ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

Gentlemen of the Congress:

Since I last had the privilege of addressing you on the state of the Union the war of nations on the other side of the sea, which had then only begun to disclose its portentous proportions, has extended its threatening and sinister scope until it has swept within its flame some portion of every quarter of the globe, not excepting our own hemisphere, has altered the whole face of international affairs, and now presents a prospect of reorganization and reconstruction such as statesmen and peoples have never been called upon to attempt before.

We have stood apart, studiously neutral. It was our manifest duty to do so. Not only did we have no part or interest in the policies which seem to have brought the conflict on; it was necessary, if a universal catastrophe was to be avoided, that a limit should be set to the sweep of destructive war and that some part of the great family of nations should keep the processes of peace alive, if only to prevent collective economic ruin and the breakdown throughout the world of the industries by which its populations are fed and sustained. It was manifestly the duty of the self-governed nations of this hemisphere to redress, if possible, the balance of economic loss and confusion in the other, if they could do nothing more. In the day of readjustment and recuperation we earnestly hope and believe that they can be of infinite service.

In this neutrality, to which they were bidden not only by their separate life and their habitual detachment from the politics of Europe but also by a clear perception of international duty, the states of America have become conscious of a new and more vital community of interest and moral partnership in affairs, more clearly conscious of the many common sympathies and interests and duties which bid them stand together.

There was a time in the early days of our own great nation and of the republics fighting their way to independence in Central and South America when the government of the United States looked upon itself as in some sort the guardian of the republics to the south of her as against any encroachments or efforts at political control from the other side of the water; felt it its duty to play the part even without invitation from them; and I think that we can claim that the task was undertaken with a true and disinterested enthusiasm for the freedom of the Americas and the unmolested self-government of her independent peoples. But it was always difficult to maintain such a rôle without offence to the pride of the peoples whose freedom of action we sought to protect, and without provoking serious misconceptions of our motives, and every thoughtful man of affairs must welcome the altered circumstances of the new day in whose light we now stand, when there is no claim of guardianship or thought of wards but, instead, a full and honorable association as of partners between ourselves and our neighbours, in the interest of all America, north and south. Our concern for the independence and prosperity of the states of Central and South America is not altered. We retain unabated the spirit that has inspired us throughout the whole life of our government and which was so frankly put into words by President Monroe. We still mean always to make a common cause of national independence and of political liberty in America. But that purpose is now better understood so far as it concerns ourselves. It is known not to be a selfish purpose. It is known to have in it no thought of taking advantage of any government in this hemisphere or playing its political fortunes for our own benefit. All the governments of America stand, so far as we are concerned, upon a footing of genuine equality and unquestioned independence.

We have been put to the test in the case of Mexico, and we have stood the test. Whether we have benefited Mexico by the course we have pursued remains to be seen. Her fortunes are in her own hands. But we have at least proved that we will not take advantage of her in her distress and undertake to impose upon her an order and government of our own choosing. Liberty is often a fierce and intractable thing, to which no bounds can be set, and to which no bounds of a few men's choosing ought ever to be set. Every American who has drunk at the true fountains of principle and tradition must subscribe without reservation to the high doctrine of the Virginia Bill of Rights, which in the great days in which our government was set up was everywhere amongst us accepted as the creed of freemen. That doctrine is, "That government is, or ought to be, instituted for the common benefit, protection, and security of the people, nation, or community;" that "of all the various modes and forms of government, that is the best which is capable of producing the greatest degree of happiness and safety, and is most effectually secured against the danger of maladministration; and that, when any government shall be found inadequate or contrary to these purposes, a majority of the community hath an indubitable, inalienable, and indefeasible right to reform, alter, or abolish it, in such manner as shall be judged most conducive to the public weal." We have unhesitatingly applied that heroic principle to the case of Mexico, and now hopefully await the rebirth of the troubled Republic, which had so much of which to purge itself and so little sympathy from any outside quarter in the radical but necessary process. We will aid and befriend Mexico, but we will not coerce her; and our course with regard to her ought to be sufficient proof to all America that we seek no political suzerainty or selfish control.

The moral is, that the states of America are not hostile rivals but coöperating friends, and that their growing sense of community of interest, alike in matters political and in matters economic, is likely to give them a new significance as factors in international affairs and in the political history of the world. It presents them as in a very deep and true sense a unit in world affairs, spiritual partners, standing together because thinking together, quick with common sympathies and common ideals. Separated they are subject to all the cross currents of the confused politics of a world of hostile rivalries; united in spirit and purpose they cannot be disappointed of their peaceful destiny.

This is Pan-Americanism. It has none of the spirit of empire in it. It is the embodiment, the effectual embodiment, of the spirit of law and independence and liberty and mutual service.

A very notable body of men recently met in the City of Washington, at the invitation and as the guests of this Government, whose deliberations are likely to be looked back to as marking a memorable turning point in the history of America. They were representative spokesmen of the several independent states of this hemisphere and were assembled to discuss the financial and commercial relations of the republics of the two continents which nature and political fortune have so intimately linked together. I earnestly recommend to your perusal the reports of their proceedings and of the actions of their committees. You will get from them, I think, a fresh conception of the ease and intelligence and advantage with which Americans of both continents may draw together in practical coöperation and of what the material foundations of this hopeful partnership of interest must consist,—of how we should build them and of how necessary it is that we should hasten their building.

There is, I venture to point out, an especial significance just now attaching to this whole matter of drawing the Americas together in bonds of honorable partnership and mutual advantage because of the economic readjustments which the world must inevitably witness within the next generation, when peace shall have at last resumed its healthful tasks. In the performance of these tasks I believe the Americas to be destined to play their parts together. I am interested to fix your attention on this prospect now because unless you take it within your view and permit the full significance of it to command your thought I can not find the right light in which to set forth the particular matter that lies at the very front of my whole thought as I address you to-day. I mean national defense.

No one who really comprehends the spirit of the great people for whom we are appointed to speak can fail to perceive that their passion is for peace, their genius best displayed in the practice of the arts of peace. Great democracies are not belligerent. They do not seek or desire war. Their thought is of individual liberty and of the free labour that supports life and the uncensored thought that quickens it. Conquest and dominion are not in our reckoning, or agreeable to our principles. But just because we demand unmolested development and the undisturbed government of our own lives upon our own principles of right and liberty, we resent, from whatever quarter it may come, the aggression we ourselves will not practice. We insist upon security in prosecuting our self-chosen lines of national development. We do more than that. We demand it also for others. We do not confine our enthusiasm for individual liberty and free national development to the incidents and movements of affairs which affect only ourselves. We feel it wherever there is a people that tries to walk in these difficult paths of independence and right. From the first we have made common cause with all partisans of liberty on this side the sea, and have deemed it as important that our neighbours should be free from all outside domination as that we ourselves should be; have set America aside as a whole for the uses of independent nations and political freemen.

Out of such thoughts grow all our policies. We regard war merely as a means of asserting the rights of a people against aggression. And we are as fiercely jealous of coercive or dictatorial power within our own nation as of aggression from without. We will not maintain a standing army except for uses which are as necessary in times of peace as in times of war; and we shall always see to it that our military peace establishment is no larger than is actually and continuously needed for the uses of days in which no enemies move against us. But we do believe in a body of free citizens ready and sufficient to take care of themselves and of the governments which they have set up to serve them. In our constitutions themselves we have commanded that "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed," and our confidence has been that our safety in times of danger would lie in the rising of the Nation to take care of itself, as the farmers rose at Lexington.

But war has never been a mere matter of men and guns. It is a thing of disciplined might. If our citizens are ever to fight effectively upon a sudden summons, they must know how modern fighting is done, and what to do when the summons comes to render themselves immediately available and immediately effective. And the government must be their servant in this matter, must supply them with the training they need to take care of themselves and of it. The military arm of their government, which they will not allow to direct them, they may properly use to serve them and make their independence secure,—and not their own independence merely but the rights also of those with whom they have made common cause, should they also be put in jeopardy. They must be fitted to play the great rôle in the world, and particularly in this hemisphere, for which they are qualified by principle and by chastened ambition to play.

It is with these ideals in mind that the plans of the Department of War for more adequate national defense were conceived which will be laid before you, and which I urge you to sanction and put into effect as soon as they can be properly scrutinized and discussed. They seem to me the essential first steps, and they seem to me for the present sufficient.

They contemplate an increase of the standing force of the regular army from its present strength of five thousand and twenty-three officers and one hundred and two thousand nine hundred and eighty-five enlisted men of all services to a strength of seven thousand one hundred and thirty-six officers and one hundred and thirty-four thousand seven hundred and seven enlisted men, or 141,843, all told, all services, rank and file, by the addition of fifty-two companies of coast artillery, fifteen companies of engineers, ten regiments of infantry, four regiments of field artillery, and four aero squadrons, besides seven hundred and fifty officers required for a great variety of extra service, especially the all important duty of training the citizen force of which I shall presently speak, seven hundred and ninety-two non-commissioned officers for service in drill, recruiting and the like, and the necessary quota of enlisted men for the Quartermaster Corps, the Hospital Corps, the Ordnance Department, and other similar auxiliary services. These are the additions necessary to render the army adequate for its present duties, duties which it has to perform not only upon our own continental coasts and borders and at our interior army posts, but also in the Philippines, in the Hawaiian Islands, at the Isthmus, and in Porto Rico.

By way of making the country ready to assert some part of its real power promptly and upon a larger scale, should occasion arise, the plan also contemplates supplementing the army by a force of four hundred thousand disciplined citizens, raised in increments of one hundred and thirty-three thousand a year throughout a period of three years. This it is proposed to do by a process of enlistment under which the serviceable men of the country would be asked to bind themselves to serve with the colors for purposes of training for short periods throughout three years, and to come to the colors at call at any time throughout an additional "furlough" period of three years. This force of four hundred thousand men would be provided with personal accoutrements as fast as enlisted and their equipment for the field made ready to be supplied at any time. They would be assembled for training at stated intervals at convenient places in association with suitable units of the regular army. Their period of annual training would not necessarily exceed two months in the year.

It would depend upon the patriotic feeling of the younger men of the country whether they responded to such a call to service or not. It would depend upon the patriotic spirit of the employers of the country whether they made it possible for the younger men in their employ to respond under favorable conditions or not. I, for one, do not doubt the patriotic devotion either of our young men or of those who give them employment,—those for whose benefit and protection they would in fact enlist. I would look forward to the success of such an experiment with entire confidence.

At least so much by way of preparation for defense seems to me to be absolutely imperative now. We cannot do less.

The programme which will be laid before you by the Secretary of the Navy is similarly conceived. It involves only a shortening of the time within which plans long matured shall be carried out; but it does make definite and explicit a programme which has heretofore been only implicit, held in the minds of the Committees on Naval Affairs and disclosed in the debates of the two Houses but nowhere formulated or formally adopted. It seems to me very clear that it will be to the advantage of the country for the Congress to adopt a comprehensive plan for putting the navy upon a final footing of strength and efficiency and to press that plan to completion within the next five years. We have always looked to the navy of the country as our first and chief line of defense; we have always seen it to be our manifest course of prudence to be strong on the seas. Year by year we have been creating a navy which now ranks very high indeed among the navies of the maritime nations. We should now definitely determine how we shall complete what we have begun, and how soon.

The programme to be laid before you contemplates the construction within five years of ten battleships, six battle cruisers, ten scout cruisers, fifty destroyers, fifteen fleet submarines, eighty-five coast submarines, four gunboats, one hospital ship, two ammunition ships, two fuel oil ships, and one repair ship. It is proposed that of this number we shall the first year provide for the construction of two battle ships, two battle cruisers, three scout cruisers, fifteen destroyers, five fleet submarines, twenty-five coast submarines, two gunboats, and one hospital ship; the second year, two battleships, one scout cruiser, ten destroyers, four fleet submarines, fifteen coast submarines, one gun boat, and one fuel oil ship; the third year, two battle ships, one battle cruiser, two scout cruisers, five destroyers, two fleet submarines, and fifteen coast submarines; the fourth year, two battle ships, two battle cruisers, two scout cruisers, ten destroyers, two fleet submarines, fifteen coast submarines, one ammunition ship, and one fuel oil ship; and the fifth year, two battle ships, one battle cruiser, two scout cruisers, ten destroyers, two fleet submarines, fifteen coast submarines, one gunboat, one ammunition ship, and one repair ship.

The Secretary of the Navy is asking also for the immediate addition to the personnel of the navy of seven thousand five hundred sailors, twenty-five hundred apprentice seamen, and fifteen hundred marines. This increase would be sufficient to care for the ships which are to be completed within the fiscal year 1917 and also for the number of men which must be put in training to man the ships which will be completed early in 1918. It is also necessary that the number of midshipmen at the Naval academy at Annapolis should be increased by at least three hundred in order that the force of officers should be more rapidly added to; and authority is asked to appoint, for engineering duties only, approved graduates of engineering colleges, and for service in the aviation corps a certain number of men taken from civil life.

If this full programme should be carried out we should have built or building in 1921, according to the estimates of survival and standards of classification followed by the General Board of the Department, an effective navy consisting of twenty-seven battleships, of the first line, six battle cruisers, twenty-five battleships of the second line, ten armored cruisers, thirteen scout cruisers, five first class cruisers, three second class cruisers, ten third class cruisers, one hundred and eight destroyers, eighteen fleet submarines, one hundred and fifty-seven coast submarines, six monitors, twenty gunboats, four supply ships, fifteen fuel ships, four transports, three tenders to torpedo vessels, eight vessels of special types, and two ammunition ships. This would be a navy fitted to our needs and worthy of our traditions.

But armies and instruments of war are only part of what has to be considered if we are to provide for the supreme matter of national self-sufficiency and security in all its aspects. There are other great matters which will be thrust upon our attention whether we will or not. There is, for example, a very pressing question of trade and shipping involved in this great problem of national adequacy. It is necessary for many weighty reasons of national efficiency and development that we should have a great merchant marine. The great merchant fleet we once used to make us rich, that great body of sturdy sailors who used to carry our flag into every sea, and who were the pride and often the bulwark of the nation, we have almost driven out of existence by inexcusable neglect and indifference and by a hopelessly blind and provincial policy of so-called economic protection. It is high time we repaired our mistake and resumed our commercial independence on the seas.

For it is a question of independence. If other nations go to war or seek to hamper each other's commerce, our merchants, it seems, are at their mercy, to do with as they please. We must use their ships, and use them as they determine. We have not ships enough of our own. We cannot handle our own commerce on the seas. Our independence is provincial, and is only on land and within our own borders. We are not likely to be permitted to use even the ships of other nations in rivalry of their own trade, and are without means to extend our commerce even where the doors are wide open and our goods desired. Such a situation is not to be endured. It is of capital importance not only that the United States should be its own carrier on the seas and enjoy the economic independence which only an adequate merchant marine would give it, but also that the American hemisphere as a whole should enjoy a like independence and self-sufficiency, if it is not to be drawn into the tangle of European affairs. Without such independence the whole question of our political unity and self-determination is very seriously clouded and complicated indeed.

Moreover, we can develop no true or effective American policy without ships of our own,—not ships of war, but ships of peace, carrying goods and carrying much more: creating friendships and rendering indispensable services to all interests on this side the water. They must move constantly back and forth between the Americas. They are the only shuttles that can weave the delicate fabric of sympathy, comprehension, confidence, and mutual dependence in which we wish to clothe our policy of America for Americans.

The task of building up an adequate merchant marine for America private capital must ultimately undertake and achieve, as it has undertaken and achieved every other like task amongst us in the past, with admirable enterprise, intelligence, and vigor; and it seems to me a manifest dictate of wisdom that we should promptly remove every legal obstacle that may stand in the way of this much to be desired revival of our old independence and should facilitate in every possible way the building, purchase, and American registration of ships. But capital cannot accomplish this great task of a sudden. It must embark upon it by degrees, as the opportunities of trade develop. Something must be done at once; done to open routes and develop opportunities where they are as yet undeveloped; done to open the arteries of trade where the currents have not yet learned to run,—especially between the two American continents, where they are, singularly enough, yet to be created and quickened; and it is evident that only the government can undertake such beginnings and assume the initial financial risks. When the risk has passed and private capital begins to find its way in sufficient abundance into these new channels, the government may withdraw. But it cannot omit to begin. It should take the first steps, and should take them at once. Our goods must not lie piled up at our ports and stored upon side tracks in freight cars which are daily needed on the roads; must not be left without means of transport to any foreign quarter. We must not await the permission of foreign ship-owners and foreign governments to send them where we will.

With a view to meeting these pressing necessities of our commerce and availing ourselves at the earliest possible moment of the present unparalleled opportunity of linking the two Americas together in bonds of mutual interest and service, an opportunity which may never return again if we miss it now, proposals will be made to the present Congress for the purchase or construction of ships to be owned and directed by the government similar to those made to the last Congress, but modified in some essential particulars. I recommend these proposals to you for your prompt acceptance with the more confidence because every month that has elapsed since the former proposals were made has made the necessity for such action more and more manifestly imperative. That need was then foreseen; it is now acutely felt and everywhere realized by those for whom trade is waiting but who can find no conveyance for their goods. I am not so much interested in the particulars of the programme as I am in taking immediate advantage of the great opportunity which awaits us if we will but act in this emergency. In this matter, as in all others, a spirit of common counsel should prevail, and out of it should come an early solution of this pressing problem.

There is another matter which seems to me to be very intimately associated with the question of national safety and preparation for defense. That is our policy towards the Philippines and the people of Porto Rico. Our treatment of them and their attitude towards us are manifestly of the first consequence in the development of our duties in the world and in getting a free hand to perform those duties. We must be free from every unnecessary burden or embarrassment; and there is no better way to be clear of embarrassment than to fulfil our promises and promote the interests of those dependent on us to the utmost. Bills for the alteration and reform of the government of the Philippines and for rendering fuller political justice to the people of Porto Rico were submitted to the sixty-third Congress. They will be submitted also to you. I need not particularize their details. You are most of you already familiar with them. But I do recommend them to your early adoption with the sincere conviction that there are few measures you could adopt which would more serviceably clear the way for the great policies by which we wish to make good, now and always, our right to lead in enterprises of peace and good will and economic and political freedom.

The plans for the armed forces of the nation which I have outlined, and for the general policy of adequate preparation for mobilization and defense, involve of course very large additional expenditures of money,—expenditures which will considerably exceed the estimated revenues of the government. It is made my duty by law, whenever the estimates of expenditure exceed the estimates of revenue, to call the attention of the Congress to the fact and suggest any means of meeting the deficiency that it may be wise or possible for me to suggest. I am ready to believe that it would be my duty to do so in any case; and I feel particularly bound to speak of the matter when it appears that the deficiency will arise directly out of the adoption by the Congress of measures which I myself urge it to adopt. Allow me, therefore, to speak briefly of the present state of the Treasury and of the fiscal problems which the next year will probably disclose.

On the thirtieth of June last there was an available balance in the general fund of the Treasury of $104,170,105.78. The total estimated receipts for the year 1916, on the assumption that the emergency revenue measure passed by the last Congress will not be extended beyond its present limit, the thirty-first of December, 1915, and that the present duty of one cent per pound on sugar will be discontinued after the first of May, 1916, will be $670,365,500. The balance of June last and these estimated revenues come, therefore, to a grand total of $774,535,605.78. The total estimated disbursements for the present fiscal year, including twenty-five millions for the Panama Canal, twelve millions for probable deficiency appropriations, and fifty thousand dollars for miscellaneous debt redemptions, will be $753,891,000; and the balance in the general fund of the Treasury will be reduced to $20,644,605.78. The emergency revenue act, if continued beyond its present time limitation, would produce, during the half year then remaining, about forty-one millions. The duty of one cent per pound on sugar, if continued, would produce during the two months of the fiscal year remaining after the first of May, about fifteen millions. These two sums, amounting together to fifty-six millions, if added to the revenues of the second half of the fiscal year, would yield the Treasury at the end of the year an available balance of $76,644,605.78.

The additional revenues required to carry out the programme of military and naval preparation of which I have spoken, would, as at present estimated, be for the fiscal year 1917, $93,800,000. Those figures, taken with the figures for the present fiscal year which I have already given, disclose our financial problem for the year 1917. Assuming that the taxes imposed by the emergency revenue act and the present duty on sugar are to be discontinued, and that the balance at the close of the present fiscal year will be only $20,644,605.78, that the disbursements for the Panama Canal will again be about twenty-five millions, and that the additional expenditures for the army and navy are authorized by the Congress, the deficit in the general fund of the Treasury on the thirtieth of June, 1917, will be nearly two hundred and thirty-five millions. To this sum at least fifty millions should be added to represent a safe working balance for the Treasury, and twelve millions to include the usual deficiency estimates in 1917; and these additions would make a total deficit of some two hundred and ninety-seven millions. If the present taxes should be continued throughout this year and the next, however, there would be a balance in the Treasury of some seventy-six and a half millions at the end of the present fiscal year, and a deficit at the end of the next year of only some fifty millions, or, reckoning in sixty-two millions for deficiency appropriations and a safe Treasury balance at the end of the year, a total deficit of some one hundred and twelve millions. The obvious moral of the figures is that it is a plain counsel of prudence to continue all of the present taxes or their equivalents, and confine ourselves to the problem of providing one hundred and twelve millions of new revenue rather than two hundred and ninety-seven millions.

How shall we obtain the new revenue? We are frequently reminded that there are many millions of bonds which the Treasury is authorized under existing law to sell to reimburse the sums paid out of current revenues for the construction of the Panama Canal; and it is true that bonds to the amount of approximately $222,000,000 are now available for that purpose. Prior to 1913, $134,631,980 of these bonds had actually been sold to recoup the expenditures at the Isthmus; and now constitute a considerable item of the public debt. But I, for one, do not believe that the people of this country approve of postponing the payment of their bills. Borrowing money is short-sighted finance. It can be justified only when permanent things are to be accomplished which many generations will certainly benefit by and which it seems hardly fair that a single generation should pay for. The objects we are now proposing to spend money for cannot be so classified, except in the sense that everything wisely done may be said to be done in the interest of posterity as well as in our own. It seems to me a clear dictate of prudent statesmanship and frank finance that in what we are now, I hope, about to undertake we should pay as we go. The people of the country are entitled to know just what burdens of taxation they are to carry, and to know from the outset, now. The new bills should be paid by internal taxation.

To what sources, then, shall we turn? This is so peculiarly a question which the gentlemen of the House of Representatives are expected under the Constitution to propose an answer to that you will hardly expect me to do more than discuss it in very general terms.

We should be following an almost universal example of modern governments if we were to draw the greater part or even the whole of the revenues we need from the income taxes. By somewhat lowering the present limits of exemption and the figure at which the surtax shall begin to be imposed, and by increasing, step by step throughout the present graduation, the surtax itself, the income taxes as at present apportioned would yield sums sufficient to balance the books of the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year 1917 without anywhere making the burden unreasonably or oppressively heavy. The precise reckonings are fully and accurately set out in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury which will be immediately laid before you.

And there are many additional sources of revenue which can justly be resorted to without hampering the industries of the country or putting any too great charge upon individual expenditure. A tax of one cent per gallon on gasoline and naphtha would yield, at the present estimated production, $10,000,000; a tax of fifty cents per horse power on automobiles and internal explosion engines, $15,000,000; a stamp tax on bank cheques, probably $18,000,000; a tax of twenty-five cents per ton on pig iron, $10,000,000; a tax of twenty-five cents per ton on fabricated iron and steel, probably $10,000,000. In a country of great industries like this it ought to be easy to distribute the burdens of taxation without making them anywhere bear too heavily or too exclusively upon any one set of persons or undertakings. What is clear is, that the industry of this generation should pay the bills of this generation.

I have spoken to you to-day, Gentlemen, upon a single theme, the thorough preparation of the nation to care for its own security and to make sure of entire freedom to play the impartial rôle in this hemisphere and in the world which we all believe to have been providentially assigned to it. I have had in my mind no thought of any immediate or particular danger arising out of our relations with other nations. We are at peace with all the nations of the world, and there is reason to hope that no question in controversy between this and other Governments will lead to any serious breach of amicable relations, grave as some differences of attitude and policy have been and may yet turn out to be. I am sorry to say that the gravest threats against our national peace and safety have been uttered within our own borders. There are citizens of the United States, I blush to admit, born under other flags but welcomed under our generous naturalization laws to the full freedom and opportunity of America, who have poured the poison of disloyalty into the very arteries of our national life; who have sought to bring the authority and good name of our Government into contempt, to destroy our industries wherever they thought it effective for their vindictive purposes to strike at them, and to debase our politics to the uses of foreign intrigue. Their number is not great as compared with the whole number of those sturdy hosts by which our nation has been enriched in recent generations out of virile foreign stocks; but it is great enough to have brought deep disgrace upon us and to have made it necessary that we should promptly make use of processes of law by which we may be purged of their corrupt distempers. America never witnessed anything like this before. It never dreamed it possible that men sworn into its own citizenship, men drawn out of great free stocks such as supplied some of the best and strongest elements of that little, but how heroic, nation that in a high day of old staked its very life to free itself from every entanglement that had darkened the fortunes of the older nations and set up a new standard here,—that men of such origins and such free choices of allegiance would ever turn in malign reaction against the Government and people who had welcomed and nurtured them and seek to make this proud country once more a hotbed of European passion. A little while ago such a thing would have seemed incredible. Because it was incredible we made no preparation for it. We would have been almost ashamed to prepare for it, as if we were suspicious of ourselves, our own comrades and neighbors! But the ugly and incredible thing has actually come about and we are without adequate federal laws to deal with it. I urge you to enact such laws at the earliest possible moment and feel that in doing so I am urging you to do nothing less than save the honor and self-respect of the nation. Such creatures of passion, disloyalty, and anarchy must be crushed out. They are not many, but they are infinitely malignant, and the hand of our power should close over them at once. They have formed plots to destroy property, they have entered into conspiracies against the neutrality of the Government, they have sought to pry into every confidential transaction of the Government in order to serve interests alien to our own. It is possible to deal with these things very effectually. I need not suggest the terms in which they may be dealt with.

I wish that it could be said that only a few men, misled by mistaken sentiments of allegiance to the governments under which they were born, had been guilty of disturbing the self-possession and misrepresenting the temper and principles of the country during these days of terrible war, when it would seem that every man who was truly an American would instinctively make it his duty and his pride to keep the scales of judgment even and prove himself a partisan of no nation but his own. But it cannot. There are some men among us, and many resident abroad who, though born and bred in the United States and calling themselves Americans, have so forgotten themselves and their honor as citizens as to put their passionate sympathy with one or the other side in the great European conflict above their regard for the peace and dignity of the United States.

They also preach and practice disloyalty. No laws, I suppose, can reach corruptions of the mind and heart; but I should not speak of others without also speaking of these and expressing the even deeper humiliation and scorn which every self-possessed and thoughtfully patriotic American must feel when he thinks of them and of the discredit they are daily bringing upon us.

While we speak of the preparation of the nation to make sure of her security and her effective power we must not fall into the patent error of supposing that her real strength comes from armaments and mere safeguards of written law. It comes, of course, from her people, their energy, their success in their undertakings, their free opportunity to use the natural resources of our great home land and of the lands outside our continental borders which look to us for protection, for encouragement, and for assistance in their development; from the organization and freedom and vitality of our economic life. The domestic questions which engaged the attention of the last Congress are more vital to the nation in this its time of test than at any other time. We cannot adequately make ready for any trial of our strength unless we wisely and promptly direct the force of our laws into these all-important fields of domestic action. A matter which it seems to me we should have very much at heart is the creation of the right instrumentalities by which to mobilize our economic resources in any time of national necessity. I take it for granted that I do not need your authority to call into systematic consultation with the directing officers of the army and navy men of recognized leadership and ability from among our citizens who are thoroughly familiar, for example, with the transportation facilities of the country and therefore competent to advise how they may be coördinated when the need arises, those who can suggest the best way in which to bring about prompt coöperation among the manufacturers of the country, should it be necessary, and those who could assist to bring the technical skill of the country to the aid of the Government in the solution of particular problems of defense. I only hope that if I should find it feasible to constitute such an advisory body the Congress would be willing to vote the small sum of money that would be needed to defray the expenses that would probably be necessary to give it the clerical and administrative machinery with which to do serviceable work.

What is more important is, that the industries and resources of the country should be available and ready for mobilization. It is the more imperatively necessary, therefore, that we should promptly devise means for doing what we have not yet done: that we should give intelligent federal aid and stimulation to industrial and vocational education, as we have long done in the large field of our agricultural industry; that, at the same time that we safeguard and conserve the natural resources of the country we should put them at the disposal of those who will use them promptly and intelligently, as was sought to be done in the admirable bills submitted to the last Congress from its committees on the public lands, bills which I earnestly recommend in principle to your consideration; that we should put into early operation some provision for rural credits which will add to the extensive borrowing facilities already afforded the farmer by the Reserve Bank Act adequate instrumentalities by which long credits may be obtained on land mortgages; and that we should study more carefully than they have hitherto been studied the right adaptation of our economic arrangements to changing conditions.

Many conditions about which we have repeatedly legislated are being altered from decade to decade, it is evident, under our very eyes, and are likely to change even more rapidly and more radically in the days immediately ahead of us, when peace has returned to the world and the nations of Europe once more take up their tasks of commerce and industry with the energy of those who must bestir themselves to build anew. Just what these changes will be no one can certainly foresee or confidently predict. There are no calculable, because no stable, elements in the problem. The most we can do is to make certain that we have the necessary instrumentalities of information constantly at our service so that we may be sure that we know exactly what we are dealing with when we come to act, if it should be necessary to act at all. We must first certainly know what it is that we are seeking to adapt ourselves to. I may ask the privilege of addressing you more at length on this important matter a little later in your session.

In the meantime may I make this suggestion? The transportation problem is an exceedingly serious and pressing one in this country. There has from time to time of late been reason to fear that our railroads would not much longer be able to cope with it successfully, as at present equipped and coördinated. I suggest that it would be wise to provide for a commission of inquiry to ascertain by a thorough canvass of the whole question whether our laws as at present framed and administered are as serviceable as they might be in the solution of the problem. It is obviously a problem that lies at the very foundation of our efficiency as a people. Such an inquiry ought to draw out every circumstance and opinion worth considering and we need to know all sides of the matter if we mean to do anything in the field of federal legislation.

No one, I am sure, would wish to take any backward step. The regulation of the railways of the country by federal commission has had admirable results and has fully justified the hopes and expectations of those by whom the policy of regulation was originally proposed. The question is not what should we undo? It is, whether there is anything else we can do that would supply us with effective means, in the very process of regulation, for bettering the conditions under which the railroads are operated and for making them more useful servants of the country as a whole. It seems to me that it might be the part of wisdom, therefore, before further legislation in this field is attempted, to look at the whole problem of coordination and efficiency in the full light of a fresh assessment of circumstance and opinion, as a guide to dealing with the several parts of it.

For what we are seeking now, what in my mind is the single thought of this message, is national efficiency and security. We serve a great nation. We should serve it in the spirit of its peculiar genius. It is the genius of common men for self-government, industry, justice, liberty and peace. We should see to it that it lacks no instrument, no facility or vigor of law, to make it sufficient to play its part with energy, safety, and assured success. In this we are no partisans but heralds and prophets of a new age.

The Chinese Government has called a national convention to determine the form of government, in view of the evident popular desire therefor. This is communicated to the United States Government in order to avoid misunderstanding and in the belief that all friendly nations will regard with favor the hope of the Chinese people to secure peace and prosperity by restoring monarchical government.	71
807	Mr. Reinsch to Mr. Lansing.	---do---	Taxation of foreigners. Refers to Department's No. 325 of Sept. 17, 1915. Ask for further instructions in regard to the subject of Legation's No. 683 of July 9.	230
	Same to same (telegram)---	Nov. 1	Political affairs. Gives reasons which prompted the British and Russian Ministers to concur in the suggestion of the Japanese Chargé to the Chinese Government that a stop be put to the monarchical movement.	72
811	Same to same-----	Nov. 3	Same subject. Incloses newspaper extract which purports to give the substance of the representations made concerning the monarchical movement. Also transmits reply of the Chinese Government.	72
	The Department of State to the Japanese Embassy.	Nov. 4	Same subject. Reply to the Embassy's Oct. 27. This Government regards the matter as wholly a domestic question; hence any interference on its part would be an invasion of China's sovereignty unless convincing evidence, not now had, should show that foreign interests under its care would be imperiled.	76

	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Casenave.	1915. Aug. 12	Financial affairs. American Chargé d'Affaires at Port au Prince reports that the bank was instructed to collect customs revenues in Port au Prince, the branch office having already performed that function in Cape Haitien.	517
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Davis (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Consult Admiral Caperton and secure cases of gourdes on arrival, place same under Legation's seal until instructed regarding their release.	517
	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Aug. 13	Political affairs. President Dartiguenave will name cabinet to-day. Suggests that negotiations be opened soon to carry out stipulations contained in Department's telegram of August 10, 1915.	482
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Davis (telegram).	Aug. 14	Treaty negotiations. Transmits full powers to negotiate treaty.	433
	Same to same (telegram) ...	Aug. 18	Same subject. Refers to Department's Aug. 10 and 14. Department expects that the draft treaty submitted will be ratified promptly. Confer with Admiral Caperton for the purpose of conducting such public works under his direction as will relieve need for employment. The Admiral will be directed to take charge of certain customhouses.	434
	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Refers to the foregoing. Draft of treaty was placed before the President Aug. 17; he gave assurance action would be taken at once.	435
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Daniels.	...do....	Financial affairs. Requests that Admiral Caperton be directed to assume charge of certain customhouses.	518
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Johnson (telegram).	...do....	Political affairs. Urge immediate measures on part of Dominican Government to prevent movement of arms into Haiti.	482
36	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Davis.	Aug. 19	Treaty negotiations. Incloses the President's autograph full power to sign treaty.	435
	Mr. Johnson to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Political affairs. The President and Minister of Foreign Affairs promised order will be sent to frontier governors urging renewed vigilance.	482
	Mr. Daniels to Admiral Caperton (telegram).	...do....	Financial affairs. List of customhouses to assume charge of funds collected to be used for organizing and maintaining efficient constabulary.	518
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Davis (telegram).	Aug. 22	Treaty negotiations. States motives and purposes of this Government in regard to Haiti. The treaty should be ratified promptly, and the Haitian Government should invite this Government to enter into a modus vivendi in order to make the treaty effective immediately. This Government will then assist Haiti to place its finances on a sound basis and to carry on public works for the benefit of its people.	435
	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Aug. 23	Same subject. A note from the Foreign Office states that they are ready to begin pourparlers, and that the Government will suggest to the Legislature to pass a resolution expressing a desire that the President conclude the treaty. This attitude results from the expression "without modification," used in Department's instruction of Aug. 12.	436
	Same to same (telegram)do....	Financial affairs. Arrival of Dutch boat without shipment of gourdes. Representative of bank note company displays cable from New York stating that no more shipping until advised by him.	519
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Davis (telegram).	Aug. 24	Treaty negotiations. If de facto authorities do not ratify treaty, this Government will be compelled either to establish a military Government or permit present control of Government to pass to the political faction representing best elements of Haiti in order to reestablish stable government.	437
	Admiral Benson to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Financial affairs. Report inclosed relative to conditions in Haitian waters from August 7 to 12, inclusive.	519
	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Aug. 25	Treaty negotiations. The President desires to propose certain changes in the draft. Political enemies of the Government are attempting to stir up animosity on the basis of the attitude of the United States.	438
	Admiral Caperton to Mr. Daniels (telegram).	Aug. 26	Political affairs. Have assumed charge customhouse and port service Port de Paix. Ex-Government troops willing to disarm and return to homes, but can not get to our lines on account Cacos.	483
	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Aug. 28	Treaty negotiations. Minister for Foreign Affairs submitted written reply of Haitian Government in regard to treaty. Practically every stipulation of original treaty is either omitted or so changed as to defeat its purpose. In my reply I declined to discuss matters, but requested an opinion as to acceptability of the original draft.	439

	Same to same (telegram)	Sept. 2	Political affairs. He will proclaim martial law at Port au Prince September 3, to quell agitation there.	484
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Blanchard (telegram).	---do---	Railroad controversy. Admiral Caperton suggests that the Department use its good offices to induce the National Railroad to resume work at once. If the Admiral considers it to be urgent the Department will endeavor to arrange with bankers for an advance sufficient to employ the hungry and indigent citizens.	549
	Admiral Caperton to Mr. Daniels (telegram).	Sept. 3	Political affairs. Transmits proclamation of martial law issued at Port au Prince.	484
	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 4	Treaty negotiations. If certain cabinet members resign, vacancies will be filled by those in sympathy with United States. Does Department still desire resolution by Congress authorizing the President to sign the treaty. Declaration of martial law has greatly strengthened position of the Government and will facilitate ratification of treaty.	442
	Mr. Ménos to Mr. Lansing.	---do---	Political affairs. Protests against arbitrary action of the American forces in Haiti in taking possession of customhouse and government of Port au Prince.	485
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Davis (telegram).	Sept. 5	Treaty negotiations. If satisfied treaty will be ratified without amendments, on 12th inst., not necessary to insist on previous resolution. Department looks for immediate favorable action by the Chambers.	442
	Mr. Daniels to Admiral Caperton (telegram).	---do---	Political affairs. Instructs not to take offensive action against Haitians unless to save life or property, then inform Department immediately.	486
	Mr. Ménos to Mr. Lansing.	Sept. 6	Same subject. Desires explanations of Admiral Caperton's proclamation of martial law and taking possession of customhouses.	486
	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 7	Treaty negotiations. Conference with President and Cabinet demanding answer to treaty. President requested and accepted resignations of Minister for Foreign Affairs and Minister of Public Works, which removes cause of previous delays. Cabinet agrees to accept treaty substantially as submitted. President realizes necessity for action without delay.	442
	Admiral Caperton to Mr. Daniels (telegram).	---do---	Political affairs. Cacos investing Cape Haitien and preventing foodstuffs from entering. May have to consider offensive operations against them.	486
	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 10	Treaty negotiations. Transmits modifications of treaty proposed by Haitian Government. Minister for Foreign Affairs states that no ratification for the treaty can be secured unless modified as stated.	443
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Ménos.	---do---	Political affairs. Reply to his Sept. 4 and 6. The interests of Haiti will be best served by restricting pending negotiations to Port au Prince.	487
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Davis (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Reviews interviews had with the Haitian Minister at Washington regarding the United States taking possession of customhouses and declaring martial law in Haiti, and that the Minister was informed that negotiations should be carried on at Port au Prince only.	487

	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 14	Same subject. Minister for Foreign Affairs states Government ready to sign treaty, enter into modus vivendi, and then submit treaty for ratification. This is preferable mode of procedure. Minister of Finance stated necessity of funds for meeting Government expenses until details of treaty are arranged and income realized under its operation. Statement is desired that United States will aid Haitian Government to secure loan.	446
	Mr. Johnson to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Political affairs. Reply to Department's Sept. 10. The Dominican Government has issued a decree prohibiting exportation of arms and ammunition to Haiti.	490
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Davis (telegram).	Sept. 15	Treaty negotiations. Reply to his Sept. 14. Instruction to conclude treaty without requiring resolution authorizing President to enter into modus vivendi, provided modus vivendi is signed at same time treaty is ratified. Then this Government will assist in securing loan. A commission with full powers to negotiate this loan should be sent to Washington. Upon ratification of treaty, will take steps to obtain an advance of $100,000 for Haitian Government.	447

ITALY.

234	Mr. Page to Mr. Bryan. ---	1915. Jan. 11	Liability to Italian military service of native or naturalized American citizens of Italian parentage. Refers to correspondence in 1914 regarding Rev. Dominic Cassetta; incloses Foreign Office note of Jan. 7 concerning him, and also discussing the general question of naturalized American citizens of Italian origin in relation to Italian military service.	554
	-----	Mar. 24	Treaty for the advancement of general peace, concluded between the United States and Italy. Proclamation.	551
127	Mr. Bryan to Mr. Page. ---	---do---	Naturalization treaty. Refers to Embassy's Nos. 177 and 221 of Nov. 3 and Dec. 14, 1914, and instructs him to report when it is opportune to reopen negotiations for a naturalization treaty between the United States and Italy.	555
274	Mr. Jay to Mr. Bryan. ---	Apr. 1	Same subject. Refers to previous correspondence on negotiation of a naturalization treaty; Italy holds that under the doctrine of dual allegiance and in the absence of a naturalization treaty, a person born in the United States of Italian parents is an Italian subject when in Italy, even where the father was naturalized before that person's birth, and may be detained for military service.	556
271	Mr. Page to Mr. Bryan. ---	May 11	Same subject. Reply to Department's 127 of Mar. 24. Because of Italy's relation to the European war, the present is not an opportune time to reopen negotiations for a naturalization treaty.	557

	Mr. Lodge to Counselor of the Department of State.	June 5	Same subject. Incloses papers showing status of Ugo Da Prato and his father Antonio. Dual citizenship not possible; the American doctrine of indefeasible allegiance is accepted by nearly all nations. Italy's contention to the contrary should be strongly opposed.	557
252	Mr. Bryan to Mr. Page (telegram).	June 7	Same subject. Reply to his 281 of May 18, concerning Ghiloni, whose father was naturalized after the son's birth. Under its law, Ghiloni is a citizen of the United States. It is hoped the Italian Government will permit his return to this country.	558
318	Mr. Page to Mr. Bryan (telegram).	June 8	Same subject. Inquiry as to detention of Enrico Ajello.	559
254	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Page (telegram).	June 9	Same subject. Da Prato's father naturalized before the son's birth; request his immediate release.	559
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Lodge.	do	Same subject. Reply to his June 5; refers to Department's June 9 to Mr. Page. Da Prato will probably be released. Response to Mr. Lodge's remarks on the law involved; "dual citizenship" discussed at length.	559
256	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Page (telegram).	June 10	Same subject. Reply to his 318 of June 8; instruction to request release of Ajello.	564
321	Mr. Page to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	do	Same subject. Reply to Department's June 9; Ugo Da Prato is held by Italy to be an Italian citizen, subject to military duty, under Law 555 of June 13, 1912, because his father, Antonio Da Prato returned to Italy, resided there more than two years, thus reacquired Italian citizenship, and communicated it to his son.	564
322	Same to same (telegram)	June 11	Same subject. Reply to Department's June 7; Ghiloni case presented to the Foreign Office June 8, but no reply to date.	565
261	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Page (telegram).	June 14	Same subject. Reply to his 321 of June 10; further information as to Da Prato; instruction to present it to the Italian Government.	565
	Mr. Lodge to Mr. Lansing.	June 16	Same subject. Reply to Mr. Lansing's June 9; further remarks on dual citizenship; its contrast with dual allegiance.	565
318	Mr. Page to Mr. Lansing.	June 17	Same subject. Refers to Department's 254 and 261 of June 9 and 14 on the Da Prato case; incloses Foreign Office note of May 4 thereon, and his note of June 16 to the Foreign Office in pursuance of Department's 261.	566
331	Same to same (telegram)	do	Same subject. Refers to Department's 261 of June 14; he has presented a further note on the Da Prato case. The Foreign Office promises a careful investigation.	568
332	Same to same (telegram)	June 18	Same subject. Refers to Department's 256 of June 10 and requests transmission of a message to Ajello's brother.	568
282	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Page (telegram).	July 12	Same subject. Refers to his 318 of June 17. Asks what reply has been made to Embassy's note of June 16 to the Foreign Office concerning Da Prato.	568
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Lodge.	do	Same subject. Refers to previous correspondence; incloses copy of Mr. Page's 318 of June 17 showing Italian Government's decision in Da Prato case; informs him of Department's further efforts to secure Da Prato's release.	569
351	Mr. Page to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	July 14	Same subject. Reply to Department's 282 of July 12; he is again urging release of Da Prato.	569
286	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Page (telegram).	July 20	Same subject. Case of Mazza, father not naturalized at time of son's birth. Instruction to request permission for Mazza's departure.	570
287	Same to same (telegram)	do	Same subject. Refers to his 322 of June 11, Ghiloni case; instructions; the principle of election of nationality should be recognized in cases of persons born with dual nationality.	570
354	Mr. Page to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	July 22	Same subject. Reply to the foregoing; Ghiloni case is promised early attention; Foreign Office seems more favorable than formerly to the idea of naturalization.	570
188	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Page.	July 29	Same subject. Refers to his 332 of June 18, and instructs him to request an early decision of the Ajello case.	571
194	Same to same	Aug. 4	Same subject. Refers to previous correspondence in Da Prato case and incloses the further evidence sent by Senator Lodge on July 29; instruction to present it and to say to Foreign Office that this Government does not consider applicable to this case the Italian law cited in Embassy's 321 of June 10; by American law a presumption of expatriation is raised by a residence abroad of more than two years, but it may be overcome by satisfactory evidence, as in this case.	571

22	Mr. Guthrie to Mr. Bryan.	Nov. 24	Same subject. Full report of the arrest and release of Eills, request for his extradition and its refusal by Japan; incloses note from Foreign Office giving the grounds for the refusal.	589
25	Mr. Hanson to Mr. Bryan.	June 17	Discrimination in freight rates affecting equal commercial opportunity in China; protest of the United States. Reports that the Japanese authorities have decided that the reduced rates on the Mukden-Antung section of the South Manchuria Railway will be extended to specific through imports into Manchuria via Dalny and Newchwang from Japan only, and that the same rates will not be applied to through imports from Shanghai. Comments on the adverse effect of this decision on American imports.	594
284	Mr. Reinsch to Mr. Bryan.	June 27	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Hanson's No. 25 of June 17; the freight arrangements therein mentioned seem clearly contrary to the spirit of the undertaking concerning equal commercial opportunity by the Japanese Government at the instance of Secretary Hay in 1899, and many subsequent assurances by Japan. Requests instructions.	595
	Mr. Pontius to Mr. Bryan.	June 30	Same subject. Incloses copy of his report No. 5 to the Legation.	595
98	Mr. Guthrie to Mr. Bryan.	July 4	Same subject. Refers to Mr. Hanson's No. 25. The action of the Japanese authorities seems in this case inconsistent with the principle of equal opportunity and with their assurances of adherence to this principle. The British Ambassador has addressed a note to the Japanese Foreign Office stating that while the rates specifically applied only to direct imports from Japan, he presumed that British goods shipped from Shanghai would enjoy the same benefit.	596
104	Same to same.....	July 20	Same subject. Quotes the British Consul at Dalny on the subject.	597
57	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Guthrie.	Aug. 18	Same subject. Refers to his Nos. 98 and 104 of July 4 and 20; instructs him to endeavor to ascertain the result of the action taken by the British Ambassador, and to consult and cooperate with him in any effort to obtain fair treatment for shipments from Shanghai over the South Manchuria Railway.	598
35	Mr. Pontius to Mr. Bryan.	Oct. 3	Same subject. Incloses copy of his report No. 28 to the Legation concerning new developments.	598
	Mr. Guthrie to Mr. Bryan.	Oct. 8	Same subject. Incloses memorandum received from the British Ambassador, dated Sept. 28, 1914.	599
	Mr. Williamson to Mr. Bryan.	Oct. 9	Same subject. Incloses copy of railway notice No. 46.	600
	Same to same.....	do.....	Same subject. Incloses copy of railway notice No. 47. The effect of the railway company's action is to give Japan an unfair advantage, and is in contravention of article 8 of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation with Japan of Feb. 21, 1911.	600
	Same to same.....	Oct. 10	Same subject. Incloses copy of railway notice No. 39.	601
	Same to same.....	do.....	Same subject. Incloses copy of railway notice No. 40.	602
39	Mr. Pontius to Mr. Bryan.	Oct. 17	Same subject. Incloses copy of his report No. 31 to the Legation, giving clear evidence of discrimination.	602
423	Mr. Reinsch to Mr. Bryan.	Oct. 28	Same subject. Refers to Department's No. 140 of July 30 and to other correspondence; comments on the memorandum of the British Ambassador forwarded by Mr. Guthrie in his Oct. 8; analyzes the entire subject. The British Minister considers the new rates discriminatory and clearly inconsistent with Japanese treaties and understandings.	603
46	Mr. Pontius to Mr. Bryan.	Nov. 7	Same subject. Incloses copy of his report No. 38 to the Legation.	605

508	Mr. Bryan to Mr. De Oliveira (telegram).	do	Same subject. Refers to his 383 and 386 and instructs him to present to Obregon the sense of the appended representations, to the effect that this Government believes the deplorable situation in Mexico City has resulted from wilful acts of Constitutionalists which can not be contemplated with patience any longer, and if Americans suffer thereby this Government will hold General Carranza and General Obregon personally responsible and will take expedient measures to bring to account those responsible for what may occur.	659
	Mr. Bryan to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	do	Same subject. The same instructions as to Mr. De Oliveira, for presentation to Carranza, with the addition that the extraordinary and unpardonable course of Obregon has renewed talk of joint action by several of the chief governments of the world to protect their legations and nationals at Mexico City, and that in pursuing his course Carranza is running a very serious risk.	660
	Mr. Bryan to the Ambassadors of Spain, Brazil, Germany and Great Britain.	do	Same subject. Calls attention to Department's instructions to its representatives in Mexico to the effect that this Government will hold Carranza and Obregon personally responsible for their conduct.	661

	Mr. Bryan to Mr. Silliman.	May 18	Same subject. Quotes from Sierra Consolidated Mines Co.'s letter of May 8 and instructs him to say that this Government does not recognize Carranza's decree of Mar. 1 as having any force outside territory in Carranza's control.	915
	Mr. Bryan to the Sierra Consolidated Mines Co.do.....	Same subject. Reply to their May 8.....	916
	Mr. Carothers to Mr. Bryan (telegram).	May 19	Same subject. Reply to Department's May 17; he has been assured no enforcement of the decree will be ordered, especially not against foreigners.	916
	Mr. Bryan to Mr. Phillips.do.....	Forced loans. Reply to his Feb. 25. It would be useless at present to demand a refund of forced loans made by American citizens, who would do well, however, to file with the Department their claims against the Mexican Government; in due time the Department will give such claims careful attention.	1000
	Inde Gold Mining Co. to Mr. Bryan.	May 20	Protection of American mining interests. Incloses copy of Urbina's decree of Apr. 14.	916
	Mr. Bryan to Mr. Silliman.do.....	Forced loans. Reply to his May 6. The Department can not undertake to advise American citizens whether, as a practical matter, they should pay forced loans to de facto authorities; but if such Americans will complain to the Department, this Government's appropriate representatives will be directed to protest against apparently illegal exactions and request their withdrawal.	1000
	Same to same (telegram)do.....	Protection of Spanish interests. Instruction to protest to Carranza against the injustice of his objection to a special Spanish representative interceding with Villa in behalf of Spaniards in Villa territory.	1038
574	Mr. De Oliveira to Mr. Bryan (telegram).	May 21	Political affairs. President Garza appeared before the Convention on May 20 and announced that he would resign if the Convention did not act on his recommendations for alleviation of the desperate conditions in the Republic.	690

617	Mr. De Oliveira to Mr. Bryan (telegram).	June 9	Political affairs. Reports postponement by the Convention of consideration of the President's statement.	699
619	Same to same (telegram)	do	Same subject. Transmits response to the President's statement made by the American Society of Mexico.	700
621	Same to same (telegram)	do	Same subject. The Convention on June 9 deposed President Garza and elected as his successor Lagos Cházaro, Villista delegate from Chihuahua.	700
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Riaño.	do	Protection of Spanish interests. Reply to his June 8; reports indicate the early restoration of the Mazatlan waterworks to the owners.	1042
623	Mr. De Oliveira to Mr. Bryan (telegram).	June 10	Political affairs. The new Conventionalist régime threatens even worse conditions than at present. But Carranza is reported as approaching the city with intention to occupy it.	700
	Mr. Silliman to Mr. Bryan (telegram).	do	Same subject. Refers to Department's June 5 and reports Carranza's thanks and his statement that there is no reply.	701
	Mr. Carothers to Mr. Bryan (telegram).	June 11	Same subject. Transmits Villa's reply dated June 10, to the President's statement of June 2.	701
	Same to same (telegram)	do	Same subject. Transmits message from Villa to Garza quoting Villa's reply to the President's statement of June 2; quoting also his communication to Carranza on the subject. Requests its transmission to Garza.	703
770	Mr. Lansing to Mr. De Oliveira (telegram).	do	Same subject. Refers to his 623 of June 10. Instruction to impress on the authorities in control in the capital that harsh measures would create a most unfavorable impression abroad and might retard the efforts to relieve the destitute.	704
	Mr. Arredondo to Mr. Lansing.	June 12	Same subject. Incloses copy of Carranza's "Manifesto to the Nation" dated June 11, containing a statement of the Constitutionalist policy. Request to lay it before the President.	704
	Mr. Guyant to Mr. Lansing	do	Same subject. Reports reception given at Ensenada to the President's statement of June 2.	707
631	Mr. De Oliveira to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	do	Same subject. Transmits a message from himself to Mr. Silliman, quoting a communication from President Lagos Cházaro to Carranza and requesting its delivery. Lagos Cházaro informs Carranza that he seconds the request of his predecessor, Garza, for an armistice and a conference of the factions.	707

645	Same to same (telegram)	---do---	Same subject. Reports compliance with the requests contained in Department's 777 and 779.	714
784	Mr. Lansing to Mr. De Oliveira (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Refers to his 631 of June 12 and informs him that Silliman telegraphs thanks to him for his good offices and says there is no reply to Cházaro.	714
785	Same to same (telegram)	---do---	Same subject. Informs him of substance of Silliman's June 15.	714
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Arredondo.	June 17	Same subject. Refers to his June 12 and informs him that it has been transmitted to the President.	714
650	Mr. De Oliveira to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Carrancista general refuses to consider an armistice and a fight will occur when he approaches the city. Conventionists blame this Government for not securing an armistice. Description of what will happen, leaving the capital completely cut off from the world and given up to despair.	715
651	Same to same (telegram)	---do---	Same subject. Confirms his 650.	715
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	June 18	Same subject. Instruction to say to Carranza that this Government is determined to adopt such measures as may be expedient to preserve Mexico, and to intimate that it is within the possibilities to this end that the United States might recognize General Carranza in view of the way things appear to be shaping themselves, but that if he does not go the full length of conciliation and conference with all the principal factions his recognition may be excluded from consideration. Various acts prejudicial to peace seem to be sanctioned by his authority, such as the exportation of supplies from famine-stricken regions.	715
793	Mr. Lansing to Mr. De Oliveira (telegram).	June 19	Same subject. Instruction to make representations to the authorities in Mexico City similar to those sent to Mr. Silliman June 18.	717
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Instruction to urge immediately upon Carranza to order General Gonzalez to use great discretion on occupying Mexico City, to avoid killing pacificos and especially to save foreign lives and property.	717
	Mr. Carothers to Mr. Lansing.	---do---	Same subject. Villa's Foreign Office at Chihuahua notifies the Department of the appointment of Lagos Cházaro as President of the Convention.	717
326	Mr. Schmutz to Mr. Lansing.	---do---	Protection of Turkish interests. In the matter reported in his 322 of June 15 Villa refuses to admit his right to represent the Turkish subject, saying the case should be taken up by the consular or diplomatic representative of the Turkish Government. In view of the general instruction of January 9, he requests instruction.	1080
	Mr. Silliman to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	June 21	Political affairs. Department's instructions of June 19 earnestly presented and previous assurances of guaranties by Gonzalez repeated.	718
	Mr. Osborne to Mr. Cobb (telegram).	---do---	Extradition of Huerta. His action approved.	829
204	Mr. Osborne to Mr. Davis.	---do---	Taxation. Reply to his 557 of May 8.	973
226	Mr. Osborne to Mr. Guyant.	---do---	Same subject. Instruction to insist to Cantú that no forfeitures be declared for nonpayment of taxes in Ensenada that have already been paid in Chihuahua.	973

677	Mr. De Oliveira to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	July 18	Same subject. Reports evacuation of Mexico City by General Gonzalez under pretext of need for retaking Pachuca. Conditions are every day further away from improvement; he considers the situation hopeless.	726
678	Same to same (telegram)...	July 19	Same subject. Zapatistas occupy the city on July 18 and President Cházaro and Conventionist Government are expected. Everything as hopeless as before.	727
827	Mr. Lansing to Mr. De Oliveira (telegram).	July 20	Same subject. Instruction to communicate Department's 808 of July 8 to Conventionists or Villistas if either obtains control of Mexico City.	727
	Mr. Silliman to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	July 21	Same subject. Reasons given by Constitutionalists for withdrawal from Mexico City.	727
	Mr. Llorente to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Firing and raids. Calls attention to the capture of Naco by Calles, in direct violation of the agreement of Jan. 11; declares that Maytorena has adhered strictly to this agreement. Suggests that this Government prohibit exportation of munitions of war from the American side of Naco, authority for which is to be found in the act approved Mar. 14, 1912.	798
	Mr. Brown to Mr. Canova.	...do....	Protection of American mining interests. Incloses copy of Carranza's decree of June 19, 1915, extending time for payment of delinquent taxes.	924
	Mr. Haf to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Taxation. Incloses circulars showing the intention of the Carranza Government to ignore the principles of international law respecting the sufficiency of payment of taxes to de facto authorities. Urges protection of American interests against second collection of the same tax.	975
683	Mr. De Oliveira to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	July 22	Political affairs. Zapatistas who took possession of Mexico City after evacuation are indulging in violence; appeals to President Cházaro at Toluca unavailing; impossible to obtain redress.	727

	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Instruction to urge upon Carranza to direct Calles immediately to withdraw from Naco—a neutral point, as provided in the agreement of Jan. 11—and to desist from his designs upon Nogales; also to inform Calles that he will be held personally responsible for any act dangerous to American citizens at these towns. This Government expects Carranza to act with great promptness in giving these orders to Calles.	799
	Mr. Hanna to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Protection of American mining interests. Urges requesting Carranza to send telegraphic notice of extension of time for tax payments so as to prevent heavy fines.	925
	Mr. Adee to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	July 23	Same subject. Instructs him to present to Carranza the request in Mr. Hanna's July 22.	926
	Mr. Slayden to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Requests a vigorous protest against confiscating mining taxes.	926
	Mr. Adee to Mr. Silliman.	...do....	Protection of Turkish interests. Reply to his June 30. Instructs him to use his good offices in behalf of Turkish subjects, saying that he is acting on instructions from the Department as a result of action by the Turkish Government. Further instructs him to protest unofficially against the summary executions mentioned in his Feb. 16 and to make similar protests in the future if there should be danger of such violence.	1083
	Mr. Adee to Mr. Hussein.	...do....	Same subject. In view of the inability of the Brazilian Minister in Mexico to use his good offices in behalf of Turkish subjects, it is suggested that his Government be asked to designate some one else to represent its interests.	1084
	Mr. Breckinridge to General Funston (telegram).	July 24	Firing and raids. Explains the reason for not permitting him to cross the border in using force to protect American life and property on the American side, namely the necessity of retaining at Washington the final discretion in so important a matter.	800

	Mr. Puig to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Reports calling on Matamoros commander and requesting cessation of firing to American side. Was told that everything was being done to that end. Complaint was made, in turn, that there is constant shooting to the Mexican side.	805
	Mr. Robertson to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Protection of American mining interests. Mexican authorities are not fulfilling promise made as per Mr. Silliman's telegram quoted in Department's July 28. Requests instructions.	940
75	Mr. Parker to Mr. Lansing.	Aug. 29	Political affairs. Incloses copies of replies of Zapata, Pacheco, Palafox, Baz, and Borrego to the message of Aug. 11; Borrego replies for President Lagos Chazaro.	739
	Mr. Puig to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Firing and raids. Commander Matamoros district, Nafarrate, personally assures him he has given strict orders to assist in every way possible to avoid trouble.	806
	General Funston to the War Department (telegram).	Aug. 30	Same subject. Urgently demands more troops; further delay is dangerous.	806
580	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Religious orders. Incloses protests to Obregon and Berlanga made by Catholic women, concerning persecutions by Constitutionalists.	1027
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Robertson (telegram).	Aug. 31	Protection of American mining interests. Suggests that miners await Mr. Silliman's reply to Department's Aug. 31 to him.	940
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Instruction to request two months' extension of time to pay taxes under decree of Mar. 1, while reserving all rights under previous protest against the decree.	941
479	Mr. Osborne to Mr. Simpich.	...do....	Taxation. Reply to his 324 of Aug. 20-----	979
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Jusserand.	...do....	Protection of French interests. Informs him that advices from Mexico show no intention of seizure of cotton.	1068
	Same to same-----	...do....	Same subject. Henry Huguét has arrived safely at his home.	1068
	Mr. Robinson to Mr. Lansing.	Sept. 1	Political affairs. Incloses a statement by the Government of the State of Oaxaca of its views of the message of Aug. 11.	742

