

It is suggested that the Executive Committee should be composed of the Chairmen of the following Delegations: United States, Brazil,

Marginal notation on the original reads: "This memorandum was handed to the British Ambassador by the Secretary on April 3, 1945". Copies were handed to the Soviet and Chinese Ambassadors on the same date.

Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, France, Iran, Mexico, The Netherlands, Soviet Union, and the United Kingdom.

It is further suggested that the Presidents of the four commissions might be the Chairman of Delegation from the following countries:

Commission I —General Provisions, South Africa Commission II —General Assembly, Belgium Commission III—Security Council, Norway Commission IV —Judicial Organization, Venezuela

The Rapporteur of each of these four commissions should be chosen with special regard to his technical qualifications and need not necessarily be the Chairman of a Delegation. It is tentatively suggested that the Rapporteurs should be allocated as follows:

Commission I —Peru Commission II —Ecuador Commission III—Philippine Commonwealth Commission IV —Honduras

It is suggested that each of the four commissions should have a Secretary with rank and title of Assistant Secretary General who would be assisted by an American, as Executive Officer. The allocation of these four Secretaries of Commission might be:

Commission I —Syria Commission III —Liberia Commission III—Nicaragua Commission IV —Ethiopia

The allocation of committee Chairmanships deserves special consideration, since most of the basic discussion and drafting will normally take place in committees rather than in the public sessions of commissions. Suggestions for Commission I are that the Chairmanships of Committees should be allocated among Delegation Chairmen as follows:

Committee 1—Preamble, Purposes, and Principles—Bolivia Committee 2—Membership and General—Yugoslavia

The Committee Chairmen for Commission II might be the Chairmen of Delegation from the following countries:

Committee 1—Structure and Procedures—Paraguay Committee 2—Political and Security Functions—Chile Committee 3—Economic and Social Cooperation—Colombia Committee 4—Trusteeship System—Australia

For Commission III the assignments of Committee Chairmen might be:

Committee 1—Structure and Procedures—Turkey Committee 2—Peaceful Settlement—Uruguay

Committee 3—Enforcement Arrangements—New Zealand

Committee 4—Regional Arrangements—Greece

In Commission IV the Chairmen of Committees might be allocated as follows:

Committee 1—International Court of Justice—India Committee 2—Legal Problems—Egypt

The Rapporteurs of these committees should obviously be persons of special competence. They might be chosen from countries not otherwise represented in commission or committee posts, or might be outstanding Delegates of countries from which other commission or committee positions have already been filled.

Each of the twelve committees would be assisted by a Secretary and by an Assistant Secretary, who for the most part would be provided by this Government. It is hoped that each of the sponsoring governments might detail two or three persons who, because of their training and knowledge of languages, would be especially qualified to serve as Secretaries of these committees. Your designation of such persons at your earliest convenince would be greatly appreciated.

In addition to the principal working commissions and committees discussed above, Chairmen will also be needed for two special committees. For these purposes these Chairmen of Delegation of the following countries are suggested:

Committee on Arrangements—Cuba Committee on Credentials and Nominations—Saudi Arabia

Press Statement on Proposal for the Representation of Certain Soviet Republics in the General Assembly

The Secretary opened the meeting by reading to the Delegation the statement proposed to be made to the press at noon that day in reply to the list of questions relative to the participation of two Soviet republics in the world organization which were raised with him by the press last Friday. (Statement by Secretary of State Stettinius For the Press, April 3, 1945, No. 285) 75

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM questioned the clarity of the first sentence of the second paragraph feeling that the two republics involved should be named. We [The Secretary] replied that we felt that the eighth paragraph of the statement made that matter entirely clear.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON raised the question of the status of the Soviet republics and it was explained by Mr. Dunn that by a change in the Soviet constitution last year they had been given certain autonomy relative to the conduct of foreign and military affairs. He indicated that they both now conducted foreign relations directly with the so-called Lublin Polish Government.

Senator Vandenberg inquired if this did not raise the question of sovereign equality. The Secretary replied that it was clear that we had made a commitment to support this proposal if the Soviets raised it. Mr. Hiss amplified this statement to the effect that we are not committed on the question of sovereign equality but that we are committed that the admission of these two republics would not violate sovereign equality. Mr. Stettinius explained that he was not present when the President informed the delegates of this situation raid and had not read a record of it. He added that he felt that if an individual delegate did not feel free to support the commitment that they should feel perfectly free to discuss it with the President.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON read the last two sentences of the second paragraph on page 2 and asked for an interpretation of the meaning thereof. The Secretary replied that we felt it was a great mistake to ask for three votes for one country as that would violate sovereign equality. The Representative commented that the votes of the two republics in question would certainly be Soviet votes whereas the same situation did not apply in the case of the constituent parts of the British Empire. Judge Hackworth pointed out that the question of three votes in the assembly really is not a major matter as the assembly is not the action body of the organization. Senator Vandenberg commented that while this might be true it would have a very adverse effect on American public opinion.

Senator Connally stressed that the final decision on this question is up to the Conference and he personally felt the Soviets would have difficulty with the smaller states in having the proposal accepted.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE inquired how the Delegation would vote at the Conference and in reply was informed that the American Delegation would cast one vote after determining its position on a given matter itself where presumably majority opinion would prevail.

In reply to Senator Vandenberg's request for a final answer The Secretary stated that we have a commitment to support the Soviet proposal if made, and repeated if any member individually does not agree with it he should take up the question with the President. He said the Government is not free to do other than to support the Soviet proposal.

In answer to Senator Vandenberg's inquiry he was informed that we do not feel that this violates sovereign equality. The Secretary added that he felt that if an individual delegate disagreed with this commitment that he should feel free to make a public statement on it.

Senator Connally said he felt we must go along with the commitment which had been made. He indicated that he regrets that it had been made and personally doesn't like it but feels he must go along as a representative of this Government at this Conference. Senator Vandenberg commented that it appeared to him that the Delegation had been told one thing and the public another. Senator Connally then reviewed his recollection of what had been told the Delegation and Representative Bloom expressed his agreement with the recital. The essence was that the Delegation had been told what had been agreed to at Yalta and that the President had indicated that he would support this at San Francisco if he were present.

Senator Vandenberg indicated that we were acting somewhat in the boy scout manner by in effect surrendering to a Soviet demand and then giving up our rights in the matter.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON stressed the importance of the meeting at San Francisco and mentioned the tendency of our people to magnify minor events, intimating that the press was playing up this matter out of its proper proportion. He pleaded that we must make a beginning at San Francisco for a new world order based on justice, law and order rather than on brute strength. He said that this was our test, "Can we unite to create this new world order and if we cannot what is the use of being a human being?" He said he had been waiting for the opportunity of being present at San Francisco for forty years and that a beginning of the new world must be made at that meeting. He repeated that this must be based on a world order resting on justice.

In reply to the Secretary's inquiries Representative Eaton expressed the opinion that the statement was as good as could be written under the circumstances. Dean Gildersleeve expressed the view that it was fairly good, possibly as good as could be drawn up, but that she would like to see in it some strong statement along the line of that just made by Representative Eaton which would give a lift to our people who are badly confused as a result of the present situation. She indicated that she felt the members of the Delegation as individuals were free, and that if one of them should feel strongly in opposition on some question he should be free to so state publicly but that as a Delegation we are bound to support the commitment.

Senator Connally expressed the opinion that he personally thought it would be better not to make a statement at all but that he did not wish to urge his views in this respect on the Delegation. Representative Bloom expressed satisfaction with the statement.

POSTPONEMENT OF CONFERENCE

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM raised the postponement issue in reply to which The Secretary read a prepared statement which indicates we feel it is now more important than ever to go ahead. The statement also indicated that we had received no suggestions from the other United Nations as to postponement. (Statement by Secretary of State Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., April 3, 1945, No. 291 78)

Unofficial Representation of National Organizations

THE SECRETARY suggested that consideration be given next to the revised List of National Organizations (April 3, 1945) <sup>79</sup> which was distributed to the members of the Delegation with the agenda and their copies of Book 3, Comments and Suggestions on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.<sup>80</sup>

WELCOMING STATEMENTS TO THE ADVISERS

THE SECRETARY on behalf of the delegates, welcomed the advisers to the important undertaking that lay ahead of all of them. . . .

The Secretary indicated that the delegates would count heavily on this impressive group of advisers, and that, since the responsibilities of all would be so heavy, it had been decided to divide into groups so that all persons would not need to keep in touch at all times with the entire subject matter. Each delegate and adviser would therefore be active on certain subjects. The Secretary said that the group of advisers was a very important one. It would meet regularly as a group and would receive full documentation from the Department staff. The Secretary asked Mr. Hiss to see that proper arrangements were made for a meeting of the advisers in the near future. He said that the delegation itself would start its regular meetings on April 9 and would continue them almost to the opening of the Conference.

TENTATIVE ASSIGNMENTS TO COMMISSIONS AND CONFERENCE ARRANGEMENTS

THE SECRETARY then asked Mr. Hiss to present the question of the assignments of delegates, advisers and technical experts to commissions. Copies of the document Tentative Assignments to Commissions of Delegates, Advisers and Technical Experts, April 3, 1945, at were then distributed to the advisers.

Mr. Hiss stated that a number of matters were being cleared with the sponsoring powers by means of a new procedure: an informal organizing group composed of the ambassadors of the sponsoring governments in Washington. One of the matters now being cleared through this group, he said, was the question of the organization of the Conference.

The Secretary commented that the persons now gathered together in this room should consider themselves one family and should treat with complete confidence matters discussed within the family. He said that the rule now was that there should be no public statement concerning the Conference by any person in the room without approval by the delegation and that this rule held for himself as well as for the rest of the members present. No member would not [now?] speak on matters connected with the Conference except with the authority of the American delegation. He asked each member to keep within these four walls all the important matters that were discussed, suggesting as an illustration that the plan to assign the chairmanship of different committees to certain states, if revealed prematurely, might cause tremendous embarrassment.

Unofficial Representation of National Organizations

Mr. MacLeish said that the problem had arisen because so many organizations had wanted to go to San Francisco and that the problem was complicated by the fact that we did not want to do anything which would increase too heavily the burden of the delegation. On the other hand, it was important to prepare for the presentation of the work of the Conference to the American public. After a great deal of discussion it had been agreed that a certain number of organizations should be invited to send representatives to San Francisco as consultants. These representatives would be put in consultative touch with the American delegation and the Conference under terms that would interfere in the least possible way with the duties of the delegates. A choice had to be made between selecting 15 or 16 organizations from among the chief pressure groups, veterans organizations, farmers, etc., or selecting a larger group of organizations, some 30 to 35, that would include, in addition to the larger pressure groups, women's organizations, religious groups and educational organizations that were greatly interested in San Francisco. It had been agreed that the larger number of organizations should be chosen and that representatives should be invited from about 33 different agencies.

THE SECRETARY commented that this decision had been a difficult one to reach and that it had been hard to draw the line. However, the delegates had had in mind the President's feeling that it was best in the end to invite representatives from certain groups and establish a liaison office for them.

THE SECRETARY then suggested that the meeting of the advisers and delegates stand adjourned.

THE SECRETARY reconvened the meeting of the delegates and asked Mr. Hiss to give an explanation of the documentation presented to the delegates.

Mr. Hiss noted that the main purpose of the documents was to give the delegates an opportunity to study the suggestions for changes in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals that had been made by other governments and that had emerged in the course of discussions in the United States. It was hoped, he said, that in the course of our discussions we would make up our minds as to our attitude toward these proposed changes before going to the Conference.

THE SECRETARY said it was going to be necessary to cut through all the underbrush so that we would know exactly what proposals the American delegation would stand by and favor and so that the matter would be altogether clear. Senator Vandenberg thought this was a wise procedure.

Mr. Hiss then explained that the text of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals was printed on the white paper, comments by other governments on green paper and suggestions that emerged from discussions in the United States on pink paper in order to make each set of papers stand out clearly.

THE SECRETARY asked if this material had been digested to the minimum. Mr. Hiss replied in the affirmative.

CONFERENCE POLICIES

THE SECRETARY asked Mr. Hiss to make a brief statement concerning the problem of language at the Conference. Mr. Hiss indicated that the present policy was to try to persuade the other sponsoring governments to adopt English as the official working language. This would mean that a delegate speaking in his own language would be responsible for the translation of his speech into English. Any documents submitted would be accompanied by an English translation. We would try to supply translating facilities as needed. Mr. Hiss added that each delegate that did not speak English would be responsible for providing his own interpreter. He added that the French were putting on considerable pressure to have French accepted as an official language. Mr. Dunn added that the Russians had also asked that Russian be an official language of the Conference.

Mr. Hiss explained that the gesture was proposed of offering to prepare a final text in Chinese, Russian, French, English and Spanish, and that he hoped this gesture of official recognition would make it possible to adopt English as the practical working language.

TIME OF ARRIVAL IN SAN FRANCISCO

It was agreed at the suggestion of The Secretary that the American delegation would be on hand in San Francisco, ready to receive other delegations on Monday morning, April 23, but that it would announce that it would not be ready to receive other delegations before that time.

The meeting was adjourned at 11:45 a.m.

Minutes of the First Meeting of the Informal Organizing Group on Arrangements for the San Francisco Conference, Held at Washington, Tuesday, April 3, 1945, 2:45 p.m.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of participants, including representatives of the United States (5); United Kingdom (2); Soviet Union (2); and China (2).]

I. Organization of the Conference

- A. It was pointed out that on this subject the Department's memorandum of March 30 superseded its memorandum of March 16.
- B. The Secretary stated that as a general rule all matters concerning arrangements for the San Francisco Conference should henceforth be taken up through this group rather than through the United States missions abroad.

C. The three Ambassadors <sup>82</sup> were requested to obtain the comments of their respective Governments on the Department's memorandum of March 30.

II. Allocation of Conference Positions

- A. The Department's memorandum of April 3, on this subject was presented.
- B. The Soviet Ambassador inquired whether it had not been suggested earlier by an officer of the Department that the chairmen of the four sponsoring delegations should be the presidents of the four commissions. It was pointed out that the Department's memorandum of March 16 had suggested that the presidencies of commissions be allotted to powers other than the sponsoring powers.
- C. THE SOVIET AMBASSADOR recalled that he had suggested to Mr. Dunn 83 that the Presidency of the Conference should rotate among the chairmen of delegations of the four sponsoring governments. THE AMBASSADOR has pointed out that the necessity of election of four chairmen is dedicated [dictated?] by the necessity of preservation of equality of position among the four sponsoring nations at the Conference. It would be natural to have four chairmen from four countries. The Secretary of State indicated that this suggestion had not yet been considered by the Department. The British Ambassador said that without prejudging the position of his Government he would think, off the record and unofficially, that an American would be President of the Conference and the chairmen of delegation of the other three sponsoring governments would be Vice Presidents. The Secretary of State suggested that precedents in recent United Nations conferences indicated that one person should be responsible throughout the period of the Conference for its effective management.

III. Problem of Official Languages

A. The Department's memorandum of April 3 on this subject was presented.

B. In response to an inquiry by the Soviet Ambassador it was indicated that under the Department's proposal any delegation could ask that particular documents of importance be made available in one or more of the official languages other than English, but that it was hoped that this right would be used with moderation in order to avoid mechanical difficulties.

C. Copies were distributed of the proposals made by the French Government that only English and French be considered as official languages.

IV. Policy Regarding Press

It was stated that the Soviet Government had agreed to the press policy proposed by the United States Government <sup>84</sup> subject to the reservation that the four commissions might, in their own discretion, hold closed sessions. It was agreed that this would be appropriate.

V. Observers from States Not Members of the United Nations

It was stated that, in accordance with the prior decision of the sponsors that no invitation should be issued to any government other than those which have signed the United Nations Declaration, a request of the Italian Government for representation by an observer had been denied.<sup>85</sup> It was also stated that, similarly, a like request by the so-called Provisional Government of Korea had been denied.<sup>86</sup>

VI. Unofficial Representation of Certain International Organizations

It was stated that the Soviet and Chinese Governments had both expressed their agreement with the United States proposal that arrangements be made for unofficial representation of the five following international organizations at the Conference: The League of Nations, the International Labor Office, the Permanent Court for International Justice, the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration and the Interim Commission on Food and Agriculture.

VII. Consultation of Sponsoring States with Respect to the Amendment of Dumbarton Oaks Proposals

Ambassador Gromyko's memorandum of March 31 on this subject was brought to the attention of the British and Chinese Ambassadors and it was stated that the Department was not in a position to comment on the Soviet proposal at this time.

Next meeting

It was indicated that Mr. Makins would be the British Ambassador's deputy, that Mr. Novikov would be the Soviet Ambassador's deputy and that the Chinese Ambassador would designate a deputy. These gentlemen would work with Mr. Hiss and Mr. Ross <sup>87</sup> informally on matters requiring clearance among the sponsoring governments. It was decided that meetings of the Ambassadors with the Secretary of State would be subject to call as might be required. The meeting adjourned at 3:30 p.m.

Memorandum Prepared in the Department of State 88

TENTATIVE SUGGESTIONS WITH RESPECT TO THE USE OF LANGUAGES
AT THE SAN FRANCISCO CONFERENCE

Reference is made to our memorandum of March 16, 1945 concerning tentative suggestions with respect to arrangements for the San Francisco Conference in which it was indicated that additional proposals concerning those arrangements would be communicated to the other sponsoring Governments. In that connection, we have now formulated a proposal concerning the use of languages at the San Francisco Conference for the consideration of the other sponsoring Governments.

1. Authentic Texts of the Charter

We propose that English, Russian, Chinese, French and Spanish be the official languages of the Conference in which authentic texts of the Charter would be drawn up for signature. If time does not permit the conclusion of drafts in each of these languages at the Conference, we suggest that those drafts which may not be completed at San Francisco be opened for signature at a later date.

2. Use of Languages in Meetings

With a view to expediting the work of the Conference, we suggest that speeches in the plenary sessions and commissions be given in English, if convenient. It is expected that delegates speaking in other languages would furnish English translations or interpreters, as possible. The Secretariat would provide assistance, when needed, in translating and interpreting from Russian, French, and Spanish into English.

We also propose that English be used, whenever possible, in the meetings of the committees and subcommittees. It is our thought that delegates would provide their own interpreters to enable them to follow discussions in English. The Secretariat would provide assistance, when needed, for interpretations from Russian, French and Spanish into English.

${\it 3. \ Use of Languages in Documents and Records}$

We propose that documents, records, and the Official Journal be issued in English. The Secretariat would be prepared to assist delegations in translating Russian, French or Spanish drafts into English. In addition to this assistance, the Secretariat would comply, as possible, with requests for assistance in translating draft texts or proposals into Russian, French, or Spanish.

The attention of the Foreign Office was invited to the three points suggested by the Chinese for inclusion in the charter of the International Organization and a reply has now been received from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs noting that the US Government perceives no objection to meeting the wish of Chinese Government and stating that the British Government for its part also sees no objection thereto and is prepared to support the Chinese proposal at the San Francisco Conference. The Secretary of State to the Legal Adviser (Hackworth)

Washington, April 3, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Hackworth: I take pleasure in designating you as Representative of the United States on the Committee of Jurists which is to meet at Washington on April 9, 1945 to formulate, pursuant to Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, a statute for the proposed international court of justice. 91

You will be assisted by one or two advisers, to be designated.92

Since the statute of the international court of justice is to become a part of the Charter of the United Nations, you are authorized to consider with the Committee not only the statute but also such other matters as are deemed necessary to determine the position and jurisdiction of the court within the proposed Organization.

The Secretary of State to Mr. Leo Pasvolsky, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

Washington, April 3, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Pasvolsky: It was agreed at Yalta that the five governments with permanent seats in the Security Council should consult each other prior to the United Nations Conference on providing machinery in the Charter of the United Nations for dealing with territorial trusteeships which would apply only to (A) existing mandates of the League of Nations; (B) territory to be detached from the enemy as a result of this war; and (C) any other territory that may voluntarily be placed under trusteeship. It was further agreed that no discussions of specific territories will take place during the preliminary consultations on trusteeships or at the United Nations Conference itself. Only machinery and principles of trusteeship will be formulated at the Conference for inclusion in the Charter and it will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories within the categories specified above will actually be placed under trusteeship.

Within these terms of reference you are directed to represent the Government of the United States in these preliminary consultations which are scheduled to take place in Washington as soon as representatives of the other invited Governments can arrive in the United States.

You will take for your instructions the paper on Trusteeship Arrangements prepared by the Interdepartmental Committee on Dependent Area Aspects of International Organization <sup>94</sup> and which has been approved by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior. <sup>95</sup>

You are expected to consult, as occasion may require, with the other members of the Interdepartmental Committee referred to above, but

The Lithuanian Minister (Zadeikis) to the Secretary of State 96

Washington, April 3, 1945.

Sir: On several occasions in the past I had stressed in my communications to you the fact that Lithuania had always been a staunch supporter of collective security under the leadership of the League of Nations. Though the system of collective security had failed because of the internal weakness of the League, the soundness of the idea is still recognized by most nations, great and small, including Lithuania. My country, the victim of Soviet and Nazi invasions, while hoping for security supported by a new international organization, is at this very moment waiting with great anxiety for immediate remedy against the fear of extermination, as is evident from what happened in Lithuania in 1940 97 and in 1941,98 also during the prolonged Nazi occupation. and from Lithuania's present situation when so many thousands are being driven eastward by the Soviet "liberators." The saving of lives and the protection of the citizenship rights of approximately three hundred thousand Lithuanian deportees and refugees in Germany 99 constitutes at present another important and urgent problem.

In this connection the following facts are worth recalling: first, when, on August 14, 1941, the Atlantic Charter was proclaimed, Lithuania was an axis-occupied country, and, therefore, the principles of the Charter were considered by the American Government to be fully applicable to Lithuania, and not to so-called Soviet Lithuania, the product of a land-grabbing policy; and second, about two weeks before the signing of the Declaration by the United Nations on January 1, 1942, Lithuania's eagerness to organize her government-inexile, and to join the Allied cause, was reported by this office (my note of December 18, 1941<sup>2</sup>). I believe, therefore, that my country cannot be accused of neglecting her fight for peace and freedom because of her absence from United Nations conferences in the past.

Lithuania wishes to be represented in appropriate capacity as a sovereign nation at the United Nations conference which is scheduled to convene on April 25, 1945, in the City of San Francisco, California, for the purpose of erecting a new edifice of peace and security. Lithuania, mindful of her position, and of the importance of the coming Conference, reserves the right to be spokesman on her own affairs, and rejects any attempt by any one who lacks legal authority to represent her at the Conference.

In conclusion I believe it is suitable to recall here President Roosevelt's significant words:

"We are going to win the war and we are going to win the peace that follows.

"... in representing our cause, we represent theirs (the majority of the members of the human race) as well." 3

Under existing circumstances Lithuania can only hope that President Roosevelt's words shall not fail to safeguard also Lithuania's independence in accordance with the principles of the Atlantic Charter.

THE PRESIDENT:

It seems obvious that we will be more or less responsible for security in all the Pacific waters. As you take a look at the different places captured by us, from Guadalcanal, the north coast of New Guinea, and then the Marianas and other islands gradually to the southern Philippines, and then into Luzon and north to Iwo Jima, it seems obvious the only danger is from Japanese forces; and they must be prevented, in the same way Germany is prevented, from setting up a military force which would start off again on a chapter of aggression.

So that means the main bases have to be taken away from them. They have to be policed externally and internally. And as a part of the western Pacific situation, it is necessary to throw them out of any of their mandated ports, which they immediately violated almost as soon as they were mandated, by fortifying these islands.

Q. Mr. President, on the question of the Japanese mandates that you say will be taken away from them, who will be the controlling government in those mandates, the United States?

THE PRESIDENT: I would say the United Nations. Or—it might be called—the world, which has been much abused now, will have a chance to prevent any more abuse.

Q. Mr. President, do you think we will have a chance to talk with you again on other subjects before you go, such as the three-to-one vote?

THE PRESIDENT: As a matter of fact, this plea for votes was done in a very quiet way.

Stalin said to me—and this is the essence of it—"You know there are two parts of Russia that have been completely devastated. Every building is gone, every farm house, and there are millions of people living in these territories—and it is very important from the point of view of humanity—and we thought, as a gesture, they ought to be given something as a result of this coming victory. They have had very little civilization. One is the Ukraine, and the other is White Russia. We all felt—not any of us coming from there in the government—we think it would be grand to give them a vote in the Assembly. In these two sections, millions have been killed, and we think it would be very heartening—would help to build them up—if we could get them a vote in the Assembly."

He asked me what I thought.

I said to Stalin, "Are you going to make that request of the Assembly?"

He said, "I think we should."

I said, "I think it would be all right—I don't know how the Assembly will vote."

He said, "Would you favor it?"

I said, "Yes, largely on sentimental grounds. If I were on the delegation—which I am not—I would probably vote 'yes.'"

That has not come out in any paper.

He said, "That would be the Soviet Union, plus White Russia, plus the Ukraine."

Then I said, "By the way, if the Conference in San Francisco should give you three votes in the Assembly—if you get three votes—I do not know what would happen if I don't put in a plea for three votes in the States." And I said, "I would make the plea for three votes and insist on it."

It is not really of any great importance. It is an investigatory body only. I told Stettinius to forget it. I am not awfully keen for three votes in the Assembly. It is the little fellow who needs the vote in the Assembly. This business about the number of votes in the Assembly does not make a great deal of difference.

Q. They don't decide anything, do they?

THE PRESIDENT: No.

By the way, this is all off the record.

The Secretary of the Interior (Ickes) to the Secretary of State 5

Washington, April 5, 1945.

My Dear Ed: Enclosed is a copy of a memorandum which I have sent to the President and which I think may be helpful to you. I hope that you will steadfastly hold the line.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the Secretary of the Interior (Ickes) to President Roosevelt

Washington, April 5, 1945.

I am considerably disturbed as a result of reports which have come to me as to the attitude of the Army and Navy with respect to the international trusteeship problem. Under Secretary Fortas, who participated in the State-War-Navy-Interior committee discussions of this problem, has advised me from time to time of the attitude taken by the representatives of the various agencies. I understand that the representatives of the Armed Forces have indicated a strong feeling that the United States should insist upon complete sovereignty of the Japanese mandated islands. I am now informed that the War and Navy Departments are urging that the matter of international trusteeship should not be discussed at the San Francisco Conference, or at least should not be discussed until there is a firm agreement as to United States jurisdiction over the Japanese mandated islands.

I agree that the United States should be the administering power for the Japanese mandated islands. The arrangement worked out by the interdepartmental committee seems to me to assure to this Government all of the rights which it could possibly desire for security purposes. The only question in my mind is whether the arrangement has not gone too far in providing a scheme by which these areas may be exempted from international accountability. But I feel most strongly that if the United States should insist upon complete sovereignty, an international grab-bag would result which would end in serious prejudice to the interests of this country and to the scheme for a peaceful world organization. For example, the British might well respond by claiming absolute title to certain areas in the Middle East which would not only affect our security interests but would seriously interfere with important commercial interests of this Nation such as our great stake in Middle Eastern oil.

I also feel that it would be a mistake to fail to reach an agreement on the subjects of mandated territories and dependent areas at the San Francisco Conference. The elimination of this topic from the agenda of the Conference would arouse suspicions and would be a continuing source of hostility and distrust. In my opinion, no International Organization can succeed or can even be successfully launched unless these vital problems are boldly confronted and dealt with on a basis of practical idealism.

Accordingly, I urgently recommend that the mandated territories and any territories which may be separated from the enemy should be placed under the trusteeship system, with only such safeguards as may be demonstrably necessary for security purposes, and that a prompt decision be made as to this Government's policy, to be followed by a vigorous effort to obtain acceptance of that policy at the San Francisco Conference.

further that we felt we should be in a position to assure France of the foregoing and to make that assurance public.

On March 9 we received word that the Chinese Government concurred with this statement.<sup>18</sup> On March 13 the Soviet Government. informed us 19 that it agreed that French participation in the sponsoring of the invitations to the San Francisco Conference is even now desirable on the same basis as the four other sponsoring powers since this would undoubtedly be in the interests of the international organization. The Soviet Government said it had no objections either to giving the French Government further opportunity to study this question in order to adopt a positive decision prior to the convening of the Conference, or to our giving an assurance to the French Government in this respect.

On March 14 the British Government informed us 20 that it is in favor of the step proposed by us. Eden said that a great deal would depend on timing and approach and suggested that Winant speak first to Massigli, leaving it to Massigli to prepare ground in Paris before the matter was taken up there. We informed London on March 19<sup>21</sup> that after carefully considering Eden's suggestion we felt that it would be preferable to have you take the matter up directly with Bidault 21a since you had been handling this question with the Foreign Office from the beginning. We also said that, if France is to act as sponsor, it would be advisable to have her become a party to preparations as soon as possible, and that therefore a prompt approach on the matter is considered desirable. On March 21 London informed us 22 that our suggested procedure was acceptable to Eden.

In the meantime, reports from Paris indicated that the Provisional Government was preparing to communicate to the sponsoring governments its comments on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals with recommendations for numerous amendments, and these were transmitted to this Government officially on March 21.23 These comments and amendments have since received widespread publicity.

From our review and study of the proposed French amendments, we assume that their character—coupled with the publicity given to them-precludes the Provisional Government's becoming a sponsor of the San Francisco Conference on the same basis as the other sponsoring governments, i.e., as stated in the invitations, that the Confer-

The Department desires that you take advantage of an early and convenient opportunity to take this matter up informally with Bidault, conveying to him orally the substance of the foregoing. As indicated above, all of the sponsoring governments would be glad to have the Provisional Government of the French Republic join in sponsoring the San Francisco Conference on the same basis as the other sponsoring nations and as stated in the last sentence of the preceding paragraph. If, however, the Provisional Government feels that it can not join in sponsoring the Conference on this basis, you should express appropriate regrets.

The Acting Consul General of Estonia in Charge of Legation (Kaiv) to the Secretary of State 24

New York, April 6, 1945. [Received April 7.]

Sin: According to the Bulletin of the Department of State, dated March 11, 1945, a conference of the United Nations is called to meet at San Francisco on April 25, 1945, the purpose of which is to prepare a charter for a general international organization for the maintenance of international peace and security and which, in conformity with the statement made at the Crimea Conference, is essential, both to prevent aggression and to remove the political, economic and social causes of war through the close and continuing collaboration of all peace-loving peoples.

 $<sup>^{24}</sup>$  In a note of May 2 the Acting Secretary of State acknowledged receipt of the Estonian note (500.CC/4-645).

Estonia, being a peace-loving country, and having severely suffered under acts of aggression, is vitally interested in the San Francisco Conference and its achievements.

Although the primary purpose of the said Conference is to prepare a charter for a general international organization, it must be presumed that in discussing the structure of such an organization the Conference has to deal directly or indirectly with the existing countries, among them Estonia.

Estonia is at present occupied by the armed forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.<sup>26</sup> Regardless of the fact that such an occupation must be considered as a temporary and military occupation only, the Government of the U.S.S.R. considers Estonia as part of the Soviet Union, designating it as the 16-th constituent Republic of the Soviet Union. The U.S.S.R. is trying to justify its position by asserting that the Estonian people have joined Russia by a plebiscite in 1940. No such a plebiscite has ever taken place in Estonia. There are no legal acts or facts by which the U.S.S.R. would have gained sovereignty over the Estonian people. Nevertheless, the U.S.S.R. continues to violate the rights of the Estonian people not only in my homeland, but also is claiming the right to represent Estonia in international relations.

I have the honor to bring through you, Sir, to the attention of the Government of the United States of America, as sponsor of the San Francisco Conference, that in appearing at the San Francisco Conference, the delegation of the U.S.S.R. cannot in any way represent Estonia. Such a right belongs only to the legal representatives of the Estonian Constitutional Government.

Subject: Conversations on Territorial Trusteeships.

Participants: S-Mr. Raynor

Mr. Harvey Bundy, of the War Department 28

Mr. Raynor and I went to the Navy Department this morning to show Major Correa and Mr. Bundy the draft memorandum which had been prepared for the President,29 recommending that the four Cabinet Officers 30 should present to the President the various aspects of the issue concerning conversations on territorial trusteeship. Mr. Raynor stated that we wished to make certain that the references to the position taken by the Secretaries of War and Navy were correctly stated in the memorandum.

After reading the memorandum, Mr. Bundy and Major Correa said that the memorandum, in effect, means that the Secretary of State had changed his position from that agreed to last Monday,31 and that he was now proposing that the conversations should not be postponed, and that the present draft plan on trusteeship should be taken as a basis of American policy.

Mr. Raynor stated that the Secretary of State had taken the advice of a number of officers and had come to the conclusion that, in view of the Yalta agreement to discuss this question,32 he could not recommend postponement, and that instead he urged that both the views of the War and Navy Departments and the differing views of the State and Interior Departments should be laid before the President for decision.

After discussing several minor points to which they objected in the memorandum, it became clear that the disagreement is not over the trusteeship plan but with the discussion at this time of any trusteeship structure or arrangement. The view of the Secretaries of War and Navy is that it is impossible to discuss trusteeship machinery without reference to specific territories, and further, that such discussion might seriously interfere with the success of the Conference.

We replied that there was some risk in this, but that there was perhaps a greater risk in not taking up the subject of trusteeships at all, in view of the fact that the public has already been informed that such discussions would take place and that the Yalta agreement required that the discussions be held. They agreed that the decision to hold discussions had been taken at Yalta but still hoped that after reconsideration the discussions could either be postponed or confined merely to a resolution at San Francisco that the question be considered by the United Nations Organization after its establishment.

We agreed that the only fundamental difference between us was the question of postponing the conversations, and that the remaining differences in regard to the trusteeship plan (Document D-1k, March 22, 1945 88) are quite easily reconcilable.

The differences in regard to the plan boiled down essentially to:

1. That the trusteeship arrangements should be negotiated by the Security Council instead of the General Assembly; and

2. That a policy statement should be made when the plan is presented, so that the public would clearly understand that strategic rights, especially with respect to the Pacific areas, are fully safeguarded and that the trusteeship principle in these areas is applied in form but not in substance. They believe that candor in this respect is necessary and desirable.

Within an hour after this conversation, Mr. Bundy telephoned a supplementary statement to our draft, setting out in somewhat more detail the recommendation of the War and Navy Departments. At the same time, he suggested the addition of a paragraph at the head of Recommendation 2 34 and suggested one or two slight verbal alterations which have been inserted in the second draft for the President.

He asked that the revised copy should be given to him on Sunday or Monday morning, in order that he could clear it with the Secretary, in the hope that he would agree on laying only one memorandum before the President rather than having the War and Navy Departments submit a separate memorandum.

I have also received your note of March 29 on this subject.36

In our conversation on March 15 I believe that I told you that it had been decided that this Conference would be a meeting of the United Nations to draft the charter for a general international organization for the maintenance of international security. Washington, April 7, 1945-7 p.m.

307. Reurtel 1286 April 1.39 The Department suggests with reference to General Hoxha's 40 petition that Albania be invited to participate in the forthcoming San Francisco Conference on international organization that you and Jacobs 41 prepare an informal memorandum of acknowledgment stating this Government's position regarding his request along the following lines:

Begin memorandum. The Office of the United States Political Adviser at Caserta has been directed by the Department of State to communicate to Colonel General Enver Hoxha, Commander-in-Chief ANLA,<sup>42</sup> Tirana, the following statement setting forth the attitude of the United States Government regarding the request which he addressed to the President on March 29, 1945, for Albanian participation in the San Francisco Conference.

continuity against the day when the north will be liberated." (500.CC/2-2445)

"Italy. Although a cobelligerent since October 1943, Italy is still subject to an armistice regime and considerable control by the Allied Commission. Chiefly through our efforts, Italy's status has improved, but less than we desire in view of the British policy of keeping Italy dependent. We have been unable to end the anomaly of Italy's dual status as active cobelligerent and as defeated enemy. Great pressure is being brought to bear by groups in this country to make Italy one of the United Nations—a step essentially in accordance with our policy but not with that of certain other allied governments." Malta and Yalta, p. 774.

Ambassador Kirk noted in his telegram 587, February 24, 10 a.m., from Rome: "The argument which is being offered and which is incontestable is that any recognition of the Italian Government in connection with this conference would enhance its prestige at a time when such a step is vitally important to ensure continuity against the day when the north will be liberated." (500.CC/2-2445)

In order to preclude any misunderstanding concerning the purview of the forthcoming deliberations at San Francisco, this Government desires to make clear immediately the fact that this Conference will deal only with questions of international organization and will in no way assume the character and functions of a "peace conference" where settlement of territorial questions, reparations, minorities problems, and similar matters would be undertaken.

While this Government appreciates General Hoxha's interest in this instance, it wishes to point out that exhaustive examination was made by the sponsoring Governments of every aspect of this subject before the decision was reached to extend invitations only to members of the United Nations, which include only recognized Governments. No provision has been made for official or unofficial observers. The Department of State trusts that General Hoxha will understand, in view of these considerations, that it cannot appropriately undertake to reopen discussion of the procedure already agreed upon and, accordingly, must inform him that it is not in a position to support his request for Albanian representation at the forthcoming Conference.

The Government and people of the United States are fully aware of the steadfast manner in which Albanian patriots have carried through to a successful conclusion their unequal struggle against enemy aggression and are also cognizant that the Albanian people have thereby contributed worthily to the eventual triumph of our common cause. It is the sincere hope of the Government of the United States, nurtured by the friendly feelings of the American people for the Albanian people, that Albania will in due course take its proper place within the community of nations.<sup>43</sup> End memorandum.

The memorandum based on the foregoing text may be communicated to General Hoxha through such channels as you and Jacobs consider suitable.<sup>44</sup>

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss)

[Washington,] April 8, 1945.

Subject: Designation of a permanent President of the San Francisco Conference

As a result of a telephone conversation which I had with the Secretary last night, I called Mr. Makins this morning at the Embassy and talked about this general question. Mr. Makins told me that he had had a discussion of this same subject with Mr. Dunn last week shortly after the meeting of the Informal Organizing Group and that as a result of that talk the Embassy had sent a telegram to London recommending that the British Government promptly make a recommendation that Mr. Stettinius be the permanent President of the Conference.

&quot;In response to another request, of April 27, for Albanian participation in the Conference, Secretary Stettinius transmitted in telegram 7, May 17, the following message to the Department for General Hoxha: "As you have already been informed, the United States could not appropriately sponsor participation in the Conference of the authorities now exercising control over Albania with which the United States Government has not established official relations." (500.CC/-5-1745)

I told Mr. Makins that the next meeting of the Informal Organizing Group had been called for next Tuesday 45 and told him that (as Mr. Raynor had informed me earlier this morning) it would be held at 3:00 p. m. I also told him that the Soviet Ambassador had again discussed this subject yesterday with Mr. Stettinius and had shown a rather unyielding attitude. Mr. Makins said that he would send a further telegram to London suggesting that the British Embassy be authorized to recommend Mr. Stettinius as permanent President at the Tuesday meeting. I also told Mr. Makins of the position which the Chinese had taken on this matter. 46 Mr. Makins expressed his pleasure at learning of this and said that if the Embassy received authorization to take the recommended action on Tuesday he would see that the British and the Chinese concerted their actions.

VARIOUS DEVELOPMENTS ABROAD

Dependent Peoples—On Sunday the eighth I made a note that Mr. Hayden Raynor would review with me the trusteeship memorandum which was to be sent to the President the following day,<sup>47</sup> and I further noted on Monday that "I am very dissatisfied with the memorandum I read last night on Trusteeships. position." I discussed the question over the phone twice with Secretary Forrestal on Monday. First, I told him that the memorandum approved by him 48 did not fit in with my views, and we decided the President should assemble everyone who was concerned and thrash the matter out. Later I discussed more fully with Secretary Forrestal my enforced position—a position taken by the Department without full consultation with me—on the U. S. policy for trusteeships. Forrestal said that he and Secretary Stimson would write me a letter 49 stating the views held by them and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Thanking him, I said that thereafter I could discuss the situation with President Roosevelt.

At the Tuesday meeting of my Staff Committee I reported that the President had replied 50 to our Trusteeships memorandum sent to him on April 9, agreeing with our position outlined in the memorandum, and had suggested that State, War and Navy representatives discuss the matter with him on April 19. I interpreted President Roosevelt's memorandum as meaning that the trusteeship question should be discussed at San Francisco (as agreed to at Yalta), that preliminary conversations with other Powers should take place after the meeting on the nineteenth, and that there would be sufficient time to handle the problem adequately, even with this delay. That evening (April 10) I phoned Secretary Forrestal that the President would like to see us on the nineteenth regarding trusteeships, and suggested that Colonel Stimson, Forrestal and myself "have the first appointment with the President when he returns". Forrestal remarked that Stimson would like the Chiefs of Staff to be there also, and I said I had no objection. On Thursday the twelfth I discussed trusteeships with Mr. Abraham Fortas, Under Secretary of the Interior, and told him that I was going to the President on this subject with the Secretaries of War and Navy before I left for San Francisco. Fortas explained about a memorandum he had sent to the President, with a copy going to me a day earlier.51 But I told him I had heard of the memorandum only from the President. Half an hour later I phoned Secretary Forrestal particularly to ask if he would explain to Colonel Stimson that I was disassociated from the State Department memorandum on Trusteeships, and Forrestal promised to pass on to the Colonel the information that I was out of town when our memorandum was prepared.

INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIPS

At Yalta, it was agreed that trusteeships should be discussed by representatives of the five governments proposed to become permanent members of the Security Council of the new International Organization preparatory to working out at San Francisco a provision of the charter of the world organization for setting up machinery to handle the problem. It was agreed that both the preliminary discussions and the negotiations at the Conference would be limited to principles and machinery and not embrace consideration of the disposition of specific territories. We have formally invited representatives of the other four governments to Washington for the preliminary consultation. They have all accepted and several representatives are already here.

We have been working diligently with the War, Navy and Interior Departments to develop an agreed U.S. Government position to submit for your approval for use in these conversations. A Draft Proposal has been prepared which is summarized in Supplement I, attached, and given in full in Supplement II,<sup>53</sup> which is being sent separately by pouch. This draft has not been approved by the Secretaries of War and Navy but we understand that with minor changes we all could agree on this plan. The main difference between us is not on the plan but on the question of considering trusteeship now.

The Secretaries of War and Navy are stating their position separately.<sup>54</sup> As we understand their view, it is that this Government should retain complete control over certain strategic areas in the Pacific and that we should make this known unequivocally to other nations and to the world before participating in any discussions. The Secretaries of War and Navy stress that they are opposed to any imperialistic annexation of territory on the part of the United States. On the contrary, they believe that the United States policy should be to hold any reserve strategic rights in a very real sense as trustee in the interests of the same cause for which we are now fighting—the cause of international peace and freedom in the Pacific, a cause in which all law-abiding nations in that area have a vital interest.

On April 10 the following message from the President to the Secretary of State was received by the White House Map Room:

&quot;Your message on International Trusteeship is approved in principle. I will see your representative and that of the Army and Navy on the 19th. That will be time enough. And if you have already left I will, of course, see you on the 25th." (800.014/4-1045)

The Department of State agrees, of course, that any plan must provide for our retaining such strategic positions, as of right, in the Pacific, as you and your military advisers deem necessary. It believes that this is provided for in the draft plan attached within the system of international trusteeship. The Department of the Interior, as Secretary Ickes has written you, agrees with the Department of State. The Department of State believes further, that if we do not include these areas, with adequate safeguards, within the trusteeship system we shall prejudice all possibility of international trusteeship, and that it would appear to large sections of the public to violate our expressed statements against annexation of territory as a result of the war.

Recommendations

- 1. As matters stand, the Department of State believes that no position can or should be taken by this Government until the Secretaries of State, War and Navy have thrashed this matter out with you in your presence, and your decision has been taken after full hearing so that a united front may be presented to this and other countries.
- 2. The Secretaries of War and Navy, I understand, do not believe it will be possible to discuss effectively the form of trusteeships as a general proposition without bringing into the discussion the particular areas as to which the probability of sharp disagreement is evident. They very much fear that the discussion of the territorial problems and adjustments involved would bring about disputes between the United Nations which might greatly prejudice the united military operations necessary for the prompt finishing of the war with Japan as well as that with Germany. They, therefore, favor postponing any discussion of this question now.
- 3. The Department of State recommends that the matter be settled now, and in favor of the attached draft, with possible minor revisions on which, I think, the three Departments can agree. The Department of State believes that having repeatedly taken the lead in raising this matter with other countries, we admit a serious internal weakness by not having a policy when the moment for action arrives. We also, by so doing, expose the whole Dumbarton Oaks plan to attack in this country and in other countries by its failure to face up to this question. The lack of trusteeship proposals in the plan to date has already been criticised. Recent polls indicate the public is in favor of such a system.

I hate to suggest interrupting your period of relaxation but, owing to the great importance of this problem, would you be willing to have a representative of the Department and a representative of the Army and Navy come down for a half hour's discussion of this subject, within the next few days, in order that a prompt decision can be reached.

SUPPLEMENT I

SUMMARY OF DRAFT PAPER ON TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

The draft on trusteeship system provides that each particular territory in the three categories mentioned in the Yalta agreement <sup>56</sup> would be placed under trusteeship by means of a special arrangement to which the title-holders, the present or prospective administering power, and the world organization would be the parties. The arrangement would specify in each case the rights and responsibilities of the administering power, and these would vary, in important respects, as between the strategic and the non-strategic areas.

In the case of the Japanese mandated islands, they would be placed under trusteeship on the basis of a previous agreement reached between ourselves and the other Principal Allied and Associated Powers of the last war, in whom title to these islands (as well as to all other mandated territories) was vested by the treaty of peace. The Principal Allied and Associated Powers were the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan. The last two would be compelled to give up their rights as a result of this war. This would mean, therefore, that having occupied these islands, we could proceed to reach an agreement with Great Britain and France as to our rights as a future administrator, and the three of us would then offer to place the islands under the trusteeship system on the basis of the agreement reached among us. Being in physical possession of the islands, we would surely be in a position to negotiate satisfactory agreements both with the other title-holders and with the organization.

The draft also provides that a trusteeship arrangement once concluded can be modified only with the concurrence of the Security Council, which requires our consent. Finally the draft provides that in the case of strategic areas exceptions can be made to the power of the Assembly to institute investigations (See Section Fd). The same reservation is made for strategic areas with respect to the powers of the trusteeship council to call for reports, to interrogate representatives of the administering authorities, to review finances, and to conduct inspections. (See Section G2).

NOTE FOR THE PRESIDENT

Washington, April 9, 1945.

I understand that this draft,50 which was worked out with representatives of the War and Navy Departments, would probably be acceptable to them if the following two changes were made:

(1) State specifically that the territories to be brought under the Trusteeship System as well as the terms, would in each case be a matter for subsequent agreement. We, of course, agree on this since it is in accord with the Yalta agreement and is stated in another way in Section B, Paragraph 1.

(2) They propose that the Security Council should be substituted for the General Assembly in all matters pertaining to strategic areas under the Trusteeship arrangements specified in Sections B, C, D, E and F. This should present no insuperable difficulty.

The Secretary then said that he proposed, at the morning session, to designate Mr. Hackworth as temporary chairman. 60 The Committee would then meet in the afternoon and elect a permanent chairman.61 The British had informed us that they would nominate Mr. Hackworth, and the Chinese that they would second the nomination. The Secretary inquired as to what the Soviet representative would do. Would he present the Soviet proposal and have the Committee vote on it?

The Ambassador said that he would have to think the matter over, but that he felt he must maintain his proposal. He rejected our proposal to have the representatives of the other three sponsors act as vice-chairmen, and our further proposal that we follow the Dumbarton Oaks procedure.

He then said that if the plan outlined by the Secretary was carried out, it would probably be necessary for the Soviet representative to abstain from voting, but that he would give the matter further thought.

[Here follows list of names of persons (23) present at meeting.] THE SECRETARY opened the meeting at 3:15 p. m., explaining that he had just been meeting with representatives of organized labor who were urging representation for labor at the San Francisco Conference. He said the agreement to invite consultants had gone some distance in satisfying the representatives of organized labor.

Press Statement on Delegation Discussions

THE SECRETARY stated that at his press conference that day the press had asked a number of questions, including whether the Delegates were free to speak on their own, how the Delegation would vote in the preliminary discussions, whether statements would be made concerning the progress of the discussions, and whether the discussions were going well. The Secretary asked whether he should perhaps tell the press that these were a series of private meetings at which the Delegates were briefing themselves on the substance to be discussed at San Francisco and that for the time being there would be nothing to say to the press. Senator Vandenberg proposed that, if the Delegation agreed upon a recommendation for change in the Proposals, there would be an advantage in letting the public know of this agreement. Representative Bloom suggested that no commitment be made in advance to make a statement, but that, if something was agreed upon which it was later thought wise to give to the press, then an appropriate statement could be made.

Senator Connally thought that it was important for the Delegation to act as a unit and that it would be unfortunate as far as the public went if arguments by the Delegates for different positions were published.

THE SECRETARY suggested that it would not be easy to make final decisions at this time on substantive questions since the proposals made at the Conference would influence our position. He did not think it would "set well" with the other nations if we issued suggestions for changes in the Proposals in advance of the Conference. Senator Vandenberg urged that, if agreement was reached on an important point, he was convinced that it would be healthy for the public to know about the agreement now.

THE SECRETARY suggested that at the close of the discussions a statement might be made to the effect that they had been productive and that on certain questions the following positions have been reached, although of course these would be subject to change. Senator Vandenberg said that he thought public opinion had developed to a point where it was fertile for any seed that might be planted and that it would be dangerous to withhold from the public the conclusions of the American Delegation.

Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the Four Sponsoring Governments had agreed that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals should be the basis for discussion at the Conference and that the further proposal had been made by the British and supported by the other governments that none of the Sponsoring Governments would introduce any ideas for changes in the Proposals without prior consultation. Of course this consultation would not be binding. This procedure, he thought, was a wise one since, if each of the Four Sponsoring Governments brought in radical changes, the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals might be completely wrecked. He noted that up to now the British and Chinese had not suggested any changes in the Proposals.

It was decided at the suggestion of the Secretary that for the time being no statement would be made on the discussions, but that, if something did come up which should be said, the press would be immediately notified.

THE SECRETARY asked what he should say as to the voting method on the Delegation. It was generally agreed that he should say that the Delegation would vote by simple majority vote.

DISCUSSION OF PROPOSALS AND SUGGESTIONS FOR CONSIDERATION

The Secretary asked Mr. Pasvolsky to open the discussion of Proposals and Suggestions for Consideration, Book 2.64 Mr. Pasvolsky said that Book 3 contained a comprehensive analysis of the views of the other governments and of private groups on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, whereas Book 2 summarized this material and brought forward certain definite suggestions. He said that the members of the Delegation would be assigned to special committees which would work on certain portions of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, and that these committees would have before them, in addition to the text of the Proposals, statements of changes suggested for discussion by the various delegations. Each committee, he said, would then work on a particular part of the Proposals and the drafting would be done largely by subcommittees.

From our point of view, he continued, there were two things to consider: (1) What amendments we ourselves would wish to offer to the Proposals and to have included in the basic documentation of the committees of the Conference; and (2) What our attitude was to be with respect to the various proposals brought forward by other governments, since it was almost inevitable that a great number of proposals would be presented. He added that it still had to be determined how much consultation there would be between the Sponsoring Governments on the suggestions that they would make. In any case, however, it was necessary to go through the Proposals discussing them from these two points of view, so that it would be possible for the staff to draft its text for a charter on the basis of the agreements reached. We would then go to the Conference with a document in the form of a charter.

For the moment, Mr. Pasvolsky said, we should concern ourselves only with the basic ideas and not bother about the language. A discussion of the language, he said, would occur in considering the actual draft charter.

Senator Connally asked whether it was the intention to rewrite the entire Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that a good many provisions of the Proposals had not been criticized and that little attention would have to be paid to these provisions. However, he said, in rewriting the whole document in the form of a legal charter, the language of all provisions would inevitably be altered. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals was not a legal document and that the immediate task of the Delegation was to decide what would go into the contract or charter which would be the legal document.

Dean Gildersleeve said it would be helpful to know how much we would be likely to change the Proposals—how closely we were tied to them as they stood. Was it necessary, she asked, to restrict the suggestions only to the most vital ones or was there a good deal of elbow room? The Secretary replied that he felt very definitely that there was not very much elbow room in view of the Soviet position that "with the Proposals we had already arrived". Dean Gildersleeve said that this then meant we should restrict our proposed changes to the most vital ones?

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that any change that would affect the basic relations of the different organs, the basic obligations of member states, and the balance of the whole structure, particularly the relation between the General Assembly and the Security Council, between regional arrangements and the central organization, and between large and small powers, would have to be very carefully considered. On the other hand, he believed the Delegation could feel freer to suggest changes when considering questions that affected the framework of the Proposals themselves, particularly on matters which were not actually covered in the Proposals but would be necessary for a legal instrument. He added that most of the Proposals, he thought, would be in the form of additions to the Proposals as they stood. He said that some additions might be necessary, in particular to more fully define the criteria of action of members of the Organization and to clarify the operation of the machinery.

THE SECRETARY said that some provisions should be made to meet Senator Vandenberg's criticism that the Proposals did not look backward as well as forward. Mr. Pasvolsky said he thought this matter was already in the document, although it might not be clear, and that this whole question would have to be carefully examined.

Name

Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that several alternative names had been suggested for the Organization, but that "The United Nations" had been agreed to, not because it satisfied everybody, but because it seemed the least of several evils. He added that emphasis was placed by the use of this name on the unity of the nations. He said further that the name had been criticized because of its association with a war-time coalition, but that in fact it applied to something larger than that coalition. Representative Eaton agreed that the nations must be united for peace as well as for war. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the name proposed by Mexico,65 "Permanent Union of Nations" when translated into English suggested a superstate. Some proposals, he added, would introduce the word "security" into the name, but they had been rejected on the grounds that they were too limiting. He concluded that the most unobjectionable name was "The United Nations". THE SECRETARY suggested that the names of the organs be considered in connection with this question. Mr. Pasyolsky referred to the titles as indicated in Chapter IV and noted that in time each organ might become known as The United Nations General Assembly, The United Nations Security Council, et cetera. Dean Gildersleeve noted that there had been little criticism of these titles, and Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that there was little opposition to them.

It was then generally agreed to support the name for the Organization "The United Nations".

Preamble

Mr. Pasvolsky called attention to the fact that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals had no preamble and that an introductory statement had been included for the sole purpose of bringing in the name "The United Nations". On the other hand, the charter of the Organization would of course have a preamble. Senator Vandenberg noted the preamble and the purposes tend to overlap and that this raised an important problem. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that at Dumbarton Oaks certain points which might ordinarily have been put in a preamble had been put in the body of the document in order to give them more emphasis. It was then possible to state in other parts of the document that the Security Council would act in accordance with the purposes and principles of the organization. He added that of course it would be possible to combine the purposes and principles into one section. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the preamble might include a statement of general objectives, while the purposes and principles would be more specifically stated as binding the Security Council in the performance of its duties. Representative Bloom wondered whether it would not be better to write the preamble after the document had been studied. Mr. Pasvolsky thought this would be a good procedure, that discussion might continue on the rest of the document, and the Delegation could then return to the preamble. The Secre-TARY agreed with this suggestion.

Chapter I: Purposes

Paragraph 1.—Mr. Pasvolsky read the text of Paragraph 1 and then proceeded to outline the alternative suggestions that had been made. He noted that in developing Chapter I the question had repeatedly arisen as to whether the obligations and criteria for action should be broadly stated or enumerated. It was agreed, he said, that it was safer to spell out these questions as little as possible. Dean Gildersleeve and Representative Eaton agreed that the broad statement was more satisfactory.

Mr. Pasvolsky thought that there would be considerable pressure to introduce a statement guaranteeing the independence of states. It had been felt, however, that the reference to sovereign equality in Chapter II adequately covered the matter.

MR. PASVOLSKY noted the suggested addition to Paragraph 1 "and with due regard for the principles of justice and equity and in accordance with the rule of law." Dean Gildersleeve asked if this addition would cause trouble. Senator Vandenberg said that, even if it should cause trouble, it should be added. He said that he presumed that this addition was to meet in part his suggestion for a reference to the establishment of justice and the promotion of fundamental freedoms. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the reference to fundamental freedoms was proposed for Paragraph 3. Senator Vandenberg questioned whether the additions to Chapter I met his suggestion. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that, with the addition of reference to the promotion of justice in the preamble, Senator Vandenberg's suggestion would be taken care of.

Senator Vandenberg noted that he had proposed a separate paragraph reading: "to establish justice and to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms". Senator Connally thought it was important to avoid giving the impression that the Organization would deal with individuals. Its main function would be to settle disputes between governments and it would be unfortunate to arouse hopes that the Organization would directly help individuals when this could not be realized.

Mr. Armstrong questioned the reference to "the rule of law". He wondered whether this referred to the body of existing treaties or what was laid down in the charter. Mr. Sandifer suggested revising it to read "and with due regard for international law". Mr. Dulles agreed with Mr. Armstrong that the reference was altogether ambiguous and that it would be a mistake to put in the reference in its present form. Senator Connally expressed agreement with this position also. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the Chinese had proposed a reference to international law along the lines suggested 66 and that it would be important to put some reference of this sort in the present document. Representative Bloom thought that the public in general was "fed up" with international law and that they would not greatly appreciate the word. Mr. Sandifer pointed out that in fact the success of the whole enterprise depended upon the development of respect for international law, and that respect for treaties would be at the root of any successful general organization to maintain the peace. He added that, while some treaties are in disrepute, this is not true of all treaties.

Senator Vandenberg felt that the really important part of the proposed amendment was the reference to justice and equity, that his fundamental point of view was that the total absence of the reference to justice in the document must be corrected, and that the American Delegation could only enhance its position in the public eye if it became the champion of justice. He would therefore oppose waiting for other delegations to propose this amendment and would urge that the American Delegation propose it first. Mr. Taft asked how proposals of this sort would be brought forward at the Conference. Mr. Pasvolsky said they would be presented in open meeting. Senator Vandenberg stated that, if at the end of the Conference the document still did not contain any reference to justice, then the American Delegation would be out of luck.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that, in view of the criticism of the reference to international law, it might be well to bring in such reference elsewhere. At Mr. Dulles' suggestion the phrase was then redrafted "in accordance with the principles of justice and equity". This rephrasing was generally agreed to and it was understood that this proposal would be made by the Delegation as a change in the Proposals as they stood.

Mr. Pasvolsky asked whether the Delegation wished to include a guarantee of the independence of states. He added that the British had strenuously opposed this suggestion when it had been raised by the Chinese at Dumbarton Oaks.<sup>67</sup> He added that Mr. Wellington Koo had later said that personally he thought the arguments against inclusion of the guarantee of independence were sound. Mr. Dulles thought it would be a great mistake to include such a guarantee, since it would tend to guarantee the freezing of the world forever and would guarantee the possession by nations of their colonies for all time. It was then generally agreed that any reference to the guarantee of independence of states would be opposed.

Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the enumeration of a list of subjects with which the Organization would deal, as proposed by Venezuela, and not really belong in a statement of purposes. Moreover, he did not think this addition would be pressed. Senator Connally thought the main objection to this suggestion was that items not enumerated were likely to be considered excluded.

Paragraph 2.—Dean Gildersleeve asked what was meant by the paragraph: "To develop friendly relations among nations and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace". Mr. Pas-VOLSKY thought this might be the proper place to include a reference to the development of international law. He added that this paragraph was in effect a "catch-all" for the purposes otherwise left out by the statements in paragraph 1 and paragraph 3. He noted that the Russians in particular were interested in this paragraph. Senator CONNALLY commented that the Russians were still suspicious that the world was against them and this probably accounted for their emphasis upon the development of friendly relations. Senator Vanden-BERG said that he would be glad to have this paragraph left in if it was actually lived up to. Dean Gildersleeve said it was really in the form of a rather pious wish. Mr. Pasvolsky commented that the British and Russians both like this particular paragraph. Senator CONNALLY said that he could not quarrel with it, but that he did doubt the wisdom of putting in any reference to international law at this point. Representative Eaton said that he thought that the development of friendly relations was in fact the foundation for a new Mr. Dulles suggested that the reference to the rule of law had been cut out in the first paragraph since there was no adequate body of law at the present time. However, since we all want to develop a body of international law, he could see the great value of putting in a reference to the promotion or development of international law as a basis for the peace. This law, he added, would be developed by decisions of the court and by the codification of international law.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that paragraph 2 be revised to read "to develop friendly relations among nations, to foster the development of international law, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace." Representative Bloom asked why the phrase "appropriate measures" was included since it was implicit that the measures would be appropriate. His suggestion to omit the word "appropriate" was agreed to. Senator Connally commented that he was opposed to introducing the reference to international law but that he had been out-voted.

Paragraph 3.—Mr. Pasvolsky explained that the attempt at Dumbarton Oaks to add a reference to the development of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the chapter on purposes had caused a great deal of difficulty. The Soviet representatives had demanded that a criterion for membership in the Organization be included to the effect that only non-fascist nations were eligible. As a result of the controversy it had been agreed to put the reference to human rights and fundamental freedoms in the chapter on the Economic and Social Council. He thought, however, that this decision need not be taken as final.

It was then agreed that the proposed addition should be adopted. Paragraph 4.—Mr. Armstrong said that the text of paragraph 4 "to afford a center for harmonizing the actions of nations in the achievement of these common ends" was not satisfactory. Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that this was a favorite idea of the British Delegation and that they would be greatly disturbed if it were taken out. DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said that its presence did no damage. Mr. Armstrong questioned the use of the term "center". In any event, he said, it was a center through which the members could harmonize their actions. Mr. Sandifer suggested that at one time the term "means" had been proposed instead of "center". Senator Vandenberg noted that, if properly drafted, this purpose might become the greatest objective of the Organization. The Secretary indicated that the Delegation was apparently in general agreement on the sense of this paragraph and that it could be drafted later more exactly. Mr. Pasvolsky said that Chile's suggestion "to include a statement that enumerated purposes do not exclude any others of similar nature" was inherent in the document.

The Secretary asked whether all the comments of the governments had already been sent in or whether others were still to come. Mr. Pasvolsky said that all the comments that had been received to date were summarized in Book 3, but that two or three states had reserved the right to send additional comments and two or three other states were still planning to send comments.

THE SECRETARY noted that at the opening of the Conference the chairmen of the different delegations would be given opportunities to present their views. This matter, he added, was now under discussion, but he was recommending that, following the opening of the Conference by the President at 4:30 p.m., the next two days would be used to give each delegation 15 minutes to present their views. In this way within two days all 46 states would have an opportunity to present their positions. He asked the Delegation to think over whether this would be a good procedure.

Chapter II: Principles

Mr. Dulles questioned what this chapter was intended to accomplish and said that he did not understand what the principles were. In part they were long-range purposes and in part, specific undertakings by the member governments. He thought that they were extremely dangerous in their present form, and he did not see what role they were supposed to play. In particular, he said, the looseness of the commitments bothered him; e.g., all members undertake to give every assistance or they undertake not to give any assistance. What, he asked, does this mean? He thought it was most important to clear up the confusion involved in this chapter.

Senator Vandenberg asked what the difference was between the purposes and principles of the Organization. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that the principles were rules of action, whereas the purposes were the aims of action. Mr. Pasvolsky added that paragraph 5 needed to be redrafted since all members would give every assistance in accordance with the provisions of the charter. Mr. Dulles remarked that he did not know what was meant by the term "principle" and that he thought the rather generalized and vague commitments in that chapter might jeopardize getting the charter through the Senate. He referred in particular to the obligation to settle disputes by peaceful means. Mr. Pasvolsky said this meant that states would use none but peaceful means in the settlement of their disputes.

MR. PASVOLSKY added that the next paragraph obligated members of the Organization to refrain from the use of force no matter what happened in settling their disputes. Senator Connally thought this was just another statement of the Kellogg-Briand Pact. Mr. Dulles thought that this statement was already implicit in the preceding paragraph. Mr. Pasvolsky commented that there were two obligations: the positive one to settle disputes by peaceful means and the negative one not to use force in settling disputes.

Mr. Acheson pointed out that there were two types of principles included in this chapter, e.g., the basis of the Organization on the principle of sovereign equality and the enumeration of the obligations of members. He felt that the chapter needed to be very carefully considered. Mr. Dulles agreed and pointed out that he was afraid that this chapter would be taken as just another chapter of principles in the French meaning of the term, to accept "en principe". This in effect, he said, meant that one was not getting anything. If it was intended to make these principles substantial, then he thought they should be gone over very carefully and made specific undertakings. Otherwise he thought the chapter would be open to a flood of criticism. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that these principles were in fact basic obligations both of the members of the Organization and of the Organization itself. He referred to the opening paragraph: "In pursuit of the purposes mentioned in Chapter I the Organization and its members should act in accordance with the following principles".

It was agreed that the further detailed discussion of these paragraphs under Chapter II would be postponed until the next meeting.

THE SECRETARY suggested that the Delegates read through their books in preparation for the meeting the next day.

[Informal Notes—Extract]

Press Policy

THE SECRETARY stated that any statement to be made would be by the Delegation as a whole after agreement upon it. Mr. Armstrong considered that it was better to hold off the issuance of any statement until the end of the preliminary discussions because of changes which might take place in the position of the Delegation. Moreover, he thought it was advantageous not to give our hand away by releasing statements to the press. Senator Vandenberg thought that the Delegation would be better off by giving a brief report. THE SECRETARY suggested that the Delegation review its work at the end of the week and see whether a statement should be made to the press at that time and suggested that a further review be made at the conclusion of the discussions for the same purpose. Senator Connally observed that the Delegation would be better off if no evidence of division among various delegates were revealed and publicity given thereto.75 He thought that as much as possible should be kept from the press. Rep-RESENTATIVE EATON stated that he had not made any statement whatever to the press. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that leaks would interfere in negotiations with other countries and said that at Dumbarton Oaks the leaks had interfered with the work and created pressures. He thought that leaks now would cause more difficulties in getting our ideas adopted at San Francisco.

COMMITTEE OF JURISTS

THE SECRETARY reported that Mr. Hackworth had been elected Chairman of the meeting 76 and that the French representative 77 had been elected rapporteur. The Secretary added that the Committee had decided to accept the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice as a basis for its work.

DISCUSSION OF THE DOCUMENT ON PROPOSALS AND SUGGESTIONS (Edition of April 9, 1945 78)

MR. PASVOLSKY stated that there had been criticism of the term "peace-loving states" and suggested that the phrase "its members" be substituted. With reference to the additional underscored phrase, Mr. Pasvolsky stated that it was important only in placing emphasis on the voluntary association of nations.

SENATOR VANDENBERG expressed his satisfaction in the use of the word "sovereign" and stated that it was "dear to our hearts". SEN-ATOR CONNALLY stated that it was useful to use the phrase "sovereign equality" as long as it did not affect voting. Mr. Armstrong considered that the term "equality" was incorrectly used in terms of voting.

The Delegation agreed that the phrase "its members" should be substituted for "peace-loving states". It also decided that the clause, "who voluntarily accept obligations to cooperate in the furtherance of their common purposes," should be deleted at the end of the suggestion for Paragraph 1.

Mr. Pasvolsky called attention to the suggestion for a new paragraph 2 which would accord to the middle-sized states a special posi-It was designed particularly to divide the members not having permanent membership on the Security Council into two categories. REPRESENTATIVE EATON inquired why this provision should not be put in Chapter VI. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that certain criteria had been proposed for the election of members to the Security Council, as follows:

1. Their ability to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security;

 $<sup>^{76}</sup>$  Jurist 36 (11), G/26, April 13, UNCIO Documents, vol. 14, p. 52.  $^{77}$  Jules Basdevant.  $^{78}$  In Book 2. Not printed.

- 2. Their geographical location;
- 3. Their contribution to the war; and
- 4. Their willingness to conclude agreements for the supply of forces.

He added his belief that the General Assembly should not be bound by any rules in the election of non-permanent members of the Security Council.

Senator Connally considered that some limitation should be placed on the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council. He had in mind particularly the Latin American countries. Mr. Pasvolsky recommended that no provision be inserted in the Charter specifying rules to be followed by the General Assembly in the election of non-permanent members to the Security Council. The suggestion for a new paragraph 2 was accordingly deleted.

MR. PASVOLSKY called attention to the alternative proposed by Chile under which states of other regions would not be obligated to participate in military action if a conflict affected only one region. The Secretary stated that the Latin American countries were worried about the possible use of Soviet troops in the Western Hemisphere. Mr. Taft suggested that this matter could be taken care of by the special agreement for the supply of forces. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that it would be possible for us to prevent the use of non-American forces in this hemisphere if we wanted to. He added that Chile would not want to contribute any forces for use outside of the hemisphere.

Senator Vandenberg suggested that the Chapter on Principles might well be eliminated since they are taken care of in other parts of the document. Senator Connally thought that repetition might be avoided. Mr. Pasvolsky, in replying to these observations, stated that such a proposal would encounter considerable opposition. He thought it desirable for the Delegation to concentrate on the question of whether or not the ideas contained in the Chapter were to be supported.

The Delegation agreed to retain the text of this paragraph provisionally and to defer fuller consideration to a later meeting.

Mr. Dulles considered that the obligation contained in this paragraph was a dangerous one and raised the question as to what would happen if a member refused to accept a method of pacific settlement. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that a definite obligation on members was necessary and that this obligation should be distinguished from the procedures for pacific settlement which were set forth in Chapter VIII. Senator Vandenberg wondered whether this text precluded the right of self-defense, and asserted that this right would need to be identified. Senator Connally observed that there could not be any self-defense until there had been resort to arms. Senator Vandenberg offered the hypothetical case of an attack upon our Embassy in Argentina. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the right of self-defense existed but that there was an obligation to notify the Council. If the Council failed to act immediately then a country was free to act. He considered that self-defense was implicit in the document but inquired how it could be spelled out. He stated that no suitable language had yet been found.

Mr. Dulles considered that both paragraphs 3 and 4 were too broad in scope and that they gave the illusion of security through sweeping commitments. He thought that from the standpoint of keeping the peace we must not give commitments that create a false illusion. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that this was the only place in the document where a positive obligation is placed on members to settle their disputes by peaceful means. Mr. Dulles stated that we weren't prepared to settle all disputes by peaceful means and pointed out, for example, the case of our immigration laws which were claimed by China to be insufficient. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that immigration was a matter of domestic concern. Mr. Dulles raised the question as to what would happen if China threatened to use force in case the immigration question were considered to be an international dispute rather than one of domestic concern. Representative Bloom raised the question whether any domestic law would be subject to the jurisdiction of the Organization as long as it was recognized by international law as a question falling within the domestic jurisdiction of a country.

Senator Vandenberg suggested the addition of the words "pursuant to all the terms of this document" as a possible limitation of the obligation. Mr. Taft suggested that the limitation of this principle might be effected by the addition of the phrase "subject to paragraph 7, Chapter VIII, Section A" which excepted from the jurisdiction of the Organization disputes arising out of matters which by international law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the state concerned. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the question was whether this paragraph should be read as an obligation on states to settle their disputes or whether it should be interpreted to mean that they be settled only by peaceful means.

Mr. Dulles suggested the possible use of the negative form, "shall not settle their disputes by other than peaceful means". Mr. Pasvolsky then suggested the following text to which the Delegation agreed:

"All members of the Organization shall refrain from using any but peaceful means in the settlement of their international disputes and shall use these means pursuant to the provisions of the Charter in such a manner that international peace and security are not endangered."

Paragraphs 5 and 6

Paragraphs 5 and 6 of the Proposals were considered separately after the Suggestion for Paragraph 6 of the document combining these paragraphs had been set aside. With respect to Paragraph 5 of the Proposals, it was decided that the text should make clear that the obligation of members to give assistance to the Organization should be in accordance with the provisions of the Charter. The following text was proposed, subject to subsequent refinement in drafting:

"All members of the Organization shall give every assistance to the Organization in accordance with the provisions of the Charter in any action undertaken by it in accordance with the provisions of the Charter."

The Delegation agreed that Paragraph 6 of the Proposals should be modified along the following lines, the precise drafting of which would be left to the Drafting Committee:

"All members of the Organization shall refrain from giving to any state against which enforcement action is being undertaken by the Organization assistance which would interfere with or nullify the action of the Organization."

Paragraph 7

Following Mr. Pasvolsky's explanation that the Suggestion for Paragraph 7 was to bring this principle into line with the Purposes, the Delegation approved the Suggestion for Paragraph 7 without change.

Paragraph 8

The Delegation agreed to delete the Suggestion for Paragraph 8 in view of the fact that provision for the promotion of human rights had been incorporated in the Chapter on Purposes.

Paragraph 9

THE SECRETARY suggested that the Delegation need not consider the Suggestion for Paragraph 9 because the provisions on trusteeship had not yet been submitted. Dr. Bowman expressed the view that a provision of this character did not belong in the Chapter on Principles. It was agreed to delete the Suggestion for paragraph 9.

Paragraph 10

Mr. Taft considered that the Suggestion for paragraph 10 tended to repeat that section of the Chapter on purposes relating to the development of international law. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that this Suggestion actually supplemented the text in the Chapter on Purposes. Senator Vandenberg thought that the Senate would support a provision such as that proposed. The Secretary thought that the text should stand without change. Representative Bloom proposed that the word "needs" be substituted by the word "conditions". Representative Eaton thought that a provision of this nature would be welcomed by the little states as a hopeful measure. Both Mr. Armstrong and Dr. Bowman considered that this provision might be taken by the small states as an excuse for aggression against their neighbors.

MR. PASVOLSKY observed that the use of the word "treaties" might cause trouble and considered that there would undoubtedly be opposition to the acceptance of an obligation to uphold both good and bad treaties. Dr. Bowman observed that if the word "treaties" were left in, it would mean the acceptance of treaties between the present time and the time at which the International Court begins to function, and that such treaties would have to be voted by the Court. He thought that the reference to treaties should be omitted. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that a distinction might be made between treaties and treaty obligations. Senator Connally said that he could not agree to let the Security Council have authority to change treaties.

The Delegation then agreed that Paragraph 10 should be revised as follows:

"All members of the Organization shall respect international law and treaty obligations and promote their development and adaptation to changing conditions."

It was further agreed that this paragraph should be reviewed at a later time in the light of Senator Vandenberg's proposed amendment for Chapter VIII A.<sup>80</sup>

PRESS STATEMENT

THE SECRETARY interrupted the discussion of the document to read a draft statement to be made to the press if the Delegation approved. After brief discussion and the acceptance of several drafting changes, the following statement was approved by the Delegation:

The Delegation will be engaged for the next few days in a continuing examination of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and all suggestions concerning them. It is the aim of these meetings to develop unified opinion on the part of the Delegation on all points which may come up at San Francisco. It is not possible to give day-to-day information on the trend of these discussions because tentative views reached today must be reviewed in light of subsequent discussion of other subjects. Towards the end of the week we will review the developments of the week to determine whether we can give you an overall picture of our progress.

In view of the foregoing I cannot confirm or deny the story in this morning's press concerning yesterday's meeting of the Delegation.

While we hope to attain complete unanimity, I can tell you, however, that the Delegation has decided to take decisions by a simple majority vote.81

Paragraph 11

SENATORS CONNALLY and VANDENBERG expressed concern with the phraseology of Paragraph 11 concerning the obligations for nonmember states. Senator Vandenberg proposed that this paragraph be stated in a negative rather than a positive form along the following lines:

"The Organization should ensure that states not members of the Organization should not interfere with action taken by the Organization in accordance with these principles for the maintenance of peace and security."

The refinement of the text was referred to the Drafting Committee. Additional Alternatives for Chapter II

The Delegation rejected all of the additional alternatives which had been proposed for Chapter II. With regard to the proposal concerning freedom of information, Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that this could be dealt with under the provisions for economic and social cooperation in Chapter IX. The Secretary proposed that the Mexico City Resolution on this subject 82 might be condensed and placed in the Charter. Mr. Pasvolsky considered the Mexican City resolution impractical. He thought it would be necessary either to have something real on this subject or a meaningless platitude, and suggested that no provision be made. After further discussion it was agreed that while something would need to be done at San Francisco with regard to freedom of information, it was not appropriate to incorporate a provision on this subject in Chapter II.

Chapter III—Membership

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the question of membership rested on two theories: (1) whether it should be universal to start with; or (2) whether initial members should be those of like mind and that provision be made for the admission of others who are willing to accept the obligations of membership. He stated that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals were based on the second theory and that there had been no serious disagreement with that provision. He also pointed out that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals had made no provision for initial members and that the formula suggested would make it possible to include Poland as an original member if it were not represented at San Francisco.

Representative Bloom suggested that the word "nations" rather than "states" be used so that there would be no confusion concerning the definition of a state. Dr. Bowman suggested that it might be necessary to include a definition of a state. Senator Vandenberg inquired how India would qualify if the term "state" were employed. Mr. Savage pointed out that India was a signatory to the Declaration by the United Nations and could qualify under that classification.

THE SECRETARY proposed and it was agreed that the provision for initial members should be limited to those states signatory to the Charter which would be listed in the Annex of the Charter and that the second sentence of paragraph 1 on initial members should be deleted.

Mr. Pasvolsky then called attention to the suggestion for paragraph 2 of the Suggestion and contrasted it with the alternative submitted by the French Government which would tend to restrict membership in the Organization.<sup>83</sup> It was then agreed that paragraph 2 should be changed to read as follows, refinement in the text being left to the drafting committee:

"Other states should be admitted in accordance with the procedure provided in Chapter V, Section C, when they have demonstrated their willingness and ability to fulfill their obligations under the Charter."

THE SECRETARY requested that a list of states be prepared showing the members of the United Nations, other states and political units of uncertain status.84 Mr. Pasvolsky stated that a memorandum would also be prepared on the qualifications for membership which would include the discussions at Dumbarton Oaks and the Soviet proposal on non-fascist states.85

Chapter IV—Principal Organs

Mr. Pasvolsky, stating that this paragraph merely listed the principal organs of the Organization, thought that it was desirable to retain it. He also proposed that if this Chapter were retained in the Charter, it would be desirable to list all of the organs included in the Suggestion rather than to restrict the list to those organs named in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Paragraph 2

Senator Connally considered that the second paragraph on other organs and agencies might be objected to by the Senate because it implied that many other types of agencies could be created by the Organization. He recommended that it be omitted. It was agreed that this paragraph should be deleted.

STRATEGY ON PROPOSED CHANGES

THE SECRETARY proposed that a list be prepared of additional provisions which the Delegation wished to insist upon and that another list be drawn up showing provisions which the Delegation was prepared to accept. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that a single list of additional proposals be drawn up, and that the Delegation then review the list to determine which of those items should be put forward and urged by the Delegation and which of them would be accepted, if proposed by other delegations.

The meeting was adjourned at 12:00 noon.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of participants, including representatives of the United States (7); United Kingdom (2); Soviet Union (2); and China (2).]

I. MINUTES OF THE FIRST MEETING

The minutes of the first meeting 86 were distributed.

II. MATTERS, UNFINISHED, CARRIED OVER FROM THE FIRST MEETING

A. Organization of the Conference

- 1. It was reported that the British and Chinese Governments had approved the suggestions made in the Department's memorandum of March 30, but that no word had been received thus far from the Soviet Government. The Soviet Ambassador was urged to seek the views of his government urgently, and he replied that he would do so.
- 2. Lord Halifax pointed out that his Government's approval of the memorandum of March 30 was subject to more precise delimitation at a later date of the functions of the various committees. He also said that the Foreign Office wished to know to which committee of the Conference would fall questions concerning the winding up of the League of Nations. It was replied that in the first instance this problem might be expected to be taken up in the Steering Committee.

It was also pointed out that the Governments' members of the League of Nations which are participants in the Conference might wish to discuss this problem among themselves. Presumably all that the Conference should do would be to authorize the future international organization to enter into discussions with the League of Nations regarding the liquidation of the League or the merger of the League with it.

- 3. Ambassador Gromyko asked for a definition of the Executive Committee. It was replied that, according to the Department's conception, the Steering Committee would be made up of the chairmen of all delegations represented at the Conference, and that the chairmen of 11 of the delegations, including the sponsoring powers and 7 others, would comprise the Executive Committee. The Executive Committee would, as its name implies, provide in effect a working group of the Steering Committee.
- 4. Lord Halifax raised the question of the chairmanship of the Conference, saying that his Government felt that the natural procedure would be for the Secretary of State, as chairman of the host delegation, to take the chair at the start of the Conference and to remain in the chair; if he were not able to be present at a certain meeting, he would invite one of the vice-chairmen to take his place. THE SECRETARY thanked Lord Halifax for his statement, and said that he wished to make it clear that the United States Government has no ambition in this matter, but that it does feel strongly that in the interests of efficient management of the Conference, there should be but one president of the Conference. The Chinese Ambassador said that his Government would like to see the chairman of the United States delegation be president of the Conference, and that in the absence of the president, the vice presidents should rotate. Ambas-SADOR GROMYKO reiterated his Government's proposal that there be four chairmen, saying that in respect of this important position it would be desirable to follow the principle of the equality of the sponsoring governments. Mr. Gromyko added that the Soviet Union does not ask for any privileges at the Conference and would refuse, if invited, to have the chairman of its delegation be the sole president. In reply to the Secretary's point, he stated that he felt that the Conference could be organized just as effectively with four chairmen as with one as the work of the Conference would be carried on by the LORD HALIFAX asked if the Soviet Government single secretariat. would feel it possible to agree to there being four presidents, all equal, thus preserving the principle of the equality of the sponsoring governments, subject to agreement that the British, Soviet and Chinese presidents invite the American president (the Secretary of State), as the chairman of the host delegation, to be the active president of the Conference. The Secretary said that he assumed that this proposal would in substance provide for one regular president and three honorary presidents. After further discussion it was agreed that the Soviet Ambassador would refer the suggestion to his Government, that the Secretary would take it up with the President, and that Lord Halifax (who had offered this course as a purely personal suggestion) would refer it to the British Government.

B. Allocation of Conference Positions

The Department's memorandum of April 9 on this subject was submitted and explained, and it was pointed out that the Department felt that a list giving the allocation of the Conference positions should be submitted to the Steering Committee at its first meeting as the joint recommendation of the sponsors. Lord Halifax suggested that this matter might be left open until San Francisco when the Secretaries General of the delegations of the four sponsoring governments should meet and agree on a list. In reply to this suggestion, THE SEC-RETARY pointed out that it would be easier to agree on a list in advance than under the pressure certain to exist during the opening days of the Conference. Mr. Gromyko agreed with the Secretary. Lord HALIFAX said that he would communicate the Secretary's views to his Government.

C. Problem of Official Languages

LORD HALIFAX stated that his Government agreed with the United States' suggestions subject to the proviso that this decision with respect to the Conference should not prejudice the decision as to the official language or languages of the international organization. The CHINESE AMBASSADOR also agreed. Mr. Gromyko stated that he had received no word from his government on this point.

D. Unofficial Representation of Certain International Organizations

1. The draft communication prepared by the Department was read.87 In reply to The Secretary's question as to why the Red Cross had been omitted, it was pointed out that that organization is not intergovernmental. As to the five organizations in question it was stated that the British, Soviet and Chinese Governments had indicated to the Department that they agreed that these organizations should be invited to send unofficial representatives to the Conference. Soviet approval had been given by the Soviet Government to the United States Embassy in Moscow.88

st See UNCIO Documents, vol. 1, p. 3, for text of message which was sent to the following inter-governmental organizations: League of Nations, Permanent Court of International Justice, International Labor Organization, United Nations Interim Commission on Food and Agriculture, and United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

2. Lord Halifax said that, because of its tri-partite nature the International Labor Organization has a special character making it somewhat different from the other bodies. 89 He, therefore, suggested that while the other bodies might be invited to send two or three representatives, it would be preferable in the case of the ILO to invite it to send four or five representatives. The Secretary and The CHINESE AMBASSADOR agreed. [The Soviet Ambassador said that he would like to consult his Government on this subject. 190

Amendments

Mr. Hiss stated the Soviet position that no amendments should be either proposed or supported without the agreement of the sponsors. Mr. Hiss also reported that the Chinese Ambassador had asked whether the American proposal referred only to matters brought up before the Conference as a whole or whether it also applied to discussions in the committees.91 To that question Mr. Hiss had replied that the Department's feeling was that the four sponsoring powers should consult regarding formal proposals put forward by any one of them in any organ of the Conference, but that this suggestion would not apply to informal statements in commission or committee discussions. Lord Halifax said that his Government agrees with the general purpose behind the United States and Soviet proposals, but that in the British view it would be preferable that there should be no rigid rule. The four sponsoring governments should not feel obliged to consult and agree on unimportant proposals for changes in the Dumbarton Oaks drafts, but they should feel bound to consult before making any major proposals for change, or before accepting any major changes suggested by others. Mr. Gromyko amplified this thought by stating that the delegations of the four sponsoring powers should consult on proposals made by any country (a) which would change [directly or would affect indirectly] 92 the character of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, or (b) which were important in other respects. With this statement The Secretary, Lord Halifax and the CHINESE AMBASSADOR agree. THE SECRETARY added the thought that this is not an advance agreement to agree but simply to consult. GROMYKO said that he hoped that the sponsors would always work in close accord.

III. Additions Presented by China to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals

THE SOVIET AMBASSADOR said that he would do his best to obtain an answer from his Government in the near future.<sup>93</sup>

IV. PROCEDURES AT THE OPENING SESSION AND THE INITIAL PLENARY SESSIONS

THE SECRETARY read the Department's memorandum of April 9 on this subject. A short discussion followed as to whether the chairmen of all delegations should be given an opportunity to speak at the opening plenary sessions of the Conference, and it was agreed that they should. This procedure, THE SECRETARY observed, would give an opportunity to bring all views out into the sunlight at an early stage of the Conference.

V. RECORDS OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONFERENCE

It was agreed that members would study the Department's memorandum of April 9 on this subject.

VI. It was agreed that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and the Yalta agreement on voting procedure should be issued in English as the first document of the Conference. [Russian, French, Spanish and Chinese would be provided if the appropriate delegation so requests.] A slight difference of thought was manifest as to the languages in which important documents of the Conference in general should be issued. The Department's suggestion was that important documents would be issued in Russian, Chinese, French and Spanish only when a request was made for them in one or more of these languages. The Soviet view was that important documents should as a matter of course be made available in all of these languages unless the secretariat were told, in an individual case, that issuance in a certain language was not necessary or desired. While this matter was not formally settled. the Soviet Ambassador indicated that the demands of his delegation for documents in Russian would be modest [and he believed that such requests could be met, having in mind the request for printing all principal documents in Russian] so that as a practical matter there appears to be agreement on this matter.

It was agreed that the next meeting would be held on Saturday, April 14 at 2:45 p. m. unless called earlier.94

Sidney Hillman is urging that we somehow arrange to have his World Trade Union Conference 98 represented at San Francisco as advisers to the San Francisco Conference. We have explained to him that we do not see how a private organization, or for that matter any organization, could have a status of adviser to a conference and we pointed out to him that even international organizations like the ILO 99 and the League of Nations, which are directly interested in the formation of the United Nations Organization, are not being invited to participate and will have no official status. We suggested that the views of his group could be gotten before the Conference if he would submit them to the Secretary General of the Conference with the request that they be distributed to the participating delega-Green and Meany, of the A. grounds that the responsibility would not be placed on any one person, that it would lead to great confusion and lack of clear-cut direction.

Moreover, the Department feels that this would set a precedent for future international conferences and might even be the opening wedge for a proposal to be made of joint chairmanship of the World Security Organization. Halifax, Ambassador Wei and myself are endeavoring to find some sort of middle ground that we can propose to the Soviets that will recognize the prestige of each of the heads of the delegation of the four sponsoring nations, perhaps along the lines of honorary chairmen who would preside in rotation in the absence of the Chairman of the Conference. Moreover, we feel that to accept the Soviet proposal would be to emphasize before the other nations attending the special position of the four sponsoring powers.

Because of the importance that we attach to this issue from the standpoint of the successful administration of the Conference, may I have your instruction for me to stand out for a single chairman of the Conference, to be selected from one of the sponsoring nations?

REVIEW OF PROPOSALS AND SUGGESTIONS FOR CONSIDERATION.

CHAPTER V, THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

THE SECRETARY then inquired as to whether there was any miscellaneous business. There being none, the Delegation turned to consideration of the subject of this session, namely, Chapter V of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, The General Assembly.

Section A—Composition

Mr. Pasvolsky, at the Secretary's request, presented the Proposals and Suggestions for Consideration, Book 2, commencing with Section A—Composition. He said the changes proposed were not very important and involved principally matters of drafting, which in any case would be taken care of in drafting the actual Charter. Senator Connally observed that a number of points could come up under this section, especially the problem of the number of votes for member states. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that this was not a question for the American Delegation to bring up, and the only question was whether the number of representatives should be determined in the Charter, this question having been left open at Dumbarton Oaks.

SENATOR VANDENBERG asked why the number should not be specified. Mr. PASVOLSKY said he thought the matter was of no consequence as far as we were concerned and could be left for the Conference to decide.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM said that the number of representatives might just as well be put in but Mr. Pasvolsky felt that it was a matter on which the United States did not need to make any specific proposal.

Section B—Functions and Powers

Paragraph 1.—On the request of the Secretary, Mr. Pasvolsky turned to Section B—Functions and Powers. He stated that Paragraph 1 is very important since it relates to the security functions of the General Assembly and that a great many questions have been raised about it. He pointed out that several ideas are included in this paragraph and said that perhaps the Charter would have to be drafted so that these ideas would be dealt with in separate paragraphs. Referring to the first sentence he drew attention to the proposed change of wording, namely, that instead of the phrase "The General Assembly should have the right to consider the general principles of cooperation and the maintenance of international peace and security . . .", it was proposed that the statement read: "The General Assembly should have the responsibility for the formulation of general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security . . ."

REPRESENTATIVE EATON said it was not stated how such questions and principles would be brought before the General Assembly for consideration.

Mr. Pasvolsky replied that they could come up in a number of ways: the matter could originate in the Assembly itself, and any member state, the Secretary-General, or the Security Council could bring it to the General Assembly. The important point in this paragraph, he thought, was whether the Charter should make explicit the right which those who drafted the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals thought was inherent in the set-up of the Organization, namely the right of the General Assembly to discuss and formulate conventions for submission to the member states for ratification. The question was really whether the General Assembly would have to recommend and bring about the calling of a special conference for the drafting of such conventions or whether it could itself formulate conventions for approval by the member states.

SENATOR CONNALLY asked if it would have to have the sanction of the Security Council.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that would not be required.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked whether the Security Council would have to be informed of such action and Mr. Pasvolsky said that notification would undoubtedly be given in the normal course.

MR. PASVOLSKY said he believed there would be strong insistence at the Conference that the power of the General Assembly be specified more fully.

SENATOR CONNALLY thought it would be correct to include the suggested provision in the Charter because the drafting of a convention for submission to the member states would be an expression of what the General Assembly thought should and ought to be done.

Mr. Pasvolsky replied that this was the real point.

Mr. Dulles commented that the original language seemed better, and that the use of the word "right" was adequate. He thought there was some danger that assigning the responsibility to the General Assembly might look exclusive and give the impression that the General Assembly was to be the sole organ dealing with such matters and others were to be excluded. He was sure there was no intention to exclude the possibility of holding a convention to codify international law. Perhaps taking out the word "responsibility" would make that clearer.

Mr. Bowman thought that the word "the" before "responsibility" should come out.

MR. PASVOLSKY asked whether the Delegates agreed on supporting the inclusion of a statement that the General Assembly should be empowered to adopt general conventions for submission to the member states for ratification. He thought this would be spelling out what is inherent in the powers of the Assembly but he recalled that there had been some question in the League of Nations as to whether the Assembly had this power. Mr. Gene confirmed this impression and added that the International Labor Organization specifically provided that the Conference should be able to draft conventions for submission to the member states.

Mr. Bowman said he thought it could be argued both ways. It might be argued that members of the Assembly by reason of the way in which they were chosen would not necessarily be the best qualified persons to conduct negotiations on specific questions. On the other hand, it could be argued that it would be advantageous for the General Assembly to formulate the proposals on which they agree and to give expression to what they stand for. They could, of course, bring in specialists from their own governments to assist in the actual negotiations. He thought it would be preferable to specify that the Assembly had the powers suggested.

THE SECRETARY asked whether the Delegation agreed with this position. They assented and he reminded them that this was a tentative approval and that the proposals that were to be made or supported by the United States Delegation would have to come up for review once more after the group had gone through the whole document.

Mr. Pasvolsky, taking up the second sentence of paragraph 1, reminded the group that the original language of the Proposals is "any question on which action is necessary", and he stated that the next sentence has a qualifying and restricting force. [The General Assembly should not on its own initiative make recommendations on any matter relating to the maintenance of international peace and security which is being dealt with by the Security Council.] <sup>5</sup> There had been much discussion about both of these sentences and in the final drafting it would be necessary to modify the wording. However, the basic idea is that when a dispute reaches the point where action is necessary, it must be immediately referred to the Security Council. It is clear from the whole paragraph, however, that the Assembly has the right to discuss any question or dispute at any time.

SENATOR VANDENBERG said he did not think this last point was clear from the wording. He thought it could be interpreted that when the Security Council takes jurisdiction over a dispute, the General Assembly has no further right to deal with it in any way. Mr. Pasyolsky replied that the right of the General Assembly to consider. discuss, and make recommendations with regard to general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of peace and security was unabridged. Moreover, the right to discuss any question relating to maintenance of peace and security as distinct from the making of recommendations remained unabridged. The right to make recommendations, however, was limited by the last sentence. Another important point is that if the Security Council refuses to handle a question and votes that it is not a case for its consideration, then the Assembly is completely free. The only requirement is that there should be no simultaneous action on a dispute by the General Assembly and the Security Council. Senator Vandenberg commented that there was a lot to be interpreted under this paragraph. Dulles said that he agreed with Mr. Pasvolsky's interpretations. His own interpretation was that the Assembly could discuss up to the point of making concrete recommendations.

Senator Vandenberg said he had no objection to the principle that the General Assembly should not attempt to deal concretely with the dispute when it was before the Security Council, but it seemed to him, according to this wording, that all the Council had to do would be to pass a resolution taking jurisdiction over a dispute before the Assembly and thereby shut out the General Assembly from any further consideration of the matter. Mr. Pasvolsky said this was not the intention of the Proposals, and he felt that the language was clear on this point.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked whether the General Assembly should refer a dispute with or without recommendations. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that reference could be made either with or without recommendations and either before or after discussion if it is not already being handled by the Council.

Mr. Bowman said he thought that "any matter relating to" could mean "every matter relating to". On that basis, the Council could take jurisdiction over everything because every kind of subject might have a bearing on the maintenance of international peace and security. He suggested that the last sentence be rephrased to read: "The General Assembly should not on its own initiative make specific recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security."

Senator Connally remarked that the general policy was sound, and he agreed that while the Council deliberates, it would be better for the Assembly to remain quiet. Senator Vandenberg said he did not want the Council to be able to take jurisdiction pro forma, merely to eliminate the Assembly from considering it.

MR. PASVOLSKY said he thought that it was all a question of language, and MR. Bowman asked what language could be agreed upon. MR. PASVOLSKY said this could be taken up later when the Charter was actually being drafted. MR. Bowman suggested that it should be written into the Charter that when the Council states that a specific case is being considered, then the General Assembly should not be able to take action on it simultaneously.

Mr. Dulles pointed out that there were certain discrepancies in the language defining who might put a case before the General Assembly. In the present text, Paragraph 1 of Section B, Chapter V, states that the General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security "brought before it by any member or members of the Organization or by the Security Council". On the other hand, Paragraph 2, Section A, Chapter VIII declares: "Any state, whether member of the Organization or not, may bring any such dispute or situation to the attention of the General Assembly or of the Security Council." He asked whether it was intended that non-members should be entitled to bring questions to the General Assembly. Mr. Pasvolsky said it was so intended and that the language should also be amended to include the Secretary-General among those who might bring cases before the General Assembly.

Paragraph 2.—The Secretary requested Mr. Pasvolsky to present the next important matter for the consideration of the Delegates. Mr. Pasvolsky said that Paragraph 2 is very important and had been subjected to much criticism from many quarters. There had been numerous suggestions that the General Assembly acting alone should be able to admit new members to the Organization. He believed that a possible alternative to the present formula would be to empower the General Assembly to admit new members to the Organization unless the Security Council objects. Senator Connally commented that this would turn the procedure around. Senator Vandenberg added that it would give the Security Council veto power. Mr. Armstrong queried whether it was important that the Council should have veto power in this matter, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied that it was important because questions of security might be involved. Senator Connally said that the Security Council should, of course, be advised of the intention of the General Assembly to admit new members.

THE SECRETARY asked whether the Delegates agreed that the alternative suggested by Mr. Pasvolsky should be adopted, and the Delegates gave their assent to substituting the following statement for the present text of Paragraph 2:

"The General Assembly should be empowered to admit new members to the Organization unless the Security Council interposes an objection."

Paragraph 3.—The Delegates then turned to consideration of Paragraph 3. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the question that arose most frequently in connection with this paragraph was why expulsion should be provided for, but not withdrawal. He commented that it was logical that suspension and expulsion should take place on the recommendation of the Security Council since these would be enforcement measures. He believed it logical also that rights and privileges of membership should be restored on decision of the Security Council alone, because it would be the Security Council that would determine when the cause for enforcement action had ceased to exist; and when that point had been reached, cause for suspension of membership privileges would automatically cease to exist. A state should not have to wait until the Assembly could meet in order to have the rights and privileges of membership restored after a period of suspension. An alternative provision would be to have the rights and privileges of membership restored by the same procedure as suspension, except when the General Assembly is not in session. Then the Security Council could take action alone.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the next important point in Paragraph 3 relates to expulsion. He stated that the United States did not particularly like this provision. The American attitude was that suspension was a more effective means of enforcement than expulsion. However, the Soviet Government had insisted on the inclusion of this provision, which seemed rather significant in view of the fact that Russia was the only country that had ever been expelled from the League of Nations. Mr. Dulles commented that perhaps the U.S.S.R. did not want to be unique. Mr. Pasvolsky said that he did not think it necessary for the Delegation to agree now on a position with regard to expulsion. There might be very strong objections to this provision in the Conference, and it would be wise to wait and see how strong they were before deciding what position the American Delegation should take.

Senator Connally commented that suspension is surely as strong a measure of enforcement as expulsion, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied that it is actually stronger. He recommended, however, that this question be left subject to future development.

Senator Connally asked whether there should not be a provision for withdrawal from membership. Mr. Pasvolsky said no provision had been made in the Proposals because there was some fear that the statement about withdrawal might give an impression of instability. Senator Connally said, however, that a state should know before it joined the Organization what procedures would be necessary if it wanted to get out. Mr. Pasvolsky said it might be useful to discuss this point, although it had not so far been insisted upon by other governments.

THE SECRETARY asked what a government would do if it wanted to withdraw from the Organization. Representative Bloom replied that he thought it could denounce the treaty under which it had accepted the Charter. Senator Connally commented that the Constitution of the United States had no provision for withdrawal and that when some of the states tried to secede, they had not been permitted to do so.

Senator Vandenberg asked whether we could admit that a state can withdraw by denunciation, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied in the affirmative. Senator Vandenberg replied: "Why not say so?" and he asked Senator Connally whether it would not help in the Senate to have this clearly stated. Senator Connally said he was doubtful whether a signatory to a treaty could denounce it when there was no clause in the treaty providing for denunciation.

Mr. Bowman said there were really two questions involved. One was what our attitude should be if the matter is brought up in the Conference, and the other is what points the American Delegation should insist upon having included in the Charter.

For resolution on this subject, adopted by the Council of the League on December 14, 1939, see telegram 324, December 14, 1939, 9 p. m., from Geneva, Foreign Relations, The Soviet Union, 1933–1939, p. 804.

Senator Connally suggested that it would help if the authority to amend the Charter were to be liberalized. He said that the Senate would want to know what the obligations of the member states were to be and would not want to take the risk of possible violation of these obligations by denunciation of the treaty if there was no clause permitting such denunciation.

Mr. Dulles thought that the present arrangement, that is, maintaining silence on the subject of withdrawal, was better than any attempt to describe procedures for withdrawal. Senator Vandenberg replied that if nothing was said in the Charter about withdrawal the Senate would be sure to make a reservation on that point, and he thought it would be better to give some indication as to what would be the lawful procedure for getting out of the Organization.

Mr. Armstrong said that an important reason for leaving out any statement about withdrawal was that the threat to withdraw could be used for blackmailing the Organization, especially by a would-be aggressor state.

THE SECRETARY said that he thought that the Delegation must be guided by the political judgment of the Senators on a point like this. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that further thought could be given to finding a satisfactory formula. Mr. Bloom commented that "withdrawal" is a harsh word and perhaps some better word could be found.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that under the League of Nations Covenant, a state that did not wish to accept an amendment could cease to be a member of the League. He suggested that the question of withdrawal be held in abeyance until the provisions for amending the Charter were discussed.

THE SECRETARY said that this question would be taken up later with the discussion of the amending process.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested further consideration of the expulsion provision, especially the qualification that such action could be taken against "any member of the Organization which persistently violates the principles contained in the Charter." He asked whether the Delegation would agree to amend this to read that any member could be expelled "which persistently fails to fulfill its obligations under the Charter."

Mr. Dulles questioned the use of the word "persistently".

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked whether withdrawal by a member would release it from all obligations under the Charter. Mr. Pasvolsky referred to the League experience and to the possibility of enforcing basic obligations on non-member states.

Mr. Bowman stated that he thought the present wording ["the principles contained in the Charter"] was pretty vague.

Mr. Pasvolsky said he thought it would be better to permit expulsion for violating both the principles and the purposes, and he added that the word "persistently" had been used in order to avoid light-hearted expulsion.

Mr. Dunn commented that if a state violated the Charter one time, it could be suspended. Mr. Taft thought that the present text left a loop-hole. Mr. Armstrong said that when a state is suspended, its rights and privileges could be restored, and he thought it important to give the General Assembly the right to take such action.

Mr. Pasvoisky pointed out that the right of suspension is restricted and that a state can be suspended only for definite cause when the Council institutes enforcement action. He added that the restoration of rights and privileges should be automatic when the Security Council declares that the cause of this action no longer exists.

Mr. Armstrong said that it was wise to bring the General Assembly in wherever possible, although there might be no difference in actual fact.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that states that had been expelled could be reinstated by the same process through which new members were admitted. He suggested that if the proposal is made in the Conference that an expelled state can be reinstated by the General Assembly on recommendation of the Council unless the General Assembly is not in session, then the United States should support the proposal.

Senator Vandenberg urged that the word "persistently" be deleted. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that it was important to include this idea because it was not desirable to have frequent expulsions, although suspension might be used very often. Senator Connally suggested the word "willful", because a state might violate its obligations one time, but that violation might be very serious.

Mr. Pasvolsky said there would undoubtedly be a demand at the Conference to eliminate the provision for expulsion, and he recommended that if the demand is made, the United States should go along with it. He thought it might still be possible to induce the Russians to agree to dropping this provision. Then it would be possible to write strong suspension measures into the Charter. Senator Vandenberg said he was willing to wait to see what would happen at the Conference, and the Secretary said that would be the American position for the present.

Paragraph 4.—Mr. Pasvolsky took up Paragraph 4 and said that no change was suggested in the present text.

Senator Vandenberg said there might be a question about defining conditions for election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, and he asked whether any provision should be made regarding the qualifications of states to be so elected.

Mr. Pasvolsky thought it would be better not to make any proposals as to criteria for the choice of states to serve as non-permanent members until we run into the problem in the Conference. Undoubtedly, the middle states would bring up some proposals along this line.

THE SECRETARY remarked that the American Delegation should know what position to take toward the Australian proposal.8 Mr. PASVOLSKY believed that the decision should be not to bind the General Assembly ahead of time but to leave it to that body to decide how to choose the non-permanent members of the Security Council. However, if pressure develops in the Conference, he believed it would be possible to agree on several criteria, which the General Assembly might apply in making its choices.

SENATOR VANDENBERG said he would like to be able to get in a requirement for adequate regional representation, but he did not know quite how it should be done.

Paragraph 5.—The Secretary asked Mr. Pasvolsky to take up Paragraph 5. Mr. Pasvolsky read the alternative proposal which had been made by Norway 9 [add to the statement on budgetary and financial powers the provision that the voting rights of states that do not pay their contributions to the expenses of the organization may be suspended]. He said that we should not make any recommendation on this point because it was a very ticklish question.

Senator Connally remarked that under the present text, giving the General Assembly the power to apportion the expenses among the members, that body would be free to make quite inequitable assessments, and it might possibly make the permanent members pay most of the expenses. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that a scale of contributions would certainly be established and that it could be done either at the Conference if pressure had developed there for it, or by the Assembly Mr. Geric reminded the group that the League of Nations had apportioned expenses according to an established scale. Senator CONNALLY thought that this was not an insuperable difficulty.

THE SECRETARY suggested expanding the statement somewhat. Mr. Dulles pointed out that it should be made clear that the apportionment of expenses would not be an arbitrary matter.

THE SECRETARY said that we might need a statement of the principle on which the expenses would be apportioned. Mr. Bowman suggested the phrase "on an agreed principle". Senator Vandenberg suggested inserting "pro-ration". It was agreed that the text should be rephrased to read: "The General Assembly should apportion the expenses among the members of the Organization according to an agreed pro-ration."

Paragraph 6.—The Secretary asked Mr. Pasvolsky to present Paragraph 6. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that this was a very important paragraph and said that the Delegation should decide whether to amplify it and, if so, how.

Mr. Stettinius asked that Mr. Pasvolsky read the suggested revised paragraph, and Mr. Pasvolsky did so. [The General Assembly should promote international cooperation in political, economic, social, and cultural fields, and in measures to establish justice; foster the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms; encourage the development of rules of international law; and recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of situations likely to impair the general welfare or to violate the principles of the United Nations as declared by them on January 1, 1942.10

Senator Vandenberg said he was willing to endorse it 1000 percent and said he believed it would do more good than anything else to gain support of the Charter.

THE SECRETARY said that he thought it might throw some light on the attitude of the British Government. The Foreign Office had been most helpful in developing plans for economic and social cooperation, but the Prime Minister tended rather to think of the Organization exclusively in terms of keeping the peace in times of crisis. The Secretary himself thought that these proposals were most important and that the United States should support them energetically.11

Mr. Pasvolsky drew attention to the reference to the Atlantic Charter 12 implied in the statement with regard to the United Nations Declaration.

Miss Gildersleeve asked what position the Russians took with regard to arrangements for economic and social cooperation.

THE SECRETARY said that the Soviet Government liked the provisions, and Mr. Pasvolsky added that the Russians had not wanted to enumerate the subjects that might be dealt with under the arrangements of economic and social cooperation.

THE SECRETARY said that the Soviet Government was very much in favor of the Economic and Social Council and that this approval had been stated when he was in Moscow.<sup>13</sup> Dean Gildersleeve said that she liked the suggested revision of the text. Representative Bloom asked what was meant by the word "cultural".

Senator Connally said that he was in sympathy with the purposes of the revised text, although he had to recognize that it might seem to go too far in the eyes of some members of the Senate who were willing to accept a peace organization but did not want a world W.P.A. LA SENATOR VANDENBERG said that such opposition might develop, but he thought that if the text were tied to the principles of the United Nations Declaration, it would get the support of a great many people who otherwise would find nothing forward-looking in the Charter.

Mr. Bowman queried whether it would weaken the statement to leave out the word "justice" since that would be included in the statement of purposes and would be implied in the clause on international law. Mr. Pasvolsky said that the British and Russian Governments had not wanted to include a reference to the observance of human rights and fundamental freedom in the Chapter on the General Assembly.

THE SECRETARY asked who would object to including the phrase "establish justice". Mr. Pasvolsky commented that it was a rather vague phrase in any case. Mr. Bowman thought the question was really whether it ought to be included at this point.

THE SECRETARY said he believed the United States should support this paragraph all the way through. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that we should be willing to take out the phrase "establish justice" if it were necessary.

Mr. Bowman commented that there are many different systems of law in the world and that there are different concepts of justice, so that some countries might object that the inclusion of the phrase "establish justice" here could be interpreted as an invasion of their own customs and traditions. He believed that a reference merely to the United Nations Declaration and to international law would make it clear that every step would have to be taken on the basis of agreement among the member nations.

Senator Vandenberg suggested leaving the phrase in and waiting to see whether it collides with any real opposition. The Secretary agreed that we should try it.

Mr. Armstrong questioned the reference to the United Nations Declaration. He said that it did not add anything substantial to the document and that it was essentially a war-time declaration, setting forth an agreement to strive together for the defeat of the Axis Powers.

Mr. Pasvolsky read the preamble to the Declaration of the United Nations, pointing out that it contains a reference to the Atlantic Charter.

Mr. Armstrong said he feared that a reference to the United Nations Declaration would make it difficult for former enemy states, for example, Italy, to join the Organization. Mr. Tarr said he thought that would not be a very serious problem and that as a matter of fact, Italy right now was trying to be permitted to sign the United Nations Declaration and to come into the Organization immediately.

Mr. Pasvolsky said he could see some difficulty arising out of this reference. Representive Bloom said he thought there would be some objection to including a reference to cultural relations and education, and he wondered whether this would weaken possible support of the Charter. He was sure that some members of Congress would object. The Secretary commented that the State Department had probably done an ineffective job of explaining what it means by international cooperation in cultural and educational fields but that it hoped to do much better in the future.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM wished that another word could be found. Mr. Taft said he believed there already had been a considerable development of international cultural relations and that the League of Nations had found it necessary to encourage this development through the Committee on Intellectual Cooperation. Miss Gildersleeve remarked that the phrase "intellectual cooperation" unfortunately had little meaning to Americans.

THE SECRETARY said he would like to leave this wording undisturbed and try to get it accepted. If it is impossible to get acceptance, then the Delegation can consider what compromises might be necessary.

Mr. TAFT said that the principles stated here could be expanded in the chapter on the Economic and Social Council. Senator Connally said that it was important to make it clear that the use of the phrase "establish justice" did not imply any intention to encroach upon traditional systems of law within various countries or any interference with domestic politics.

Mr. Bowman said that in the experience of the permanent Court of International Justice, cases involving domestic jurisdiction had not really played a major part even though that was a matter that had concerned a great many people in the beginning.

THE SECRETARY suggested that the discussion should move on from this paragraph. Before proceeding with the text of the proposals, however, he wanted to bring up some other matters. First, the mention of Italy reminded him that he wished to distribute a list of the United Nations and other states that might be invited later to join the Organization and suggested that this list be put in the notebooks.<sup>15</sup> He said there had been some question about India and that he had a memorandum prepared with regard to the inclusion of India in the United Nations.<sup>16</sup>

ROLE OF ADVISERS

... The Secretary said that Mr. Sweetser of the O.W.I. was working with the State Department and that it was agreed that the Delegation itself would have the final word as to approval or disapproval. He told Mr. Gerig to see to it that the Delegates should be informed as to what statements the State Department would approve their making.

Senator Connally said that the O.W.I. should also be straight-jacketed. The Secretary said that he had talked with Elmer Davis <sup>17</sup> and that there had been a clear understanding about the use of statements by the Delegates. He said further that the restriction in the memorandum applied to questions of substance before the Conference. [Senator Connally left with apologies for having to attend a Committee meeting at the Senate.]

Senator Vandenberg asked whether the advisers would not have to sit in on some meetings for the Delegates. The Secretary, seconded by Mr. Dunn, said that the Delegates would have to decide how to make use of the advisers as the work developed.

Senator Vandenberg commented that each Delegate would be assigned to several committees and commissions and that he could not possibly attend all the meetings of all these groups.

REVIEW OF PROPOSALS AND SUGGESTIONS FOR CONSIDERATION. CHAPTER V, THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY—(Continued)

THE SECRETARY suggested that the group should continue with the discussion of the proposals and suggestions with regard to Chapter V. Paragraph 7.—Mr. Pasvolsky read Paragraph 7.

["The General Assembly should make recommendations for the coordination of the policies of international economic, social, and other specialized agencies brought into relation with the Organization in accordance with agreements between such agencies and the Organization."]