	Mr. Arredondo to Mr. Lansing.	1915 Sept. 1	Firing and raids. Complains of firing by American soldiers on the American side at Mexican soldiers on the Mexican side at Matamoros, wounding two.	806
	Mr. Silliman to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Refers to Department's Aug. 28, 1 p. m., and his own Aug. 28, 8 p. m. He has received written reply to his representations, stating that orders have been given to refrain from anything that might cause friction with the United States and for punishment of soldiers found disobedient. His Government expects a reciprocal attitude and a redoubling of vigilance to prevent disturbers of peace in Texas from taking refuge on Mexican side.	807
	Same to same (telegram)	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. Reply to Department's Aug. 31. Carranza has decreed temporary reductions of taxes and suspension of rates of decree of Mar. 1 until Mar. 1, 1916.	941
	Same to same	---do---	Same subject. Incloses text of decree of Aug. 31, referred to in his telegram of Sept. 1.	941
	Mr. Bevan to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 2	Forced loans. General Peláez at Vera Cruz renewed his demand for 50,000 pesos within 72 hours, made upon the Penn-Mex. Fuel Co. On their refusal he closed pumping station and secured 5,600 pesos and work was resumed. The company desires representations to Carranza requesting armed force to protect their interests.	1002
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	Sept. 3	Political affairs. Refers to his Aug. 24. Instruction to inform Carranza that the Secretary of State is formally authorized by the Ambassadors of Brazil, Argentina, and Chile and the Ministers of Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala to communicate the following: "My signature to the communication of August 11 was in my official capacity." On his own behalf he sends an identical communication.	743
41	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Parker (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Instruction to telegraph statement of conditions in Mexico City, number of Americans that have left since arrival of Constitutionalists, status of railway communication with Vera Cruz, probable number of Americans who will leave at once, and attitude of American colony toward him.	744
50	Mr. Parker to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 4	Same subject. Reply to Department's 41 of Sept. 3.	744
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Robertson (telegram).	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. Quotes Mr. Silliman's Sept. 1.	942
	Mr. Robertson to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 5	Same subject. Inquires whether the 4-month period payments specified in the new decree are the rates per annum and are payable in currency.	942
	Mr. Naón to Mr. Lansing	Sept. 6	Political affairs. Asks when the next conference on Mexican affairs will be held.	745
	Mr. Arredondo to the President.	---do---	Firing and raids. Incloses copy of a communication to the Secretary of State protesting in behalf of the Carranza Government against insinuations in the American press tending to embroil the border situation and impute to the Carrancista forces participation in border disturbances, whereas the Carranza Government is the first to deplore such a state of affairs.	807
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Naón	Sept. 7	Political affairs. The conference is being postponed in expectation of Carranza's reply to the message of Aug. 11.	745
1531	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Jusserand.	---do---	Protection of French interests. Reply to his Aug. 23 in regard to report of threatened seizure of cotton.	1069
45	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Parker (telegram).	Sept. 9	Political affairs. Reply to his No. 50. The Department is again making representations to Carranza in behalf of the suffering poor of Mexico City.	746
59	Mr. Parker to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. Forwards protest against new decree, made by American Society of Mexico.	943
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Quotes Mr. Robertson's Sept. 5	943
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Carothers (telegram).	---do---	Forced loans. Refers to Mr. Bevan's Sept. 2 and instructs to request Villa to order Peláez to withdraw demand and cease interfering.	1002

	Mr. Silliman to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	1915. Sept. 10	Political affairs. Transmits reply of Carranza, dated Sept. 10, to the message of Aug. 11 from the plenipotentiaries. Carranza declines to accept the invitation thereby offered; gives his reasons at length; offers, in his turn, an invitation to the plenipotentiaries to confer with him on the border for the purpose of discussing Mexican affairs, solely from the international standpoint and solely to determine whether or not they consider him to be exercising a de facto government with all the attributes for recognition as such and, if so, of recommending to their Governments his recognition in that character.	746
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Arredondo	---do---	Firing and raids. Reply to the letter of Sept. 6 addressed to the President. Quotes the substance of telegrams from General Funston and Colonel Bullard giving instances of firing to the American side by Carrancistas.	809
	Mr. Silliman to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. Reply to Department's Sept. 9. The new decree makes gradual increase of rates until Mar. 1, 1916, when rates of superseded decree will be effective; payments to be made in gold or its equivalent.	943
	Mr. Lansing to certain American Consuls (telegram).	Sept. 11	Protection of American interests. Instruction to induce all Americans, and incidentally other foreigners in their districts, to leave Mexico without any delay; directions in case of their personal danger.	837
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Silliman (telegram).	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. Quotes Mr. Parker's Sept. 9 and instructs to continue efforts to prevent increase of tax and confiscation of mining properties.	943
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Parker (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Reply to his No. 59 of Sept. 9, of which Mr. Silliman has been informed, with instructions.	944
	Mr. Touche to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Protection of Turkish interests. Requests intervention to protect his property in Chihuahua.	1085
	Mr. Llorente to Mr. Lansing.	Sept. 13	Political affairs. Refutes statements made by Carranza in the reply of Sept. 10, and accuses him of seeking a dictatorship.	748
	Mr. Lansing to the Plenipotentiaries of the powers in conference.	---do---	Same subject. Calls a meeting of the plenipotentiaries for Sept. 15.	750
	Mr. Da Gama to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Can not attend the conference on Sept. 15 on account of illness.	751
	Mr. Garrison to Mr. Lansing.	---do---	Firing and raids. Incloses copies of instructions which General Funston proposes to give for the suppression of raids, and approval thereof.	810
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Robertson (telegram).	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. Reply to his Sept. 5. Quotes Mr. Silliman's Sept. 10.	944
	Mr. Silliman to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Reply to Department's Sept. 11; gives the Mexican Government's argument; suggests that miners present their case directly to the Secretary of Hacienda.	944
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Da Gama (telegram).	Sept. 14	Political affairs. Postpones conference until Sept. 18 and changes the meeting place to New York City.	751
	Mr. Simpich to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 15	Firing and raids. Raids by both Villa and Carranza troops into Arizona are increasing, practically without opposition. Urges that military be given more authority, with detachments at more points.	11
	Mr. Llorente to Mr. Lansing.	Sept. 17	Political affairs. Protest of Villista Government against the invitation of Carranza to the plenipotentiaries to confer with him.	751
			Same subject. Lists of replies to the message of Aug. 11, received up to Sept. 18 from military and civil officers of the Carrancista and the Conventionalist factions; the former all refer the matter to Carranza, the latter refer it to Villa with the exception of certain acceptances without such reference.	752
	General Funston to Mr. Garrison.	Sept. 17	Firing and raids. Reports firing across border by Carrancista troops opposite Brownsville and return of fire, the Mexican officers trying to make it appear that United States troops fired first.	812
	Mr. Lansing to Messrs. Letcher and Carothers (telegram).	---do---	Protection of Turkish interests. Instruction to render good offices in behalf of Touche.	1085
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Touche (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Informs him of instructions to Messrs. Letcher and Carothers.	1086

		1915. Sept. 18	Political affairs. Stenographic report of the meeting at New York City on Sept. 18 of the plenipotentiaries of the powers in conference; consideration of Carranza's reply of Sept. 10 and of ways and means for determining what course to pursue in respect to selection of a de facto government in Mexico; decision to request statements from the factional leaders of the grounds on which they consider their faction worthy of recognition.	754
	Mr. Silliman to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Protection of American mining interests. Incloses copy of memorandum on mining taxes sent him by the Secretary of Hacienda.	945
587	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Same subject. Requests instructions as to how to advise mine owners regarding taxes.	946
672	Mr. Letcher to Mr. Lansing.	Sept. 19	Protection of Turkish interests. Refers to Department's Sept. 17 and reports his consequent action. Observes that Turkish subjects at Chihuahua are having recourse to the honorary German Consul in cases requiring consular assistance, it being understood that an agreement to this effect now subsists as a result of the Turco-German alliance.	1086
	Mr. Llorente to Mr. Lansing.	Sept. 22	Revolutionary claims. The Conventionist Government of Mexico states that it is incumbent exclusively upon the Federal Congress to acknowledge and order payment of national debts; hence Mr. Carranza lacks authority in the matter, and the Conventionist Government, while admitting the existence of such claims, considers necessary the restoration of constitutional order before Mexico can proceed to examine them.	836
	Mr. Carr to Mr. Simpich.	Sept. 27	Firing and raids. His Sept. 15 has been forwarded to the War Department for appropriate action.	812
	Mr. Stadden to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Sept. 29	Religious orders. Reports confiscation at Colima of church property.	1028
1527	Mr. Bevan to Mr. Lansing.	Sept. 30	Protection of American oil interests. Incloses copy of Carranza's decree of Aug. 14, prohibiting drilling within 30 meters of boundaries of oil properties.	890
	Mr. Polk to Mr. Belt (telegram).	Oct. 1	Firing and raids. Instruction to represent to Carranza the serious nature of an attack made Sept. 23 at Los Pelados in which Carrancista soldiers crossed to American territory, attacked American soldiers and killed and mutilated two of them. This is one of many such atrocities, and as Carranza claims to have authority in that district the responsibility appears to rest upon him.	812
	Mr. Montague to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Protection of Chinese interests. Reports killing and wounding of Chinese. Appeal made to General Calles for protection.	1095
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Oct. 2	Firing and raids. Instructions of Oct. 1 urgently presented; an early reply is promised.	813
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Belt (telegram).	...do....	Protection of Spanish interests. Instruction to request restoration of property of Felipe Muriedos, a Spanish subject.	1044
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Oct. 3	Firing and raids. Reports delays by Carranza in replying concerning the atrocity at Los Pelados Crossing.	813
	Mr. Lansing to the Plenipotentiaries of the conferring powers.	Oct. 5	Political affairs. Calls a meeting of the plenipotentiaries of the powers in conference for Oct. 9.	762
115	Mr. Parker to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Same subject. Transmits message from the American Society of Mexico renewing their request for aid to the distressed citizens of the capital.	762
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Firing and raids. Transmits reply of Carranza in the Los Pelados matter. It states the surprise of Carranza at the contents of the American note, declares he has had no news of the matter, but has ordered an investigation. If the American allegations are found true, he will have the guilty punished. Reiterates his resentment at the Department's assumption that the report is true.	814
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Llorente.	...do....	Revolutionary claims. Acknowledgment of his communication of Sept. 22, 1915.	836
	The plenipotentiaries of the conferring powers to Mr. Lansing.	Oct. 6	Political affairs. Accept the invitation to meet on Oct. 9.	763
	Mr. Arredondo to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Firing and raids. Carranza instructs him to say that he has no knowledge of the alleged Los Pelados affair and it would be unjust for the Department to presume that he would acquiesce in such acts.	814

MEXICO—Continued.

No	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Arredondo.	1915. Oct. 6	Same subject. Refers to his Sept. 1 and repeats the substance of information from the War Department regarding the attacks from the Mexican side at or near Brownsville on American troops; the latter were not the aggressors in any of the many instances; the Mexican commander at Matamoros has done nothing to stop the attacks.	815
	Mr. Riaño to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Protection of Spanish interests. Requests restoration of certain colleges in Yucatan, property of Spanish subjects.	1044
	Mr. Arredondo to Mr. Lansing.	Oct. 7	Political affairs. Transmits a résumé of the Constitutional claims to recognition. 	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Letcher (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Same purport.....	838
	Mr. Lansing to the principal American Missions in Europe (telegram).	Oct. 11	Political affairs. Informs them that the Secretary of State, the Ambassadors of Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, and the Ministers of Bolivia, Uruguay and Guatemala, in conference on Oct. 9, after careful consideration of the facts, found that the Carrancista party is the only party possessing the essentials for recognition as the de facto government of Mexico, and they have so reported to their respective Governments.	767
	Mr. Bevan to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Oct. 12	Same subject. Reports General Pelaez in control of the oil fields near Tuxpam; Carranza could drive him out with about a thousand men.	767
	Mr. Calderón to Mr. Lansing.	Oct. 13	Same subject. Informs him that he is authorized by his Government (Bolivia) to recognize Carranza.	767
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Protection of Spanish interests. Reply to Department's Oct. 2. The Foreign Office requests that this and any other cases that may arise involving Spanish subjects be handled through Spanish representative fully accredited before the Constitutional Government.	1045
	Mr. Suárez Mujica to Mr. Lansing.	Oct. 14	Political affairs. Informs him that he is authorized by his Government (Chile) to reach an understanding with the other conferees as to the time and form for the recognition of a Mexican Government.	768
	Mr. Da Gama to Mr. Lansing.	Oct. 15	Same subject. Informs him that he is authorized by his Government (Brazil) to proceed in regard to recognition of a government in Mexico.	768
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Belt (telegram).	Oct. 16	Same subject. Instruction to urge Carranza to take prompt action to put an end to the activities of Pelaez and his lawless bands.	768

	Mr. Cobb to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	1915. Oct. 16	Same subject. Urges closing of the ports on the border against Villa and to discontinue making representations to him, in the probability of thereby causing his complete collapse and a turn-over all along the line.	769
	Mine & Smelter Operators' to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Protection of American mining interests. Protest against mining taxes.	946
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Belt (telegram).	...do....	Protection of Spanish interests. Instruction to make the representations requested in Mr. Bonney's Oct. 8.	1046
	Mr. Crane to the Plenipotentiaries of the powers in conference.	Oct. 18	Political affairs. On behalf of the Secretary of State, calls a meeting of the plenipotentiaries for Oct. 18.	770
	Mr. Blocker to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Protection of French interests. Reports confiscation of coal mines largely French and American owned and requests renewal of protest.	1069
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Oct. 19	Political affairs. General Carranza does not desire to be considered President but the title "in charge of the Executive Power of the Republic"; he will not call general elections until after municipal elections; other information imparted by Carranza as to his plans.	770
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Parker; to all American Embassies and Legations throughout the world; and to certain consular officers in Mexico (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. "This Government to-day recognized the de facto Government of Mexico, of which General Venustiano Carranza is the Chief Executive."	771
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Arredondo.	...do....	Same subject. Informs him that the President of the United States takes this opportunity of extending recognition to the de facto Government of Mexico, of which General Venustiano Carranza is the Chief Executive. This Government will be pleased to receive formally a diplomatic representative thereof and to accredit its diplomatic representative thereto. Requests him to inform General Carranza of the foregoing.	771
	Mr. Lansing to the Ministers at Washington of various Latin American Governments.	...do....	Same subject. Informs them of the recognition of the de facto Government of Mexico of which General Carranza is the Chief Executive. This is informally communicated at the instance of all the members of the Conference.	771
	Mr. Lansing to all European members of the Diplomatic Corps at Washington, the Japanese Ambassador, and the Ministers of China and Siam.	...do....	Same subject. Informs them of the recognition as above, adding that the American diplomatic representatives at the capitals of their respective Governments have been instructed to advise those Governments of the fact.	772
	-----	...do....	Same subject. Proclamation prohibiting the exportation of arms and ammunition from the United States to Mexico. Same proclamation, p. 780, exportation of arms.	772
	Mr. Arredondo to Mr. Lansing.	...do....	Same subject. Informs him that he has transmitted the contents of his note of Oct. 19 to Mr. Carranza.	773
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	...do....	Same subject. Reports reading notification of recognition to officials of the de facto Government and presenting it in writing to the Secretary of Foreign Relations.	773
	The President to Mr. McAdoo.	...do....	Exportation of arms. Instructs him, as an exception to the embargo resulting from the foregoing proclamation, to instruct the appropriate officers of the Treasury Department to permit exportation of munitions of war for the use of the recognized de facto Government of Mexico or for industrial or commercial uses, excepting through ports along the international boundary in the States of Chihuahua and Sonora and all the ports in Lower California.	781
	Mr. Lansing to the Mine & Smelter Operators' Association (telegram).	...do....	Protection of American mining interests. Reply to their Oct. 16.	947
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Alger (telegram).	...do....	Protection of Spanish interests. Instruction to request General Dieguez to withdraw demand for 100,000 pesos on the Bank of Mazatlan.	1046
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Oct. 20	Political affairs. Transmits note from Secretary of Foreign Relations of the de facto Government acknowledging receipt of the notice of recognition; at the first opportunity a diplomatic representative will be accredited to this Government and one from this Government received with pleasure.	774

	Mr. Carothers to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Oct. 31	Political affairs. Villa to-day received from newspaper men his first information of the recognition of Carranza; he was very indignant, said he would attack Agua Prieta, and has drawn in his troops within a radius of 5 miles.	775

LIST OF PAPERS.

MEXICO—Continued.

No.	From and to whom.	Date.	Subject.	Page.
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	1915 Nov. 1	Firing and raids. Carranza promises to attend to Brownsville matter; has ordered arrest of De la Rosa and other bandits. Has bad advisers.	818
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Belt (telegram).	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. Instruction to discuss with Carranza payment of mining taxes in territory not under his Government's control, and request full protection of American interests.	950
	Same to same (telegram)---	---do---	Taxation. Instruction to ask of Carranza that full protection be given Americans against illegal tax collections.	979
	Mr. Carothers to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Nov. 2	Firing and raids. Villa has begun attack on Agua Prieta. General Funston conferred with him this morning.	818
	Same to same (telegram)---	---do---	Same subject. Many bullets crossing the line but both sides apparently trying to prevent it.	818
	Mr. Ferguson to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Reply to his Oct. 30. Will cooperate.	818
	General Funston to War Department (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Agua Prieta can not be seriously attacked without bullets falling on American side, and without authority to cross the border our troops can do nothing to prevent it. Villa's attack is about to be intensified.	819
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Ferguson (telegram).	Nov. 3	Same subject. Refers to his telegram of Oct. 27 to the President. Informs him of Carranza's promises.	819
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Gregory.	Nov. 4	Exportation of arms. Requests his ruling as to the applicability of the term "munitions of war," as used in the proclamation, to certain freight cars, coal and cattle.	782
	Mr. Bevan to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Nov. 5	Political affairs. Refers to his Oct. 28; reports the success of the peace conference and that General Pelaez will remain in command of the Tuxpam district as an officer of the de facto Government.	775
621	Mr. Davis to Mr. Lansing.	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. States the situation of American mine owners.	950
	Mr. Alger to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	---do---	Protection of Spanish interests. Reports execution of Department's instruction of Oct. 19; favorable action taken by Mexican authorities.	1047
	Mr. Belt to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Nov. 9	Firing and raids. Foreign Secretary says Carranza will attend to Matamoros situation when he goes there. Arrangements have already been made whereby American and Mexican forces can pursue bandits 15 leagues into the other's territory.	819
151	Mr. Parker to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Nov. 10	Protection of American mining interests. Requests information as to status of representations concerning taxes.	951
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Belt (telegram).	Nov. 11	Political affairs. Special Agent Silliman has repeatedly been told by the de facto Government to take up with the Governors of the States in which they occurred various matters brought to the de facto Government's attention. The Department considers that diplomatic representations to political subdivisions are regular only in exceptional cases and that the de facto Government is obliged to entertain and act on representations made to it by this Department, and instructs him so to suggest to General Carranza.	776
129	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Parker (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. What information have you regarding the activities of Zapata? Keep Department advised of important developments.	776
	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Belt (telegram).	---do---	Firing and raids. His Nov. 9. This Department has no record of any such arrangement for pursuit of bandits as he mentions. So inform Carranza if he is proceeding on the assumption that there is one.	820
130	Mr. Lansing to Mr. Parker (telegram).	---do---	Protection of American mining interests. Reply to his Nov. 10. The decree of Aug. 31 is the only result to date of Department's representations.	951
	Mr. McPherson to Mr. Lansing (telegram).	Nov. 13	Protection of American interests. Reports conditions of Guaymas; immediate protection necessary to prevent repetition of atrocities by Indians.	839
	Admiral Winslow to Mr. Daniels (telegram).	---do---	Same subject. Reports dangers to settlers in Yaqui Valley. Suggests compelling Mexican Government adequately to garrison the valley immediately; as the only alternative, suggests an expeditionary force of his command with discretionary orders to land as required by occasion.	839
	Same to same (telegram)---	---do---	Same subject. He has ordered the commander of the New Orleans urgently to request General Dieguez to send an adequate force to protect settlers in the Yaqui Valley.	839

ABROGATION OF PROVISIONS OF CERTAIN TREATIES CONFLICTING WITH THE SEAMEN'S ACT OF MARCH 4, 1915. ACCEPTANCE OF THE ABROGATION BY BOLIVIA AND GREAT BRITAIN.

File No. 711.0021/44a.

The Secretary of State to Ambassador Page.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 29, 1915.

SIR: By direction of the President, I enclose herewith a copy of an act of the Congress of the United States, approved March 4, 1915, entitled "An Act To promote the welfare of American Seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea."¹

It is deemed appropriate that an explanation be made of the origin of the legislation and the causes operating to move Congress to pass the Act of March 4, 1915.

The improvement of the condition of seamen, to bring it into harmony with the enlightened spirit of personal freedom of the modern age, has long been the studious purpose of the Congress of the United States. By the Act of Congress of December 21, 1898, the penalty of imprisonment for desertion of seamen from American vessels in domestic ports and in near-by ports was abolished. That act covered more than nine-tenths of the seamen on American vessels, and antedated by twelve years the resolution of the International Seamen's Congress at Copenhagen in August, 1911, favoring the abolition of imprisonment for desertion wherever prescribed by the laws of maritime nations.

Again, many events occurred immediately prior to the present legislation which have profoundly influenced and moulded public sentiment in favor of stricter regulation of over-seas traffic, relative to the safety of passengers, and as to the necessity for the protection of seamen in their natural rights as a class of laborers, theretofore discriminated against in comparison with the treatment accorded by law to all other classes of workmen. The terrible disaster to the steamship Titanic, with the resultant loss of human life, attracted universal attention to the need of further legislation to promote the safety of passengers and seamen. The burning of the Volturmo, with its disclosure of the lack of life-saving appliances, drilled crews, and of other defective conditions, added to the forces operating to secure remedial legislation. As a result of these tragedies on the high seas, and of the agitation engendered thereby, two great political parties of the United States which express and move public opinion and policy, adopted in their platforms of 1912 declarations respecting the subject. The platform of one contained the following statement:

We urge upon Congress the speedy enactment of laws for the greater security of life and property at sea; and we favor the repeal of all laws, and the abrogation of so much of our treaties with other nations as provide for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen charged with desertion, or with violation of their contract of service. Such laws and treaties are un-American, and violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States.

The platform of the other contained the following:

We favor the speedy enactment of laws to provide that seamen shall not be compelled to endure involuntary servitude, and that life and property at sea shall be safeguarded by the ample equipment of vessels with life-saving appliances and with full complements of skilled, able-bodied seamen to operate them.

As a consequence of the public sentiment thus manifested, a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives on May 2, 1912, providing, among other things, for the better protection of life at sea, abolishing involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and of involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States. As indicating the views of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the Congress of the United States, to which the bill was referred, the following extract from its Report is quoted:

There is no other portion of our citizens or residents who can be compelled, under penalty of imprisonment, to fulfill a civil contract to labor. The seamen alone remain as the last remnant of serfdom. * * *

It is needless in this age to argue for the right of men to be free. It is an established fact in our fundamental law and should be applied to seamen as well as others. You can not control man's labor without controlling the man himself. If he is to be free, he must have the right to labor or not, as best suits his own judgment or convenience. Labor power is a part of man; it is generated within him and can only be exercised and utilized through his brain power and will. To compel him to use it against his will is to make him to all intents and purposes a slave.

This bill relieves him from that condition. By relieving the seaman from any criminal proceedings for violating a contract to labor, leaving only the civil process as a remedy, you place him exactly in the same position as other workmen, and the result will be to gradually improve the standard of the men who go down to the sea, not only of those in our own shipping, but of those in all ships entering our ports, until it has reached the same standard as that of workmen on land.

While the bill above referred to was not enacted into law, it nevertheless contained in substance the amendments to the navigation laws of the United States subsequently incorporated and passed in the act of March 4, 1915.

Sections 16, 17, and 18 of this Act provide as follows:

SEC. 16. That in the judgment of Congress articles in treaties and conventions of the United States, in so far as they provide for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of the United States in foreign countries, and for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and the Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment and any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this Act, ought to be terminated, and to this end the President be, and he is hereby, requested and directed, within ninety days after the passage of this Act, to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, that so much as hereinbefore described of all such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign Governments will terminate on the expiration of such periods after notices have been given as may be required in such treaties and conventions.

SEC. 17. That upon the expiration after notice of the periods required, respectively, by said treaties and conventions and of one year in the case of the independent State of the Kongo, so much as hereinbefore described in each and every one of said articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and to be of no force and effect, and thereupon section fifty-two hundred and eighty and so much of section four thousand and eighty-one of the Revised Statutes as relates to the arrest or imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment, shall be, and is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 18. That this Act shall take effect, as to all vessels of the United States, eight months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels twelve months after its passage, except that such parts hereof as are in conflict with articles of any treaty or convention with any foreign nation shall take effect as regards the vessels of such foreign nation on the expiration of the period fixed in the notice of abrogation of the said articles as provided in section sixteen of this Act.

It will be perceived, by the sections above quoted, that it is mandatory upon the President, within ninety days after the passage of the Act, to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, that "so much as hereinbefore described of all such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign Governments will terminate on the expiration of such periods after notices have been given as may be required in such treaties and conventions."

The period of ninety days thus established will terminate on June 1, next, and it is therefore necessary that such notice be now given to the Government to which you are accredited.

From an examination of the treaties between the United States and Great Britain it appears that the Treaty of June 3, 1892, is affected by the terms of Section 16 of this Act.

Article 1 of the treaty reads as follows:

The Consuls General, Consuls, Vice Consuls and Consular Agents of either of the High Contracting Parties, residing in the dominions, possessions or colonies of the other, shall have power to require from the proper authorities the assistance provided by law for the apprehension, recovery and restoration of seamen who may desert from any ship belonging to a citizen or subject of their respective countries, while in the ports of the other country. If, however, any such deserter shall have committed any crime or offence in the country where he is found, his surrender or restoration may be delayed until the proper tribunal before which the case shall be pending or may be cognizable shall have pronounced its sentence and the sentence shall have been carried into effect.

It is understood that the preceding stipulations shall not apply to the citizens or subjects of the country where the desertion shall take place.

This article is affected by the provisions of Section 16 of the Act of Congress which directs the President, within ninety days of the passage of the Act, to notify all interested foreign Governments of the termination of articles of all treaties providing for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen deserting from the United States vessels abroad, or foreign vessels in American waters.

The application of the fundamental principles of the Act of Congress to alien seamen within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States involves an abrogation of such treaty provisions as are inconsistent therewith. This, with respect to Great Britain, may be effected without inconvenience inasmuch as the Treaty of June 3, 1892, refers wholly to the matter of deserting seamen and provides in its Article 3 for denouncement by notification.

It is obvious that the Government of Great Britain is aware that sooner or later an amelioration of the legal status of seamen and the practice with regard to their treatment must have come, as a concomitant of the general advance in human liberty in other pursuits, to modify the strictness of the letter of municipal and conventional law existing for centuries in statutes and treaties. That national legislation has been the first to respond to this humane impulse is presumably due to the greater ease of amending local laws; but it is to be expected that international conventional arrangements will not long stand opposed to the complete release of seamen from the artificial restraints upon their personal liberty and pursuit of happiness peculiar to their calling. That so little has heretofore been done in their behalf may be ascribed to the fact that the nature of their calling removes the circumstances and conditions of their lives from the view of the great body of their fellow countrymen in whose regard generally reposes the welfare of individuals.

You are instructed, therefore, to bring this subject to the attention of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and to say to him that, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of March 4, 1915, the Government of the United States hereby gives notice of its intention to abrogate the Treaty of June 3, 1892, with Great Britain, in accordance with the stipulations in the treaty requiring twelve months' notice.

In this connection it is desired that you propose, as the time when such abrogation shall take effect, July 1, 1916—a period of twelve months' notice—so as to render the Act effective in the case of Great Britain simultaneously with other Governments concerned.

I am [etc.]

W. J. BRYAN.

File No. 711.0021/44a.

The Secretary of State to Minister O'Rear.²

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 29, 1915.

SIR: By direction of the President, I enclose [and so on, in the same words as in the foregoing instruction to Ambassador Page, to the end of the first paragraph after the quotation of Sections 16, 17 and 18 of the Act of March 4, 1915; from which point this instruction to the Minister to Bolivia (and, mutatis mutandis, to the other missions mentioned in the footnote) continues as follows.]

² The same, mutatis mutandis, to the American missions in Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, China, Colombia, Denmark, France, Greece, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Roumania, Spain, and Sweden.

The period of ninety days thus established will terminate on June 1 next, and it is therefore necessary that such notice be now given to the Government to which you are accredited in order that negotiations may be instituted looking to an agreement limiting the effect of the denunciation required by law to the portions of the treaty or treaties which are found to be in conflict with the provisions of the Act. Inasmuch as treaties are contracts between governments, they can only be varied in whole or in part by mutual agreement or special consent. It is the hope, however, of the President that such an agreement can easily be reached which will leave unaffected all parts of the treaties with foreign governments not inconsistent with the humanitarian and progressive provisions of the Act.

From an examination of the treaties between the United States and Bolivia it appears that Article 34 of the Treaty of May 13, 1858, is affected by the terms of Section 16 of the Act.

Article 34 reads as follows.

The said Consuls shall have power to require the assistance of the authorities of the country for the arrest, detention and custody of deserters from the public and private vessels of their country; and for that purpose they shall address themselves to the courts, judges and officers competent, and shall demand the said deserters in writing, proving by an exhibition of the registers of the vessels or ships' roll, or other public documents, that those men were part of the said crews; and on this demand, so proved, (saving, however, when the contrary is proved,) the delivery shall not be refused. Such deserters, when arrested, shall be put at the disposal of said Consuls, and may be put in the public prisons, at the request and expense of those who reclaim them, to be sent to the ships to which they belong or to others of the same nation; but if they be not sent back within two months, to be counted from the day of their arrest, they shall be set at liberty, and shall be no more arrested for the same cause.

This article is affected by the provisions of Section 16 of the Act of Congress which directs the President, within ninety days of the passage of the Act, to notify all interested foreign Governments of the termination of articles of all treaties providing for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen deserting from United States vessels abroad, or foreign vessels in American waters.

The application of the fundamental principles of the Act of Congress to alien seamen within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States involves an abrogation of such treaty provisions as are inconsistent therewith. This, it is hoped, may be effected with but little inconvenience through a willingness on the part of the Government of Bolivia and other Governments with which the United States has treaty provisions on the subject to consent to such an abrogation as will leave intact all the other clauses in the treaties in question, inasmuch as these treaties have so long and so well cemented the cordial relations that have happily prevailed between the United States and her sister nations.

It is obvious that the Government of Bolivia is aware that sooner or later an amelioration of the legal status of seamen and the practice with regard to their treatment must have come, as a concomitant of the general advances in human liberty in other pursuits, to modify the strictness of the letter of municipal and conventional law existing for centuries in statutes and treaties. That national legislation has been the first to respond to this humane impulse is presumably due to the greater ease of amending local laws; but it is to be expected that international conventional arrangements will not long stand opposed to the complete release of seamen from the artificial restraints upon their personal liberty and pursuit of happiness peculiar to their calling. That so little has heretofore been done in their behalf may be ascribed to the fact that the nature of their calling removes the circumstances and conditions of their lives from the view of the great body of their fellow countrymen in whose regard generally reposes the welfare of individuals.

You are instructed, therefore, to bring this subject to the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs and to say to him that, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of March 4, 1915, the Government of the United States hereby gives notice of its intention to abrogate Article 34 of the Treaty of May 13, 1858, with Bolivia, in accordance with the stipulations in the treaty requiring one year's notice following the termination of the specified period of ten years during which the treaty is operative from the date of ratification. In this connection you will explain to the Minister for Foreign Affairs that, while denunciation of a portion of a treaty as required by the Act may not, according to international practice, be made, the President, nevertheless, using the discretion which he deems is granted to him to interpret the Act in the sense contemplated by the Congress, instructs you to propose an arrangement between the two Governments which will effect the purpose of the Act by the abrogation or mere omission of the article referred to.

Further, in this connection, it is desired that you propose, as the time when such abrogation shall take effect, July 1, 1916—a period of twelve months' notice—so as to render the Act effective in the case of Bolivia simultaneously with other Governments concerned, the original terms of whose treaties have expired and which are in all cases subject to termination upon not more than twelve months' notice.

It is believed that the general observations made in a previous part of this instruction will convince the Government of Bolivia of the wise and humane purposes towards which the legislation is directed. That Congress did not contemplate the least infringement of the rights of foreign Governments respecting the control of their merchant marine while in ports of the United States in a manner inimical to those Governments is evident from the reports of the various committees to which the bill was referred before passage.

It is likewise clearly shown by Section 16 of the Act that the intent of Congress was not to disturb the great and valuable treaties now existing between the Government of the United States and other countries, negotiated from time to time with so much care and with so much patience, but by appropriate legislation to correct and regulate the long-existing and varying methods of procedure in matters affecting seamen. That such methods of procedure and standards of conduct towards seamen generally have not advanced, as should have been the case, coincident with the treatment of other classes of labor is believed to be so well established as to need no comment, and the President feels, therefore, that, when all the facts and circumstances attendant upon the passage of the act and of the purposes actuating the Congress in its passage are fully considered by the other Governments whose treaties may be affected in parts, no serious difficulties will be found to exist to delay or to prevent an agreement for the mere abrogation or omission of the respective articles found to be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act.

The President, although deeply anxious that an agreement be reached with foreign Governments upon this subject, is not concerned as to the particular method by which it may be consummated, whether by signed protocols of conferences, or by mutual exchange of note, as is a common practice in the conduct of many diplomatic affairs of this character. The latter course seems preferable because more easily effected in view of the constitutional requirements that formal agreements between the United States and other countries must be submitted to the Senate of the United States for its advice and consent. In this connection, therefore, you may point out to the Minister for Foreign Affairs that such reference to the Senate in the case of a simple exchange of notes will not be necessary, and that such an exchange of notes will be regular and effective because of the authority already granted to the President by Section 16 of the Act to abrogate the portions of the treaties inconsistent therewith. Hence, it will be perceived that the intent of Congress may be fully realized by informal agreements between the Government of the United States and other powers, and that in this way the various important treaties now subsisting may remain in full force and effect, with the exception of the articles relating to seamen.

In bringing this matter to the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, you will hand him a copy of this instruction, and convey to him the earnest hope of this Government that, in the sympathetic consideration which the Government of Bolivia will undoubtedly bestow upon it, means may be found to disturb as little as possible the conventional relations now happily existing between the two countries while effecting the abrogation merely of those clauses of the treaty which are inconsistent with the Act of Congress of March 4, 1915.

SIR: Referring to the Department's instruction of this day's date, directing you to give notice to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, pursuant to the provision of the Act of Congress of March 4, 1915, of the intention of the Government of the United States to abrogate the Treaty of June 3, 1892, with Great Britain, you are now instructed to inform the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs that the considerations which made that notice necessary apply equally to Article 10 of the Treaty of October 2, 1886, between the United States and the King of Tonga; and, as the protectorate over the Tonga Islands proclaimed by the Government of Great Britain on May 19, 1900, was subsequently accepted by the United States, you will, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of March 4, 1915, as set forth in the Department's instruction of May 29 above mentioned, give notice to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the intention of the Government of the United States to abrogate Article 10 of the Treaty of October 2, 1886, between the United States and the King of Tonga, in accordance with the stipulations of the treaty requiring one year's notice, such abrogation to take effect on July 1, 1916.

Article 10 of the Treaty of October 2, 1886, with the King of Tonga reads as follows:

Should any member of the ship's company desert from a vessel-of-war or merchant vessel of either of the High Contracting Parties, while such vessel is within the territorial jurisdiction of the other, the local authorities shall render all lawful assistance for the apprehension of such deserter, on application to that effect made by the Consul of the High Contracting Party concerned, or if there be no Consul, then by the master of the vessel.

INTERNATIONAL ENGINEERING CONGRESS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, April 1, 1915.

To the Diplomatic Officers of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: By a provision of law contained in the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation Act approved March 4, 1915, the President is authorized to extend invitation to foreign governments to appoint delegates or representatives to attend the International Engineering Congress to be held at San Francisco, Cal., from September 20 to September 25, 1915.

You will accordingly extend to the governments to which you are respectively accredited a cordial invitation to be represented by delegates or representatives at the Congress mentioned. In doing so you will add an expression of the pleasure with which the Government of the United States will learn of the acceptance of the invitation.

The Congress is to be conducted under the auspices of five national engineering societies. The American Society of Civil Engineers; the American Institute of Mining Engineers; the American Society of Mechanical Engineers; the American Institute of Electrical Engineers; and the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers.

Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals, U. S. Army, has consented to act as Honorary President of the Congress, and it is expected that he will preside over the general sessions of the Congress, which will be held in the Memorial Auditorium, San Francisco, Cal.

The Chairman of the Committee of Management of the Congress is Prof. W. F. Durand, of Leland Stanford, jr., University, California.

The general field of engineering to be covered by the Congress has been divided into ten groups which with the special field of the Panama Canal will constitute the program during the Congress.

Each of the following-named eleven sections will hold independent sessions, with general sessions to consider matters of world-wide importance:

- Panama Canal.
- Waterways and Irrigation.
- Railways.
- Municipal Engineering.
- Materials of Engineering Construction.
- Mechanical Engineering.
- Electrical Engineering.
- Mining Engineering.
- Naval Architecture and Marine Engineering.
- Military Engineering.
- Miscellaneous.

The proceedings of this Congress will be printed in eight or ten volumes covering all of the important phases of engineering work.

SECOND PAN AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC CONGRESS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, April 19, 1915.

To the Diplomatic Officers of the United States accredited to Latin American Countries.

GENTLEMEN: You have received previous communications from the Department in re the Second Pan American Scientific Congress which is to be held under the auspices of the United States Government in Washington, D. C., December 27, 1915, to January 8, 1916. The First Congress, meeting in Santiago, Chile, in 1908, highly honored this Government by the generous and unsolicited act of designating Washington as the meeting place of the next Congress. It is desirable, therefore, that the diplomatic representatives of the United States to the participating foreign countries do all in their power to assist in making this Second Congress what it promises to be—a great Pan American gathering—where not only scientific matters of Pan American interest will be discussed by the leading scientists of these countries, but where, through the character of the persons, societies, and institutions designated to represent them, will be established more intimate relations on the basis of a common interest in science, culture, and economic progress.

The First Pan American Scientific Congress, in designating Washington as the next place of meeting, appointed certain visiting delegates from the United States members of the Executive Committee, charged with the organization and procedure of the Second Congress. These gentlemen, with certain others elected by them, constitute the Executive Committee of the Second Pan American Scientific Congress. The Honorable William Phillips, Third Assistant Secretary of State, is Chairman ex officio of the Executive Committee. This Executive Committee, among other duties, will appoint the Honorary Presidents and Vice Presidents, who are to be selected from the participating countries. The Director General of the Pan American Union, Mr. John Barrett, a member of the Executive Committee, has accepted the post of Secretary General of the Congress, and Dr. Glen Levin Swiggett, Professor of Romance Languages in the University of Tennessee, has been appointed Assistant Secretary. The Governing Board of the Pan American Union has signally complimented the Congress by tendering the use of its handsome building for the offices and sessions of the Congress.

This Government has perfected its local organization. Proceeding under the direction of the Executive Committee, in cooperation with the Secretary General, a committee has been designated to invite preparation of papers on topics of special interest and pertinent to the subject-matter of the nine program sections. These sections are as follows:

- I. Anthropology;
- II. Astronomy, Meteorology, and Seismology;
- III. Conservation of Natural Resources, Agriculture, Irrigation, and Forestry;
- IV. Education;
- V. Engineering;
- VI. International Law, Public Law, and Jurisprudence;
- VII. Mining and Metallurgy, Economic Geology, and Applied Chemistry;
- VIII. Public Health and Medical Science;
- IX. Transportation, Commerce, Finance, and Taxation.

Following my cablegram of instructions of the 17th instant that it is most expedient that a similar committee, to act as a cooperating committee with the Executive Committee of the United States, be appointed at once in the several participating countries, this communication is sent to you with the request that you urge the Government to which you are accredited to appoint, without delay, such an executive or cooperating committee, if it has not already done so.

The members of this committee should then be immediately informed of the urgent necessity that steps be taken at once to see that their government and country are properly represented at the Congress by contributed papers and visiting delegates. It is hoped further that these committees of the several countries will fully cooperate with the Executive Committee and the Secretary General of the Congress at Washington in preparing a list of persons to be invited to submit papers and in making sure that their government and country are adequately represented at the Congress by persons chosen from among its leading scientific organizations, educational institutions, and learned societies.

The following persons will be members of the Congress: I. The official delegates of the governments represented; II. The representatives of the universities, institutions, societies, and scientific bodies of the countries represented; III. Such persons in the countries participating in the Congress as may be invited by the Executive Committee with the approval of the governments represented and their cooperating committees.

There will be forwarded to you immediately copies of the Preliminary Program of the Congress in English and Spanish (or, in the case of Brazil, English and Portuguese), which you are requested to transmit to the proper persons. As soon as a special mailing list of individuals can be prepared for the different countries, copies of this program will be forwarded directly to those individuals. You will cable the names and addresses of the members of the local cooperating committee as soon as they shall have been appointed by the Government to which you are accredited. Such committees are requested, moreover, to communicate directly with the Secretary General of the Pan American Scientific Congress at the offices of the Congress in the Building of the Pan American Union, Washington, D. C. If it is found desirable to communicate with the Secretary General by cable, the code address is "Pau, Washington."

FIRST PAN AMERICAN FINANCIAL CONFERENCE AND HIGH COMMISSION.

File No. 810.51/309b.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 10, 1915.

To the Diplomatic Officers of the United States in Latin America.

GENTLEMEN: At the Pan American Financial Conference, recently held at Washington,⁵ the recommendation was made by the Committee on Uniformity of Laws that the Minister of Finance of each of the countries represented should appoint a High Commission consisting of nine men to consider the subject of uniformity of laws relating to bills of exchange, consular invoices, and various other things, the intention being that the Commissions so appointed are to constitute an International High Commission, of which the Minister of Finance or the Secretary of the Treasury of each country is to be the Chairman of the Commission for his own country. The idea is to have a meeting of this International High Commission on the 1st day of November next in Buenos Aires for the purpose of considering the subjects of uniformity of laws, the reaching of definite conclusions by the actual formulation of such measures as are to be recommended for adoption by each of the countries concerned, and then having the High Commission of each country actively prosecute the work in its country for the enactment of such measures into laws. The Commission for the United States, of which the Secretary of the Treasury is Chairman, has already been appointed.

Pending the proposed conference in Buenos Aires, carefully prepared briefs will be made on the various subjects involved and forwarded to the High Commission of each of the Latin American Republics. It is our hope to send these briefs to each country before the 15th of August next, thus giving the High Commission in each country the opportunity of studying the briefs and of securing from their respective governments indication of the extent to which it is likely that such measures for uniformity of laws are acceptable, so that when the International High Commission meets on November 1st next opinion will be so largely crystallized that definite results may be promptly expected. There is enclosed herewith, for delivery by you, a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Minister of Finance of the country of your sojourn, requesting certain material for the United States section of the International High Commission.

On the 19th day of June last the Secretary of the Treasury addressed to each delegation from the States of South and Central America a communication outlining the future work to be done, explaining the plans for the creation of the International High Commission and making suggestions for the meeting of the Commission at Buenos Aires on the 1st day of November next. Twenty-eight prints of the letter in English and a like number in Spanish you will find enclosed. It is desired to have you send through the proper channels one copy in each language to the Minister of Finance. You will retain one copy of each for your files, and the remainder you will hand either directly or through the consular officers to such representative men as you or they think are interested and will be helpful in prosecuting the outlined plans.

The Department can not lay too much stress on the importance it attaches to the diplomatic and consular officers in Latin America fully informing themselves regarding the Pan American Financial Conference, and especially about the plans for future work; and it does not doubt that they will familiarize themselves with the contents of Secretary McAdoo's letter of June 19, and will give their earnest cooperation and utmost endeavor in keeping alive in their respective jurisdiction interest in the future work of the Conference.

While the recommendation of the Pan American Financial Conference contemplates the appointment in each country of a High Commission consisting of nine men, and it is deemed highly desirable that a Commission of this number be constituted in each country, it is thought that some of the countries might not care to go to the expense of sending so large a number as nine to the proposed Buenos Aires Conference. The Department has, therefore, thought it expedient to instruct you by cable to-day to inform through the proper channels the Minister of Finance of the governments to which you are accredited that it will not be necessary that each country send to the proposed Conference at Buenos Aires the entire nine men constituting its Commission, but that each country may be represented at this Conference by one or more of the members of its High Commission, the Minister of Finance in each case to designate the number and to select the representatives of his own country.

This instruction in so far as its provisions may be pertinent to consular action is to be deemed as applicable to consular officers as well. Extra copies thereof are enclosed in order that you may send one copy, together with one print of Secretary McAdoo's letter in each language, to each of the consular officers in your jurisdiction, to the end that they may be governed thereby and will give their cooperation and endeavor in promoting this highly important movement.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 29, 1915.

To the Diplomatic Officers of the United States in Latin America.

GENTLEMEN: In carrying out the Department's wishes expressed in its circular instruction of July 10, 1915, that diplomatic officers in Latin America fully inform themselves regarding the Conference of American financiers recently held in this city, and especially with regard to its outcome and its plans for future work and accomplishments, I transmit herewith a number of memoranda by foreign delegates and American officials which will give you a concrete understanding of what was accomplished at this important gathering and its future aims in reaching a uniformity of laws governing bills of exchange and other monetary matters throughout the Americas.

It is hoped that you will familiarize yourself with the enclosed pamphlets to enable you to discuss fully and ably financial questions with the High Commission of the country to which you are accredited in arousing and maintaining interest in the coming International High Commission, which is to meet in Buenos Aires in November next.

The Department has from time to time impressed you with the importance of your assistance in carrying out the plans started at the Conference in May last and I may assure you that in the appointment of a High Commission and adequate representation at Buenos Aires much rests with your interest and activity in that direction.

In the Department's circular instruction above referred to, it was stated that it was hoped that briefs on the various subjects to be dealt with at the meeting of the International High Commission could be sent to you by August 15. It is found that it will not be possible to send these briefs until about the middle of the following month, September.

Secretary Treasury says inevitable delays make it desirable to propose postponement conference Buenos Aires from November 1915 to April 1916. Consult Government to which you are accredited and cable promptly if entirely agreeable to fix April 3, 1916, for meeting International High Commission Buenos Aires. If postponement decided upon, Second Financial Conference may be postponed until 1917.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 23, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Owing to unavoidable delays in the designations of the High Commissions of several of the Latin American Republics, and the preparation of papers upon financial subjects for discussion at the conference of the International High Commission at Buenos Aires, the Secretary of the Treasury has, through this Department, proposed to the Governments of these countries that the conference be postponed from November, 1915, to April, 1916, and that, if entirely agreeable, April 3 of that year be fixed as the opening date.

This proposition has met with the concurrence of the Governments of Chile, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama and Salvador, and it is expected that in the next day or two the Governments of all the countries to be represented at the conference of the International High Commission will have been heard from.

If the postponement of the conference is decided upon, as is now expected, the second conference of American financiers will be postponed until 1917, in order that an appropriate period may elapse between the two meetings.

I bring this to your knowledge in the desire to keep you fully informed regarding this important matter.

RADIO COMMUNICATION IN THE AMERICAN HEMISPHERE.

File No. 810.74.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 13, 1915.

To the Diplomatic Officers of the United States accredited to Latin American Governments (Panama for information only).

GENTLEMEN: In view of the influence which radio communication will increasingly exert upon the relations between the countries of this hemisphere, the Department of State has long been interested in the development of the wireless telegraph and telephone systems in Latin-American countries, whether conducted by Government operation or private enterprise.

It is a matter of public knowledge that in certain Central and South American countries there are radio stations, of both high and medium power, which have been erected by European capital and which are, to some extent, if not entirely, operated and controlled by European companies. The Department therefore believes it to be to the mutual advantage of the American Governments, and the moment opportune, to call to their attention the complications with which the present situation is fraught, should unwarranted use of such radio stations be cited as an alleged violation of neutrality, and the importance which this Government attaches to the effort that the ownership and control of radio communication shall not pass beyond this hemisphere and into European or Asiatic hands.

The Department would accordingly be inclined to look with favor, and believes that the other American Governments would share this view, upon any mutually acceptable agreement whereby the control of this vitally important method of communication between the American continents might rest wholly in sympathetic and disinterested hands, thus realizing another conception of a broad and beneficent Pan-Americanism. The Department is further of the opinion that an exchange of views upon this matter might properly take place during the forthcoming Pan-American Scientific Congress, the duly accredited delegates to which might be instructed by their Governments to discuss it in an informal conference called for this purpose.

You are therefore directed to bring, informally and preferably orally, to the attention of the Government to which you are accredited the substance of this instruction. In discussing the subject it would not be irrelevant to direct attention to the very high development and success of the wireless installations in operation in this country.

In reporting, in triplicate, regarding your representations in this regard and the attitude of the Government toward the policy outlined, you will add the results of your discreet inquiry regarding the wireless stations now in operation in the country of your residence, those under construction, those proposed to be constructed, and the nationality of those owning, controlling, and operating them, bearing in mind that the erection of radio stations in such countries by American capital and with American apparatus might lead to an agreement by which such stations could be used in communicating with the United States shore and ship stations. The Department desires your active and continued interest in the matter.

CONDITIONS OF ENLISTMENT OF AMERICANS IN FOREIGN ARMIES INVOLVING THEIR EXPATRIATION.⁶

File No. 136./32.

[Circular notice to applicants for passports.]

Enlistment of Americans in foreign armies.

The Department has received a number of inquiries from people in the United States asking whether enlistment in a foreign army by a citizen of the United States is evidence that he has expatriated himself and whether it is a breach of his duty as a citizen of the United States to enlist in a foreign army.

The law relative to expatriation (Sec. 2, Act of Mar. 2, 1907) says:

That any American citizen shall be deemed to have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state.

Therefore, when service in a foreign army involves taking an oath of allegiance to a foreign state, an American citizen who enters such service must be deemed to have expatriated himself.

Service in some foreign armies and in some branches of some foreign armies does not require an oath of allegiance to a foreign state. On the other hand, an oath of allegiance is required as a condition of service in other foreign armies. The Department can not give authentic information on the subject of foreign requirements in this respect, because of their variation and because they are subject to changes.

The Department does not undertake to prescribe the duty of an individual with reference to his citizenship. It is of opinion, nevertheless, that the observance of neutrality in the conflict now engaging certain European powers requires American citizens to avoid participation in those conflicts.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, December 14, 1915.

Department Circular No. 268.]

To Collectors of Customs, Supervising and Local Inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, and Others Concerned:

Section 13 of the Seamen's Act of March 4, 1915, will apply to all foreign vessels of 100 tons gross and upwards (except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except fishing or whaling vessels or yachts) which depart from any port of the United States on or after March 4, 1916.

2. The section provides that 40 per centum in the first year after that date, 45 per centum in the second year, 50 per centum in the third year, 55 per centum in the fourth year, and thereafter 65 per centum of the vessel's deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, shall be of a rating not less than able seaman.

3. An able seaman, to conform to the requirements of the section, must have the following qualifications:

⁷ In Portuguese as sent to the Embassy at Rio de Janeiro; and in French to the Legation at Port au Prince.

⁸ See the Address of the President, ante.

(a) He must be 19 years of age or upward.

(b) He must have had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes on a vessel or vessels of 100 tons gross or upward, including decked fishing vessels (not including vessels navigating rivers exclusively and smaller inland lakes, and not including whaling vessels or yachts or fishing vessels, unless the fishing vessels are decked fishing vessels). Service on deck in foreign naval vessels or foreign vessels similar to vessels of the United States Coast Guard may be included.

(c) He must have been found competent upon examination as to eyesight, hearing, and physical condition under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce. The rules so prescribed are set forth in Form 983, Steamboat-Inspection Service, File S. This examination in the case of able seamen on foreign vessels may be conducted by the proper authorities of the country of which the seamen are citizens or subjects.

(d) Section 13 also provides for a special class of able seamen who may compose not more than one-fourth of the number of able seamen required on a vessel. Able seamen may qualify for this special class after having served on deck twelve months at sea or on the Great Lakes, but in addition to the examination mentioned in paragraph (c), they must have been found competent upon examination as to knowledge of the duties of seamanship under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce. The rules so prescribed are set forth in Commerce Department Circular No. 264, second edition, Steamboat-Inspection Service. This examination in the case of able seamen on foreign vessels may be conducted by the proper authorities of the country of which the seamen are citizens or subjects.

4. Section 13 does not require that able seamen on foreign vessels shall be furnished with certificates as such. The section, however, does provide that a Collector of Customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States, setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section.

Accordingly, it may facilitate the despatch of foreign vessels from American ports, if the necessary proportion of the deck crews are so certificated, thus preventing the delay necessary to ascertain by inquiry and examination whether in fact the necessary number of the deck crew are able seamen within the intent of the section.

5. Certificates issued to able seamen by competent authorities of the countries of which the seamen are citizens or subjects will be accepted by Collectors of Customs as evidence that the able seamen so certificated comply with the requirements of Section 13 of the Seamen's Act. These certificates should certify that the able seaman is of the prescribed age, has had the prescribed sea service, and has passed the examination as to eyesight, hearing, and physical condition, and, for the special class of short-term service men, has also passed the examination as to knowledge of the duties of seamanship.

6. This circular does not apply to able seamen on foreign vessels on the Great Lakes, who will be covered by another circular to be issued before the opening of navigation on the Great Lakes in the spring.

No. 45.]

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Buenos Aires, May 12, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on Monday, May 10, I assisted at the formal opening of Congress by the President of the Nation, and enclose herewith a copy of the message which he read on that occasion. * * *

I have [etc.]

F. J. STIMSON.

[Inclosure—Extract—Translation.]

At the opening of your last ordinary session, I communicated to you the steps that had been taken by the Argentine Government, in conjunction with the Governments of Brazil and Chile, to arrive at a solution of the armed conflict that had a short time previously arisen between the United States of America and Mexico. I said to you then: "It will be a great day for America when peace is reestablished between these nations, through a friendly mediation which aims at terminating a conflict which is contrary to the spirit of solidarity and of harmony, linked together in a community of sentiment in the Pan-American Congresses."

This desire has been realized, and in a measure beyond that which in our most optimistic moods we thought possible. When the conference met at Niagara Falls the representatives of the belligerent countries approached the study of their subject in an atmosphere of the greatest harmony, under the auspices of the diplomats of the mediating countries. The high spirit of equanimity which presided at the meetings allowed both parties to find a solution of their problems worthy of both adversaries, and as a consequence, a peace protocol was signed, whose stipulations were accepted without protest and carried out loyally. In this way, a conflict that had led to the outbreak of hostilities and which threatened the serenity of the whole continent was peacefully and decorously settled.

I have reason to think that the solution so happily arrived at in this case has met with equal sympathy both in the two countries concerned and in the three nations which lent the weight of their moral influence to the mediation.

Shortly after the signing of the protocol, the United States Government and the Government of Mexico expressed their gratitude to the mediators in cordial and effusive terms, significant for the unanimity they evidenced and for the marks of spontaneity they bore.

From the first moment our chancellery accepted the proposition of the United States to establish closer financial relations between the Republics of America. When we were invited to send a representative to the Financial Congress shortly to be held in Washington for the purpose, the Executive Power appointed Mr. Samuel Hale Pearson, director of the Bank of the Nation, and Dr. Ricardo C. Aldao, former Minister of Finance for the Province of Buenos Aires, as delegates to represent the Argentine Government in this important conference, at which consideration will not only be given to banking matters but to transport and commerce between the various countries concerned.

You were duly informed of the invitation of the United States to this Government to raise the grading of their respective diplomatic representations. This proof of friendly deference was peculiarly agreeable to the Executive Power, for it meant that the progress made by our country in the realm of the moral and the material was recognized by the powerful Republic of the north.

To fill the new role, the North American Government has appointed Dr. Frederic J. Stimson, a distinguished citizen and one exceptionally well fitted to assume the position. We have appointed Dr. Rómulo S. Naón to represent us at Washington, where he was formerly our Minister Plenipotentiary, a man whose earlier capability and skill and whose brilliant work elected him for the post.

The creation of these two Embassies is a mile-stone on the road of our diplomatic progress. It is significant of the state of our international standing, and it binds us still closer to the United States of America, already linked to this Republic by a similar act.

TREATY FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF GENERAL PEACE, CONCLUDED BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND BOLIVIA.

Signed at Washington, January 22, 1914; ratification advised by the Senate, August 13, 1914; ratified by the President, January 4, 1915; ratified by Bolivia, November 14, 1914; ratifications exchanged at Washington, January 8, 1915; proclaimed, January 9, 1915.

Treaty Series No. 606.]

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, a Treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Bolivia looking to the advancement of the cause of general peace was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Washington, on the twenty-second day of January, one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, the original of which Treaty, being in the English and Spanish languages, is word for word as follows:

The United States of America and the Republic of Bolivia, being desirous to strengthen the bonds of amity that bind them together and also to advance the cause of general peace, have resolved to enter into a treaty for that purpose, and to that end have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States, the Honorable William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State; and

The President of Bolivia, Señor Don Ignacio Calderon, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Bolivia to the United States;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in proper form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties agree that all disputes between them, of every nature whatsoever, to the settlement of which previous arbitration treaties or agreements do not apply in their terms or are not applied in fact, shall, when diplomatic methods of adjustment have failed, be referred for investigation and report to a permanent International Commission, to be constituted in the manner prescribed in the next succeeding article; and they agree not to declare war or begin hostilities during such investigation and before the report is submitted.

ARTICLE II.

The International Commission shall be composed of five members, to be appointed as follows: One member shall be chosen from each country, by the Government thereof; one member shall be chosen by each Government from some third country; the fifth member shall be chosen by common agreement between the two Governments, it being understood that he shall not be a citizen of either country. Each of the High Contracting Parties shall have the right to remove, at any time before investigation begins, any Commissioner selected by it and to name his successor, and under the same conditions shall also have the right to withdraw its approval of the fifth Commissioner selected jointly; in which case a new Commissioner shall be selected jointly as in the original selection. The Commissioners shall, when actually employed in the investigation of a dispute, receive such compensation as shall be agreed upon by the High Contracting Parties. The expenses of the Commission shall be paid by the two Governments in equal proportion.

The International Commission shall be appointed as soon as possible after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty; and vacancies shall be filled according to the manner of the original appointment.

ARTICLE III.

In case the High Contracting Parties shall have failed to adjust a dispute by diplomatic methods, they shall at once refer it to the International Commission for investigation and report. The International Commission may, however, by unanimous agreement spontaneously offer its services to that effect, and in such case it shall notify both Governments and request their cooperation in the investigation.

The High Contracting Parties agree to furnish the Permanent International Commission with all the means and facilities required for its investigation and report.

The report of the International Commission shall be completed within one year after the date on which it shall declare its investigation to have begun, unless the High Contracting Parties shall limit or extend the time by mutual agreement. The report shall be prepared in triplicate; one copy shall be presented to each Government, and the third retained by the Commission for its files.

The High Contracting Parties reserve the right to act independently on the subject matter of the dispute after the report of the Commission shall have been submitted.

ARTICLE IV.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof; and by the President of Bolivia, with the approval of the Congress thereof; and the ratifications shall be exchanged as soon as possible. It shall take effect immediately after the exchange of ratifications, and shall continue in force for a period of five years; and it shall thereafter remain in force until twelve months after one of the High Contracting Parties have given notice to the other of an intention to terminate it.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty and have affixed thereunto their seals.

Done in Washington on the 22d day of January, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fourteen.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN [SEAL.]
IGNACIO CALDERON [SEAL.]

And whereas, the said Treaty has been duly ratified on both parts and the ratifications of the two Governments were exchanged in the City of Washington on the eighth day of January, one thousand nine hundred and fifteen;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Treaty to be made public to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this ninth day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, [SEAL.] and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth:

WOODROW WILSON

Ayala-Mujía Agreement.

At the City of Asunción, the capital of the Republic of Paraguay, on April 5, 1913, meeting at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, His Excellency Dr. Ricardo Mujía, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Bolivia, and His Excellency Dr. Eusebio Ayala, Foreign Minister, agreed to sign the following Protocol:

Article I. The High Contracting Parties undertake to negotiate a definitive boundary treaty within two years counted from the date of the approval of the present agreement by the respective Governments.

Article II. The possibility of concluding a treaty by direct negotiations, taking into account the commercial obligations of both countries, is primarily contemplated.

Article III. Should it not be possible to agree upon a treaty by means of direct negotiation, the High Contracting Parties will submit their boundary dispute to arbitration upon its legal merits.

Article IV. Until the direct negotiations reach a successful conclusion, or the arbitration award is delivered, the status quo of the Agreement of January 12, 1907, shall continue in force, both parties declaring that they have not modified their respective positions since that date.

Article V. By virtue of the preceding clauses which modify the stipulations of the Agreement of January 12, 1907, the High Contracting Parties agree to declare that that agreement has lapsed.

Article VI. The period for the approval by the respective Governments of the present agreement and referendum shall be four months from this date.

In witness whereof the undersigned Plenipotentiaries sign the present Protocol in duplicate.

RICARDO MUJÍA.
EUSEBIO AYALA.

NOTE.—The above agreement was approved by the respective Governments thereto, on July 28, 1913.

[Inclosure—Extract—Translation.]

During the civil wars which for some time past have interfered with the normal development and prosperity of Mexico, serious friction (to the general regret of all American countries) unfortunately arose also between the United States and that country, the situation being rendered even more acute about the beginning of last year by the incident of Tampico, which almost culminated in armed warfare between the two nations.

On this difficult and anxious occasion, when the international peace of America and our continental fraternity were in great danger, the Brazilian, the Argentine and the Chilean Governments tendered their good offices in the matter and had the satisfaction of seeing the same accepted by the other two Governments concerned, the first hostilities being immediately suspended.

I take great pleasure in advising Congress that this mediation produced the most complete and satisfactory results. It is, however, but just to acknowledge that the happy outcome of our joint efforts was mainly due to the well interpreted patriotism and high judgment shown by the two divergent Governments on that occasion.

At the Niagara Falls Conference the deplorable incident was brought to a conclusion and, to the satisfaction of all concerned, the protocol (preliminary treaty) of June 24, 1914, was signed by the Delegates of the three mediating Governments, and by those of the two Republics involved, with the approval of the other American nations and, most assuredly, of all the Powers as well.

This protocol decided only on the international features of the conflict, leaving the Mexicans the exclusive right to discuss and agree upon all matters of domestic nature, such as the organization of a provisional government and its political program, amnesties, calling of elections, liberal and progressive reforms, and any other measures indispensable to the free exercise of national sovereignty.

The Brazilian Government, in that emergency, merely pursued once more its traditional policy of peace and confirmed its inalterable sentiments of Continental Fraternity. Brazil, therefore (as was, no doubt, the case with Argentina and Chile as well), experienced great satisfaction in the applause and cooperation of the American Republics, in its endeavor to strengthen the ties of friendship and harmony which should unite them always for the welfare and the enhanced moral grandeur of our Continent.