He said that proposals had been made to modify this text because of a feeling that it was too weak in its present form. He thought that this was probably true. Also, it was not clear whether the General Assembly should recommend to other organs of the Organization, to specialized agencies, and to the Governments, or should act itself. He said that in the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations this text probably would have been strengthened if there had been time to work out a desirable formula. He suggested amending the text to read:

"The General Assembly should take action to bring about coordination of the policies of international economic, social, cultural, and other specialized agencies . . ."

THE SECRETARY asked whether there were any objections to this amendment and since there were none, he stated that it was approved.

New Paragraph.—Mr. Pasvolsky read the proposed New Paragraph (for Section B) and said this had been discussed widely. [The General Assembly should be empowered to act, within the limits of the Charter, on matters of concern to the Organization which are not allocated to other agencies.] It was in the United States Proposals 18 before the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations and had been left out in drafting the Proposals because it had seemed undesirable to overburden the Charter. However, the inclusion of such a provision regarding the residual power of the Organization strengthens the General Assembly in appearance. Actually, the General Assembly has this residual power anyhow.

THE SECRETARY thought that inclusion of the proposed new paragraph would help with the small nations.

Section C. Voting

Paragraph 1.—The group turned to consideration of Section C, and Mr. Pasvolsky read paragraph 1:

["1. Each member of the Organization should have one vote in the General Assembly."]

Mr. Dulles commented that there was no provision for a Committee on Credentials, and he thought it would be most important to have some procedure for passing on credentials of representatives, because of changing conditions. It would sometimes be necessary to decide whether a given state was independent or not and whether the representatives who claimed the right to sit for that state were, in fact, entitled to do so. He thought it most important to state who should pass on the eligibility of the delegates, because there might be a fluctuating situation.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the General Assembly would have such power. In any case, it had the power to create the agencies it needed to discharge its functions. Mr. Dulles said that the problem took on special urgency because of the fact that the Soviet Russian Republics had been given autonomy in foreign affairs. Mr. Pasvolsky said that their status was rather a problem of membership than a question of powers of the General Assembly to seat delegates of member states.

MR. Dulles asked what would happen if a state ceased to be independent. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that the question would then come up in the Assembly and would be settled by that body. Representative Bloom thought it would be better to say so specifically. Mr. Pasvolsky rejoined that it should not be stated under the provisions about voting.

Mr. Dulles said that it should be made clear that the General Assembly has the power to determine whether a given political unit has or has not the characteristics that entitle it to representation or whether it may have had them and has lost them.

Mr. Pasvolsky said the matter should be dealt with under membership. Mr. Dulles said that might be the way to resolve the problem. He thought that the question of the Soviet Union and its component parts could be dealt with reasonably. It would be a question of fact as to whether the Assembly considered them independent states. Placing that decision in the hands of the Assembly might avoid complicating the politics of the great powers.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the decision with regard to the status of members was something that the General Assembly would never delegate to a subordinate agency, even though it would have the power "to set up such bodies and agencies as it may deem necessary for the performance of its functions."

Mr. Taft and Representative Bloom said simultaneously that they wanted some specific statement in the charter on this point.

Mr. Pasvolsky said there were two problems here. First of all, there was the question of credentials of Delegates and a decision as to whether certain Delegates should be seated and accorded the right to represent the countries that they claimed to represent. There might easily be a revolution in some country and two delegations might arrive and present credentials. In that case, the Assembly would have to decide between them and would undoubtedly use a committee to investigate the credentials and recommend what decision should be taken.

Representative Bloom commented that the problem of credentials affected those countries that were already members. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that it would affect the initial members and that those members would normally send their delegates, who would be seated if there was no question about the status of their governments. If there was a question, then the General Assembly would have to pass upon their status. Any new political units would have to be admitted separately as members. Another case would be the raising of a claim in the General Assembly that a certain state had lost its independent status and was no longer entitled to membership. The General Assembly would undoubtedly establish rules regarding credentials of delegates.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM said he thought this did not apply to what Mr. Dulles had in mind. Mr. Taft said that it might be necessary to define the word "state". Mr. Dulles asked who would have the power to define it,—the General Assembly?

Mr. Pasvolsky said it could not be put exclusively in the hands of the General Assembly because of security considerations.

Mr. Bowman referred to the history of Newfoundland, which had been a Dominion within the British Commonwealth and which later gave up its Dominion status. He said that if there was not a definition of the exact basis on which the U.S.S.R. was to be allowed three votes in the General Assembly, then the Soviet Government might come back again urging the acceptance of additional Soviet Republics as members. If we have to accept the Soviet demand, then we should define it in such terms that they could not come back and ask for more.

Mr. Bloom stated that it is necessary to say in the Charter who decides such matters. Mr. Taft suggested that it be put in Paragraph 2 of Section B and that the General Assembly be empowered to pass on the qualifications for membership. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that this could be spelled out.

Mr. Stettinius said there has to be machinery for dealing with the problem of credentials. Mr. Pasvolsky said he did not believe that anything short of the General Assembly could determine this matter in the last analysis, and he doubted whether the small nations or any other nations would be willing to delegate this decision to a small group.

Mr. Dulles said that the small nations had the power to act through recommendations, and he thought that if the General Assembly had the power to decide on the status of the members of states, it could take this kind of decision out of the hands of the big powers.

Representative Bloom said that membership and credentials were two different matters.

Mr. Taft said that any body has the power to pass on the credentials of those who claim to vote within it and that the General Assembly would therefore have the power to decide on the status of the states whose representatives claimed the right to vote. He pointed out that if Paragraph 2 of Section B were amended as suggested, the Security Council would have veto power over the decisions with regard to the qualifications of members.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested the following formula to be incorporated in Paragraph 2 of Section B:

"The General Assembly should be empowered to determine the qualifications of membership and admit new members unless the Security Council interposes objections on security grounds."

THE SECRETARY commented that nobody except the General Assembly has the power to pass on the credentials of its members, and he suggested that the amendment be left in the form that Mr. Pasvolsky had proposed. Mr. Dulles agreed that this would be satisfactory, and the other members of the group concurred.

Mr. Pasvolsky reminded the group that there were still some questions to discuss under Section C.

THE SECRETARY said he wanted to hold an executive session with the Delegates on the question of voting in the General Assembly.

Mr. Pasvolsky said there had been some proposals for weighted voting in the General Assembly, but he thought that was impossible; and it was agreed by the group that this idea was to be left out completely.

Paragraph 2.—Mr. Pasvolsky called attention to the suggested revision of Paragraph 2 of Section C. He said that the suggestion involved merely verbal changes except for the proposal that it should take a two-thirds majority to decide on additional categories of decisions that would require a two-thirds majority. He believed, however, that it would be better to leave this decision to a simple majority and not make it more difficult to add new categories.

THE SECRETARY agreed with Mr. Pasvolsky and said that it was important to keep in mind that the Soviet Government would question the introduction of any amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Mr. Pasvolsky said there was a question as to whether the American Delegation was going to push for certain changes or simply agree among themselves to support changes if pushed by others.

THE SECRETARY said that in the meeting of the steering committee of the Sponsors, there had been a proposal that none of the four Governments should propose changes without consulting the others.<sup>19</sup> The British and Chinese representatives seemed especially anxious on this point. It had been agreed not to advance proposals without advising the other Sponsors, and he had made it very clear that this would constitute consultation but would not necessarily require agreement before such changes could be proposed.

Mr. Armstrong said there should be different classes of proposals that the United States Delegation would support and as few red-letter amendments as possible.

Section D. Procedure

Paragraph 1.—Mr. Pasvolsky read Section D, Paragraph 1:

["The General Assembly should meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require."]

He said that a question had arisen as to who could call special sessions of the Assembly, and he believed that some statement should be included on this point. This proposal was approved.

Additional Paragraph.—Mr. Pasvolsky read the suggested Additional Paragraph: [p. 4 in Section D of Chapter V, Proposals and Suggestions for Consideration.]

He asked whether a paragraph of this sort should be included in the Charter. He thought that it might be possible to add a description of ways by which the General Assembly acts, in connection with the statements of the various powers of the General Assembly, and he pointed out that in connection with Section B, Paragraph 1, the group had already agreed on the inclusion of the power to adopt draft conventions for submission to the member states.

THE SECRETARY suggested that the word "consider" would be better than the word "debate".

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the initiation of studies making recommendations, etc., was already covered and that the only new point was the adoption of draft conventions. He pointed out that some countries had raised the question as to what was involved in discussing reports submitted to the General Assembly.

THE SECRETARY said that the General Assembly would discuss the reports anyhow. He thought it very important to build up the General Assembly, to recognize its powers and add strength and said that he liked the ideas suggested for improvement.

THE SECRETARY asked Mr. Taft if the advisers concerned with the Economic and Social Council were on the way to attend the meeting, and Mr. Taft said that they would soon arrive.

THE SECRETARY called a 5-minute recess and said that the group would reconvene for a discussion of the arrangements for economic and social cooperation.

Proposals and Suggestions for Consideration

Section A: Purposes and Relationships

Paragraph 1.

At the request of the Secretary, Mr. Tarr presented the recommendations of the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy 20 proposing an elaboration of the objectives of the Organization in the economic and social fields.

Mr. Tart stated that the purpose of the detailed objectives was to bring out more clearly the functions of the Organization in promoting economic and social programs, which in the long run would be essential if the Organization were to be successful in maintaining peace. He pointed out that the paragraph in Chapter IX of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals setting forth the functions of the Organization in these fields was very brief and general and seemed to minimize this area of international cooperation in which much public interest had been expressed both in this and other countries. Mr. Tart then proceeded to go over briefly the main objectives recommended by the Executive Committee, pointing out that much of the language had been drawn from international documents such as the Atlantic Charter, Article VII of the Mutual-Aid Agreements,<sup>21</sup> and the League Covenant.

With regard to the language drawn from the Article VII of the Mutual-Aid Agreements (for the reduction of tariffs and elimination of discriminations), Senator Vandenberg remarked that that Article had been unanimously denounced by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Mr. Bloom stated that on the other hand the same Article had received the approval of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

With particular reference to Senator Vandenberg's statement regarding the action of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in respect of Article VII, Mr. Tarr pointed out that the inclusion of this and other objectives in the Charter of the Organization would in no way commit the United States, that they would be merely goals toward which all countries should work.

Mr. White thought that the point made by Mr. Taft did not answer the question which Senator Vandenberg had in mind, namely,

Preparation, p. 436.

Article VII of the preliminary agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom regarding principles applying to mutual aid in the prosecution of the war against aggression, signed at Washington, February 23, 1942. For text, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series No. 241, or 56 Stat. (pt. 2) 1433. For documentation on economic discussions on article VII questions, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. III, pp. 61–80, passim.

whether the objectives themselves were desirable, even as objectives. Senator Vandenberg stated that he might agree with these objectives in the abstract and in so far as they relate to the internal development of each country. He doubted, however, that we could safely spell out in an international document this enormous field of unlimited operations. He stated that if these objectives were included the whole program could be successfully attacked on the ground that it was intended to organize the earth, and millions of people in this country would be scared off.

Mr. White inquired whether or not it would be desirable to examine the objectives in detail and determine which of them might be acceptable.

Senator Vandenberg did not feel that a detailed examination of the objectives would be helpful. He thought that the issue lay in the division between what are international and what are domestic matters. He stated that what various governments ought to address themselves to is one thing, but that whether this should be an international function is quite another thing.

THE SECRETARY stated that we should keep in mind the main objective at San Francisco, and that we should be sure that we do not reach out for too much or involve ourselves in too long a period of negotiation on these matters in the economic and social field.

Mr. Taft thought that an unduly large negotiating problem might not be involved since the objectives under consideration were not new: for the most part they merely restated objectives already agreed to internationally. With reference to Senator Vandenberg's fears that the Organization might invade the domestic sphere, Mr. Taft emphasized that the Organization would merely promote the adoption of measures by the nations and that it would not of course undertake to do the job itself.

Mr. Bloom inquired what would be the result if the nations refused to adopt the programs proposed by the Organization. Mr. Tarr replied that of course if the nations were not going forward in the field of economic and social cooperation it would be a grave handicap. He then called attention to the objective for the promotion of full employment, stating that this objective was of special significance and importance because it involved not only the question of measures directed specifically at the employment problem but also the activities of all the specialized economic organizations which would be brought into relationship with the Organization. The inclusion of this objective in the Charter would provide a framework within which the activities of these specialized organizations could be coordinated.

Senator Vandenberg remarked that this country is split wide open on the issue of full employment. He questioned whether the American people would delegate to an international organization the right to advise the United States as to the methods it should use in maintaining full employment.

Mr. Tarr stated that many foreign countries did not think that the matter of employment was a matter solely for domestic concern and that we had received several requests from other countries for the holding of a conference on full employment.

Mr. Eaton remarked that some people had even gone so far as to request that we should arrange at San Francisco for the maintenance of minimum wages, an 8-hour day and a 40-hour week, etc. etc.

Mr. White stated that he was impressed that the main purpose of the San Francisco Conference would be security. He thought that there would be enough problems involved in that without injecting other matters. He wondered whether we could not have more general language dealing with the economic and social fields and leave it to subsequent conference to spell those objectives out.

The Secretary agreed with Mr. White's view. Senator Vandenberg remarked that if we thrust these objectives into the San Francisco Conference the result would be the November election all over again. He repeated that he did not oppose these objectives in the abstract but that as a practical matter, so far as the San Francisco Conference was concerned, the faster we could reach agreement on the economic and social side of the Organization and get it out of the way the better off we would be.

Mr. TAFT pointed out that even though the United States should not propose these objectives it is probable that other countries would bring them up. He mentioned that the Latin American countries were particularly interested in these fields and had expressed a definite desire for the inclusion of specific proposals. Also, in recent discussions with the British and Russians regarding an Advisory European Economic Committee,23 to deal with pressing wartime problems, the Russians had first indicated a willingness to establish such a Committee but had later taken the position that nothing should be done until the San Francisco Conference. We had received the definite impression from the Russians that they would make detailed proposals at San Francisco with regard to economic and social mat-In the light of these developments it could be anticipated that a great deal of pressure would come from other countries for the inclusion in the Charter of detailed objectives such as those which had been recommended by the Executive Committee.

Senator Vandenberg thought that the arguments presented by Mr. Taft made it all the more necessary that in so far as these objectives were concerned the initial position of the United States delegates should be pretty close to the zero line.

THE SECRETARY was of the opinion that if the gates are open to detailed negotiation on all these questions that would prejudice our getting the Economic and Social Council at all.

Mr. White felt that there might be some danger that these economic and social questions would dominate the time of the committees at the Conference. For example, the Australians would bring up proposals on the employment question and fight tooth and nail to have them adopted.

In the light of the discussion the Secretary proposed that, in lieu of the detailed objectives, the general reference to economic and social questions in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals should be adopted, possibly with some expansion within reasonable limits.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE agreed with the Secretary. She thought however that there would be tremendous disappointment in this country unless some constructive step is taken at San Francisco in the economic and social fields. She thought therefore that something, some general phrase of a constructive nature should be included in the Charter. At the same time we should hold down the pressure which would come from other countries to spell out all these questions in detail.

THE SECRETARY and Mr. Bloom agreed with Dean Gildersleeve's statement.

Mr. Eaton said that his position on this whole question was in accord with that of Senator Vandenberg.

In connection with the point raised by Mr. White, that it would be an error to have language in the Charter which would seem to limit the subsequent development of the Organization in the economic and social fields, The Secretary and Mr. Bloom agreed that there should be flexibility for future developments and that some clause should be included in the objectives which would leave such flexibility and which would indicate a general direction in which the economic and social functions of the Organization might develop.

Mr. Taft doubted that it would be possible to make a limited expansion of the economic and social purposes of the Organization, that these purposes would need to be either brief and general, as in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, or comprehensive and in some detail, as in the Executive Committee recommendations. The Secretary asked the economic advisers to reexamine the question with a view to seeing whether something in the way of a moderate expansion of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals would not be possible.

In reply to a question from the Secretary, Mr. Stinebower stated that it was his view that the main question with regard to the Economic and Social Council was not one of spelling out in detail the objectives which it should pursue. The main point, he thought, was to make sure that the Economic and Social Council will have such objectives as will enable it to keep the specialized organizations on a consistent track. He pointed out in this connection that the Economic and Social Council is not intended to be an action body, but rather an advisory and coordinating body.

With regard to the general view of the Delegation that the Charter of the Organization should be in broad general terms, Mr. Cox suggested that if pressure should develop at San Francisco for the inclusion of detailed objectives, we should take the position that the Charter, being a constitution, should be general, and that detailed questions should be handled in a separate document which would be analogous to a statute. If the pressure is very great it might be possible to reach agreement at San Francisco on such a statutory document, which might be appended to the Charter.

Mr. White remarked that for the reason that they deal with details, statutes need careful consideration by a special body. It did not seem wise to attempt to negotiate such statutes at San Francisco. He agreed, however, that it would be a good idea to resist the pressure which might develop at San Francisco by insisting on the constitutional approach.

In response to a question from Mr. Taft, Mr. Pasvolsky stated that it was the President's plan to set up a commission at San Francisco which would prepare for the first meeting of the General Assembly. This commission would be purely preparatory and recommendatory and would not have the powers necessary to make it a satisfactory mechanism through which agreement might be reached on detailed statutory agreements of the kind referred to by Mr. Cox or provided for in the recommendations of the Executive Committee.

Mr. Waring remarked that if the anticipated pressure does in fact develop at San Francisco the rest of the world may be disappointed if the American Delegation does not have some detailed views on the Economic and Social Council. He thought that we should be prepared to meet the views of other countries half way if we cannot make our own prevail entirely.

Mr. Taft thought, with regard to the preparatory commission referred to by Mr. Pasvolsky, that it might be possible to establish a subcommission to which might be entrusted the job of reaching agreement on detailed objectives in economic and social matters.

Senator Vandenberg, referring to the question of pressures from other countries at San Francisco, thought that these would be less important than the pressures which would come from groups at home. He stated that the CIO intended to present a detailed program at San Francisco and that our only defense would be the constitutional approach suggested by Mr. Cox and Mr. White.

Mr. Bloom pointed out that our own Constitution is in general terms, the power-granting clauses being in brief and simple language. He thought that if we depart from this principle of simplicity and generality and tried to enumerate the various details, the negotiating task would be impossible.

In response to the Secretary's question, Mr. Brannan stated that he was in agreement with the views expressed by the Secretary, Mr. Bloom and others on the question of detailed vs. general objectives.

In response to the Secretary's question, Mr. Dulles stated that the Protestant church groups with which he was affiliated have a tremendous interest in this whole economic and social field, but that they have all felt that the present proposals regarding economic and social cooperation set forth in the Dumbarton Oaks documents are fully adequate.

The Secretary summed up the prevailing view of the Delegation: That the United States should support a brief and general statement of objectives along the lines of that set forth in the opening paragraph of Chapter IX of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, to which might be added a general phrase designed to cover broadly the constructive goals represented by the detailed objectives suggested by the Executive Committee. He requested the economic advisers to draft language on this point for the consideration of the Delegation.<sup>24</sup> In closing the discussion on this subject The Secretary remarked that the economic advisers should not be discouraged by the action which the Delegation had taken. He wished to assure them that the Delegation fully appreciated the need for economic and social cooperation and fully supported the proposals for an Economic and Social Council.

Suggested Paragraphs 2 and 3.

Mr. Taft then discussed paragraphs 2 and 3 of Section A of Chapter IX as recommended by the Executive Committee. These paragraphs would 1) specifically authorize the Organization to initiate negotiations for the establishment of specialized organizations in the economic and social fields and 2) make it clear that the specialized organizations, as well as the Organization itself, would have responsibilities in these fields. In discussing these paragraphs Mr. Taft referred to the need for having an adequate mechanism to coordinate the activities of the various specialized international organizations, within the limits imposed by the fact that these specialized organizations, just as the General Organization itself, are the instruments of the governments. In this connection he referred to certain views recently expressed by people connected with the International Labor Organization that the ILO should be co-equal with the General Organization.

Mr. Pasvolsky laid special emphasis on the clause in the suggested revision of paragraph 1 which would authorize the Organization to initiate negotiations for the creation of specialized organizations. He thought it was essential that such a clause be included in view of the fact that there were many fields of economic and social cooperation in which the assistance of the specialized organization would be necessary in the future and for which no specialized organization exists. Mr. Pasvolsky went on to say that, moreover, there was a special reason why this clause should be included: according to Mr. Evatt, Australian Minister for External Affairs, the Australians will not press for detailed objectives in the economic and social field if the inclusion of this clause is agreed to.25

The Delegation approved paragraphs 2 and 3 as recommended by the Executive Committee, without change.

Mr. Taft then discussed the suggested revision of the paragraph dealing with the establishment of relationships between the general Organization and specialized organizations (see page 4 of the paper on Section A). He stated that, under the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, relationships between the General Organization and the specialized organizations would be established by agreements to be negotiated between them. The Proposals do not mention, however, where these agreements should originate. The purpose of the suggested revision is to make it clear that the Economic and Social Council, rather than the specialized organizations, would have the authority to initiate such agreements.

In the light of the foregoing discussion the Delegation approved the proposed revision of paragraph 2 of the D.O.P. without change. Section B: Composition and Voting:

The Delegation approved the proposal that this section of Chapter IX should remain unchanged, and specifically that no change should be made, as proposed by France, to provide that permanent seats on the Economic and Social Council should be accorded to member states of chief economic importance.<sup>26</sup> In discussing this question Mr. Taft pointed out that the interdepartmental committee which had considered the matter was of the opinion that provision for permanent seats would not be essential, since the Great Powers would certainly be appointed as a matter of course. Mr. Pasvolsky added that this whole question had been gone into at Dumbarton Oaks and &lt;sup>26</sup> A resolution on general international organization, adopted at the Australia-New Zealand Conference, Wellington, November 10, 1944, stated in this connection: "The specialized bodies set up separately for various purposes of international welfare should be brought within the framework of the Organization." was settled on the basis indicated on the ground that the Economic and Social Council would be merely an advisory body.

Section C: Functions and Powers of the Economic and Social Council

Mr. Taff then presented recommendations for the amendments of points b, d, and g of paragraph 1 of this section.

With regard to point b, the proposed amendment, in addition to making certain minor drafting changes, would require that any recommendations made by the Economic and Social Council to specialized organizations or to governments be consistent with those adopted by the General Assembly. Mr. Taff explained that in connection with this point there had been considerable discussion in the interdepartmental committees concerned regarding the powers of the Council to make recommendations directly to governments on questions involving jurisdictional or other conflicts between two or more specialized organizations. The conclusion resulting from this discussion was that in all such cases the Council should make its recommendations directly to the Assembly which, after hearing the organizations concerned, could then make any necessary recommendations directly to governments. While this procedure is not spelled out in the proposed amendment to point b, it would seem to follow as a matter of course if the amendment is adopted, since any specialized organization would be free to address the General Assembly.

Mr. White referred to the language in b, reading "to make recommendations... with respect to international economic, social, cultural, and other related matters...". He wondered whether there might not be need for some qualification in this language which would assure that such recommendations would be confined only to those questions that are proper subjects of international action and which would prevent the Council from recommending in respect of purely domestic matters.

THE SECRETARY suggested that the economic advisers might look into the point raised by Mr. White with a view to seeing whether there was any real danger of that kind.

With regard to d, the proposed amendment would remove a limitation, implied in the present text of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, that in so far as the budgets of specialized organizations are concerned the Economic and Social Council could make recommendations only to the specialized organizations involved. Mr. Tarr stated that there had been suggestions from some quarters that the budgets of specialized organizations should be directly voted by the General Organization. It was the view of the interdepartmental committees, however, that the powers of the General Organization in respect of the budgets of specialized organizations should be purely advisory, for a number of reasons. In the first place budgetary control is not in and of itself likely to be an effective device for the coordination of functions. Secondly, the specialized organizations will have definite and agreed-upon responsibilities assigned to them by their basic instruments, and centralized budgetary control might improperly infringe on the jurisdiction of the specialized organizations. Finally, some of the specialized organizations might have a different membership, or might have a different voting pattern, than the General Organization.

With regard to point g, Mr. Taff stated that the proposed amendment is designed to make the functions of the Economic and Social Council more flexible by leaving the way open for additional functions to be assigned by later intergovernmental agreements, subject, of course, to the approval of the General Assembly.

In the light of the discussion the Delegation approved the amendments to points b, d and g, without change.

Section D: Organization and Procedure

Mr. TAFT read the proposed amendment of paragraph 1 of this section, which was designed to remove, as a constitutional requirement, the provision in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals for an Economic Commission and a Social Commission and, in lieu thereof, to provide that the Economic and Social Council should be authorized to establish such commissions, committees, or other bodies of experts as may be necessary.

Mr. Stinebower called attention to the fact that although the new language omitted the provision in the original paragraph 1 for a permanent staff to constitute a part of the Secretariat of the Organization, this omission was merely a drafting matter and provision for permanent staff in the economic and social fields would be taken care of under the Chapter of the Charter dealing with the Secretary-General and the Secretariat.

The Delegation approved the proposed amendment of paragraph 1 without change.

Mr. Tarr then read the proposed amendment to paragraph 2 of this section, the effect of which would be to make it clear that the question of representation by specialized organizations on the Economic and Social Council, or on bodies established by it, should be handled on a reciprocal basis.

The Delegation approved the proposed amendment to paragraph 2 without change.

The meeting was adjourned at 11:50 a.m.

Washington, April 11, 1945.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to bring to your attention that when the question on the organization of the work of the Jurists' Committee was under consideration the Soviet Government set forth a proposal to elect four chairmen from representatives of the four nations 27 in whose name invitations to the Conference and to the meetings of the Jurists' Committee were sent out.28 The proposal of the Soviet Government was based on the principle of equality of position of the four nations. This proposal, however, was not accepted.29

The Soviet Government considers such a decision wrong and expresses its disagreement with the decision as it violates the principal of equality of position of the four nations, in whose name invitations to the Conference were sent out to other governments.

QUESTIONS ARISING FROM DISCUSSIONS IN THE COMMITTEE OF JURISTS

THE SECRETARY requested Mr. Hackworth to present certain matters that had arisen in connection with the discussions of the Committee of Jurists.

Mr. HACKWORTH said he would make a very brief statement and that he was glad to tell the Delegation that the discussions of the Committee of Jurists were going very well. Thirty-three articles, he explained, had already been covered, a number of which were now under discussion in subcommittees. He added that there were about four outstanding problems that he felt should be presented to the Delegation so that he could have their guidance in further negotiations.

Mr. Hackworth said the first problem was the method of election of judges to the court.31 According to the present method of the Court, judges are nominated by panels of judges on the Hague Court of Arbitration and are elected by the Council and the Assembly of the League of Nations. He said the British were now proposing that judges be nominated directly by governments and that instead of the nine members of the present Court, fifteen should be elected. He pointed out that this government doubted whether nine members would be sufficient and that our tentative view was that the Court should be kept at fifteen and that the present method of election should be retained. Our primary objection to the British suggestion, he added, was that it would throw the whole matter into politics. Senator Connally asked whether states not members of the Hague Court of Arbitration could participate in the election of judges to the Court. Mr. Hackworth replied in the affirmative and added that where a state is not a member of the Hague Court, it may set up a panel of four to prepare a nomination.

The Secretary asked what decision Mr. Hackworth wished from the Delegation. Mr. Hackworth replied that he wished to know whether we should adhere to our present tentative position or go along with the British. Senator Connally favored retaining our present position. Representative Bloom thought that any change from the present system would permit states to gang up and pack the Court. Mr. Hackworth strongly recommended sticking to the present method of election, adding that this position was widely supported by the American Bar Association. Mr. Bloom pointed out that while under the British proposal states would tend to nominate judges of a particular political conviction, this same weakness was also present in the existing system since governments put men on the Hague tribunal that they considered "sound". Mr. Bowman recommended that we stick to the old method for the time being, but recognize that we would prefer a better method if it could be developed.

THE SECRETARY questioned whether the Delegation was in a position to make a decision on this matter and wondered whether it would not be wise to reserve our position until further study could be given to this question. He added that it would be well to have Chief Justice Stone's point of view. Senator Connally suggested that former Chief Justice Hughes might also be consulted.<sup>32</sup> It was then generally agreed that the Delegation would reserve its position and that former Chief Justice Hughes and Chief Justice Stone would be consulted.

Mr. Hackworth said he had a further point to raise—the question of compulsory jurisdiction.<sup>38</sup> He explained that some countries wanted compulsory jurisdiction, but that the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union were opposed.34 Among those countries favoring compulsory jurisdiction in particular were the Latin American countries. Senator Connally said that he could not agree to compulsory jurisdiction unless the cases that could come before the Court were very restricted.

Mr. Hackworth explained that the American Bar Association was very much in favor of compulsory jurisdiction and that they would like to see compulsory jurisdiction adopted. They recognized, however, that it would be necessary to permit any government to make a reservation when approving the treaty. Senator Vandenberg commented that the Permanent Court did not get by the Senate, even with its present jurisdiction. Mr. Hackworth agreed that probably compulsory jurisdiction would not be acceptable. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that there already was compulsory jurisdiction under the optional clause and Mr. Hackworth agreed that it was possible to have compulsory jurisdiction under the present statute.

THE SECRETARY said it was then agreed that this government did not favor the proposals of the Latin American countries for compulsory jurisdiction.

Mr. Hackworth explained that a third point he wished to discuss was that of advisory opinions.35 He noted that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals provide that the Security Council may ask for advisory opinions but that there was now some feeling that both the Assembly and other international organizations should also be allowed to ask for advisory opinions. Senator Connally said he had no particular objection to empowering the General Assembly to ask for advisory opinions except that such a provision might pose conflicts of jurisdiction between the General Assembly and the Security Council. Mr. Hackworth thought empowering the General Assembly to ask for advisory opinions would be in line with our general desire to strengthen the Assembly.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked what an advisory opinion was. Mr. Hackworth replied that it was a request to the Court on a question of law.

Mr. Bowman noted that after elaborate discussion of this whole matter in Mr. Hull's office over a period of a year, the conclusion in the end was that the General Assembly should be empowered to ask for advisory opinions. SENATOR CONNALLY said he had no objection whatever to the Assembly asking for advisory opinions on questions that lay within the jurisdiction of the Assembly. Mr. BOWMAN commented that of course the Court was free to decide whether it wished to give an opinion in a case or not. Mr. HACK-WORTH agreed that the Court on a number of occasions had in fact decided not to give an opinion. Representative Bloom said what he objected to was the phrase "advisory opinion". Why could not just the word "advice" be adopted? The term "opinion" suggested that the Court would be bound by its decision and that to escape a prior decision it would have to reverse itself. Senator Connally commented that a reversal had frequently taken place in the history of courts.

Mr. Hackworth asked if it was the sense of the meeting that the Assembly should be allowed to request advisory opinions along with the Security Council. Mr. Gerig noted that in the case of the League where both the Council and the Assembly could request advisory opinions there had been some thirty cases where the Council had requested such opinions and only one case in which the Assembly had requested an opinion. He noted that there was the possibility of losing control over the vote requesting an advisory opinion if the matter was handled by the Assembly, since the major powers would not have a veto on the decisions of the Assembly.

It was the general agreement of the Delegation that the Assembly should be allowed to request advisory opinions.

Mr. Hackworth asked whether international organizations such as the International Labor Organization should be allowed to request advisory opinions also. Senator Connally thought this would be most inadvisable since these bodies were not in the same category with the Security Council and the General Assembly. It was generally agreed that it would be undesirable for international organizations like the I.L.O. to request advisory opinions.

Senator Connally said he would like to make it clear that he was reserving his views on these questions for later study and The Secretary suggested that these matters be raised again at a later time.

The meeting was recessed at 10:10.

At 10:15 the meeting was reopened by the Secretary . . . .

REVIEW OF PROPOSALS AND SUGGESTIONS FOR CONSIDERATION—CHAPTER VI

THE CHAIRMAN then asked Mr. Pasvolsky to open the discussion of Chapter VI of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Section A

With reference to Section A, Mr. Pasvolsky reviewed the changes in the composition of the Security Council proposed by other governments. These included proposals for abandoning the category of permanent members, for increasing the number of permanent members and, likewise of non-permanent members, and for providing for regional representation. Mr. Pasvolsky drew particular attention to the desire of the "Middle Powers" for special consideration with respect to membership on the Security Council. He recommended that this Government should be prepared, if necessary to enumerate various criteria which it would consider a suitable basis for use in selecting the non-permanent members of the Council, but that such criteria should not be incorporated in the Charter itself. It was agreed by the Delegates that this was the proper position to take.

Section B

Paragraph 1—Mr. Pasvolsky said that paragraph 1 of Section B incorporated a principal feature of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, namely that the Security Council should have primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. Senator Connally thought it unwise to grant to the Assembly the right of review of Council decisions in this field, as a number of governments have proposed. Senator Vandenberg and Representative Eaton concurred with this view. It was agreed that this paragraph is satisfactory as it stands.

Paragraphs 2 and 3—With respect to the following paragraph (2), which Mr. Pasvolsky explained had been incorporated at British insistence, it was agreed that the phrase "and the provisions of this Charter" 35a should be appended at the end.

Paragraph 3 was agreed to in its present form without discussion. Paragraph 4—The vital importance of paragraph 4 was recognized in that it obligates all members of the Organization to accept the decisions of the Security Council. In response to a question from Senator Connally, Mr. Pasvolsky said that it refers only to measures of enforcement.

General Embick and Secretary Stettinius thought the paragraph should stand as it is, whereas Senator Vandenberg said that he could appreciate the Canadian point of view. With reference to Canada's proposal that decisions of the Council be binding only on its members and that only they be obliged to take enforcement action unless by virtue of a concurring vote in the Assembly all members of the Organization were similarly bound, Mr. Pasvolsky said that the implications of such a provision had been discussed in conversations with the Canadians and that it had been pointed out to them that their proposal would have the effect of limiting enforcement measures to the action of the great powers. He said that the Canadians were somewhat shaken in their position by this argument and that it had been used with similar effect in conversations at Mexico City with representatives of Latin American countries.

Mr. Hickerson raised the question as to whether the Canadian proposal applied only to the supply of forces or applied as well to the making available of facilities. Mr. Stettinius anticipated that there would be complications about the use of bases if concurrence by General Assembly were made to apply to facilities and assistance as well as to armed forces. Admiral Willson agreed with General Embick that a modification of paragraph 4 in the direction of the Canadian proposal would slow up action and would make planning difficult. At this point Senator Connally left the meeting, stating that he favored leaving the provision in its present form. This was the position adopted by the Delegates.

Paragraph 5—Paragraph 5, relating to the regulation of armaments, was considered acceptable in its present form. Mr. Pasvolsky said that the negotiations at Dumbarton Oaks would indicate that this provision goes as far as is practicable.<sup>36</sup>

Section C

With reference to Section C, relative to voting in the Security Council, Mr. Pasvolsky took note of the French proposals which would have the effect of placing under paragraph 2 disposition of all matters arising under Section A of Chapter VIII. In support of the present text he made the point that unanimity among the great powers was important in order to give greatest possible weight to recommendations for pacific settlement. It was agreed to stand by Section C in its present form.

Section D

Mr. Pasvolsky explained that paragraph 1 of Section D, relative to procedure in the Security Council, was the result of a compromise between two views. The British had wanted the Council to be a meeting place of foreign ministers; at the same time, this Government had desired the Council to be a continuous organ. It was agreed that the paragraph is satisfactory as it stands.

The Secretary left the meeting and asked Senator Vandenberg to act as Chairman.

In accordance with a recommendation of the Committee on Security Aspects of Preparation for the United Nations Conference, Mr. Pasvolsky proposed the dropping of the last clause from paragraph 2, and this was agreed to. He explained that the British had asked for the inclusion of this reference to regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee in order that the control of Germany might be made a special case under the Charter. The subsequent decision embodied in paragraph 2 of Chapter XII in the Proposals made this reference necessary [unnecessary].

Paragraph 3 was agreed to without discussion.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that two alternatives had been proposed by other governments in substitution for the procedure envisaged in paragraph 4: (1) that the participation in the discussion of any question before the Security Council should be a right to be exercised on the decision of any member of the Organization, and (2) that the privilege might be accorded to any member of the Organization by a specified minority vote in the Security Council. Senator Vandenberg thought that if only the right of discussion were involved it might be left unrestricted. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested, however, that many would clamor to be heard and that it was in the interest of more orderly procedure to put such participation on a restricted basis. It was decided to let paragraph 4 stand as it is, but the opinion was expressed that, if pressure develops at the Conference to liberalize its terms, no serious objection should be interposed. The same conclusion was reached with reference to paragraph 5.

REVIEW OF PROPOSALS AND SUGGESTIONS FOR CONSIDERATION— CHAPTER VIII

Chapter VIII, Section A

With reference to Section A of Chapter VIII, the next item on the agenda, Senator Vandenberg proposed to add the following sentence to paragraph 1: "If the Security Council finds that any situation which it shall investigate involves injustice to peoples concerned, it shall recommend appropriate measures of adjustment which may include revision of treaties and of prior international decisions." Senator Vandenberg said that he wanted to make the fundamental point that the Security Council must look backward as well as forward. He felt that, if the Charter were to be a rigid guarantee of the status quo, there would be difficulty in securing the approval of the Senate. He wanted to find language which would result in the least friction, but which would constitute a reference to this point in the Charter.

Mr. Pasvolsky took the view that the investigatory powers of the Council should be concerned exclusively with situations the continuance of which might endanger the peace and that this was not the appropriate place to introduce broad language of this kind. He suggested, therefore, that the possibility of incorporating such a provision in the Chapter on the General Assembly should be further examined. This was agreeable to Senator Vandenberg, and it was decided to defer consideration of this matter to another time.

Paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 were found satisfactory in their present form. Paragraph 5 gave rise to considerable discussion. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that it involved the important issue as to whether the Council's powers of pacific settlement should be limited to the recommendation of procedures or methods of adjustment, as provided for in the present text, or whether they should be broadened to include recommendations relating to terms of settlement. Representative Bloom asked where this power resided if not in the Council, and Representative Eaton thought that the Council would have to take cognizance of measures of settlement. Mr. Bowman stated that it had been the desire at Dumbarton Oaks to give disputants a wide freedom of action as to the manner of settling disputes and he favored leaving paragraph 5 in its present form. Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion that the phrase "or settlement" be added at the end of the paragraph was agreed to.

Paragraph 6 was accepted as satisfactory without discussion.

With reference to paragraph 7, Mr. Pasvolsky said that two important changes had been proposed: (1) to limit the applicability of paragraph 7 to paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of Section A and (2) to designate the international court of justice as the agency to determine whether a dispute arose out of matters solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the state concerned. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that these changes would constitute an improvement over the present text.

Senator Vandenberg thought that it was important to examine this question carefully in the light of the attitudes expressed in the Senate on those occasions when the question of adherence to the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice was before that body. The said he wanted to go as far as it was practicable to go in the Senate. There was discussion of specifying the Security Council rather than the Court, but it was pointed out that the United States would not have a veto on the Council if it were a party to a dispute of the kind covered by VIII, A. Senator Vandenberg then suggested that consideration of this very important paragraph be deferred until Senator Connally was present. It was agreed to do this.

Chapter VIII, Section B

With respect to paragraph 1 of Section B, Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the phrase "and the provisions of this Charter" be added, thus making the drafting in this paragraph conform to the language suggested for paragraph 2 of Section B of Chapter VI. It was agreed that it should be adopted as a general drafting rule that this change should be made elsewhere at the appropriate places in the Charter. With this additional phrase, paragraph 1 was considered to be satisfactory.

Paragraphs 2 and 3 were approved in their present form. With respect to the latter, Representative Bloom said he did not like the enumeration of measures not involving the use of armed force, but did not suggest any revision in view of Mr. Pasvolsky's statement that the enumeration had been in response to Soviet insistence.

It was recognized that some clarification of paragraphs 4 and 5 might be in order. Accordingly, it was agreed that, in the event of dissatisfaction on the part of other Governments, the following revisions would be agreeable to the United States Delegation:

With respect to paragraph 4, the redrafting of the last sentence to read: "Such action may include demonstrations, blockade, and other operations by air, sea or land forces made available to the Security Council by the members of the Organization.

With respect to paragraph 5, the redrafting of the last sentence to read: "The negotiations concerning the special agreement or agreements should be initiated by the Security Council as soon as possible. The agreement or agreements should be subject to approval by the Security Council and to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their constitutional processes."

Paragraph 6 was approved. Senator Vandenberg said that it was his understanding of this paragraph that the forces would be supplied under the agreements referred to in paragraph 5. General Embick said that this was the correct view. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that the paragraph had developed from the proposal of the Soviets for an international air force.

Mr. Pasvolsky explained that paragraph 7 provides that the Security Council may decide in each case whether contributions of armed forces, facilities and assistance shall be required of all members of the Organization or of a smaller number, and that the second sentence thereof refers to a situation in which the Organization calls for action in which it is desirable for the specialized international organizations to concur. This paragraph was considered satisfactory.

Paragraphs 8, 9, 10 and 11 were approved in their present form.

Section A, Paragraph 1

At this point Senator Vandenberg reverted to paragraph 1 of Section A of Chapter VIII and proposed that investigation of a dispute be made a rigid obligation on the Security Council. He suggested that this might be done by substituting "shall investigate" for "should be empowered to investigate." Mr. Pasvolsky said that this question had come up at Dumbarton Oaks and that it had been decided not to make investigation mandatory because too much investigation would provoke difficulties. Mr. Bowman thought that the Council should not be obliged to take up every case, many of which would be trivial. Mr. Pasvolsky made the further point that, in view of the discretion still remaining in the Council to judge whether international peace and security were actually in danger, no device could give assurance that the Council would in any particular instance exercise its investigatory powers. It was decided to let the paragraph stand as it is.

The meeting was adjourned at 11:45 a.m.

Minutes of the Ninth Meeting (Executive Session) of the United States Delegation (A), Held at Washington, Thursday, April 12, 1945

CHAIRMANSHIP OF THE CONFERENCE

THE SECRETARY explained that the Soviets had requested that there be four Chairmen, one from each sponsoring government, who would serve in rotation. He pointed out that the British, the Chinese, and ourselves have expressed dissent to such a proposal on the grounds that it would be cumbersome, impractical and unrealistic. Senator Connally moved that we adhere to the custom of the host government having the Chairmanship. The Secretary pointed out that in addition to the factors enumerated above, it might set an undesirable precedent for future international conferences and even for the Organization itself. He indicated that the President feels we should stand firm on our position. Dean Gildersleeve inquired if the other sponsors would not be given due recognition if their heads of Delegation were named Vice Chairmen. The Secretary replied that was exactly what we had in mind. The Delegation approved our maintaining a firm position on this matter.

SOVIET REPUBLICS

The Secretary opened this discussion by repeating clearly that the President had made a commitment at Yalta to support a proposal for the admission of two Soviet Republics as initial members of the international organization if the Soviets proposed this at San Francisco. The Secretary explained that we must find some way to handle this without embarrassment to the President or to the Delegation. He said we had been considering the possibility of having the President send a note of instructions to the Secretary which could be read at the Conference. Senator Vandenberg asked what the word "support" meant, pointing out that he would be our spokesman on the Commission involved. The Secretary expressed the view that we will have discharged our commitment if we cast our vote at San Francisco for the proposal.

Dr. Bowman felt there should be some definition of the basis on which it was done, otherwise a precedent would be set and the door wide open for later admission of the remainder of the 16 Soviet Republics, suggesting that perhaps, if politically feasible, a declaration of three as the limit might be the way to handle it. Congressman Bloom expressed the opinion that voting for three would not set a precedent for 16.

Dr. Pasvolsky pointed out that at the Conference a list of the initial members of the organization must be agreed upon and that presumably the Soviet proposal will be framed so as to request inclusion of the two Republics in that list. He said this undoubtedly at San Francisco should be handled in the Steering Committee, reciting the example of Denmark's request for participation at Bretton Woods being so handled.<sup>38</sup> He thought we should be absolutely certain that the question is handled in the Steering Committee and that we should receive clarified instructions on voting "yes" in the Steering Committee and then stop.

At the request of the Secretary, Mr. Dunn explained that the Soviets had requested that the two Republics be invited to send delegates to San Francisco and that we have refused this request. Congressman Eaton inquired what the "Quid pro quo" was for the agreement at Yalta and the Secretary replied vaguely that there were military and other considerations which could not be discussed. Senator Connally expressed the opinion that it was an unfortunate situation but that the Delegation must vote for the proposal.

Dr. Pasvolsky expressed the opinion that there was a bare chance that the Soviets might withdraw from this position. He said that when the question comes up it is probable that the collateral question will be raised as to what constitutes a national unit and if this is raised sharply with indications that a sharp debate will ensue they might possibly withdraw their proposal and raise it after the establishment of the organization.

In answer to Congressman Bloom's inquiry, Messrs. Dunn and Pasvolsky stated that this was not a matter of the Soviet Union itself having three votes. Dr. Pasvolsky suggested that the Assembly would have to pass on the admission of additional Soviet Republics if that question were later raised.

At this point Dr. Pasvolsky stressed the importance of having a no voting rule at the Conference, that instead of asking for a vote the Chairman should inquire if any country raised objections and if they had objections inquire if they would make reservations or if they would place the matter before their legislative body for approval as is. It was indicated that if certain countries had objections these could possibly be negotiated out at the Conference.

On the proposal that the President send a letter of instruction which the Secretary could read at San Francisco, Senator Vandenberg said that this course of action would be the most powerful aid we could give to the Soviet proposal and Dr. Bowman said it would look as if the Delegation had a whip held over it. It was decided unanimously that if the Soviets raise the point the Delegation would vote for it but say nothing on the question and that there should be no letter from the President for public use although it might be well for the Secretary personally to have a letter of instruction on it.

[Washington,] April 13, 1945.

Subject: United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco.

- 1. Delegation—The Delegation as appointed by President Roosevelt under my Chairmanship consists of Mr. Hull, Senior Adviser, Senator Connally, Senator Vandenberg, Congressman Bloom, Congressman Eaton, Commander Stassen and Dean Gildersleeve.
- 2. Its Activity—The Delegation has been meeting with me daily to review the substance of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals which have been agreed upon with the other sponsoring governments of the Conference (United Kingdom, Soviet Union and China) as the basis for drafting the Charter of the Organization at San Francisco. The Delegation has been considering what changes if any, which have been suggested by other governments or have evolved through discussion in this country, should be advanced by us at San Francisco or supported by us there if advanced by others.

Generally speaking there will be only a few changes of substance which the Delegation will recommend. For instance, it is probable that the proposal which Senator Vandenberg has stressed so much publicly (and which the Chinese have also in effect proposed) of adding certain references to justice and international law in the Charter 40 will be accepted. We have not yet considered his other proposal that the Organization should be empowered to review treaties and prior international obligations.

Our analysis of the document will be completed before we leave for San Francisco and the final recommended changes of the Delegation submitted to you for your consideration and approval. After that step is completed we are obligated to submit them to the other sponsoring governments as we have agreed to consult with them on such proposed changes.

&lt;sup>40</sup> Senator Vandenberg issued a press statement on March 5 in which he expressed his anxiety about the failure of the Dumbarton Oaks formula to mention "justice" as a guiding objective or a rule of conduct, except in the chapter providing for an International Court of Justice, and he indicated that he would submit concrete proposals to his colleagues on this subject. (Arthur H. Vandenberg, Jr., (ed.), The Private Papers of Senator Vandenberg, p. 154.) See also the memorandum of March 16 by the Secretary of State to President Roosevelt, p. 125.

- 3. I think it is important that you meet with the Delegation on Monday or Tuesday of next week.
- 4. I attach a copy of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals hereto.<sup>41</sup> If you wish to review them in detail I would be glad to meet with you with several of our technical experts.
- 5. Presidency—We are having some difficulty with the Soviet Union as to the Presidency of the Conference. They have proposed that the Heads of the Delegations of the four sponsoring Governments should be co-chairmen with rotation in office. Our position, which President Roosevelt had instructed us to maintain, is that this is cumbersome, impractical and unrealistic. We also feel that if we yield to the Soviet position it might set an undesirable precedent for future Conferences and even for the organization itself. Our position is that there should be a single President for the Conference and that the other sponsoring powers would hold the positions of Vice Presidents and would preside in rotation in the President's absence.
- 6. Trusteeships—Another important open question relates to territorial trusteeships. It was agreed at Yalta that there should be discussion among the five proposed permanent members of the Security Council (United States, United Kingdom, Soviet Union, China and France) prior to San Francisco as to the machinery and principles of a trusteeship system to replace the League of Nations mandate system, and that machinery to create such a system should be made a part of the Charter of the International Organization. It was also agreed that there should be no discussion prior to or at San Francisco of specific territories to be placed under the system, this subject being left for later agreement.

Because of the importance of certain strategic areas in the Pacific to our future security a question has arisen as to the wisdom of discussing the subject at all at this time. This matter was referred to President Roosevelt a few days ago with the recommendation that he review the matter with the Secretaries of War, Navy and me on his return. He had agreed to do this on the 19th.

President Roosevelt has had the trusteeship system importantly in mind for some time and his latest thought on it is evidenced by his last Press Conference in which he specifically stated that "the United States and the other United Nations must accept trusteeships over Japanese mandate islands, build new naval and air bases and help the Philippines rebuild, economically, after the Commonwealth becomes a self-governing nation." (As reported by today's New York I feel it is vitally important that you meet with Secre- $Times.^{42}$ taries Stimson, Forrestal and me to discuss this at the earliest possible opportunity. You may also wish to invite the Secretary of the Interior to this meeting as Secretary Ickes is extremely interested in the subject and recently submitted a memorandum to President Roosevelt on it.<sup>43</sup>

- 7. Tuesday 44 will be the last day the full Delegation is in Washington.
- 8. The Soviet Republics—At Yalta this Government and the United Kingdom agreed to support at San Francisco a Soviet proposal that two Soviet Republics, the White Russia and the Ukraine, be admitted to initial membership in the International Organization. As you know, there has been considerable discussion of this. The position of the United States Delegation, in which I concur, is that we should interpret support to mean voting at San Francisco for the proposal if and when the Soviets make it and that no other action on our part is required to carry out the commitment.

The Soviets are now taking the position that by interpretation the commitment extended to giving these two Republics the right to be represented at the San Francisco Conference itself should their membership in the Organization be approved by the Conference. No commitment was made by the United States and the British with respect to participation by the two Soviet Republics in the Conference at San Francisco. That is a matter for the Conference to decide. The Soviets, however, are still insistent and at a meeting this morning <sup>46</sup> refused to agree to a list of proposed Commission and Committee Chairmen for the Conference pending clarification of the right of these Republics to be present.

Mr. Hiss read the Soviet Ambassador's letter of April 12, 1945 48 proposing corrections to the minutes of the April 3 meeting. The corrections were accepted by the Secretary and the British and Chinese Ambassadors.

THE SECRETARY suggested that each Ambassador give any report he might be in position to make.

THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR reported that his Government has indicated assent on all proposals previously referred to it from the Informal Organizing Group with the exception of two: first, the allocation of Executive Committee positions and officerships of the Commissions and Committees and, secondly, the [personal suggestion which he had made at the last meeting concerning the 49 Conference chairmanship. Lord Halifax indicated that the British Government is in general agreement with the proposed allocations but that it suggests that no strictly final agreement be undertaken at this time because of the fact that fuller information regarding delegations and related questions will probably be available at San Francisco before the Conference convenes. He said that his Government has one or two suggestions not worth going into at the present time, which could better be cleared in the period just before the Conference. [The Secretary asked whether Lord Halifax means agreement by April 20 or April 21 and Lord Halifax indicated that it ought to be possible by that time.] 50

With regard to the second point LORD HALIFAX said that he has no answer from his Government on the question of chairman of the Conference. [With regard to the second point, Lord Halifax said that he had not yet received the comments of his Government on the personal suggestion which he had made.] 51 [The Secretary said that unless this question is definitely solved the confusion would be hopeless.] 50

THE SECRETARY then called on THE SOVIET AMBASSADOR who took up first the question of languages in which the Conference proceedings should be published. He requested on behalf of his Government that all main documents of the Conference and the official journal be published in five languages, English, French, Spanish, Russian and Chinese. [In answer to the question as to what he means by the journal, he said that the journal is simply the journal.] <sup>52</sup> Mr. Hiss asked whether the need for the use of documents in the Russian language might not be met by the translation into Russian of the order of the day without any attempt at printing the official journal in Russian. The Secretary asked whether the Soviet Ambassador really meant the publication in printed form of the daily record in Russian.

[Mr. Hiss asked the Soviet Ambassador whether the translation into Russian of only conference papers would be sufficient.] <sup>52</sup> Discussion on this subject was closed by the Secretary's instructing Mr. Ross to determine the facilities at San Francisco for printing in the Russian language and instructing further that the resultant information be discussed with the Soviet Embassy.

THE SOVIET AMBASSADOR expressed the view of his Government that invitations for unofficial observers from governmental international organizations to attend the Conference should be limited to persons who are nationals of the countries participating in the Conference. Mr. Hiss stated that invitations have already gone out to the five agreed organizations on the basis of previous clearance with the Soviet Government and that this condition was not previously expressed and therefore not incorporated in the invitations.<sup>53</sup> Ambassador Gromyko asserted that his orders in this regard had arrived since the last meeting and that they are specific regardless of an apparent discrepancy between them and what the Department understood from the United States Embassy in Moscow as having been stated by the Soviet Government. Mr. Hiss was instructed to look into whether any official organization invited would be sending observers who are not nationals of participating countries.<sup>54</sup> Lord HALIFAX indicated that his silence in this discussion should not be construed as consent, and that he must reserve the position of his government. The Secretary reserved the position of the American Government.

THE SOVIET AMBASSADOR suggested that Yugoslavia be given membership on the Executive Committee to displace the Netherlands. of his Government.<sup>57</sup> The Secretary and the Chinese Ambassador also reserved their positions.

Ambassador Gromyko stated that the Soviet Government cannot give its consent either to the first proposed allocation or to the second proposed allocation of officerships of Commissions and Committees, because the Ukrainian Republic and the White Russian Republic are not allocated chairmanships.

THE SECRETARY reviewed the agreement reached at Yalta on the subject of votes for the Soviet Republics and pointed out that there was agreement that a Soviet request for membership in the General Assembly of such international organization as may be established would be supported by the United States and the United Kingdom, but that there was no agreement whatever for participation in the Conference by those Republics and that participation is limited to countries who have signed the United Nations Pact. 58 [Lord Halifax confirmed this statement.] 59

Ambassador Gromyko asserted that it was previously agreed that the two Republics would be initial members of the organization and that membership from the beginning must inevitably entail their being participants in the Conference. He stated that his Government had in mind that at the first or at an early session of the Conference the two Republics would be admitted and that their participation would become immediately effective thenceforth.

[The Secretary again described what had happened in the matter. He said that, according to the arrangement arrived at, the Soviet Union would propose at an appropriate meeting the admission of the two Soviet Republics as members of the General Assembly; that the United Kingdom and the United States would support this proposal at that time; and that nothing further in the matter was agreed THE SECRETARY pointed out that there had been no previous reference whatever to the subject now raised by the Soviet Ambassador in requesting participation by the Republics at the San Francisco Conference. Copy of the March 20 note to the Soviet Ambassador was produced in confirmation.] 60

The Department thereupon suggested substituting Chile for Czechoslovakia. The British did not concur but continued to press for a seat for India. (Memoranda of conversations, April 10 and 12, not printed.)

In a telephone conversation of April 14, the Counselor of the Soviet Embassy, Alexander Kapustin, informed Mr. Hiss that he had been instructed by Ambassador Gromyko to say that his Government did not agree to the proposal to exchange the positions of Chile and Czechoslovakia in the San Francisco Conference allocations (500.CC/4-1445).

LORD HALIFAX and Mr. Hiss were called upon and indicated general agreement with the Secretary's account of the background of the subject.

THE CHINESE AMBASSADOR was called upon for his report and stated that the proposed allocations of Commission and Committee officerships are generally agreeable to the Chinese Government. He added that, if subsequent questions of alteration come up, the Chinese Foreign Minister will be here to consider suggestions.

THE SECRETARY stated that if the sponsoring powers cannot go to the Conference in agreement, questions at issue will regrettably have to go before the Conference. LORD HALIFAX stated that the view of the United Kingdom will be the same unless subsequent diplomatic interchange clears up questions before the 20th or 21st.] 61

Mr. HILLMAN's proposal that the World Trade Union Conference send a delegation as advisers to the San Francisco Conference was brought up. [It was indicated that the view of the American Government was that the suggestion is impracticable.] 61 Ambassador Gromyko said he will consult his Government.

[The Soviet Ambassador in reply to a question again stated that his Government has not given instructions on questions previously referred, even as early as the March 30 memorandum on Conference organization.] 62

THE SECRETARY stated that because of lack of progress, the Informal Organizing Group should adjourn permanently and be disbanded; that he is greatly disturbed and disappointed; and that there would be no more meetings of the Informal Organizing Group unless one of the members wishes that a meeting be called. The Secretary stated that the Informal Organizing Group is making no progress whatever because of inability to arrive at decision; that the Soviet Ambassador's lack of instructions and his opposition to proposals agreed by all the other sponsors make for an impossible state of affairs; ] 63 that on that account he feels that the group should adjourn permanently and be disbanded; that he is greatly disturbed and disappointed; [that there is apparently no point in attempting to de anything before we actually go to San Francisco;] and that there would be no more meetings of the Informal Organizing Group unless one of the members wishes that a meeting be called. Memorandum by Mr. Leo Pasvolsky, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State 64

[Washington,] April 13, 1945.

TRUSTEESHIP PROBLEM

- 1. The Yalta decision on trusteeship covered the following points:
- (1) That there will be included in the Charter provisions for the establishment of a trusteeship system covering principles and machinery;

(2) That the question of the precise territories to be placed under that system will be discussed later;

(3) That, in any event, the system would apply only to the former mandates, the newly detached territories and such areas as might voluntarily be placed under the system;

(4) That, prior to the Conference, consultation would take place between the five sponsoring powers for the purpose of agreeing upon proposals to be placed before the conference.

- 2. Pursuant to this agreement, we have invited the British, Soviet, Chinese and French governments to send representatives to participate in such consultation. 65 All four have accepted the invitation. It is, therefore, necessary for us to go through with the consultation, either in Washington or in San Francisco—in the latter case, prior to the organization of the Committee on Trusteeships.
- 3. The consultation can result in one of the following three proposals:
- A. To have no discussion at the Conference itself but rather to postpone the consideration of the whole matter to some future date.

B. To include in the Charter a provision that, after its creation, the organization would undertake to set up a trusteeship system.

C. To include in the Charter the substance of the material contained in our paper, thus setting up the machinery of trusteeships, stating the objectives of the system, defining the powers and basic

&lt;sup>64</sup> The substance of this memorandum was presented by Mr. Pasvolsky at a meeting on trusteeships on April 13, with the Secretary of State, the Under Secretary of the Interior (Fortas), and Messrs. Taussig and Raynor, which was held to attempt to develop some proposal which might have a chance of breaking the existing deadlock. It was finally decided that the best course of action would be to place this problem before the United States delegation to the San Francisco Conference, to invite the Secretaries of War and Navy to be present at a meeting of the delegation on April 17, and, after the delegation had reached a decision, it would then be submitted to President Truman for approval. procedures in this respect of the various organs of the Organization, and leaving to future determination the following questions to be handled by means of special agreements:

a. Territories to be placed under trusteeship;

b. Designation of strategic areas;

c. Precise terms under which each particular territory would be placed under trusteeship;

d. Selection of the country to be the administering power of each particular territory;

e. Definition, in each case, of the respective rights and responsibilities of the administering power and of the Organization.

The Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, April 13, 1945—11 p. m. [Received April 13—7: 50 p. m.]

1161. This evening I called on Marshal Stalin. Stalin was obviously deeply distressed at the death of President Roosevelt. He asked many questions about the situation in the US resulting from his death. He assured me that it was his desire to work with President Truman as he had with President Roosevelt in the past. I will report in more detail in a later telegram on this aspect of the conversation. I proposed to Stalin that the most effective way to assure the American public and the world of the desire of the Soviet Government to continue collaboration with us and the other United Nations would be for Mr. Molotov to go to the US at this time. I suggested that he might stop at Washington to see the President and then proceed to San Francisco, even though he might be able to remain there only a few days. If it would assist I felt sure that arrangements could be made to place one of our latest planes at his disposal such as the one used by President Roosevelt.

Stalin inquired whether I was expressing my personal views. I made it clear that I was, but added that I felt completely confident that I was expressing the views of the President and yourself and that you would be ready to confirm this.

After a brief discussion between Molotov and Stalin the latter stated categorically that Molotov's trip to the US, although difficult at this time, would be arranged. He made it clear, however, that this decision was based on my assurance that you would authorize me with the approval of the President to renew the hope that it would be possible for Mr. Molotov to come to Washington and San Francisco as you considered his presence there at this time of real importance.

I hope that you will send me immediately instructions so that I may confirm without delay what I said to Stalin this evening.

I hope also you will bear in mind that I have promised a suitably equipped C-54 to take him to the US via the North Atlantic Scandinavian route if he so desires.68

Memorandum by the Secretary of State 69

[Washington,] April 14, 1945.

Early this morning at the railroad station while waiting for the funeral train to arrive, 70 I had a private talk with Forrestal, King 71 and Marshall.

I told them that we must find a solution at San Francisco to compose the trusteeship issue and it was impossible for us to go into San Francisco with the policy of annexation which representatives of the armed forces had publicly enunciated.

I also said that we in the State Department were willing to meet them half-way, but we could never agree to a policy of annexation.

All three of the gentlemen listened sympathetically and obviously appreciated the importance of the point I was making.

Forrestal stated that he had drafted a memorandum on the whole subject.

Would it not be possible, before throwing the entire issue to the Delegation on Monday,72 for our people to have a round-up with Bundy and Correa tomorrow 73 to see whether or not some suggestion could be made now by the Army and Navy which I could propose to the American Delegation and which could later be endorsed by President Truman.

The Secretary of State to the Soviet Ambassador (Gromyko)

Washington, April 14, 1945.

EXCELLENCY: I acknowledge your note of April 11 relative to the proposal of the Soviet Government to elect four chairmen of the Jurists' Committee from representatives of the four nations sponsoring the United Nations Conference on International Organization and the meetings of the Jurists' Committee. The United States Government accepts the decision of the Jurists' Committee to elect one chairman, is since this decision does not appear to violate in any way the principle of equality of position of the four governments sponsoring the San Francisco Conference.

Moreover, it is the view of the United States Government that the proposal of the Soviet Government to elect four chairmen would, if it had been accepted, inevitably lead to great confusion and a lack of clarity in the direction of the work of the Committee.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Cabot Coville of the Office of Special Political Affairs

[Washington,] April 14, 1945.

Participants: Mr. Kapustin of the Soviet Embassy SPA-Mr. Hiss

A—Mr. H188 Mr. Coville

Mr. Kapustin called at 6:00 p. m. at his request to discuss several matters growing out of the work of the Informal Organizing Group.

In connection with the Soviet proposal regarding rotation of the chairmanship of the Conference, he said that his government proposes also that the chairmanship of the Steering Committee and of the Executive Committee rotate in the same way. He was asked whether his government's proposal in this matter would be that the person who in rotation would under the Soviet proposal become chairman of the Conference at a particular time should at that time also be chairman of the Steering and Executive Committees. He said that he was not clear on that point. He left the impression simply that the Soviet Government desires that there be rotation among the sponsoring powers of the chairmanships of the Conference Steering Committee and Executive Committee as well as of the Conference itself.

Mr. Kapustin expressed Soviet agreement with the Department's memorandum dated April 9 entitled "Records of the Proceedings of the Conference". 74a

With regard to the Department's memorandum of April 9 entitled "Procedures Anticipated at the Opening Session for the Reception of Delegates and at the Initial Plenary Sessions of the Conference", Tab Mr. Kapustin said that his government agrees except to (1) and (2) under paragraph 2 c, which have to do with the president and vice presidents of the Conference. He again referred to the desire of his government that there be four presidents serving in rotation. Mr. Hiss incidentally mentioned that point 1 c of the memorandum has undergone change in that it is not President Truman's intention to attend in person.

Mr. Kapustin stated that the Soviets agree to the April 8 draft communication from the Department to the five governmental international organizations provided that such organizations be not represented by nationals of any state not participating in the Conference. His attention was called to the fact that, on the basis of a letter dated March 31 from Mr. Molotov, the substance of which had been communicated to the Department by the American Embassy in Moscow, the Soviet Government had not attached this condition to its previous approval of the matter and the invitations had therefore been sent out without the condition now suggested by the Soviet Government. It was also mentioned to him that two organizations, the League of Nations and the International Labor Organization, have an Irish national among the persons whom they are likely to send to the Conference.

On the subject of languages to be used in the Conference papers, Mr. Kapustin promised to have further information for us by Monday morning, April 16.

At 11:30 a. m. on Saturday I held a meeting in my office 77 with Anthony Eden 78 and Sir Alexander Cadogan. Messrs. Grew and Dunn were with me. . . .

To Eden and Cadogan I reported Ambassador Harriman's view that Molotov had not wanted to come to San Francisco at all and had objected when Stalin first suggested it. He had also "made difficulties" when Stalin authorized him to discuss the Polish question. Mr. Eden optimistically remarked that, since Ambassador Harriman and Molotov had left Moscow, the joint message of the President and the Prime Minister 2 had been received, Mikolajczyk 3 had accepted the Yalta compromise, and undoubtedly a cable would be awaiting Molotov in Washington advising him of Stalin's reaction. . . .

Returning to the Polish question, we called in Mr. Bohlen. According to Mr. Eden, progress on this problem was essential before San Francisco if the Conference was to be a success. Final solution was not to be expected, but we should be able to make "a step forward". I reported that I had discussed the matter that morning with President Truman, who was prepared to tell Molotov that failure to reach an early agreement on the Polish Government would jeopardize the Conference and would react adversely on American public opinion. Furthermore, there would be little chance of a treaty on world organization being approved by the Senate. Truman felt that continued failure to settle this question endangered the entire U.S. position in taking its place at the world council table. Mr.

The United Kingdom and the United States had suggested that Stanislaw Mikolajczyk, former Prime Minister of the Polish Government in London and subsequently leader of the Polish Peasant Party (in exile), participate in the hoped-for consultations in Moscow regarding the reorganization of the Polish Provisional Government. For documentation on this subject, see vol. v, pp. 110 ff.

Eden said this was fine. We should stand on the general lines of the joint message from Truman and Churchill.

Mr. Bohlen saw considerable significance in the delay in Molotov's arrival, because the head of the Polish Lublin Government had been called to Moscow. He suspected the Russians were going to announce their mutual assistance pact with the Lublin Government 84 before Molotov arrived. Mr. Eden felt announcement of the pact would have a bad effect on British opinion.

. . . Molotov actually arrived at the Washington airport a little before six o'clock.85 Messrs. Dunn, Harriman, Clark-Kerr 86 and Gromyko were with me when I met him. The rest of the plans worked out as scheduled. After our talk with the President, 87 Molotov went across the street with me to the State Department, where we were joined by Anthony Eden for a conference which lasted about an hour and a half.88

Soviet Union.

In my meeting with Anthony Eden and Sir Alexander Cadogan in my office on the twenty-first, I asked Mr. Eden for his interpretation of our agreement at Yalta to "support" the Soviet request for the Ukraine and White Russia to be initial members of the international organization. He felt that, while we had agreed to support the Soviet request, we were not obliged to insist on approval of it to the extent of breaking up the Conference if the other nations would not go along. The vote itself, and a short statement of the reasons for our position, would suffice. I said we were in agreement on this issue.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] April 16, 1945.

The Soviet Ambassador came in this afternoon at 6:30. He said that on March 13 Ambassador Harriman had addressed a note to Mr. Molotov in which he informed him that the United States Government desired to initiate consultations prior to the San Francisco Conference on the subject of trusteeship and that the consultations would take place in Washington as early as possible but not before April 1.89 He said that since then the Soviet Government had heard nothing further on the subject and desired any information we might be able to give him. Mr. Harriman's note had also stated that documents would be forthcoming with respect to this subject.

I reminded the Ambassador that we had heard nothing from the Soviet Government in response to this invitation although the other governments who were informed at the same time, that is, the British, Chinese, and French Governments <sup>90</sup> have already designated their representatives who will deal with this subject in Washington.

I told the Ambassador that we had not made any definite arrangements as yet with regard to the consultations he referred to and that we hoped within a few days to be able to give him further information on the subject. I said that as far as the documents were concerned that no paper had been given to us by any of the governments with whom we had taken the matter up or had we presented documents on the subject to any of those governments. I said we still expected to have consultations on the matter prior to the San Francisco Conference and that as soon as our arrangements were made we would be very happy to notify the Soviet Government accordingly. I further explained that this was a matter which had been caused some delay by the death of President Roosevelt as it was a question which was being discussed with him at the time of his death. The Ambassador thanked me very much for this information and said he would await a further communication.

[Informal Notes—Extracts]

[Here follows list of names of persons (17) present at meeting, and announcement by Senator Connally, presiding in the absence of the Secretary, on the revised opening day arrangements at San Francisco.

TENTATIVE ALLOCATION OF ASSIGNMENTS FOR OTHER COUNTRIES

Senator Connally asked Mr. Hiss to explain the next item on the agenda—the allocation of assignments for other countries at the Conference.

Mr. Hiss distributed to the delegates copies of a chart setting forth the tentative allocation of officerships on the commissions and committees of the Conference.91 He noted that we had suggested that Chile replace Czechoslovakia on one committee, but that this proposal was not acceptable to the British and Russians and that no word had vet been received from the Chinese. Mr. Hiss then explained that the president of Commission I would probably be Mr. Smuts (South Africa), that the president of Commission II would probably be Mr. Spaak (Belgium), that the president of Commission III would probably be Mr. Lie (Norway), and finally that the president of Commission IV would probably be Mr. Para Perez. Mr. Hiss emphasized that the assignments were extremely tentative and that agreement had not yet been reached upon them. He indicated that the British had suggested that a decision be postponed until San Francisco,92 but that our preference was to decide the matter in advance in order to avoid a scramble at the Conference.

Senator Vandenberg questioned the designation of India for the chairmanship of the Committee on Economic and Social Cooperation. Representative Eaton thought the designation of Guatemala on the same commission was questionable. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that it was expected that a very competent person would head the Indian Delegation, and Mr. Hiss added that the British themselves had proposed India for the Executive Committee. Mr. Hiss added that the distribution of posts had been based on the assumption that the four sponsoring powers would have positions on the Executive Committee and Steering Committee, but would not have other positions on the committees and commissions since this might be interpreted as domination of the Conference by the Big Four. He added, however, that the British had asked for permission to have a rapporteur on one of the committees and had specifically notified the other sponsoring powers that they wished the position now designated for Honduras on the second committee of Commission II.

Senator Vandenberg asked what advantage it would be to have a rapporteur.

Mr. Hiss indicated that a rapporteur was a very important official since he would state the position of the commission and would be mainly responsible for assisting the chairman in drafting and reporting. Representative Eaton asked whether the officers on the commissions would be members of the delegations. Mr. Hiss replied in the affirmative. Senator Connally commented that the United States would then have no chairmanship of committees. Mr. Hiss replied that we probably would have the chairmanship of the Executive Committee and of the Steering Committee. He emphasized of course that the present chart of positions was entirely tentative and had not been agreed to, and suggested that the Delegates return their copies to him for possible revisions.

Press Statement on Meetings of the Delegation 94

CHARACTER OF CHANGES TO BE PROPOSED BY UNITED STATES DELEGATION

THE SECRETARY said he thought that the Delegation was going into the San Francisco Conference under pretty favorable conditions, in his mind the only question was the Soviet Government. Representative Eaton commented that this had always been the only question. The Secretary noted that the easiest way to get the Soviet Government to come along was to make as few changes as possible in the Proposals which they had agreed to at Dumbarton Oaks and the voting formula that they had accepted at Yalta. He thought the Soviets would sign these documents today.

Senator Connally thought that the least that was said now as to what had been done by the Delegation the better off the United States would be with respect to other nations. He thought it was plain horse sense to keep our decisions to ourselves.

The Secretary asked how many fundamental changes had actually been agreed to in the course of the discussions. Mr. Dulles said that he thought there was one, which was the suggestion of Mr. Vandenberg on the revision of treaties. Mr. Pasvolsky thought most of the suggestions were by way of clarification and that the one basic change was that of Senator Vandenberg's. Mr. Pasvolsky added that, if this proposed change was now announced, he was afraid that other nations would interpret it as an attempt to bring pressure on them. He thought it was better to handle the matter subtly and carefully, and that, if it were so handled, it would be possible to secure the addition that Senator Vandenberg favored. Senator Connally agreed that the opposition to this addition would be hardened if the position of the Delegation was now announced. The Secretary thought it would be best at this time to reserve our position.

MR. STASSEN asked when it was contemplated that the Russians would be told of this suggestion, since he was sure that Foreign Commissar Molotov's first question would be: "What changes do you propose?" MR. PASVOLSKY indicated that we were still going over the tentative decisions and discussing proposed changes.

THE SECRETARY said he envisaged having the Big Four meet together after the general discussion on the opening days, at which time we could bring forward our two or three changes. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that, if the matter was handled in this way, we would actually find that we had considerable support for our suggestions.

Mr. Stassen asked if the Russians would give up their three votes if we accepted the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Mr. Dulles noted that in fact the Russian proposal was not inconsistent with the Proposals as they stood at present, since the question raised by the Russian proposal was: "What is in fact a state?" If the three republics were considered independent states then they could each be members of the General Assembly under the present Proposals. Mr. Stassen said he thought most of the suggestions were by way of filling in the Proposals and interpreting the document, and that they were not fundamental. He thought that no release would be better than the present one, and that it might at this time be better to remain silent.

The Secretary indicated that at some routine press conference he might say quite informally that the discussions of the Delegation had been entirely satisfactory and that the Delegation was generally in agreement. Senator Vandenberg questioned the phrase "generally in agreement". Did that mean that the Delegation had agreed to his proposal—to what he believed was indispensable if the Senate was going to ratify the treaty? The Secretary said that his great concern was to have the Delegation act as a unit, and that he thought each member of the Delegation would have to do a little cutting and fitting of the cloth in order to make this possible. He said that he would give up some things to satisfy Senator Vandenberg and that he expected Senator Vandenberg to follow the same policy. Senator Vandenberg said that the press would read meaning into whatever statement was made and that therefore it was important to be sure that we meant what we said. The Secretary suggested that a brief sentence be prepared for him that he could use at a press conference at an early date.

[The Secretary was called from the meeting.] 94a

Senator Connally said he did not think it would help the Delegation's trading position at the Conference if we told in advance what we were going to do. He thought that the important thing was to keep our "cards in the hole". Mr. Pasvolsky agreed with Senator Connally that the important thing was to do everything that could be done to get the Proposals we want negotiated and that we should therefore consider the problem as negotiators. This would mean that we would have to approach the Russians very carefully and talk the whole matter out with them behind the scenes. He said he was sure that in this way we would have a better chance of getting what we really wanted.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON commented that his concern was to get certain additions to the Proposals without which it would not be possible to get the Proposals through the Senate. Dean Gildersleeve remarked that the Senate was not the only hurdle, and that it would be well to keep in mind that we had to get an agreement acceptable also to a large number of other nations. Representative Eaton stated that in the end the Senate had the final say, however, and that we could never get an agreement that the Senate did not find acceptable.

Senator Connally said it was his view that the more closely we adhered to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals the more apt we would be to get something at San Francisco. Mr. Stassen said that he agreed with this view. Senator Vandenberg thought that certain amendments would be necessary, however, but that most of these would not affect the machinery and basic structure of the organization but would influence the consciousness of the American people. He said we had, of course, to have the American people with us and that we should keep this at the center of our attention. Senator Connally thought that, if our position were now known, the public would be quite satisfied. Mr. Stassen thought we should not at this time say anything to the American public that we had not previously discussed with other sponsoring powers. . . .

VANDENBERG PROPOSAL ON ADJUSTMENT OF TREATIES

Senator Connally indicated that Senator Vandenberg's proposal concerning the adjustment of treaties still required discussion and that the two remaining questions were: (1) Should the proposal be adopted? and (2) Where should it be placed?

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that he had suggested placing the amendment in the chapter on the General Assembly: Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 6. He proposed adding to that paragraph the sentence "including situations arising out of existing treaties or other prior international engagements". Senator Connally asked if this would include both prospective and retroactive situations. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that Senator Vandenberg wished to emphasize the revision of treaties SENATOR CONNALLY thought the word "existing" that were in force. was restrictive. He preferred the phrase "including situations arising out of treaties or other international engagements". Senator Van-DENBERG thought the sentence should read "situations arising out of treaties and other prior international engagements." He thought it was very important to include the word "prior", which, he said, was the key to the whole matter. He wanted to be able to tell men like Senator LaFollette that this was not an organization to freeze the status quo. Mr. Bowman said that the word "prior" did not add anything.

Mr. Dulles suggested the draft "including situations arising out of then existing treaties or other international engagements". He thought that the word "then" would relate to the time when the Assembly dealt with a particular situation. In this way he thought it would be possible to omit the word "prior". Senator Connally questioned whether Mr. Dulles' suggestion improved the draft. He favored "including situations arising out of treaties or other international engagements".

Senator Vandenberg commented that Mr. Pasvolsky said that the authority he was now trying to bring out in the document was implicitly an authority of the General Assembly. However, many critics have said what Mr. Pasvolsky reads into the document cannot properly be read into it. He would like to see the matter clarified so that it was absolutely certain that the Organization could look backward as well as forward.

Senator Connally thought the word "prior" limited the conception. Mr. Bowman raised the question whether the mention of the date, January 1, 1942, did not complicate the addition of the sentence as suggested by Mr. Dulles. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that it was not possible to say "arising out of then existing treaties" with the prior statement of the date of the Declaration by the United Nations. Senator Connally said that he did not seriously object to the use of the word "then" or "prior". Mr. Dunn said the term "then" implied the time at which the Assembly took the matter up. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the draft might read "including situations arising out of any treaties or other international engagements". Mr. Stassen suggested the omission of the word "any". Senator Vandenberg thought that this wording was good except that he would recommend the omission of the word "other".

Senator Connally asked whether this new proposal obviated the difficulty with the mention of the date, January 1, 1942. Mr. Pasvolsky replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Dulles asked whether the power of the Assembly in this connection was subject to the limitations indicated in paragraph 2 of Section B, Chapter V. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that the power of the Assembly to make recommendations concerning situations arising out of any treaties or international engagements was not subject to the limitations of paragraph 2 of Section B, Chapter V.

Senator Connally said that, while he had no objection to the Assembly discussing and making recommendations for the adjustment of situations arising out of treaties, he did not wish to empower the Security Council to revise such situations. Mr. Pasvolsky said that that was the reason why he had suggested the addition of paragraph 6, Section B, Chapter V of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Senator Connally said he wanted to be absolutely sure on this matter, and Mr. Pasvolsky reassured him that there was no question and that that was why we had not proposed that the Security Council be empowered to impose a settlement.

MR. Armstrong said that the reference to the United Nations Declaration was in his view a great mistake and should be taken out. He said the declaration was a wartime declaration and referred to the principles of the Atlantic Charter only in the preamble. Senator Vandenberg suggested that this was the only point at which the signatories of the Declaration were identified and that he saw no objection to it. It was generally agreed that the reference to the United Nations Declaration should remain but that it should be redrafted to read: "or to violate the principles accepted by them in the preamble of the Declaration by the United Nations of January 1, 1942".

REVIEW OF PROPOSALS AND SUGGESTIONS CHAPTER VIII, SECTION C—REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Senator Connally announced that the Delegation would now discuss Chapter VIII, Section C, of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals on Regional Arrangements.

[Here follows list of names of persons (14) present at meeting.]

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the Committee on Security Aspects of Preparation for the United Nations Conference <sup>95</sup> had recommended that no changes be made in Section C, a statement which was confirmed by Mr. Dunn. Mr. Pasvolsky further remarked that consideration had been given to proposals of foreign governments with respect to this chapter, but that it had been agreed to support none of these proposals. Senator Connally then asked if the Delegation were agreed as to making no changes, and without objection, the section was allowed to stand.

Mr. Dulles indicated, however, that, as paragraph 2 of Section C stood, any permanent member of the Security Council could veto enforcement action under a regional arrangement, whereupon Senator Connally read the paragraph in question and Mr. Pasvolsky confirmed the power to veto. Both Mr. Dulles and Commander Stassen interposed that this would permit France and China, for example, to veto American regional action in the Western Hemisphere. Senator Connally thought that the Security Council could veto enforcement action in a region but that no one power could veto an investigation.

Mr. Pasvolsky replied that parties to a dispute could use any pacific means of their own choice to settle a question, but that the Security Council had a right to call on them to settle by pacific procedure according to regional arrangements at their disposal. The Security Council, under paragraph 1 of Section C, had the authority either under the initiative of regional arrangements or of the Security Council to seek for settlement. The only time the Security Council would come into the picture was when the procedure was moving too slowly, but it could not stop the procedure.

Commander Stassen declared, however, that any one of the Great Powers might veto action, nothing new had been added to the instruments of pacific procedure by Chapter VIII, Section C, and the procedure was subject to the veto of any one Great Power. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that provision had been made, in this respect, for unanimous agreement of the Great Powers. Representative Eaton wondered whether the whole concept had not been based on the assumption of a dispute between minor nations and asked what would happen if a dispute occurred, for example, between the United States and the Soviet Union. Mr. Pasvolsky admitted that this was an important point. All the nations were obligated to settle their disputes peacefully. If a dispute occurred between a small state and a Great Power, the Security Council could recommend that the vote of the parties in dispute would not count. The purpose was to make the section as strong as possible.

COMMANDER STASSEN cited a hypothetical example in which trouble might arise in Latin America and the Inter-American System wanted to act. Suppose the Security Council approved action but France and China as permanent members of the Council objected. What would happen then? Mr. Pasvolsky replied that, of course, if the Security Council failed to preserve the peace, the International Organization would have failed. Commander Stassen stated that he was merely citing an example: that he did not want the organization to fail because of two negative votes of powers like France and China. COMMANDER STASSEN agreed with Mr. Pasvolsky that it was necessary to preserve the veto of the Great Powers. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that there were two matters under consideration: (1) the enforcement powers of the Security Council; and (2) the power of the Security Council in the matter of recommendations. The basis of the idea of unanimity among the Great Powers was at times to prevent unilateral action. The Great Powers, under the Charter, were all committed to pacific procedure. If this were broken down, we might have force employed by a Great Power or a group of Great Powers.

Representative Eaton wanted to know if it were not implicit that the final assurance we could have in the International Organization was the moral obligation, and thought this was a job for the preachers. Mr. Dulles said that the use of force should rest on law, it would work automatically, and that perhaps it would function better regionally than it would universally. He thought, therefore, that the Security Council should facilitate the development of regional arrangements. If it were always necessary to submit procedures under regional arrangements to the Security Council, the Great Powers would be able to exercise a veto and the International Organization might prove an obstacle to peace in that case.

Mr. Rockefeller cited the possibility that the Soviet Union, as some Latin Americans feared, might foment trouble in the Western Hemisphere, and then it might block action in the Security Council if the states of the Western Hemisphere desired to take collective regional action. Commander Stassen reiterated that he saw danger in the veto of the Great Powers and especially of states like China and France blocking regional action in the Americas unless we had some reservations. He did not want the Inter-American System destroyed, but Mr. Pasvolsky replied that to weaken the authority of the Security Council in regional matters would be tantamount to throwing all Europe into the hands of the Soviet Union, and would break the world up into regional units. Commander Stassen did not agree with this statement. He reverted to his original example of the Security Council approving action under a regional arrangement with France and China voting against any action.

Senator Connally felt that the regional issue should not becloud the thinking of the Delegation because of the Inter-American System, since he believed that the principles applied in the Americas would apply everywhere. He approved of the Declaration of Chapultepec <sup>96</sup> and did not want the regional principle endangered but Commander Stassen insisted that the principles of the Declaration of Chapultepec could be vetoed by any one of the Great Powers at any time. Mr. Pasvolsky, however, pointed out that aside from the temporary provisions for a hemispheric alliance against aggression during the present war, the Declaration of Chapultepec provided only for consultation. Commander Stassen replied that it was hoped that the system would develop.

MR. Dulles declared that if the legal basis for collective action were established by regional arrangements and were approved by the Security Council, then it would work automatically. Why not act under the law? Mr. Pasvolsky stated that this position presupposed a world under which the same law applied everywhere; that because there were lacunae in the law, political decisions entered the field. Mr. Dulles insisted that the position adopted by Mr. Pasvolsky would have prevented the formation of the American Union. But Mr. Pas-VOLSKY denied this and stated that it could not have prevented the development either of the American Union or the Pan American Union. He was not sure, however, what was going to happen with respect to the Inter-American System in the development of an International Organization on a universal basis. Mr. Rockefeller pointed out that the initiative as to regional arrangements at the Mexico City Conference had come from the Latin American states, not the United States.

Senator Connally inquired whether under the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals the Security Council had the authority to determine whether regional arrangements should exist and Mr. Pasvolsky replied in the negative, pointing out that it had the authority only to determine whether obligations under such arrangements were consistent with the Charter of the International Organization. There were two theories involved: (1) The theory of regional organizations and an over-all International Organization; and (2) one world organization.

Senator Connally doubted the value of regional organizations except as to pacific procedure. In the matter of war and economic sanctions there would not be much value. There was general agreement with this position.

At this point Senator Connally directed attention to the "draft statement" in support of the retention of Chapter VIII, Section C, on regional arrangements of The Dumbarton Oaks Proposals", which had been approved by the Committee on Security Aspects of Preparation for the United Nations Conference, and asked the military and naval advisers of the Delegation if they had any comments to make. Admiral Herburn indicated that he had seen the paper and although he had not had an opportunity to read it carefully, endorsed it. General Embick was fearful lest the Declaration of Chapultepec, by implication, loosen the control of the United States over the Western Hemisphere. He approved of Chapter VIII, Section C, of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as it stood, but did not agree that peace was indivisible, since he could think of local disputes, particularly in Latin America, which had produced armed conflict.

General Fairchild stressed that there was nothing in paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter VIII, which would prevent the Security Council from giving a general prior authority to a regional organization to act. If the Security Council acted in good faith, there was no reason why the Inter-American System could not appeal for prior authority, where a local dispute did not threaten the peace of the world. In that case a regional organization could go ahead without the interference of the veto of an outside Great Power. He thought this was a practical scheme. Senator Connally said that this was just the point he had been trying to make. General Fairchild stated that a regional organization could go ahead as to pacific procedure as paragraph 2 stood and could obtain prior authority for the Council for enforcement action. Senator Vandenberg thought this was implicit but not entirely apparent.

Admiral Wilson, at this point, indicated that the basic issue involved in regionalism was whether stress was to be laid on the whole or on the parts—whether the whole were to be greater than the parts thereof, or vice versa. While it was true, as Commander Stassen had stated, that China and France might have a veto as to Inter-American regional action, if China had no veto as to this hemisphere, then the United States would have no veto as to any other parts of the world. The Charter, he thought, was quite adequate as a basis for discussion at San Francisco.

ADMIRAL HEPBURN pointed out that the discussion really involved the whole Charter of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. The Great Powers had decided to "stick together", and it was necessary to have some faith. He thought the chapter should stand as it was. Senator

CONNALLY thought that this was the heart of the problem and Ap-MIRAL HEPBURN reiterated that the whole thing rested on faith, on promises. The Great Powers were not imposing anything on the smaller powers, but were simply asking them to contribute to the organization of peace. Senator Connally stated that in fact only the Great Powers which had the power to make war could enforce the peace. Admiral Hepburn indicated that no two of the three really Great Powers could enforce their will on the other one. Com-MANDER STASSEN stated that he still did not like to see China and France have a veto over possible regional action in this hemisphere, but Admiral Herburn said that he did not see how any discrimination could be made, although he thought there was a weak point in the situation. Commander Stassen cited the possibility that France, with the assistance of a Latin American state, might make trouble, and then wondered what would happen, but ADMIRAL HEPBURN thought the three Great Powers might have the means to bring pressure on France in such a case. Mr. Rockefeller stated that it was also possible for France and the Soviet Union to make trouble in Europe.

REVIEW OF PROPOSALS AND SUGGESTIONS CHAPTER XII—TRANSITIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

At this time the Delegation passed on to a consideration of Chapter XII which dealt with Transitional Arrangements. Mr. Dunn stated that the Committee on Security Aspects for Preparation for the United Nations Conference had recommended that this chapter stand as it was written. Paragraph 1 provided that pending the entry into force of the special agreement or agreements referred to in Chapter VIII, Section B, paragraph 5, and in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of the Four Nations Declaration signed at Moscow on October 30, 1943, 48 "the states parties to that Declaration should consult with one another and as occasion arises, with other members of the organization with a view to such joint action on behalf of the organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security."

Mr. Armstrong, citing a view of Senator Vandenberg, indicated, however, that paragraph 1 might be clarified to give the Security Council authority to determine when action should be taken. Senator Vandenberg stated that the paragraph did not pin responsibility for initiating moves. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that the reason for this lack of precision was the desire not to commit the United States to the use of force. This was an interim provision based on the Moscow Declaration. Senator Vandenberg said that he was not suggesting any change in procedure but thought the role of the Security Council should be clarified. Mr. Dunn said that every one of the four powers could initiate action. When Senator Connally inquired whether other nations might not feel slighted, Mr. Dunn said that no objection had been raised to this chapter. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the question would come up at San Francisco and that it might be necessary to refer to the Security Council in drafting at the conference.

Mr. Dunn then read paragraph 2 which stated that "no provision of the Charter should preclude action taken or authorized in relation to enemy states as a result of the present state by governments having responsibility for such action". The Committee on Security Aspects of Preparation for the United Nations Conference had recommended no change. If clarification were needed, however, the following paragraph should be substituted:

"The armaments and armed forces of the enemy states (to be named later) should be governed by the terms of their surrender and by the authority established thereunder. The Security Council should be enpowered to take responsibility for assuring the execution of stipulations governing the armaments and armed forces of the enemy states to the extent that such responsibility may devolve upon it in succession to the authority established under the surrender terms."

Commander Stassen thought that we might not have formal surrender either in the case of Japan or of Germany and therefore, the term "surrender" might not fit the case. It was agreed that the text might be changed to cover the situation, using such a phrase as "terms imposed". Senator Vandenberg wanted to know who would take the responsibility in the matter of the disarmament and control of Germany or Japan, and Mr. Dunn stated that the victorious powers would do so, although it was possible that, in time, the international organization might be asked to do so. It was admitted that occupation of the enemy states might endure for years, and that a formal peace might not be made for some time, since one had to be negotiated with a recognized government.

Senator Vandenberg thought that we might run the danger of not disarming Germany and of seeing powers like Great Britain disarm again, which got us into the present war, he thought, and might get us into another world war. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that the victorious powers were responsible for seeing to this but Senator Vandenberg indicated his skepticism as to the set policies of these powers. Senator Connally believed that the treaties of peace would take care of this matter but Senator Vandenberg thought this matter would take ten years and Mr. Armstrong recalled the failure of the United States Senate to approve the Anglo-French-American Tripartite Treaty of 1919.99 It was agreed that this was a separate subject but Senator Vandenberg considered it utterly fundamental.

MEETING WITH THE PRESIDENT

As the meeting was apparently drawing to a close, Senator Connally stated that President Truman would receive the Delegation at 9:00 a.m. on Wednesday.<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER VIII, SECTION A, PARAGRAPH 72.

At Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion the meeting then passed to a reconsideration of Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 7, concerning "situations or disputes arising out of matters which by international law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the state concerned." Mr. Pasvolsky said it was a question of whether (1) the paragraph should limit the effects of the section to paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, or from 1 to 6; and (2) what provision should be made for determining the question of "domestic jurisdiction". It had been suggested at the last meeting that it might be determined by unanimous agreement of members of the Security Council or the Court of International Justice.

Mr. Dulles said that he had objected to this paragraph at the time of his discussions with Secretary of State Hull in the fall of 1944.3 It was, he thought, a contradiction in terms to say that a matter which threatened the peace of the world was solely a matter of "domestic jurisdiction". How could this be? We had to have limitations as to Section B dealing with action concerning threats to the peace or acts of aggression, but the whole effect of Chapter VIII would be destroyed with such a limitation in it. The Security Council should have authority to consider any matter which threatened the peace of the world.

COMMANDER STASSEN said he thought the Charter would be better off without paragraph 7, but Senator Vandenberg declared that without it there would be no possibility of getting the Charter approved by the United States Senate. Commander Stassen said that that might be true but he still insisted on his position, pointing out that a state like Argentina might provide bombs and air force, etc., and then proceed to cause trouble and no action could be taken until its forces stepped across a boundary line. Mr. Armstrong pointed to the murder of Chancellor Dollfuss of Austria in 1934.4

Mr. Dulles said that the trouble with international law was that it had reserved the right of any state to do as it pleased, although the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals represented an attempt to break this principle down. He wondered whether something might not be gotten through the Senate. Senator Vandenberg said that a reading of the Senate's comments on the advisory opinions of the Permanent Court of International Justice were not reassuring. Commander Stassen thought the Senate had probably changed its opinions, since the debate on the court, and paid high praise to Senator Vandenberg's leadership in this respect. Senator Vandenberg stated, however, that this was one of the "fantasies obsessing the Senate". Commander Stassen said that wars broke out because nations took cover under the concept that their actions fell only within their domestic jurisdiction.

Senator Connally was skeptical whether the Senate would approve the idea of permitting the Security Council to decide as to "domestic jurisdiction". Mr. Dulles thought it was just a matter of talk in the Security Council in any case. Senator Connally thought that "talk" would imply responsibility and action. Senator Vandenberg thought we would be lucky to get by the Senate with the reservations in any case, since the Senate had always thought that the United States should decide what was within its "domestic jurisdiction".

Senator Connally said that we were covering virgin territory, and it would be best to proceed conservatively in order to accomplish anything at all. There was considerable objection, he thought, and we must allow experience and the passing of the years to develop the structure of peace. What we were now doing was starting, and he wanted to lay the foundations for success. Mr. Armstrong suggested that paragraph 7 might be modified to give the Security Council authority to determine whether a question were purely domestic, pointing out that we have a veto power in the Security Council, an idea which Senator Vandenberg approved.

Dr. Bowman thought we might accomplish something by leaving out the reference to international law in paragraph 7, since he believed this was restrictive in the sense that international law had developed only up to a certain point. Mr. Sandfer thought this would remove the criteria by which the Council should act, although Dr. Bowman did not mean to remove all standards for such determination. In the last analysis Commander Stassen thought it best to leave the paragraph as it is since the public had offered no real objection. Mr. Dulles confirmed this although Mr. Armstrong pointed out that the Hudson Group 6 had objected to it. Mr. Dulles thought that this group and others which would go further—had challenged it because any nation could go to war under it.

He said that speaking informally he would like to outline the French position as follows: Although the French Government is not a sponsor it has already engaged in preliminary conversations and discussions in Washington on the question of trusteeship and an international court. In addition it has conducted exchanges of views with the USA Government through regular diplomatic channels. These preliminary conversations and exchanges of views have thus far proved entirely satisfactory. The French Government does not feel that it is in a less favored position or that there will be any discrimination against it because it is not a sponsor. On the whole the French are satisfied with their position insofar as UNCIO is concerned and any effort to change that position at this late date would call for discussions within the Cabinet and would probably take a considerable length of time.

On the other hand "if by becoming a sponsor the French position will be strengthened by concrete advantages or privileges which the sponsors have but which other participating governments do not have the French Government would wish to know so that all elements could be considered in taking a decision." He concluded by stating that France desired to cooperate in every possible way to make the

Trusteeship Arrangements

The meeting was called to order by Secretary Stettinius at 9:05 a.m. Mr. Sterring announced that he had asked the Secretaries of War and Navy to meet briefly with the American Delegation this morning in order to discuss the question of trusteeship.8 It was hoped that it would be possible to work out a policy recommendation on this question in the meeting for submission to the President. Mr. Stettinius emphasized that there was to be no discussion outside of the meeting room on this question until President Truman has reached a decision as to the policy which this Government will follow.

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY STETTINIUS ON TRUSTEESHIP

Mr. Stettinius traced briefly the history of the trusteeship question. He pointed out that the subject did not come up at Dumbarton Oaks. There was fear that any discussion of trusteeship at those conversations might lead to difficulties and complications in connection with the prosecution of the war. At the request of the Army and the Navy, therefore, who particularly feared that a discussion of trusteeship at that time might lead to disagreement among the Allies on questions affecting territories in the Pacific, the subject was not included in the agenda. At Yalta the matter was reviewed by $<sup>^7</sup>$  Not printed. In telegram 1553, April 18, 7 p. m., the Secretary replied that it would be inappropriate for this Government unilaterally to make any representation to the French Government as to special advantages of the sponsoring powers, inasmuch as the United States was but one of the four powers sponsoring the Conference (500.CC/4-1745).

President Roosevelt, Marshal Stalin, and Prime Minister Churchill. It was agreed there that the powers who had participated in the Dumbarton Oaks conversations and who were sponsoring the United Nations Conference would meet in preliminary consultations prior to the United Nations Conference on this question. These preliminary consultations have not taken place. Invitations have been sent out to the other nations involved, and their representatives are here, but the consultations have not been held because the three Departments, Army, Navy, and State, have not been able to agree on a paper as the basis of discussion with the representatives of the other nations.

Mr. Stettinius further announced that the Secretaries of War and Navy and himself had met and had agreed upon a paper on a policy statement for presentation to the President.

Mr. Stettinius pointed out that on the diplomatic side it was felt that we would be in a weak position if we cannot deal with the question of trusteeship in some way at the San Francisco Conference. The Department, he said, is in complete agreement with the Army and Navy with respect to the necessity for full protection of our security interests, but the Department also appreciates the difficulty in which this country would find itself if it should lay itself open to the charge of expansionist ambitions by pursuing a policy of annexation. An annexation policy would be contrary to the policy consistently followed by the late President Roosevelt. Mr. Stettinius concluded by stating that he and the Secretaries of War and Navy felt that they had arrived at an agreeable solution and he asked Secretary Stimson if he would wish to make a statement on the subject.

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY STIMSON

Secretary Stimson stated that the position of the War and Navy Departments has been, and Secretary Forrestal and himself feel strongly, that under no circumstances should anything be done which would prevent the American Government and Delegation from presenting a united front at San Francisco. This, said Secretary Stimson, tended to put Secretary Forrestal and himself in a somewhat difficult position. He stated that he knew nothing of the Yalta agreement on trusteeship until the results were made public.

Secretary Stimson continued that in the treatment of the question of trusteeship it is imperative from the standpoint of the safety of the United States that there should be an understanding of the difference between the kind of bases we feel essential to the safety of the United States in the Pacific and the territories out of which the whole system of mandates and trusteeship has grown. Secretary Stimson expressed the view that the question of mandates in the last war was completely different from the question of bases in this war. The territories dealt with at the end of the last war were the colonies of Germany and the territories to be taken from Turkey. These were colonies and territories with substantial economic resources and significant populations. With respect to them there was a danger of an exploitation of the resources and the populations by the enemy nations, and there was also a little difficulty of possible acquisitive tendencies among the victorious nations. These territories were disposed of in such way that a strong light played on their population and resources. This was done in order to prevent their exploitation. These big territories were therefore held as a trust of the world, although that objective grew slimmer and slimmer as the years wore on.

This was the basis of President Roosevelt's position in this war. We in the United States have no desire for the acquisition of any kind of territory, but the kind of bases, said Secretary Stimson, which those in the military departments are interested in are primarily not exploitable bases. Some of them have almost no population and almost no resources, and many of them are mere atolls in the Pacific.

The purpose for which we anticipate that such bases will be used in the future may be appraised by an examination of United States history. The United States has been, and particularly through this war, not an exploiting nation. We have been fighting a battle of freedom and justice. We have not sought to exploit any territory beyond our own lands. The United States has been seeking to keep the Pacific in a condition of freedom, and it is for this that we have fought and it is for this that we have already rescued Australia and the Philippines and that we are preparing to rescue China and the Netherlands East Indies. These things are inextricably connected. The United States is not taking a selfish attitude but is nevertheless much concerned that its own safety will be preserved.

Secretary Stimson remarked that this peculiar position of the United States in the Pacific has not been made clear in the press reports and in the discussions of this subject. If anyone is looking for an exploiter the United States can say, "don't look here".

This, said Secretary Stimson, is the background of the question. The next question concerns the methods of insuring that safety which we must have. For that we civilians must turn to our military advisers, who are experts on these questions. It is clear that the nation on whom responsibility for defense and security is thrust needs bases. If we are to have a naval base, for example, it is absolutely essential that there be complete control of that base. Naval bases are just as essential as battleships and supply lines. The advice of the naval and military officers is that control of a base must be complete, and Secretary Stimson pointed out that he was deliberately avoiding the use of "sovereignty". What he had in mind was that management over such areas must be complete. This would be the only insurance against espionage, and the only means of protecting military installations.

THE SECRETARY explained that President Truman was waiting to meet the Delegation and that they would return to the meeting within a few minutes. The Delegates left at 9:24 a. m.<sup>9</sup>

On their return Secretary Stettinius stated that he had mentioned to the President the fact that the Delegates and the Advisers were engaged this morning in a discussion of the question of trusteeship. The President stated that he would meet the Secretaries of State, War and Navy whenever the discussions on trusteeship were completed.

Continuing his statement Secretary Stimson observed that the interests which he and Secretary Forrestal were trying to protect in these discussions did not infringe on the concept of trusteeship. To a large extent, he said, it is a question of the atolls which this country will have to keep, and it is also necessary to avoid the paths of danger for possibly aggressive nations. He called attention to the error of our ways after the last war, and this, he said, had been burnt into his soul. After the last war, when the question of the disposition of the mandates to Japan was up for consideration, Mr. Wilson had been approached on the effect it would have on the Philippines. We had for twenty years been building up the Philippines.

Secretary Stimson stated that when he went to the Philippines in 1928 it had been his duty as Governor General <sup>11</sup> to know the defense lines. Everyone knew then that Corregidor and the Philippines were defenseless even with the power of the United States. The Secretary of War continued that it was then his unhappy fate that what he predicted would happen and what we had known would happen did happen. He stated that he was at the other end at that time and saw that fate carried out on those doomed islands under our Flag. We tried to get arms to them but could not sail the seas or fly our planes because we were cut off by Jap-held bases. Reinforcement was practically impossible. We had to see those doomed men, the garrison at Corregidor, and that Commonwealth trampelled under by unspeakable methods of warfare, <sup>12</sup> all because we had allowed the gates to be shut between us and those wards of ours. Our obligations and ties, he emphasized, will not be a bit less moral after the Philippines achieve their independence. They speak our language; they practice our religion; we must keep that gate open.

Secretary Stimson continued that after the last war we accepted the mandates system and then committed a further folly—the Four-Power Treaty <sup>13</sup>—which made the doom of those men in the Philippines even more certain. We saw what happened to the mandates and to the Four-Power Treaty when an aggressor power was on the loose. We cannot afford to make the same mistake twice. The role of the United States between East China and the Philippines must be such as to guarantee our ability to protect the Philippines. We cannot allow the necessity of the draftsmanship of the artifices of treaty-making to destroy what we in common sense know must be done. There are two essentials: (1) the United States must be affirmatively provided with full power over necessary protective bases; (2) we must have our eyes peeled as to what aggressive-minded but now quiet nations may wish to do. This can be worked out within the framework of international cooperation.

Secretary Stettinius expressed thanks to Secretary Stimson for his statement.

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY FORRESTAL

Secretary Forrestal was then called upon to make a statement. The Secretary of the Navy began by saying that he was conscious of the fact that we are not the makers of policy. He considered it a restatement of the obvious to say that the world recognizes that the security of the Pacific depends upon the United States and therefore on the air and naval power of the United States. It follows, therefore, that the United States must have the means to implement this responsibility. The Navy, he observed, was in a difficult position because there was uncertainty as to what we are responsible for, and he appreciated this opportunity to present what naval people think they need.

Secretary Forrestal emphasized that he was not talking about isolated bases—pin points— but a system of defense in the Pacific. He then outlined the four essential American defense routes in the Pacific in 1943 and stated that we had lost the middle route which interdicted in the number one route, had only a toe-hold in the third route and decided to hold the fourth route in the South at all costs. We were able to make our hold on the third route firm after Guadal-canal.

Secretary Forrestal stated that in the present draft the Navy people would like and would hope that that concept would be approved that whatever abstract ideas of trusteeship may be evolved there will be no commitment with respect to the islands in the Pacific which the United States occupies or will occupy without naval approval. Secretary Forrestal stated it as his view that American retention of power in such islands would not be inconsistent with the items embodied in the trusteeship concept. Power must remain with the people who hate power.

Secretary Stimson stated at this point that it was his understanding that this would be an executive session and that discussion should be confined to this session.

DISCUSSION ON TRUSTEESHIP

Secretary Stettinius pledged on behalf of the Delegation and all others present that the statements made in this meeting would be confined to this room.

Senator Connally observed that the chief difficulty would appear to be the kind of tenure the United States would have in the island bases. He pointed out that some theorists hold that title to the mandated territories is vested in the League of Nations. Senator Connally stated that he was in entire agreement that the United States should not come out of this war stripped of the strategic bases in the Pacific which are necessary to the security of this country and of the world. He remarked that we may have some difficulty with other nations with respect to the kind of tenure we will have in these islands.

Senator Vandenberg inquired whether any of the essential bases have any substantial population. Secretary Stimson stated it as his understanding that most of them have little or no population. Senator Connally inquired if any consideration had been given to the possibility of American bases on New Caledonia. Secretary Forrestal stated that consideration had been given to this matter in connection with the development of a strategic system in the Pacific under which we may need to have rights in places such as New Caledonia.

Representative Bloom inquired whether the original mandates were outright possessions and whether the terms of transfer from the mandate status to the trusteeship status would have something to do with our position in them.

Secretary Stimson stated that the mandatory was the trustee and could not fortify the mandated territories. He repeated that under a new system the United States must have full control in strategic areas and that this is not a question of who is the trustee or holds title. The question, he said, is really one of management involving full control, including the right to fortify.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON emphasized the importance of building up a strategic system and that this would be our responsibility for being out there. He stated that it would never be possible to get anything through Congress that didn't protect American interests in the Pacific.

Commander Stassen stated that these bases are as an essential a part of our armament as guns and ships. It is essential that these land bases must be under our own control. In some places there may be joint international bases, but these should not and cannot take the place of or interfere with our own defense network, but in the base areas for which we will be responsible we do have an obligation to protect the native population and not to exploit selfishly the economic resources of the area. We should agree that we will not do this and should accept an accountability for our administration.

Senator Connally suggested the Army and the Navy might prepare a memorandum of the bases they would need.

Secretary Steptinius read a recommendation which had been drawn up by the Secretaries of War, Navy and State.<sup>14</sup> In these two paragraphs, he said, it was the feeling of the three Secretaries that the situation might be covered, and the approval of the recommendation was suggested to the Delegation, prior to its submission to the President. Secretary Steptinius added that he would think it advisable to make this statement public prior to the San Francisco Conference because of the wide public interest and discussion of the subject. The statement was read to the Delegation.

COMMANDER STASSEN objected to the phrase "we do not seek annexation of territory", and Secretary Forrestal explained that annexation would be considered only as a last resort. Representative Eaton observed that while the United States would not seek annexation, it would undertake it if it became necessary.

COMMANDER STASSEN remarked that in his view it would be carrying forward a confusion in thinking to employ the words "we do not seek the annexation of territory". Secretary Stimson pointed out that at San Francisco the machinery of the system would be constructed, but there would be no determination of what territories would go under it.

COMMANDER STASSEN stated that it should be the policy of this Government that any bases which are essential to the security of the world and to our own security would be held in trusteeship, and that we would define the terms of the trusteeship. Secretary Stimson observed that he preferred that approach, but that he recognized that the Secretary of State is confronted by certain reactions. Senator Connally said that he saw no objection to taking Japanese territory.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE remarked that on the whole she agreed with Commander Stassen's statement. We should, she said, make it clear that we don't intend to grab, but we do intend to hold what is necessary for our security.

Senator Connally said that we are going to take these islands and hold them, but if we hold them under trusteeship we might get in difficulty with our Allies. The implication, however, is clear that we are going to take them and hold them. In his view we would be doing too little too fast in making a public statement. He said that it might be advisable to make a clear declaration, but that it should not be published at this time.

THE SECRETARY stated that all that is wanted is to agree on United States policy with respect to the subject of trusteeship at San Francisco.

Senator Vandenberg stated that Congressional opinion is totally in sympathy with the position of the Secretaries of War and Navy. He suggested the substitution of "indispensable" for "necessary" in the next to the last line of the statement, and the deletion of the reference to annexation. Secretary Forrestal stated that he would prefer the retention of the word "necessary" and Senator Vandenberg withdrew his suggestion.

Dr. Bowman stated that Secretary Stimson had used an expression which might stick in the minds of all present, and that was the Secretary's warning against putting our trust in a network of treaties. All conditions require that we cannot turn these islands over to a network of treaties, he said. We must remain in them. It is very easy to talk on that side of the problem. Moreover, it is no good assuming that we solve the problem by an appeal to the patriotism of the people. It is a question of timing. If we take unilateral action we destroy what we are going to San Francisco to achieve. We have been led into a situation in which the world expects us to do something on trusteeship. We are faced with such questions as whether we wish Somaliland to go to the British. We will have to participate in its disposition. What in this situation is our safeguard? It is in the fact that we have set up a principle—a principle of trusteeship in the interests of the natives.

Dr. Bowman stated, however, that he was not ready to discuss a text he had not seen, but that he could be ready to discuss it on the following morning after an opportunity to study it.

He continued that it would be possible for this country to participate within the framework of a trusteeship system without any impairment of our military necessities. He stated that he would be willing to take the military version of this system without quibble, but he emphasized that it is important to nail down the position on the other side—that no matter how few the people in a particular territory, to insure that our obligation to those people will be discharged, because if this should be given up there would be no defense at all in dealing with Britain and Russia. We would be at the bar of opinion, and if we accept the trusteeship system we will be able to say that we have taken a position.

Commander Stassen observed that it appeared that Dr. Bowman had misinterpreted the position of the Delegation. There was no intention to retreat from the idea of a trusteeship system, and there is a recognition and acceptance of the fact that we must account for what we do in territories for which we are responsible, but there must be a distinction in the degree or in the terms of the trusteeship in the strategic areas on the basis of military requirements. Commander Stassen pointed out that he had spoken about the desirability of trusteeship two or three years ago and that he had no intention of retreating one whit from the needs and the right of the peoples of such territories.

Mr. Bloom inquired whether there might be several kinds of trusteeship, and Commander Stassen replied that in some areas the trustee would be an individual nation; in others the trustee would be a joint agent.

Senator Connally cautioned that it would be proceeding on a very tenuous basis if it should be assumed that this country is going to get what it needs easily.

Mr. Taussic suggested that if it should be decided, as Dr. Bowman had implied, that there could not be agreement on a statement at this meeting, that then the military people might outline their needs.

VIEWS OF INTERDEPAREMENTAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Pasvolsky remarked that it is necessary for us to decide quickly the basis on which we would wish to negotiate. He pointed out that the interdepartmental committee on trusteeship had been working on this problem for some time and outlined the points on which agreement had been reached in this Committee. The trusteeship system was to be established under the Organization. There would be no reference to the territories to be placed under the system. The basic objectives would be broadly stated and there would be procedures and machinery on the basis of which the system would operate. Each territory would be subject to a separate agreement. A distinction would be made between the strategic and nonstrategic areas. The trusteeship arrangements would take into account such factors as the geographical situation of the territory; the stage of development of the people, its economic resources, etc.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that under this system it would be entirely possible for the United States to control any territory it might need and want. With respect to the question as to who are the title holders, Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the policy had been laid down by former Secretary of State Hull to the effect that the title is vested in the peace treaties. The initial arrangements affecting the Japanese mandated islands, therefore, would have to be made between the three residual Principal Allied and Associated Powers, namely, the United States, the United Kingdom, and France. On this basis, said Mr. Pasvolsky, nothing could be settled affecting these territories without United States consent.

GENERAL DISCUSSION ON TRUSTEESHIP

Secretary Stimson pointed out that the United States would also have established certain rights of title deriving from occupation of the islands. Mr. Pasvolsky affirmed this, adding that our position would be actually one of the three title holders, and we would also be in possession.

Secretary Stimson observed that he would be opposed to the suggestion made by Mr. Taussig of detailing the military needs. If this were attempted, he pointed out, something would surely be left out. Governor Stassen added that in any case this would be done in the Charter for each specific territory as it was placed under the system.

Mr. Dulles observed that there was in his view not a real difficulty involved. The trusteeship was originally a legal device and it was not intended to deal with military questions such as those under discussion. The new organization, he said, should have the authority to look into the condition of colonial peoples. This, he said, is not inconsistent with the right of military defenses. He could see no conflict in this respect. All that is needed, continued Mr. Dulles, is to set up an organization with the power to look into these questions.

Mr. Fortas remarked that the problem of dependent peoples has in the past created a great deal of unrest in the world, and it will continue to do so. He referred to the work of the interdepartmental committee as showing the possibility of achieving strategic needs on the one hand and at the same time of erecting machinery to meet the needs of the dependent peoples on the other. In the view of Mr. Fortas it is entirely possible to reconcile these two points. With respect to the question of annexation, Mr. Fortas pointed out that if we were to confine our discussion to the Japanese mandates a simple result could follow—they could be annexed, but he cautioned, if that were to be done, if the United States were to take a position in favor of annexation, an international grab bag would surely follow. In that event we might well find that our tremendous military and security interests in other parts of the world would be prejudiced. Mr. Fortas also advised that an effort should be made to avoid becoming legalistic on these questions.

Mr. Stettinius suggested that a redraft of the statement be undertaken for the purpose of establishing United States policy for submission to the press.

Secretary Stimson stated that he had taken an extreme position in his statement and that what is really wished by the military people is "full control".

Mr. Stettinius inquired whether he represented the view of the Delegation accurately in assuming that they would wish more time to study the question. It was agreed that the matter would be taken up at the meeting of the Delegation on the following day.

COMMANDER STASSEN stated that he was opposed to complete annexation of any territory by this country.

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the military advisers and staff left the meeting.

FURTHER TOPICS FOR DISCUSSION

The Secretary asked what further topics remained for discussion. Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that there were three important points of substance still to be covered: (1) amendments, (2) an introductory statement on Chapter IX, Arrangements for Economic and Social Cooperation, and (3) completion of the discussion of domestic jurisdiction. Mr. Pasvolsky recommended that the three questions listed on the Agenda for discussion with advisers for Commission 4 should be studied by the staff between now and its arrival in San Francisco, and that recommendations would then be made to the Delegation. The Secretary asked which questions Mr. Pasvolsky referred to, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied that the three questions were: (1) juridical status, (2) registration of treaties, and (3) inconsistent obligations.

At Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion it was generally agreed that the Agenda the following day would include: (1) trusteeships, (2) amendments, (3) domestic jurisdiction, and (4) reconsideration of Chapter IX, Section A—Economic and Social cooperation—and that following the clearing up of these points the Delegation would begin its general review of the decisions made during this series of meetings. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that discussion of Chapter X could be deferred until San Francisco, and the Secretary agreed.

LANGUAGE OF REPORT OF JURISTS' COMMITTEE

THE SECRETARY announced that Mr. Hackworth had a question he wished to raise with the Delegation.

Mr. Hackworth commented that the question was a very important one but that it would take only a brief time for him to present it. The question, he said, was what language the report of the Jurists' Committee and the draft statute of the court should be printed in. He reported that the Soviet Union wished to print the report in five languages, and that a heated debate had taken place on this matter, 16 since there was considerable opposition to printing the report in any languages other than English and French.

THE SECRETARY commented that it had been agreed by the sponsoring governments that they would recommend that there would be five official languages at the Conference and that all basic documents would be published in these five languages. He thought, therefore, that the suggestion of the Soviet Union was quite in line with our position. Mr. Hackworth explained that the British representative had apparently not heard of this decision and that there was some confusion, although the point the Secretary had made had been stated during informal discussions following the main meeting. Mr. HACK-WORTH noted that it would be very difficult to find adequate time to prepare five translations, and that it would be impossible to postpone the translations until San Francisco, since some of the individuals not going to San Francisco would have to sign the document here. On the initiative of the Secretary the Delegation agreed that the report of the Committee of Jurists together with the statute of the court should be published in five languages. Mr. Hackworth asked whether he was authorized to tell the Jurists' Group that this system of five languages had been agreed upon for the main Conference. THE SECRETARY said that Mr. Hackworth should simply agree to the Soviet proposal that five languages be used in printing the jurists' report and that he leave the other question in the hands of the delegation. He added that this was one of the questions which would be talked over with Mr. Molotov.

Mr. Hackworth noted that to use other than English and French opened too many demands for other languages, including Greek for example, and that the larger number of languages that were recognized the more feelings would be hurt. The Secretary explained that the political experts had given considerable attention to this question, and had advised him that French, Spanish, Chinese, Russian and English should be adopted as official languages. He thought if there were more time to discuss the matter a good justification could be made for this decision.

THE SECRETARY said that he had heard very good reports of the work of the Jurists' Committee and of Mr. Hackworth's chairmanship, and that he assumed that everything was going well and the revised statute would be ready for San Francisco. Mr. HACKWORTH commented that there had been many difficulties, but that good progress had been made and a statute would be ready. He stressed that the spirit throughout had been cooperative.

The Secretary adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

A. SAN FRANCISCO MATTERS

1. Chinese Position

The Secretary told Mr. Eden that he just had a very satisfactory conference with Foreign Minister Soong of China. Among other things, Mr. Soong had told him that the Chinese Delegation was strongly in favor of setting up a United Nation Organization at San Francisco and would cooperate in every way with the United States and the United Kingdom in making the Conference a success.

2. Foreign Ministers Meeting re Conference

It was agreed after discussions that the four Foreign Ministers representing the sponsoring powers should hold a meeting, if possible, this coming Saturday 18 to go over and settle various matters regarding the organization of the Conference. Mr. Stettinius asked Mr. Hiss to plan to stay over the weekend in order to attend this meeting and to accompany him on his plane to San Francisco.

3. Chairman of the Conference

There was a discussion of the alternative proposals of having a single Chairman or a rotating Chairman. The Secretary stated that it was our position that in order to have effective operations, it was essential that there be one Chairman who could be responsible for directing the Secretary General on all matters relating to the Conference. We felt that one of the sponsoring powers should provide the Chairman but did not care from which country he came. Mr. Eden felt that the Secretary should be chosen in view of the fact that the U.S. was the host. It was agreed that Mr. Hiss would raise this issue on Saturday as one of the matters on the agenda for the Foreign Ministers and that either Mr. Eden or Mr. Soong would propose that Mr. Stettinius should be named as the permanent President of the Conference.

The Secretary explained what we had in mind in regard to the President and three Vice Presidents, we felt that the burden of presiding at plenary sessions would be too great for one man. We also desired to recognize the position of the sponsoring powers. We propose, therefore, that there should be a permanent President, and that the other three Chairmen of the Delegation of the sponsoring governments should be named as Vice Presidents. The President would preside over the first plenary session, and from then on he and the Vice Presidents would rotate as presiding officers. Mr. Eden raised a question as to whether this system would be practical and suggested that Mr. Stettinius preside at every meeting. Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Dunn both said that we felt it was better to have a rotating system. Mr. Eden asked, if this was the case, what were the Russians objecting to. Mr. Hiss stated they were insisting on four Chairmen entirely equal in name and prestige. The Secretary pointed out that this would not only cause great confusion but would provide a poor precedent for the International Organization itself.

${\bf 4.} \ {\it Membership of the Executive Committee of the Steering Committee}$

Mr. Eden said that he had just come from a meeting of the British Commonwealth in London.<sup>19</sup> He was in agreement with our proposed list of nations to sit on the Executive Committee with one exception. He proposed that Iran be eliminated and that Australia be put in its place. The Secretary pointed out that it would be very difficult to have three British members on an Executive Committee of only eleven. Mr. Eden pointed out that there were no small or medium powers from the Pacific on the Executive Committee; that Australia had participated wholeheartedly in the war, and was prepared to take a substantial part in security arrangements for the peace. The Secretary and Mr. Dunn continued to raise objections to the British having three members on the Steering Committee. Mr. Dunn said that while the U.S. did not object, other nations most certainly would. He felt it might endanger the Conference and even react on the British themselves if they presented this point. He thought this was particularly true since it so happened that there were eleven members on the Executive Committee, and it was also proposed that there should be eleven members on the Security Council. Membership of the Executive Committee might therefore be considered as the forerunner of the Security Council, particularly if the membership of the Executive Committee got along well and worked out successfully. He suggested that if the British were to have three members on the Executive Committee. it might be wise to increase membership beyond eleven so that there would be no precedent. Mr. Eden said that he thought the point of the same number had been intentional and that it was wiser to leave the membership as it stood. Mr. Eden said that he thought it was essential that Canada should be a member, and he thought Prime Minister Smuts would be an enormous help; that he had stood out head and shoulders above the rest at the Commonwealth Conference. He was sure that Mr. Smuts would make a large contribution as he was strongly in favor of the Organization. He also stated that the British were clear that Canada had a prior right to membership on the Executive Committee as against Australia. He had informed Mr. Evatt of this fact. He suggested that they would send a message to Mr. Evatt advising him of our difficulties in accepting the proposal which he had made.<sup>20</sup> He suggested that possibly Australia might be given one of the one year term seats on the Security Council which were provided for in the Charter. Mr. Dunn thought this might be possible.

The Secretary stated that he did not think that the membership of the Executive Steering Committee necessarily set a pattern for the Security Council. Mr. Eden agreed but thought as a practical matter that it probably did.

Mr. Eden said that he did not agree to our recent suggestion that Czechoslovakia should be eliminated in favor of Chile. Mr. Dunn stated that we had dropped this proposal after the Russians had objected. It was stated that the Russians had urged that Yugoslavs should be given a seat on the Executive Committee instead of the Netherlands since they had suffered more and contributed more to the war effort. Our answer to that was no. Mr. Eden agreed, and said that it was essential to have one of the small Western European powers represented on the Committee.

5. Official Language at the Conference

The Secretary asked Mr. Hiss whether he had any urgent problems. Mr. Hiss said that the most urgent problem was the question of the official language. The Russians had taken an absurd position on this issue demanding that all important documents of the Conference be printed in Russian. In view of this position, the Chinese had also demanded that anything that was printed in Russian would also have to be printed in Chinese. This was out of the question, as we had few printers who could print in Chinese. Our position was that Russian and Chinese should be among the official languages but that we would not currently print all documents in those languages but would print the final document in those languages and have original signatures on those documents after the Conference was completed. Mr. Eden agreed to our position.

6. Procedure for Steering Committee

Mr. Hiss explained that the Steering Committee would have on it the Chairmen of all the Delegations-46 people. It would have as its operating arm the Executive Committee of eleven. pected that the Executive Committee would be the key organ for making decisions at the Conference. The Executive Committee would be expected to settle the major issues and prepare papers, recommendations and agenda for the Steering Committee as a whole. suggested that the Steering Committee would accept the recommendations of the Executive Committee. He stated that the session on the opening day would not be considered a plenary session of the Conference but would be a formal opening in which the U.S. will welcome the Conferees. The session is expected to last one-half hour. The Secretary said President Truman would open the Conference with a short speech from the White House and there would be a band present. After a few ceremonies and short speeches by the Mayor and Governor Warren,21 the Secretary would close the meeting with a five minute address. Mr. Hiss said that the next morning the Steering Committee would hold its first session to organize the Conference. There would be no nomination committee as such matters would be handled by the Steering Committee. In any case, a great many decisions would already have been made. It was hoped that the Steering Committee could present to the first plenary session, the afternoon of Thursday, April 26th, a complete document outlining the Organization of the Conference. The first plenary session would be devoted to speeches by the Chairmen of the Delegations. It was planned that the President of the Conference would make the first speech and that the Foreign Ministers of the sponsoring powers would follow in alphabetical order. Mr. Eden wondered whether this would be wise and suggested the advisability of holding one or two of these speeches until later on so that a rebuttal, if necessary, can be made of the proposals raised. Mr. Hiss said that the publicity and radio people were very anxious to have the Foreign Ministers of the sponsoring powers speak on the first day. Mr. Eden acquiesced. It was agreed that the speeches should be limited to around fifteen minutes. It was decided that Mr. Hiss would prepare an agenda for the Foreign Ministers Conference Meeting on Saturday.

B. POLAND

Mr. Eden stated that he had just received a telegram from Moscow to the effect that since Harriman and Clark-Kerr had left, there was no longer the same urgency to deliver the message from the President and the Prime Minister to Stalin.<sup>22</sup> He <sup>23</sup> and the American Ambassador had therefore agreed to delay action until Wednesday morning April 18th to permit further changes to be made if the Prime Minister and Eden desired. If no word was received prior to that time they would send to Stalin the original message agreed upon. Mr. Eden stated that two new events had occurred since discussing this previously which might change our position. The first was that the Russians had informed us that they were about to sign a mutual assistance pact with the Lublin Government of Poland. The Secretary stated that we had received a cable to this effect 24 also, and was disturbed by it. Mr. Eden said that the Russians had come out again publicly demanding that the Lublin Poles be represented at San Francisco if no new government had been formed by that time. He stated that Ambassador Clark-Kerr had urged very strongly against making any concessions whatever in our joint telegram as the Russians would construe it as a sign of weakness. He thought there was still time to make a change if it was decided that such a change as Clark-Kerr had suggested was considered favorably.

The Secretary and Mr. Dunn both stated that they felt that no change should be made even though there might be time to do so. Mr. Dunn stated that we had received a similar message from our Embassy and had already telegraphed a reply instructing our Embassy to deliver the message as previously instructed.25 Mr. Dunn gave our views on this matter at some length. He said that we felt it would be a mistake to demand that five Poles other than the Lublin Poles be brought from inside Poland to Moscow as the Russians would never agree to this. Any attempt to get them to do so would just be butting our heads against a brick wall.

It was agreed to stand by the original message. During this discussion, the Prime Minister called Mr. Eden and Mr. Eden advised that the Prime Minister agreed with this position.

Mr. Eden stated that there was considerable risk that Mr. Mikołajczyk would not proceed to Moscow at all if the non-Lublin Poles selected from Poland itself were not representative of the Polish people. The Secretary and Mr. Dunn agreed that this presented a problem. Mr. Eden stated that he might want some help from us to prod Mr. Mikołajczyk into going. The Secretary said he would be glad to do so.

Mr. Eden stated that the British were considerably disturbed at the prospect of a mutual assistance agreement being made between the U.S.S.R. and the Lublin Poles at this time. He suggested that we both ask the Russians to postpone action until Mr. Molotov arrived and he (Eden) and the Secretary had a chance to talk to him about the matter. The Secretary agreed and instructed that such a cable be sent.26 Mr. Dunn felt that the Russians were going to proceed with this treaty regardless of any objections on our part, and that all we were doing in any case was to make our position a matter of record.

The Secretary told Mr. Eden that the position which the Catholics had recently taken in connection with the International Organization was very serious.27 He felt that this position was accounted for largely by the failure of the Polish negotiations and fears about what the Russians were going to do. Mr. Dulles had told him that while a few weeks ago sixty percent of the religious organizations were in favor of the Organization now it was only fifty-fifty. The Secretary suggested that Mr. Eden have his people brief him on this.

C. ARGENTINA

Mr. Eden asked the Secretary what the latest position was on Argentina. The Secretary said that we were in a difficult position at the moment because the Argentine Government had requested that in accordance with the Mexico City Agreements they should be permitted to sign the United Nations Declaration.28 Mr. Eden said that the British had no objection. The Secretary said that the Latin American Republics had none either but that we were quite sure that the U.S.S.R. was not prepared to agree. He said we had not yet decided what to do. He had told Mr. Rockefeller to advise the South American Ambassadors with whom he was discussing this matter that he, the Secretary, was prepared to take this matter up and discuss it with the Foreign Ministers when they arrived here later this week but that he was not prepared to request or propose favorable ac-He felt this would hold the situation only temporarily. Secretary said he thought recognition was one thing but acceptance as a United Nation was another. The United Nations had grouped together to stop the enemy and now we should go slowly before permitting the Argentine to join. . . .

Mr. Eden said this was fundamentally a U. S. decision and that he would support us in any decision we made but would not himself push the Argentine case. The question was asked as to whether the Argentine request involved the matter of an invitation to the Conference. The Secretary stated that this had not arisen vet but we did expect it in due course, and that if they became a United Nation during the Conference, the matter might have to be put to a vote in the Conference as to whether Argentina would be permitted a seat. Mr. Eden seemed somewhat surprised at this and wondered what would happen in that event.

The Secretary called Mr. Rockefeller into the meeting and he asked him to explain to Mr. Eden the Argentine situation as he saw it. They had a private discussion of five or ten minutes.

MEMORANDUM

In connection with the memorandum of the State Department dated March 29 on the question of the invitation of Poland to the Conference at San Francisco, the Embassy of the U.S.S.R., in accordance with instructions of the Soviet Government, has the honor to state that the Soviet Government cannot agree with the arguments of the Government of the United States set forth in the memorandum mentioned. The Soviet Government considers that the inviting of the presently functioning Polish Provisional Government to the Conference at San Francisco not only does not contradict the decisions of the Crimea Conference but is in full accord with the principles of these decisions in as much as the present Polish Provisional Government exercises governmental authority on Polish territory and is fully supported by an overwhelming majority of the Polish people.

The Soviet Government continues to insist on the necessity of the obligatory participation of the Polish Provisional Government now functioning in Poland in the forthcoming Conference at San Francisco.<sup>32</sup>

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows lists of names of persons (34) present at meeting.]

TRUSTEESHIP ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Stettinius called the meeting to order at 9:10 a.m. and announced that he had been informed that the Secretary of the Navy would be coming in late. He further announced that the committee which met yesterday afternoon to draw up a revised draft statement on recommended policy on trusteeship had presented a statement, and that it was his understanding that Secretary of War Stimson has found the draft statement satisfactory. [This statement was then distributed to the delegates.] <sup>83</sup>

Mr. Stettinius read the statement, and Mr. Gates stated that the statement was satisfactory to Secretary Forrestal.

Mr. Bundy observed that he had shown the statement to Secretary Stimson last night, and that he had found it generally satisfactory. He had, however, pointed to certain redundancies and suggested that the word "namely" ought to be added after "thereunder" in the ninth line. Mr. Bundy stated further that it was his understanding that the State Department might raise a question about the phrase "trusteeship arrangements" in the eighth line, and that it was agreeable to him if it should be decided to remove this phrase.

ADMIRAL WILLSON questioned the use of the word "shall" in the fifteenth line, but Mr. Bundy stated that the Secretary of War prefers the word "shall" in a policy statement.

Mr. Dulles stated that it was the committee's idea that this statement would be a directive primarily for the instruction of the American Delegation and that if it were to be used as a statement for publication it might need some changes. This would be particularly true in view of the fact that there is somewhat too much emphasis on United States interests and on the Pacific for a public statement.

Mr. Taussig suggested that in any statement for publication, paragraph 1, which is a negative statement, should be put last.

MR. PASVOLSKY suggested the addition of the word "political" after "social and economic" in the next to the last line. He pointed out that in all of the drafts the wording had been "social, economic and political".

Mr. Stetunius stated that the draft statement has been recommended by the Army, Navy, and by our political and economic advisers and asked if there were any more questions.

Mr. Bloom raised a question about the meaning of the phrase in the second paragraph dealing with the territories to be put under trusteeship by "subsequent agreement" and wished to know if this meant that all territories in the above categories would be placed under the system.

Mr. Bowman explained that the wording of the statement left open the question as to which specific territories might be placed under the system by "subsequent agreement".

MR. STETTINIUS then asked each delegate in turn whether the statement was satisfactory to him, and it met the approval of all. MR. STETTINIUS then remarked that he would wish the three Secretaries to recommend this statement to the President today as a directive for the Delegates, 35 that in fact he would like to have this done within the next two or three hours, since he considered it a very important matter. With respect to the statement for the press, MR. STETTINIUS stated that in his view it would not be necessary to obtain Presidential approval for a statement for publication. The draft statement, he said, should be called "Recommended Policy on Trusteeship".

THE SECRETARY expressed appreciation to the committee for working up the statement.

DOMESTIC JURISDICTION

MR. PASVOLSKY indicated that consideration should next be given to the provision regarding domestic jurisdiction in paragraph 7 of Chapter VIII, Section A.<sup>36</sup> Senator Connally suggested that we should not try to solve the whole problem at one time, but that we should definitely limit action by the Organization to international questions. He thought that there would be a serious reaction if domestic questions were allowed to come within the scope of the Organization.

DR. Bowman proposed that the words "by International Law" and "solely" be omitted from Paragraph 7. Senator Connally thought that in the long run the jurisdiction of the Organization would be wider if no attempt was made at the start to force states to submit questions of a domestic character to action by the organization. Representative Eaton thought that the present wording of the paragraph would provoke the question of immigration since it would be argued that the immigration question affected other countries. Senator Connally said this particular objection would be overcome if Dr. Bowman's suggestion was adopted to strike out "by international law" and "solely". He thought that we would get into difficulties unless we left it up to the states themselves to decide whether a question was within their domestic jurisdiction.

General agreement was then reached by the members of the Delegation to adopt Mr. Bowman's suggestion, so that Paragraph 7 would read "The provisions of paragraph 1 to 6 of Section A should not apply to situations or disputes arising out of matters which are within the domestic jurisdiction of the state concerned."

AMENDMENT Provisions

THE SECRETARY asked Mr. Pasvolsky to continue the discussion and Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that the next topic would be the amendment provisions as stipulated in Chapter XI. Mr. Pasvolsky said that the basic question was whether to leave the chapter as it stood or whether to provide in addition for a system of periodic general review of the Charter.

(The Secretary was called from the meeting and asked Senator Connally to preside.)

Senator Connally said that Mr. Pasvolsky's latter suggestion was hardly workable and that he personally preferred a more liberal and flexible amendment procedure that was clear-cut. Senator Vandenberg indicated that the present rigidity of the amendment process might prove very serious if one of the permanent members of the Security Council dropped into the position of a third rate power. It was possible that one of the permanent members might at some time not be on hand to concur in a proposed amendment. Senator Connally thought it was better to liberalize the amendment process than to provide for a general convention. He added that in any event he thought that the calling of a special convention should not be made the exclusive method for amending the Charter. He said he would tolerate the idea of recognizing the rights of the members to call a Constitutional Convention, but that he did not think this method should prevent the use of the amendment process.

Mr. Stassen suggested that paragraph 1 of Chapter XI remain as in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposal and that a new paragraph be added reading "A Revisionary Convention of the United Nations Organization shall be held in the year 1957 at a date and place to be fixed by the Assembly, for the purpose of revising the Charter of the Organization. Each Member of the Organization shall have one vote in the convention. New revisions proposed in the Charter of the Organization will take effect upon their ratification by two-thirds of the Members including the permanent Members of the Security Council." Senator Connally asked why Mr. Stassen eliminated the other Members of the Council. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the other Members of the Council would have their say in the action of the General Assembly. Mr. Stassen considered it very important to give the people a chance to review the Charter at a later stage and he thought that by this procedure many groups that would be dissatisfied with the results at San Francisco would come along with the Organization.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM commented that the date 1957 was twelve years off and he asked what would happen if changes were desired before that date. Mr. Stassen pointed out that the amendment process still would be available. Senator Connally said he would have no fundamental objection to the general idea proposed by Commander Stassen, except that he did not think a definite date should be set. He did not object to suggesting in the Charter that a conference might be held, if needed, but he thought that the method of adopting the suggestions of the conference should be the same as that provided for the adoption of regular amendments. Mr. Stassen said that it might be possible to provide simply that "A Revisionary Convention of the United Nations shall be held on the call of a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly." Representative Eaton and Representative Bloom thought this was a useful proposal.

Mr. Pasvolsky remarked that this whole question had been discussed at Dumbarton Oaks and that the possibility of a provision for general revision had been considered.<sup>37</sup> He indicated that the argument against such a provision that had been raised at Dumbarton Oaks was that it would tend to detract from the prestige of the Organization, just at the time when the Organization should have all the prestige possible. It was agreed also, he said, that any Organization had the inherent right to have a general look at its provisions and to review its operations. In the final analysis, he said, we have to keep in mind that at the present stage of developments no system for amendments would be acceptable that would lead to a revision contrary to the wishes of any one of the major powers. He added that this assumption of the necessary unanimity of the major powers would have to be carried over into any revisionary process.

Mr. Stassen said he disagreed with Mr. Pasvolsky that a provision for periodic review would detract from the prestige of the Organization. He thought quite the contrary, that such a provision would strengthen the prestige of the Organization. He said that large sections of public opinion would be dissatisfied with the results of San Francisco, and that a provision permitting reconsideration of the Organization would help keep people in back of the enterprise.

MR. PASVOLSKY said that whatever we provided would get us into trouble, unless we recognized the principle of the unanimity of the permanent members on the Security Council. MR. STASSEN agreed with this view.

Senator Vandenberg suggested that a final clause be added to the proposed addition to Chapter XI, to the effect that revisions cannot come into effect until they have been ratified in accordance with a state's constitutional processes. Mr. Stassen agreed that this would be a useful addition.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON felt that the attitude with which this whole matter should be approached was that we were at the beginning of a great world development, that this was only a first step, a beginning, and that it would be essential to make changes. Senator Connally indicated that his main objection to the proposal was the setting of a definite time for the convening of a convention. Such a provision, he said, would simply announce to the world that we are establishing a temporary outfit. Senator Connally thought that the calling of a general convention should be left up to an agency of the Organization to call it by a special vote.

DR. Bowman indicated that there was a very practical political problem to be met since there would inevitably be strong objections to certain provisions of the Charter. He thought the addition now of a provision for periodic revision would decrease the pressure of public opinion.

Senator Connally said that Mr. Pasvolsky had mentioned that this question was discussed at Dumbarton Oaks. The Senator questioned how strong the opposition to this proposal had been. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that the opposition had been very heavy, but that there might have been some change of opinion in view of the discussions subsequent to Dumbarton Oaks. Mr. Dulles thought it would be very useful to be able to say that the Charter was not the last word, that it was just a start and so that people could have hope that at some future date changes might be made. Dean Gildersleeve thought that the amendment process should if possible be liberalized and that this proposal was one way of doing it. She added that she saw the difficulty pointed out by Senator Connally of specifying a date at which time a General Convention should be called.

Mr. Stassen suggested that his proposal might be redrafted to read "A Revisionary Convention of the Members of the United Nations may be held by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly for the purpose of revising the Charter, at a date and place to be determined by the General Assembly. Any revisions proposed would take effect upon ratification in accordance with their respective constitutional purposes of two-thirds of the Members including the permanent Members of the Security Council." Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the special position given to the permanent Members in this procedure followed logically from their special responsibilities for security matters.

Senator Connally wondered why the whole matter was not left to the Assembly. Senator Vandenberg pointed out that this country would not have a veto in the General Assembly. Mr. Dulles noted that if Mr. Stassen's suggestions were adopted, this country would have a veto over any revision proposed by the Conference, but that it would not have a veto over the calling of the Conference. Mr. StasSEN thought it would so work out that a conference would not be called unless there was general willingness on the part of the large nations, since there would be no use in a conference that could not count on the support of the large nations.

Senator Connally thought that the calling of a conference should be with the approval of the Security Council, by a vote of seven. Mr. Stassen thought that rather than define the voting procedure the phrase might be included: "with the approval of the Security Council in accordance with the procedure stipulated in Chapter VI, Section C, Paragraph 3."

Mr. Bloom noted that the action of the Conference would be limited to revision of the Charter. He asked what was implied in the term "revision" and whether the Conference could be called for any other purpose. Mr. Stassen said he interpreted the word "revision" broadly and that it might be well to say "for the purpose of considering revisions." Mr. Bloom said he would prefer the phrasing "reviewing the Charter of the Organization."

Senator Connally said he thought this matter should be deferred for final action and that it should be more thoroughly discussed. Mr. Stassen indicated that he was interested in having the Delegation indicate the general line of policy they favored and that the drafting Committee could then work out the language. Mr. Pasvolsky questioned introducing reference to the whole Security Council, preferring reference only to the permanent members of the Security Council.

Mr. Stassen asked whether the general principle of his proposal was acceptable to the Delegation if his original statement was modified to include Senator Connally's proposal that the Conference be called by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly with the approval of the Security Council, if Mr. Vandenberg's addition was included "in accordance with their respective constitutional processes" and if Mr. Bloom's proposal was taken that the Convention be called for the purpose of reviewing the Charter. Mr. Dunn thought it was important to use the term "Conference" rather than "Convention". Senator Connally suggested that in place of the phrase "revising the Charter" there be substituted the phrase "for the purpose of considering revisions in the Charter." Mr. Stassen said what he had in mind was not to change the exact language, but rather to define the line of policy. He said he agreed that mention of a particular date should be eliminated.

Senator Connally asked whether this line of policy presented by Mr. Stassen and amended in the course of the discussion of the Delegation was in general satisfactory. He said that it satisfied him. General agreement with the proposal was expressed by the members of the Delegation. Senator Connally asked why the Assembly by itself could not adopt proposals. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that there would be strong objection to having the Assembly alone possess this power, since the permanent members of the Council would then have no special position with respect to the making of amendments.

Senator Connally pointed out that as suggested by Mr. Stassen, it would be more difficult to get a revision ratified than it would be to get an amendment ratified since an amendment would require ratification by members of the Organization having permanent membership on the Security Council and by the majority of the other Members of the Organization. According to Mr. Stassen's amendment proposal, ratification of proposed revisions would require two-thirds of the Members including the permanent Members of the Security Council. He thought this point should be borne in mind in the drafting and Mr. Pasvolsky agreed with him.

WITHDRAWAL FROM MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Pasvoisky asked the Delegation whether a provision for withdrawal should be included. He noted that such a provision had been removed from the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals on our own recommendation and that it was primarily a political question.<sup>88</sup>

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked Mr. Pasvolsky what his suggestion MR. PASVOLSKY replied that, so far, no provision for withdrawal was being suggested. Mr. Stassen commented that a provision for withdrawal would affect, in fact, only the smaller states who might find it desirable to withdraw if a veto of one of the permanent members tied up action of the Organization. He suggested that this Government should not put forward a provision for withdrawal but let the small nations if they wished make the suggestion themselves. Mr. Stassen thought that it might be well to have a provision for easy withdrawal. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that since this is an Organization based on the unity of the great powers, he did not think the great powers would be willing to make possible easy withdrawal. Representative Eaton said that if a provision for easy withdrawal was stipulated, the conditions leading up to the breakdown of the League of Nations would be reproduced. Senator Connally thought it would be difficult to hold within the Organization states that really wanted to get out.

Mr. Bowman remarked that it was important to keep in mind the unnumbered paragraph at the end of the Chapter on Principles, in which it was provided that states not members of the Organization could not escape the obligation to conform to certain lines of action. He thought this provision should be kept in mind in considering the question of withdrawal.

Mr. Dulles suggested that there were two possibilities for handling the matter, to grant a general right of withdrawal or to grant to a small power the right to withdraw if an amendment which it did not like was imposed upon it. He said he personally favored according the right of withdrawal to small states that did not wish to accept an amendment which the large powers favored. Mr. Dunn thought this provision would get the Organization into trouble.

Mr. Stassen suggested that if the small nations came forward with a provision for withdrawal, then we would have to seriously consider it, but that since it is their problem, we might well withhold any decision at this time. Representative Bloom indicated that he would oppose a withdrawal clause included in the Charter on the ground that the public would then say we were writing only a very temporary agreement. He preferred, he said, to allow states to make reservations with respect to certain parts of the Charter while keeping the states bound together in the Organization. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that Mr. Stassen's proposal to postpone a definite decision would seem satisfactory. It was then generally agreed by the Delegation to pass over this question for the time being and consider it later. [The Secretary returned to the meeting]. 3824

RECONSIDERATION OF CHAPTER IX, 39 SECTION A, PARAGRAPH I— ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COOPERATION

Mr. Pasvolsky then read the suggestion for the revision of Chapter IX, Section A, Paragraph I (April 12, 1945 Suggested Revision of Chapter IX, Section A, Paragraph I). 40 Mr. Pasvolsky noted that it might be well to reverse the order of reference to economic development and social advancement and the reference to promotion of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. Mr. Pasvolsky asked Mr. Stinebower to say a few words about the proposal.

Mr. Stinebower explained that the suggestion embodied shorter text that had been asked for on the basis of the discussion at a previous meeting of the Delegation. He noted that the basic change that was being suggested was the addition of the phrase "encourage separate and cooperative action by all nations for the solutions of international, economic, social, health and other related problems." He indicated that the present draft was in lieu of a longer, detailed statement of functions which had previously been placed before the Delegation.

SENATOR CONNALLY said he liked the reference "encourage separate and cooperative action". Mr. STINEBOWER indicated that this addition paralleled the idea that had developed at the Hot Springs Conference that the Organization would not take the action but rather that the nations would take the action.41

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said she would like to say a few words on this proposal. She said she had been confronted with a good many questions as what the term "humanitarian" meant. She had wondered whether it would not be well to spell out what was meant, for example, health, education, control of opium traffic, etc. But in spelling out, the list seemed to get too complicated and she now wondered whether it would not be satisfactory simply to mention health and cultural relations so that the final phrase would read "the solution of international, economic, social, health, cultural and other related problems." Senator Connally stated that the enumeration of any fields tended to exclude other fields. Dean Gildersleeve replied that this was taken care of by the phrase "and other related problems". She said, however, that she recognized the advantage in leaving the text as it stood in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as long as one had authority to state what was included under the term "humanitarian". THE SEC-RETARY said that Dean Gildersleeve was correct in interpreting humanitarian to include social, cultural and health problems. He said he remembered that late one Sunday night at Dumbarton Oaks they had wrestled with the interpretation of "social and other humanitarian".42 It had been agreed that this phrase included education, health, narcotics and cultural relations. He asked Dr. Bowman if this interpretation was accurate. Dr. Bowman indicated that the interpretation had been just inclusive enough to allow him to go along with it. The Secretary thought it would be preferable to leave the matter in general terms rather than to attempt to list the various fields in detail.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE replied that she had recently received a letter with very important backing proposing the establishment of an Office of International Education. She said the situation would be satisfactory if she was authorized to say that the United States Delegation interpreted the text of the proposals, particularly the phrase "to facilitate solutions of international, economic, social and other humanitarian problems" as providing future opportunities for the tions, 1943, vol. I, pp. 820 ff.

For reference to agreement by the American Group to accept the words "and other humanitarian" and not to insist upon specific reference to educational and cultural problems, see progress report of September 13, 1944, on the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations, Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. I, p. 796.

establishment of specialized organizations dealing with health, education, culture, control of opium and other related problems as well as other problems not obviously within the category "social and humanitarian", and that these organizations could be established whenever the Economic and Social Council under the general authority of the Assembly approved. Moreover, provisions could be made to bring them into relationship with the Organization.

THE SECRETARY said he welcomed this interpretation and that he did not think a statement to this effect would do any damage, although he thought that Dean Gildersleeve should make the statement not as a member of the Delegation but as an individual. Mr. Dunn agreed that this would probably be desirable.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON questioned whether any reference should be made to education, particularly since it was important to avoid having any interference by the international organization with the educational processes of the member states. Dr. Bowman said he would like to speak in support of Dean Gildersleeve and also support the chairman's suggestion that she make her statement as an individual and not as a member of the Delegation. Since education was as hot a subject as religion, reference to it as coming within the scope of the Organization might invite dissension. However, if she spoke only as an individual, it would still leave open the possibility of talking about the matter. He explained that he had received hundreds of letters asking him whether the term humanitarian covered education as well as other matters. The letters always asked, if the term did cover education, why education was not mentioned directly. He said he answered such letters by saving that if education was mentioned, then a lot of other things would have to be enumerated, and that, in any case, the representatives that met at Dumbarton Oaks interpreted "humanitarian" to include education.

Senator Vandenberg noted that the greatest row that had taken place over UNRRA concerned an amendment on education which had been introduced. He said to get the agreement by it had taken a firm letter from Mr. Acheson <sup>43</sup> saying that there was no reference to education in the agreement. Dean Gildersleeve explained that after twenty-five years in the field of education, particularly in the field of international education, she was not interested in seeing education imposed on anybody, she was not interested in having an educational system imposed on this country, nor was she interested in using force to impose our educational system on other countries. She said she would be satisfied if she could say that education was not eliminated by the terms "social and humanitarian."

Senator Connally urged that the phrase in the suggested draft "encouraged separate and cooperative action" be added to the present text of the Proposals. Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that the term "facilitate" had been adopted and that it carried the same meaning as "encourage". He said that the matter of wording would be considered in the course of the work of the Drafting Committee.

THE SECRETARY asked whether there were not other words that could be used in place of "cultural enrichment". Mr. Stinebower mentioned that it might be possible to say "economic enrichment and cultural development". The Secretary suggested "cultural exchange". Mr. Stassen proposed that the phrase in the text might be condensed to "economic, social and cultural advancement". The Secretary indicated that he preferred this modification.

SENATOR VANDENBERG said he would prefer to keep the present text and Dean Gildersleeve concurred. The Secretary said he would like to see included the phrase "separate and cooperative action". Mr. Bloom, Dean Gildersleeve and Mr. Stassen expressed approval of this modification.

Senator Connally proposed that the word "international" be omitted before "economic, social, and other humanitarian problems". Senator Connally thought that the term international would arouse opposition in the Senate and would suggest that the Organization had powers that went beyond those of encouraging the solution of problems. Mr. Dulles said he felt that the omission of the word international would create greater anxiety and opposition. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that it was important to make clear that the organization would deal only with international problems and not with domestic questions. He suggested that one might say "should facilitate and encourage cooperative action by all nations for the solution of international, economic, social and other humanitarian problems."

Senator Connally said he still objected to the term "international." Mr. Stassen explained that the term "international" modified the other problems and that the Organization would encourage separate and cooperative action with respect to international problems. The action, in most cases, he added, would be local and domestic action. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that the Organization should deal only with problems of an international character and that considerable discussion had preceded the inclusion of the word "international".

Senator Connally said that the term international definitely suggested that the Organization would have power beyond that of "encouraging separate and cooperative action". Representative Bloom thought that the term international modified the whole document and that any special mention at this point would get us into trouble on the floor of Congress. Dr. Bowman said he thought what the Senator had been getting at was that voluntary cooperation so far as it can go is a good thing and that anything that is imposed is bad.

Mr. Stassen suggested that for the phrases "to facilitate" and "international..." there be substituted "encourage separate and cooperative action by all nations for the settlement of economic, social, humanitarian and other related problems". Mr. Pasvolsky said he thought that the omission of the term international would cause trouble and that further thought should be given to the matter. Dean Gildersleeve said she feared that if any amendment was made in the text of the present Proposals there might be some danger of losing the reference to human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Secretary agreed that each change we proposed created the danger that changes would be asked by other Governments. Mr. Dunn indicated that he felt it was more important to retain the word "international". Senator Connally thought that everything was modified by the term "international".

THE SECRETARY explained that the present text on Page 9 had been arrived at only after great difficulty and that the Soviet Union in particular had come along with much hesitation. To demand any change in this text, he felt, would run the great risk of upsetting the whole applecart. The Secretary asked whether any essential changes were being proposed in this chapter. Senator Connally replied that it was necessary at some point to say no to Mr. Stalin and that this would be a good issue on which to meet him.

The Secretary suggested that the text of Section A 44 be reconsidered in San Francisco and that for the time being it be left as it stands. The Members of the Delegation generally agreed to this proposal. Mr. Stinebower remarked that he did not regard any proposed change in the chapter as essential, except perhaps the phrase "to encourage separate and cooperative action". Mr. Stassen indicated that he would like to indicate his agreement with Senator Connally to omit the term international. The Secretary said he especially favored the phrase "separate and cooperative action" and Dean Gildersleeve concurred.

REVIEW OF DECISIONS TENTATIVELY REACHED FOR SUGGESTIONS ON THE PROPOSALS

THE SECRETARY suggested that each proposed revision in the draft before the Delegation <sup>45</sup> (Chapter I through Chapter VI, VIII, and XII April 16, 1945, yellow paper) should be reviewed to see which changes we would propose and which we would support if other governments proposed them. Senator Connally hoped that, while general agreement might be reached, such agreement should not be considered final and that we should reserve final judgment until the proceedings in San Francisco. The Secretary added that we were obligated to consult with the other sponsoring governments regarding any changes we intended to propose.

Preamble

Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that it was probably not necessary to discuss the Preamble in detail at this time and that the matter might well be deferred for consideration at San Francisco. This procedure was generally agreed to.

Chapter I-Purposes 46

Mr. Pasvolsky noted that Paragraph 4 contained only a verbal change so that the proposal need not be pushed. He added that, at the Chinese stage of the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations, agreement had been reached to sponsor three proposals made by the Chinese Government: 47

"1. The Charter should provide specifically that adjustment or settlement of international disputes should be achieved with due regard for principles of justice and international law.

2. The Assembly should be responsible for initiating studies and making recommendations with respect to the development and revision of the rules and principles of international law.

3. The Economic and Social Council should specifically provide for the promotion of educational and other forms of cultural cooperation."

MR. SANDIFER explained that these proposals had been transmitted to the Governments invited to the San Francisco Conference simply as Chinese proposals. The Secretary noted that the agreement on the Chinese proposals actually constituted a commitment on our part to support them. Copies of the three points as distributed to the sponsoring governments were then presented to the members of the Delegation. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the Chinese proposals were quite in line with our own, and he wondered whether we should then propose the changes in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of Chapter I, or whether we should merely support them. Mr. Stassen said that these three paragraphs were proposing what the Chinese had already suggested. The Secretary thought that we should support these proposals. Mr. Stassen urged that we propose them since they were in fact the work of the Delegation.

Mr. Pasvolsky thought there might be some difficulty with the Soviet Union in transferring mention of human rights and fundamental freedoms to Chapter I, but that he saw no objection to proposing this change. The Secretary then asked whether it was intended to propose paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of Chapter I. The members of the Delegation replied in the affirmative.

Chapter II—Principles 48

Paragraph 1.—It was generally agreed that the change in Paragraph 1 should be proposed.

Paragraph 2.—Mr. Pasvolsky remarked that nothing new was suggested in Paragraph 2 and that the Paragraph added nothing important to the Proposals.

It was agreed that the Paragraph should stand.

Paragraph 3.—Mr. Pasvolsky said that the change in Paragraph 3 was primarily one of clarification. Mr. Stassen thought that the Paragraph raised the question of the rights of states when a veto by a major power prevented action by the Organization. Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that the main purpose of Paragraph 3 was to indicate that a state would violate the principles of the Organization if it used anything but peaceful measures. Mr. Stassen said he would agree to Paragraph 3 with the change that had been worked out previously. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that Paragraph 3 as changed be proposed. This was generally agreed to.

Paragraph 4.—Mr. Stassen said he would not agree to the suggested changes in Paragraph 4 since it would prevent necessary action by Member states when the veto power of the Organization was used arbitrarily. He thought the change made the paragraph more restrictive than before. He said he did not want the principle so restrictive that when the Organization failed to act, states would still be bound by the provisions of the Charter.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that we should examine the situation that would be created if Mr. Stassen's proposal was agreed to. He added that the basic question was whether states assumed obligations not to use force or whether they did not assume them. Mr. Dulles agreed with Mr. Stassen that the proposed change enlarged the scope of the obligations of members. Mr. Stassen indicated that so long as the veto power remained, he would stand against enlarging the scope of the obligations.

THE SECRETARY announced that there would be a meeting of the Delegation in San Francisco not later than Wednesday 49 and that the discussion would continue at that time. Meanwhile he said there remained the job of going through the rest of the documents to discover what proposals we should present and which other ones we should support. Mr. Bloom said he wondered whether it would not be possible to postpone further discussion until arrival at San Francisco. Senator Connally thought discussions should proceed, but that we should not make final decisions before arrival in San Francisco. He said we would want to be free to reconsider our position in the light of the proposals made by other Governments. The Secretary agreed... The Secretary indicated that he wished to discuss with President Truman any fundamental changes that we were going to propose in the position that had been taken by Mr. Roosevelt. Senator Vandenberg and Mr. Bloom remarked that President Truman had said that the Secretary was boss and that the President had left the matter in the Secretary's hands. Senator Vandenberg thought that we should go forward on that basis. The Secretary explained that what he had in mind was the necessity of keeping the President informed. Senator Vandenberg added that in fact there was little departure from President Roosevelt's position.

THE SECRETARY requested that a memorandum be prepared for presentation to the President embodying a statement of the proposed changes in the Dumbarton Oaks document that were agreed to by the Delegation. THE SECRETARY then said that he would have to leave the meeting to go to the White House. [Senator Connally also left at this time.] 49a

Mr. Dulles referring to Paragraph 4, said that this paragraph only underlined his feeling about the whole Chapter on Principles—that the statements in that Chapter were either redundant or involved too sweeping undertakings. He thought that the Chapter had not been carefully drafted and that it ought to be revised to make the commitments more precise and more definite in order that we would not put states in the position of being open to the charge that they had violated their international commitments. It was then generally agreed to defer any decision on Paragraph 4 for consideration at San Francisco.

Paragraph 5.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the change in Paragraph 5 was an important clarification and he thought that the change should be proposed. This was generally agreed to.

Paragraph 6.—Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the change in Paragraph 6 was also one of clarification, but that it was important and should be proposed. Senator Vandenberg asked if there was any objection and none was expressed.

Paragraph 7.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the addition of Paragraph 7 be supported. This was agreed to.

Paragraph 8.—Mr. Pasvolsky said that the addition of Paragraph 8 should be supported. This was agreed to.

Unnumbered Paragraph.—Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that this paragraph had been redrafted in order to emphasize that states not members of the Organization should not interfere with action taken by the Organization rather than that they should take certain types of Mr. Stassen said he preferred the original draft. Senator VANDENBERG indicated that the difficulty with the original draft was that we were imposing obligations on states that had not assumed them. General agreement was reached to defer decision on this paragraph until arrival in San Francisco.

Chapter III—Membership

Paragraphs 2 and 3.50—Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the addition of Paragraphs 2 and 3 be supported since they were not fundamental changes. This was generally agreed to.

Chapter IV—Principal Organs

Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the changes proposed in this Chapter be supported.<sup>51</sup> This was generally agreed to.

Chapter V—The General Assembly 52

Section A. Composition

Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the changes in Section A be supported. This was agreed to.

Section B. Functions and Powers

Paragraph 1.—Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the changes in Paragraph 1 be supported since it was implicit that the General Assembly could formulate general conventions. At Mr. Bloom's suggestion the term "convention" was changed to "treaty". General agreement was expressed to support the changes in Paragraph 1.

Paragraph 2.—Mr. Pasvolsky favored the changes proposed in Paragraph 2. He explained that the point of this paragraph was to assure that the General Assembly could at all times discuss any question bearing on the maintenance of peace and security, and that the limitation of its power to make recommendations concerning matters which will be dealt with by the Security Council should be confined to specific recommendations. Mr. Pasvolsky urged that this matter would need to be discussed with the other sponsoring Governments. General agreement was reached to propose the changes in paragraph 2.

Paragraph 3.—Mr. Pasvolsky favored proposing the changes in Paragraph 3 on the ground that they constituted a basic additional thought. This was agreed to.

Paragraph 4.—Mr. Pasyolsky favored supporting the change in Paragraph 4 on the ground that it was not vitally important. This was agreed to.

<sup>50</sup> For previous discussion of suggestion for the addition of a new paragraph as paragraph 1 and substitution of a new paragraph 2 for the present text, see minutes of meeting of April 10, 10: 15 a. m., p. 227.

Por discussion of chapter V, see minutes of meeting of April 11, 9 a. m., p. 241.

Paragraph 6.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the change in Paragraph 6 be supported. This was agreed to.

Paragraph 7.—Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the reference to the formulation of draft convention be omitted from Paragraph 7 and that the bracket be omitted from the last sentence. With these modifications he favored proposing the changes indicated for Paragraph 7, except that the first sentence should be redrafted to read "The General Assembly should initiate studies and make recommendations for the formulation of draft conventions for submission to states for ratification; for the promotion of international cooperation in political, economic, social and cultural fields and in measures to establish justice; and for the fostering of the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms; and for encouraging the development of rules of international law." Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion was agreed to.

Paragraph 8.—Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the changes in Paragraph 8 be supported. This was agreed to.

Paragraph 9.—Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the changes in Paragraph 9 be supported. This was agreed to.

Paragraph 10.—Mr. Pasvolsky favored supporting the addition of Paragraph 10, for the time being. He pointed out that it might be necessary at a later time in the discussions in San Francisco to bring the matter up. Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion was agreed to.

Mr. Bloom asked how our proposals would be made. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that they would be made first when we went into discussions with the other sponsoring powers. At this time the four Governments would submit their suggestions for changes. As the discussion developed in the work of the main conference, he added, we might bring other of our suggestions forward.

Section C. Voting

Paragraph 2.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the change in Paragraph 2 be supported. Admiral Willson asked whether the reference to trusteeship was to remain. Mr. Pasvolsky said that it would remain but that we would only support the change. This decision was generally agreed to.

Section D. Procedure

Paragraph 1.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the addition to Paragraph 1 be supported. This was generally agreed to.

 $Chapter \, VI-The \, Security \, Council$

Section B. Principal Functions and Powers

Paragraph 2.—Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the change in Paragraph 2 be supported. This was agreed to.

Paragraph 4.—Mr. Pasvolsky favored supporting the change in Paragraph 4. This was agreed to.

Section D. Procedure

Paragraph 2.—Mr. Pasvolsky asked whether the change in Paragraph 2 to take out the phrase referring to regional sub-committees of the Military Staff Committee should be proposed, or whether we should be guided by the discussions at the Conference. General FAIRCHILD and ADMIRAL WILLSON favored proposing this deletion. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that we might have a fight with the British on this point. General agreement was expressed to propose this change.

Chapter VIII—Arrangements for the Maintenance of International Peace and Security Including Prevention and Suppression of Aggression 53

Section A. Pacific Settlement of Disputes

Paragraph 5.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the addition to Paragraph 5 should be proposed. This was agreed to.

Paragraph 7.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that Paragraph 7 be proposed as amended earlier in the discussion that day. This was agreed to.

Section B. Determination of Threats to the Peace or Acts of Aggression and Action with Respect Thereto

Paragraph 1.—Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the change in Paragraph 1 be supported. This was agreed to.

DEFERRED ITEMS

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the review of the present draft was now completed 54 but that meanwhile certain matters of importance had been deferred including a possible withdrawal provision and Chapter IX. He said the question of the seat of the new Organization would also come up. He pointed out that the Delegation had before it a memorandum, that had not been officially approved but which presented the facts concerning the seat of the new Organization. [Report of the Fletcher Committee on the Location of the International Organization, November 1, 1944.] 55

TRUSTEESHIP

Mr. Stassen said that he would like to submit the draft proposal which he had prepared on trusteeship for discussion. The draft reads as follows:

CHAPTER ---

ARRANGEMENTS FOR INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP

Section A.

1. The organization should establish under its authority a system of international trusteeship for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be brought thereunder by subsequent agreement of the states concerned.

2. The Trusteeship system should apply only to such territories in the following categories as may, by trusteeship arrangements, be placed thereunder;

(a) territories now held under mandate;

(b) territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of this war; and

- (c) territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.
- 3. The trusteeship of a particular territory may be established by either;

(a) The execution of a trust arrangement by a member of the organization as trustee and the approval thereof by the Assembly and by the Security Council.

(b) The adoption of a trust arrangement by the Assembly of the organization as trustee and the approval thereof by the Security Council.

4. All changes in any trusteeship arrangement shall be subject to the approval of the Assembly and the Security Council.

5. The basic objectives of the trusteeship system shall be to advance the purposes of the organization as set forth in Chapter One.

6. The Assembly, with the approval of the Security Council, may establish a Trusteeship Council to assist in the administration of the Trusteeship System.

Mr. Stassen said that he felt that the statement in the Charter should not go into detail and that he had accordingly proposed the present draft. He said he did not mean to criticize the work done over a long period of time in the Department and felt that this work could be used. He suggested that the draft be considered that afternoon at the sub-committee dealing with trusteeship.<sup>56</sup>

GENERAL RESOLUTIONS

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE asked whether it was expected that there would be many general resolutions offered in San Francisco. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that an effort was being made to limit the number of gen-

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to the Under Secretary of State (Grew)

[Washington,] April 18, 1945.

Subject: Meeting with the President on Trusteeship.

The Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy and I saw the President today to discuss with him the proposed policy on trusteeship.

I opened the meeting by saying that the Army, Navy, and the Department had been working for many months endeavoring to find a satisfactory solution to the question of trusteeships, maintaining our strategic bases in the Pacific and at the same time not being charged with annexation and expansionist policies. I stated that the papers which I handed to him 58 were the result of much labor and had the endorsement of Secretary Stimson, Secretary Forrestal, and myself.

The President proceeded to read the memorandum very carefully and said he thought it gave him a clear understanding of the subject. He remarked that he had been asked at his last press conference about trusteeship and he wished to have it clear in his mind so that he could handle it properly at his next press conference.

Mr. Forrestal and Mr. Stimson then talked for a few moments. Mr. Stimson reviewed his experience as Governor of the Philippines and Secretary of State and said that it was unthinkable at this time that we give up our bases and our protection in the Pacific. Mr. Forrestal observed that this was a very innocuous statement which he and Secretary Stimson endorsed.

Mr. Truman then approved the statement and handed it back to me.

of a trusteeship system is to be discussed at the Conference at San Francisco.

We have agreed upon the attached policy directive which we have discussed with the United States Delegation to San Francisco and they have approved. We recommend to you that you approve this directive and that it be sent to the Chairman of the American Delegation as a statement of United States policy on this subject.

We wish also your approval of making this United States policy on trusteeship made known publicly at a time and in a manner to be determined by the United States Delegation.

RECOMMENDED POLICY ON TRUSTEESHIP

It is not proposed at San Francisco to determine the placing of any particular territory under a trusteeship system. All that will be discussed there will be the possible machinery of such a system.

The United States Government considers that it would be entirely practicable to devise a trusteeship system which would apply only to such territories in the following categories as may, by trusteeship arrangements, be placed thereunder, namely: (a) territories now held under mandate; (b) territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of this war; and (c) territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration. It shall be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which of the specific territories within the foregoing categories shall be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

This system would provide, by agreements, for (1) the maintenance of United States military and strategic rights, (2) such control as will be necessary to assure general peace and security in the Pacific Ocean area as well as elsewhere in the world, and (3) the advancement of the social, economic, and political welfare of the inhabitants of the dependent territories.

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, April 18, 1945—4 p. m. [Received April 18—3:40 p. m.]

1234. Text of Molotov's note of March 31 to Ambassador Harriman reads in translation as follows (re Department's 898, April 17, 7 p. m.):

"I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of March 24 59a concerning the presence at the San Francisco Conference of non-official representatives of the inter-governmental organizations listed in your letter. I have the honor herewith to inform you that the Soviet Government does not object to the presence of non-official representatives of the above-mentioned inter-governmental organizations at the San Francisco Conference. The Soviet Government notes the statement of the State Department of the United States of America to the effect that these organizations are regarded by it as among those which should be liquidated or modified as a result of the creation of the International Security Organization or which will be officially or non-officially brought into relationship with this organization.

"The Soviet Government also agrees with the opinion of the American Government that non-governmental international organizations should not be invited to the San Francisco Conference.

Please, Mr. Ambassador, et cetera."

We will endeavor to discuss this question with the Foreign Office this afternoon and to have Mr. Gromyko's instructions changed.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State

[Washington,] April 18, 1945.

Participants: Ambassador Gromyko

Mr. Hiss

Mr. Raynor

Mr. Bohlen Mr. Thompson

Mr. Thompson

Mr. Stettinius

The Soviet Ambassador called upon me this afternoon at his request. He stated that he had just been through the Blair-Lee House, had found it most attractive and that the only change he would suggest was that an office be made in a room adjoining Mr. Molotov's bedroom for his convenience.

He then stated that he had instructions from his Government to take up three items:

1. That it was impossible for his Government to agree on the names of Commissions and Committees at the San Francisco Conference as proposed by our Government because of the failure to reach agreement on the Chairmanship of these Committees and Commissions and agreement on the matter of the participation of Ukraine and Byelorussia (White Russia).

2. That originally it had been proposed by the United States Government that no observers be admitted at the San Francisco Conference who were not members of the United Nations; that this decision, his Government feels, covers the question of the nationality of representation from the other international organizations who have in their groups members who are not citizens of the United Nations attending the Conference. He mentioned in particular Mr. Lester, an Irishman of Aragon, who was on the United Nations list.

3. The Ambassador stated that it was the desire of his Government that this Government and the other sponsors agree that no proposals be accepted by any individuals; that only proposals for amendment to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals be accepted from individual members of the Delegation. To clarify the matter, I said you mean that if Mexico has an amendment to offer, they are to offer it through their Delegation and you think it not proper to hear from a member of the Delegation as you might not be sure that he was speaking for the Delegation. He said that covered it precisely. I said the United States was in full agreement with that position.

I asked the Ambassador when he expects Mr. Molotov to arrive. He stated he knew less than I did and he would appreciate being kept informed. I said that we would keep him informed and that Mr. Thompson would undertake the responsibility of advising the Embassy in advance of the arrival time and place of arrival in order that the Ambassador and members of the staff who might wish to do so might meet Mr. Molotov.

500.CC/4-1945

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to President Truman

[Washington,] April 19, 1945.

Subject: Charter for the International Organization.

The American Delegation to the United Nations Conference on International Organization is unanimously agreed that we should propose a few alterations in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals during the San Francisco Conference.<sup>60</sup> We will reserve our final positions

The proposed amendments outlined in this memorandum were based on a paper entitled "Tentative U.S. Revisions of the Proposals", which had been discussed by the delegation paragraph by paragraph, and on the resultant memorandum, "Substantive Decisions on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals Reached on April 18 by the American Delegation [On basis of draft, April 16, 1945 (yellow paper)]", neither printed (U.S. Doc. Und. 1 and U.S. Del. 65/G-35).

on all of these, of course, until we learn the views of other governments. I am listing below for your information the most important points involved:

PURPOSES 61

- 1. Inclusion of a statement that the organization should act in accordance with the principles of justice and equity in adjusting or settling disputes, and that the organization should foster the development of international law.
- 2. Inclusion of a statement on the promotion of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms (in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals this is stated in the chapter on economic and social cooperation only).

PRINCIPLES 62

- 1. Change the expression "sovereign equality of peace-loving states" to "the sovereign equality of all member states".
- 2. Make clearer that members must refrain from using any but peaceful means in settling their disputes and must use such means pursuant to the provisions of the Charter.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY 63

- 1. Clarify to show that the General Assembly can at all times discuss any question bearing on the maintenance of peace and security, and that the limitation on its power to make recommendations concerning matters which are being dealt with by the Security Council should be confined to specific recommendations.
- 2. Give the General Assembly power to determine the qualifications of membership, and to admit new members by its own action unless the Security Council interposes objections for reasons of security.
- 3. Apportionment by the General Assembly of expenses among the members should be on the basis of an appropriate pro-ration.
- 4. Add to recommendatory powers, so can make recommendations relative to the promotion of measures to establish justice, to foster the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to encourage the development of rules of international law.
- 5. Extend power to recommend measures for peaceful adjustment to include situations likely to violate the principles enunciated in the Atlantic Charter and situations arising out of any treaties or international engagements.

Chapter II (1 and 3).

Chapter V, section B (2, 3, 6, and 7).

THE SECURITY COUNCIL 64

1. Eliminate provision that regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee can be established.

MAINTENANCE OF PEACE AND SECURITY 65

1. Propose that the exclusion from the scope of the Security Council in peaceful settlement of matters within the domestic jurisdiction of a state should be stated without the present qualification that those matters must be ones which "by international law" are "solely" within domestic jurisdiction.

AMENDMENTS 66

We should hold to the present proposals, but serious consideration is being given to proposing or supporting a possible additional provision to the following effect:

"A general conference of the members of the United Nations may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council, for the purpose of reviewing the Charter. Each member shall have one vote in the Conference. Any alterations of the Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the Conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by the members of the organization having permanent membership on the Security Council and by a majority of the other members of the Organization."

QUESTIONS DEFERRED

We have been considering, but have deferred, making decisions on the following questions:

1. Wording of the Preamble.

2. Defining the right of self-defense.

3. Possible changes in the wording in the chapter on economic and social cooperation.

4. Possible withdrawal provision.

United States Economic Commission and Mexican Delegate to the United Nations Conference on International Organization

Lic. Luciano Wichers, (Adviser to the Mexican Delegation)

Lic. Alfonso García Robles, Minister Counselor, Mexican Foreign Office (Secretary General, Mexican Delegation to UNCIO)

Mr. Leo Pasvolsky, Adviser American Delegation Mr. W. K. Ailshie, American Embassy, Mexico City, D.F.

I lunched today on the train with Dr. Padilla and the following members of the Mexican Delegation: Sr. Manuel Tello, Licenciado Primo Villa Michell, Licenciado Luciano Wichers, Licenciado Alfonso García Robles. In the course of the luncheon and during the conversation which followed, Dr. Padilla and his associates described the following four modifications in the Dumbarton Oaks draft which, in their opinion, they believe are the most important:

- 1. Dr. Padilla said that he was very anxious that the final Charter should reflect a spiritual note, as well as, the realities of power. He spoke of the great forces of ideas and ideals which, in his opinion, would do much toward building the kind of system of international relations that we all favor. He said that for this reason the Mexican Delegation was very eager to have incorporated in the Charter something approaching a statement of the basic rights and obligations of individuals and nations. As he and his associates explained, later on, they would like to see the Act of Mexico City (Resolution #30 of the Mexico City Conference 69 or as much of it as would be advisable, stated in the form of a preamble to the Charter.
- 2. There should be a stronger emphasis on international law and the basis of law in international relations. They were not clear as to how they would like to see this point explained in the Charter.
- 3. Their next point related to the designation of permanent members on the Security Council. They said that they recognized fully the need of placing the militarily powerful nations in a special category. However, they would like to see a democratization of the procedure for the selection of the Security Council, in such a way that the whole membership would be elected by the Assembly, but with an understanding that the five great powers would always have seats on the Council.
- 4. Their most important point related to the security functions and powers of the General Assembly. They explained that they did not wish to see the powers of the Security Council, as now projected, disturbed in any way, but that they would also like to increase the powers of the General Assembly.

On this last point, Tello described their ideas as follows: They are perfectly willing to leave undisturbed the procedures set forth in Section B, Chapter 8, but they would like to give the General Assembly the power to review the important acts decided upon by the Security Council as well as of the Security Council to act. They would like to have the Assembly make recommendations which would require action by the Security Council if two-thirds of the Assembly, including all the members of the Council would support such a recommendation. In the event that a difference of view then developed between the Assembly and the Security Council a joint commission of the two positions would then be set up to reconcile the differences.

In an informal discussion of the four proposals that followed, I pointed out that while the particulars of their proposals will, of course, be a matter of discussion at the Conference, our experience arising from our discussions with other Governments would lead me to make the following comments on their four major points:

- 1. It would be extremely difficult to incorporate in the Charter anything approaching a full statement of a bill of rights. They said that they would be satisfied with even a limited statement provided it contained the most basic points.
- 2. On the subject of international law, I called their attention to the fact that an international organization, if it were to be established at this time primarily on the rule of law, would have a very narrow basis on which to operate. Since there is not enough recognition of international law to provide such a basis there must, therefore, be ample scope for political action and for the extension and development of international law. The problem of intervention was raised in this connection and we all agreed that under the system that is being projected, intervention by a single nation in the affairs of another nation would be forbidden, but intervention by the community of nations for the purpose of maintaining international law and order would not only be proper but necessary.
- 3. On the question of the membership on the Security Council, I asked them whether or not their desire was already met by the fact that the five permanent members would be designated by the San Francisco Conference which will, in effect, be a constitutional conference of the general organization. I pointed out that, after all, the participants would be sovereign states each of which would have the choice of accepting or not accepting membership in the organization. Their proposals would only postpone to a future meeting or meetings of the Assembly the selection of the permanent members and the Assembly would be no more representative than the San Francisco Conference. They then said that their desire would be satisfied if it were possible to say in the Charter that the nations assembled at San Francisco agreed on the designation of the five great powers as permanent members on the Security Council in view of their special position of influence and power. I said, that point could certainly be given attention.

4. On their last and most important point I raised the question as to whether, under the system which they proposed, the Assembly would have the power to over-rule the Security Council. At this juncture it became quite apparent that the group was not united on the subject. I pointed out that if there were to be two interpretations, then we would be confronted with a far-reaching analysis of the whole basis on which the Dumbarton Oaks proposals rests.

Tello took the position that what they had in mind was precisely the power of the Assembly to initiate or prevent action in those cases on which a grave emergency existed, although they were even more interested in forcing the Council to act in the event that the future power exercised by one of the permanent members would make action impossible.

On the other hand, Dr. Padilla said that in his thinking no action of the Assembly would interfere with action by the Council, but he was interested in providing for an expression of the conscience of the world and in this way to put pressure on the permanent members of the Council so as to dissuade them from using their veto power willfully. He also said that while the ideas developed by the Mexican Delegation were along the lines indicated by Señor Tello, what I said about the uselessness of a joint commission had convinced him that the proposed modification should be abandoned.

I said that, as the Dumbarton Oaks proposals stand, the Assembly already has the power to do everything that Dr. Padilla indicates, although it has not, in my opinion, and should not have the power implied in Señor Tello's statement. Nor could I see any usefulness in an Assembly procedure which would give a special position to the members of the Council and even to the permanent members of the Council. I said that we had carefully avoided any differentiation in the membership in the organization, except in those matters in which responsibility for it goes with the capacity to exercise it. We left the subject at that point.

Dr. Padilla spoke in very enthusiastic terms about the projected Economic and Social Council, and said that he attributed a very great importance to the types of activities which such a Council would be able to set into motion, and which in his judgment, were indispensable as a foundation for the maintenance of peace. I agreed with him fully, adding, however, that the one thing that we must constantly bear in mind is that economic progress and social betterment would be impossible unless there exists a reasonable assumption that the peace of the world will be maintained. Without confidence in such an assumption it would be impossible for economic enterprise and social reform to go forward.

After the luncheon García Robles walked with me to my car and on the way we had a further conversation on the fourth point. I asked him point-blank as to how I should interpret the discussion regarding the two views of the power of the Assembly in the maintenance of security. He said that his delegation was extremely apprehensive of the possibility that because of the exercise of veto power by the permanent members, the Security Council would be completely stalemated when there would be need for it to take action against one of the permanent members. I asked him to bear in mind the point that the Dumbarton Oaks proposals were based on the proposition that coercion of a great power would mean war and that if such a need arose and the procedures for adjustment were found to be inadequate to take care of it, the only possible outcome would be the breakdown of the organization. I said that we must recognize frankly that although it may become possible at some future stage to have a system that would be universally applicable, in our judgment that is an impossibility today.

On the other hand, if we were to attempt to provide some mechanism by which recognition of a larger power would be provided for in one form or another within the framework of the organization, the only consequence would be that we would end up with the same system which we had under the League of Nations, namely, further freedom of action by each of the great powers, no pledge of responsibility for combined action, and the employment of military force left entirely to the discretion of each member state.

García Robles said that he would pass these ideas along to his associates, but that he would like to think about the danger which I had indicated, and which had not occurred to them. He said that it was quite apparent after the discussion that a great deal more thinking needs to be done on the whole subject, although he was sure that Dr. Padilla intended to raise the question. I said that I hoped that if the question is raised, it would be along the lines of his statement to me at the luncheon, because to raise it in the form in which Señor Tello stated it would certainly create very great difficulties.

In the course of the luncheon a question arose as to the possible duration of the Conference. Dr. Padilla expressed the view that with goodwill and a reasonable amount of effort the Conference could be concluded by May 15. An observation was made that there were a good many issues involved, including particularly the amount of stubbornness shown by the various delegations.

In connection with both the possibility of a bill of rights and the duration of the Conference Dr. Padilla expressed the view that we might well find ourselves confronted by a cleavage of the East and the West. He said that that was one of the reasons we ought to concentrate on a charter of basic obligations which could be accepted by both the East and the West.

Dr. Padilla also asked me what I thought the French attitude would be. He said that he was rather disturbed by the statements which have been made by Bidault and other members of the French Government. What interested him most was whether or not France really intended to operate outside the organization in matters of security. I said that it is not as yet clear what general attitude the French were going to assume, but it was apparent that they would attempt to argue in favor of special arrangements. In that case, I said that it would be the same question that confronted us in our Inter-American discussions. Dr. Padilla said that as far as Mexico was concerned, it was perfectly clear that in matters of security the world organization must hold a controlling position, because otherwise the whole question of world peace and security would be completely undermined.

On the question of the two Soviet Republics, Dr. Padilla expressed the view that their addition to membership might not be a serious matter from the point of view of Russia's position in the voting by the Assembly, but that there was an important question of principle involved, regarding the qualification for membership in the organization. He suggested that even without the two representatives Soviet Russia might have as many as eight votes which would be favorable to her. I did not press Dr. Padilla for his views as to what he would do if the Soviet delegation were to raise the question of the two Republics, and he did not volunteer any statement on that subject.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, April 23, 1945-1 p. m.

3192. At the Yalta Conference consideration was specifically given on President Roosevelt's initiative to the question as to whether Denmark should be represented at UNCIO by an observer <sup>70</sup> (Embassy's No. 3647, April 10, 6 p. m.<sup>71</sup>). Because of British and Soviet objection this was decided in the negative. It was further decided that only the United Nations should be represented and that no provision should be made for observers from any other state. In view of these decisions and in the absence any proposal from the other sponsoring governments that it be reversed, we do not intend to transmit the request of the Freedom Council or otherwise to raise the issue during the conversations here with Eden, Molotov, and Soong.

Mr. Kauffmann <sup>72</sup> has already been informed that President Roosevelt suggested at Yalta that Denmark should be represented at UNCIO, as at previous United Nations Conferences, by an observer, but was opposed by Churchill with the concurrence of Stalin. We have pointed out to him that the decision concerning invitations was taken by all four sponsoring governments and that the United States as host Government issued the invitation on behalf of all four sponsors. Since any change in this policy would obviously have to be made by all four sponsoring governments, responsibility in this matter does not rest, as the Foreign Office erroneously informed you, with this Government alone.

Please convey this information to the Foreign Office. This message is being repeated to Stockholm as No. 731.

Thenrik de Kauffmann, Danish Minister in the United States, was informed by Acting Secretary Grew, in a letter of March 6, that "no observers from countries which are not adherents to the United Nations Declaration will be invited to the Conference". He was subsequently informed by Mr. Grew that exclusion of Denmark was not based on a decision of the American Government but on an agreement reached at the Yalta Conference (500.CC/3-545).

[Washington,] April 23, 1945.

Subject: The Conference of the Committee of Jurists.

As proposed at Dumbarton Oaks and confirmed at Yalta, a Committee of Jurists, representative of 44 nations, met in Washington from April 9 thru 20 to develop recommendations to present to the San Francisco Conference on the statute of the new Court.<sup>73</sup>

The Committee took as a basis for its work the present statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and made many changes, the more important of which are listed below.

Briefly the court should be composed of fifteen judges, as is the present court; the judges to hold office for nine-year periods, one-third retiring every three years.

It is to have jurisdiction over such cases as parties to the statute may agree to present to it. There is a strong feeling on the part of some of the representatives at the meeting of the Committee of Jurists that the Court should have compulsory jurisdiction (that any government should have the right to bring a case before the Court against any other government without the necessity for special agreements). This would constitute a departure from the present statute under which it is made optional with the parties to the statute of the Court to accept compulsory jurisdiction generally or on the basis of reciprocity. This was left for decision at San Francisco.

The provisions in the statute authorizing the Assembly and the Council of the League of Nations to call upon the Court for advisory opinions has been retained as was contemplated by the Dumbarton Oaks Proposal, substituting the General Assembly and the Security Council of the new organization for the comparable bodies of the League.

There was a wide difference of view in the Committee on the question of the nomination of the judges. At present the nominations are made by the representatives of the various countries on the panel of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague under a convention of 1907 <sup>74</sup> and by similar groups set up for that purpose by countries that are not parties to The Hague convention. There was considerable support in the Committee for having these nominations made directly by the respective governments. This question remains open for discussion in San Francisco.

The Committee suggested the incorporation in the statute of an article designed to facilitate future amendments.

I am happy to say that the jurists demonstrated throughout their work a spirit of earnestness and complete cooperation.

Minutes of the First Four-Power Preliminary Meeting on Questions of Organization and Admission, Held at Washington, Monday, April 23, 1945, 9:35 p. m. 75

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of participants, including members of the Delegations of the United States (3); United Kingdom (2); China (1); and the Soviet Union (2).]

Mr. Stettinius stated that there were some questions regarding San Francisco which he felt should be discussed with Dr. Soong who had postponed his flight to San Francisco in order to be here.

Mr. Molorov stated that he had one question, which involved the Crimean decisions, which he desired to discuss before Dr. Soong joined the group. He then referred to the question of the admission of the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics as initial members of the world organization.

Mr. Stettinius replied that the United States' position had recently been made clear to Ambassador Gromyko. He then asserted that the United States would vote in favor of the inclusion of these two Republics in the world organization but that this is a matter which the Conference itself would have to decide.

Mr. Molorov stated that since the Crimean Conference there had taken place a conference of Inter-American countries as well as a conference of the British Dominions. He then remarked that since the British and American Governments at these two conferences had undoubtedly discussed the Crimean decision regarding these two Republics and that since they had undoubtedly indicated their desire to vote in favor of the inclusion of the Republics in the world organization, he was sure that the Crimean decision on this question would be carried out not just in form but in substance. He added that he felt sure of this since if this was not the case, he was certain that the Soviet Government would have received information from the British and American Governments as to any doubts regarding this matter.

This was the first of a series of so-called "Big Four" consultations which were held April 23 through May 4, 1945. The first six preliminary meetings (April 23, 25, 27, 28, 30, and May 1) concerned principally questions of organization and admission of States to the Conference; discussion at dinner on May 1 marked the transition to substantive consideration of the Charter proposals. The remaining five consultative meetings (May 2-4) were concerned exclusively with the Charter proposals.

Mr. Stettinius replied that the United States Government would carry out the commitment made by President Roosevelt at the Crimea to support this proposal and vote for it at the Conference.

Mr. Molorov asked whether the United States and British Governments were aware of the opinions held by Latin American countries and the Dominions in regard to this matter. He added that he understood that certain of the Dominions supported this question but was certain that Mr. Eden had full information on this subject.

Mr. Eden replied that Great Britain would carry out its pledged word to vote in favor of the inclusion of the Republics but added that he could not answer for the Dominions or the Conference itself.

Mr. Molorov remarked that he was bound to say that from a moral point of view he felt that the countries who had made this decision at the Crimea should exert every effort to see that other countries voted favorably for this proposal.

Mr. Eden asked Mr. Stettinius if he could control Latin American votes.

Mr. Stettinius replied in the negative.

MR. EDEN added that he could not control the Dominion votes.

Mr. Molotov stated that he could control no votes either.

Mr. Eden replied that it was therefore clear that all three countries were in the same position.

Mr. Stettinius stated that he had been instructed by the President to carry out the pledge made by President Roosevelt in regard to this question.

Mr. Eden added that the British Government would do likewise and it [had?] so informed the Dominion governments.

Mr. Molorov stated that if we cannot clarify this question further he wished to ask another; namely, do the United States and Great Britain agree that the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics should take part in the Conference if the Conference agrees?

Mr. Stettinius reminded Mr. Molotov that at the Crimea the only pledge taken was that we would vote in favor of making these two Republics initial members of the Assembly and that at Yalta the question of these Republics taking part in the Conference was not raised.

Mr. Molorov replied that since it was agreed that the Republics should be initial members of the Assembly, that meant that as initial members they would also take part in the Conference.

Mr. Stettinius replied that this was not our understanding since this is a Conference of United Nations to set up a world organization, and that we have only undertaken to vote in favor of making these two Republics initial members of the Assembly when the organization is set up.

Mr. Molotov stated that he agreed but expected that the United States and Great Britain will see that these Republics are made initial members of the organization.

Mr. Sterring replied in the negative, stating that this was a matter for the Conference to decide.

Mr. Molorov stated that the Soviet Government would form its own judgment as to how well we can carry out joint agreements by the success that is achieved in electing these two Republics as initial members of the world organization.

Mr. Eden replied that the favorable votes of Great Britain and the United States were assured but that he could not speak for the other forty-four countries.

Mr. Molotov stated that this was all he had to say in regard to this question.

(Dr. Soong joined the group for further discussions.)

Mr. Stettinius declared the first meeting of the four Foreign Ministers to be open and suggested that they discuss procedural matters regarding the San Francisco Conference. He then stated that Mr. Alger Hiss, the temporary Secretary General of the Conference, would point out the procedural questions which remained unsettled.

Mr. Hiss pointed out that there were still a few problems which the British, Chinese and Soviet Ambassadors and the Secretary of State had not yet been able to settle. He then stated that the first question involved the organization of the commissions and committees of the Conference.

Mr. Molorov replied that he felt the first question to be discussed was that of the chairmanship of the Conference. He then asked whether it had been decided to apply the principle of equality between the four sponsoring powers. He then remarked that it was his hope that since the question of equality had been held to in regard to the invitations to the Conference, he felt that the same principle should apply to the proceedings of the Conference. He then stated that the Soviet Government claimed no special privileges and he was sure that none of the other sponsoring powers desired any special privileges. He then suggested that the chiefs of the delegations of the four sponsoring powers be elected chairman to act in rotation, and added that he felt it would also be advisable to elect four vice-chairmen from other countries and thus set the tone of the Conference on a basis of equality.

Mr. Stettinius replied that as far as the United States Government is concerned we did not desire any special privileges but that the question of the chairmanship had been given most careful consideration and it was felt that it would be necessary to fix responsibility and thus avoid confusion by electing one officer to preside over the Conference. He remarked that it would undoubtedly cause difficulties if the principle of rotating chairmanship should be adopted; confusion might arise when one chairman succeeded another. He remarked that this entire question had been reviewed in detail by both President Roosevelt and President Truman, and that they both agreed that it was desirable to have one presiding officer who would have full authority.

Mr. Molotov stated that he had explained the position of the Soviet Government.

Mr. Eden remarked that it was really a matter of procedure and a question of efficiency. He reminded Mr. Molotov that at the Moscow Conference, which had been a very great success, Mr. Molotov as host had been elected chairman of the Conference, and therefore he felt that the same principle should apply in this case and that the Foreign Minister of the country in which the Conference was held should be elected chairman.

Mr. Molorov replied that at the Moscow Conference he had suggested that there be three chairmen, and although this proposal had not been accepted he felt that in order to preserve the question of equality four chairmen should be elected to preside over the San Francisco Conference.

Dr. Soong stated that he believed it was a question of efficiency and for this reason he felt that one chairman should be elected. He added that as regards the question of equality anyone may be elected chairman, but he felt that whoever is elected should remain chairman throughout the entire Conference.

Mr. Stettinius stated that Mr. Hiss had studied this question carefully and perhaps he could clarify certain points regarding this matter.

Mr. Hiss replied that there was little he could add to what had already been stated but that he could review what Mr. Gromyko and the others had said in regard to this, when it was discussed a short time ago.

Mr. Molotov stated that he was familiar with these discussions. Mr. Stettinius asked whether it was believed advisable to throw this question into the whole Conference.

Mr. Molorov asked why it should not be decided by the Conference as a whole.

Mr. Stettinius replied that he had no objection to this but it would involve discussion with at least the forty-six delegates on the Steering Committee.

Mr. Molotov replied that he felt that this was a very important question and that therefore he felt that the other governments should have an opportunity to decide the matter. He then thanked Mr. Stettinius for all the work he had done in arranging for the Conference and assured him that whoever was elected chairman would receive the full support of the Soviet delegation.

Mr. Stettinius thanked Mr. Molotov for his comments on the arrangements which had already been made and stated again that his Government had given careful consideration to this entire question and felt that in point of view of efficiency only one chairman should be elected.

Mr. Molorov replied that he had no doubts as to the efficiency of four chairmen and felt that in order to preserve the question of equality four chairmen should be elected.

Mr. Stettinius asserted that as far as the United States Government was concerned, it made no difference who was elected chairman but it felt that one person should preside during the entire Conference.

Mr. Molorov asked permission of the other Foreign Ministers to maintain the position of the Soviet Government he had already expressed.

Mr. Stettinius agreed.

Mr. Molorov stated that he would like to see the Conference conducted by the four sponsoring governments on a friendly basis and on a basis of equality.

Mr. Stettinius asked whether Mr. Molotov desired that the chairman change every day or every week, or what he had in mind in regard to this question.

Mr. Molorov replied that this was a very simple question which could be worked out easily.

Mr. Eden stated that the Conference would be called upon to vote on this question.

Mr. Stettinius asked Dr. Soong whether there was anything else to do on this matter except to put it up for decision to the Steering Committee.

(It was agreed that this procedure should be followed.)

Mr. Hiss then brought up the question of the structure of the Conference itself as regards the commissions and the committees.

Mr. Molorov asked why it would not be possible to reach agreement in regard to the Steering Committee and the Executive Committee, and asked who would be on the Steering Committee and who would be on the Executive Committee.

Mr. Stettinius stated that the Steering Committee would be devoted to the forty-six chairmen of the delegations, and added that in regard to the Executive Committee Mr. Hiss had suggested that it be composed of eleven members.

Mr. Molorov agreed to the proposal regarding the Steering Committee but asked whether representatives of the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics would be on the Steering Committee if they were admitted to the Conference.

Mr. Stettinius replied that if any country is admitted to the Conference, of course the chairman of its delegation would be on the Steering Committee.

Mr. Hiss stated that when the Ambassadors and the Secretary had discussed the question of the Executive Committee <sup>77</sup> they had generally agreed that there should be eleven members: the five permanent members of the Council, that is, the four sponsoring powers and France, and that in addition the United States representatives had suggested that Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Iran, the Netherlands and Mexico be represented on the Executive Committee. He added that there had been another suggestion made by the British and one by the Soviet Government, and therefore he felt that it might be advisable at this moment for each of the Foreign Ministers to express his ideas on this subject.

Mr. Molorov then suggested that Yugoslavia be substituted for Holland on the Committee since the government of Holland was now in the process of being reorganized while the Yugoslav government has already been reorganized and the Yugoslav people, who have contributed so much to the war, deserve a place on this Committee.

Mr. Stettinius stated that this matter had been discussed at the last meeting with the three Ambassadors.<sup>78</sup>

Mr. Gromyko stated that he had put up the question of substituting Yugoslavia for Holland but that so far he had not received an answer from the other representatives.

Mr. Eden stated that it was his understanding that the American proposal as to the composition of the Executive Committee had been based upon the desirability of having various geographical units represented on the Committee, and that since Holland was a small Western European power and Czechoslovakia was a small Central European power he did not feel that you could leave Holland off. He added that if the Soviet Government felt that Yugoslavia was a better representative than Czechoslovakia, he had no objection to substituting Yugoslavia for Czechoslovakia.

 $^{\rm ff}$  See minutes of the second meeting of the Informal Organizing Group, April 10, 3 p. m., p. 235.

Mr. Molorov stated that it would be unjust to exclude Czechoslovakia since the Red Armies as well as the Armies of Great Britain and the United States were at this moment in the process of liberating that country.

Mr. Eden reminded Mr. Molotov that the British Army was in the process of liberating Holland, and then asked whether there was any fixed magic in the number 11.

Mr. Molotov remarked that he felt 11 was a good number.

Mr. Eden stated that, as Mr. Stettinius knew, Australia had asked whether it might not be possible for it to be represented on the Executive Committee since there were no countries representing the Southwest Pacific area. He added that he felt full consideration should be given to this since Australia had played a very prominent part in the war, and asked whether it was necessary to limit the membership of the Committee to eleven.

Mr. Stettinius replied that as far as he was concerned there was no magic in the number 11, and he felt that the Australian request should be given careful consideration.

Mr. Molotov asked whether it had been agreed that Yugoslavia should be on the Committee.

Mr. Stettinius replied in the negative and pointed out that to have both Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia on the Committee would throw off the geographical balance which had been used in selecting members of the Committee.

Mr. Molotov remarked that the Balkan countries were not represented on the Committee.

Mr. Eden asked whether it would be agreeable to include both Yugo-slavia and Australia on the Committee as well as the four chairmen of the commissions of the Conference.

Mr. Stettinius asked whether there was any objection to that suggestion and pointed out that the chairmen of the commissions would in all probability be South Africa, Belgium, Norway and either Chile or Venezuela.

Mr. Molorov stated that if the Committee was enlarged to seventeen it would be composed of almost half the countries represented at the Conference.

Mr. Stettinius stated that seventeen was a good deal less than half of the number of countries represented at the Conference.

Mr. Eden pointed out that if the four chairmen of the commissions were placed on the Executive Committee they were not to act for their countries but act as representatives of the commissions.

Mr. Stettinius again asked whether it was agreeable to have an Executive Committee of seventeen as suggested.

Mr. Eden agreed.

Mr. Molorov then suggested that we should limit the number to twelve.

Mr. Eden suggested fourteen since thirteen would be an unlucky number.

Mr. Molotov asked who would be the additional members.

Mr. Stettinius suggested Yugoslavia, Australia and Chile.

Mr. Molotov agreed.

Mr. Hiss then brought up the question of the four commissions and four committees.

Mr. Molorov stated that he agreed to the proposals on this point but added that he hoped that the organizers of the Conference had borne in mind that places should be held on the committees for the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics. He was certain that all three governments including China desired to have the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics admitted to the Conference, and that once admitted they would have appropriate seats on the commissions and committees.

Mr. Eden stated that of course such would be the case and pointed out that with the enlargement of the Executive Committee there would be vacant seats on some of the commissions and committees.

Mr. Molorov again stated that he wished to press this question and hoped that China would agree with the British, American and Soviet Governments that these two Republics should be elected to the Conference.

Mr. Stettinius reminded Mr. Molotov that this depended on whether the Conference elected to admit these two Republics.

Mr. Eden remarked that we all are agreed that anyone who is elected to attend the Conference would have to work.

Mr. Molorov remarked that he would not forget this.

Mr. Stettinius assured Mr. Molotov that if the Conference elects to have the White Russian and Ukrainian Republics placed at the Conference, he will see to it that they get places on appropriate committees.

Mr. Hiss then brought up the question of official languages.

Mr. Stettinius moved that Chinese, French, English, Russian and Spanish be accepted as the official languages.

Mr. Hiss remarked that it was the feeling of the American delegation that it would be most practicable to have English as the working language but of course the others would also be the official languages, and stated that all statements would be translated into English and not into the other languages unless a special request was received to make such translation. He added that as regards documents, arrangements have been made so that any document may be translated into any language but the Secretariat hoped that this request would be used sparingly because of the time element involved in making such translations.

Mr. Molotov stated that in order to aid the Russian delegation in its work he desired that all documents be translated into Russian since Russian was one of the official languages.

Mr. Hiss pointed out that it had so far proved impossible to find a printing establishment in San Francisco that could handle the Cyrillic alphabet but that arrangements had been made so that documents in Russian could be mimeographed.

Mr. Molorov stated that he did not care whether it was printed or mimeographed so long as it was translated into Russian, and added that he was sure that American facilities would ensure that a good job was done.

Mr. Hiss stated that he would discuss this question further in San Francisco.

Mr. Stettinius added that we will do everything in our power to ensure that the documents were printed in Russian.

Mr. Molotov again expressed the desire to have all documents printed in Russian since it is one of the official languages.

Mr. Stettinius stated that investigations are being made in San Francisco to find out if it might not be possible to print the documents instead of having to mimeograph them.

Mr. Hiss stated that the next question concerned the matter of inviting unofficial international organizations to attend the Conference as observers or advisers. He added that a question had arisen as to whether nationals of non-United Nations could be admitted as observers or advisers to the Conference. He pointed out that this question had not been raised until March 31 79 when it was raised by the Soviet Government and that in the meantime invitations had been sent informally to various of these organizations and that some of the unofficial observers were not citizens of one of the United Nations.

Mr. Molotov remarked that he felt that it should have been clearly understood that only citizens of one of the United Nations could be invited to the Conference.

Mr. Eden pointed out that these individuals would attend not as nationals of their own countries but as representatives of the unofficial organizations, and therefore he did not think the question very important.

Mr. Molorov agreed that the question was not too important, but he felt that it was logical that only citizens of a United Nations should be invited. He pointed out that while the Soviet Union is not a member of the League of Nations or the International Labor Organization it had not objected to these organizations being represented, but he thought that the individuals representing such organizations should be citizens of a United Nation.

Mr. Eden stated that he did not think that Mr. Molotov could accuse him of pushing to have an Irishman represent one of these organizations.

Mr. Molorov said that he did not, of course, think that, but he was just expressing the opinion of his Government.

Mr. Stettinius pointed out that it would not be necessary for the official delegates to see or talk with any of these individuals, who in reality would only have "tickets to the balcony".

Dr. Soong agreed that it was a minor question.

Mr. Eden said that he was willing to have neutrals invited and asked whether Mr. Molotov agreed.

Mr. Molorov stated that he wished to maintain the position of the Soviet Government.

Mr. Hiss stated that Sydney Hillman had asked the Department whether it would be possible to have a representative of the International Labor Organization accredited as an adviser to the Conference. He added that all the sponsoring powers except the Soviet Union were against this proposal since this would mean that the International Labor Organization would have a different position than the other unofficial international organizations.

Mr. Molotov stated that the presence of any of these people in San Francisco would not interfere with the Conference.

Mr. Eden observed that representatives of this organization could not be invited as advisers since the organization was not a government and therefore it could not be an adviser to a government.

Mr. Molotov then suggested that they should be invited as observers.

Mr. Stettinius pointed out that Mr. Hillman did not want this, and added that many other organizations had been invited as observers but that the International Labor Organization wished to be accredited as official adviser.

Mr. Molotov stated that he hoped an agreement would be reached to permit this organization to participate.

Mr. Stettinius pointed out that the organization was not a governmental body.

Mr. Molorov then suggested that it might be advisable to make an exception for this organization and did not think it would be right to refuse this request.

Mr. Eden pointed out that if we accepted this request we would have to accept the many similar requests from other organizations.

Mr. Dunn pointed out that we had had requests from about eighty-five similar organizations.

Mr. Eden stated that the British Government had requests from approximately forty such organizations.

Mr. Hiss replying to Mr. Molotov's suggestion that this be left up to the Steering Committee pointed out that invitations to the Conference were issued by the sponsoring powers and not by the Steering Committee.

Mr. Molotov remarked that he had with him the Chairman of the Soviet Trade Union organization.<sup>80</sup>

Mr. Stettinius stated that we had discussed the question of Mr. Hillman at some length and that after careful consideration it had been turned down.

Mr. Molorov asked that reconsideration be given to this matter.

Mr. Eden remarked that in regard to the Chairman of the Soviet Trade organization, he was accredited as an official delegate of the Soviet Government and that of course any government could accredit individuals as official delegates no matter what his private capacity was.

Mr. Hiss then brought up the question of the proposed changes to the Dumbarton Oaks agreement which the Chinese Government had suggested. He pointed out that these suggested changes had been agreed to by the United States Government and that they had been sent to the Soviet Government on March 16 s1 but that no reply had yet been received.

Mr. Sterrinius suggested that these Chinese proposals be put on the table for discussion in connection with other proposed changes in the Dumbarton Oaks proposal.

Mr. Molotov stated that the Soviet Government would support the Chinese Government in this matter and hoped that the Chinese Government would also support the Soviet Union.

Mr. Hiss then brought up the voting procedure. He suggested that in closed sessions of the commissions and committees it would be advisable for each group to fix its own voting rules. In regard to the public sessions, however, he stated that we must have some rule for voting and suggested that in regard to procedural matters decisions should be taken by majority vote and that on matters of substance decisions should be taken on the basis of a two-thirds majority. Mr. Hiss added that he hoped that this question would be approached in a spirit of the Conference as a whole so that agreement will be reached in the closed sessions before the question at issue is discussed in public meetings, in order to avoid the possibility of the impression being gained that divergencies exist. He then asked whether the Foreign Ministers would agree that this question should be discussed with the other delegations.

(It was agreed that this question could be discussed with the other delegations.)

Vasily Vasilevich Kuznetsov, Chairman of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions of the Soviet Union.
 See telegram 619 to Moscow, p. 126.

Mr. Molorov asked whether it was contemplated to have consultations with the four sponsoring delegations in regard to other questions that might come up.

Mr. Hiss stated that of course there would be such consultations.

Minutes of the Fourteenth Meeting of the United States Delegation, Held at San Francisco, Tuesday, April 24, 1945, 9:30 a.m.

[Informal Notes—Extracts]

[Here follows list of names of persons (15) present at meeting.] Senator Vandenberg opened the meeting at 9:30 a.m. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that there were two items on the agenda. A discussion of a paper on United States Delegation, Organization and Procedures, drafted April 22, 1945 and discussion of a paper entitled Principal Proposals by Other Governments and Arguments Against Them, April 23, 1945.82

[Here follows discussion on the organization and procedures of the United States delegation; on relations with the press; and on arrangements for meeting the Secretary, who would arrive at the San Francisco airport at approximately 10:30 a.m. (he had left Washington at midnight on Monday, April 23).]

PRINCIPAL PROPOSALS BY OTHER GOVERNMENTS AND ARGUMENTS AGAINST THEM

Senator Vandenberg suggested that Mr. Pasvolsky introduce the document before the Delegation, Principal Proposals by Other Governments. Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that this document incorporated many points which had already been discussed but that its main function was to bring concretely together the main arguments against the proposals of other governments that we would not favor. Senator Vandenberg thought this type of document was very useful and asked what procedure should be followed in discussing it. Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the Delegation go over the argumentation to see whether the arguments were in each case adequate.

CHAPTER II—PRINCIPLES

MR. Pasvolsky then introduced the first proposal by Brazil, Bolivia and other countries that there should be included among the principles maintenance of the territorial integrity and political independence of member states. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the two arguments against this proposal be reversed. Mr. Bowman indicated that he would favor maintaining our position to exclude a principle of this character. He thought particularly that we should be aware of the difficulties involved since to put the emphasis upon the possibilities of change would tend to take the lid off the box. He questioned whether the reference in the first argument to the modification of boundaries was wise. It would seem to give opportunities to states to revise boundaries.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON asked why New Zealand favored this particular principle. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that this principle was favored by the New Zealand Minister in Washington <sup>83</sup> who felt that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals did not go far enough to guarantee the boundaries of states. He did not believe however, that the New Zealand argument needed to be taken too seriously. Mr. Armstrong thought it was important in arguing for our position not to say anything that would give the impression that we favored a change of boundaries. He was afraid this would open the door to a difficult situation.

Mr. Stassen asked whether the Act of Chapultepec did not guarantee the territorial integrity of states in this hemisphere. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that the Act of Chapultepec defined aggression as a crossing of a frontier. He thought this might be all right. He proposed that argument 1 be omitted and that argument 2 be retained but expanded to include the idea that an enumeration of what is included under the term "sovereign equality" would weaken the concept which, stated in general terms, covers a very broad field.

Mr. Bowman commented that since the question of territorial integrity would be raised by a large number of states he thought it was desirable to agree upon a formula which would satisfy everybody. He said he would be glad to attempt the drafting of such a formula at any time he was so directed. Senator Vandenberg noted that this subject fell within the jurisdiction of Committee 1 of Commission I. Mr. Dulles commented that this was a most delicate problem.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE suggested that Mr. Bowman prepare a formula along the lines he had suggested and submit it to Committee 1 for consideration. Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion for the argumentation on the principle of territorial integrity was accepted generally by the Delegates.

CHAPTER III—MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Pasvolsky commented that the main proposal on membership that we would wish to counter was the suggestion of the principle of universal membership. According to this principle all states would automatically be members of the organization. He pointed out that most theories of universal membership involved the idea that some countries would not exercise the privileges of membership although considered members of the organization. In practice he said, there would be the categories of initial membership and other members admitted later, and it was on the basis of this theory that we were proceeding. He suggested that to the present arguments there be added the idea that the organization is to be an association of states for certain purposes and not the super state indicated by a provision for universal membership.

Mr. Stassen commented that he was greatly interested in seeing that certain rules were established for the whole world, so that there would be some things which the Organization would decide that would be abided by by everyone. Mr. Dulles noted that there was a principle dealing with that very conception. Mr. Pasvolsky, in reply to a question from Senator Vandenberg, said that this particular problem lay within the jurisdiction of Committee 2 of Commission 1.

Mr. Stassen said he would like to see some language, possibly in the Preamble of the Charter, indicating that the Organization was concerned with the entire world and that states regardless of whether they were members or not would be expected to abide by certain laws. Representative Eaton agreed with Mr. Stassen that there would have to be created a world law and that non-member states would have to abide by certain provisions of it. Mr. Armstrong thought it might be provided that non-member states should act in accordance with it. Senator Vandenberg indicated that he would hate to do anything that would brand the new Organization as a world state.

CHAPTER V—THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, SECTION B—FUNCTIONS AND POWERS

Senator Vandenberg asked to which committee this topic fell. Mr. Gerig replied that it came within the jurisdiction of Committee 1 of Commission II. Mr. Gerig explained that a large number of states were unofficially pressing this idea of extending the powers of the General Assembly and that the main difficulty was that any such broad extension of its powers would involve the General Assembly in the security field. Senator Vandenberg then read the proposal by Cuba, Mexico and Paraguay that the General Assembly be the supreme authority of the organization in all matters within the scope of the charter including the maintenance of international peace and security.

Senator Vandenberg suggested that Mr. Gerig read the arguments, which Mr. Gerig then did. Mr. Bowman remarked that the most important argument was not stated and that was that the ultimate causes of war lie in certain economic conditions and relationships and that it was these problems with which the General Assembly would deal. The Assembly after all would be the primary organ dealing constructively with all of the fundamental economic and social problems. Mr. Bowman thought the argument should start off with this positive note. Mr. Dulles explained that one got into the question of weighted voting the moment one thought of giving the General Assembly supreme authority in the organization in all matters within the scope of the Charter. He added that this question of weighted voting raised problems that could not be resolved. Dean Gildersleeve commented that it was a fallacy to believe that the only democratic way of settling questions was by a majority vote in the Assembly. Mr. Dulles agreed that when each state with such different populations had one vote it was not democracy. Mr. Stassen agreed.

Senator Vandenberg then read the second proposal by Chile, Ecudor, Guatemala, Paraguay and Venezuela, that the General Assembly should be empowered to review decisions of the Security Council and to consider appeals from such decisions. Senator Vandenberg indicated that the argument against this proposal was obvious. Mr. Bowman asked Mr. Gerig if the experience of the League did not bear out the undesirability of this proposal. Mr. Gerig agreed that the League experience suggested that too much time would be lost if the General Assembly had a power of review of decisions of the Council. Mr. Armstrong pointed out that the fact had to be recognized, however, that the small states in the League Assembly had been more willing to take action than the large states on the Security Council. Mr. Gerig noted that one reason for this was that probably the small states were not so immediately involved in taking action themselves.

Senator Vandenberg said that the next proposal, to grant to the General Assembly the right of referendum on decisions of the Security Council and to provide that such decisions will not become binding on all member states until approved by a two-thirds majority of the Assembly, would fall within the jurisdiction of the Committee 2 of Commission II. Mr. Notter noted that the right of the Assembly to approve action in fact involved the right of the Assembly to force action. He pointed out that Mr. Padilla had in mind empowering the General Assembly to take action if the Security Council was stopped by the veto of any one state.

At Senator Vandenberg's suggestion the meeting was recessed at 11:15 in order to permit the Delegates to greet the Secretary in his office. The meeting reconvened at 12:15.

PRINCIPAL PROPOSALS BY OTHER GOVERNMENTS AND ARGUMENTS AGAINST THEM, CHAPTER VI—SECURITY COUNCIL

Senator Vandenberg commented that the next proposal to consider was one by Canada, that special provisions be adopted to insure due representation of the middle powers as non-permanent members of the Security Council. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that if this question comes up the Delegation had agreed that they would not recognize any single criterion, that if they have to recognize any criterion the Delegation would want to list a large number. He thought that the Latin American countries might emphasize moral contribution as one element but that in any case we should be prepared to bring forward a list of criteria in order to avoid settlement on any single criterion. Mr. Dulles commented that any middle power proposition would divide nations into two groups and that tremendous competition to qualify as a middle power would be started. Mr. Dulles suggested that the way to beat the proposal was to ask what states would be classified as middle powers. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that in this way the situation could be snarled up so that we could probably maintain the present provisions.

Press Policy

Mr. MacLeish announced that Mr. Byington, who had just arrived with the Secretary, had come to the meeting to discuss press policy with the Delegation. Senator Vandenberg remarked that there were a number of problems troubling the Delegation and that there was a general feeling that it was time to tell the press what they can and what they cannot do. All of the Delegation felt, he said, that relations with the press were vital and that the press contacts of the Delegation were almost as important as what happened in the substantive discussions themselves. Senator Vandenberg urged that a press policy was necessary.

Mr. Byington explained that as he understood it the press were free to see the Delegates and that a special press room had been provided for them. Mr. MacLeish added that in addition to the special press room on the fourth floor of the Fairmont, the Green Room on the main floor would be available for press conferences. Mr. Stassen urged that the press be prevented from entering any rooms except the press rooms and that in addition there be daily background press conferences. Senator Vandenberg commented that he saw no use of background conferences if there was going to be merely shadow boxing. We had to be frank he said and we would have to do something to counteract the fact that the Conference was opening with a natural attitude of anxiety, gloom and doubt. He said a specific story was what the press needed and that they could have it in the assignment of Delegates to Commissions.

MR. MACLEISH asked whether it would be possible to announce the proposals which this Government intended to make. MR. PASVOLSKY said this would be very unwise since other nations would think that we were trying to force their hand.

Mr. Dulles noted that while it might be unwise to announce the specific assignments to Commissions and Committees since the organization of the Conference had not yet been agreed to, he thought the assignment of Delegates by subjects could be made public. This proposal was generally agreed to.

Senator Vandenberg adjourned the meeting at 12:55.

MEMORANDUM

In referring to the proposal repeated in the Soviet Embassy's memorandum of April 17, 1945 that the Provisional Polish Government now functioning in Warsaw be invited to send representatives to the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco, the United States Government is compelled to state that its position in this matter, as already set forth in a memorandum to the Embassy dated March 29, 1945, is unchanged and that it cannot agree to the extension of such an invitation.<sup>85</sup> While the importance of participation in the Conference by Poland, the first United Nation to undergo Nazi attack in 1939, is fully realized, it remains the firm

Memorandum by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State, of a Conversation Held at San Francisco, April 24, 1945, 5:45 p.m.

Present: The Secretary of State
Mr. Molotov
Ambassador Harriman
Ambassador Gromyko
Mr. Pavlov
Mr. Bohlen

Mr. Molotov said: that he had come to see the Secretary to raise a number of points. His request was as representative of a sponsoring government that he be kept informed of all developments and arrangements affecting the Conference; that he did not wish to have to rely on rumors but wished to have first-hand information on all matters such as plans, arrangements, agenda, et cetera. He added that he designated Mr. Novikov of the Soviet Delegation to maintain contact with the U.S. Delegation.

THE SECRETARY replied: that he intended to see that Mr. Molotov was kept fully informed about everything, and that Mr. Hiss, as temporary Secretary General had already made plans for the full dissemination of such information. He added that in so far as the U.S. Delegation was concerned, he had delegated Mr. Thompson, whom Mr. Molotov knew from Moscow, as our representative to maintain contact with the Soviet Delegation. He emphasized, however, the difference between the Secretariat headed by Mr. Hiss and the U.S. Delegation and suggested that Mr. Novikov be put in touch both with Mr. Hiss' office and with Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Molorov agreed and expressed his satisfaction.

THE SECRETARY then said that since there had been much speculation of the press in regard to the matter of the final amendments proposed at Dumbarton Oaks, at a press conference this afternoon, he had informed them that last night the four sponsoring powers had agreed that these amendments be placed before the Conference together with the Dumbarton Oaks proposals. He said he had tried to get in touch with the Soviet Delegation yesterday afternoon before the press conference but had been unable to do so.

Mr. Molorov said that he had no objection at all to the press statement which he felt was entirely satisfactory in view of last night's decision.

Mr. Molorov then said that he wished to raise again the question of the four Chairmen of the Conference since his government felt that this would establish before the other nations the principle of equality of the sponsoring powers. He said the matter had not been fully explored last night and would like to clarify further the American position.

THE SECRETARY explained that he had discussed this matter both with the late President Roosevelt and with President Truman and that his instructions were that we should support the view of one responsible Chairman for the conduct of the Conference's position. He said, however, that he thought that possibly some halfway point or compromise could be found whereby all four nations would be honorary Chairmen and in the absence of the responsible Chairman they could each have an opportunity to preside over plenary session.

Mr. Molorov inquired whether this meant that the U.S. did not wish to reach agreement on this question.

THE SECRETARY replied that, of course, we wished to reach an agreement but such were his instructions and that the matter would have to be decided at the first meeting of the Steering Committee.

Mr. Molorov said he would have to maintain the position of his government on this point.

After some discussion of the program of the plenary session tomorrow and the first meeting of the Steering Committee on Thursday, the 26th, Mr. Molotov said he had some other questions to raise.

He said that he had not had an opportunity to see the Secretary alone without representatives of other powers since he had arrived in the United States. He said he wished to speak first of the question of the Agreement at Yalta concerning the admission of White Russia and the Ukraine as initial members of the World Organization. (After some discussion, it was established that Mr. Molotov had in mind not a representation to the Conference which he said was the second phase of the question but the first phase, namely, of the execution of the Crimea Agreement regarding White Russia and the Ukraine).

He said that the discussions last night on this subject had been somewhat vague and he hoped to arrive at a more or less friendly understanding of the status of this matter. He said he must say frankly that the Soviet Government considered that the three governments who had made the Crimean decisions were responsible for its execution and that he wished to know whether there was any justification to believe that the three nations would be able to have their agreement carried into effect.

THE SECRETARY said he thought he had made clear the position of the U.S. Government; namely, that he would live up to the agreement. He added that since Mr. Molotov had requested his personal opinion, he felt that the attitude of the Conference could not help but be affected by the failure of the three nations to reach an agreement on the Polish question. He added that this failure had cast doubt on the unity and collaboration between the three powers which was the corner stone of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals and that as a friend he must state this view frankly to Mr. Molotov. He said that he was confident that if we could agree on the Polish question that the Conference would in all probability be willing to accept the Soviet proposal.

Mr. Molotov replied that he felt that a failure to carry out the Crimea agreement on the admission of White Russia and the Ukraine could only worsen the situation; that to add failure on this point to our inability to carry out the decision on Poland would be an even more serious indication of disagreement between us. He added that he felt that since Mr. Stettinius had met with the Latin American countries at Mexico City and that Mr. Eden had met with the Dominions in London they both should have some idea as to the attitude of those countries towards the proposal in regard to White Russia and the Ukraine and he, therefore, wished again to ask whether there was grounds for believing that the three nations would be able to carry out at the Conference this agreement.

THE SECRETARY said, speaking quite frankly, that he could not tell Mr. Molotov that attitude of the Latin American countries; adding that he had not raised the question at Mexico City since he had not been authorized by President Roosevelt to do so, and in any event, the agreement had not been published.

Mr. Molotov remarked that the agreement had been published to which The Secretary replied that that was after Mexico City.

Mr. Molotov then said that he had some indications that the Dominions were prepared to support this proposal.

THE SECRETARY again reported to Mr. Molotov his impression of the effect of failure to reach the agreement on Poland would have at the Conference. He said that he felt if we could only agree here on the plan of consultation with Polish leaders from within and without Poland and that the Commission could go back to Moscow to continue its work, the effect would be most beneficial. He added that he felt that the United Nations were firmly determined to create a World Organization; that they were prepared to make adjustments, but that they had come to look upon the Polish issue as a test case between the three powers. He concluded by saying that he was speaking as an individual and not as a representative of the U. S. at this Conference.

Mr. Molorov said that they had no objection to consultation but that he felt his position and that of his government of [on] the Polish matter had been made sufficiently clear. He then said that he expected to put the question of White Russia and the Ukraine at the first meeting of the Steering Committee on Thursday, April 26th, and that he would state that this was an agreement between the three powers at the Crimean Conference who bore the responsibility for its execution. He asked if he could expect that we would secure the maximum support for this proposal.

THE SECRETARY replied that he felt it would be unwise to raise this question so early in the proceedings of the Conference.

Mr. Molotov answered that the matter had been settled between the three powers and that he did not feel it would be possible to support [suppress?] this question.

THE SECRETARY said he thought it would be more logical to have the question come up when the composition of the assembly was under consideration rather than the other way around.

Mr. Molorov said that it could not be put off and that it was a question of membership in the Organization. He replied also that if the Soviet Government was confronted with the failure of the three powers to carry into effect the Crimea decision on the admission of White Russia and the Ukraine he would have to go home. He added that such a failure would be greeted with surprise and concern by the Soviet public opinion and that the consequences could not be good.

THE SECRETARY reported that we were prepared to carry out our commitment but that he had only been here a few hours and Mr. Eden had not arrived, and that they should be given some time to discuss the matter with the Chairman of some of the other Delegations. Otherwise, there might be the serious risk that when Mr. Molotov put the proposal before the first meeting of the Steering Committee that only he and Mr. Eden would vote for it.

Mr. Molotov said he did not know but that this was a risk.

THE SECRETARY again said that if we could only reach some agreement on Poland and announce that a list of leaders who were to be invited for consultation would have an enormous helpful effect on the attitude of the Conference towards the White Russia and the Ukrainian question.

Mr. Molorov said that in regard to Poland, his Government felt that instead of friendly support in the matter of the establishment of a Polish Government friendly to the Soviet Union, obstacles had been continually put in its path by the U.S. and Great Britain. He said this had created quite a difference in atmosphere than that at the Crimean Conference. He said that now attempts were being made to speak to the Soviet Union in the language of a dictator; that the Soviet Union was in the first rank of the powers and would not be pushed back into the second rank; that if the Soviet Union was treated as a partner, it would react as a cooperative partner along the lines of the Crimea Conference but that if attempts were made using the Polish situation as an excuse to dictate to the Soviet Union no good would come out of it.

THE SECRETARY said that there had been no change in our attitude since the Crimea; that we maintained to carry out our agreements and that all we asked was that the Polish leaders suggested by us be accepted for consultation.

Mr. Molorov replied that Mr. Stettinius was aware of his position and that of his Government on this question. He concluded by saying that if the Soviet Government was forced to accept anything but a friendly government in Poland after all the Russian blood that had been shed for Polish liberation, any other solution would mean for them that this blood had been shed in vain and they had lost the war. He said that aggression had come to Russia through Poland twice in a generation and that they could not abandon the interest of their state. He said that at the Crimean Conference the atmosphere had been satisfactory but since then they had noticed a definite change and that obstacles were being placed in the way of a formation of a Polish Government friendly to the Soviet Union.

THE SECRETARY denied that there had been any change in atmosphere on the part of the United States.

It was agreed that at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning if Dr. Soong and Mr. Eden were agreeable there would be a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the four powers to consider Conference arrangements and to begin the examination of amendments proposed by other countries to the Dumbarton Oaks document, and that this meeting would take place in Mr. Stettinius' office.<sup>87</sup>

The Secretary also asked and received the approval of the Delegation to have Mr. MacLeish and Mr. Dickey attend the meetings of the Delegation in order to provide proper liaison with the public relations staff of the Delegation.