[Inclosure—Translation—Extract.]

The friendly mediation of the Argentine, Brazilian and Chilean Governments in the conflict stirred up between the United States of America and the Government of General Huerta in the Republic of Mexico, which was so successful at the Niagara Falls conferences, has been an eloquent testimony of the solidarity spirit which governs the relations of the American peoples.

Inspired by the same sentiment of Pan-Americanism which led them to tender their good offices on that occasion, the Governments of these three Republics agreed upon an interchange of visits between their Ministers for Foreign Affairs in order to contribute by a public act of cordiality to the drawing closer of their relations.

In fulfilling this agreement the capital of the Republic has had the honor of receiving the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Brazil and Argentina, Messrs. Lauro Müller and José Luis Murature; and the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Alejandro Lira, has visited Buenos Aires.

The enthusiastic and warm welcome which these three representatives met in Santiago and Buenos Aires is a frank manifestation that the diplomatic action of the Governments has faithfully interpreted the sentiment of the people, and that the policy of approximation so happily initiated is a solid guaranty of peace for the American Republics and of respect for their rights, the most vital of which is the integrity of the Continent.

As a practical result of this international act, a treaty between the three Republics was signed in Buenos Aires on the 25th of May last, destined to strengthen the cordial understanding which unites them and which establishes a formula, inspired by the Bryan Peace Treaty, for the solution of questions which might arise among them.

Upon the initiative of the Government of the United States, our Government raised its diplomatic representation in that country to the rank of Embassy, and we continue to cultivate a constantly closer friendship with that country.

In order to increase the means of solving through juridical channels the differences that might arise between the nations, the Secretary of State of the American Government, Mr. Bryan, submitted to the diplomatic representatives accredited in Washington a proposed treaty which was given the frankest acceptance by the Governments. Our Government, simultaneously with those of Argentina and Brazil, signed a treaty of this nature with the Government of the United States, which desired to invest this act with special solemnity.

We have signed a similar treaty with the Government of Uruguay.

RULES AND REGULATIONS FOR CABLE AND WIRELESS MESSAGES.

File No. 825.731/1.

Ambassador Fletcher to the Secretary of State.

No 574.]

AMERICAN EMBASSY,

Santiago, January 11, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a copy, with translation, of Decree of the Chilean Government No. 6364, dated December 30, 1914, which orders all telegraphic, radio-telegraphic and telephonic apparatus, destined or not for public service, whose installation has not been duly authorized to be destroyed and forbids all telegraphic, cable, or radio-telegraphic companies, either governmental or private, to transmit communications in code language or cipher, excepting, however, the communications of diplomatic agents and banks providing they deposit their code with the Director General of Telegraph. All communications must be written in clear language in German, Spanish, French, English, Italian or Portuguese, and may not contain news regarding the situation, movements or operations of the ships of belligerent nations.

Some time before the issuance of this decree and during the incumbency of Mr. Salinas, the matter was several times informally discussed between him and myself and Mr. Castro, the Sub-Secretary, and I pointed out the inconvenience and annoyance to neutral commerce which would be caused by a decree applying to belligerents and neutrals alike. I also pointed out the inconvenience which would be caused if consuls were prevented from communicating with their diplomatic representatives and their governments in code. Both the Minister, Mr. Salinas, and Mr. Castro seemed to agree with the reasonableness of my observations.

The decree was signed on the 30th of December. On the 2d of January I again called on the Foreign Office and took up the matter with both the Minister and the Sub-Secretary. They explained that the decree had been prepared and issued in this comprehensive form, without exception of communications to and from neutral countries, in order to secure a more forceable effect and attract more serious attention, but that exceptions could and would be made later.

This decree very seriously interferes with our commercial and business relations with Chile, and I have received strong and energetic protests from practically all the leading American houses doing business in Chile, and I have addressed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, under date of January 9, last, a note, of which I enclose copy and in which I embodied the complaints of the American business community.

I have followed up this note with a personal interview with the Minister to-day, and urged him as strongly as possible and with all the arguments at my command to relieve our commerce from these restrictions. He agreed with me that Chile's responsibility in the matter of neutrality did not extend to other neutral countries and that the restrictions which I complained of should be removed, and promised to take up the matter immediately with the Minister of the Interior, with a view to having the decree amended. I have also spoken of the matter of the decree with a number of leading Senators and Deputies, who have promised to urge its amendment.

I am just now in receipt of a circular from the Foreign Office, transmitting printed copy of the decree and stating that the Minister of the Interior is preparing a new decree excepting consular communications from the scope of the decree. This circular, however, was prepared some days ago, and I am hoping to secure the exception of communications to and from neutral countries also.

I shall, at all events, continue my efforts to have these restrictions upon our commerce removed.

Decree No. 6364.

MINISTRY OF THE INTERIOR,
Santiago, December 30, 1914.

Considering that, in accordance with the Radiotelegraph Conference of London, July 5, 1912, wireless-telegraph offices not authorized by the Government can not exist in the territory of a State;

Considering that Chile signed the 5th Convention of The Hague relative to the rights and duties of neutral powers in case of war;

In view of Articles 3 and 9 of the said Convention, which say the following:

Article 3. Belligerents are likewise forbidden to:

a. Erect on the territory of a neutral power a wireless telegraphy station or other apparatus for the purpose of communicating with the belligerent forces on land or sea.

b. Use any installation of this kind established by them before the war on the territory of a neutral power for purely military purposes, and which has not been opened for the service of public messages.

Article 9. Every measure of restriction or prohibition taken by a neutral power in regard to the matters referred to in articles 7 and 8 must be impartially applied by it to both belligerents.

A neutral power must see to the same obligation being observed by companies or private individuals owning telegraph or telephone cables or wireless telegraphy apparatus.

IT IS DECREED:

1. The Intendentes and Governors of the Republic will proceed to dismantle the telegraphic, radio-telegraphic or telephonic apparatus destined or not for the public service, whose installation has not been fully authorized.

2. The telegraphic, cablegraphic or radio-telegraphic companies of the Government or private will not in the future accept, until a new order, for transmission communications which are written in code language or cipher.

3. From this rule are excepted the communications sent by diplomatic agents accredited in the Republic and those exchanged by the banks between their offices, providing that they deposit the key in the Directory General of Telegraphs.

Only communications written in clear language in German, Spanish, French, English, Italian and Portuguese, which do not contain notices regarding the situation, movements and operations of the ships of the belligerent nations, will be accepted.

Take note, communicate, publish and insert in the Bulletin of the Laws and Decrees of the Government.

No. 20.]

EXCELLENCY: Referring to the conversation I had the honor of having with your excellency on the 2nd instant, on the subject of the decree of the Supreme Government No. 6364, dated December 30, 1914, relating to telegraphic messages, etc., in which your excellency promised to study the question and relieve as far as possible innocent neutral commerce from any annoyances or inconveniences which might arise from the application of the new regulations, I have the honor to inform your excellency that I am in receipt of communications from practically all the leading American commercial establishments in Chile, complaining of the serious effect the decree is having upon our trade and asking me to use my good offices with your excellency to secure an amendment of the new regulations.

The inconveniences complained of are principally:

(1) Owing to the inability on the part of steamer agents to advise the movements of steamers by wire, grave inconveniences will be caused to the consignees and shippers of merchandise and the owners of the steamers, as it will be impossible to prepare for the loading or discharge of a steamer before her arrival, which in many cases will result in demurrage and loss of time and money to all parties concerned.

(2) The export of nitrate will be disorganized for, as the nitrate industry is at present conducted, it is necessary to exchange cables continually between the loading ports and Valparaiso as regards quantities shipped, payments of contracts and duties to be paid to the Government. An example of this difficulty is that on completion of a shipment of nitrate in the loading port both buyer and seller advise their representatives in Valparaiso that the shipment is completed. Payment is made in Valparaiso and the payment is then advised to the loading port when bills of lading are delivered. In all these cablegrams it will be necessary to mention the name of the ship, which we understand will cause them to be censored.

(3) It would be impossible to order payments by cable, which is a commercial operation that is daily taking place, for no commercial house will make a cable payment on a plain word cablegram owing to the danger of fraud.

(4) The secrecy necessary between business houses competing with each other as regards prices of merchandise could not be kept.

(5) A considerable additional expense would be imposed on commercial houses through the inability to shorten cablegrams by putting them into code, thus hindering the commerce of the country.

I desire also, with your excellency's permission, to refer to the fact that the decree as promulgated makes no exception of the official telegraphic communications of Consuls with their respective diplomatic representatives or their Governments, and that such a rule will seriously impede the transaction of the business of my Government.

From conversations I have had with your excellency's honorable predecessor and the Sub-Secretary, Mr. Castro, I was under the impression that the Consuls of neutral countries at least were not to be affected by the new regulations.

Relying upon that spirit of justice and the intelligent and active interest in all that concerns the trade of our two countries which characterize your excellency, I beg to ask your excellency to be kind enough to re-study and re-consider this decree in the light of its effect on legitimate neutral commerce and the official business of neutral Governments, and I allow myself to hope that your excellency may find means to harmonize Chile's duties as a neutral with the interests of other neutral nations, as well perhaps as her own, in free and unrestricted legitimate commercial interchange.

Santiago, January 25, 1915.

The dispositions of Articles 2 and 3 of Decree No. 6364, of December 30 last, are modified in the following form:

1. The communications of diplomatic representatives and consular agents accredited in Chile can be transmitted and received in cipher or in code language without any restriction when there is reciprocity.

2. Private telegraphic communications, within the country or with neutral countries, may be exchanged in code language or cipher.

3. Private telegraphic communications, in cipher, with the belligerent countries may be made only by means of the codes A. B. C., fifth edition; Scott's Code, tenth edition; Bentley's Complete Phrase Code; Western Union Code; Leiber's Code, and those which the Government of Chile authorizes, providing that the sender gives to the corresponding administrative authority a translation of the telegram and he authorizes its transmission, placing his O. K. on the original cipher.

4. Private telegraphic communications, in cipher or not, which contain notices regarding the situation, movements or operations of the war or merchant vessels of the belligerent nations may not be transmitted; but the agents of steamship companies and commercial houses may transmit telegraphic communications in cipher or code language within the country or to neutral countries regarding the movement of steamers or merchant vessels.

TREATY FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF GENERAL PEACE, CONCLUDED BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CHINA.

Signed at Washington, September 15, 1914; ratification advised by the Senate, October 12, 1914; ratified by the President, June 17, 1915; ratified by China, June 18, 1915; ratifications exchanged at Washington, October 22, 1915; proclaimed October 23, 1915.

Treaty Series No. 619.]

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a Treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of China looking to the advancement of the cause of general peace was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Washington, on the fifteenth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, the original of which Treaty, being in the English and Chinese languages, is word for word as follows:

The President of the United States of America and the President of the Republic of China, desiring to strengthen the friendly relations which unite their two countries and to serve the cause of general peace, have decided to conclude a treaty for these purposes and have consequently appointed the plenipotentiaries designated hereinafter, to wit:

The President of the United States of America, the Honorable William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State of the United States; and

The President of the Republic of China, Kai Fu Shah, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic of China to the United States;

Who, after exhibiting to each other their full powers, found to be in due and proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Any disputes arising between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of China, of whatever nature they may be, shall, when ordinary diplomatic proceedings have failed and the High Contracting Parties do not have recourse to arbitration, be submitted for investigation and report to a Permanent International Commission constituted in the manner prescribed in the following article.

The High Contracting Parties agree not to resort, with respect to each other, to any act of force during the investigation to be made by the Commission and before its report is handed in.

ARTICLE II.

The International Commission shall be composed of five members appointed as follows: Each Government shall designate two members, only one of whom shall be of its own nationality; the fifth member shall be designated by common consent and shall not belong to any of the nationalities already represented on the Commission; he shall perform the duties of President.

In case the two Governments should be unable to agree on the choice of the fifth commissioner, the other four shall be called upon to designate him, and failing an understanding between them, the provisions of article 45 of The Hague Convention of 1907 shall be applied.

The Commission shall be organized within six months from the exchange of ratifications of the present convention.

The members shall be appointed for one year and their appointment may be renewed. They shall remain in office until superseded or reappointed, or until the work on which they are engaged at the time their office expires is completed.

Any vacancies which may arise (from death, resignation, or cases of physical or moral incapacity) shall be filled within the shortest possible period in the manner followed for the original appointment.

The High Contracting Parties shall, before designating the commissioners, reach an understanding in regard to their compensation. They shall bear by halves the expenses incident to the meeting of the Commission.

ARTICLE III.

In case a dispute should arise between the High Contracting Parties which is not settled by the ordinary methods, each Party shall have a right to ask that the investigation thereof be intrusted to the International Commission charged with making a report. Notice shall be given to the President of the International Commission, who shall at once communicate with his colleagues.

In the same case the President may, after consulting his colleagues and upon receiving the consent of a majority of the members of the Commission, offer the services of the latter to each of the Contracting Parties. Acceptance of that offer declared by one of the two Governments shall be sufficient to give jurisdiction of the case to the Commission in accordance with the foregoing paragraph.

The place of meeting shall be determined by the Commission itself.

ARTICLE IV.

The two High Contracting Parties shall have a right, each on its own part, to state to the President of the Commission what is the subject matter of the controversy. No difference in these statements, which shall be furnished by way of suggestion, shall arrest the action of the Commission.

In case the cause of the dispute should consist of certain acts already committed or about to be committed, the Commission shall as soon as possible indicate what measures to preserve the rights of each party ought in its opinion to be taken provisionally and pending the delivery of its report.

ARTICLE V.

As regards the procedure which it is to follow, the Commission shall as far as possible be guided by the provisions contained in articles 9 to 36 of Convention 1 of The Hague of 1907.

The High Contracting Parties agree to afford the Commission all means and all necessary facilities for its investigation and report.

The work of the Commission shall be completed within one year from the date on which it has taken jurisdiction of the case, unless the High Contracting Parties should agree to set a different period.

The conclusion of the Commission and the terms of its report shall be adopted by a majority. The report, signed only by the President acting by virtue of his office, shall be transmitted by him to each of the Contracting Parties.

The High Contracting Parties reserve full liberty as to the action to be taken on the report of the Commission.

ARTICLE VI.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and by the President of the Republic of China.

It shall go into force immediately after the exchange of ratifications and shall last five years.

Unless denounced six months at least before the expiration of the said period of five years, it shall remain in force until the expiration of a period of twelve months after either party shall have notified the other of its intention to terminate it.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty and have affixed thereunto their seals.

Done at Washington this 15th day of September, in the year nineteen hundred and fourteen, corresponding to the 15th day of the ninth month in the third year of the Republic of China.

And whereas the said Treaty has been duly ratified on both parts, and the ratifications of the two Governments were exchanged in the City of Washington, on the twenty-second day of October, one thousand nine hundred and fifteen;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twenty-third day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and [SEAL.] fifteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fortieth.

Memorandum by the Chinese Secretary.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM IN CHINA.

As President Yuan Shih-K'ai has now announced the appointment of a committee to draft a permanent constitution for China, it is interesting to recapitulate briefly the action which has been taken by the Chinese Government in the direction of constitutional reform since the beginning of the agitation.

The proposition to introduce reform into the old machinery of the Chinese Government originated with the Manchu Court rather than with the people. After the return of the Court to Peking in 1902, the Empress Dowager and her official advisers began to cast about for means to strengthen the position of the Throne in respect to the people, as well as to strengthen China in her relations with foreign countries. They were led to believe that the half-understood principles of representation of the people would be the remedy for the ills under which China was suffering.

On the 16th of July, 1905, Duke Tsai Tsê, Hsu Shih-Ch'ang, Tuan Fang and Tai Hung-Tzu were appointed to go abroad to study the various forms of government to be found in other lands and to report to the Throne. After the return of these officials, constitutional reform was taken up actively by the Imperial Government.

On the 6th of June, 1906, an Office of Investigation of Governmental Methods was established, and five days later an edict was issued announcing the purpose of the Court to give the country a constitution. Other edicts followed during the next two years, arranging various minor details in the work of preparation, until, on the 27th of August, 1908, the famous Constitutional Edict was sprung upon the world.³ This was a proclamation of a constitution with detailed regulations for the establishment of representative institutions, local, provincial and national, and the new form of government was to be put into full operation in the year 1917, after a carefully prepared program of preparation to extend over nine years.

³ For. Rel. 1908, p. 191 et seq.

During the years 1909, 1910 and 1911 the country was deluged with new regulations on all the various matters covered by the elaborate program of August, 1908.⁴ The reports and regulations were drawn up with a wearisome prolixity and detail. Meanwhile the hot-heads among the young scholar class were becoming impatient at the delay in the inauguration of representative government and began pressing the Court to shorten the period of preparation laid down in the August 1908 edict. The position of the Court was also weakened by the death of the forceful Empress Dowager in November 1908 and by the dismissal of Yuan Shih-K'ai from the Grand Council on January 1, 1909. Thereafter the feeble Prince Regent and his Councillors were unable to withstand the pressure of the young scholar class. On the 30th of January, 1910, the Prince Regent refused to hasten the time for the organization of a national parliament.⁵ Before the end of the year, however, on November 4, 1910, he issued another edict promising the opening of Parliament in the year 1913.⁶

Meanwhile the Constitutional Assembly (Tzu Chêng Yüan), which had been organized October 4, 1910, became more and more insistent and turbulent while the Prince Regent and his advisers became more panic-stricken. On the 5th of November, 1911, an edict was issued ordering the Parliament to be organized as soon as the elections could take place.

Besides clamoring for the speedy opening of Parliament, the Constitutional Assembly persistently pressed for the completion of a formal constitution. Finally, on the 5th of November, 1910, Prince Pu Lun and Duke Tsai Tsé were appointed by the Throne Constitutional Law Commissioners to draft the constitution. Owing to the insistence of the Assembly that the representatives of the people should have a voice in deciding the terms of the constitution, the Throne ordered, November 2, 1911, that the draft be submitted to the Assembly for discussion and approval. This body at once drew up nineteen resolutions embodying the fundamental principles of a constitution and demanded that the Emperor should take a solemn oath to respect these fundamental principles. This was done in the Ancestral Temple on November 26, 1911. By this time, however, the Revolution had already commenced. Before the end of November a Provisional Government had been established in the Yangtze Valley. On the 10th of December, 1911, the Prince Regent resigned. On the 12th of February, 1912, the Manchus abdicated. Yüan Shih-K'ai became Provisional President of the Chinese Republic on the 10th of March, 1912.⁷

With the change of government from monarchy to republic, all the work done on the national constitution previous to 1912 became null and void and the whole question entered on a new phase. At the commencement of the republican era the people were represented in the provincial assemblies as organized under the Empire, and by a Provisional National Assembly which had been hastily organized at Nanking under the auspices of the Revolutionary party. The Constitutional Assembly (Tzu Chêng Yüan) at Peking dissolved with the end of the Empire and its functions were assumed by the Provisional Assembly at Nanking as the Ts'an-i Yüan or Advisory Council, the election of the members of which was hasty and irregular. This Advisory Council was reorganized and moved to Peking in March, 1912.⁸

On the 10th of March, 1912, a Provisional Constitution of fifty-six articles was passed by the Advisory Council.⁹ This constitution aimed to have all the power of the Central Government in the hands of a Parliament, the President being a figurehead and the Premier the chief executive officer. This remained in force until the dissolution of the Provisional National Assembly in January, 1914.¹⁰

A Provisional National Assembly (Chung I Yüan) was convened in Peking in April, 1913¹¹ and for nearly a year formed, with the Advisory Council (Ts'an-i Yüan) as upper house, a Provisional Parliament. Meanwhile provincial assemblies were organized under Republican auspices in the spring of 1913. The National Assembly elected Yüan Shih-K'ai Permanent President on October 6, 1913¹², but his views of a president's functions differed widely from those of the Democratic party (Kuo Min Tang) in the National Assembly and the strife was brought to a summary ending on November 4, 1913, by the President's expulsion of the members of the Kuo Min Tang from the National Assembly.¹³ On November 26 the President organized an Administrative Conference or Political Council (Chêng Shih Hui I) to give advice on governmental affairs.¹⁴ On January 10, 1914, the President, acting on the advice of the Political Council, dissolved the National Assembly¹⁵, and in February and March he also dissolved the local government bodies and the provincial assemblies. Thus all representation of the people was temporarily done away with, and the Provisional Constitution of March 10, 1912, became a dead letter. On January 26, 1914, the President issued a mandate ordering the formation of a Constitutional Compact Conference (Yüeh Fa Hui I) which convened on the 18th of March, 1914.

On the 1st of May, 1914, the President proclaimed an Amended [Revised] Provisional Constitution of sixty-eight articles.¹⁶ This Constitution provides for a highly centralized form of government. It is now in force. By this Provisional Constitution various details are left to the Constitutional Compact Conference (Yüeh Fa Hui I) to work out. Articles 59-63 contain the procedure for drawing up the Permanent Constitution. Article 59 provides that this Constitution shall be drafted by a Committee composed of persons not exceeding ten in number elected by the "Council of State" (Tsan Chêng Yüan). This body, the Tsan Chêng Yüan, was organized by Presidential mandate on May 26, 1914. It consists of seventy members appointed by the President and is supposed to contain experts in different lines capable of giving him advice on governmental matters. Its most important function is to give the color of popular assent to the actions of the President. This body has now nominated the committee of ten to draft the Permanent Constitution, which will be promulgated by the President when drafted without reference to any elected representative body of the Chinese people. The following ten men compose the committee to draw up the Permanent Constitution: Li Chia-Chu; Liang Ch'i-chao; Yen Fu; Wang Tung-pen; Wang Shih-chêng; Ta Shou; Ma Liang; Ssu Yu; Tsêng Yi-chang; Yang Tu. They are all men of high standing, representing fairly the moderate Progressives. Needless to say, they all favor the centralized form of government outlined in the Provisional Constitution of May 1, 1914.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, August 25, 1915.

For some weeks there has been a widespread discussion of the question of reestablishing monarchical form of government. This agitation seems to have the general sympathy and to some extent support not only of many of the older officials but also of the younger officials hitherto identified with the republican movement. It is also regarded with tolerance, if not with complacency, by the Government, the President having declined to intervene in restraint of activities of the so-called Peace Planning Society recently formed for the purpose of monarchist propaganda. The President has also given publicity to a memorandum prepared at his request by Goodnow expressing the view that, theoretically and in the abstract, monarchical form of government is better adapted to conditions in China, though reserving an opinion as to the advisability of making a change from the present system of government. Extensive use is being made of Goodnow's name in support of propaganda. The movement has excited considerable opposition although not so much in the North at any rate as might have been expected.

It is not yet possible to be sure whether this agitation is a part of a plan to bring about the assumption of the throne by the President or is merely a means adopted by him or sanctioned by him at the instance of certain reactionary influences with a view to determining whether or not the temper of the country would tolerate such a reestablishment of an imperial régime. Present indications tend to support the former alternative.

Referring to Legation's telegram of August 25. It now appears certain that monarchical agitation is incidental to a definite plan looking to assumption of the throne by the President if, and as soon as, that appears to be practicable. * * *

The great majority of provincial governors, both civil and military, have telegraphed to the Peace Planning Society their adherence to the movement; similar telegrams in considerable number have been received from commercial and educational institutions throughout the country. These telegrams have in all probability been sent under official inspiration.

Council of State convened yesterday, acting under the Provisional Constitution as a legislative body pending the institution of the proposed legislature. The Vice President failed to preside, pleading illness. * * *

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 7, 1915.

SIR: Referring to my telegrams of August 25, September 2 and September 4, on the subject of the agitation in favor of a restoration of the monarchical form of government in China, I have the honor to report as follows:

For some months past there have been rumors, vague at first, but becoming gradually more definite, that President Yuan Shih-k'ai was maturing a plan for the transformation of the Republic into a monarchy, and taking the throne as the founder of a new dynasty. From several usually trustworthy sources I received, as early as mid-June, information to the effect that the Committee of Ten, entrusted with the drafting of the permanent Constitution, was being carefully "handpicked" with a view to its embodying in the Constitution provisions for the reestablishment of a monarchy, and then demanding that the Legislature, which would in due course have been selected with like care, should be convened in order that it might in the name of the people of China decide whether or not the proposed change in the form of government should be made—the President meanwhile deprecating, with the appropriate degree of earnestness, any action tending to force on him responsibilities more lofty than he had assumed as President of the Republic. Despite the character of the sources from which this information reached me, I attached slight importance to it at the time, believing that while certain influences might be intriguing to that end, it was scarcely credible that so shrewd a politician as the President should choose for such a purpose (even if he entertained it) a time when the personnel of the Government was engaged in bitter factional strife, when the finances of the country were being carried on in hand-to-mouth fashion, when the balance of power in China was destroyed by the European War, when new revolutionary movements were believed to be forming, and when the prestige of his administration was suffering from the yielding of the concessions which the Japanese Government had demanded and enforced by its ultimatum of May 7. Such plans as were being made were in fact worked out with a degree of secrecy altogether unusual in this country; and for some weeks there appeared to be no concrete indications tending to confirm the reports referred to above.

The first tangible evidence of anything stirring beneath the surface was an interview (of which the account given in the Peking Gazette of July 7 is enclosed herewith)¹⁷ in which the President rebuked General Feng Kuo-chang, military governor of Kiangsu Province, for urging upon him the suggestion that he assume the throne. This abjuration said so much more than would have been necessary to a staged disclaimer of any monarchical aspirations, that it had all the appearance of genuineness.

The next development in the movement was associated with the coming of the American Constitutional Adviser, Dr. Frank J.

¹⁷ Not printed.

Goodnow, who had returned to Peking in the middle of July for a short visit. Shortly after his arrival, Dr. Goodnow was asked by the President to prepare for his own information a memorandum on the respective merits of the republican and monarchical forms of government, with particular reference to conditions in China. In entire good faith, though, as the event has proved, with perhaps too little wariness as to the use which might be made of it, Dr. Goodnow, in response to this request, prepared a memorandum (of which a copy, as printed in the Peking Daily News of August 20 is enclosed herewith^a) in which he outspokenly set forth the view that theoretically and in the abstract the monarchical form is the better suited to the genius and traditions and present political development of the Chinese, but expressly disclaimed any judgment on the question whether the conditions actually existing would render feasible or expedient a change from the republican to the monarchical system. I understand that he also discussed the matter with the President in the same sense, making it clear that as a question of practical politics the matter involved considerations of fact as to which no foreigner is competent to form a judgment, and which must be decided by those responsible for the destinies of the country.

At the end of the second week of August, a monarchical propaganda, professedly based upon Dr. Goodnow's advice, was begun with an amazing suddenness that appears to indicate careful preparation in advance. In spite of the reservations with which Dr. Goodnow had qualified his memorandum for the President, it began to be quoted in the Chinese press (as cited in the enclosed clipping from the Peking Gazette of August 14)¹⁷ as maintaining categorically the bald thesis that "a monarchical system of government is better than a republican system"; and he was thenceforward referred to as supporting or even as having inspired the monarchical movement. On August 16 there appeared in the press the manifesto of an organization calling itself the Ch'ou An Hui or Peace Planning Society, newly formed for the purpose of "devising means for keeping peace in this country" and for expounding "views concerning the future of our country and the advantages and disadvantages accruing from the republican form of government," which was based upon the declaration that "Dr. Goodnow has stated that a monarchy is a better form of government than republicanism, and according to his opinion a monarchical form of government is most indispensable at present for China". (For translation see enclosed clipping from the Peking Gazette of August 16).^b Dr. Goodnow found it necessary to repudiate the views thus attributed to him, in an interview which appeared in the Peking Gazette of August 18 (of which a copy is enclosed herewith);^c and with the permission of the President he also caused the full text of his memorandum to be published in the Peking Daily News of August 20. Even the publication of his memorandum, however, did not put an end to the misquotation of his views by the adherents of the Ch'ou An Hui, who continued to refer to his advice in support of their propaganda; and as late as August 24, in the society's circular telegram to which reference is made hereafter, Dr. Goodnow's views were cited in a passage of which the following is a translation made by the Chinese Secretary of the Legation:

The United States is the foremost Republic in the world. Dr. Goodnow, the great American scholar in the science of government, says that a monarchy is really better than a republic, and that China especially cannot do without the monarchical form of government. This opinion is held not only by Dr. Goodnow, but by many other well-known scholars. As Dr. Goodnow is a citizen of a republic, he is very familiar with both the advantages and failures of the republican form of government. Moreover, he says that conditions in America and China are different, and that the institutions of the one country cannot be forcibly transplanted to the other.

Dr. Goodnow consequently found himself placed in a false light, and in order to clear up his position he brought pressure to bear upon certain of his official associates who were in a position to influence the leaders of the Ch'ou An Hui, with the result that a notice to the following effect was published in the Chinese press on August 28:

With reference to the discussion of the question "Monarchy or Republic", Dr. Goodnow has made no statement other than that contained in the memorandum which he presented to the President. Lest there should be any apprehension on the subject, we hereby specially issue this notice.

CH'OU AN HUI.

In the earliest days of its formation, the Ch'ou An Hui was scarcely taken seriously by outside observers. Even when there was published an interview (of which the translation appearing in the Peking Gazette of August 17 is enclosed herewith)¹⁷ in which the President, referring to the activities of that society, said

As to the people of the country * * * it is quite reasonable for them to discuss the best method which will ensure them permanent peace and happiness. * * * How can I interfere with such a movement, merely for the reason that such a movement would tend to misrepresent me to the public as a person who entertains some doubtful and suspicious ambition? * * * If it does not tend to disturb the order of the country, there is no necessity for the Government to take measures to interfere with it—even then, the apparent inopportuneness of the times, the comparative obscurity of those who were known as its adherents, and the shallowness and obvious insincerity of its propaganda, all tended to induce the belief that the movement was no more than a ballon d'essai—an activity which the President countenanced, perhaps with a view to its revealing whether or not the temper of the country would admit of such a possibility now or at some later occasion, but which he in all probability regarded as a means of quieting the enthusiasts and the sycophants by letting them batter their heads against an impossibility.

But meanwhile the Ch'ou An Hui thrived immensely. In addition to the original manifesto (quoted in the enclosure from the Peking Gazette of the 16th ultimo), it issued a prospectus and notifications (which are enclosed herewith in translation from the Peking Gazette of August 21)¹⁷ and a circular telegram to the civil and military governors of the provinces, to the lieutenant generals, and to the chambers of commerce and popular bodies of the provinces, expressing the belief that the republican form of government is not suitable to China (of which a translation, as printed in the Peking Daily News of the 25th ultimo is enclosed herewith);¹⁷ and its chief promoter, Mr. Young Tu, published an elaborate "Defense of the Monarchical Movement" (of which I enclose a translation as printed in the Peking Daily News of August 26, 27 and 28);¹⁷ it attained the distinction of having its leaders interviewed by Mr. B. L. Simpson (Putnam Weale); it acquired the rather more substantial dignity of having its views and purposes contested with eloquent and apparently sincerely patriotic earnestness by Mr. Liang Ch'i-ch'iao, recently Minister of Justice, in an interview printed in the Peking Gazette of the 31st ultimo (of which a copy is enclosed);¹⁷ and in an article (of which a translation, as printed in the Gazette of September 4 and 6, is enclosed);¹⁷ and, most important of all, it contrived to receive from the civil and military governors and others, to whom its circular was addressed, most encouragingly acquiescent replies—which, for the most part, embody the ideas and the terms which the society professed to quote from the memorandum which Dr. Goodnow had submitted for the information of President Yuan. There were obstacles to the progress of the society; according to a report quoted in the Peking Gazette of August 23 (of which a copy is enclosed),¹⁷ the President in conversation with the Secretary of State, on August 19, discreetly discountenanced the movement by declaring,

If a few shortsighted people attempt to compel me to adopt an unrighteous course I shall have no alternative but to take refuge in a foreign land, as I cannot break my solemn oath; and about the same time there was talk of an impeachment to be lodged against its members by the censorate, on the ground of their indulging in a movement subversive of the existing Government; but the chief censor had found it expedient to get to one of the foreign concessions in Tientsin before it was even known to the general public that this suggestion had originated with him.

It has now appeared that, back of all this rather puerile agitation on the part of the Ch'ou An Hui, there has been the substantial fact that the President himself, his eldest son, Yuan K'o-ting, and the most powerful civil official in China, Liang Shih-yi, and the most influential military leader, Feng Kuo-chang, have planned and worked for the reinstatement of a monarchical régime with President Yuan as emperor. That is a fact which, for my own part, I must acknowledge having doubted perhaps longer than the evidence warranted; it has now been made indubitable, not only by the indirect testimony of colleagues and of press correspondents and other unofficial sources of information, but also by the direct statements of certain Cabinet Ministers, who have discussed the matter with the President and learned his views authoritatively and at first-hand. As I reported in my telegram of September 4, the majority of the Cabinet and of the other officials of greatest influence are (or have been) in favor of the movement.

On the evening of Saturday, the 4th instant, one of the Cabinet Ministers who called to see Dr. Tenney and myself on another matter took occasion to say that he had that morning conferred with the President in reference to the plans for the reestablishment of a monarchy; and that, whereas President Yuan had up to a few days previously been whole-heartedly in favor of forcing the movement through without delay, he was now "much less enthusiastic", and determined to proceed, if at all, with the utmost circumspection. My informant went on to say that the reason for this change was doubtless the apprehension that the foreign Powers might withhold their recognition of the new Government, and that Japan, particularly, might exact terms in consideration of its recognition of the new order. He then offered the naïve surmise that perhaps this difficulty might be avoided by simply announcing that the appropriate lawmaking body of China had determined to confer upon the President the title of Emperor, and that at some convenient time thereafter the Constitution might, as a matter of purely domestic concern, be so amended as to make the presidency hereditary.

Fantastic as these suggestions sound, they seem to accord with the present attitude of those in authority. It appears that the Chinese official mind accepts, without any sense of anomaly, the idea of a hereditary presidency as forming the happiest possible solution of the problem of the succession, which has been brought so persistently to public notice by the propaganda of the Ch'ou An Hui.

It would seem that by the mere fact of having created a general impression that something in the present system of government requires modification, that society has now exhausted its usefulness to the purpose in view, and its activities will probably be allowed to dwindle. So nearly as can be judged from the reports as to the present mood of the President, and from the message which was communicated by him yesterday to the Council of State (Tsan Cheng Yuan), sitting as a legislative body pending the establishment of the Li Fa Yuan,¹⁸ the present intention is not to establish the new régime by a coup d'état, as a few days ago seemed likely, but to leave the matter for decision and adjustment by processes at least superficially constitutional.

Concerning the attitude of the Chinese people towards the contemplated change, it is still too early to generalize with assurance. It would be naïve to take without discount the expressions of approval which have been telegraphed, in really considerable volume, by the provincial authorities and by popular bodies of all sorts in the provinces, in reply to the circular of the Ch'ou An Hui; their spontaneity is more than questionable; and in the great majority of cases they must be assumed to represent not a conviction that the monarchical system is the best for the country, but a calculation that that system is the more likely to prevail. It should be noted, however, that among the younger officials—the foreign-educated class, which has hitherto been more or less directly associated with the republican movement,—there has been observable an unmistakable tendency to regard with sympathy, if not with active approval, the idea of reversion to a monarchy. On the other hand, such opposition as has thus far appeared has seemed to be wholly academic and forensic, giving no evidence of any likelihood of serious resistance. There is of course a considerable revolutionary element which may be expected to take what advantage it can of the discontent which such action would cause; but among both foreign and Chinese observers it seems generally to be believed that the Government has the situation well enough in hand to assure that no revolutionary movement is likely to gain headway or to pass beyond the stage of mere local disturbances—unless abetted and assisted by Japan. The great bulk of the people may, I believe, be assumed to be indifferent to the question of the form of government so long as it does not undertake to govern them too rigorously or tax them too much.

With a view to learning the character and effects of the monarchical movement in the provinces, the Legation on August 25 despatched to the consuls a circular directing them to report on the subject. Replies have thus far been received, as follows: Antung, Hankow, Mukden, Nanking and Shanghai. In order to put the Department in possession of all available information at as early a date as possible, I forward copies of these reports¹⁷ without waiting to coordinate them with those which are still to be received.

It has proved difficult to learn with accuracy the views of the several other Legations here. In general, I think it may be said that they regard the contemplated change in the form of government without particular concern, feeling their policies wholly unaffected by it unless in the event that it should lead to disorders detrimental to trade and jeopardizing foreign interests; for the rest, the general feeling is that if the Chinese find it possible to reinstitute their traditional form of government, without bringing on revolution or bankruptcy or foreign intervention, so much the better. But opinions differ as to the feasibility of bringing about the change without those consequences. * * *

Dr. Goodnow's Memorandum to the President.

[From the Peking Daily News of August 20, 1915.]

MONARCHIES ORIGINATE WITH ONE MAN.

The determination in a given country of the form of government established therein has seldom if ever been the result of the conscious choice of the people of that country or even of the choice of its most intelligent classes. The establishment on the one hand of a monarchy or on the other hand of a republic has in almost all instances been due to influences almost beyond human control. The former history of the country, its traditions, its social and economic conditions all have either favored the form of government which has been adopted or, in case the form of government at first adopted has not been in harmony therewith, have soon brought it about that that form is replaced by one which is better suited to the country's needs.

In other words, the form of government which a country usually possesses is for the most part determined by the necessities of practical life. Among the contributing causes which fix forms of government, one of the most important is force. Almost all monarchies thus owe their origin in last analysis to the exertions of some one man who has been able to organize the material power of the country in such a way as to overcome all competitors. If he has able sons or male relatives, if he has ruled wisely and if the conditions of the country have been such as to favor monarchical rule, he may be able to establish a dynasty which will during a long period successfully govern the country.

Under such conditions one of the most perplexing problems of government is probably more satisfactorily solved than has usually been the case in republics. For on the death of the monarch there is no question as to the succession to the executive power. No election or other method of choosing a successor is necessary. As the English law expresses it: "The King is dead, Long live the King." In order, however, that the desired result may be attained, it is absolutely necessary that the law of succession be clearly determined and practically universally accepted. Else the death of the monarch will bring into being numerous aspirants for the throne whose conflicting claims can be adjudicated only by resort to civil war.

History would seem to prove, furthermore, that the only permanently satisfactory solution of the question of succession in monarchical states is that which has been reached by the States of Europe. This consists in fixing the succession to the throne upon the eldest son of the monarch or in default of sons, upon the nearest eldest male relative. Under this method he who is by the law of succession entitled to the throne is permitted to waive his rights, in which case, if it is the eldest son who has so waived his rights, the next eldest son takes his place.

If some such method of fixing the succession is not adopted, if for example the succession to the throne is left to the determination of the monarch, who may choose as his successor a son not the eldest, or some other relative not the nearest eldest male relative the uncertainty as to the succession is almost certain to produce trouble. Palace intrigues in favor of the various claimants to the throne are sure to develop which both embitter the closing days of the monarch's life and often lead to confusion if not civil war after his death.

The advantages which history would seem to show are attendant upon a monarchy as compared with a republic, so far as concerns this important question of succession to the executive power, are thus, it would seem, conditioned very largely upon the adoption of that law of succession which experience has shown to be the best, that is, succession in the eldest nearest male line.

EUROPEAN REPUBLICS.

Until recently the accepted form of government both in Asia and Europe was monarchical. It is true that in Europe, contrary to the usual rule there were a few republics such as Venice and Switzerland. But the States possessing a republican government were few in number and small in size. In almost all the important States of the world the government was monarchical in character.

Within the last hundred and fifty years, however, there is noticeable among European peoples a distinct movement away from monarchical and in favor of republican government. The first attempt to establish republican government in any of the large European States was made in England in the 17th century. After a successful revolution Charles I, the English King, was tried by Parliament, convicted of treason and executed. A republic, the so-called "Commonwealth" was established with Oliver Cromwell as "Protector" or President. Cromwell obtained his power as a result of his control of the revolutionary army which had defeated the forces of the crown.

This early English Republic lasted only a few years and fell as a result of the difficulties attendant upon the question of the succession to the Protectorate which arose on Cromwell's death. Cromwell had attempted to place his son Richard in the position left vacant by his death. But either because the English people were not suited to a republic or because Richard Cromwell did not have the characteristics required of the possessor of executive power, this attempt to continue the English Republic was a failure, and England abandoned the republican and re-established the monarchical form of government. Charles II, the son of the executed Charles I, was put upon the throne, largely as the result of the support of the army but with the almost universal approval of the English people.

The next attempt to form a republic among European peoples was made after the American revolution at the end of the 18th century when the United States of America was formed. The American revolution was due not so much to an attempt to overthrow monarchical government as to a desire upon the part of the English colonies in America to obtain their independence of England. The success of this revolution brought, however, in its train, almost necessarily, the establishment of republican government. There was no royal family left in the country to which its government might be entrusted. There was, furthermore, in the country a distinct sentiment in favor of a republic due in large measure to the fact that quite a large number of those who had participated in the establishment of the ill-fated English Republic in the preceding century had come to America and had exerted even after their death an influence in favor of republican institutions.

It is, however, possible that George Washington, who had led the American armies during the revolution, might have if he had been so inclined, established himself as king. He was, however, in principle a republican rather than a monarchist. He furthermore had no son who, had he been crowned king, could have succeeded him.

The result was that, when the United States obtained its independence, it definitely adopted the republican form of government which has lasted during a century and a quarter. The unquestioned success which has attended the United States during most of its existence has done much to give to the republican form of government the prestige which it now possesses. It is well, however, to remember that the United States inherited from England the principles of constitutional and parliamentary government and that these principles had been applied in America for a century or more before the republic was established. The change from the form of government which was in force during the colonial period to the republic adopted in 1789 was not therefore anything in the nature of a change from autocracy to a republic. Such a change as was made had been preceded by a long period of preparation and discipline in self-government. Furthermore, the American people even of that day possessed a high grade of general intelligence, owing to the attention which had from the very beginning of American history been given to the common schools where almost every child could learn at any time to read and write.

The establishment of the American Republic was followed almost immediately by the formation of the French Republic. The Government of France prior to the declaration of the republic had been autocratic. Almost all public powers were centered in the crown and the people participated hardly at all in the administration. The French people had thus had little experience in self-government and were therefore unable to carry on successfully the republic which they endeavored to establish. Periods of disorder followed by military dictatorships followed in rapid succession. The monarchy was restored after the fall of Napoleon largely as the result of foreign intervention. A revolution in 1830 brought into being a more liberal monarchy. This was overthrown by a revolution in 1848, when a republic was again established. The President of this Republic, the nephew of the great Napoleon, overthrew it and declared himself Emperor. After the Franco-Prussian war in 1870 he was deposed and the present French Republic came into being. This republic has now lasted nearly half a century and gives every evidence of permanence.

It is well to remember, however, that the present permanence of republican institutions in France was secured only after nearly a century of political change, if not disorder, and that during that century serious attempts had been made both to give the people generally that education upon which intelligent political action must be based and to accustom them by participation in public affairs to the exercise of powers of self government.

The French, like the Americans, would appear to have solved successfully the most difficult problems in republican government, that is the succession to the executive power. In France the President is elected by the Legislature. In the United States he is elected by the people. In both France and the United States the people have long had experience in self government through participation in public affairs, while in both countries, during the past half century particularly, great attention has been paid to their general education through schools in many cases supported by the Government. The result is that the grade of intelligence of the people in both America and France, is comparatively speaking, high.

THE LATIN REPUBLICS.

The examples given in the latter part of the 19th century by the United States and France were very largely followed in South and Central America at the time the former Spanish colonies in this part of the world achieved their independence. As was the case in the United States when it became independent a republic seemed the only practicable form of government which could be adopted. There was no royal family to which the people might look for guidance.

The success which had been attendant upon the establishment of a republic in North America had caused the belief to be entertained by many thinkers, both that a republic was the best form of government and that its establishment and maintenance were possible under all conditions and among all peoples. Republics were therefore established almost everywhere throughout South and Central America. But, either because of the disorders which were incident to the long struggle for independence or because of the difficulties inherent in a republican form of government among a low grade of intelligence, due to the lack of general education, and accustomed only to autocratic rule, the South and Central American Republics have not been generally successful. For years after the independence of the Spanish colonies was achieved South and Central America was the scene of continual disorder, incident for the most part to the struggles of military leaders for political power. At times there were periods of comparative peace due to the success of some extraordinarily strong man who was able to seize and keep in his hands political power. Little if any attempt was for a long time made by any of those who obtained political power to educate the people generally through the establishment of schools or to aid them in the acquisition of political experience by according them participation in the government. The result was that when the strong hand which controlled the country was relaxed, owing either to the increasing age or death of him who possessed political power, disorder again appeared due to the struggles of the claimants for the political succession—since no satisfactory solution of the question of succession was reached. Whatever progress the country had been able to make during its period of peace was arrested and not infrequently the anarchy and chaos which followed caused a serious deterioration in the economic and social conditions of the country.

What has happened in Mexico recently has too often been the lot of the Central and South American States under a republican form of government not suited to their stage of economic and political development. Under the Government of Diaz, who acquired political power through his control of the army, it seemed as if Mexico had successfully solved the problem of government. Diaz, however, did little for the education of the people and discouraged rather than encouraged their participation in the government. When increasing age caused him to relax his control revolution broke out again and he fell from power. Since his loss of power the country has been devastated by the contending armies of rival leaders, and at present it would seem that its salvation is possible only as the result of foreign intervention.

It is of course true that in some of the South American countries progress is apparently being made in solving the problems of republican government. Such countries are particularly Argentine, Chile and Brazil. In both Argentina and Chile a long period of disorder and disturbance has been followed by a comparatively long period of peace. In Brazil the establishment of the republic about twenty-five years ago, was accompanied by little trouble and the subsequent life of the republic has been a peaceful one. In all three countries considerable progress has been made in the establishment of constitutional government, in Argentine and Chile as one of the results of the struggles of the early part of the nineteenth century, in Brazil, partly at any rate, during the empire which preceded the present republic, and which encouraged the participation of the people in the government of the country.

LESSONS FROM REPUBLICAN EXPERIENCE.

The experience in the South and Central American countries would seem to inculcate the same lessons which may be derived from the experience of the United States and France. These are

1st. That the difficult problem of the succession to executive power in a republic may be solved by a people which has a high general intelligence due to the existence of schools where general education may be obtained and which has learned to exercise political power through participation in the affairs of government; and

2d. That little hope may be entertained of the successful solution of the question of presidential succession in a country where the intelligence of the people is not high and where the people do not acquire political wisdom by sharing in the exercise of political power under some form of constitutional government. Where such conditions do not exist a republican form of government—that is a government in which the executive is not hereditary—generally leads to the worst possible form of government, namely, that of the military dictator. The best that can be hoped for under such a system is periods of peace alternating with periods of disorder during which the rival claimants for political power are striving among themselves for the control of the government.

GREAT POWERS WILL NOT PERMIT DISORDER.

At the present time, it may further be remarked, it is very doubtful whether the great Powers of the European world will permit the government of the military dictator permanently to exist, if it continues to be accompanied by the disorder which has been its incident in the past. The economic interests of the European world would have grown to be so comprehensive, European capital and European commercial and industrial enterprises have become so wide in their ramifications that the governments of the foreign countries interested, although caring little what may be the form of government adopted by the nations with which they deal, are more and more inclined to insist, where they have the power, that conditions of peace shall be maintained in order that they may receive what they consider to be the proper returns on their investments. This insistence they are more and more liable to carry to the point of actual destruction of the political independence of offending nations and of direct administration of their government if this is necessary to the attainment of the ends desired.

It is therefore becoming less and less likely that countries will be permitted in the future to work out their own salvation through disorder and revolution, as may have been the case during the past century with some of the South American countries. Under modern conditions countries must devise some method of government under which peace will be maintained or they will have to submit to foreign control.

CHINA'S NEEDS CONSIDERED.

The question naturally presents itself: How do these considerations affect the present political situation of China?

China is a country which has for centuries been accustomed to autocratic rule. The intelligence of the great mass of its people is not high owing to the lack of schools. The Chinese have never been accorded much participation in the work of government. The result is that the political capacity of the Chinese people is not large. The change from autocratic to republican government made four years ago was too violent to permit the entertainment of any very strong hopes for its immediate success. Had the Tsing dynasty not been an alien rule which it had long been the wish of the Chinese people to overthrow, there can be little doubt that it would have been better to retain the dynasty in power and gradually to introduce constitutional government in accordance with the plans outlined by the commission appointed for this purpose. But the hatred of alien rule made this impossible and the establishment of a republic seemed at the time of the overthrow of the Manchus to be the only alternative available.

It cannot, therefore, be doubted that China has during the last few years been attempting to introduce constitutional government under less favorable auspices than would have been the case had there been a royal family present which the people regarded with respect and to which they were loyal. The great problem of the presidential succession would seem still to be unsolved. The present arrangement cannot be regarded as satisfactory. When the present President lays down the cares of office there is great danger that the difficulties which are usually incident to the succession in countries conditioned as is China will present themselves. The attempt to solve these difficulties may lead to disorders which if long continued may seriously imperil the independence of the country.

What under these conditions should be the attitude of those who have the welfare of China at heart? Should they advocate the continuance of the republic or should they propose the establishment of a monarchy?

These are difficult questions to answer. It is of course not susceptible of doubt that a monarchy is better suited than a republic to China. China's history and traditions, her social and economic conditions, her relations with foreign powers all make it probable that the country would develop that constitutional government which it must develop if it is to preserve its independence as a State, more easily as a monarchy than as a republic.

But it is to be remembered that the change from a republic to a monarchy can be successfully made only on the conditions

1st. That the change does not meet with such opposition either on the part of the Chinese people or of foreign Powers as will lead to the recurrence of the disorders which the present republican government has successfully put down. The present peaceful conditions of the country should on no account be imperiled.

2d. The change from republic to monarchy would be of little avail if the law of succession is not so fixed that there will be no doubt as to the successor. The succession should not be left to the crown to determine for the reasons which have already been set forth at length. It is probably of course true that the authority of an emperor would be more respected than the authority of a president. The people have been accustomed to an emperor. They hardly know what a president is. At the same time it would seem doubtful if the increase of authority resulting from the change from president to emperor would be sufficient to justify the change, if the question of the succession were not so securely fixed as to permit of no doubt. For this is the one greatest advantage of the monarchy over the republic.

3rd. In the third place it is very doubtful whether the change from republic to monarchy would be of any lasting benefit to China, if provision is not made for the development under the monarchy of the form of constitutional government. If China is to take her proper place among nations greater patriotism must be developed among the people and the government must increase in strength in order to resist foreign aggression. Her people will never develop the necessary patriotism unless they are given greater participation in the government than they have had in the past. The government never will acquire the necessary strength unless it has the cordial support of the people. This it will not have unless again the people feel that they have a part in the government. They must in some way be brought to think of the government as an organization which is trying to benefit them and over whose actions they exercise some control.

Whether the conditions which have been set forth as necessary for such a change from republic to monarchy as has been suggested are present, must of course be determined by those who both know the country and are responsible for its future development. These conditions are present if there can be little doubt that the change would be of benefit to the country.

The Society for Peace. Chou An Hui.

[From the Peking Gazette, August 16, 1915.]

A number of prominent officials, including Messrs. Yang Tu, Sun Yu-yun, Yen Fu, General Li Shi-ho and others have promoted a society under the name Chou An Hui, or the Society for Peace. The following is a translation of the manifesto:—

During the revolution of 1911 the racial prejudices of our people were so aroused that their attention was entirely concentrated on the removal of a certain section of the population and they did not give the least consideration to the future political affairs of the country. They hastily adopted the republican form of government without weighing carefully its suitability for this country. When a proposal to this effect was made by a few people, others followed blindly without further questioning its advisability. The farsighted people at that time foresaw the danger and trouble to the future of the country, but to prevent dissension and other troubles, which would have further endangered the existence of the country, were compelled to accept this proposal though reluctantly. Since the abdication of the Tsing Imperial House, followed by a period of anarchy, the régime of the Provisional Government and finally the establishment of the present Government, there have been numerous crises in the Government and many unspeakable sufferings of the people which are still fresh in the memory of every class of our people. If a proper measure is not devised to remedy the situation, there will be endless trouble in this country.

In such countries as Argentine, Peru, Chile and other Republics in South and Central America, party feuds have been the order of the day, and such quarrels frequently culminated in civil war. In Portugal the recent change of Government from a monarchy to a republic has been immediately followed by deadly internecine strife and the worst case of all is in Mexico. Since the abdication of Diaz, that country has been seething with civil strife till the present day. Their party leaders have struggled for supremacy with one another with military force. When they win they occupy the land and when they are defeated they never scruple to commit looting, incendiarism and massacre. Finally the whole nation is divided into five camps with as many presidents, and the country is practically in a state of anarchy. As we are a newly established republic, we should take Mexico as our object lesson.

The United States of America is the senior republic of the world and her great student of politics, Dr. Goodnow, has stated that a monarchy is a better form of government than republicanism and according to his opinion, a monarchical form of government is most indispensable for China at present. This view has been shared by not a few notable scholars of other countries. As Dr. Goodnow is a citizen of a republic, he is more competent to make such a statement than others. His words are, the conditions are different in China and America and it is impossible to transplant one system from one country to another.

If foreigners who are in sympathy with China have so openly and loudly laid before us their unprejudiced views, can we people of China leave everything to fate, raising not a hand to find a fundamental solution for this important problem? Where is your patriotism? Where is your duty as a citizen to the country, if you, for fear of adverse criticism or other dangers, remain silent and indecisive?

As we are the people of this country, the prosperity or decline of this country is nothing less than the prosperity or decline of ourselves. Therefore we cannot bear to sit silent and see the country being obliterated out of existence without making any attempt to save it. We have therefore gathered a number of our sympathizers and started this society with a view to devising means for keeping peace in this country. We shall each give our views concerning the future of our country and the advantages and disadvantages accruing from the republican form of government for general discussion. There are not a few wise and farsighted people in this country, and if they are kind enough to condescend to join us in the discussion of these points, we shall extend them our heartiest welcome.

[From the Peking Gazette of August 18, 1915.]

The following statement of views expressed by Dr. Goodnow in an interview which we had with him yesterday, defines his attitude on the subject of a monarchical restoration in China in terms which forbid the further citation of his name in support of the thesis that "a monarchical system of government is better than a republican system." It is also clear that Dr. Goodnow cannot be cited as an authority for the proposition that a monarchical form of government is most indispensable at present in China in the sense suggested by the Chou An Hui in the manifesto published in our issue last Monday. In the interests of clear thinking and of the national welfare, it is to be hoped that this exceedingly grave and anxious question will be discussed with care and with exact knowledge of the principles and all the facts involved, bearing in mind the possibility—if not the probability—of the proposed change reacting with disastrous effect on the foundations of the State.

Referring to the leading article which appeared in these columns on Monday, Dr. Goodnow stated that the statement attributed to him to the effect that "a monarchical system of government is better than a republican system," which we had quoted from the manifesto of the newly formed Chou An Hui or Society for Peace was not a correct statement either of anything that he has said or of his views. Dr. Goodnow declared that he not only had never made such a statement, but, on the contrary, he was of the opinion that no form of government could be said to be superior under all conditions to other forms of government. He believed that for some countries—where the conditions were favorable—a republican form of government was the best form of government. This was true of the United States and France. In these countries the grade of intelligence of the people was high, owing to the long continued existence of schools, and the people themselves had for many years participated in the work of government and, through this participation, they had learned the lesson of self-government. On the other hand it was just as true, he thought, that a monarchy was often better suited for countries where the conditions were different from those obtaining in the United States and France.

Dr. Goodnow also expressed it as his opinion that conditions in China made difficult the orderly development of republican government; because, among other things, of the general lack of knowledge of the people and their long subjection to autocratic rule. He said that from some points of view it had been unfortunate that China could not have carried further the experiment—begun by the Manchus—of developing gradually constitutional government under a monarchy, but that probably under the conditions existing after the revolution, the establishment of a republic was unavoidable.

When asked his opinion as to the expediency of re-establishing a monarchy in China in the near future, he said that the change could be justified only because under a monarchy the question of the succession to the executive power, the most dangerous question in republics, might possibly be more satisfactorily solved than was probable under any sort of republican government which was likely to be established in this country. The settlement of this question had often, particularly in some of the South and Central America States, led to civil war which had as its result the worst form of government known, viz, that of the military dictator. Chinese could not afford to permit civil war or great disorder, as this would almost certainly lead to foreign intervention with the probable loss of political independence.

And, speaking slowly and with care, he added that because of these considerations, a monarchical restoration in China would be justified, in his opinion, only on condition

(a) That the change be acceptable both to the thinking people of China and to the foreign Powers in order that it might not meet with such opposition as would lead to disorder;

(b) That the succession to the throne be so fixed that no doubt could arise on the death of the monarch as to who would succeed. If we might judge from European experience, the only proper method of fixing the succession was to give it to the eldest son of the monarch or in default of sons to the eldest nearest male relative;

(c) That the monarchy established be a limited constitutional monarchy, which, while for the moment vesting large powers in the Crown, would permit of the gradual development of greater popular government. The re-establishment of the former autocratic monarchy in China could not be regarded as promising any improvement over present conditions.

When asked whether these conditions could be met at present in China, Dr. Goodnow said that he did not know enough about the country or of Chinese opinion to be able to express an opinion of any value and must therefore leave that question to be answered by those who did know China's conditions and were responsible for her destinies.

The President's Message, conveyed by Mr. Yang, the Senior Under Secretary of State, on the 6th of September, to the Council of State acting in the capacity of Li Fa Yuan.

[Copy left at the Department of State by Mr. Yung Kwai, Counselor of the Chinese Legation, on September 7, 1915. Acknowledgment of receipt made to the Chinese Minister on September 9, 1915.]

It is now four years since I have been entrusted by the people with the office of President of the Chinese Republic. During these troublous years, fearing that my ability is not equal to the task, I have labored under much anxiety and misgiving and have looked forward to the time when I may be relieved and permitted to retire. But so long as I am in my present position it is my constant duty and responsibility, which admit of no evasion, to protect the country and the people; it is my special duty to maintain the Republic as the form of government. Recently many citizens from the provinces have petitioned the acting Li Fa Yuan to change the form of government—a state of things which is incompatible with my position as President. But as the office of President is conferred by the people, it should of course depend on the will of the people. Moreover, since the acting Li Fa Yuan is an independent organ and as such is free from outside interference, I should not, strictly speaking, express any views before the people of the country nor to the acting Li Fa Yuan. As, however, any alteration in the form of government makes a radical and important change in the Executive Department, and as I am the Chief Executive, I feel that even at the risk of misinterpretation of my motives I cannot remain silent. In my opinion a change in the form of government involves such a momentous change in the manifold relations of the State that it is a matter which demands the most careful and serious consideration. If it is decided on hastily, serious obstacles will arise. It being my duty to maintain the general situation, I regard the proposed change as unsuitable to the circumstances of the country. As to the petition of the citizens, their object is of course no other than to strengthen the foundation of the State and to increase the prestige of the country. If the opinion of the majority of the people of the country is consulted, good and proper means will undoubtedly be found. Furthermore, as the Constitution of the Republic is now being drafted with due consideration of the conditions of the country, careful thought and mature discussion, a suitable and practicable law will be devised.

I commend this to your attention, Gentlemen of the acting Li Fa Yuan.

No. 766.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 24, 1915.

SIR: In continuation of my despatch No. 747 of the 7th instant, on the subject of the contemplated change in the form of government of China, I have the honor to transmit herewith the following reports¹⁷ from consular officers, additional to those forwarded in that despatch, in regard to the character and effects of the monarchical movement in the several consular districts: Amoy, Canton, Changsha, Foochow, Hankow, Harbin, Shanghai, Swatow and Tientsin.

The impressions to be derived from the study of these reports are singularly consistent and harmonious. Except for Shanghai, Swatow and Harbin, which report a suspicion of Japanese instigation, and Tientsin and Mukden, which indicate a noticeable degree of acquiescence on the part of the local Japanese press, none of these reports points elsewhere than to Peking as the origin of the whole movement; it seems to be everywhere believed that the agitation has been inspired in the highest quarter of the Government, acting through such agencies as the Ch'ou An Hui and the Peking Chamber of Commerce to elicit the support or at least the acquiescence of the provincial officials and of the local commercial and other popular bodies. The propaganda appears to have taken in general a purely argumentative form, except in certain cases in which coercion is reported to have been employed in suppressing opposition on the part of the press. It may be added, however, that in several instances occurring in Peking I have direct information of attempts by the Ch'ou An Hui to purchase the support of certain press correspondents. On the other hand, the only overt act of violence thus far perpetrated on the part of the opponents of the movement is the attempt to bomb the office of the Asiatic Daily News on the morrow of its establishment as the mouthpiece of the Ch'ou An Hui in Shanghai. The proposal to revert to the monarchical system would appear to have created surprisingly little impression throughout the country, except in the capital and (to a less degree) in Shanghai; it would almost seem that it is accepted by the people of China as being, if not wholly desirable, at any rate as a natural and inevitable working out of existing conditions. For reasons sufficiently obvious, the movement seems almost universally to command either the active support or at least the cordial lip-service of the official classes; there are also certain reactionary sections of the literati who are wholly in sympathy with the proposed restoration of the traditional type of government; the merchants and the majority of the gentry appear to be as a rule unsympathetic with the proposal, but desirous of tranquillity under whatsoever political conditions, and therefore disposed to acquiesce in the change with what grace they can; the student classes are more or less openly hostile to the movement; the professed revolutionaries have as yet given no indication of the use which they may find it feasible to make of the situation, although they may no doubt be counted on to utilize the opportunity to spread a feeling of distrust and disaffection from the Government; and the vastly preponderant mass of the people of the country appear to be utterly indifferent to the proposed change as in fact they are utterly ignorant of the character of the republican system under which they are at present governed. Under these circumstances, there seems to be ample warrant for the opinion, held by all the consular officers whose reports are enclosed, that (so far, at least, as concerns its direct and immediate effects) there is no reason to apprehend that the reinstitution of a monarchical form of government would lead to organized resistance or to anything more serious than isolated outrages, and perhaps local disorders which the Government troops would be quite able to restrict.