VICE CHAIRMEN OF THE DELEGATION

The Secretary announced that the President had approved the appointment of Senators Connally and Vandenberg as Vice Chairmen of the Delegation. He stated that under such an arrangement he would try to divide up his responsibilities between the two of them and to that end would discuss the matter with them later. He asked

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of persons (19) present at meeting.] Polish Question

The Secretary reported that he had brought with him to this session Ambassador Harriman, Mr. Dunn and Mr. Bohlen. He indicated that he wished to discuss frankly and with the utmost secrecy the whole question of our Soviet relations, in particular our relations with the Soviet Government on the question of Poland and the problem of two votes for the two extra Soviet Republics. He said he looked upon these as two separate issues.

With respect to the Polish question the Secretary stated that he had already indicated to the Delegation what had taken place in a general way. He said our position was that the Yalta Agreement 92 should be lived up to. This position, he said, had been made clear by Mr. Truman in his meeting with Molotov and Eden.93 The Secretary reported that Mr. Truman, at a second meeting with Mr. Molotov and Mr. Eden, had reaffirmed our position that consultation should take place with an independent commission. He pointed out that nothing further could be done on this question until word was received from the Soviet Government.

Admission to the Organization of the Two Soviet Republics

He explained that the specific issue he wished to consider here concerned the proposal for two votes for the extra Soviet Republics. The Secretary reported that he would like to read Mr. Truman's letter, addressed to him, to the Delegation.94 The President directed that we support the proposal for admission to membership in the Organization of the Ukraine and the White Russian Republics. The Secretary then read the letter to the Delegation.

The Secretary reported that the President was only thinking of seats in the Assembly for the two Republics after the Organization was established. Mr. Bohlen said this was correct and that the admission of the White Russian Republic and the Ukrainian Republic to representation at the Conference was left open. Senator Vandenberg thought this open question would certainly be raised by the Russians. Mr. Bohlen agreed since it was logical he said, if the Republics were admitted as initial members, that representation would be asked for them at the Conference. This however, Mr. Bohlen said, was a second phase of the problem and that for the time being Mr. Molotov was dealing with the first phase of the question.

The Secretary stated that the question at issue was whether the two Soviet Republics would have seats in the General Assembly after the establishment of the Organization. With that introduction he said he would ask Mr. Dunn to make his recommendation for action on this question. Mr. Dunn replied that he would like first to refer to the terms of the Yalta Agreement on this question.95 By this Agreement it was pledged that when the Conference was held a Soviet proposal would be supported to admit to original membership in the Organization the two Soviet Republics. Mr. Dunn said his thought was that at Yalta there had been several agreements regarding the new Provisional Government of Poland, the liberated areas, trusteeship questions, and that among these was the agreement on the admission of the two Soviet Republics.96 All of these agreements he said had been made public. The question of timing arose only in connection with this one agreement on the admission of the Republics since that agreement began "when the Conference is held . . . ". Mr. Dunn said we would have to face the fact that the Conference is now being held and that this question would come up at the first business session. The Polish question was in a state of consultation and development and was not up for final decision or conclusion at this time. However, the problem of admission of the two Republics was before us and Mr. Dunn felt that unless we followed through and went along in full good faith to do all we could to assure the admission of the two Republics our position with respect to the other agreements reached at Yalta would be very weak.

Mr. Eaton asked whether it would be possible for us to make the decision or whether it was not a decision of the Conference. Mr. Dunn indicated that the question was whether or not we would support the Russian proposal in full good faith. Senator Vandenberg remarked that, since this question did not involve the fate of the Conference he wondered why it needed to be settled immediately and why it could not be settled in the course of events. Mr. Dunn said that the Soviet Delegation was going to bring the question up and had in fact already told us that the matter would be brought up. Senator Vandenberg asked if any violation of the Yalta Agreement would be involved if the matter was referred to the Assembly Commission—Commission II—for decision. Mr. Dunn thought that a violation would be involved if we took steps to defer the vote on this question.

Mr. Dulles proposed that if we indicated our support for the Russian proposal then we would have to put it through. It would indicate bad faith if we nominally supported the proposal and did nothing to put it into effect.

Mr. Stassen agreed that to support the proposal without being successful would be unthinkable. He was afraid that to fail at this early stage in this way would result in the failure of the Conference. However, he thought a major problem was to secure for the proposal the support of the American people and that if this was to be done we would have to take the offensive in interpreting our decision. He said he did not wish to raise again the point that the Delegation had not been fully advised in this matter at the start. He said from one point of view this was only a minor issue and that the important thing was to proceed aggressively to find a basis for bringing in references to justice and international law and other important points and then proceed to a vote on this question. Senator Vandenberg said he agreed with this.

The Secretary commented that Mr. Roosevelt had, according to his understanding, told the Delegation of the Yalta Agreement on the Soviet Republics. Senator Vandenberg replied that there had been some disagreement as to what the President had actually said. The Secretary indicated that he tended to agree with Mr. Stassen's statement. Mr. Bloom thought that we should not take on the responsibility for securing the adoption of the Russian proposal. While we should not do anything to retard it, he felt that we would be taking on an awful lot if we assumed responsibility for pushing it through.

Senator Vandenberg indicated that while he was reluctant about the whole proposal he would accept the obligation to back it, but he did not see why it was necessary to push the matter through at the beginning of the Conference. He thought we should be able to choose the time when we would reach agreement on this question.

Senator Connally said that if we supported the Russian proposal and failed to put it over we would be discredited. On the other hand if we insisted that the little countries should go along we would contribute to the already prevalent notion that the big countries were dominating the Conference. He wondered whether it would not be possible to settle the Russian proposals all at once. He thought that if a settlement of the Polish question could be reached it would ease the blow of this other agreement.

Representative Bloom asked at what point on the list the United States would vote since, if it led off, the impression would be created that we were trying to dominate, while if we voted later on the list this impression might not be given. The Secretary asked that a list of order of voting at the Conference sessions be brought into the meeting.

Mr. Rockefeller proposed that we should take advantage of the situation and support the Russian proposal wholeheartedly, thereby taking psychological advantage of a situation that we could not now avoid. He pointed out that the Latin American states would not be willing to vote as a bloc in favor of the Russian proposal unless Russia relaxes its position on Argentina. If the United States wants the Latin American votes for the Russian proposal there would have to be a settlement of the Argentinian question. Mr. Dunn said he did not think we could make a deal of this sort. The Secretary asked whether the Latin American countries were agreed that Argentina should be an initial member of the Organization. Mr. Rockefeller explained that they wanted Argentina invited to the Conference. They do not want to disrupt the Conference and therefore they would not push their position but they do feel that in view of the position taken in Mexico 98 that it is time to admit Argentina to the United Nations.

The Secretary noted that no word had come from Molotov on the request of the Argentinian Government to be recognized. The Secretary then announced that Ambassador Harriman had come to the meeting and that he wished to have him speak on the question under discussion.

Ambassador Harriman said that since the Yalta Conference our relations with Russia had taken a very different turn. The relations of war time were now developing into the beginning of the relations of peace time, which might in part explain the change in our relations. All men who have dealt with Russia know of the Russian &lt;sup>88</sup> See Resolution LIX of the Final Act of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, in Report of the Delegation of the United States of America to the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, Mexico City, Mexico, February 21-March 8, 1945, p. 183, or 60 Stat. attempt to chisel, by bluff, pressure, and other unscrupulous methods to get what they wish. We also recognize that they wish to have as much domination over Eastern Europe as possible, and that as the Red Army has advanced, governments in Eastern Europe have tended to come under the domination of the army. While we cannot go to war with Russia, we must do everything we can to maintain our position as strongly as possible in Eastern Europe. Russia is building a tier of friendly states there and our task is to make it difficult for her to do so, since to build one tier of states implies the possibility of further tiers, layer on layer. Our whole position, Ambassador Harriman said, the one advantage we had, was to stand firm on our position in Eastern Europe. He added that he felt just as warmly on this question as Senator Vandenberg, and that he recommended that we be as firm with the Russians as possible.

Ambassador Harriman pointed out that the Polish question was the major question, and that we should not confuse it with the admission of the two Soviet republics to the Conference or to membership in the Organization. Ambassador Harriman indicated that the basic issue at Yalta had been the voting procedure on the Security Council, on which the Administration had taken a strong position and on which there had been no weakening. When the President had put this position up to Stalin, Stalin had agreed to accept it for the admission of the two Russian republics.<sup>99</sup> He thought the special interest of Stalin in the two Russian republics reflected a problem of Communist control in the Ukraine and in the White Russian Republic.

Senator Connally asked whether Ambassador Harriman meant that the Russian proposal stemmed from a situation of domestic politics. Ambassador Harriman replied in the affirmative. He thought that Stalin was attempting to achieve a favorable public opinion in the two republics. He pointed out that we must face the fact that the foreign policies of the two republics would be dictated by the Kremlin. and that those republics were not autonomous. He noted that Stalin placed a great deal of emphasis upon the international recognition of these two republics, and that the question of their votes in the assembly was only a secondary one. Mr. Bowman questioned whether, on achieving two extra seats in the Assembly, it was likely that the Soviet Government would press for additional seats for other constituent republics. Ambassador Harriman replied that there was no doubt about this, and that that was the reason why the President had tied the matter of admitting the two republics to the particular circumstances of the war, in which they had suffered so heavily. It was clear, he said, that further demands would be made by the Soviet Government. Mr. Stassen asked whether the President agreed to the Soviet proposals because of the Polish quid pro quo. Mr. Bohlen commented that the Russian proposal was put in at the same time that the Polish question was up.

Mr. Dulles asked whether the veto power on the Security Council in questions of pacific settlement had been gained in exchange for the agreement on the two Soviet republics. Ambassador Harriman indicated that Mr. Stalin had first agreed to the voting procedure. We had felt that it was essential not to give in on the voting procedure in order to give the small states some satisfaction. In fact, he said, the question of the Soviet Republics and the problem of the voting procedure were tied together in the discussion, although Stalin had never said he would agree to our proposal if we agreed to his. The Secretary pointed out that the discussion of these two matters took place within the same half hour. Ambassador Harriman agreed.

Mr. Bloom asked why the justification was used that these Republics had participated in the war. He wondered if other republics had not suffered equally. Ambassador Harriman replied in the negative, indicating that these two republics had been invaded. sador Harriman pointed out that we should not consider the question of the two Soviet Republics in connection with the Polish settlement. He said he agreed with Mr. Stassen that we should carry out the agreement which the President had made, and do it in such a way so as to avoid giving any grounds for others going back on the other agreements at Yalta. He said the question of the timing was not one on which he could pass judgment, since he was not sufficiently in touch with American public opinion. His judgment, however, was that we should announce the matter four-square to the public. In any case, he said, we were not going to get the Polish settlement at this time, even if we allowed the Polish representatives to come here for consultation. The point was that there was still the question to decide as to what kind of government Poland would have, and this would inevitably delay the whole matter. On the question of the two Soviet republics, however, as Mr. Dunn had said, we were up against a date.

The Secretary indicated that there would be considerable delay in settling the Polish question, even if Mr. Molotov heard from Mr. Stalin, since it was planned to have the leaders invited to Moscow for consultation. Ambassador Harriman explained that the next step would be consultation in Moscow, and an attempt there to reorganize the government. He said it would be a hollow victory if we had assumed that having taken the first step the whole matter was settled. Mr. Eaton asked whether if we kept our agreement, there was any guarantee that the Soviet Union would change its spots. Ambassador Harriman replied that there was no such guarantee. Representative Eaton thought that we would then have given away our position and lost our bargaining power. Ambassador Harriman indicated that if the question of the Soviet republics was the only issue he would tend to agree with Mr. Eaton, but that there were in fact other issues connected with this question. The Secretary thought that frank recognition should be given to the fact that there were certain military considerations that could not be discussed here. Ambassador Harriman indicated that a primary motive of the Soviet Union was to get a position as a respected nation among the family of nations, and not to go back to its former isolation. He thought that there would be many issues coming up between us and that we must be more than certain not to give Russia grounds for saying that we had gone back on the Yalta agreement. He thought we should not raise the question of the invitation to the Conference at this time, but simply live up to our agreement. He doubted that the situation would be improved if we showed reluctance in living up to our agreement.

Senator Vandenberg commented that the problem remained to satisfy the people of the United States. He said he could not escape the notion that if the first action of the Conference was to admit the two Soviet Republics the repercussions on public opinion would be desperately bad. He agreed that a contract we had made would have to be completed, but he thought it better to postpone the completion until later. He said that he did not think that Russia had done anything to help us along the way on this question. Ambassador Harriman remarked that although there were a number of actions taken by the Soviet Government with which he did not agree, he did not think it was fair to say that the Russians had done nothing. Senator Vandenberg replied that the fundamental fact was that the American public would believe that Stalin was writing the ticket.

Mr. Armstrong asked whether it was true that there were no other time provisions on the agreements at Yalta. In connection with the agreement on liberated areas, he recalled that it had been stated that when we believe that conditions are unsatisfactory we shall invoke the consultative procedure. He pointed out that we had invoked the consultative procedure in regard to Rumania, but that the Russians had not accepted that. Mr. Dunn said that there were two periods to keep in mind: 1, the period of military action, and 2, the period of political action. Rumania was still within the field of military operations. We would have to accept this fact just as we had made the Russians accept our position in Italy.<sup>2</sup> on the Rumanian situation, see vol. v, pp. 464 ff.

For the Anglo-Soviet-American communiqué (Declaration Regarding Italy), issued at the Moscow Conference, held October 18-November 1, 1943, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, p. 759.

Ambassador Harriman said the big issue was the Polish issue and that we should concentrate on that. Rumania, after all, was an enemy country while Poland was a country which we respected and which had suffered considerably since the very beginning of the war, and was, in fact, the country over which war was declared.

Senator Vandenberg commented that the question uppermost in his mind was the American reaction. He indicated we did not have any idea whether the Russians would cooperate with us or would be bluntly hostile to our suggestions for a more liberalized amendment procedure.

The Secretary commented that the advantages would be better in getting a liberalized amendment procedure if we could get by this first hurdle. Ambassador Harriman replied that he agreed with the Secretary.

Senator Vandenberg said he thought it was about time we did not take Russian good intentions so for granted. Ambassador Harriman recommended that if Russia did not go along with us on changes that we considered fundamental in the charter of the organization, we ought to talk in a straight-forward manner, and tell the Russians to return to Russia. On a substantive question he would recommend meeting the issue head-on, but he did not like to see the Conference broken up on a relatively unimportant question.

Senator Connally explained that in any event there was not now time for a Polish representative to come to the Conference, since the Conference was upon us. The Secretary explained that we would not agree upon a Polish representative until a Polish Government was satisfactory to us, and we had recognized it. Representative Bloom asked whether the Yalta agreement on Poland was quite explicit. Ambassador Harriman replied that all decent people could understand it, and that it was very specific. The difficulty was that the Russians interpreted the agreement differently than we did. The phrase "other Polish leaders" meant to us leaders of all parties, including the democratic elements. The Russians thought that they had fulfilled the terms of the agreement if they merely brought to Moscow a few Communist stooges and non-party officials. Representative Bloom asked what had been done to carry out the Yalta agreement on Poland. Ambassador Harriman reported that there had been a half dozen meetings, lasting from three to four hours, and that careful work had been done.

Senator Connally said that if it was true that there were other considerations at Yalta that had not been made public, but that affected the Russian proposal on the two republics, then we ought to carry out our pledge at Yalta under the directives of President Roosevelt and President Truman. We should carry out their agreement, graciously and promptly and not equivocate. We should not give the impression that we were not acting in good faith.

Senator Vandenberg indicated that we would have to be prepared to confront the demand that the Soviet republics be immediately seated in the Conference. Mr. Dunn said there had been no agreement on the invitations to the Conference. Mr. Stassen wondered whether we should not say that while we are opposed to the participation of the republics in the Conference, we will wholeheartedly carry through with our agreement on the admission of the two republics to the Assembly.

Representative Bloom thought we had already gone on record as a Delegation in favor of the Russian proposal. He questioned the use of the two terms "original" and "initial", and thought we should stick to the phrase "initial members". Dean Gildersleeve said she also thought the Delegation had agreed to the Russian proposal and had announced its position. The Secretary said he thought this was true and believed we should promptly make a statement to the Russians and to the public. Senator Vandenberg indicated that while he would go along with the proposal he was opposed to doing it until some plausible excuse was developed for going along. He did not like to give the impression of being ordered around, and would prefer to have the matter come up first in the Commission on the Assembly. He believed the impact would be terrific on the American public if it was presented simply with the bald fact.

The Secretary pointed out the fact that the Soviet Government was likely to bring up the issue in the Steering Committee. Mr. Bowman thought that we might merely announce that we reaffirmed our position taken at Yalta on the Russian proposal, and then we could follow the legal procedure in discussing and getting agreement upon the Russian proposal.

Mr. Stassen indicated his opposition to an additional announcement such as suggested by Mr. Bowman, feeling that this would only increase the difficulty.

The Secretary regretted that he had to leave the meeting and that Mr. Dunn would also have to leave, and he said that he would expect the Delegation to continue its discussions. The Secretary said that he would like an instruction from the Delegation on the question under discussion. (The Secretary and Mr. Dunn left the meeting.)

Mr. Hackworth did not think that we should qualify our position, but should indicate to the Soviet Government that we were ready to comply with our previous decision. Mr. Stassen remarked that no one had raised the question of reneging, but that the fundamental problem was how the matter should be brought up. Mr. Rockefeller said that we should not forget that we had to carry this out with the American Republics, and that if we wanted to put the proposal through, we would have to have their votes. The only way he thought we could get their vote was to give in to their desires on Argentina.

Mr. Armstrong thought this would only create a double handicap with the American people, since the American people did not want Argentina in.

Dean Gildersleeve suggested that careful consideration be given to a statement on the fundamental reasons why we had gone along with the Russian proposals, and that we could couple this statement with an announcement that we were standing firm on Poland.

Mr. Dulles thought that we might also add to this statement that the Delegation had determined that it would not favor seating the Russian republics at the San Francisco Conference. Senator Connally thought it was rather awkward to tie in the announcement of carrying out the Yalta agreement with the statement that we would not invite the two republics to attend the Conference.

Senator Vandenberg thought that any statement now, until we could produce something that we had gained in the bargain, would invite public opposition. Ambassador Harriman indicated that he would like nothing better than to have the people rise up in protest and indicate their real position, since it would be good for the Soviets to appreciate for once the reaction of the American people which he had been for such a long time trying to convey to them.

After a brief discussion, it was agreed by Mr. Pasvolsky and Mr. Raynor that the Delegation had not yet announced its own view on the Soviet proposal.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that there was a real difference of interpretation of the Yalta agreement between the Russians and ourselves. While we were committed to admitting the two Russian republics to membership in the Organization, this meant to us listing them in the annex as initial members of the Organization. From our point of view the question of participation in the Conference did not arise at Yalta and is not now involved. The Russian interpretation, on the other hand, was that admission as original members of the Organization implied the right to send representatives to the Conference itself. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that there would be no problem of timing if we were merely listing the Soviet republics in the annex, but the reason that the Russians were pressing the matter was that they wanted to get the two Soviet Republics represented in the Conference. Ambassador Harriman commented that the agreement at Yalta did not imply the seating of the two republics in the Conference. Mr. Pasvolsky said that it would be tremendously difficult to avoid doing this if we lived up to our own interpretation of the Yalta agreement. Senator Vandenberg replied that if we yielded on the Russian proposal at all it did not much matter whether we seated the states at the Conference or whether we did not. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that the preferable position was to say that we did not intend to seat the two republics at the Conference. Mr. Stassen preferred to make our carrying through on the two Soviet republics conditional on the Russians carrying through on Poland. He wondered if this was feasible.

Mr. Bowman asked what significance there was in the stepped-up interest of the Soviets in the Economic and Social Council. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that this was not particularly related to the question of membership. He pointed out that the Russians had come a long distance in supporting the effort for a firm organization, in large part because of the prestige which recognition as a great power gave the Soviets. Ambassador Harriman agreed that the prestige factor was the predominate one, and he said he was convinced that if the Russian Delegation returned without delivering on the General Organization they would pay for it. He said it would be a serious thing for the Kremlin to face if it backed out of the Conference.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the worry of the Government over its relations with the Ukrainian and White Russian republics was evident by the fact that in military reports the armies are always referred to as Ukrainian and White Russian armies. Ambassador Harriman indicated that officers fighting on the Ukrainian and White Russian fronts are referred to by those names.

Mr. Bloom asked how a decision on the Russian proposal would affect the military situation. Ambassador Harriman did not think that it would affect the military situation either in Germany or in the Pacific.

Mr. Hackworth asked why the two Republics should not be invited to the Conference. Senator Vandenberg replied that this would be in violation of our previous agreement that only United Nations should be invited. Mr. Pasvolsky commented that it would change the character of the Conference to invite the two Republics.

Mr. Bloom asked when this question was going to come up and what the urgency was. Ambassador Harriman replied that the question would be raised probably the following day. Mr. Pasvolsky thought it might be under discussion at this very moment. He explained that what was involved was a matter of interpretation of the Yalta agreement. He thought that to give up the interpretation that we have already urged, in other words that we were willing to admit the two Soviet Republics to membership in the Organization but not to extend invitations to them, would be bad. From our view, he said, the only question was the inscribing of the names of the two Soviet Republics on the list of initial members.

Senator Vandenberg indicated that he did not think that the Secretary of State would stand for the extending of invitations to the two Soviet Republics. Mr. Rockefeller said that he thought the matter needed to be looked at as a whole and that some position had to be taken on the Argentinian question if we expected to line up the Latin American votes. Mr. Eaton asked whether Argentina was a United Nation. Mr. Rockefeller replied that Argentina had requested ten days ago to sign the United Nations Declaration and that nothing had been done about it. The Latin American countries, however, unanimously wanted Argentina in the United Nations. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that we did not want Argentina in. Mr. Stassen did not think that we could now invite Argentina to the Conference if we were going to give the Russians a negative reply on their demand to admit the two Republics to the Conference. Senator Connally thought the American public would be bitterly opposed to the Argentinian Government signing the Declaration by United Nations. Mr. Stassen wondered why it would not be feasible for Argentina to come in as an original member after the Organization was established. Senator Connally said that he did not even like the idea of Argentina coming in as an original member. Mr. Rockefeller said all he had in mind was that we had to keep in view the inter-connection of the two problems.

Mr. Armstrong pointed out that we must also keep in view the psychological effect on the Russian Delegation if it was presented with the double proposition of inviting Argentina to the Conference while the two Soviet Republics were not invited. He asked Ambassador Harriman what the Russians would do if the two Republics were refused representation at the Conference. Ambassador Harriman replied that the Russians would object very strongly, and that Molotov would probably pack up and go home. Moreover, he thought if we said that we could not guarantee the membership of the two republics until the Conference voted it, that the opposition of the Soviets on other issues would be greatly increased. He said that until the Soviet Government knew where it was going to come out on the issue, we were going to face increasing stubborness. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that in preference to stalling and to long negotiation on the admission to membership of the two republics our bargaining power would probably be bettered if the issue could be settled and gotten out of the way. Senator Connally asked what would happen if we voted "no" on inviting the Soviet republics to attend the Conference. Mr. Pasvolsky said that in making any decision we would have to be guided by the principle of not letting Russia walk out of the Conference on this issue. Ambassador Harriman thought that Russia would not walk out of the Conference on this particular issue but that Molotov would simply pack up and go home.

Senator Connally asked whether the Russians really wanted a peace organization. Ambassador Harriman replied that they wanted a peace organization but for different purposes than we did. Membership in the Organization, he said, would give them world prestige that would be useful to them in extending their relations, particularly in Eastern Europe. Senator Connally asked how badly they wanted the peace organization. Ambassador Harriman replied that if the democratic world did not meet them on the terms that they generally favored they would probably go in the direction of isolation. He thought that it was a real possibility that, if the Conference voted down their request for membership of the two Soviet Republics, they would walk out on the Conference. He did not believe they would walk out on the question of the seating of the Soviet Republics at the Conference.

Mr. Dulles commented that we must face the fact that we are not in a position to deliver the Conference vote for the Russian proposal within the next twenty-four hours. If the Conference votes down the proposal there is every reason to expect a blow-up. The Russians would accuse us of having sent Nelson Rockefeller around to tell the Latin American governments to vote against the proposal. This, he said, inevitably raises the Argentinian question. Ambassador Harriman pointed out that the Argentinian question had not been raised in any form with the Soviet Government.

Senator Connally proposed that the Secretary tell Molotov that we would vote for and support the membership of the two Soviet Republics in the Organization, but that we would not vote for or support their participation in the Conference. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the Russians would say "no" to this latter statement, since according to their interpretation initial membership meant representation in the Conference. Senator Connally said he did not know how we could speak for the Conference. If the Conference voted down the Russian proposal, then no breach of the Yalta agreement was involved.

Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the presence of the Soviet Republics in the Conference had not been discussed at Yalta. Mr. Stassen asked when the question was first raised. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that it was first raised when the Soviet Government informed us of the Delegation that it wished to send to the Conference.

Mr. Stassen said he thought we should actively support the proposal for membership of the two Republics in the Organization, and support it early in the Conference, but that we should not support the proposition that the two Republics would be seated at the Conference. Mr. Pasvolsky asked what would happen if the Soviet said "no" to the proposal; would we face a break-up in the Conference. Senator Vandenberg said that the Russians could make one issue after another like this. Mr. Bloom said the question was whether we wanted to drive the Russians home at the beginning of the Conference. Mr. Stassen urged that we live up to our agreement at Yalta so that Russia would not go home in a position to claim that we had broken our promise.

Senator Connally asked whether we should let them sit at the Conference. Mr. Bowman thought that this question was relatively minor and certainly was different from other more substantial questions. Senator Vandenberg asked what we intended to stand on and what we were going to surrender on. Mr. Bowman replied that we certainly should stand on the question of a more liberal amendment procedure.

Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that the question of participation in the Conference of the Soviet Republics was a relatively minor issue. He wondered whether the American public would resent this second step if, in any event, the first one was taken. Mr. Stassen pointed out that the American public had not discussed this second question, but that in fact this was now the real issue before the Delegation—whether we should support the seating of the two republics in the Conference. The other issue, he said, was already decided.

Senator Vandenberg remarked that this issue could not be settled in the absence of the Secretary, who had definitely opposed the issuance of invitations to the two republics. Mr. Rockefeller questioned whether the Secretary was fully informed on the entire background of the matter. He pointed out that in the discussions concerning the disposition of positions at the Conference positions had been left open for the two republics. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that the positions were allowed for only in the event that a decision was reached by the Conference to admit the two Soviet Republics. Mr. Stassen said the decision would have to be made within the next twenty-four hours and that the basic question was how we intended to interpret the Yalta agreement. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed and indicated that the British would probably support us in our interpretation that initial membership in the Organization meant listing in the Annex and not, as the Russians would have it, invitations to the Conference. Senator Vandenberg thought that the President would have to be communicated with.

Mr. Hackworth said that he had had a conversation with one of the Russian Delegates who had reported, when asked what position Russia would take on the nomination of judges to the World Court, that he would go along with the United States. Moreover, he had indicated that he did not have a very strong feeling about the continuation of the present judges, since, like ourselves, Russia had never been a member of the Court, and that Russia would probably go along with us on this question also.

Senator Connally reported that Russia would be greatly embarrassed at home if the Delegation returned without getting successful results, and that we had to face the fact that we must not continue simply to rubber-stamp the Russian position. Senator Vandenberg agreed that we could not make a Munich out of San Francisco. Ambassador Harriman thought that if we could get this one difficulty off the decks, the Russians would be less likely to be suspicious of us. He added that they would not be satisfied until there was a vote of the Conference. He added that the Russians believed us capable of intrigue and double-crossing. Senator Vandenberg said that that is precisely what the Russians do. Ambassador Harriman replied that that is perhaps why the Russians think that we are capable of doing it also. Ambassador Harriman urged that we get the issue of the membership of the Soviet Republics off the boards.

Mr. Rockefeller proposed that the over-all picture be considered rather than just this one problem in isolation. Senator Vandenberg indicated that he was willing to go along with the Russian proposal if there was something else that would help counteract the bad effect on public opinion. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that the admission of Argentina to the Conference would not help us.

Ambassador Harriman urged that before Mr. Stettinius talked to Mr. Molotov we should be determined what should be done and should stick to it. He indicated that he could think of nothing more disastrous than to back down on our position. He felt that we should allow the Soviet Republics to become members of the Organization but that whatever we decided, we should not let Russia's threat to walk out on the Conference cause us to back down. Senator Connally said that. after all, the issuing of invitations to the Conference was a relatively minor one. Ambassador Harriman agreed that since we were giving in on the major question the decision on the minor question was less important. Senator Connally said that even if the Soviet Government would walk out, it would be better to have it walk out after we had fulfilled the Yalta agreement, and not on that issue. way we probably would still have the American public with us and could then work on with other nations and could organize the Security Organization.

Dean Gildersleeve wondered if the American people would be particularly interested in the question of the seating of the Republics in the Conference, once the decision had been made to admit them to membership. Mr. Stassen said that we would be vulnerable to attack on many scores if we admitted the Republics to the Conference, since they are not United Nations and are not independent states. He added that if we could get a favorable Polish settlement, obtain mention of justice in the text, and achieve great flexibility in the organization, particularly in the amendment process, he would agree to the invitation to the Republics to the Conference.

Ambassador Harriman indicated that his first interest was to keep Molotov here long enough so that if he went home it would be over a substantial question. He did not like to have the departure of Molotov associated with a failure on our part to keep a promise. Senator Connally thought that this whole matter must be talked over with the Secretary before a decision could be made.

Mr. Rockefeller indicated that the Latin American votes, as he had said earlier, depended on the admission of Argentina to the United Nations. We had agreed on the procedure by which this would take place, if Argentina declared war, if she agreed to the Act of Chapultepec, etc.6 It had been agreed that the United States would recommend an invitation to the other sponsoring powers. All but this last step had been taken. Now there was considerable confusion, and Argentina, herself, was not in a position as yet to sign the Declaration. We might make the condition that we would support invitations to the Russian Republics to the Conference if they would support the admission of Argentina within the next three week's time or Senator Connally asked how we could predict that Argentina would be invited by the Conference even if we asked for it. He asked Ambassador Harriman whether, if the Conference voted against us, the supposition that we had not been sincere would not operate to cause an unfavorable reaction? Ambassador Harriman replied that, if we had decided to support the Russian proposal in good faith, and if the Russians put a false interpretation on the situation, we would just have to face up to it. He agreed, however, that to be voted down would be very serious.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the Secretary talk to Mr. Molotov and to Mr. Eden, and that we do not indicate our support for an invitation to the Soviet Republics to the Conference, but that we do raise the issue of the invitation. Mr. Rockefeller disagreed with the procedure on the grounds that if Russia insists on an invitation, he could not be held responsible for delivering the vote if nothing was done on the Argentinian question.

It was agreed after brief discussion that the next meeting of the Delegation would be held at 8:30 that evening. (Mr. MacLeish came into the meeting.)

Senator Connally said that Mr. MacLeish wished to make a statement. Mr. MacLeish wanted to know whether the Delegates wanted to abide by their earlier decision to allow the press to come up to the corridors and be permitted to have the run of the corridors on the understanding that they would not enter the offices. General agreement was reached that this decision should be adhered to.

Senator Connally adjourned the meeting at 12:50 p.m.

Minutes of the Second Four-Power Preliminary Meeting on Questions of Organization and Admission, Held at San Francisco, April 25, 1945, 11 a.m.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of participants, including members of delegations of the United States (5); the United Kingdom (4); the Soviet Union (4); and China (3).]

The meeting was called to order by the Secretary of State in his office at the Fairmont at 11 a. m., April 25, 1945.

The Secretary invited the Foreign Ministers to give at any time to the Secretariat any comments which they might have with regard to inadequacy of arrangements.

The Secretary outlined briefly the proposed program for the afternoon's opening meeting of the Conference <sup>7</sup> to determine if it is satisfactory to all the sponsors.

The Delegations would be seated in the Opera House in alphabetical order. There would be appropriate music but no national anthems. As temporary chairman the Secretary would at 4:30 p.m. accompany the Governor of California and the Mayor of San Francisco on to the platform and call the meeting to order. In view of the wide variety of different religions represented among the participating delegations a religious invocation would not be undertaken but the Secretary would request one minute of silence. He would then say, "the President of the United States" and President Truman's speech by radio from Washington 8 would then follow. This would be followed by a word of welcome from the Governor of California (three minutes), and a similar welcome by the Mayor San Francisco. The Secretary would thank the Mayor for arrangements made. The Secretary would then speak for five minutes. On concluding this he would introduce Mr. Alger Hiss as temporary Secretary General and Mr. Hiss would outline arrangements for April 26. The band would then play appropriate music and the Secretary would adjourn the meeting.

The Foreign Ministers indicated their approval of this program.

The Secretary called on Mr. Hiss to outline to the Foreign Ministers: the suggested program for April 26. Mr. Hiss stated that the tentative plan is that the heads of delegations meet at 10:30 a. m. in an auditorium of the Veterans Building on April 26 and draw up a report to submit to a first plenary session 10 of the Conference which would meet on the afternoon of April 26 at 3:30 p. m. in the Opera House.

Mr. Molotov asked what would be the nature of the report to be made by the heads of delegations.

Mr. Hiss stated that the report would of course depend upon the action taken by the heads of delegations, but that presumably it would consist mainly of recommendations to the Conference having to do particularly with form and in addition would include recommendations regarding commission and committee officerships and executive committee membership as discussed by the Foreign Ministers on the night of April 23.<sup>11</sup>

Mr. Hiss said that according to the proposed plan, if the recommendations of the meeting of the heads of delegations be accepted by the Conference, the presiding officer of the Conference would then speak and would be followed by the Chairmen of the other sponsoring powers speaking in alphabetical order.

Mr. Eden asked what sort of statements the Foreign Ministers would be expected to make. The Secretary said he would be delighted to supply to the Foreign Ministers copies of the remarks which he has in mind, and suggested that the Foreign Ministers should set an example in brevity of the statement in order that the other delegation chairmen will keep their remarks within reasonable limits. Mr. Molotov asked if twelve to fifteen minutes would be too long. Mr. Eden said that he feels fifteen minutes is necessary. A length of about fifteen minutes was mutually agreed to.

Mr. Hiss reported being in the receipt of request from the French to speak after the sponsors but before the other participating countries. Mr. Molotov indicated that he is agreeable. The Secretary asked whether it would not be embarrassing to single out one country for special treatment in this respect after France turns [turned?] down the opportunity of being a sponsor. Mr. Eden raised the question whether this matter might not be left to the Secretariat. Mr. Hiss stated that the view of the Secretariat is that there is no ground for giving France a special position in this respect but that he would, if agreeable, place the matter before the meeting of the heads of delegations to decide.12

Mr. Hiss mentioned the next item on the agenda having to do with allocations of officerships. He said that a meeting is set for 12:30 p. m. April 25 among deputies of the Foreign Ministers 13 to go into the matter further. Mr. Molotov suggested that the deputies exchange views on the subject. The Secretary suggested that decision be expedited and said that Mr. Dunn has complete authority to speak for the United States on this matter.

Mr. Hiss next referred to the subject of the unofficial observers of the five invited intergovernmental organizations being nationals of non-participating countries. Mr. Pavlov asked if the question involves only one person who is an Irish national. Mr. Hiss said that according to information already known to the Secretariat two Irish nationals and a Spanish national are involved. Mr. Molotov stated that the Soviet delegation will maintain its point of view on this question. Mr. Hiss pointed out that the invitations have already been delivered 14 and that the three persons are already present in San Francisco with the exception of one of the Irish nationals. Mr. Hiss added that such observers are unofficial and are subject to any limitations which the Conference may impose. He said that no specific action in the matter seems to be required of the Secretariat, but that Mr. Molotov is of course free to bring the subject up in such manner as he may wish. Mr. Molotov expressed agreement.

Mr. Hiss stated that he had informally received the information that the French Delegation will request that all speeches be put immediately into the French language which with English would be a working language of the Conference. Mr. Molotov asked why this proposal would not be acceded to. Dr. Soong stated that the business of the Conference would be unduly protracted thereby. Mr. Molotov suggested that it is necessary to convince the French that they should withdraw their request. Mr. Eden interposed that this would certainly be difficult. Mr. Molotov asked if there is not some way to meet the French demand half-way. The Secretary closed the subject by requesting Mr. Hiss to undertake to persuade the French Delegation to change its position with regard to this matter.

Mr. Hiss raised the matter of the request made by Mr. Hillman for the World Trade Union Conference to be invited to send a delegation to advise the San Francisco Conference and stated that he understood at the last meeting 15 that Mr. Molotov wished to consider the matter further. Mr. Molotov said to accede to the request would not be a bad thing, and that it might be discussed in the Steering Committee. The Secretary pointed out that the request was to serve in an advisory capacity to the Conference as a whole. Mr. Molotov said that the Soviet Delegation has already expressed to the World Trade Union Conference its approval of its request and that therefore anything other than favorable action to it would be embarrassing to the Soviet Delegation. Mr. Eden pointed out that the request was presented before the four sponsors and that if the sponsors are not in agreement in the matter it would presumably be necessary to report the fact to the Steering Committee. Mr. Molotov approved, and all agreed that the subject should be referred to the Steering Committee.

Mr. Hiss stated that papers suggesting a tentative and informal basis of organization and procedure of the Conference were yesterday circulated to the Secretaries General of the Delegations for their consideration.<sup>16</sup> Mr. Molotov said that it will be necessary to examine them. Mr. Hiss commented that the papers as circulated contain only points already agreed to between the various sponsors. Mr. Molotov said that he has not seen the papers and must withhold his position until he has had time to examine them. He asked further whether, among these papers, the agenda for the meeting of the April 26 Meeting of the Heads of Delegations is included, and Mr. Hiss replied in the affirmative. Copies were thereupon distributed among those pres-Mr. Molotov asked what is contemplated under point 4 of the proposed agenda (i.e., Nomination of the presiding officer or officers of the Conference). Mr. Hiss replied that the inclusion of this item in the Secretariat's paper is simply to propose that the subject be laid before the Meeting of the Heads of Delegations, and that the resultant action would, of course, depend on the decision of that meeting.

Mr. Molotov asked for an explanation of point 7. Mr. Hiss replied that when invitations to the San Francisco Conference were sent out the comments of the invited countries upon the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as supplemented at the Crimea Conference were invited; and that such comments submitted in response to that invitation 17 would logically be considered by the Conference.

Mr. Molotov asked if he might add one point to the agenda. proposed that the question of invitations to the White Russian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic be point 9 of the agenda. He stated that he must reserve the right to raise the question of the Yalta Agreement on the subject.

Mr. Eden stated that while he understands the Soviet Union's goal in the matter, he would appreciate enlightenment as to how Mr. Molotov proposes to go about it. Mr. Molotov replied that he should like to be permitted to raise the question before the Meeting of the Heads of Delegations. Mr. Eden asked whether Mr. Molotov would expect that the question would then be referred by the Meeting of the Heads of Delegations to the Conference itself. Mr. Molotov replied that he would expect that the question might go before any appropriate body of the Conference. He requested that he be empowered to argue the question before the Heads of Delegations and if possible to obtain their support of the Soviet Proposal. He stated that he sees no reason why the Meeting of the Heads of Delegations cannot vote and act upon the matter.

Mr. Eden noted that one of the committees proposed for the Conference, Committee 2 under Commission I, would presumably be concerned with this question. Mr. Molotov took exception, stating that that committee will be concerned with questions relating to the Charter and the permanent organization to be set up, but that his wish is to obtain consideration of the subject of the Yalta Agreement and initial participation.

Mr. Hiss stated that it has been the Secretariat's understanding that the agreement at Crimea relates to the initial membership of the International Organization. Mr. Molotov stated that such is not the fact, and that he wishes the point added to the agenda. The Secretary stated that the request is agreed to, and Mr. Hiss stated that the additional point as point 9 of the agenda will be immediately circulated to the Secretaries General of Delegations.<sup>19</sup>

Mr. Hiss asked for clarification as to whether Mr. Molotov's intention is to request the Meeting of the Heads of Delegations to vote upon his proposal. Mr. Molotov replied that he sees no reason why it should not.

Mr. Molotov brought up the subject of trusteeship discussions. The Secretary commented that the American Delegation has just arrived but that Mr. Dunn and Mr. Pasvolsky are prepared to discuss the matter with the others just as soon as immediately pressing conference arrangements are completed. Mr. Molotov remarked that the Soviet representatives are ready to discuss the question even today. Doctor Soong indicated that Mr. Koo is prepared to represent the Chinese in discussing the trusteeship question. Mr. Molotov named Mr. Sobolev for the same purpose. Mr. Eden said that he has no person in mind for this purpose and would presumably have to ask his Government. He added that he is not able to take a position in the trusteeship matter upon five minutes' notice, and that he must insist on opportunity to refer to his Government any proposals which the United States may have in mind.

Mr. Hiss proposed that the sponsors in speaking in the afternoon session on April 26, after remarks by the President of the Conference should speak in alphabetical order. Mr. Molotov expressed agreement, as did the others.

The Secretary stated that if a single presiding officer for the Conference should be chosen it might be wise for the sponsors to be in agreement about the position of the other three Foreign Ministers. Mr. Eden said that presumably the three would be Vice Presidents. Mr. Molotov said that if the Soviet proposal for a presidency of, four 20 should be turned down then the position of the Soviet Delegation would become the same as that of all other delegations. The Secretary asked if the Soviet Union would definitely decline a vice presidency if offered to it. Mr. Molotov replied in the affirmative, adding that the Soviet Union would carry on as other delegations and help.

The Secretary asked for any other suggestions in solution of the problem. Mr. Eden said that the question of the presidency should be left to the meeting of the heads of delegations as proposed by Mr. Molotov.

The Secretary asked Mr. Molotov for clarification as to how he would expect his proposal of a joint presidency of the Four Foreign Ministers to work in actual practice. Mr. Molotov replied that it would mean rotation. He amplified this statement by saying that one person would preside at one session, at the next session the next person would preside and so on.

The Secretary asked how the press conference would be handled. Mr. Molotov stated that no one person can be responsible for all such functions.

The Secretary stated that his instructions are to favor the choice of a single responsible presiding officer.

Mr. Molotov suggested adjournment, and the meeting concluded.

Minutes of the Seventeenth Meeting (Executive Session) of the United States Delegation, Held at San Francisco, Wednesday, April 25, 1945, 8:40 p.m.

[Informal Notes].

[Here follows list of names of persons (20) present at meeting.]
In opening the meeting the Secretary reported that he had talked briefly over the telephone to the President concerning the events of the day; that the President had received an encouraging and conciliatory message from Marshal Stalin; 21 and that the President was pleased with the progress of events in San Francisco.

The Secretary reported that he had talked to Mr. Hull on the telephone and that Mr. Hull was also pleased with the way events had moved in the opening session.

ELECTION OF PERMANENT PRESIDENT FOR CONFERENCE

The Secretary reported that he had just finished a conversation with Mr. Eden on the question of trying to find a compromise proposal which would be satisfactory to both the United States and the Soviet Union on the question of the election of a permanent President for the Conference. The Secretary stated that, in his view, the proposal to have four permanent Presidents—as suggested by the Soviet Delegation <sup>22</sup>—was dangerous because it might form a pattern and precedent for the International Organization when it was established. The Secretary reported that President Truman felt that it would be a tragedy if such a proposal were accepted by the Conference, and stated that the President said it was his view that the Delegation should insist upon one presiding officer.

The Secretary reported that Mr. Eden advanced a compromise proposal under which there would be a council of four presidents with the United States member being chairman of the council and the directing head of the Conference. Each of the presidents would preside in rotation from day to day. Messrs. Dunn and Pasvolsky pointed out that, if under such an arrangement the chairman of the council could not act without the agreement of the other three, it would be a very difficult and wholly unsatisfactory arrangement. If, on the other hand, the chairman could act without such agreement, it would be satisfactory.

The Secretary said that, in his view, the British proposal would not be acceptable to the Soviet Union; that the latter wanted to have four presidents of the Conference with equal rank and authority. The Secretary then inquired from Ambassador Harriman as to whether in the latter's view the Soviet Union would attempt to carry such a pattern over into the world organization. The Ambassador replied in the negative.

Senator Vandenberg raised the question as to what would happen if the United States maintained its position of proposing a single president as the operating head of the Conference. The Secretary replied that if such a position were maintained and agreement was not reached in the four-power consultations, then the matter would have to go to n For message of April 24 from Marshal Stalin to President Truman, see vol. v, the Steering Committee of the Conference, in which event he felt sure that the United States would win its point. In that event, there was a good likelihood that Molotov might refuse to serve as a vice-chairman of the Conference, although there was no doubt in his mind that Eden and Soong would accept vice-chairmanships.

Mr. Hackworth pointed out that this same question had been involved in selecting the chairman of the Committee of Jurists at the meeting in Washington.<sup>23</sup>

Commander Stassen observed that the Soviet proposal for four chairmen of equal rank was really an application of the veto principle of the voting procedure in the Security Council.

In response to a request from the Secretary, Mr. Pasvolsky stated that it was his view that the United States should maintain its position that there should be only one President of the Conference, with three Vice-Presidents.

Representative Eaton also made it clear that it was his view that the Delegation should not accede to the Soviet position.

The Secretary then inquired of Messrs. Rockefeller and Dunn as to whether the other countries at the Conference would support the United States position. Mr. Rockefeller said that the Latin American representatives thought that the Soviet proposal for four chairmen was absurd; that in Inter-American conferences the chairman of the delegation of the host country always had the honor of being the permanent chairman of the conference; and that the Chilean representatives had specifically told Mr. Molotov that the Soviet proposal was absurd. Mr. Dunn stated that he could not answer positively what would be the attitude of the countries other than the Latin American ones, but that, in his opinion, most of them would feel that the issue was not important enough to incur the displeasure of the Soviet Union by voting against the Soviet proposal.

Mr. Pasvolsky then proposed that the United States could conceivably take a new position—different from both the British and the Soviet proposals—along the following lines: The Conference would have four chairmen for plenary sessions who would serve in rotation but that there would be no President of the Conference as such. Instead, the Secretary would serve as chairman of the Steering and Executive Committees of the Conference and would be responsible for the executive management of the Conference as a whole. Mr. Dulles said that, in his opinion, such a proposal if advanced by the United States, would be a blow to our prestige.

&lt;sup>22</sup> For documentation on the United Nations Committee of Jurists meeting in Washington from April 9 to April 20, 1945, see The International Court of Justice; also, UNCIO Documents, vol. 14. For note of April 11 from Ambassador Gromyko to Secretary Stettinius protesting the failure to accept the Soviet proposal regarding the question of chairmanship, see ante, p. 269.

Following a general discussion of the problems involved—in which Messrs. Bloom, Stassen, Armstrong and Connally participated—the Secretary asked which position, in the opinion of the Delegates and Advisers, should the United States assume. It was the unanimous opinion of the Delegates and Advisers that the Secretary should insist upon the United States position of one President for the Conference who would serve as its executive head.

Accordingly, the Secretary asked Mr. Hiss to telephone Sir Alexander Cadogan and to convey to him the fact that the United States Delegation would continue to maintain its position that there should be one presiding officer for the Conference and three vice-presidents representing the other sponsoring powers, with the understanding that such vice-presidents would be invited by the President of the Conference to preside over the plenary sessions.

COMMISSION AND COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS

Mr. Hiss said that the British Delegation was proposing a shift in the chairmanships of Commissions I and II. The current proposal was for Commission I to have as its chairman a representative from South Africa, while Commission II would have a representative from Belgium. The British were proposing that these two assignments be exchanged, so that Field Marshal Smuts, the South African representative, would become chairman of Commission II, where his prestige would be more greatly needed than in Commission I.<sup>24</sup>

The Delegation agreed to this proposal and Mr. Hiss was instructed to inform the British representatives of this fact.

SEATING OF TWO SOVIET REPUBLICS

At the request of the Secretary, Mr. Dunn reported a discussion that he had had with Ambassador Gromyko. He said that the United States had agreed to the Soviet proposal that the Executive Committee be enlarged by the addition of three more members. However, the Soviets refused to agree to the slate of Commission and Committee chairmen and officials because the two Soviet Republics were not listed for any of the positions. It so happened, Mr. Dunn reported, that there were two vacancies on the proposed slate of candidates, one a chairman of a Committee and another a rapporteur of a Committee. The Soviets wished to have representatives of the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics named to these two posts. Mr. Dunn stated that he had explained to Mr. Gromyko that such an assignment could not be made until the Conference had passed on the question of whether the Soviet Republics were to be seated.

The Secretary pointed out that it was possible to propose the slate of candidates for Commission and Committee posts without approval of the Soviet Union, and for the Steering Committee to refer the proposed membership to a special subcommittee. Mr. Rockefeller agreed to such a procedure, stating that he was sure the Latin American Republics would support it. Mr. Dunn stated that he was not so sure of the support of the European countries, particularly the smaller ones who might be wary of a Soviet reaction.

It was clear, the Secretary said, that this question was not only bringing into the first sessions of the Conference the question of admission of the two Soviet Republics as initial members of the International Organization but was also raising the problem of the status of Argentina. Mr. Stassen proposed that Argentina and the two Soviet Republics might be seated at the Conference during the third week, although it could be agreed to earlier that they would become initial members of the International Organization. The Secretary pointed out that such a proposal was bound to meet opposition from President Truman, who was dead set against Argentina's being admitted to the United Nations.

Mr. Dunn therefore suggested that the Secretary General of the Conference propose the slate of Commission and Committee posts as it stood, and if it were not accepted by the Steering Committee, it would then be referred to a special subcommittee of the Steering Committee. The Secretary stated that he was concerned as to the countries which would be appointed as members of such a Subcommittee.

During the discussion that followed, it was brought out that the Secretary had inquired from the President as to his attitude regarding a public announcement of the United States attitude on admitting the two Soviet Republics to the Organization. At this juncture Mr. Dunn reported that the Soviets had insisted that an item be placed on the agenda for the first meeting of the Steering Committee covering the question of the admission of the two Republics to the Organization.

The Secretary asked the Delegation's opinion as to whether if this question of the two Republics was reached the next day in the Steering Committee, he should read President Truman's letter to the Committee stating the reasons why the United States would support the Soviet proposal. Senator Connally felt that the reading of such a letter might expose the strategy being followed by the Delegation and would thus weaken its hand. Mr. Stassen also pointed out that reading the letter might carry the implication that the United States Delegation was supporting the Soviet proposal only because it was a commitment by former President Roosevelt, and in this event, it would tend to further weaken the United States position. Representative Bloom questioned the advisability of reading the letter, pointing out that what had been said in the letter had previously been stated publicly in the Secretary's press statement of two or three weeks ago.<sup>25</sup>

Messrs. Dunn and Hiss tried to resolve the issue by pointing out that there would be really two proposals to be faced in the Steering Committee. The first of these would be whether the two Soviet Republics would become initial members of the general international organization, and the second would be whether they should be seated at the Conference. The Secretary said that in such event he thought the Delegation should vote to approve the first and to disapprove the second. Mr. Rockefeller said that in his opinion the Latin American countries would not support either of these proposals unless the Argentine question was settled; he pointed out that the Latin American countries would want to support the United States but would no doubt vote to defer action if they were free to do so.

At this point, Mr. Dulles stated that he felt that the discussion of the Delegation was dealing too much with the details of negotiations which the Secretary would have to face on the following day; that what was really needed was for the Delegation to settle the large issues involved and to leave to the Secretary the details of handling the negotiations themselves.

Again Mr. Rockefeller, in response to requests from members of the Delegation, made the point that if the approval of the seating of the two Soviet Republics were given by the Conference, the Argentina question would be up at once, since the Latin American Republics would feel that Argentina should be given equal treatment.

Reverting to the proposal of Commander Stassen that Argentina be seated three weeks after the Conference opened, the Secretary polled the Delegation—Dean Gildersleeve questioned the advisability of such a procedure; Senators Connally and Vandenberg approved the proposal, as did Representatives Bloom and Eaton and Commander Stassen. Dr. Bowman suggested that, in view of this opinion of the Delegation, he felt that the two Soviet Republics should be brought in at the same time.

The Secretary then raised the question as to whether he should see Molotov at once on the question of the two Soviet Republics. Messrs. Harriman and Bohlen stated that he should not do so unless he could give the assurance that the vote on the seating of the two Republics would be favorable. This, in turn, brought up the question of Argentina, and the Secretary again gave it as his opinion that the President would be very adamant on the Argentine question. Mr. Bohlen inquired as to whether the question of the two Soviet Republics could be separated from that of Argentina. Mr. Rockefeller replied that that would be giving away our bargaining position with the Latin American countries.

Dr. Bowman said that the issues seemed to resolve into the following points: (1) whether to admit the two Soviet Republics to initial membership; (2) whether to seat the two Soviet Republics at the Conference; and (3) whether to admit Argentina and seat it at the Conference. He gave it as his opinion that the United States position on item (1) was clear, but that decision on items (2) and (3) would have to be delayed until the matters could be cleared with the President.

The Secretary then inquired the opinion of the Delegation as to whether they would agree to the seating of both of the Soviet Republics and Argentina within, say, three weeks from the opening of the Conference. Representative Bloom and Senator Connally agreed to such a procedure. Senator Vandenberg at first disapproved, then subsequently reserved his position. Representative Eaton agreed to the position, as did Commander Stassen. In this connection, Senator Connally also said that he felt that the United States Delegation was quibbling over an interpretation of the words "original member"; that if the United States were committed to the admission of the two Republics as original members, it seemed to be morally committed also to seating them at the Conference. The Secretary was very insistent that no such commitment as the latter had ever been made.

The Secretary then said that he would call the President early in the morning and state that the majority of the Delegation agreed to the admission of the two Soviet Republics as original members of the organization and that the two Soviet Republics and Argentina should be seated at the Conference at a later date. At this point the Secretary and Representative Eaton left the meeting.

RAPPORTEUR OF STEERING COMMITTEE

Mr. Rockefeller said that since Chile had been moved to a post on the Executive Committee of the Conference, a question of prestige among the Latin American Republics was raised. Therefore, he proposed that Cuba be made the rapporteur for the Steering Committee, a post which did not appear on the Conference chart at the time.

After discussion, Mr. Rockefeller's proposal was approved and Mr. Dunn was asked to clear it with the British, Chinese and Soviet Delegations.

The meeting adjourned at 10:30 p.m. with the agreement of the Delegation that they would convene again at 9:30 the next morning.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of persons (19) present at meeting.] Senator Connally presided during the absence of Secretary Stettinius <sup>26</sup> and called the meeting to order at 9:30 a. m. Senator Connally called upon Mr. Pasvolsky to present the business that should come before the Delegation.

CHAPTER II—PRINCIPLES, PARAGRAPH 8 27

Mr. Pasvolsky said that before taking up the deferred items on the agenda for the meeting, he wanted to bring before the group two points raised by the military advisers. The first one referred to Chapter II, paragraph 8. He reminded the group that it had been agreed to support the sense of this paragraph, but it had not yet been adopted in final form. The military advisers thought it would be better to omit the phrase "and treaty obligations". They thought it would be enough to stick to "respect international law . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . and promote its development and adaptation to changing conditions".

Senator Vandenberg asked why the omission was suggested. Senator Connally remarked that it was desirable to leave in the reference to law, but it might not be desirable to leave the guarantee of treaty obligations. Senator Vandenberg asked if it was not desirable to respect treaty obligations. Mr. Sandifer commented that it was self-evident that as long as treaties were in force, they should be respected. Senator Connally said that the proposed Charter did not, however, admit that obligations to support treaties were assumed everywhere.

CHAPTER III—MEMBERSHIP, PARAGRAPH 1

Senator Connally said further that he wanted, himself, to raise a question about Chapter III, "Membership", paragraph 1, especially the phrase "all peace-loving states". He would like to have a definition of what is a state. He wondered, for example, whether India could be considered a state. It was true that this matter could be considered later. Mr. Bowman remarked that a memorandum on the status of various political units 29 had been prepared, and Senator Connally said he would like very much to have a copy. He then asked Mr. Pasvolsky to proceed.

CHAPTER V-THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, SECTION B, PARAGRAPH 1

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the second point arose out of Chapter V, Section B. paragraph 1. He recalled that the Delegation had agreed to support, although not to take the initiative in proposing, the amendment of the last clause of the first sentence to read: "and to formulate treaties embodying such principles and their application for submission to the member states for ratification". The military advisers objected to this provision on the grounds that the job of planning for the regulation of armaments was given to the Security Council under the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. 30 If, however, the General Assembly begins to formulate a draft convention and insists on carrying through its application, there could be a conflict between the two bodies. Mr. Pasvolsky was inclined to think that this proposition should be dropped. He thought it would be better to take out at this point any reference to the power of the General Assembly to draft treaties or conventions for submission to the members. This power would be applicable to other aspects of the General Assembly's responsibility, but it might be handled at more appropriate points. Senator Connally said that under the present provisions and on the principle of differentiation between the Security Council and the Assembly, the latter body could discuss these matters but could not compel the states to comply with its suggestions. thought this was a very important point. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that all the Security Council could do in the regulation of armaments was to propose plans for acceptance by the member states.

Mr. Pasvolsky asked Senator Vandenberg if he was satisfied that the language was clear enough. Mr. Stassen asked exactly what it was that would be struck out. Senator Connally said that if the Security Council had already been given the power to prepare draft agreements on the regulation of armaments, it would probably not be good to have this power vested in the General Assembly. Mr. Pasvolsky said that the United States all along had wanted all the power relating to armaments assigned to the Security Council. The Soviet Union, however, had wanted it assigned to the General Assembly and wanted the Assembly to discuss disarmament as well as regulation of armaments. The text incorporated in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals was a compromise. The General Assembly was given the right to discuss principles but without power to do anything more than make recommendations. It was true that somewhere in the Charter it should probably be recognized that it was within the field of operations of the General Assembly to formulate treaties for submission to the member states. However, it would be better not to include it at this point. Moreover, he thought it would be best for the United States not to take the initiative, but to wait to see what other countries had to propose on this point.

Mr. Notter commented that under the present language the General Assembly had the power to consider without the power to put recommendations into effect. The General Assembly could state principles without imposing an obligation to live up to them. If the General Assembly had no power to formulate treaties for submission to the members, then it could only talk and not really do anything. He was under the impression that the American Delegation meant to try to build up the power of the General Assembly, but he thought that could not be done if the Assembly was restricted merely to general discussion.

[At this point the Secretary entered the meeting, and the discussion of the points raised by Mr. Pasvolsky was suspended while he consulted the delegates about two matters that he had discussed with the President, namely, the status of the two Soviet Republics and the position of Argentina.] 31

Position of Argentina and Admission of Two Soviet Republics

The Secretary said it was reported that Perón resigned the previous evening.<sup>32</sup> The President had agreed that the United States might approve an invitation to Argentina to attend the Conference at a later date if this invitation was understood not to include Argentina's signing the United Nations Declaration. As to the Soviet Republics, the President was willing to have the United States support actively the request of the Soviet Union that the Ukraine and White Russia be included among the initial members. He was also willing to have us support a move to have representatives of the two Soviet Republics seated in the Conference, but only at a later date. The Secretary said that he had to go immediately to see Molotov about the question of the two Soviet Republics, and he wanted to be able to assure him that the request would be granted when it was raised. He said he did not intend to discuss the question of Argentina with Molotov. Others might do it, but the United States would not. Before going, however, he needed the quick reaction of the American Delegation.

Representative Bloom said that he had understood from Assistant Secretary Rockefeller that the South American Republics wanted Argentina to sign the United Nations Declaration. The Secretary said he had information today that they were willing to drop that part of it. Mr. Stassen asked whether it would not be necessary as a preliminary step to Argentina's being invited to sit in on the Confer-The Secretary replied that Argentina would be satisfied with this arrangement. Senator Connally asked why the United States was so opposed to having Argentina sign the United Nations Declara-The Secretary replied that sentimentally we oppose it. We just cannot let Argentina come in at the last minute on a Declaration pledging full support to the war against the Axis when the Argentines had not given such support. It would spoil the spirit of the Declaration and would not be well received by a great many of the countries that had signed it in good faith.

Mr. Dulles asked whether the admission of Argentina without its signing the United Nations Declaration would open the way to demands from the other states that had not been invited to the Conference. The Secretary replied that it undoubtedly would have that result. He was sure, for example, that Representative Marcantonio 83 would make a long speech in the House about the fact that Italy was left out. There might be serious repercussions on American public opinion. Mr. Dulles said that he personally would not oppose having the Conference at the end become more universal in its membership. The Secretary said that it would be difficult to do that because if Switzerland and Portugal were invited, for example, the U.S.S.R. would object strongly. Moreover, he said that there was a distinction—that Argentina had declared war and was not a neutral country.

The Secretary then asked each of the Delegates for concurrence in the decisions about Argentina and the Soviet Republics. Senator Vandenberg said that the Secretary should proceed as he thought best, although his own position remained as it was. Mr. Stassen said it would be very important to delay the matter of inviting the Ukraine and White Russia to the Conference in order to give time for the preparation of American opinion. Senator Vandenberg asked what we were going to get in exchange for our concession on this point, and Mr. Stassen replied that we would get the basis for insisting that the Soviet Government should follow through on Poland. Senator Vandenberg said he hoped we would not go through the same process with regard to Poland, of giving in at the last moment. The Secretary said that he thought there was no danger of that, especially since he had seen the President's telegram on Poland.34 He stated that there was a serious crisis now, in which the United States had to make this concession in order to keep the Soviet Government in the Conference. Mr. Armstrong said he thought it would be most important to get a delay on the request for seating representatives of the two Soviet Republics in the Conference. The Delegates agreed to the position that the Secretary had stated on the questions of Argentina and the Soviet Republics.

[The Secretary left the meeting to speak to the Consultants Group for a few minutes and then to see the Soviet Foreign Minister.<sup>35</sup>]

CHAPTER V—THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, SECTION B, PARAGRAPH 1

Senator Connally suggested that the group resume its consideration of paragraph 1 of Section B in Chapter V. Mr. Pasvolsky said that if the clause in question was taken out, the power of the General Assembly to make recommendations on the general principles of cooperation and the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, would be restored. Senator Connally said that if there was no objection, this clause would be struck out. There being no objection, he stated that the Delegation had agreed.

CHAPTER VIII, SECTION B, PARAGRAPH 1

Mr. Dulles said that he wanted to raise one question before the discussion turned away from this paragraph. According to the language now proposed, the General Assembly does not have the power to make specific recommendations for the settlement of a dispute, and the Security Council does not have that power either. It seemed to him that the revised text of the Proposals did not permit any action on the merits of a dispute, and there was no real conflict on this matter between the Security Council and the General Assembly.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that under paragraph 1, Section B of Chapter VIII the authority to recommend procedures and terms of settlement would lie in the Security Council if it was determined that a threat to the peace exists. The Security Council under this paragraph would have unlimited powers to avert a threat to international peace and security and could even impose the terms of settlement. Perhaps this provision goes too far, but this is a possible interpretation.

Mr. Dulles said that it was a sweeping power, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied that if there was a threat to the peace the Security Council had to have very wide powers of action. Mr. Dulles said that under this power the Security Council could give the Sudetenland to Germany or could give Alaska to Russia in order to keep the peace. Mr. Bloom and Mr. Stassen said simultaneously that it must be remembered that the five permanent members would have to agree in order to impose terms. Mr. Dulles said that because of the veto power the United States would not be subjected to the imposition of terms of settlement, but that it would be terrific to put the small powers under such a threat. Mr. Notter commented that two of the non-permanent members of the Council would have to agree.

Mr. Dulles stated that he thought that the provisions of VIII, B 1 [It should take any measures necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Organization.] referred to policing measures, such as economic sanctions and military enforcement. He did not think it was intended to decide such matters as revision of immigration or tariff policies or territorial revisions. Mr. Bloom asked if domestic questions could be subjected to the action of the Security Council. Mr. Dulles replied that the exemption of domestic affairs from the jurisdiction of the Organization applied only to the measures outlined in Section A of Chapter VIII. Mr. Pasvolsky observed that the Security Council could do anything and take any steps if peace and security were affected. Representative Bloom said that undoubtedly the immigration policy of the United States had been considered by Japan a threat to peace, and Mr. Pasvolsky answered that Japan had never given any indication of wanting to go to war over it. Representative Bloom said that in his opinion this provision went very far.

Mr. Sandifer said that this provision applied to an actual threat to or breach of the peace. If domestic affairs were excluded in such a situation, it would be difficult for the Organization to preserve peace under all circumstances. Certainly if there was an actual threat to the peace, the Organization must deal with it. Mr. Notter remarked that this provision would not come into operation until the parties had failed to settle a dispute by means of their own choosing and until the Security Council had failed to get them to settle their dispute peacefully. Finally, the Security Council might determine in such a case that the continuance of the dispute was a threat to the peace and that, if peace was to be maintained, the Council must have the power to deal with the dispute. Representative Bloom said that only Congress can regulate domestic matters.

Senator Connally said that, while it was true that the United States had a veto power in the Security Council, it seemed to him to be putting too much power and responsibility in the hands of one man to decide when that veto should be exercised. Mr. Dulles commented that if we should have as President or as delegate to the Security Council someone who believed that the immigration or tariff policies of the United States should be changed, then by not exercising the veto he could enable the international organization to force the United States to change them. Mr. Stassen said that this pointed up another problem, and he thought it most important: that when Congress decides about the position of the delegate to the Security Council, it must restrict his powers very carefully. Mr. Dulles said that if paragraph 1 means what Mr. Pasvolsky says it does, Congress will certainly act to restrain the American delegate, and Mr. Stassen said that it should certainly do so. Representative Bloom queried why some such restriction should not be put in here.

Mr. Pasvolsky asked the group how the matter should be handled. Mr. Dulles said he thought that the word "measures" should be read in the context of the next paragraphs. He could see that it would include invoking sanctions in order to prevent nations from going to war, but he thought it would be going too far to decide substantive questions and remake the world economically and socially. He suggested that the phrase be amended to read: "measures of the character hereinafter referred to". Senator Connally thought this would be too broad because it might be taken to refer to all the rest of the Charter. Mr. Dulles said that in that case it could be restricted to the measures hereinafter referred to in this Chapter. [Mr. Pasvolsky left the meeting at this point.] Mr. Stassen said he thought that the experts had better confer on this matter and readvise the Delegates with regard to the interpretation of paragraph 1 and any possible revision that should be proposed or supported.

Mr. Dulles said that measures of pacific settlement would already have been attempted, and when those had failed, the dispute would come under the provisions of Section B. He thought it right to say to the member states, "If you go to war, the Organization will impose diplomatic and economic sanctions or call out the contingents of armed forces to bomb your cities." Senator Connally added that this was, however, wholly different from settling disputes. Mr. Dulles thought that the measures referred to ought not to include that. There would certainly be discrimination if the Security Council could impose settlements. It put too great a power in the Security Council, and it was not fair to subject small countries to it. Mr. Stassen said he thought that the measures referred to in this paragraph involved alternative means of action if disputes were not settled on the recommendations of the Organization or on some other basis. He did not think the Security Council could create substantive changes unless the disputants agreed, although they might be made to agree under pressure.

Mr. Notter said that in drafting the Proposals one theory had been followed. The International Organization is being created because the nations want peace. It is not basically concerned with just settlements. It says to the nations, "You cannot fight", and in Section A many procedures are offered for settlement without the use of force. Under Section A the Security Council has no right to recommend the terms of settlement. Under paragraph 1 of Section B, however, as a very last resort to keep the peace the Security Council would have the power to recommend terms of settlement in order to prevent a given dispute from continually threatening the peace of the world. Mr.

Bowman said it was his recollection that there had originally been a provision for the Security Council to recommend terms of settlement, and Mr. Notter added that that was before the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations.

Mr. Notter said it was conceivable that the Security Council would apply force in order to preserve peace, and then, when the immediate crisis had passed, the parties might again threaten war, and it might be necessary to achieve a settlement in order to keep them from starting over again. If they do threaten to start over again, the Organization is in a dilemma as to whether to keep on applying force or to try to settle the matter itself. Mr. Sandifer said that if the Organization is to maintain peace, it must at some point be able to establish terms of settlement, and if it has that power, it would come in at this point in the Charter. Such a provision would not be unusual, however. Under the League of Nations Covenant, Article 11, if the Council voted unanimously to approve the terms of settlement the parties had to accept them.<sup>36</sup> Mr. Dulles said that he did not recall this part of the Covenant. However, it was important to remember that the League of Nations did not impose obligations as far reaching as those involved in this Organization. Moreover, the Council's vote would now be seven out of eleven-not unanimous.

Mr. Armstrong asked whether anyone had ever suggested that the powers of the League of Nations were too broad because of the power of the Council to impose the terms of settlement. Mr. Gerig said that in the Covenant there had been no limitation on the power of the League in this respect. Senator Connally said that there would be serious difficulty in the Senate if paragraph 1 were construed to give the Security Council the power to impose terms of settlement.

Senator Vandenberg asked whether the power to take any measures necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security was not qualified by the clause "in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Organization and the provisions of this Charter". Mr. Bowman said that this was the only place in the Proposals where the ultimate possibility of action was referred to. Mr. Bowman said that under the League of Nations and in the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations this was really a key question and that the language to cover it had not yet really been devised.

Senator Vandenberg asked if Mr. Dulles would be satisfied if the word "measures" were construed to cover the provisions of paragraph 3. Mr. Dulles replied that paragraphs 3 and 4, to his mind, were included under the word "measures". Mr. Notter added that the provision would mean, then, that the Organization would have no power to recommend terms of settlement. Mr. Dulles said that the power to make recommendations had been taken from the Assembly. He thought it strange that if the Organization was to recommend terms of settlement, the power was not included in Section A, which deals with the situation before the fighting starts.

Mr. Notter said that the Assembly can still make recommendations if the Council does not act on a dispute. Senator Connally said that if the Security Council, acting under Section A, had already tried to bring about a peaceful solution but had failed, then the word "any" in paragraph 1 of Section B means something more than has already been attempted. This constituted a very wide sweep of authority. Mr. Bowman suggested that the measures contained in paragraphs 2 and 3 defining the powers of the Security Council were really paralyzing powers and that if thoroughly applied they could stop unlawful action by the offending states. He doubted that it was necessary to assume that some ultimate great last resort has to be spelled out here. It seemed to him that peace would be restored and the dispute settled long before the states would let themselves be driven to that point.

Mr. Armstrong observed that before Munich, Czechoslovakia would have been delighted to have an International Organization take the measures foreseen in paragraphs 3 and 4, but it would certainly not have agreed to the terms of the Munich settlement. Mr. Dulles said he feared that the World Organization, in a second Munich, could say to the disputing states, "If you do not accept the terms here laid down the enforcement measures such as economic sanctions and military pressure will be applied against you." It would become too easy to give away the territory and the rights of the small nations in order to appease possible aggressors. This would be a far greater power than ought to be given to the World Organization.

Senator Vandenberg asked Mr. Notter if he believed that this was meant by the wording of paragraph 1. Mr. Notter replied that respect for the sovereign equality of the members included respect for their territory, and he did not see how the Organization in that case would have a right to impose settlements involving the giving up of territory by any state. Mr. Armstrong commented that many modifications of sovereignty had been accepted in these Proposals, and that as a matter of fact every obligation that was undertaken by a state modified its sovereignty. Mr. Notter added that these obligations were, however, freely given and defined. Mr. Stassen said that this paragraph was open to the interpretation that it did not give the Security Council the power to change territories or matters within domestic jurisdiction without the consent of the states involved.

Senator Connally commented that if there was as much difference of opinion elsewhere as there was in the American Delegation about the interpretation of this paragraph, it should be more clearly defined. Mr. Stassen said he believed that the Advisers should discuss the matter thoroughly and report back the result of their discussion. Mr. Dulles said that he would like to know more clearly the views of the Delegation as to what should be incorporated here, and then the Advisers could find the language to reflect their views, but he felt that the Advisers needed an indication of policy.

Senator Vandenberg asked if the question would be covered by stating that the Security Council could take such measures as are described in Section B of Chapter VIII. Mr. Stassen said that since the Principal Advisers seemed to disagree in their interpretation of the paragraph, he believed that they must go over it again and reach some agreement. Mr. Bowman said that the matter had been discussed endlessly in the State Department, and then the question had been taken to Dumbarton Oaks and the controversy had raged again there.37 It was his belief that the problem would still come up in the Organization if it were not clarified in the Charter. Now it was facing the American Delegation, and we would have to take some decision on it. He wanted to know the judgment of the Delegation as to whether an attempt should be made to deal with the last, ultimate consequences, assuming that such a point must inevitably be reached. Perhaps another position would be feasible, and he thought that the Advisers must be guided by the political judgment of the Delegates on this point.

Senator Vandenberg said that he proceeded on the assumption expressed by Mr. Bowman that the measures described in paragraphs 3 and 4 could be so totally paralyzing that it is needless to go beyond them in the document. Mr. Gerig said that it must be kept in mind that many of the other countries wanted to have a phrase guaranteeing territorial integrity and political independence. This guarantee had been left out of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals deliberately.

Mr. Bowman added that while everyone would like to have boundaries drawn so that they could be permanent as well as possible and ideal, we cannot let boundaries be broken down continuously and cannot allow indiscriminate free migration across them. There are some boundary disputes in the world that are not yet settled, and we do not want to give the interpretation that all the treaties governing boundaries will be torn up on every complaint. There will be some cases, for example, the eastern boundary of Poland and the boundaries of Southern Albania, where there will be frequent disputes. We do not want to shut off every chance for adjustment, and we should leave it open to the Council to make some investigations and assist in the ultimate settlement of these problems.

As to the matter of sovereign equality and the integrity of states, the memorandum prepared by Mr. Gerig 38 indicates how the relationships of certain states to others vary, and it is difficult to define their exact degree of sovereignty and independence. The number of these political units goes up to about 70. The first 45 or so can be considered fully independent, but the sovereignty of the remainder is qualified in some degree. We have to leave out of the Charter any attempt to define a state or to guarantee boundaries, but we should come as close as possible to maintaining the integrity and independence of political units by regulating their behavior and preventing aggression. The question is likely to be discussed in the Conference and to rage in the Senate. On the one hand, we cannot guarantee boundaries. On the other, we cannot proceed to tear them up constantly. In order to make an adjustment a state must have a real case. In the matter of relationships of states, we must start where we are and work out from this point. We cannot jump to the millenium.

Representative Bloom said he was somewhat concerned about the matter of guaranteeing all the new boundaries that would be made at the end of this war. Mr. Bowman said we would have no difficulty with the enemy states, since they were not signing this document, but there might be troubles with many of our present allies.

Senator Connally stated that paragraph 1 of Section B would come into play if a dispute cannot be settled even though every attempt has been made to settle it under paragraphs 3 to 5 of Section A.

[3. The parties to any dispute the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security should obligate themselves, first of all, to seek a solution by negotiation, mediation, conciliation, arbitration or judicial settlement, or other peaceful means of their own choice. The Security Council should call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

4. If, nevertheless, parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in paragraph 3 above fail to settle it by the means indicated in that paragraph, they should obligate themselves to refer it to the Security Council. The Security Council should in each case decide whether or not the continuance of the particular dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, and, accordingly, whether the Security Council should deal with the dispute, and, if so, whether it should take action under paragraph 5.

5. The Security Council should be empowered, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in paragraph 3 above, to recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.]

It was his interpretation that the word "any" in Section B, paragraph 1, meant additional powers.

Mr. Bowman said he agreed with the suggestion made by Mr. Dulles and would subscribe to it, since he thought it was better not to attempt to meet the ultimate possible crisis. He could see that there might be many questions coming up on the imposition of settlements and that such a provision would mean all things to all men. Mr. Dulles said that we face a dilemma. The small states are clearly afraid that under paragraph 1 of Section B another Munich could be imposed and there could be a new wave of appeasement. That is why they want to guarantee territories and boundaries. Such a guarantee, in his view, was not the answer, and he thought it would certainly produce war if the Organization attempted to guarantee boundaries in perpetuity. He would advocate making it clear that the provisions of paragraph 1 do not extend to giving the power to the big nations to sacrifice small ones but only to preventing changes through violence.

Senator Vandenberg asked what language could be used to clarify this matter. Mr. Sandifer suggested empowering the Security Council to take any means "as hereinafter specified in this Section". Mr. Notter suggested examining just what that would mean. After all of the conditions foreseen in Section A had been dealt with, we passed, in Section B, to the first stage of enforcement measures. He called attention to paragraph 2 of Section B, which he thought made it clear that the Security Council should have the power to recommend terms of settlement but not to impose them.

[2. In general the Security Council should determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression and should make recommendations or decide upon the measures to be taken to maintain or restore peace and security.]

He thought it most important that the Security Council should be enabled to mediate adjustments, and if it could make recommendations regarding terms of settlement, it might not have to use force in order to preserve peace. Senator Connally said that paragraph 2 would undoubtedly have to be adapted also. Mr. Dulles said that these two paragraphs could not be redrafted extemporaneously but would require a little more study. Mr. Stassen said he thought that the Advisers should consider the matter carefully in the light of the discussion.

Mr. Bowman said he felt the Delegates had now given the necessary guidance, and he wanted only to be sure that it was agreed that we would not pursue all the ramifications of the theory of maintaining peace. He believed that the intention of the Organization to encourage peaceful settlement was spelled out in paragraph 3 of Section A. Section B, however, described the working of the Organization in case these efforts at peaceful settlement were to break down. Mr. Gerig said that paragraph B, 2 was really sufficient without paragraph 1, and he recalled that at one time paragraph 1 was actually the last paragraph in Section A. When the possible voting formula had been discussed at Dumbarton Oaks, it was decided that it would be better to have this paragraph under Section B. He thought that paragraph 2 covered everything that was important in paragraph 1.

Mr. Bowman commented that there were many people who wanted a complete and perfect system of philosophy, and others wanted to implement a philosophy. It was difficult to attain a perfect system in the present world with all its interconnections. He thought that the Charter should be short and to the point and should indicate a wide range of means, powers, and procedures for accomplishing the basic purposes. He thought it unnecessary to fill out all the corners. If the Delegates were agreed on their point of view, the Advisers could develop the text.

Senator Connally asked if the Delegates agreed that the Advisers should reconsider paragraphs 1 and 2 of Section B. Senator Vandenberg said he was willing to have them proceed on that basis. Senator Connally added that the Advisers should consider paragraph 2 together with paragraph 1 and recommend a revision of the text to limit the word "measures" to the enforcement action envisaged in paragraphs 3 and 4. Mr. Bowman said he was sure that the Advisers could bring the text into harmony with the views of the Delegation.

CHAPTER II—PRINCIPLES, PARAGRAPH 4 AND THE PROBLEM OF SELF-DEFENSE

Mr. Sandifer called attention to the items on the agenda for this meeting. The first of the deferred items was Chapter II, paragraph 4. Mr. Sandifer read the text with the proposed amendments: "All members of the Organization shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force in any manner inconsistent with the purposes and principles of the Organization and the provisions of its Charter". He stated that the question was whether the phrase "and principles" and the "and the provisions of its Charter" should be included.

Mr. Stassen said he objected to the new language because if Russia vetoed action by the Organization, he wanted it to be possible for the United States to take whatever action was necessary, consistent with the purposes of the Organization. He believed the original language, confining the obligation to refraining from the use of force in a manner inconsistent with the purposes, was preferable.

Senator Vandenberg said he was nervous about the problem of self-defense in view of the long arguments that had occurred in the Senate when the Kellogg-Briand Pact <sup>39</sup> came up. The Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate had never been willing to yield until a reservation on the subject of self-defense was made. <sup>40</sup> Mr. Dulles said he thought it would be better to go back to the original language. Senator Vandenberg, rereading the original language, said he would support it. Senator Connally stated that the Delegation had now agreed to support the text of this paragraph as it stood in the Proposals.

Senator Connally said he would appreciate it very much if he could have a statement on the subject of self-defense to use when the Charter comes before the Senate. Mr. Sandifer said he agreed with the importance of a statement on this point, especially since there was nothing in the Proposals. Mr. Gerig commented that the problem of self-defense could be looked at in the light of Section A, paragraph 3, which describes the measures to which parties to a dispute are expected to resort for peaceful settlement. If, in spite of the willingness of a state to resort to these measures, it is attacked by military force, then clearly such a state has the right to defend itself. Mr. Stassen said he thought that interpretation was sound, but that it would still be useful to have an authoritative explanation that could be used when necessary.

Senator Connally asked Mr. Sandifer to proceed with the agenda of the meeting, and Mr. Sandifer called attention to the unnumbered paragraph proposed for inclusion in Chapter II, "Principles".

[The Organization should insure that states not members of the Organization should not interfere with action taken by the Organization, in accordance with these principles, for the maintenance of international peace and security.]

Senator Vandenberg said he hoped someone would give him and Senator Connally a statement of the State Department's conception of the answer to the argument on self-defense. Mr. Notter said that such a statement had already been drafted and would be available if needed. Senator Connally said he believed that if a dispute was not settled by peaceful means, and an innocent state was attacked, it could still act with its own forces. Senator Vandenberg said he was concerned with the intermediate situation between the failure of peaceful means of settlement and a decision on the part of the Security Council to use the armed forces at the disposal of the Organization. Mr. Sandifer said he believed that the test was whether the use of armed force was in accordance with the purposes of the Organization and that the individual use of armed force by a state might on occasion be construed as serving the purposes of the Organization and at the same time constitute self-defense.

Treaty providing for the renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy, signed at Paris on August 27, 1928, Foreign Relations, 1928, vol. 1, p. 153.

Representative Bloom said that he was interested also in having a statement on the right of self-defense because the House of Representatives would want such a statement, and in general he wanted to get a copy of everything the Senators obtained.

Senator Vandenberg read the second paragraph of the report of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate on the Kellogg-Briand Pact 42 to illustrate the attitude that must be faced when this Charter comes up for discussion.

Representative Bloom asked why it would not be a good idea to repeat the qualification about self-defense in the Charter. Mr. Bowman said that it was questionable whether the Charter should go so far as to acknowledge the right of each state to "judge its own measures". Mr. Stassen said that the Charter should be drafted in such a way as to take cognizance of this problem and that he for one would welcome a memorandum on this subject.

Mr. Notter asked if the Senators thought that a reservation on this subject would be made by the Senate if the Charter did not mention it specifically. Representative Bloom asked if it was the intention to foreclose all possibility of reservations to the Charter. Mr. Notter said that there might be a movement in the Conference to say something about the right of self-defense in the Charter, and Senator Connally commented that, if it was not included in the Charter, the Senate would certainly make a reservation. Mr. Notter and Senator Vandenberg simultaneously queried whether it would not be better, then, to have some statement included in the Charter.

Representative Eaton inquired what was the use of all the provisions of the Organization if the right of self-defense under all circumstances remained fundamental. Senator Vandenberg said he disagreed with this position. Representative Eaton asked what all the machinery was for if it was intended that each state would still have the right to use military force whenever it thought necessary in its own defense. Mr. Sandifer said he thought it might be better to make some statement about self-defense in general language. The test could still be whether action when taken was in accordance with the purposes of the Organization. A state might have the right to act in an emergency, and, if there was an allegation that this action was contrary to the purposes of the Organization, the Security Council might review it.

Mr. Stassen said it might be assumed that the right of self-defense was inherent as long as it was not taken away by the language of the Charter. Mr. Dulles said it could be resorted to in order to repel invasion. Senator Vandenberg commented that the proposed Charter certainly involved approval of the use of force to maintain or restore peace and security, but required that such use should be regulated. Mr. Dulles said there was no prohibition on the individual use of force if it was done for the purposes of the Organization. Senator Vandenberg said he thought we needed an affirmative statement, and Senator Connally asked to have a draft prepared, which Mr. Notter said the Advisers would take up.

CHAPTER II—PRINCIPLES, UNNUMBERED PARAGRAPH

The group returned to its discussion of the proposed unnumbered paragraph of Chapter II. Mr. Sandifer asked what the Delegation had agreed to do about paragraph 8. Senator Connally said, and the other Delegates confirmed the statement, that it had been agreed to take out the phrase "and treaty obligations" and to support the remainder of the paragraph if some other Delegation proposed it in the Conference. Senator Connally stated that the unnumbered paragraph involved the question of imposing on non-member states the obligations of members of the Organization. Mr. Sandifer read the original text.

[The Organization should insure that states not members of the Organization act in accordance with these principles for the maintenance of international peace and security.]

Senator Connally thought this form was better. Senator Vandenberg said he thought this had already been agreed upon and asked why it was included in the deferred items. Representative Bloom asked whether this paragraph was to be proposed by the United States Delegation or supported by it. Mr. Sandifer said that the final decision on it had been deferred.

Mr. Stassen commented that it would be of great importance to keep non-members in line so that they should not interfere with enforcement action by the Organization, since, if non-members were free to act as they wished, they might greatly weaken the Organization. Mr. Armstrong said he thought that the suggested new wording would make the provision more palatable to non-members. Mr. Sandifer pointed out that the new form was stated in the negative. Mr. Stassen said that the ultimate objective of the Organization was to have all decent states as members. The outlaws have to be kept in line, however.

Mr. Notter said that the original language could be objected to on the ground that it gave the Organization the power to exert compulsion on non-member states, on an undefined basis. Senator Vandenberg said that actually the Organization should not police non-member states until a specific instance arose requiring such policing. Mr. Notter said that the purpose was to make the non-member states conform their actions with that approved by the Organization. Senator Vandenberg said he thought about all that can be done is to arrange it so that non-member states will not interfere with action taken by the Organization. Senator Connally said he thought the negative language was better and that the Organization certainly had a right to protect itself against interference. Representative Bloom commented that this was important, since it could be done for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

Mr. Stassen observed that of course the ideal situation would be to have all states within the Organization, where they would all have a right to vote and to take part in the work of the Organization. Senator Connally said that this would amount to a world state. Mr. Bowman said it would be inadvisable for the states in the Organization to try to make all other countries conform to the provisions of the Charter. Senator Connally said that we want to get them in voluntarily. Mr. Bowman said it was important to keep in mind what Mr. Stassen had said about wanting to bring in all peace-loving states. Therefore, it was important to write the obligations in broad terms and make it clear that one of the main purposes was to prevent threats to peace and security.

Senator Connally said that under this paragraph, if the Organization took enforcement measures, then states neighbors of the one against which enforcement action might be taken could be prevented from giving assistance that would undermine the efforts of the Organization. Mr. Notter said he was of the opinion that it would be better to have the action that might be taken by the Organization against a member state directed toward preventing interference than to try to force such a state to act according to the provisions of the Charter.

Mr. Sandifer asked whether the Delegation wished to propose or support this paragraph. Senator Connally said that he thought the United States should propose it. He considered that the sense of the paragraph was implicit in the document. The unnumbered paragraph with the language proposed in the April 16 document was approved by the Delegation for proposal to the Conference if no other Delegation brought it up.

CHAPTER X—SECRETARIAT, PARAGRAPH 1

Mr. Sandifer said that the next item of business was to discuss Chapter X, The Secretariat, which had not yet been considered by the Delegation at all.

Senator Connally said he was still concerned about Chapter III, Membership, especially the phrase "all peace-loving states". He wondered if it would not be a good idea to define what a state is. Mr. Dulles said that any definition would exclude some political unit already taking part in the Conference, for example, India. He thought the important thing to do was to agree on who would decide whether a given political unit had enough of the characteristics of a state to be entitled to membership in the Organization. Mr. Bowman said the General Assembly should decide it in the light of conditions.

Mr. Sandifer presented Chapter X to the Delegation. Mr. Gerig opened the discussion on paragraph 1.

[Suggested Revised Text:

1. There should be a Secretariat comprising a Secretary-General and such staff as may be required. The Secretary-General should be the chief administrative officer of the Organization. He should be elected by the General Assembly on recommendation of the Security Council with the concurrence of the Security Council for such term for a period of five years and under such conditions as are specified in the Charter and should be eligible for re-election. He should be subject to removal for cause by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly.]

Mr. Gerig noted that the first suggestion was that the Secretary-General should be elected by the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council rather than on the recommendation of the Security Council. This revision would emphasize the position of equality between the two bodies. Senator Vandenberg thought this was an improvement. Mr. Gerig said that there were two other proposals in this paragraph, first, that the Secretary-General should have a term of five years and should be eligible for re-election, and, secondly, that he should be subject to removal for cause.

Senator Vandenberg asked what "for cause" meant and said he thought it was not necessary to include these words. Senator Connally commented that concurrence of the two bodies in the election of the Secretary-General must mean that they would vote separately. Mr. Gerig agreed and said that they would vote by their ordinary votes. Senator Connally said that this would mean that seven votes would be required in the Council. Mr. Gerig agreed, saying that this was not a procedural matter. Senator Connally stated that in that case any one of the permanent members could veto the choice of the Secretary-General. Mr. Gerig said that it was important for the successful operation of the Organization that the Secretary-General be acceptable to the great powers. Representative Bloom said that there could be a situation in which one state by voting against the candidate could prevent any election. Then there was a question as to whether the Secretary-General already in office would just continue, or whether the office would become vacant.

Senator Connally said he thought that the question of voting in the Security Council as applied to the election of the Secretary-General was extremely important. Mr. Notter stated that, if the permanent members were to have a veto power, perhaps it would be better for the Security Council to decide first on its choice for Secretary-General. He liked the suggested revision better, except for the possibility of the veto, because it would be most unfortunate if two-thirds of the Assembly were committed to a given candidate, and then one great power could block that decision. Mr. Dulles said that it would create a very bad situation if the Assembly took action which was then vetoed by one member of the Security Council.

Senator Connally suggested that the Secretary-General be elected by the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council by a vote of any seven members. Mr. Notter said that this would amount to having the General Assembly cast its tightest vote, namely, two-thirds, and the Security Council its loosest vote. Mr. Armstrong suggested that this be considered a procedural matter. Senator Connally said that perhaps this would be the way out and reiterated his objection to the possibility of a veto by one great power. Mr. Dulles said that this possibility might block the entire functioning of the Organization.

Representative Bloom commented that the Organization had to have somebody in charge of its administration before it could actually get started. Senator Vandenberg said that of course there would have to be some sort of temporary organization. Mr. Sandifer noted that this would be taken care of by an agreement here at the Conference and that there was a plan for an Organizing Committee, which was not in the Dumbarton Oaks document. Representative Bloom asked what would happen if the temporary Security Council did not agree on the choice of a Secretary-General.

Mr. Gerig referred to the experience of the League of Nations in electing judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice. He said that election of the judges had required the unanimous concurrence of all members of the Council. No difficulty had ever arisen, and two panels of judges had been elected. Senator Vandenberg commented that that was before Stalin had taken over. Mr. Gerig observed that the position of the Secretary-General of the Organization would be very difficult if he was persona non grata to any of the principal states.

Senator Connally said he had liked Mr. Armstrong's suggestion that the Secretary-General be elected by the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council, both bodies acting under their respective procedural authority. Mr. Notter said that another possibility would be to provide that the Secretary-General should be elected by the General Assembly unless the Security Council by its procedural vote interposes an objection. Mr. Sandifer suggested the possibility of going back to the original language. Mr. Armstrong said he thought that was still bad because one of the permanent members could still impose a veto. Senator Vandenberg said we must be very careful about the total veto power of the permanent members.

Mr. Gerig stated his opinion that the new language gave the Assembly more power. Mr. Armstrong said that it would put more heat on the Assembly to take initiative in organization matters and put the responsibility on the Security Council for blocking any decisions. Senator Connally said that if there was a choice between the two bodies, the Security Council should have the primary power to choose the Secretary-General. He did not want the General Assembly to impose a Secretary-General on the Security Council, but he thought that if any seven members wanted a Secretary-General, that person should be elected.

Mr. Notter said he had been checking over the probable membership of the General Assembly to estimate what states would hold the balance of power under a rule requiring a two-thirds majority for electing the Secretary-General. The Western Hemisphere states and the British Dominions would amount to more than one-third of the Assembly. In the Security Council there would undoubtedly be some of these states represented, and he thought that for Britain and the United States the arrangement that any seven could vote on this matter would be perfectly safe. Representative Bloom asked if the suggestion was that any seven members of the Council would be required to approve the action of the Assembly in its choice of a Secretary-General.

Mr. Dulles said that he thought Mr. Armstrong's suggestion should be adopted in some form. Senator Connally stated that he thought some such plan would be desirable. Mr. Dulles said that the veto power as exercised by the U.S.S.R. might be dangerous in this situation. Senator Vandenberg said that perhaps it would be exercised so as not to let a provision be incorporated permitting the Secretary-General to be elected without the veto right.

Mr. Armstrong suggested providing that the Secretary-General should be elected by the Assembly and the Security Council acting under their respective procedural authorities. Mr. Sandifer amended this to "respective procedural votes". Senator Vandenberg called attention to the fact that in the General Assembly the procedural vote is a simple majority. Mr. Notter said it was provided in Section C of Chapter V that a two-thirds vote was required in the General Assembly for elections. There would be less safety in a simple majority. Senator Connally said he did not intend that a simple majority should suffice in the General Assembly. Mr. Sandifer said he concluded, then, that only the Security Council should vote in this instance by its procedural formula. Mr. Stassen suggested that it be provided that the Secretary-General be elected by the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council acting under Section C, paragraph 2 of Chapter VI. The Delegates agreed.

Mr. Gerig pointed out that the next proposed revision was to prescribe a five-year term instead of leaving the term to be determined by the General Assembly. It was not desirable to have the term too long, but if the Secretary-General was good, it should be possible for him to be re-elected. Senator Connally asked what the provision had been under the League of Nations, and Mr. Gerig replied that the Secretary-General had been elected for a first term of seven years with the possibility of re-election for three years. Senator Connally asked if the Delegation agreed to including the provision about the term of office for the Secretary-General, and the Delegates replied in the affirmative.

The Delegates agreed to the suggested provision for removal by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly with the words "for cause" left out. Mr. Sandifer asked if this was to be proposed or supported by the American Delegation. Representative Bloom said that if we wanted it in the Charter, we should propose it. Mr. Stassen said it would be better, however, if others proposed it. Senator Vandenberg said he thought the American Delegation should support it for the time being, and this view received general assent.

CHAPTER X—SECRETARIAT, PARAGRAPHS 2, 3, 4, 5 AND 6

Mr. Gerig called attention to the proposed changes in paragraph 2 of Chapter X.

[Suggested Revised Text:

2. The Secretary-General or his representative should act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, and of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council and should make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization.]

He noted that if it was desired to assign trusteeship functions to the Organization, an organ would have to be provided to handle the matter, so that it would have to be listed at this point. It would be more efficient if the Secretary-General could designate a deputy to attend meetings, since there would undoubtedly be a great many of them. Senator Connally stated that in the absence of objections the Delegation would approve this revision for support.

Mr. Gerig presented the suggested amendment of paragraph 3.

[Suggested Revised Text:

3. The Secretary-General should have the right to bring to the attention of the Security Council or the General Assembly any matter which in his opinion may threaten international peace and security or impair the general welfare.]

He commented that this involved a substantive addition to the text. At present the Secretary-General has the right to call the attention of the Security Council to any matter threatening peace and security. Therefore, it seemed necessary to empower him to call to the attention of the General Assembly any situation which might impair the general welfare. This provision would give him a similar right to that which he would have in relation to the Security Council. Representative Eaton commented that the Secretary-General is an agent of the General Assembly as well as of the Security Council. Mr. Gerig pointed out that this suggestion gave the Secretary-General some discretion in deciding what matters to bring up and to which body to refer them.

Mr. Notter suggested it be provided that the Secretary-General have the right to bring to the attention of the Security Council and the General Assembly any matter within their respective competencies. Mr. Bowman asked if it was necessary to spell out the respective fields of jurisdiction. Mr. Notter said perhaps it would be better to hold back the tendency to obscure the differentiation between the two bodies. Senator Connally said there might be considerable discussion as to where a given dispute or situation should be referred. Mr. Sandifer said there were two different kinds of situations: (a) those which might threaten peace and security, and (b) those which might impair the general welfare. Representative Bloom objected to the phrase "in his opinion". Senator Vandenberg said that situations tending to impair the general welfare might also threaten international peace and security. Mr. Stassen suggested taking out the phrase "in his opinion".

Senator Vandenberg read the revised suggestion, which was approved for support.

[3. The Secretary General should have the right to bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which may threaten international peace and security, and to the attention of the General Assembly, any matter which may threaten or impair the general welfare.]

Mr. Gerig presented a suggested new paragraph 4.

[4. The Secretary-General should appoint such officers and other personnel as may be required. The appointment of principal officers should be subject to confirmation by the General Assembly.]

Representative Bloom asked how "principal officers" should be defined. Mr. Gerig said that in practice there was a pretty clear understanding that the Deputy Secretary-General, Under Secretary-General and Assistant Secretaries-General, and Directors of Divisions and Departments would be considered principal officers. This would conform to the practice of the International Labor Office and the League of Nations. Mr. Dulles suggested amending the text to make the appointment of principal officers subject to such confirmation by the General Assembly as it may require or specify. Senator Connally asked if there was any objection, and, since there was none, he declared that the Delegation agreed.

Mr. Gerig presented the suggested new paragraph 5.

[5. Subject to the requirements of technical or administrative competence and experience, officers of the Secretariat should be recruited on the widest practicable geographical basis.]

He said this was intended to give satisfaction to all countries and make the provisions for the Secretariat more acceptable to the small states. Senator Connally asked if the Delegation approved it, and the Delegates gave their assent. Senator Vandenberg asked why it would not be a good idea for the United States to propose it. Senator Connally answered that we would probably not catch many flies that way, and it was agreed that the United States should support it if proposed by other Delegations.

Mr. Gerig presented the suggested new paragraph 6.

[6. In the performance of their duties, the Secretary-General and the staff should be responsible only to the Organization. Their responsibilities should be exclusively international in character, and they should not seek or receive instructions in regard to the discharge thereof from any authority external to the Organization. The members should undertake fully to respect the international character of the responsibilities of the Secretariat and not to seek to influence any of their nationals in the discharge of such responsibilities.]

Mr. Dulles said he thought this provision extremely important. Senator Vandenberg said that having such a statement in the Charter would not stop the nations from trying to influence their nationals on the Secretariat. Mr. Bowman said it had worked quite well in the League of Nations except for the Axis countries. Senator Connally asked if there was any possibility of removing officials who would violate such a provision. Mr. Gerig said that the principal officers of the Organization would have the authority to remove members of the staff in such a case. Senator Connally said it was worth thinking about making some clear provision for removing officials who violated this provision of the Charter. Mr. Bowman observed that the League of Nations had had a scheme for retirement and that it would be possible to work out the necessary regulations. Mr. Dulles said that normally the officials of the Organization would be removable for violations. Senator Connally remarked that he thought a penalty was needed in addition to the general policy.

Mr. Gerig called attention to the fact that in the draft constitution for the Food and Agriculture Organization there was a provision similar to the suggested new paragraph 6.43 Mr. Dulles said it might be suggested that the Assembly would have a general power to remove any official who violated this provision. Mr. Stassen said it would be important not to interfere with the authority of the Secretary-General as the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Mr. Armstrong suggested that there should be some discussion of the responsibility of the member states to grant immunities and privileges to the officials of the Organization, and members of its organs and other bodies, especially since it was contemplated in some quarters that the Organization might meet from time to time in different countries. Mr. Gerig said there was a section on that point in the proposed new chapter on juridical status. Mr. Armstrong read the proposed new chapter on juridical status, paragraph 3.

[3. The members of the Organization should accord diplomatic privileges and immunities to persons appointed by other members as their representatives in or to the Organization, and to the higher officials of the Organization, not being their own nationals. Immunity from jurisdiction shall be subject to waiver by the members of the Organization in the case of their representatives in or to the Organization, and by the Organization in the case of higher officials of the Organization.]

Mr. Sandifer said that this chapter together with the ones proposed on the registration of treaties and on inconsistent obligations had been left for Mr. Hackworth's committee <sup>44</sup> to consider. Mr. Armstrong said he just wanted to open up the question whether it would be suitable to have such a provision in the chapter on the Secretariat if there were no separate chapter on Juridical Status. Mr. Stassen said that in Chapter X only the members of the Secretariat were involved, but that in the proposed separate chapter all officials and representatives of the Organization could be included.

Senator Vandenberg asked how it would be possible to exempt officers of the Organization from taxation of their salaries. Mr. Sandi-fer said that it could be taken care of by a treaty regulating the legislation of each country. Senator Connally said that the Charter could exact a promise from each country not to levy taxes on the salaries of the nationals of other states working in the Organization Secretariat.

Mr. Stassen asked if it was desirable to support or propose the suggested new paragraph 6. The Delegates agreed to support it. Mr. Gerig said that it was important to make sure that it gets into the document. Mr. Stassen said in that case the United States should propose it, and the Delegates agreed.

CHAPTER XI—AMENDMENTS, NEW PARAGRAPH 2

Mr. Sandifer presented the suggested new paragraph of Chapter XI, Amendments.

[2. A general conference of the members of the United Nations may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council, for the purpose of reviewing the Charter. Each member shall have one vote in the Conference. Any alterations of the Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the Conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by the members of the Organization having permanent membership on the Security Council and by a majority of the other members of the Organization.]

He said that at the last meeting in Washington <sup>45</sup> the substance of this paragraph had been discussed, and it had been suggested that there should be a new provision to provide for a constitutional convention at a later date. This draft had been prepared subsequently but had not yet been considered by the Delegation. Senator Connally commented that this proposal would make the Charter more liquid. Mr. Dulles pointed out that the adoption of a new Charter would be accomplished by the same process as the adoption of an amendment. Mr. Stassen said he was willing to agree to this formulation, although he preferred to say that there must be a constitutional convention within twelve years. Senator Vandenberg said that this proposal was all right as far as he was concerned.

Mr. Notter pointed out that the Soviet Union could still prevent the calling of a conference for revision of the Charter. Mr. Dulles said that the Soviet Government would have the power to veto amendments also and that this was the same as the amending process. Mr. Notter said that this differed from the amending procedure, which did not require the prior approval of the Security Council before an amendment could even be considered by the member states. Mr. Sandifer said that the United States was protected either way.

Mr. Dulles was in favor of classifying as a procedural matter, covered by the provisions of paragraph 2 of Section C, Chapter VI, the concurrence of the Security Council in the call for a general conference. Since this was not a matter involving the use of enforcement measures, he thought it would be better to consider it a procedural question. Mr. Sandifer said it was a more important matter than electing a Secretary-General. Under the provisions of a procedural vote, a conference could be called against the opposition of four permanent members, and he thought that would be going too far. Senator Vandenberg asked if it was not procedural to call a convention. Mr. Sandifer said he thought not. Mr. Armstrong said that many of the smaller Governments would say that apparently nothing was procedural under the Charter. Senator Connally said that he agreed that this was a more fundamental matter than a question of procedure.

Representative Bloom asked whether it would not be desirable to require a larger vote in the Assembly. Then if there was a deadlock in the Security Council, the Assembly might break it. Senator Vandenberg commented that that would give the Assembly an overriding veto. Mr. Notter said the matter might be taken care of by requiring a higher vote in both the General Assembly and the Security Council, but no veto for the permanent members. For example, there could be a requirement for a three-fourths vote in the General Assembly and ten members of the Council. Representative Bloom said that some way should be provided to take the matter out of the hands of the Security Council if one of the permanent members tried to block the obvious desire of all the rest of the Organization. Dean Gildersleeve said it was terrific to think that any one member could block the will of the whole Organization.

Mr. Sandifer said that any provision other than the one mentioned here would involve a new type of voting in the Security Council. Representative Bloom commented that the call for a conference would be merely to consider matters of general concern to the Organization in connection with the Charter. Mr. Notter said that this was, however, a fundamental matter which opened the door to a far-reaching revision of the Charter. Dean Gildersleeve said that the actual amending power would be left as it stands. Senator Connally said that the ordinary amending processes could still be used. Mr. Sandifer added that two-thirds of the General Assembly could adopt amendments, which would come into force only when ratified by all the permanent members and the majority of the other members of the Organization.

Mr. Dulles observed that this provision was more liberal than the proposed second paragraph. He did not think, in fact, that the proposal added anything that could not be done much more easily under paragraph 1. In the first paragraph the Assembly can take the initiative and does not need the concurrence of the Security Council. Mr. Sandifer asked whether this country would be willing to have a constitutional convention called by two-thirds or three-fourths of the General Assembly, without requiring the concurrence of the Security Council.

Senator Vandenberg said there might be some advantage in having the same process for both amendments and the calling of a constitutional convention. Mr. Sandifer said this could be much more serious than a single amendment, and the situations would not be parallel. He thought it should require a minimum of a three-fourths vote in the General Assembly. Mr. Dulles said that if the great powers lose their influence to such an extent that they cannot block the will of three-fourths of the Assembly, then the Organization has come to a sad pass. Mr. Bowman said he doubted whether it was good judgment to provide for a general revision of the Charter, especially since there is provision for amendments.

Representative Bloom asked whether there was any limit on the time in which amendments are to be adopted. Mr. Bowman said he did not like the proposed paragraph 2. Senator Connally said that by setting a date for a constitutional convention, the United Nations would be admitting at the start that the Organization as constituted now is likely to fail. If the Organization is confronted by a demand for amendments, then it could start work on revisions, but it would not invite some 30 or more dissidents to start agitating right away for revisions. He thought that it would be within the competence of the Organization to undertake drastic revision of the Charter if necessarv. Mr. Bowman said he thought this was implicit in the Charter. Mr. Stassen said that in that case the provision concerning a call for a conference would show the intention of the Organization. Mr. Bowman doubted the wisdom of inviting the member states to plan to call for a conference to revise the Charter before this one has had an opportunity to work. Mr. Stassen said it had not worked out that way in our Constitution. Representative Bloom said that if the provision is to be included, it should be made flexible. Mr. Bowman said that we already have the amendment provisions of paragraph 1. Mr. Stassen thought that too remote a means of dealing with the matter. Representative Bloom felt there should be a way to call a conference if necessary to revise the Charter and referred to the fact that in New York State there was a provision for constitutional conventions.

Mr. Bowman asked why it would not be satisfactory merely to indicate the process by which the matter of a thoroughgoing revision could be approached and leave it in a two or three line formula. Mr. Dulles said he thought there should be much less formality and procedure, and he thought the suggested provision actually did not give any fresh implementation. The General Assembly could meet and consider the revision of the whole document itself without calling a special conference, and this would be a more flexible arrangement. Mr. Bowman said that the Assembly could amend everything. Mr. Dulles said he thought it a question of policy whether there should be a paragraph explicitly recognizing the need for subsequent revision. He himself thought it might be desirable to recognize that the Charter is inadequate as it stands and that it would be a good idea to improve it later. Mr. Stassen said it would make it clear that we did not presume that all wisdom had been accumulated here. He thought the whole discussion had been a wholesome one and that it would be good to have some such provision in the Charter. Senator Vandenberg said the psychological value would be very great.

Mr. Notter suggested that it would be making the draft a little too loose to incorporate a thoroughgoing revision by the same process as the making of amendments. He thought it might be possible to empower the General Assembly, at "a time and place which it should determine", to convene in special session for a thoroughgoing reconsideration of the Charter. Mr. Bowman asked what vote would be required and whether the Security Council should have some check on such a determination in the interests of security. Mr. Armstrong said it would be important to avoid having the threat of such a move hanging over the Assembly. He thought it probably desirable to have some sort of provision but not so imminent as this.

Senator Connally asked if it would be acceptable to provide that "a general conference of the members of the United Nations may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a three-fourths vote of the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council by a vote of seven members". Mr. Stassen said he agreed, and Mr. Bowman added that he was satisfied. Mr. Notter estimated that there were eleven small Eastern European states that could be considered as coming within the orbit of the Soviet Union. While this was close, it was still not enough to block a three-fourths vote of the General Assembly. Senator Connally said that with a majority as high as three-fourths, there would be more stability. He foresaw that the smaller states might be dissatisfied with the Charter, and if they were agitating for changes all the time, it would weaken the effectiveness of the Organization. Mr. Bowman said he was now prepared to agree with this paragraph. Mr. Stassen said that he would accept the incorporation of this paragraph with the suggested amendments, and he thought that the American Delegation should propose it to the Conference. The Delegates agreed that a constitutional conference could be called by a three-fourths vote in the Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council acting under the provisions of paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter VI. Senator Connally commented that the United States would be protected in the provisions for ratification.

Mr. Gerig asked if the last four lines of the suggested paragraph should be eliminated, since it was merely a repetition of the description in the previous paragraph. Mr. Stassen said he thought it would be better to keep it as it is, as it is a complete statement. Senator Connally stated it was agreed by the United States Delegation to keep the last four lines and that the whole paragraph as revised should be classified among the items to be proposed.

WITHDRAWAL PROVISION

The group turned to the next item on the agenda: the question of a provision for withdrawal. Mr. Sandifer read the following proposal, which had been drafted but not yet considered:

"Any member may withdraw from membership in the United Nations for stated cause and upon six months' notice, during which period its rights, privileges, and obligations of membership with respect to the functions allocated to the Security Council shall be suspended automatically. Any provisions of the Charter relating to voting that may be affected by the withdrawal of any member shall be adjusted accordingly by the General Assembly, subject to amendment of the Charter."

Senator Connally asked for an explanation of the last phrase "subject to amendment of the Charter". Mr. Sandifer said that it meant pending the amendment of the Charter. Since the withdrawal of a permanent member of the Security Council would affect the voting provisions of the Security Council, Representative Bloom said it was reasonable that a member of the Council should not vote if it had announced its intention to withdraw.

Mr. Notter explained that the withdrawal problem would affect the Organization seriously only if one of the great powers should go out of the Organization. The first question was how quickly a state could withdraw if it was permitted to do so at all. If a member of the Security Council decided to leave the Organization, it would want to do so quickly, and it would not want to be held to the obligation to join in the use of force. Therefore, a short period was desirable. There was also a question of how quickly such a state could drop its responsibilities. If the United States were to withdraw, it would certainly not want to have any responsibility for the work of the Security Council any longer. Therefore, the rights, privileges, and obligations of membership with respect to the functions allocated to the Security Council should be suspended automatically for a state upon its giving notice of intention to withdraw.

Senator Connally said that under this provision any nation could withdraw whenever it was called upon to use force and did not wish to comply. Mr. Sandifer said this was an important question; it should be given sufficient time for careful consideration, and he would like to have an opportunity to circulate the draft of the proposal he had read to the group. He thought a prior question was whether it was desirable to have any provision for withdrawal in the Charter and that could be considered at a later meeting the same day.

Senator Connally said that in the few moments remaining he would like to discuss the general attitude of the United States Delegation toward the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. It was his impression that except for the items which the United States Delegation had agreed to propose as amendments, or those which they had agreed to support if amendments were offered, the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals should stand as the framework of the Charter that we would like to see adopted. Mr. Bowman said that many of the American proposals reflected the views of other governments, which had been taken into account in the drafting of suggested alterations. Senator Vandenberg said it would not be desirable for the United States to take a hard and fast position of refusing to consider any other amendments. Miss Gildersleeve said the Delegation could not really decide until it had had an opportunity to hear what the other Governments expected to bring up. She thought the group might wish to alter its position after hearing other proposals.

Senator Connally said that of course it might be necessary to accept amendments offered by other countries. What he was trying to get at was a view of our main objectives. Miss Gildersleeve said she thought the Delegation should agree in the first instance to adhere to the position defined in these meetings. If other proposals are made with good arguments to back them up, then the Delegates should come back and report to the whole group. Mr. Bowman said that other Governments might have later thoughts than those that were incorporated in memoranda circulated before the Conference, but he thought it advisable to have a general attitude defined.

Senator Connally said that there should be a meeting of the Delegation every day, with the members of each Commission reporting on the most important items that came up in their respective groups. Mr. Bowman said that is where any revisions of the American attitude would be worked out. Mr. Stassen said he thought that would give the group a stable basis for its work.

Mr. Sandifer pointed out that there were still several items on the agenda, especially the Preamble; Chapter IX; Chapter VIII, Section A; and trusteeship. It was agreed that a meeting would be held at 8:30 on the evening of the same day to complete this agenda. Mr. Sandifer suggested that the order of business be Chapter IX; Chapter VIII, Section A; trusteeship withdrawal, and the Preamble. Mr. Stassen asked that the subject of trusteeship be considered first, and the group agreed to this arrangement. Representative Bloom said that it would be a safeguard to provide a 24-hour legislative day for the Delegation to consider amendments.