It is therefore not surprising that the Government now seems to feel itself in a position to carry out the projected change with a satisfactory degree of haste by means which will be at least ostensibly legal and will therefore excite as little domestic antagonism as need be, and avoid so far as possible any pretext for outside interference.

From a confidential source which I believe to be dependable, I have learned that the development of the movement for the reinstitution of the monarchy has led up to the present situation through a course of which the following is a general outline:—The reactionary military faction, usually known as the Anhui Party, has for a considerable time been favoring the President's assumption of imperial dignity, but their influence was until recently counterbalanced by the opposition of the so-called Cantonese Party, which dominates the financial administration of the Government. Early in June, however, the influence of the Anhui Party began to predominate; and its ascendancy over the President found manifestation in the extraordinary series of impeachments which was reported in my despatch No. 722 of August 6 last.¹⁷ Realizing the dominant political position which the rival faction had thus attained, Liang Shih-yi, the actual leader of the Cantonese Party, resolved to steal their thunder by bringing his adherents to the support of the ambitions which the President was known to cherish. The immediate results of this manoeuvre were a reconciliation between the President's eldest son, Yuan K'o-ting, and Mr. Liang (to whom he had theretofore been hostile), the remarkable expression of confidence in the latter which the President caused to be published (as reported in by 722, above cited), and the discontinuance of virtually all the impeachments that had been brought against officials of the Cantonese Party. Some of the more prominent of the Anhui Party officials were disposed to sulk at this reversal of the situation; the Minister of War, Tuan Chi-jui, rather than follow the leadership of his political rivals in the plagiarized policy, resigned; and the Minister of Education, T'ang Hua-lung, attempted unavailingly to do so; the Minister of Finance, Chou Hsüeh-hsi, and the Minister of Communications, Liang T'un-yen, remained in the Cabinet with occasional precautionary spells of illness, looking on rather unsympathetically from aloof. Some of the less weighty members of the party, however, attempted to assume the leadership in the movement by founding the Ch'ou An Hui or Peace Planning Society for the purpose of propaganda, based upon an obvious but convenient perversion of the views set forth in the confidential memorandum which Dr. Goodnow had prepared at the President's request. The propaganda of this society would really seem to have served a purpose in furtherance of the project, by demonstrating the almost complete indifference of the people towards the question of the form of government, and by forcing expressions of opinion on the subject from those who could not without risk or embarrassment either reply unsympathetically or keep silence; but the rather puerile and blatant methods of the society brought down upon the movement a certain amount of ridicule; and in the early part of this month it had begun to be felt that the Ch'ou An Hui had exhausted its usefulness and might be expected to be discarded as a means to the end in view. On September 13 the Secretary of State communicated, for the information and guidance of the Minister of the Interior, the views of the President to the effect that the activity of the Ch'ou An Hui shall be restricted to the discussion of the forms of government. The society shall do nothing more.

Plans had in fact already been made to take advantage of the state of feeling in the country, which the propaganda of the society had revealed rather than created.

The next definite step in the progress of the movement was taken on September 20, by the Tsan Cheng Yuan or Council of State, as had been intimated in the message which the President addressed to that body on the 6th instant. The Council, at a meeting which began as an informal one, set itself to the consideration of the action to be taken upon the petitions received by it from the representatives of officials and commercial bodies urging the change in the form of government; and after having constituted the session a formal one, it unanimously decided to transmit the petitions to the President with the suggestion that "with the view that a fundamental solution be found so that the general situation may be settled and the mind of the people be set at ease," he should "accelerate the convocation of the National Convention within this year"—"or" (according to an amendment to the report that had been made by the committee in charge of the matter) "devise other proper and adequate means to consult the will of the people".

There has been much speculation as to the purport of the amendment thus adopted with an inspired unanimity, which would of course make possible some shortcut to the "fundamental solution" which is contemplated; it has been surmised that it might be the intention of the Government either to confide the solution to the Council of State itself, or to have the change voted by the electors for the Kuo Min Hui or National Convention which is presumably to be convened in October next. From the best information now available, however, it appears probable that the question of the reinstitution of the monarchical system will be submitted to the National Convention itself. The present indications are that, in view of delays which have taken place in the preliminary elections by reason of difficulties of communication, the Convention may not convene until early in 1916, instead of on October 20 next as had been planned.

In this connection I may add that there is reason to foresee that when the National Convention shall have evidenced its value as a representative body by having enacted the fundamental solution of the question of the form of government, it will be converted from a constituent assembly into the legislature of the country, taking the place of the proposed Li Fa Yuan or Legislative Assembly. * * *

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 2, 1915, 6 p. m.

Monarchist movement has gained in strength and extent so that most Legations now expect its successful consummation within a short time. Liang Shih-yi and the Cantonese Party are endeavoring to give the movement constitutional form; on the motion of former the Council of State is making provisions for a referendum on the question of the form of State in connection with elections of members of the citizens' Constitutional Convention which are set for October 21. Under this law each hsien is to elect one delegate; all the delegates of the hsien in any province are to meet in the provincial capital and there to vote on the main question on a date to be fixed by Presidential mandate.

The original promoters of the movement, the military and the Anhui Party, are reported as not greatly pleased with this policy which would base action upon the consent of the whole body of citizens rather than on the support of any party or class. The leaders who favor this policy are also likely to work for the development of representative institutions and of a responsible administration under the monarchy if restored. These progressive elements realizing the strength of monarchical movement have allied themselves with it in the hope of and with the intent of influencing it in the direction of constitutionalism.

Meanwhile the military leaders are reported as being impatient and apprehension is expressed lest on October 10 some coup d'état be attempted by them or that on the other hand radical revolutionists may chose this day for violent measures. Extra police precautions are being taken. The President has stated to one of his advisers that he would not allow the military to place him in the position of accepting the crown in a coup d'état. In the event of a restoration of the monarchy no open resistance is expected although there may be some bomb throwing.

No. 782.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 11, 1915.

SIR: In continuation of the Legation's despatch No. 766, of September 24 I have the honor to report further developments in the monarchical movement:

In the councils of the leading men favoring the movement, who now include nearly all the prominent officials of China, the opinion prevails that the change should be brought about in something like a constitutional form. It has therefore been decided to institute a national referendum on the question of the form of State. A bill was drafted and introduced in the Council of State (Tsan Cheng Yuan) on October 1; after discussion, extending over several meetings, the bill was given the form of law on the 6th instant (a translation of the text of the law, as published in the Peking Gazette of October 8, is enclosed herewith).

The principle of this law is based upon the idea of using the electoral machinery, which is to be provided for the selection of a representative body to adopt a constitution, for the incidental purpose of first deciding the question of the form of the State; for this purpose, it is provided that each district, or hsien, of the eighteen provinces of China proper, and of Manchuria, is to elect one representative, and that, moreover, in addition to these, the other dependencies, the bannermen, the chambers of commerce, and recognized scholars shall elect a certain number of representatives. The representatives elected from each province are to meet at the provincial capital and there to ballot upon the question of the form of State. The date of the general election has been fixed on November 5; that for balloting by the electorate representatives on the principal question, on November 15.

While reports from all parts of the country indicate that no concerted opposition to the change in the form of State is to be expected, yet considerable apprehension was felt lest the review of troops at Peking, which had been set for October 10, the Chinese national holiday (the anniversary of the outbreak of the revolution in 1911), should be made the occasion for some demonstration in favor of the monarchy, or for attempts at assassination by revolutionary opponents of the movement. The review of the troops was countermanded and the national holiday passed very quietly.

In several interviews, their excellencies Liang Shih-yi and Chou Tsz-ch'i, the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, leaders of the Cantonese Party, have given me a very full account of their policy; they claim that among officials, as well as the commercial classes, there exists a strong preference for the monarchical form of government; they state that the traditions and customs of China emphasize personal relationships in government and business, and that the abstract forms of thinking in terms of institutions and corporations are not yet sufficiently developed. The officials are said to desire the change because authority would be more permanently established and its manifestations would be more readily understood by the mass of the people; they urge that it would be far easier to carry through a fundamental financial reform, such as that of the land tax, through a form of authority with which the people are more familiar. Everyone recognizes that the possibility of reforming the land tax constitutes the ultimate test as to whether or not the Chinese Government can last and retain its independence; as this is a matter which affects the traditional relative immunity of the agricultural classes from taxation, their customary liberty and independence, the officials appear to believe that any attempt to impose a greater burden on the agricultural classes would have to be backed up by all the strength public authority could derive from national traditions. The commercial classes, on the other part, are alleged to favor the change, where they are not indifferent, because a permanent settlement of the question of succession would have a favorable effect upon commercial and industrial enterprises.

Mr. Liang Shih-yi desires to emphasize the constitutional side of the movement. He has succeeded in taking it out of the hands of the Military Party and giving it a civil character. He stands strongly for the creation of a representative parliament, with full liberty of discussion. It is his desire to utilize the change for the purpose of bringing about a reform of the financial and general administration. He is also greatly in favor of utilizing the assistance of properly qualified foreign experts in actual work in all branches of the public administration. It would appear that he has succeeded in imbuing the President with the idea of the desirability of these policies.

His Excellency Yuan Shih-k'ai, in an interview which I had with him on the 4th instant, spoke in terms of studied neutrality of the popular vote by which the question of the form of the State is to be determined. Should the vote be favorable to the continuance of the present system, there would be no change; should it, on the contrary, favor the return of a monarchical form, a great many difficult questions of organization would have to be decided. He expressed himself as strongly in favor of a representative parliament, which, while its power over finances would have to be limited, would be given full liberty in the discussion of public policies. He expressed a great desire to advance the education of the people and their intelligence in public matters, and stated that it was his wish that the foreign experts employed by the Chinese Government should not longer merely hover around the outside of the Departments as occasional advisers, but should be put to work in helping to develop the administrative activities in the different Ministries and their bureaus.

High Chinese officials have sought conversations with me on the question which now principally interests them. While taking the position that the determination of the form of State is a matter entirely for the Chinese people to determine, I have indicated that a change to the monarchical form could not be expected to be received with applause in the United States. I have emphasized, above all, the prime necessity of serious attention being given to the continued development, in an accelerated measure, of live representative institutions, with freedom of public discussion; and the establishment of methods in the public administration which will make for thorough efficiency and complete accountability to the public.

PARAPHRASE OF A TELEGRAM FROM BARON ISHII TO VISCOUNT CHINDA.¹⁹

As no doubt the Government to which you are accredited is well aware, a plan to inaugurate a monarchical government in China has recently made sudden and rapid developments. While the inadequate means of communication, coupled with the fact of manipulation of the press freely resorted to by the Chinese authorities, make it extremely difficult to learn the actual and true state of affairs in China, one thing seems certain: that the feeling prevailing in the country against the monarchical movement is very much stronger than at first suspected. This is particularly the case in the Yangtze Valley and South China, where the strong opposition sentiment is widely diffused.

No pains are, it seems, spared by the Chinese Government in the endeavor to put a peaceful face on the situation by resorting to various means such as causing the provincial authorities to frame and submit reports favorable to the execution of the monarchical plan and giving publicity thereto, or directing these authorities to exercise weighty pressure directly and indirectly upon the opposition. But in point of fact the more it attempts to hasten the realization of a monarchy the stronger grows the opposition sentiment. So long as the present political status is maintained in China, there would seem to be little fear of any intestine disturbances arising in the immediate future, and it is to the monarchical plan that the present state of disquietude is to be attributed. Should change of the polity be unfortunately followed by an upheaval and dissensions, the consequence thereof to be suffered by the countries having important interests in China would be beyond calculation.

At a time when, in view of the European situation, it is deemed desirable to avoid any event that may in the least tend to further prejudice the general peace of the world, the Imperial Government, particularly solicitous as it is of peace in the Far East, cannot but view with grave concern the situation in China as is pointed out above. It need scarcely be mentioned that the Imperial Government has not the remotest intention to intervene in the internal affairs of China, but, the situation in that country being as it is, it is desirous of preventing possible disaster in time. With this object in view, the Imperial Government proposes at this juncture to enquire of the Chinese Government whether it is counting upon a peaceful inauguration of the monarchical form of government unattended by any disturbances, and at the same time to offer to it an informal and friendly advice in the sense that, inasmuch as the furtherance of the monarchical plan involves, in the opinion of the Imperial Government, a danger of inviting disorder in China, it would be more in keeping with the interest of the general situation to defer its execution for some time.

If the Government to which you are accredited shares the solicitude of the Imperial Government in above respect, it is earnestly hoped that it will see its way to give to the Chinese Government similar advice, in the interest of general peace in the Far East.

MEMORANDUM.²⁰

The Japanese Government have communicated to the British Government a draft of instructions to the Japanese representatives at Washington, Paris and Petrograd, copy of which is annexed¹⁸ inviting the Governments of the United States, France and Russia to participate in representations to the Chinese Government in that sense.

After careful consideration of the circumstances the British Government have instructed the British representatives at Washington, Paris and Petrograd to make to the above-named Governments a communication in the same sense.

Having received from many sources information as to the rapidity with which events are proceeding in China, they have agreed with the Japanese Government that no time should be lost in tendering advice to the Chinese Government in the sense of the above-named communication. They have accordingly instructed their representative in Peking to proceed at once with the communication and to concert with his Japanese colleague as to the manner in which the advice suggested can best be tendered to the Chinese Government.

The British Government trust that the United States Government will appreciate the reason for proceeding at once with the communication without awaiting the reply of the United States and hope that the United States Government will deem it expedient to send similar instructions to the American representative at Peking, with as little delay as possible in view of the gravity of the danger which appears to threaten the internal peace of China.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, October 29, 1915—9 p. m.

I am informed that yesterday afternoon Japanese Chargé d' Affaires, together with British and Russian Ministers, called on the Minister of Foreign Affairs and individually stated to him that by way of friendly counsel their Governments desired to suggest the advisability of stopping the movement for a change in the form of government, in order that disturbances might be avoided. * * *

The Chinese maintain that an attempt to stop the movement now, when the elections are already in progress, would be the surest way to bring about confusion and disorder; there being no opposition, they believe that they have the situation well in hand and that there is no reasonable ground for expecting internal disturbances.

Referendum is proceeding and the monarchy will in all probability be established in a few months. I still perceive no reason to apprehend serious opposition or danger to foreign interests in China, unless artificially induced by outside influences.

*The Chinese Legation to the Department of State.*MEMORANDUM.²¹

Our country has a territory immense in extent and a population of five main groups different in customs and manners. In a republic the chief executive of the nation is frequently changed, and this cannot but cause great disturbances, not only endangering life and property in this country but also injecting an element of uncertainty into the business affairs of foreign residents. The Republic has now been established for four years, but the business of the country is at a standstill owing to a lack of permanence in the occupation of the people and the acts of officials. In this unsettled state of affairs it is difficult to secure order. Our people, therefore, have been contemplating a change in the form of government from a republic to a monarchy. This movement has long been gaining ground in secret. The Government, in its endeavor to maintain the present form of government, has made repeated attempts to discourage it. But, growing stronger with every opposition, it now numbers among its adherents a great many influential persons. If the Government tries to put it down it is greatly to be feared that the peace of the country may be affected.

The Government, therefore, hesitates to take this great responsibility. But, in accordance with the general trend of public opinion, the Government has proclaimed the adoption of the recommendation of the Legislative Body by calling a National Convention of Representatives of the People to determine the form of government. Of late the officials of the different provinces have reported that this step has met with the approval of the people. All indications now point to a desire on the part of the people to adopt a constitutional monarchy. The Government will be powerless to oppose the will of the people inasmuch as in accordance with republican principles all political powers rest finally with the people of the country. The will of the people, thus publicly expressed, must be obeyed. Since it is the people of the whole country that desire this change and demand the Government to act in accordance with their wishes, there will certainly be no disorder. The provincial authorities, both civil and military, have given assurances that order will be maintained within their respective jurisdictions. It is the hope of the people of the whole country that they will thus secure permanent peace and prosperity.

There is no doubt that this hope is shared by the Governments of all friendly nations, and that this step will be looked upon with favor by the Governments of all friendly nations. Although this is an affair that concerns our domestic affairs, in view of the friendly relations between the two countries this is communicated confidentially to the American Government before the act is officially promulgated in order to avoid any misunderstanding.

Upon being approached by a representative of the President with a view to ascertain more clearly the purport of the advice offered concurrently with that of the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires, British Minister stated that he had acted under instructions of his Government which had for obvious reasons fallen in with the Japanese suggestion but which should not be understood as being hostile to monarchical movement, being in fact concerned only with the question whether the Government's purpose could be carried out without endangering foreign interests.

To similar inquiries Russian Minister, who is understood to have acted on his own responsibility, gave it to be understood that he had joined with the Japanese representative in order to assure that his Government would have a voice in any demands or other developments which the Japanese Government might make consequent upon the démarche which it had initiated.

Japan and the Monarchy Question.

TEXT OF THE JAPANESE NOTE.

[From the Peking Post, November 2nd, 1915.]

The following details of the visit of the foreign diplomats to the Wai Chiao Pu on October 28 are obtained from a reliable source:—

At half past five in the afternoon of October 28, Mr. Obata, Japanese Chargé d'Affaires in Peking, accompanied by Sir John Jordan, British Minister, and M. Krupensky, Russian Minister, called on Mr. Lu Cheng-hsiang, Chinese Foreign Minister and Acting Secretary of State, at the Wai Chiao Pu and delivered to Mr. Lu the following advice:

In view of her special position in the Far East, Japan is very anxious about the contemplated change of the Kuoti, or form of State in China, on the ground that a hasty change is calculated to lead to internal risings in the country to the detriment of the peace and order of the Far East. The recent bomb outrages at Shanghai are evidence of anti-monarchical signs. Japan wishes to know whether the Chinese Government is confident of maintaining perfect peace and tranquillity within her territory. In case of disturbances, whether they directly or indirectly touch upon the interest and privileges of Japan, she will be compelled, though very reluctantly, to take adequate measures for their protection. The Japanese Government draws the attention of the Chinese Government to the signs of unrest in the Yangtze and other Southern Provinces on account of the people's opposition to the contemplated change and, in view of the seriousness of the European War, China, as a nation in the Orient, should adopt very careful measures to preserve the status quo, which is the most important thing at the present critical moment. Although the contemplated change is the true wish of the Chinese people, nevertheless, in case the monarchical restoration gives rise to sudden uprisings of the opposition parties, not only will the Chinese people who suffered misery and distress during the recent revolutions go through a fresh period of suffering, but also those foreign Powers who have close relations with China will share the consequences.

The Japanese advice paid a handsome tribute to the ability of H. E. Yuan in suppressing the late rebellion and maintaining peace throughout China after his inauguration as President of the Chinese Republic, which has contributed not a little to the preservation of peace in the Far East, for which the Japanese Government and people admire and respect him. Hence for the sake of the perpetual peace of the Orient, the Japanese Government sincerely hopes that H. E. Yuan will temporarily delay the contemplated change for the present until long administration and permanent peace have been established in China. In conclusion, the advice added that Japan has not the slightest intention of interfering in the internal affairs of this country; her counsel and advice are given in a perfectly friendly manner in the interests of the Orient, inasmuch as tranquillity or unrest in China concerns also Japan's future welfare.

A translation of the answer of the Chinese Government to the Chargé d' Affaires of Japan and the Minister of Great Britain and Russia.

November 2, 1915.

On the 28th of October, you, Monsieur le Chargé d' Affaires, verbally communicated an advice of the Japanese Government. I have duly taken note of it. The matter is one which is entirely China's internal affair, but as the Japanese Government has been good enough to offer advice, I now reply fully and in detail as follows:

With regard to the question of the monarchy, there has been for some time a body of opinion in favor of it. The Government, intent on maintaining the present form of government, has always opposed it. Of late, however, the number of people in favor of it has daily increased numbering among them men of power and influence in the country; the undercurrent has become stronger and stronger, and the combinations have become more and more numerous. If the Government were to use solely methods of forcible suppression, not only would the will of the people be set at naught, but there would have been considerable danger to peace and good order for which the Government would have been reluctant to undertake the heavy responsibility. The only course for the Government, consequently, has been to respect the wishes of the people and promulgate the bill passed by the acting Li Fa Yuan to organize the Assembly of Citizens' Representatives to consider and determine this fundamental question. When the people of the provinces petitioned to the Li Fa Yuan for the change of the form of government, the President, on September 9, expressed to the Li Fa Yuan the opinion that the change was unsuitable to the circumstances. On October 10, a Presidential mandate, quoting the petition of various Mongolian and Mohammedan Princes and nobles to change the form of government, again stated that any hasty and rash change was undesirable and admonished all the superintendents of elections carefully to obey the provisions of the law in the discharge of their duties. On October 12, a further telegram was dispatched to the superintendents of elections to observe the election laws scrupulously and not to be hasty or careless. It is evident therefore that the Government did not originally approve of the step and a fortiori, has not had any intention of bringing about a hasty change. But as according to the Constitutional Compact of this country the sovereignty is vested in the whole body of the people there has been no other course but to await the decision of the people. Placed in this difficult position, the Government has exhausted every means of compromise, actuated with the desire on the one hand to respect the laws and on the other to obey the wishes of the people so as to preserve the general peace.

At the time when the discussion in regard to the form of government was at its height, the Government, apprehensive that it might lead to the occurrence of untoward events, more than once telegraphed to the civil and military officials of the provinces to ask whether they could absolutely maintain public peace and good order. The reply each time and in every case from the respective officials was that if the will of the people was obeyed in the solution of the question of the form of government, the provinces would hold themselves responsible for the public order so that when the change should be carried out no untoward event would occur. The sources of information at the disposal of foreigners cannot naturally be as full and as accurate as those of the Chinese; inasmuch as the provincial officials have uniformly reported that they would be responsible for peace and good order, and have not reported of any strong undercurrent of opposition, nor of any ground for anxiety in regard to Shanghai, the Yangtze region, and South China, the Government can only place full credence and reliance on these reports.

As for the reasons why our people desire the monarchy, they are these. With China's immense area, the differences in the five races, the changeableness of popular feeling, and the comparatively low standard of education of the masses, the frequent change of the head of the State under a republic will be a source of great danger and disturbance, as witness recent events in other countries. Not only will life and property of Chinese be in jeopardy, but the business and interests of subjects and citizens of friendly Powers in China will likewise be insecure. The Republic has now been established four years in China, during this time, men of wealth and capital have been unwilling to invest their money, the business and trade of the people as well as the administration of officials have lacked permanent policies and plans, a feeling of instability has prevailed, and government has been difficult. It is for these reasons that the people desire a change in the form of government. Since the large majority of the people of this country has considered that the republican form of government is unsuitable to China, and since the question has been referred to the Assembly of Citizens' Representatives for decision the constitutional foundation of the State is already shaken and in the minds of men there are expectancy and hesitation. The political conditions have been affected and trade and commerce are showing signs of stagnation. If evil persons should seize the opportunity to disseminate false rumors, the people would be even more disturbed. In case troubles should arise on account of this constitutional question remaining protracted without a decision, not only would our own people suffer loss and injury, but the subjects and citizens of friendly Powers in China would also be subject to apprehension and alarm. So long as the form of government which has been referred for decision remains undetermined, so long will there be unrest in men's minds and so long will there exist an element of danger. This is the more so since at the time of the communication of the Japanese Government's advice, five provinces have already declared for constitutional monarchy. In sum, on the part of the people of the country, the hope and expectation are for the benefits of permanent peace and tranquility; on the part of the Government there is the further hope and expectation that the subjects and citizens of friendly Powers resident in China will be secure in the pursuit of their business and that the peace of the Orient will be maintained, in which hope and expectation the Chinese Government is in complete accord with the Governments of the friendly Powers.

There is a small number of turbulent rebels who are seeking refuge in foreign countries and in other localities beyond the jurisdiction of the Chinese Government. Whether a republic or a monarchy, as in the past so in the future, their character will always be that of destruction and violence, and their plans those of trouble and turmoil. The utmost they can do is the spreading of rumors to incite sedition and rebellion, but they are devoid of all power and influence. In the last few years they have created occasional disturbances, but they have immediately been suppressed so that the general situation has never been affected. The provinces are now taking added precautions against them; it is hoped that the Governments of the friendly Powers in all localities beyond the jurisdiction of the Chinese Government, will cooperate in future, as heretofore, in keeping them under restraint and control. They will thus certainly have no opportunity of creating trouble.

The Chinese Government appreciates the good intentions of the Japanese Government which has tendered advice in a friendly manner and has declared that it has no intention whatever to interfere in the internal affairs of China. Inasmuch as the Japanese Government is animated purely and solely by the desire to maintain the peace of the Orient, this desire coincided entirely with that of the Chinese Government. The Japanese Government may rest assured that the Chinese Government will spare no means to attain this object and aim.

I request you, Monsieur le Chargé d'Affaires, to convey the above to the Japanese Government.

MEMORANDUM.

The American Government appreciates the invitation extended to it by the Imperial Japanese Government to join in the tender of informal and friendly advice to the Republic of China to defer for a time in the interest of general peace in the Far East the change in its form of government which is reported to be under consideration.

The American Government is naturally in sympathy with republican institutions, but is of opinion that any change by the Chinese in the form of their government, however radical, is wholly a domestic question and that any sort of interference by the Government of the United States would be, therefore, an invasion of China's sovereignty and would be without justification unless convincing evidence, which is not now in the possession of the United States Government, should show that any foreign interests which it is the privilege of the United States to safeguard would be imperilled.

The American Government has carefully considered the memorandum which was handed to the Secretary of State by his excellency the British Ambassador on October 27, 1915, concerning the invitation of the Japanese Government to the United States, Great Britain, Russia and France to join Japan in tendering to China informal and friendly advice in the interest of general peace in the Far East to defer for a time the change in the form of its government which is reported to be in contemplation.

The American Government appreciates the courtesy of His Britannic Majesty's Government in communicating the information that the British Minister at Peking had been instructed to concert with his Japanese colleague and tender the advice suggested.

The American Government is naturally in sympathy with republican institutions, but is of opinion that any change by the Chinese in the form of their government, however radical, is wholly a domestic question and that any sort of interference by the Government of the United States would be, therefore, an invasion of China's sovereignty and would be without justification unless convincing evidence, which is not now in the possession of the United States Government, should show that any foreign interests which it is the privilege of the United States to safeguard would be imperilled.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, November 12, 1915.

SIR: In continuation of the Legation's despatch No. 782 of October 11, concerning the monarchical movement, I have the honor to enclose, for reference, the following despatches¹⁷ from various consular offices in China; Swatow, Foochow, Shanghai, Mukden, Nan-king, Changsha, Canton and Hankow.

At the present writing, reports on the elections have been received from practically all the provinces, which are to the effect that the change of the form of State to a monarchy has been accepted unanimously by the designated electors.

The question as to how far this vote is to be taken as a free expression of public opinion, or of the "will of the people," is one open to discussion and doubt. In all cases, the electorate was not a large one, but was limited through high property and educational qualifications. The vote cast in the primary elections was in most cases small, and indications are not wanting that in several of the provinces the officials exerted their influence to the end of constituting the electoral body in a sense favorable to monarchy. On the other hand, instances of direct intimidation or bribery have not been reliably reported. The unanimity of the electors is generally accounted for by referring to the timidity of the Chinese: the votes were given in writing, signed with the name of the elector, and it is likely that, as everybody recognized, the tendency has strongly set in the direction of a monarchy, none of the electors was willing to espouse a losing cause, notwithstanding what their personal preferences might originally have been.

No organized opposition to the movement has appeared anywhere, but it is apprehended that revolutionaries, who are strongly dissatisfied with the monarchical movement, will have recourse to acts of individual violence, such as that to which Admiral Tseng Jucheng, the military governor of Shanghai, on the 10th instant, fell a victim.

Serious tension again exists between the Chinese and Japanese Governments. The Japanese Minister has submitted a long list of demands at the same time pledging the President and Ministers of State not to divulge the character of the demands to other Powers on pain of serious consequences to China. The demands are stated to be such as could not be granted without abandoning entirely the open-door policy as well as independence in political and industrial matters. It is feared that refusal to comply will be met by causing trouble to China through instigation of revolutionary movements which would offer pretext for military occupation.

The Legation is informed that the Japanese demands include not only predominant special interests in impairment of China's sovereignty and of open door in Shantung, Kiangsu, Chekiang, Anhui and Kiangsi in addition to Manchuria, but also such further reservations in behalf of Japanese interests as would in effect make subject to their veto all future concessions to other nationalities throughout China. * * * This would effectively work the exclusion of American participation in economic and industrial development of China.

In insisting upon these demands the Japanese Minister stated to the Minister for Foreign Affairs that a considerable body of the Japanese public regards with disfavor the present administration of China but might be conciliated by compliance with their wishes and he added that in that case the Japanese Government could give President Yuan assurances of immunity from the activities of the Chinese rebels residing in Japan.

More precise information now obtained in reference to the Japanese demands indicates that the fragmentary advices contained in my telegrams January 23-29, though subject to correction in detail were nevertheless substantially accurate. The following are now known to be among the most significant of the specific demands:

First. That the Chinese must undertake "to permit the joint organization of Chinese police force in important places or to engage a large number of Japanese to assist in police matters."

Second. That half of the arms required by China must be purchased in Japan or in the alternative that joint Sino-Japanese arsenals must be established for the manufacture of arms.

Third. That "educational, political, financial and military advisers" must be engaged from among Japanese subjects.

Fourth. That all mining rights in Manchuria and Inner Mongolia are to be given to Japan.

Fifth. That Han-yeh-ping Iron and Coal Company is to be organized as a joint Chinese and Japanese company, and that the Chinese Government must "engage not to permit foreigners to operate mines in the neighborhood of the company's mines nor to allow any enterprise which might affect the company's interests directly or indirectly without the consent of Tokyo."

It is announced here that comment in the Japanese press has been prohibited. Reuter despatches from Tokyo, quoting the highest authority, describe the demands as overtures which violate no treaty and contemplate no infringement upon China's territory; but they evade the question of administrative integrity. The local Reuter correspondent has refused to transmit to England a dementi which the Japanese Minister asked him to telegraph as based upon the highest authority but for which he declined to permit the Japanese Legation to be quoted. Japanese Minister has also protested against inaccuracies in the report telegraphed by the acting correspondent of the Associated Press but has refused to specify any of the inaccuracies complained of and it is believed that a similar protest has been lodged with the management of the Associated Press.

1060. You have doubtless seen newspaper reference to Japan's demand on China. The reports are probably exaggerated but we are interested to know whether the British Government has been informed as to the nature and extent of these demands. By an exchange of notes November 30, 1908,²² it was agreed that the two Governments [United States and Japan] should communicate with each other in case any event threatened the status quo or the principle of equal opportunity in order to arrive at an understanding as to what measures they may consider it needful to take. If the demands now made by Japan are accurately described in the press despatches, it would seem that both the integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity are threatened. Let us know what you are able to learn from the Foreign Office.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, February 9, 1915—midnight.

Today Baron Kato gave me a written memorandum which he told me had been given in the same manner to the Ambassadors of England, France and Russia and to no one else. He said that for many reasons both China and Japan were anxious that none of the terms of the proposition under discussion be disclosed as this would be embarrassing to both parties in the negotiations but that he desired you to know the true nature of the proposition and that they are not contrary to China's integrity or to the rights and interests of other nations. In our personal conversation he stated that Japan had no desire for any naval station on the coast of China, either at Tsingtau or south of that point for the reason that it would be valueless to her, but that she would object to any other nation's having one. The memorandum reads as follows:

First, in relation to the Province of Shantung:

1. Engagement on the part of China to consent to all matters that may be agreed upon between Japan and Germany with regard to the disposition of all rights, interests and concessions which, in virtue of treaties or otherwise, Germany possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

2. Engagement not to alienate or lease upon any pretext the Province of Shantung or any portion thereof, and any island lying near the coast of the said province.

3. Grant to Japan of the right of construction of a railway connecting Chefoo or Lungkou and the Tsi-nan-Kiao-chou Railway.

4. Addition of open marts in the Province of Shantung.

Second, in relation to South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia:

1. Extension of the terms of lease of Kwan-tung, the South Manchuria Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway.

2. (a) Acquisition by the Japanese of the right of residence and the ownership of land.

(b) Grant to Japan of the mining rights of the mines specified by Japan.

3. Obligation on the part of China to obtain in advance the consent of Japan before she grants railway concessions to any third power, procures the supply of capital from any third power for the construction of a railway, or raises from any third power a loan on security of any duties or taxes.

4. Obligation on the part of China to consult Japan before employing advisers or tutors regarding political, financial or military matters.

5. Transfer of management and control of the Kirin-Chang-chun Railway to Japan.

Third:

Agreement in principle that at an opportune moment in future Han-yeh-ping Company should be placed under the Japanese and Chinese cooperation.

Fourth:

Engagement, in accordance with the principle of maintenance of the territorial integrity of China, not to alienate or lease any ports or bays on, any island near the coast of China.

No. 538.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, February 10, 1915.

SIR: Referring to my telegrams of January 23, 7 p. m., 24, 2 a. m., 26, 8 p. m., 27, 8 p. m., and 29, 1 a. m., and February 1, 8 p. m., 8, 9 p. m., and 9, 7 p. m., I have the honor to report on the progress of the negotiations between the Japanese Minister and the Chinese Government in so far as they are known to me.

From January 25 on, the demands began to be discussed by the public press, and confidentially among members of the Diplomatic Corps; and high Chinese officials frequently consulted with me concerning the demands, informing me of the difficulties of the Chinese Government and of the alternatives between which a choice would have to be made.

All these officials expressed the feeling that China was confronted with the greatest crisis in her history; the granting of the demands would be the end of the independent sovereignty of China. The plan of Japan was not to make any annexations of territory, but, with the maintenance of the formal sovereignty of China, to place the Chinese State in a position of vassalage through exercising a control over important parts of its administration and over its industrial and natural resources, actual and prospective.

The outline of the plan is to seek control from three centers: Manchuria, Shantung, and Fukien. Manchuria is to be made more entirely a reserved sphere for Japanese capital and colonization with a certain measure of administrative control. In Shantung the interest formerly belonging to Germany is to be taken over and expanded, which will give a free hand for the complete control of this Province. In Fukien the priority of rights of development is asked which would exclude other nations and would lead to the Manchurianization of this Province by well-known methods.

In the northern sphere Inner Mongolia is to be included. From the central sphere influences will radiate to the interior by means of railway extension grants to Honan and Shansi. From the Fukien sphere influence would extend to the interior through Kiangsi to Hupei and Chekiang, as well as through to Kwangtung. The mortgage on the Hanyehping iron and coal mines is to be consolidated into a controlling interest with the very significant proviso attached that foreigners are to be prohibited from operating mines in the neighborhood of the company's mines and from engaging in any enterprise which may, either directly or indirectly, affect the company's interest without the consent of the company. This arrangement would make the Japanese interest the arbiter of industrial enterprise in the middle Yangtze valley.

To these proposals, through which a footing would be obtained on the coast and in the interior of China, there were added the other demands which, while maintaining the form of sovereignty in the Central Government, would deprive it of the substance of control over its own affairs. Such are the employment of "effective" Japanese advisers in political, financial, and military affairs; the joint organization of the police forces in important places; and the control over the armament of China implied in the provision that China must purchase one-half of the arms required from Japan or establish Sino-Japanese arsenals controlled by Japanese engineers and using Japanese materials.

Other demands carry out in detail these outlines of policy.

The Chinese Government does not seem to be disinclined to grant to the Japanese certain definite railway and mining concessions, provided they do not follow the precedent of Manchuria but the ordinary conditions under which such concessions are granted to other nations in China; thus, for instance, that the railways are to belong to and be operated by the Chinese Government, and that the concessionaire will advance the capital with the privilege of certain rights of engineering and furnishing materials.

The demands in their present form include a number which are incompatible with the treaty rights of other nations. It is believed by the Chinese that they may be modified in such a way as formally to avoid such conflict; but even if this should be done and if the demands directly affecting the sovereignty of China should be eliminated, enough would still remain to give Japan a de facto position which, unless China were able rapidly to strengthen her national organization, would inevitably lead to Japanese control. The hope that the most excessive of the Japanese demands may be withdrawn, and the desire to make such withdrawal easier to the Japanese, had made the Chinese Government inclined to observe the Japanese injunction of secrecy. Thus, while in the course of the conversations I have been able to gain a complete knowledge as to what demands of Japan are, I have always most carefully avoided making any suggestion that the demands should be formally communicated.

Should the attempt of Japan to secure control of the administration and resources of this rich country be successful, it will operate primarily to the prejudice of Great Britain whose existing important interests in China would be most adversely affected; but it would probably eventually be an equally great disadvantage to the United States. The good will and sincere friendship which the Chinese people have for Americans would no longer be free to manifest itself; Americans could engage in important enterprises in China only at the sufferance of another government and the friction inevitably resulting would tend to feelings of hostility between Americans and Japan.

Demands regarding police, arsenals and advisers are more accurately stated in my telegram of February 1, 8 p. m.; statement [that] "China may call upon Japan alone for preservation her integrity" would appear to be an inference rather than a specific item of demands.

Referring to my cable of February 9, 7 p. m. The conference scheduled for today has been postponed, as I am credibly informed, for the reason that while the Chinese Government is willing to discuss ten of the demands the Japanese Government is insisting that the entire list shall be accepted in principle and negotiated on. The Chinese Government appears to be contemplating the adoption of a well defined policy regarding concessions; namely, that they shall cover only specific enterprises or activities over expressly delimited areas commensurate with the scope of the respective undertaking, to the exclusion of all arrangements for a general preference or options carrying contingent implications. In this way it is hoped that the principle of equal opportunity may be maintained. The Government is reported ready to make liberal grants of concessions to the Japanese on this basis.

Apparently in pursuance of an arrangement made by Embassy Tokyo in response to my request to it for information, Japanese Minister yesterday handed me a confidential memorandum professing to embody the demands which his Government is urging upon China. He stated that the same memorandum had been communicated to you. This memorandum sets forth only certain demands of far more restricted scope than those which are actually being urged upon the Chinese Government. Not only does it refer to specified mining rights in Manchuria and Mongolia, whereas actual demand is for all such rights there, and omits all reference to dangerous exclusive clause attached to the demand concerning Han-yeh-ping Company, but it omits the further demands as follows: compulsory engagement of Japanese advisers; Japanese participation in police administration and the supply of arms by Japan. Further demands are those of missionary land-holding rights for Japanese in the interior; extensive mining rights on the Yangtze; concessions for railways from Wuchang to Nanchang thence to Hangchow and to Foochow, Amoy and Chaochowfu, and an undertaking that Japan must first be applied to when foreign capital is required for the development of railways, mines and ports in Fukien.

A similar incomplete summary of demands appears to have been communicated to the British authorities.

No. 540.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, February 15, 1915.

SIR: Supplementing my despatch No. 538 of the 10th instant, I have the honor to report on the continuance of the negotiations between the Japanese and Chinese Governments with respect to concessions.

As reported in my telegram of February 12, 11 p. m., the diplomatic conference which had been scheduled for that day was postponed. I am now informed that the Chinese Government had declared its willingness to negotiate with Japan on twelve of the proposals of the latter, and had notified the Japanese Government of that fact. Negotiations were adjourned in order to give time for the consideration of this proposal by the Japanese Government. On February 13, however, the Chinese Government was informed that the Japanese Government adhered to its desire to have the entire list made the basis of negotiations; to this the Chinese are not ready to accede, as they believe that they have gone as far as the preservation of their sovereign rights and the treaty obligations to other nations will permit.

The twelve demands which the Chinese are ready to consider cover the demands regarding Manchuria, Inner Mongolia, and Shantung, together with a general non-alienation manifesto affecting the entire coast line of China.

Two demands with respect to Manchuria have been accepted: the control of the Kirin-Changchun Railway and the obligation not to pledge local revenues of Southern Manchuria and Inner Mongolia as security for any public loans without the consent of Japan.

The fact that the Chinese Government notified the Government of Japan that the permission to use a large part of the Province of Shantung for military operations would now be withdrawn, since the occasion for such use had disappeared, has been represented by the Japanese as being a calculated and malignant insult to Japan. As the permission to use the eastern part of Shantung for military purposes was given in connection with the attack upon Tsingtau, which has now been completely conquered, the withdrawal of such permission would appear a very natural thing.

Aside from this pretended discourtesy, no reason has been assigned why these unprecedented demands should be made upon China, nor has any quid pro quo been mentioned.

As it was reported here that a memorandum concerning the demands had been handed by the Japanese Foreign Office to the Embassies in Tokyo, I requested the American Ambassador there, under date of the 9th instant, to inform this Legation, as the knowledge might be of great value in understanding the situation here. On February 11 Mr. Guthrie replied that I was to be given a copy of the memorandum by the Japanese Minister at Peking. It appeared to me that in the absence of any intimations of a contrary intention on the part of the Department, it would be highly inadvisable for this Legation to assume vis-à-vis the Japanese Legation any cognizance of the demands which the latter is known to be urging upon the Chinese Government; and I so informed the American Embassy at Tokyo on the 12th instant, at the same time requesting a copy of the memorandum by telegraph. Late in the afternoon of February 13 the Japanese Minister called at my residence during my absence. I returned the call during the forenoon of yesterday (14th), when Mr. Hioki handed to me the memorandum, of which a copy is enclosed.²⁵ On the same day I received from the Tokyo Embassy by telegraph the text of the same memorandum. The Japanese Minister stated that the memorandum had been given to the Department; I received it from him without comment either on his part or on my own.

It now appears that the demands which have thus been notified to the United States, and presumably to other Powers, are those from among the demands submitted to the Chinese Government which are in themselves less objectionable than the others and which, as reported above, the Chinese Government, after a careful analysis of the demands, had decided to negotiate upon with the exceptions already stated. From outward indications and from all the implications of the matter, it would now appear that the Japanese Government probably considers these demands as the maximum which it is ready to avow to the other Powers at present and as a minimum which it desires to enforce upon the Chinese Government. The additional demands which the Chinese Government has been asked to consider include the following:

That the Chinese Government will engage itself not to permit foreigners to operate mines in the neighborhood of the Hanyehping Company's mines, nor to permit any enterprise which may affect the company's interests directly or indirectly, without the consent of the company;

That the Chinese Government must engage effective political, financial and military advisers from among the Japanese;

²⁵ Not printed here, but see Ambassador Guthrie's telegram of February 9, midnight.

That the Japanese are to be permitted to carry on missionary work and that their hospitals, temples and schools are to have the right to own land in the interior;

That there is to be a joint organization by Chinese and Japanese of the police forces in important places;

That at least one-half of the required amount of arms must be purchased from Japan, or that Chinese arsenals must be put under Japanese engineers;

That railway concessions between Foochow and Wuchang, with various branch lines, are to be granted to Japan;

That Japan must be first applied to when foreign capital is needed for the construction of railways and ports and for the development of mines in Fukien.

The above is a statement of the substantial contents of the remaining demands, as ascertained from the most reliable sources and as generally accepted to be true in Peking.

The Chinese have made a classification of the demands, separating those which might be conceded from those that would infringe treaties and those that would abridge the rights of sovereignty. While they acknowledge no obligation whatever to make any grants to Japan at the present time, they are willing, nevertheless, in order to assure peace and friendly cooperation, to make the most far-reaching concessions consistent with national independence and treaty rights. In the future the Chinese Government will endeavor to adhere to the policy that concessions shall cover only specific enterprises or expressly delimited areas, which shall be commensurate with the scope of the respective undertaking, and that they will avoid all arrangements for a general preference or for options carrying contingent implications. Exceptional arrangements may have to be made in the regions of Manchuria and Shantung where unfavorable precedents exist; but it is hoped that by adhering to the policy above outlined, the principle of equal opportunity may be maintained even there in legal form, and in other provinces in substance.

Referring to my telegram of February 12, 9 p. m., I beg to enclose a copy of the telegram which was sent to the Associated Press on the 11th instant by its correspondent here (Mr. Frederick Moore), which was handed to the Legation subsequent to its transmission.

ironworks, Tayeh mines, Pinghsiang collieries; China may grant no competing concessions to other foreigners; railway concessions are demanded from Nanchang to Chaochowfu, Nanchang to Kukiang, Nanchang to Wuchang, Nanchang to Hangchow. In Fukien Province, where Japanese lay special claim because proximity Formosa, they require exclusion other foreigners from future railway, mining, dockbuilding concessions unless by Japanese consent. In Shantung, besides transfer all German rights, Japanese demand special concessions including railway from present line to northern coast. In Inner Mongolia, exclusion other foreigners from future mining, railway rights, except with Japan's consent. In Manchuria, extension present railway territorial leases to ninety-nine years. In both Mongolia, Manchuria, privilege of immigration farming [as] well as trading population with rights settlement, land ownership; all railways demanded must [be] under Japanese not Chinese control. British papers published Far East suggest Japan breaking terms of alliance while Japanese papers criticise, in some cases violently accusing British of having profited by alliance and being selfish in Japan's natural sphere; strained relations between these allies began when Japanese entered war and British sent fifteen hundred men to participate Tsingtau siege, which some Japanese publications considered not assistance but interference. Chinese Government pardoned Sun-yat-sen, Hwang-hsing, other rebel leaders; offered them high official positions if willing return and declare loyalty. I asked him whether he had any idea as to the influences that were responsible for these exaggerations and he said he did not. I asked him whether it was possible that the German influences in China might be responsible and he said that while they might, they had no evidence upon which to make such a charge.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 19, 1915—3 p. m.

Press despatches have been announcing that Japan is asking of China:

1. That the Central Government employ only influential Japanese subjects as advisers for conducting administrative, financial and military affairs.

2. That China and Japan jointly police the important places in China or that China employ a majority of Japanese in her police department.

3. That China shall purchase from Japan at least half the arms and ammunition used in the whole country or establish jointly in Japan factories for the manufacture of arms.

4. That China shall permit Japan to build certain railroads connecting Wuchang with Kiukiang and Nanchang, Nanchang with Hangchow and Nanchang with Chiaochow.

5. That in case the province of Fukien requires foreign capital for railway construction, mining, harbor improvements and ship building, Japan shall be first consulted.

The above demands if they had been made would have aroused serious concern for they would have menaced the political integrity and independence of China and would have materially discriminated against other nations which are entitled to equal treatment.

We were very much relieved to receive the memorandum delivered by the Japanese Ambassador²⁷ and likewise forwarded by you,²⁷ for this memorandum is a complete denial of the press reports as above quoted and gives assurance that Japan has no such intention as the press reports would have indicated. You may express to the Government our appreciation of its action in making known to us its purpose, in accordance with the terms of the Root-Takahira agreement,²⁸ as stated in the memorandum referred to.

2. China shall not lease to other countries any territory or island on the coast of Shantung.

3. China shall grant to Japan the right to construct a railway from Yentai or Lungkow to connect with the Kiaochow-Tsinan line.

4. China shall open without delay the principal important cities of Shantung to trade.

ARTICLE II.

PROPOSED FOR THE PURPOSE OF SECURING TO JAPAN A POSITION OF SPECIAL DOMINANCE IN SOUTH MANCHURIA AND EAST MONGOLIA.

1. The lease of Port Arthur and Dairen, together with the South Manchurian Railway and the Mukden-Antung Railway, shall be extended to ninety-nine (99) years.

2. Japanese subjects shall have the right to rent and purchase land in South Manchuria and East Mongolia for uses connected with manufacture or agriculture.

3. Japanese subjects shall have the right to go freely to South Manchuria and East Mongolia for purposes of residence and trade.

4. The right to open and operate mines in South Manchuria and East Mongolia shall be granted to Japanese subjects.

5. China shall obtain the consent of the Japanese Government to actions of the two following kinds:

(a) Permitting citizens or subjects of other countries to build railroads in South Manchuria or East Mongolia, or negotiating for loans.

(b) Hypothecating the various revenues of South Manchuria and East Mongolia as security for foreign loans.

6. China shall consult Japan before employing advisers or instructors for conducting the administrative, financial or military affairs of South Manchuria and East Mongolia.

7. Japan shall have control of the Kirin-Changchun railway for ninety-nine (99) years.

ARTICLE III.

1. China and Japan shall agree to act jointly, not independently, in the contemplated formation of the Han-Yeh-Ping Company.

2. Without consent foreigners shall not be permitted to open and operate mines in the neighborhood of the Han-Yeh-Ping Company's property; and anything affecting the company directly or indirectly shall be decided jointly.

ARTICLE IV.

PROPOSED FOR THE PURPOSE OF EFFECTIVELY PROTECTING THE TERRITORIAL INTEGRITY OF CHINA.

1. China shall not alienate or lease to other countries any port, harbor, or island on the coast of China.

ARTICLE V.

1. The Central Government of China shall employ influential Japanese subjects as advisers for conducting administrative, financial and military affairs.

2. Japanese hospitals, missions, and schools established in the interior shall have the right to hold land in China.

3. China and Japan shall jointly police the important places in China, or employ a majority of Japanese in the police department of China.

4. China shall purchase from Japan at least half the arms and ammunitions used in the whole country or establish jointly in Japan factories for the manufacture of arms.

5. China shall permit Japan to build railroads connecting Wu Chang with Kiukiang and Nanchang, Nanchang with Hangchow, and Nanchang with Chiaochow (Swatow).

6. In case the Province of Fukien requires foreign capital for railway construction, mining, harbor improvements and shipbuilding Japan shall be first consulted.

7. Japan shall have the right to propagate religious doctrines in China.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 19, 1915—2 p. m.

We have received from the Chinese Minister complete statement of demands. The demands contained in Article V are not included in the statement which we received from the Japanese Ambassador. We infer that the demands contained in Article V may have met with such opposition from the Chinese Government that they were withdrawn before the shorter statement was handed to us. Please keep us advised as to negotiations, cabling at once whether the demands in Article V affecting the entire Government are being urged. Those demands if they had been made as demands would have aroused serious concern for they would have menaced the political integrity and independence of China and would have materially discriminated against other nations which are entitled to equal treatment.

In reply to your telegram February 19, 2 p. m., I beg to refer to my previous reports particularly February 1, 8 p. m., February 8, 9 p. m., February 9, 7 p. m., February 15, 10 p. m.

As recently as yesterday Baron Kato informed Chinese Minister at Tokyo and on February 18 Japanese Minister informed the Foreign Office here that the Japanese Government was not satisfied with readiness of the Chinese Government to negotiate concerning the first four articles but insisted upon negotiations in regard to the whole set of twenty-one demands presented on 18th ultimo including the more obnoxious ones segregated in article V.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,

Tokyo, February 21, 1915—4 p. m.

Your telegram of February 19, 3 p. m. The Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs says that the statement handed me by him and sent you in my telegram of February 9, midnight, was complete of the "demands" [upon] which Japan would insist and refusal of which without good grounds would be a serious matter; but that in addition to these demands several matters had been presented to China as "requests" or wishes [of] which friendly consideration was desired. He said that, while press reports were exaggerated and distorted, these requests were substantially as indicated in the five articles of your telegram to me of February 19, 3 p. m., with the following qualifications:

First: The words "only influential" were not used. Japan desires, inasmuch as China employs advisers of the various nationalities, that she employ also "fully confident" [sic]³⁰ Japanese in like capacities.

Second: The request as to joint policing refers to "certain" places, by which was intended places in Manchuria to be designated where there has been friction between the two nationalities. Japan believes that joint policing would tend to better administration and more peaceful mutual relations.

Third: Japan's request in regard to purchase of arms and ammunition was that China purchase "a fixed quantity, say one half" from Japan or in default of this that factories be established in China with capital furnished jointly by the two countries.

Fourth: This article is substantially correct except that shipbuilding is not included. It was intended to secure the option; if Japan could not furnish the money China would be free to go elsewhere.

Baron Kato said that Japan's "requests" included two former articles:

First, liberty to propagate Japanese Buddhism in China and Second, the right of Japanese Buddhist organizations to own lands and buildings for their temples, schools, and hospitals.

He asked me to forward this information to you confidentially. He was particularly anxious that you should understand that the reason for confining the statement sent you strictly to Japan's "demands" was that the other items were "requests" and were so designated when presented to China.

My telegram of February 20, 5 p. m. At the conference yesterday Japanese Minister continued to insist on full list of demands including Article V. When the Chinese refused steadfastly the Japanese Minister agreed to discussion in detail but insisting that Article V must be taken up in its turn. The demands relating to Shantung were then discussed. The Japanese ruled out the question of rendition of Tsingtau as irrelevant, and, rejecting all Chinese counter proposals, insisted that [on?] acceptance of Article I en bloc. AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, March 6, 1915.

SIR: In continuation of my despatch No. 540 of the 15th ultimo and referring to my telegrams of February 15, 10 p. m.; 17, 7 p. m.; 20, 5 p. m.; 23, 8 p. m.; and 26, 7 p. m., I have the honor to report briefly on the state of the negotiations between the Japanese and Chinese Governments.

Diplomatic conferences were held on February 28 and March 3. In both of these the demands relating to Shantung and Manchuria and Mongolia were discussed. No definite point of agreement was secured, except that the Chinese Government declared its readiness in principle to open additional treaty ports in Shantung and to extend the leases of Port Arthur and Dairen and of the railways in South Manchuria. The Chinese Government is ready to accede to Article II of Section 1²² by way of issuing a non-alienation decree.

With respect to Article III (Section 1) of the Japanese demands, the Chinese Government is ready to make a contract with Japan providing for the building of a Chinese Government railway from Chefoo or Lungk'ou to Weihsien with a Japanese loan and under Japanese engineering and auditing control, following herein the accustomed terms of railway contracts in China. The Japanese Government seems ready to accept this, but insists, however, on the right of fixing the terminals of the railway. As it is feared that it may be the desire of Japan to develop Lungk'ou and entirely to isolate Chefoo, leaving the latter port without railway connection, the Chinese Government is desirous of securing the assurance that the railway may be built to Chefoo without opposition by Japan. Incidental negotiations dealing with this question have been reported in my despatch No. 558 of the 1st instant.²¹

The Japanese Government has strongly insisted upon the adoption of the preamble to Section 2. The Chinese Government is, however, resisting with all its force the acknowledgment of a special position of Japan in South Manchuria and Inner Mongolia. As the Japanese demand on this point conflicts with existing treaty rights, the position of the Chinese Government is strong, if it would only be given the support of the nations holding rights under these treaties.

With respect to the extension of the leases mentioned in Article I (Section 2), the Chinese Government is willing to grant an extension, even in the case of the railways, although this amounts directly to the grant of an important money value, since the Chinese Government is, under the terms of the contract, to become the proprietor, absolutely and without payment, of the railways at the end of the lease. The Chinese Government is not so ready to extend the term provided in the railway contract for the period (thirty-two [thirty-six] years) after which it is to have the right to redeem the railway properties upon payment of their value.

²¹ Not printed.

It is recognized that Articles II and III (Section 2) would, if granted, open the regions concerned to all foreigners for trade, farming and residence, through the operation of the most-favored-nation clause. While such a grant would therefore not conflict with existing treaties, it is considered by the Chinese to involve a serious menace to their sovereignty, since all foreigners entering these regions are exempt from Chinese jurisdiction. It is moreover, of course, anticipated that should these demands be conceded the enjoyment of the privileges granted would through natural causes fall almost entirely to the Japanese, tending to make the whole region a Japanese colony. It is for this reason that the Chinese are very unwilling to grant these demands and propose to solve the difficulty by opening additional places to foreign residence and trade.

The remaining articles have not yet been discussed in detail. I have the honor to submit a copy of the original Chinese document handed to President Yuan Shih-k'ai by Mr. Hioki, the Japanese Minister, on January 18. There is also enclosed a translation of this document which was given to me by one of the staff of the Foreign Office on February 20. For convenience of reference this translation has been arranged parallel with the statement of the demands as handed to me by the Japanese Minister of the 14th ultimo. In the translation, as transmitted, certain corrections have been made by Dr. C. D. Tenney, the Chinese Secretary of Legation, as noted therein.

I.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government being desirous of maintaining the general peace in Eastern Asia and further strengthening the friendly relations and good neighborhood existing between the two nations, agree to the following articles:

In relation to the Province of Shantung:

ARTICLE I.

ARTICLE I.

The Chinese Government engages to give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government relating to the disposition of all rights, interests and concessions which, by virtue of treaties or otherwise, Germany possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

Engagement on the part of China to consent to all matters that may be agreed upon between Japan and Germany with regard to the disposition of all rights, interests and concessions

ARTICLE II.

The Chinese Government engages that within the Province of Shantung and along its coast no territory or island will be ceded or leased to a third power under any pretext.

ARTICLE III.

The Chinese Government consents to Japan's building a railway from Chefoo or Lungkou to join the Kiaochou-Chinanfu Railway.

ARTICLE IV.

The Chinese Government engages, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by herself as soon as possible certain important cities and towns in the Province of Shantung as commercial ports. What places shall be opened are to be jointly decided upon by the two Governments in a separate agreement.

II.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, since the Chinese Government has always acknowledged the special position enjoyed by Japan in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The two contracting parties mutually agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny and the term of lease of the South Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway shall be extended to the period of 99 years.

ARTICLE II.

Japanese subjects (literally, Japanese officials or common people) in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia shall have the right to lease or own land required either for erecting suitable buildings for trade and manufacture or for farming.

ARTICLE III.

Japanese subjects (literally, Japanese officials or common people) shall be free to reside and travel in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia and to engage in business and in manufacture of any kind whatsoever.

which, in virtue of treaties or otherwise, Germany possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

ARTICLE II.

Engagement not to alienate or lease upon any pretext the Province of Shantung or any portion thereof, and any island lying near the coast of the said province.

ARTICLE III.

Grant to Japan of the right of construction of a railway connecting Chefoo or Lungkou and the Tsinan-Kiaochou Railway.

ARTICLE IV.

Addition of open ports in the Province of Shantung.

II.

In relation to South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia:

ARTICLE I.

Extension of the terms of lease of Kwantung, the South Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway.

ARTICLE II.

(a) Acquisition by the Japanese of the right of residence and the ownership of land. (b) Grant to Japan of the mining rights of the mines specified by Japan.

ARTICLE IV.

The Chinese Government agrees to grant to Japanese subjects (literally, Japanese officials or common people) the mining rights of all the mines in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia. * As regards what mines are to be opened they shall be decided upon by the two Governments jointly.

*(As regards the opening of each mine there shall be a separate agreement.—C. D. T.)

ARTICLE V.

The Chinese Government agrees that, in respect of the (two) cases mentioned herein below, the Japanese Government's consent shall be first obtained before action is taken:

(a) Whenever permission is granted to the subject of a third Power to build a railway or to make a loan with a third Power for the purpose of building a railway in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia.

(b) Whenever a loan is to be made with a third Power pledging the local taxes of South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia as security.

ARTICLE VI.

The Chinese Government agrees that if the Chinese Government employs political, financial or military advisers or instructors in South Manchuria or Eastern Inner Mongolia, the Japanese Government shall first be consulted.

ARTICLE VII.

The Chinese Government agrees that the control and management of the Kirin-Changchun Railway shall be handed over to the Japanese Government for a term of 99 years dating from the signing of this agreement.

III.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, seeing that Japanese financiers and the Han-yeh-ping Company have close relations with each other at present and desiring that the common interests of the two nations shall be advanced, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The two contracting parties mutually agree that when the opportune moment arrives the Han-yeh-ping Company shall be made a joint concern of

ARTICLE III.

Obligation on the part of China to obtain in advance the consent of Japan before she grants railway concessions to any third Power, procures the supply of capital from any third Power for the construction of a railway, or raises from any third Power a loan on security of any duties or taxes.

ARTICLE IV.

Obligation on the part of China to consult Japan before employing advisers or tutors regarding political, financial or military matters.

ARTICLE V.

Transfer of the management and control of the Kirin-Changchun Railway to Japan.

III.

Agreement in principle that, at an opportune moment in future, Han-yeh-ping Company should be placed under the Japanese and Chinese cooperation.

the two nations; and they further agree that, without the previous consent of Japan, China shall not by her own act dispose of the rights and property of whatsoever nature of the said company nor cause the said company to dispose freely of the same.

ARTICLE II.

The Chinese Government agrees that all mines in the neighborhood of those owned by the Han-yeh-ping Company shall not be permitted, without the consent of the said company, to be worked by other persons outside of the said company; and further agrees that if it is desired to carry out any undertaking which it is apprehended may directly or indirectly affect the interests of the said company, the consent of the said company shall first be obtained.

IV.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, with the object of effectively preserving the territorial integrity of China, agree to the following special article:

The Chinese Government engages not to cede or lease to a third Power any harbor or bay or island along the coast of China.

V.

ARTICLE I.

The Chinese Central Government shall employ influential Japanese (literally, Japanese who have strength, power, or influence) as advisers in political, financial and military affairs.

ARTICLE II.

Japanese hospitals, churches and schools in the interior of China shall be granted the right of owning land.

ARTICLE III.

Inasmuch as the Japanese Government and the Chinese Government have had many cases of dispute between Japanese and Chinese police to settle, cases which caused no little misunderstanding, it is for this reason necessary that the police departments of the important places (in China) shall be jointly administered by Japanese and Chinese or that the police departments of these places shall employ numerous Japanese, so that they may at the same time help to plan for the improvement of the Chinese police service.

ARTICLE IV.

China shall purchase from Japan a fixed amount of munitions of war (say 50 per cent or more of what is needed by the Chinese Government) or that there shall be established in China a Sino-Japanese jointly worked arsenal. Japanese technic-experts are to be employed and Japanese material to be purchased.

ARTICLE V.

China agrees to grant to Japan with the right of constructing a railway connecting Wuchang with Kiu-kiang and Nanchang, another line between Nanchang and Hanchou, and another between Nanchang and Chao-chou.

ARTICLE VI.

If China needs foreign capital to work mines, build railways and construct harbor-works (including dock-yards) in the Province of Fukien, Japan shall be first consulted.

ARTICLE VII.