The meeting was adjourned at 1:00 p.m.

Memorandum by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Member of the United States Delegation, of a Conversation Held at San Francisco, April 26, 1945, 10:20 a.m.

Present: The Secretary of State
Mr. Dunn
Mr. Molotov
Ambassador Harriman
Ambassador Gromyko
Mr. Pavlov

The Secretary said he asked to see Mr. Molotov to give him his opinion on the matter which Mr. Molotov had raised the day before yesterday. He said that first of all he wished to make it plain that that U.S. Government had always been fully prepared to live up wholeheartedly to the agreement reached at the Crimea in regard to the admission of White Russia and the Ukraine as initial members of the World Organization. The day before yesterday, Mr. Molotov had asked him as to his opinion of the attitude of the other countries at this Conference. He had then frankly told Mr. Molotov that he did not know. Since then he had had an opportunity to consult other Delegations and to ascertain their views, and that as a result of this work, he was now glad to be able to tell Mr. Molotov that he was confident that the Soviet proposal regarding the admission of these two Republics as initial members of the proposed Organization would be approved by the Steering Committee.

Mr. Molorov expressed his pleasure and gratitude for the Secretary's statement. He then said that he would like to inquire as to the second phase of his question—invitations to attend the Conference.

THE SECRETARY replied that this was another question and one for which he would need more time to consult with other Delegations before giving an answer. He advised Mr. Molotov not to press this second phase of the question but to delay it until a little later. He said he thought it could be arranged if some time was given.

Trusteeship System. Mr. Pasvolsky announced that agreement had been reached on a draft of a proposed trusteeship system, with the exception of three minor suggested changes in the draft before the Delegation. (Arrangements for International Trusteeship (D-10 47)). It had been pointed out that in Note 2 of the document the wording required revision since if the trusteeship plan were to be included as a chapter of the Charter of the Organization, the provisions of the Charter would have to be modified in order to accommodate the trusteeship provisions. Therefore the wording of the note should read that the Charter would have to be harmonized with the trusteeship provisions. He also noted that with respect to paragraph 3 of the draft it had been suggested that a statement be added to this effect: "It would be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories would be brought under a trusteeship system and upon what terms". This, said Mr. Pasvolsky, would be consistent with the Yalta agreement,48 and there would be no objection to adding a sentence of this nature. The sense of this statement, however, was already implicit in the wording of the draft document as would be noted in paragraphs 1, 3, and 4. While there would be no objection to adding this sentence, there is a question as to whether the addition of a statement of this nature would be good for negotiations on the document.

Representative Bloom raised a question as to whether the proposed trusteeship draft ought not to be taken up point by point, in order that the discussion might bear upon the merits of the plan. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that he had assumed that the Delegation had studied the plan and would be ready to discuss it. Senator Connally suggested that Mr. Pasvolsky might present a five-minute summary analysis of the draft. Senator Vandenberg suggested that Mr. Pasvolsky might take a territory as an example and trace the working of the plan for the benefit of the Delegation.

Mr. Pasvolsky then undertook a paragraph-by-paragraph analysis of the draft document. With respect to paragraph 1, which he read, he pointed out that the phrase "by subsequent agreement" in this paragraph should be interpreted to mean that no territory could be placed under the trusteeship system except by agreement among the states concerned, subsequent to the establishment of a trusteeship system.

Representative Bloom queried as to what would happen to a mandate if no "subsequent agreement" respecting it would be made. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that in that case the particular territory could not be placed under the system. Representative Bloom expressed the view that this would seem to be entirely different from the original conception of the mandated territories.

Recapitulating, Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the first point is that territories would be placed under the trusteeship system only by agreement among the states directly concerned. The second point is, he stated, a statement of the objectives of the trusteeship system. He read paragraph 2 of the draft. These objectives, explained Mr. Pasvolsky, would be applied in each territory placed under trusteeship in accordance with the trusteeship arrangement for that particular territory. In paragraph 3, which he read, he pointed out that there is a limitation in the form of a statement of the three categories from which territories to be placed under trusteeship may be drawn. He cited a Japanese territory as an example in point for category A on the one hand with respect to the Japanese mandated islands and for category B with respect to Japanese territory other than that under mandate which might be detached from Japan at the end of this war. These three categories of territories, Mr. Pasvolsky observed, were set forth in the Yalta agreement. Mr. Pasvolsky read the relevant passage of the Yalta agreement: "It was further agreed that no discussion of the specific territories will take place during the preliminary consultations on trusteeships or at the United Nations Conference itself. Only machinery and principles of trusteeship will be formulated at the Conference for inclusion in the Charter, and it will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories within the categories specified above will actually be placed under trusteeship."

Senator Vandenberg asked who would make the agreements, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied that the answer would be found in paragraph 4 which refers to the "states directly concerned". Continuing, Mr. Pasvolsky remarked that the negotiation of the agreements with respect to the mandated territories, for example, would presumably be among the nations concerned with the mandatory system, that is, the Principal Allied and Associated Powers.

Senator Connally asked what role Japan would play in this agreement, and Mr. Pasvolsky explained that Japan and Italy would be required by the peace treaties to renounce all of their rights in these territories. Mr. Pasvolsky continued with an explanation of category

B of paragraph 3. The Italian colonies to be detached at the end of this war and any Japanese territory which would be taken away from Japan, for example, would involve negotiations based upon any arrangement to which the United States would agree in the peace treaties with these nations. The question as to what disposition would be made of such territories, under whom they would be placed, is not yet settled, of course, and there is an open question as to whether Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States as Principal Allied Nations would make the decisions, whether China would be included, or the United Nations outside of Europe would be included—these questions are not yet settled.

Mr. Gates observed that it should not be assumed that the mandated territories would be turned over to trusteeship.

Representative Bloom inquired whether it had not been decided in the Delegation that a distinction should be recognized as between territories of economic importance and territories of strategic importance. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that this distinction had been made and was recognized in the draft document, which carried special provisions affecting the strategic territories.

Mr. Pasvolsky then read paragraph 5 of the draft document without comment and continued by reading paragraph 6. With respect to paragraph 6 he emphasized that some of the territories under the trusteeship system may be designated in whole or in part as a strategic area or areas. Paragraphs 7, 8, and 9 were then read by Mr. Pasvolsky, and with respect to the last paragraph he pointed out that the idea was that in formulating the composition of the Trusteeship Council the nations administering trust territories would be permanently on the Council.

[Mr. Stettinius arrived at this point, accompanied by a photographer. After the pictures were taken the meeting was resumed.] 49

Discussion was held as to whether the Delegation should go into executive session at this point or continue its discussion of trusteeship. Mr. Stettinius inquired how long the trusteeship discussion might take. Representative Bloom pointed out that it was just getting underway, and Mr. Pasvolsky had not yet completed reading and commenting on the draft. Mr. Gates stated that the military advisers had had no opportunity to comment and wished a hearing. Representative Bloom observed that Congress was very much interested in this question, that a number of Congressmen had introduced resolutions on the subject recently, and that some time should be taken to discuss the matter thoroughly in the Delegation.

Senator Connally stated that it would be hard on the advisers to have to leave the meeting again, but it could not be helped. Governor

Stassen moved that the meeting go into executive session. This was agreed upon, and Secretary Stettinius informed the advisers on trusteeship that he did not think the executive session would take very long, perhaps 20 to 25 minutes.

[Following the executive session,<sup>50</sup> discussion on trusteeship was resumed at 10:35 p.m.] <sup>50a</sup>

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the three changes in the draft proposal recommended by the Secretaries of War and Navy had been accepted. The three changes involved: (a) a rewording of the explanatory note 2 at the beginning of the document to read, "If this draft is to be included as a chapter of the Charter of the Organization, the relevant paragraphs and clauses of the Charter would require revision in order that they might be brought into harmony with the trusteeship provisions." (b) the addition of a statement in paragraph three to the effect that "it would be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories would be brought under a trusteeship system and upon what terms"; and (c) omission of the words "by the Organization" in line 4 of paragraph 4 (D-lo).

These suggested changes were agreed upon.

Senator Vandenberg suggested that an example of what would happen under the proposed system with respect to a particular territory should be given.

Admiral Willson explained in outline the process of negotiation with respect to a given island. He stated that the nations directly concerned with that island, which in the case of the Japanese mandated islands, would be the Principal Allied and Associated Powers and in which the United States would have a veto power, would agree that the territory would be placed under the trusteeship system and would work out the particular arrangements which would apply to that territory. If the arrangements provided that the territory was to be designated as a strategic area the arrangements would be presented to the Security Council, if not, to the General Assembly. Until the trusteeship arrangements were agreed upon nothing could be done to place the territory under the trusteeship system. Admiral Willson further pointed out that as a permanent member of the Security Council the United States would also have a veto vote in that body.

Senator Connally inquired if under this system the United States would be "free to make agreements". Admiral Willson replied affirmatively but pointed out that an assumption would have to be made with respect to the negotiation of satisfactory peace treaties, since the territories taken from enemy states would be involved in the peace treaties. He pointed out that nothing about the peace treaties could be undertaken in this document.

Senator Vandenberg inquired whether this could be taken to mean that nothing in the draft of the proposed trusteeship system would hamper the United States in negotiating the peace treaties. Admiral Willson replied that the proposed system would not hamper the United States in the peace treaties, and that the United States would have a free hand in the negotiation of treaties, strengthened by the fact that with respect to the Pacific islands in which the United States is interested the United States is in possession. He emphasized that nothing could be done with respect to such territories without the agreement of the United States and reiterated the importance of the veto vote of the United States in the Security Council. It was for this reason, he stated, that the strategic areas were placed under the Security Council in the draft proposal.

Senator Vandenberg stated that he would like to take up the matter of island "X" and that he would then be through with his questions. He asked what would be the situation if our military people decided that island "X" is strategically necessary, and we are in physical possession of the territory. When negotiations are entered into with respect to the peace treaties affecting this island "X", would there have been any prior commitment which would prejudice the question of our control or which would require any special negotiations affecting our right of control?

Admiral Willson replied that this would depend entirely on the peace treaty and would not involve the proposed trusteeship system, since this system would make no prior commitments on the part of anybody with respect to any territory. There is nothing in the proposed trusteeship system, he continued, which would prevent the United States from obtaining outright possession of any territory. Our hands would be completely free in so far as the trusteeship system is concerned in this matter. If, however, it should be decided that territory "X" would be placed under the trusteeship system, then the procedures required in this system as outlined previously would be invoked. If we, as one of the powers directly concerned, decided that territory "X" should be placed under trusteeship, then nothing could happen.

Senator Vandenberg inquired further whether there was anything in the draft proposal which would prevent the United States from taking an island outright. Admiral Willson answered that there was not, and that the proposed system would apply only to those territories which would be specifically placed under it. Governor Stassen remarked that it would be a matter of our own national policy as to whether a territory would be placed under the system or kept out of it, and that this would be the case with respect to the Japanese islands. He stated, however, that he would personally hope that the United States would place such territories under the trusteeship system, since in its present form it incorporated full safeguards with respect to areas essential to our security.

Senator Connally inquired whether there were any reservations with respect to the proposal on the part of the Army and Navy. Governor Stassen pointed out that the three amendments offered by the Army and Navy had been accepted and would be incorporated in the draft.

Mr. Gates explained that the Army and the Navy were in agreement with the proposal if the three small changes suggested were made. Since they had been accepted on that basis he could say that the plan would be acceptable to the Army and Navy.

Senator Connally inquired whether this statement ought not to be interpreted as meaning that the Army and Navy were accepting this proposal because they were unable to do anything better.

Mr. Gates replied that the Army and Navy would prefer that the subject not be discussed at this time but that if for political or other reasons it had to be discussed at this time the proposal was acceptable.

Governor Stassen pointed out that this position would be going behind the policy clearly fixed by the President.

Mr. Pasvolsky gave reassurance that the draft proposal was entirely within the framework of the President's directive.

Mr. Pasvolsky went on to inform the Delegation that the question of trusteeship had come up in the Steering Committee at its meeting this morning <sup>51</sup> and that the heads of two of the delegations had raised the question as to whether trusteeship would be discussed and had suggested that there would be trouble if it were not discussed. They also intimated that it would be unacceptable to try to pin the discussion down exclusively to the security question. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that he did not know what the reaction of the other governments would be to this paper, but that he would like to recommend it as a basis for discussion. This recommendation was accepted and the paper was approved.

Governor Stassen stated the feeling that the technical experts and advisers who had worked on the trusteeship subject had done a fine job on an extremely difficult subject. He considered the report a significant contribution to the Charter of the Organization.

Senator Connally observed that a motion had been made to approve the document and inquired whether it was satisfactory to Dr. Bowman. Dr. Bowman replied that he accepted it.

Senator Connally stated that it had been suggested during the afternoon that he should be on the negotiating committee for this document, but that he would like to renege. Senator Connally inquired of Governor Stassen whether he would like to substitute for him. Governor

Stassen replied that he would have no objection, but that arrangements with respect to his other assignments would have to be made.

Senator Connally inquired if General Embick concurred in the acceptance of the proposed trusteeship draft. General Embick replied affirmatively and added that the Army and Navy feel that there are two essential bases for our security—hemispheric solidarity and control of the necessary islands in the Pacific.

Senator Vandenberg inquired of General Embick whether he was aware that we are engaged in creating a world organization and wondered whether this might be the source of trouble over this document.

General Embick responded that he had believed in the League of Nations and in world order, but that he believes there was more chance for the League of Nations to endure than for a new world organization to endure.

General Embick stated that there is too much chaos in the world of today. He felt, however, that the people in America would give the new world organization full support, but the American people must recognize the extent of the chaos in the world and the lack of common standards of value. Therefore, the American people must keep a sharp lookout for United States interests. In 1918, he stated, the military people did all they could to keep the Pacific islands from being mandated to Japan, and later to prevent their fortification. He pointed out that the American military leaders had made plans for defense of the Philippines which they knew were hopeless. He stated that they had told the President when Japan took those islands that all the military could do at Corregidor would be to continue to fly the American Flag as a matter of national prestige. If the United States is to be adequately protected, he said, we must have an entire chain of island bases.

Admiral Willson called attention to the fact that the trusteeship plan as now formulated falls under both the Security Council and the General Assembly. Therefore, he felt that there might be an organizational problem in that the draft proposal would actually need to be considered by two committees of the Conference. Senator Connally pointed out that the classification of territories was based on islands that we had need of for strategic purposes and those which were not needed for such purposes.

Mr. Pasvolsky explained that consideration had been given to the question of Conference organization during the afternoon, and that a statement had been made to the effect that in some instances there would be unavoidable overlapping and that this would be taken care of.

Mr. Pasvolsky's recommendation that the draft proposal incorporating the three changes suggested by the Secretaries of War and Navy be adopted as the negotiating document was approved.

Mr. Pasvolsky announced that there were some economic matters outstanding which ought to be discussed for three quarters of an hour the next morning and inquired whether it would be possible for the Delegation to meet at 9:50 on Friday morning, April 27. This was agreed upon.

The meeting was adjourned at 11:15 p.m.

Secretary's Report on Steering Committee

THE SECRETARY, in opening the session, gave a brief report of the Steering Committee meeting that afternoon.<sup>52</sup> . . .

THE SECRETARY said that he had talked to the President and to Mr. Hull regarding the situation and had received from them encouragement to follow the policy which the United States Delegation was advocating. He said that the President particularly said that he felt the Delegation should "stick to its guns" in the matter of advocating the election of a single President.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT OF CONFERENCE

In reporting the general discussion on the subject of the election of the President, The Secretary said the proposal for the election of a single President [of the] Conference had been supported by Foreign Minister Padilla of Mexico, who had said that it was in the tradition of this Hemisphere. The Secretary said that then the British had advocated—as a compromise proposal—the election of four Presidents of the Conference, but that they had failed even to specify that any one of the four should serve as a chairman. However, he said, the British did propose that the United States representative should be chairman of the Steering and the Executive Committees.

At this point, the Secretary turned the discussion over to Mr. Dunn for a more detailed report on the British position on this matter.

Mr. Dunn said that the previous evening, word had been sent to Mr. Eden that the United States Delegation declined to accept the &lt;sup>52</sup> Reference is made to the meeting of the Heads of Delegations at 10:37 a. m.-2:30 p. m., April 26. After the three meetings of the Heads of Delegations, April 26, 10:30 a. m., April 27, 10:45 a. m., and April 30, 11:18 a. m., they became the Steering Committee which came into existence in accordance with recommendations of the Heads of Delegations adopted by a plenary session of the Conference on April 30.

British proposal of four chairmen for the Conference. He said that Mr. Hiss, on Wednesday night, had talked to Sir Alexander Cadogan and that he, Mr. Dunn, had talked to Sir Alexander on Thursday morning regarding this matter. Mr. Dunn said that it was his understanding that Mr. Eden hoped that Field Marshal Smuts or Prime Minister King would present the Secretary's name as the President of the Conference, and later, at the Steering Committee meeting, Mr. Eden said that he himself would do it. Instead, however, Mr. Eden made the proposal that the Conference have four Presidents and that each one of the four should rotate as presiding officer at the plenary sessions, with the United States representative being Chairman of the Steering and Executive Committees.

Mr. Dunn said that Mr. Molotov had proposed in the Steering Committee that the Conference have four Presidents of equal status, and that the Conference be run by the four Presidents equally and together. Mr. Padilla had been caught unawares by the British proposal, since he had expected to second the nomination of the Secretary to be the President of the Conference and the other three representatives of the sponsoring Governments to be Vice-Presidents. Consequently, Mr. Padilla, in speaking to the point in the Steering Committee meeting, had to make his case on the basis of the precedent at Inter-American Conferences, and was forced to make the original motion proposing the election of the Secretary as President and the representatives of the other three sponsoring Governments as Vice-Presidents.

Mr. Dunn reported that Mr. Molotov had made a strong speech in reply to Mr. Padilla's proposal, pointing out that the Soviet Government considered it a principle of equality and unanimity among the four Governments that the Soviet proposal of four Presidents be accepted. Mr. Molotov had implied that Mr. Padilla had made a prepared speech. Mr. Padilla replied—Mr. Dunn reported—that his speech had been prepared on the basis of the traditional operations of Conferences in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. Dunn reported that considerable confusion had then developed in the Steering Committee, with Field Marshal Smuts favoring the Soviet proposal, although it was originally understood that he had been furthering Mr. Eden's proposal. Mr. Fraser of New Zealand, in effect, also supported the Soviet proposal. On the other hand, representatives of the other American republics clearly favored the proposal advanced by Mr. Padilla.

Mr. Dunn further reported at this point in the Steering Committee meeting that the Secretary made it clear that the United States could not accept the Molotov or Eden proposals. Mr. Dunn explained that under the Eden proposals, the Conference would have four presidents who would preside in rotation at the plenary sessions, with the Secretary of State presiding at the Steering and Executive Committee meetings with full authority to conduct the affairs of the Conference. Mr. Dunn also reported that there was clearly great sentiment for the Eden proposal.

MESSRS. DUNN and PASVOLSKY then both reported the happenings at the Steering Committee meeting during which it developed that Mr. Molotov appeared to favor the first part of Mr. Eden's proposal for the four Presidents of the Conference, but did not appear to favor the second part of the proposal, whereby the Secretary of State would preside at the Steering and Executive Committees. It was clear, however, that Mr. Molotov had agreed that the Secretary should be chairman of the four Presidents. Further, it developed that Mr. Molotov had also proposed that there be four chairmen who would serve in rotation as heads of the Steering and Executive Committees.

Mr. Dunn reported that a vote had been taken on the issue but that it was not a clear-cut one. In the confusion, Mr. Molotov had made his point that he wanted the vote divided into two parts to cover the two items of the Eden proposal, but Mr. Eden would not consent to such a division, although Mr. Fraser of New Zealand had indicated his willingness. Following the confused situation, the Steering Committee had taken a brief recess and The Secretary reported that he had adjourned the meeting following the end of the recess, since it looked as if the situation would develop beyond control.

THE SECRETARY said that he wished to have Ambassador Harriman report upon his conversation with Mr. Eden and other British officials regarding their apparent failure to carry out the understanding of the previous evening whereby they would have proposed that the United States representative be elected President of the Conference.

Mr. HARRIMAN said that he had seen Messrs. Eden and Attlee, Lord Cranborne, Lord Halifax and Sir Alexander Cadogan just prior to the meeting of the United States Delegation. He said that he had told them that the United States Delegation felt that they had been "let down" by the British Delegation. Mr. HARRIMAN said that Mr. Eden told him that they had understood that the United States Delegation had accepted the British proposal made the previous evening, stressing particularly that Sir Alexander Cadogan said he so understood from his conversation with Mr. Dunn. Mr. HARRIMAN also reported that Mr. Eden said it was his understanding that Mr. Molotov did not accept the British resolution made in the Steering Committee meeting that afternoon, but accepted only that part of the proposal covering the four Presidents for the Conference. Mr. HARRIMAN said he reported to them that the Secretary had talked with the President and that the President had insisted that the host Government have the presiding officer for the Conference. Furthermore, he said, he had reported to them that, in the opinion of the United States Delegation, this whole question was a matter of substance and not of form. Furthermore, he said, he had conveyed to them the views of the United States Delegation that the Delegation would not accept any proposal under which the Secretary of State was not made President of the Conference, chairman of the Steering and Executive Committees, and responsible—with full authority—for the conduct of the Conference.

MR. HARRIMAN reported that Mr. Eden said he would consult the representatives of the Dominions and would report their reactions later in the evening. He said that Mr. Eden felt that if his own proposal were divided into two parts as suggested by Mr. Molotov, he—Mr. Eden—and the British Delegation would support the United States proposal on the Conference Presidency. In response to an inquiry from Senator Connally, The Secretary assured him that the British had known of the United States proposal for the Conference Presidency for more than a month. Mr. Dunn said that he had even called Sir Alexander Cadogan to find out which of the British Dominions was going to nominate Mr. Stettinius for the post. Senator Connally said that he felt that this appeared to be a lack of good faith on the part of the British Delegation.

Mr. Harriman said that he felt that Mr. Eden and the British Delegation thought they were carrying out the wishes of the U.S. Delegation in the matter in the Steering Committee. He said that in his conversations with them he had said that the United States Delegation would undertake to handle the matter with the other American Republics if the British would undertake to handle the question with the Dominions. He said that, in his opinion, it would be better not to let this matter come to a vote in the Steering Committee without careful political preparation.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM inquired as to why the Dominions had opposed the United States proposal of that afternoon. Mr. Harriman replied that in his judgment, the matter had not been discussed with them properly, and as a consequence, misunderstanding had occurred.

THE SECRETARY at this point said that he wished to make clear his position in regard to this whole matter. He said that he did not think that the issue of the Presidency of the Conference was of terrific importance insofar as the San Francisco Conference was concerned. But he did believe that if the Soviet proposal were accepted by the Conference, there would be thereby provided a pattern for the proposed international organization which might prove to be very serious in the end. Mr. Harriman added that, in his opinion, the Soviets were advocating four Presidents for the Conference because they wanted a "veto" position, which attitude arises out of their mistrust of other nations.

Senator Connally inquired as to whether it might not be possible that the British Delegation were using the Dominion Delegations in this instance as a "stalking horse". Mr. Pasvolsky said that in his opinion such was not the case; that Mr. Eden had said in the Steering Committee meeting that his original position was the same as that of Mr. Padilla. Mr. Eden said that the compromise which he had put forth was advanced in the hope that if he moved from his original position Mr. Molotov would also move and it might be possible to agree on a compromise proposal.

Senator Connally inquired as to whether there was any possibility that the British Delegation was doublecrossing us; that they were petting the Russians at our expense. Mr. Harriman replied that he did not believe that such was the case; that the entire affair was due entirely to a misunderstanding and because of that fact he believed that it would be possible for the United States Delegation to straighten out this situation. Furthermore, he said that in his opinion, no useful purpose was served in questioning the motivations of the British Delegation in this particular instance. Dean Gildersleeve said that she agreed with this general position of Mr. Harriman. Senator Connally said that in his opinion it all developed into an unfortunate situation.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM then inquired as to whether the Delegation would continue to maintain the original United States position in this matter. The Secretary said that both the President and Mr. Hull had advised him to stick to the original position. He also said that he would like to have the advice of the Delegation in this matter as to whether (a) he should stick to the original position or (b) accept the Eden proposal.

The Delegation was then polled by the Secretary with the following results: Dean Gildersleeve said that if the Eden compromise satisfied the Soviet Delegation, then she thought it should be acceptable to us. If it did not, then she thought we should revert to our original position. Representative Bloom said that he thought we ought to adhere to the original United States position in this matter, but if the Soviet Delegation was willing to accept the Eden compromise, he thought it should be accepted by us.

When he was asked for his views, Senator Connally inquired as to what the wishes of President Truman were. The Secretary replied that the President preferred a single President for the Conference, to be chosen from the United States Delegation, but that we were authorized to accept the proposal advanced by Mr. Eden.

Senator Vandenberg said that he felt the Secretary had been too scrupulous in this matter; that he was, in effect, tying his own hands too much by asking for detailed instructions from the Delegation. He said that in his opinion the Secretary should be authorized to accept the proposition upon which the United States Delegation could obtain the most votes.

COMMANDER STASSEN said that in his opinion the question of equal authority and rank of the four nations was involved. Mr. Dunn added that the Soviet Delegation wanted four equal Presidents so that no one could act without the approval of the other three. Mr. Stassen suggested that it might be wise to find out if the Soviet Delegation would accept the Eden compromise. If the Soviets would not, then, he suggested, the United States Delegation might determine whether it could obtain the necessary votes for the original United States proposal. He further stated that he thought the Secretary should make a clear statement in the Steering Committee meeting that no question of rank was involved in these matters. Furthermore, Commander Stassen thought it might be helpful if the Secretary would get in touch with the Soviet Delegation at once.

THE SECRETARY then asked for further opinions on this matter of the Advisers to the Delegation, with the following results:

Messrs. Pasvolsky and Harriman said that if the Soviet Delegation did not get its way in this question, there was a possibility that they might withdraw from their position as a sponsoring power in order that they might have a free hand in the Conference.

Mr. Hackworth pointed out that the same situation had been faced in the Committee of Jurists in Washington; that the Soviet representative there would not serve as one of the three Vice Presidents after the Soviet proposal for four chairmen of the Committee had been defeated.<sup>53</sup>

Messrs. Gates and Dulles agreed that it might be better to delay the vote in the Steering Committee the next day in order to gain time to consider the situation and mobilize support for the United States proposal.

At this point Mr. Hiss entered the meeting and The Secretary inquired as to whether there was any possibility of a misunderstanding the previous evening when Mr. Hiss had conveyed to the British Delegation the views of the United States Delegation on the British proposal. Mr. Hiss said that he thought that he had clearly stated the situation to Sir Alexander Cadogan and that there was no doubt in his mind at the time that the British Delegation clearly understood what the views of the United States Delegation were in the matter.

THE SECRETARY said that it was his sense of the discussion that the United States Delegation was willing to accept the compromise advanced by Mr. Eden but that, in the opinion of the Delegation, it would be better to go back to the original United States proposal.

 $<sup>^{53}</sup>$  See exchange of notes on this subject by the United States and the Soviet Union, April 11 and 14, pp. 269 and 291, respectively.

Senator Vandenberg suggested that the Delegation might advance a proposal under which the Conference would have four Presidents with the Secretary of State as Executive Chairman of the Conference chosen by the four Presidents. Messrs. Dunn and Pasvolsky opined that the Soviet Delegation would accept such a proposal at once.

Senator Connally said that in his opinion the United States Delegation was defeated on its original stand and that it could not go back to the original United States position. Therefore, it appeared better to him to accept the Eden compromise.

In attempting to summarize the discussion again, The Secretary said that it was his view that the Delegation preferred the original United States proposal but that they would authorize him to compromise on the Eden proposal as a minimum. Mr. Armstrong added that in his opinion it would be much better if the Delegation were defeated supporting the compromise than if they were defeated on their original proposal.

Dr. Bowman said that this discussion had somewhat disturbed him because he felt that the Delegation was attempting to go too far in giving detailed instructions to the Secretary as to what his position should be. He felt that this was the type of a decision which should be made at the top, and that only the general position of the Delegates and the Advisers ought to be stated.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that after what had happened that afternoon, the smaller countries now thought that the present situation in the Steering Committee was essentially a fight among the four sponsoring Governments. Therefore, it was impossible at this time to obtain a real heartfelt vote on the original United States proposal. He said that he felt that it would be better, however, to let the original proposal stand and if it were accepted by the Conference to see what the Soviet reaction would be. If Mr. Molotov refused to serve as one of the Vice Presidents, that situation would have to be met when it arose. Therefore, he thought it might be well for the Secretary to talk to Mr. Molotov regarding this situation before the next meeting of the Steering Committee.

The meeting of the Delegation closed with Mr. Dulles expressing the view that the Secretary should attempt to obtain the best deal that he could; with Senator Connally expressing the belief that the original United States proposal was a better one but that the Delegation was licked on it and that it would have to go ahead on a compromise; and finally, with both Commander Stassen and Senator Connally stating clearly to the Secretary that he had their vote to do whatever he thought was best under the circumstances.

The meeting was adjourned by the Secretary at 10:35 p.m.

Draft United States Proposals for Trusteeship 54

[San Francisco,] April 26, 1945.

CHAPTER ----

ARRANGEMENTS FOR INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP

(Note 1: This draft deals with principles and mechanism only and makes no assumption about the inclusion of any specific territory.)

- (Note 2: If this draft is to be included as a chapter of the Charter of the Organization, the relevant paragraphs and clauses of the Charter would require revision in order that they might be brought into harmony with the trusteeship provisions.)
- 1. The Organization should establish under its authority a system of international trusteeship for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent agreement.
- 2. The basic objectives of the trusteeship system should be: (a) to further international peace and security; (b) to promote the political, economic, and social advancement of the trust territories and their inhabitants and their progressive development toward self-government; and (a) to provide for non-discriminatory treatment in trust territories with respect to the economic and other appropriate civil activities of the nationals of all member states.
- 3. The trusteeship system should apply only to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship arrangements: (a) territories now held under mandate; (b) territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of this war; and (c) territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration. It would be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories would be brought under a trusteeship system and upon what terms.
- 4. The trusteeship arrangement for each territory to be placed under trusteeship should be agreed upon by the states directly concerned and should be approved as provided for in paragraphs 7 and 8 below.
- 5. The trusteeship arrangements in each case should include the terms under which the territory will be administered.

With the omission of Note 2, this document is the same as that submitted to the Conference at midnight, May 5 (Doc. 2, G/26 (c), UNCIO Documents, vol. 3, p. 607).

&lt;sup>54</sup> Text of this draft (D 1-p, the 16th draft of United States proposals for trusteeship made since the beginning of interdepartmental consideration early in 1945) was adopted by the United States delegation at its nineteenth meeting, April 26, 8:40 p. m.; after clearance by telegraph with the War and Navy Departments copies were transmitted to the Acting Secretary of State in telegram 9, April 27, and to President Truman in memorandum of May 1, neither printed.

- 6. There may be designated, in the trusteeship arrangement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the territory to which the arrangement applies.
- 7. All functions of the Organization relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the trusteeship arrangements and their alteration or amendment, should be exercised by the Security Council.
- 8. The functions of the Organization with regard to trusteeship arrangements for all other areas should be exercised by the General Assembly.
- 9. In order to assist the General Assembly to carry out those functions under the trusteeship system not reserved to the Security Council, there should be established a Trusteeship Council which would operate under its authority. The Trusteeship Council should consist of specially qualified representatives, designated (a) one each by the states administering trust territories; and (b) one each by an equal number of other states named for three-year periods by the General Assembly.
- 10. The General Assembly, and under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, in carrying out their functions, should be empowered to consider reports submitted by the administering authorities, to accept petitions, to institute investigations, and to take other action within their competence as defined by the trusteeship arrangements.
- 11. The administering authority in each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly should make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of a questionnaire formulated by the Trusteeship Council.

Press Policy

The Delegates and Advisers assembled between 9:30 and 9:40 A. M., with the exception of the Secretary and Senators Connally and Vandenberg. . . .

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked Mr. Stassen to take the chair for the discussion, and it was agreed that the Delegates present should consider the problem of press relations and perhaps formulate a proposal which could be put before the remainder of the Delegation.<sup>55</sup>

CHAPTER IX—ARRANGEMENTS FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COOPERA-TION—EDUCATIONAL AND CULTURAL COOPERATION

Mr. Stassen suggested that the Delegates present should now take up some of the deferred items that had not yet been dealt with. He thought everyone was present who was concerned with the Preamble. Mr. Gerig suggested that the Arrangements for Economic and Social Cooperation had better be taken up and that it would be a good idea to wait with the Preamble. Mr. Dulles said this could be taken up better than some other questions.

MISS GILDERSLEEVE said that before this was discussed, she wanted to clarify the status of the official text in the light of the Russian approval of the Chinese proposals.<sup>56</sup> She asked whether this made the official text different. Mr. Gerig said there was a revised draft of Chapter IX 57 being proposed which took account of the suggestions that the Chinese Government had made at Dumbarton Oaks. Mr. Stassen said it was his understanding that the three Chinese proposals now had the same status as the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals themselves.

Mr. Gerig asked whether they should be treated as a separate paragraph or woven into the text of the document. Representative Bloom commented that Miss Gildersleeve, himself, and Representative Eaton were on this committee.<sup>58</sup>

Mr. Bowman recalled that the Advisers had put before the Delegation in Washington a program on this subject and that this program had been discussed and some revisions had been suggested. He asked whether the text had been redrafted, and Mr. Notter said it had been. Mr. Bowman said that the group that had discussed the matter was here, and Representative Bloom said that they should come in to listen to the discussion now. Mr. Bowman asked if it would be all right to open the discussion again. Mr. Stassen thought that the Delegates could discuss the draft more intelligently if these people were available and if the Delegates could have their views.

Mr. Notter said that ordinarily Mr. Stettinius decides when an executive session should be held, and Mr. Bowman added that the group present had to decide in his absence. Mr. Stassen said that unless there was some objection, he would call in the Economic and Social Advisers and Experts. Mr. Gerig sent for them. . . .

Too. Und. 1, not printed.

Mr. Stassen asked if the advisory group felt that the tentative draft of Chapter IX had adequately incorporated the Chinese Proposals. Mr. Stinebower said that in working over the draft they had gone back to the original formulation except for a small change in Section C. He was sure that the language definitely would have taken care of the Chinese Proposals with some insertions, although these proposals were not specifically covered under the specific language of Section A, Purposes and Relationships. Mr. Stassen said he thought some change was undoubtedly needed in Section A, and he asked whether the Technical Advisers would agree that this was so. He asked whether it was not necessary especially to make provision for education and other forms of cultural cooperation. He asked Dean Gildersleeve her opinion.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said she would be very glad to see specific mention of education and cultural cooperation in the draft. It was true that some of the Delegates and other members of Congress seemed to see dynamite in the word "education". She thought it was possible to use educational cooperation internationally with great profit. 25 years she had worked in this field with some success through private international organizations. As the world is today, this cooperation cannot be carried on completely and efficiently on an entirely non-governmental basis. There is undoubtedly some need of a governmental framework, nationally and internationally, and it is important to provide for international educational cultural cooperation in planning for the new international system. We have evidence of the results of international educational and cultural cooperation right here in San Francisco. For example, certain members of the Chinese Delegation were educated in American institutions and acquired a considerable understanding of this country and its ways, and an attitude of friendliness toward America as a result. This type of educational exchange was certainly all to the good. She wanted to repeat that she was opposed to the idea of an international education office that would undertake to dictate or force forms of education on the people of any country, because she thought it would be harmful and ineffective. However, she would certainly feel that an international education office that served as a center of information and mutual aid and facilitated the interchange of teaching ideas and equipment and the visits of students and teachers was not only harmless but admirable. She thought it would be enough to use the word "cultural" although many people in this country would be disappointed if the word "education" was left out.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM said he agreed with the Dean in the desire to have the word "education" in this document. However, he felt that it would be hard to get it through Congress. He said the word "cultural" was bad enough, and he recalled that there had been trouble in the Foreign Affairs Committee when the program of cultural cooperation with Latin America 59 had come up. Also, the Committee had voted down any proposition that UNRRA should have anything to do with education and that it should even be allowed to rebuild schools.<sup>60</sup> He also recalled that when Mr. Fulbright came back from London last year after the conference on education, 61 and made a statement that it would cost about $20,000,000 to carry through the projects of educational reconstruction, there were a great many members of Congress who would not listen any more to the idea of an international educational organization.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE asked whether Congress itself could not be educated.

Mr. Dulles said he thought it was significant that the Chinese Proposals had been accepted as the basis for discussion by the sponsoring governments, and he thought this gave reason for some hope of changing the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals for the better. He then read the three Chinese Proposals.

[1. The Charter should provide specifically that adjustment or settlement of international disputes should be achieved with due regard for principles of justice and international law.

2. The Assembly should be responsible for initiating studies and making recommendations with respect to the development and revision of the rules and principles of international law.

3. The Economic and Social Council should specifically provide the promotion of educational and other forms of cultural cooperation. 62

Mr. Dulles said it was important to recall that it had been agreed by the four Governments that these proposals were acceptable for discussion by the Conference, and this agreement had been specifically announced. He wished to inquire whether this Delegation was competent to reject a stand that already had been taken publicly by our Government. He questioned also, whether it would be expedient to do so, especially since it might open the way for the Russians to go back on their commitments.

Mr. Stassen said it was his opinion that this Delegation has the right to reject any part of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals if it deems wise, and that it was not bound by previous actions of the Government, not even by this agreement. Perhaps there were consequences that would have to be faced if any change were made, but the Delegation had the right to do so. Representative Bloom asked Mr. Dulles if it would be satisfactory to leave out the word "education" and include the rest. Mr. Dulles commented that the Russians leave out the word "justice". Mr. Cox remarked that this stand had been taken publicly and that an announcement had been made, so that it might have unfortunate repercussions to make any change.

Mr. Stassen said that all that happened was that Molotov agreed to what the British and American Governments had already agreed to at Dumbarton Oaks and that the four Governments had agreed to release this information.

Representative Eaton asked for a definition of educational cooperation among nations. Representative Bloom said he had tried that in the Foreign Affairs Committee and that Mr. Fulbright and Mr. Murray 63 and others who had experience in this field had attempted to define the word "education" for Congress.

Mr. Cox said that the general public impression is that the Chinese Proposals are now supported by the United States and by the other sponsoring powers.

Representative Eaton repeated his question as to what educational cooperation is. Mr. Bowman said he had already given a definition and did not want to bore the Delegation by repeating it, but he would repeat it if they wished. He said that there were as many definitions of "education" as of "religion" and that since various forms of propaganda had been developed, some of which we condemned and some of which we approved under the name of "education", there was considerable confusion about the whole matter. A great many fears had been aroused by the misuse of education to propagandize whole peoples, and he thought there was some feeling of the hopelessness of trying to educate entire nations by the processes involved in ordinary educational contacts. He said there were no serious differences as long as international educational cooperation meant setting up machinery for exchange of materials and students, but the difficulties began when we tried to establish values and preach about them. There is considerable controversy as to how to stay away from the latter while doing the former. He spoke of the experience of the Scientific Unions, where members from some countries had frequently tried to promote highly objectionable ideologies. He concluded that all that can be done is to exchange information and people on a friendly personal basis. He said it was a matter of having a in this country knowing a in another country. There will be a tremendous demand for exchange of materials after this war. Countries that have been blocked off from normal contacts need everything, beginning with journals and books. When we are faced with such a demand and it comes in the form of a concrete practical job to be done, we can agree on that. Looking at the Chinese Proposals again, he said that the Technical Advisers should see what could be done with the text to incorporate the intention of Paragraph 3. The professional educators would not be satisfied, it is true. He was not enough of a politician to know what storms might be created if the word "education" was taken out.

Representative Bloom said he was willing to have all sorts of international interchanges carried on but that it would be impossible to write the word "education" into the Charter and then hope for favorable action by the Senate and the House.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON said he believed it necessary to face realities of the world situation on the intellectual and spiritual side. During the last century the world had developed a four-pronged philosophical life. One system was based on the ideal of freedom. That was essentially represented by America and Britain. Three other ideologies stemmed from one source, and the forms they take are the Communism of Russia, the Naziism of Germany, and the Fascism of Italy. Molotov had spoken on behalf of his ideology and with him, being against Fascism apparently meant being against tyranny.

The real question was what would happen in trying to carry on cooperation with the three-pronged systems of education where the Governments supported and dominated educational life. We have not educated people for Democracy as these other nations have educated their people for their ideologies. We take Democracy rather for granted and feel that we need not worry. The Russian system hopes now to advance by pacific means and to gain converts as, in fact, it has already done on a large scale even in this country. He was anxious to get background information on what we mean by educational cooperation. What would happen if we sent our educational philosophies to the U.S.S.R. and they sent theirs here? Our people would come back converted to the Communist system. The Russians have succeeded admirably in educating us here with the people they have sent over. How is it possible to cooperate with the educational system of Russia, which is a country that indoctrinates its people deliberately?

Mr. Bowman said he was in favor of simply working along the line of cultural cooperation. Mr. Stassen called on Mr. Hovde to outline what he thought was included in the term "cultural cooperation". MR. HOVDE said that personally he felt that the word "cultural" was broad enough. If that was left in, he thought it would be possible to persuade others that education, art, science, etc., were a part of culture. There was a practical situation, however, of which due account must be taken. Between the two Great Wars and during this War, professional educational people had been organizing to promote educational cooperation on an international basis. They were interested in school systems and methods of education and in developing the content of education for international understanding. not only the educational people who have drives to insert various descriptive words. Some people want specific mention of science and scientific cooperation. He added that Mr. MacLeish would bear out the assertion that artists in the United States feel very strongly on the matter of having artistic cooperation included. If all of them could be brought to agree that the word "culture" covers all of them and would permit them to engage in their proper lines of activity, it would be a very good thing. However, if we want the support of various groups, it may be important to try to satisfy them with a more precise formulation.

Mr. Stassen said that as the adjournment time of 12:30 was approaching, he thought that the Delegates would like to know what was happening in the Steering Committee, and he suggested sending Mr. Notter to go over to the meeting and come back and inform the group. Mr. Notter said that before going he wanted to say that by this time there had been a great deal of experience with programs of cultural cooperation, and he was for all achievable progress in this field. He thought the big test was whether cultural cooperation would involve freedom of information. He wanted to raise this question of a free exchange of information, thinking this a far more serious problem. It reached all the way to radio, news, etc., and was actually much more explosive. [Mr. Notter left the meeting.]

Mr. Bowman said that in the period when the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals were being explained, it had been necessary to take a position on policy and to interpret and explain various points in detail. It was not enough to take a timid attitude and try to avoid the issues. We should have to come out and explain what we read into any formular that was adopted. In public discussions now, as after the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations, public interest is intense, and it is important to enlighten the public as to our meaning. He believed it necessary to state what elements of education we think suitable to have flourish in the world after the war. He thought it well to expand the idea of cultural cooperation and explain that it includes education, arts, and sciences, and perhaps that would bring us a little farther along the road.

Representative Bloom said that if any other word besides "cultural" was used, that is any specific term, the other specific terms would have to be added. He thought it usually better to keep to more general formulas. For example, Congress under the Constitution was given the right to regulate Post Offices and Post Roads and because of that had been able to deal with a great many specific matters. Thus, he thought it better to use a broad term and interpret it to include science, arts, and education. He had one further example. When Congress was considering a proposal to finance the committee for the preservation of the monuments of Europe, there was a great deal of misunderstanding until it was explained that this term covered art treasures, museum objects, etc. He cited this as an illustration of how difficult it is to work with certain words. He was sure that if the word "education" was in the Charter, there would be a fight in Congress.

Mr. MacLeish said he had been a member of the Delegation to the education meeting in London last year and had been living with his [this?] problem for some time. He was reluctant to make any suggestions on the subject of public pressure, knowing what the members of Congress felt on this matter. He would like, however, to underline what Mr. Hovde had said. The American people feel strongly on the subject of education, and there is a considerable body of opinion and a tremendous support for proposals that lie in the educational field. One aspect of the problem was that the people of the United States, having seen that education had been used as a weapon by the Nazis. now believe that this tendency could not be left uncombatted. He thought that the difficulties were obvious, and it was a problem how to deal substantively with the problem in any terms. The matter could be approached in terms of interchanging the instruments of education, that is, technical information, documentary films, books, new developments and the techniques of education everywhere. Then we could favor an international organization to exchange information about advances in these fields, and circulate reports on developments in different countries. However, it would be difficult and dangerous to ignore the fact that in many minds, education has been abused; and if we really intend to stop war, we must begin to do so and not refuse to take necessary steps in all fields. He would agree that one general word was better than several specific terms. The word "culture" is suspect in America, but there is no substitute for it. He thought it would be better to take the general term and develop it in statements afterwards. He spoke of plans for establishing a special international organization for education and cultural cooperation, which would encourage the interchange of knowledge and techniques and throw light on the developments of education in various countries. This might give part of the control that is needed when things begin to go wrong substantively.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON asked if this is what Mr. MacLeish meant by the term "education". Mr. MacLeish said he thought there was something risky about having announced acceptance of the Chinese Proposals and then whittling them down, and we should face the consequences. Representative Bloom asked if Mr. MacLeish could not suggest any other word, and Mr. MacLeish said he could not. Representative Bloom said that he was trying to ease the way and thought it would be helpful if the word "culture" could cover the word "education".

Dean Gildersleeve said she thought the word "culture" could cover it, although she would have to do a lot of explaining when it became generally known. It was an important point to keep in mind that the four Governments had agreed on the Chinese Proposals and were now making changes. The American people have an almost superstitious reverence for the word "education" and would be shocked if the word is cut out. She thought the matter could be explained if the Delegates were permitted to talk freely about it, so that actually we were coming back again to the question of public relations.

Mr. Stassen said that the word "education" is a fighting word and a symbol. To many it means better information and an opportunity to learn more. To others it is a device through which to establish central control of what people shall learn, and it is this element of control that is opposed by a great many people.

Mr. Dulles thought this problem could be met by making the language clear and saying that control is not intended.

Mr. MacLeish said that the proposed Constitution of the United Nations Organization in this field <sup>64</sup> had been drafted in the State Department and approved by President Roosevelt shortly before his death, and it was intended for later consideration. However, it was relevant to mention it here. It had been very carefully gone over and worded so as to indicate the objectives very clearly, and to limit and define them. If this draft constitution is brought out soon after the Charter is agreed upon, it may resolve some of the misunderstanding.

Mr. Armstrong said he would like to ask about a specific application of the theory of international educational cooperation. What would an exchange of knowledge and techniques between the United States and the U.S.S.R. involve?

Mr. Hovde said that educational cooperation as we conceive it includes a continuous study of methods of education as they are carried out in various countries and of reports describing them as they are published. For example, some country might want improvements in its educational system and might request the international body or the United States directly to help it obtain a survey of its educational Then there could be exchanges of students, professional educators, and leaders in various fields who would learn how the people doing corresponding work in other countries conducted their operations. If they should see something worth adopting, they might recommend making use of it in their own countries. It was conceivable that there might be some sort of cooperative model school established to test out various educational methods in actual conduct and to see whether a real contribution could be made through them. is not merely a matter of the interests of professional educators in this country. American education is admired to a high degree in many other countries, for example, in China, the Balkan countries, Scandinavia, England, and France. Many people look to the United States for suggestions and help. Mr. Bowman asked if Latin America should not be included in this list. Mr. Hovpe said it should be.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked Mr. Hovde what was the name of the division of which he was chief, and Mr. Hovde replied the Division of Cultural Cooperation. Representative Bloom said that this was another place where the word "cultural" was used rather than "education". He thought Congress would have to be educated, but he was trying not to give them an excuse for opposing the Charter at this point. Dean Gildersleeve said she would like to be free to tell the educators that the effort to use the word "education" had been blocked by Congress. Representative Bloom said it would not do to say that the word "culture" meant something else. It would be better just to say that the word "culture" is all-embracing and that the word "education" is too limited.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON said he thought it should be remembered that the members of Congress quite faithfully represent the cultural and educational level of the people they represent in Congress and that their views are not peculiar.

Mr. Armstrong said he still wanted an answer on Russia. He said he wanted to help the people who wanted us to help them, but we might not be so much interested in interchanges with those who wanted to educate us.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said she believed it would be much better if more Americans had been in Russia and could speak Russian. She thought we were handicapped in this Conference by a shortage of people who can talk freely with members of the Russian Delegation. It would be desirable to have international machinery to facilitate sending American students to learn about Russia and to learn to speak the Russian language.

Mr. Armstrong said he did not think of this as coming under the heading of educational techniques. Mr. MacLeish said it was generally thought here that the cure for the failures of Democracy is more Democracy. If this is true, then it seems that the cure for failures of information is more and not less information. We cannot and should not exclude ideas, but we must be sure that they are fully exchanged. It is true that there are difficulties imposed by the Russians themselves. We, however, would like a very full exchange of students, teachers and documents and would like to make available to all the common body of knowledge. Mr. Stassen said that the real difficulty was that Russia so far has not opened up the avenues of information about the rest of the world to its own people, though we might live in hope of improvement.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON said that ideas are like thistledown and they fly like the wind. He said that you take American boys and girls and send them to Russia and they come back Communists. However, whenever Russians come over here they do not go back as Democrats. Very few Russian missionaries had become converts to Democracy.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE and Mr. Bowman questioned this observation, saying that most American young people who went to Russia came back anything but Communists.

Mr. Stassen then read a proposal made by Mr. Dulles for an addition to the Chinese Proposals on educational and cultural cooperation, suggesting the the phrase be added: "through exchanges between the states; but the Economic and Social Council should not itself sponsor or permit any particular educational or cultural methods or matter."

Mr. White said he thought the sole question here was the impact on the public and Congress, and the attitude of Congress was decisive. All Governments supported some degree of educational interchange, and the phraseology would not affect the actual operations. The question here was not what would actually be done in this field. He thought that "culture" as the broader concept was preferable. He believed that the matter could be explained and that it would be useful to have the experts instructed to prepare a redraft of Chapter IX taking the Chinese Proposals into account.

Mr. Cox said there was bound to be some emotional reaction, but he thought it was important to get in the concept of freer interchange of knowledge and to include the idea that cultural interchange includes science, art, and education.

Mr. Stassen said he did not see that the use of the word "education" would be enough of a gain to justify the loss of support that might come if the word was used.

Mr. Stinebower presented the alternative draft for the first paragraph in Section A, Chapter IX.

[1. With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations, and in order to further their common economic, social, and cultural development, the Organization should promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and should encourage separate and cooperative action by all nations for the solution of international economic, social, health, and other related problems.]

In substance, it was the same as the one presented at the last meeting in Washington. Moreover, it included the words "cultural development" but not "education". Dean Gildersleeve said she thought that in this formula, human rights seemed an intrusion. It was certainly vital to keep in the recognition of human rights, but she thought this was not the right place for it. Mr. Stassen expressed the view that there were an unnecessary number of words used here. Representative Bloom asked why the phrase "all nations" should be used and not just "nations". Mr. Stinebower said it was not a very important matter, and Representative Bloom suggested taking out the word "all".

Mr. Stassen asked if the wording of Subsection B had been approved.

[to make recommendations on its own initiative with respect to international economic, social, cultural and other related matters, provided any such recommendations made to governments or to specialized organizations are not inconsistent with those adopted by the General Assembly.]

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked if the technical experts had not gone too far in redrafting this text. Mr. Stinebower said they intended to go less far than the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals by encouraging "separate and cooperative action" and looking to the nations as well as to the international organization for action.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked if it would not be preferable to have fewer words if the same results could be obtained. He thought that the original language was as broad and even broader. Mr. Stinebower said it had been retained because the Committee thought it a desirable safeguard. Miss Gildersleeve said she thought that the simplest thing to do would be to keep the original language and put in the word "culture" in order to adapt the draft to the Chinese Proposals and also to leave the order of words as in the original.

Mr. Stassen said that with the agreement of the Delegation, he would ask the Technical Advisers and Experts to prepare a draft, taking account of the Chinese Proposals, and then bring it back for decision. The Delegates agreed with this suggestion.

Mr. Stinebower asked whether the word "humanitarian" could not be struck out and the word "related" used instead. Mr. Armstrong suggested it would be better to leave out the word "other". Representative Bloom said that the word "humanitarian" is a good word and that it should be left in.

Mr. Stassen instructed the Technical Advisers and Experts to draft a text which would include the cultural phase of the Chinese Proposals with a minimum of words. He then thanked them for their assistance. The meeting was recessed at 12:15 and reconvened in executive session at 12:35.65

THE SECRETARY said he had called this meeting in order to clarify the results of the Steering Committee <sup>66</sup> concerning Chairmanship of the Conference. He said that Mr. Eden's proposal had been accepted by the Committee and Mr. Molotov had made a reservation, and he hoped to be able to go before the Committee today and say that the four powers were united on the text of Mr. Eden's proposal which Mr. Molotov had received.

Mr. Molorov said he could accept points one, two and three in Mr. Eden's proposal but that he proposed that the plan of four Chairmanships be carried on to the Steering Committee.

Mr. Eden inquired as to the last sentence of the resolution which stated that the three other Presidents would give Mr. Stettinius full powers to conduct the position [business?] of the Conference.

Mr. Molorov said that if the word "practical" was added before business, he felt he would be able to accept that sentence.

Mr. Eden said he did not believe he could accept any changes in the wording of the proposal, and he was very much opposed to the idea of four official Chairmanships for the Steering and Executive Committees.

&lt;sup>65</sup> The delegation went into an executive session to hear a report from Mr. Notter regarding the events during the morning at the meeting of the Steering Committee (Doc. 30, DC/5(1), April 27, UNCIO Documents, vol. 5, p. 81); minutes of the meeting of the United States delegation in executive session, 12:35–12:50 p. m., not printed.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that they had gone almost all the way in trying to meet Mr. Molotov's desire that the plan of equality of the four guiding powers should be established, and he did not feel that it was possible to go any further. He asked Mr. Eden whether he thought that Mr. Molotov's amendments could be accepted.

Mr. Eden said emphatically that he did not believe they could.

Dr. Soong agreed with Mr. Eden.

THE SECRETARY then said that his position; that of Mr. Eden's, and that of Dr. Soong was that the resolution as adopted at yesterday's session should stand unchanged.

Mr. Molorov said in that case, if his amendments were not accepted, he could not agree.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of persons (24) present at meeting.] Senator Vandenberg called the meeting to order at 8:38 p.m. in the absence of the Secretary and Senator Connally.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COOPERATION

Mr. Pasvolsky announced that it would be necessary to take up the suggestions made with respect to Chapter IX, Arrangements for International Economic and Social Cooperation (Yellow Paper, 4/18/45). In this connection Mr. Stinebower called attention to the paper on this Chapter incorporating suggested changes, which had been circulated as a result of the morning's meeting. Representative Bloom explained that the idea was to discuss possible modifications in view of the Chinese proposals.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE recalled that tentative agreement had been reached in the morning's meeting to insert "cultural cooperation" in paragraph 1 of Chapter IX.

Mr. Stinebower proceeded to explain the following suggested changes:

(a) Paragraph 1: The insertion of the phrase "cultural cooperation and" in line 6 between "promote" and "respect", that is, the paragraph would facilitate solutions and promote cultural cooperation.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that this was not a new proposal. This change was agreed upon.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the elimination of the word "other" might cause trouble.

[Senator Connally arrived at this point.] 68

(b) The addition of a paragraph on the responsibility of the Organization, the first sentence of which was formerly the last sentence of paragraph 1, and the last sentence of which would be new and would read "The Organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the nations concerned for the creation of any specialized economic, social or other organizations or agencies for the accomplishment of these objectives."

Mr. Stinebower stated that this paragraph had been considered by the Delegation at its first meeting when the economic questions came up.<sup>69</sup> The first part of the paragraph, he observed, was not new. The new part is the part underlined. The first part of the paragraph was originally the last sentence of paragraph 1.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that this again was something which should be put up by other governments, and in that event it might be supported by the United States.

Senator Connally inquired whether this was to involve any authority beyond that of recommendation, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied that this was all that was involved. Senator Connally stated that he would then have no objection.

[The Secretary of State and Commander Stassen arrived at this point.]

Mr. Stinebower explained that the next suggested change was something new—a new statement in Section B, providing for a staggered system of representation on the Economic and Social Council.

Mr. Dunn inquired whether this had been proposed by any other Delegation, and Mr. Stinebower said that it had not. It was not to be considered a substantive proposal, however.

Senator Vandenberg suggested that it appeared unobjectionable and might be marked "B". 70

Mr. Stinebower further explained that the suggested changes in Sections C and D were not new and had been approved by the Delegation in Washington.

It was agreed that all of these changes, while acceptable, would be marked "B" and although they would not be put forward by this Government, they would be carefully watched by the American representatives on Commission II.<sup>71</sup>

An executive session was called at this point (9:05 p.m.) and the Economic Advisers left.

CHAPTER VIII, SECTION B, PARAGRAPHS 1, 2, AND 3

Following the executive session the meeting turned its attention to Chapter VIII, Arrangements for International Peace and Security, Including the Prevention and Suppression of Aggression, with particular attention to the suggested reorganization and rewording of Section B, paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 proposed by Messrs. Armstrong, Bowman, and Dulles, which read as follows:

"Should the Security Council deem that a failure to settle a dispute in accordance with procedures indicated in Paragraph 3 of Section A, or in accordance with its recommendations under Paragraph 5 of Section A, constitutes a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security or if the Security Council should otherwise determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression, it may make recommendations as to how to maintain or restore peace and security and it may invoke the measures provided for by Paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Section."

"Renumber Paragraph 3 to be Paragraph 2 and strike out 'to give effect to its decisions' and substitute 'to maintain or restore international peace and security'. Renumber the succeeding paragraphs."

It was pointed out by Mr. Pasvolsky that the proposed change in the wording of these paragraphs would involve a fundamental change in substance, namely, from a mandatory position to a permissive position, and Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out the desirability of retaining the mandatory position. Mr. Pasvolsky observed that this would alter the sense of paragraph 1, which was a compromise, and that it would cause considerable discussion.

Mr. Dunn inquired whether the meaning was that the Security Council would have to make recommendations. Mr. Dulles remarked that the Security Council may make recommendations, and it may invoke action, that these are two entirely independent powers, and that there may not be time to make the recommendations first.

Mr. Notter pointed out that the biggest change involved in the suggested wording is that the Council is given discretion to act, whereas in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals this action was mandatory.

Dr. Bowman pointed out that paragraphs 3 and 4 are severe, and that diplomatic channels might be employed in the interval.

Mr. Dulles stated that paragraphs 3 and 4 are to be interpreted as giving the Security Council the power to take measures but not to compel it to do so.

MR. DUNN inquired why the word "may" had been used instead of "should" in the rewording. DR. BOWMAN explained that this was to convey the thought that there may be an interval which might bring about an agreement before action becomes necessary. MR. DUNN suggested that the phrase might read "should make recommendations, and if necessary should invoke". Mr. Dulles stated, however, that he would prefer the term "may" with respect to recommendations. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that "may" would become "shall" in any case in the final drafting, but Mr. Hackworth stated that it need not become "shall".

Mr. Pasvolsky stated it as his view that it would be desirable to adhere to the Dumbarton Oaks language.

MR. DULLES pointed out that it would be possible to argue in the Council for a month as to what recommendations to make. Senator Connally stated that the Council might make recommendations and might act on them, and Mr. Pasvolsky added that the meaning is that the Council would have complete freedom of action and suggested the wording "it should make recommendations as to how to maintain or restore peace and security or it may invoke . . .". It might make recommendations, it might invoke non-military sanctions, it might invoke military sanctions, or it may do all three.

Mr. Dunn stated that he also favored the original language.

Mr. Pasvolsky agreed and suggested an alternative wording "decide upon the measures to be taken to maintain or restore . . .". He pointed out that the object of the redraft is to eliminate the word "any" in paragraph 1 and that this had been done.

Mr. Pasvolsky observed that another possible wording would be "it should make recommendations or decisions on measures to be taken to maintain or restore peace and security as provided for in the paragraphs below".

Mr. Dulles stated that they could sit around in the meeting all night discussing language.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the meeting might focus its attention on the proposition that it is desirable to eliminate the word "any" and to make sure that we preserve the measures provided for in paragraphs 3 and 4.

Mr. Dulles remarked that force is to be used to maintain peace and it should not be coupled with recommendations. Mr. Pasvolsky added that that is precisely why distinction is made between recommendations and measures. It is certainly clear, he said, that what we had in mind was that the Council might make recommendations or take measures, or do both. The use of "or" therefore is more flexible.

Mr. Dunn remarked that if recommendations are made they would come first.

Mr. Hackworth suggested that paragraph 2 should actually be paragraph 1.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the two paragraphs could be combined necessarily if there is agreement that the measures to be taken are solely the measures provided for in paragraphs 3 and 4, and that the Council will not use force with respect to recommendations. He continued that we would get into international arguments if we play with the language.

Mr. Notter called attention to the last two lines of paragraph 1 as it was originally and pointed out that words had been added which have been dropped in the suggested rewording.

COMMANDER STASSEN urged that serious effort should be made to finish the consideration of American proposals at this meeting in preparation for our discussions with other governments.

Dr. Bowman inquired of Mr. Pasvolsky whether the weight of his objection to the new draft was the substance of the draft as opposed to the substance of the old wording or the difficulty of negotiating the new draft.

Mr. Pasvolsky replied that there were two points involved. One was the change from a mandatory to a permissive position, and this, he said, is fundamental. The position should be mandatory. The second was his acceptance of the position that the word "any" should be eliminated. He was inclined to put aside the question of the difficulty of negotiating the draft resulting from the deletion of the word "any". Mr. Dunn read paragraph 4, Section B and observed that it would seem that any action that was deemed necessary could be taken under this wording. Mr. Pasvolsky remarked that up to now the interpretation had been one whereby the Council would have the right to impose a settlement when there is a threat to the peace.

It was finally agreed that the desired end could be attained by accepting a formula offered by Mr. Dulles, which would involve adding the phrase "set forth in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this Section" following "measures" in line 7 of paragraph 1, Section B, and following "measures" in line 4 of paragraph 2, Section B, and by adding the phrase "to maintain or restore international peace and security" following "decisions" in line 4 of paragraph 3 of this Section.

It was agreed that the proposal of Commander Stassen be accepted that the suggestion advanced by Mr. Dulles be marked "A".<sup>72</sup>

PREAMBLE

Senator Vandenberg observed that the next item on the agenda would be a discussion of the Preamble.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the Preamble is all new and read the new Preamble, noting that it provided that "The High Contracting Parties hereby agree upon this Charter and accept its obligations".

COMMANDER STASSEN read a suggested wording for a preamble which he had drafted, which he pointed out would draw considerably from the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Pasvolsky commented that the difficulty encountered in attempting to write a preamble embodying such ideas is that they would be repeated three times. He said he would like to be sure that a substantial part of the document would contain these ideas and remarked to Commander Stassen that in the draft he had just read all of the basic ideas were present and well-stated. He noted also that several people were working on a preamble.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE remarked that it would be desirable to have a simple preamble which could be hung up and should be hung up in every peasant's cottage throughout the world. This, she said, would not be easy to draft.

Mr. Pasvolsky read a second version of the preamble, which Senator Vandenberg stated that he liked. Commander Stassen, however, expressed dislike of the phrase "The High Contracting Parties".

Mr. Hackworth stated that instruments such as this usually start out with the names of the parties signatory. This, he said, is a drafting problem and should be turned over to a drafting committee.

Mr. Pasvolsky advised that there are two questions involved in this matter: (1) should the United States Delegation put forward a proposal on a preamble; and (2) if so, should it be of the type that has just been read.

Commander Stassen suggested a wording as follows: "The United Nations, in conference assembled ordain the creation of an international organization to maintain peace and security, establish justice, and promote the general welfare of all peoples".

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE stated that she rather liked this wording, but Mr. Dulles suggested that it was too much reminiscent of war.

Mr. Dunn stated that the most forceful approach would be one in which the states would obligate themselves to do the things mentioned in Commander Stassen's wording.

MR. PASVOLSKY remarked that it should make reference to the determination of states to maintain international peace and security, law and order, to foster respect for these concepts. Senator Vandenberg added facetiously that he "rather liked the idea of getting Foster's name in there".

Mr. Pasvolsky advised that the Mexican Delegation would propose a very long preamble which would incorporate a bill of rights for individuals and nations. He suggested that the Delegation might collect all preambles that would be proposed, take a look at them, and come forth with one of our own.

MR. HACKWORTH advised that all preambles with which he was acquainted named the states involved, but MR. PASVOLSKY pointed out that the Covenant of the League of Nations did not name the parties.

SENATOR VANDENBERG suggested that it might be given to the Preamble Committee to handle.

SENATOR CONNALLY remarked that he would be in a much better position with respect to the proposals of the other governments if we had a short draft of our own.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that it would be better if we would take a look at the preambles of the other delegations and then suggest one of our own, but if we should introduce a preamble proposal of our own first, the other groups would try to tack things on to it.

SENATOR CONNALLY repeated that any proposal on the preamble that we might advance should be short and business-like.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the matter might be left to Committee I/1 to propose a preamble after that Committee had examined the suggestions of the other delegations.

SENATOR VANDENBERG inquired whether there were any other suggestions and in the absence of any stated that it was agreed that the procedure outlined by Mr. Pasvolsky would be followed. He then called attention to the subject of withdrawal.

REGISTRATION OF TREATIES AND REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

SENATOR CONNALLY stated that there should be a provision somewhere in the Charter requiring members making treaties of alliance to register them.

MR. PASVOLSKY pointed out that there was not only the question of registration of treaties but also inconsistent obligations, and MR. Dulles inquired whether the recent Russian-Polish treaty 73 involved an inconsistent obligation.

Mr. Pasvolsky commented that this raises a very difficult problem. It is not a matter of a proposal. The Franco-Russian treaty,74 for example, raises certain special questions, for this was directed solely against Germany. The British, he said, had already raised the question as to what position we would take on this matter. If the French advance a claim, he said, we would probably have to allow that claim, but only with the very clear understanding that if the Organization takes over the functions of the victor nations with regard to the control of Germany and Japan, then the Franco-Russian treaty would become inconsistent with the provisions of the Charter.

Mr. Dulles remarked that there should be more liberality with respect to regional rather than bilateral arrangements.

Mr. Pasvolsky noted that when the section of the Charter on regional arrangements was drafted those drafting it had in mind bilateral and multilateral as well as regional arrangements.

WITHDRAWAL

Senator Vandenberg stated that there were no questions in connection with this problem which had to be settled at this time. He again mentioned the question of withdrawal.

SENATOR CONNALLY stated that he always thought there should be some provision whereby a nation could disassociate itself from the Organization in its own interests.

Mr. Hackworth expressed the view that a withdrawal clause would weaken the document by fifty percent.

Senator Vandenberg said that in his opinion a withdrawal provision should be included. If the United States wants to withdraw, he said, then it will withdraw.

Mr. Hackworth admitted that this would be the case, but it was not necessary to include a provision in the Charter to provide for this.

Senator Connally remarked that he had just gone through a Senate fight on a treaty which was only because the treaty was "forever".

COMMANDER STASSEN observed that as long as we have a veto power which operates in such way that the Organization cannot do anything we don't agree with, then he could see no reason why we should not stay in it.

Senator Connally stated that this may be true, but the country that wants "out" and not "in" should be able to get out.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE inquired whether any countries had proposals on withdrawal.

Mr. Pasvolsky observed that we now have sixteen "A" proposals and that that is an awful lot.

COMMANDER STASSEN stated that we would settle for eight of these if we could pick the eight. Mr. Dunn stated that he did not think that the British would offer many.

Mr. Pasvolsky wondered whether they should all be advanced as formal proposals.

Senator Vandenberg inquired whether they would fall within the role requiring them to be present within a week, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied affirmatively.

COMMANDER STASSEN suggested that we not propose anything on withdrawal and this was agreed upon. Mr. Dulles pointed out that it would have a bad psychological effect if this country should propose it in any case.

COMMANDER STASSEN inquired whether the discussions were not finished and whether it would now be possible to put the document together and take it up with other governments.

Mr. Pasvolsky replied that this was the case, and he added that by early next week the International Secretariat would provide the Delegation with a list of all proposals which the other governments are offering.

CHAPTER VII—THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Mr. Hackworth observed that Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals relative to the Court had not been discussed in the Delegation. He suggested that a time should be set at which he could present the Delegation with a résumé of what took place on this subject in Washington.<sup>75</sup> There are, he said, only a few questions outstanding.

Senator Vandenberg inquired whether this meant that the Delegation would have to reach a decision on some fundamental questions, and Mr. Hackworth said that such matters as compulsory jurisdiction, and the continuation of the present Court would have to be decided.

Senator Vancenberg announced that the Delegation would meet at 9:30 the next morning at the suggestion of the Secretary to meet with its "dissident constituents", and would also meet at 9:30 Monday morning to discuss the outstanding questions on the Court.

The meeting was adjourned at 10:48 p.m.

The Delegation went into Executive Session at 8:55 p.m.

REPORT ON THE CONFERENCE STEERING COMMITTEE

THE SECRETARY reported that he had just talked to both the President and Mr. Hull and that he felt that all in all the day had been a very successful one and that he was greatly encouraged by the events of the day.

THE SECRETARY then gave the following detailed report on the events during the day at the long meeting of the Steering Committee.<sup>76</sup>

- 1. He said that Mr. Molotov had withdrawn his proposal that the World Trade Union Congress be made an official adviser to the Conference. He said that the British, the Chinese and the United States Delegations were prepared to oppose such a proposal and that he felt that it would have been defeated if it had come to a vote.<sup>77</sup>
- 2. He said that before the meeting he had tried to persuade Mr. Molotov to accept the Eden compromise but that he had been unsuccessful. However, he said that after the meeting began, Mr. Molotov, sensing the situation, had finally withdrawn the Soviet proposal and the Steering Committee had accepted the British compromise.
- 3. He reported that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals constituted the agenda of the Conference and that amendments to these Proposals, if they were to be considered by the Conference, would have to be submitted not later than midnight, May 4. At this point, Representative Bloom inquired as to whether counter amendments to any such amendments submitted could be made later in the Conference, and the Secretary assured him that such was the case. Representative Bloom then said that he hoped that appropriate provision had been made so that any such counter-proposals would have to be submitted twenty-four hours in advance of the time at which action upon them would be decided. Mr. Dunn assured him that such was the case.
- 4. The Secretary reported that Field Marshal Smuts had asked for speed in completing the Conference work. As a sidelight on the afternoon's events, The Secretary reported the details of his press conference following the Steering Committee meeting and said that hereafter he would hold no more press conferences after Steering Committee meetings but only after Plenary Sessions of the Conference.
- 5. He reported that the Executive Committee had been approved as recommended.
- 6. The proposal for a two-thirds vote in the Conference on all substantive matters had been opposed by the Australian Delegation and had been deferred for later consideration. In this connection, The Secretary again mentioned that there had been great sentiment among the Delegates for speed in concluding the work of the Conference and that he had made the statement that he was for as rapid action as could be taken, but not at the expense of producing a good Charter.
- 7. The question of the seating of the two Soviet Republics had been advanced by Mr. Molotov who proposed them as initial members of the organization. He said that Mr. Molotov, on his advice, had made only a very brief statement on the question, and that the Secretary had then endorsed the proposal and said that the United States Delegation would vote for it. He said that Mr. Eden also approved the proposal in a short statement and that it had been voted unanimously by the Steering Committee. THE SECRETARY said that Mr. Molotov then raised the question of seating representatives of these two Republics at this Conference. In this connection, he said that the British Dominions were not at all helpful in the debate and it was with some difficulty that the matter had been referred to the Executive Committee for action at that Committee's next meeting. He said that Mr. Molotov had tried unsuccessfully to have a report on this matter made available in twenty-four hours.

8. The Secretary reported the next major item taken up by the Steering Committee concerned the question of inviting Poland to the Conference. He said that such a proposal was made by Mr. Masaryk of Czechoslovakia.<sup>78</sup> The Secretary had formally replied that such a proposal could not be accepted in view of the Crimea agreement. Mr. Eden then endorsed the United States position in this matter. Other countries objected to introducing such a matter into this Conference, and a motion by Foreign Minister Spaak (Belgium) on this question was adopted unanimously. The sense of Spaak's motion was that the question of Poland did not belong before this Conference but instead was a matter for the three major powers concerned to settle among themselves.

Conversations with the President and Mr. Hull

Following this long report of the activities in the Steering Committee during the day, The Secretary also said that there were two other matters which he wished to report to the Delegation:

1. He said that he had reported on the happenings of the day by telephone to the President, who was both delighted and pleased; and that the President now felt that the Conference was off to a good start. THE SECRETARY said that he advised the President that there was another big hurdle looming, and this involved the seating of the two Soviet Republics at the Conference, as well as the question of Argentina. He said that the President told him that if the seating of these two Republics and Argentina did not involve the signing of the United Nations Declaration, he would give the United States Delegation full power and responsibility to deal with this question as best they could when it arose.79

<sup>79</sup> In his message to President Truman reporting on developments at the Conference on April 27th (telegram 3, April 28), Mr. Stettinius stated: "At my press conference this afternoon I released the President's letter to me directing me, pursuant to the commitment assumed by President Roosevelt at Yalta, to support the Soviet request for initial membership for the Ukrainian and White Russian Republics." (500.CC/4-2845) For the President's letter of April 22 to the Secretary of State, see Department of State Bulletin April 29, 1945, p. 806.

THE SECRETARY also reported that he had talked to Mr. Hull and that Mr. Hull preferred not to advise the Delegation in this matter. The Secretary said that he inquired of Mr. Hull as to whether he would not feel better if Argentina were merely seated at the Conference. He said that Mr. Hull replied that he would not like it, but if the Delegation had to agree to such a proposal, of course, they would have to agree to it.

THE SECRETARY closed this report on these two conversations by saying that the President and Mr. Hull both felt strongly that neither the Soviet Republics nor Argentina should be permitted to sign the United Nations Declaration.

SEATING OF SOVIET REPUBLICS

THE SECRETARY said that he felt it necessary to impress upon the Delegation the seriousness of this situation; that Mr. Molotov would press and press on the question of seating the two Soviet Republics at the Conference; that the Argentina question would go hand in hand with whatever Conference action was taken on the two Soviet Republics. The Secretary again made the point that the solution of these two questions would have to be made at the same time.

Advisers to the Delegation

THE SECRETARY also reported that, according to his information, the Advisers to the Delegation were in a rather uneasy frame of mind, since they felt that the Delegation was not paying them the proper attention. Consequently, he suggested that he and one or two other members of the Delegation should appear before the entire group of Advisers on Saturday morning, and that the Delegation meet with them at 9:30.

THE SECRETARY also reported that he wanted to recommend to the Delegation that Assistant Secretaries Gates and McCloy of the Navy and War Departments sit with the Delegation at all times. Mr. Stassen said he was strongly in favor of such a recommendation, and this recommendation was accepted without objection.

SOVIET REPUBLICS AND ARGENTINA

Senator Connally reverted to the Secretary's statements with respect to the two Soviet Republics and Argentina, and inquired as to whether the Secretary believed Mr. Molotov would be open to negotiation on this matter. Mr. Dunn said that he had discussed this matter with Mr. Gromyko and that he had warned the Soviet Delegation that the American Republics would bring up the Argentina question as soon as the Soviet Republics question was brought forward by the Soviet Delegation. He said, however, that at his next meeting with Mr. Gromyko, he would warn him again that continued Soviet insistence on action regarding the seating of the two Soviet Republics would be sure to raise the Argentina question.

COMMANDER STASSEN said that he thought that the general tactics should be that of attempting to delay action on the entire question, and to that end he thought the Delegation should give the Secretary full authority to act when, as, and if necessary. He said that he thought that his original suggestion of having the Soviet Republics seated perhaps three weeks after the Conference was too much of a concession.

Senator Connally said that despite attempts to delay action, Mr. Molotov would insist that that question of the status of the two Soviet Republics be settled before regard to the issues which might be raised on Argentina.

Mr. Dunn pointed out that it was almost impossible to organize the Conference properly until the question of the two Soviet Republics was settled, since the Soviet Delegation was insisting that these two Republics be given positions in the Conference organization. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that it might be possible to set up an organization slate with two vacancies left for the Republics and to assure Mr. Molotov that representatives of the two Republics would be assigned to these positions whenever they were seated.

Mr. Rockefeller said that the reason that Argentina was not being brought up at this point was that the American Republics did not wish to disturb the possible success of the Conference, but that if the Soviet Government insisted on pursuing its proposal for seating the other two Republics, the American Republics would feel duty-bound to insist on the seating of Argentina.

THE SECRETARY suggested that the Delegation should take the weekend to consider the Argentina matter and to meet together early next week to decide what course of action they should follow. As the Secretary left the meeting at the close of the Executive Session, Mr. Warren said that he wished to make clear that the support of the American Republics for the admission of the two Soviet Republics as initial members of the international organization was a gesture of support for the late President Roosevelt; that they had not liked the proposal and that they had agreed to support it out of respect and honor to him.

THE SECRETARY said he had asked the sponsoring powers to meet with the four representatives of the Latin American countries in order to hear the requests they had to make.

Dr. Padilla said that all the countries of Latin America had been glad to vote for the admission of White Russia and the Ukraine as initial members of the Organization at the session of the Steering Committee. He said he felt that this unanimous vote was a splendid indication of unity among the powers represented here. He said in this connection he wished to refer to a commitment which had been assumed by all the Latin American countries at the Mexico City Conference in regard to Argentina. At that Conference, it had been agreed that if Argentina fulfilled certain conditions in accordance with the spirit and contents of the Act of Chapultepec then the other South American countries would accept her back into the American family of nations. He added that the Argentine had fulfilled these conditions, had declared war on the Axis, and had subscribed fully to the plans set forth at Mexico City. He said that from the point of view of the Latin American countries Argentina had taken these steps in confidence that the other Republics would keep their share of the bargain. He said he felt it would be appropriate, in view of Argentina's action and the commitments of the Latin American countries if Argentina would be invited to this Conference as a recognition of the steps which she had carried out in good faith. He said it would be a very pleasant matter for the South American countries if this request could be treated in the same spirit of cooperation and unity which they had displayed in regard to White Russia and the Ukraine. He concluded expressing the hope that Mr. Molotov would find it possible to agree to this.

Mr. Molotov inquired "How would it be understood if we were to invite Argentina to attend this Conference and not Poland?" He said he thought it would be difficult to explain since Poland had suffered so much in this war and had been the first country to be invaded whereas Argentina had, in effect, helped the enemy.

DR. PADILLA answered that the Polish question had been considered at the last meeting of the Steering Committee <sup>80</sup> and that he personally felt that since the three great powers had an agreement on the subject at the Crimea Conference it should be left to them to decide the Polish question. He said he did not feel that the other countries had any right or authority to attempt to decide this question. He went on to say that in regard to the Argentine, he felt that twenty American countries would be in a position of having failed to carry out their commitment and that Argentina could legitimately consider that she had been let down.

Mr. Molorov made a statement in which he repeated his previous arguments that both India and the Philippines although not independent countries were represented at this Conference. He said, in addition, there were a number of small nations who had no diplomatic relations with the Soviet Government but they had not objected to these countries coming to the Conference. He said that it would be impossible to explain the absence of Poland if Argentina were to be invited. He repeated his argument that Argentina had helped the enemy at least until very recently whereas Poland had been one of the first victims of German aggression. He stated that there might be no objection to Argentina if Poland were to be invited but otherwise it would be impossible to explain an invitation to Argentina.

Mr. Velloso said that as Dr. Padilla had explained, there was no comparison between the two questions. In the case of Poland, the issue was not whether Poland as a country should be at the Conference—he knew everyone warmly desired their presence—but rather the question as to which Government should be considered as representing Poland.

Mr. Fernandez then inquired whether Mr. Molotov meant that an invitation to Argentina from his point of view was conditional upon invitation to the Warsaw Government. He said he supported the view of Dr. Padilla and Mr. Velloso that there were two distinct and unconnected problems. He added that it was up to the three powers who had been at the Crimea to decide the question of the Polish Government whereas Argentina had carried out in good faith what had been asked of her at the Mexico City Conference, and that the question irrespective of which side she may have been considered on before.

Mr. Velloso then said that he regretted very much Mr. Molotov's position and he was afraid that if Argentina was not admitted, the

American countries would have to vote against an invitation to White Russia and the Ukraine.

SIR ALEXANDER CADOGAN in the absence of Mr. Eden, said he wished to make it quite clear that from the point of view of the British Government it was absolutely impossible to accept an invitation to the representatives of the Warsaw regime and that he did not feel the Polish question could be decided in this manner by the Conference.

Mr. Molorov stated that without an invitation to Poland, he could not agree to one to Argentina and repeated his suggestion that it be brought before the Executive Committee on Monday.<sup>81</sup>

The meeting broke up with this suggestion accepted.

MEMORANDUM

Relative to the memorandum of the Department of State of April 24 regarding position of the Government of the United States on the question of inviting representatives of the present Provisional Polish Government to the conference in San Francisco, the Soviet Government has the honor to state that for the reasons stated in the memorandum of the Soviet Government of April 17, it cannot agree with the position of the Government of the United States and continues to insist upon the participation in the conference in San Francisco now functioning, of the representatives of the Provisional Polish Government and that the position of the Soviet Government on this question remains as before.

Press Policy

Mr. Byington read the following proposed statement of press policy for the American Delegation:

- 1. Official announcements by the Delegation shall be made through the Chairman.
- 2. All members of the Delegation are free at all times to converse with the press for background or to make such personal statements as they may consider appropriate. Copies of any formal statements made to the press should be sent to the Delegation's Press Officer immediately after they are made.
- 3. All arrangements to speak on the radio shall be made through Commander Lloyd Dennis.
- 4. The Press Officer of the Delegation will arrange as frequently as possible for a background conference by one or more members of the Delegation together with one or more of the technical advisers.
- 5. In making the arrangements for press conferences the Press Officer of the Delegation will consult with Commander Stassen who will act in behalf of the Delegation in directing the Press Officer with regard to general arrangements. This suggestion is made on the basis of the Delegation's discussion last Friday.<sup>83</sup>
- 6. The Chairman of the Delegation will attend the background conferences and preside. However, arrangements shall be made by the Press Officer, through Commander Stassen, for a delegate to be definitely on hand to preside in case it is not possible for the Chairman to attend, as will undoubtedly sometimes be the case.
- 7. The first background press conference will be presided over by the Chairman of the Delegation and it is hoped that as many of the Delegates and advisers as can arrange to do so will be present. It will be held Tuesday at 2:45 p. m. in the Red Room of the Fairmont Hotel. There will be a further background meeting with the press at 2:45 on Wednesday. During the latter part of the week, an effort will be made to move the time for the conferences to 1:00 p. m. or quarter to one if possible.

In view of the tremendously large number of correspondents attending the conference, it is suggested that these background conferences should be started on an experimental basis and without commitment on the part of the Delegation to continue them daily in any set form since it may not prove feasible to have background conferences with such large groups as may attend. The press should be informed, however, that it is the intention of the Delegation to meet with them as often as possible and that all announcements of future conferences will be made through the Press Officer of the Conference Secretariat.

<sup>83</sup> April 27, 9:30 a. m.

All newsreel and still camera arrangements shall be made through the Delegation Press Officer who will follow a policy of endeavoring to see to it that the camera men get all the pictures they want.

Senator Vandenberg asked if the United States Proposals or amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals had been submitted formally as yet, and if they were not available for public discussion. He thought they were a legitimate subject of publicity and that it was important to get them out. Mr. Gerig explained that it was necessary to get an approved Russian text before these Proposals could be released and that the Russian approval had not yet been obtained. Congressman Bloom commented that it seemed to take a long time to get this clearance. . . .

TRUSTEESHIP

At the request of Senator Connally, Mr. Gerig reported on the subject of trusteeship. He stated that it had been agreed at Yalta that the five permanent members of the Security Council would consult with respect to trusteeship prior to the San Francisco Conference. Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Dunn had been in touch with the other four governments over the weekend, and there would be preliminary conversations with those governments beginning that evening at 8:30.84 Commander Stassen, Mr. Gates, Mr. McClov, and Mr. Gerig (as Technical Expert) would represent the United States. Mr. Gerig thought these conversations would take several days. The paper prepared by the United States Delegation 85 would be submitted; and it was Mr. Gerig's understanding that the British did not have a paper but would rely upon the United States paper. Developments in this matter would be brought to the attention of the United States Delegation and every effort would be made to push the matter as rapidly as possible. Representative Bloom asked how this was different from the manner in which it would be handled in the Conference, and also asked if any over-all committee on trusteeship had been appointed for the Conference, as he had heard that there was such a United Nations Committee with Saudi Arabia represented on it. Mr. Gerig stated that under the organization of the Conference, there would be a Committee on Commission II dealing with this subject but that such a committee had not as yet been appointed. The International Secretariat would

Mr. Dulles observed that it would be desirable to decentralize this work. He noted that on this trusteeship question, the Delegation had considered primarily the military aspects, but that other countries would raise many other considerations, such as the Dutch East Indies, etc. He thought, therefore, that Commander Stassen would need advisers other than the Army and Navy people. Congressman Bloom thought that with all due respect to Commander Stassen there should be some one representative from Congress dealing with this subject.

Senator Connally noted that the Army and Navy advisers took the position that strategic bases would be under the Security Council, and that other areas would be under the Assembly. He noted that Senator Vandenberg was associated with both Commission II and Commission III and therefore Senator Vandenberg should handle this matter with Commander Stassen. Commander Stassen observed that this present consultation was merely to present the United States Delegation document regarding trusteeship to the other four governments, and to explain to them informally what the United States Delegation intends. This was just a preliminary consultation and before anything would be decided, the full Delegation would be informed.

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE: COMPULSORY JURISDICTION

Senator Connally asked Mr. Hackworth to present a report to the Delegation on the work of the Committee of Jurists in Washington. Since Senator Connally and Senator Vandenberg had to leave in a few minutes, Mr. Hackworth was asked to take up the subject of compulsory jurisdiction first.

Mr. Hackworth stated that in the Committee of Jurists there had been a considerable demand to write compulsory jurisdiction into the Statute of the International Court, particularly on the part of the small powers and also on the part of such countries as China and Brazil. On the other hand, he reported that the USSR, the United Kingdom, Netherlands, Yugoslavia, Norway, Haiti, and France were opposed to compulsory jurisdiction and supported the Optional Clause of the present Statute, which also appears in the United States draft.<sup>87</sup> These countries stated that they would not be parties to the Statute if it contained a provision for compulsory jurisdiction. Mr. Hackworth stated that this situation presented a real problem.

The structure of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice with revisions proposed by the United States, see Jurist 5, G/5, April 9, ibid., p. 323; for article 36 (compulsory jurisdiction), see ibid., p. 338.

Senator Connally asked if under the Optional Clause a state could agree to accept the jurisdiction of the Court, either generally or just with certain states. Mr. Hackworth replied that under the Optional Clause a state could go as far as it wished, i.e., it could accept the Court's jurisdiction for a limited period of time or for certain types of cases, etc. Representative Bloom asked if Russia would object to that type of provision too. Mr. Hackworth replied that the United Kingdom and Russia were willing to accept the Optional Clause and, he supposed, the United States also. However, he said, a large number of the small countries wanted the compulsory jurisdiction provision. Therefore, he had suggested that this article be put in alternative forms for the San Francisco Conference.88

Congressman Eaton asked what argument these countries used in insisting on compulsory jurisdiction. Mr. Hackworth replied that the little states seem to feel that it would be a great protection to them if they could bring other countries, both large and small, into the Court. Congressman Eaton remarked that he could see their point.

Senator Vandenberg stated that he had the definite feeling that this was one situation where we would have to depend upon evolution to reach the desired objective. He thought that a provision for compulsory jurisdiction would be a red-danger signal in the Senate. He recalled the Court fight in the Senate which he had gone through. He felt, therefore, that the Optional Clause of the Statute must be retained for the purposes of the Senate. Senator Connally agreed with Senator Vandenberg. He felt that from the United States' standpoint, the Optional Clause must be retained. He said if we accepted the compulsory jurisdiction provision, we would not know what suits would be brought against us by other countries, both in this hemisphere and elsewhere. He thought, therefore, that the optional jurisdiction provision should be retained. He noted that unless nations were willing to submit a dispute to the Court on an optional basis, the case would probably have to go to the Security Council in any event.

Mr. Dulles observed that everybody would like to have the compulsory jurisdiction clause, but that we would have to move toward it through the process of evolution. He thought that the United States' acceptance of the Court Statute with the Optional Clause would be as great a step at present as would be practical.

COMMANDER STASSEN thought that this country had moved a long way from the old debates in the Senate on the world court. He would like to have a provision for the compulsory jurisdiction of the international court over certain limited types of cases and permit the Senate to make what reservations it wished with respect to the compulsory jurisdiction provision. For example, he did not think that the Senate would make any reservation with respect to compulsory jurisdiction of the court with respect to the interpretation of international documents. Commander Stassen thought that this country had gotten away from the idea that the United States is above all law. He felt that it was ingrained in the American people that there are standards of justice applicable to everybody. Commander Stassen then asked that whether or not the United States insisted upon compulsory jurisdiction, would it not be better to let this matter come up in the form of a reservation in the Senate?

Mr. Dulles asked if Commander Stassen was proposing that the provision for compulsory jurisdiction be made part of the world Charter. COMMANDER STASSEN said that he preferred to let the Senate make a reservation to a compulsory jurisdiction provision rather than to propose the Optional Clause in the first instance. Senator Vandenberg disagreed with Commander Stassen because, he said, it was very undesirable to invite deliberately the process of reservation in the Senate. COMMANDER STASSEN asked if the Senators expected that there would be no reservations made to the documents of this Conference in the Senate. Senator Connally said that they intended to stand by what they had done here and would oppose any reservations to the Conference documents in the Senate. Commander Stassen said that if we got a document here for which the two Senators would fight in the Senate without reservation, he would gladly withdraw his position with regard to compulsory jurisdiction in the Court and would support the United States Delegation's policy.

Mr. Fahy noted that the American Bar Association had proposed that there be a provision for compulsory jurisdiction of the court and also a provision for reservations to that jurisdiction. He observed that if the Optional Clause were adopted, it would still be necessary for the Senate to take affirmative action before the United States would become a member of the Court. Senator Vandenberg said that could be taken up at the same time the Charter was ratified. Commander Stassen noted that the Optional Clause could be accepted by separate action in the Senate.

Senator Connally asked Mr. Fahy if the American Bar Association's proposal for compulsory jurisdiction were limited to certain categories of cases. Mr. Fahy read the categories of cases involved, as follows: "(a) the interpretation of a treaty; (b) any question of international law; (c) the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation; (d) the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation."

At this point, Senator Connally and Senator Vandenberg left the meeting, and Commander Stassen presided. Commander Stassen asked Mr. Hackworth to give the Delegation an explanation of the other points involved in the Statute of the Court.

Mr. HACKWORTH stated that he had prepared a draft with respect to compulsory jurisdiction which he thought would be safe. Com-MANDER STASSEN stated that in view of the opinion just expressed by Senator Connally and Senator Vandenberg, that Mr. Hackworth had better prepare a draft containing the Optional Clause and also the simplest possible provision for its acceptance by the various countries, which would also make it convenient for the countries individually and, subsequently, to consent either to limited or compulsory jurisdiction of the Court. Representative Bloom asked whether it would be necessary to specify what cases would be covered by the Optional Clause. Mr. Hackworth replied that the Optional Clause covers four categories of cases and read Article 35 of the present Statute: "(a) the interpretation of a treaty; (b) any question of international law; (c) the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation; (d) the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation."

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked if Congress might not object to some of those cases covered by the Optional Clause. Mr. Fahy noted that under the Optional Clause the World Court would be limited to these four types of problems. Representative Bloom asked if this were safe enough, and Mr. Fahy replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Dulles asked if under this provision the Court would be limited to justiciable questions rather than political questions. He thought that if this were the case, then the Delegation should consider changing the corresponding part of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 6, which read: "Justiciable disputes should normally be referred to the International Court of Justice." Mr. Hackworth observed that in the Committee of Jurists, the United Kingdom Delegation had wanted to insert the word "justiciable" in the first paragraph of Article 36 of the Statute. He reported that the question of getting "justiciable" had been debated at great length, and that it had also been suggested that the Court's jurisdiction be limited to all cases "of a legal character". Congressman Eaton asked if the Committee of Jurists did not know what the word "justiciable" meant. It was stated that there were many different meanings given to this word.

Mr. Jessup observed that in line with Mr. Dulles' comment, the language of Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 6 of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals should be toned down, because it suggested at present an obligation to refer justiciable disputes to the Court. Mr. Dulles stated that it might be changed to read that justiciable disputes should be referred to the Court "if the parties have agreed." Commander Stassen noted that in theory the countries have to agree to action under the Security Council, with respect to the pacific settlement of disputes, although he thought that there might actually be some element of compulsion involved.

NOMINATION OF JUDGES OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT

Mr. Hackworth explained to the Delegation the present system for the nomination and election of the judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice. He stated that the method of making nominations under the present Statute was somewhat complex, but this is a result of a determined effort made by the Committee of Jurists who drew up the original Statute in 1920 to avoid as far as possible the making of selection on the basis of political considerations. Nominations under the present Statute are made by the national groups on the panel of the old Hague Court of Arbitration under the Conventions of 1899 and 1907.90 These national groups (composed of four persons in each country) meet and nominate jurists for election to the Court. Mr. Hackworth stated that no group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality; nor may it nominate more than two persons for the same vacancy. Mr. Hackworth then said that the British representative at the Washington meeting had proposed that each government nominate one of its own nationals, and the Judges would be elected from this list.91

Mr. Hackworth stated that there was a sharp division of view on this matter in Washington and that sixteen countries had favored the British proposal while sixteen others favored retention of the present system. Mr. Hackworth recalled that this had been discussed in the United States Delegation in Washington, and that in accordance with the Delegation's instructions, Chief Justice Strong and Chief Justice Hughes had been consulted. Both emphatically felt that the present system was better than having direct nominations by governments. It was felt that while the United States might try to select the best man, other nations might nominate politicians rather than jurists. Mr. Hackworth stated, therefore, that in the Committee of

Jurist 57, G/45, April 16, ibid., p. 195.</sup>

Jurists the United States representative had supported this system of nomination by national groups.

Representative Bloom asked if a vacancy occurred on the Court in a position to which the United States had appointed a Judge, whether the United States could appoint someone else. Mr. Hackworth replied that while the United States might have nominated a Judge, the Judge would be elected by all of the countries. Mr. Jessup noted that none of the Judges are appointed, but elected by the Council Representative Bloom still thought that such a vacancy should belong to the United States; he also wanted to know if the countries could not select the Judges in their own way. Commander Stassen felt that the Delegation ought to consider Representative Bloom's proposal, and that some way should be found to compromise the two points of view so as to make the best of each. He thought that if the vote had been sixteen to sixteen on this matter, it was time to find another way of nominating Judges of the Court.

Mr. Jessup noted that under the present system an international group would nominate two nationals and two other persons, whereas the British were proposing that each government would nominate their own national. This proposal, therefore, constituted a real change and he did not see how the two points of view could be harmonized. Commander Stassen thought it would be necessary to try and blend the two. Mr. Fahy stated that there might be two alternatives: (1) Let each government decide for itself or (2) Let the nomination be made from a group recommended to the government. Representative Bloom said he preferred the first alternative because it would make the people of a country feel that they were independent in the matter. Commander Stassen thought that the group could not go too far on this point at that time because of the absences in the Delegation that morning.

Mr. Notter noted that the result of the British proposal would be that there would always be a Russian Judge on the Court and that any jurist exiled from his country for political activities would be barred from a seat on the Court. Representative Eaton thought that the system of appointment by governments would result in continuous seats for the five big powers. Mr. Dulles noted that the Judges of the Court would be elected by the Assembly. Commander Stassen commented that the major powers would naturally attempt to push their nominees through. He thought, however, that this question would have to be explored thoroughly. Mr. Hackworth noted that under the British proposal, those countries who already had nationals on the Court would in effect be precluded from making further nominations.

CONTINUITY OF THE COURT

MR. HACKWORTH then explained the problem as to whether the present Permanent Court of International Justice should be continued under that name or whether a new Court under some other name. such as the "International Court of Justice", as used in Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, shall take its place. He stated the arguments for continuing the present Court as follows: (1) it would give greater continuity to the system set up under the existing Statute: and (2) it would create less difficulty and confusion with respect to a large number of treaties between states, which provide for the jurisdiction of the Court in certain categories of cases. He noted in this connection that it would be possible to provide in the United Nations Charter that wherever treaties between members of the United Nations refer to an international court, the new court shall be the court intended. Thus, there would be no break in the treaty situation as between members of the United Nations, but there would be between members of the United Nations and states which are not members of the United Nations.

Mr. Hackworth stated the arguments against continuing the Court, as follows: (1) there are a number of parties to the present Statute, who are not members of the United Nations, and hence were not represented on the Committee of Jurists and not represented at San Francisco; (2) there are certain legal difficulties in continuing the existing Court where some of the parties to the present Statute do not become members of the new International Organization; and (3) acceptance, particularly in the United States, of a new court might be more general, in view of the long controversy regarding the United States' adherence to the old Court.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked if the present Court were retained whether it would not avoid a debate in Congress with respect to the establishment of a new court. Mr. Hackworth replied that all the people opposed to the present Court will object. He thought that if a new court were proposed, some of the controversy would be avoided. He noted that the present Court had never been accepted by the United States, and that the Senate had refused to ratify the Protocol several times. He thought it would be desirable to keep the present Court going if it were possible to avoid the recurrence of political controversy. He noted that the judges would have to be elected to the court and that no judges had been elected since 1939. Mr. Hackwoth stated that three of the United States advisers felt that it was simpler to start fresh with a new court of the United Nations and to take over the equipment of the old Court so that it would be unnecessary to bother with states who are not members of the United Nations.

Mr. Fahr stated that he did not feel strongly on this matter as he did not think it was a critical point. He suggested renaming the court and starting anew. He noted that the revised draft statute retained about 99 per cent of the Statute of the present Court, so that it had the benefit of the experience of the Court. He suggested that it be called "The International Court of Justice", as stated in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Mr. Dulles noted that the American Bar Association was unanimously in favor of continuing the present Court. He felt that the Delegation ought to follow the line strongly supported by the American Bar Association. Commander Stassen observed that the jurisdiction of the old Court could be carried forward by a clause in the Charter in which the United Nations could accept a substitution of a new court.

Representative Bloom asked if actually only the name of the court were being changed, since it was stated that 99 per cent of the present Statute would be taken over. Mr. Fahr observed that a new court would really be created, if this statute were adopted. He observed that he did not think that Russia would join the present Court.

Dean Gildersleeve asked what Russia's attitude was on the Court. Mr. Hackworth said he thought that Russia had no strong feeling one way or another, and would go along with a strong movement in either direction. Representative Bloom stated that the Delegation must consider what it can get most easily from Congress, whether a new or an old court. It was important to avoid any controversy in Congress on the matter of the court. Mr. Hackworth asked if it would be easier to get a new court through the Senate than an old one. Representative Bloom observed that the House of Representatives would have to be considered as well as the Senate. Representative Eaton said that it was important to consider the House because if the House had a strong feeling about a matter, the reaction would be felt in the Senate; and that moreover the House, as the voice of the people, could back up the Senate. Mr. Jessup noted that the House of Representatives had first passed a resolution in favor of a world court.<sup>93</sup>

At this point, the meeting was adjourned.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Chairman of the United States Delegation at San Francisco (Stettinius)

Washington, April 30, 1945—11:23 a.m.

3. The question of Italian participation in the conference at San Francisco was discussed in the Staff Committee 94 this morning. Reference was made to the communication of the Italian Government 95 sent directly to the President of UNCIO and the forty-six delegations protesting Italy's exclusion from the conference; to the recent liberation of the north of Italy,96 due in large measure to action of Italian Patriots and unification of Italy under Government at Rome; and to indications that Argentina may be invited to participate at UNCIO in some capacity other than United Nation. In the light of these developments and the desire to support the moderate and democratic elements represented in the Government at Rome at a time when the heavy responsibilities of the north's liberation will fall upon it, it was the consensus of the Staff Committee that we should reopen the question of Italy's immediate participation in UNCIO in some capacity.97 Before putting this question up to the President we would of course like to have your views.98

There was some feeling in the Committee this morning that you would meet serious objections to such a proposal in certain quarters principally from the French, Greek and Yugoslav delegations if not the British.

&lt;sup>97</sup> A memorandum of April 13, 1945, by the Secretary of State to President Truman, providing special information on top diplomatic matters at the moment, contained the following statement on Italy: "Although a cobelligerent since October 1943, Italy is still subject to an armistice regime and considerable control by the Allied Commission. Chiefly through our efforts, Italy's status has improved, but less than we desire in view of the British policy of keeping Italy dependent. We have been unable to end the anomaly of Italy's dual status as active cobelligerent and as defeated enemy. Great pressure is being brought to bear by groups in this country to make Italy one of the United Nations—a step essentially in accordance with our policy but not with that of certain other allied governments." Minutes of the Twenty-Fourth Meeting of the United States Delegation, Held at San Francisco, Monday, April 30, 1945, 6: 20 p.m.

[Informal Notes-Extracts]

THE SECRETARY called the meeting to order at 6:20 p.m. and apologized for being late, explaining that he had just talked with the President and Mr. Hull in order to bring them up-to-date on the day's developments. He announced that he had a number of routine announcements to make.

Regular and daily meetings of the advisers are to be held at 6:15 p. m. in Room 462, Fairmont Hotel. At these meetings Dr. Bowman will usually preside. Twice a week the advisers and delegates will meet together to consider policy questions, the first of these meetings to be held Thursday, May 3, at 6:15 p.m. The Secretary explained that the Soviet Union was still holding up agreement on the slate of assignments to commissions and committees, but that it was hoped that a final decision could be reached in the Executive Committee at 10:30 a.m. the following day 99 so that the serious business of the Conference could start promptly. . . .

Representative Bloom asked whether the assignments to the Trusteeship Committee had been determined. The Secretary announced that Mr. Dunn and Mr. Rockefeller were now working on getting an agreed slate for all the committees. Mr. Sandifer pointed out that every country would be represented on Committee 4 of Commission II, no matter what the decisions on the assignment of positions.

THE SECRETARY announced that an exchange was now under way of amendments suggested for the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals by the sponsoring governments. This exchange, he reported, was taking place on the working level, and within 48 hours he thought there would be some reaction on the views of the other governments on our proposals.

DEVELOPMENTS OF THE DAY

THE SECRETARY announced that he would review the important developments of the day. He said that two subjects had been discussed at the meeting of the Executive Committee at 9 a. m.1 and at the meeting of the Steering Committee at 10:30 a.m.2—the question of the seating of the Soviet republics and of Argentina at the Conference. He noted that the question of the signing by either of the Soviet republics or Argentina of the United Nations Declaration had not been raised at any time by any one. He explained that Mr. Molotoy had pled that the seating of the Polish Government be linked with the seating of Argentina and the two Soviet republics, but that we had stood our ground. He explained that what Mr. Molotov had said in the Steering and Executive Committees was practically the same as what he had said in the afternoon.

The Latin American states, he felt, had behaved extremely well in voting for the admission of the two Soviet republics to the Conference before receiving a commitment on Argentina. The admission of the two Soviet republics, he explained, had been unanimously passed in the Executive and Steering Committees. In these committees Mr. Molotov had attempted to block the seating of Argentina until the Lublin Poles were admitted, but there was great resentment at this, and when it was put to a vote, Mr. Molotov was overwhelmingly voted down. The Secretary stated that it had been the general feeling that the business was then completed on these two questions. In fact, he had received permission to announce the action of the Executive and the Steering Committees to the press. He had felt that the major hurdle had been cleared and that the Conference could now settle down to its serious business. However, Mr. Molorov had arisen in the Plenary Session and had made a long speech against the seating of Argentina.3 This was followed by several Latin American speakers who urged the admission of Argentina. The question was then up to be thoroughly thrashed out in the Plenary Session. He explained that he himself had finally pled that the matter be disposed of promptly, that the log jam was finally broken, and another vote taken which was substantially the same vote as in the Steering Committee. The motion of admission of Argentina to the Conference was approved 31 to 4.

THE SECRETARY explained that the representatives of the two Soviet republics had already asked for visas and that he had wired that they should be granted.4

THE SECRETARY commented that no one could tell whether the Polish settlement would come up again, but that we were taking the position that this question upon which agreement had been reached at Yalta was still in consultation and did not belong in the Conference.

<sup>4</sup> In telegrams 15, 16, and 17, May 1, to the Acting Secretary of State, the Secretary-General (Hiss) requested that the Department inform the Governments of Argentina, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, and the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic that the Conference in plenary session on April 30 had resolved that, having decided that those Republics would be invited to be initial members of the proposed international organization, the representatives be invited to take their seats at the Conference immediately (500,CC/5-145).

THE SECRETARY pointed out that Mr. Molotov had suggested from the start that he would not stay at the Conference for a long period. He suspected that, when the work of the Conference got under way, the allocation of positions established, and the views of the sponsoring governments on the proposals thoroughly discussed, Mr. Molotov might return to Moscow.

THE SECRETARY explained that the question of the nationality of representatives of official international organizations invited to the Conference had been raised in the Executive Committee by the Soviet Government, but in view of the opposition which developed, Mr. Molotov did not ask for a vote and merely put himself on record.

The Secretary described the events which led up to Mr. Molotov withdrawing his suggestion for the invitation to the World Trade Union Conference to send representatives as official advisers to the Conference. The Secretary explained that he had taken the position that it had been previously determined that only five organizations should be invited to attend, and that, if this question was now opened up, it would raise many problems. The Secretary noted that Mr. Molotov, in the face of opposition, did not press for a vote, and it was agreed to instruct the Secretary-General to address a letter to the World Trade Union Conference stating that the Steering Committee regretted not being able to invite their representatives as advisers, but that, if they liked, any suggestions which they transmitted would be distributed to all the delegations.

STATUS OF REPRESENTATIVES OF OFFICIAL INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE raised the question of the position of the I.L.O. representatives at the Conference who felt that they had in fact no status at all, not even as much as the representatives of Rotary,<sup>5</sup> and who would like to be given a more dignified position and be invited in as advisers in commission and committee discussions. The Secretary asked Mr. Tracy for his view on this problem. Mr. Tracy noted that there was considerable disappointment among the representatives of the five official organizations <sup>6</sup> who would like to have an opportunity to be heard before the committees and commissions. The Secretary thought that, if the rule was broken and outside organizations were permitted to be heard in the commissions and committees, the Conference would go on until next autumn.

Mr. Stinebower stated that the representatives of the five organizations had clearly understood their status prior to coming to San Francisco, that they were only unofficial representatives. . . .

Assignment of Positions on Commissions and Committees of the Conference

At the request of The Secretary, Mr. Dunn presented the Draft Statement on the Assignment of Positions on the Commissions and Committees of the Conference. He pointed out that the one question that was holding up a definite agreement on the assignments was whether Argentina was to have a position in any one of the commissions or committees. The Soviets were opposed to Argentina having any position on any of the commissions or committees. Mr. Stassen thought it would be well to keep them off. He sympathized with the Soviet position on this matter. The Secretary agreed that this was [not] an easy pill to swallow. Mr. Dunn said he thought it should be clear that Argentina would be the only country without a position on the commissions and committees, but that of course Argentina would be represented on each commission and committee. He noted that the Ukraine would have a chairmanship and the White Russian republic a rapporteurship.

Mr. Stassen urged that now that we had defeated Russia on the Argentinian question we should not rub the defeat in. Mr. Dunn remarked that the Soviet Delegation would never agree to a slate giving Argentina a position, and that he was sure that they would fight this matter through the Executive Committee, the Steering Committee, and the Plenary Session just the way they had fought the earlier question. Mr. Rockefeller pointed out that perhaps Mr. Molotov had not had instructions, and that, if his instructions come through, the situation might change. Mr. Dunn reaffirmed the fact that the Russians would fight the issue through the Plenary Session. THE SECRE-TARY urged that in that event we back down. Mr. Rockefeller suggested that we agree to leave a vacancy on one committee and then see what happens. Mr. Dunn commented that the sponsoring governments ought perhaps to meet tonight to settle this question, so that the slate could be taken up with other countries, including France. THE SECRETARY agreed and asked that a meeting be scheduled for 9:00 that evening.

Senator Vandenberg said he did not like the decision that was being made at all. He felt that we were letting down our only friends, the Latin Americans, and that what we had come through today was just a preview of the fight that lay ahead of us. He did not like the idea of letting down the one group of states we could count on. Mr. Stassen commented that this was precisely not the basis on which we could go forward to an effective organization and that having fought the Russians on one issue we should now make a decision on this less important issue that would permit the Conference to go forward. Mr. Cox suggested that a statement might now be issued by the four sponsoring powers. Mr. Stassen urged that no statement be issued, but that we now demonstrate practically that we could go forward together.

TRUSTEESHIP

Assignment of Positions on Commissions and Committees of the Conference

Mr. Dunn presented the completed draft of assignments to commissions and committees, reading the assignments to each commission and committee (Draft Prepared for Discussion with Sponsoring Governments Monday Evening, April 30, 1945).

THE SECRETARY questioned whether New Zealand should have the chairmanship of the committee on the trusteeship system. Mr. Hickerman explained that Mr. Fraser was all right. Mr. McCloy said he might be satisfactory on security questions, but might not be satisfactory from the angle of the welfare of the dependent peoples. Mr. White urged that, although the chairman could not write the decisions of the committee, he wielded a great influence and that on committees important to us we should see that someone was picked who would not give us trouble. Mr. Dunn thought Mr. Frazer would be a good choice.

Mr. Dunn pointed out that no one of the sponsoring governments had positions on commissions and committees, except that the Soviet Union, Great Britain, and China were each assigned a rapporteurship. The United States had of course the chairmanship of the Executive Committee, the Steering Committee, and responsibility for the administration of the Conference.

THE SECRETARY asked that the question of leaving a chairmanship for Argentina be left in his hands, and that we not press the question of a seat for Argentina this evening. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that the Soviet Union would agree to a vacancy. Mr. White urged that we recognize the possibility that the Soviet Union might not agree. Mr. Dunn said that the Soviet Union will certainly raise the question. Mr. Rockefeller thought there might be some difficulty with his Latin American friends on the decision taken by the Delegation. Mr. Stassen thought that they would come along, and Mr. Rockefeller agreed that they probably would. Senator Vandenberg stated that he thought the decision was a "lousy" one, but that, if Mr. Rockefeller was agreeable, he would accept it. Anything, he said, that pleased Mr. Rockefeller on this question would satisfy him.

The Secretary adjourned the meeting at 7:55 p.m.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of participants, including members of delegations of the United States (5); United Kingdom (3); Soviet Union (5); and China (1).]

The meeting convened in the apartment of the Secretary at the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco at 9:15 p. m. April 30, 1945.

THE SECRETARY said that he had received from Mr. Dunn a report that the deputies of the four Foreign Ministers <sup>8</sup> had agreed to recommend that the four Ministers approve the attached list of officerships of the commissions and committees.<sup>9</sup>

Dr. Soons indicated his agreement to the list.

Mr. Molotov said that something along that line might be acceptable, and to The Secretary's question whether he would accept it, Mr. Molotov replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Eden said that he liked the list, but referred to the blank in the rapporteurship in the fourth commission and asked what would happen there. Mr. Molotov suggested thinking that matter over for a day, but agreed to the immediate submission of the report of the list with the blank. The Secretary stated that, because of general agreement among the four ministers, the list would be submitted to the Executive Committee and then to the Steering Committee in the hope that it would be accepted.

Mr. Eden suggested that the Plenary Session meeting on the afternoon of May 1 be reconvened to meet also in the evening in an effort to finish the statements of the various chairmen of delegations. General agreement was expressed and the recommendation was approved.

Mr. Molotov also suggested a Steering Committee meeting at 11:00 a.m. May 1. This was likewise agreed to.

Mr. Molorov referred to the importance of having the commissions commence their work. Mr. Dunn stated that it should be possible for them to organize on the morning of May 2.

The meeting adjourned with agreement that the calendar for the following day should be an Executive Committee meeting at 10:30 a.m., a Steering Committee meeting at 11:00 a.m., a Plenary Session at 3:30 p. m. and an additional sitting of the Plenary Session at 8:30 p. m.

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Stettinius) to the Acting Secretary of State

San Francisco, May 1, 1945. [Received May 1—3:20 p. m.]

7. Will you be good enough to send the attached to the President in memorandum form as from me:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

Subject: Charter for the International Organization

The United States delegation to the United Nations Conference on international organization is unanimously agreed that in addition to the alterations in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals that it was previously agreed we should propose during the San Francisco Conference, and which were listed in the memorandum to you of April 19, 1945, 10 a few additional alterations should be proposed. 11 It has also been agreed that we should give our support to certain other suggestions when made by other governments. 12

Alterations To Be Proposed.

The most important additional points that we have agreed to propose are:

Principles: 13

1. Change the principles concerning non-member states so that instead of the organization being obligated to ensure that non-member states take positive action in accordance with the principles for the maintenance of peace and security, the organization would be obligated to ensure that non-member states should not interfere with action by the organization for the maintenance of peace and security.

Maintenance of Peace and Security: 14

- 1. Extend the power of the Security Council to recommend appropriate procedures or methods of settlement as well as of adjustment.
- 2. Specify that the measures which the Security Council should take when it has determined that a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security exists are limited to diplomatic, economic, or other measures not involving the use of armed force and action by air, naval, or land forces necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Secretariat: 15

1. Specify that in the performance of their duties, the Secretary-General and the staff should be responsible only to the organization, that they should not seek or receive instructions in regard to the discharge of their responsibilities from any authority external to the organization, and that the members should undertake fully to respect the international character of the responsibilities of the Secretariat.

Amendments: 16

1. Supplement the amendment procedure by providing that a general conference of the members of the United Nations may be held for the purpose of reviewing the charter at a date and place to be fixed by a three-fourths vote of the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council by a vote of seven. Each would have one vote in the conference, and recommendations of the Conference by a two-thirds vote would take effect in accordance with the procedure prescribed for amendments.

Alterations To Be Supported.

The most important points that we have agreed to support are: Principles: 17

- 1. Specify the obligations of all members
- (a) To cooperate in the solution of international economic, social and other humanitarian problems, and
- (b) To respect international law and treaty obligations and to promote their development and their adaptation to changing conditions. Membership: 18
  - 1. List the initial member states in an annex to the charter.

Principal Organs: 19

1. Eliminate the distinction between principal organs and other agencies of the organization, and list together all the main bodies mentioned in the proposals.

General Assembly:

- 1.20 Specify the power of the General Assembly to
- (a) Determine the number of representatives each member state could have in the General Assembly,
- (b) Formulate draft conventions for submission to states for ratification,
- (c) Act within the limits of the charter on matters of concern to the organization which are not allocated to other organs.

 Chapter II (7) and (8).
 Chapter III (2).

- 2.21 Indicate that the rights and privileges of members that have been suspended may be restored by the same process as that required for suspension (by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council), except that if the General Assembly is not in session they may be restored by decision of the Security Council.
- 3.22 Provide that the members of the organization should report periodically on the effect given by them to recommendations of the General Assembly.
- 4.23 Indicate that special sessions may be called by the Security Council or on request of a specified number of members.

The Security Council: 24

1. Specify that the Security Council, and member states in carrying out the decisions of the Security Council, should act in accordance with both provisions of the charter and the purposes and principles of the organization.

Arrangements for International Economic and Social Cooperation:

- 1.25 Specify that the organization should:
- (a) Promote cultural cooperation,
- (b) Initiate negotiations for the creation of specialized agencies for the accomplishment of its objectives.
  - 2.26 Empower the Economic and Social Council:
- (a) To initiate the agreements to bring specialized organizations into relationship with the organization,
- (b) To make only recommendations that are consistent with those adopted by the General Assembly,
- (c) To perform functions entrusted to it by inter-governmental agreements, subject to approval by the General Assembly, as well as functions assigned it by the General Assembly.
  - 3.27 Specify that the Economic and Social Council should:
- (a) Initiate the agreements to bring specialized organizations into relationship with the organization,
- (b) Set up such commissions, committees, or other bodies as it needs, rather than to specify an economic and a social commission.

Secretariat: 28

1. Provide that the Secretary-General shall be elected by the General Assembly with the concurrence of the Security Council acting by a vote of seven, for a period of five years and eligible for re-election. Also that he should be subject to removal by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly.

1. Matters discussed during the casual conversation at dinner 29 were as follows:

The question of the relationship of the Franco-Soviet Pact and the Anglo-Soviet Pact <sup>30</sup> on the one hand with the new United Nations Charter came up. Mr. Molotov stated that he felt that if these pacts related to the question of new aggression on the part of Germany, and as the new United Nations Organization will have nothing to do with dealing with Germany, at least for the present, these pacts could continue in force without any modification. He produced a formula which he proposed for addition to the second paragraph of Section C of Chapter VIII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. This formula was somewhat as follows:

"Except as to action provided for under treaties or arrangements which may have been entered into with regard to protection against aggression by Germany".

Mr. Eden was in entire agreement with this proposal. Mr. Dunn said this would seem to be satisfactory and acceptable as to the present situation and for some time to come, that is, during the period when the United Nations Organization would not have anything to do with the matter of dealing with German action, but that this proposal would not take care of the situation which would arise at some time in the future when the United Nations Organization might assume the responsibility of dealing with new German aggression.

Mr. Molotov said that at that time the reason for these special treaties with respect to German aggression would cease and those treaties might very well be cancelled. He said this was a point which could be discussed further. He left with Mr. Eden a copy of his suggested formula, and Mr. Eden promised to have it copied and sent on to Mr. Dunn the next morning.

- 2. Mr. Stettinius at one point asked Mr. Molotov whether it would be possible for the four sponsoring Governments to complete their consultations with regard to proposals of amendments or changes to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals before Mr. Molotov left San Francisco, the American suggestions having already been presented to the British, Russian, and Chinese Delegations. Mr. Molotov said that he did not expect to leave until the Commissions and Committees of the Conference were set up and working. That would be two or three days and he hoped very much that agreement could be reached on suggested amendments among the four sponsors before he left.
- 3. Mr. Molotov himself brought up the question of Poland, and said that there would be a great advance in the atmosphere of cooperation of the Big Powers of the Conference if some future step could be taken with regard to Poland and that he hoped that some exchange of views while he was here would help to make some progress along those lines. The Secretary said that he was looking forward to discussion of this matter the next day at 11 o'clock, as already arranged, and Mr. Eden said that he was intensely interested in the matter and would be glad to take it up at that time.31
- 4. Mr. Molotov took occasion to refer to the enormous influence exercised by the Latin American Republics, even including the very small ones, which, he indicated, seemed, in his opinion, to have a voice out of all proportion to their power and resources, merely by associating themselves with others in the South American group. This matter was not pursued, but Mr. Molotov was plainly indicating his concern at the possible control of the Conference by a bloc as opposed to his own conception of having the Conference controlled by the four Major Powers under an agreement to maintain unanimity with respect to all major questions which came before the Conference.

These were about the only subjects of a serious political nature which arose at the dinner, as most of the conversation was on noncontroversial subjects and in a tone of complete cordiality and friendliness on the part of all those taking part. Immediately after the dinner, all the Foreign Ministers proceeded to the Opera House for the evening Plenary Session, 32 which was presided over by Dr. Soong, the other three Ministers sitting together in the seats of the United Kingdom Delegation. The obvious friendliness and cordiality of tone displayed by the three Ministers sitting in the British Delegation's seats was remarked on by all those present, including the press and photographers, and a general spirit of hopefulness resulted from their appearing together in this manner.

Minutes of the Twenty-Fifth Meeting of the United States Delegation, Held at San Francisco, Wednesday, May 2, 1945, 9 a.m.

[Informal Notes—Extracts]

[Here follows list of names of persons (24) present at meeting.] SENATOR CONNALLY stated that the Chairman of the Delegation had requested him the previous evening to preside at this meeting. He asked Mr. Hackworth to proceed with his report on the International Court of Justice.

Mr. Hackworth stated that there were three questions as to which the United States Delegation should take a position so that we could know what the United States' views were in the Committee proceedings. He observed that he had talked to Sir William Malkin of the United Kingdom, who had told him that the British Delegation had made up its mind with respect to the court. Mr. HACKWORTH said he did not know what the British position was yet. The three questions to be decided were: (1) Continuity of the court, which had been left open in Washington as it was largely political; (2) nomination of the judges of the court; (3) compulsory jurisdiction—Mr. Hackworth thought it had been decided the other day that the present optional clause should be retained.33 Senator Connally told Mr. Hackworth that it had been definitely decided to keep the optional clause. Mr. HACKWORTH asked the Delegates for guidance on these questions to enable him to discuss them with the British, Russians, and Chinese, so as to reach some sort of understanding in Commission IV.

Mr. Dunn suggested that perhaps Mr. Hackworth and the legal representatives of the other sponsoring powers might be added to the Subcommittee of the four sponsoring powers which was discussing the changes in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.34 He thought that by bringing in the legal representatives, this group could discuss those points there. Representative Bloom noted that Mr. Hackworth was asking for the Delegation's decisions on these matters before going into the small Subcommittee.

CONTINUITY OF THE COURT OF JUSTICE

Senator Connally then said that with regard to the continuity of the court, he understood that if the old court were retained, its present name would be retained as would its statute with some modifications.

<sup>38</sup> The Four-Power Deputies held four consultative meetings on suggested amendments to Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, April 29-May 2; notes not printed.

MR. HACKWORTH pointed out that whether a new court or an old court were accepted it would still be necessary to elect new judges, as the present incumbents were hold-overs from 1939. Representative Eaton commented that in any event the court would be new to that extent.

Senator Connally stated that Judge Hudson had asked him to be permitted to come to a delegation meeting as a representative of the court. Mr. Hackworth commented that the court now had three representatives in San Francisco: Judge Hudson; the President of the Court, Sr. Guerrero, of El Salvador; and the Registrar,<sup>35</sup> who were representing the Court, as one of the organizations authorized to have representatives at the Conference. Dean Gildersleeve remarked that two or three of the Delegates had agreed to meet with the representatives of the ILO and wondered if the same procedure could not be followed with respect to the representatives of the Court.

Senator Vandenberg said he understood that the American Bar Association was on one side and the Lawyers Guild on the other, with respect to continuing the court. Mr. Hackworth said that the American Bar Association wanted to retain the old court, while the Lawyers Guild wanted a new court. He personally thought it would be possible to have either court, although there would be some difficulty in taking the old court out of its present group and putting it into the United Nations. Senator Connally stated that if the present court were retained, it would have to be modified somewhat. Senator Connally then asked that Commander Stassen be sent for, as he hated to arrive at any decisions on this matter, since Commander Stassen was assigned to Commission IV.

Dr. Pasvolsky then introduced the following Brazilian proposal with respect to the power of the court to review treaties: <sup>36</sup>

"Where any Contracting Party of an executory treaty alleges that it can not be carried out, either partially or totally, or that it is unjust to maintain its existence, the Assembly, by a majority of two thirds, may invite the other or other Contracting Parties to agree with the first as to the revision or annulment of such treaty. Should one of the Contracting Parties not agree to the revision or annulment, the other or other Contracting Parties shall be authorized to have recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice which, by a declaratory verdict, shall decide whether the treaty in question has partially or totally lost its binding force in consequence of changes in the conditions which brought about the treaty, or because it has become unfairly burdensome for one or more of the Contracting Parties."

Dr. Pasvolsky commented that this proposal would amount to compulsory jurisdiction in this type of case.

At this point, Commander Stassen entered the meeting, and Mr. Hackworth restated the question whether the present court should be continued or a new court set up. Mr. Dunn asked if this related only to the personnel of the court; and Mr. Hackworth replied that it involved the organization of the court.

Mr. Dulles observed that Mr. Jessup had reported the impression that the British, Soviet and Chinese preferred to retain the present court. Mr. Jessup said that Mr. Fitzmaurice of the United Kingdom had told him yesterday that the Russians would be willing to continue the old court and also that the British and Chinese had the same point of view. Senator Connally asked if that position would preclude modifications. Mr. Jessup said that it assumed that modifications would be made.

DR. PASVOLSKY then asked about the states members of the present court who were not members of the United Nations. MR. Hackworth said that the neutral countries which are parties to the present Statute presented a real difficulty, but that of course the enemy states could be handled. He suggested that the Statute be opened immediately to the neutral countries. Senator Connally asked if it would not be desirable to do so if a country qualified, as he thought that this would strengthen the organization. Mr. Hackworth agreed, as he thought the judicial process should be opened up to all countries. In his opinion, however, the Soviet Union would not allow Portugal, Spain and Switzerland to join the court. He said on the train coming out, the Russian representative had definitely questioned both Spain and Portugal. He wondered if it would be desirable to have the League take up with these people the matter of liquidating their interest in the court.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked if Russia would let Spain come in if Spain had a different government. Mr. Hackworth thought that Russia's objection to Spain was directed at its present government. Mr. Dunn noted that it was important as a general practice to avoid suggesting that Spain be brought into any part of this organization.

Mr. Fahry stated that there should be a new court. He said that the present Permanent Court of International Justice is a creature of the League of Nations. He noted that this court would be a new court since it will arise out of the United Nations Charter. While the Statute of the present court would not be changed in many respects, nevertheless, that statute comes out of the United Nations Conference. An election of judges would have to be held and the court constituted under the statute would be under the new statute. In other words, whether it is called the Permanent Court of International Justice or the International Court of Justice, as stated in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, it would in substance be a new court. Mr. Fahry thought the main question was whether the old name be retained, since there would be continuity with regard to the statute in either event. Thus, the precedents created under the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice would be appropriate under the new statute.

He thought the sole question was whether there was any advantage in changing the name of the court. He noted that it was true that the American Bar Association preferred the old court and the old name; but he observed that most of those American Bar Association discussions had been in terms of American adherence to a World Court, without emphasis on the name of the court.

Senator Connally asked if the old court had not been named in numerous treaties as the forum to which various matters should be submitted. Mr. Fahy replied that that could be covered by a provision in the United Nations Charter to the effect that wherever the Permanent Court of International Justice was referred to in treaties, the new court should be deemed to be the court referred to. He stated that this would leave a question as to treaties in which one of the parties was not a member of the United Nations. However, he thought that this problem would exist even if the name of the old court were retained, since states not members of the United Nations might not be parties to the new statute.

Senator Connally asked if it were Mr. Fahy's view that the name of the court were the only point of divergence. Mr. Fahy replied that one difficulty he had with respect to the old Statute was that it really would not be the old Statute if it were modified. He did not think this was a critical point however.

Senator Vandenberg thought that the Delegation should give Mr. Hackworth the option to proceed in either direction with respect to the statute. Senator Connally asked if the Delegation should hear the American Bar Association on this matter. Mr. Hackworth reported that Mr. Simmons' 37 attitude was that the American Bar Association would accept whatever the Delegation would decide here at San Francisco.

Senator Connally thought that the idea of continuity, especially with regard to judicial matters, is entitled to some weight. He thought it would be desirable if we could retain the old organization with pertinent modifications. Commander Stassen observed that there was no basic difference between the two positions. He thought that with regard to the old court, there was an asset in its precedents, an asset in its statute, and an asset in the fact that numerous countries had signed treaties referring matters to the court. On the other hand, the old court had the liability that there are countries now in it that we do not want in it; and also the fight over the old court in this country was a liability. He thought it would be sound to give the court a new name, to provide in the Charter that the United Nations accept this court as a substitute for the old court, that the precedents of the old court are accepted by the countries, and that the statute of the old court would be accepted with modifications. In this way, Commander Stassen thought you would have a revised court rather than a new or an old court.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM thought it would be a better talking and trading point for the United States to hold out for the new court at present, although he agreed that Mr. Hackworth and his advisers should be allowed to do what they think best. He felt that if the other three powers have agreed to the old court and we also agree to the old court, we have no further arguing point with them.

Mr. Armstrong asked Mr. Hackworth what Chief Justice Hughes, Chief Justice Stone, and Secretary Stimson had said in this respect. Mr. Hackworth stated that they had only been consulted with respect to nomination of judges.<sup>38</sup> Mr. McCloy stated that Secretary Stimson felt that there was not much difference between keeping the old court and creating a new court, although the Secretary had favored continuity.

SENATOR CONNALLY thought it would be desirable to retain the court, but that it was not important. He then called for an expression of the Delegation's views to Mr. Hackworth. Commander Stassen therefore moved that the option be left with Mr. Hackworth to proceed in either direction in Commission IV, with the following provisos: (1) if a new court were created, some provision must be made for protecting the treaties involving the present court; if the old court were retained, some provision must be made to keep out the countries which are not members of the United Nations.

Mr. Hackworth agreed to report back to the Delegation on this matter; Senator Connally stated that the motion made by Commander Stassen states the view of the United States Delegation on this point.

Nomination of Judges of the Court of Justice

Mr. Hackworth stated that the next question was whether the judges of the court should be nominated as at present by national groups or whether they should be nominated directly by the governments as the British had proposed. He stated that in the Committee of Jurists in Washington there had been a 16-16 vote on the motion to change the method of nomination.<sup>39</sup> He had held that the motion was lost, since the vote was divided. Senator Connally asked about the procedure of nomination through the panels of The Hague Court.

See footnote 31, p. 270.
 Jurist 57, G/45, April 16, UNCIO Documents, vol. 14, p. 195.

MR. HACKWORTH replied that under the Hague procedure, each country appoints a group of four of its nationals, and these groups decide upon the nominations. He said that the British want each government to make one nomination. Senator Connally asked who elected the judges; Mr. Hackworth replied that at present, the Assembly and the Council of the League of Nations. He noted an important consequence of the British proposal, to the effect that if the United States already had a national on the court, its right to nominate would be worthless because it could not nominate a Brazilian or some foreign national and it was clear that the Assembly and Council would not elect another United States national.

Senator Connally asked whether it would give the nominations a political tinge to allow the governments to nominate directly. Mr. Dulles thought this was an extremely important question. He noted that the United States would undoubtedly name some outstanding non-political person, but that the United States was as much interested in the other judges on the court as its own judge. Thus, to make it the kind of a court to which the United States would submit disputes, the court must be non-political in character. Mr. Dulles, therefore, recommended the method of nomination now in effect.

Senator Vandenberg asked about countries which are not members of the Hague Court; Mr. Hackworth replied that they used the same procedure as the Hague procedure for these nominations. Senator Connally inquired about states not members of the United Nations; Mr. Hackworth replied that a state would have to be a party to the statute of the court, even if it were not a member of the United Nations, in order to nominate a judge.

COMMANDER STASSEN thought that the Hague tribunal method was the best for the nomination of judges, and that the British proposal for nominations by governments was not acceptable. He thought perhaps the nomination by the Hague group would have to be qualified. For example, it might be made subject to objection by a respective government, who might declare the nominee persona non grata.

MR. FAHY recalled that CHIEF JUSTICE STONE and CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES urged that the present method of nomination be retained. Senator Vandenberg and Dean Gildersleeve both stated agreement with this view.

Senator Connally then declared that it was the general view of the United States Delegation that the present method of nomination of judges of the court, provided in the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, should be retained; that nominations of judges should be restricted to members of the United Nations. He therefore requested Mr. Hackworth to carry out this policy in the proceedings of Commission IV.

Representative Bloom asked if this created any difficulty under the United States Constitution, which provides specifically for one Supreme Court. He wondered if this international court, in being made a court of last resort would not be superior to the United States Supreme Court, if anybody cared to appeal a case to the international court. Senator Connally remarked that no individuals would appear before the international court. Mr. Hackworth pointed out that the world court was an international court with cognizance over disputes between states, whereas the Supreme Court was charged with jurisdiction over the internal affairs of the United States and did not have competence to settle disputes between the United States and other countries. He noted that the international court had the same type of jurisdiction as arbitral tribunals to which the United States had had recourse on many occasions. Senator Connally observed that the fields of jurisdiction of the two courts were quite separate. He therefore stated that the order of the Delegation, with respect to the nomination of judges, should stand for the present, and that Mr. Hackworth would report back to the Delegation.

Mr. Hackworth then read off the alternative drafts which he had prepared for Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals (US Gen 22).40 Mr. Hackworth observed that paragraph 6 of the draft for a new court attempted to tie in the treaties referring to the present court to the new court in so far as possible.41 Mr. Dulles asked if this provision took care of the point raised by Commander Stassen to the effect that the prior decisions of the Permanent Court of International Justice should have the same weight as decisions of the new court. Senator Connally doubted if it would be wise to make a statutory direction to the court. Mr. Dulles said he was merely suggesting that the same weight be given to the decisions of the old court, as would be given to the decisions of the new court. Mr. Fahy thought that the court should be free to give whatever weight it chose to these precedents, without a statutory direction. Commander Stassen thought that some language would be necessary, perhaps to the effect that the court "may" give the same weight to the prior precedents. Senator Connally observed that the decisions of the old court would be precedents, and that the court itself would go back to these precedents but should be free to change these precedents if it so desired. Com-MANDER STASSEN said he assumed that the precedents of the old court would be preserved. Senator Connally observed that the decisions of the Permanent Coart of International Justice would be most persuasive with the new court. Mr. Hackworth thought it was not necessary to mention these precedents because the court would have the right to look at those decisions as well as treatises on international law, and so forth. Senator Connally then asked if the Delegation wished to make some general statement with respect to the authority of the court. Representative Bloom thought it should be omitted, and that it could be inferred that the court is authorized to do what it wishes. Senator Vandenberg observed that the court would do that anyway. Commander Stassen then stated that he was willing to leave this question to be resolved in the course of the negotiations with the other countries. Senator Connally said that he was interested in giving the new court the same prestige as the old court.

Mr. Dunn then asked why the recommendation of the Security Council for admission of non-members of the United Nations to the court was required by paragraph 4 of Mr. Hackworth's draft. Mr. Hackworth replied that this merely followed the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals; and that this provision was inserted because it was thought that it might be a political question as to whether a state should be admitted to the court. Mr. Fahy noted that it would be necessary for the Security Council to determine the conditions under which the present enemy states would be admitted to membership in the court.

REVISION OF CHAPTER VIII, SECTION A, PARAGRAPH 6, OF THE DUMBARTON OAKS PROPOSALS

Mr. Dulles called attention to the need to modify paragraph 6, Section A, Chapter VIII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, providing for the reference of justiciable disputes to the court.42 He noted that as this provision now stands, it comes pretty close to compulsory jurisdiction. Mr. Hackworth commented that he had proposed an amendment to this provision the other day,43 which would read: "Disputes which are susceptible of judicial determination should normally be referred to the International Court of Justice. The General Assembly and the Security Council should each be empowered to refer to the court, for advice, legal questions connected with other disputes." Mr. HACKWORTH noted that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals now provide only for advisory opinions at the request of the Security Council. Since the present Statute of the court authorizes both the Assembly and the Council to ask for advisory opinions, the Committee of Jurists felt that the Assembly should also have the right to ask for advisory opinions. This proposal would involve a change in the Dumbarton Oaks provision.

&lt;sup>42</sup> For previous discussions on this subject by the United States delegation, see minutes of meetings of April 12, 9 a. m., and April 30, 9:30 a. m., pp. 269 and 488, respectively.

Mr. Dulles asked whether, under Section A, Chapter VIII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, the Security Council had the power to decide whether disputes should be referred to the world court. Mr. Hackworth said that under this section the Security Council could only recommend that such action be taken. Mr. Dulles said that this is not so stated in Section A of Chapter VIII.

VETO POWER—INVESTIGATION PROCEDURE UNDER CHAPTER VIII, SECTION A

Senator Connally raised the question as to whether the veto power of the five permanent members of the Security Council applied to the investigation procedure of the Security Council, provided by paragraph 1 of Chapter VIII, Section A. The Senator contended that there was a conflict of opinion on this matter, with one group contending that the veto did not apply to this investigation procedure, and the other group contending that it did. Mr. Dulles thought that the unanimous vote of the five permanent members of the Security Council would be required for this investigation procedure, unless one of the permanent members was a party to the dispute, in which case that state would not have the veto power. Senator Vandenberg remarked that evidently there was nothing that could be done without the restriction of veto power.

COMMANDER STASSEN took a hypothetical case of a dispute between Italy and Albania, and asked if the five great powers would have to agree to investigation of the dispute by the Security Council. Dulles replied that the five powers must agree in such a case. Sena-TOR CONNALLY thought this was a ticklish point, because in his opinion investigation was a very valuable power. Mr. Dulles commented that several states were going to raise that proposition. Senator Connally observed that he was assigned to Commission III and he wanted to know about this matter. Dr. Pasvolsky said that the investigation procedure under paragraph 1 of Chapter VIII, Section A, was subject to the veto of the five powers. He said that this would be true unless paragraph 1, Chapter VIII, Section A, were specifically excluded from the veto power and made a matter of procedure. Mr. Dulles commented that the Dutch and Belgians were going to push this proposal; and Commander Stassen said the Australians would do likewise.

Senator Connally commented that frequently the application of the investigation procedure will dissolve a dispute before it goes any further. Commander Stassen said he agreed thoroughly with Senator Connally. He did not think, however, that the United States should advance a proposal on this, but should explore the suggestions made by the other countries. The Commander noted that at present the veto power of the five permanent members of the Security Council would apply in all cases except: (1) matters of procedure and (2) investigatory matters, when one of the five powers is a party to the dispute, in which event that state would not have a veto. Dr. Pasvolsky stated that Commander Stassen's analysis was correct.

Senator Connally noted that a number of proposals had been advanced with regard to Chapter VIII, although the United States had only proposed several unimportant amendments. He wondered what some of the issues, with respect to the Security Council, were going to be. Dr. Pasvolsky observed that the delegation was waiting to receive the papers containing the foreign proposals from the Secretariat. Senator Connally said it seemed to him that Chapter VIII was going to be fairly simple. Dr. Pasvolsky observed that a lot of proposals were being made with respect to Chapter VIII. Mr. Dulles stated that there was pressure to shift the second paragraph of Chapter VIII, Section B into Chapter VIII, Section A, so that a state could be branded as an aggressor by the Security Council without the application of the veto power of the five great states. Senator Vandenberg asked if this would not override the Yalta decision. Mr. Dulles stated that the small powers were willing to accept the veto of the great powers over decisions of action, but not over the power to brand a country as an aggressor. Dr. Pasvolsky commented that the French Delegation was moving to have all of Section A of Chapter VIII declared procedural. Mr. Dulles stated that according to the Yalta Agreement,44 the unanimous vote of the five great powers would be necessary for action by the Security Council under Chapter VIII, Section B. Section B contains the provision by which a great power would be labeled an aggressor; and it was this provision that the small powers wanted shifted into Section A. Senator Vanden-BERG again asked if that change would conflict with the Yalta agreement. Dr. Pasvolsky thought this proposal would have to be considered jointly by the four sponsoring powers.

REFERENCE OF JUSTICIABLE DISPUTES TO THE INTERNATIONAL COURT

MR. Dulles asked the Delegation to go back to the question of the language of Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 6. Mr. Hackworth read his proposed amendments to this paragraph again: "6. Disputes which are susceptible of judicial determination should normally be referred to the International Court of Justice. . . ." Mr. Dulles asked if that provision were intended to alter the status of the parties to the world court. Mr. Hackworth replied that a case could be referred to the court by agreement of parties. Mr. Dulles observed that this language does not say that, but rather gives the Security Council power to refer cases to the court. Commander Stassen agreed. Mr. Fahy proposed that this language should make reference of disputes to the court subject to the provisions of Article 36 of the Statute of the court. Commander Stassen moved that the Delegation adopt that qualification to clarify Mr. Dulles' point, and that it be added to paragraph 6 of Chapter VIII, Section A. Senator Connally asked if this proposal would have to be transmitted to Commission III from the Jurists. Senator Connally asked the Delegation if it were agreed that this proposal be adopted with the instructions that it be transmitted from Commission IV to Commission III.<sup>45</sup> The Delegation agreed.

ADVISORY. OPINIONS

Mr. Hackworth then called attention to the proposed change of Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 6, which would empower the General Assembly, as well as the Security Council, to request advisory opinions of the international court. Senator Connally observed that it was his understanding that these bodies could only refer those matters to the international court which were within their own juris-Mr. Hackworth agreed. He noted that there had been a demand on the part of the ILO and other international organizations to be empowered to request advisory opinions of the court. It was thought that such organizations could get the Council or the Assembly to request advisory opinions for them. Senator Connally thought that such organizations should not have this power, and that it was important for the prestige of the Council and the Assembly that these organizations should not bypass them and go directly to the court. Mr. Hackworth said that had been agreed upon; and COMMANDER STASSEN said he favored limiting this power to the Assembly and the Council. Mr. Dulles asked if the two Senators agreed that the General Assembly should be authorized to ask for advisory opinions. Senator Connally thought it would probably strengthen their hands in the Senate to give that right to the General Assembly, as the General Assembly is the more popular body of the organization. He noted that sentiment in the Senate and among lawyers generally was opposed to practice of advisory opinions; and that the United States Supreme Court itself followed the theory that it could only act in an actual case of litigation. However, the Senator felt that advisory opinions should be allowed in the International Organization, as they might be useful in the early termination of disputes.

Congressman Bloom inquired as to the weight of an advisory opinion, that is, if an advisory opinion is binding. Mr. Hackworth replied that an advisory opinion had no binding effect. Senator Connally noted that the word "advisory" carried the implication that the opinion had no binding effect.

<sup>45</sup> Doc. 146, IV/1/5, May 8, UNCIO Documents, vol. 13, p. 142.

In response to Senator Connally's inquiry, the Delegation unanimously agreed to adopt the recommendation to insert "General Assembly" in Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 6, second sentence.

CLEARANCE OF THE UNITED STATES DRAFT OF CHAPTER VII

Mr. Hackworth asked if the Delegation would have to clear the draft of Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals with the other three sponsoring powers, or if it could come out of the Fourth Commission. He asked for Dr. Pasvolsky's view on this matter. Dr. Pasvolsky thought it was proper for Commission IV to make this recommendation in order to bring Chapter VII of the proposals in conformity with the statute of the court. He did not think that this required conversation between the four sponsoring powers; but felt that it could properly come up in Committee 1 of Commission IV. COMMANDER STASSEN asked if we should not at least inform the other powers as to our suggestions. Dr. Pasvolsky proposed that Mr. Hackworth get in touch with the representatives of those other powers who were on Committee 1 of Commission IV. He did not think this should be sent to the Steering Committee because it was not a formal proposal of an amendment and was not subject to the Friday dead-He felt that this was a proposal which emerged out of the work of the Committee of Jurists. Mr. Hackworth thought it was largely a drafting matter for Commission IV.

Mr. Notter noted that the recommendation that the General Assembly be empowered to ask for advisory opinions constituted an amendment to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Mr. Fahy thought that Mr. Notter had a point, in that this was a substantive change, but observed that the Netherlands Delegation is making this proposal. Senator Connally commented that Dr. Pasvolsky's idea was that a report of Commission IV to the Conference could cover this matter. Dr. Pasvolsky thought that Commission IV could merely report that these changes were necessary to bring the Charter into conformity with the Statute of the Court.

REFERENCE TO THE COURT IN CHAPTER VIII, SECTION A

MR. Dulles thought that paragraph 6 of Chapter VIII, Section A, should be moved into Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, since this paragraph related to the court, and Chapter VIII, Section A, seemed to relate to the pacific settlement of disputes by the Security Council. MR. Hackworth pointed out that Chapter VIII, Section A, covers the whole structure of pacific settlement of international disputes, and that the court is one of the principal means of pacific settlement in addition to such procedures as negotiation, conciliation and arbitration. While paragraph 6 of Section A relates to judicial settlement of disputes, he observed that this is an elaboration of paragraph 3 of Chapter VIII, Section A. He thought that it would be possible to have a duplicate provision in Chapter VII of the Proposals, but he wondered if paragraph 6 of Chapter VIII, Section A really does not belong where it is now. Commander Stassen thought this matter could come up later when the draft was harmonized. Senator Connally stated that he agreed with Mr. Hackworth and felt that a reference to the court is necessary in Chapter VIII, Section A. Mr. Dulles noted that the type of question that would be covered by an advisory opinion probably would not be involved in the pacific settlement of disputes. He also noted that the General Assembly was being given the power to ask for advisory opinions; and this body had no role in the pacific settlement of disputes. Senator Connally stated that he thought that the International Court of Justice ought to be mentioned in Chapter VIII, Section A as one method of pacific settlement of disputes.

Release of Proposals to the Press

Senator Connally stated that Mr. Byington wished to know which of the United Nations proposals should be released to the press.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that Mr. Dunn and he had held consultations on this question, and that there were not many comments on our proposals from the Russians, but that there were a good many from the British and the French, who are concerned particularly with Chapters III and VI.

COMMENTS BY U.K., U.S.S.R., CHINA AND FRANCE ON U.S. PROPOSALS

Mr. Pasvolsky said that with respect to the Chapter on the Secretariat they feel very strongly about the addition of the word "specific", and also with respect to the election of new members. As it now stands, he pointed out, the Security Council is powerless to elect a new member, and the Security Council can no longer act, for example, with regard to Germany (under Chapters V and VI). Mr. Pas-VOLSKY said that they also have some questions. The British raised a question with respect to paragraph 6, Chapter V. They feel strongly that at least the word "international" should be inserted in this para-Otherwise there might be interference with internal affairs. The British, Chinese, and Russians, he said, take the position that it is confusing to have references to another document in the body of a document of this kind. There would be two sets of principles if there is reference to the Declaration by the United Nations. He suggested, therefore, that the principles which we were to make applicable should be selected from the Atlantic Charter and incorporated in the Chapter on Principles or in the Preamble. The British, he said, take the position that this is included in the original text.

Mr. Pasvolsky also stated that Mr. Sobolev had sent him a note two days ago inquiring whether it was true that the United States intended to make a proposal that the General Assembly should have the right to revise treaties. Mr. Pasvolsky said that he had replied that this is not true, but that we did intend to propose that the General Assembly should have the right to review and to make recommendations on treaties. This, said Mr. Pasvolsky, seemed to satisfy Mr. Sobolev at that time. Yesterday, however, Mr. Sobolev informed Mr. Pasvolsky that he had studied the United States proposal carefully and that he was now inclined to think that the United States was extending the picture and that the subject would have to be talked over. He added that at yesterday's meeting of the Committee of Five 46 one of the junior members of the Soviet Delegation represented them, and he had no power, but listened attentively to the British views.

Mr. Pasvolsky continued that with respect to Chapter I on Purposes, the Chinese had raised the point that the language is now somewhat different from the Dumbarton Oaks text in that "in accordance with" is suggested as against "with due regard for". The British favored the Chinese formulation, i.e. "with due regard for". The Russians, he added, raised a question about the proposed use of "justice and equity", and this was somewhat difficult to explain.

With respect to paragraph 2, Chapter I, the Chinese had asked about "development" and the British had asked why "appropriate" had been omitted. It was explained that this was done to avoid redundancy, and they agreed.

With respect to paragraph 3 of this Chapter the Russians had raised a question regarding the repetition of the phrase "human rights, etc."

With respect to Chapter II the British and Chinese were completely in accord with the first American proposal, but with respect to paragraph 3 of this Chapter questions were raised by all three of the other sponsoring governments. They took the position that the new language weakened the document by stating the proposals negatively rather than positively, and thereby avoiding an obligation. Originally, this meant an obligation to settle only by peaceful means, and they preferred the positive approach to the negative. The Russians question whether in the new language there is really a repetition of paragraphs 3 and 4. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that he had explained that there is a difference even in the negative formulation. Paragraph 3, he said, refers only to where the disputes exist, while paragraph 4 refers to any situation.

Senator Vandenberg inquired what our point had been in changing it around. Mr. Dulles stated that it had been his point, since the language in the original formulation was in effect only an obligation to accept compulsory settlement, for example, an immigration dispute as with Japan. In the original language we would be under an obligation to accept arbitration on such matters.

COMMANDER STASSEN inquired whether Mr. Dulles did not think that this would be an injunction only that we should not resort to war, and nothing else. He stated that he did not see that the construction put on the original language by Mr. Dulles was correct.

Mr. Dulles stated that when we change the language we should make certain that its meaning is clear.

COMMANDER STASSEN stated that the effect of a change would be to give the layman the impression that the document had been weakened, and Mr. Dulles stated that we have weakened it.

Mr. Hackworth expressed the view that we could make a concession on this point, since the British, Chinese, and Russians are opposed to the new formulation. Mr. Dulles stated that he would be happy to see nations settle all of their disputes by peaceful means.

Mr. Hackworth suggested that it would be possible to merely let the question sleep.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that with respect to paragraph 5, Chapter II, there had been no question.

With regard to paragraph 6, however, relating to assistance, it had been questioned whether, if the organization has taken action against a country, other countries might give that country assistance, which might in effect interfere with or nullify the action of the organization. The British, he said, were vehement on this point. Their position is that when the organization takes action against a state, no interference should be permitted. They all, he reported, thought that the paragraph would definitely be weakened by the suggested new language.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that there was an even stronger reaction to the suggested rewording to the next paragraph. For example, he said, if two member states attempted to go to war with each other the organization could see to it that they would settle the dispute by peaceful means. The suggested new language, however, does not seem to cover that case in the estimation of the other powers. They point out that there is a difference between positive and negative obligations.

RELEASE OF PROPOSALS TO THE PRESS

Mr. MacLeish observed that the publication or non-publication of the American proposals is a very urgent matter. . . .

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the United States is in a peculiar position on this matter—a position of great responsibility. Mr. Molotov, on the day previous, had made passing reference to a "bloc." <sup>47</sup> In Mr. Pasvolsky's view the United States should not put itself in the same position as countries which were not present at Dumbarton Oaks. The United States, he said, could not afford to just throw out the proposals or take them back. This Delegation, he urged, should be sure of its proposals. Moreover, it should be borne in mind that the United States will have to pay a price for any support given to its proposals.

MR. MACLEISH called attention to the background of the situation. The Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, he said, had been placed before the people of the country. The precedent on which the government has operated with respect to these matters is complete frankness with the people. It seemed to MR. MACLEISH to be helpful, rather than harmful, to continue this policy. The American consultants, he added, wished to know if the United States Delegation is willing to take one position or another. . . .

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that none of the participants at Dumbarton Oaks had announced their proposals at this time. He added that it has been taken for granted by the other delegations that we would consult first and then talk about the proposals publicly.

Mr. Bowman urged that the Delegation should not run the risk of embarrassing its relations with other governments. These other governments, he said, should be consulted. There are, he added, two alternative procedures—the first would be mutual agreement among the governments to release; the other would be to inform them that the United States has decided to release its proposals.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that there are several considerations to bear in mind: (1) No one is against telling the people of the country what the Delegation is for. The only issue is that they be told at the right time. The right time would be when the Delegation itself is ready to negotiate on them. (2) After Dumbarton Oaks the Government went all out in its campaign to acquaint the people with the nature of these proposals. (3) The only important point at issue is that the United States cannot afford to put out several series of proposals. When the Delegation is agreed on the proposals then all the members should do their "damndest" to get them adopted and to acquaint the people with them. (4) Before the end of the week all of the proposals must be in the hands of the International Secretariat, and that is the time to make them public. (5) Other governments still want to discuss points in the American proposals. They should be permitted to do so before they are confronted with a fait accompli.

Mr. Pasvolsky commented that the United States will ask no one's permission to publish anything that it may wish to publish. On this matter, he said, the Delegation would be guided solely by its own position. It would, however, be very discourteous not to inform the other governments if we intend to release our proposals. Mr. Pasvolsky went on to suggest that the United States Delegation meeting might be held later in the day. By that time the British and Chinese comments would be available. The Russian comments are not yet available. The Delegation could go over the proposals in the light of the comments submitted by other governments and could determine if it might want to make any changes. . . .

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR MEN AND WOMEN

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE stated that she wished to put a question for the purpose of information. Article 7 of the Covenant of the League of Nations provided that all positions in the Secretariat could be open equally to men and women. Some of the Delegation, she said, are taking the position that this should be included in the new Charter. Had this question ever arisen in the course of the Dumbarton Oaks discussions?

Mr. Bowman replied that the question had been taken up at Dumbarton Oaks and at the end had been treated rather facetiously. Organized women's groups, he said, had brought pressure to bear at Versailles and had pressed Woodrow Wilson to do something on this matter. This was thought to be a political issue of great importance at that time, but the progress which women have made since Versailles makes this issue now a completely dead one.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE pointed out that some of the other nations do not feel this way, however.

Senator Vandenberg noted that if this issue is pushed, a corollary issue relating to race, color or creed will inevitably arise.

Mr. Bowman replied that this had been held in mind in considering the sex issue.

AMENDMENT AND WITHDRAWAL

Senator Connally pointed out that an outstanding question is that of a proposal for calling a convention to amend the Charter. This, he said, would be an important provision. Somewhere there should be authority to call a conference for a complete revision of the Charter whenever this would become necessary.

Senator Vandenberg asked where the United States Delegation stands on the question of withdrawal and Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the United States was not proposing anything on this matter.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM inquired whether the Delegation should not be on the lookout for things which it might expect other countries to propose but which they may fail to do.

[Informal Notes—Extracts]

[Here follows list of names of persons (26) present at meeting.] Senator Connally presided while the Secretary was absent and called the meeting to order at 5:30 p.m.

MEETING OF THE PRESIDENTS, RAPPORTEURS, AND ASSISTANT SECRETARIES
GENERAL OF COMMISSIONS

At the request of Senator Connally, Mr. Sandifer reported on the meeting of the Presidents, Rapporteurs, and Assistant Secretaries General of the Commissions of the Conference, which had been held during the day.49 He reminded the group that all countries were represented among the officials of the Commissions and Committees, and he read the following statement which the Secretary General was authorized to make as a result of this meeting: "The Conference has heard in eight plenary sessions the statements of the Chairmen of Delegations who have signified a desire to speak. It is now possible for the Conference to carry on its work through its four Commissions and twelve Technical Committees. The Officers of the four Commissions met informally this morning to discuss the procedures required for beginning the second phase of our work. It is their recommendation that the Officers of each Commission meet tomorrow with the Officers of the Committees within that Commission to plan the work of the Committees, in order that the Committees may proceed to their important tasks as soon as possible. In view of the urgency of proceeding with the agenda of the Conference, it is recommended that the Commissions meet subsequently to receive the reports of their Technical Committees."

Voting Procedure in Public Meetings of the Conference

Senator Connally asked Mr. Gerig to report on voting procedures in public meetings. Mr. Gerig stated that the rules of procedure proposed by the Secretariat of the Conference had been agreed upon except for voting. The Secretary General had recommended that in public meetings of the Commissions and the Conference, decisions should be taken by a two-thirds majority.<sup>50</sup> Mr. Evatr (Australia) and some others thought it would be better to have the voting done by a simple majority so that it would be easier to get various questions on to the floor for discussion. He thought it could be decided later whether the voting should be made tighter.<sup>51</sup> Mr. Molotov had opposed the suggestion of a simple majority because he noted that his own recommendation had been voted down the day before with twenty-eight countries voting against it, and he had commented that the Republics of the Western Hemisphere plus Liberia and the Philippines came close to twenty-four which would be a majority, and those states alone could do business in the Conference on a simple majority basis.<sup>52</sup> He said the original idea of requiring a two-thirds majority was better. Mr. Stettinius had stated that the United States was in favor of a twothirds majority. The matter was referred back from the Steering Committee to the Executive Committee for further consideration. Mr. Gerig commented that he thought it a matter of some interest that Mr. Molotov called attention to the problem of bloc voting, and that he felt safer apparently having only one more than one-third of the votes to defeat something. Mr. Gerig added that Mr. Dunn had reported on this matter to the advisers and that there had been no meeting on the matter since. Representative Bloom remarked that if the majority is to be two-thirds, that could be only a tentative agreement.

Mr. Geric added that in the Steering Committee the possibility of setting up two categories of questions had been discussed—essential questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority and incidental and procedural questions by a simple majority.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked who would decide which category a question belonged to. He thought this question a crucial one. Mr. DUNN said that the Executive Committee was going to study the question and that Representative Bloom's point was one of those that would be considered. Mr. Pasvolsky observed that if we were thinking in terms of bloc voting, we could still count on a two-thirds majority in many cases if we added the British Dominions and the Arab states to the Western Hemisphere. Mr. Dunn said that on the other hand, if a two-thirds majority was required, a decision could be blocked by a small number of states. Representative Bloom said that was not what concerned him. What he was primarily concerned with was how the categories of questions were to be decided. Mr. Dunn replied that it was an extremely complicated question and he was in favor of letting the Executive Committee try to settle it. THE SECRETARY said he would like to have some indication of what the Delegation wanted. He personally hoped for a simple majority. SENATOR VANDENBERG said that he agreed with Molotov, for the first time, and he thought a two-thirds majority should be required on everything he wanted. Representative Bloom said that in the House of Representatives it took a two-thirds majority to ask for the suspension of rules to vote on a special measure; otherwise all the voting is by a simple majority. Mr. Dunn asked how the voting for suspension of rules was carried out and Representative Bloom answered that if the Speaker recognizes a member requesting suspension, there has to be a two-thirds majority to sustain the request. Representative Bloom said that he wanted a set of rules to cover all these matters, but that the matter of voting on substantive questions might still be by simple majority. However, if it were to be left to the Chairman to decide which category a question belonged in, it would be desirable to require a two-thirds majority to overrule the Chairman. thought the matter could not just be left open. Mr. Stettinius asked whether any Delegation in that case could call for a two-thirds vote on any question. Representative Bloom said that the rules should be uniform and apply all the way through.

MR. DUNN stated that this Conference is a constituent assembly establishing a basic instrument, and is not an already constituted organization, conducting its normal routine business. MR. Dulles said there were some questions on which we would not want to have a simple majority prevail, and MR. Pasvolsky added that there were some on which even a two-thirds vote would not be acceptable to us. Representative Bloom said we would probably have a better chance on a two-thirds than on a simple majority. Senator Vandenberg said he was in favor of having all questions decided by a two-thirds majority and the other Delegates individually said that they agreed. Senator Vandenberg commented that he hoped Mr. Molotov would be told that he had made this motion and that the fact would be reported in Pravda.

OBSERVANCE OF VE-DAY 53

Four-Power Consultation

THE SECRETARY said that the previous evening with Mr. Molotov, Mr. Soong and Mr. Eden <sup>54</sup> had been marked by the best spirit that was evinced since the beginning of the Conference. He said there was good cooperative spirit, some fun, and a good deal of serious talk, all mixed together, and that this spirit had prevailed in the morning meeting <sup>55</sup> as well. Eden and Molotov had talked on the Polish issue with great frankness and in a spirit of cooperation. He thought maybe he would have something new to announce in the next twenty-four hours. Of course, it was questionable whether the same spirit would prevail at this evening's meeting.

Senator Connally commented that Molotov had been in good spirits during the day. The Secretary said that Molotov had promised he would not leave San Francisco until the Commissions and Committees had begun their work and until the four sponsoring powers had reached agreement on the changes to be made on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, also until some progress had been made on the Polish issue. The Secretary felt that that day's meeting had brought the first rays of sun since Yalta.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked about Mr. Eden's plans and the Secretary answered that Mr. Eden had assured him he would stay as long as he possibly could. (The Secretary made several comments off the record about Mr. Eden's plans for the immediate future).

THE SECRETARY said that at this evening's meeting with Mr. Soong, Mr. Molotov and Mr. Eden views would be exchanged on amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. The Soviet Union and the British Government had given us the texts of their proposals.<sup>56</sup> This would be a very important meeting, and he thought the Delegation should authorize certain of its members to negotiate on the sugges-He hoped the Delegation would grant him the authority and also designate Senators Connally and Vandenberg to be present as well as such advisers as he wanted to have with him. He said he would like to be given this authority but wanted a discussion now so that the representatives of the United States at the meeting would have full information on the American view. It would be necessary to agree on our rock bottom position and to know what the others had in mind. He asked that the Delegation give him and Senators Connally and Vandenberg authority to negotiate on this matter this evening with the other three sponsoring governments. Representative Bloom and Dean Gildersleeve agreed and Representative Eaton said that he agreed but that he wanted a full discussion of the issues. COMMANDER STASSEN asked if he might go along too, especially since he was in an unusual position. Representative Bloom suggested that it could be left to the Secretary to decide whom to take with him. THE SECRETARY said he would appreciate that very much.

NEWSPAPER REPORTS ON ARGENTINE ISSUE

Representative Bloom asked what steps should be taken about the newspaper report that Mr. Hull had expressed strong disapproval of the position taken by the United States on Argentina.<sup>57</sup> Mr. Bying-TON said he had immediately given out a denial and he said there had been no foundation whatever for the report. . . .

STATEMENTS BY CONSULTANTS

THE SECRETARY said that before the Delegation started discussing the amendments the United States should bring up in the meeting of the Sponsoring Governments tonight, he wanted to report on the meeting of the Consultants.58 He thought it had been an excellent meeting and he had been deeply impressed by the discussion. The Consultants had shown themselves especially concerned about the expansion of the reference to human rights and fundamental freedoms. He had called their attention to the phrase in Chapter IX of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals on promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. Mr. Hackworth interjected the reminder that it was now proposed to add such a reference to Chapter I. The Sec-RETARY said that at the Consultants' meeting Mr. Nolde, Mr. Proskauer 59 and others had made speeches and they had presented a statement signed by a considerable group.

THE SECRETARY read the statement regarding human rights submitted to the United States Delegation by a group of Consultants representing church bodies, business, labor, civic organizations, etc. (U.S. Gen 42, May 2, 1945 60). The Secretary commented that the Consultants thought this a matter of tremendous importance. He had assured them that at Dumbarton Oaks he personally had voted for recognition of human rights and fundamental freedoms and he had promised them that he would take up the matter of expanding and defining in greater detail what the functions of the organization might be in this respect. He had told them that he could not say whether the Delegation would sponsor the language they proposed. The Consultants had said that they thought the United States should try to obtain agreement on giving much greater emphasis to human rights, even if there was some risk of failure. They thought that even if the United States Delegation failed in its attempt, the Delegation could put out a statement that it had tried and this would carry a great weight with American public opinion.

SENATOR VANDENBERG commented that the group of Consultants had asked for four measures of which two were already included in the United States proposals. Representative Bloom said that while it was all right to talk about human rights, he thought it would be better to refer to equal rights; that would mean more and go farther for all people. He thought that in this country it had definite meaning and that it should be understood that what was desired was equal rights for every citizen of every nation, within that nation. He said he had taken that up with Mr. Pasvolsky earlier. He wondered what human rights really meant; did it mean equal rights? If not, he asked, what did it mean?

The Secretary said that Dr. W. W. Cumberland of the National Association of Manufacturers thought that the language in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals on the Economic and Social Council was too indefinite for the future. There were too many generalities and vague hopes. His organization wanted language used in the redraft of this chapter that would give assurance that the Council and its program would really come into being soon. They did not want it left merely that the organization had a right to make the sort of arrangements outlined. The Secretary, himself, thought that Mr. Cumberland had made a strong point.

Senator Vandenberg commented that the Russians were proposing in Chapter I the addition of the clause "and encouragement of respect for human rights and particularly the right to work and the right to education and also for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, language, religion or sex". Representative Bloom said that the Russians repeated this proposal several times in their suggested amendments. Mr. Notter added that it appeared three times.

THE SECRETARY asked what could be done about the Human Rights Commission which the Consultants group was proposing. Mr. Pasvolsky observed that the British wanted to drop the enumeration of commissions from Chapter IX and leave the Economic and Social Council free to set up such commissions as may be required. They thought this was not a statutory matter and that it was something that might be left to the organization itself to handle.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said that a number of people had spoken to her about the importance of making sure that the work of the existing League of Nations Committees in the field of economic and social cooperation should be carried on. She was sure no one would object to that, but the matter needed clarification.

THE SECRETARY said he was in favor of informing the President this evening about this matter and telling him of the sincerity with which the proposals had been put forward. He wished also to report the urging of the Consultants' group that the United States should back the proposals heartily even though they might fail eventually. He felt that the Delegation should make public its position. Senator Vandenberg said he approved of taking a public stand on this issue; he thought it would make for better public relations all around. The

SECRETARY said that the American Delegation could take a public stand after tonight.

THE SECRETARY referred to a letter on the subject of education which had been brought up at the Consultants' meeting [U.S. Gen 52]. MR. MACLEISH asked that the whole letter be read and Mr. Sandifer read it. Representative Eaton said this was a very important document and he wanted to come back to the Russian proposal for amending paragraph 3 of Chapter I "in particular the right to work". He wondered whose duty it was to implement this right. Senator Vandenberg said he was surprised that the Russians had not suggested the right to strike, also. Representative Eaton said that was really a part of what they wanted. He still wanted to know whose duty it was to provide the work.

Senator Connally said he felt that while we must be sympathetic with these proposals, he dreaded trying to cover too much. If this is included, the other countries want other things. Education has as many connotations as religion. He was merely uttering a word of caution.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM said he wished to raise a point of order against the whole discussion. The Delegation had decided not to include the word "education", and he thought that the one sure way to meet with trouble in Congress was to include it. He recalled that the Senators had been for omitting this word also. The Secretary asked whether we could accept this word as a proposal of the Soviet Delegation. Representative Bloom thought that would be somewhat better. Senator Vandenberg said he thought the language suggested by the American Delegation already expressed the spirit of this letter.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked why it would not be better to talk about equality. He thought "human rights" means nothing. Mr. Dulles asked Representative Bloom if he would be satisfied with the Soviet formula "without distinction as to race, language, religion or sex". Representative Bloom said he thought it did not have quite the same meaning.

THE SECRETARY said that it was now 9:30 in Washington and it was time for him to telephone to the President.

MR. Bowman said that at two meetings the advisers had been invited and urged to make their suggestions. MR. Pasvolsky said he thought it was now too late for anything further, and whatever decisions were to be made would have to be made here. Dean Gildersleve asked whether this would apply to Chapter IX since this was the first occasion on which there would be an opportunity to decide.

THE SECRETARY said it was necessary to prepare for tonight's meeting with the other Sponsoring Governments and reach the final position of the United States before that meeting. He did not believe that the advisers would have anything new to say, and he thought that the Consultants had really given their most essential suggestions.

Senator Connally said that the question before the Delegation was the adoption of Commander Stassen's proposal that reference to a commission on human rights should be inserted in paragraph 2 of Chapter IX, and that the matter should be referred to the Advisers and drafting committee for the proper wording.

Dean Gildersleeve asked if that was the only change that was being proposed in Chapter IX and if there was not also to be a change in Section A. Senator Connally said that was his understanding. Dean Gildersleeve said that if that was the case, then she wished to propose that the word "cultural" be included in paragraph 1 of Section A. Mr. Pasvolsky said that the Soviet proposal contained it and the United States did not need to propose it. Mr. Dulles said that the Delegation had already agreed to this change. Commander Stassen said that psychologically Dean Gildersleeve was right. It would make a considerable difference to say that we had proposed it.

MR. PASVOLSKY said that it was all right to add the word "cultural" since it had already been accepted and that it should be added in the chapter on Purposes and in Chapter IX. Dean Gildersleeve said it should be clear that the American Delegation was making the proposal. Mr. Pasvolsky said the phrase should read "cultural and other humanitarian problems". Senator Connally asked if the Delegates agreed on reference to the commission on human rights. If so, the next place to make a reference to human rights would be in Chapter I. Mr. Pasvolsky said that he thought that could be taken up in the discussion on the proposals and amendments, and urged that the Delegation now turn to the immediate business of deciding what amendments should be offered by the United States and which of the Russian and British proposals we should accept or oppose.

REVIEW OF U.S. PROPOSALS IN LIGHT OF CONSULTATION DEVELOPMENTS

Senator Connally asked Mr. Pasvolsky to open the discussion. Mr. Pasvolsky reported that the Advisers had given some consideration to this matter and wanted to suggest that the list of proposals to be insisted upon by the United States be kept to the minimum Senator Connally said he thought that was what the American Delegation should do. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the Delegates run through Document A (April 26, 1945) and agree on the points that should be taken up in the meeting later that evening. He said that some of the Advisers to the American Delegation had met informally with some of the Russian, Chinese and British at noon and as a result of this discussion they wanted to propose the elimination of certain amendments in the American list. (Document A)

Chapter I, Purposes.—The first suggestion was that the proposed revision of Chapter I, paragraph 1 (adding after "peaceful means" the clause "and in accordance with the principles of justice and equity") should be altered to read "with due regard to the principles of justice and international law".

Senator Vandenberg said that he was willing to accept the Chinese version <sup>63</sup> on this point. He thought it would produce the same atmosphere and it would achieve the purpose of including international law. The Delegation agreed to the change proposed by Mr. Pasvolsky.

Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the suggested amendment of paragraph 2 (to include the phrase "to foster the development of international law") should be dropped since it did not add anything to the document. A reference to international law would be in paragraph 1 of this Chapter and in paragraph 6, Section B, Chapter V of the General Assembly. Senator Connally asked if the Delegates agreed to this change and they gave their assent.

Mr. Pasvolsky asked the Delegates if the word "cultural" could be added after the word "social" in paragraph 3. The Delegates agreed to this change and no change was made in the revision already proposed for that paragraph (to add after "problems" the clause "and to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms").

Chapter II, Principles.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested retaining the proposed amendment to paragraph 1 (substituting "its members" for "peace loving states"). The Delegates agreed.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the proposed amendments to paragraphs 5 and 6 and the unnumbered paragraph should be dropped. That meant going back to the original language of the Dumbarton Oaks document. However, some textual changes might be made in the course of drafting. Mr. Dunn said that the dropping of these amendments was recommended by himself, Mr. Dulles, Mr. Pasvolsky, Mr. Bowman and Mr. Armstrong who had met together in the course of the afternoon. Senator Vandenberg asked what would happen to the proposed insertion in paragraph 5 of the phrase "in accordance with the provisions of the Charter in any action taken by it under the provisions of the Charter." Mr. Dulles said that this had been merely a drafting change in the first place and as it was stated now it made the phrase "any action" much too broad. He thought that the result that the American Delegates wanted to achieve could be brought about in the drafting process.

Senator Vandenberg commented that what Mr. Pasvolsky suggested was really postponing this particular problem. Mr. Hackworth said that this was a matter of shifting emphasis. Senator

Connally asked if the effect in paragraph 6 would not be to make the statement positive instead of negative. Mr. Dunn thought that if the original phrase "in accordance with the" was used it could apply both positively and negatively. Mr. Pasvolsky said that he would prefer not to multiply the proposals to be made by the United States. He was working with Mr. Dunn on textual changes like this and thought there might be other ways to accomplish the results he wanted without making a formal proposal.

Senator Connally asked the Delegates whether they would agree to striking out all the amendments suggested for paragraphs 5 and 6 and the unnumbered paragraph in Chapter II, and the Delegates agreed.

Chapter V, The General Assembly.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the proposed amendments to Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 1 should be dropped. He said the suggested changes had caused a great deal of discussion and many people could not understand the reason for them. Moreover, there would be many proposals coming in from the small countries on this paragraph. He thought it wise, therefore, for the United States to drop all proposals for changes in the paragraph, leaving it as it is in the text of Dumbarton Oaks, and to concentrate rather on paragraph 6 of this Section and whatever changes were desired in Chapter VIII. Senator Connally asked if the Delegates had any objection, and since they raised none it was agreed that the amendments proposed for paragraph 1 should be dropped.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that with respect to paragraph 2, Section B, the amendment proposed by the United States might cause more trouble than we had anticipated. The smaller countries were asking that the Assembly alone should have the power to admit new members. His suggestion was that the United States should make no proposal on that point, and if necessary should agree later to modify the text of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals so as to give the General Assembly and the Security Council concurrent powers in the election of new members, permitting either body to initiate the step. As far as the United States is concerned now he thought we should go back to the original language. The Delegates agreed to his proposal.

Mr. Pasvolsky proposed that the United States should not suggest any amendment on paragraph 5 and that the phrase "on the basis of an appropriate proration" should not be offered by the United States. He said that it was actually a procedural matter for the General Assembly to decide upon, and could well be left to the future operation of the Organization. In any case it was customary for international organizations to set up some scale for payment of contributions by the members.

Senator Connally asked if this might not be changed to read "agreed scale". Mr. Pasvolsky thought it would be better not to offer any amendments at all. Senator Connally said that if there was no objection he would rule that the Delegation agreed. There were no objections.

Mr. Pasvolsky said there was a question in paragraph 6 about the meaning of the phrase "establish justice". Did it mean justice in states or between states? Moreover, it was not clear how the General Assembly could initiate studies and make recommendations to establish justice. He thought if the phrase was left, the word "international" would have to be added. There was also a question about the last phrase "the principles accepted by them in the Preamble of the Declaration by the United Nations of January 1, 1942". He thought this might cause some difficulty since the British and Russians had no recommendations on this point. He did, however, recommend keeping the final phrase "including situations arising out of any treaties or international engagements".

COMMANDER STASSEN said he thought that the whole of the last 4 lines of this paragraph is vital and that the paragraph as it stands is good. Mr. Pasvolsky said he would be willing in the evening meeting to state this objective in principle, but perhaps it would have to be taken out in the negotiations there.

Senator Connally asked if there were any objections to inserting "international" before "justice". Senator Vandenberg said he would like to return to that later if it has to be done. Senator Connally asked if the American proposal to include the word "justice" should be dropped. Senator Vandenberg said he would not want the word "justice" left out. Senator Connally asked if it was not true that the whole text of the Charter implied that the justice to be sought is international, and asked if we could assume that "international" was meant. Mr. Dulles said he wanted to leave the proposed amendments of paragraph 6 as they were. He thought that if this was to be a battle ground, it was no use for us to give up ahead of time. He thought we should try to bring the other sponsors to our point of view.

Senator Connally said that, without objection, the proposed amendments to paragraph 6 would stand and the United States would make them one of its proposals. Mr. Pasvolsky commented that some of the words could be taken out if necessary for bargaining purposes, and Senator Vandenberg rejoined that he would have put in more words if they were going to have to be sacrificed in the negotiations.

Chapter VI, The Security Council.—Mr. Pasvolsky turned to Chapter VI. Senator Connally said that so far the United States was offering only one amendment in that Chapter (Section D, paragraph 2, delete phrase "including regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee").

MR. DUNN said that in the Dumbarton Oaks text the provision for regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee looks like an attempt to build up blocs. MR. PASVOLSKY said he thought it would be better not to raise the question of regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee here. The provision had been put in on the suggestion of the British at Dumbarton Oaks, but he thought it looked strange to talk about "bodies or agencies" and then enumerate only one, and that one probably the least important of any that the Security Council might set up. If the reference to regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee is dropped here, however, it might be rewritten in the paragraph on the Military Staff Committee.

Mr. McCloy said he thought it wise to delete the reference to regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee at this point. Mr. Pasvolsky said it was the result of long argument at Dumbarton Oaks. The British had insisted upon it and since they had insisted on very few points, the Americans had thought it best to go along with them on this. Senator Connally said that if any reference is to be made at all to this point, it should be made in the paragraph on the Military Staff Committee. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that it would be better to propose the suggested amendment and the Delegation agreed.

Senator Connally asked whether other governments are submitting many amendments on the Security Council. Commander Stassen said that all the proposals were coming in and would soon be available. Egypt, Chile, The Netherlands and Liberia were proposing changes on the Security Council. No proposals had come in from Czechoslovakia, Lebanon, Turkey, and South Africa. However, the proposals would be distributed as fast as they could be made available.

Chapter VIII, Section A.—Mr. Pasvolsky turned to Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 5 [to add "or settlement" at the end of the paragraph]. He said that this was only a drafting change and believed we should drop it as a proposal and go back to the original text. As to paragraph 7 of Section A, Chapter VIII, on domestic jurisdiction, the British were making a proposal. He thought we should make some declaration on this point and wanted to defer it until the British proposals were considered. Senator Connally said that he wanted to see the United States proposal on paragraph 7 put forward on the initiative of this Government. Mr. Pasvolsky said there was some question in his mind whether this was the best place for such a proposal but we could call it a proposal now and come back to it later.

Chapter VIII, Section B.—In Section B of Chapter VIII Mr. Pasvolsky thought it desirable to retain the amendments already agreed upon (after "measures" insert the following phrase "set forth in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this section"). He thought that the suggested alteration in paragraph 3 could be dropped if the proposals with respect to paragraphs 1 and 2 were retained inserting after "decisions" "to maintain or restore peace and security". Senator Connally asked if there was any opposition to retaining as an American proposal the suggested amendment to paragraphs 1 and 2. The Delegates agreed to this suggestion. He asked if there was any opposition to dropping the proposed amendment from paragraph 3. Mr. Dulles said it could be dropped if the proposals for paragraphs 1 and 2 are retained. The Delegates raised no opposition to deleting this amendment.

Chapter IX, Arrangements for Economic and Social Cooperation.—Mr. Pasvolsky said that in Chapter IX it had just been agreed that the word "cultural" should be inserted after "social" in Section A, paragraph 1, and that in Section D, paragraph 1 the phrase "a commission on human rights" should be inserted after the phrase "a social commission". Senator Connally asked if the Delegation had any opposition now to these changes and there being none, he stated that the Delegation agreed to the proposals.

Chapter X, The Secretariat.—Mr. Pasvolsky said that the proposed additional paragraph to Chapter X might encounter strong objections and he wanted to be able to propose it to the other sponsors in order to have bargaining power on other provisions with regard to the Secretariat. Senator Connally asked if the Delegates agreed. They assented.

Chapter XI, Amendments.—Mr. Pasvolsky said that all three of the governments had reservations on the American proposal for a new paragraph in Chapter XI. One reason for their opposition was that as it stands it makes it more difficult to have a conference for a thorough-going revision of the Charter than for amendments. Nevertheless, he personally thought this proposal should be left in. COMMANDER STASSEN agreed with him. SENATOR CONNALLY asked the Delegates if they agreed to offering this as an American proposal. He commented that according to this proposal the vote of seven Council members would be required, but with unanimity among the permanent members. However, ratification of a new draft Charter would require acceptance by all permanent members, and he thought that would be enough of a veto for them to retain. Senator Vandenberg said he was in favor of leaving this proposal as it had been drafted. Senator Connally said he would like to have this known as his amendment. He added that Hamilton Holt 64 had called upon him and said that the Charter should have a provision like this. Com-

MANDER STASSEN said he thought it was one of the most important proposals being made by the United States. Mr. Hackworth said the American Bar Association was in favor of it and as a matter of fact would like to have a constitutional convention of the United Nations Organization every seven years.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that it might be wise to provide some time limit in this procedure and to say that a general conference of the members could be held not oftener than after a certain number of years. He would also suggest that since the process of ratification is the same as for amendments, it would be sufficient to say so and not to spell it out.

Preamble.—Mr. Pasvolsky said there was one more point on which he would like advice. The United States Delegation believes there should be a Preamble setting forth the motives which lie behind the Charter. So far this was an item that had not been discussed very thoroughly and we had no draft, but he thought we might, nevertheless, tell the others that we believed there should be a Preamble. Senator Connally suggested that we prepare a draft Preamble and say to the Russians and British that we had a text in mind. He would like to see it short and crisp and to the point. Senator Vandenberg commented that there seemed to be a good many chapters of this kind—a Preamble, a chapter on Principles, a chapter on Purposes. Perhaps chapters should be added on Objectives and Aims.

Withdrawal Provision.—Mr. Pasvolsky said that no final decision had been taken on the question of proposing a withdrawal provision. Senator Connally asked about a provision on the registration of treaties. Mr. Pasvolsky said that this was being suggested by many countries.

Senator Vandenberg said that a withdrawal provision was desperately important. Mr. Pasvolsky said the Delegation had already agreed to support such a provision, but he thought we should make sure that it was in if we wanted it. Senator Vandenberg said it was utterly fundamental. Mr. Dulles commented that if the American Delegation feels it is fundamental they should see to it that it is proposed. Senator Connally asked what such a provision should contain. Senator Vandenberg asked where the text was that had been presented.

Release to the Press

Mr. MaoLeish said he was sorry to interrupt the discussion, but he wanted very much to know what to say to the press in the conference to be held on Friday. He reported that the journalists were eager to be told first about the American proposals.

Senator Connally asked whether the Delegates agreed on calling a press conference for Friday morning at 10 o'clock. All except Representative Bloom agreed. . . .

Dean Gildersleeve said she supported communicating our proposals to the other Delegates no later than to the press. Senator Vandenberg said it should have been done already. Mr. Pasvolsky said that we have to reach some agreement with the other sponsoring nations and it would be best if all four would put out their proposals at the same time. Senator Vandenberg said he was willing to concede Mr. Pasvolsky's point about courtesy to the other Delegates.

MR. PASVOLSKY thought the best way would be to decide tonight that this was the American program and then in the morning or afternoon of the next day to send it to the Secretary General and to the press. Senator Connally said that was difficult because the Delegation had just authorized several of its members to negotiate with the Russians and British on some of these points. Representative Bloom still thought we should put it out as our program and make it clear that some modifications might have to be made as a result of consultations. Mr. Armstrong thought that if that plan was followed the press conference could be held on Thursday, and that would delight and surprise the press.

Mr. Sandifer said there were some mechanical problems because there would have to be about 600 copies turned out. Senator Connally said it was necessary to keep in mind the facilities for a job of this sort. Mr. MacLeish said he wanted to announce to the press that it had been decided to hold a conference on Friday morning at 10 o'clock. Senator Connally said that without opposition Mr. MacLeish would be authorized to announce a press conference for Friday morning at 10 o'clock. Senator Connally called upon Mr. Pasvolsky to proceed with the business.

Withdrawal Provision.—Senator Vandenberg said there was still something to be done on the withdrawal provision. Mr. Pasvolsky remarked the best thing to do was to say to the Russians and British that there was another point on which we wanted to make a proposal and that we were working on a text which would be shown to them later. Commander Stassen said he wanted it understood that the United States was not to take the initiative in proposing a withdrawal provision. Senator Vandenberg said the Delegation had agreed not to include it in the "A" document but had put it into the "B" document. Commander Stassen said there had not been a clear decision on that point. Mr. Pasvolsky said that we could tell the others tonight that we would like to see some provision about withdrawal. Mr. Stassen said he was against having a withdrawal clause introduced by a nation that was going to have a veto in the Security Council. Mr. Dunn said the matter would have to be decided before Friday. Commander Stassen said that he would not object so much to the idea of the withdrawal clause, but he thought it would be very bad for the United States to propose it.

REVIEW OF AMENDMENTS TO DUMBARTON OAKS PROPOSALS AS SUGGESTED BY THE UNITED KINGDOM DELEGATION

Mr. Pasvolsky turned to the British proposals [US Gen 37, Amendments to Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as Suggested by the United Kingdom Delegation]. He suggested that the United States should make no objection to the first British proposal [delete paragraph 1, d of Section C of Chapter IX and insert a new paragraph after paragraph 7, Section B, Chapter V as follows: "The General Assembly should examine the administrative budgets of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned."] Mr. Pasvolsky said he thought the American Delegation did not care very much how this matter of reviewing budgets was done. Senator Connally asked if there was any objection to Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion. There was none.

With respect to the British proposal on the election of non-permanent members, Mr. Pasvolsky said that this question had already been argued at Dumbarton Oaks. ["The General Assembly should elect six States to fill the non-permanent seats, due regard being paid to the contribution of members of the Organization towards the maintenance of international peace and security and towards the other purposes of the Organization."] Mr. Pasvolsky said that the issue here was whether criteria should be set up in the Charter for election of non-permanent members of the Security Council. If one criterion were proposed, then others would be brought forward. Various countries were proposing various criteria—regional, etc. Dean Gildersleeve asked if we were going to object to having the British put this proposal forward. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that we would express our opposition to it and the British could then do as they wished about actually proposing it.

SENATOR CONNALLY said it would be difficult to define "due regard to the contribution of members of the Organization . . ." He was against this idea, and thought the Assembly should have complete freedom in the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council.

Mr. Johnson said that if this clause should go in, there would be a demand for an increase in the number of seats on the Security Council and there would be demands for regional representation. Senator Vandenberg commented that such a condition would virtually outlaw small states. Mr. Pasvolsky said it would be stated in the negotiations that the United States does not like this proposal. Senator Connally asked if the Delegates agreed with this position and they said that they did.

Mr. Pasvolsky took up the amendment proposed by the United Kingdom Delegation on pacific settlement of disputes. ["Without prejudice to the provisions of paragraphs 1–5 below, the Security Council should be empowered, if all the parties so request, to make recommendations to the parties to any dispute with a view to its settlement in accordance with the principles laid down in Chapter II [3)."]

Mr. Pasvolsky said this would give the Security Council the power to recommend the terms of settlement only on the request of all parties to a dispute. He thought it was a harmless provision and that the right was inherent to the Security Council anyway. The next proposed amendment to paragraph 4 of Section A, Chapter VIII, he thought was not harmless. ["If, nevertheless, parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in paragraph 3 above fail to settle it by the means indicated in that paragraph, they should obligate themselves to refer it to the Security Council. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the particular dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under paragraph 5 or whether itself to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate." He thought that if this power was given at this point it would open the door to permitting the Security Council to enforce the settlement of a dispute. The Delegation agreed that the United States should oppose this amendment but raise no objection to the previous one.

Mr. Pasvolsky called attention to the proposed amendment of paragraph 7, Section A, Chapter VIII. ["(1) The Charter should not confer the right on any member of the United Nations to require that a dispute or situation arising out of matters which by International Law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the State concerned should be submitted to the means of settlement mentioned in Section A (3). Should, however, such a situation or dispute constitute a threat to the maintenance of international peace or security, or should a breach of the peace occur in consequence of such a situation or dispute, it should be open to the Security Council, acting in accordance with Section B, to take such action as it may deem appro-(2) The question whether a particular dispute or situation does arise out of matters which by International Law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the State concerned should be decided, if necessary, by the body to which it is sought to submit the dispute or situation."]

Mr. Pasvolsky thought that the first sentence was satisfactory but that the rest of the proposal was questionable. He thought it particularly bad to suggest that the question as to whether a particular dispute or situation does arise "out of matters which by International Law are solely within the jurisdiction of the State concerned" should be decided by the body to which it is decided to submit the dispute or situation.

COMMANDER STASSEN said that this sentence went far beyond the most extreme suggestions he had heard so far. Mr. Pasvolsky said that our proposal was to set no standard whatever. This was really the other extreme. Senator Connally asked whether the Delegation agreed to opposing this British suggestion. Mr. Dulles said that our opposition should be stated, but it should be pointed out that our main opposition related to paragraph (2). He thought perhaps we could talk over paragraph (1) with the British.

Mr. Pasvolsky read the amendment proposed by the British for paragraph 1, Section D, Chapter IX. ["The Economic and Social Council should have the power to set up such commissions as may be required."] Mr. Pasvolsky said this would eliminate the enumeration of the commissions. Commander Stassen said we are making a contrary proposal. Mr. Pasvolsky said the matter would have to be adjusted somehow.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the last British proposal was very important:

["In Chapter IX Section A, Paragraph 1 the first sentence should read as follows:

After 'should' insert 'in association with the International Labour Organisation and other bodies concerned.'

In Chapter IX, Section A, insert at the end of paragraph 2, new Paragraph as follows:

3. In view of its tripartite constitution the International Labor Organisation should, subject to the provisions of Paragraph 2 above, be brought into special relationship with the Organisation and should be an important instrument through which should be pursued the object of securing for all improved labour standards, economic advancement and social security."]

Mr. Pasvolsky said this would put the International Labor Organization in a special position as compared with other international organizations. Representative Bloom inquired what our own labor organizations would think of this. Mr. Pasvolsky said that we have always opposed the efforts of the International Labor Organization to place itself in a superior position in the development of economic and social progress. Commander Stassen said that this was the other half of the fight over the World Trade Union Conference. DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said that this would weaken the Economic and Social Council.

MR. PASVOLSKY said there was no real objection to mentioning the ILO as an existing organization which should be brought into relation with the Organization. MR. Dulles said that we did not, however, wish to give the ILO priority over the Economic and Social Council. Representative Bloom asked what the effect would be if the British made this proposal and the United States opposed it, and especially what the effect would be on American labor. MR. Pasvolsky said that American labor groups were not very much concerned about it. Also, the U.S.S.R. would surely oppose this suggestion and the United States might not have to speak out at all.

REVIEW OF AMENDMENTS TO DUMBARTON OAKS PROPOSALS AS SUGGESTED BY THE SOVIET DELEGATION

On the request of Senator Connally, Mr. Pasvolsky opened the discussion on the Russian amendments [US Gen. 39, Amendments to Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as Suggested by the Soviet Delegation]. Mr. Pasvolsky said the proposed amendment to Chapter I, paragraph 1 had already been agreed upon by the American Delegation [insert after "peaceful means" the phrase "in conformity with the principles of justice and international law].

MR. PASVOLSKY read the proposed amendment to paragraph 2. [Insert after "nations" the phrase "based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples"]. MR. ARMSTRONG said that it could be used to cover the expansion of the Soviet Union. Commander Stassen said he was against it. MR. Armstrong said it would be a little difficult for the United States to come out as opposed to such a provision, and the Delegates agreed to ask the Soviet Delegation to explain what was intended by the proposal.

Mr. Pasvolsky read the proposed amendment to paragraph 3 of Chapter I. [After "humanitarian problems" insert "and encouragement of respect for human rights in particular the right to work and the right to education and also for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, language, religion or sex."]

MR. BOWMAN said that it contained everything but the right to be assassinated. MR. Pasvolsky said that in this the Russians were playing up to the small nations and would undoubtedly insist upon this amendment. Representative Eaton said he wanted to know whose duty it would be to provide the work. Commander Stassen said that when you begin to specify the right to work and the right to education, then freedom of the press and freedom of religion would have to be added. Mr. Dulles thought it desirable to propose discussing this amendment with the Russians. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that part of it would be all right, namely the phrase "without distinction as to race, language, religion or sex." Senator Vandenberg said that was all right with him; however, if the right to work and to education were named, then there was a long list that should be added such as freedom of assembly, freedom of religion, etc. Senator Connally said that freedom of the press and freedom for the exchange of information and freedom to petition should also be included in that case. There was agreement on this suggestion.

MR. PASVOLSKY drew attention to the Soviet proposal for amendment of paragraph 6 of Section B, Chapter V, which is the same as the proposal just discussed. He pointed out that the Soviet Delegation was not making any proposal about the revision of treaties or the principles of the Atlantic Charter. Senator Vandenberg said that the Americans really wanted to go farther in this paragraph than the Russians.

Mr. Pasvolsky called attention to the Soviet proposal on paragraph 2 of Section C, Chapter VIII. [After the phrase "without the authorization of the Security Council" add the clause "with the exception of measures provided for in treaties or concluded directly against the renewal of the policy of aggression on the part of the aggressor states in the present war."]

Mr. Pasvolsky said that he did not like this particularly. It had been drafted to take care of the Soviet agreement with France. The British, however, were working on a redraft. Mr. Armstrong said that Mr. McCloy before leaving had asked him to say that he hoped this matter would be left open until the Military Advisers had had a chance to express themselves.

MR. PASVOLSKY drew attention to the fact that the proposed amendment to paragraph 1 of Section A, Chapter IX was simply a repetition of the amendments proposed for paragraph 6 in Section B, Chapter V and paragraph 3 in Chapter I.

Mr. Pasvolsky read the suggested amendment to Chapter X [substitute the following for the present paragraph 1: "There should be a Secretariat comprising a Secretary General, four deputies and such staff as may be required. The Secretary General and his deputies shall be elected by the General Assembly on recommendation of the Security Council for a period of two years and the Secretary General cannot be immediately re-elected. The Secretary General shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization."

Mr. Pasvolsky said this was a very important proposal. He thought the United States Delegation would not like it, and the Delegates agreed that they definitely did not like such a short term with quick rotation in the office of the Secretary General, although they had no objection to the provision for four deputies.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the proposed amendment to Chapter XII might be useful. [Insert a new paragraph before paragraph 1 reading: "The present Charter comes into force after its ratification in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by the members of the Organization having permanent seats on the Security Council and by a majority of the other members of the Organization."]

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that this would bring the Charter into force under the same provisions as the amending process and would require the ratification of about twenty-eight countries. The Delegation agreed that this amendment would be satisfactory. The meeting was adjourned at 8:15 p.m. and the Delegates agreed to meet again at 9 o'clock Thursday morning, May 3.

Minutes of the First Four-Power Consultative Meeting on Charter Proposals, Held at San Francisco, May 2, 1945, 9 p. m.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of participants, including members of Delegations of the United States (13); United Kingdom (6); Soviet Union (10); and China (5).]

Mr. Stettinius said that he thought that everyone understood the purpose of the meeting. It was a meeting of the sponsoring governments—the governments who participated at Dumbarton Oaks and who have agreed to consult with each other concerning the amendments and changes which they wish to propose in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. He said he was sure that everyone in the room hoped that it would be possible to have the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals approved with just as few amendments as possible. However, there are a few fundamental matters which all four governments had in mind which would require very careful consideration. He added that with the fast moving events in Europe and the extreme importance and necessity of many of the Foreign Ministers now in San Francisco returning home to their posts to resume their important duties at the earliest possible moment, he was hoping under the leadership and unanimity and complete collaboration of the four governments represented here, that it would be possible to complete the Charter successfully in a short time.

Mr. Molotov expressed his agreement.

Mr. Stettinius called upon Dr. Soong to present to the group the proposals of the Chinese Delegation for amendments or changes in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Dr. Soons said that the proposals of his Delegation were short and he hoped, sweet. He asked Ambassador Koo to present them to the group.

Ambassador Koo said that the Chinese had only three proposals to present and that they thought they were, and hoped that they would be acceptable, because they were practically all in the nature of a clarification rather than any substantial change. He inquired whether the Chairman would like to have him read them.

Mr. Stettinius asked if these changes were in addition to those submitted in the conversations in Washington last fall. Ambassador Koo said that they were. In response to a question from Mr. Stettinius The Ambassador said that the text had been distributed to the Delegations. Mr. Stettinius said that the United States Delegation had not received them. Mr. Molotov said that his delegation had received them but had not had time to study them. In order that their [there] might be a complete understanding of the Proposals Mr. Stettinius suggested that Ambassador Koo read them (Copy attached—US Gen 47).68

With respect to the first Chinese amendment which was a proposal for the insertion of a new paragraph between paragraphs 2 and 3 in Chapter VIII, Section B, Ambassador Koo said that this matter might be already implied in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. However, his Delegation thought it was desirable to include an explicit provision so that if the Security Council should be called upon to deal with the situation, especially a situation which might have the possibility of threatening or developing into a breach of peace, the Security Council should have the power to adopt preliminary measures to keep the status quo so that the situation would not be aggravated during the period required for consideration of the dispute. That was the purpose of his amendment.

Mr. Stettinius said that he thought it was clear and asked Dr. Koo to proceed.

Ambassador Koo read the second Chinese amendment which was for the addition of a new paragraph 6 at the end of Chapter VII. He said that this amendment was intended to promote the judgments of the International Court of Justice in case of any refusal on the part of any party to a case before the Court to carry out the judgment of the Court. The Court should refer the matter to the Security Council to consider what steps it might take in order to assure the carrying out of the judgment. This, again, was more in the nature of amplification of something already agreed to in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Ambassador Koo said that the third amendment proposed by the Chinese Delegation involved an addition in two places, Chapter VI, or Doc. 1, G/1(a), May 1, UNCIO Documents, vol. 3, p. 25.

Section D, paragraph 5 and Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 2. The purpose of his Delegation was to make it certain and clear to non-member states as well as to the Organization itself, that when a non-member state comes before the Organization, either to defend itself or its own rights, or in a dispute brought by a member, the position of the non-member state should be quite clear. It should be understood that such non-member state accepts the obligations following from the consideration of the dispute by the Council.

Ambassador Koo said that this was all of the amendments that the Chinese Delegation had to propose except the three which had been agreed to at Dumbarton Oaks with the United States and the United Kingdom and which had subsequently been sponsored by all four governments.

Mr. Stettings said that he thought that the four governments should now clarify their procedure. The question was whether the group would like the various suggestions and amendments all presented by all the governments in order that there might be a complete picture and then return to discuss them or whether it would be preferable to discuss the separate amendments as we go along. He inquired what was the preference of the group.

MR. EDEN suggested that amendments should be discussed as they were presented. MR. Stettinius said that this did not mean that there would be any attempt to reach final decisions this evening. This might be difficult. We have only had the Soviet suggestions 69 for one day and we would like to have further time to study some of them. Some we would be prepared to speak on now, but not all of them. MR. EDEN said that decision could be reached on some and position reserved on others. MR. Stettinius said that this was agreeable.

Mr. Molorov suggested that the amendments should be taken up point by point. This was agreed.

Mr. Stettinius said that we would proceed on this suggestion and proposed that the group turn to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and review the text. The following procedure might be followed: Each paragraph of the original Dumbarton Oaks Proposals would be read and only one of the four Delegations having a suggested amendment would bring it up. This was agreed.

Mr. Stettinius proposed to turn to Chapter I and asked Mr. Pasvolsky to read the amendments suggested by the United States Delegation as they came up, paragraph by paragraph.

On Chapter I, Paragraph 1, Mr. Soons said that the Chinese had no amendment.

Mr. Pasvolsky said the United States Delegation had a change to propose in Paragraph 1, that is, the insertion of the phrase "and with due regard for principles of justice and international law".

(For text of amendments suggested by United States Delegation see "Changes in Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as suggested by United States Delegation", May 2, 1945, copy attached.)<sup>70</sup> The United States suggestion was agreed to.

Mr. Molotov said the Soviet Delegation proposed the insertion in Paragraph 2 of the phrase "based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples". Mr. Pasvolsky said that in view of the introduction of the words "international law" in the first paragraph, the United States would drop its suggestion for reference to it in the second paragraph and let the provision stand as it was in the original text leaving the word "appropriate" in. Mr. Molotov said that he thought it would be well to accept the Soviet amendment to Paragraph 2. Mr. Eden said that his Delegation favored this amendment. The United States and Chinese Delegations also approved. The amendment was declared accepted.

The Soviet Delegation proposed the addition to Paragraph 3 of the phrase "and encouragement of respect for human rights in particular the right to work and the right to education and also for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, language, religion or sex".

The United States proposed the addition of the word "cultural" and of the phrase "to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Mr. Eden said that he agreed with these amendments, the only question was whether this point should be covered here or in the Preamble. Mr. Molotov thought the American amendment was acceptable subject to slight additions. Mr. Stettinius said that he would like to have the paragraph read as suggested by the United States. The other three Delegations indicated approval.

Mr. Molorov said that this was subject to slight additions, reading the changes proposed by the Soviet Delegation.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that we had encountered some difficulty with the proposed enumeration of rights. There are likely to be a good many other rights which other governments would insist on including.

Mr. Molorov said that when human rights are referred to everyone would ask what rights are intended. It seemed to him that it would be proper to indicate fundamental rights—the right to work because it would be in the interest of the people and in the interest of mankind to secure that right.

Senator Vandenberg said that our difficulty was that when you start to particularize there are so many other fundamental rights not included in the language proposed, for example, the right of freedom of religion, freedom of press and other similar freedoms. The United States Delegation felt that it would be necessary to go even further if the rights proposed by the Soviet Delegation were to be enumerated.

Mr. Molorov said that if we were to specify fundamental rights, those proposed would represent a great advancement. If it were desired to add others, he would have no objection. The paragraph might be amplified otherwise, "human rights" would be rather vague. The right to work and the right to life—it would be impossible for a man to make his living without working. The right to an education should be guaranteed by all United Nations for this would promote the civilization and opportunity of all mankind.

Senator Vandenberg reminded Mr. Molotov of the American Bill of Rights which includes these and numerous other basic rights. He would hesitate to pick out one or two of them for special mention. Senator Connally said that the naming of only one or two rights would mean the exclusion of others, and to name them all would be difficult and undesirable—the freedom of religion, the right to hold private property, trial by jury and many others. The Senator thought it would be a mistake to go beyond a general statement on the subject because if you start to particularize you will have to have a long list.

Mr. Stettinius said that he was entirely in accord with the views expressed by the other members of the United States Delegation.

Mr. Molorov said that it appeared that if the words "in particular the right to work and the right to education" were deleted, the remainder of the Soviet amendment would be acceptable. In view of the objections raised he thought that these amendments ought either to be referred to a Committee for consideration or deleted here at once. Mr. Stettinius thought they should be deleted and Mr. Molorov said he had no objection. With this change the paragraph was agreed to including the insertion of the word "cultural" as suggested by the United States.

Turning to Chapter II, Paragraph 1, Mr. Pasvolsky said that the United States proposed in Paragraph 3 to strike out the words "peace-loving states" and to substitute the words "its members". This was accepted.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that the United States proposed in Paragraph 3 to strike out the words "settle their disputes by" and to insert the phrase "in the settlement of their international disputes use". He explained that the principal reason for the change was that there is an ambiguity in this paragraph as to whether the obligation is to settle all disputes or to settle disputes by peaceful means. With respect to the question of the differences between Paragraphs 3 and 4, the United States Delegation felt that Paragraph 3 deals with situations in which disputes arise. The point in Paragraph 3 is that if there is a dispute and there is a settlement of that dispute it should be by peaceful means. Paragraph 4 is broader in scope, but it is the reverse of Paragraph 3 in that it provides that member states shall refrain from the threat or use of force. Paragraph 4 is applicable to all situations and not merely to disputes. There might be unilateral action in connection with which force or threat of force might be implied. Paragraphs 3 and 4 complement each other and Paragraph 4 in addition carries us a little further than Paragraph 3 because it relates not only to situations in which a dispute exists, but to any situation in international relations.

Mr. Molorov suggested that the word "international" be inserted before the word "disputes" in Paragraph 3. He did not see any reason for further change in this paragraph as it seemed to him that Paragraphs 3 and 4 taken together covered all that had been suggested. They cover cases in which there are disputes as well as cases in which there are no disputes.

Mr. Dulles suggested that we assume a claim is made upon the Soviet Union—does the Soviet Union undertake to submit that claim to international arbitration? He did not think that was the intent of the provision. What was intended was that a nation should not resort to force and violence as a means of settling their disputes.

Mr. Molotov repeated that Paragraphs 3 and 4 covered all cases. Mr. Eden said that he would be quite content with Paragraph 3 as it stands. Dr. Soong said that he felt that the original text was all right.

Senator Vandenberg said that he would like to know how important Mr. Dulles thinks this matter is. Mr. Dulles replied that he thought that the language as it stands would probably be interpreted in the sense of the suggestion the United States had made. Personally he would be willing to accept the language as it is.

Mr. Molotov indicated his agreement. Paragraph 3 was therefore accepted with the addition of the word "international".

Mr. Pasvolsky said, with reference to Paragraph 5 of Chapter II. that there had been some misunderstanding about this paragraph which could easily be corrected by a drafting change. He said it might be necessary to clarify the meaning by making the paragraph read somewhat as follows: "all members of the organization shall give every assistance to the organization in accordance with the provisions of the Charter". Dr. Soong and Mr. Molorov indicated agreement.

No changes were suggested in Chapter III or Chapter IV.

Mr. Sterrinius said that the changes which had been tentatively suggested by the United States on Chapter V, Paragraphs 1 and 2 had been withdrawn by the United States Delegation. The United States Delegation had also withdrawn its suggestions on Paragraph 5. The Soviet Delegation had a change to propose on Paragraph 6. He asked Mr. Molotov to present this change.

Mr. Molotov said that he thought there was no need for him to justify the suggested change as everyone present was familiar with it.

Mr. Stettinius said that the Soviet amendment was very similar in its first part to that suggested by the United States. Mr. Eden suggested that this paragraph be taken in two parts. He thought there was agreement on the first half down through the words "rules of international law". He said that his Delegation agreed with the first sentence as contained in the Soviet draft.

Senator Vandenberg said that the Soviet amendment was different from that of the United States but that it represented an improvement. Mr. Molotov said he was very happy to hear this statement.

Mr. Stettinius suggested that the full Soviet proposal down through the words "rules of international law" be approved. This was agreed. Senator Vandenberg added "provided we get the rest of it".

Mr. Molorov said it would be interesting to know what additions were suggested in the second part. With reference to the second part Mr. Jebb said that it must be clear that the Assembly must not make recommendations in matters which the Security Council is handling. The United Kingdom Delegation also proposed that references to the Atlantic Charter should be omitted here. They consider it undesirable to refer to another document in the Charter.

Senator Vandenberg said that the British proposal went a long way toward achieving the result we are all after. He could not overemphasize the importance of this matter from the standpoint of ultimate Senate ratification of the document. The chief purpose of the language, which is the only thing left in dispute between the British proposal and that of the United States is to make plain the fact that we are not forgetting the purpose for which the war has been waged. We want to leave open for discussion our recommendations in the application of these purposes and situations likely to impair the general welfare. It seemed to the United States Delegation that somewhere in this continuing effort, there should be a literal tieback into the objectives which move all of us in going to war. He thought that the Charter would have a very great weakness in its appeal to public opinion in the United States, if it were not possible to identify in it anywhere the purposes for which we have gone to war.

Mr. Eden said that he agreed but inquired whether it would not be better to have a reference in the Preamble. Senator Vandenberg said that this would be satisfactory.

Senator Connally said that he had no comment to make except that he assumed that the Assembly might discuss and recommend, but that it would have no power to undo treaties, and that it was clear that the recommendation would not go to the Security Council, which would have no power in this respect. He agreed thoroughly with the idea of having a forum for the consideration of this question. He would not be willing to give either organization the power to call nations in and say, "Here, your treaty is wrong." He said that making the reference in the Preamble suggested by Mr. Eden was agreeable to him.

SENATOR VANDENBERG said that if Mr. Molotov wished a statement made regarding the reasons for the proposal under discussion he would be very glad to make it. Mr. Molotov said he would like to hear the statement. Senator Vandenberg said that we are constantly told that all of this latitude for investigation and report by the Assembly already exists in the broad language of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, to which all the sponsoring powers have agreed. If this is true, it seemed to the Senator that there could be no objection to making it specific. If there is objection, it lends dangerous weight to critics of Dumbarton Oaks to  $\lceil who? \rceil$  deny that the power is already implicit. Frankly, he was thinking of critics in the United States Senate who have already indicated this as their line of attack on the Charter. These critics say that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals freeze the post war world in a rigid pattern created by expedient decisions made during the war. In addition there will be future decisions at the peace table of which we are not now cognizant. They are asking our people to underwrite the unknown even with the lives of our soldiers and our sons. They say we are not exploring the opportunity of correcting our mistakes by specific means, but the only way to do it is by the use of armed forces at our disposal.

THE SENATOR said that he wanted to add this personal appeal. He was in a very peculiar position—representing the minority side of the Senate. It was from that side of the Senate that the votes must be produced for the ratification of the Charter. He wanted to produce them. He was precisely in the position of Prime Minister Churchill when he said "If you will give me the tools, I will give you the results". This provision in Paragraph 6 was the tool the Senator had to have.

Mr. Molotov said that his first question was whether the American Delegation agreed with the views expressed by Senator Vandenberg. Mr. Stettinius said that as Chairman of the United States Delegation he could say that this was the Delegation's unanimous view.

Mr. Molotov said he would like to know exactly what text was being discussed—the British proposal or the United States draft.

&quot;"Give us the tools, and we will finish the job", was the concluding sentence in a world broadcast, February 9, 1941, printed in The War Speeches of the Rt. Hon. Winston S. Churchill, compiled by Charles Eade (London, Cassell & Co. Ltd., 1951), vol. 1, p. 343.

Senator Vandenberg said that we were discussing the British proposal with the understanding that there would be a reference to the Atlantic Charter in the Preamble to which reference should be made at this point.

Mr. Molorov inquired how his Delegation could make objections to what it had not had a chance to read. This was a very difficult thing for him to do.

Mr. Stettinius suggested that our United Kingdom colleagues say what their objections to the United States text was so that it could be changed right here. After a brief exchange Mr. Eden suggested that it might be better to take the matter up on the basis of the United States draft. Mr. Stettinius asked Mr. Molotov if he cared to give his comments on this draft.

Mr. Molorov said if the group desired he would make a preliminary comment. First he would like to refer to what Senator Vandenberg had said. The Senator seemed to have omitted the fact that it would not be convenient to refer to the Atlantic Charter in this document. Mr. Molorov thought first of all that we should make no reference to the Atlantic Charter. He thought that we should all agree that it would not be proper in drafting this very important document to refer to any other document. If it should be considered necessary to add certain provisions, they should be added in substance and not by reference to other documents. He thought this was the customary rule.

Mr. Molotov said that it was suggested, with regard to treaties that reservation should be made with regard to these treaties so that they may be revised. He would say on behalf of the Soviet Government that it would not agree to this and he would explain why. Of course, there are now treaties in the world which would be permanent, however, there is nothing permanent in the world. But still obligations are obligations. If there is a treaty signed on the one hand by the Soviet, United Kingdom and United States Governments, and on the other hand by one or more of the defeated powers, he thought such a treaty should be observed. The governments put their signatures to such treaties in order to make them firm. Not a single one of these treaties has been implemented as yet and he could not agree that we should begin by undermining their force. The Proposals, as adopted at Dumbarton Oaks, contain the provision that the Security Council and the Organization itself are entitled to intervene in any situation which is likely to endanger the peace. The Proposals contain no restrictions on this point but if we are now to draw a reverse conclusion that we can impose such a restriction this would in effect involve a revision of these treaties which would mean weakening them.

Mr. Molotov said we must consider to whom this would be helpful. He thought it would be helpful only to those whom we have fought and are fighting, and while fighting have shed much blood. We are happy in the treaties which we have signed in the course of the war—the treaties agreed to by us and our allies. From the point of view of the Soviet Government, he thought that the problem is to determine the limitation and the strength of these treaties. Have we had the right to conclude such treaties? We not only had this right but we had won it by shedding blood, the treaties have been signed, and if we are to undermine the strength of these treaties that would mean undermining the strength, the prestige and sovereignty of those states which have signed. If we were to impair the treaties, we should undermine the sovereignty of the states which have signed. The Soviet Government could not accept such a procedure and will continue to maintain its sovereignty. It considers that every state which has signed such treaties will do the same.

It was agreed on the suggestion of Senator Vandenberg that this matter should be carried over for later consideration.

The group turned next to Chapter VI, Section A, on which the United Kingdom Delegation had a proposal (See copy attached, US Gen 37).<sup>72</sup> It was thought that the third sentence of this section reading "The General Assembly should elect six states to fill the non-permanent seats" should be modified by adding the following clause, "due regard being paid to the contribution of members of the Organization towards the maintenance of international peace and security and towards the other purposes of the Organization".

Mr. Eden said that this proposal had originated with the Canadian Government.

Senator Vandenberg said that it seemed to him that this proposal would recognize the so-called middle powers and totally eliminate the possibility of small states ever having a chance to become members of the Security Council.

Mr. Molorov said that the United Kingdom proposal was acceptable subject to slight changes. He suggested that the words "other purposes of the Organization" should be omitted and the word "especially" inserted before the word "contributions".

Mr. Eden agreed to the second part of the suggestion. He did not understand the purpose of the first one. He was thinking of the past experience of the League when many members never paid their subscriptions at all and got all the advantages. However, if his colleagues were ready to accept the suggestion he would accept it.

Mr. Stettinius suggested that if we recognized one criteria for the election of non-permanent members we were opening up many others. He said this would open up the whole regional question, the matter of geographical position, populations and a number of other questions which must be taken into account before this matter could be dealt with if the provision is to be stated in other than very general language. Dr. Soong agreed with Mr. Stettinius saying that otherwise small nations would have no voice or chance at all.

Mr. Eden remarked that some states like Canada considered that they were entitled to some recognition because of the contribution they had made in the present war. Mr. Stettinius said he recognized fully the great contribution which Canada had made.

Senator Connally said that it seemed to him that one of the substantial objections to this proposal was that it impinged upon the freedom of the Assembly. There is already some resistance here and in the country to the immense powers being conferred upon the permanent members of the Security Council. The British proposal would aggravate that objection. Only those states which are strong and powerful would be given seats. It seemed to the Senator that if the Assembly was to be given power to elect the non-permanent members it should have the power to determine the conditions of election. If such a criterion as that proposed were meritorious it would appeal to the Assembly. It seemed to him that small powers would raise serious objections to the adoption of the proposal as it would be construed as a build-up of another favored group.

Mr. Stettinius said that he agreed with the Senator.

Mr. Eden thought that it would be desirable to give this subject more thought.

Mr. Stettinius called attention to the fact that it was after 11 o'clock and suggested adjournment until tomorrow morning.

Minutes of the Twenty-Seventh Meeting of the United States Delegation, Held at San Francisco, Thursday, May 3, 1945, 9 a.m.

[Informal Notes—Extracts]

[Here follows list of names of persons (22) present at meeting.]

THE SECRETARY convened the meeting at 9:00 a.m., and stated that he hoped that the members of the Delegation had been able to get some rest over the night.

[Here follow discussion of proposed meetings of the Delegation with private organizations and the Secretary's report on progress of consultations with the Four Sponsors.]

Press Policy

THE SECRETARY stated that, following the departure of the two Senators the night before, a group had continued to meet in his apartment on the question of the release of our proposals to the press. Since a press conference had already been scheduled for Thursday, but since it would not be possible to issue the proposals at this time, agreement had been reached that Mr. Stassen would leave the meeting of the four sponsoring governments and attend a press conference at 11 a.m., Thursday, on behalf of the whole Delegation.

THE SECRETARY asked Mr. STASSEN to summarize the statement he would make to the press conference. . . . He said he would indicate that the present consultations were a continuation of those held the previous evening, and that he would stress that consultation was going forward on amendments which each of the four governments wished to propose for discussion along with the consideration of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Moreover, he thought it should be said that, since none of the four governments had published the texts of their amendments, as host government it would be courteous for us not to publish our proposals before the conclusion of the consultations. . . .

REPRESENTATION AT CONSULTATIONS OF THE FOUR SPONSORS

Provision on Equal Rights

Representative Bloom remarked that the question of solidarity was not at issue, since he had on a number of occasions brought a suggestion which had not been ruled out and yet did not appear in any of the documents. The Secretary asked Mr. Sandifer the status of Representative Bloom's suggestion. Mr. Sandifer stated that the suggestion was to include in Chapter I, Purposes, paragraph 3, reference to "equal rights for all people".

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that this point was in fact in the document, since last evening the Soviet proposal had been accepted to add the phrase in paragraph 3, "without distinction," etc.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON asked what could be done if the Russians did discriminate. Would we deal authoritatively with the Russians? Mr. Pasvolsky said the Organization could not impose a decision on this question but that it could say to them, "you are violating a purpose of the Organization". Moreover considerable pressure could be mobilized in the form of public opinion.

Representative Bloom asked what objection there was to his phrase "equal rights"? Mr. Pasvolsky explained that the word "equal" was a touchy one with the Russians, and that from his point of view the phrase "without distinction" was actually better than "equal". Representative Bloom asked whether Mr. Pasvolsky meant to say that the Declaration of Independence was wrong. Mr. Pasvolsky said that it was satisfactory for the United States but not for the world, since to others it had a different connotation. Representative Bloom asked whether Mr. Pasvolsky thought it was better for us not to use the word "equal". Mr. Pasvolsky replied that he had no objection in principle to the word "equal", but was merely pointing out that it would be difficult to negotiate in this connection. Having gotten agreement on the Soviet proposal he was afraid we might lose what we had if we started monkeying with the language.

THE SECRETARY stated that he thought it was a very small request to ask for the inclusion in the document of a reference to "equal rights for individuals and nations". Mr. Pasvolsky replied that the difficulty with this proposal was that it raised the whole minority question. Representative Bloom noted that he did not recognize minorities and that this was the whole point of his amendment.

Mr. Pasvolsky reaffirmed that it had already been agreed in Chapter I to take care of what Representative Bloom wanted, but that in addition, if it was desired to include a reference to equal rights, then the matter would have to be considered.

THE SECRETARY asked that, if possible, a provision on equal rights be included and that Mr. Sandifer should make a report on this problem. Mr. Stassen expressed support for the Secretary's statement. The Secretary suggested that the reference to equal rights might well be included in the preamble. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that it might be possible to work it in there.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said she would like to go on record as saying how grateful she was to find the great advance in language indicated in the Soviet proposal for paragraph 3 of Chapter I.

STATUS OF AMENDMENTS MADE BY THE FOUR GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Pasvolsky thought that it might be necessary, if agreement was not reached on the Vandenberg proposal, 73 for us to put forward that proposal separately. He added that the British and even the Russians might have one or two individual proposals to make. Senator Connally remarked that this question would, for the moment, have to be reserved. The Secretary pointed out to Mr. Notter that it would not be possible for Mr. Stassen or anyone else to discuss this with the press until a policy had been established in consultation with the four sponsoring governments. Dean Gildersleeve thought that, if joint proposals of the four governments were issued, the impression might be given that the four governments were ganging up on the other countries. Mr. Pasvolsky thought it would be possible to make an introductory statement to the effect that these proposals were the result of our joint studies, but that we were ready to consider all the views and proposals presented by other governments.

&lt;sup>73</sup> For previous discussion of chapter V, section B, paragraph 6, see minutes of meeting of the United States delegation, May 2, 5:30 p. m., pp. 528, 537; for text of United States proposal, see Postwar Foreign Policy Preparation, p. 680.

THE SECRETARY indicated that he would not like to run the risk of Mr. Molotov's going home before the four powers had agreed upon a joint set of proposals. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that it would be necessary to continue consultations with the sponsoring governments until they had together gone over all the substantive proposals. This consultation would continue over the weekend. He thought Mr. Molotov could be persuaded to stay for this length of time. The Secretary thought he might be persuaded to stay until Saturday.

Senator Connally stated that the justification for the four sponsoring governments putting forward joint proposals was that these four drew up the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals originally, and we could say that on reflection, and following consultation, we had all felt they could be improved.

Mr. Pasvolsky said, in answer to Dean Gildersleeve's earlier comment, that it so happened that all the proposals being put forward were in the direction of improving the position of the smaller states rather than in acquiring more power for the large states, and therefore he thought they would actually please the other governments:

[Here follows discussion of Mr. Stassen's anticipated press conference, and documents before the delegation.]

Proposal on Revision of Treaties

THE SECRETARY asked whether there was any further business. Senator Vandenberg stated that he had been surprised by Mr. Molotov's first question <sup>74</sup> as to whether our proposed change in paragraph 6, Section B, of Chapter V, was Senator Vandenberg's proposal or the proposal of the whole Delegation. Senator Vandenberg stressed that the proposal on the review of treaties must be in the document or charter if it is to get through the Senate. He indicated that Mr. Molotov must understand that this is indispensable. Senator Connally said he would like to know how he might help in the negotiation of this proposal.

Mr. Bowman said we ought to find new ground for an argument for keeping the clause in paragraph 6. He pointed out that in a conversation with Mr. Gromyko he had been told that too much importance was being attached to the Senate Republican minority, since in fact the Republican votes were not needed to get the Charter through. Mr. Bowman said he had disabused Mr. Gromyko of his interpretation by citing the world court fight. Mr. Eden also had said that the clause that we were proposing created a good deal of difficulty. Senator Vandenberg pointed out that Mr. Eden had said however that he hoped that Britain would never negotiate a treaty that it would not be willing to submit to scrutiny.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM added that it was not only a question of the attitude of the Senate but that it was also a problem of public opinion.

MR. PASVOLSKY suggested that we argue that the final clause of paragraph 6 was included within the phrase "impairs the general welfare". He thought we should drop the reference to the Atlantic Charter, put this in the preamble, and emphasize the last clause with respect to treaties. Senator Vandenberg indicated his agreement with this proposal.

THE SECRETARY suggested that we should stress at the opening of the meeting that the Delegation still backs Senator Vandenberg's clause.

Mr. Pasvolsky favored not beginning with that point, but, for purposes of negotiation, starting with another point. Senator Connally, Senator Vandenberg, and The Secretary agreed to this suggestion.

Mr. Stassen pointed out that much of the difficulty arises from the fact that the newspapers have linked Senator Vandenberg's proposal with review of the Polish question.

The Secretary adjourned the meeting at 10 a m.

Minutes of the Second Four-Power Consultative Meeting on Charter Proposals, Held at San Francisco, May 3, 1945, 10 a.m.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of participants, including members of delegations of the United States (15); United Kingdom (6); Soviet Union (11); and China (6).]

Mr. Stettinius suggested that the discussion continue at the point where it left off the preceding evening.

CHAPTER VI. SECTION D.

(Mr. Stettinius and the members of the United States Delegations present had before them a document entitled "Amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as Suggested by the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, and China", US Gen 48, May 3, 1945, copy attached.<sup>75</sup>)

Paragraph 2. Regional Subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee.—Mr. Pasvolsky explained the United States proposal to delete the phrase "including regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee". He said that in view of the fact that the Security Council was empowered to set up any agencies necessary for the performance of its functions it seemed strange to make specific reference to only one of them in this provision. He thought there was very little reason for including one specific body at this point.

Mr. Eden said that he was inclined to agree that this was not the right place to refer to regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee. He thought that this provision might be put in the regional section in Chapter VIII, Section C, or in the paragraph on the Military Staff Committee in Chapter VIII, Section B. He said that he was willing to agree to the United States proposal to strike it out here provided that it should be considered in one of the other places that he had mentioned.

Mr. Stettinius proposed that following Mr. Eden's suggestion this matter be considered in connection with the provision concerning the Military Staff Committee in Chapter VIII, Section B. This was agreed to.

Paragraph 5. Participation of Non-Members.—Dr. Soong, at the request of the Chairman, explained the Chinese proposal to add a sentence as follows to this paragraph: "In the case of a non-member, the Security Council should lay down such conditions as it may deem just for the participation of such a non-member." Dr. Soong said that it was the thought of his Delegation that if a non-member were given the privilege of attending and participating in meetings of the Security Council when considering a dispute in which it was involved, the Security Council should have the right to lay down the conditions of such participation.

The proposal was agreed to without further discussion.

CHAPTER VIII. SECTION A

New Paragraph Before Paragraph 1. Recommendations on Request of Parties.—The British proposal to insert the following new paragraph before paragraph 1 was next taken up:

"Without prejudice to the provisions of paragraphs 1-5 below, the Security Council should be empowered, if all the parties so request, to make recommendations to the parties to any dispute with a view to its settlement in accordance with the principles laid down in Chapter II (3)."

Mr. Eden said that his Delegation recognized the importance of not cluttering up the Security Council with miscellaneous disputes, as had sometimes been the case with the League of Nations, but at the same time it was their thought that if the countries parties to a dispute requested the Council to take it up, the facilities of the Council should be available for this purpose.

The proposal was agreed to without discussion.

CHAPTER VII

Paragraph 6. Enforcement of Judgments of the Court.—At this point Dr. Soons called attention to the fact that one of the Chinese proposals related to Chapter VII and had not been discussed. The Chairman apologized for this oversight, which he said had resulted from the Secretariat putting the paragraph under Chapter VIII instead of Chapter VII. Dr. Soons said that this was probably the result of the paragraph having been inadvertently listed under Chapter VIII in the text of the Chinese proposals.

The Chinese proposal was to insert the following paragraph as paragraph 6 of this chapter:

"If any party to a dispute fails to comply with the judgment of the International Court of Justice, the Secretary Council may, upon application by the other party or parties concerned, take such action as it may deem necessary to give effect to the judgment."

Dr. Soons said that his Delegation regarded this provision as necessary and very important.

Mr. Eden doubted the desirability of including such a provision.

Mr. Molorov said that the inclusion of such a provision would mean that in addition to the decision of the court the Security Council would be issuing decisions binding upon the parties. He questioned the desirability of such a provision.

Mr. Stettinius stated that the United States Delegation was opposed to this provision.