China agrees that Japanese subjects shall have the right to propagate Buddhism (In Chinese text, reference is to religion and not especially to Buddhism) in China.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, March 8, 1915—7 p. m.

Referring to my cable of February 26, 7 p. m. At the meeting March 6, Japanese Minister stated that his Government was dissatisfied with the slow progress of the negotiations and that unless by March 12 important concessions should have been granted, means outside of diplomacy might be resorted to. He continues to urge the consideration of the demands in Group V. The Chinese are ready to grant extension of South Manchuria Railway lease to ninety-nine years and of the repurchase terms, as well as of the Antung-Mukden line to seventy-two years; also to make some concessions regarding rights of residence and landholding in this region. The Chinese in making these important concessions desire definitive withdrawal of the obnoxious demands in Group V, but they fear armed pressure. Japanese Minister yesterday stated to the Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs that the railway guards on the South Manchuria Railway are shortly to be relieved by forces and he suggested the possibility that the old troops might thus find themselves free to take unexpected action.

The Secretary of State to the Japanese Ambassador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 13, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: On February 8 last your excellency left with me at the Department a memorandum setting forth the demands which the Imperial Japanese Government felt obliged to make upon China, and on the 22d of the same month your excellency delivered to me an additional memorandum presenting certain "requests" affecting the relations between the two countries which the Imperial Government has urged China to consider.

The American Government is glad to learn from these two communications of the Imperial Government that the "requests" were not presented to China as "demands" but that they were but "wishes" for which "friendly consideration" was asked on the part of China. The American Government understands from this distinction between the "demands" and the "requests" that the latter are not to be pressed if the Chinese Government should decline to consider them.

Inasmuch as these requests appear to have a bearing upon the traditional attitude of both the United States and Japan towards China, I desire to present to your excellency the following considerations of the Government of the United States relative to the effect which, it is thought, these demands and requests may have upon the relations of the United States with the Chinese Republic.

Reciprocating the frank and friendly character of the statements of the Imperial Japanese Government, the Government of the United States of America believes that an expression of its views with respect to these matters will be received by the Imperial Government in the same friendly spirit in which it is offered.

It will be recalled that in the year 1899 the Government of the United States requested the Governments of France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Russia and Japan to give their formal consent to three proposals:

First. They will in no way interfere with any treaty port or any vested interest within any so-called "sphere of interest" or leased territory they may have in China.

Second. The Chinese treaty tariff of the time being shall apply to all merchandise landed or shipped to all such ports as are within said "sphere of interest" (unless they be "free ports"), no matter to what nationality it may belong, and that duties so leviable shall be collected by the Chinese Government.

Third. They will levy no higher harbor dues on vessels of another nationality frequenting any port in such "sphere" than shall be levied on vessels of their own nationality, and no higher railroad charges over lines built, controlled, or operated within such "sphere" on merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of other nationalities transported through such "sphere" than shall be levied on similar merchandise belonging to their own nationals transported over equal distances.

On December 26, 1899, the Minister for Foreign Affairs addressed a note to the American Minister at Tokyo assuring the Minister—that the Imperial Government will have no hesitation to give their assent to so just and fair a proposal of the United States, provided that all the other Powers concerned shall accept the same.³⁴

³⁴ For. Rel. 1899, pp. 138-139.

A similar acceptance was given on behalf of the other Powers approached.

On July 3, 1900, having been consulted by other Powers as to the course to be pursued in China as a result of the Boxer disturbances, this Government expressed its views in a circular communication to Austria-Hungary, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan and Russia, stating that—the policy of the Government of the United States is to seek a solution which may bring about permanent safety and peace to China, preserve Chinese territorial and administrative entity, protect all rights guaranteed to friendly Powers by treaty and international law, and safeguard for the world the principle of equal and impartial trade with all parts of the Chinese Empire.³⁵

In reply the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Imperial Government expressed through the American Minister at Tokyo views in accord with those of the United States Government.³⁶

In the following month Great Britain and Germany signed an agreement defining their mutual policy in China:³⁷

I. It is a matter of joint and permanent international interest that the ports on the rivers and littoral of China should remain free and open to trade and to every other legitimate form of economic activity for the nationals of all countries without distinction, and the two Governments agree on their part to uphold the same for all Chinese territory so far as they can exercise influence.

II. Her Britannic Majesty's Government and the Imperial German Government will not on their part make use of the present complication to obtain for themselves any territorial advantages in Chinese dominions and will direct their policy towards maintaining undiminished the territorial conditions of the Chinese Empire.

This agreement being communicated by those Powers to Japan was acknowledged by the Imperial Government in a note containing the following language:

The Imperial Government having been assured by the contracting Powers that in adhering to the agreement in question they would be placed in relation to it in the same position as if they had been a signatory thereto, do not hesitate to declare formally their adherence to the said agreement and their acceptance of the principles embodied therein.

In 1901, when the Manchurian Convention was being negotiated by the Russian and Chinese Governments, involving the grant of certain exclusive privileges relating to the opening of mines and the building of railroads in Manchuria, the Japanese Minister called on the Secretary of State of the United States and said that the Japanese Government considered that the convention was a most undesirable thing because it was a violation of the understanding among all the Powers that the integrity of the Chinese Empire should be preserved, and that the Japanese Government was anxious that some means should be taken by the different Powers to induce China to delay the final signature of the convention beyond the period assigned by Russia as an ultimatum for signing.

On the same subject a circular note was sent by the United States to Belgium, China, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Russia and Spain, as follows:³⁸

³⁸ For. Rel. 1902, p. 26.

An agreement by which China cedes to any corporation or company the exclusive right and privilege of opening mines, establishing railroads, or in any other way industrially developing Manchuria, can but be viewed with the gravest concern by the Government of the United States. It constitutes a monopoly, which is a distinct breach of the stipulations of treaties concluded between China and foreign Powers, and thereby seriously affects the rights of American citizens; it restricts their rightful trade and exposes it to being discriminated against, interfered with or otherwise jeopardized, and strongly tends towards permanently impairing the sovereign rights of China in this part of the Empire, and seriously interferes with her ability to meet her international obligations. Furthermore, such concession on the part of China will undoubtedly be followed by demands from other Powers for similar and equally exclusive advantages in other parts of the Chinese Empire, and the inevitable result must be the complete wreck of the policy of absolute equality of treatment of all nations in regard to trade, navigation, and commerce within the confines of the Empire.

On the other hand, the attainment by one Power of such exclusive privileges for a commercial organization of its nationality conflicts with the assurances repeatedly conveyed to this Government by the Imperial Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Imperial Government's intention to follow the policy of the open door in China, as advocated by the Government of the United States and accepted by all the Treaty Powers having commercial interests in that Empire.

It is for these reasons that the Government of the United States, animated now, as in the past, with the sincerest desire of insuring to the whole world the benefits of full and fair intercourse between China and the nations on a footing of equal rights and advantages to all, submits the above to the earnest consideration of the Imperial Governments of China and Russia, confident that they will give due weight to its importance and adopt such measures as will relieve the just and natural anxiety of the United States.

The foregoing constitute the beginnings of the policy of the United States and other Powers interested in the welfare of China for the maintenance of the territorial integrity and administrative entity of China, and equal opportunities in commerce and industries in her behalf. To this policy the Powers have generally given their formal acceptance and support.

It is only necessary to refer to the British-Japanese Treaty of 1902, the Japanese Declarations at the opening of the Russo-Japanese war, the British-Japanese Treaty of 1905, the Russo-Japanese Treaty of Portsmouth, of 1905, the Franco-Japanese Entente of 1907, and the Russo-Japanese Treaty of 1907, in which Japan confirmed her special interest in maintaining the political independence and territorial integrity of the Empire of China, and in securing equal opportunities to all nations in the commercial and industrial development of China.

Finally, the United States and Japan declared their policy in the Far East by an exchange of notes on November 30, 1908, between the Honorable Elihu Root, then Secretary of State, and Baron Kogoro Takahira, the Ambassador of Japan. These notes contain the following language:³⁹

4. They are also determined to preserve the common interest of all Powers in China by supporting by all pacific means at their disposal the independence and integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry of all nations in that Empire.

5. Should any event occur threatening the status quo as above described or the principle of equal opportunity as above defined, it remains for the two Governments to communicate with each other in order to arrive at an understanding as to what measures they may consider useful to take.

I assume that it is because they wish to act in the spirit of this agreement to communicate with each other in reference to any event which may threaten these principles that your excellency's Government has informed this Government of the above-mentioned proposals which have been made to China. It is with the same purpose also, and on the further ground that the United States feels itself under a moral obligation to the Powers whose pledges are deposited with it not to pass over in silence any threatened violation of these pledges, that I address this communication to you with a view to carrying out the agreement of 1908 in accordance with that mutual regard and friendship which inspired it.

The United States, confident that the principle of mutuality will be preserved by Japan, believes that it may rely upon the often repeated assurances of your excellency's Government relative to the independence, integrity and commerce of China, and that no steps will be taken contrary to the spirit of those assurances.

For two generations American missionaries and teachers have made sacrifices in behalf of religious and educational work in China. American capital has been invested and industries have been established in certain regions. The activity of Americans has never been political, but on the contrary has been primarily commercial with no afterthought as to their effect upon the governmental policy of China. As an outgrowth of these two interests Americans have become concerned in the legitimate participation in the economic development of China along broader lines. Many projects which in other countries are left to private enterprise are in China conducted necessarily under government direction. United States citizens and capital are thus engaged in certain public improvements, such as the Huai River conservancy, the Hukuang Railway project, etc. A fourth matter of great moment to the United States is its broad and extensive treaty rights with China. These in general relate to commercial privileges and to the protection of Americans in China. In view of these treaty rights and its increasing economic interests in China, this Government has noted with grave concern certain of the suggestions which Japan has, in the present critical stage of the growth and development of the new Republic, considered it advisable to lay before the Chinese Government. While on principle and under the treaties of 1844, 1858, 1868 and 1903 with China the United States has ground upon which to base objections to the Japanese "demands" relative to Shantung, South Manchuria, and East Mongolia, nevertheless the United States frankly recognizes that territorial contiguity creates special relations between Japan and these districts. This Government, therefore, is disposed to raise no question, at this time, as to Articles I and II of the Japanese proposals. Further, as to Article IV, and Article V, paragraphs 2, 5 and 7, this Government perceives no special menace to the existing rights and interests of the United States or of its citizens in China. On the other hand Article V, paragraph 4, restricting the purchase of arms and ammunition to purchases from Japan, and paragraph 6 contemplating a monopoly of the development of the province of Fukien, the United States Government considers, would, if they should become operative, be violations of the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industries of other nations. American citizens may claim a right to share in the commercial development not only in Fukien but in other provinces as well. The United States is not unmindful that many serious disadvantages would result to its commercial and industrial enterprises if special preference is given to one nation in the matter of concessions. An example is shown in the operation of the South Manchuria Railway whereby discriminations have been made for some time against freight brought into Manchuria in other than Japanese vessels.^a This case indicates the embarrassing results of concessions of a broad preference or option. The United States, as well as every other nation, has the right to have its citizens free to make contracts with the Central and Provincial Governments without having the exercise of their rights interrupted or regarded as unfriendly by a third power; for each American enterprise in China is treated on its own merits as to its usefulness and prospective benefit, and without any regard to the possible effect it might have on China's future political status in the Orient.

The rights and privileges, which are set forth in these two paragraphs and which Japan seeks to obtain from China, are in conflict with rights of Americans secured by treaties between the United States and China.

Article XV of the Treaty of 1844 reads as follows:

The former limitation of the trade of foreign nations to certain persons appointed at Canton by the Government and commonly called Hong-merchants, having been abolished, citizens of the United States, engaged in the purchase or sale of goods of import or export, are admitted to trade with any and all subjects of China without distinction; they shall not be subject to any new limitations, nor impeded in their business by monopolies or other injurious restrictions.

Article XXX of the Treaty of 1858 reads as follows:

The contracting parties hereby agree that should at any time the Ta Tsing Empire grant to any nation or the merchants or citizens of any nation, any right, privilege or favor, connected either with navigation, commerce, political or other intercourse which is not conferred by this treaty, such right, privilege and favor shall at once freely enure to the benefit of the United States, its public officers, merchants and citizens.

Article VIII of the Treaty of 1868 reads as follows:

The United States, always disclaiming and discouraging all practices of unnecessary dictation and intervention by one nation in the affairs or domestic administration of another, do hereby freely disclaim and disavow any intention or right to intervene in the domestic administration of China in regard to the construction of railroads, telegraphs or other material internal improvements. On the other hand, his Majesty, the Emperor of China, reserves to himself the right to decide the time and manner and circumstances of introducing such improvements within his dominions. With this mutual understanding it is agreed by the contracting parties that if at any time hereafter his Imperial Majesty shall determine to construct or cause to be constructed works of the character mentioned within the empire, and shall make application to the United States or any other western Power for facilities to carry out that policy, the United States will, in that case, designate and authorize suitable engineers to be employed by the Chinese Government, and will recommend to other nations an equal compliance with such application, the Chinese Government in that case protecting such engineers in their persons and property, and paying them a reasonable compensation for their service.

Articles III and VII of the Treaty of 1903 read as follows:

Article III. Citizens of the United States may frequent, reside and carry on trade, industries and manufactures, or pursue any lawful avocation, in all the ports or localities of China which are now open or may hereafter be opened to foreign residence and trade; and, within the suitable localities at those places which have been or may be set apart for the use and occupation of foreigners, they may rent or purchase houses, places of business and other buildings, and rent or lease in perpetuity land and build thereon. They shall generally enjoy as to their persons and property all such rights, privileges and immunities as are or may hereafter be granted to the subjects or citizens of the nation the most favored in these respects. .

Article VII. The Chinese Government, recognizing that it is advantageous for the country to develop its mineral resources, and that it is desirable to attract foreign as well as Chinese capital to embark in mining enterprises, agrees, within one year from the signing of this treaty, to initiate and conclude the revision of the existing mining regulations. To this end China will, with all expedition and earnestness, go into the whole question of mining rules; and, selecting from the rules of the United States and other countries regulations which seem applicable to the condition of China, will recast its present mining rules in such a way as, while promoting the interests of Chinese subjects and not injuring in any way the sovereign rights of China, will offer no impediment to the attraction of foreign capital nor place foreign capitalists at a greater disadvantage than they would be under generally accepted foreign regulations; and will permit citizens of the United States to carry on in Chinese territory mining operations and other necessary business relating thereto provided they comply with the new regulations and conditions which will be imposed by China on its subjects and foreigners alike, relating to the opening of mines, the renting of mineral land, and the payment of royalty, and provided they apply for permits, the provisions of which in regard to necessary business relating to such operations shall be observed. The residence of citizens of the United States in connection with such mining operations shall be subject to such regulations as shall be agreed upon by and between the United States and China.

Any mining concessions granted after the publication of such new rules shall be subject to their provisions.

It is manifest that these articles including "most favored nation" treatment entitle Americans to claim from China the same rights as those which Japan now seeks to have granted exclusively to her subjects.

It remains to call attention to Article III forbidding the alienation or lease of any port, harbor or island on the coast of China, and to Article V, paragraph 1, requiring China to employ competent Japanese subjects as advisers for conducting administrative, financial and military affairs, and paragraph 3 suggesting the joint policing of China, "where it is deemed necessary."

With reference to the first of these three proposals, Baron Kato has explained to the American Ambassador at Tokyo that Japan has no desire for a naval station on the coast of China, either at Tsingtau, or south of that point, as it would be valueless to her, but that it would however object to another nation having such a station. With reference to the employment of advisers the United States believes it may be assumed that the Chinese Government will not discriminate unfairly in their selection, although it should be pointed out that this Government understands that Japan has six out of twenty-five advisers to the Republic representing eight nations. In respect to the proposed joint policing of certain places where there has been some friction between Japanese and Chinese, this Government feels apprehensive that this plan, instead of tending to lessen such friction might create greater difficulties than those which it is desired to remove.

But what is more important is the fact that these proposals, if accepted by China, while not infringing the territorial integrity of the Republic, are clearly derogatory to the political independence and administrative entity of that country. The same is in a measure true of Paragraph 4 of Article V relative to the purchase of arms. It is difficult for the United States, therefore, to reconcile these requests with the maintenance of the unimpaired sovereignty of China, which Japan, together with the United States and the Great Powers of Europe, has reaffirmed from time to time during the past decade and a half in formal declarations, treaties and exchanges of diplomatic notes. The United States, therefore, could not regard with indifference the assumption of political, military or economic domination over China by a foreign Power, and hopes that your excellency's Government will find it consonant with their interests to refrain from pressing upon China an acceptance of proposals which would, if accepted, exclude Americans from equal participation in the economic and industrial development of China and would limit the political independence of that country.

The United States is convinced that an attempt to coerce China to submit to these proposals would result in engendering resentment on the part of the Chinese and opposition by other interested Powers, thereby creating a situation which this Government confidently believes the Imperial Government do not desire.

The United States Government embraces this opportunity to make known that it has viewed the aspirations of Japan in the Far East with that friendship and esteem which have characterized the relations of the two nations in the past. This Government cannot too earnestly impress upon your excellency's Government that the United States is not jealous of the prominence of Japan in the East or of the intimate cooperation of China and Japan for their mutual benefit. Nor has the United States any intention of obstructing or embarrassing Japan, or of influencing China in opposition to Japan. On the contrary the policy of the United States, as set forth in this note, is directed to the maintenance of the independence, integrity and commercial freedom of China and the preservation of legitimate American rights and interests in that Republic.

I yesterday communicated to the Minister for Foreign Affairs substance of your telegram of March 13, 6 p. m.,⁴⁰ reading to him the last portion as instructed. He said that he had not yet received the contents of the note handed to Viscount Chinda. He first asked if the note was presented at the request of or suggestion of China or of any other Power. I told him I had no reason for thinking so or that it presented anything but the views of the United States. He then spoke quite freely: As to the privileges asked in Fukien he asserted that precedents existed in the way of exclusive privileges granted in certain provinces to Great Britain and other countries respectively and that even if the proposed agreement for the purchase of arms could be objected to, which he would not admit, he could see no objection to the suggestion for the erection in China of manufactories of arms under joint management. He said however that he was not prepared to discuss the questions raised but would consider and answer the note when it was received in the same spirit of friendliness in which the communication was made. He told me the negotiations were "proceeding not altogether unsatisfactorily" and that while he would like greater speed still owing to the use of interpreters the delay was probably unavoidable.

In accordance with instructions in your March 13, 6 p. m., I have called the attention of the Foreign Office to the treaty provisions cited. The Minister of Foreign Affairs assures me that the fullest consideration was being given to treaty rights.

At the meeting yesterday the demands relating to Manchuria and Mongolia were further discussed. The Japanese proposed that twenty-seven new trade marts should be opened; moreover that permission should be extended for Japanese settlement in the interior without restriction. The Chinese are ready to adopt former alternative but not both.

Your telegram of March 13, 6 p. m., repeated from Tokyo implies a communication by Japan supplementary to the statement of demands communicated early in detail to our Embassy at Tokyo. If such supplementary statement has been made I beg to request that its text be quoted to me for information.

Yesterday afternoon I had a very full and frank interview with Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs. He read to me a telegram which he stated he had sent to Chinda in regard to Mr. Bryan's note, only an abstract of which he said he had as yet received. He dwelt especially on Fukien saying that Japan was very sensitive about it because of its proximity to Formosa, and that she had been made uneasy some years ago by Secretary Hay's suggestion that the United States desired to improve a harbor there for a naval coaling station,⁴² and that this uneasiness had been recently re-

He said that the purpose of Japan's request on this point was to guarantee her against any action by any power which would give the latter a foothold in that province, as any attempt by any power to gain a foothold there would be regarded as unfriendly and inimical to Japan. He said that his only desire was to prevent this, not to secure for Japan any exclusive commercial advantages, his information being that the district is poor, that there are no indications of valuable mineral resources and that the hilly character and poverty of the country would make railroad building expensive and unprofitable. He expressed the belief that if Japan, at the suggestion of the United States, withdrew the request concerning Fukien and the fact became known in Japan it would create a suspicion and resentment and impair the growing cordiality between the two peoples. In conclusion he said that before the United States approve the withdrawal of this request he would suggest that the United States and Japan should agree upon a frank and friendly statement concerning this province by which all possibility of future uneasiness might be eliminated. LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Tokyo, December 11, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm your telegraphic instruction of the 7th instant, received on the 9th, and my reply by telegraph yesterday, the 10th, concerning the matter of obtaining for our Navy a coaling station at Samsah Inlet, north of Foochow.

In an interview with the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs yesterday he said that he had received on the 7th instant a telegram from the Japanese Minister in Washington giving an account of a conversation with you upon this subject; that he had consulted the Emperor and the Acting Minister President of State, and had been to Oiso to confer with Marquis Ito (still absent sick), and on that day (yesterday) had already telegraphed at length to his Minister in Washington the conclusion reached. He then kindly read me a copy of the telegram sent, which gave particularly and in full the reasons why the Japanese Government were unwilling to accede to the proposal, and said that because of the very friendly relations of the two countries it was with regret that circumstances were such as, in the opinion of his Government, made it necessary to decline to give a favorable response which otherwise would be given with pleasure. He having said that his Minister in Washington would communicate to the State Department fully the views of the Japanese Government, I deem it unnecessary to enter into particulars in this despatch.

*The Japanese Foreign Office to the Japanese Minister.

Regarding the proposed acquisition by the United States of a coaling station in Samsah Bay, the Imperial Government would not, were it possible to be guided only by sentiments of good will, experience any difficulty in meeting the wishes of the United States; but there being many reasons of a commanding nature which make undesirable the realization of the project of the United States Government, the Imperial Government cannot but take these reasons into serious consideration, and they confidently believe that the United States Government will not, upon a careful review of the entire situation, fail to perceive that it would be impossible for the Imperial Government to view with indifference the consummation of the proposed step.

In the first place, in view of the fact that the Chinese Government have given to the Imperial Government a self-denying engagement on the non-alienation of any portion of ever known. He again pointed out the distinction between Japan's "demands" and "requests" saying that while it was Japan's wish to gain the latter and while she would continue to press them she did not expect to compel compliance by force. He expressed regret at the published report that information as to our objections had been given out at Washington by authority saying that public belief on this point would seriously embarrass the administration here and that for this reason although he had instructed the censors to permit publication of telegrams received by papers here he had authorized the statement that the United States had not fully understood all the propositions submitted to China, had asked for further explanations which had been given and which he expected would be satisfactory, and that no protest against any of Japan's "demands" had been made. Newspapers of last night and this morning contained inspired paragraphs stating that some time ago Washington asked Japan for explanation on a certain ambiguous point but that this was not to be construed as a warning much less a protest and that there is not the slightest truth in the report that the United States has demanded of Japan that she modify her demands. All vernacular newspapers this morning discuss the question on the basis of this inspired statement.

Fuhkien Province, such an acquisition as is proposed by the United States Government would practically be an abrogation of that engagement, to which, for geographical and other reasons, the Imperial Government attach the highest importance; for should the door be once opened to enable one Power to secure territorial advantages in that Province, it would be impossible to prevent others from acquiring similar concessions.

Secondly, having in view Article II of the Anglo-German Agreement†, to which both the United States and Japan have declared their adhesion, the Imperial Government fear that the acquirement by the United States Government of such territorial advantage as is desired would at once bring into force Article III of the same agreement, which is a contingency that cannot be viewed without the gravest apprehensions.

Thirdly, not less serious would be the effect of the proposed step upon the situation at Peking, which is already at the present moment sufficiently delicate.

The Imperial Government harbor no territorial designs upon China; their policy, on the contrary, is directed to the maintenance of her territorial integrity; and they have noted with entire satisfaction the declaration made on several occasions by the Secretary of State that the United States were also anxious to preserve the territorial entity of that Empire. That desired end may be, in the opinion of the Imperial Government, best attained by those Powers which entertain similar views refraining from accepting any advantages which might give other Powers a pretext for territorial demands.

For these reasons, which are suggested with the frankness and sincerity fully justified by the good relations subsisting between the two Governments, the Imperial Government confidently hope that the United States Government will definitely abandon their above-mentioned project.

You are hereby instructed to present to the Secretary of State an answer in the above sense.

Peking, March 24, 1915—midnight.

At yesterday's conference articles relating to preference in the matter of railways, local loans, and advisers in South Manchuria were initialed; also article providing for recasting of Kirin Railway contract in sense favorable to Japan. Open door in [Opening of ?] seventeen treaty ports was not spoken of but proposal of Chinese to allow residence in interior on condition of special registry, payment of local taxes and submission to police authority with special tribunals for the trial of mixed cases was communicated by Japanese Minister to his Government for instructions. All of this [relates ?] only to South Manchuria, Japanese Minister reserving action on Mongolia for future.

While the character of the negotiations is now less peremptory than hitherto, the Chinese are in doubt whether the Japanese any longer treat diplomatic negotiations seriously or whether burden of action has been shifted to the military side.

The Consul at Tsingtau reports extensive military preparations. Consul General at Mukden reports virtual doubling of Japanese forces in the railway zone. Consul at Antung reports transport of troops under cover of night. Troops at Tsinanfu now sixteen hundred. Ordinary traffic on the Shantung railway stopped in favor of military transport.

On Sunday the Chinese Government asked an explanation of the troop movements but to date no reply has been received.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 26, 1915—3 p. m.

Your interview with the Foreign Office and an oral communication from Ambassador Chinda of the same purport, taken together, throw a new light upon part of the situation and furnish an explanation of some matters which it has been difficult for us to understand. It is evident that the Japanese Government has regarded the suggestion made by Mr. Hay in regard to a naval coaling station as evidence of a continuing desire upon the part of the United States to secure a concession on the coast of Fukien, whereas this Government has no such purpose or desire. This Government regrets that any such apprehensions as are expressed should have been entertained by the Japanese Government, and finds pleasure in relieving their minds on the subject.

You are, therefore, authorized to inform the Government that this Government will view without the slightest objection any arrangement which Japan may make with China looking toward the withholding of any concession to any foreign Power which contemplates the improvement of any harbor on the coast of Fukien or the establishment of a coaling station or naval base along said coast by any foreign Power. Such an agreement entered into between Japan and China, and approved by the United States in an exchange of notes, would put an end to any speculation that may have been indulged, or fears that may have been entertained in regard to this nation's desires or intentions. As Japan's desire to be consulted in regard to concessions granted to Fukien was based upon her wish to prevent the development of any foreign influence on the coast of Fukien we may assume that this fear being removed she will not feel it necessary to insist upon any special advantage in regard to the development of the interior of Fukien. In fact, this is intimated in both your despatch and the communication made by Ambassador China.

If the Japanese Government has any uneasiness as to the development of the interior of Fukien you might inquire whether it would not be advisable to propose that no railroad concession be granted to any foreign Power, with the understanding that the Chinese Government shall, itself, build, own and operate any railroads that may be deemed necessary for the development of Fukien, such railroads, if built with borrowed money, not to be mortgaged or in any way pledged to the creditors.

In view of the exaggerated and distorted reports being circulated as to boycott of Japanese goods, I have the honor to report that both the Chinese Government and the local authorities throughout the country are taking severe measures to repress agitation to that end. Popular feeling in consequence of the demands is nevertheless so intense and bitter that many dealers are withholding or canceling orders for goods and refusing to accept payment in Japanese bank notes. Consul General at Shanghai reports that Japanese Consul General states that he feels every possible aid is being rendered by the municipal and Chinese authorities to suppress boycott movement but that trade is being seriously interfered with and the freight offered to Japanese vessels has diminished fifty per cent. Consul General at Mukden reports that in order to avoid any possibility of untoward incidents the Chinese soldiers are being kept in their barracks. The Chinese police are taking extraordinary repressive precautions including explicit orders to all people to avoid giving offense to the Japanese and to continue business relations with them.

The Japanese at the conference held yesterday adopted an attitude of uncompromising exigence, the Minister stating that as the Chinese are now fully aware of the Japanese demands further discussion of the details is unnecessary and China is now expected to make categorical answer and be prepared for the consequences of refusal.

The demands as to the right of residence in the interior of Manchuria in addition to the opening of seventeen treaty ports there, also those concerning Han-yeh-ping and the right of Buddhist propaganda were insisted upon in toto. The Chinese fear injection of political intrigue into the entire Buddhist system of China.

The most serious matter is the insistence of Japan upon the second portion of Han-yeh-ping demand, the effect of which would be to give Japanese interests the right of veto over competitive mining developments in the Yangtze region.

An ultimatum backed by force is momentarily expected.

The Chinese yesterday postponed the crisis by yielding to demand that Japanese subjects be allowed to travel, reside, carry on trade and agriculture and lease land in Manchuria, remaining subject only to their national jurisdiction in criminal and civil matters except as to land cases. The Japanese thereupon insisted upon participation in police, which however was not conceded. The right of hospitals and schools to own land in the interior was discussed without result.

Although the Japanese Government is understood to have explained that the demands suppressed in its first communication to the Powers were merely requests I now learn that when that explanation was first reported in the newspapers the Secretary of Japanese Legation called especially at the Foreign Office to state in the Minister's name that his Government recognized no such distinction and particularly would insist upon Group V of the demands equally with the others.

Will you please ascertain whether anything is contemplated which would discriminate against the nationals of other countries and if so what territory is understood to be included in the area thus described. No. 597.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, April 5, 1915.

SIR: The progress of the negotiations has been reported to the Department in the following telegrams: March 8, 7 p. m.; 12, 7 p. m.; 13, 10 p. m.; 17, 7 p. m.; 22, 6 p. m.; 24, 12 p. m.; 25, 12 p. m.; 31, 8 p. m., and April 2, 3 p. m. I shall therefore confine the present despatch to a few observations on the general nature of the negotiations and on some incidental features.

I. While, as it appears, a distinction was made by the Japanese Government, in conversations with other Governments, between "demands" and "requests," no such differentiation has been observed here. The demands as presented to the Chinese Government on January 18 last (communicated to the Department in connection with my No. 571 of March 6) include those matters which have been subsequently characterized as "requests"; nor has the Japanese Minister in his negotiations with the Chinese Foreign Office ever placed these matters in a different category from the rest of the demands.

II. In official declarations made on behalf of the Japanese Government it has been repeatedly stated that the demands made on China are simply "discussions of outstanding questions." Only in the sense that Japan already has interests in China and that anything she may possibly ask may be considered an extension of her existing influence could the majority of the present demands be considered as at all relating to pending questions. However, as far as their specific substance is concerned, the following are new demands, not in any direct sense concerned in previously pending negotiations:

1. The right of residence and land-ownership in Manchuria.
2. The right of railroad building and loan preference in Manchuria.

3. Exclusive mining rights within large areas.
4. All demands respecting Inner Mongolia.
5. The extensive implications of the articles relating to the Hanyeh-ping Company.
6. The compulsory employment of advisers.
7. The compulsory purchase of military supplies.
8. The joint organization of police.
9. Industrial preference in the Province of Fukien.

The demand with respect to the propagation of Buddhism in China had been discussed from 1903 on between China and Japan on the basis of the most-favored-nation clause. In 1908 the attempt to claim the right under this principle was abandoned by Japan. It is apparent that as far as the most-favored-nation clause goes, it is only the Christian missionaries from Japan who might claim the benefit of its operation; discrimination could be urged only by the Buddhist church; but as this is one of the great religions of China, it is plain that it could not argue discrimination against itself.

III. Among the demands notified to the Powers is one relating to the Hanyehping mines enterprise; it was, however, communicated in a very reduced version, viz:

DEMAND AS MADE UPON CHINA.

DEMAND AS COMMUNICATED BY JAPAN TO THE POWERS.

III.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, seeing that Japanese financiers and the Hanyehping Company have close relations with each other at present and desiring that the common interests of the two nations shall be advanced, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1.

The two contracting parties mutually agree that when the opportune moment arrives the Hanyehping Company shall be made joint concern of the two nations; and they further agree that without the previous consent of Japan, China shall not by her own act dispose of the rights and property of whatsoever nature of the said company nor cause the said company to dispose freely of the same.

ARTICLE 2.

The Chinese Government agrees that all mines in the neighborhood of those owned by the Hanyehping Company shall not be permitted, without the consent of the said company, to be worked by other persons outside of the said company; and further agrees that if it is desired to carry out any undertaking which it is apprehended may directly or indirectly affect the interests of the said company, the consent of the said company shall first be obtained.

III.

Agreement in principle that, at an opportune moment in future, Hanyehping Company should be placed under the Japanese and Chinese co-operation.

It will be seen that all the features that would make this demand inimical to the independence of China and the treaty rights of foreign nations were omitted. Not only is it asked that the Chinese Government shall limit the rights of the Chinese company freely to dispose of its property (Article 1), but the most far-reaching of interference with all mining and allied enterprises without limitation of locality is involved in Article 2. In granting the second article the Chinese Government would give to a company controlled by Japan the right to give or withhold its consent to any enterprise or undertaking which may directly or indirectly affect the interests of the said company; in other words, the company would be made the arbiter of mining development in China.

Only on condition of entirely relinquishing their treaty rights and abdicating all opportunities for sharing on an equal and self-respecting basis in the development of the natural resources of China could the foreign Powers consent to such an arrangement. In conflict with existing treaties, such an arrangement could not be made valid by agreement between Japan and China except with respect to such Powers as may subsequently give their assent thereto.

IV. From the point of view of the sovereignty and independence of China, the dangerous character of the present demands lies in the fact that many of them would not be satisfied through concessions for definite enterprises dealing with a limited area commensurate with the scope of the undertaking; they are such as import a direct interference with the general operations of government and expressions of sovereignty. Such is the case with the demand to allow to a Japanese-controlled company an important voice with respect to industrial enterprises in China; such would be the effect of agreeing to purchase any fixed quantity of military supplies from a foreign Power, as this would involve allowing such Power an insight into the complete military system of China, as well as the right to determine the types of her armament. Other demands affecting China's independence are those relating to residence in the interior without relinquishment of extraterritoriality; the compulsory appointment of advisers; compulsory preference to one nation in certain provinces, and dictation as to what missionary activities are to be permitted in the interior, while extraterritoriality lasts.

The Chinese Government is confronted with a serious dilemma of inviting the hostile attitude of Japan through failure to grant such concessions and, on the other hand, of irretrievably resigning important rights of sovereignty if the concessions are made; the latter alternative would also involve the danger of entirely forfeiting the confidence of the Chinese people, who have been assured that the Government is in this negotiation strongly protecting their interests. It is therefore feared that should Japan succeed in extorting these far-reaching concessions from China, a powerful movement of opposition against the Government which has made such concessions would rise as soon as the facts would become known; thus the Chinese Government finds itself between the dangers of a foreign war and of internal revolution.

V. American residents in China, in common with the British and other Europeans, are greatly apprehensive as to the outcome of the present negotiations. It is believed that the effect upon Japan of successfully carrying through the present venture and thus imposing her will upon China will not result favorably to the peace of the Far East or of the world, in the immediate or more distant future.

The position of this Legation has not been without difficulty. Considering the feeling of real friendship for America which animates the Chinese people and the expectation connected therewith that the United States would not without protest permit the independent rights of China to be overridden, there has been some difficulty in preserving an attitude of friendliness while carefully avoiding to give an encouragement to the idea that the United States might actively intervene in behalf of China for the sake of friendship and in the cause of international justice. In cases where a discussion of these matters could not be avoided, I have strictly confined myself to the position that, notwithstanding what the demands of Japan and the action of China might turn out to be, American treaty rights here could be affected only with the consent of the American Government, and that, therefore, Americans would expect to continue to participate in the commerce and cultural development of China on an equal and independent basis. During the course of negotiations I have been repeatedly consulted by Chinese officials with respect to various aspects of the problems presented, and I have restricted the expression of my views to a consideration of the legal implications of the questions presented, avoiding anything that might be taken as advice on matters of political action.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a copy of a memorandum on the rights of residence in South Manchuria which was handed to the Japanese Minister by the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs on April 3. The memorandum is important as indicating the insistence upon the part of Japan upon the full measure of its demands on this topic; the manner in which the Chinese Government has yielded step by step; and the reservation of its complete rights which it is attempting to make with respect to Eastern Inner Mongolia.

MEMORANDUM ON RIGHTS OF RESIDENCE IN SOUTH MANCHURIA, HANDED TO THE JAPANESE MINISTER BY THE MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS ON APRIL 3, 1915.

It is evident that the intention of Articles 2 and 3 in the second group of demands asking for an unhampered right of residence, trade, farming, and ownership of land in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, is to obtain for Japanese subjects in those regions a status beyond the terms of the treaties now existing between the two nations; and to give them a freedom of action which will be a restriction on China's sovereignty and a serious infringement of her administrative rights. Should Japanese subjects be granted the right of owning land, it means that all the landed property in the aforesaid regions might fall into their hands, thereby endangering China's territorial integrity. Moreover, residence in the inland is incompatible with the existence of extraterritoriality, the relinquishment of which is necessary to the actual enjoyment of the privilege of inland residence, as evidenced in the practice of other nations.

Japan's unconditional demand for the privilege of inland residence, accompanied with a desire to extend extraterritoriality into the interior of China and to enable the Japanese subjects to monopolize all the interests in South Manchuria, is also palpably irreconcilable with the principle of equal opportunity. For this reason the Chinese Government were, in the first instance, unable to accept this demand as a basis of negotiation. Their profound regard for the friendly relations of the two countries, however, persuaded them to exert their utmost efforts, in spite of all the inherent difficulties, to seek a solution of a question which was practically impossible to solve. Knowing that the proposal made by Japan was incompatible with treaties, they nevertheless sought to meet her wishes within the limits of treaties; accordingly they submitted a counterproposal to open more places in South Manchuria to international trade and to establish Sino-Japanese joint reclamation companies.

This suggestion was made in the thought that the places to which Japanese subjects would desire to resort for purposes of trade could not be other than important localities; if all these localities were opened to commerce, then they could go there and reside, trade, and lease land for joint reclamation within any of them. Thus Japanese subjects might enjoy the essence of the privilege of inland residence and would still be able to reconcile their position with China's treaties and the principle of equal opportunity.

After the Japanese Government declined to accept this suggestion, China withdrew it and replaced it with an amendment to the original articles. It was proposed in this amendment to grant to Japanese subjects the extra-treaty privilege of inland residence with the provisos that Japanese subjects in places outside of trade ports should observe Chinese police regulations and pay taxes in the same manner as Chinese, and that civil and criminal cases of such Japanese subjects should be adjudicated by Chinese authorities, the Japanese Consul attending merely to watch the proceedings. This suggestion was not an innovation; it was based upon the modus operandi now in force as regards the Korean settlers in inland districts of Chientao. But the Japanese Government again declined to accept it.

The Chinese Government thereupon made a third proposal along the lines of what constitutes the present practice in Turkey and Siam, making a distinction, however, in favor of Japanese subjects, in the exercise of jurisdiction over civil and criminal cases. This was once more objected to by the Japanese Government.

Now the Chinese Government proposes to concede another step—the fourth time. They propose to agree to the full text of Articles 2 and 3 relative to the question of inland residence, except that “the right of owning land” is changed into “the right of leasing land”, and to the phrase “cultivating land” is added this clause: “the regulations for which shall be determined separately”; and, further, to add a supplementary article which embodies a modus operandi which the Chinese Government has constrained itself to make, out of a desire to come to a settlement over this question. The view advanced in this supplementary article is based upon your excellency's declaration made on March 6, 1915, that a separate article embodying some compromise might be added to the original Articles 2 and 3 for the purpose of avoiding any conflict with China's sovereignty or the system established by treaties.

Since China now agrees to Articles 2 and 3; since there already exists a harmony of views on the question of observing Chinese police regulations and paying taxes; since as regards the question of jurisdiction criminal cases are to be dealt with as heretofore and civil cases in a slightly different way from what prevails now—since this is a concession which the Chinese Government feels unable to improve upon, they request your excellency to be so good as to inform your Government of its nature and extent and invite them to agree thereto, to the end that this question may be brought to a conclusion.

As regards Eastern Inner Mongolia, there is altogether a different state of things there, quite different from what exists in South Manchuria. I have stated on several occasions that these two regions could not be discussed together, and I am glad to recall that your excellency has already given your endorsement of my views.

I beg to submit that to grant to any foreign-controlled company the right to be consulted concerning the working of mines in the neighborhood or other enterprises which might directly or indirectly affect the interests of said company, would be to abdicate the freedom [of] industrial development as well as to deny the treaty rights of other nationals. Even aside from its broader implications the proposal is tantamount to a demand for a monopoly of mineral production and manufacture in at least the upper portion of the Yangtze valley and it is so considered among residents in China of all nationalities. The indefiniteness of its scope constitutes the dangerousness of this demand and I would suggest the desirability of insisting in this connection upon the principle that only concessions for specific enterprises operating over a definitely delimited area commensurate with the scope of the undertaking are within the purview of treaties guaranteeing equal commercial and industrial opportunities.

At yesterday's meeting the Japanese continued to discuss the details of the demand relating to residence in Manchuria.

Group V was again discussed and the demand concerning purchase of one-half of all war materials from Japan insisted upon.

Fukien demand was taken up for the first time and urged by the Japanese Minister in a strikingly peremptory manner and at times with a show of excitement. He stated that apprehensions as to the intentions of a certain Power (understood by China to refer to America) compelled Japan to insist on a declaration that the Chinese would finance developments in Fukien herself and especially would not make any contract with nationals of another nation for the construction of harbors and dockyards. He declared that the certain Power was ready to accept this view.

At yesterday's meeting residence in Manchuria was further discussed, China holding that taxes and police regulations should apply equally to Japan, Japanese residents and Chinese citizens, while the Japanese demanded the right of veto in these matters.

Passing to Group V, Japanese Minister presented a paper containing an additional demand in Fukien namely the concession of coal mines at Anki. The Minister for Foreign Affairs refused to receive this document stating that his Government could not enter upon a discussion of any demands in Group V or in extension thereof as they were inconsistent with national independence and treaty obligations. * * * Japanese Minister withdrew the paper and declared that he could only report the attitude of the Chinese Government to his own.

then attempted to discuss Articles 4, 5, and 6 of Group V. The Minister for Foreign Affairs insisted that he could not consider these demands in principle since they conflict with China's sovereignty and treaty obligations. The Japanese Minister thereupon stated that he could not see the force of these arguments in view of what the Chinese had already found it possible to grant in Manchuria.

At the meeting on the 13th instant the Chinese pressed for an answer to their proposals concerning Manchuria and were informed that the Japanese Government insisted upon the right to participate in making the agricultural tax and police regulations affecting Japanese residents.

In regard to Japan's demands for railway grants in the fifth group the Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that those demands conflicted with grants already made to British interests; whereupon Japanese Minister replied that China had displayed a spirit of unfriendliness in thus granting to Great Britain lines which Japan had asked for, and said that it is desirable that the Chinese Government should give concessions asked by Japan and leave it to the latter to adjust with Great Britain any conflict between their claims.

At the meeting yesterday Japanese Minister demanded that the rights which the Chinese Government has offered to grant in respect to Manchuria should be extended to Eastern Mongolia. The Minister for Foreign Affairs declined to assimilate the two cases saying that at most his Government might consent to open certain additional treaty ports in Mongolia. After refusing to yield to further insistence the Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that he might find it possible to consider this demand on condition that the Japanese should wholly abandon the demands under Group V although he refused to commit himself in advance as to the concessions which his Government will in that case be prepared to make in Mongolia. Japanese Minister said he would refer the matter to his Government for instructions.

At the conference of April 19 no progress was made as the Japanese withheld agreement on Manchuria and the Chinese refused to commit themselves on Group V or make further concessions respecting the Hanyehping Company.

As the negotiations had thus come to a deadlock it was necessary for the Japanese Government to decide whether to accept the liberal concessions made by China or to attempt to create a new basis of action. As both of the conferences were prorogued at the request of Japan it is evident that an important decision is impending based upon the situation here and taking into account the attitude of the Powers.

REINSCH.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, April 27, 1915—8 p. m.

At the conference yesterday Japanese Minister communicated the revised demands.

The demands respecting Manchuria and Shantung are unchanged. In Eastern Mongolia, Japan asks railway and loan preference, opening of treaty ports and admission to agricultural and industrial enterprises in partnership with Chinese.

With respect to Hanyehping Company, Japan insists that the present shareholders be coerced into forming joint company with Japan, but Section 2 of the article is dropped.

Group V is formally withdrawn but the demand is made that matters contained therein shall be separately dealt with in a note to Japan with the exception of Articles 3 and 7 which are postponed. Numerous Japanese advisers are to be engaged whenever any important situation may arise; Article 2 is unchanged; a delegation of Chinese military officials is to visit Japan and arrange with Japanese military authorities regarding the purchase of war supplies and the conduct of arsenals; the railways asked for are to be granted in so far as not already actually contracted for with Great Britain; in Fukien, no foreign Power is to establish a naval base, nor is China to borrow capital "of any other Power" for this purpose. The latter phrase embodied in the note to Japan would of course leave that Power free to act while excluding others.

The so-called withdrawal of Group V is therefore a mere form, leaving the substance of the demands unaffected.

Japan then offers to return Tsingtau on condition that it be an open port without a Chinese military station; that there be set aside a Japanese and an international settlement; and that the disposal of German public property in Tsingtau be settled by a subsequent conference between China and Japan. From the latter condition the Chinese surmise that the Japanese plan retaining the German forts and barracks as a part of the Japanese settlement.

The return of Tsingtau upon such conditions and with Japan entrenched in the hinterland through ownership of railways and mines and through general industrial preference is not considered by the Chinese as an advantage of more than merely formal value.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,

Director of Political Affairs in the Foreign Office informs me that the greater portion of the demands on China have been substantially agreed upon; that China has agreed in principle to ground tenure and residence in Manchuria, though the form of the agreement is still under discussion; and that the only serious question still unsettled is that of Eastern Mongolia. He says that while China so far has flatly refused to discuss the latter question, Japan is very determined, and that if China insists upon retaining this attitude the situation may yet become serious. He does not, however, anticipate open trouble.

He says that Japan still insists upon her demand as to munitions of war but that the question whether China shall buy of her, or whether jointly managed arsenals shall be established in China, will probably be left for future consideration. He says the question of the Han-yeh-ping mines "promises to be settled" by the agreement of China to recognize Japan's joint interest in and management of the mines in the future; that an understanding has been arrived at in the matter of Japanese advisers; and that agreement as to Fukien has been practically reached though its form has been left entirely to the discretion of Mr. Hioki. He says also that the question of railroad concessions south of the Yangtze must await settlement, in conference with the Powers interested, after the war; and that Japan has virtually decided if necessary to abandon the demand concerning joint policing. He reiterated that Japan, throughout all the negotiations, had most carefully avoided a conflict with the principle of equal opportunity.

The local press has been very generally denouncing Baron Kato's methods of negotiation and it is expected that the opposition will make a severe [interpellation?] upon the Government at the special session of the Diet to be convened on May 17.

*The Japanese Embassy to the Department of State.*⁴⁴

1. The proposals concerning the Province of Shantung have been agreed with some modification.

2. Several points concerning South Manchuria have been agreed. The question of residence and land tenure still remaining unsettled, the Imperial Government now make the following propositions:—

a. Japanese subjects shall be permitted in the region of South Manchuria to lease or buy land necessary either for erecting buildings of various kinds for commercial and industrial uses or for agricultural purposes.

b. Japanese subjects shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in the region of South Manchuria and carry on their business of various kinds, commercial, industrial and otherwise.

c. Referring to the preceding two provisions, Japanese subjects shall produce before Chinese local authorities passports duly issued and be registered by the said authorities. They shall also observe Chinese police laws or regulations approved by the Japanese consuls and pay to Chinese authorities taxes approved by the Japanese consuls.

In civil and criminal suits, the Japanese consul, where a Japanese subject is the defendant and the Chinese official, where a Chinese citizen is the defendant, shall respectively try and decide the case, both the Japanese consul and the Chinese official being permitted each to send his authorized agent to attend trial of the other and watch proceedings, provided that, in a civil suit concerning land between Japanese and Chinese, the case shall be examined and decided jointly by the Japanese consul and the Chinese official according to the laws and local customs of China; further, that in the future when the judicial system in the said region shall have been completely reformed, all civil and criminal suits involving Japanese subjects shall be wholly tried and decided by Chinese courts.

3. As regards Eastern Inner Mongolia, the Chinese Government are asked:—

First. To permit joint enterprises of Japanese and Chinese in agriculture and auxiliary industries;

Second. To consult Japan first in case China contemplates contracting either railway loans or loans to be secured by the taxes.

Third. To increase the number of open ports.

4. As regards the Han-yeh-p'ing Company, the Chinese Government shall engage:—

a. To approve agreement that may be concluded in future between the company and Japanese capitalist for its joint undertaking;

b. Not to confiscate it;

c. Not to nationalize it without consent of the interested Japanese capitalist;

d. Not to permit it to contract any foreign loan other than Japanese.

5. Non-alienation of the Chinese coast. The Imperial Government will be satisfied with declaration as suggested by the Chinese Government.

6. As to the other points, the following to be kept on record:—

a. That the Chinese Government will, in case of necessity in future, employ Japanese advisers.

b. That, in case Japanese subjects desire to lease or purchase land for the purpose of building schools and hospitals in the interior, the Chinese Government will permit them to do so.

c. That the Chinese Government will some day in the future send their military officers to Japan in order to make arrangements directly with Japanese military authorities either for the purpose of purchasing arms from Japan or for establishing arsenal in China under Japanese and Chinese management.

d. That the Chinese Government will grant to Japan the desired railway concessions in South China in case it becomes clear that there is no objection in this respect on the part of any other Power; or that the Chinese Government will refrain from entering into any agreement with any other party concerning the railway lines in question until Japan may, independently of the present negotiations with China, reach an agreement with the party whose interests are, in the opinion of the Chinese Government, opposed to the proposed lines.

e. That the question of the freedom of preaching by Japanese missionaries is left for future discussion.

The original proposal for joint administration of police is withdrawn.

As to Fukien Province, the Chinese Government engage in some form that they will not grant to any other Power the right to build shipyard, coaling or naval station or any other military establishment on or along the coast of Fukien Province, and, further, that the Chinese Government will not allow any such establishment to be built with any foreign capital on the coast of the said Province.

The above are the proposals which the Imperial Government have made in order to arrive at an early conclusion of the pending negotiations. If the Chinese Government accept them, the Imperial Government will, of their own accord, announce to the Chinese Government the restoration of Kiaochou to China, in the event of its being left at the free disposal of Japan as a result of treaty of peace, subject to certain conditions of which principal ones are as follows:

1. The opening of Tsingtao as a commercial port;
2. Establishment of Japanese concession in the locality to be designated by Japan;
3. Establishment, if requested by the Powers, of an international settlement;
4. Arrangement to be made between the Japanese and the Chinese Governments regarding the disposal of German public structures and properties.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

After the fullest consideration by the President and Cabinet, the Minister for Foreign Affairs on May 1 handed to Japanese Minister the reply to the revised demands.

The Chinese note disputes the charges of procrastination and insincerity made by Japan.

In connection with Shantung Group, all is granted with the counter-proposal regarding Article 1 asking participation in international conference for arrangement of altered status of Shantung, indemnification for losses consequent upon Tsingtau campaign and restoration of status quo ante bellum.

All Manchurian demands are met, with sole reservation that land cases be tried in Chinese court with Japanese assessor.

Three out of four Mongolian demands are accorded; namely, treaty ports, preference in railway loans, and engagement not to pledge local revenues. Demand for agricultural and industrial enterprises is rejected.

The last version of Hanyehping demand is accepted; namely, that Chinese Government will undertake not to make the company a Government-owned concern or allow the indebtedness to Japan to be paid off through foreign loans.

The Chinese Government again declared its inability to consider Group V but is ready to make a separate exchange of notes regarding non-alienation or mortgaging of Fukien harbors and naval stations.

When Japanese Minister queried regarding railway concessions the Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that national good faith prevented the Chinese Government from discussing this demand with Japan.

Minister for Foreign Affairs answered in the affirmative the question of the Japanese Minister whether these concessions were to be considered a maximum and whether he could inform his Government to that effect.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs also informed Japanese Minister that his Government, having gone to the utmost extent in a desire to prove its friendship for Japan by substantial concessions, would be compelled to place the whole situation before the Treaty Powers should Japan apply further pressure.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 4, 1915.

SIR: In connection with other reports as to the negotiations on the subject of the demands made upon China by Japan, and the conditions created in various parts of China by the political crisis thus induced, I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of certain documents.

The first of these documents is an extract (in translation) from the remarks with which the Japanese Minister accompanied the presentation of the demands to the President on January 18th last: it has been given to me from an authoritative source as an excerpt from the shorthand record made at the time of the interview, and may therefore be accepted as accurate.

The second enclosure is a translation of a memorandum in which the Japanese "Black Dragon Society" advocated a policy for the "solution of the Chinese question." This very able and illuminating memorandum could scarcely be the invention of a Chinese secret agent; nor is it likely that it could be a fabrication by any Chinese official, who in drafting such a forgery ex post facto would surely have sought to give it the greater plausibility by making its anticipations correspond more closely with the facts which have attended the presentation and insistence upon the demands. It would therefore seem that this paper may be accepted as what it professes to be—an expression of views by a Japanese political group interested in Chinese questions.

The policy recommended in the memorandum involves the following points: (1) To take advantage of China's present weakness and the preoccupation of the Powers, in order to enforce the Japanese programme; (2) to incite revolution as a means of disposing of the present Chinese administration; (3) to substitute a monarchical form of Government, patterned on the Japanese; (4) to form a defensive alliance with the Government so established, with certain special privileges in favor of Japan, and notably with certain provisions for protection and control which would constitute China a protectorate of Japan.

The action which has in fact been taken by Japan has corresponded with the first of these points.

The second of the points has formed the subject of direct threats by the Japanese Minister to the President and to the Chinese negotiators. The majority of the terms of the "defensive alliance" contemplated by the memorandum (referred to in the fourth point above) are included either in substance or in detail among the twenty-one demands which have actually been urged upon the Chinese Government. It is therefore not surprising, although the event may happily prove it unwarranted, that the highest and most responsible of Chinese officials accept as a working hypothesis the assumption that the aims and certain of the methods advocated in this memorandum have been "adopted in general by the Japanese," including those points which would make this country a dependency of Japan under a titular monarchy. * * *

In conclusion, I beg to reiterate the reserves with which I submit these documents. They are, in varying degrees, of doubtful authenticity; but I think that none of them is to be absolutely rejected from consideration, whereas some of them appear by internal evidence to justify their acceptance as of substantial accuracy.

Part of the conversation during the interview on January 18, 1915, between the Japanese Minister, Dr. Hioki, and President Yuan Shih-kai.

Furthermore, the Chinese revolutionists are in close touch and intimate relations with numerous irresponsible Japanese some of whom have great influence and whose policy is for strong measures. Our Government has not been influenced by this policy, but if your Government does not quickly agree to these stipulations, it will be impossible to prevent some of our irresponsible people from inciting the Chinese revolutionists to create trouble in China.

The majority of the Japanese people are also opposed to President Yuan and President Yuan's Government. They all declare that the President entertains anti-Japanese feeling and adopts the policy of "befriending the Far (Europe and America) and antagonizing the Near (Japan)." Japanese public opinion is therefore exceedingly hostile.

Our Government has all along from first to last exerted its best efforts to help the Chinese Government, and if the Chinese Government will speedily agree to these stipulations it will have thus manifested its friendship for Japan.

The Japanese people will then be able to say that the President never entertained anti-Japanese feelings nor adopted the policy of "befriending the Far and antagonizing the Near." Will not this then indeed be a bona fide proof of our friendly relations?

The Japanese Government also will then be inclined to render assistance to President Yuan's Government whenever it is necessary.

The policy advocated by the Japanese Hei Lung or Black Dragon Society in regard to the Solution of the Chinese Question, this society having been so called on account of the members having studied the situation in the Hei Lung Kiang Province in Manchuria.

I. THE EUROPEAN WAR AND THE CHINESE QUESTION.

The present gigantic struggle in Europe has no parallel in history. Not only will the equilibrium of Europe be affected and its effect felt all over the globe, but its results will create in the political and social world a new era. Therefore, whether or not the Imperial Japanese Government can settle the Far Eastern Question and bring to realization our great Imperial policy depends on our being able skillfully to avail ourselves of the world's general trend of affairs so as to extend our influence and decide upon a course of action towards China which shall be practical in execution. If our authorities and people view the present European war with indifference and without deep concern, merely devoting their attention to the attack on Kiaochow, neglecting the larger issues of the war, they will have brought to naught our great Imperial policy and committed a blunder greater than which cannot be conceived. We are constrained to submit this statement of policy for the consideration of our authorities, not because we are fond of argument but because we are deeply anxious for our national welfare.

No one at present can foretell the outcome of the European war. If the Allies meet with reverses and victory should crown the arms of the Germans and Austrians, German militarism will undoubtedly dominate the European continent and extend southward and eastward to other parts of the world. Should such a state of affairs happen to take place, the consequences resulting therefrom will be great indeed and extensive. On this account we must devote our most serious attention to the subject. If on the other hand, the Germans and Austrians should be crushed by the Allies, Germany will be deprived of her present status as a Federated State under a Kaiser. The Federation will be disintegrated into separate states, and Prussia will have to be content with the status of a second-rate power. Austria and Hungary, on account of this defeat, will consequently be divided. What their final fate shall be, no one would now venture to predict. In the meantime Russia will annex Galicia and Austrian Poland; France will repossess Alsace and Lorraine; Great Britain will occupy the German colonies in Africa and the South Pacific; Servia and Montenegro will take Bosnia, Herzegovina and a certain portion of Austrian territory; thus making such great changes in the map of Europe that even the Napoleonic war in 1815 could not parallel.

When these events take place, not only will Europe experience great changes, but we should not ignore the fact that they will occur also in China and the South Pacific. After Russia has replaced Germany in the territories lost by Germany and Austria, she will hold a controlling influence in Europe and for a long time to come will have nothing to fear from her western frontier. Immediately after the war she will make an effort to carry out her policy of expansion in the East and will not relax that effort until she has acquired a controlling influence in China. At the same time Great Britain will strengthen her position in the Yangtze Valley and prohibit any other country from getting a footing there. France will do likewise in Yunnan Province using it as her base of operations for further encroachments upon China and will never hesitate to extend her advantages.

We must therefore seriously study the situation, remembering always that the combined action of Great Britain, Russia and France will not only affect Europe but we can even foresee that it will also affect China.

Whether this combined action on the part of England, France and Russia is to terminate at the end of the war or to continue to operate, we cannot now predict. But after peace in Europe is restored, these Powers will certainly turn their attention to the expansion of their several spheres of interest in China, and, in the adjustment, their interests will most likely conflict with one another. If their interests do not conflict, they will work jointly to solve the Chinese Question. On this point we have not the least doubt.

If England, France and Russia are actually to combine for the coercion of China, what course is to be adopted by the Imperial Japanese Government to meet the situation? What proper means shall we employ to maintain our influence and extend our interests within this ring of rivalry and competition? It is necessary that we bear in mind the final results of the European war and forestall the trend of events succeeding it so as to be able to decide upon a policy towards China and determine the action ultimately to be taken. If we remain passive, the Imperial Japanese Government's policy towards China will lose that subjective influence and our diplomacy will be checked forever by the combined force of the other Powers. The peace of the Far East will be thus endangered and even the existence of the Japanese Empire as a nation will no doubt be imperiled.

It is therefore our first important duty at this moment to inquire of our Government what course is to be adopted to face the general situation after the war, what preparations are being made to meet the combined pressure of the Allies upon China. When the European war is terminated and peace restored we are not concerned so much with the question whether it is to be the Dual Monarchies or the Triple Entente which emerge victorious, but whether, in anticipation of the future expansion of European influence in the continents of Europe and Asia, the Imperial Japanese Government should or should not hesitate to employ force to check the movement before its occurrence. Now is the most opportune moment for Japan quickly to solve the Chinese Question. Such an opportunity will not occur for hundreds of years to come. Not only is it Japan's divine duty to act now, but present conditions in China favour the execution of such a plan. We should by all means decide and act at once. If our authorities do not avail themselves of this rare opportunity, great difficulty will surely be encountered in future in the settlement of the Chinese Question. Japan will be isolated from the European Powers after the war and will be regarded by them with envy and jealousy, just as Germany is now regarded. Is it not, then, a vital necessity for Japan to solve at this very moment the Chinese Question?

II. THE CHINESE QUESTION AND A DEFENSIVE ALLIANCE.

It is a very important matter of policy whether the Japanese Government, in obedience to its divine mission, shall solve the Chinese Question in a heroic manner by making China voluntarily rely upon Japan or by forcing her to a position where she is obliged to rely upon Japan. To force China to such a position there is nothing else for the Imperial Japanese Government to do but to take advantage of the present opportunity to seize the reins of political and financial power and to enter by all means into a defensive alliance with her under secret terms as enumerated below:

SECRET TERMS FOR A DEFENSIVE ALLIANCE.

The Imperial Japanese Government, with due respect for the sovereignty and integrity of China and with the object and hope of maintaining the peace of the Far East, undertakes to share the responsibility of cooperating with China to guard her against internal trouble and foreign invasion; and China shall accord Japan special facilities in the matter of China's national defence, or the protection of Japan's special rights and privileges; and for these objects the following treaty of alliance is entered into between the two contracting parties:

1. When there is internal trouble in China or when she is at war with another nation or nations, Japan shall send her army to render assistance, to assume the responsibility of guarding Chinese territory and to maintain peace and order in China.
2. China agrees to recognize Japan's privileged position in South Manchuria and Inner Mongolia and to cede the sovereign rights of those regions to Japan to enable her to carry out a scheme of local defence on a permanent basis.
3. After the Japanese occupation of Kiaochow, Japan shall acquire all the rights and privileges hitherto enjoyed by the Germans in regard to railways, mines and all other interests; and after peace and order is restored in Tsingtao, the place shall be handed back to China to be opened as an international treaty port.
4. For the maritime defence of China and Japan, China shall lease strategic harbors along the coast of the Fukien Province to Japan to be converted into naval bases, and grant to Japan in the said province all railway and mining rights.
5. For the reorganization of the Chinese army China shall entrust the training and drilling of the army to Japan.
6. For the unification of China's arms and munitions of war, China shall adopt arms of Japanese pattern and at the same time establish arsenals by the help of Japan in different strategic points.
7. With the object of creating and maintaining a Chinese navy, China shall entrust the training of her navy to Japan.
8. With the object of reorganizing her finances and improving the methods of taxation, China shall entrust the work to Japan and the latter shall select competent financial experts who shall act as first-class advisers to the Chinese Government.
9. China shall engage Japanese educational experts as educational advisers and extensively establish schools in different parts of the country to teach Japanese so as to raise the educational standard of the country.
10. China shall first consult with and obtain the consent of Japan before she can enter into an agreement with another Power for making loans, the leasing of territory, or the cession of the same.