Dr. Soong said that in view of the position of the other three governments China would reserve its position with respect to this provision.

CHAPTER VIII. SECTION A

Paragraph 2. Obligations of Non-Members.—The Chinese proposal to add the following sentence to this paragraph was taken up for consideration: "In the case of a non-member, it should be required to accept, for the purposes of such dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the Charter."

Dr. Soong pointed out that this provision was related to the provision in paragraph 5 of Chapter VI, Section D, concerning invitations to non-member states to participate in the discussion relating to disputes to which they are parties.

Mr. Molotov asked for a further clarification of this provision.

Dr. Koo explained that the purpose of the proposed addition is to make certain that when the Organization takes up for consideration a dispute involving a non-member, it can count on the obligations being complied with by such non-member.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the proposed addition was related also to the last paragraph in Chapter II on Principles to the effect that the Organization should insure that states not members of the Organization act in accordance with the principles laid down in Chapter II so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of peace and security.

Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Eden indicated that this provision was acceptable to their respective Delegations.

Mr. Molotov asked for time to study the provision.

Paragraph 4. Recommendation of Terms of Settlement.—The proposal of the United Kingdom to add the following sentence to paragraph 4 was taken up for consideration: "If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the particular dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under paragraph 5 or whether itself to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate."

Mr. Eden said that his Government attached great importance to this provision. He said that under the original provision if the Security Council took jurisdiction of a dispute its action was limited to the recommendation of procedures or methods of settlement. He thought that it would not be understood by the general public how the Council could take up a dispute and then take no action looking towards its settlement other than to recommend procedures or methods of settlement.

Dr. Soons said that the provision was acceptable to his Delegation. Mr. Molorov thought that the provision might be acceptable to his Delegation, but that they would like to go over the draft again.

Mr. Stettinius said that it was the view of the United States Delegation that it was undesirable for the Security Council to have the power to recommend terms of settlement. He would be happy to discuss the matter now or later as desired by the other Delegations.

Mr. Eden said that if this provision were not made clear by the proposed addition the Security Council could do nothing but talk and would not be in a position to take any effective action. At the very least he thought it must have the power to make recommendations as to terms of settlement.

The United States reserved its position on this question.

Paragraph 7. Domestic Jurisdiction.—Two proposals were before the meeting with respect to this paragraph. The United States proposal was to delete the words "by international law" and the word "solely".

The British proposal was that paragraph 7 be replaced by the following provision:

"(1) The Charter should not confer the right on any member of the United Nations to require that a dispute or situation arising out of matters which by International Law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the State concerned should be submitted to the means of settlement mentioned in Section A (3). Should, however, such a situation or dispute constitute a threat to the maintenance of international peace or security, or should a breach of the peace occur in consequence of such a situation or dispute, it should be open to the Security Council, acting in accordance with Section B, to take such action as it may deem appropriate.

"(2) The question whether a particular dispute or situation does arise out of matters which by International Law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the State concerned should be decided, if necessary, by the body to which it is sought to submit the dispute or situation."

SIR WILLIAM MALKIN, at the request of Mr. Eden, explained the British proposal. He said that paragraph 7 had never been fully discussed at Dumbarton Oaks. Under the Dumbarton Oaks provision, paragraphs 1 to 6 of Section A would not apply to matters coming within domestic jurisdiction, whereas the provisions of Chapter VIII, Section B, would apply to such matters. The effect of this was that members of the Organization would not be obligated under Section A to submit disputes coming within domestic jurisdiction. At the same time if such a dispute produced a situation likely to lead to war or if it actually caused a breach of the peace, the Council could act under Section B. It seemed to the United Kingdom essential that this situation be clearly stated and that was the purpose of the proposal put forward by the United Kingdom Delegation.

Mr. Bowman, at the request of Mr. Stettinius, explained that the United States proposed the deletion of the words "international law" on the ground that international law might not keep up with the evolution of the definition of domestic jurisdiction. It was proposed to omit the word "solely" as too precise in view of the existing imprecision of international law.

Mr. Molorov said that the United States proposal was acceptable to his Delegation.

Dr. Soong said that he would prefer to see the words "international law" retained.

Mr. Eden stated that he preferred the fuller statement of the matter contained in the British proposal.

Mr. Stettinius proposed the appointment of a subcommittee to consider this matter. The respective Delegations appointed Mr. Dulles and Mr. Hackworth (United States), Sir William Malkin (United Kingdom), Mr. Golunsky (Soviet Union), and Dr. Wang (China). The suggestion was accepted and the subcommittee directed to consider this matter at once and submit a report at the next meeting.

CHAPTER VIII. SECTION B

Paragraph 1. Character of Measures of Enforcement.—Mr. Pasvolsky said that the change proposed by the United States was in-

&lt;sup>76</sup> For the American proposal of September 9 to the Joint Steering Committee, and Soviet acceptance of the proposed paragraph 7 on domestic jurisdiction on September 27, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol 1, pp. 789 and 838, respectively. tended to make it clear that the word "measures" is intended to mean measures indicated in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this section. The same proposal is made also with respect to paragraph 2.

MR. Eden thought that this proposal required consideration in connection with paragraphs 4 and 5 of Section A.

Mr. Molotov said that he would prefer the original language of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Mr. Soong seemed inclined to agree with Mr. Molotov.

The United States reserved its position with respect to this proposal. Paragraph 2. The Measures to Maintain or Restore Peace.—It was pointed out that the United States proposal in this paragraph was identical with that in paragraph 1, that is to limit the measures to be taken to those provided in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this section.

Mr. Eden said that he had no objection to the proposed change in this connection. Mr. Soong agreed, but Mr. Molotov thought that it was connected with that in the preceding paragraph. Mr. Eden pointed out that this paragraph had reference to a threat to or breach of the peace. Mr. Molotov said that he had no objection to the change.

The proposed change was agreed to.

New Paragraph Between Paragraphs 2 and 3. Provisional Measures.—Dr. Soong explained that the new paragraph proposed by China arose out of the experience of the League in the case of Manchuria.

Ambassador Koo said that the whole idea was to facilitate the Organization's task of maintaining or restoring international peace and security. The provision was designed to maintain the conditions existing at the time the disturbance occurred. It would be helpful to prevent any aggravation of the situation. The prescription of provisional measures would be without prejudice to the rights, claims, or position of the parties concerned, but would not in any way affect the final settlement of the dispute. If any of the parties should fail to comply with the measures prescribed, such failure might be taken into account by the Council in reaching its final decision.

Mr. Molotov and Mr. Eden had no objection to this provision. Mr. Stettinius reserved the right on behalf of the United States Delegation to study the matter further.

CHAPTER VIII. SECTION C.

Paragraph 2. Enforcement through Regional Agencies.—The proposal of the Soviet Union for an amendment to this section reading as follows was next taken up:

"2. The Security Council should, where appropriate, utilize such arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority.

But no enforcement action should be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures provided for in treaties already concluded directed against the renewal of a policy of aggression on the part of the aggressor states in the present war."

Mr. Molorov explained that the purpose of the contemplated Organization is to prevent future aggression. This is also the purpose of a number of treaties which have been concluded among certain of the Allied states in Europe during the course of the present war. The amendment proposed by the Soviet Union would apply only to those treaties entered into, prior to the ratification of the Charter, by the governments participating in the San Francisco Conference. The proposal would include only treaties against aggression within this limited time-period. The proposal is entirely in keeping, Mr. Molorov said, with the spirit of the proposed Organization.

Mr. Eden said that he was in entire agreement with Mr. Molotov as to the importance and purpose of the treaties in question. One of the first treaties of this character was that between the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eden had two points which he wished to make with respect to the Russian proposal. In the first place, it was not reasonable to limit the exception to measures provided by treaties in force at the time that the Charter was ratified. A later treaty of the same character should not be discriminated against, for example Great Britain might conclude such a treaty with France after the ratification of the Charter. Mr. Eden's second point was that some provision should be made so that when the new Organization became stronger there should be a provision for its taking over the functions carried out by the parties to these treaties. This of course could only be carried out with the agreement of the signatories to the treaties. This he had tried to cover in an amendment which he had proposed.

Senator Vandenberg said that the question raised by the Soviet proposal should be considered in connection with the settlement of the question raised last night concerning Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 6.

Mr. Stettinius said that he had had in mind suggesting at the end of the meeting that the provision to which Senator Vandenberg had referred be turned over to a subcommittee of specialists for the purpose of exploring all angles to reach a common ground. He thought that it would be desirable to refer both of these matters to such a subcommittee. There being no objection, the following persons were designated: Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Pasvolsky (United States), Sir Alexander Cadogan and Mr. Jebb (United Kingdom), Mr. Molotov and Ambassador Gromyko (Soviet Union), Ambassador Koo and Dr.

Wang (China). Mr. Molotov suggested that Mr. Pasvolsky act as chairman. Mr. Stettinius said that he would attend the meetings as time permitted.

CHAPTER IX. SECTION A

Paragraph 1. Economic and Social Council.—The United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union each had made proposals for amendments in this paragraph. The United States proposed the insertion of the word "cultural". The United Kingdom proposed the insertion of the phrase "in association with the International Labor Organization and other bodies concerned". The Soviet Union proposed three different insertions: (1) "based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples"; (2) "in particular the right to work and the right to education"; (3) "for all without distinction as to race, language, religion, or sex".

Mr. Molorov explained that he wished to support the Soviet proposal for inclusion of the provision concerning the right to work and to education, but that he would not press the matter. If there was no objection to these additions, he would also like to have reference made to them in the Chapter on Purposes. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that if such additions were made the language used in Chapter I should be followed here.

Mr. Attree said that the proposal of the United Kingdom with reference to the International Labor Organization was related to the proposal for the insertion at the end of paragraph 2 of a new paragraph reading as follows:

"3. In view of its tripartite constitution the International Labor Organisation should, subject to the provisions of Paragraph 2 above, be brought into special relationship with the Organisation and should be an important instrument through which should be pursued the object of securing for all improved labour standards, economic advancement and social security."

The International Labor Organization as a specialized organization would be brought into relationship with the new Organization. It would be brought into relationship particularly with the Economic and Social Council. It was the view of the British Delegation that it was highly desirable that this should be stated clearly and specifically here. This view was based upon the important and distinguished record of the International Labor Organization.

Dr. Soons said that he regarded the British amendment as too sweeping and that he would like to study it further.

Mr. Molorov said that for reasons well known it was the view of the Soviet Government that it would be sufficient to adhere to the original text of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals in this respect. Mr. Pasvolsky explained that the United States desired to add the word "cultural" in order to make it clear that the cultural and educational fields were covered by this paragraph. It had been understood at Dumbarton Oaks that the word "social" included cultural, but there was a strong sentiment in the United States for making this explicit. Dr. Soong supported the United States proposal and it was agreed to by the four governments. Action on the British proposal both in paragraph 1 and paragraph 3 was reserved for later consideration.

The Soviet proposal was agreed to with the understanding that the language should be made to conform with the proposal which had been agreed to for paragraph 3 of Chapter I. This would involve the deletion of the phrase "in particular the right to work and the right to education".

CHAPTER IX. SECTION D

Paragraph 1. Establishment of Commissions.—The United States had a proposal on paragraph 1 for the addition of the phrase "a human rights commission". The United Kingdom proposed the deletion of the first sentence with respect to the establishment of specified commissions, a new sentence as follows to be substituted: "The Economic and Social Council should have the power to set up such commissions as may be required."

Mr. ATTLEE explained that in the view of the British Delegation the Dumbarton Oaks Proposal was too precise on this point in specifying the particular bodies to be created. It would be wiser to give the Council the power to set up commissions or other bodies as required and to leave the matter open and flexible for development. Mr. Molotov said that he had no objection to the British proposal.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said that she would very much like to have a specific reference made to a human rights commission. She had some sympathy with the British proposal, but she thought that further consideration of both proposals was desirable.

MR. ATTLEE suggested that the United States point might be met if a proposal on human rights were put at an earlier point in the document.

Mr. Eden suggested a subcommittee to study this question. Accordingly the following subcommittee was appointed: Mr. Bowman (United States), Mr. Attlee (United Kingdom), Dr. Hsu Mo (China), and Mr. Kuznetsov (Soviet Union).

CHAPTER X

Paragraph 1. Secretary-General and Deputies.—Ambassador Gromyko explained that the first Soviet amendment to this paragraph related to the number of deputies. The second related to the term of service of the Secretary-General and the deputies. His delegation had in mind that the four deputy secretaries-general would be from the permanent members of the Council, the Secretary-General also being a national of one of the permanent members. His delegation thought that the two-year term proposed would be long enough for purposes of experience and yet short enough to guarantee a term of service for a national of each of the five permanent powers within a ten-year period.

Dr. Soong supported the proposal for four deputies, but he thought that the two-year term was too short. He would prefer something like three, four, or five years. Mr. Eden said that he had no objection to the provision for four deputies. However, he thought it was not a good plan to choose these deputies from among the four great powers. They should be chosen upon their merits as individuals. He would not favor as short a term as two years. He wished the point emphasized that the officers of the Secretariat would not be representatives of their countries. They would be international civil servants. If they did good and satisfactory work they should be kept on.

Mr. Stettinius said that he was in entire sympathy with the views expressed by Mr. Eden. He thought that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals were adequate on this point.

Mr. Molorov said that he would not insist on the suggestion made by Ambassador Gromyko on behalf of the Soviet Delegation that the four deputies be nationals of permanent members of the Council. He would agree to a three-year term. Mr. Stettinius suggested that the four delegations study this proposal but come fully prepared on all points at the next meeting.

Mr. Attlee inquired whether Mr. Molotov would press the point of non-reelection. Mr. Molotov suggested that this also be studied for the next meeting, to which there was general agreement.

New Paragraph 4. International Character of Secretariat Staff.— The United States proposed the addition of a new paragraph 4 as follows:

"4. In the performance of their duties, the Secretary-General and the staff should be responsible only to the Organization. Their responsibilities should be exclusively international in character, and they should not seek or receive instructions in regard to the discharge thereof from any authority external to the Organization. The members should undertake fully to respect the international character of the responsibilities of the Secretariat and not to seek to influence any of their nationals in the discharge of such responsibilities."

Mr. Pasvolsky explained that this provision was based upon the experience of the League, especially in the years following the rise of Fascism and Nazism in Italy and Germany. The attitude of those countries had been to regard their nationals in the Secretariat as national servants rather than as international civil servants. It was extremely important on the administrative side that the staff of the Secretariat be truly international in character. It was important to build up a true international civil service. It was the view of the United States Delegation that there is a great deal to recommend the adoption of a provision of this character.

The proposed paragraph was agreed to without further discussion.

CHAPTER XI

Paragraph 1. Coming Into Force of Charter.—The Soviet Delegation proposed the following new paragraph as the first paragraph of this Chapter:

"1. The present Charter comes into force after its ratification in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by the members of the Organization having permanent seats on the Security Council and by a majority of the other members of the Organization."

Senator Connally in explaining the reason for this proposal 78 pointed out that while the Chapter provided for individual amendments it did not provide for any general revision. It was the thought of the United States Delegation that there ought to be somewhere authority for a complete revision of the Charter if situations should develop to make this desirable. He pointed out that in the Constitution of the United States there was a provision authorizing Congress to call a Constitutional Convention for the purpose of reexamining the whole Constitution, or the states might by a specified vote call for the convening of a Constitutional Convention. While the present provision with respect to separate amendments is both necessary and desirable, there ought to be provision to take account of changing conditions and growth. This can best be done by providing for review at intervals to be determined. The interests of the permanent members of the Council would be protected under the proposed provision by the requirement for their unanimous vote for the approval of any revision recommended.

The United States Delegation regards this amendment as highly imperative because of the possible difficulty of getting approval by the Senate. The Delegation is extremely anxious to get a Charter which will receive the Senate's approval. There have been objections that the Charter of the proposed Organization should not be frozen for all time.

COMMANDER STASSEN said that he was very much in accord with the position stated by Senator Connally. He was interested in this provision particularly on account of the men in the armed services who were not here to make their influence felt in the formulation of the Charter. It should be made possible for them to exercise their influence at a later date.

Mr. Molorov said that perhaps if we accepted this provision it would not be necessary to work so hard on other provisions and amendments under consideration, since everything would be open to change.

Mr. Eden thought the proposal was acceptable. He had two questions to raise: Why was the provision made for a three-fourths vote of the General Assembly in calling a Conference, whereas elsewhere in the document a two-thirds vote is used? Secondly, Would it be desirable to fix a minimum time within which such a Conference should be called? He thought this might help meet the point Mr. Molotov had in mind. Senator Connally suggested seven years as a possibility. He said that the three-fourths vote had been suggested in order that the calling of a Conference would not be too easy.

Dr. Soong said he thought this was a very wise provision. It was sufficiently safeguarded by the requirement of ratification by all members of the Security Council.

Mr. Molorov said that taking into account the reasons given by Senator Connally and Commander Stassen he was willing to accept the proposal.

The proposal was therefore agreed to.

CHAPTER V. SECTION B.

New Paragraph to Follow Paragraph 7. Administrative Budgets.—The United Kingdom proposed the following provision:

"The General Assembly should examine the administrative budgets of such specialised agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned."

This provision was agreed to without discussion.

PROCEDURE

Mr. Stettinius brought up the question of future procedure in considering the proposed amendment[s]. After we have reached agreement are we to regard the amendments as part of the revised Dumbarton Oaks Proposals to be submitted to the Conference? Or should it be announced that the four governments have consulted each other and submit the amendments agreed on separately? It would be understood, he assumed, that each Delegation would be at liberty to present its individual views in the Commissions and Committees. He thought that it was very important to weigh carefully the effect on other countries of consultations among the four governments resulting in new joint proposals.

Mr. Eden thought that the position was substantially this. The four authors of the original Dumbarton Oaks Proposals have each presented amendments. Quite naturally and properly they have discussed these amendments among themselves for the purpose of reaching mutual agreement if possible. So far as other amendments proposed by other governments are concerned, we seek to impose no amendments on them, though we may consult on other amendments as they arise.

Dr. Soong thought that it might be desirable for the four governments to present their amendments to the Conference in a joint statement.

Mr. Molorov agreed in general with the suggestions made by Mr. Eden.

COMMANDER STASSEN suggested that the amendments as agreed upon be proposed jointly as amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. There seemed to be general agreement with this proposal.

Mr. Stettinius asked that the Secretariat prepare a statement before the next meeting which might be submitted to the Conference and to the press. He proposed that the group should meet again at 9:30 this evening. The subcommittees should be prepared to report at that time. Mr. Stettinius suggested that the subcommittees meet immediately following the meeting.

French Position

THE SECRETARY reported that he and Mr. Dunn had had a conversation with M. Bidault, the French Foreign Minister. M. Bidault had felt perturbed about the meetings of the Big Four in which his Government had not been represented. He feared that the Big Four were trying to reach new agreements on questions not pertaining to the conference. Mr. Dunn had explained to M. Bidault that the only purpose of the meetings was to obtain agreement among the Sponsoring Governments on proposed amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. The Secretary proposed that M. Bidault be invited to attend the meetings of the Big Four and pointed out that these meetings would probably not continue very much longer inasmuch as the Executive Committee of the Conference would begin to function more actively and tend to replace the meetings of the Big Four. Mr. Bloom asked whether this meant that M. Bidault would participate in the meetings and The Secretary replied in the affirmative. The Secretary stated, in reply to Mr. Armstrong's question, that the Sponsoring Governments would be consulted before an invitation was extended. Senator Connally stated that he had no objection to the proposal but that he didn't like it.

Release of Sponsoring Governments Amendments

THE SECRETARY raised the question whether or not it was wise to present a united front among the Big Four on the proposed amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and suggested that it might be better to introduce such amendments separately in the Commissions and Committees. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that it was impossible to follow that procedure because all formal proposals had to be submitted to the Secretary-General by midnight, Friday, May 4. Mr. Pasvolsky also stated that the proposed amendments could not be submitted separately because they had been worked out jointly among the Big Four. Mr. Bowman suggested that one way of explaining the matter would be to suggest that the Sponsoring Governments had consulted together on the proposed amendments in order to expedite the work of the Conference.

THE SECRETARY asked the Delegation to review the following Draft Covering Statement for Joint Submission to the Conference of Amendments Agreed by the Four Nations:

"The United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, and China have consulted together concerning the amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals which they wish to propose for consideration by the Conference. They have agreed upon the amendments annexed hereto as their joint proposals to the Conference.

"These governments will give full consideration to proposals and amendments submitted by other countries as they come before the Commissions and Technical Committees of the Conference."

To In telegram 1, May 4, not printed, Secretary Stettinius informed the Acting Secretary of State as follows: "A long somewhat stormy but on the whole friendly conversation ensued. Essentially Bidault insisted that France be associated from now on with the Four-Power discussions on amendments, stating that public and official pressure in France was such that if this were not done he would undoubtedly be recalled, leaving the representation of France at the Conference to technical advisers without authority. I agreed to bring this matter up at once with the other three Foreign Ministers and not only to introduce but to support fully the French request that Bidault be included in further Big Four discussions on Conference matters." (500.CC/5-445)

The view was expressed by several members of the Delegation that the statement should be redrafted to convey the impression that the proposals being submitted by the Big Four were to be considered merely as one group among other proposed amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and that further amendments by each of these governments would be presented separately. Mr. Notter was requested to redraft a statement along these lines which might be presented for consideration at the meeting of the Big Four this evening. Mr. Notter distributed the following statement later in the meeting:

"The Delegations of the four Governments which participated in the Dumbartons Oaks Conversations, the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, and China, have consulted together concerning those amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals on which they find themselves in agreement for inclusion among the amendments being proposed for consideration by the Conference.

"Such further amendments as each of these Governments may wish to propose will be presented separately. All four Governments are now studying and considering the various proposals and amendments submitted by the Delegations of other countries as they are presented to the Conference and its Commissions and Technical Committees."

SPONSORING GOVERNMENTS AMENDMENTS

The Secretary asked Mr. Pasvolsky to review the document Consultation of the United States, United Kingdom, Soviet Union, and China on the Amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, May 3, 1945.80 Mr. Pasvolsky stated that Section I of this document from pages 1–9 contained the amendments to the proposals upon which agreement had been obtained among the Sponsoring Governments. He then asked the Delegation to consider Section III of the document beginning on page 9 which dealt with amendments which had been deferred for further study or where the position of individual governments had been reserved.

Chapter VI, Section A, Proposal of the United Kingdom.—Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the British proposal to establish a category of middle-sized states whose position would be specially recognized in connection with the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council was acceptable to the Russians, but that we didn't like it nor did the Chinese. He felt, however, that we would be obliged to accept it. He then suggested that we amend the British proposal to include a provision which would take into account the geographic position of member states. The clause as thus revised would read as follows: "due regard being paid to their geographic position and to their contribution towards the maintenance of international peace and security and towards the other purposes of the organization".

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE pointed out that Canada would object to a regional provision of this character. Several members of the Delegation indicated that they were not wholly satisfied with this proposal but after brief discussion it was decided to accept it as revised.

Chapter VII. Chinese Proposal.—Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the Chinese had strongly urged a provision empowering the Security Council to take enforcement action to give effect to judgments of the International Court of Justice in the event any party failed to comply with a decision of the Court. The Secretary stated that we could not accept the Chinese proposal and the Delegation agreed that it could not be accepted.

Chapter VIII, Section A, Paragraph 2. Chinese Proposal.—The Chinese proposal that non-members be required to accept the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the Charter was accepted without comment.

Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 4.—Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the British proposal by itself was not objectionable. He stated that the real problem arose in connection with other provisions of the proposal. Would, for example, the failure of a state to abide by the terms of settlement recommended by the Security Council constitute a threat to the peace under which the Council might then take enforcement action? He stated that both China and the U.S.S.R. supported the British proposal while we had consistently opposed it. He indicated that this proposal introduced an entirely new element in the structure of the organization. He urged that whatever our position was with regard to the British proposal we should insist on our amendment for Chapter VIII, Section B, paragraph 1.

Mr. Dulles thought that the British proposal went to the heart of the role of the Security Council. He pointed out that under the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals it had been generally understood that the Security Council would act only as a policeman and would not itself have the function of settling disputes on the basis of merit. British proposal goes very much farther by making the Security Council the arbiter of the world. Mr. Sandifer pointed out that there was a specific limitation in the jurisdiction of the Security Council under the British proposal in that the Council could assume jurisdiction only in those cases likely to endanger the maintenance of peace and security. Mr. Bowman pointed out that when the Security Council makes a recommendation the party that loses its case will try to object to any further action, while the party which is favored will fight to maintain its position. In any event, there would be no appeal from the Security Council. Senator Vandenberg observed that this proposal collided with Senator Austin's position. He also observed that it had nothing to do with justice.

Mr. Pasvolsky thought the Delegation should oppose the British proposal. Mr. Dulles stated his belief that the small powers would object to the proposal. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that we were alone in opposing the British proposal and alone in supporting our proposal for Section B, paragraph 1. He stated that if we oppose the British proposal we could not hope to get acceptance of our own. Mr. Dulles suggested that we drop our proposal under Section B, 1 if the British agree to drop their proposal under Section A, 4. MR. PASVOLSKY said that a number of the small powers wanted the Security Council vested with power to recommend terms of settlement. He added that he favored the earlier British proposal under which the Council would be empowered to recommend terms of settlement when requested to do so by parties to a dispute. The Secretary suggested that we oppose the British proposal and try to retain our proposal for Section B. 1. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that the British might reserve their position if we took that approach. Mr. Dunn suggested that we oppose paragraph 4 but argue the case for our own proposal.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the agreement on the Big Four amendments could not be reached tonight because of the discussions to be held tomorrow with the Russians concerning regional arrangements. In reply to a question concerning the release of the proposals to the press, he stated that we could do that when the proposals are sent to the Secretary-General. It was agreed that an effort should be made to retain our proposal under B, 1 if possible.

Chapter VIII, Section B. Chinese Proposal.—Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the Chinese proposal concerning provisional measures which might be taken by the Security Council had been deferred for further consideration at our request. After brief comment it was agreed to support this proposal.

Chapter VIII, Section B, 9.—Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that a provision in this paragraph to provide for regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee might read as follows: "The Military Staff Committee with the approval of the Security Council may establish regional subcommittees of the Military Staff Committee". The proposal was approved by the Delegation.

Chapter IX, British Proposal.—The Delegation agreed to oppose the British proposal to include specific reference in the Charter to the International Labor Organization in paragraphs 1 and 3 of Section A. Mr. Pasvolsky reported that Mr. Eden had said that Mr. Bevin st would be greatly disappointed if some such provision were not included. The Secretary stated that we could not accept it and it was so agreed.

Chapter X. Soviet Proposal.—After a brief, cacophonic discussion it was agreed that the Russian proposal for the term of office of the Secretary-General should be modified by extending his term of office from two to three years. No definite decision was taken with regard to the question of the eligibility of the Secretary-General for immediate reelection but it was intimated that this question might receive further attention at a later meeting of the Big Four.

INTERIM ECONOMIC COMMISSION

Dean Gildersleeve reported that a proposal had been submitted by Dr. Shotwell 22 on behalf of a group of consultants urging that an interim commission be established for economic and social questions. The Secretary then read Dr. Shotwell's letter. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out the difficulties which would ensue were a council of this kind set up, which would consist of the representatives of fifty countries and would be quite unlike the proposed Economic and Social Council for the permanent organization. He stated that there was need, however, for a preparatory commission to prepare documents for the agenda of the first session of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and the Security Council. Mr. Bowman expressed the view that the creation of such an interim commission at this time, as proposed by the consultants, would lead to terrible confusion. He suggested that it was evident that there was a concern among some groups for the safeguard of their special interests.

The Secretary stated that we evidently wanted the establishment of an interim commission as soon after ratification as possible to plan for the initial work of all the organs of the Organization. He appointed Dr. Bowman and Mr. Pasvolsky to appear before the consultants and to explain the position of the Delegation. Mr. Sandifer stated that the secretariat would have a memorandum on a preparatory commission for discussion by the Delegation. Dean Gilder-sleeve observed that the consultants believe that the Delegation keeps pushing aside economic questions and that she thought there was some justification for their point of view. Mr. MacLeish proposed that the Secretary and Mr. Pasvolsky appear before the consultants and present the views of the Delegation at 5:00 p. m. the following day and that this be tied in with the press conference. The Secretary then inquired whether the consultants felt that they were being ignored.

Dr. Bowman thought that the proposal suggested by Mr. MacLeish would help satisfy them if a full enough explanation were given with regard to the interim arrangements proposed. The Secretary stated that the C.I.O. had indicated that they wished to be represented on the interim organization. Dr. Eaton said that in a conference with representatives of business and agricultural organizations expression had been given to their desire to be represented on such an interim commission. Dean Gildersleeve stated that she was in agreement with the proposal for a preparatory commission along the lines suggested by Mr. Pasvolsky.

Mr. Bloom complimented Commander Stassen on his press conference and hoped that the Delegation would get copies of the transcript.

REPORTS ON SUBCOMMITTEES

THE SECRETARY invited the Delegation to consider the matters referred to Subcommittee in the document under consideration (p. 5). Mr. Dulles submitted the following text of an article to be inserted as a new chapter in the Charter which would replace VIII-A-1:

"Nothing contained in this Charter shall authorize the Organization to interfere with matters which [by international law] <sup>83</sup> are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the State concerned or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement under this Charter. Should, however, a situation or dispute arising out of such a matter assume an international character and constitute a threat to the maintenance of international peace or security, or should a breach of the peace occur in consequence of such a situation or dispute, it shall be open to the Security Council, acting in accordance with Chapter VIII, Section B, to take such action as it may deem appropriate."

The Delegation agreed to support the proposed text except for the bracketed clause referring to international law. Mr. Dulles reported that we were supported by the Soviet Government on this matter but that the British and Chinese Governments favored the inclusion of a reference to international law.

Mr. Pasvolsky reported that no agreement had been reached by the Subcommittee which had been working on the reference to treaties in the proposed amendments for Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 6 and Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2. He stated that the United States and China were supporting a new United Kingdom proposal for Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2 but that he feared that the Soviet Union would not sign a Charter with such a provision incorporated in it. The Soviet argument was that the British proposal would interfere with the sovereign rights of states. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the Soviets were concerned about treaties with enemy countries. The Secretary observed that we could explain our opposition to the Soviet proposal for this paragraph and that another meeting of the Subcommittee would need to be held to see whether a compromise text could be agreed upon. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the Subcommittee would want another meeting and that this could be indicated at the meeting of the Big Four tonight.

Dr. Bowman presented the report of the Subcommittee on Commissions under the Economic and Social Council which made the following recommendations:

(a) Insert "cultural" after "social" in Sections A and C.

(b) Insert new sub-paragraph in Section Cafter sub-paragraph (b) as follows: "To make recommendations for promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms."

(c) Section D, paragraph 1 should read as follows: "The Economic and Social Council should set up such commissions as may be required for the performance of the functions and the exercise of the powers entrusted to it. There should be a permanent staff which should constitute a part of the Secretariat of the organization."

With reference to the third recommendation which did not spell out by name the commissions which might be established by the Economic and Social Council it was pointed out that this was in line with the position the Delegation had been taking against the naming of such commissions in the Charter. Commander Stassen stated that he thought the Delegation should press for the insertion of a provision for the establishment of a human rights commission. The Secretary suggested that Commander Stassen present his arguments in behalf of the creation of a commission for the promotion of human rights at the meeting of the Sponsoring Governments this evening.

The meeting adjourned at 7:40 p.m.

1. CELEBRATION OF V-E DAY

2. France's Participation in Four Power Discussions

Mr. Stettinius said that M. Bidault had called on him to express his regret at not participating in the conversations which he had heard were being held among the Four Delegations. Mr. Stettinius, in reply, had first expressed regret that France was not a sponsoring power and then proceeded to say that of course the heads of the four delegations had held discussions, as was only natural. M. Bidault had then asked if he might join the meetings. When Mr. Stettinius requested the views of the others, no objections were expressed to inviting the French to join the talks. Mr. Stettinius remarked that in any case after May 4 there would not be many occasions on which meetings of the big powers would be necessary. When Dr. Soong raised the question of France's participation in the meetings of the Four Presidents of the Conference, Mr. Stettinius said that this had not come up but he thought he could handle it; there was no comment.

3. Status of Consultation

4. Domestic Jurisdiction

At Mr. Stettinius' request Mr. Dulles presented a report from the subcommittee on domestic jurisdiction. The subcommittee had agreed that the exception for domestic jurisdiction should cover not only the peaceful settlement of disputes, but should apply to the whole Charter except for threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and action with respect thereto. He submitted a report in this sense, pointing out that the only pointed issue was the inclusion of the words "by international law". The United Kingdom and China were inclined to include them but the U.S.S.R. and U.S. representatives on the subcommittee had preferred to exclude them due to the difficulty of establishing when a matter is by international law under domestic jurisdiction.

Dr. Soong expressed his approval of the Committee's draft with the reference to international law included. Mr. Molotov preferred to keep paragraph 7 of VIII, A, intact. Mr. Eden, commenting that he preferred a "shade to a blank" and that international law is now only a shadow but may grow stronger, preferred to include reference to it. After Senator Connally had said that he agreed with Mr. Molotov, Mr. Eden commented that the words "by international law" are in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and that he agreed with Dr. Soong in desiring to keep them. After Mr. Stettinius had read the original paragraph 7 of VIII, A, Mr. Eden said that he was puzzled as he had understood that all had agreed on the new paragraph and that the only disagreement was over "by international law". To this Mr. Stettinius replied that Mr. Molotov had now reconsidered his position. Senator Vandenberg indicated a preference for the old paragraph with the words "by international law" and Mr. Eden replied that if it was necessary to choose he preferred the new proposal without the reference to international law to the old one with it. Mr. Molotov replied that the new draft will make the matter obscure.

Thereupon, Mr. Dulles, speaking at the request of Mr. Stettinius, said that the exemption for domestic jurisdiction should cover the whole charter, as the matters to which it applies are not limited to VIII, A. Mr. Eden then said that he would concur with the U.S. and U.S.S.R. position on a new paragraph without the words "by international law", and in reply to Mr. Molotov's inquiry as to why there should be a departure from the good old Dumbarton Oaks language, said "because we have all agreed to." Mr. Molotov reiterated his preference for the old paragraph, indicating that he did not care one way or the other about the inclusion in that case of the phrase "by international law". Mr. Eden then said that Mr. Dulles would explain the reason for the change and Mr. Dulles laughed.

SIR WILLIAM MALKIN undertook to answer Mr. Molotov's question by an illustration: The third paragraph of Chapter II provides for settlement of disputes by peaceful means and the U.K. desire to have the language about domestic jurisdiction cover this point. From the points of view of countries anxious on this point, the new text is better. When Mr. Molotov inquired in what respect it was better, Sir Wil-LIAM MALKIN said that it was better because it covers this and other similar points. Senator Vandenberg commented that under the new text, a state has a larger option to reserve domestic jurisdiction and Mr. Pasvolsky added that in the new form and location it applied even to Assembly discussion. When Mr. Stettinius put the question as to whether or not to accept the subcommittee recommendation, Dr. Soong inquired whether agreement had not been reached on the new text, and after Mr. Eden said he had thought so, both of them indicated a preference for the new with the words "by international law". Mr. Molotov repeated that he saw no reason to change but he thought the reference to international law in paragraph 7 of VIII, A, might be thrown out. Upon Mr. Stettinius' request for his suggestion as to the way to settle the difference, he replied he would leave it as it is in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals except for the words "by international law". Mr. Stettinius commented that this had been the original suggestion by the U.S.<sup>84</sup> Mr. Dulles, after Mr. Stettinius had restated Mr. Molotov's position, said that he did not think this proposal was as good as the revision.

After further discussion and an inquiry by Mr. Stettinius as to whether the four wished to refer the matter back to the subcommittee, Mr. Eden clarified his understanding as follows: (1) under the old text domestic matters might be considered international issues except under one chapter (VIII-A); (2) under the new text domestic matters were generally protected. That is why he preferred the new paragraph.

Mr. Molorov thought the amendment led in exactly the opposite direction, but Mr. Stettinius agreed with Mr. Eden. After further discussion in which Mr. Molotov remarked that he was afraid the new text might permit interference in the relations between the U.K. and India, and Mr. Eden had said that he wanted the new language to remove just such a possibility, Mr. Eden summed the matter up by saying that there appeared to be agreement on what was wanted, to which Mr. Molotov nodded affirmatively. Before it was agreed to send the matter back to the subcommittee, Mr. Stettinius restated the U.S. position and Mr. Eden concurred in this.

5. *Revision of Treaties

Mr. Stettinius reported that the subcommittee had not yet agreed and was going to meet again the next day. He suggested that this subject therefore not be discussed by the four for the moment and then inquired whether it was the understanding of the other three that if the four failed to reach agreement, they would act independently and separately in the committees. Dr. Soong and Mr. Molotov said yes and Mr. Eden said, "yes—reluctantly".

6. ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

After Mr. Stettinius had introduced this subject by saying that there appeared to be a substantial measure of agreement, Mr. Bowman reported from a subcommittee. He said that all were agreed on the inclusion in Chapter IX, Section A, paragraph 1, and Section C, paragraph 1 (c) of the word "cultural". The U.S.S.R. and the U.K. with Chinese support wished to insert a new paragraph after C 1 (a) relating to respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. As to Section D, paragraph 1, the U.K., the U.S.S.R., and China were opposed to spelling out the reference to several commissions. He read the new text, showing the changes, including insertions pointing out the changes and stating that their effect was to give greater prominence to human rights and fundamental freedoms. Dr. Bowman then said that the U.S. Delegation prefers to specify in Section D, paragraph 1, reference to economic, social and other activities and to the promotion of human rights. When Mr. Attlee said that he had not yet seen the latest U.S. proposal as read by Dr. Bowman, the latter explained that the U.S. Delegation had not agreed on it until 8:00 o'clock.85 Mr. ATTLEE then said that he preferred this language; he did not want to mention commissions but this language was all right. All agreed on the Bowman report and Mr. Stettinius said that that ended the subcommittee report.

7. Basis of Selecting Non-Permanent Members of the Council

Mr. Stettinius said that the next question was that of inserting some qualifications with respect to the election of non-permanent members of the Council in Section A of Chapter VI, and restated the earlier positions of the four delegations.86 Mr. Eden stated that the U.K. Delegation had a new proposal which he proceeded to read. Mr. Stettinius thought this a very good proposal and then when Dr. Soong said he preferred the words "equitable geographical distribution" both Mr. Eden and Mr. Stettinius approved the change.

Mr. Molorov thought that contribution towards the maintenance of peace and security and geographical distribution should not be put on the same plane and therefore proposed insertion of the words "and also" between the two clauses and the omission of the symbols (A) and (B). When Mr. Dunn inquired why the words "in the first instance" were inserted, Mr. Molorov explained that it was because the contribution to peace and security should come first. Mr. Dunn then said that he thought the U.S. should reserve its position, but Mr. Stettinius said it was necessary to reach a decision and asked whether the two factors could not be put on the same plane. Mr. Pasvolsky commented that some nations are interested in one criterion, some in another, to which Mr. Eden replied that everyone should be interested in the first criterion. Mr. Stettinius withdrew his objection and Dr. Soong his reservation, and all agreed to the U.K. Proposal as modified by Dr. Soong's and Mr. Molotov's amendments.

8. RIGHTS OF NON-MEMBER STATES

Mr. Stettinius stated that the U.S. withdrew its reservation to the proposed Chinese proposal for an addition to paragraph 2 of VIII, A, respecting the requirement that non-member states accept the obligations of peaceful settlement provided in the Charter. Mr. Molotov also withdrew his objections and this amendment was therefore agreed to.

9. Security Council Recommendations of Terms of Settlement

In introducing the discussion of the U.K. Proposal for an addition to paragraph 4 of VIII, A, 87 Mr. Stettinius expressed regret that U.S. still could not accept the change. To this Mr. Eden (or another U.K. spokesman) commented that this is a very important matter.

Mr. Pasvolsky then explained that this introduced a new element into the picture: to give the Council the power to recommend terms of settlement on its own alters the scheme laid down in Dumbarton Oaks, and extends the Council's powers very considerably. He thought it would lead to great difficulty. Mr. Eden in reply said that what worried him was that the Council would not be able without this amendment to do as much as it should. He thought it ought to go just as far as possible in the realm of peaceful settlement.

See minutes of Four-Power meeting, May 2, 9 p. m., p. 548.
 For text, see minutes of Four-Power meeting, May 4, 12:15 p. m., p. 598.

SIR WILLIAM MALKIN added that it is not true that this introduces something new. If under 4 as it stands, the Council does not have this power of recommending terms of settlement, paragraph 4 has no meaning, for all the Council can do is to recommend to the states that they use arbitration or other means of peaceful settlement, and the Council can already do this under paragraph 5.

Mr. Pasvolsky replied that in writing paragraphs 4 and 5 at Dumbarton Oaks, they had introduced a progression. He explained his own understanding of this progression and added that they had stopped short of permitting the Security Council to recommend terms of settlement because they did not wish it to take the still further step of imposing a settlement. The U.S. Delegation was not prepared to go so far as to permit the imposition of settlement and Mr. Pasvolsky said he took it that the U.K. was not, either. He thought it bad to permit the Council to recommend terms of settlement without giving it the powers to impose its terms; this would weaken the Council. As matters now stand the Council can in any case take enforcement action if the dispute is not settled.

Mr. Molotov announced that he would accept whatever the U.K. and the USA Delegation could agree upon. Dr. Soong wanted to consider the matter further.

After Mr. Eden had mentioned the Senate, indicating his great respect for it, Mr. Stettinius said that this matter could not be settled now. When he added that he felt it was one on which the four powers would have to go their own ways, Mr. Eden said that he hoped this would not be the case.

10. Amendment to Paragraph 1 of Section B, Chapter VIII

After Mr. Stettinius had recapitulated the different positions with respect to the proposal for introducing a reference to paragraph 4 of Section A into paragraph 1 of VIII, B, Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the U.S. feels this would be very broad and inquired whether the U.K. Delegation felt that this would permit the imposition of a settlement. Mr. Jebb (U.K.) replied that VII, B, limits the Council to enforcement action. When Mr. Pasvolsky inquired whether he was right in interpreting this as meaning the Council could not go beyond military action to impose a settlement, Mr. Eden said that he considered the imposition of a settlement as falling short of military action.

After further discussion it was agreed, on Mr. Stettinius' proposal, that this matter be carried over and be considered later in connection with the U.K. amendment to paragraph 4 of VIII, A.

11. Provisional Measures

Mr. Stettinius stated that the U.S. Delegation now accepts the Chinese proposal to insert a new paragraph regarding provisional measures between paragraphs 2 and 3 of Chapter VIII, Section B. This amendment is now therefore agreed upon by all four powers.

12. SUBCOMMITTEES OF THE MILITARY STAFF COMMITTEE

In introducing the question of subcommittees to the Military Staff Committee, Mr. Stettinius called upon Mr. Pasvolsky, who said that the U.S. would accept the addition at the end of paragraph 9 of VIII, B, of a sentence reading "The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council, may establish its own regional subcommittees." This was agreed upon by all four.

Upon Mr. Molotov's inquiry as to whether that finished the items relating to Chapter VIII, Mr. Pasvolsky said it did except for the amendment to paragraph 2 of Section C, which was still in subcommittee.

13. Specific Reference to the International Labor Organization

Mr. Stettinius stated that the U.S. views respecting the U.K. proposal to insert specific reference to the International Labor Organization remained the same, that is, the U.S. was opposed.

Dr. Soong said that this amendment was too sweeping. After Mr. Eden had said that each country could reserve its own position on this, Mr. Molorov inquired whether the subcommittee had discussed it. When Mr. Stettinius said it had, Mr. EDEN inquired of the other three whether it was true that none of them liked the U.K. proposal. Mr. Molorov indicated that in view of the subcommittee's position there was no point in referring the matter again to a subcommittee and asked whether the others would like to discuss the question in the big four at this time. He said that he agreed with the U.S. and Chinese delegations in opposing the amendment. Then Mr. Eden reiterated that the U.K. would reserve its position to bring the proposal up in the Conference committee. Mr. Molorov asked if it was true that there was no intention to reorganize the ILO, and Mr. ATTLEE replied that that was correct, but that there would be some improvement and then it would be transferred to the new organization. When Mr. Molotov asked whether the present structure is sacrosanct, Mr. EDEN said it was not but that the ILO would do its own reorganizing. He added that the U.K. hoped it would take its place in the new world organization. Mr. Attlee emphasized that the ILO is an existing autonomous body with its own constitution.

In reply to Mr. Eden, Mr. Molorov pointed out that the ILO cannot be brought in completely as the U.S.S.R. is not a member of that body. Mr. Eden said he realized that and that it was most unfortunate.

The discussion at this point was brought to a close by Mr. Stettinius saying that the consultation was now ended and that he understood the U.K. would go its own way on this matter. This was agreed on.

14. ELECTION OF THE SECRETARY GENERAL AND DEPUTIES

Mr. Stettinius introduced the question of the Soviet amendment to Chapter X by reviewing its status and then announcing that the U.S. was ready to state its position but before doing so desired to call on the Chinese Delegation. Dr. Soong parried the question by asking the U.S. position and Mr. Stettinius eventually said the U.S. favored a three-year term for the election of a Secretary General as suggested by the U.S.S.R. After it had been pointed out that the U.S.S.R. proposal was for a two-year term, Mr. Molotov remarked that that was correct.

Mr. Stettinius went on to say that the U.S. would like the Secretary General to be eligible for reelection and suggested that the Soviet reconsider its position. Mr. Molotov replied that he did not wish to press on this point and Mr. Stettinius said then that there would be no limit to the number of times the Secretary General could be reelected.

All agreed to the three-year term with eligibility for reelection.

15. Further Subcommittee Meetings

16. AMENDMENTS OF OTHER DELEGATIONS

Mr. Molotov raised the question of the manner in which the four would deal with amendments proposed by other delegations. Mr. Stettinius in reply suggested we let others propose their amendments and then talk about them. Mr. Molotov inquired whether the four expected to discuss among themselves any questions raised by amendments from other countries. Mr. Eden and Mr. Stettinius agreed that this was desirable and the latter thought that M. Bidault should be brought in as well. To Mr. Molotov's inquiry as to why the French should be included, Mr. Stettinius referred to his statement at the beginning of the meeting and said that the meetings beginning the following week should consist of the five foreign ministers. Mr. Molotov said he had no objection. Agreed.

The meeting was then adjourned.

meeting at 9:05 a.m. He called on Mr. Sandifer to explain the schedule of meetings for the day.

Consideration of Deferred Questions

Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 4 Chapter VIII, Section B, paragraph 1

Senator Connally announced that the next item of business was the consideration of deferred questions. He asked Mr. Pasvolsky to lead the discussion.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that it might now prove necessary to reconsider a decision taken yesterday with respect to the British proposal on paragraph 4, Section A, Chapter VIII, that the Security Council be given the additional power to recommend terms of settlement. He noted that the British took a very strong position on this question, that the Chinese had talked with him and had expressed the view that we ought to give this provision to the British. He added that he talked to certain members of the Canadian Delegation who expressed the view that there were very strong feelings in support of this change. In the light of this reaction, Mr. Pasvolsky asked whether the Delegation wished to reconsider its decision. Senator Vandenberg commented that his primary concern in connection with this question was Senator Austin's viewpoint. He knew Senator Austin would strongly oppose the British proposal. Mr. Stassen commented that in his view the British proposal was a sound one.

Mr. Dulles said that he had come to the same conclusion as Mr. Pasvolsky, in the light of some of the talks that he had had following the four-power meeting. He said he thought that the small powers would be willing to accept the recommendation, although he was not at all sure that they would want the use of force linked up with the implementation of the recommendation. He added that he thought we might reserve our position on this question. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that we should drop our own amendment to paragraph 1 of Section B (the words "set forth in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this Section"). We could, however, insist on retaining these words in paragraph 2 of Section B in order to put the burden of explanation on the British if the small powers asked why we keep the words in one place and remove them in another. Mr. Pasvolsky added there was no question but that we would be defeated on the floor of the Conference if the British made their own proposal. Senator Vandenberg suggested that we should not give in on this question unless we were on the brink of sure defeat. Mr. Stassen remarked that the British proposal was right. Mr. Pasvolsky commented that at the meeting of the four he had found himself in the position of having to argue against the British position with certain arguments that he personally did not believe.

Mr. Armstrong commented that Mr. Stassen's statement was the first one he had heard in the course of the discussions suggesting that the British were right. While it might be necessary to accept the British position on grounds of tactics, he wondered whether the issue should not be met primarily on substantive grounds.

Mr. Pasvolsky said our view had been that we did not object to the particular power stipulated in the British proposal since the power was limited to recommendation of terms of settlement alone. What we were afraid of was the possibility that this power might lead to the imposition of terms of settlement. He said he thought the British proposal was satisfactory as long as it was made clear that it was not intended to involve imposition of terms of settlement. Mr. Bowman noted that in this connection we would have the veto power.

Mr. Stassen remarked that it was very useful to have the Security Council empowered to recommend terms of settlement, and that the imposition of terms under this provision was not likely since a vote would require all five permanent members and two additional states. It was less likely to happen under this provision, he added, than if one power was left free to act on its own, since the five powers would have to come to agreement on the imposition of terms. Mr. Dulles noted that we had a veto power on the matter ourselves.

Mr. Armstrong remarked that we should face the fact that the major powers did in fact impose a settlement upon Czechoslovakia at Munich so and that it was just this kind of act that would be made possible under the British position. Mr. Stassen explained that all the major powers did not agree to Munich: Russia held out—and the significant fact was that Munich took place outside any general mechanism for the maintenance of peace and security. He suggested that Munich was much less likely to happen if there was an Organization than if there was none. Moreover, he felt that at the present stage of negotiations it was necessary to make some adjustments in our point of view to accommodate the views of the other governments. Senator Vandenberg urged that we negotiate and not retreat. Mr. Pasvolsky reassured him that this was not a retreat but negotiation. It was generally agreed to support Mr. Pasvolsky's proposal on this question.

TREATTES

The members had before them a document entitled Alternative Methods for Dealing with the Question of Bi-lateral Pacts, US 3, Document 6, May 3, 1945.**

(At this point General Hertford, General Fairchild, and Admiral Train joined the meeting.)

SENATOR CONNALLY called on Mr. McCloy to make a statement for the military advisers. Mr. McCLox reported that the Joint Chiefs of Staff had circulated an instruction 90 to the military and naval representatives at the Conference concerning the fundamental security aspects under discussion at the Conference. The problem raised in the instruction concerned the relationship of the security provisions. of the general organization to problems of hemispheric defense, particularly in relation to the provisions of Chapter VIII, Section C, Regional Arrangements. He reported that the Joint Chiefs of Staff accepted the regional provisions of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals in the light of the general purpose of the Organization, but that it was thought important to point out the significance of the step involved. Under these provisions no enforcement action could be taken by a regional organization without the authorization of the Security Council. At the time this provision was first agreed to no voting proposals had been accepted. Now it was clear as a result of the Yalta agreement that any one state could veto action under a regional arrangement by preventing authorization by the Security Council.

Mr. McCloy stated that the Joint Chiefs of Staff urged that no other steps be taken to further water down our concept of hemispheric defense. Senator Vandenberg commented that the proposals spelled the end of the Monroe Doctrine. Mr. McCloy stated that they certainly watered down that document. He added that the proposals brought forward by the Soviet Union and the French provided that in Europe action could be taken under bi-lateral pacts without intervention or authorization by the Security Council. There was no question but that Chapter VIII, Section C, would be up for debate and that there would be considerable pressure to water it down. It was extremely important to protect our concept of preclusive rights in this hemisphere. In order to bring out the issue involved in the challenge to Chapter VIII, Section C, Mr. McCloy stated that the document before the members set forth the possible positions we might take in the form of alternatives.

Our preferred position should be, he said, that the Russian proposal be withdrawn, and that there be no change in Chapter VIII, Section C. This position would be satisfactory to the military advisers. If necessary, he added, there might be some arrangement by which the Big Four would enter into a public agreement providing that the first order of business would be to give prior authorization to permit us to apply regional procedures in this hemisphere and to allow the Russians and French to apply regional procedures in Europe.

Mr. Dulles remarked that the problem was that the language of Chapter VIII, Section C, did not clearly apply to bilateral agreements. Mr. Notter expressed disagreement with this view, and Mr. Pasvolsky remarked that we have interpreted this Section to include bilateral treaties.

Senator Vandenberg asked whether the authorization required in Chapter VIII, Section C, was acceptable to the military advisers. Mr. McCloy said the military and naval advisers were willing to concede that force should not be used without the authorization of the Security Council. This provision, he said, assumed good faith under procedures of regional undertakings.

Senator Vandenberg asked whether the right of summary self-defense was implicit. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that it was completely implicit. Mr. McCloy asked, supposing Germany sent a fleet into the waters off Argentina, would it be illegal if we shot across the German bows when they attempted to land in Argentina? Mr. Pasvolsky said that we would act, and that the Security Council would then be in a position to review our action, asking us what we were trying to do. He pointed out that the procedure implied good faith on our part not to take action except in self-defense.

General Embick stated that the question was raised as to how far our intervention was restricted in fact in this hemisphere by Chapter VIII, Section C. He thought that if the Council itself acted in good faith we would be allowed to intervene to prevent aggression in this hemisphere. Senator Vandenberg indicated that we could not intervene without authorization of the Security Council. Mr. McCloy commented that to leave this provision out would certainly involve going back on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Mr. Stassen stated that what was involved here was a basic question as to whether we were setting up a regional system or a world-wide system. It was essential to permit the Security Council to authorize enforcement action; otherwise, we would find ourselves with a regional system only. On the other hand, we retained the essential right of self-defense. We could act if we were attacked, but we then would have to begin immediately presenting to the Security Council what we were doing in our own defense. We should not get ourselves into a spineless attitude but take strong action if necessary.

SENATOR VANDENBERG asked if there was any way to put into words the right of self-defense, which it was claimed was inherent, without throwing open the door to individual action. Mr. Stassen remarked that no effort should be made to define the right of self-defense since to define it simply raised the question as to what constitutes selfdefense. Senator Vandenberg said what was uppermost in his mind was the poignant memory of the hours of debate over the Kellogg-Briand Pact on this very question of self-defense. Representative Eaton asked if it would be self-defense if we acted when a South American country was attacked. Mr. Bowman explained that paragraph 1, Section C of Chapter VIII provides that a regional agreement would have to have the approval of the Security Council. would be possible, he said, to write into a particular regional arrangement the whole procedure for action on a regional basis and include there a definition of the meaning of self-defense. Mr. Dulles pointed out that the members of the Organization, under paragraph 4, Chapter II. Principles, pledged "to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force in any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the Organization." Since the prevention of aggression would be consistent with the purposes of the Organization, action by a state in self-defense would be in accord with the principles of the organization.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that there was no question as to the right of a nation to act in self-defense. The question was whether the right of self-defense included action on a regional basis. He pointed out that the Act of Chapultepec, which was not yet binding on a long-term basis, did not really meet this question. In the conclusion of the treaty provided for in the Act of Chapultepec, however, the question would arise, and if we intend to extend the right of self-defense to act under this treaty, we would have to write into the treaty the proposition that an attack on any American state is an attack on all the American states.

Senator Vandenberg stated that, if he was asked on the floor of the Senate whether, under the Charter, states still had the right of self-defense, was the only thing he could say that the right was implicit? Mr. Bowman pointed out that the document did not give any assurance on this matter. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that we were protected by the veto power on any question concerning the consistency of a regional arrangement with the General Organization. The Council would have to say that our regional arrangement was inconsistent. On this question we would have a veto power. Of course we should recognize, he added, that the Soviet Union had this same power.

Mr. Stassen stated that the existence of a Security Council should not mean that we develop a weak and vacillating policy. We must continue rather a strong and positive policy toward our own self-defense and toward the preservation of world security. It would be a great tragedy on becoming members of the Organization if we gave way to a weak and vacillating position. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that this would be about the worst thing that could happen.

Mr. Sandifer noted that it was the general rule in international law that a state possessed the right of self-defense, and that this right remains unless there is an explicit limitation upon it. In the present proposals, instead of an explicit limitation, it is provided only that states shall not resort to force in violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter. Since any act of aggression is contrary to the purposes of the organization and since preventing aggression is consistent with the purposes of the organization, the right of self-defense against attack is not limited. Of course, if a state acted individually, its action would be subject to review by the Council.

SENATOR VANDENBERG said he agreed with Mr. Sandifer's logic but he wasn't sure it would help him on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. Dulles commented that the Kellogg-Briand Pact was far more sweeping in limiting the right of self-defense. He suggested that, on the floor of the Senate, Senator Vandenberg could ask his opponents to point to a single sentence in the draft which took away the right of self-defense.

Mr. Stassen asked what the disadvantage would be of explicitly stating in the Charter that "nothing in the Charter takes away the right of self-defense". Senator Connally commented that such a provision would probably be opposed by the little countries who would be afraid of raising the question openly.

Senator Connally added that all he would probably say on the Senate floor was that the right of self-defense was inherent and that nothing in the present draft took that right away. Senator Vandenberg commented that this was the kind of line taken in the arguments over the Kellogg-Briand Pact and that it was no use to rely on it alone. He asked Mr. McCloy whether he considered the right of self-defense implicit. Mr. McCloy said he agreed that the right of self-defense was implicit and that he saw no particular harm in stating this. Senator Vandenberg remarked that the main objection would be that the Russians might then claim that they were acting under the provisions of the Charter permitting action in self-defense. Mr. Sandifer said that it had been considered wisest to leave the matter implicit.

GENERAL EMBICK stated that it was important to have recognized that the normal method of action would be by regional organizations as against action normally through the Security Council. It would be essential to maintain our isolation and our preclusive control over this hemisphere. Senator Vandenberg said he could see how it would be possible to say that the right of self-defense was implicit in the draft. Senator Connally pointed out that the opposition would contend that the right of self-defense does [not?] extend to action on a regional basis. Senator Vandenberg commented that this extension of the right could be stated in the regional treaty itself and be approved by the Organization. Mr. Bowman explained that under the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals we could make an agreement and the Security Council would have to take negative action to declare that agreement inconsistent. In this vote we would have a veto. Mr. Dunn agreed that regional treaties or arrangements would stand until declared inconsistent by the Security Council. Mr. McClox pointed out that we could not operate under a regional agreement, however, in taking enforcement action. If any one of the major powers said "No" the Soviet Union could in this way veto our action in this hemisphere.

Mr. Stassen stated that he was strongly in favor of Mr. McCloy's first proposal that no change be made in the wording of Section C, Chapter VIII. Mr. McCLoy urged that we face the fact that the Russian and British proposals are very vital to them. Mr. Stassen indicated that he could see the reason for action against Germany being reserved to the major powers before the Organization came into being, but now that the Organization was coming into being and in view of the present collapse of the European war, he could no longer justify making a special exception for such action. stated that in any event a provision relating to this question should be an interim provision. Mr. Dunn agreed that the action should certainly be limited to action against enemy states. Mr. Pasvolsky also felt that we should make sure that any provision along the lines of the Russian or British proposals should be tied to the temporary situation until the Organization could avail itself of adequate military resources. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that, if necessary, we could propose that the British amendment be included in Chapter XII.

Senator Connally asked whether, if Chapter VIII, Section C was left as it is and we made a treaty based on the Act of Chapultepec, we could take action under that treaty until this action was vetoed by the Security Council. Mr. Pasvolsky replied in the negative, stating that, if the treaty provided for automatic action, it would be clearly inconsistent with the present provisions.

MR. McCloy stated that the South Americans wanted authority to act under regional arrangements. Mr. Warren noted that a large number of the Latin American states, including Colombia and Brazil, are profoundly afraid of the right of veto over action in this hemisphere and wish, if possible, to deny this right of veto. Mr. Warren added that many of the South American countries would prefer to see action taken on a regional basis first. Mr. Stassen urged that we vote against this Latin American proposal and, moreover, work actively against it. If, of course, the veto power works arbitrarily to prevent essential defensive measures, we would have to move. This right, however, should be left inherent and not written into the Charter. Mr. Dunn said this right could be included in a treaty. Senator Vandenberg asked if there might be any different veto rule as applied to action by a state or a regional group. Mr. Pasvolsky said that there was no question but that the veto power in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals applied equally to both. Senator Vandenberg wondered whether it ought not to be more difficult to veto action determined upon by 20 states than action taken by one state. Mr. Stassen thought this procedure would force unnatural regional agreements. Mr. Pasvolsky said this might result in the creation of three or four spheres of influence, which explains our opposition to such a proposal.

Mr. Dulles indicated that there had developed in this hemisphere genuine regional arrangements. If the veto power was allowed to operate we might not be able to take advantage of this system, and meanwhile we might find we had given in to a Russian proposal which would permit the Russians to use force in Europe and undermine the whole system of collective security. The two main difficulties, he said, were that (1) It was not clear whether bilateral agreements were included among regional agencies and arrangements under Chapter VIII, Section C; and (2) the loose language of Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 3 and Chapter XII, paragraph 2, might permit the negotiation of agreements in such a way that one would get in fact an interlocking regional system resulting in the complete absence of control of that system by the Security Council.

Mr. Stassen stated that, if more language was needed to clarify the question in Chapter VIII, Section C, he was in favor of it.

Senator Connally asked whether the French bilateral treaties <sup>92</sup> were covered by Chapter VIII, Section C. Mr. McCloy indicated that from his point of view they were.

General Embick suggested that the provision might be included that regional organizations would be given authority to act wherever they have means to act. There would be no question of veto power if a regional organization had the proper means to act. General Embick said he was not recommending this proposal, but, if the Russians insisted, it might be stated that "a regional organization should be given authority to take enforcement action whenever such organization possessed the means to take effective enforcement action. He, of course, would recommend that no change be made in Chapter VIII, Section C unless such a change was forced.

MR. STASSEN urged that we make certain that Chapter VIII, Section C covered multilateral and bilateral pacts. MR. Pasvolsky suggested inclusion of the phrase in Section C "regional or other special arrangements or agencies". MR. Hickerson questioned whether we should not specify bilateral, multilateral, and other special arrangements. MR. Pasvolsky stated that we could make this addition that he had first suggested throughout Section C. MR. STASSEN supported this proposal. MR. Dulles also agreed that it was useful.

Mr. Stassen moved this suggestion be proposed and that we stand on the original language of Section C as against the British and Russian proposals. Mr. Dunn commented that we could point out that Chapter XII provides for what the British and Russians have in mind. General agreement was reached with this suggestion.

Mr. Pasvolsky said, as he understood it, the agreement was that we would make sure when talking about regional arrangements that all special arrangements for the maintenance of peace and security were implied. We would therefore add the phrase "other special arrangements or agencies" throughout Chapter VIII. Our line would be that we have always taken the position that Section C covers both bilateral and regional pacts and that our amendment is merely for clarification. We would oppose the Russian language, and if we have to give in on the British proposal, we would insist that it be included in Chapter XII. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that the only way to get the Russians to withdraw their proposal might be to stick to the present text of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Did we wish to disagree with the Russians and let them make a separate proposal or should we agree with them on maintaining the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as they stand?

Mr. Stassen urged that we go into the Conference with a separate proposal and fight the Russian proposal there. Mr. Dunn thought this was a sound position.

TRUSTEESHIP

Mr. Stassen said he would like to give a report on trusteeship to the members of the Delegation. He announced that the paper on trusteeship which had been presented by the British was unacceptable. It was weaker than ours, there was no spelling out, and there was no division of strategic and non-strategic areas. Moreover, it did not include as clear a statement of objectives and the British placed the trusteeship council as a commission under the Economic and Social Council. It was agreed at the last meeting of the trusteeship group to recess in order to examine the British paper, particularly in view of the fact that there were no French or Russian translations available.

The next meeting of the Five-Power group would be at five o'clock on Saturday.

Mr. Stassen said Mr. Fraser had scheduled a 10:30 meeting on Saturday morning of the Trusteeship Committee. Mr. Stassen's thought was that we would be in a bad psychological situation if our paper was not available for discussion at the committee meeting. He said his thought was to go to Lord Cranborne and say that we were so far apart that it would take a long time to work out the differences, that we had fulfilled our obligation to consult, that we now knew each other's position, and that we would now submit our papers to the Conference before the midnight deadline. Mr. Dunn said it would be very important to get the British and Soviet agreement to this procedure since we were committed by the Yalta agreement to a procedure of consultation. He saw no reason why Mr. Stassen's proposal would be unacceptable to the Soviet.

Mr. Stassen added that the Russians, French, and Chinese have indicated general interest in our paper and have indicated that they would in general go along with it. Mr. Dunn suggested that Mr. Stassen emphasize that we have consulted in accordance with the Yalta agreement with a view to informing each other and that now we are under obligation to get our proposal in before the deadline. Mr. Stassen indicated that we might also stress that we were not committed to agreement and that it looks as though the process of getting agreement would be a long one. Mr. Dunn thought we had a good case. Mr. Stassen said he would talk to Lord Cranborne, and Mr. Dunn indicated he would clear the matter with the Russian Delegation.

Mr. HICKERSON reported that Mr. Fraser had expressed the opinion that our paper on trusteeship was a fine one and that we could count on his support, and that New Zealand would do everything in its power to meet our military requirements in the Pacific.

The meeting was adjourned at 10:30 a.m.

GERMAN SURRENDER

THE SECRETARY said then that he hoped they could resume discussions where the meeting had left off the previous evening, and, accordingly, asked for the reports of the three subcommittees, beginning first with the subcommittee dealing with the question of domestic jurisdiction.

Domestic Jurisdiction

MR. DULLES said that Mr. Golunsky, the Soviet representative on the subcommittee, had made a suggestion which the rest had accepted, and which he would like to have Mr. Golunsky explain. MR. Golunsky explained that the new proposal was for adding a new paragraph at the end of Chapter II, Principles, along the following lines: "Nothing contained in this Charter shall authorize the organization to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the state concerned or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement under this Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of Chapter VIII, Section B."

THE SECRETARY asked if all were in agreement to accept this proposed amendment and the other three Foreign Ministers indicated such was the case.

CHAPTER V, SECTION B, PARAGRAPH 6

*Mr. Stettinius then said they would turn to the work of the subcommittee and asked Mr. Pasvolsky to report upon those consultations. Mr. Pasvolsky said that consultations had not been completed with respect to the proposed amendments to Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 6; he said that while agreement had been reached on the first part of this paragraph, the last clause was still in question. Therefore, Mr. Pasvolsky read the proposed new paragraph, as follows:

"The General Assembly should initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of promoting international cooperation in political, economic, social and cultural fields to assist in the realization of human rights and basic freedoms for all without distinction as to race, language, religion or sex, and also for the encouragement of the development of international law. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Section, the General Assembly should be empowered to recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situations, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations or of situations resulting from a violation of the purposes and principles set forth in this Charter."

Mr. Pasvolsky said that this paragraph was now approved by the United States, British and Chinese Delegations, and had been agreed to in principle by the Soviet Delegation, although the latter wanted time to study it further. Mr. Molotov said that he would give an answer as to their position in this matter later in the day.

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Pasvolsky reported that with respect to the proposed amendments affecting regional arrangements, the discussion had not been completed but that they would meet later in the day at a time to be agreed to by the four Foreign Ministers, to continue their consultations.

AMENDMENTS DEFERRED FOR FURTHER STUDY

THE SECRETARY then said that they would move to the consideration of other items which had been deferred the previous evening for further study.

1. Chapter VIII, Section A, Paragraph 4

The first of these, Mr. Stettinius explained, concerned the proposed amendment to Chapter VIII, Section A, paragraph 4. He said that he was now prepared to announce that the United States Delegation, which had previously been the only one disagreeing, would accept the British proposal to add the following sentence to this paragraph: "If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the particular dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under paragraph 5 or whether itself to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate."

MR. EDEN said that he was happy to learn that this had been accepted, and because of its acceptance consequential amendments would be required in Chapter VIII, Section B, paragraph 1. Accordingly, SIR WILLIAM MALKIN explained that a legal question was involved as to whether the Security Council in taking measures under Section B. paragraph 1, would take them following its recommendations under either paragraph 4 or 5, of Section A. Accordingly, he suggested, to clarify the situation, that Section B, paragraph 1, should be amended to make clear that both paragraphs 4 and 5 of Section A were included, the sentence as reworded being as follows: "Should the Security Council deem that a failure to settle a dispute in accordance with procedures indicated in paragraph 3 of Section A or in accordance with its recommendations made under paragraphs 4 or 5 of Section A constitutes a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security, it should take any measures necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the purposes and principles of the organization."

Mr. Stettinius said that such changes would be inevitable and would be agreeable to the United States Delegation; Messrs. Molorov and Soong indicated such changes were also agreeable to them.

2. Chapter VIII, Section B, Paragraph 1

Mr. Stettinius then turned to the proposed United States amendment on Section B, paragraph 1, whereby the word "measures" in that paragraph would be defined as those "set forth in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this Section." Mr. Pasvolsky recalled that while this amendment had not been acceptable to the other three Delegations, the United States Delegation reserved its position on this paragraph. that the Delegation was prepared not to press this amendment at this time but that it reserved its position on this question if the subject was discussed in the Conference so as to make clear that its understanding of these measures was as set forth in its proposed amendment.

Mr. Eden expressed his thanks for the United States Delegation's change of position in this matter.

3. International Court of Justice

Mr. Stettinius said that the United States Delegation had an amendment to propose to Chapter VII which would make clear the position of the four Delegations as to their attitude with respect to the provisions of this Section in relation to the proposed new Statute. A text of an amendment along the following lines was distributed to the Delegations: "The provisions of Chapter VII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals should be adjusted to bring it into conformity with the recommendations of Commission IV in light of the report of the Jurists Committee."

After a brief study of this proposed statement, to be submitted in the nature of an amendment, Messrs. Molotov, Eden and Soong indicated their agreement with it.

International Trusteeship

Mr. Stettinius then called upon Mr. Stassen to explain the status of the proposals on trusteeship. Mr. Stassen explained that in accordance with the agreements made at Yalta, the first consultations on trusteeship had been held the previous Monday.94 At that time, the United States Delegation had presented its paper 95 to the other four Delegations and, after a brief discussion, the consultations had been adjourned until the previous evening (Thursday) 96 in order to allow time for study of the United States proposal. He said that, on the previous evening, the British Delegation had presented its paper <sup>97</sup> and in view of the many differences of position between the United States proposal and the British proposal, the other three Governments (Soviet Union, China and France) had reserved their position on both papers in order to allow for further time for study.

Mr. Stassen said that he recommended that the Five-Power consultations continue but that they would take several days. In order to avoid holding up the Conference action on this matter, however, he suggested that if it were agreeable to the other three Governments, each of the four sponsoring Governments should be free to submit an amendment to the Charter covering its views of the trusteeship question and then to continue the consultations while the Conference was in session. He said that if such a course were not pursued, he feared that there would be a general feeling in the Conference that the sponsoring Governments were "holding out" on the Conference.

Mr. Eden indicated his agreement with Mr. Stassen's suggestion. Mr. Stassen pointed out that his suggestion would not in any way preclude any of the five Powers at any stage of the consultation from advancing proposals or counter-proposals to each of the original proposals.

Mr. Molotov said that he was in agreement with Mr. Stassen's proposal and Messrs. Eden and Soong also said that they agreed. Mr. Stassen said that, for the information of the group, the French Delegation had also agreed to follow this course of action.

Mr. Stettinius said that this completed their agenda for this noon session, except for the proposed press statement. He said, however, that several items still remained unsettled and for that reason he proposed an early meeting in the evening at six o'clock for the purpose of finally concluding these consultations in order that the joint Four-Power amendments might be submitted to the Conference before the midnight deadline.

In view of the situation, Mr. Pasvolsky suggested, and it was agreed, that the Subcommittee on Treaties would meet at five o'clock in the afternoon in room 512 for final consultations on the proposed amendments dealing with regional arrangements.

Press Statement

Mr. Stettinius then asked for opinions as to the draft press release which had been distributed at the previous meeting to cover the presentation of the joint Four-Power amendments. . . .

This revised wording was agreed to by the four Foreign Ministers. It was also agreed that it would be acceptable if the Secretary of the United States Delegation presented this statement to the Conference Secretariat along with the amendments at the time that they were submitted.

PREAMBLE

As the meeting was closing, Mr. Molotov inquired as to the opinions of the other three Delegations on the question of a Preamble for the Charter. Mr. Stettings said that the United States Delegation thought such a Preamble would be highly desirable, and Messrs. Eden and Soong also agreed. It was pointed out that Field Marshal Smuts had already submitted a suggested Preamble and for that reason it was felt unnecessary to submit an additional one. Instead the four Delegations could take as a basis for their later discussions the draft version submitted by the Field Marshal.<sup>90</sup> This was agreed to.

The session adjourned at 1:10 p.m.

CHAPTER V, SECTION B, PARAGRAPH 6

Mr. Molorov said that as regards Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 6, their work had not been completed, but that they had agreed in principle on the addition of the following paragraph:

"Subject to the provisions of Paragraph 1 of this Section the General Assembly should be empowered to recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the purposes and principles set forth in this Charter."

Mr. Molorov said, however, that he was unable to give his final decision in this matter.

CHAPTER VIII, SECTION C, PARAGRAPH 2

Insofar as Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2 was concerned, Mr. Pasvolsky reported that they had not yet reached agreement as to the proposed amendments offered by the four Delegations to this Section. Mr. Molorov said that, at the close of their subcommittee meeting, Mr. Pasvolsky had made a suggestion of compromise language to be included, which he had rather liked.

Mr. Pasvolsky read his proposal, which would be to add the following clause at the end of the second sentence in paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter VIII: "with the exception of measures against enemy states in this war provided for in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of such states."

In explaining his proposal, Mr. Pasvolsky said that it was a question of bringing into proper relationship the provisions of Chapter XII, paragraph 2 and of Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2. To this end, he cited the amendments proposed by the Soviet Government and the British Government and the French Government to the latter paragraph. He said that the position of the United States Delegation was that Chapter XII, paragraph 2, provided for all arrangements against the enemy states, and that the new amendment which was proposed would be in the nature of making Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2 consistent with Chapter XII.

Mr. Eden said that in his view, the point was whether the Anglo-Soviet and the French-Soviet Treaties should be ultimately merged into the world organization. He said that idea had been embodied in the Anglo-Soviet Treaty and for that reason he would like to carry out that suggestion as an addition to the amendment which Mr. Pasvolsky had suggested.

Mr. Molorov said that he assumed that the proposal which had been advanced by Mr. Pasvolsky was one which had been personally made by him. He said that he believed, however, that it was more in keeping with the decisions made at Dumbarton Oaks.

Mr. Molorov then made a long statement as to his views of the arrangements covered by Chapter XII, paragraph 2. He made it clear that while the Soviet Delegation was prepared to support any measures for establishing the proposed international organization, he was not yet prepared to say when the responsibility for dealing with the enemy states should be transferred to that organization. He said that the Soviet Government believed that Germany would do everything in its power to restore its strength, and for that reason his Government was trying to be cautious and farsighted, and to that end had concluded the Anglo-Soviet and the French-Soviet Treaties. When, however, the proposed international organization has gained enough strength and prestige to deal with Germany, the need for the Soviet treaties above mentioned would probably lapse. He pointed out that the Anglo-Soviet Treaty specifically envisions that time.

Mr. Molorov continued by saying that both the Soviet Union and France had twice been objects of German aggression. Again, he emphasized the fact that when the international organization was strong enough to assume the responsibility for dealing with such aggression, the need for the treaties would lapse, but that it was for the parties to the treaties to decide when that time had arrived. He closed his statement by saying that he would accept either the French amendment or the one advanced by Mr. Pasvolsky, which he said was an improvement.

At this point, Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that his amendment might be improved by the addition of the following words: "until such time as the world organization may, by decision of the Security Council, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by a state now at war with the United Nations."

A general discussion of this newest proposal followed among the members of the United States Delegation who were present at the meeting. Mr. Sterminus then asked for a recess in the meeting in order that the United States Delegation could consult on this matter among themselves.

Accordingly, a recess was held from 7:05 to 7:45 p.m., while the United States Delegation left the room.

When the meeting was resumed, Mr. Stettinius apologized for the delay which the United States Delegation had caused, and asked Dr. Koo if he should like to resume discussion of the proposed amendments to Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2.

Dr. Koo said that the Soviet amendment was acceptable to the Chinese Delegation so long as the original text remained intact. However, he said he objected to the inclusion of the words "or other special" in paragraph 1 and 3 of Section C as proposed by the United States Delegation. He said that he felt that the addition of these words opened the door to uncertain developments, and that they added nothing to the original text. He said that the Chinese Delegation would be willing to accept the Soviet text even as revised by the proposed British amendment if that were acceptable to the other Delegations.

Mr. Molorov said that he supported the Chinese Delegation in its views that the words "or other special" as suggested by the United States Delegation should be omitted. Furthermore, Mr. Molorov said that he should like to have the Soviet text amended to exclude the words "already concluded" so that the revised Soviet text would read: "With the exception of measures provided for in treaties directed against the renewal of a policy of aggression on the part of the aggressor states in the present war."

Mr. Eden said that he had nothing further to add to the discussion; that he preferred the United States redraft of the British proposal as suggested by Mr. Pasvolsky before the recess.

Mr. Stettinius said that the United States Delegation preferred the redraft suggested by Mr. Pasvolsky, with certain modifications suggested by Mr. Stassen, and to this end he asked Mr. Stassen to indicate his ideas on this subject. Mr. Stassen said that he thought the language of the amendment should make clear that Chapter XII, paragraph 2, was in no way affected by this new proposal. Mr. Molorov said that he felt that it would be necessary first to have Mr. Stassen's proposal couched in exact terms and to have a Russian translation of it before he would be in a position to give an opinion on it.

Mr. Eden suggested that in order to resolve this difficulty, each of the sponsoring Governments should put forth separately its own amendment on this Section, and that later in the Conference, after more detailed consultations, they might be able to agree on a joint proposal. Mr. Molotov said that he could see no other way out at this particular time.

Mr. Stettinius said that he felt they were fairly close in their views, and that with a few more hours this matter could be worked out. He believed that the four Delegations were in agreement on what they were seeking and for that reason he hoped that they could continue these consultations this evening. Furthermore, he said that they would have a new text prepared, based on Commander Stassen's suggestions, which they would have available later in the evening. Therefore, he suggested that they adjourn for one hour and resume at 9:30 with Mr. Soong in the chair for a brief period until he and

Messrs. Eden and Molotov could deal with another item which was up for consultation among them.<sup>2</sup>

Accordingly, the meeting adjourned at 8:35.

Minutes of the Thirtieth Meeting (Executive Session) of the United States Delegation, Held at San Francisco, Friday, May 4, 1945, 7:10 p.m.

[Informal Notes]

THE SECRETARY explained that this emergency meeting had been called in order that a quick consultation could be had among the members of the Delegation on the proposal advanced by Mr. Pasvolsky in the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers 3 with respect to the amendment to Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2, under which it was proposed to add the following words at the end of the second sentence: "with the exception of measures against enemy states in this war provided for in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of such states until such time as the world organization may, by a decision of the Security Council, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by a state now at war with the United Nations."

In explaining his proposal, Mr. Pasvolsky said that it tried to confine the action which would be taken under the exception to action against the enemy states. He said that at first he had attempted to argue the point with Mr. Molotov that there would be no need for an amendment to Section C, paragraph 2, since the measures referred to under the exception would only be those measures which could be taken under Chapter XII, paragraph 2. In any case, he said, if an amendment were made, it should be consistent both with Chapter VIII and with Chapter XII. He said that the first part of the proposed amendment would take care of the action against enemy states alone, while the second part of the proposal would take care of the question as to when the International Organization should take over action under the treaties.

In his Diary for Friday, May 4, Mr. Stettinius noted: "... Eden and Molotov and I were due for a completely private talk immediately after dinner. For Molotov had just informed me that day that the Soviet Government had imprisoned the sixteen Polish leaders who had gone to Moscow to discuss the formation of a more democratic Polish Government. Ambassador Harriman was urging me to issue a public statement condemning this act and to announce the breakdown of our Polish discussion between the Soviets on one side and the British on the other." For a report of this meeting, see memorandum of conversation, May 4, vol. v, p. 281.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that during the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations, it had always been envisioned that at some time the International Organization, through the Security Council, would assume responsibility for control of the enemy states, but that this would be subject to agreement between the Security Council and the governments having responsibility toward the enemy states. He said that if it were wished to make this point clear the proposed amendment could be modified to indicate that the taking over of such responsibility by the Security Council would be subject to the agreement between the Security Council and the Governments referred to in Chapter XII, paragraph 2. Mr. Pasvolsky said that he felt that this might also be necessary since Mr. Molotov said that, otherwise, some doubt might always exist as to the responsibilities of the Security Council and the Governments concerned.

THE SECRETARY asked Mr. Pasvolsky what he would recommend and Mr. Pasvolsky suggested the amendment which is set forth above.

Mr. McCloy said that, speaking for the War and Navy Departments, he could accept the amendment with some provision to cover the registration of treaties. He was assured that such a general provision would be included in the final Charter.

Mr. Stassen said that in his opinion, the amendment was "wide open" in relation to Chapter XII, paragraph 2; that in his view, if the Soviet Union and France agreed to take action under the proposed amendment, the United States would not have the veto power; he said this confusion arose since there was no clear indication as to who were "the Governments responsible" under Chapter XII. Messrs. Dunn and Pasvolsky said that they did not believe that Mr. Stassen's interpretation was correct, and Senator Vandenberg also indicated that he disagreed with Mr. Stassen.

MR. STASSEN said that in his view, the United States must be a party to any peace settlement and that the amendment proposed by Mr. Pasvolsky would make that impossible. Mr. Pasvolsky said that that right of the United States was in no way abridged by the proposed amendment.

Mr. Dulles said that he did not agree with Mr. Stassen's position since under the terms of Chapter XII, the International Organization would not be responsible for the control of Germany; that the major allies in this war would be responsible for such control and that was not involved in the amendment proposed by Mr. Pasvolsky.

Mr. Stassen said that was his point; that the proposal did not adequately take care of the provisions of Chapter XII. To this end, Commander Stassen suggested that the amendment should be redrafted to contain appropriate references to the rights of the Governments concerned in Chapter XII, also to take measures under the amendment and to be a party to any agreements that might be made for the transfer of the responsibilities under Chapter XII to the Security Council.

At this point, The Secretary said that he would like to poll the Delegation regarding their views on the amendment.

Senator Vandenberg said that he liked Mr. Pasvolsky's proposal as it stood; that the Delegation would not be eternally committed to it, and that the Delegation could modify it later in the Conference if necessary.

SENATOR CONNALLY and REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM said they would accept Mr. Pasvolsky's proposal.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said that while she would accept the proposal, she still hoped that some attempt could be made to incorporate Mr. Stassen's idea into the proposal.

At this point in the discussions, Mr. Stassen said that in his view, France under the proposed amendment could move without the consent of the Security Council at some future date, and this was what he was attempting to prevent. Mr. Bowman suggested that in view of Mr. Stassen's strong opinions on this subject, some further attempt might be made to modify Mr. Pasvolsky's proposal. Mr. Stassen replied that in his view it would be better to omit altogether any amendments to this Section.

In response to a specific question from Senator Connally, Mr. McClor said that, representing the Army and Navy, he wished to express his agreement with Mr. Pasvolsky's proposal.

Mr. Pasvolsky said that what had to be kept in mind was that the French and the Soviet Governments were trying to build a treaty system based on their continued fear of Germany; that such treaty system had to work—in the last analysis—without the assistance of the United States, since European Governments still were not sure that the continuing participation of the United States in the future control of Germany could be assured. For this reason, he said that it was impossible to keep Europe from building a defensive system against a renewed threat of German aggression and that he felt that if this proposed amendment, which was entirely consistent with the provisions of Chapter XII, could be accepted by the Delegation, it would be nothing more than a restatement of the position that had always been understood since Dumbarton Oaks.

Senator Vandenberg indicated that he agreed with Mr. Pasvolsky. The Secretary adjourned the meeting at 7:40 p.m. in order that certain members of the Delegation could rejoin the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers.

Minutes of the Fifth Four-Power Consultative Meeting on Charter Proposals (Part II), Held at San Francisco, Friday, May 4, 1945, 10 p.m.

[Here follows list of names of participants, including Chairmen of delegations of the United States, United Kingdom, Soviet Union, and China, accompanied by their respective delegates, advisers, and experts (not listed by name).]

The meeting convened with Mr. Soong in the chair pending the arrival of Messrs. Stettinius, Molotov and Eden.

Mr. Soong opened the meeting by referring to the new redraft proposed by the United States Delegation of an amendment to paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter VIII, which reads as follows:

"2. The Security Council should, where appropriate, utilize such arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action should be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council with the exception of measures against enemy states in this war provided for pursuant to Chapter 12, paragraph 2, or, to the extent not inconsistent therewith, in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of such states, until such time as the World Organization may, by agreement between the Security Council and the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by a State now at war with the United Nations."

Mr. Stassen explained that this redraft attempted to meet the problems of the application of the surrender terms against enemy states, regional and bilateral treaties against aggressors, and attempts to build a strong and successful world organization. He said that this amendment made it clear that any such regional or bilateral treaties would not take precedence over the surrender terms.

Mr. Soons then inquired from several members of the United States Delegation as to whether they agreed with this new proposal, and the unanimous opinion was expressed that this met with their wishes.

Thereupon Mr. Soong inquired from Mr. Jebb whether this proposal would meet with the views of the British Delegation. Mr. Jebb said that while he was unable to speak officially in the absence of Mr. Eden, he would like to comment briefly on it. He said that he felt the phrase "inconsistent therewith" was not clear and might be omitted from the text. Mr. Stassen said that this phrase was an attempt to make clear that the regional arrangements referred to should not supersede the surrender terms. Mr. Jebb inquired as to whether there was really any conflict between the two, and Mr. Stassen said that while he could not render an opinion on that, he wanted to guard against any such inconsistencies.

Following this brief discussion, Mr. Soong asked that an informal recess be taken pending the return of Messrs. Molotov, Stettinius and Eden.

There followed a brief recess from 10:15 until 10:30.

Following the recess, Mr. Stettinius asked if Mr. Soong could give a report as to the progress that had been made in consideration of the latest United States proposal. Mr. Soong reported that the United States Delegation was in agreement on the proposal; that approval had been given unofficially by the British Delegation although the phrase "inconsistent therewith" had been questioned; the Soviet Delegation had been unable to comment on the proposal; and, finally, the Chinese Delegation found the new formula acceptable to them.

Mr. Eden said that a study of the text led him to question the entire phrase "to the extent not inconsistent therewith".

Mr. Molorov said that he thought these words should be dropped and that all of the words at the end of the proposal, beginning "until such time as, etc." should be omitted.

Mr. Stettinius said that they could agree to the first suggestion made by Mr. Eden and agreed to by Mr. Molotov, but that the United States Delegation would be unable to agree to omit the balance of the sentence as suggested by Mr. Molotov.

Mr. Molotov said that if the language to which he objected were retained, it might be possible that the Security Council and the Governments concerned under Chapter XII would be placed at logger-heads with each other. Mr. Eden said that there was little chance of this since the Governments principally concerned under the treaties would also be members of the Security Council, and if these Governments agreed to transfer these responsibilities to the Security Council, there would be little chance of any dispute between them.

SENATOR VANDENBERG said that he thought that Mr. Molotov's point of view might be met by substituting the words "by consent of the Governments concerned" for the words "by agreement between the Security Council and the Governments concerned".

After briefly considering Senator Vandenberg's suggestion, Mr. Molorov said that he thought he would like to take up this matter with the French Delegation, since they had already proposed an amendment upon which the Soviet amendment had been based.

Mr. Dulles then pointed out that these consultations so far had been just among the four powers and that if the Soviet Delegation went to the French Delegation for consultations on this matter, many members of the United States Delegation might feel that there were other countries which the United States Delegation ought to consult on the question. Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Delegation found itself in a special position in this matter and that they felt that it was important to take up the matter with the French Delegation. Furthermore, he said, this amendment had only just been submitted to him for study and that he felt that he would need more time to consider it. On the other hand, he pointed out that if the other three Delegations were willing to accept the Soviet amendment they could reach agreement immediately.

Mr. Stettinius said that under the circumstances, since the British and Chinese Delegations had accepted this latter proposal as modified, he would be willing to have the proposal submitted by the three of them. Mr. Molotov said that the Soviet Delegation did not want to lag behind but that they would need at least 24 hours to study this question. Mr. Stettinius said that, unfortunately, all amendments had to be submitted to the Conference by midnight, and that if the amendment were not submitted it would not be available for consideration.

To resolve this difficulty, Mr. Stettinius suggested that each of the Delegations might put in its own amendment. In this same connection, he raised the question of the further action that might be taken with respect to the amendment to Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 6. Mr. Molotov said that he would like to study this proposal further; that on the whole, he found it acceptable and that it met the principal Soviet points, but that he would like to have the opportunity to study it a little further.

To bring the meeting to a close, The Secretary then suggested that all of those amendments upon which they had found themselves in agreement would be submitted as joint proposals. Those amendments upon which they had found themselves in disagreement could then be submitted individually by each of the Delegations,<sup>4</sup> with the hope that the consultations on them could continue at a later state [stage?] in the Conference.

Thereupon, the meeting adjourned at 11:15 p.m.

1. The following is my daily message to the President, Mr. Hull and you on developments at the Conference.

- "1. Press conference. The full delegation held a large and successful press conference this morning 5 at which I gave out three statements, one describing the joint amendments submitted to the conference by the four sponsoring powers, the second quoting the amendments submitted by the United States alone, and the third dealing with the arrest of the Polish underground leaders.6 The conference went off smoothly and the general impression seems to have been good on all counts.
- 2. Meeting with consultants.7 I also attended this morning a meeting of the consultants representing the various national organizations and took up with them the amendments submitted last night. There was on the whole general satisfaction with the position which the delegation had taken. Only two groups expressed some dissatisfaction, the C.I.O., which wished representation on the economic commission to be by representatives of organizations rather than by experts as provided in the present draft, and the educational groups which felt there should have been a separate commission on education.
- 3. Reconciliation of differences on amendments. The staff of the United States delegation is actively engaged in examining the amendments submitted by the various countries. Particular attention will be given to attempts to reconcile the remaining differences among the four sponsoring powers to whose consultations France will henceforth be added. The chiefs of these five delegations will meet Monday afternoon in my office for this purpose. I am very hopeful that we will reach agreement early next week on the two issues still remaining open among the sponsoring powers. As a matter of fact we missed agreement last night only by the narrowest margin.8 Agreement in principle had in fact been reached on a substitute provision the language of which has already been transmitted to you for that advanced by Senator Vandenberg originally relating to the review of treaties. The Senator believes that the new draft includes not only everything he had in mind but infinitely more. We were also extremely close to agreement on the paragraph on regional arrangements which has now been submitted as a separate United States amendment but at the last moment Molotov insisted that he would have to consult the French before giving definite assent.

4. Committees of the conference. The remaining committees of the conference met today and organized themselves.9 Most of them will commence substantive work on Monday.10

One point of interest arose this morning in the committee having to do with the structures and procedures of the Security Council.<sup>11</sup> All of the delegates present except three spoke in favor of expanding the membership of the Council. The Soviet representative and Senator Connally both opposed the suggestion. Senator Connally quoted the text of the amendment on the composition of the Council agreed to by the sponsoring powers and it seemed to be generally felt that that amendment more or less met the arguments put forward by the other delegations.

5. Trusteeship. Commander Stassen held an informal meeting this afternoon with Senators Byrd, Eastland, Tobey, and Capehart of the Naval Affairs Committee and the military advisers of the delegation. The British and American trusteeship proposals were reviewed and the Senators were assured by the military that our security interests are adequately covered by our draft. The Senators seemed to be satisfied by these assurances.

The five delegations now engaged in preliminary consultations in regard to trusteeship are meeting again this evening to consider the French draft on this subject.<sup>12</sup> The French and United States drafts appear to be more or less along the same lines.

6. Latin American attitudes. At a meeting today with one of the chief advisers of the United States delegation the chiefs of the Brazilian, Colombian, and Cuban delegations stated their views in regard to regional pacts.<sup>13</sup> The conversation made it yet further evident that the other American Republics are insistent on greater freedom for the Inter-American system to act in matters of hemispheric concern. They do not for example wish to take [make?] action under the Act of Chapultepec dependent upon the veto of any one of the powers sitting on the Security Council. Strong sentiment exists for sharply restricting the scope of action of the general organization in this hemisphere and for permitting action under the Act of Chapultepec without authorization from the Council.

7. Supplementary information on amendments. Late this evening Molotov called at my apartment <sup>14</sup> to say that the Soviet Government is now ready to concur in United States amendments on the two outstanding issues, i.e. (1) Authorization to the Assembly to recommend the adjustment of any situation whatever may be its origin likely to impair the general welfare and (2) the association of regional pacts having to do with aggressive states in the present war with the transitional arrangements referred to in Chapter XII of the Charter. I immediately informed Eden and Soong of this news which assures substantial agreement among all the sponsoring powers on the outstanding issues before the conference. This information should be held in a confidential status until Molotov himself makes the appropriate announcement.["]

[Informal Notes—Extracts]

[Here follows list of names of persons (29) present at meeting.] Senator Connally, in the absence of the Secretary, convened the meeting at 9:00 a.m.

QUESTION OF UNOFFICIAL REPRESENTATIVES OF OFFICIAL ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Hiss reported that he had come to the American Delegation to explain the status of the representatives of the five official organizations invited to the Conference. He had heard that the American Delegation was not altogether clear on this question, and although he thought there was no confusion, he thought the best way to handle the matter was to speak to the Delegation directly. He pointed out that the status of the representatives had remained the same since we left Washington. They continued to have an unofficial status and were not allowed in the closed sessions of the Conference, although it had been reported to him that a member of the American Delegation had said they would be admitted. Moreover, it looked as though the organizations might eliminate on their own initiative representatives of neutral nationality. The Permanent Court of International Justice had dropped their Spanish representative. He added that it now looked as though the Committee on the Court would invite to its meetings the representatives of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Mr. Dunn thought the whole question of invitations to committee meetings of unofficial representatives should be referred to the Steering Committee. Mr. Hiss explained that so far the Conference was taking the same position that was taken in Congressional committees where each committee could invite in such persons as it wanted. In any event, he felt it would be better to raise this question at the committee level and not impose a decision from above. Representative Bloom commented that Congressional committees, when in executive session, invited persons to be heard only and only for a limited time. Mr. Hiss emphasized that the unofficial representatives of the five organizations have no status unless they are invited by the committees. He pointed out that one of the most important things was to get rid of the neutral representatives. If the neutral representatives withdrew, it would be possible to publish the names of the unofficial representatives in the Conference list.

Mr. Stassen commented that the question of inviting the two judges had arisen in the discussions of Committee IV/1.15 It had been pointed out that the question was under consideration in the Steering Committee and therefore should be laid over. Mr. Hiss commented that the question was not under consideration in the Steering Committee and, as far as he knew, the only place it was being considered was in the committees themselves. Mr. Stassen stated that the situation would be chaotic, since different committees would make divergent decisions. He felt it was up to the Steering Committee to define the rules.<sup>16</sup> Mr. Hiss indicated that on this question the Congressional committees made their own rules. Mr. Stassen pointed out that the situation was not comparable in the two cases, since Congressional committees voted on the admission of citizens, whereas the issue before the Conference was whether official organizations should be given a status comparable to that of potential member states. Representa-TIVE BLOOM added that unanimous consent was generally required on Congressional committees for the admission of members.

Mr. Hiss pointed out that his staff was operating on instructions not to raise the question in the Steering Committee until it was negotiated outside the committee. Senator Connally disapproved of the procedure of allowing committees to make their own decisions.

Mr. Sandiffer commented that in fact the representatives of the official organizations have from the start been put in a different category from private organizations. The sponsoring governments had opposed the unofficial representation of private organizations, while consenting to the unofficial representation of the five official organizations. Mr. Dunn pointed out that the official organizations had been authorized only to send observers. Mr. Hiss added that the invitation requested that they come for "informal consultation".17

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said that for the purpose of the record she would like to make it clear that she had had a conversation with the representatives of the I.L.O. who had inquired concerning what status they would have, but that she herself had said nothing to them on the matter. She recalled that the Delegation had decided that several of its representatives might well meet unofficially with the representatives of the five organizations at some opportune time.

Senator Vandenberg asked whether Mr. Hiss had accomplished his business. Mr. Hiss replied in the affirmative. Senator Vandenberg then said "Goodbye".

RECONSIDERATION OF FOUR-POWER AMENDMENT OF REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS, CHAPTER VIII, SECTION C, PARAGRAPH 2

Senator Connally called on Senator Vandenberg to present his proposal to apply the same type of exemption to the "regional agreements" of the Pan American Union under the Act of Chapultepec which we allow to our European allies in respect to our European enemies.

Senator Vandenberg indicated that he must have had a brain fag at the end of the meeting on Friday for he now felt that our proposal for Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2, made it impossible for us to face either our European friends on the one hand or our Latin American friends on the other. He therefore had written the letter which the Secretary had distributed to the members of the Delegation (Letter by A. H. Vandenberg, May 5, 1945 18). He remarked that from his point of view the question of fortifying our position with our American friends was so utterly fundamental that he would hate to impair this position by any action that might be taken.

Mr. Bowman reported that in the discussion that had taken place Sunday on this question no one could recall clearly the objections raised by Mr. Stassen to the proposal, objections stated during the "bedroom session." Mr. Bowman asked Mr. Stassen to explain those objections 19 if he was willing.

Mr. Stassen remarked that his objections concerned the clause which took the whole European scene away from the Security Council, at the same time leaving the entire Western Hemisphere within the jurisdiction of the Security Council. He stated that he did not wish to see more areas taken out of the jurisdiction of the Security Council, but preferred to soften the veto power. He indicated that the draft as it stood, as we submitted it to the Secretary-General, was an improvement over the earlier language and that this explained whv he had felt so strongly about the original language. He urged that the Security Council would be a very weak body if it was deprived of jurisdiction over events in this hemisphere. On the other hand, it was difficult to see how this hemisphere could be left under the Security Council and Europe outside. He pointed out that the way the language now stood we would have to have the support of the Soviet Union to take enforcement action in this hemisphere, whereas the Soviet Union would not require our vote in taking action in Europe. He proposed that the issue be met, however, not by making further inroads on the powers of the Security Council, but by increasing the exemptions from its jurisdiction.

He pointed out that one important question was whether France could act under the regional arrangements against Germany and at the same time veto our action through the Security Council.

Senator Vandenberg noted that Mr. Stassen had suggested handling the situation by a change in the voting section. He questioned whether this was the way to handle the matter. His proposal, he said, did not involve robbing the Security Council of authority to act in the event that a situation was not being adequately cared for under a regional arrangement. On the other hand he felt it would preserve to us, until such time as the effectiveness of the world organization was demonstrated, the right to take advantage of the 100 or more procedures of the Pan American system including solidarity of mutual defense.

Senator Connally commented that in view of the present position perhaps our best immediate procedure would be to ask the Secretary to withdraw our consent to the proposed amendment to Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2. Senator Vandenberg agreed this was the next step.

Mr. Dunn remarked that Mr. Molotov had called on the Secretary late Saturday <sup>20</sup> and had indicated the entire agreement of the Soviet Union with our two additional amendments. Representative Bloom proposed that rather than withdraw our amendment we should proceed, if necessary, to amend it in discussion. Senator Vandenberg thought the Secretary could say to Mr. Molotov that we were not proposing to alter or modify the regional provision as it related to the Soviet Union, but that we have to have a comparable right for this hemisphere, particularly in order to get the right for the Soviet Union. Senator Vandenberg suggested an informal conference between Mr. Molotov and the Secretary.

Mr. Dulles indicated that our regional proposal was substantially similar to the one included in Chapter XII of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Moreover, he thought that we should give very thorough consideration to the problem and not immediately go into discussion with Mr. Molotov. The fact of the matter is, he said, we had filed an amendment which the Russians approved.

Mr. Stassen commented that this amendment was not one of our own proposals, but was rather an alternative that we had worked out to meet the demands of the French and the Russians.

Mr. Dulles remarked that the best way to handle this question was by amending our own amendment when proposals from other countries developed. He was sure that such proposals would be forth-The important thing, he added, was not to let Mr. Molotov go home before this question was reopened. If he returned and we then opened the question, he certainly would charge us with bad faith and he would justifiably feel about our action some of the things that we have been feeling are typical of the Soviet Union. He added that we should do whatever we can in this situation to preserve our integrity. Senator Vandenberg thought we could approach Mr. Molotov on the basis of the position that we did stand by our agreement as far as he was concerned, intending no change in the provisions affecting the Soviet Union. Mr. Dulles suggested that we would actually be altering the power of the Soviet Union if we made Senator Vandenberg's proposal, since we would deprive the Soviet Union of veto over action in this hemisphere.

Mr. Stassen pointed out that we were not deprived of an opportunity to give subsequent consideration to this proposal. In fact, it was obvious that further consideration of it would have to be given since smaller powers would be making their own proposals on this same subject.

Mr. Armstrong pointed out that the general organization would be ruined if we made general exceptions for regional arrangements. The Soviet Union would demand freedom in Europe. The Latin American states would demand freedom in this Hemisphere. He wondered whether it would not be possible to handle the matter by itemizing occasions upon which the veto power would not hold. In this way it would not be necessary to make general exceptions for regional arrangements. He thought a rather simple list of events would do the trick.

Mr. Rockefeller pointed out that the Soviet Union under the exemption we had given them would on the basis of unilateral treaties build up a system which would amount to a strong regional system. Senator Vandenberg asked Mr. Rockefeller what the reaction of the Latin American states was to this exception. Mr. Rockefeller explained that they were frankly disturbed. They felt that without consultation with them we had in fact liquidated Chapter VIII, Section C. They now felt that we would not ratify any treaty on the basis of the Act of Chapultepec so that they feel we have liquidated the agreement made there. The Ministers he had talked to, he said, believe that something substantially new has been done in which they had no voice and which they feel has given them no security or protection. Mr. Stassen pointed out that the Act of Chapultepec explicitly states that action should be subject to the purposes and principles of the Organization. Mr. Dulles asked why the Latin American Minister felt the question had arisen as a new issue. Mr. ROCKEFELLER explained that the whole matter had been threshed out on a democratic basis in Mexico City and that now the Latin American Ministers were confronted with an agreement made without consultation with them.

Mr. Notter asked whether we intended to go back on Paragraph 3 of the Moscow Declaration with its reference to consultation in taking action against enemy states.<sup>21</sup> Mr. Stassen said he assumed that we would be in all action taken with respect to enemy states under the surrender terms. Mr. McCloy stated that having our armies in Europe would also keep us in the picture.

Senator Vandenberg said he would now like to ask whether the Military Advisers had any comments to make on this question. Mr. McCloy stated that he did not see how we could vote against a South American proposition for hemisphere solidarity. We had agreed to the Act of Chapultepec. In the discussions with the Big Four we did not get the full implication of the provision with respect to enemy states. We find that we have wiped out the veto provision in Europe permitting the Russians without restraint by us to deal on their own terms with the enemy states. Since the veto on Europe has been wiped out it would seem wise to wipe out the veto provision altogether. Rather than add an exception for the Western Hemisphere it would make sense to wipe out the veto provision altogether and allow regional organizations to operate on their own impetus.

Mr. Armstrong asked Mr. McCloy what he thought of the suggestion to enumerate a number of occasions on which the veto power would not be exercised. Mr. Dulles questioned whether agreement on such a list could be reached here. Mr. Dulles added that while the Soviet Union would have a free hand in Eastern Europe under our amendment, we would still have a voice in Western Europe. From his point of view the question was whether it was worth it to us to save our position in Western Europe or whether we should trade this off to assure American solidarity. This decision, he felt, would be the highest decision of national policy—whether or not to build on hemisphere solidarity alone and throw away all of Europe or whether to save our voice in Western Europe. Mr. McClox thought it was essential not to sacrifice our position with the British Empire as well as with Western Europe. Mr. Stassen proposed that we not deal ourselves out of Europe for fear of a possible circumstance when we would want to rely exclusively on the Western Hemisphere. The taking on of more exceptions he said would result in our being crowded out of the rest of the world. In any event he did not feel we should take a decision rapidly and should certainly confer fully with the President.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked what Mr. McCloy thought of Senator Vandenberg's proposal on page 2 of his letter beginning "and with the exception of measures which may be taken under Resolution VIII, known as the Act of Chapultepec", etc. Mr. McCloy said that this exception would take care of the point he had but would not satisfy Mr. Stassen. The protocol method moreover might be preferable.

Senator Connally asked whether action should be taken to do away with the veto. Mr. McCloy felt that to do away with the veto would mean the elimination of the clause now in Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2 that no enforcement action should be taken by regional organizations without the authorization of the Security Council. Mr. Rockefeller pointed out that the exception with regard to treaties in Europe already does away with the veto power. Mr. Stassen objected. Mr. Rockefeller pointed out that the argument had been made that if the Security Council refused to act, enforcement action would be taken in any event by this country in self-defense. He asked what would prevent Russia, on the basis of this same argument, from also taking independent action.

MR. STASSEN replied that if the organization failed to act we would not spinelessly give up. MR. Rockefeller then asked what significance the veto had. MR. STASSEN replied that if the veto power impairs effective action for international security then we would have to act anyway. MR. Rockefeller thought then that the veto power meant nothing more than a piece of paper. MR. STASSEN said that any one of the major powers could destroy the organization. MR. Rockefeller recalled that at an earlier meeting Mr. Stassen had urged that a provision be included so that if the Council failed to act, force could still be employed on a regional basis without destroying the organization. MR. STASSEN pointed out that he had always preferred some modification of the veto power. MR. Rockefeller indicated that the position he was taking did not imply any lessening of the power of the Security Council to take action in a situation if the Security Council thought such action was necessary. Mr. Bloom noted that Senator Vandenberg's proposal was limited in time by the phrase "until such time as the organization may, by consent of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union, be charged with this function". Senator Vandenberg thought this proposal would be acceptable. Mr. Bloom agreed that this limitation narrowed the exception and made it less objectionable. Mr. Rockefeller agreed.

Mr. Stassen urged that to adopt Senator Vandenberg's amendment would be to destroy the organization. If we intend to make this kind of a provision in Chapter VIII we should do it in Chapter I and realize that we were undermining the whole effort.

Mr. Rockefeller asked why Mr. Stassen had not objected to the weakening of the Organization by the exception for the Russian-French treaty. Mr. Stassen said he had strongly objected. He hoped that the definition of enemy states could be narrowed and moreover he thought it useful to point out that our amendment applied not only to action by European states against enemy states but also to action by any states in the world against former Axis states. The position we had taken in the amendment in its present form is in line with Senator Vandenberg's speech.<sup>22</sup> Mr. Stassen said he believed that it was not a general exception but was a limited and restricted exception that seems to have had the general approval of the public, if one can judge by the reaction to Senator Vandenberg's speech. Mr. STASSEN said he would not approve a further exception being made in the basic document itself. He would, however, go along with an agreement made in advance that the Western Hemisphere would receive prior authorization to take action on local disputes. In this way the regional organization would be kept subordinate to the general organization. DEAN GILDERSLEEVE commented that we had assumed that some such blanket authorization in advance would be forthcoming. Mr. McCloy indicated that he had recently talked with some of his friends, both French and English, who had indicated that they would support us on anything we wanted in connection with the Monroe Doctrine. DEAN GILDERSLEEVE said that Mr. Koo had talked in the same vein. Mr. McCLoy suggested that the problem comes down to getting agreement with the Soviets.

Mr. Notter stated that he could not refrain from pointing out that the proposed exceptions would wreck the international organization. He felt that the present amendment that we had proposed, even without further exceptions, undermined the Organization since no time limit was indicated for the treaties and action might be taken under them independently of the Organization forever. Mr. Notter pointed out that our amendment gave legal sanction to our Allies to build up a system that could in time be turned against us. He believed that all exceptions should be strongly fought in the name of American security. Senator Connally asked Mr. Notter what he recommended. Mr. Notter proposed that we return to the provisions of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Mr. Rockefeller stated that he would be satisfied with the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals with a provision for prior authorization for action under the Latin American system. He stated that the Latin Americans felt that the United States had let them down and they were contemplating the disintegration of the Western Hemisphere system.

Senator Connally thought that it would be necessary for the Secretary to see Mr. Molotov promptly and to tell him that we were agreed that we could not put over our proposed joint amendment. Since we did not have the votes we might ask him for a release from our proposals and then reconsider them. Mr. Bloom asked whether, if we went back to Dumbarton Oaks, that would take care of the Act of Chapultepec. Mr. Notter thought that there was a danger of us selling out under the Act of Chapultepec simply in order to provide for an ultimate event that would probably not take place.

Mr. Dunn thought that there was no need for an exception for the Western Hemisphere. If we went back to the original language of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals the Inter-American System would have adequate protection. He noted that the exception in our proposed amendment was very similar to the exception formerly placed in Chapter XII of the Proposals. In fact, he said, it was the same provision in a different place. He questioned any decision that would compound the number of exceptions. He wondered why the original language of Chapter XII would not be perfectly satisfactory.

Senator Connally noted that Mr. Molotov was wedded to protection for his French treaty. Mr. Dunn commented that Mr. Molotov had his French treaty even under the old Chapter XII. Mr. Dunn suggested that if we proposed an exception for the Western Hemisphere the Soviet Union would want to extend its exception over all regional arrangements without any limitation. We had successfully narrowed down our exception to rights already in the Proposals. If we now request an exception for the Western Hemisphere the pressure will be great to arrange exceptions for all regional arrangements. Mr. Dulles questioned whether or not the basic question was to save our position in Western Europe.

Mr. Stassen said that even if Great Britain and other countries favored additional exceptions he felt that we should oppose them since they would tend to destroy the world organization. Senator Connally asked whether the regional organization could function under the original language of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Mr. Dunn replied in the affirmative, noting that the regional organization would have to be consistent with the General Organization. It would not be allowed, however, to take military action without authorization. Mr. Dunn added that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals were built on the theory that there should be one General International Organization with teeth in it. If you distribute the right of enforcement action to regional organizations you distribute the teeth. Of course, he said, the decision might be made that the Inter-American System was so unique and so important that one had to sacrifice everything for it. If this is done, he said, the character of the world organization is changed. With the teeth distributed we would have to face the fact that any combination of powers might start up war in an area and we would have nothing whatever to say about it. Mr. Rockefeller said this was the case now under our amendment. Mr. Dunn noted that while any combination could take a stand against Germany there was not a general right to take enforcement action without authorization.

Mr. Stassen indicated that the provisions of our amendment as they now stood had been generally accepted as our national policy. Mr. Dunn agreed that the exception was a narrow one, for example, we had not given the Soviet Union and France the right to take action against Belgium without authorization. If we make one exception of a general nature he felt we would start the chain of exceptions until any group anywhere could take enforcement action without review or authorization by the Council. This system he said would be the end of the Organization.

Senator Vandenberg asked what we would say to the Latin American Republics who asked for some exception. Mr. Dunn replied that we would have to decide as to the type of organization we wanted. If we wanted regional organization we could go along with further exceptions. If we wanted overall supervision we should not make further exceptions. He thought that the Latin Americans would see the point of the exception in Europe. Since the Monroe Doctrine was protected by our right of veto and since the Act of Chapultepec does not itself call for the use of force he thought the Latin Americans would come along with us.

Mr. Rockefeller suggested that Mr. Dunn was making a legal interpretation. While the Act of Chapultepec was not a treaty and did not call for the use of force on a permanent basis we had agreed—we had pledged—our word of honor to work for a treaty. If we wished to continue good relations with the Latin Americans he said we would have to continue to work on the basis of good faith. (The Secretary joined the meeting).

THE SECRETARY announced that he had been busy all day long on the telephone talking with the President concerning the development of the war situation. He wanted to be sure that the Delegation knew that Mr. Molotov had called on him Saturday late in the evening and had said that the Soviet Union accepted the two points on which the Soviet Union had reserved its position. There was now unanimity of the four powers on the amendments to the Proposals. The Secretary commented that the public angle on this question was important and that his judgment would be to leave Mr. Molotov to make his own announcement in his own good time.

Mr. Dulles reported that the New York Times had reported Mr. Molotov's agreement with our Proposals.

The Secretary announced that the Foreign Minister of Belgium, Mr. Spaak, had left suddenly for Belgium. Whereas he had not checked out in the normal way the Secretary assumed there was no reason for his departure other than the urgency of his work at home. Mr. Dunn reported that a political crisis was pending in Belgium and that Mr. Spaak wished to be there for the reorganization of the government. The Secretary reported that he had been personally hurt by Mr. Spaak's not taking leave of either Mr. Dunn or himself. Mr. Hickerson reported that Mr. Spaak hopes to return to the Conference.

The Secretary reported that Mr. Lie of Norway had been instructed to return and that he had explained to Mr. Lie that this would be embarrassing in view of his chairmanship. It would be a great blow, he said. Mr. Lie had assured him of his full confidence in the success of the enterprise and had in no way indicated any difficulty arising from the Conference. The Secretary indicated that work would have to be speeded up in view of the day's developments, with Mr. Molotov leaving in a few days and with the possibility that he might himself have to leave for Washington. He pointed out that he had asked for a special meeting of the Steering Committee and that he thought it was time to set up a drafting committee to get the charter knocked into shape.

Mr. Stassen commented that there was a danger in this procedure since we were just getting to the small power stage and we should take advantage of the Conference organization to permit the smaller states, particularly the dominions, to make their contribution. In addition to these regular Conference meetings, however, Mr. Stassen thought it would be possible to make special provisions for special sessions with the Secretary in the Penthouse of members of the other delegations. Senator Vandenberg agreed that these special meetings in the Penthouse might prove a shortcut to the ponderous procedure of the Conference. The Secretary asked how these meetings might be organized. Mr. Rockefeller replied that the countries might be divided into eight key groups and that if the Secretary could meet with them it might go a long way to answer the problems that had arisen because they had been left out of the meetings of the Big Four.

Mr. Dulles thought it would be possible even while the general discussions were going on in the Conference committees to have a small group of some five individuals whipping the Charter into shape so that a first draft would be ready for submission to the Steering Committee with such last minute changes as proved necessary.

The Secretary emphasized that the work of the Conference would have to be speeded along. Mr. Stassen thought it would do no damage to have a "flat week", if meanwhile the heads of delegations were being invited by the Secretary to the Penthouse in order to present their views. Senator Vandenberg remarked that it would be out of the dog house into the Penthouse. The Secretary agreed with the suggestion and asked Mr. Hickerson and Mr. Rockefeller to prepare the plans for the meetings. The Secretary agreed that he would postpone the Steering Committee meeting today. Mr. Stassen emphasized that the primary purpose of the meeting of the delegations would be to receive their views.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that the meetings with the heads of delegations should start today and continue tomorrow.

THE SECRETARY stated that we could not reverse ourselves on our proposed amendment. He did not see how he could go to Mr. Molotov and make an about face. Senator Connally said he preferred the protocol arrangement under which the Pan American group would be authorized in advance to take regional enforcement action in local disputes. Mr. Dunn suggested that the protocol involved an assurance from the permanent members that they would permit prior authorization of the Pan American group.

MR. ROCKEFELLER stated that this was quite in line with the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and could be raised with Mr. Molotov. The Secretary said he preferred to wait until later, at least until tomorrow, since it was psychologically impossible for him to discuss the revision of an amendment that was still warm.

STATEMENTS BY REPRESENTATIVES OF LABOR

THE SECRETARY welcomed the representatives of American labor organizations who had been invited to meet with the Delegation. . . .

THE SECRETARY assured these representatives that the United States Delegation was doing everything in its power to represent their interests at the Conference and welcomed the opportunity of hearing their views. He explained that he was working on some important European matters and had asked Senator Connally to preside.

ASSIGNMENT OF DELEGATES AND ADVISERS

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE urged that in so far as possible members of the Delegation should attend committee meetings as they had not been able to do the last few days.

Mr. Sandifer suggested that a final decision should be made on the assignment of advisers to committees.<sup>23</sup> The Secretary said he thought this matter had already been settled, but that if not a recommendation should be prepared by the Secretary-General after discussion with the delegates in charge and final decision made as promptly as possible. Mr. Stassen pointed out that Mr. Sandifer had attempted to get a decision on this question a number of times but that the Delegation had each time pushed the matter aside.

Mr. Bloom asked whether he was on the trusteeship committee. After a brief discussion Mr. Stassen indicated that he would be happy to have Mr. Bloom go with him on that committee.

RECONSIDERATION OF FOUR-POWER AMENDMENT ON REGIONAL ARRANGE-MENTS, CHAPTER VIII, SECTION C, PARAGRAPH 2

Mr. Dunn pointed out that a decision would have to be made as to what would go into the protocol. Senator Vandenberg asked who should take responsibility for drafting the protocol. It was agreed that the committee should consist of Mr. Dunn, Mr. McCloy, Mr. Dulles, Mr. Rockefeller, and Mr. Pasvolsky with possibly additional naval and military advisers.

Senator Connally indicated that we still had to decide whether we wished to pursue the method of the protocol.

GENERAL FAIRCHILD thought the protocol would let us off the horns of our dilemma. We could maintain the right to take regional action at the same time that we would not violate the Charter. Mr. Bowman asked under the theory of the protocol when and in what form we would announce the decision. Mr. Dunn thought the whole question should, of course, be settled first among the Big Four.

Senator Connally proposed that the Secretary might go to Mr. Molotov and get his suggestion as to the proper procedure to follow. He doubted whether it would be possible to get agreement with the Russians on a satisfactory protocol.

Mr. Bloom suggested that two drafts be prepared, one, an amendment to Paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter VIII, and a second amendment in the form of a protocol.

Mr. Stassen proposed that (a) the Secretary should promptly notify Mr. Molotov that this question was pending and should advise

Mr. Molotov on the general nature of the problem we are facing, leaving to the discretion of the Secretary how far he would pursue this preliminary discussion; (b) appoint a technical committee to prepare a draft protocol; and (c) provide that the final decision as to the disposition of this problem would be made by the American Delegation before negotiations were opened.

(Mr. Pasvolsky entered the meeting.)

The motion made by Mr. Stassen was passed and the names of members of the Committee approved finally: Mr. Dunn, Mr. McCloy, Mr. Dulles, Mr. Rockefeller, and Mr. Pasvolsky.

Mr. Pasvolsky made the statement that having read Mr. Vandenberg's letter that had been before the Committee, he was completely flabbergasted.

Mr. Hickerson suggested that it might be best for the Secretary to meet with the members of the Latin American delegations alone. Mr. Stassen favored a meeting of the four powers with the American Delegation and the Latin American representatives. Mr. Bloom proposed that the meeting be of the five powers together with one or more members of the American Delegation accompanying the Secretary. After a brief discussion this last suggestion was agreed to.

. . . The meeting was adjourned by Senator Connally at 12:30 p. m.

THE SECRETARY opened the meeting by calling attention to the fact that it was the first at which Mr. Bidault was present.<sup>24</sup> He said that it was his intention to make this a short meeting, although he had several items to discuss with the Foreign Ministers.

1. Conference Procedure on Surrender of Germany 25

2. Consultation on Amendments

Mr. Stettinius recalled that the consultations of the four Ministers up to this time had included only those powers which were represented at the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations and concerned only their proposed amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. With Mr. Bidault joining the group, he felt that they should now turn their attention to the amendments proposed by other countries and consider and review them. Mr. BIDAULT said that he agreed with the procedure proposed by Mr. Stettinius but that he wished to call attention to the fact that the French Delegation has not yet had the time to study completely the amendments proposed by the four powers in their own right.

Mr. Stettinius replied that so far as the French Delegation is concerned, it was understood, of course, that it would be a free agent with respect to the amendments proposed by the four powers to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals; that the French Delegation would not be bound by the previous decisions in this regard.

Mr. Stettinius said that in order to expedite the work of the five Foreign Ministers he suggested that a Committee of their deputies be appointed to consider the amendments that are proposed by the other nations represented at the Conference. All of the Foreign Ministers agreed and accordingly the following appointments were made:

Mr. Stertinius appoint[ed] Mr. Leo Pasvolsky to represent the United States:

Mr. Molorov appointed Mr. A. A. Sobolev to represent the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

Dr. Koo appointed himself as a deputy for the Chinese Delegation, in as much as he explained that Mr. Soong had intended that he, Dr. Koo, bear this responsibility, and that in the interim, Mr. Liang would represent him as an alternate;

Mr. BIDAULT appointed Mr. Jacques Fouques Duparc;

Mr. Attlee appointed Mr. Gladwyn Jebb.

Mr. Stettinius suggested that this Committee of Deputies should meet rather soon 26 and should report back to the Foreign Ministers group on Wednesday, May 9, at 3:00 p.m., at its next meeting. This was agreed to.

Dr. Koo suggested that as a method of procedure for expediting the work of the Conference, the review by the five Foreign Ministers of the amendments to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals should be in the nature of an examination of these amendments to determine whether they were in the framework of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, leaving the necessary verbal changes to the Commissions and Committees of the Conference.

Mr. Stertings said that he agreed with this observation of Dr. Koo's. He felt that the work of the Conference must be expedited but that they must leave freedom of expression to the Conference as much as possible. Accordingly, he recommended that the Subcommittee of Deputies which had just been appointed should recommend to the Foreign Ministers the procedure to be followed with respect to their review of the proposed amendments.

Mr. BIDAULT said that it was his understanding that no final position would be taken by any one of the five powers in the Conference with respect to any amendment until agreement had been reached by this meeting of the five Foreign Ministers. Mr. Stettinius assured him that such would be the case.

[Here follows discussion of items No. 3, drafting of final Charter; No. 4, press statement; and No. 5, expediting the Conference.]

6. Soviet Action on Two Amendments

Mr. Attree raised the question as to whether the Soviet Delegation had agreed to the two proposed amendments to Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 6 and Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2. Mr. Monorov replied that such agreement had been reached. Mr. Stettinius then inquired as to whether the Soviet Delegation had announced this fact yet. Mr. Monorov replied that they would confirm this agreement in writing later in the day, and at the same time would also agree to the announcement of the fact. However, he indicated that if in the meantime, questions were raised by the press as to the Soviet Delegation's attitude in this matter, that Mr. Stettinius was at liberty to announce the Soviet agreement.

At this point Mr. BIDAULT inquired as to what amendments were being discussed. Specifically, he asked whether these amendments included the United States amendment on regional arrangements.

Mr. Steptinius explained that the Soviet Delegation had now agreed to accept the United States amendment on regional arrangements. Mr. Molotov reminded Mr. Bidault that Mr. Gromyko had informed the French Delegation of this fact on Saturday.

MR. BIDAULT agreed that Mr. Gromyko had informed them of that fact, but that in his opinion the Committee of Deputies of the Foreign Ministers should take the French amendment on this subject at into account.

Mr. Sterrings asked if there were further business to be brought before the group, and since there was none, the meeting was adjourned. . . .

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of persons (31) present at meeting.] THE SECRETARY opened the meeting at 6:18 p. m. and announced that the regular meeting of the Delegation each day would take place at 6:15 p.m...

STATEMENT BY SENATOR VANDENBERG

SENATOR VANDENBERG remarked that Mr. Molotov had held a press conference that day and that he had a transcript of this conference before him.28 He noted that Mr. Molotov had adroitly tried to leave the inference that in omitting the reference to "treaties", we were attempting to provide a means by which the enemy could get out from under repressive measures. Of course this was not the reason, but Mr. Molotov's interpretation made a hot story.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that he had met with press representatives that afternoon and reread to them the statement made by Senator Vandenberg in the press conference Saturday morning.29 He had pointed out that the phrase "regardless of origin was in fact broader than the term "treaties". Mr. Pasvolsky said he had defended Senator Vandenberg and said that he thought that Senator Vandenberg's own press statement would help to straighten out the situation.

THE SECRETARY announced that he would have to reach a quick decision on the matter raised at the morning meeting. (1) He would need to have the instructions of the Delegation as to what he would say to Mr. Molotov before he left. (2) It was important for two or three members of the Delegation and for Mr. Rockefeller and himself to meet with a half dozen of the Latin American ambassadors in order to thoroughly understand their position. Furthermore, he needed time to take the whole question up with the President after the Delegation reached a position. Representative Bloom suggested that the Delegation hear the report of the subcommittee appointed at the meeting of the morning.30 Mr. Dunn stated that an attempt had been made to draft alternatives in the form of a protocol and in the form of an amendment to paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter VIII. Mr. Dunn then read the following two proposals:

- (1) "It is the understanding of the undersigned that the provision of Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2, with respect to authorization of enforcement action by the Security Council will not apply to the repression of aggression under a regional arrangement, such as contemplated by the Act of Chapultepec, which will define in advance the conditions under which said repression may occur."
- (2) "The Security Council should, where appropriate, utilize such arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action should be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council with the exception of measures against enemy States in this war provided for pursuant to Chapter 12, paragraph 2, or pursuant to regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of such States, and with the exception of measures to repress aggression under a regional arrangement, such as contemplated by the Act of Chapultepec, which will define in advance the conditions under which such repression may occur, such exceptions in all cases to expire when the Organization by consent of the Governments concerned may be charged with the responsibility for preventing the aggression so exceptionally dealt with."

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked whether Mr. Dunn thought that the protocol proposition would take care of the problem. Mr. Dunn expressed the view that if any proposal along the lines he had read was raised, it would be difficult to avoid opening up the old question of the exclusion of all regional arrangements from the jurisdiction of the Organization.

Senator Vandenberg said he realized that if we now opened up this question Mr. Molotov would put an unfriendly interpretation on our action.

THE SECRETARY asked whether Ambassador Harriman would make a statement to the Delegation. Ambassador Harriman commented that he and Mr. Bohlen were shortly going to talk to Mr. Molotov. He added that while he would not talk on the substance of the question, he did have the following advice to give: (1) he thought we should not approach Mr. Molotov alone, but should rather meet him with the four powers together; (2) he hoped that when we talked to Mr. Molotov we would be clear as to our objective so as not to leave the matter in a vague state and so possibly arouse unnecessary fears on the part of Mr. Molotov; (3) we should guard against any possibility of giving the impression that we were bowing out of regional organizations in Europe. Ambassador Harriman explained that the Soviet Union believes that Continental Europe is properly the field of action for continental countries only. We should be sure not to fall in with this assumption.

THE SECRETARY asked Ambassador Harriman if he wanted to define his stand more fully. Ambassador Harriman remarked that he did not know where the discussion stood in its substantive aspects, but that he felt very definitely that all five powers should meet together and that we should not manage things in such a way that the South American countries became our "stalking horses". In any event he said the Soviet Union would assume that we stirred up the problem. Moreover, he felt we should be clear that we are not backing out of Europe.

Senator Vandenberg thought we could approach Mr. Molotov by stating that we were not proposing to debate what had already been given him in the modifications of Chapter VIII, Section C, paragraph 2. We could point out that in order to achieve these ends, we had found it necessary to clarify the situation regarding the Act of Chapultepec. We could explain that we contemplated that, in the first instance, the Pan American authority would be the enforcement authority, subject to the ultimate action of the peace league if the regional action was not successful.

Ambassador Harriman remarked that he had no comment to make on the substance of the discussion, but he felt constrained to point out that the Soviet Union would use whatever excuse it could find to minimize our interest in Europe and might welcome our approach as a reason to get us out of Europe.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE recalled that on Friday night Mr. Molotov had said he had to think our amendment over, and that at this time the Secretary had urged that all amendments must be in by midnight Friday night. She felt that the Secretary would be in a very difficult position if modifications of our amendment were now urged.

Mr. Rockefeller indicated his agreement with Ambassador Harriman that the Soviet representatives should be approached quite directly and with simple frankness.

Mr. Stassen indicated that if any effort was made to put into the basic document an exception for the western hemisphere, it would be a basic and tragic mistake. Mr. Stassen stated that the draft read by Mr. Dunn went too far and went further than the speech made by Senator Vandenberg on January 10,<sup>31</sup> which, having received general approval, represented in his view the basic policy of the United States. To go as far as Mr. Dunn suggested would weaken our influence in the world and undermine the charter, which the world now looked to us to conclude. Mr. Stassen proposed a more limited protocol under which the Western Hemisphere would be given permission to take enforcement action in the event of aggression in an emergency situation until the Security Council took over. He said he would agree to a revision of our position to that extent only, and that he would strongly oppose any move that would open up the rest of the world situation. Senator Vandenberg said he had no objection to this proposal. The Secretary agreed that this represented exactly his position. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that even this went too far.

Senator Connally felt that whatever was done, the Secretary would have to see Mr. Molotov before he left and tell him the situation.

Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that he would like to say a few words. He stated that the Act of Chapultepec does not provide for prior authorization of regional organizations by the general organization in taking enforcement action. The Act of Chapultepec says that whatever action is taken during the war must be in conformity with the world organization. At the time that the Act of Chapultepec was drafted it was our general understanding that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals were not subject to change and we negotiated under instructions to use Section C, Chapter VIII as a basis. Therefore, the only interpretation that we can justifiably make of the Act of Chapultepec is to interpret it as being consistent with the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. It is another story if we now propose to make a change.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that on Saturday in a three-hour talk which he had with Latin American representatives he emphasized that the United States did not and could not make commitments which went beyond paragraph 2 of Section C, Chapter VIII. Therefore, the Latin Americans would be aware of the fact that there is no commitment in the Act of Chapultepec beyond the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, nor are there any private commitments that go beyond the Proposals.

MR. PASVOLSKY said the basic situation we confront is to decide whether we wish to take the regional systems out of a world system of security. So far we have considered the Russians' proposal as applying only to special states in a special situation. In the course of our negotiations the one point we were not sure of was whether the Russians meant to go beyond this limited exception. On Friday afternoon we proposed a change in the Russian proposal limiting it to enemy states. The Russians accepted this, while a French representative also indicated his agreement with this limitation. The French Foreign Minister today said that he would reserve his position. In other words, the matter is not altogether "smoked out".

Mr. Paslovsky stated that he had one important point which he felt should be emphasized. If we open up the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals to allow for regional enforcement action on a collective basis, the world organization is finished. In that event, we have accepted the thesis brought forward openly, at the beginning by the British and voiced also in the Russian press. We then move into a system in which we rely for our security on regional groups, large states with their spheres of influence surrounded by groups of smaller states. We will convert the world into armed camps and end up with a world war unlike any we have yet seen.

Senator Vandenberg asked what the purpose was of the Act of Chapultepec.

MR. PASVOLSKY stated that the Act of Chapultepec fulfilled one useful and very necessary purpose. In 1940 at the Conference at Habana <sup>32</sup> the Monroe Doctrine was extended, so that if any one of the American states was attacked by a non-American power each assumed the responsibility to consider it an attack upon itself. Under that Doctrine we were able to call upon the other American states when Japan attacked us, since the Japanese attack was under this Doctrine an attack on each of the American states. The only state that did not respond was Argentina. All the other states broke their relations with the Axis or put their resources at our disposal.

Recently there was some feeling that the Doctrine developed at Habana was not enough. It did not cover an attack by one American state upon other American states. This explains the Act of Chapultepec which extends the area of the doctrine of joint responsibility, so that the attack by any American state upon another American state is an attack upon each American state.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that there were some at Mexico City who attempted to build a super-structure of a full-fledged regional system on the basis of this Doctrine. When first proposed, the draft for the Act of Chapultepec contained a mandatory obligation to use force which went way beyond the consultative obligations assumed under the Act of Habana. According to the first proposal, enforcement action would be mandatory for all American states when adopted by a majority. So, six Central American states, three island states, Venezuela, and Ecuador could send into action the forces of the United States. This mandatory obligation became in the course of negotiation an obligation to consult with the American states with a view to deciding what action should be taken.

Mr. Pasvolsky said he would like to point out that we are not now obligated permanently, as a treaty is envisaged in the Act of Chapultepec which would have to be ratified by the Senate. For the time being we are committed only to consulting and to determining what action is necessary to further the war effort. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that there was written into the Act of Chapultepec an enumeration of measures corresponding to those in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, which were there, he said, for some unaccountable reason. Moreover, there is the obligation, after the establishment of peace, to consider the conclusion of a treaty under which the wartime obligations would be assumed in perpetuity. Very important, however, was the fact stated in Chapter III of the Act of Chapultepec that the operation of the Act shall be in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Organization, when that Organization is set up.

Mr. Rockefeller stated that he tended to agree with Mr. Pasvolsky's statement and that it was interesting to note that the initiative for the Act of Chapultepec had come from Mr. Roosevelt, who had proposed to the Colombians that they propose a resolution for the mutual guarantee of borders in this hemisphere.<sup>33</sup> Mr. Roosevelt had said he would tell the Chinese and the Russians that this is what we intended to do. Mr. Rockefeller explained that the Latin Americans had no desire to withdraw from the World Organization and wanted to play their part fully. He thought that if Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion was adopted we would be able to move forward happily with the Latin Americans.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that there were three items not thoroughly considered in connection with the Act of Chapultepec:

(1) We never considered whether under this system we committed all of our forces or only a part of our forces.

(2) We never faced the question as to the kind of procedures by which our forces would be set in motion.

(3) Action could be taken, not only if a certain event took place, but also if there was suspicion of such an event, and we have not clarified our interpretation of intervention.

SENATOR VANDENBERG stated that the problem was that we would be helpless to act in the new world if our action was not wanted by China or Russia. Mr. Pasvolsky noted that thanks to our own veto power no state could interfere in this hemisphere. In the event of an attack upon us from within or without, we would go to the Security Council, and if the Security Council refused to act, we would take action in self-defense. There was no question, he said, but that if our security was immediately imperiled by the failure of the Organization to act, we would ourselves act.

Senator Vandenberg said this amounted to doing as we pleased. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that we would do as we pleased only if we were attacked and the council would not act. He asked what Senator Vandenberg thought we ought to do if the system failed. Senator Vandenberg asked Mr. Pasvolsky whether he would be willing to have him tell the Senate that if the Security Council voted no and we thought action was vitally necessary we could take action on our own. Mr. Pasvolsky remarked that he would have no objection to Senator Vandenberg making the statement that if the Security Council failed we would have to go ahead and act.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM asked whether the Monroe Doctrine still remained untouched. Mr. Pasvolsky replied in the affirmative. Senator Connally asked how the Monroe Doctrine was protected. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that the Monroe Doctrine is protected by our right of veto and by the obligation assumed by all the states, including the big powers, not to intervene. The old [whole?] system, he said, rests upon the good faith of the big powers and their willingness to behave. If they fall out there is no opportunity to keep the peace.

SENATOR VANDENBERG indicated that our only protection was then our right of independent action. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that this was not our only protection, but that there was certainly no statement in the text under which we would give up our right of independent action. Mr. Dulles indicated his general agreement with Mr. Pasvolsky, but pointed out that he would argue the case on different grounds. He thought that Senator Vandenberg could say that at no point would the member states give up their right to use force in all circumstances. Under principle four they pledged to refrain from the use of force in a manner inconsistent with the purposes of the organization. Since the prevention of aggression was a purpose of the organization, action to prevent aggression in the absence of action by the Security Council would be consistent with the purposes of the organization. He thought that if a European country vetoed action to prevent aggression in the Western Hemisphere, we would be entirely free to use force. Mr. Stassen stated that in order to keep us free to use force under these circumstances, he had previously favored the omission of the phrase in principle four "consistent with the provisions of the Charter". Senator Vandenberg commented that he had no further complaint to make, but that he was now convinced that the people would be disillusioned beyond words when they realized the plan. Mr. Stassen said he would be willing to speak on the subject and would gladly testify before the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee. Senator Vandenberg thought that there was a general renunciation of the right to use force. Both Mr. Dulles and Mr. Stassen pointed out that this was not the case.

Senator Connally suggested that Mr. McCloy make a statement. Mr. McCloy pointed out that he had just had a talk with certain Latin American delegates who had, in a tolerant and composed way, shown that they knew our problem and appreciated our situation. He felt there was a good chance that in the discussion of paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter VIII, an effort would be made to eliminate the veto provision. Mr. McClor had asked the Latin American delegates whether if we withdrew our proposal, making an exception of treaties against enemy states, this would solve the difficulty. He reported that they had replied in the negative, suggesting that the whole issue would have arisen anyway in connection with the veto power of the major nations. They appreciated the fact that we felt it necessary to keep our hand in Europe, realizing that we had spent our men and our resources in wars that had arisen in Europe over minor incidents. He reported that they appreciated our need of finding a formula, and that they were quite sympathetic.

Mr. McClor suggested that the question might be confronted by weighing the relative assets of Europe against the assets of this hemisphere. He personally believed that both assets were important in their own way, and he did not feel that we could sit here deciding between the value of the two assets in a hypothetical way. Mr. McClor felt we would have the sympathy of our Latin American friends in reaching a formula. He thought that if such a formula was reached we should consult the President. He proposed that the procedure suggested by Ambassador Harriman, to consult only after our position was clear and to hear from the Latin American delegations as to their attitude on the problem, would go a long, long way in helping the situation.

Senator Vandenberg asked Mr. McCloy what he recommended. Mr. McCloy recommended that we follow along the lines of the protocol already suggested. He realized, however, that the main difficulty lay in the veto power of the major powers.

Mr. Rockefeller expressed the feeling that we would lose the conception of consultation before acting if we accepted the proposal made by Mr. Stassen and Mr. Pasvolsky. Mr. Stassen pointed out that it was assumed that we would act in this hemisphere, in the event of the Security Council failing to act, only after consultation with the other states.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the following procedure be adopted:

(1) We should not take up changes in paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter VIII, as our proposals;

(2) We should take up the issue in the course of consultations with other countries and should state our position in the course of these consultations. A number of proposals, including the Cuban proposal, have been brought forward on this question. We should present our case in the course of discussing these proposals.

(3) The Secretary should meet with the Latin American repre-

(3) The Secretary should meet with the Latin American representatives as promptly as possible to get their views prior to discussing the question with Mr. Molotov. He added that we were now through with the period for refining the amendments of the Big Four and had come to the period for the discussion of the proposals of other governments. It was then perfectly natural to raise our problem in connection with the discussion of these other proposals.

Mr. Rockefeller pointed out that in addition to the Cuban proposals there were proposals by Chile and Paraguay. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that at the meeting the next day these proposals be brought up, that at first the five powers talk them over, and that then consultations should continue with the heads of the other delegations. Mr. Rockefeller agreed that this was sound procedure.

SENATOR VANDENBERG asked whether, in supporting the treaty that came out of this conference, which he expected to do, if he was asked to answer the question whether a state had the right of self-defense. Mr. Pasvolsky would support him in making a reservation on this question. He added that he expected that the Senate would insist on such a reservation and that he would want to support it. REPRE-SENTATIVE BLOOM asked whether the Senator meant an interpretation or a reservation. Senator Vandenberg replied that he meant an interpretative reservation. Senator Vandenberg thought that some reassurance would have to be given the Senate on the right of selfdefense. Mr. Pasvolsky urged that if the system failed, that is, if the Security Council did not act when it ought to, obviously a state was free to act to defend itself. Mr. McCloy commented that the issue might not arise as a clear case of self-defense. There was a possibility that the situation might arise in a more confused way. Sena-TOR VANDENBERG asked what he should then say to the Senate. Pasvolsky urged that he did not promise intervention, and Mr. Rocke-FELLER thought that the emphasis should not be on unilateral action. but rather on action through consultation.

Senator Connally asked what would happen if one South American country attacked another. The Council might wish to intervene, but we could veto action and act ourselves. Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that there would be a bad situation if a state acted first and talked to the Security Council afterward. Mr. Stassen said that he agreed with Mr. Pasvolsky that action should take place only when the Security Council failed to act or unduly delayed action. Mr. Pasvolsky said that he thought that Mr. Stassen earlier had said that we could act only "until" the Security Council takes action. Mr. Stassen said this was not what he had meant to imply.

THE SECRETARY requested that a statement be prepared that evening setting forth the issue as a basis for his talk with the President. Mr.

Bowman thought it was very important for the Secretary to be thoroughly briefed on this question since in his view it was at the heart of the whole problem.

THE SECRETARY asked that a further statement be prepared by Mr. Hickerson and his assistants for the use by the Secretary in talking with Mr. Molotov. Agreement was reached that Mr. Stassen, Senator Connally and Senator Vandenberg, Mr. Pasvolsky, Mr. Dulles, Mr. Rockefeller, and Mr. Bowman would join the Secretary in his talks with the Latin American representatives at 9:00 a. m. the next morning.

Mr. McCloy took issue with Mr. Pasvolsky's suggestion, and urged that we present the problem before us to Mr. Molotov as our own and not as a problem raised by the Latin American countries. The Secretary thought we should sleep on this question, but that he personally preferred at this time raising the issue in connection with the discussion of the proposals by other governments. Mr. Rockefeller thought that it was safer to be perfectly honest in this matter, and Mr. McCloy agreed that any other tack would arouse suspicion.

MR. PASVOLSKY added that we were now through with the period of defining the amendments of the Big Four and had come to the period for the discussion of the proposals of other governments. It was then perfectly natural to raise our problem in connection with the discussion of these other proposals. MR. PASVOLSKY said he intended to raise this question as the number one problem in the subcommittee appointed by the Big Five that afternoon.

THE SECRETARY asked that Mr. Dunn speak immediately to Mr. Gromyko, explaining that the Secretary would want to see Mr. Molotov before he left.

Mr. Stassen asked for the consent of the Delegation to the holding of a press conference by Mr. Bloom and himself to give background information on trusteeship. He noted that there was considerable demand for such a press conference. The request was granted.

The Secretary adjourned the meeting at 7:30 p.m.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Minister in Iceland (Dreyfus)

Washington, May 7, 1945—7 p. m.

75. In telephone conversations during the past few days the Minister of Iceland has urged upon officers of the Department the admission of Iceland to the San Francisco Conference on the grounds that several states have been admitted subsequent to the original March 1 deadline. Mr. Thors was informed that should his Government desire to present a formal request <sup>36</sup> it would, of course, be given consideration but that it seemed very doubtful that a favorable reply could be expected. It was pointed out to Mr. Thors that a declaration of war against one of the Axis powers is still a requisite for signature of the United Nations Declaration and that the Department had so far received no indication of a change in Icelandic opinion in this regard. Mr. Thors admitted that it was highly improbable that Iceland would declare war on Germany and in fact stated that in his opinion such a declaration at this late date would be ridiculous. He further stated that a declaration of war on Japan was quite out of the question.

It appears, however, that Mr. Thors has suggested to his brother, the Foreign Minister, that since the Ukraine and White Russia have been made members of the United Nations the Foreign Minister might try the experiment of writing a private letter to Secretary Stettinius asking for an application for membership in the United Nations on behalf of Iceland. Should the Foreign Minister request your views, you may advise him in the sense of the first paragraph of this telegram.

Minutes of the Thirty-Third Meeting of the United States Delegation, Held at San Francisco, Tuesday, May 8, 1945, 5 p. m.

[Informal Notes—Extracts]

[Here follows list of names of persons (32) present at meeting.] Senator Connally called the meeting to order at 5:00 p.m.

&lt;sup>∞</sup> In a note of May 10 to the Acting Secretary of State (not printed), the Icelandic Minister expressed the desire of his Government to attend the San Francisco Conference, indicated that since the enemy in Europe had been completely defeated, there could be no longer any question of Iceland's declaring war, and stressed the feeling of the Government and the people of Iceland "that they have made their contribution to the United Nations' war effort by lending their country for important military bases and by sacrificing the lives of many hundreds of seamen engaged in transportation of food to Britain and the United States." (500.CC/5–1045) The text of the note was telegraphed to San Francisco (telegram 75, May 7, 1945), but the Conference took no action on the Icelandic request. (500.CC/5–1145)

Agenda of Meeting

Mr. Bowman stated that a useful meeting had been held with the Advisers during the previous hour and that since an emergency matter had arisen concerning the regional question, he understood this meeting would now be in executive session, with the military advisers only. . . . (All Advisers except the Principal Advisers and Military Advisers and Senator McCarran 37 then left the meeting.)

DISCUSSION OF REGIONAL PROBLEM

At Senator Connally's request, Mr. Sandifer introduced a Draft Memorandum for the President, May 8, 1945,38 which the Secretary had asked the Secretariat to prepare as a basis for his talks with the President on the question involving the inter-American system and its relationship to the proposed international organization. Mr. Sandifer stated that the draft was only a preliminary one to get before the Delegation the main ideas. Mr. Sandiffer then read the draft.

[Here follows inconclusive discussion of the draft memorandum.] (The Secretary joined the meeting.)

THE SECRETARY stated that he had two or three quick things to discuss: First, he wished to report that the Executive Committee had held a successful session; 39 secondly, the Steering Committee meeting had gone very well; 40 and thirdly, the regional question was now wide open. He said he had just left an international press conference and that the story was out in the open. He said we were going to be faced with the whole question in the press and the radio the next day. Further, Mr. Molotov was saying "goodbye" this evening at 8:30, but was planning to come here at 7 o'clock to meet with Mr. Eden and the other foreign ministers.41 He expected to have a statement from the Delegation to be used in his talk at 7 o'clock with Mr. Molotov.

The meeting of the Big Five at 7 p. m. at the Fairmont Hotel was to be the last meeting of the Foreign Ministers. Mr. Stettinius recorded in his Diary of May 8 that there apparently had been some misunderstanding, for Mr. Molotov did not show up. Representatives of the United States at this meeting included Mr. Stattinius and six others the United Kingdom Mr. Edon and two others. Mr. Stettinius and six others; the United Kingdom, Mr. Eden and two others; China, Mr. Koo and one other; the Soviet Union, only Mr. Gromyko; and France, Mr. Bidault and four others. Mr. Stettinius said he would make his two-minute statement and then repeat it to Mr. Molotov at his meeting with him later at 8: 30 o'clock. He then talked from a prepared statement and outlined three main points to be considered by the meeting (see record of meeting with Mr. Molotov, infra). Mr. Stettinius noted that Mr. Eden's response was immediate—namely, that the first two questions were minor but the third (that the Latin Americans proposed to make reservations in favor of the Inter-American system) raised all kinds of questions and made him "very unhappy".

Mr. Dulles thought that considerable time would be wasted if the Delegation continued to discuss the memorandum to the President. He did not feel that the question could be adequately represented to the President except orally, particularly because of the differing view points. He said the memorandum represented an honest attempt to state the differing views fairly, but that it would be unfair to the President to ask him to make a decision without giving him adequate background.

Senator Vandenberg stated that the President was entitled to an entirely developed recommendation and that quick judgments under the pressure of events would not be satisfactory.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY AT THE MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

THE SECRETARY said it was vital to have a document from which he could speak to Mr. Molotov. Mr. Dunn indicated that Mr. Raynor was on his way down with the document. Mr. McCloy stated that he had come to the conclusion that no document short of an essay would adequately cover the question under discussion. The Secretary reported that he would like to send to the President a long night letter that he would have in the morning, so that when he telephoned the President the President would have an intelligent understanding of the issues.

Mr. McCloy asked whether the Delegation would like to have a report on the telephone conversation he had had that afternoon with Mr. Stimson. The Delegation indicated their interest. Mr. McCloy stated that Mr. Stimson had listened to his comments on the regional problems with great interest and had then indicated the following point of view. Secretary Stimson had requested that we try to obtain the right to move in this hemisphere free of the veto of the Security Council. This right, he felt, we should seek at the expense of the immediate non-concurrence of the Soviet Union. The Secretary had stressed that we should certainly have this right in internal western hemispheric matters. The Secretary had stressed the importance of preserving solidarity in the Western Hemisphere. He had pointed out the long heritage of pacific settlement in the Hemisphere. The Secretary of War had emphasized the fundamental need of finding a formula to meet the situation.

The Secretary of War did not believe that the one exception for this Hemisphere would cut the heart out of the document, but had expressed the hope that there would be no requests for further exceptions. He had said he wanted more time to consider whatever counterrequests came up before reaching a final decision upon this question. He urged that, since the matter was one that should be considered at the highest level, a decision should not be rushed into.

Mr. Dulles stated that he had had some doubt as to whether the Soviets really wanted a world organization. Since he had come to San Francisco he had concluded that they would want an organization in order to get the maximum possible voice outside their own sohere of influence. They accepted the fact that they would be able to deal in their own sphere and he believed they felt that, working through a world security system, they might be able to influence areas outside their direct control. He thought this might mean that we could get an exemption for the Western Hemisphere without actually being driven out of Europe. The Russians, wanting to get as much as they could in the way of influence outside their own sphere, might be willing to accept the best they could get. Mr. Dulles indicated that he was not sure that we would have to give up our voice in Western Europe, but that the Secretary might want to keep these ideas in mind in determining his tactics. The Secretary thought that Mr. Dulles had made a very wise observation.

THE SECRETARY then read the following memorandum prepared for his use at the meeting of foreign ministers:

"I. Quick Survey of Important Amendments Proposed by Other Countries

"(a) French suggest change in voting on recommendations in Security Council to classify recommendations as procedural matters, thus removing from themselves [removing in these cases?] the necessity of unanimity among the permanent members.

"(b) Netherlands have proposed shift of Paragraph I of Chapter VIII, Section B, to Section A. This will have the effect of making a party to a dispute unable to vote on decisions as to aggression or breach of peace.

"(c) Latin American Republics propose adjustment in regional arrangements to take care of Act of Chapultepec as was done in the case of European treaties.<sup>42</sup> (If questioned as to formula, we should say that we have not had time to analyze the question but we are basically sympathetic.)"

THE SECRETARY thought that an introduction would be necessary running as follows: He would say that he was terribly sorry that Mr. Molotov was leaving, that this was the last time that the ministers of the five powers would all meet together. However, he would be

With reference to a meeting with Latin American Foreign Ministers, May 8, 9 a.m., in the Penthouse, Mr. Stettinius reported to the President and Mr. Hull in telegram 2, May 9, as follows: "The chiefs of eight Latin American delegations called on me this morning and presented a very urgent plea that the implementation of the Act of Chapultepec not be made subject to the veto of a single non-American power. On the other hand members of the United States delegation pointed out to them the disadvantages which would ensue if the focus of international security were to be placed in regional understandings rather than in the General International Organization. No conclusion was reached and the American delegation is still working actively on the question in the hope of finding a satisfactory formula which will relieve the Latin American apprehensions without seriously weakening the Charter." (500.CC/5-945) sure to notify any one of the ministers that had to leave of events, if necessary by telephone. The Secretary suggested that he might further add that there were two or three suggestions brought up by other governments. They would certainly have to be discussed and there were specifically three that he would like to mention at this time. The Secretary indicated that he might say that these three questions have to be ironed out and would express the hope that when we communicated with any one of the foreign ministers we would find adjustments that would be agreeable to all concerned.

Mr. Armstrong indicated that the important point was to assure that Mr. Molotov would not be surprised by later exchanges of views.

Mr. McCloy urged that Senator Vandenberg's position should be included that we were not going to whittle down what we had already proposed for the Soviet Union. The Secretary stated that he might say that we were going to do nothing that would whittle down the rights that the Soviet Union wanted. Senator Vandenberg said the matter might be stated more directly that we would protect the Soviet proposal to the finish, and that we would merely ask their cooperation in a collateral phase of the matter that would affect us but not the Soviet Union.

Mr. Dunn thought the discussion should not be pointed at Mr. Molotov. He added that, at the suggestion of the Secretary, he had put this whole matter up to Sir Alexander Cadogan who had expressed concern lest any exception be extended and the Security Council's authority be seriously impaired.

THE SECRETARY, reported that Mr. Eden had expressed the same concern when the Secretary talked to him at the reception given by the Soviet Union for the representatives of the two Soviet Republics.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE felt there was too much of an implication that we were engaged in a duel with the Soviet Union, when in fact there were other very important implications.

Mr. Pasvolsky did not think we should use the phrase "but we are basically sympathetic" until the Secretary had received an authorization by the President to take that position. Mr. Pasvolsky thought the Secretary should say that we are trying to find a solution. Ambassador Harriman, who had come into the meeting with the Secretary, urged that the important thing was to get into Mr. Molotov's mind the idea that we might want to press this matter. We would have to do this in order to feel free later to back a particular position. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested the phrase "we are sympathetically trying to find a solution". He thought the Secretary would get himself out on a limb if he said we were sympathetic to the Latin American proposed the phrasing "we are sympathetic to the purpose of reaching an adjustment".

THE SECRETARY asked Mr. Rockefeller what had destroyed the faith of the American republics in the general organization when they arrived here in San Francisco. He said it was obvious that they had lost their confidence in the general organization and had nowhere near the genuine sincerity and interest they had previously expressed. Mr. Rockefeller replied that the reason for this loss of faith could be traced to the way the Soviet representatives had behaved toward the Secretary and their actions in general, their maneuvers and the entirely novel type of tactics that the Latin American representatives had come up against. Mr. Dunn thought it was as much the attitude of the Soviets toward the other American republics. Senator Van-DENBERG felt that a new and hysterical dread was sweeping the representatives of the American republics. Mr. McCLoy suggested that the death of Mr. Roosevelt might explain the situation in part. Mr. STASSEN suggested that the President should speak out strongly on the Pan American Union, and THE SECRETARY noted that the President had already made one speech which had been an excellent one.43 Mr. ROCKEFELLER indicated that the representatives of the American republics were coming around to the position that, until the world organization proved its effectiveness, the Western Hemisphere system should be free from the necessity of any authorization for action by the Security Council. Mr. Dunn noted that some of the representatives were saying that there was no use for the international organi-Mr. Stassen said that this was nothing more than a narrow isolationist approach and that it was exceedingly dangerous.

Ambassador Harriman stated that it was important for the Secretary not to commit us tonight but merely to make Mr. Molotov understand that this issue would certainly come up in the near future. Mr. Stassen thought that the memorandum that had been prepared for use by the Secretary was excellent and that the Secretary should certainly not allow Mr. Molotov to leave without raising this matter with him. Dean Gildersleeve asked whether it was true that the Arab delegations had told the Latin Americans that they would vote with them. Mr. Rockefeller reported that the Arabs had offered to support the Latin Americans, giving them five votes, but that the Latin Americans had refused.

THE SECRETARY remarked that the draft memorandum as it stood was unsatisfactory and that it should be re-dictated immediately in the light of the suggestions made during the discussions. Senator Vandenberg thought that we should stress that we wanted an exception only until the organization proves its reliability and that we would fight to the death the right of the Soviet Union to the same privilege.

 $<sup>^{43}</sup>$  For address broadcast from Washington on April 25, for the opening session of the Conference, see Department of State Bulletin, April 29, 1945, p. 789.

Mr. Dunn urged that whatever the Secretary said should not be directed at Mr. Molotov alone. The Secretary agreed that he would speak to the four ministers.

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM remarked that the Latin American representatives were afraid that the Monroe Doctrine would be destroyed. He thought that, if they were reassured on this question, they might be more tractable on the other question. The Secretary stated that Mr. Stassen and Mr. Pasvolsky had assured the Latin American representatives of our position on this question.

Mr. Dulles pointed out that, if the Secretary made the statement that we were not going to take anything away from the Soviet Union that we had already granted them, we would be precluded from cutting down the scope of the phrase "enemy states". Mr. Dunn urged that the Secretary not argue a case with Mr. Molotov but merely raise the issue. Mr. Bowman stressed that it might be unwise to urge our position on the ground that we doubted the adequacy or reliability of the general organization. This, he said, would put the general organization in a very weak position from the start.

THE SECRETARY asked that Mr. Raynor and Mr. Hickerson proceed immediately to have a redraft made of the memorandum which would then be brought to the Delegation for its approval.

REPORT OF DRAFTING SUBCOMMITTEE OF FIVE-POWER GROUP

Mr. Pasvolsky announced that the subcommittee appointed by the five-power group 44 had agreed upon ten broad topics that would be used as a basis for reaching agreement on the proposals:

- 1. Increase in the powers of the General Assembly on security matters.
- 2. Obligation of all members to carry out decisions of the Security Council.
- 3. Increase in the number of members of the Security Council.
- 4. Veto powers of the permanent members of the Security Council.5. Purposes and Principles of the Organization.
- 6. Regional arrangements.
  - a. Mutual aid pacts.
  - b. Economic and social arrangements.
- 7. Definition of aggression.
- 8. Compulsory jurisdiction of the international court.
- 9. Peaceful change.
- 10. Admission, expulsion and suspension of members.

Mr. Pasvolsky announced that the international secretariat was preparing a collection of the proposals on all these ten topics. The procedure will be to go over the proposals on each of the topics and report the results of the preliminary discussion to the meeting of foreign ministers. Mr. Pasvolsky added that the Secretariat was having considerable difficulty in preparing the documentation and that discussion would be delayed in view of the fact that all the amendments would have to be available in order that they might all be considered on the same footing.

Mr. Stassen indicated that the ten points were very good. He thought that if we gave way to the smaller powers on a number of these points, we would be able to get agreement on a Charter in rather short order.

(The Secretary then left the meeting.)

DISCUSSION OF REGIONAL PROBLEM

Mr. Rockefeller felt that further consideration should be given to backing up our position that the Organization does not affect the Monroe Doctrine. He felt personally that the two were now mutually exclusive. Under the provisions of Chapter VIII, if we were attacked, the only way we could take action would be to ask permission of the Security Council. On the Security Council one state could veto action. He felt the Monroe Doctrine was not safeguarded unless we could take action to protect ourselves. If we did take action in spite of the Security Council, it would, as Mr. Stassen said, break up the Organization. Mr. Dulles indicated that he had prepared a memorandum 45 on the question of the Monroe Doctrine which he thought covered the point raised by Mr. Rockefeller. Senator Vandenberg thought Mr. Dulles' memorandum was totally disillusioning. Mr. Stassen thought that the memorandum was good, and that, in so far as the Monroe Doctrine meant that an attack on one American state was an attack on all, he thought it was not inconsistent with the General Organization. Senator Vandenberg commented that Mr. Dulles' point of view reduced itself to the principle that we have the right to do anything we please in self-defense. Mr. Rockefeller stated that that was perhaps our own interpretation, but that it was not expressed in the Charter. Mr. Stassen said that the Charter was limited to describing the methods by which to prevent the necessity of resorting to self-defense.

Senator Connally stated that he felt that the question under discussion was a very critical one, and that we were facing a very difficult problem, particularly in view of the attitude taken by the Latin American representatives that they want absolute control of action in this Hemisphere. Mr. Rockefeller thought that the Latin American representatives would be willing to take a compromise.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE asked why we were not proceeding with the proposal for a protocol, under which prior authorization would be given to the Pan American system. Mr. Pasvolsky indicated that prior authorization was in fact the same as an exception, as it would always be possible for us to prevent the Security Council from taking over responsibility for action in this Hemisphere. Senator Vandenberg stated that he could not get away from the feeling that Mr. Dulles' interpretation made every state a law unto itself.

Senator Connally asked Mr. Rockefeller how far he thought the American republics would be willing to go. Would they oppose the General Organization altogether? Mr. Rockefeller replied that they had faith in the Secretary and wanted to find a solution of the problem. He believed that they were hopeful that a solution could be worked out, and that their main concern was not to permit the liquidation of the inter-American system.

REVISED MEMORANDUM FOR SECRETARY AT FOREIGN MINISTERS'.

MEETING 46

DISCUSSION OF REGIONAL PROBLEM

MR. DUNN stated that for background the delegates might wish to know that the British and French were engaged in setting up a Western European bloc. The question of the establishment of this bloc was no longer in doubt. The only problem was who would dominate it. He thought that other regional blocs would possibly be developed along similar lines in other areas. Senator Vandenberg stated that this might be a healthy thing in order to prevent control by Russia of the entire European Continent.

Mr. Stassen thought it was very important for us not to weaken our hand out in the areas of the world where difficulties begin. We wanted to preserve the solidarity of the Hemisphere, but we should also keep a strong hand in other areas so that we could meet problems when they first came up rather than when they had already developed into first-class wars.

MR. MACLEISH questioned what the result would be if we put our faith in the Western Hemisphere alone. Would it not in the last analysis result in our being thrown back on preserving the peace in this Hemisphere alone and at the same time preparing for possible attack from abroad? While we would keep up our Army in any event in joining the General International Organization, would we not be in a position where we would have to have an even larger army if we pulled into the shell of this Hemisphere?

Mr. McCLoy stated that from the military point of view it was important to have the strength of this Continent in order to be able to branch out. We could not, for example, get to North Africa unless we had a considerable area in this Hemisphere from which to operate.

We depended on Brazil, for example. He added that of course the more consultation we had with the Latin American powers the better, and that we could not afford to ignore the significance of the western continental land mass as a factor in any of our military operations. Mr. MacLeish repeated that he questioned where dependence on the Western Hemisphere exclusively would leave us.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that the South American representatives should consider what was involved in the use of force in the Western Hemisphere under the inter-American system. That system, he said. had been built on the basis of consultative arrangements and procedures for peaceful settlement and the principle of non-intervention. Now it was proposed to use force under this system. If this policy was adopted, what we have had at its best would exist no longer. We would have intervention on a grand scale. Where would we be, he asked, if we had intervened with our military might in Argentina? GENERAL EMBICK pointed out that the Argentinian situation had seriously worried the military. Our policy had been not to foment a situation there unless we could count upon the neighboring countries. If we attempted anything alone, we would have greatly prejudiced the war in Europe, but with the cooperation of adjoining countries we could have easily handled the situation. The fact of the matter was. he said, that in order to have essential bases for our security, the solidarity of the Western Hemisphere was indispensable. Admiral Hep-BURN suggested that he feared that the use of force in this Hemisphere might result in the extension of subversive political principles.

The meeting was adjourned by Senator Connally at 6:30 p.m.

Memorandum by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Member of the United States Delegation, of a Conversation Held at San Francisco, May 8, 1945, 8:30 p.m.

Present: The Secretary Ambassador Harriman

Mr. Molotov Mr. Pavlov Mr. Dunn Mr. Bohlen

THE SECRETARY expressed his great regret at Mr. Molotov's forthcoming departure and his appreciation for the cooperative spirit of their work together here at the Conference.

Mr. Molotov warmly thanked the Secretary, and through him, the American Government for all the hospitality and friendly treatment he had received during his stay in the United States.

THE SECRETARY thanked Mr. Molotov for the picture which he had received this afternoon and presented Mr. Molotov with one of himself in return, also a salad bowl made from redwood which Mr. Molotov accepted with deep appreciation. He then said that despite the departure of Mr. Molotov, he hoped it would be possible to communicate with him for purposes of consultation, since, although they had reached a large measure of agreements already, there were bound to be questions put forward by other countries which would require careful consideration by the sponsoring powers.

Mr. Molorov said, of course, such consultations should continue and he was leaving as his deputy, Ambassador Gromyko who was thoroughly familiar with all the problems at the Conference and of Dumbarton Oaks.

THE SECRETARY said he had in mind questions of the following type which would be raised by other countries. He briefly outlined the following important amendments which had been proposed by other countries:

1—The French suggestion that recommendations of the Council should be regarded as procedural questions not requiring unanimity of the permanent members—

2—The Dutch suggestion to move paragraph one of Chapter 8 from Section B to Section A in cases involving threats of aggression or breach of the peace which would mean that the parties to such disputes would not be entitled to vote—

3—The Latin American countries were proposing that adjustments be made in the section dealing with regional agreements so as to safeguard the inter-American system, i.e. the Act of Chapultepec as had been done in the case of the European treaties.

In regard to the last point, the Secretary said he wished to make it clear that as far as the U.S. Government was concerned, any consideration of the Latin American suggestions would not affect the agreement already reached in regard to treaties directed against enemy states and that the U.S. would fully support the agreement reached on this point.

Mr. Molorov said he felt that the proper course was for the sponsoring powers to defend the agreements in regard to the amendments which they had worked out themselves. He said he felt that points 1 and 2 mentioned by the Secretary were fully covered in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals and in the Crimea decisions. He added that from the Soviet point of view, until agreements were reached, everyone was free to discuss and argue, but that once an agreement was reached, they should all undertake to defend it and in this way insure harmony of action and guarantee the success of the Conference.

Ambassador Harriman pointed out that the views of other countries would have to be heard and there might even be strong pressures for one suggestion or another. He said he felt it would be a mistake for the big powers to give any ground for belief that they were attempting to intimidate the smaller powers.

Mr. Molorov said there was, of course, no question of intimidation, but he felt if an agreement had been reached, those who reached it should endeavor to explain, convince and persuade the other nations as to the common advantage of the agreements reached. After further expression of gratitude for his kind treatment in the United States, Mr. Molotov left, after urging with great sincerity that the Secretary not come down to see him off at the airport.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Chairman of the United States Delegation (Stettinius)

Washington, May 8, 1945.

8. At his press conference yesterday 47 Molotov is reported to have stated that Russia will take the initiative in having the International Organization clothed with power actively to promote self-government for dependent peoples. Although this has been our historic role, Russia, I fear, may appear before the world as the champion of all dependent peoples. Molotov's move may confirm in the minds of the people of Asia their already strong suspicion that the Anglo-American powers are not their real champions and will turn to Russia as their more outspoken friend and spokesman.

Although I am sure you have these thoughts in mind, I thought perhaps you would like to have our own impression of the importance of Molotov's statement.

[Informal Notes]

[Here follows list of names of participants, including the Chairmen of delegations of the United States, United Kingdom, and France, the Acting Chairmen of delegations of the Soviet Union and China, together with various unnamed delegates, advisers and members of the technical staffs.]

In opening the meeting, THE SECRETARY said that he hoped to make it as short as possible, since they had one major item on their agenda, namely, the report from the Subcommittee of their Deputies. Accordingly, he said, he would call upon Mr. Pasvolsky as his Deputy to report to this meeting.

&lt;sup>47</sup> UNCIO press release No. 55, May 7, not printed.

MR. PASVOLSKY said that the assignment of the Deputies had covered two points:

1. The suggested procedure for drafting the final Charter, and

2. The establishment of a system whereby consultations might proceed respecting the amendments placed before the Conference by the other Governments.

He said that his Subcommittee had completed the first of these assignments, and that there was being distributed a copy of the procedure which was being suggested for the approval of the heads of the Delegations. He said that on the second point, the method had been established for reviewing the mass of amendments now pending before the Conference and that he thought that they would be able to proceed rapidly with these consultations.

1. Drafting Final Charter

At Mr. Stettinius' request, Mr. Pasvolsky summarized the document shown in Annex A.48

Following this oral summary of the document, Mr. Steptinius said that in his opinion, each member of the five should appoint a deputy to sit on the Coordination Committee, and that the Coordination Committee would then report to the Executive Committee. He said that it was his understanding that the procedure set forth in the draft proposed by the Subcommittee was in the nature of a unanimous recommendation to the heads of the Delegations. Mr. Pasvolsky also noted that it was the recommendation of the Subcommittee that if the document was approved by the five heads of Delegations, it should then be submitted to the Executive Committee for its approval before it would become operative.

Mr. Stettinius then asked for comments on the document.

MR. BIDAULT said that paragraph 6 seemed to be a bit complicated. MR. STETTINIUS said that both paragraphs 6 and 7 seemed to be somewhat complicated and both envisioned a problem which, in his judgment, would have to be met when it arose. MR. Eden agreed with this point of view. MR. Pasvolsky suggested that if the paragraphs were dropped, the procedure that they contemplated would, of course, have to be kept in mind.

Mr. Gromyko then inquired as to whether the heads of the Delegations would sit on the Coordination Committee, stating that in his view this would be a preferable procedure. Mr. Steptinius said that he could not agree to such a proposal; that in his judgment it would be better if the members of the Coordination Committee were of the technical level, otherwise there would be great confusion. Mr. Gromyko said that in that event, he recommended that Mr. Sobolev sit as the Soviet member of the Coordination Committee.

REPRESENTATIVE EATON expressed the hope that in the drafting of the Charter, it would be written so that the common people could understand it.

Mr. Stettinius said that if there were no further comments on the Subcommittee's report, it would be accepted as modified.

MR. PASVOLSKY then raised the question as to the manner in which the procedure could be adopted, expressing the view that the drafting procedure could be adopted by the Executive Committee without referral to the Steering Committee. Messrs. Stetting, Eden, Bidault, and Koo agreed that this would be the procedure to follow, with Mr. Koo noting that it might be well to report the action to the Steering Committee at its next meeting.

Mr. Hiss then suggested that the Coordination Committee itself should meet informally first to approve the procedure and then have the Executive Committee meet formally to approve the document itself. Mr. Pasvolsky said he would agree with such a suggestion if the only business before the Coordination Committee at such a meeting was the approval of such a procedure.

Although Mr. Eden expressed the opinion that this seemed to be a slow procedure, Mr. Stettinius said that in his view the Coordination Committee could be quickly called together, even later in the afternoon, to discuss the document and then to clear it with their respective members on the Coordination Committee.<sup>49</sup> Then, if it appeared to be necessary, the Executive Committee could meet the following morning at 10:30 for the purpose of approving the document itself.<sup>50</sup>

This procedure seemed to be agreeable, and Mr. Hiss was requested to make the necessary arrangements at once.

As the meeting closed, Mr. Dunn suggested, and The Secretary approved, that the head of each Delegation might also wish to appoint an alternate to the Deputy which he appointed to the Coordination Committee.

Whereupon the meeting adjourned at 3:45 p.m.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF THE COORDINATION COMMITTEE

THE SECRETARY stated that it was necessary to appoint at once the members of the Coordination Committee, which was to meet at 6:00 o'clock.<sup>51</sup> This Committee was to comprise fourteen members, namely, one deputy for each member of the Executive Committee. It had also been agreed that each deputy would have an alternate. The SECRETARY proposed that the deputy and alternate for the United States be Mr. Pasvolsky and Mr. Dunn respectively. This proposal was approved by the Delegation.

ATTENDANCE AT COMMISSION AND COMMITTEE MEETINGS OF THE WORLD TRADE UNION AND OF QTHER ORGANIZATIONS

THE SECRETARY remarked that he wished to submit to the Delegation an emergency matter on which a decision must be taken without delay. The problem arose out of a vote taken by the Economic and Social Committee to invite the World Trade Union Conference to send a representative to the meetings of the Committee.<sup>52</sup> He requested Mr. Hiss to explain the situation.

Mr. Hiss explained the parliamentary situation stating that the Steering Committee was the only body of the Conference competent to pass upon the subject and that it had made a positive but not a negative decision, i.e., it had approved an invitation to the five official organizations but had not explicitly ruled out invitations to the other organizations. He was of the opinion that if the question of the invitation to the World Trade Union Conference were brought up in the Steering Committee an acrimonious debate would ensue.

THE SECRETARY requested that Mr. Hiss call a meeting of the Steering Committee for 10:30 the next morning to consider the question.<sup>53</sup> He likewise requested Mr. Hiss to hold up sending the invitation of the Economic and Social Committee pending a final disposition of the issue.

NON-PERMANENT MEMBERSHIP ON THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Senator Connally remarked that pressure for an increase in the membership of the Security Council up to fifteen members was building up and asked for suggestions on how this could be met. He thought that Mr. Rockefeller might have something to contribute on this point since a great deal of the pressure was emanating from the Latin American group. Mr. Rockefeller said that this was in part a reflection of the desire of Brazil for a permanent seat and of the group as a whole for at least two nonpermanent seats.

COMMANDER STASSEN expressed the opinion that the delegations pressing for an increase in membership should be reminded that the five permanent members represented 65 percent of the peoples of the world. Senator Connally said in this connection that in the Assembly all states, regardless of size and importance, would have an equal vote and that a majority would elect six of the members of the Security Council. Mr. Dulles characterized the discussion developing on this subject as "academic" since an increase in the permanent and non-permanent members was out of the question. Mr. Rockefeller held that while this might be true it was desirable and wise to allow full and free discussion since it would permit the middle and small states to "get the thing off their chests".

COMMANDER STASSEN'S PROGRESS REPORT ON TRUSTEESHIP

COMMANDER STASSEN reported that the conversations with the other four powers had not yet reached the stage where anything could be approved and indicated that the following problems were being discussed:

(a) the non-discriminatory language was opposed by the British and the French and the possibility of a different approach was being explored.

(b) the British opposed the distinction between strategic and nonstrategic territories.

(c) the handling of welfare problems of the inhabitants of the trusteeship territories was causing difficulties and it had been suggested that jurisdiction over these problems be delegated by the Security Council to the trustee governments.

(d) we were opposing a British proposal that the trusteeship governments have the right to conscript the forces and facilities of the trusteeship territory.

- (e) the British and French opposed the right to petition and investigate. We were standing firm on the right to petition and would insist on some right of inspection within the general trusteeship territories.
- (f) France was opposed to the self-government phrase, apparently because of the absence of an adequate equivalent in French. The British were prepared to accept this terminology with proper qualifications.

Mr. Fraser, the Chairman of the Committee, was anxious to proceed without delay and a comparative study of the proposals was now being prepared.

The meeting was adjourned at 6:27 p.m.

[Informal Notes]

CONTINUATION OF THE DISCUSSION OF REGIONAL PROBLEM

Prior to the opening of the meeting Mr. Dulles stated that he had a memorandum in preparation indicating the five ways of dealing with the regional problem. He suggested that a meeting be held with the principal advisers on the draft memorandum this evening, and that the memorandum then be made available to the Delegation. He said that he had already had some reactions from the principal advisers. Mr. Pasvolsky commented that the memorandum was excellent. Mr. Dulles commented that the memorandum presented the arguments for and against each of the five alternatives. He thought the memorandum might be used as a basis for reaching an agreed recommendation. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that Mr. Rockefeller should meet with the principal advisers this evening. He pointed out that Mr. Dulles had previously focused attention on a very important point, and the Act of Chapultepec only visualizes a treaty and does not provide for a specific treaty system.

Mr. Dulles explained that his memorandum makes the point that there is no correlation between the existing treaty system in this hemisphere and the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. The Act of Chapultepec simply recommends the ratification of the treaty in the future. Before there would be a conflict, there would have to be a conference held to consider the draft of a treaty. He questioned whether this could ever happen. Moreover, he said, the treaty would have to be ratified by twenty-one republics, which he thought was altogether unlikely. Only after these two hurdles were surmounted would there perhaps be a conflict between the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and the treaty system. He thought there were 99 chances out of 100 that the issue of such a conflict would never have to be faced. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that if the recommendation of the Act of Chapultepec was translated into treaty terms we ourselves would probably object.

ANNOUNCEMENTS BY THE SECRETARY

THE SECRETARY convened the meeting formally and indicated that he had a number of announcements to make to the Delegation.

1. Mr. Gromyko had called to present to the Secretary comments and amendments of the Soviet Union on our trusteeship proposals.<sup>54</sup>...

[Here follow numbered paragraphs 2–7 containing announcements on questions of expediting the Conference, non-admittance of non-Governmental organizations to Committee meetings; providing information on developments to Senator McCarran, changing time of meetings of the Delegation to 9 a.m., postponing discussions of the location of the Organization, and keeping all members of Committees and Commissions informed of the progress of work.]

LOCATION OF THE ORGANIZATION

THE SECRETARY stated that it had been the feeling of many in the Delegation that this question was not one with which we should attempt to deal at this Conference, since it would raise all manner of knotty problems. He suggested that we agree here on the place for the holding of the meeting of the General Assembly and put up to the General Assembly the task of deciding on a permanent location. He felt that there was the possibility of the development of blocs if this matter was considered at the Conference. Mr. Pasvolsky agreed that the best procedure might well be to await recommendations by the Preparatory Commission on both the question of the location of the Organization and the place of the first meeting of the General Assembly. Mr. Dunn agreed with this proposal. Mr. Stassen (who had just come into the meeting) expressed approval of the Secretary's recommendation and Mr. Pasvolsky's addition.

THE SECRETARY recommended that Mr. Sandifer consult with the two Senators who were not present on this question and if they were agreeable we would make this recommendation to the sponsoring governments and then take it up in the Executive Committee.

CONTINUATION OF DISCUSSION OF REGIONAL PROBLEM

Mr. Stassen stated that he had had another idea in connection with the regional question that had come from his discussions with members of the Delegation and Advisers. He added that he had just come from a meeting of the regional subcommittee (III/4) 55 at which the Colombian Delegate 56 had eloquently and clearly pressed his case for a regional exemption in this hemisphere. Mr. Stassen reported that it was a perfect plea for hemispheric isolation. The Colombian Delegate had stated that a regional arrangement in the Western Hemisphere was better than the general organization as a means of preserving security. Under this system responsibility is placed on the regional system to take action to maintain peace. He had pointed out that military and economic sanctions were still only contemplated in this hemisphere but that these could be developed. The Colombian Delegate proposed that exceptions be made for the Western Hemisphere and added that he also believed in such an exception for Pan-Arabia. He continued that if in the future there were two or three or four regions he did not believe that would be a danger to the peace, but thought that that would more assuredly result in security. The Colombian Delegate said of course that one could not foresee developments. For the time being, he would ask for only one exception, since further developments could not be clearly anticipated.

Soviet proposal on trusteeship, see Doc. 324, II/4/5(a), May 15, ibid., vol. 10, p. 671.

Mr. Stassen pointed out that the Colombian had revealed assumptions that he had anticipated were behind the Latin American position. It was clear that their position was not based on sound reasoning.

Mr. Stassen pointed out that he had heard over and over again that the basic objection to the present plan was the inability of a regional organization to act in the event of an arbitrary veto of one of the major powers. He said he had come to the conclusion that it might be best to spell out in the Charter the right of self-defense, in order to meet the recurrent criticism on this question. Mr. Stassen then read the following memorandum:

"Memorandum to U.S. Delegates and Advisers

"On the basis of suggestions and discussions these past few days with a number of our delegates and advisers it appears to me that the following would be the best answer to our regional problem and it would at the same time meet other problems. This language arises from the suggestions of other delegates and advisers.

"VI-E. Self-Defense

"1. Nothing in this Charter shall be construed as abrogating the inherent right of self-defense against a violator of this Charter.

"2. In the application of this provision the principles of the Act of Chapultepec and of the Monroe Doctrine are specifically recognized.

"It is of course also clear that all regions are fully entitled to use all peaceful means of settling disputes without the permission of the Security Council.

Harold E. Stassen"

On the basis of this proposal Mr. Stassen explained the Inter-American system could go forward in the field of peaceful settlement. The International Organization would have responsibility for the use of force unless this responsibility was delegated. If, however, the principles of the Act of Chapultepec or of the Monroe Doctrine were violated the proposal of the right of self-defense would be applicable. The Secretary asked Mr. Rockefeller for his view on this proposal. Mr. Rockefeller thought that it was interesting but said he would need more time before he could make any decision.

THE SECRETARY commented that at the 6:30 meeting the next evening this whole question would be the first order of business.

Mr. Pasvolsky announced that an amendment by Bolivia <sup>57</sup> had just been brought to his attention, stating that in no case should regional organizations or agencies be able to adopt sanctions without the express authority of the Security Council. In view of Bolivia's position stated orally, he thought this amendment was most interesting and wondered whether it had been withdrawn. Mr. Rockefeller reported that it was an earlier amendment and that he did not know whether it had been withdrawn.

Mr. Dulles indicated that he had had a brief talk with members of the Soviet group who had reported that they thought that most of the outstanding questions could be answered, but that the one question to which they did not see the answer was this regional one. The Secretary asked whether that was indicative that they had faith that in time they would see it. Mr. Dulles replied that they did not talk in these terms.

THE SECRETARY announced that he would have to be excused from the meeting to phone the President.

MEETING WITH CONSULTANTS

. . . The Secretary stated that Mr. MacLeish and Mr. Dickey were working out a schedule for meetings with consultants.

In leaving the meeting The Secretary asked Mr. Stassen to preside.

Admission of Members to the Organization

Mr. Bowman said he would like to present a question in the absence of Representative Bloom which Representative Bloom had asked him to discuss with the Delegation. Representative Bloom wondered what position we should take on Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 2, if the Committee voted on that paragraph. Should he stand for the position that new members should be admitted "on recommendation of the Security Council" or "unless the Security Council interposes objection". After some discussion, it was agreed that Representative Bloom's question was typical of the situation of many Delegates on questions on which the United States' position was not yet clear. Mr. Bowman suggested that Representative Bloom's device of appointing a subcommittee or referring the question to a subcommittee was useful, but that there was always the possibility that such a move would be opposed and defeated. Therefore, it was necessary for a Delegate to have instructions on how to vote.

Mr. HARTLEY pointed out that the United States amendment with respect to the interposing of an objection by the Security Council had not been actually proposed. In the discussion, it had been pointed out that, if this change was accepted, an objection to a new member could be prevented by one vote on the Council. Because of this objection, Representative Bloom wanted to know whether we wished to drop the United States amendment. Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that agreement had been reached that, if we had to recede, we would recede to the position that the General Assembly and the Security Council would have concurrent powers in the admission of members, with initiative in either body. Mr. Bowman said that Representative Bloom wanted some indication as to how he should act on this question. Mr. Pasvolsky replied that it might be necessary in this interim period, until the Delegation had fully made up its mind on some questions, to reserve our position, then later we could move reconsideration. We might then use the procedure of the Coordination Committee to reconcile certain decisions that were not altogether to our liking. He suggested that it would be important to have a long meeting of the Delegation on Saturday to go through the crucial questions and to make up our minds. He thought he perhaps could make a report to the Delegation at that time on a number of items discussed at the meeting of the Subcommittee of Five.

QUALIFICATIONS OF MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Pasvolsky thought the delegation might be interested in the method adopted in the Subcommittee of Five. He said he had before him an amendment worked out by that Committee on the qualifications for membership in the Organization. A number of amendments, he pointed out, had been proposed on this problem. The French wished to qualify the term "peace-loving states" by providing that only those should be admitted which give proof of their love of peace by their institutions, their international behavior, and the effective guarantee which they furnish that they will respect their international obligations. The Dutch proposed the amendment "which may be expected, on account of their institutions and by their international behavior, faithfully to observe and carry out international commitments". The Australians proposed a reference to acceptance of the obligations of the Charter as a condition of membership.

Following discussion, Mr. Pasvolsky stated that a simple statement had been worked out in the Subcommittee of Five, reading: "Membership of the Organization should be open to all peace-loving states, which in the judgment of the Organization have demonstrated their willingness and ability to accept the principles and obligations contained in the Charter". After some discussion in Commission I, Committee 2,58 it was generally agreed that the following text would do, proposed by the British: "Membership of the Organization should be open to all peace-loving states, which, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and ready to accept the principles and obligations contained in the Charter".

REPRESENTATIVE EATON pointed out that an attempt had been made to get a vote on this paragraph in the Committee, but that the Belgians had opposed it and that the text had been referred to the drafting subcommittee. Dean Gildersleve pointed out that there was considerable objection among many people in this country to the term "peace-loving" and that there was some talk that the best definition of "peace-loving" was "readiness to fight". On the philosophical level she had of course objections which could be raised, but she questioned whether it was the proper time to take out the term altogether. Mr. Pasvolsky questioned whether it should be taken out here, since the word "peace-loving" had already been removed in Chapter II. Mr. Stassen, serving as Chairman, said that, if there was no objection, the Delegation would agree to retaining the term "peace-loving".

New Zealand Amendment on Powers of Assembly in Enforcement Action

MR. STASSEN stated that in Committee III/3 59 the Delegate of New Zealand had made a strong plea that decisions of the Security Council involving the application of enforcement measures should require the concurring vote of the General Assembly, except in extremely urgent cases. Mr. Pasvolsky said that for the moment the only thing to do would be to filibuster in this Committee.

REGIONAL PROBLEM

Senator Vandenberg stated that the regional question was making his life in Committee III/4 extremely difficult. He reported that he had just come from a meeting of that Committee in which the Colombian representative had stated in a most earnest and eloquent fashion the South American position. He said it was a humdinger of a speech. He said he had had to make a statement at this meeting making clear that we were attempting to obtain both the objectives of our South American friends and to safeguard the interests of the general organization.60 He had added that, whereas he could not speak in any detail and would have to reserve his position, he hoped that without too much delay, possibly by Monday, a concrete suggestion would be available for the Committee to shoot at.

... Mr. Warren commented that the Russian reaction to Senator Vandenberg's speech might be mentioned. Senator Vandenberg pointed out that the Russians had expressed the view that the Delegate from the United States had presented a very novel proposition which the Russians would want to have time to consider. 61 Senator Van-DENBERG explained that he had proposed that a formula was needed which would both preserve global security and regional security until the system of global security had proved that it would work. Mr. WARREN explained that the reaction to Senator Vandenberg's statement had been quite striking. Great enthusiasm was voiced, particularly among the Latin Americans. Mr. Stassen asked whether any more had been said in the Committee concerning the Pan-Arab League. 62 Mr. Warren replied in the negative. Senator Vanden-BERG pointed out that most of the emphasis in the meeting was on the amendment situation. He added that he had made his speech with the approval of Mr. Wellington Koo and as a result of an appealing look by the Delegate from Colombia.

The meeting adjourned at 7:35 p.m.

Senator Connally, in the absence of the Secretary, convened the meeting at 2:40 p.m.

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Senator Connally requested Mr. Dunn to report on the new draft on regional arrangements. 63 . . .

(At this point the Secretary entered the room.)

THE SECRETARY took the Chair and informed the meeting that Mr. Eden planned to leave Sunday morning because of the situation in England. He will call on President Truman on his way through Washington but will not discuss the problems of the Conference. A public statement to this effect will be made both by Mr. Eden and the Secretary at an opportune moment. The Secretary said that Mr. Eden had expressed anxiety over the regional problem at the morning meeting in the Penthouse 64 and indicated that he was favorably impressed by the French amendment to Chapter VI, Section C.65 In this respect he appeared to share the opinion expressed recently by Dr. Padilla of Mexico. The Secretary added that he had tentatively called a meeting of the Big Five for tonight 66 to discuss the matter. MR. DUNN had talked by telephone with Mr. McCloy and the Secretary with Mr. Hull. The former had indicated that he would discuss the formula with the Secretary of War and report back his views. Mr. McCloy said that he had discussed the problem in an informal way with the Chiefs of Staff who had indicated that they did not want to take a position which would interfere with the working out of a political formula.

THE CHAIRMAN called on Mr. Gates who reported on the reaction in Washington. Mr. Gates confirmed that Mr. McCloy had discussed the problem yesterday with the Chiefs of Staff but indicated that at that time they did not have the new formula.

Mr. Dunn reported on the conversation with Mr. Hull who had indicated that he considered the draft might offer a possible solution but wanted to mull over the formula. He had raised two questions: (1) whether the formula might encourage states to take themselves out of the Security Council, and (2) whether a political conflict might not ensue if an American state attacked another, requiring a decision by the Security Council and the adoption of a position by the United States. Mr. Dunn reported that he had indicated to Mr. Hull that states would take action under the formula only if the Security Council failed and a state was attacked; the Security Council would have to decide to go to the aid of the State attacked or to call a halt to the hostilities. This must be left to the discretion of the Security Council.

&lt;sup>64</sup> In his Diary of May 11, Mr. Stettinius noted: "Eden came to talk with me at 10:30 this morning and I did not talk, but we have got to talk to him on this before he goes."

THE CHAIRMAN requested the opinion of the military people and MR. GATES replied that he could not speak for them. THE CHAIR inquired if General Embick or Admiral Willson could express their personal views. GENERAL EMBICK reported that he had been in telephonic conversation with Mr. McCloy who considered the formula satisfactory. GENERAL FAIRCHILD agreed with this and ADMIRAL WILLSON expressed the opinion that "in view of the history of the subject" he thought the draft was adequate.

(At this point Admiral Hepburn entered the room.)

THE CHAIR said that the draft should not be discussed with the President in Washington until after the Delegation had agreed. Mr. Gates gave assurances that the military people in Washington would limit their discussions of the proposal to their own group.

ADMIRAL HEPBURN reported that he had talked with Mr. McCloy who had said that his impression and that of others in Washington was that the Draft in its present form might weaken the world organization; that it was satisfactory in so far as it related to the protection of the inter-American system.

Mr. MacLeish inquired if the idea of attack in the draft was not too vague and recalled that Germany had entered Poland at the beginning of the present war on the pretext that Poland had attacked her. Mr. Dulles referred to the Act of Chapultepec. He said that it had two parts: first, it incorporated the principle that an attack on one American republic is an attack on all. The second part recommends the conclusion of a treaty consistent with the principles and purposes of the new international organization. He thought that it was hard to reconcile on paper the establishment of two police groups, the regional and the world. However, he saw no real clash because it was highly unlikely that a local police group would be established in the Western The proposed draft takes the first part of the Act and recognizes that it establishes a valid principle. The use of the word "attack" is already in the Act of Chapultepec. We thus take the operative part of the Act and say it is acceptable, subject to the concurrent power of the Security Council. The French proposed amendment to Chapter VI, Section C, is substantially similar in concept if the Security Council fails to act then states can take measures of Mr. Dulles thought that the French proposal was unduly restrictive, involving a negative concept. The problem was to indicate definitely when there was a failure on the part of the Security Council. However, the basic concept in the two, that is, the French and the new draft, is the same, i.e., the inherent right of self-defense cannot be immobilized.

Senator Connally inquired whether the Security Council could take cognizance of a situation in which there was an attack and a counterattack by other states acting in self-defense. Mr. Dunn replied in the affirmative and Mr. Dulles added that however the states were not obliged to discontinue their countermeasures taken in self-defense. In other words, that there was concurrent power.

THE CHAIRMAN recalled that since the deadline had passed for the submission of amendments, no new proposal could be offered and that, therefore, we had to build on the French proposal. He also inquired whether it was necessary to mention the Act of Chapultepec. He thought that it would be hard to negotiate the new draft with the British and the Russians if the Act was mentioned. Mr. Dunn agreed that perhaps it might not be necessary to mention the Act but that we could start with it as a negotiating point. It could be dropped later if necessary. Mr. Rockefeller agreed but emphasized that the mention of the Act had a sales value for the Latin American group. Mr. Dunn thought, however, that the general language of the draft took care of the idea.

THE CHARMAN was very strongly of the opinion that the time had arrived when, while recognizing the strategic importance of inter-American solidarity, we should not allow ourselves to be compelled to adopt a position contrary to our own view of national interest... The United States must lead, not follow. Mr. Rockefeller said the Secretary had given the right kind of leadership and that the attitude of some of the Latin American republics merely reflected the grave concern they felt over developments which they believe tended to weaken the inter-American system. This concern made them say things that they ordinarily would not say.

The Chairman said that some of the Latin American representatives had come to the Penthouse and declared that they had lost confidence in the Conference and that recent developments made them entertain doubts that an effective international organization could be created here and that it might be necessary to build a fence around the hemisphere. The Chair added that we had come to this Conference to create an international organization and could not be deviated from that course. Mr. Rockefeller referred to the support given the American Delegation with respect to the Trade Union conference, despite the fact that Mr. Toledano et had had many of the Latin American delegations lined up in favor of admission. He did not think that they were motivated by an isolationist spirit and recalled that most of the Latin American republics had been members of the League while we had stayed out of it.

Mr. Notter spoke against the mention of the Act of Chapultepec and said that under the Act several states, not including the United States, could take action against another American state and the United States would have to deal with the consequences of such a situation in the Security Council. The right of self-defense is an inherent right and is not restricted to the case of a direct attack. The concept is much broader. He recalled that the concept of an indivisible peace had dominated the thinking of Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Hull, President Truman, and Secretary Stettinius. This concept is that an attack against one state in any part of the world is an act against all. This is the concept of world security, not of regional security.

Mr. Hackworth said that the Act was mentioned merely by way of example. The Act is in fact merely a first step toward the ambition of the United States to prevent and stop aggression through the creation of a world security system. He did not think that we were setting a precedent by referring to the Act since the precedent was already in Article XXII [XXI] of the League. He thought that it would be helpful in securing the support of the Latin American bloc and to the world at large to have an example of the kind of regional undertaking that we consider desirable.

Senator Vandenberg inquired as to the distinction between "attack" in the first sentence and "armed attack" in the second sentence. Mr. Dulles explained that the distinction was made deliberately in order to cover the Monroe Doctrine which has two parts—the case of an overt attack and that of political efforts from outside the continent to overthrow the political institutions of the American Republics. Perhaps the word "attack" could be used to cover both contingencies but the second has specific reference to collective action under the Act of Chapultepec. Senator Vandenberg understood from this that the first was broad enough to cover a propaganda attack.

Senator Connally inquired if it would not suffice to use the language of Article XXII [XXI] of the League Covenant. Mr. Dunn read Article XXII [XXI] and Senator Connally recalled that he had drafted similar language which would cover both the Monroe Doctrine and regional arrangements and indicated a personal preference for such language. Mr. Dulles thought that this would open up regionalism; that the League Article XXII [XXI] was adequate for its time but not now. The new draft doesn't refer to regional arrangements. It avoids the idea of regionalism in preference for the concept of self-defense.

Mr. Gates reported that the discussions yesterday in Washington were based on the previous idea developed by the Delegation, that is, that we proceed by way of an exception of the American system to the provision of prior authorization for enforcement action. He thought the present draft was broader and presumably covered regionalism in other parts of the world.

Senator Vandenberg said that the problem is broader and that if we proceeded by way of exception in Section C, Chapter VIII, we would encourage the specific mention of other regional arrangements, including the Arab League. Mr. Gates inquired whether since we have a unique system in this hemisphere we would not be justified in insisting on an exception. The Chairman thought that we could not expect special consideration for the inter-American system in the Charter. Mr. Dunn agreed with this.

ADMIRAL WILLSON said that this was a compromise which gives all regional systems the right of automatic action but retains in the general organization the exclusive right to determine when there is a threat to the peace.

COMMANDER STASSEN expressed the opinion that the Advisers had done an able job and that he would join in a recommendation to the President that the draft be accepted, after the Secretaries of War and Navy had been heard from. He considered that this was a high policy decision which must be passed upon by the President. He thought the formula was a satisfactory compromise since it (1) placed no restrictions on pacific settlement by regional means, (2) recognizes the paramount authority of the world organization in enforcement but (3) permitted freedom of action for all in the event of failure by the general organization and of an attack. He thought the formula fits both world and regional requirements. Mr. Gates inquired if this formula didn't encourage regionalism which would shut us out of other parts of the world in which we had a direct and vital interest. COMMANDER STASSEN thought it did not since it applied only in case of an attack. We cannot prevent an immediate response to a direct attack and moreover this provision did not affect enforcement action. This was the same principle as in private law in which defense must have relation to the nature of the attack. In the case of propaganda we would respond with propaganda. In the case of an armed attack we would respond with an armed attack, this however, without prejudice to the continued authority of the Security Council.

Mr. Dulles stressed that the principle operates if the Security Council is paralyzed by unwarranted exercise of the veto power and Mr. Rockefeller agreed and stressed that the Act of Chapultepec has a symbolic value similar to the Monroe Doctrine and that it would be helpful to have a specific reference to it in the formula. Commander Stassen agreed with this opinion and said that if the principle is sound we should have a specific mention. The Act is the modern Monroe Doctrine. Mr. Sandifer expressed the opinion that it was not desirable to include the Act since it was a transient instrument. To this Mr. Hackworth said that the Act has two parts, one of which relates to the war period and ends with it and the other to the postwar in which the implementation of the Act is contemplated through the negotiation of a treaty. Senator Connally thought there was merit in the mention of the Act in so far as it might constitute a warning to other states to keep out of this hemisphere and in so far as it might give body and content to the vague concept of self-defense. THE CHAIR inquired whether it might not be desirable to mention the Monroe Doctrine and Senator Vandenberg thought that such a reference was outdated—that we had gone beyond the point where we could speak exclusively of the Monroe Doctrine. Mr. Gerig called attention to the fact that mention of the Monroe Doctrine in Article XXII [XXI] in the League Covenant had always proved rather embarrassing at Geneva; that it was very difficult to explain to non-American states precisely what was meant by the Monroe Doctrine.

THE CHAIR at this point canvassed the opinion of the meeting and it was agreed that the new draft should be discussed with the other sponsoring governments.

Mr. Bowman said that there appeared to be consensus that the draft represented our maximum demands. He thought this should be made clear to Mr. Eden so that he would have the assurance that later on we would not ask for more. THE CHAIRMAN again said that in the discussions he would stress that we had built on the French amendment and would discuss the draft in general terms, since the specific text had not yet been cleared by the War and Navy Departments or approved by the President. Mr. Dunn thought it desirable not to say that the new draft was a modification of the French amendment but rather that it was based on the French position. Senator Con-NALLY thought that the Delegation must come to a definite conclusion and stand by it in the discussions with the other powers. He said that it might be well to emulate Stalin's tactics at Yalta where he had told Churchill and Roosevelt that he could not vary from the position he had taken; that it was the sine qua non of Russian approval of the Yalta conclusions. The Chair agreed that a firm position should be taken but thought it should be with respect to the fundamental ideas contained in the draft and not on the exact text.

Mr. Rockefeller said that the draft under consideration represented our minimum demands, not the maximum, as Mr. Bowman had indicated. Mr. Bowman replied that he had reference solely to the fact that Eden is about to leave and the Secretary must take a position and inform Eden that he can leave with the assurance that his deputies will not be called upon to make greater concessions later on. Commander Stassen thought that the draft represented both the minimum and the maximum.

MR. MACLEISH thought that we would regret the formula as long as the memory of the Conference lasted. He referred specifically to the vague terminology, specifically the term "attack". He also considered that the state attacked and the other states siding with it should be required specifically to submit to a decision of the Security Council. MR. Pasvolsky thought that the third sentence of the draft amply satisfied the point raised by Mr. MacLeish. He thought, however, that the draft would require public explanation so as to avoid the impression that the Security Council had lost out. The point should be driven home that the formula covered only emergency situations and that the Security Council had the power to stop the fighting at any stage.

(At this point the Secretary, Mr. Gates, and General Embick left the meeting to talk by telephone with Mr. McCloy.)

Mr. Dunn declared that states already have the right to take measures of self-defense against attack and that the draft should be read in relation to the responsibility given the Security Council and the right of the states to submit the case to the council and their obligation to abide by its decision. Commander Stassen thought the formula would be attacked by extremists on both sides and agreed that it was necessary to have a full explanation of the background and meaning of the draft. Mr. Dunn stressed that the formula would of course work only if good faith was present.

(At this point Representative Bloom entered the meeting.)

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested certain drafting changes, particularly the insertion of the word "inherent" before the phrase "right to take measures of self-defense" and also that the words "be reported immediately to the Security Council and shall not in any way" be added before the phrase "affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council. . . ." Senator Connally said that he agreed with the revisions and that it was clear that they did not mean that the states attacked should stop fighting before the necessary countermeasures were taken by the world organization; that the situation was similar to that of the individual who could continue to protect himself until adequate police measures had been taken. Mr. Geric pointed out that the draft not only didn't affect the authority of the Security Council but includes the right of the attacked state to appeal to the Council. Mr. Dunn added that as far as the Western Hemisphere is concerned we had additional protection in our veto right.

Senator Vandenberg inquired as to which of the Conference committees had jurisdiction. Mr. Pasvolsky thought that perhaps a joint subcommittee should study the proposal in the first instance and that ultimately the Coordination Committee would decide as to location. Senator Vandenberg recalled that Subcommittee III/4/A had been requested to consolidate or amalgamate the various amendments offered to Section C of Chapter VIII 70 and that the draft, in his opinion, could be submitted direct to the Subcommittee.

STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

THE UNITED STATES POSITION ON THE AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY OTHER DELEGATIONS

Mr. Pasvolsky reported that the Committee of Five had studied the ten questions before it and had completed part of the work. Substantial agreement had been reached to recommend acceptance of the first sentence of the Australian proposal on membership.<sup>71</sup>

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE reported that the group of Advisers and Technical Experts assigned to Committee I/1 had met all afternoon to study the amendments suggested by other governments and to point up the issues which required decision by the United States Delegation. Mr. Sandifer informed the Delegation that a report on the work of the various commissions and committees had been prepared and distributed. It was agreed that there would be no committee meetings tomorrow and that the Delegation would meet at 9:00 a.m. and stay in session all morning to determine the United States position on the various amendments.

VOTING PROCEDURE IN THE COMMITTEES

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM inquired as to the voting procedure in the committees and Mr. Pasvolsky said that this question had come up in the Committee of Five but that a final decision had not been taken.

It was agreed that the amendments proposed by other governments should be voted upon in the first instance and rejected. If it appeared that the vote would be against the United States position, appointment of a subcommittee should be suggested and if this failed the United States representative should reserve the position of the Delegation. Mr. Pasvolsky stressed that pressure for an increase in the members of the Security Council should be opposed by every means and if necessary carried back through the Executive and Steering Committees.

Senator Connally thought the Steering or Executive Committee should rule on the number and duration of speeches. He thought that something should be done immediately since the tendency to make long speeches was delaying the work of the Conference.

JURISDICTIONAL DISPUTES BETWEEN COMMITTEES

Mr. Armstrong inquired as to the procedure where there was a dispute between two committees as to where a given subject should be discussed. Mr. Pasvolsky said that this problem had come up in the Coordination Committee and that no agreement had been reached. He thought, perhaps, that the issue could be settled by the Steering Committee. Mr. Armstrong said that in practice the Chairmen were deciding either individually or in consultation and Representative Bloom thought this was undesirable since it might foreclose the issue; he considered the dispute should go direct to the body competent to decide such questions. Mr. Pasvolsky then suggested that perhaps it might be better that the matter be reported to the President of the Conference through the Secretary General. It was agreed that this should be done.

Doc. 196, III/4/, May 10, UNCIO Documents, vol. 12, p. 669.

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS (Continued)

(The Secretary, Mr. Gates, and General Embick returned to the meeting.)

THE CHAIR reported he had talked with Mr. McCloy who had just finished a conversation with the War and Navy Secretaries who felt that the draft placed too much emphasis on regionalism at the expense of the world system. They thought it might be better to go back to the idea of a specific exception for this hemisphere. Mr. McCloy was to talk again with the Secretaries of War and Navy and report back. The Chairman also said that Mr. McCloy thought the drafting changes agreed upon at the meeting would be helpful.

Mr. Gates added that the impression in Washington appeared to be that the draft strengthened our position in the Western Hemisphere from the military point of view but that the problem of world security was not adequately covered; that the formula might be a wide open invitation to regionalism; and that the distinction between "attack" and "armed attack" gave rise to certain doubts. Senator VANDENBERG thought that it would be very difficult to explain in the Committee and in the Senate the distinction between the two concepts of "attack" and "armed attack". Mr. HACKWORTH thought it might be better to speak of "armed attack" in both cases and The Chair thought it might be useful to use the word "aggression" instead of "attack". Mr. Dulles suggested that there be no tinkering with the text around the table since every word had been carefully scrutinized by the group which had prepared it and that if there were any suggestions for drafting changes they should be referred to the small group for study and report.

THE CHAIRMAN inquired as to what should be done with respect to the meeting with the other sponsoring governments and France scheduled for tonight and specifically whether the other sponsoring delegations should be with him when he discussed the draft with Mr. Eden. He thought perhaps it was better to confine the conversation to Mr. Eden since his departure made it necessary to be specific with him. Mr. Pasvolsky was of the opinion that tonight's meeting of Five should be called off and that Mr. Eden should be told that the Delegation was moving in the direction set out in the draft. Senator Vandenberg thought that the others could be seen later in the evening. Mr. Pasvolsky believed Mr. Eden would accept the proposal since he had been worried regarding the situation which would ensue if the Security Council failed to take action as a consequence of the exercise of the veto power by one of the permanent members.

It was agreed that the procedure from here on should be: (a) the Delegation would wait to hear the views of the Secretaries of War and Navy; (b) if these views were favorable, the draft would be submitted to President Truman for his approval; (c) the Secretary would cancel his meeting with the representatives of the four sponsoring powers and M. Bidault and would explain in an informal manner to Mr. Eden and his chief advisers the general lines of the Delegation's thinking; (d) in negotiating the draft the position would be taken that it was simply a United States modification of the French proposal.

REPRESENTATION OF THE DELEGATION AT COMMITTEE MEETINGS

REPRESENTATIVE BLOOM stressed that it was important that a voting member of the Delegation be at all committee and subcommittee meetings. Mr. Sandifer referred to a directive issued recently by the Chairman with respect to this matter. The Chairman stated that the Secretary General of the Delegation had the responsibility to see that a voting representative of the United States was at every committee meeting. In the absence of the delegate, the adviser would vote and in his absence the principal technical expert assigned to the committee.

STATEMENT TO THE PRESS (Continued)

Mr. MacLeish reverted to his previous request for instructions regarding a statement to the Press, particularly if he were asked whether the subject had been referred to Washington. . . .

Mr. Hickerson's suggestion was approved, to the effect that the Press be informed that there were approximately seventeen amendments on the various aspects of the problem and that the Delegation had spent the afternoon considering the position it should take, that it had made progress, but that it had not completed its studies.

The meeting was adjourned by the Chairman at 5:00 p.m.

12. In the event of an attack by any state against any member state, such member state shall possesses the inherent right to take measures of self-defense. The inherent right to take measures of self-defense against armed attack shall apply to arrangements, like those embodied in the Act of Chapultepec, under which all members of a group of states agree to consider an attack against any one of them as an attack against all of them. The taking of such measures shall be reported immediately to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under this Charter to take at any time such action as it may deem necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Minutes of the Thirty-Seventh Meeting of the United States Delegation, Held at San Francisco, Saturday, May 12, 1945, 9 a.m.

[Informal Notes—Extracts]

[Here follows list of names of persons (37) present at meeting.] The Secretary called the meeting to order at 9:10 a.m.

JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

THE SECRETARY replied that on the previous evening Mr. Dulles, Mr. Dunn, Mr. Pasvolsky and himself had met with Mr. Eden and a few of his associates on the question of regional arrangements. He stated that the British had been shown none of the American language, however. Mr. Pasvolsky and Mr. Dunn are to meet today with Mr. Jebb. Mr. McCloy and Secretary Stimson are satisfied with the revised language. Army clearance has been obtained on the language which the Delegation worked over on yesterday.

THE SECRETARY also stated that there was great embarrassment yesterday afternoon. The press had picked up the story that Sol Bloom had made an indignant speech. Mr. Pasvolsky stated that it was a mistake to permit the press on this floor.

THE SECRETARY also stated that he and Señor Padilla are close friends and that on the strength of this he had phoned him this morning to inquire whether there was any concern or uneasiness on the part of the Latin American states on the question of regional arrangements. He replied that there was none at all, and that the Latin American states had complete confidence in the United States Delegation. The Secretary added that he was inclined, therefore, to believe that there was no immediate heat on this question.

Senator Vandenberg remarked that on the other hand, the Committee on regional arrangements on the previous day <sup>72</sup> had insisted on going ahead on this question and he doubted if he could hold them much beyond Monday. The meeting on the previous day had been tough, he said, and very nearly got out of hand. He added that he had great difficulty in getting the meeting adjourned. They wanted to go ahead on the veto question.

Mr. Pasvolsky inquired as to who was particularly difficult in the meeting, and Senator Vandenberg replied Australia and the Soviet Union. He urged that this question must be settled some way in the next forty-eight hours.

THE CHAIRMAN replied that Dean Gildersleeve wished direction on the question of the Social and Economic Council and that attention should be given to her subject early in this meeting.

Navy Views:

On the question of regional arrangements Mr. Gates reported that the reaction of the Navy Department is the same as it had been on the previous day. The Navy will concur if this is the best deal that can be made. It is satisfactory with respect to western hemispheric solidarity, but there is a fear that it will throw the door open to arrangements elsewhere which might weaken the international organization.

GENERAL EMBICK stated that he had informed a General who wanted to exempt the Pan American system from the Security Council that this would be the best arrangement that could be made.

THE CHAIRMAN pointed out that Mr. Eden was leaving the Conference at 2:30 p.m. on the next day, and that this would be the last chance to talk with him on this subject.

Proposed New Language

Mr. Dulles called attention to a proposed new language on regional arrangements (US Gen. 93).

"(Regional Arrangements)

(This is a new paragraph to be added to Chapter VIII, Section B, as paragraph 12.)

12. If the Security Council fails to prevent aggression by any state against any member state, such member state possesses the inherent right to take measures of self-defense. The right to take measures of self-defense against armed attack shall apply to arrangements, like those embodied in the Act of Chapultepec, under which all members of a group of states agree to consider an attack against any one of them as an attack against all of them. The taking of such measures shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under this Charter to take at any time such action as it may deem necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security."

THE CHAIRMAN inquired whether this would include the two changes adopted by the Delegation, and Mr. Dulles replied that this was an original wording.

Senator Connally inquired why the language "in the event of an attack" had been changed.

Mr. Dulles explained that this was in order to make the same approach as the French proposal which Mr. Eden favored. If the Security Council fails to maintain peace and security then a state's inherent right of self-defense comes into play.

British Reaction

THE CHAIRMAN stated that on the previous evening he had heard the British reaction to the Act of Chapultepec and inquired whether it is necessary to mention this Act specifically.

Mr. Dulles stated that there were two reasons for doing so: First, the Latin American states will like it, and secondly, reference to the Act of Chapultepec puts a limitation on the arrangements. Specific reference to it would tend to prevent arrangements purporting to be like it, but not having the same solid basis. Reference to the Act, therefore, has a limiting force. It prevents throwing the door open to less sound and historical arrangements.

Senator Vandenberg inquired whether there might be some other word than "arrangement".

Mr. Dunn pointed out that the Act of Chapultepec in fact is not much more than an arrangement.

Appraisal of New Language

Mr. Hackworth expressed the view that in the proposed new wording the document has been greatly weakened. It presupposes a breakdown of the Security Council and he inquired when it would be determined that the Security Council has failed. Mr. Hackworth went on to suggest that the wording be left as it had been originally.

Mr. Dunn remarked that the new wording had been devised in order to bring the Security Council into the picture—that is to make it clear that the regional arrangement only operated in self-defense. The intent was to bring the Security Council right into the picture.

Mr. Armstrong commented that the new wording emphasized the Security Council more than did the former text.

THE SECRETARY suggested that Mr. Pasvolsky might discuss the French amendment which the British prefer to the American wording.

FAILURE OF SECURITY COUNCIL TO ACT

Mr. Pasyolsky pointed out that if the Security Council fails to agree on an act, then the member state reserves the right to act for the maintenance of peace, justice, etc. The League of Nations Covenant, he said, had a provision that if the Council fails to act, then a member state resumes freedom of action for the maintenance of peace.<sup>73</sup> present French amendment is much like that except that it says "after the Council fails to agree". The freedom of action reserved to the member state if the Council fails to agree, is much greater than in the American wording—a reservation for individual freedom of action. Mr. Eden's interpretation of this is that group action is not precluded and is therefore entirely possible. There is agreement that the French wording permits much more freedom of action than the American, but the British were shocked by the American concept of self-defense. It was to them a new thought that self-defense can operate outside of a nation's territorial limits. The wording of the French text was as follows: "Should the Council not succeed in reaching a decision the members of the organization reserve to themselves the right to act as they may consider necessary in the interest of peace, right and iustice".

COMMANDER STASSEN suggested a new wording of the US Gen 93 as follows: "if the Security Council does not prevent aggression and aggression occurs by any state against any member state . . ."

[Mr. Rockefeller arrived at this point and the Chairman brought him up to date on the discussion, including the Army and Navy reaction to the proposed wording on regional arrangements, and the fear that it would strengthen the hemispheric situation at the expense of the world situation.] <sup>74</sup>

MR. HULL'S VIEWS

THE SECRETARY expressed regret that he had not been seeing the Latin American Foreign Ministers. He announced that he had heard from Mr. Hull this morning, and that Mr. Hull felt that the American position was veering away from a strong international organization. Mr. Hull felt that the proposed new wording on regional arrangements would impair the strength of the international organization. He stated that we are being led away from our own national interest and the intent of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals.

Mr. Dulles suggested the addition of the word "existing" before "arrangements" in line 5 of US Gen 93. Mr. Eden, he said, would like this since he is worrying about opening the door too wide to such arrangements.

Mr. Bowman pointed out that the insertion of the word "existing" would limit and freeze the situation. There could be, he said, other regional arrangements approved by the Security Council as long as they were within the broad purposes of the organization.

Mr. Dulles pointed out that as it now stands anybody can create a regional organization. Any group of states can make a pact that an attack against one is an attack against all. He stated that he would propose to put a veto power on that, i.e. that no new groups can be created for this purpose without the approval of the Security Council.

THE SECRETARY inquired whether this would not also raise the question of whether the Security Council must approve arrangements under the Act of Chapultepec, and Mr. Dulles replied negatively.

COMMANDER STASSEN stated that he did not think that the United States could draw up a rule which would permit the door to be closed after they had taken care of our own national advantage. Arrangements for mutual defense against armed attack can be made, he said, but if an attempt is made to make this exclusively a United States or western hemisphere advantage then we would be in an impossible position, vis-à-vis the rest of the world.

Mr. Dulles pointed out that this would merely recognize an existing situation.

COMMANDER STASSEN responded that the British would say that an armed attack against any part of the empire is an attack against all of the empire.

Mr. Dunn stated that there is a wide-spread hope that the Act of Chapultepec would be superseded after the war by a new arrangement. The United States, he said, would not wish to cut itself off. Mr. Dunn added that it is not possible to limit the right of self-defense, and that the reaction of the British last night was that the American conception was so new as to be startling to them. Senator Connally remarked that if the concept was applied to the six dominions it should not be startling to them.

Mr. Dunn pointed out that suppose arrangements were made between Britain and Turkey on the basis that Turkey is essential to the defense of the British Isles. He added that the regional concept is easy for the United States to visualize because of the background of the Monroe Doctrine, but it is not so easy for others.

The Chairman referred again to the French amendment and Mr. Hackworth asked when it would be decided that the Council had not succeeded. The Secretary replied that this would be when aggression occurs.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that it might be possible to use the language proposed by Commander Stassen as follows: "should the Council not succeed in preventing aggression and should aggression occur by any state against any member state such member state possesses the inherent right to act individually or collectively as they may consider necessary in the interest of self-defense against aggression."

Mr. Bloom inquired whether the intent was the threat of aggression or actual aggression.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that Mr. Eden had been bothered last night and that the United States Delegation had been for a long time, since there is no way that individual nations can act legally within the system. Mr. Eden would prefer a wording relating to "collectively".

Mr. Bloom inquired if more than one state acts, if that is to be interpreted as "collectively" and Mr. Pasvolsky said that it would.

Senator Connally inquired whether the French would accept the elimination of the words "peace, right, and justice", and the Chairman said that they would.

Mr. Pasvolsky inquired as to who would determine whether or not an act of aggression occurs.

Mr. Armstrong inquired whether this disadvantage had appeared in the draft which had been considered at the morning's meeting.

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that this was a new arrangement involving a defensive alliance.

Mr. Armstrong stated that it appeared to open a much broader door to the break-up of the international system than under the original wording.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that it implied complete freedom of action. Mr. Eden, he said, had introduced a new problem, namely, how much freedom of action is to be allowed to individual nations without a Council break-down. The United States, he said, referred to its hemispheric system, but that doesn't cover the British. The French tried to solve the problem by giving freedom of action to individual states, leaving the states completely free. What Mr. Eden had liked was that it applies to a group and not to a region and thus could apply to the British Commonwealth.

Senator Connally remarked that if the organization fails any nation not pleased with the speed of action can say "here we go in a bloc." Mr. Pasvolsky observed that it is really worse than that, for they can veto the action of the Council. But this, he said, is a danger that can not be avoided.

COMMANDER STASSEN remarked that in his view this would open it up too wide. This door, he said, should not be opened up too wide. Some emphasis should be on regional arrangements like Chapultepec, but the situation should not be opened up wide for any kind of regional arrangement. Commander Stassen suggested that it might be advisable to revert to the original American wording, using the opening sentences of the French text.

Senator Connally stated that the French text does not provide for group action.

MR. PASVOLSKY stated that the Act of Chapultepec has all sorts of things in it. It would be well, he said, to make certain it is that sort of arrangement which is being referred to, and not an interventionist system.

COMMANDER STASSEN inquired whether there was general agreement on the wording "should the Council not succeed in preventing aggression and should aggression occur . . .".

PROPOSALS RELATING TO WORK OF THE COMMITTEES

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

With respect to the draft on regional arrangements Senator Con-NALLY stated that he would prefer some arrangement setting forth the American position. This is, he said, a very broad question, but he thought that the draft before the Delegation would possibly be satisfactory if some of the language of the French text were added.

Mr. Bowman urged that whatever the changes which might be made in the wording, it is obligatory that somewhere a finger be put on the historical chain, beginning with Monroe and ending with Chapultepec. Mr. Bowman stated that he would like a poll taken with respect to the specific inclusion of the Act of Chapultepec in the draft.

MR. PASVOLSKY commented that no one was opposed to this.

THE SECRETARY observed with emphasis that the American Delegation had not taken a position on this matter and asked Mr. Bowman why he would try to force a position. It will be necessary, he added, to consult with the President. He stated further that he understood fully Senator Connally's position.

Senator Connally said that the people making this organization need the United States as badly as the United States needs them. The time will come, he said, when the United States will have to talk turkey to them. The United States must be able to take care of itself.

COMMANDER STASSEN commented that the other countries go along. He pointed out that on the previous night all four votes had come along with the positions he had urged in the Committee, and that on every occasion he was sustained by more than a % vote. The South American countries had come along, he said, after some stewing.

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that the opening sentence of the French text might be taken, from the point of view of psychology, since Mr. Eden favors it.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE stated that she would like to make three points: (1) that she was in general agreement with the position taken in the Delegation on the matter, (2) that it is impossible for the United States to get an arrangement without giving the possibility of a similar arrangement to the rest of the world, and (3) that she felt a little uneasy about not mentioning the Act of Chapultepec in the draft.

THE CHAIRMAN inquired whether there was agreement on using some of the French language, that is the opening sentence in the French text.

Mr. Bloom stated that he was in agreement with this but would like to see the Act of Chapultepec mentioned.

Senator Vandenberg stated that it would help him greatly in the Committee, if the statement should start out with the French language. The Soviet representative, he said, had raised a procedural question and the employment of the French language would help.

Representative Eaton said that he was in agreement.

COMMANDER STASSEN said that the suggestion was a very good one and that it would be desirable to start with the French language. This is, he said, a difficult and intense issue. There are, he warned, some efforts being made on the outside to split up this Delegation, and it is very important that all members of it should remain calm and clear. The attempt to split the Delegation, he said, is because it has done so much.

THE SECRETARY stated that he would wish to endorse every word of Commander Stassen's statement and suggested that everyone should get rested over the week end. He had told the press, he said, that there was no split in the American Delegation, and that it was operating under very harmonious relations. From the point of view of negotiating the draft with the British, French and Russians, it would be helpful to start with the French language. With respect to the mention of the Act of Chapultepec, he added, this has been his unalterable position, providing it is something that can be negotiated.

Mr. MacLeish stated that it is important to consider the impact on the public. This, he said, is a new angle. The right of self-defense, is spelled out in these treaties, and it should be made clear that the right of self-defense is spelled out in one regard by bilateral treaties and in the second by regional arrangements. This should be presented to the public as a spelling-out of the self-defense arrangements and not as a dicker between governments.

THE SECRETARY expressed agreement with this view, and inquired whether the military advisers wished to say anything on the subject.

Mr. Gates stated that he would be willing to go along with the Secretary's suggestion respecting the use of the French language.

ADMIRAL WILLSON also expressed agreement with this view. He added, however, that a question which is not settled is how much of the French language should be used. A decision would have to be made, he suggested, between armed as against unarmed attack.

GENERAL EMBICK stated that he would concur in opening the provision with the language of the French, and following with the draft that had been agreed upon yesterday and mentioning the Act of Chapultepec.

Mr. Armstrong said that he was in agreement with the Secretary's suggestion.

DEAN GILDERSLEEVE inquired as to what the attitude of the British and Russians was to the French amendment.

THE SECRETARY replied that the British like it and would accept it, but that the United States advisers and technical experts think that it opens the door too wide.

MR. DUNN commented that he would not go so far as to say that Mr. Eden actually liked the French text, but that he did recognize that it provided for action to be taken legally if the Security Council did not have success in stopping an act of aggression.

Representative Eaton asked why they should not conform to human nature since it is only natural that nations will take arms when attacked.

Commander Stassen offered a suggested composite wording as follows: "Should the Security Council not succeed in preventing aggression, and should aggression occur, the members of the Organization possess the inherent right to act as they may consider necessary in the interest of self-defense. The right to take measures of self-defense against armed attack shall apply to arrangements, like those embodied in the Act of Chapultepec, under which all members of a group of states agree to consider an attack against any one of them as an attack against all of them. The taking of such measures shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under this Charter to take at any time such action as it may deem necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security".

Mr. Pasvolsky pointed out that an important word was missing in this draft, namely, the word "also" following the phrase "armed attack shall".

Senator Vandenberg inquired whether this revised language would cover the situation of a British-Turkish arrangement, and Mr. Pasvolsky replied that it would.

THE SECRETARY stated that he would like to revert to the matter raised by Mr. Bowman, that is, leading down the historical chain of events from Monroe to Chapultepec. He stated that it should be decided whether the United States Delegation is willing to accept anything without specific mention of the Act of Chapultepec. The British, he said, will press strongly for general language, and the Delegation should reach a decision on this issue.

Mr. Bowman stated that his intent was that somewhere the draft should reach out and touch this chain of historical events. Whether the Act of Chapultepec is mentioned specifically is of little consequence. Whatever changes may be made, and in his opinion, starting out with the language of the French text, would be good, will relate to this chain of circumstances. If Mr. Eden should find that this has completely opened the door to all sorts of independent individual actions and destroyed world organization, the question then arises as to whether the United States would wish to give up its hemispheric organization in order to preserve the world organization.

Secretary Stettinius inquired whether the sentiment of the Delegation was to mention the words "Act of Chapultepec" or whether there would be a willingness merely to describe it in the language. Mr. Rockefeller stated that the Delegation had on its hands a negotiation with the four sponsoring powers, but that it also had negotiations with twenty other South American powers. He expressed agreement with the views stated by Dean Gildersleeve. Specific mention of the Act of Chapultepec would have a great drawing power. The simplest way would be to mention the name.

THE SECRETARY stated that the Delegation would like the Act mentioned, but if Russia and Britain refuse, what will our position then be? The question is, he said, whether the United States Delegation would be willing to have it described rather than mentioned.

Senator Vandenberg pointed out that the League Covenant had been mentioned, and that the Act of Chapultepec is merely the modern name for the Monroe Doctrine.

COMMANDER STASSEN stated that it is not necessary to have complete agreement. The United States is not in a weak position, and it is on sound ground in stating that an opening has been made.

Mr. Pasvolsky stated that by the elimination of certain words from the previous American draft the French and British had been given exactly what they wanted. In the new sentence it is left to the member states, individuals or groups of states, to make decisions regarding self-defense. It should be remembered, he said, that lend-lease was adopted as a measure of self-defense. There would be no objection to mention of the Act of Chapultepec if it is made clear to what part of that Act reference is made.

Mr. Pasvolsky read a revision which he suggested and which was as follows: "Should the Security Council not succeed in preventing aggression, and should aggression occur, (the members of the Organization possess the inherent right to take necessary measures for self-defense) [by any state against any member state, such member state possesses the inherent right to take necessary measures of selfdefense 174a the right to take measures of self-defense against armed attack shall [also] extend (to a group of states the members of which agree,) as in the case of the Act of Chapultepec, [action taken as a result of understandings or arrangements under which all members of a group of states agree | to consider an attack against any one of them as an attack against all of them [as in the case of the Act of Chapultepec] the taking of such measures shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under this Charter to take at any time such action as it may deem necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security".

THE CHAIRMAN suggested that there might be a pause in the discussion in order to take inventory. He raised a question as to whether this matter would need to be referred to Washington.

Mr. GATES thought that it would need to be referred to Washington if any change in the substance of the text is made.

THE CHAIRMAN inquired whether the Delegation would feel that a tentative decision could be reached before Mr. Eden leaves, that if so that it could be taken up at 2:30 at the meeting of the Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Pasvolsky suggested that it would be advisable to explain to Mr. Eden what the Delegation has in mind to do. This, he said, has never been discussed with Mr. Eden and amounts to the resumption of complete freedom of action.

COMMANDER STASSEN expressed the view that it would not be a reversion to freedom of action if the American draft is sufficiently tied down.