From the date of the signing of this defensive alliance, Japan and China shall work together hand-in-hand. Japan will assume the responsibility of safeguarding Chinese territory and maintaining peace and order in China. This will relieve China of all future anxieties and enable her to proceed energetically with her reforms; and, with a sense of territorial security, she may wait for her national development and regeneration. Even after the present European war is over and peace is restored, China will absolutely have nothing to fear in the future of having pressure brought against her by foreign Powers. It is only thus that permanent peace can be secured in the Far East.

But before concluding this defensive alliance, two points must first be ascertained and settled. (1) Its bearing on the Chinese Government. (2) Its bearing on those Powers having intimate relations with and great interests in China.

In considering its effect on the Chinese Government, Japan must try to foresee whether the position of China's present ruler, Yuan Shih Kai, shall be permanent or not; whether the present Government's policy will enjoy the confidence of a large section of the Chinese people; whether Yuan Shih Kai will readily agree to the Japanese Government's proposal to enter into a treaty of alliance with us. These are points to which we are bound to give thorough consideration. Judging by the attitude hitherto adopted by Yuan Shih Kai, we know he has always resorted to the policy of expediency in his diplomatic dealings, and although he may now outwardly show a friendliness towards us, he will in fact rely upon the influence of the different Powers as the easiest check against us and refuse to accede to our demands. Take, for a single instance, his conduct towards us since the Imperial Government declared war against Germany and his action will then be clear to all. Whether we can rely upon the ordinary friendly methods of diplomacy to gain our object or not it does not require much wisdom to decide. After the gigantic struggle in Europe is over, leaving aside America, which will not press for advantages, China will not be able to obtain any loans from the other Powers. With a depleted treasury, without means to pay the officials and the army, with local bandits inciting the poverty-stricken populace to trouble, with the revolutionists waiting for opportunities to rise, should an insurrection actually occur while no outside assistance can be rendered to quell it, we are certain it will be impossible for Yuan Shih Kai, single handed, to restore order and consolidate the country. The result will be that the nation will be cut up into many parts beyond all hope of remedy. That this state of affairs will come is not difficult to foresee.

When this occurs, shall we uphold Yuan's Government and assist him to suppress the internal insurrection with the certain assurance that we could influence him to agree to our demands, or shall we help the revolutionists to achieve success and realize our object through them? This question must be definitely decided upon this very moment so that we may put it into practical execution. If we do not look into the future fate of China but go blindly to uphold Yuan's Government, to enter into a defensive alliance with China, hoping thus to secure a complete realization of our object by assisting him to suppress the revolutionists, is obviously a wrong policy. Why? Because the majority of the Chinese people have lost all faith in the tottering Yuan Shih Kai who is discredited and attacked by the whole nation for having sold his country. If Japan gives Yuan support, his Government, though in a very precarious state, may possibly avoid destruction. Yuan Shih Kai belongs to that school of politicians who are fond of employing craftiness and cunning. He may be friendly to us for a time, but he will certainly abandon us and again befriend the other Powers when the European war is at an end. Judging by his past we have no doubt as to what he will do in the future. For Japan to ignore the general sentiment of the Chinese people and support Yuan Shih Kai with the hope that we can settle with him the Chinese Question, is a blunder indeed. Therefore in order to secure the permanent peace of the Far East, instead of supporting a Chinese Government which can neither be long continued in power nor assist in the attainment of our object, we should rather support the 400,000,000 Chinese people to renovate their corrupt Government, change its present form, maintain peace and order in the land and usher into China a new era of prosperity so that China and Japan may in fact as well as in name be brought into the most intimate and vital relations with each other. China's era of prosperity is based on Chino-Japanese alliance and this alliance is the fundamental power for repelling the foreign aggression that is to be directed against the Far East at the conclusion of the European war. This alliance is also the foundation stone of the peace of the world. Japan should therefore take this as the last warning and immediately solve this question. Since the Imperial Japanese Government has considered it imperative to support the Chinese people, we should induce the Chinese Revolutionists, the Imperialists and other Chinese malcontents to create trouble all over China. The whole country will be thrown into disorder and Yuan's Government will consequently be overthrown. We shall then select a man from amongst the most influential and most noted of the 400,000,000 of Chinese and help him to organize a new form of government and consolidate the whole country. In the meantime our army must assist in the restoration of peace and order in the country, and in the protection of the lives and properties of the people, so that they may gladly tender their allegiance to the new government which will then naturally confide in and rely upon Japan. It is after the accomplishment of only these things that we shall without difficulty gain our object by the conclusion of a defensive alliance with China. For us to incite the Chinese revolutionists and malcontents to rise in China we consider the present to be the most opportune moment. The reason why these men can not now carry on an active campaign is because they are insufficiently provided with funds. If the Imperial Government can take advantage of this fact to make them a loan and instruct them to rise simultaneously, great commotion and disorder will surely prevail all over China. We can then intervene and easily adjust matters.

The progress of the European war warns Japan with greater urgency of the imperative necessity of solving this most vital of questions. The Imperial Government cannot be considered as embarking on a rash project. This opportunity will not repeat itself for our benefit. We must avail ourselves of this chance and under no circumstances hesitate. Why should we wait for the spontaneous uprising of the revolutionists and malcontents? Why should we not think out and lay down a plan beforehand?

When we examine into the form of Government in China, we must ask whether the existing Republic is well suited to the national temperament and well adapted to the thoughts and aspirations of the Chinese people. From the time the Republic of China was established up to the present moment, if what it has passed through is to be compared to what it ought to be in the matter of administration and unification, we find disappointment everywhere. Even the revolutionists themselves, the very ones who first advocated the republican form of government, acknowledge that they have made a mistake. The retention of the republican form of government in China will be a great future obstacle in the way of a Chino-Japanese alliance. And why must it be so? Because, in a republic, the fundamental principles of government as well as the social and moral aims of the people are distinctly different from that of a constitutional monarchy. Their laws and administration also conflict. If Japan act as a guide to China and China model herself after Japan, it will only then be possible for the two nations to solve by mutual effort the Far East Question without differences and disagreements. Therefore to start from the foundation for the purpose of reconstructing the Chinese Government, of establishing a Chino-Japanese alliance, of maintaining the permanent peace of the Far East and of realizing the consummation of Japan's Imperial policy, we must take advantage of the present opportunity to alter China's republican form of Government into a constitutional monarchy which shall necessarily be identical, in all its details, with the constitutional monarchy of Japan and with no other. This is really the key and first principle to be held firmly for the actual reconstruction of the form of Government in China.

If China changes her republican form of government to that of a constitutional monarchy, shall we, in the selection of a new ruler, restore the Emperor Hsuan T'ung to his throne, or choose the most capable man from the Monarchists, or select the most worthy member from among the Revolutionists? We think, however, that it is advisable at present to leave this question to the exigency of the future when the matter is brought up for decision. But we must not lose sight of the fact that to actually put into execution this policy of a Chino-Japanese alliance and the transformation of the Republic of China into a constitutional monarchy is, in reality, the fundament principle to be adopted for the reconstruction of China.

THE BEARING OF A DEFENSIVE ALLIANCE ON OTHER POWERS.

We shall now consider the bearing of this defensive alliance on the Powers. Needless to say, Japan and China will in no way impair the rights and interests already acquired by the Powers. At this moment it is of paramount importance for Japan to come to a special understanding with Russia to define our respective spheres of influence in Manchuria and Mongolia so that the two countries may cooperate with each other in the future. This means that Japan, after the acquisition of sovereign rights in South Manchuria and Inner Mongolia, will work together with Russia, after her acquisition of sovereign rights in North Manchuria and Outer Mongolia, to maintain the status quo, and endeavor by every effort to protect the peace of the Far East. Russia, since the outbreak of the European war, has not only laid aside all ill feelings against Japan, but has adopted the same attitude as her allies and shown warm friendship for us. No matter how we regard the Manchurian and Mongolian questions in the future, she is anxious that we find some way of settlement. Therefore we need not doubt that Russia, in her attitude towards this Chinese Question, will be able to come to an understanding with us for mutual cooperation.

The British sphere of influence and interest in China is centered in Tibet and the Yangtze Valley. Therefore if Japan can come to some satisfactory arrangement with China in regard to Tibet and also give certain privileges to Great Britain in the Yangtze Valley, with an assurance to protect those privileges, no matter how powerful Great Britain might be she will surely not oppose Japan's policy in regard to this Chinese Question. While this present European war is going on, Great Britain has even asked Japan to render her assistance. That her strength will certainly not enable her to oppose us in the future need not be doubted in the least.

Since Great Britain and Russia will not oppose Japan's policy towards China, it can readily be seen what attitude France will adopt in regard to the subject.

What Japan must now somewhat reckon with is America. But America in her attitude towards us regarding our policy towards China has already declared the principle of maintaining China's territorial integrity and equal opportunity and will be satisfied if we do not impair America's already acquired rights and privileges. We think America will also have no cause for complaint. Nevertheless America has in the East a naval force which can fairly be relied upon, though not sufficiently strong to be feared. Therefore in Japan's attitude towards America there is nothing really for us to be afraid of.

Since China's condition is such on the one hand and the Powers' relations towards China is such on the other hand, Japan should avail herself in the meantime of the European war definitely to decide upon a policy towards China, the most important move being the transformation of the Chinese Government to be followed up by preparing for the conclusion of the defensive alliance. The precipitate action on the part of our present Cabinet in acceding to the request of Great Britain to declare war against Germany without having definitely settled our policy towards China has no real connection with our future negotiations with China or affect the political condition in the Far East. Consequently all intelligent Japanese, in every walk of life throughout the land, are very deeply concerned about the matter.

Our Imperial Government should now definitely change our dependent foreign policy which is being directed by others, into an independent foreign policy which shall direct others, proclaiming the same with solemn sincerity to the world and carrying it out with determination. If we do so, even the gods and spirits will give way. There are important points in our policy towards China and the result depends on how we carry them out. Can our authorities firmly make up their mind to solve this Chinese Question by the actual carrying out of this fundamental principle? If they show irresolution while we have this heaven-conferred chance and merely depend on the good will of the other Powers, we shall eventually have greater pressure brought against the Far East after the European war is over, when the present equilibrium will be destroyed. That day will then be too late for us to repent our folly. We are therefore impelled by force of circumstances to urge our authorities to a quickened sense of the situation and to come to a determination.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 4, 1915.

SIR: In continuation of my despatch No. 597 of April 5, I have the honor to report on the progress of the negotiations between China and Japan:

The slow progress of the negotiations is partly due to the inherent difficulty and complexity of the interests and enterprises which form the subject-matter of the demands. It cannot be justly charged that the Chinese Government followed a policy of obstruction and delay; on the contrary, there has probably never been a negotiation in China in which questions of such vast scope were disposed of with similar expedition. At the beginning of April the far-reaching concessions regarding South Manchuria and Shantung, as well as the coastal non-alienation agreement, had practically been settled. The Manchurian question was kept open upon the matter of jurisdiction in police and land cases involving Japanese settlers in the interior. A copy of a memorandum of the Chinese Government was forwarded in my despatch No. 598 of the 5th ultimo; and a copy of a subsequent memorandum, handed to the Japanese Minister by the Minister for Foreign Affairs on April 15, is transmitted herewith. It was suspected that the action of the Japanese Government in again and again adjourning the discussion of this matter in detail was probably due to a desire to keep the question of South Manchuria open in order to afford an opportunity of further committing the Chinese Government on the demands contained in Group V.

On these latter demands the Chinese Government throughout consistently took the position that they could not be considered since they involve action inconsistent with the administrative integrity and independence of China, or with treaty obligations to foreign powers, or both. Yielding to the insistent pressure of the Japanese Minister, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, however, consented informally to discuss some of the reasons why the Chinese Government could not make these grants; in the course of this conversation the Japanese Minister repeatedly attempted to treat the statements of the Minister for Foreign Affairs as admissions to be made part of the protocol. As an example of this, I may give the conversation concerning Buddhist missionary rights in China. The Japanese Minister queried on what general principle Buddhist missionaries from Japan should be excluded while Christian missionaries from Western countries were admitted. The Minister for Foreign Affairs, after alluding to the fact that as China was herself a Buddhist country it was natural that special arrangements might be made with respect to the representatives of some other religion, stated that this would not apply to Buddhists from neighboring countries; and further pointed out that the continuance of extraterritoriality would bring about many difficulties in connection with the free admission of Japanese Buddhist propagandists. He then stated that as far as any general principle was concerned, his Government had, of course, none to urge against Buddhist religious work; but that in this particular matter the difficulties which might arise would be rather of a local nature, as a special situation existed in each of the provinces or localities in China. The Japanese Minister then immediately asked that the statement that the Chinese Government had no objection on general principle to the admission of Japanese Buddhist missionaries be embodied in the formal protocol. The Minister for Foreign Affairs declined to allow this to be done, stating that the Chinese Government could not make any formal admissions in this matter; that his statements must be taken in the spirit of the general conversation as explaining the difficulties which his Government would experience should it give up its liberty of action in this matter. Nevertheless, the Japanese Minister insisted upon this part of the minutes being initialed by the secretaries.

At the conference of May 1 the Minister for Foreign Affairs pointed out that the phraseology in certain of the demands of Group V in the revised list of Japan was based on expressions which he had employed in the course of conversations when he was explaining the reasons why it was impossible for China to negotiate this particular group; and he again insistently emphasized, as had been done at the time, that these conversations were in no way to be considered as implying a formal discussion and possibly involving admissions of principle, but that they had been entered into with the explicit declaration that no such admissions could be made and that the conversations should be considered as an informal explanation by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the necessities under which the Chinese Government acted.

During the discussion of the demand relating to the Province of Fukien very pointed references were made to a "certain Power," understood by all present as referring to the United States of America. It was stated that it was of equal importance to China and to Japan to have a complete assurance that any efforts of this "certain Power" to obtain a foothold in Fukien Province through getting control, directly or indirectly, of any of the naval bases there should be frustrated. It was urged that the time was favorable for the making of an arrangement by which this "certain Power" would be excluded from the possibility of obtaining such a foothold; the present administration was stated to be favorable to the withdrawal of American pretensions, but that it was uncertain whether such pretensions would not again be taken up by some future administration.

When the demand for railway grants south of the Yangtze River was under discussion, the Japanese Minister insisted that if concessions which had in the past been asked for by Japanese had actually been granted to another Power, this of itself constituted a proof of the unfriendliness of China towards Japan. The Minister for Foreign Affairs pointed out that negotiations had never been seriously taken up with any Japanese concerning these railway lines. Thereupon the Japanese Minister advanced the proposal that China should grant these railway concessions to Japan and leave it to the latter to come to an agreement with Great Britain concerning any conflicting claims which might arise.

On April 26, after an intermission of one week in the negotiations, the Japanese Minister handed to the Chinese Government a revised list of demands which is reported in my telegram of April 27, 8 p. m. The statement regarding the Han-yeh-ping Company was later modified, as a mistake had been made in the decoding of the instructions to the Japanese Legation. As it now stands, it would involve a declaration favorable to the formation of a joint company with Japan, the Chinese Government binding itself not to transform the company into a state-owned concern nor to allow the company to borrow money abroad for the repayment of the debts owing to Japan.

The formal "withdrawal" of Group V is accompanied by a re-statement of the principles therein contained which, in the view of the Chinese Government, would render such concessions no less fatal to Chinese independence and administrative integrity. The appointment of Japanese advisers in administrative and military affairs, the purchase of war supplies, the conduct of arsenals, and railway concessions south of the Yangtze River, are demands which are retained under a slightly modified form, but none the less dangerous to China's independence. The Chinese Government has therefore decided to continue its unqualified refusal to entertain these demands. Nor did the formal return of Tsingtau, coupled with conditions which render it of no concrete value to the Chinese Government, appear to be an offer which could be considered a valid quid pro quo for any important concessions on the part of China.

After deliberating throughout the week and taking the counsel of all his Ministers and important advisers, the President decided to adhere to his original position that, after making unprecedented concessions with respect to Manchuria, Eastern Mongolia, Shantung, and the Han-yeh-ping Company, it would be impossible for the Chinese Government to grant the still more general rights and privileges asked for in Group V. Being extremely desirous to maintain the best of relations with Japan, the Chinese Government nevertheless was convinced that, if Japan was acting in good faith as a friend of China, the far-reaching concessions now offered would be satisfactory to her; but that if it were the desire of the Japanese Government to exceed these limits and to follow a policy of subjugating China, then the attempt to buy peace by making further concessions inconsistent with the independence of China would be futile, because it was to be foreseen that in such a case concessions would not buy immunity but would tend to encourage further exactions. The Chinese Government is convinced that on account of its desire to befriend and satisfy Japan, too much rather than too little has already been granted, from the point of view of China's national interest; and that it would be impossible for the Chinese Government to assume, in the face of the Chinese people whose rights it holds in trust, the responsibility for yet more extensive concessions which would permanently shackle her freedom of national development.

As is probably known to the Department, the English version of the full text of the Japanese demands, including Group V, was published late in April in the Japan Mail, the semi-official Tokyo paper. During the recent past, high Chinese officials have frequently stated to me that it is their great desire that the American people should be fully informed of the facts regarding the attack now being made upon China's liberties, because they have the conviction that the public opinion of the world, and especially of the United States, is a great force which will in the long run operate to defeat any policy of injustice.

[Inclosure—Translation.]

MEMORANDUM HANDED TO THE JAPANESE MINISTER BY THE MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS, APRIL 15, 1915.

It is a fact that in Manchuria there exist special regulations governing grant of land for reclamation, and custom and usage relating to lease of land for farming. In recent years there have been instances of leasing land to foreigners for reclamation or farming. In such instances there are always written contracts, the terms of which are not all the same. To make regulations for reclamation and farming in future means only to reduce the existing customs and usage to what is permitted by custom and usage will be chosen as a standard. Based upon customary practice, to be observed by Chinese and foreigners alike, these new regulations will naturally have reasonableness as their principle and avow [show?] discrimination. These are points for which the Chinese Government can give an assurance.

By the phrase "police laws or ordinances" are meant the existing police laws of China which have been in force throughout the entire country for many years. "Taxes" also mean the taxes now in force. These being all matters relating to China's internal administration, it is impossible to subject them to the necessity of having them recognized by a Japanese consul first, thereby setting a vicious precedent to have the laws of China subjected to recognition by foreign consuls. Moreover the fact that Japan agrees to have Japanese settlers in South Manchuria submit to Chinese taxation and police laws clearly shows that she knows that there already exist police and tax laws in China which Japanese settlers are to observe. There is, then, no reason why Japan should ask to approve the police and tax laws which are already in force.

Regarding the question of jurisdiction, China has amended her counter-proposal many times. According to the most recent amendment, both civil and criminal cases are to be arranged in accordance with treaty. Compared with the original idea, suggested by China, of abolishing consular jurisdiction in return for the right of residence in the interior, this amendment is again a great concession. In Turkey, where consular jurisdiction prevails, civil cases between Ottoman and British subjects, regardless of whether the latter are plaintiffs or defendants, are tried and adjudicated by Turkish tribunals. In cases where the ownership of real property is involved, foreigners are treated in the same manner as Ottoman subjects and are directly amenable to the Ottoman civil courts, both as plaintiffs and defendants. Even when both parties to the case are foreigners, they are subject to the same jurisdiction, without availing themselves of personal nationality. (Vide Law of Turkey, June 18, 1867, and Protocol of July 28, 1868.) The modus operandi which China has suggested for cases involving land disputes is based upon only one phase of the Turkish system. The method of dealing with criminal and civil cases as conceded by China is far from anything like what exists in Turkey. And since your excellency has declared that Chinese law and custom will be followed in adjudicating cases of land disputes, there is still less need for trial by a mixed tribunal. It is therefore hoped that the Japanese Government will appreciate the sincerity of the Chinese Government and not find a pretext again in consular jurisdiction to decline this most liberal concession.

The Chinese Government believe that the concessions outlined above are most reasonable and generous and hope that your excellency will be so good as to transmit the same to your Government and request them to take the matter into careful consideration and speedily express their concurrence, to the end that this question may be soon settled.

[Telegram.]

MAY 6, 1915.

The reply the Chinese Government made on May 1⁴⁶ to the amended proposals which the Imperial Government had recently addressed to the former was unsatisfactory and extremely disappointing, even containing, among other things, certain points where-in attempt is made to upset what has already been settled and to formulate fresh provisions prejudicial to our interests. In point of fact, the amended proposals, formulated and presented in a most conciliatory and accommodating spirit, have resulted, quite contrary to expectation, in a retrogression of the situation. Were the present contentions of the Chinese Government to be acceded to in their entirety, the original object of our negotiations with China would, in effect, be set at naught. Nevertheless, Chinese authorities unequivocally declared that their present counter-proposals are final and that there is no room left for any modification whatever.

Later, on May 5, the Chinese Government sent an official of the Foreign Office to our Minister at Peking, and intimated unofficially that they will withdraw the last reply and will continue conference under an understanding that China, on her part, would accord further consideration to our last amended proposals. But what was stated on that occasion was, as hitherto, vague and indefinite, only manifesting an idle attempt at further procrastination and revealing more than ever the lack of sincerity.

Although it has been deemed that there is left scarcely any room for further continuation of the negotiations in the circumstances, the Imperial Government have, nevertheless, decided to address a fresh communication to the Chinese Government, and to request a reconsideration of their position. This decision is based solely on a sincere desire on the part of the Imperial Government to spare no pains in bringing the negotiations to an amicable conclusion, and thereby to avert complication of the situation.

The Imperial Government entertain an earnest hope that China, mindful of importance to preserve peace in the Far East and sensible of the broader aspect of the situation, will find her way, upon reflection, to accept, within the time limit set, the proposals as finally modified. In the untoward eventuality, however, of receiving no satisfactory answer from the Chinese Government before the time limit expires, the Imperial Government would be left no course but to resort, however much against their inclination, to a measure they consider necessary for maintaining and safeguarding Japan's position in the Far East.

The Imperial Government hope that the Government to which you are accredited will fully appreciate the situation as above set forth.

[Annex 1.]

Chinese counter-demands relating to Kiao-chau.

1. Unconditional restitution to China of the leased territory of Kiao-chau.
2. Agreement by Japan to the participation of China in the peace conference to be held between Japan and Germany.
3. The Japanese Government to bear the entire damages incident to the hostilities between Japan and Germany.
4. Immediate removal of all the Japanese military establishments connected with the hostilities between Japan and Germany; and prompt withdrawal of the troops from within the occupied territory.

[Annex 2.]

The time limit fixed for reply to the last communication of the Japanese Government to the Chinese Government is 6 p. m. of May 9.

Five out of the six items in Group V as they appeared in the amended proposals are now proposed to be detached from the negotiations subject to future discussion. The only item left is that concerning the Province of Fukien, with regard to which an agreement as to exchanges of notes has already been reached between the representatives of the two Governments. Another item in the same group in the original proposals, relating to police administration, was withdrawn in the amended proposals, substance of which was communicated to the Honorable the Secretary of State on April 30, 1915.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 6, 1915—7 p. m.

The following notice was given to the press this evening for release May 7:

In order that there may be no misunderstanding of the position of the United States in reference to the negotiations pending between Japan and China the following announcement is made:

At the beginning of negotiations the Japanese Government confidentially informed this Government of the matters which were under discussion and accompanied the information by the assurance that Japan had no intention of interfering with either the political independence or territorial integrity of China, and that nothing that she proposed would discriminate against other Powers having treaties with China, or interfere with the "Open Door" policy to which all the leading nations are committed.

This Government has not only had no thought of surrendering any of its treaty rights with China, but it has never been asked by either Japan or China to make any surrender of these rights. There is no abatement of its interest in the welfare and progress of China and its sole interest in the present negotiations is that they may be concluded in a manner satisfactory to both nations, and that the terms of the agreement will not only contribute to the prosperity of both of these great Oriental empires but maintain that cordial relationship so essential to the future of both, and to the peace of world.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 6, 1915—1 a. m.

The situation remains unchanged. Japanese subjects are under orders leaving Canton, Hankow and other centers; are being concentrated in the Mukden railway settlement; and in Peking are making preparations for leaving. At Tsinanfu new entrenchments were constructed last night. A Japanese cruiser and four destroyers have appeared off Chinwangtao. Conditions in China remain entirely normal, quiet and peaceful.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 6, 1915—noon.

An ultimatum was received here by the Japanese Legation today and is to be delivered tomorrow afternoon. Meanwhile in order to avert its presentation, the Chinese Government has offered further important concessions which nearly reach the full measure of the revised demands presented by Japan April 26. These the Japanese refuse to consider, giving the Chinese to understand that the ultimatum will call for an unconditional yes or no.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 7, 1915—7 p. m.

Japanese Minister this afternoon handed to the Minister of Foreign Affairs an ultimatum in the form of a further revised set of demands to be accepted categorically by 6 p. m., May 9. It is surprising that these demands were presented in the form of an ultimatum, being in fact almost identical with those conceded by China as reported in my telegram of May 3, 4 p. m.,⁴⁸ and on the surface less exigent than those which this Government informally offered to concede yesterday as reported in my telegram May 6, midnight. All the articles of Group V of the original demands except the omissions [Sic: one?] relating to Fukien are now marked "discussion postponed" which at any rate temporarily removes them from the discussion although somewhat ominously putting them on record as outstanding questions. I am informed that other modifications in the demands as presented April 26 are unimportant.

2062. Sir Edward Gray informs me that he gave the following memorandum to the Japanese Ambassador here yesterday:

His Majesty's Government are very much concerned at the prospect of a war between China and Japan. They feel this may imperil the independence and integrity of China which is one of the main objects of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. In view of Article 1 of the alliance, we trust that the Japanese Government will not finally shut the door upon the possibility of agreements with China without consulting with us and giving us an opportunity of promoting a friendly settlement.

Sir Edward Gray further informs me that the Japanese Government have withdrawn the demands classified under Group V and left them for subsequent discussion and settlement, thus leaving a way open for the Chinese acceptance of the demands as they now stand.

Sir Edward Gray expressed the hope today to the Chinese Minister that his Government would find itself able to accept them.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 9, 1915—1 a. m.

As your May 6 was delayed in transmission I had been already informed at the time of receiving it that the Chinese Government, recognizing its inability to resist the military forces of Japan, would accede to the ultimatum.

A meeting of the Cabinet and Council of State lasting several hours today formally adopted this decision and an answer to that effect was delivered to Japanese Legation tonight. This was indeed the only alternative possible, for, although the Chinese Government feels that its rights have been cruelly overridden, its military unpreparedness made it necessary to yield to threats of Japan.

The Japanese have in the ultimatum given the objectionable demands in the fifth group the status of unfinished business to be negotiated later. It is especially significant that the Japanese refused to accept the first draft of the Chinese answer which was delivered to them at eight o'clock this evening and which contained a formula indicating that the pending questions have been disposed of; the Japanese insisted that the future negotiations of the demands in Group V should be specifically promised. The Chinese then gave a categorical assent to the ultimatum. This shows that it is by no means Japan's intention to give up the demands of Group V and that an early resumption of pressure on these demands may be expected.

As the Chinese military leaders themselves recognize the necessity of submitting to the Japanese and are supporting the President in his painful act it is probable that no organized movement against the Government will occur although popular feeling is likely to run high when the extent of the concessions becomes known.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 14, 1915—4 p. m.

In communicating to the Minister for Foreign Affairs yesterday afternoon the note incorporated in your telegram May 11, 5 p. m., which he received with the statement that it had been his earnest endeavor to secure observance of the treaty rights, I took occasion to suggest that the definitive treaty which is to embody the results of the negotiations should contain an article expressly stipulating that none of its provisions should be so construed as to impair the political or territorial integrity of China or the principle of equality of commercial opportunity.

Inasmuch as the explanatory memorandum accompanying the Japanese ultimatum of the 7th instant contained a suggestion that a secret agreement should be concluded in regard to the approval by the Japanese authorities of all Chinese tax and police regulations affecting residence of Japanese subjects in Manchuria, I intimated to the Minister for Foreign Affairs that as under the most-favored-nation principle the United States would be entitled to claim similar treatment it would expect to be advised of the terms of any such arrangement. I beg to request authorization to supplement yesterday's note by a further communication formally requesting to be advised of any arrangement which may result from the present negotiations with Japan by which the Chinese Government may imply any change in the status and rights of foreigners resident in China, in order that the Government of the United States may be in a position to determine and to claim for its citizens all rights thus accruing to them under the principle of most-favored-nation treatment.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 17, 1915.

SIR: In continuation of my despatch No. 617 of May 4, I have the honor to transmit for your information copies of a number of documents connected with the ultimatum of May 7 which closed the negotiations between China and Japan.

1. The first document contains the proposal for a settlement which was advanced by the Japanese Minister on April 26 and was then stated to contain the minimum which the Japanese Government could accept.⁵¹

2. On May 1 the Minister for Foreign Affairs met the Japanese Minister in conference and read to him a memorandum in which he argued that the Chinese Government had given ample proof of its friendliness and sincerity towards Japan through the extensive concessions which it had offered and in which he gave the reasons for withholding assent to other demands.⁵²

3. At the same time the Minister for Foreign Affairs handed to the Japanese Minister a statement of the maximum of concessions which the Chinese Government was ready to make.⁵¹

4. On May 7 at 3 p. m. the Japanese Minister handed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs a memorandum which was in fact an ultimatum with acceptance limited to fifty-one hours, in which there was demanded the acceptance without alteration of all the articles of Groups I, II, III, and IV in the Japanese revised list of demands of April 26, together with an exchange of notes in connection with Fukien Province.⁵¹

5. This ultimatum was accompanied by an explanatory note in which various points of detail were discussed.⁵¹

6. At midnight of the 8th of May the reply of the Chinese Government accepting the ultimatum unconditionally was delivered to the Japanese Minister.⁵¹

7. As the Japanese Government had issued a statement⁵³ concerning the negotiations, a copy of which is enclosed, the Chinese Government on May 13 issued a statement in which its position is fully explained.⁵²

8. Enclosure No. 8 also contains a number of the other texts herein separately enclosed which have been left together for convenience in reference.

9. On May 13 the President issued a mandate based upon a memorial received from the Tsan Cheng Yuan or Council of State in which it is declared to be the policy of the Chinese Government that "hereafter no part of the coast or any port, bay or island thereof, will be ceded or leased to any foreign country."⁵⁴

⁵¹ Printed as an inclosure to note of July 6 from the Chinese Minister, post, p. 187; see also inclosure to dispatch, dated June 8, 1915, from the American Chargé d'Affaires at Tokyo, p. 163, post.

⁵² Printed as an inclosure to the note of July 6 from the Chinese Minister, p. 190

⁵³ The text of the Japanese statement, as circulated in China by Reuter's Telegraph Agency, is printed as inclosure 3.

⁵⁴ Inclosure 1.

10. I am further enclosing a copy of a telegram sent by the President to the provincial authorities on May 5, in which certain instructions are given with respect to the attitude and behavior of officials and people during the critical period.⁵⁵

11. I am also enclosing a copy of an editorial concerning the official statements of China and Japan.¹⁷

When it had been made known that an ultimatum would be delivered, the Chinese officials were much perplexed as to whether it was wiser quietly to await the delivery of the ultimatum or to attempt by further concessions to placate the Japanese. During the six days from May 3 to May 7 councils were held at the President's residence almost daily. I have been informed that on May 5, which is the diplomatic reception day at the Foreign Office, the Ministers of Great Britain, Russia and France took occasion to express to the Minister of Foreign Affairs their opinion that it would be wise for China not to attempt armed resistance to the demands of Japan. During May 6 certain conversations were held between the Japanese Legation and the Foreign Office; I was informed that the Counsellor of the Japanese Legation stated to the Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs that if China had further proposals to make it might be possible for the Legation to intercede. The Chinese Foreign Office, presumably with the consent of the President, thereupon offered to make further concessions on the points contained in Group V. Although the Chinese fully realized that the Japanese Government had put itself in a position where it could not urge the demands of Group V by force of arms, they were so panic-stricken at the idea of an ultimatum that they were willing to buy the assurance of peace by foregoing every tactical advantage which they held in the negotiations. The Japanese Legation then stated that the instructions of the Japanese Government left no alternative but the presentation of the ultimatum, which was carried out on May 7 at 3 p. m.

The Chinese were now astonished and chagrined to find that the demands of Group V were not urged in the ultimatum; but their annoyance at having unnecessarily committed themselves too far the day before was compensated by a sense of relief because the terms of the ultimatum at first sight seemed so moderate. In the first fullness of satisfaction and relief the Chinese were inclined to understand the stipulation that "The demands of Group V will be detached from the present negotiations and discussed separately in the future" as an adroit manner of abandoning those troublesome questions. They were, however, soon to learn that this hopeful interpretation was not in accord with the ideas of the Japanese Legation.

In the discussions preceding the delivery of the ultimatum there had been a very strong party, in which the leading military men were included, favoring resistance to the Japanese demands. Violent scenes are said to have taken place in the council during these discussions. The party favoring resistance argued that, while China was not prepared to wage war successfully against Japan, submission would mean national disintegration and would rob the Government of all authority and popular support while resistance would rally national feeling and make it possible to obstruct the Japanese advance until, with the ending of the European war, help from abroad could be expected. The strongest representations were made to the President to determine him toward this course of action. When the ultimatum had been delivered, however, the military party realized that it would be decidedly impolitic to offer resistance in view of the fact that the most objectionable demands had been postponed. They therefore assured the President of their support in the disagreeable duty of accepting the ultimatum.

¹⁷ Not printed.

May 8 was taken up with the drafting of the Chinese reply to the ultimatum. The Chinese Foreign Office realized that a certain advantage could be gained by giving the answer a form which would imply the abandonment of the demands under Group V. This would have been accomplished by stating that the Chinese Government accepted the demands of Group I, II, III and IV and was willing to make an exchange of notes respecting Fukien; and that it trusted that in this way a settlement of the pending questions had been effected. But the form chosen included the phrase "with the exception of the five articles in the fifth group." The Japanese Legation had expressed a desire to see the answer before it was formally submitted. When they saw the wording chosen by the Chinese they insisted that after the clause as quoted there should be inserted the words "which are to be discussed in the future." In this way it was made perfectly clear that the Japanese Government had no idea of relinquishing the demands in Group V but that they had been given the character of unfinished business to be taken up at a future date. The tactical mistake of the Chinese Government was probably due to a desire to appear explicitly to refuse certain concessions.

When the acceptance of the ultimatum was announced there came from all parts of China many strong expressions of disapproval; but so far, with the exception of slight anti-Japanese outbreaks at Hankow on May 14 and at Chinkiang on May 16, no popular movements have been reported.

The Presidential mandate with respect to the non-alienation of places along the coast represents the effort of the Chinese to solve this question in such a way as not to commit themselves to the Japanese Government as a protecting power.

Presidential mandate concerning the non-alienation of the coasts of China.

May 13, 1915.

MEMORIAL FROM THE TS'AN CHENG YUAN.

During the last days of the Ch'ing régime when the power and influence of the nation were on the decline, the coast was the scene of many military activities. Consequently some parts of the coast were either ceded while others were leased to foreign countries; thus many strategic points fell into the hands of foreign countries and the means of defense were practically lost to China, whose people have since not been able to enjoy peace. This is directly in conflict with the principle of defending the country by occupying the strategical points. We therefore suggest to the Government that at this time when our country has just passed through a period of suffering and pain, we should profit by past experience and make plans for the future. An open order should be given to the Ministries of War and Navy as well as the provincial authorities to give special attention to coast defence, so that the people residing in these regions may live in peace in their homes and pursue their occupations. A declaration should be made to the world that hereafter no part of the coast or islands, bays or ports thereof shall be ceded or leased to any foreign country, with a view that the nation will be at ease, that its defense is secure while peace may reign among the different countries. This problem was brought up for discussion at a meeting held on May 12 and unanimously passed. We hereby respectfully present this suggestion for promulgation, etc.

PRESIDENT'S RESCRIPT.

Since the coast regions are in close relations with national defence and should be well guarded beforehand, the suggestion of the Ts'an Cheng Yuan is indeed farsighted. It is hereby promulgated. Hereafter no part of the coast or any port, bay or island thereof will be ceded or leased to whatever foreign country. The Ministries of War and Navy as well as the provincial authorities of the coast provinces are hereby instructed to be specifically responsible for the defence of the same so that the sovereignty of the nation may be consolidated.

President's telegram to Provinces.

PEKING, May 5, 1915.

1. In order to give no pretext to Japan to commence hostilities against our country, it is absolutely necessary for the high provincial authorities to devise means to prevent any anti-Japanese demonstrations or riots, while at the same time great care should be taken by them and their subordinates to induce the people to love their own Fatherland so that in case of necessity the masses know how to defend their own homes against alien aggression.

2. If the people know how to love their own country, then they know how to use the native products of their Fatherland without any collective demonstration against foreign goods. Hence the improvement of native products is not prohibited by the Government; but any useless demonstration or talk about boycott of foreign merchandise is strictly forbidden at this critical moment.

3. The publication of patriotic announcements or speeches or any printed matters concerning the improvement and extension of native products are not prohibited by the Government; but in order to prevent bad characters or fiendish elements to mix themselves in the company of well-to-do merchants and people to make mischief for attaining their selfish ends, provincial authorities are hereby ordered to pay their full attention to inflict certain restrictions according to the existing conditions of their respective districts so as to confine the patriotic people of our country to the right path.

In conclusion, the President adds that the people of the 20th century should know how to love and respect their own Fatherland and die for it in case of emergency; but in the case of individuals, they should respect foreigners; any anti-foreign demonstrations or riots are greatly despised as senseless and barbarous by the civilized world. Hence, in the midst of our perils, we must exert our best to gain the sympathy and respect of foreigners. Sensible and educated men will certainly at once know the real intention and idea of the Central Government in handling the most delicate situation so that the Civil Governors and Chiang-chuns must strictly adhere to these instructions.

[From the Far Eastern Review of May 1915.]

Japan's Communiqué, issued by the Japanese Government from Tokyo on May 7 and circulated by Reuter's Telegraph Agency.

The Imperial Government have, in the demands lately presented to the Chinese Government, made it the main object to adjust matters to meet the new situation created by the war between Japan and Germany and to bring closer the friendly relations subsisting between Japan and China and thus insure the permanent peace of the Far East. In formulating these demands, they have taken special care to avoid those which might have been deemed to conflict with the principles of territorial integrity, equal opportunity and the open door which Japan has from time to time declared to the Powers in regard to China. Accordingly these demands include among others those relating to the disposition of German rights in Shantung; those relating to the recognition of the special position and interests of Japan in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, and those relating to the solution of various questions which for many years have been pending between the Japanese and Chinese Governments.

GROUP I contains demands relating to the Province of Shantung.

The first article demands an engagement on the part of China to consent to all matters which may be agreed upon between the Japanese Government and the German Government with regard to the disposition of all rights, interests and concessions which in virtue of treaties or otherwise Germany possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

The second article demands an engagement on the part of China not to alienate or lease to another Power the province of Shantung or any portion of it or any island lying near the coast of the said province.

Article 3. China shall grant to Japan the right of construction of a railway connecting Chefoo or Lungkou with the Tsinanfu-Kiaochow Railway.

Article 4. The Chinese Government shall open the principal cities of the province of Shantung for the residence and trade of foreigners.

GROUP II contains demands relating to South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia.

The first article demands the extension of the terms of lease of Port Arthur and of the South Manchuria and Antung-Mukden Railways to a period of ninety-nine years.

The second article demands that Japanese subjects shall be permitted to lease or own land necessary either for erecting buildings of various kinds for commercial and industrial uses or for agricultural purposes.

The third article demands that Japanese subjects shall be permitted to reside, travel and carry on business of various kinds, commercial, industrial or otherwise.

The fourth article demands that Japanese subjects shall be granted the mining rights of certain specified mines.

The fifth article demands that the consent of the Japanese Government shall be obtained in advance when China proposed to grant a railway concession to subjects of a third Power or to procure a supply of capital from a third Power for the construction of a railway or to raise a loan from such Power on the security of duties or taxes.

The sixth article demands that the Japanese Government shall be consulted before the engaging of advisers or instructors regarding political, financial or military matters.

Article 7 demands that the management and control of the Kirin-Changchung Railway shall be transferred to Japan for the term of ninety-nine years.

GROUP III contains demands relating to the Hanyehping Company.

The first article demands that having regard to the close relations between Japanese capitalists and this company, the Chinese Government shall agree to the placing of the company under joint Japanese and Chinese management and not to dispose or permit the company to dispose, without the consent of Japan, any rights or property belonging to the company.

The second article demands that owing to the necessity for the protection of the interests of Japanese capitalists, the Chinese Government shall engage not to permit, without the consent of the company, any one other than the company to work the mines situated in the neighborhood of those belonging to the company and also to obtain previous consent in case it is proposed to take measures which may be deemed to affect the company directly or indirectly.

GROUP IV contains demands relating to the non-alienation of the coast of China or islands off the coast.

The Chinese Government shall engage not to alienate or lease to a third Power any ports or bays on, or islands off, the Coast of China.

GROUP V. Propositions relating to the solution of pending questions and others.

Article 1. The Central Chinese Government must engage influential Japanese as political, financial and military advisers.

Article 2. The Chinese Government must recognize the right of Japanese to land for building Japanese hospitals, temples and schools in the interior of China.

Article 3. The police in localities where such arrangements are necessary must be placed under joint Japanese and Chinese administration, or else Japanese must be employed as police officers in such localities.

Article 4. China must obtain from Japan a supply of a certain quantity of arms, or else must establish arsenals in China, under joint Japanese and Chinese management, and these must be supplied with experts and material from Japan.

Article 5. Japan must be given the right to construct a railway connecting Wuchang with the Kiukiang-Nanchang line and with the Nanchang-Hangchow railways.

Article 6. In view of the relations between the Province of Fukien and Formosa and the agreement respecting the non-alienation of Fukien, Japan must be consulted whenever foreign capital is needed in connection with railways, mines and harbor works, including dockyards.

Article 7. The Chinese Government must recognise the right of preaching by the Japanese in China.

With regard to the Province of Shantung, China absolutely lacks, it is clear in her present condition, the power to prevent Germany from recovering her influence in that province and from becoming in future again a source of disturbance in the Far East. It is, therefore, natural that Japan, who has at great sacrifice driven Germany out of Shantung, should present the above-mentioned demands, in order to consider how the rights possessed by Germany should be disposed of, and to take measures to prevent the recrudescence of German influence.

Japan's relations with Manchuria have always been especially close geographically, politically and from the point of view of commercial and industrial interests. Since those relations have been strengthened by two successive wars the predominant position of Japan in that region has been recognized both at home and abroad.

The case is almost similar in regard to Eastern Inner Mongolia.

Further for the advancement of the intimate relations existing between Japan and China, no effort should be spared to solve definitely on this occasion all pending questions which are likely to lead to difficulties with China and at the same time to make an agreement with a view to prevent future misunderstandings. The Japanese Government, fully expecting that the Chinese Government would value the friendly sentiments existing between the two countries and willingly accede to the Japanese proposals, urged them to carry these matters into effect, whereas, in other matters China's consent was demanded by reason of treaty and other rights.

With regard to the demands, which were formulated after careful and mature consideration, on the basis of the principles above referred to, the Chinese Government, in disregard of the understanding which was made at the commencement of the negotiations to keep the proceedings of the conferences strictly secret, made public the Japanese proposals, in various exaggerated forms and endeavored to stir up the feelings of the Powers against Japan. They caused the matters discussed at the conferences to be published invariably in the newspapers, with a view to hindering the progress of the negotiations; by fabricating news detrimental to Japan and they attempted to shake the confidence placed by her ally in Japan. They even demanded the unconditional retrocession of Kiaochow and an indemnity for the damage caused by the war between Japan and Germany, and thus they showed from the first a lack of a sincere desire for a satisfactory conclusion of the negotiations.

Moreover, although the Japanese Government fully showed its sincerity by repeatedly explaining the motives of the demands and endeavored to hear China's unreserved views on the matter, it is an undeniable fact that the Chinese authorities failed to appreciate the friendly attitude of Japan and persisted in protracting the negotiations. Twenty-five conferences were held in all, extending over more than three months and throughout these conferences the Japanese Government exhausted every means of arriving at a satisfactory solution, but the Chinese Government, although they showed a disposition to agree to the demands relating to the province of Shantung, yet with regard to South Manchuria put various restrictions upon the most important demands, namely those relating to the rights regarding land tenure and objected to those relating to Eastern Inner Mongolia and various questions enumerated under Group V on the ground that they were derogatory to the sovereign rights of China or conflicted with treaties with other Powers and, although the Japanese Minister explained that such was not the case, they refused to listen.

But, recognizing that a satisfactory conclusion of the negotiations was most important for the maintenance of peace of the Far East, the Japanese Government treated the Chinese contentions with every consideration, making very great concessions. In a spirit of conciliation they amended their proposals and presented their revised draft to the Chinese Government on April 26. In the revised draft the contentions put forward by the Chinese Government were taken into consideration. In this draft, as regards Eastern Inner Mongolia, the demands were confined, for the present, to absolutely necessary matters; those relating to the Hanyehping Company were confined to matters which had been admitted by the Chinese Government at the conferences. As regards the demand respecting the non-alienation of the coast, the form desired by the Chinese was accepted. The proposals relating to advisers, ownership of land for schools and hospitals, and the position of the Province of Fukien were all altered in accordance with the views expressed by the Chinese representatives at the conferences. As regards South China railways, the relations with third parties especially were respected and alterations were made accordingly. The question of the right of preaching was reserved for future negotiation. Those relating to police and the ownership of sites for temples were withdrawn.

The revised draft is therefore practically as follows:—

GROUP II. Eastern Inner Mongolia is excluded from the proposals respecting South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia and the second and third articles are amended as follows:

Article 2. Japanese subjects shall be permitted in the region of South Manchuria to lease or buy land necessary for erecting buildings of various kinds for commercial and industrial uses or for agricultural purposes.

Article 3. Japanese subjects shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in the region of South Manchuria and carry on business of various kinds, commercial, and industrial and otherwise.

The fourth article, referring to the preceding two provisions, says that Japanese subjects shall produce before the Chinese local authorities passports duly issued and registered by the said authorities. They shall also observe Chinese police laws or regulations approved by the Japanese consuls and pay to the Chinese authorities taxes approved by the Japanese consuls. In civil, original suits the Japanese consul, where a Japanese subject is defendant, and a Chinese official, where a Chinese is defendant, shall respectively try and decide the case, both the Japanese consul and the Chinese official being permitted each to send an authorized agent to attend the trial and watch proceedings, provided that in a civil suit concerning land between Japanese and Chinese the case shall be examined and decided jointly by the Japanese consul and a Chinese official according to the laws and local customs of China, provided further that in future when the judicial system in the said region shall be completely reformed all civil and criminal suits involving Japanese subjects shall be wholly tried and decided by Chinese courts.

Proposals relating to Eastern Inner Mongolia:—

The first article demands that China shall permit joint enterprises of Japanese and Chinese in agricultural and auxiliary industries, the second that China shall consult Japan first in case China contemplates contracting either railway loans or loans secured by taxes, and the third that China shall increase the number of open ports.

GROUP III. As regards the Hanyehping Company the Chinese Government shall engage to approve of an agreement that may be concluded in future between the company and Japanese capitalists for a joint undertaking, and agrees not to confiscate it nor to nationalize it without the consent of interested Japanese capitalists and not to permit it to contract any foreign loan with other than Japanese.

GROUP IV. As regards the non-alienation of Chinese coasts, the Japanese Government will be satisfied with the declaration as suggested by the Chinese Government.

GROUP V. As to the other points the following shall be kept on record:

Article 1. That the Chinese Government will in case of necessity in future employ Japanese advisers.

Article 2. In case Japanese subjects desire to lease or purchase land for the purpose of building schools or hospitals in the interior, the Chinese Government will permit them to do so.

Article 3. The Chinese Government will some day in the future send military officers to Japan in order to make arrangements directly with the Japanese military authorities either for the purchase of arms from Japan or for establishing an arsenal [arsenals?] in China under Sino-Japanese management.

Article 4. The Chinese Government will grant Japan her desired railway concession in South China in case it becomes clear that there is no objection in this respect on the part of any other Power, or that the Chinese Government will refrain from entering into any agreement with any other party concerning the railway lines in question until Japan may, independently of the present negotiations with China, reach an agreement with the party whose interests, in the opinion of the Chinese Government, are opposed to the proposed lines.

Article 5. The question of freedom for preaching by Japanese missionaries will be left over for future discussion.

The proposal for joint administration of police is withdrawn.

As to Fukien Province the Chinese Government must engage in some form that they will not grant to any other Power the right to build a shipyard, coaling or naval stations, or any other military establishment on or along the coast of Fukien Province, and further, that the Chinese Government will not allow any such establishment to be built with any foreign capital on the coast of the said province.

At the same time as the presentation of the revised draft, the Japanese Government declared to the Chinese Government that if, at any peace conference upon the conclusion of the present war, Japan should be given the free disposal of Kiaochow which she acquired at enormous sacrifice, she would return it to China subject to certain conditions, of which the principal ones were as follows:

The opening of Kiaochow Bay as a commercial port.

The establishment of a Japanese concession in a locality designated by the Japanese.

This establishment, if required by the Powers, of an international settlement and arrangements between the Japanese and Chinese Governments regarding the disposal of the German public structures and properties.

Germany having after many years labor and heavy expenditure of money converted Kiaochow into an important military and commercial port, as the basis of her expansion in the East, German influence in this part of China grew with the development of Kiaochow and became so firmly established that it was utterly hopeless for China, singlehanded, to regain possession of the leased territory. Japan desiring to remove this source of danger, which might in future again disturb the peace of the Far East, captured it at no small cost of life and money, and now that it is in her hands, she is almost at liberty to dispose of it at will. She is certainly under no obligation to return it to China, but she offered of her own will to return Kiaochow because she was anxious to promote friendly relations with China and to maintain the general peace of the Far East. The Chinese Government have, however, failed to reciprocate Japan's sentiment of accommodation and conciliation, and on May 1, presented a counter-draft which they declared to be their final answer.

In this counter-draft, the Chinese Government recognize with regard to South Manchuria the right of residence, trade and leasing land by Japanese subjects in the interior, but refuse to grant long leases.

The Chinese Government also demand that Japanese subjects shall submit to Chinese police laws and regulations, be liable to the same taxes and duties as Chinese, and all actions arising out of land disputes, whether between Japanese and Chinese, or between Japanese themselves, shall come under the jurisdiction of Chinese courts.

As regards Eastern Inner Mongolia, they put limitations on the extent of that region and refuse to permit the main point of the Japanese demand, which is the joint enterprise of Japanese and Chinese in agriculture and auxiliary industries.

Further they demand at the same time the unconditional surrender of the leased territory at Kiaochow, and the recognition of the right of the Chinese Government to participate in the coming peace negotiations between Japan and Germany.

Indemnification by Japan for all losses suffered by China in consequence of the Japan-German war.

The immediate removal of various military establishments of the Japanese army and the prompt evacuation of occupied territory.

They also refuse all the proposals contained in Group V of the Japanese amended project except that relating to Fukien. In this counter-draft the Chinese Government, still further in disregard of responsible statements made by their representatives at the conferences, revived in some cases articles which had already been withdrawn and in others made alterations in matters which were agreed to. Moreover, they make demands to which it is clearly impossible for Japan to accede, such as those for the unconditional surrender of Kiaochow and indemnification for losses incurred through the Japan-German war.

Furthermore, the Chinese Government declare that their counter-draft formulates their final decision. Accordingly, so long as Japan refuses to accede to these demands, whatever agreement may have been arrived at on other points must ultimately be abortive and the terms offered by China prove illusory. The Japanese Government deeply regret to perceive from the attitude of the Chinese Government that it is no longer any use to continue the present negotiations. Nevertheless, being desirous, with a view to the maintenance of peace in the Far East, to make every effort to bring the negotiations to a satisfactory conclusion and thus to avoid complications in the situation, the Japanese Government, taking fully into account the wishes of the Chinese Government, decided with great forbearance, to leave out of the present negotiations and reserve for future discussion all items specified in Group V of the amended draft, except that relating to Fukien, about which an agreement has been reached.

The Japanese Government instructed their Minister at Peking on May 6 that in conveying this decision to the Chinese Government he should earnestly advise them to give due regard to Japan's sentiment of accommodation and conciliation and express after careful consideration their assent without delay to the Japanese amended draft; and at the same time announce that the Japanese Government expect from the Chinese Government a satisfactory response to this advice not later than 6 p. m. on May 9.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, May 24, 1915—11 p. m.

Today's newspapers here print telegrams from Peking stating that the Government of the United States has presented to China and Japan a note of warning in the sense that the United States cannot recognize any agreements in the treaty about to be concluded which conflict with the principles of the open door and equal opportunity or with China's sovereign rights or territorial integrity. Editorial comment, excepting in papers disposed not to credit the report, resentful, alleging that adequate explanations had been given that should make such representations at this late date uncalled for. It is expected that the opposition, which has begun a bitter attack on the Government in the Diet, will make the matter a subject of discussion.

No. 633]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, May 25, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, in accordance with the Department's telegraphic instruction of May 11, 5 p. m., I presented to the Minister of Foreign Affairs on Thursday, the 13th instant, a note textually in the terms of your instruction.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs, in receiving your note, stated that throughout the negotiations with Japan it had been his endeavor to safeguard the treaty rights of other nations with which he conceived China's rights themselves were bound up. He asked me specifically what provisions of the proposed agreement on the additional demands seemed so objectionable to my Government that a protest on such provisions would have to be anticipated; to which I replied that my Government had not instructed me to protest against any particular proposal but that it trusted in the respect of the contracting Governments for treaty rights and insisted that the rights referred to in the note should be given complete protection in the framing of the definite provisions of the treaty. There was then some discussion of the feasibility of adding to the treaty to be made a general saving clause to the effect that the "provisions of this treaty shall be given an interpretation not inconsistent with the treaty rights of other nations, etc."

During the conversation, the Minister of Foreign Affairs admitted that there was some thought of making a secret arrangement respecting the sanction of police and tax regulations affecting Japanese resident in Manchuria. I pointed out to his excellency at the time that any rights of residence granted to the Japanese in Manchuria would, by operation of the most-favored-nation clause, accrue in like terms to all other nations having treaties with China and that they would therefore be entitled to be informed of all the terms of the arrangement affecting such rights.

Upon receiving your telegraphic instruction of May 15, 6 p. m., I wrote to the Minister of Foreign Affairs as follows:

In view of my conversation with your excellency on Thursday last, in which we touched upon the clause in the explanatory note accompanying the Japanese memorandum of May 7 which refers to the approval of tax and police regulations in South Manchuria, I have the honor to state that I take it for granted that the Government of the United States will be notified of any provision in the treaty and subsidiary agreements now being negotiated by which the status of foreigners in China or in any part thereof would be affected. Such notification is necessary to enable the Government of the United States to share in privileges which may accrue under the most-favored-nation treatment guaranteed by the treaties.

When this matter was discussed in the diplomatic conference, the Japanese representative stated that the application of the most-favored-nation treatment to the matter of residence in Manchuria would have to be worked out by China with the individual nations concerned.

In one of the conversations with a member of the Foreign Office, I was asked whether the presentation of the note implied a resolution on the part of the American Government to call for a revision of the treaty if it were concluded in terms considered unacceptable by it under the existing treaties. I stated that the Government had not expressed itself on that point, but that through the action of giving this formal notice it had kept its hands perfectly free to take whatever measures it might later deem necessary for the full protection of the rights and policies referred to in the note.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, May 26, 1915.

SIR: On the 24th instant I had the honor to telegraph the Department that the Tokyo newspapers of that date contained telegrams from Peking stating that the United States had presented to China and Japan a note of warning to the effect that it cannot recognize any agreements, in the Sino-Japanese treaty about to be concluded, which conflict with the principles of the open door and equal opportunity, or with China's sovereign rights or territorial integrity. My telegram stated that the general tone of editorial comment on the report was resentful.

I attach hereto, as enclosure, translations from the vernacular newspapers.¹⁷

While it was apparent that the identic note referred to was the one embraced in the Department's telegram of May 11, 5 p. m., and communicated by me to the Foreign Office on May 13, I was apprehensive that any popular resentment, from whatever misunderstanding it may have arisen, might be utilized by the opposition (which has been grasping at any weapon capable of being used against the administration) and thus result in a lingering irritation against the United States. Today's newspapers, however, contain a paragraph telegraphed from Washington stating, on authority said to be official, that the American note to Japan and China is "merely of a legal nature, designed chiefly to affect the phraseology of the new treaty" and that no difficulties are looked for.

In view of this statement I do not anticipate that unfriendly comment on the incident will continue.

THE DOCUMENTS REGARDING THE NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN JAPAN AND CHINA.

(1915)

I.

INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN BY BARON KATO TO MR. HIOKI.

(Handed in Tokyo, Dec. 3, 1914.)

In order to provide for the readjustment of affairs consequent on the Japan-German war and for the purpose of ensuring a lasting peace in the Far East by strengthening the position of the Empire, the Imperial Government have resolved to approach the Chinese Government with a view to conclude treaties and agreements mainly along the lines laid down in the first four groups of the appended proposals. Of these, the first group relates to the settlement of the Shantung question, while the second group has for its chief aim the defining of Japan's position in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, that is to say, securing at this time from the Chinese Government full recognition of Japan's natural position in these regions, absence of which has hitherto been the cause for various questions tending to estrange the feelings of the two peoples towards each other. The object of the third group is to safeguard the best interest of the Han-yeh-ping Company, with which Japanese capitalists are closely identified. It will thus be seen that there is nothing especially new in our proposals embodied in the foregoing three groups, while as regards the fourth group, it is only intended to emphasize the principle of China's territorial integrity, which has so often been declared by the Imperial Government.

Believing it absolutely essential, for strengthening Japan's position in Eastern Asia as well as for preservation of the general interests of that region, to secure China's adherence to the foregoing proposals, the Imperial Government are determined to attain this end by all means within their power. You are, therefore requested to use your best endeavour in the conduct of the negotiations, which are hereby placed in your hands.

As regards the proposals contained in the fifth group, they are presented as the wishes of the Imperial Government. The matters which are dealt with under this category are entirely different in character from those which are included in the first four groups. An adjustment, at this time, of these matters, some of which have been pending between the two countries, being nevertheless highly desirable for the advancement of the friendly relations between Japan and China as well as for safeguarding their common interests, you are also requested to exercise your best efforts to have our wishes carried out.

It is very likely that in the course of these negotiations the Chinese Government desire to find out the attitude of the Imperial Government on the question of the disposition of the leased territory of Kiaochou Bay. If the Chinese Government will accept our proposals as above stated, the Imperial Government may, with due regard to the principle of China's territorial integrity and in the interest of the friendship of the two countries, well consider the question with a view to restoring the said territory to China, in the event of Japan's being given free hand in the disposition thereof as the result of the coming peace conference between Japan and Germany. As, however, it will be absolutely necessary, in restoring the said territory to China, to lay certain conditions such as the opening of the territory for foreign trade, establishment of a Japanese settlement, etc., you will ask for further instructions when you propose to declare to the Chinese Government the willingness of the Imperial Government to consider the question.

I avail, &c.

GROUP I.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, being desirous to maintain the general peace in the Far East and to strengthen the relations of amity and good neighbourhood existing between the two countries, agree to the following articles:

Art. I. The Chinese Government engage to give full assent to all matters that the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government respecting the disposition of all the rights, interests and concessions, which, in virtue of treaties or otherwise, Germany possesses vis-à-vis China in relation to the Province of Shantung.

Art. II. The Chinese Government engage that, within the Province of Shantung or along its coast, no territory or island will be ceded or leased to any other Power, under any pretext whatever.

Art. III. The Chinese Government agree to Japan's building a railway connecting Chefoo or Lungkow with the Kiaochou-Tsinanfu Railway.

Art. IV. The Chinese Government engage to open of their own accord, as soon as possible, certain important cities and towns in the Province of Shantung for the residence and commerce of foreigners. The place to be so opened shall be decided upon in a separate agreement.

GROUP II.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, in view of the fact that the Chinese Government has always recognized the predominant position of Japan in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, agree to the following articles:

Art. I. The two contracting parties mutually agree that the term of the lease of Port Arthur and Dairen and the term respecting the South Manchuria Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway shall be extended to a further period of 99 years respectively.

Art. II. The Japanese subjects shall be permitted in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia to lease or own land required either for erecting buildings for various commercial and industrial uses or for farming.

Art. III. The Japanese subjects shall have liberty to enter, reside and travel in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, and to carry on business of various kinds—commercial, industrial and otherwise.

Art. IV. The Chinese Government grant to the Japanese subjects the right of mining in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia. As regards the mines to be worked, they shall be decided upon in a separate agreement.

Art. V. The Chinese Government agree that the consent of the Japanese Government shall be obtained in advance, (1) whenever it is proposed to grant to other nationals the right of constructing a railway or to obtain from other nationals the supply of funds for constructing a railway in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, and (2) whenever a loan is to be made with any other Power, under security of the taxes of South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia.

Art. VI. The Chinese Government engage that whenever the Chinese Government need the service of political, financial or military advisers or instructors in South Manchuria or in Eastern Inner Mongolia, Japan shall first be consulted.

Art. VII. The Chinese Government agree that the control and management of the Kirin-Changchun Railway shall be handed over to Japan for a term of 99 years dating from the signing of this treaty.

GROUP III.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, having regard to the close relations existing between Japanese capitalists and the Han-yeh-ping Company and desiring to promote the common interests of the two nations, agree to the following articles:

Art. I. The two contracting parties mutually agree that when the opportune moment arrives the Han-yeh-ping Company shall be made a joint concern of the two nations, and that, without the consent of the Japanese Government, the Chinese Government shall not dispose or permit the company to dispose of any right or property of the company.

Art. II. The Chinese Government engage that, as a necessary measure for protection of the invested interests of Japanese capitalists, no mines in the neighbourhood of those owned by the Han-yeh-ping Company shall be permitted, without the consent of the said company, to be worked by anyone other than the said company; and further that whenever it is proposed to take any other measure which may likely affect the interests of the said company directly or indirectly, the consent of the said company shall first be obtained.

GROUP IV.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, with the object of effectively preserving the territorial integrity of China, agree to the following article:

The Chinese Government engage not to cede or lease to any other Power any harbour or bay on or any island along the coast of China.

GROUP V.

1. The Chinese Central Government to engage influential Japanese as political, financial and military advisers;

2. The Chinese Government to grant the Japanese hospitals, temples and schools in the interior of China the right to own land;

3. In the face of many police disputes which have hitherto arisen between Japan and China, causing no little annoyance, the police, in localities (in China) where such arrangements are necessary, to be placed under joint Japanese and Chinese administration, or Japanese to be employed in police offices in such localities, so as to help at the same time the improvement of the Chinese police service;

4. China to obtain from Japan supply of a certain quantity of arms, or to establish an arsenal in China under joint Japanese and Chinese management and to be supplied with experts and materials from Japan;

5. In order to help the development of the Nanchang-Kiukiang Railway, with which Japanese capitalists are so closely identified, and with due regard to the negotiations which have for years been pending between Japan and China in relation to the railway question in South China, China to agree to give to Japan the right of constructing a railway to connect Wuchang with the Kiukiang-Nanchang line, and also the railways between Nanchang and Hangchou and between Nanchang and Chaochou;

6. In view of the relations between the Province of Fukien and Formosa and of the agreement respecting the non-alienation of that province, Japan to be consulted first whenever foreign capital is needed in connection with the railways, mines and harbour works (including dockyards) in the Province of Fukien;

7. China to grant to Japanese subjects the right of preaching in China.

II.

COUNTER PROJECT OF THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT.

(Handed to Mr. Hioki on Feb. 12th, 1915.)

GROUP I.

The Governments of China and Japan, being sincerely desirous to maintain the general peace of the Far East and further strengthen the friendly relations and good neighbourhood subsisting between the two countries, have concluded the following articles:

Art. I. The Chinese Government declare that they will give full assent to the dispositions that may hereafter be agreed upon between the Japanese and German Governments in regard to all interests which Germany possesses in the Province of Shantung by virtue of treaties or recorded cases (excepting the provisions of Section I of the Convention for the Lease of Kiaochou to Germany).

The Japanese Government declare that, when the assent of the Chinese Government in regard to the interests above referred to has been given, Japan will restore Kiaochou to China, and they recognize the right of the Chinese Government to participate in the negotiations mentioned in the preceding clause between the Japanese and German Governments.

Art. II. The Japanese Government agree that they will be entirely responsible in regard to indemnification for losses of all kinds occasioned by Japan's military operations in Kiaochou; and although the customs, telegraphs and posts within the leased territory of Kiaochou will, pending the restoration of Kiaochou, be administered for the present as heretofore, the military railways and telegraphs which were constructed for the use of the Japanese troops will be immediately removed; and the Japanese forces remaining outside the leased territory of Kiaochou will first be withdrawn and those remaining within the said territory will be completely withdrawn at the time of the restoration of Kiaochou to China.

Art. III. In case the Chinese Government propose themselves to construct a railway from Chefoo or Lungkou to connect with the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway and raise a foreign loan for the purpose, they agree, provided Germany is willing to abandon the right to furnish capital for the Chefoo-Weihsien line, to negotiate first with Japanese capitalists.

Art. IV. The Chinese Government agree, for purposes of foreign trade, to select suitable places in the Province of Shantung and open them as marts; and the regulations relating to such marts will be determined by China herself.

GROUP II.

The Japanese Government declare that they will always respect the complete sovereignty of China in the Three Eastern Provinces, and accordingly the Chinese and Japanese Governments have, with a view to the development of their commercial relations in the southern portion of the Three Eastern Provinces, agreed upon the following articles:

Art. I. The Chinese Government agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dairen shall be extended to ninety-nine years, expiring in the eighty-sixth year of the Republic or in the year 1997 of the Christian era, and that the time for the restoration of the entire South Manchuria Railway to China shall be extended to ninety-nine years, falling due in the ninetieth year of the Republic or in the year 2001 of the Christian era, and further that in all other matters the provisions of the respective original treaties shall be adhered to.

Art. II. The Chinese Government consent, upon the expiration of the term of the Japanese management of the Antung-Mukden Railway, to negotiate with Japan respecting the manner of extending the said term and to continue to carry into effect all other provisions according to Art. VI of the Annex to the Agreement relating to Manchuria concluded between Japan and China.

Art. III. The Chinese Government shall select places, in addition to the marts already opened, in the Three Eastern Provinces and of their own accord open them to trade, and after fixing the boundary lines, permit merchants of Japan and other countries freely to reside, trade and carry on commercial and industrial business of all kinds, and also to rent land, after fair negotiation with the respective owners of such land with regard to rental, for the erection of buildings required for commercial and industrial purposes. Such merchants, however, shall equally pay taxes and contributions imposed upon them.

Art. IV. If, not later than one full year from the day on which the present agreement is signed, any Japanese syndicate desires to engage in mining in the southern portion of the Three Eastern Provinces, the Chinese Government shall consent to grant to such syndicate for the term of one year only the privilege of prospecting mines in that region with the exception of those on which prospecting or mining has already been commenced. Of the mines which have been examined, permission shall be granted to work one-half the number according to the provisions of the Chinese mining law; and the remaining mines shall be disposed of by China herself.

Art. V. The Chinese Government agree that if it is found necessary hereafter to construct railways in the southern portion of the Three Eastern Provinces, they will construct them with capital provided by China herself; and if foreign capital is required, they will first negotiate for a loan with Japanese capitalists.

Art. VI. The Chinese Government declare that if it is proposed hereafter to employ foreign advisers in regard to political, financial and military affairs of the southern portion of the Three Eastern Provinces, preference will be given to Japanese.

Art. VII. The existing treaties between China and Japan in regard to the Three Eastern Provinces shall remain in force as heretofore except as otherwise provided for in the present agreement.

GROUP III.

NOTES TO BE EXCHANGED RESPECTING THE HAN-YEH-PING COMPANY.

As the Han-yeh-ping Company, being a Chinese commercial concern, has undoubtedly, according to the laws of China, the right to preserve its property and conduct and supervise its business, the Chinese Government do not find it proper to take measures immediately in its behalf without first consulting the company. If, however, the company desires on a future occasion to come to agreement with Japanese capitalists for the joint management of its present business, the Chinese Government will give permission in so far as such step does not conflict with the laws of the country.

III.

THE AMENDED JAPANESE PROPOSALS.

(Presented to the Chinese Government by Mr. Hioki on April 26, 1915.)

GROUP I.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, being desirous to maintain the general peace in the Far East and to further strengthen the relations of amity and good neighbourhood existing between the two countries, agree to the following articles:

Art. I. The Chinese Government engage to give full assent to all matters that the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government respecting the disposition of all the rights, interests and concessions, which, in virtue of treaties or otherwise, Germany possesses vis-à-vis China in relation to the Province of Shantung.

Art. II. (An exchange of notes may be acceptable) The Chinese Government declare that, within the Province of Shantung or along its coast, no territory or island will be ceded or leased to any other Power, under any pretext whatever.

Art. III. The Chinese Government engage that, in case they undertake the construction of a railway connecting Chefoo or Lungkow with the Kiaochou-Tsinanfu Railway, they shall, in the event of Germany's surrendering her right of providing capital for the Chefoo-Weihsien railway line, enter into negotiations with Japanese capitalists for the purpose of financing the said undertaking.

Art. IV. The Chinese Government engage to open of their own accord, as soon as possible, certain important cities and towns in the Province of Shantung for the residence and commerce of foreigners.

(Supplementary exchange of Notes.)

The places to be opened and the regulations therefor shall be determined by the Chinese Government after consultation with the Japanese Minister.

GROUP II.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, with the object of developing the economic relations of the two countries in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, agree to the following articles:

Art. I. The two contracting parties mutually agree that the term of the lease of Port Arthur and Dairen and the term respecting the South Manchuria Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway shall be extended to a period of 99 years respectively.

(Supplementary exchange of Notes.)

The term of the lease of Port Arthur and Dairen shall expire in the 86th year of the Republic or 1997 A. D. The date for reversion to China of the South Manchuria Railway shall fall due in the 91st year of the Republic or 2002 A. D. The clause of Article 12 of the original Chinese Eastern Railway Agreement, that after 36 years from the commencement of traffic, China may take over the line on payment, etc., is hereby cancelled. The term of the Antung-Mukden Railway shall expire in the 96th year of the Republic, or 2007 A. D.

Art. II. The Japanese subjects shall be permitted in South Manchuria to lease or purchase land required either for erecting buildings for various commercial and industrial uses or for agricultural purposes.

Art. III. The Japanese subjects shall have liberty to enter, reside and travel in South Manchuria, and to carry on business of various kinds—commercial, industrial and otherwise.

Referring to the present and preceding two articles, the Japanese subjects shall produce before the Chinese local authorities the passports duly issued, and be registered by the said authorities. They shall also observe the Chinese police laws or regulations approved by the Japanese consuls and pay to the Chinese authorities the taxes approved by the Japanese consuls. In civil and criminal suits, the Japanese consul, where a Japanese subject is the defendant, and the Chinese official, where a Chinese citizen is the defendant, shall respectively try and decide the case, both the Japanese consul and the Chinese official being permitted each to send his agent to attend the trial by the other and watch proceedings; provided that in a civil suit concerning land between Japanese and Chinese, the case shall be tried and decided jointly by the Japanese consul and the Chinese official according to the laws and local usages of China; provided further that in the future when the judicial system in the said region shall have been completely reformed, all civil and criminal suits involving Japanese subjects shall be wholly tried and decided by the Chinese law courts.

Art. IV. (An exchange of notes may be acceptable). The Chinese Government permit the Japanese subjects immediately to investigate, select, and then prospect for and open mines at the following places in South Manchuria, excepting those mining areas which have already been prospected for or worked; provided that until the mining law becomes definitely operative practices at present in force shall be followed.

Art. V. (An exchange of notes may be acceptable). The Chinese Government agree that they will hereafter build railways in South Manchuria with funds from Chinese sources, and if foreign capital is required preference shall be given to Japanese capitalists; and that in case a foreign loan is to be made on the security of the taxes of South Manchuria (excepting the customs and salt revenues which are already made the securities for loans contracted by the Central Government) preference shall be given to Japanese capitalists.

Art. VI. (An exchange of notes may be acceptable). The Chinese Government declare that whenever in future the Chinese Government propose to employ foreign political, financial, military or police advisers or instructors in South Manchuria, Japanese will be employed first.

Art. VII. The Chinese Government agree to make speedily a fundamental revision of the Kirin-Changchun Railway Loan Agreement, taking as a standard the provisions in railway loan agreements made heretofore between China and foreign capitalists. If, in future, more advantageous terms than those in the existing railway loan agreements are granted to foreign capitalists in connection with railway loans, the above-mentioned Kirin-Changchun Railway Agreement shall, if so desired by Japan, again be revised.

Art. VIII. All existing treaties between Japan and China relating to Manchuria shall, except as otherwise provided in this convention, remain in force.

Matters relating to Eastern Inner Mongolia.

1. The Chinese Government agree that whenever in future a foreign loan is to be made on the security of the taxes of Eastern Inner Mongolia the Japanese Government will be consulted first.

2. The Chinese Government agree that in future they will build railways in Eastern Inner Mongolia with funds from Chinese sources, and if foreign capital is required the Japanese Government will be consulted first.

3. The Chinese Government agree to open of their own accord, as soon as possible, suitable places in Eastern Inner Mongolia for the residence and trade of foreigners. The places to be so opened and the regulations therefor shall be determined by the Chinese Government after consultation with the Japanese Minister.

4. In the event of Japanese and Chinese desiring jointly to undertake agricultural enterprises and industries auxiliary thereto in Eastern Inner Mongolia, the Chinese Government shall give their permission.

GROUP III.

In view of the close relations between Japan and the Han-Yeh-Ping Company, the Chinese Government shall approve the agreement that may hereafter be reached by those interested in the said company with Japanese capitalists for its joint undertaking, nor shall the Chinese Government confiscate the company, nor shall, without consent of the Japanese capitalists, nationalize it, nor shall permit it to contract any foreign loan other than Japanese.

GROUP IV.

The Chinese Government to make the following declaration:

The Chinese Government will not cede or lease to any other Power any bay, harbour or island along the coast of China.

GROUP V.

1. (Notes to be exchanged) The Chinese Government shall not permit any Power to construct a dockyard, a coaling station for military use, or a naval base or to set up any other military establishment on the coast of Fukien Province, nor shall they allow any like establishment to be set up with any foreign capital on the said coast.

2. (Notes to be exchanged) As regards the right of financing a railway to connect Wuchang with the Kiukiang-Nanchang Line, and the Nanchang-Hangchou and Nanchang-Chaochou railways, the Chinese Government shall either grant it to Japan, in case it is clearly ascertained that there is no objection on the part of any other foreign Power, or refrain from granting it to any other Power before the Japanese Government come to an understanding directly with the other Power which is interested in these railway schemes.

3. (Mr. Lu, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of China, stated as follows:)

a. The Chinese Government will, in case of necessity in future, employ Japanese advisers;

b. Whenever the Japanese subjects desire to lease or purchase land for the purpose of building schools and hospitals in the interior of China, the Chinese Government will permit them to do so;

c. Some day in future when a suitable opportunity arrives, the Chinese Government will send military officers to Japan in order to make arrangements directly with the military authorities of Japan either for purchase of arms or for establishing an arsenal in China under joint Japanese and Chinese management.

4. (Mr. Hioki, the Japanese Minister, stated as follows:)

As regards the question of the right of preaching of Japanese in China, it will be left for future discussion.

5. The proposal relating to the police administration. (Withdrawn.)

The Japanese Government engage that, if the Chinese Government accept the Japanese revised proposals as above stated, the leased territory of Kiaochou Bay shall be returned to China, in the event of the said territory being left to the free disposal of Japan as the result of the peace conference upon conclusion of the present war, on the following conditions:

1. To open the entire territory as a commercial port;
2. To permit a Japanese settlement to be established in the area to be designated by Japan;
3. To permit an international settlement to be established, if desired by the Powers;
4. Arrangements to be made between Japan and China, before the restoration of the territory to China, regarding the disposition of the German establishments and with respect to the other conditions and procedures.

At the time of the presentation of the above revised proposals, Mr. Hioki declared to the Chinese Government as follows:

The wording or choice of terms and phrases adopted in the above project may be changed or amended at the time of its final redaction.

IV.

THE FINAL AMENDED PROJECT OF THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT.

(Handed to Mr. Hioki on May 1st, 1915.)

GROUP I.

The Governments of China and Japan, being sincerely desirous to maintain the general peace of the Far East and further strengthen the friendly relations and good neighbourhood subsisting between the two countries, have concluded the following articles:

Art. I. The Chinese Government declare that they will give full assent to the dispositions that may hereafter be agreed upon between the Japanese and German Governments in regard to all interests which Germany possesses in the Province of Shantung by virtue of treaties or recorded cases.

The Japanese Government declare that when the assent of the Chinese Government in regard to the interests above referred to has been given, Japan will restore Kiaochou to China, and recognize the right of the Chinese Government to participate in the negotiations between the Japanese and German Governments.

Art. II. The Japanese Government agree that they will be entirely responsible in regard to indemnification for losses of all kinds occasioned by Japan's military operations in Kiaochou, and also that the customs, telegraphs, and posts within the leased territory of Kiaochou shall, pending the restoration of Kiaochou, be administered for the present as heretofore. The military railways and telegraphs which were constructed for the use of the Japanese troops shall be immediately removed and the Japanese forces remaining outside the leased territory of Kiaochou shall first be withdrawn, and those remaining within the said territory shall be completely withdrawn at the time of restoration of Kiaochou to China.

Art. III. (Draft for exchange of notes.)

The Chinese Government declare that they will not transfer or lease to another Power, under any designation whatever, any territory within the Province of Shantung or any zone of land or any island along the coast thereof.

Art. IV. In case the Chinese Government propose to construct themselves a railway from Chefoo or Lungkou to connect with the Kiaochou-Tsilian Railway and raise a foreign loan for the purpose, they engage, provided Germany is willing to abandon the right to furnish capital for the Chefoo-Weihsien line, to negotiate for a loan with Japanese capitalists.

Art. V. The Chinese Government engage, for the residence and trade of foreigners, to open of their own accord, as soon as possible, suitable places in the Province of Shantung as marts.

(Draft for exchange of notes.)

The places to be so opened shall be selected and regulations relative thereto framed by the Chinese Government and decided upon after consultation with the Japanese Minister.

Art. VI. The foregoing articles relating to the transfer and other matters that are to be settled in the future negotiations between the Japanese and German Governments, in the event of their failure to come to a definite agreement, the provisional engagements made in this treaty shall become null and void. [Sic.]

GROUP II.

The Chinese and Japanese Governments, with a view to the development of their economic relations in South Manchuria, have concluded the following articles:—

Art. I. The two high contracting parties engage to extend to ninety-nine years the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dairen and the terms of the South Manchuria and Antung-Mukden Railways.

(Draft for exchange of notes.)

The term of lease of Port Arthur and Dairen shall expire in the eighty-sixth year of the Republic, or in the year 1997 of the Christian era, and the time for the restoration of the South Manchuria Railway shall fall due in the ninety-first year of the Republic, or in the year 2002 of the Christian era. The Clause in Art. 12 of the original Chinese Eastern Railway Convention stipulating that the Chinese Government shall have the right to recover the railway by purchase upon expiration of thirty-six years from the day on which it is opened for traffic, shall become null and void. The term of the Antung-Mukden Railway shall fall due in the ninety-sixth year of the Republic, or in the year 2007 of the Christian era.

Art. II. Japanese subjects may lease from the owners land required for the erection of buildings for commercial and industrial uses and that required for agricultural purposes in South Manchuria.

Art. III. Japanese subjects may freely reside, travel, or engage in commercial, industrial, and other pursuits of every description in South Manchuria.

The Japanese subjects mentioned in the preceding two articles shall present for registration to the local authorities their passports duly issued, and shall observe the Chinese police laws and regulations, and pay all taxes in the same manner as Chinese.

Civil and criminal cases shall be tried and decided by the authorities of the defendant's nationality, and the proceedings may be watched by officers of the other nationality. Cases, whether between Japanese themselves or between Chinese and Japanese, arising out of disputes relating to land or lease shall be tried and decided by the Chinese authorities, and an officer may be sent by the Japanese consul to watch the proceedings. When, however, the judicial system of the region has been completely reformed all civil and criminal cases relating to Japanese subjects shall be tried entirely by Chinese courts.

Art. IV. The Chinese Government agree to effect at an early date a radical revision of the Kirin-Changchun Railway Loan Agreement on the basis of the stipulations of the railway loan agreements which have hitherto been concluded between China and capitalists of other countries.

In the event of the Chinese Government granting in future to foreign capitalists in regard to railway loans more advantageous terms than those of the existing railway loan agreements, the above-mentioned Kirin-Changchun Railway Loan Agreement shall, if so desired by Japan, again be revised.

Art. V. (Draft for exchange of notes.) The Chinese Government shall permit Japanese subjects to prospect or work, after an early examination and selection, the mines elsewhere specified in South Manchuria (excepting the mine lots which have already been prospected or are being worked). The existing arrangements shall be followed until the mining law is made definitely operative.

Art. VI. (Draft for exchange of notes.) The Chinese Government agree that, in future, they will build railways in South Manchuria with funds from Chinese sources, and if foreign capital is required preference will be given to Japanese capitalists.

If, in future, the Chinese Government propose to rise a foreign loan on the security of the taxes of South Manchuria, (excluding the customs and salt revenues which are already made the securities for loans contracted by the Central Government), they shall first consult Japanese capitalists for such a loan.

Art. VII. (Draft for exchange of notes.) The Chinese Government declare that if it is proposed, in future, to engage foreign advisers and instructors in regard to the political, financial, military and police affairs of South Manchuria, they will give the preference to Japanese.

Art. VIII. The existing treaties between China and Japan relative to Manchuria shall remain in force as heretofore, except as otherwise provided for in the present agreement.

Draft for Exchange of Notes relating to Eastern Inner Mongolia.

The Chinese Government declare that they will hereafter not pledge for foreign loans any taxes or duties, excepting the salt gabelle and customs duties, in Eastern Inner Mongolia under the jurisdiction of South Manchuria and the Jehol Intendancy.

The Chinese Government declare that, if it is proposed, in future, to construct railways in Eastern Inner Mongolia under the jurisdiction of South Manchuria and the Jehol Intendancy, China herself will provide the capital for the undertaking, and if foreign capital is required, they will first negotiate with Japanese capitalists, provided such course does not conflict with the existing agreements with the other Powers.

The Chinese Government agree to establish of their own accord open marts, as soon as possible, in suitable places in Eastern Inner Mongolia under the jurisdiction of South Manchuria and the Jehol Intendancy for the residence and trade of foreigners; and regulations relating thereto will be determined according to those of other marts already opened by China herself.

GROUP III.

The relations between Japan and the Han-Yeh-Ping Company being especially intimate, the Chinese Government shall, when the company and Japanese capitalists shall hereafter have agreed to bring it under joint management, give their consent thereto; and the Chinese Government shall not confiscate or nationalise the concern, nor permit the company to raise any foreign loan other than Japanese.

GROUP IV.

The Chinese Government to make on their own initiative the following declaration:

The Chinese Government will not transfer or lease to any other Power the bays, harbors, and islands along the coast of China.

GROUP V.

Draft of a Note to be sent by Mr. Hioki to the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs.

It has been rumored that the Chinese Government will permit a foreign Power to construct shipyards, military coaling stations, naval bases, and other military establishments of all kinds on the coast of Fukien Province, and also that China herself intends to construct the above establishments with the loan of foreign capital. A reply is desired as to the truth of the rumour.

Draft of a Note to be sent by the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs to Mr. Hioki.

In reply to your note under date the —, the Chinese Government are in a position to declare that they will never permit a foreign Power to construct shipyards, military coaling-stations, naval bases, and other military establishments, nor have they any intention of constructing such establishments with the loan of foreign capital.

V.

JAPAN'S ULTIMATUM TO CHINA.

(Delivered by Mr. Hioki to the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs, May 7, 1915.)

In opening the present negotiations with the Chinese Government, the Imperial Government were actuated by the desire to adjust matters to meet the new situation created by the war between Japan and Germany and of strengthening, in the interest of a firm and lasting peace in the Far East, the bond of amity and friendship between Japan and China by removing from the relations of the two countries various causes of misunderstanding and suspicion. Since the Imperial Government first presented their proposals to the Chinese Government in January last, twenty-five conferences have been held between the representatives of the two Governments. In these successive conferences, the Imperial Government presented their side of the case fully and frankly, while at the same time, animated by a spirit of conciliation and concord, they gave every possible consideration to the argument advanced by the Chinese Government. This fact, the Imperial Government believe, affords abundant proof of their sincere desire to bring the present negotiations to a peaceful conclusion. With the close of the twenty-fourth conference on April 17th, discussions on all questions were practically brought to an end. Thereupon the Imperial Government, in deference to the expressed wishes of the Chinese Government, considerably modified their original proposals and prepared an amended project, showing no small concessions on their part. This they presented to the Chinese Government on the 26th of the same month, with the announcement that should the Chinese Government accept it, Kiauchou Bay, which is a point of no small importance in the Far East commercially as well as strategically, and which cost Japan so much to take, would be returned to China at a proper time under fair and reasonable conditions. The reply which the Chinese Government gave on May 1st to this amended project of the Imperial Government was a total disappointment. It gave not only no indication of the Japanese amended project having been seriously examined by the Chinese Government, but also failed to show any appreciation of the friendly and generous offer of the Imperial Government. Japan, being now in possession of Kiauchou Bay, is under no obligation to return it to China. It is because of her desire to promote the friendly relations with China that Japan proposes to do so. The Imperial Government cannot conceal their keen disappointment at the utter disregard, on the part of the Chinese Government, of the sentiment which prompted them to make this offer. The Chinese Government, so far from showing an appreciation of the good will of the Imperial Government in respect of Kiauchou Bay, even demanded its unconditional surrender and called upon Japan to indemnify inevitable losses suffered by China in consequence of the war between Japan and Germany. Moreover they presented several other demands in connection with the occupied territory, and declared that they were entitled to participate in the coming peace negotiations between Japan and Germany. A demand like the unconditional surrender of Kiauchou Bay or indemnification by Japan of inevitable losses suffered by China in consequence of the Japan-German war, is one that cannot be justly accepted by the Imperial Government. Nevertheless the Chinese Government declared the last reply to be their final decision. Any agreements that have already been or may hereafter be reached as to the other points would, therefore, be of no effect, unless those inadmissible demands of China are accepted by Japan. In other words, the last reply of the Chinese Government, taken as a whole, amounts to nothing more than a rejection of the entire Japanese proposals.

In several other respects the Chinese reply is no less unsatisfactory.

As regards South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, for instance, the Chinese Government ignored the universally recognized fact that these are the regions where, owing to geographical, political and economic reasons, Japan has special interests which have been made the more preponderating as the result of the last two wars. Some of the proposals which the Imperial Government formulated with a conciliatory spirit on the basis of the declarations made by the Chinese representative at the conference, were arbitrarily amended by the Chinese Government, thus nullifying the statement of their own responsible Minister, while in some others an inconsistent and therefore inadmissible amendment was introduced, showing thus no evidence of good faith and sincerity on their part.

As to the questions of advisers, land for schools and hospitals and supply of arms, the Imperial Government merely asked to leave on record what had been declared by the Chinese representative, while as regards the railway concessions in South China, they were satisfied with a promise that the matter would be favorably considered, in case there was no objection on the part of the other interested Powers. These proposals affected in no wise China's sovereignty or treaty obligations, but the Chinese Government refused to give their consent on the ground that they involved the question of China's sovereignty or of treaty obligations.

The Imperial Government extremely regret that they find in the attitude of the Chinese Government little use of further continuing the present negotiations. Yet the Imperial Government, who are ever solicitous for the preservation of peace in the Far East, prompted by the desire to bring the present negotiations to a satisfactory close and avoid the development of any serious complication in the situation, have decided, as a mark of their sincere good will towards the Chinese Government, to withdraw from the present negotiations and reserve for future discussion the whole of Group V, except the one item respecting Fukien Province about which agreement has been reached between the representatives of the two Governments.

The Imperial Government therefore advise the Chinese Government, in appreciation of the good will of the Imperial Government, to accept without amendment all items included in Groups I, II, III, and IV, together with the item in Group V relating to Fukien, as embodied in the Japanese amended project of April 26.

In case the Imperial Government fail to receive from the Chinese Government, before 6 p. m. of May 9, a satisfactory response to their advice they will take such independent action as they may deem necessary to meet the situation.

VI.

EXPLANATORY NOTE HANDED TO THE CHINESE MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS BY THE JAPANESE MINISTER AT THE TIME OF THE DELIVERY OF THE ULTIMATUM, MAY 7, 1915.

1. The words "the whole of Group V, except the one item respecting Fukien Province" which appear in the latter part of the ultimatum, refer to the question (a) of advisers, (b) of land for schools and hospitals, (c) of railways in South China, (d) of arms and arsenal and (e) of right of preaching.

2. The acceptance by the Chinese Government of the item relating to Fukien Province, may be either in the form proposed by the Japanese Minister on April 26, or in that contained in the Chinese reply of May 1.

Although the ultimatum calls for the acceptance by China, without alteration, of the revised Japanese proposals presented on April 26, yet it should be noted that it merely states the principle, and does not apply to such exceptions as this item and items 4 and 5 of this note.

3. If the Chinese Government accept all the items as demanded in the ultimatum, the offer of the Japanese Government to restore Kiaochou Bay to China, made on April 26, will hold good.

4. The words "lease or purchase" in Art. 2 of Group II may be replaced by the words "temporary lease" or "perpetual lease," or simply by "lease" on the clear understanding that it means a long-term lease with the privilege of its unconditional renewal.

5. The phrase "the Japanese Government will be consulted" in connection with questions of railway loans and loans to be secured by the taxes in Eastern Inner Mongolia, should be altered in the sense that "Japanese capitalists shall be consulted," as in the case of similar agreement relating to Manchuria on matters of the same kind.

Of the article relating to the opening of trade marts in Eastern Inner Mongolia, the part which refers to the location and regulations may be left to an exchange of notes, as in the case of Shantung agreement.

6. From the phrase "those interested in the said company" in Group III of the revised Japanese proposals, the words "those interested in" may be deleted.

7. The official text of the treaties and their annexes shall be in Japanese or in both Japanese and Chinese.

VII.

THE REPLY OF THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT TO THE ULTIMATUM OF THE IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT.

(Handed to Mr. Hioki on May 8, 1915.)

On the 7th May, at 3 p. m., the Chinese Government received from the Japanese Minister the ultimatum of his Government, together with an explanatory note of seven articles. The ultimatum concluded with the statement that the Japanese Government expected a satisfactory reply from the Chinese Government not later than 6 p. m. on the 9th May, and that in the event of their failing to receive a satisfactory reply by that hour, they would take such measures as they might deem necessary.

The Chinese Government, having in view the preservation of peace in East Asia, hereby accept, with the exception of the five items of the fifth group, which are reserved for future negotiation, of the revised proposals presented on the 26th April by the Japanese Government, all the items of the first, second, third, and fourth groups together with the exchange of notes relative to the Fukien question in the fifth group, as set forth in the said revised proposals and explained in the seven articles annexed to the ultimatum, and hope that all outstanding questions between China and Japan will thereby be solved and the friendly relations between the two countries be further strengthened.

The Japanese Minister is requested to appoint a day for calling at the Department of Foreign Affairs in order to make verbal amendments in the text and sign the documents at an early date.

VIII.

TREATIES SIGNED AND NOTES EXCHANGED BETWEEN JAPAN AND CHINA ON MAY 25, 1915.

TREATY RESPECTING THE PROVINCE OF SHANTUNG.

(Signed at Peking, May 25, 1915.)

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan and His Excellency the President of the Republic of China, being desirous to maintain the general peace of the Far East and to further strengthen the relations of amity and good neighborhood existing between the two countries, have resolved to conclude a treaty for that purpose and to that end have named their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:—

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, Mr. Eki Hioki, Jushii, Second Class of the Imperial Order of the Sacred Treasure, His Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Republic of China; and

His Excellency the President of the Republic of China, Mr. Lu Cheng-hsieng, Tsung-Ching, First Class of the Order of Chia-Ho, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of China;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full Powers, which were found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I. The Chinese Government engage to recognize all matters that may be agreed upon between the Japanese Government and the German Government respecting the disposition of all the rights, interests and concessions, which, in virtue of treaties or otherwise, Germany possesses vis-à-vis China in relation to the Province of Shantung.

ARTICLE II. The Chinese Government engage that, in case they undertake the construction of a railway connecting Chefoo or Lungkou with the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway, they shall, in the event of Germany's surrendering her right of providing capital for the Chefoo-Weihshien railway line, enter into negotiations with Japanese capitalists for the purpose of financing the said undertaking.

ARTICLE III. The Chinese Government engage to open, of their own accord, as early as possible, suitable cities and towns in the Province of Shantung for the residence and trade of foreigners.

ARTICLE IV. The present treaty shall take effect on the day of its signature. The present treaty shall be ratified by His Majesty the Emperor of Japan and by His Excellency the President of the Republic of China, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Tokyo as soon as possible.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty made in duplicate, in Japanese and in Chinese, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Peking the 25th day of the 5th month of the 4th year of Taisho, corresponding to the 25th day of the 5th month of the 4th year of the inauguration of the Republic of China.

TREATY RESPECTING SOUTH MANCHURIA AND EASTERN INNER MONGOLIA.

(Signed at Peking, May 25, 1915.)

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan and His Excellency the President of the Republic of China, being desirous to develop the economic relations of the two countries in the regions of South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, have resolved to conclude a treaty for that purpose and to that end have named their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, Mr. Eki Hioki, Jushii, Second Class of the Imperial Order of the Sacred Treasure, His Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Republic of China; and

His Excellency the President of the Republic of China, Mr. Lu Cheng-hsieng, Tsung-Ching, First Class of the Order of Chia-Ho, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of China;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I. The high contracting parties mutually agree to extend the term of the lease of Port Arthur and Dairen, and the term relating to the South Manchurian Railway and to the Antung-Mukden Railway, to a period of ninety nine years respectively.

ARTICLE II. The subjects of Japan shall be permitted in South Manchuria to lease land necessary either for erecting buildings for various commercial and industrial uses or for agricultural purposes.

ARTICLE III. The subjects of Japan shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in South Manchuria and to carry on business of various kinds—commercial, industrial and otherwise.

ARTICLE IV. The Government of China shall permit joint undertakings, in Eastern Inner Mongolia, of the subjects of Japan and citizens of China, in agriculture and industries auxiliary thereto.

ARTICLE V. With respect to the three preceding articles, the subjects of Japan shall produce before the local authorities the passports duly issued for the purpose of registration, and shall also submit themselves to the police laws and regulations and taxes of China.

In civil and criminal suits, the Japanese consular officer, where a Japanese subject is the defendant, and the Chinese official, where a Chinese citizen is the defendant, shall respectively try and decide the case, both the Japanese consular officer and the Chinese official being permitted each to send his agent to attend the trial by the other, to watch the proceedings; provided that in civil suits arising out of land disputes between Japanese subjects and Chinese citizens, the cases shall be tried and decided by the joint tribunal composed of the properly authorized officials of the two countries, in accordance with the laws and local usages of China.

In the future when the judicial system in the said regions shall have been completely reformed, all civil and criminal suits involving Japanese subjects shall be wholly tried and decided by the law courts of China.

ARTICLE VI. The Government of China engage to open of their own accord, as early as possible, suitable cities and towns in Eastern Inner Mongolia, for the residence and trade of foreigners.

ARTICLE VII. The Government of China agree to a speedy fundamental revision of various agreements and contracts relating to the Kirin-Changchun Railway, on the basis of the terms embodied in railway loan agreements which China has heretofore entered into with various foreign capitalists.

If, in future, the Chinese Government grant to foreign capitalists, in matters that relate to railway loans, more advantageous terms than those in the various existing railway loan agreements, the above-mentioned Kirin-Changchun Railway Loan Agreement shall, if so desired by Japan, be further revised.

ARTICLE VIII. Except as otherwise provided in this treaty, all existing treaties between Japan and China with respect to Manchuria shall remain in force.

ARTICLE IX. The present treaty shall take effect on the day of its signature. The present treaty shall be ratified by His Majesty the Emperor of Japan and by His Excellency the President of the Republic of China, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Tokyo as soon as possible.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty made in duplicate, in Japanese and in Chinese, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Peking the 25th day of the 5th month of the 4th year of Taisho, corresponding to the 25th day of the 5th month of the 4th year of the inauguration of the Republic of China.

MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE: I have the honor to state that respecting the stipulation of Art. I of the treaty relating to South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, signed this day, the extension of the term of the lease of Port Arthur and Dairen shall expire in the eighty-sixth year of the Republic, that is to say, in the year 1997 of the Christian Era. The date for reversion to China of the South Manchuria Railway shall fall due in the ninety-first year of the Republic, that is to say, the year 2002 of the Christian Era, and the clause in Art. XII of the original Chinese Eastern Railway Agreement, providing that the Chinese Government may take over the railway after thirty-six years from the day on which it is opened for traffic, is hereby declared null and void. THE CHINO-JAPANESE NEGOTIATIONS

Official statement by the Chinese Government respecting the Chino-Japanese negotiations brought to a conclusion by China's compliance with the terms of Japan's ultimatum delivered on May 7, 1915.

[Published May 13, 1915.]

At three o'clock in the afternoon of May 7, 1915, his excellency the Japanese Minister in Peking delivered to the Chinese Government in person an ultimatum from the Imperial Japanese Government, with an accompanying note of seven articles. The concluding sentences of the ultimatum read thus:

The Imperial Government hereby again offer their advice and hope that the Chinese Government, upon this advice, will give a satisfactory reply by six o'clock p. m. on the ninth day of May. It is hereby declared that if no satisfactory reply is received before or at the specified time the Imperial Government will take such steps as they may deem necessary.

The Chinese Government—having received and accepted the ultimatum—feel constrained to make a frank and plain statement of the facts connected with the negotiations which were abruptly terminated by this drastic action on the part of Japan.

The Chinese Government have constantly aimed, as they still aim, at consolidating the friendship existing between China and Japan, and, in this period of travail in other parts of the world, have been particularly solicitous of preserving peace in the Far East. Unexpectedly on January 18, 1915, his excellency the Japanese Minister in Peking, in pursuance of instructions from his Government, adopted the unusual procedure of presenting to His Excellency the President of the Republic of China a list (hereto appended) of twenty-one momentous demands, arranged in five groups. The first four groups were each introduced by a preamble, but there was no preamble or explanation to the fifth group. In respect of the character of the demands in this group, however, no difference was indicated in the document between them and those embodied in the preceding groups.

Although there was no cause for such a démarche, the Chinese Government, in deference to the wishes of the Imperial Japanese Government, at once agreed to open negotiations on those articles which it was possible for China to consider, notwithstanding that it was palpable that the whole of the demands were intended to extend the rights and interests of Japan without securing a quid pro quo of any kind for China.

China approached the pending conferences in a spirit of utmost friendliness and with a determination to deal with all questions frankly and sincerely. Before negotiations were actually commenced the Japanese Minister raised many questions with regard to the number of delegates proposed to represent China, the number of conferences to be held in each week, and the method of discussion. The Chinese Government, though their views differed from those of the Japanese Minister, yielded in all these respects to his contentions in the hope of avoiding any delay in the negotiations. The objections of the Japanese Minister to the customary recording and signing of the minutes of each conference, which the Chinese Government suggested as a necessary and advisable precaution, as well as one calculated to facilitate future reference, were also accepted. Nor did the Chinese Government retaliate in any way when in the course of the negotiations the Japanese Minister twice suspended the conferences, obviously with the object of compelling compliance with his views on certain points at the time under discussion. Even when delay was threatened owing to the unfortunate injury sustained by the Japanese Minister as a result of a fall from his horse, the Chinese delegates, in order to avert interruption, proposed that the conferences should be continued at the Japanese Legation, which proposal was accepted. Later, when on March 22, the Japanese Government despatched large bodies of troops to South Manchuria and Shantung for the ostensible purpose of relieving the garrison—whose term of service had not then expired—the Japanese Minister stated at the conference, in reply to a direct question as to when the retiring troops would be withdrawn, that this would not be done until the negotiations could be brought to a satisfactory conclusion. Although this minatory step caused much excitement, indignation and alarm on the part of the Chinese people, and made it difficult for the Chinese Government to continue the conferences, they successfully exerted efforts to avert a rupture and thus enabled the negotiations smoothly to proceed. All this demonstrates that the Chinese Government were dominated by a sincere desire to expedite the progress of the conferences; and that the Japanese Government recognized this important fact was made clear on March 11 when the Japanese Minister conveyed to the Chinese Government an expression of his Government's appreciation of China's frankness and sincerity in the conduct of the negotiations.

From February 2, when the negotiations were commenced, to April 17, twenty-four conferences were held in all. Throughout this whole period the Chinese Government steadfastly strove to arrive at an amicable settlement and made every concession possible.

Of the twenty-one demands originally submitted by Japan, China agreed to fifteen, some in principle and some textually, six being initialled by both parties.

IN THE MATTER OF THE DEMANDS TO WHICH CHINA AGREED :

At the first conference, held on February 2, China agreed in principle to the first article of the Shantung Group of demands which provides that China should give her assent to the transfer of Germany's rights in Shantung to Japan. The Chinese Government maintained at first that the subject of this demand related to the post bellum settlement, and, therefore, should be left over for discussion by all the parties interested at the Peace Conference. Failing to persuade the Japanese Minister to accept this view, the Chinese Government agreed to this demand in principle, and made certain supplementary proposals.

One of the supplementary proposals was in these terms :

The Japanese Government declares that when the Chinese Government give their assent to the disposition of the interests above referred to, Japan will restore the Leased Territory of Kiaochow to China, and further recognizes the right of the Chinese Government to participate in the negotiations referred to above between Japan and Germany.

The provision for a declaration to restore Kiaochow was clearly not a demand on Japan but only a reiteration of Japan's voluntary statement in her ultimatum to Germany on August 15, 1914, (a copy of which was officially transmitted to the Chinese Government for perusal on August 15), and repeated in public statements by the Japanese Premier. Appreciating the earnest desire of Japan to maintain the peace of the Far East and to cement her friendship with China, as evidenced by this friendly offer, the Chinese Government left the entire question of the conditions of restoration to be determined by Japan, and refrained from making any reference thereto in the supplementary proposal. The suggestion relating to participation in the conference between Japan and Germany was made in view of the fact that Shantung, the object of future negotiation between Japan and Germany, is a Chinese province, and therefore China is the power most concerned in the future of that territory.

Another supplementary proposal suggesting the assumption by Japan of responsibility for indemnification of the losses arising out of the military operations by Japan in and about the leased territory of Kiaochow was necessitated by the fact that China was neutral vis-à-vis the war between Japan and Germany. Had China not inserted such a provision, her position in relation to this conflict might have been liable to misconstruction—the localities in which the operations took place being a portion of China's territory—and might also have exposed herself to a claim for indemnification of losses for which she was in no way responsible.

In a further supplementary proposal the Chinese Government suggested that, prior to the restoration of the Kiaochow territory to China, the maritime customs, the telegraphs and post offices should be continued to be administered as heretofore; that the military railway, the telegraph lines, etc., which were installed by Japan to facilitate her military operations, should be removed forthwith; that the Japanese troops now stationed outside of the leased territory should be first withdrawn, and those within the territory should be recalled at the time when Kiaochow is returned to China. Shantung being a Chinese province, it was natural for China to be anxious concerning the restoration of the status quo ante bellum. Although the Chinese Government were confident that the Japanese Government would effect such restoration in pursuance of their official declaration, it was necessary for China, being neutral throughout the war, to place these matters on record.

At the third conference, held on February 22, China agreed to the second demand in the Shantung Group not to cede or lease to any Power any territory or island or land on the sea border of Shantung.

At the fifth conference, held on February 28, China agreed to give Japan the preference, provided Germany abandoned the privilege, to supply the capital for the construction of a railway from Chefoo or Lungkow to connect with the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu railway, in the event of China deciding to build that railway with foreign capital.

At the sixth conference, held on March 3, China, in the interests of foreign trade, agreed to open certain important cities in Shantung as trade marts under regulations approved by the Japanese Government, although this was a demand on the part of Japan for privileges additional to any that hitherto had been enjoyed by Germany and was not an outcome of the hostilities between Japan and Germany, nor, in the opinion of the Chinese Government, was its acceptance essential to the preservation of peace in the Far East.

At the eighth conference, held on March 9, China agreed (1) to the extension of the term of the lease of Dairen and (2) Port Arthur, and (3) of the South Manchuria and (4) Antung-Mukden railways, all to 99 years.

Owing to the bitter experiences which China sustained in the past in connexion with the leased portions of her territory, it has become her settled policy not to grant further leases nor to extend the term of those now in existence. Therefore, it was a significant indication of China's desire to meet Japan's wishes when she agreed to this exceptional departure from her settled policy.

At the same conference the Chinese Government also agreed to refrain from raising objections to the principle of co-operation in the Hanyehping Company, if the latter should arrive [at] an agreement in this respect with the Japanese capitalists concerned. With reference to this question it was pointed out to the Japanese Minister that, in the Provisional Constitution of the Republic of China, Chinese subjects are guaranteed the right of protection of their property and freedom to engage in any lawful occupation. The Government were precluded, therefore, from interfering with the private business of the people, and could not find any other solution than the one thus agreed to.

As regards the single article of the fourth group, and the preamble thereto, the Chinese Government held that they were inconsistent with Chinese sovereignty. However, China, at this conference, expressed her readiness to meet the wishes of Japan so far as it was possible without infringing her sovereignty, and agreed to make a voluntary pronouncement that she would not alienate any portion of her coast line.

In connection with the South Manchuria Railway it is worthy of note that the provision regarding the repurchase period in the agreement (36 years from 1902) was not mentioned in Japan's original proposal. Subsequently the Japanese Government, on the ground that the meaning of this provision was not clear, requested China to agree to its cancellation. To this request the Chinese Government acceded, though well aware that the proposed change could only benefit Japan. China thus relinquished the right to repurchase the railway at the expiration of another 23 years.

In connection with the Antung-Mukden Railway the article which was originally initialled at the conference, provided for the reversion of the railway to China at the end of 99 years without payment, but, at the subsequent meeting, the Japanese Minister requested that the reference to the reversion without payment be deleted from the initialled article. In acceding to the Japanese Minister's request, China again showed her sincere desire to expedite matters and to meet Japan's wishes even at the sacrifice of a point in her favour, to which Japan had already agreed.

At the eleventh conference, held on March 16, China agreed to give Japan preference in regard to loans for railway construction in South Manchuria.

At the thirteenth conference, held on March 23, China agreed (1) to the amendment of the Kirin-Changchun Railway loan agreement; (2) to give preference to Japan if the revenue of South Manchuria were offered as security for loans; (3) to give preference to Japanese in the event of the employment of advisers for South Manchuria; (4) to grant to Japanese the right of mining in nine specified areas in South Manchuria.

In its original form the demand with reference to mining in South Manchuria tended to create a monopoly for Japanese subjects, and, therefore, was entirely inconsistent with the principle of equal opportunity. The Chinese Government explained that they could not, in view of the treaty rights of other Powers, agree to this monopoly, but they readily gave their acceptance when Japan consented to the modification of the demand so as to mitigate its monopolistic character.

In connection with the Kirin-Changchun Railway the amendment agreed to involves a fundamental revision of the original agreement on the basis of the existing railway loan concluded by China with other foreign capitalists, as well as an engagement on the part of the Chinese Government to extend to this railway any better terms which may be hereafter accorded to other railway concessionaires in China. The capital of this railway was originally fifty per cent. Chinese and fifty per cent. Japanese. The effect of this undertaking is to transfer the capital originally held by the Chinese, as well as the full control and administration of the railway, to the Japanese.

At the twenty-first conference, held on April 10, China agreed, in regard to the demands concerning Fukien Province, to give Japan an assurance in accordance with Japan's wishes at a future time.

As regards demands 2 and 3 in the Manchurian group, relating to the ownership of land for trade, manufacture, and agricultural enterprises as well as for the right of settlement in the interior of South Manchuria, the Chinese Government, after discussion at several conferences, agreed to them in principle, but desired to introduce certain amendments concerning the control and protection of the Japanese subjects who might avail themselves of these rights. The course of the negotiations in connection with these amendments will be referred to subsequently.

IN THE MATTER OF THOSE DEMANDS TO WHICH CHINA COULD NOT AGREE:

Of the twenty-one original demands there were six, as previously mentioned, to which China could not agree on the ground that they were not proper subjects for international negotiation, conflicting as they did with the sovereign rights of China, the treaty rights of other Powers, and the principle of equal opportunity.

Thus, for example, the second article of the Hanyehping question in the original third group in particular seriously affected the principle of equal commercial and industrial opportunity.

The proposal that there should be joint administration by China and Japan of the police in China was clearly an interference with the Republic's domestic affairs, and consequently an infringement of her sovereignty. For that reason the Chinese Government could not take the demand into consideration. But when it was explained by the Japanese Minister that this referred only to South Manchuria, and he suggested that his Government would be satisfied if China agreed to engage Japanese as police advisers for that territory, the Chinese Government accepted the suggestion.

The two articles relating to the acquisition of land for schools, hospitals, and temples, as well as to the right of missionary propaganda, would, in the opinion of the Chinese Government, have presented grave obstacles to the consolidation of the friendly feeling subsisting between the two people. The religions of the two countries are identical and therefore the need for a missionary propaganda to be carried on in China by Japanese does not exist. The natural rivalry between Chinese and Japanese followers of the same faith would tend to create incessant disputes and friction. Whereas Western missionaries live apart from the Chinese communities among which they labor, Japanese monks would live with the Chinese, and the similarity of their physical characteristics, their religious garb, and their habits of life would render it impossible to distinguish them for purposes of affording the protection which the Japanese Government would require should be extended to them under the system of extraterritoriality now obtaining in China. Moreover, a general apprehension exists among the Chinese people that these peculiar conditions favoring conspiracies for political purposes might be taken advantage of by some unscrupulous Chinese.

The demand for railway concessions in the Yangtze Valley conflicted with the Shanghai-Hangchow-Ningpo Railway agreement of March 6, 1908, the Nanking-Changsha Railway Agreement of March 31, 1914, and the engagement of August 24, 1914, giving preference to British firms for the projected line from Nanchang to Chaochowfu. For this reason the Chinese Government found themselves unable to consider the demand, though the Japanese Minister, while informed of China's engagements with Great Britain, repeatedly pressed for its acceptance.

In respect to the demand for the appointment of influential Japanese to be advisers in political, financial and military affairs, the policy of the Chinese Government in regard to the appointment of advisers has been similar to that which has presumably guided the Japanese Government in like circumstances, namely, the selection of the best qualified men irrespective of their nationality. As an indication of their desire to avail themselves of the services of eminent Japanese, one of the earliest appointments made to an advisership was that of Dr. Ariga, while later on Dr. Hirai and Mr. Nakayama were appointed to the Ministry of Communications.

It was considered that the demand that Japanese should be appointed in the three most important administrative departments, as well as the demand for the joint control of China's police, and the demand for an engagement to purchase a fixed amount of arms and ammunition from Japan or to establish joint arsenals in China, so clearly involved the sovereignty of the Republic that the Chinese Government were unable even to consider them.

For these reasons the Chinese Government, at the very outset of the negotiations, declared that they were unable to negotiate on the demands; but, in deference to the wishes of the Japanese Minister, the Chinese delegates consented to give the reasons for declining to enter into a discussion of them.

IN THE MATTER OF THE QUESTIONS OF DISPUTE INVOLVED IN SOME OF THE FOREGOING DEMANDS:

The demand by Japan for the right of her subjects in South Manchuria to lease or own land, and to reside and travel, and to engage in business or manufacture of any kind whatever was deemed by the Chinese Government to obtain for Japanese subjects in this region a privileged status beyond the terms of the treaties existing between the two nations, and to give them a freedom of action which would be a restriction of China's sovereignty and a serious infringement of her administrative rights. Should Japanese subjects be granted the right of owning land, it would mean that all the landed property in the region might fall into their hands, thereby endangering China's territorial integrity. Moreover, residence in the interior was incompatible with the existence of extraterritoriality, the relinquishment of which is necessary to the actual enjoyment of the privilege of inland residence, as evidenced in practice of other nations.

Japan's unconditional demand for the privilege of inland residence accompanied with a desire to extend extraterritoriality into the interior of China and to enable Japanese subjects to monopolize all the interests in South Manchuria was also palpably irreconcilable with the principle of equal opportunity. For this reason the Chinese Government were, in the first instance, unable to accept this demand as a basis of negotiation. Their profound regard for the friendly relations of the two countries, however, persuaded them to exert their utmost efforts, in spite of all the inherent difficulties, to seek a solution of a question which was practically impossible to solve. Knowing that the proposal made by Japan was incompatible with treaties, they nevertheless sought to meet her wishes within the limits of treaties. Accordingly they submitted a counter-proposal to open more places in South Manchuria to international trade and to establish Sino-Japanese joint reclamation companies.

This suggestion was made in the belief that the places to which Japanese subjects would desire to resort for purposes of trade could not be other than important localities; if all these localities were opened to commerce, then they could reside, trade, and lease land there for joint reclamation. Thus Japanese subjects might enjoy the essence of the privilege of inland residence and would still be able to reconcile their position with China's treaties and the principle of equal opportunity.

After the Japanese Government declined to accept this suggestion, China withdrew it and replaced it with an amendment to the original articles. It was proposed in this amendment to grant to Japanese subjects the extra-treaty privilege of inland residence with the provisos that Japanese subjects in places outside of trade ports should observe Chinese police regulations and pay taxes in the same manner as Chinese; and that civil and criminal cases involving such Japanese subjects should be adjudicated by Chinese authorities, the Japanese consul attending merely to watch the proceedings. This suggestion was not an innovation; it was based upon the modus operandi now in force as regards the Korean settlers in inland districts in Chientao. But the Japanese Government again declined to accept it.

The Chinese Government thereupon made a third proposal along the line of what constitutes the present practice in Turkey, making a distinction, however, in favour of Japanese subjects, in the exercise of jurisdiction over civil and criminal cases. This was once more objected to by the Japanese Government.

Then the Chinese Government proposed to concede still another step—the fourth endeavour to meet Japan's wishes. They proposed to agree to the full text of articles 2 and 3 relative to the question of inland residence, except that "the right of owning land" was changed into "the right of leasing land" and to the phrase "cultivating land" was added this clause: "the regulations for which shall be determined separately"; and, further, to add a supplementary article which embodied a modus operandi which the Chinese Government had constrained themselves to make out of a desire to come to a settlement over this question. The view advanced in this supplementary article was based upon the Japanese Minister's declaration made on March 6, 1915, that a separate article embodying some compromise might be added to the original articles 2 and 3 for the purpose of avoiding any conflict with China's sovereignty or the system established by treaties.

These suggestions made by the Chinese Government were not accepted by Japan.

As regards Eastern Inner Mongolia not only have no treaties been entered into with Japan concerning this region, but also the people are so unaccustomed to foreign trade that the Chinese Government invariably feel much anxiety about the safety of foreigners who elect to travel there. The Chinese Government, therefore, considered that it would not be in the interest of foreigners to open the whole territory to them for residence and commerce, and on these grounds based their original refusal to place Eastern Inner Mongolia on the same footing as South Manchuria. Still, their desire to meet the wishes of the Japanese Government eventually prompted them to offer to open a number of places in the region to foreign trade.

IN THE MATTER OF JAPAN'S REVISED DEMANDS.

The foregoing is an outline of the negotiations up to April 17. It was hoped by the Chinese Government that the Japanese Government in view of the great concessions made by China at the conferences held up to this time, would see a way of effecting an amicable settlement by modifying their position on certain points. In regard to these it had, by this time, become manifest that China would encounter almost insuperable difficulties in making further concessions.

The Japanese Government, however, suspended the negotiations until April 26, when they surprised the Chinese Government by presenting a new list of twenty-four demands (which is hereto appended), and requested the Chinese Government to accord their acceptance without delay, adding that this was their final proposal. At the same time the Japanese Minister stated that the Japanese Government would restore the leased territory of Kiaochow to China at an opportune time in the future and under proper conditions, if the Chinese Government would agree to the new list of twenty-four demands without modification.

In this new list although the term "special position" in the preamble of the Manchurian group was changed to "economic relations," and although the character of the articles in the original fifth group was altered from demands to a recital of alleged statements by the Chinese Foreign Minister, four new demands were introduced concerning Eastern Inner Mongolia. In deference to the wishes of the Japanese Government, the Chinese Government gave the revised list the most careful consideration; and being sincerely desirous of an early settlement offered new concessions in their reply presented to the Japanese Minister on May 1.

In this reply the Chinese Government reinserted the proposal in reference to the retrocession of Kiaochow which they advanced at the first conference on February 2, and which was postponed at the request of the Japanese Minister. This, therefore, was in no sense a new proposal.

The Chinese Government also proposed to agree to three of the four articles relating to Eastern Inner Mongolia. There was some difficulty in determining a definition of the boundaries of Eastern Inner Mongolia—this being a new expression in Chinese geographical terminology—but the Chinese Government, acting upon a statement made at a previous conference by the Japanese Minister that the Japanese Government meant the region under Chinese administrative jurisdiction, and taking note, in the list presented by the Japanese Minister, of the names of places in Eastern Inner Mongolia to be opened to trade, inferred that the so-called Eastern Inner Mongolia is that part of Inner Mongolia which is under the jurisdiction of South Manchuria and the Jehol intendency; and refrained from placing any limitations upon the definition of this term.

The Chinese Government also withdrew their supplementary proposal reserving the right of making regulations for agricultural enterprises to be undertaken by Japanese settlers in South Manchuria.

In respect of the trial of cases involving land disputes between Japanese only, or between Japanese and Chinese, the Chinese Government accorded to the Japanese consul the right of deputing an officer to watch the proceedings.

The Chinese Government also agreed to accept the suggestion of the Japanese Government to modify the term "police law and ordinances" into "police rules and regulations," thereby limiting the extent of control which the Chinese would have over Japanese subjects.

As regards the Hanyehping demand, the Chinese Government accepted the draft made by the Japanese Government, embodying an engagement by the Chinese Government not to convert the Company into a State-owned concern, nor to confiscate it, nor to force it to borrow foreign capital other than Japanese.

In respect of the Fukien question the Chinese Government also agreed to give an assurance in the amplified form suggested by the Japanese Government that the Chinese Government had not given their consent to any foreign nations to construct a dockyard, or a coaling station, or a naval base, or any other military establishment along the coast of Fukien Province; nor did they contemplate borrowing foreign capital for the foregoing purposes.

Having made these concessions, which practically brought the views of China into line with those of Japan, and having explained in a note accompanying the reply the difficulty for China to make further concessions, the Chinese Government hoped that the Japanese Government would accept their reply of May 1, and thus bring the negotiations to an amicable conclusion.

The Japanese Government, however, expressed themselves as being dissatisfied with China's reply, and withdrew the conditional offer to restore Kiaochow to China made on April 26. It was further intimated that if the Chinese Government did not give their full compliance with the list of twenty-four demands, Japan would have recourse to drastic measures.

Upon receiving this intimation the Chinese Government, inspired by the conciliatory spirit which had been predominant from the very beginning of the negotiations and desirous of avoiding any possible rupture in the relations of the two countries, made a supreme effort to meet the situation, and represented to the Japanese Government that they would reconsider their position and make another attempt to find a solution that would be more satisfactory to Japan, in respect to those articles which China had declared could not be taken up for consideration, but to which Japan attached great importance. Even in the evening of May 6, after the Japanese Minister had notified the Chinese Government that the Ultimatum had arrived in Peking, the Chinese Government in the interests of peace still exerted efforts to save the situation by offering to meet Japan's wishes.

These overtures were again rejected, and thus was exhausted the means at the disposal of the Chinese Government to prevent an impasse.

It is plain that the Chinese Government proceeded to the fullest extent of possible concession in view of the strong national sentiment manifested by the people throughout the whole period of negotiations. All that the Chinese Government strove to maintain was China's plenary sovereignty, the treaty rights of foreign Powers in China and the principle of equal opportunity.

To the profound regret of the Chinese Government however, the tremendous sacrifices which they had shown themselves ready to make proved unavailing, and an ultimatum (the text of which is appended) was duly delivered to them by the Japanese Minister at three o'clock on the afternoon of May 7.

As to the allegations made in the ultimatum against China the Chinese Government hope that the foregoing outline of the history of the negotiations constitutes a clear, dispassionate, and complete reply.

In considering the nature of the course they should take with reference to the ultimatum the Chinese Government was influenced by a desire to preserve the Chinese people, as well as the large number of foreign residents in China, from unnecessary suffering and also to prevent the interests of friendly Powers from being imperilled. For these reasons the Chinese Government were constrained to comply in full with the terms of the ultimatum (the reply being hereto appended), but in complying the Chinese Government disclaim any desire to associate themselves with any revision, which may thus be effected, of the various conventions and agreements concluded between other Powers in respect of the maintenance of China's territorial independence and integrity, the preservation of the status quo, and the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations in China.

I.

JAPAN'S ORIGINAL DEMANDS.

Translations of Documents handed to His Excellency the President, Yuan Shih-Kai, by His Excellency Mr. Hioki, the Japanese Minister, on January 18th, 1915.

I.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government being desirous of maintaining the general peace in Eastern Asia and further strengthening the friendly relations and good neighbourhood existing between the two nations agree to the following articles:—

Article 1. The Chinese Government engages to give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government relating to the disposition of all rights, interests and concessions which Germany, by virtue of treaties or otherwise, possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

Article 2. The Chinese Government engages that within the Province of Shantung and along its coast no territory or island will be ceded or leased to a third Power under any pretext.

Article 3. The Chinese Government consents to Japan's building a railway from Chefoo or Lungkow to join the Kiaochou-Tsinanfu Railway.

Article 4. The Chinese Government engages, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by herself as soon as possible certain important cities and towns in the Province of Shantung as commercial ports. What places shall be opened are to be jointly decided upon in a separate agreement.

II.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, since the Chinese Government has always acknowledged the special position enjoyed by Japan in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, agree to the following articles:—

Article 1. The two contracting parties mutually agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny and the term of lease of the South Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway shall be extended to the period of 99 years.

Article 2. Japanese subjects in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia shall have the right to lease or own land required either for erecting suitable buildings for trade and manufacture or for farming.

Article 3. Japanese subjects shall be free to reside and travel in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia and to engage in business and in manufacture of any kind whatsoever.

Article 4. The Chinese Government agrees to grant to Japanese subjects the right of opening the mines in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia. As regards what mines are to be opened, they shall be decided upon jointly.

Article 5. The Chinese Government agrees that in respect of the (two) cases mentioned herein below the Japanese Government's consent shall be first obtained before action is taken:—

(a). Whenever permission is granted to the subject of a third Power to build a railway or to make a loan with a third Power for the purpose of building a railway in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia.

(b). Whenever a loan is to be made with a third Power pledging the local taxes of South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia as security.

Article 6. The Chinese Government agrees that if the Chinese Government employs political, financial, or military advisers or instructors in South Manchuria or Eastern Inner Mongolia, the Japanese Government shall first be consulted.

Article 7. The Chinese Government agrees that the control and management of the Kirin-Changchun Railway shall be handed over to the Japanese Government for a term of 99 years dating from the signing of this agreement.

III.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, seeing that Japanese financiers and the Hanyehping Co. have close relations with each other at present and desiring that the common interests of the two nations shall be advanced, agree to the following articles:—

Article 1. The two contracting parties mutually agree that when the opportune moment arrives the Hanyehping Company shall be made a joint concern of the two nations and they further agree that without the previous consent of Japan, China shall not by her own act dispose of the rights and property of whatsoever nature of the said company nor cause the said company to dispose freely of the same.

Article 2. The Chinese Government agrees that all mines in the neighborhood of those owned by the Hanyehping Company shall not be permitted, without the consent of the said company, to be worked by other persons outside of the said company; and further agrees that if it is desired to carry out any undertaking which, it is apprehended, may directly or indirectly affect the interests of the said company, the consent of the said company shall first be obtained.

IV.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government with the object of effectively preserving the territorial integrity of China agree to the following special article:—

The Chinese Government engages not to cede or lease to a third Power any harbour or bay or island along the coast of China.

V.

Article 1. The Chinese Central Government shall employ influential Japanese as advisers in political, financial and military affairs.

Article 2. Japanese hospitals, churches and schools in the interior of China shall be granted the right of owning land.

Article 3. Inasmuch as the Japanese Government and the Chinese Government have had many cases of dispute between Japanese and Chinese police to settle, cases which caused no little misunderstanding, it is for this reason necessary that the police departments of important places (in China) shall be jointly administered by Japanese and Chinese or that the police departments of these places shall employ numerous Japanese, so that they may at the same time help to plan for the improvement of the Chinese police service.

Article 4. China shall purchase from Japan a fixed amount of munitions of war (say 50% or more) of what is needed by the Chinese Government, or there shall be established in China a Sino-Japanese jointly worked arsenal. Japanese technical experts are to be employed and Japanese material to be purchased.

Article 5. China agrees to grant to Japan the right of constructing a railway connecting Wuchang with Kiukiang and Nanchang, another line between Nanchang and Hangchow, and another between Nanchang and Chaochou.

Article 6. If China needs foreign capital to work mines, build railways and construct harbour-works (including dock-yards) in the Province of Fukien, Japan shall be first consulted.

Article 7. China agrees that Japanese subjects shall have the right of missionary propaganda⁶⁰ in China.

 II.

JAPAN'S REVISED DEMANDS.

Japan's Revised Demands on China, twenty-four in all, presented April 26, 1915.

The revised list of articles is a Chinese translation of the Japanese text. It is hereby declared that when a final decision is reached, there shall be a revision of the wording of the text.

GROUP I.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, being desirous of maintaining the general peace in Eastern Asia and further strengthening the friendly relations and good neighbourhood existing between the two nations, agree to the following articles:—

Article 1. The Chinese Government engages to give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government, relating to the disposition of all rights, interests and concessions which Germany, by virtue of treaties or otherwise, possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

Article 2. (Changed into an exchange of notes).

The Chinese Government declares that within the Province of Shantung and along its coast no territory or island will be ceded or leased to any Power under any pretext.

Article 3. The Chinese Government consents that as regards the railway to be built by China herself from Chefoo or Lungkow to connect with the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu Railway, if Germany is willing to abandon the privilege of financing the Chefoo-Weihsien line, China will approach Japanese capitalists to negotiate for a loan.

Article 4. The Chinese Government engages, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by China herself as soon as possible certain suitable places in the Province of Shantung as commercial ports.

(Supplementary exchange of notes.)

The places which ought to be opened are to be chosen, and the regulations are to be drafted, by the Chinese Government, but the Japanese Minister must be consulted before making a decision.

GROUP II.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, with a view to developing their economic relations in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, agree to the following articles:—

Article 1. The two contracting Powers mutually agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny and the terms of the South Manchuria Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway, shall be extended to 99 years.

(Supplementary exchange of notes.)

The term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny shall expire in the 86th year of the Republic or 1997. The date for restoring the South Manchurian Railway to China shall fall due in the 91st year of the Republic or 2002. Article 12 in the original South Manchurian Railway Agreement that it may be redeemed by China after 36 years after the traffic is opened is hereby cancelled. The term of the Antung-Mukden Railway shall expire in the 96th year of the Republic or 2007.

⁶⁰ Refers to preaching Buddhism.

Article 2. Japanese subjects in South Manchuria may lease or purchase the necessary land for erecting suitable buildings for trade and manufacture or for prosecuting agricultural enterprises.

Article 3. Japanese subjects shall be free to reside and travel in South Manchuria and to engage in business and manufacture of any kind whatsoever.

Article 3a. The Japanese subjects referred to in the preceding two articles, besides being required to register with the local authorities passports which they must procure under the existing regulations, shall also submit to police laws and ordinances and tax regulations, which are approved by the Japanese consul. Civil and criminal cases in which the defendants are Japanese shall be tried and adjudicated by the Japanese consul; those in which the defendants are Chinese shall be tried and adjudicated by Chinese authorities. In either case an officer can be deputed to the court to attend the proceedings. But mixed civil cases between Chinese and Japanese relating to land shall be tried and adjudicated by delegates of both nations conjointly in accordance with Chinese law and local usage. When the judicial system in the said region is completely reformed, all civil and criminal cases concerning Japanese subjects shall be tried entirely by Chinese law courts.

Article 4. (Changed to an exchange of notes.)

The Chinese Government agrees that Japanese subjects shall be permitted forthwith to investigate, select, and then prospect for and open mines at the following places in South Manchuria, apart from those mining areas in which mines are being prospected for or worked; until the mining ordinance is definitely settled methods at present in force shall be followed.

Province of Feng-Tien.

Sha Sung Kang	Ho-lung	C. & I.
Kang Yao	Chi-lin (Kirin)	Coal.
Chia P'i Kou	Hua-tien	Gold.

Article 5. (Changed to an exchange of notes.)

The Chinese Government declares that China will hereafter provide funds for building railways in South Manchuria; if foreign capital is required, the Chinese Government agrees to negotiate for the loan with Japanese capitalists first.

Article 5a. (Changed to an exchange of notes.)

The Chinese Government agrees that hereafter, when a foreign loan is to be made on the security of the taxes of South Manchuria (not including customs and salt revenue on the security of which loans have already been made by the Central Government), it will negotiate for the loan with Japanese capitalists first.

Article 6. (Changed to an exchange of notes.)

The Chinese Government declares that hereafter if foreign advisers or instructors on political, financial, military or police matters, are to be employed in South Manchuria, Japanese will be employed first.

Article 7. The Chinese Government agrees speedily to make a fundamental revision of the Kirin-Changchun Railway Loan Agreement, taking as a standard the provisions in railway loan agreements made heretofore between China and foreign financiers. If, in future, more advantageous terms than those in existing railway loan agreements are granted to foreign financiers, in connection with railway loans, the above agreement shall again be revised in accordance with Japan's wishes.

CHINESE COUNTER-PROPOSAL TO ARTICLE 7.

All existing treaties between China and Japan relating to Manchuria shall, except where otherwise provided for by this convention, remain in force.

MATTERS RELATING TO EASTERN INNER MONGOLIA.

1. The Chinese Government agrees that hereafter when a foreign loan is to be made on the security of the taxes of Eastern Inner Mongolia, China must negotiate with the Japanese Government first.

2. The Chinese Government agrees that China will herself provide funds for building the railways in Eastern Inner Mongolia; if foreign capital is required, she must negotiate with Japanese Government first.

3. The Chinese Government agrees, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by China herself, as soon as possible, certain suitable places in Eastern Inner Mongolia as commercial ports. The places which ought to be opened are to be chosen, and the regulations are to be drafted, by the Chinese Government, but the Japanese Minister must be consulted before making a decision.

4. In the event of Japanese and Chinese desiring jointly to undertake agricultural enterprises and industries incidental thereto, the Chinese Government shall give its permission.

GROUP III.

The relations between Japan and the Hanyehping Company being very intimate, if those interested in the said company come to an agreement with the Japanese capitalists for cooperation, the Chinese Government shall forthwith give its consent thereto. The Chinese Government further agrees that, without the consent of the Japanese capitalists, China will not convert the company into a state enterprise, nor confiscate it, nor cause it to borrow and use foreign capital other than Japanese.

GROUP IV.

China to give a pronouncement by herself in accordance with the following principle:—

No bay, harbour, or island along the coast of China may be ceded or leased to any Power.

NOTES TO BE EXCHANGED.

A.

As regards the right of financing a railway from Wuchang to connect with the Kiukiang-Nanchang line, the Nanchang-Hangchow railway, and the Nanchang-Chaochow railway, if it is clearly ascertained that other Powers have no objection, China shall grant the said right to Japan.

B.

As regards the right of financing a railway from Wuchang to connect with the Kiukiang-Nanchang railway, a railway from Nanchang to Hangchow and another from Nanchang to Chaochow, the Chinese Government shall not grant the said right, to any foreign Power before Japan comes to an understanding with the other Power which is heretofore interested therein.

NOTES TO BE EXCHANGED.

The Chinese Government agrees that no nation whatever is to be permitted to construct, on the coast of Fukien Province, a dock-yard, a coaling station for military use, or a naval base; not to be authorized to set up any other military establishment. The Chinese Government further agrees not to use foreign capital for setting up the above mentioned construction or establishment.

MR. LU, THE MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, STATED AS FOLLOWS:

1. The Chinese Government shall, whenever, in future, it considers this step necessary, engage numerous Japanese advisers.

2. Whenever, in future, Japanese subjects desire to lease or purchase land in the interior of China for establishing schools or hospitals, the Chinese Government shall forthwith give its consent thereto.

3. When a suitable opportunity arises in future, the Chinese Government will send military officers to Japan to negotiate with Japanese military authorities the matter of purchasing arms or that of establishing a joint arsenal.

MR. HIOKI, THE JAPANESE MINISTER, STATED AS FOLLOWS:

As relates to the question of the right of missionary propaganda, the same shall be taken up again for negotiation in future.

III.

MEMORANDUM.

Read by the Minister of Foreign Affairs to Mr. Hioki, the Japanese Minister, at a conference held at Wai Chiao Pu, May 1, 1915.

The list of demands which the Japanese Government first presented to the Chinese Government consists of five groups, the first relating to Shantung, the second relating to South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, the third relating to Hanyehping Company, the fourth asking for non alienation of the coast of the country, and the fifth relating to the questions of national advisers, national police, national arms, missionary propaganda, Yangtse valley railways, and Fukien Province. Out of profound regard for the intentions entertained by Japan, the Chinese Government took these momentous demands into grave and careful consideration and decided to negotiate with the Japanese Government frankly and sincerely what were possible to negotiate. This is a manifestation to Japan of the most profound regard which the Chinese Government entertains for the relations between the two nations.

Ever since the opening of the negotiations China has been doing her best to hasten their progress holding as many as three conferences a week. As regards the articles in the second group, the Chinese Government, being disposed to allow the Japanese Government to develop the economic relations of the two countries in South Manchuria, realizing that the Japanese Government attaches importance to its interests in that region, and wishing to meet the hope of Japan, made a painful effort, without hesitation, to agree to the extension of the 25-year lease of Port Arthur and Dalny, the 36-year period of the South Manchuria railway and the 15-year period of the Antung-Mukden railway, all to 99 years; and to abandon its own cherished hopes to regain control of these places and properties at the expiration of their respective original terms of lease. It cannot but be admitted that this is a most genuine proof of China's friendship for Japan.

As to the right of opening mines in South Manchuria, the Chinese Government has already agreed to permit Japanese to work mines within the mining areas designated by Japan. China has further agreed to give Japan a right of preference in the event of borrowing foreign capital for building railways or of making a loan on the security of the local taxes in South Manchuria. The question of revising the arrangement for the Kirin-Changchun railway has been settled in accordance with the proposal made by Japan. The Chinese Government has further agreed to employ Japanese first in the event of employing foreign advisers on political, military, financial and police matters.

Furthermore, the provision about the repurchase period in the South Manchurian railway was not mentioned in Japan's original proposal. Subsequently the Japanese Government, alleging that its meaning was not clear, asked China to cancel the provision altogether. Again, Japan at first demanded the right of Japanese to carry on farming in South Manchuria, but subsequently she considered the word "farming" was not broad enough and asked to replace it with the phrase "agricultural enterprises." To these requests the Chinese Government, though well aware that the proposed changes could only benefit Japan, still acceded without delay. This, too, is a proof of China's frankness and sincerity towards Japan.

As regards matters relating to Shantung the Chinese Government has agreed to a majority of the demands.

The question of inland residence in South Manchuria is, in the opinion of the Chinese Government, incompatible with the treaties China had entered into with Japan and other Powers, still the Chinese Government did its best to consider how it was possible to avoid that incompatibility. At first, China suggested that the Chinese authorities should have full rights of jurisdiction over Japanese settlers. Japan declined to agree to it. Thereupon China reconsidered the question and revised her counter-proposal five or six times, each time making some definite concession, and went so far as to agree that all civil and criminal cases between Chinese and Japanese should be arranged according to existing treaties. Only cases relating to land or lease contracts were reserved to be adjudicated by Chinese courts, as a mark of China's sovereignty over the region. This is another proof of China's readiness to concede as much as possible.

Eastern Inner Mongolia is not an enlightened region as yet and the conditions existing there are entirely different from those prevailing in South Manchuria. The two places therefore, cannot be considered in the same light. Accordingly, China agreed to open commercial ports first, in the interests of foreign trade.

The Hanyehping Company mentioned in the third group is entirely a private company, and the Chinese Government is precluded from interfering with it and negotiating with another Government to make any disposal of the same as the Government likes, but having regard for the interests of the Japanese capitalists, the Chinese Government agreed that whenever, in future, the said company and the Japanese capitalists should arrive at a satisfactory arrangement for co-operation, China will give her assent thereto. Thus the interests of the Japanese capitalists are amply safeguarded.

Although the demand in the fourth group asking for a declaration not to alienate China's coast is an infringement of her sovereign rights, yet the Chinese Government offered to make a voluntary pronouncement so far as it comports with China's sovereign rights. Thus, it is seen that the Chinese Government, in deference to the wishes of Japan, gave a most serious consideration even to those demands which gravely affect the sovereignty and territorial rights of China as well as the principle of equal opportunity and the treaties with foreign Powers. All this was a painful effort on the part of the Chinese Government to meet the situation—a fact of which the Japanese Government must be aware.

As regard the demands in the fifth group, they all infringe China's sovereignty, the treaty rights of other Powers or the principle of equal opportunity. Although Japan did not indicate any difference between this group and the preceding four in the list which she presented to China in respect of their character, the Chinese Government, in view of their palpably objectionable features, persuaded itself that these could not have been intended by Japan as anything other than Japan's mere advice to China. Accordingly China has declared from the very beginning that while she entertains the most profound regard for Japan's wishes, she was unable to admit that any of these matters could be made the subject of any understanding with Japan. Much as she desired to pay regard to Japan's wishes, China cannot but respect her own sovereign rights and the existing treaties with other Powers. In order to be rid of the seed for future misunderstanding and to strengthen the basis of friendship, China was constrained to iterate the reasons for refusing to negotiate on any of the articles in the fifth group, yet in view of Japan's wishes China has expressed her readiness to state that no foreign money was borrowed to construct harbour work in Fukien Province. Thus it is clear that China went so far as to seek a solution for Japan of a question that really did not admit of negotiation. Was there, then, evasion on the part of China?

Now, since the Japanese Government has presented a revised list of demands and declared at the same time, that it will restore the leased territory of Kiaochow, the Chinese Government reconsiders the whole question and herewith submits a new reply to the friendly Japanese Government.

In this reply the unsettled articles in the first group are stated again for discussion.

As regards the second group, those articles which have already been initialled are omitted. In connection with the question of inland residence the police regulation clause has been revised in a more restrictive sense. As for the trial of cases relating to land and lease contracts the Chinese Government now permits the Japanese consul to send an officer to attend the proceedings.

Of the four demands in connection with that part of Eastern Inner Mongolia which is within the jurisdiction of South Manchuria and the Jehol intendency, China agrees to three.

China, also, agrees to the article relating to the Hanyehping Company as revised by Japan.

It is hoped that the Japanese Government will appreciate the conciliatory spirit of the Chinese Government in making this final concession and forthwith give her assent thereto.

There is one more point. At the beginning of the present negotiations it was mutually agreed to observe secrecy but unfortunately a few days after the presentation of the demands by Japan an Osaka newspaper published an "Extra" giving the text of the demands. The foreign and the Chinese press has since been paying considerable attention to this question and frequently publishing pro-Chinese or pro-Japanese comments in order to call forth the world's conjecture—a matter which the Chinese Government deeply regrets.

The Chinese Government has never carried on any newspaper campaign and the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs has repeatedly declared it to the Japanese Minister.

In conclusion, the Chinese Government wishes to express its hope that the negotiations now pending between the two countries will soon come to an end and whatever misgivings foreign countries entertain toward the present situation may be quickly dispelled.

IV.

CHINA'S REPLY TO REVISED DEMANDS.

China's Reply of May 1, 1915 to the Japanese Revised Demands of April 26, 1915.

GROUP I.

The Chinese Government and the Japanese Government, being desirous of maintaining the general peace in Eastern Asia and further strengthening the friendly relations and good neighbourhood existing between the two nations, agree to the following articles:—

Article 1. The Chinese Government declare that they will give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese and German Governments may hereafter mutually agree, relating to the disposition of all interests which Germany, by virtue of treaties or recorded cases, possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

The Japanese Government declare that when the Chinese Government give their assent to the disposition of interests above referred to, Japan will restore the leased territory of Kiaochow to China; and further recognize the right of the Chinese Government to participate in the negotiations referred to above between Japan and Germany.

Article 2. The Japanese Government consent to be responsible for the indemnification of all losses occasioned by Japan's military operation around the leased territory of Kiaochow. The customs, telegraphs and post offices within the leased territory of Kiaochow shall, prior to the restoration of the said leased territory to China, be administered as heretofore for the time being. The railways and telegraph lines erected by Japan for military purposes are to be removed forthwith. The Japanese troops now stationed outside the original leased territory of Kiaochow are now to be withdrawn first, those within the original leased territory are to be withdrawn on the restoration of the said leased territory to China.

Article 3. (Changed to an exchange of notes.)

The Chinese Government declare that within the Province of Shantung and along its coast no territory or island will be ceded or leased to any Power under any pretext.

Article 4. The Chinese Government consent that as regards the railway to be built by China herself from Chefoo or Lungkow to connect with the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu railway, if Germany is willing to abandon the privilege of financing the Chefoo-Weihsien line, China will approach Japanese capitalists for a loan.

Article 5. The Chinese Government engage, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by herself as soon as possible certain suitable places in the Province of Shantung as commercial ports.

(Supplementary exchange of notes.)

The places which ought to be opened are to be chosen, and the regulations are to be drafted by the Chinese Government, but the Japanese Minister must be consulted before making a decision.

Article 6. If the Japanese and German Governments are not able to come to a definite agreement in future in their negotiations respecting transfer, etc., this provisional agreement contained in the foregoing articles shall be void.

GROUP II.*

The Chinese Government and the Japanese Government, with a view to developing their economic relations in South Manchuria agree to the following articles:—

Article 2. Japanese subjects in South Manchuria may, by arrangement with the owners, lease land required for erecting suitable buildings for trade and manufacture or agricultural enterprises.

Article 3. Japanese subjects shall be free to reside and travel in South Manchuria and to engage in business and manufacture of any kind whatsoever.

Article 3a. The Japanese subjects referred to in the preceding two articles, besides being required to register with the local authorities passports which they must procure under the existing regulations, shall also observe police rules and regulations and pay taxes in the same manner as Chinese. Civil and criminal cases shall be tried and adjudicated by the authorities of the defendant nationality and an officer can be deputed to attend the proceedings. But all cases purely between Japanese subjects and mixed cases between Japanese and Chinese, relating to land or disputes arising from lease contracts, shall be tried and adjudicated by Chinese authorities and the Japanese consul may also depute an officer to attend the proceedings. When the judicial system in the said Province is completely reformed, all the civil and criminal cases concerning Japanese subjects shall be tried entirely by Chinese law courts.

RELATING TO EASTERN INNER MONGOLIA.

(To be exchanged by notes.)

1. The Chinese Government declare that China will not in future pledge the taxes, other than customs and salt revenue of that part of Eastern Inner Mongolia under the jurisdiction of South Manchuria and Jehol Intendancy, as security for raising a foreign loan.

2. The Chinese Government declare that China will herself provide funds for building the railways in that part of Eastern Inner Mongolia under the jurisdiction of South Manchuria and the Jehol Intendancy; if foreign capital is required, China will negotiate with Japanese capitalists first, provided this does not conflict with agreements already concluded with other Powers.

The Chinese Government agree, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by China herself certain suitable places in that part of Eastern Inner Mongolia under the jurisdiction of South Manchuria and the Jehol Intendancy, as commercial marts.

The regulations for the said commercial marts will be made in accordance with those of other commercial marts opened by China herself.

GROUP III.

The relations between Japan and the Hanyehping Company being very intimate, if the said company comes to an agreement with the Japanese capitalists for co-operation, the Chinese Government shall forthwith give their consent thereto. The Chinese Government further declare that China will not convert the company into a state enterprise, nor confiscate it, nor cause it to borrow and use foreign capital other than Japanese.

Letter to be addressed by the Japanese Minister to the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Excellency: I have to honor to state that a report has reached me that the Chinese Government has given permission to foreign nation to construct, on the coast of Fukien Province, dock yards, coaling stations for military use, naval bases and other establishments for military purposes; and further, that the Chinese Government are borrowing foreign capital for putting up the above-mentioned constructions or establishments. I shall be much obliged, if the Chinese Government will inform me whether or not these reports are well founded in fact.

* The six articles which are found in Japan's Revised Demands of April 26, 1915, but omitted herein, are those already initialled by the Chinese Foreign Minister and the Japanese Minister.

Reply to be addressed by the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Japanese Minister.

Excellency: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of ----- In reply I beg to state that the Chinese Government have not given permission to foreign Powers to construct, on the coast of Fukien Province, dock yards, coaling stations for military use, naval bases or other establishments for military purposes; nor do they contemplate to borrow foreign capital for putting up such constructions or establishments.

V.

JAPAN'S ULTIMATUM TO CHINA.

(Delivered by the Japanese Minister to the Chinese Government, May 7, 1915.)

The reason why the Imperial Government opened the present negotiations with the Chinese Government is first to endeavour to dispose of the complications arising out of the war between Japan and Germany, and secondly to attempt to solve those various questions which are detrimental to the intimate relations of China and Japan with a view to solidifying the foundation of cordial friendship subsisting between the two countries to the end that the peace of the Far East may be effectually and permanently preserved. With this object in view, definite proposals were presented to the Chinese Government in January of this year, and up to to-day as many as twenty-five conferences have been held with the Chinese Government in perfect sincerity and frankness.

In the course of the negotiation the Imperial Government have consistently explained the aims and objects of the proposals in a conciliatory spirit, while on the other hand the proposals of the Chinese Government, whether important or unimportant, have been attended to without any reserve.

It may be stated with confidence that no effort has been spared to arrive at a satisfactory and amicable settlement of those questions.

The discussion of the entire corpus of the proposals was practically at an end at the twenty-fourth conference; that is, on 17th of last month. The Imperial Government, taking a broad view of the negotiation and in consideration of the points raised by the Chinese Government, modified the original proposals with considerable concessions and presented to the Chinese Government on the 26th of the same month the revised proposals for agreement, and at the same time it was offered that, on the acceptance of the revised proposals, the Imperial Government would, at a suitable opportunity, restore, with fair and proper conditions, to the Chinese Government the Kiaochow territory, in the acquisition of which the Imperial Government had made a great sacrifice.

On the 1st of May, the Chinese Government delivered the reply to the revised proposals of the Japanese Government, which is contrary to the expectations of the Imperial Government. The Chinese Government not only did not give a careful consideration to the revised proposals but even with regard to the offer of the Japanese Government to restore Kiaochow to the Chinese Government the latter did not manifest the least appreciation of Japan's goodwill and difficulties.

From the commercial and military points of view Kiaochow is an important place, in the acquisition of which the Japanese Empire sacrificed much blood and money, and, after the acquisition the Empire incurs no obligation to restore it to China. But with the object of increasing the future friendly relations of the two countries, they went to the extent of proposing its restoration, yet to her great regret, the Chinese Government did not take into consideration the good intention of Japan and manifest appreciation of her difficulties. Furthermore, the Chinese Government not only ignored the friendly feelings of the Imperial Government in offering the restoration of Kiaochow Bay, but also in replying to the revised proposals they even demanded its unconditional restoration; and again China demanded that Japan should bear the responsibility of paying indemnity for all the unavoidable losses and damages resulting from Japan's military operations at Kiaochow; and still further in connection with the territory of Kiaochow China advanced other demands and declared that she has the right of participation at the future peace conference to be held between Japan and Germany. Although China is fully aware that the unconditional restoration of Kiaochow and Japan's responsibility of indemnification for the unavoidable losses and damages can never be tolerated by Japan yet she purposely advanced these demands and declared that this reply was final and decisive.

Since Japan could not tolerate such demands the settlement of the other questions, however compromising it may be, would not be to her interest. The consequence is that the present reply of the Chinese Government is, on the whole, vague and meaningless.

Furthermore, in the reply of the Chinese Government to the other proposals in the revised list of the Imperial Government, such as South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, where Japan particularly has geographical, commercial, industrial and strategic relations, as recognized by all the nations, and made more remarkable in consequence of the two wars in which Japan was engaged the Chinese Government overlooks these facts and does not respect Japan's position in that place. The Chinese Government even freely altered those articles which the Imperial Government, in a compromising spirit, have formulated in accordance with the statement of the Chinese representatives thereby making the statements of the representatives an empty talk; and on seeing them conceding with the one hand and withholding with the other it is very difficult to attribute faithfulness and sincerity to the Chinese authorities.

As regards the articles relating to the employment of advisers, the establishment of schools and hospitals, the supply of arms and ammunition and the establishment of arsenals and railway concessions in South China in the revised proposals they were either proposed with the proviso that the consent of the Power concerned must be obtained, or they are merely to be recorded in the minutes in accordance with the statements of the Chinese delegates, and thus they are not in the least in conflict either with Chinese sovereignty or her treaties with the Foreign Powers, yet the Chinese Government in their reply to the proposals, alleging that these proposals are incompatible with their sovereign rights and treaties with Foreign Powers, defeat the expectations of the Imperial Government. However in spite of such attitude of the Chinese Government, the Imperial Government, though regretting to see that there is no room for further negotiations, yet warmly attached to the preservation of the peace of the Far East, is still hoping for a satisfactory settlement in order to avoid the disturbance of the relations.

So in spite of the circumstances which admitted no patience, they have reconsidered the feelings of the Government of their neighbouring country and, with the exception of the article relating to Fukien which is to be the subject of an exchange of notes as has already been agreed upon by the representatives of both nations, will undertake to detach the Group V. from the present negotiation and discuss it separately in the future.

Therefore the Chinese Government should appreciate the friendly feelings of the Imperial Government by immediately accepting without any alteration all the articles of Groups I, II, III, and IV and the exchange of notes in connection with Fukien province in Group V, as contained in the revised proposals presented on the 26th of April.

The Imperial Government hereby again offer their advice and hope that the Chinese Government, upon this advice, will give a satisfactory reply by 6 o'clock p. m. on the 9th day of May. It is hereby declared that if no satisfactory reply is received before or at the specified time, the Imperial Government will take steps they may deem necessary.

VI.

EXPLANATORY NOTE.

Accompanying Ultimatum delivered to the Minister of Foreign Affairs by the Japanese Minister, May 7th, 1915.

1. With the exception of the question of Fukien to be arranged by an exchange of notes, the five articles postponed for later negotiation refer to (a) the employment of advisers, (b) the establishment of schools and hospitals, (c) the railways concessions in South China, (d) the supply of arms and ammunition and the establishment of arsenals and (e) right of missionary propaganda.

2. The acceptance by the Chinese Government of the article relating to Fukien may be either in the form as proposed by the Japanese Minister on the 26th of April or in that contained in the reply of the Chinese Government of May 1st.

Although the ultimatum calls for the immediate acceptance by China of the modified proposals presented on April 26th, without alteration but it should be noted that it merely state the principle and does not apply to this article and Articles 4 and 5 of this note.

3. If the Chinese Government accept all the articles as demanded in the ultimatum the offer of the Japanese Government to restore Kiaochow to China made on the 26th of April, will still hold good.

4. Article 2 of Group II relating to the lease or purchase of land, the terms "lease" and "purchase" may be replaced by the terms "temporary lease" and "perpetual lease" or "lease on consultation," which means a long-term lease with its unconditional renewal:

Article 4 of group II relating to the approval of police laws and ordinances and local taxes by the Japanese consul may form the subject of a secret agreement.

5. The phrase "to consult with the Japanese Government" in connection with questions of pledging the local taxes for raising loans and the loans for the construction of railways, in Eastern Inner Mongolia, which is similar to the agreement in Manchuria relating to the matters of the same kind, may be replaced by the phrase "to consult with the Japanese capitalists."

The article relating to the opening of trade marts in Eastern Inner Mongolia in respect to location and regulations, may, following the precedent set in Shantung, be the subject of an exchange of notes.

6. From the phrase "those interested in the company" in group III of the revised list of demands, the words "those interested in" may be deleted.

7. The Japanese version of the formal agreement and its annexes shall be the official text or both the Chinese and Japanese shall be the official texts.

VII.

REPLY OF THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT TO THE ULTIMATUM OF THE JAPANESE GOVERNMENT.

Delivered to the Japanese Minister by the Minister of Foreign Affairs on the 8th day of May, 1915.

On the 7th of this month, at three o'clock p. m. the Chinese Government received an ultimatum from the Japanese Government together with an explanatory note of seven articles. The ultimatum concluded with the hope that the Chinese Government by 6 o'clock p. m. on the 9th of May, will give a satisfactory reply, and it is hereby declared that if no satisfactory reply is received before or at the specified time, the Japanese Government will take steps she may deem necessary.

The Chinese Government with a view to preserving the peace of the Far East, hereby accepts, with the exception of those five articles of Group V. postponed for later negotiation, all the articles of Group I, II, III, and IV and the exchange of notes in connection with Fukien Province in Group V as contained in the revised proposals presented on the 26th of April, and in accordance with the explanatory note of seven articles accompanying the ultimatum of the Japanese Government with the hope that thereby all the outstanding questions are settled, so that the cordial relationship between the two countries may be further consolidated. The Japanese Minister is hereby requested to appoint a day to call at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to make the literary improvement of the text and sign the agreement as soon as possible.

THE CHINO-JAPANESE TREATIES AND ANNEXES.

COMPLETE ENGLISH TEXT OF THE DOCUMENTS.

The following is an authoritative translation of the two treaties and thirteen notes exchanged between His Excellency the President of the Republic of China and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan through their respective plenipotentiaries:

TREATY RESPECTING THE PROVINCE OF SHANTUNG.

His Excellency the President of the Republic of China and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, having resolved to conclude a treaty with a view to the maintenance of general peace in the Extreme East and the further strengthening of the relations of friendship and good neighbourhood now existing between the two nations, have for that purpose named as their plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

His Excellency the President of the Republic of China, Lou Tseng-tsiang, Chung-ching, First Class Chia Ho decoration, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

And His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, Hioki Eki, Jushii, Second Class of the Imperial Order of the Sacred Treasure, Minister Plenipotentiary, and Envoy Extraordinary:

Who after having communicated to each other their full powers and found them to be in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:—

Article 1. The Chinese Government agrees to give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government relating to the disposition of all rights, interests and concessions which Germany, by virtue of treaties or otherwise, possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

Article 2. The Chinese Government agrees that as regards the railway to be built by China herself from Chefoo or Lungkow to connect with the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu railway, if Germany abandons the privilege of financing the Chefoo-Weihsien line, China will approach Japanese capitalists to negotiate for a loan.

Article 3. The Chinese Government agrees in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by China herself as soon as possible certain suitable places in the Province of Shantung as commercial ports.

Article 4. The present treaty shall come into force on the day of its signature.

The present treaty shall be ratified by His Excellency the President of the Republic of China and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, and the ratification thereof shall be exchanged at Tokio as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries of the high contracting parties have signed and sealed the present treaty, two copies in the Chinese language and two in Japanese.

Done at Peking this twenty-fifth day of the fifth month of the fourth year of the Republic of China, corresponding to the same day of the same month of the fourth year of Taisho.

TREATY RESPECTING SOUTH MANCHURIA AND EASTERN INNER MONGOLIA.

His Excellency the President of the Republic of China and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, having resolved to conclude a treaty with a view to developing their economic relations in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, have for that purpose named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

His Excellency the President of the Republic of China, Lou Tseng-tsiang, Chung-ching, First Class Chia-ho decoration, and Minister of Foreign Affairs; And His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, Hioki Eki, Jushii, Second Class of the Imperial Order of the Sacred Treasure, Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary;

Who, after having communicated to each other their full powers, and found them to be in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:—

Article 1. The two high contracting parties agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny and the terms of the South Manchuria Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway, shall be extended to 99 years.

Article 2. Japanese subjects in South Manchuria may, by negotiation, lease land necessary for erecting suitable buildings for trade and manufacture or for prosecuting agricultural enterprises.

Article 3. Japanese subjects shall be free to reside and travel in South Manchuria and to engage in business and manufacture of any kind whatsoever.

Article 4. In the event of Japanese and Chinese desiring jointly to undertake agricultural enterprises and industries incidental thereto, the Chinese Government may give its permission.

Article 5. The Japanese subjects referred to in the preceding three articles, besides being required to register with the local authorities passports which they must procure under the existing regulations, shall also submit to the police laws and ordinances and taxation of China.

Civil and criminal cases in which the defendants are Japanese shall be tried and adjudicated by the Japanese consul; those in which the defendants are Chinese shall be tried and adjudicated by Chinese authorities. In either case an officer may be deputed to the court to attend the proceedings. But mixed civil cases between Chinese and Japanese relating to land shall be tried and adjudicated by delegates of both nations conjointly in accordance with Chinese law and local usage.

When, in future, the judicial system in the said region is completely reformed, all civil and criminal cases concerning Japanese subjects shall be tried and adjudicated entirely by Chinese law courts.

Article 6. The Chinese Government agrees, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by China herself, as soon as possible, certain suitable places in Eastern Inner Mongolia as commercial ports.

Article 7. The Chinese Government agrees speedily to make a fundamental revision of the Kirin-Changchun Railway Loan Agreement, taking as a standard the provisions in railway loan agreements made heretofore between China and foreign financiers.

When in future, more advantageous terms than those in existing railway loan agreements are granted to foreign financiers in connection with railway loans, the above agreement shall again be revised in accordance with Japan's wishes.

Article 8. All existing treaties between China and Japan relating to Manchuria shall, except where otherwise provided for by this treaty, remain in force.

Article 9. The present treaty shall come into force on the date of its signature. The present treaty shall be ratified by His Excellency the President of the Republic of China and His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Tokio as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries of the two high contracting parties have signed and sealed the present treaty, two copies in the Chinese language and two in Japanese.

EXCHANGE OF NOTES RESPECTING THE TERMS OF LEASE OF PORT ARTHUR AND DALNY AND THE TERMS OF SOUTH MANCHURIAN AND ANTUNG-MUKDEN RAILWAYS.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Japanese Minister.

PEKING, the 25th day of the 5th month of the 4th year of the Republic of China.

MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE, I have the honor to state that, respecting the provisions contained in Article 1 of the treaty relating to South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, signed this day, the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny shall expire in the 86th year of the Republic or 1997. The date for restoring the South Manchuria Railway to China shall fall due in the 91st year of the Republic or 2002. Article 12 in the original South Manchurian Railway Agreement providing that it may be redeemed by China after 36 years from the day on which the traffic is opened is hereby cancelled. The term of the Antung-Mukden Railway shall expire in the 96th year of the Republic or 2007.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, October 8, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that a disagreement has arisen between Japan and China as to whether the treaty of May 25 last respecting South Manchuria and Inner Mongolia applies to Koreans residing in Chientao, a portion of Manchuria lying on the north of the Tumen River; or whether on the other hand such residents are covered solely by the agreement of February 4, 1909, between Japan and China.

If the latter is the case, then Koreans resident in Chientao are subject to the jurisdiction of the Chinese judicial authorities; if the former, then suits against such Korean residents must be tried before the Japanese consul.

After the establishment of the protectorate over Korea, Japan on September 4, 1909, concluded an agreement with China fixing the Tumen River as the boundary between China and Korea⁵⁷ (which in the past had been a subject of dispute) and defining the rights of Korean residents in Chientao.

On August 21, 1910, Korea was formally annexed by Japan, whereupon the Koreans became Japanese subjects. Notwithstanding this, however, the Chientao agreement was recognized by both Japan and China as still operative, and the Chinese judicial authorities in Chientao continued to exercise jurisdiction over Koreans residing in that territory as theretofore until the conclusion of the treaty relating to South Manchuria and Inner Mongolia of May 25 last above referred to, which confers upon all Japanese subjects the right of residence, etc., in "South Manchuria," and gives to Japanese consuls therein jurisdiction over suits in which such Japanese residents are defendants.

After the conclusion of this treaty the Japanese authorities, claiming that it applied to Chientao, proceeded to assert jurisdiction over suits brought against Koreans residing therein, but the Chinese judicial authorities in Chientao denied this claim and continued to exercise judicial authority over Korean residents as theretofore.

Article III of the new treaty gives all Japanese subjects without distinction liberty to reside and carry on business in all parts of South Manchuria. Article V confers on Japanese consuls in South Manchuria exclusive jurisdiction over suits brought against Japanese subjects resident therein. And Article VIII provides that "Except as otherwise provided in this treaty, all existing treaties between Japan and China with respect to Manchuria shall remain in force."

The local newspapers here in referring to the dispute say that the Chinese contend that the new treaty applies only to South Manchuria and that Chientao is not a part of South Manchuria and therefore is not affected by the new treaty which, by Article VIII above quoted, continues in force all existing treaties between Japan and China with respect to Manchuria when not otherwise provided in the treaty.

Positive information concerning the Chinese contention in this case is not obtainable here. It would seem, however, to be that Chientao is not a part of South Manchuria, to which the new treaty is restricted, and that therefore the new treaty has no application to it, and that the old treaty is continued in force by the express provisions of Article VIII above quoted.

The whole dispute, therefore, would seem to resolve itself into a question as to whether Chientao belongs to South Manchuria or to North Manchuria.

The Japanese Foreign Office, however, says that China has not raised this point; that Chientao has by custom always been regarded as a part of South Manchuria; and that Japan with the cognizance of China at present actually exercises consular jurisdiction under the treaty in the territory contiguous to Chientao on the north. This it considers as amounting to a tacit admission on the part of China that the district in question is a part of South Manchuria.

⁵⁷ For. Rel. 1909, p. 119.

According to the Foreign Office the contention of China is based solely on the wording of Article VIII of the treaty (above quoted), maintaining that by it the former agreement respecting Chientao is continued in full force and effect. What the reasons for the position taken by the Chinese Government are, the Foreign Office states it does not clearly understand, not being as yet in full possession of the details of their argument. It thinks, however, that it is due to a misunderstanding resulting from an erroneous reading or interpretation of the article in question, and that as soon as this is removed, the dispute will be amicably settled.

SIR: I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the Wai Chiao Pu's note of December 28th last on the subject of the foreign losses sustained during the Revolution of 1911 and to inform your excellency that the Diplomatic Body concur in the proposal of the Chinese Government to withdraw the balance remaining of the sum of £2,000,000 reserved for the payment of these losses under the Reorganization Loan Agreement and at present kept at the Group Banks.

SURPLUS CLAIMS FUNDS.

The Dean has the honour to circulate herewith copy of a note which he has received from the Wai Chiao Pu respecting the disposal of the surplus of the funds set aside for payment of foreign claims arising out of the Revolution of 1911.

The matter is one which primarily concerns the five Legations interested in the Reorganization Loan; but inasmuch as the note is addressed to Sir John Jordan as Dean, and as the payment of the Revolution claims is a question that concerns the whole Diplomatic Body, the Dean thinks it well to submit the note for the consideration of all his honourable colleagues.

Sir John Jordan himself has no objection to the procedure proposed by the Wai Chiao Pu.

[Subinclosure 3—Translation.]

The Wai Chiao Pu to the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps.

PEKING, December 28, 1914.

SIR: With reference to the question of foreign losses sustained during the Revolution of 1911, this Ministry in the month of November last notified the foreign Ministers in Peking to the effect that the claims then already settled by the Claims Investigation Committee and which had been paid amounted to a little over £500,000, and as there were then a few outstanding cases of claims of France, Denmark and Belgium, this Ministry proposed to reserve £400,000 to be kept to meet the probable requirements, and that this Government intended to draw the balance of fund at the Groups Banks of about £1,000,000.

We now find that the outstanding cases have either been settled or withdrawn and that the cases not yet paid require about £66,000. This sum, when added to £627,780 already paid up to the present, brings the total to £693,780 odd. Deducting this last figure from the total reserve fund of £2,000,000 kept at the Group Banks, the balance available at our order is about £1,306,000 odd. We hereby inform your excellency that the Government intends to draw from the Group Banks the whole amount of the above-mentioned balance of about £1,306,000 odd. The Ministry of Finance will make arrangements directly with the Group Banks for the drawing of this sum, in accordance with Annex E of the Reorganization Loan Agreement concerning administrative expenditures. We request that your excellency would kindly convey this message to the other foreign Ministers concerned, and we would feel obliged if your excellency would give us an early reply on this subject.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, July 26, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to recall that in despatch No. 93 of January 30, 1914,¹⁷ the Legation submitted for the approval of the Department an exchange of notes between the Dean of the Diplomatic Body and the Wai Chiao Pu modifying the existing arrangement in regard to the allocation of customs revenues for the service of loans and the payment of the Boxer indemnities; and that this arrangement received the approval of the Department in its instruction No. 51 of March 4, 1914.¹⁷ In order to make clear the manner in which that arrangement was evolved by modifications of the original arrangement of January 30, 1912, for the establishment of a Commission of Bankers to receive the Customs revenues for the service of the foreign debt charged thereon, I enclose herewith a copy of that original arrangement [Inclosure 3] with notes indicating the amendments subsequently adopted.

Under date of November 14, 1914, the Wai Chiao Pu, in view of its apprehensions that the Customs revenues would prove insufficient to meet the debts charged upon it (as reported in the Legation's No. 352 of September 3rd last)⁶², addressed to the Dean of the Diplomatic Body a note of which the translation is as follows:

With reference to the procedure for meeting the service of loan and indemnity payments from Customs funds, your excellency will remember that I had the honour on 15th January last to communicate to you my assent to the alteration made by the Inspector General of Customs in Clause 2 of the original arrangement to meet the situation. Subsequently, owing to the effect of the European War, a shortage arose in the Customs receipts, and on August 18th I informed your excellency that it was proposed to follow the procedure laid down in 1911, namely, to meet payments as far as funds would allow and to temporarily suspend payment in full.

In order to prove its good faith in the matter and to create confidence, the Government of the Chinese Republic now proposes that if at the end of the year there is any sum either of the loan or of the indemnity payments still outstanding such shall be paid out of the surplus salt funds or out of the internal loan of the 3rd Year of the Republic (1914). In order to avoid confusion and change, the arrangement as revised on 15th January for meeting both the loan and indemnity services shall continue in force.

The Shui Wu Ch'u are issuing orders accordingly to the Inspector General, and I have the honour to inform your excellency of the above facts and would request you to transmit the information to the Ministers in Peking of the countries whom it may concern.

A considerable correspondence ensued between the Diplomatic Body and the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in consequence of the apprehension that the Chinese proposal did not sufficiently safeguard the principles that: (a) the service of loans contracted prior to 1900 has priority over that of the Boxer indemnities, as a charge upon the Maritime Customs revenue; and that (b) under the Protocol of 1901 the salt revenue is liable to make monthly provision for the service of the indemnity.

This correspondence terminated with a note from the Wai Chiao Pu to the Dean of the Diplomatic Body under date of June 9th, for translation of which see the enclosed copy of Diplomatic Circular No. 57 of June 14th [Inclosure 1], and the Dean's reply under date of July 22nd, 1915, in the terms of the draft proposed in Diplomatic Circular No. 66 of the 6th July, of which a copy is enclosed [Inclosure 2]. It will be noted that the result of this correspondence is to continue in effect the agreement on this subject as reported to the Department in the despatch cited above—subject, however, to the reservation that the assent of the Diplomatic Body is "made subject to the reservation of the right of any interested Power to insist that, in the event of any doubt arising as to the sufficiency of the Maritime Customs revenues and the Salt revenues to defray all charges secured thereon in respect to the Loan and Indemnity services, the payments of the proceeds of the Maritime Customs' revenues to the Indemnity Banks shall be deferred until full provision has been made for meeting the service of the loans contracted prior to 1900."

LOAN AND INDEMNITY PAYMENTS.

With reference to Circular No. 37 of April 13th last, on the subject of the procedure for meeting the service of loan and indemnity payments from Customs Revenues, the Dean has the honour to circulate translation of the reply which has been received from the Wai Chiao Pu to the note addressed to them on the 5th ultimo, and he would be glad to learn what action his honourable colleagues would wish to take in the matter.

For his own part Sir John Jordan would be prepared to acquiesce in the proposal of the Chinese Government, as he understands that circumstances have now rendered it practical to revert to the arrangement for concurrent monthly service that was in force during the first half of the year 1914. It appears to Sir John Jordan that this arrangement secures the two principles for which the Diplomatic Body have contended during the present discussion, namely, on the one hand the recognition of the priority of the service of the loans over that of the indemnity in regard to the Maritime Customs Revenue, and on the other hand the recognition of the liability of the Salt Revenue, in terms of the Protocol of 1901, to make monthly provision for the service of the indemnity.

COMMENTS.

I agree, on condition that the right of any interested Power should be reserved to insist upon the payment of the indemnity to be delayed until full provision for the service of the loans prior to 1900 is made, in case of any doubt arising as to the sufficiency of Maritime Customs and Salt Revenues to meet all payments on both liabilities.

B. KROUPENSKY.

I accord with the note of the Honorable Dean.

BEELAERTS.

[Subinclosure.]

The Wai Chiao Pu to the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps.

PEKING, June 9, 1915.

SIR: This Ministry having made inquiries now learns from the Inspector General of Customs that the procedure desired by the Diplomatic Body and laid down in the revised wording of Article 2 has in fact been followed since January, 1915. The Inspector General states that all loan and indemnity payments have been fully paid to the end of April and that on the 30th of April the balance of foreign revenue in the three custodian banks was sufficient with estimated May and June revenue to more than cover the loan payments to the end of June.

The Inspector General states that as exchange is now steady and reliable estimates of revenue can now be made, it is desirable to revert to the procedure in force before the war and to arrange with the Salt Department a concurrent service for loans and indemnity.

In these circumstances this Ministry considers that it is no longer necessary to revise the wording of Article II which in its present form permits a concurrent loan and indemnity service to be conducted. If this view meets with the assent of the Diplomatic Body, instructions will be issued to the Inspector General to prepare a table for a concurrent loan and indemnity service for the half year July to December showing the amounts required each month from the Salt Department in aid of the indemnity fund.

SIR: I have the honour to inform you that the Diplomatic Body have had under consideration your excellency's note of the 9th of June, relative to the procedure for meeting the service of loan and indemnity payments from Customs funds, and that in view of the statements of the Inspector General of Maritime Customs contained therein, they are prepared to concur in the view of the Chinese Government that it is no longer necessary for them to press for the revision of Article II of the revised arrangement for meeting the service of loan and indemnity payments.

The assent of the Diplomatic Body to the course proposed in your excellency's note of the 9th ultimo is, however, made subject to the reservation of the right of any interested Power to insist that, in the event of any doubt arising as to the sufficiency of the maritime customs revenues and the salt revenues to defray all charges secured thereon in respect to the Loan and Indemnity services, the payments of the proceeds of the maritime customs' revenues to the Indemnity Banks shall be deferred until full provision has been made for meeting the service of the loans contracted prior to 1900.

PEKING, January 30, 1912.

Clause 1. The International Commission of Bankers shall consist of the Managers of the Banks interested in the service of all outstanding loans secured by the customs revenue contracted previous to 1900 and/or the Indemnity payments. The said commission shall decide all questions of priority of claim between foreign loan payments and shall draw up a schedule of the various payments to be made in this connection for the guidance of the Commissioner of Customs at Shanghai.

Clause 2. The Banks chiefly interested, viz., the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation, the Deutsch-Asiatische Bank, and the Russo-Asiatic Bank shall be custodians of the customs funds at Shanghai.²

Clause 3. The Inspector General of Customs shall account to the commission appointed for the net customs revenue until such time as the Chinese Government are in a position to resume payments of loans and indemnity.

Clause 4. The Inspector General of Customs shall arrange for a weekly remittance of net revenue from all collecting points to Shanghai.

Clause 5. The Inspector General of Customs shall arrange that the net revenue accumulated at Shanghai shall be divided weekly in as nearly as possible equal amounts between the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation, the Deutsch-Asiatische Bank, and the Russo-Asiatic Bank for account of the loans concerned and indemnity payments, and the Commissioner of Customs shall be authorized to draw upon these accounts for loan payments as they fall due according to the priority of such loans as determined by the Commission of Bankers in terms of Clause No. 1.

Clause 6. If normal conditions are not restored by the end of 1912 then at that time an account shall be taken of the surplus available for the Indemnity, and such account shall be sent to the Diplomatic Body for their decision as to its disposal.³

Clause 7. The Commission shall furnish to the Diplomatic Body at Peking, through the Consuls at Shanghai, a quarterly report showing the appropriation of the revenue received.

Clause 8. The above arrangement is subject to future revision should circumstances require it.

NOTE 1.—The terms of this arrangement were proposed by the Wai Wu Pu in a note addressed to the Dean of the Diplomatic Body on January 21, 1912, and were approved by a communication which the Dean addressed to the Wai Wu Pu in behalf of the Diplomatic Body on January 30th, 1912. (See Diplomatic Circular No. 15, January 23, 1912, and No. 15, January 2.)

NOTE 2.—At the meeting of the Diplomatic Body on April 7th, 1913, it was decided to amend Clause 2 by adding the sentence: "But as soon as the service for the current year of all loans contracted before 1900 is provided for by funds in these Banks, then the surplus shall be divided pro rata till the end of 1913 amongst the Banks having charge of the Indemnity Service."

At the meeting of the Diplomatic Body on December 24th, 1913, the following sentence was substituted for the above: "At the end of each month, beginning with January, 1914, the surplus, after all payments due each month on account of loans secured on the Customs Revenues and contracted previous to 1900 have been fully met, shall be divided pro rata amongst the Banks having charge of the Indemnity Service up to the amount of the instalments of the Indemnity respectively due to them each month." This arrangement was accepted by the Wai Chiao Pu in a note to the Dean of the Diplomatic Body dated January 15th, 1914. (See Diplomatic Circular No. 12, January 16th, 1914.)

NOTE 3.—At the meeting of the Diplomatic Body on April 7th, 1913, it was decided to cancel Clause 6.

SIR: Referring to your letter to the undersigned of December 23 in which the Department acknowledged receipt of my letter of December 19, 1914, respecting an advance of five million dollars ($5,000,000) on the Huai River loan; and to the information conveyed by the Department that pursuant to the suggestion of the Central Committee of the Red Cross a telegram was being sent to the Minister at Peking on December 22, 1914, expressive of the views of the Red Cross on the subject of the Huai River conservancy, a paraphrase of which telegram was communicated to the Red Cross by the same letter from the Department of December 23; and referring also to a further request of the Red Cross that the dispatch transmitted for delivery to the Chinese Government be held by the Minister at Peking I would now say that after the consideration of the matter in the light of results of the further inquiry on which a hope was based of obtaining a loan for China, that this hope has not as yet been realized, and I have to ask that the dispatch, of which a paraphrase was submitted on December 23, be now delivered by the Minister at Peking to the Chinese Government, so that it will read as follows:

Red Cross engineers report Huai River Conservancy project entirely practical but that war conditions make the negotiation of a loan or contract to obtain an advance of funds at this time almost impossible. Inquiry is made as to whether China desires Red Cross to continue its efforts towards working out a solution of the project. If so, Red Cross will be glad to continue to exert its efforts. Meanwhile formal extension of exclusive option to Red Cross desirable. If China concedes extension Red Cross desires American Minister to make necessary arrangements. Two hundred copies of board's final report delivered to Chinese Minister in Washington this day.

I will be glad if this dispatch can be transmitted to the American Minister at Peking.

The Chinese Government has inquired about the likelihood of the Huai River conservancy loan being consummated before January. They are desirous that this necessary improvement should not be delayed. I have the honor to mention that the Siems-Carey Company, about to begin business in China, are ready to undertake the construction work and that the National City Bank of New York might be induced to assist in financing. Please inform me concerning state of Huai River negotiations. The Chinese Government is in an expectant attitude as to whether the United States will be able to accomplish this enterprise and desires very much to see improvement undertaken. It might be possible for me to prevail upon the Government to set aside sufficient revenue to meet the interest charges on the capital during the time of construction thus reducing the amount of the loan and improving security. If considered essential it might also be possible to obtain period of six months for further examination and report by the engineers of the bankers, [if?] the latter actually would agree to furnish the capital unless the engineers should pronounce work unprofitable or not feasible. It is hoped that this great work of progress with which the American name is linked may now actually be undertaken while the influences in the Government are favorable and ready to make the most liberal arrangements.

Your telegram December 17. Red Cross has taken up conservancy scheme with American bankers. American International Corporation alone have shown disposition to interest themselves therein. They feel, however, that in view of present political situation in Far East, it might be prejudicial to best interests China should Americans now actively negotiate with Chinese Government for a large loan. Even if loan were concluded, it would moreover probably be impossible to issue here at this time on terms satisfactory to China. Bankers appreciate that option expires at end of January but consider in view of world wide situation, if China is really desirous of interesting American capital this enterprise, should be possible for Government extend option at least another year. In the meantime, bankers suggest that it would be desirable for Legation to place representative Siems-Carey in touch with proper officials in order that they may discuss general plans which might become operative upon improvement general situation.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, December 30, 1915.

Your December 28 indicates certain apprehensions on the part of American bankers which are unwarranted and which ought not to control unless American enterprise is to forego present opportunities through abnormal modesty and timidity. To carry out a loan agreement initiated two years ago could in any case redound only to the advantage of the United States and best interests of China. Fortunately the political situation has not yet undergone such radical changes that American capitalists need ask permission of their competitors before engaging even in new business with China. In fact these competitors still harbor the idea that Americans really desire to do business here. As to the internal political conditions nothing has occurred which affects the security of foreign investment: if anything they favor those on the ground ready to take advantage of opportunities for securing ample and secure foundation for future enterprise. It is to be hoped that some of the leading American financiers should visit China in person in order to obtain a direct judgment of conditions which it is believed contain all the elements favorable to a sound establishment of American business interests in China for a long time to come when European markets shall fail us.

TAXATION OF FOREIGNERS. NEW STAMP TAX. INTERPRETATION OF THE TREATY OF 1903 IN RELATION TO CHINESE INTERNAL TAXES AND TO THE STATUS OF TREATY PORTS.⁶⁴

No. 588.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, March 22, 1915.

SIR: Referring to the telegram of July 20, in which the Legation brought to the attention of the Department the situation created by the Chinese authorities in imposing upon American goods certain inland charges considered to be irreconcilable with treaty stipulations, I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of the Department an instruction on that general subject which the Legation addressed to the Consulate General at Shanghai under date of July 25 last, which but for a regrettable oversight would have been submitted to the Department at that time. In transmitting this instruction I have to report that the particular cases to which it refers have all, as is not infrequently the case with matters of dispute with the Chinese Government, come to an indeterminate conclusion—the particular causes of the complaint having disappeared but the Chinese authorities having conceded nothing.

Upon receipt of the Department's telegraphic instruction of July 21, the Chargé d'Affaires took occasion to intimate informally both to the Minister for Foreign Affairs and to the Minister of Finance that the manifest effort of the Chinese Government to pare down to a minimum its obligations in the matter of inland taxation did not predispose our Government towards a feeling of confidence that it would, in the interests of its citizens, be justified in conceding such a liberal construction of treaty provisions as would be implied in the acceptance of the proposed stamp tax as applicable to its nationals. It should perhaps be added that neither of those Ministers showed any indication of concern at that intimation; and the Minister of Finance pointed out that, even if the nationals of the Treaty Powers were to ignore the tax, yet no doubt the Chinese parties to any contract potentially suable in Chinese courts would be sufficiently cautious to affix such stamps as might be necessary to insure the validity of the document under their national law; and (perhaps with a sound appreciation of the habit of mind which leads the Chinese to take no chances on anything) he seemed quite indifferent to the consideration that, in order to vindicate their contractual rights against foreigners, Chinese citizens would have to sue in consular courts which do not recognize the payment of a stamp tax as a condition of the validity of a contract.

Almost immediately after these informal representations the European war broke out; and in the midst of the preoccupations consequent upon it the various questions of inland taxation were for the time being lost sight of, both by the Chinese Government and by the Legation and the Consulates. On the resumption of more normal conditions, it appeared that the several causes of complaint in this matter had almost entirely ceased; and during the past six months or so the attention of the Legation has been drawn only infrequently and sporadically to cases of illegal taxation of that sort—either in the form of destination taxes (of the nature indicated under the fifth heading of the instruction of July 25 to Shanghai) or in the form of so-called boat-taxes which are in fact transit taxes levied upon the value of the cargo.

Whether the Chinese Government has been convinced of the illegality of its action, or has appreciated the inexpediency of trying to force a perverted construction of the treaties, or has desired to conciliate the United States and Great Britain for political reasons, or has realized the futility of exactions that throttle the trade from which they are derived, or (as is most likely) has yielded to the opposition of the Chinese merchants whose trade was threatened by such exactions—whatever the reason, it appears that for the time the various obnoxious laws of this character are in abeyance and there is a lull in the effort to evade the exemptions stipulated in the treaties.

I cannot, however, feel that this respite is permanent, but anticipate that, as has so often happened before, there will eventually be a renewal of the mistaken policy of trying to shift the burden of taxation onto the foreigners by one or more of the familiar equivocations as to the meaning of the treaties. With a view to that probability, I beg to request an expression of the views of the Department on the several points discussed in the instruction of July 25 last to Shanghai, in order that the Legation may be in a position to instruct the various Consulates as to the attitude which they should adopt in the event of any of these questions arising in their districts. I reserve for future discussion, at a time when the issues involved may again become practical, certain recommendations as to a possible adjustment of the questions treated in the enclosed instruction to Shanghai, and of the related questions of Stamp Tax, Excise Tax, etc.

I have [etc.]

Chargé MacMurray to Consul General Sammons.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, July 25, 1914.

C. No. 553.]

SIR: The Legation has received from your Consulate General the following despatches reporting upon questions of inland taxation [enumeration of despatches].

Of the questions involving matters of inland taxation which are presented for consideration by this series of despatches, it may be convenient to dispose first of the simple question of the increase in likin taxes leviable by the Chinese authorities. Subject always of course to the proviso that such charges must not be so levied as to discriminate against foreign goods in general or against the products of any particular nationality, or impair the value of the treaty arrangements for exemption certificates and transit passes, the Legation concurs with the view of the Consulate General that the determination of the amount of likin leviable upon goods properly subject thereto rests with the Chinese authorities, and that the foreign powers can therefore at the most point out the injury to trade resulting from too heavy a taxation of this sort.

There remain a number of questions, raised by the cases you report, affecting the rights of the Treaty Powers in respect to inland taxation. These questions may be conveniently analyzed under the following headings:

1. The levy of likin within open ports, outside of the foreign settlements or concessions.

In reply to the inquiry on this point contained in your No. 147, I have to inform you that the Legation has not abandoned the contention that the whole of any opened port, and not merely a restricted area of it, is open to foreign trade with all the privileges conferred by the treaties. It nevertheless appears to be the fact that in spite of this contention the Chinese Government has continuously acted upon the contrary view and has succeeded in collecting likin in the region beyond a restricted area in each of the open ports. Under these circumstances it would seem advisable, in any case which presents such a possibility, to rely upon some other principle than that which has been so long and so successfully maintained by the Chinese Government and is therefore unlikely to be conceded by it.

2. The levying of likin by private organizations to which the authorities have farmed out the collection of such taxes.

It seems doubtful whether this circumstance would in itself give cause for a valid and tenable protest, inasmuch as the treaties contain no restriction upon the power of the Chinese Government to delegate its authority in the matter of the collection of taxes. It would appear, however, that such a method of collecting likin taxes might constitute an important consideration tending to establish, in any particular case, the existence of an element of discrimination.

3. The specific discrimination against certain products in the tariff of likin charges levied under the conditions above indicated.

In the view of this Legation, the mere fact of specifying, in any tariff of charges, goods of any nationality, manufacture or brand would in itself constitute a discrimination—even though the actual charge should not exceed that levied upon other like products—in that it would constitute the assertion of a right to impose special taxation at discretion upon the products of the particular nationality, manufacture or brand.

It may also be contended, though perhaps with somewhat less force, that a likin tax, where leviable at all, must be assessed upon a uniform ad valorem rate, or upon a specific commutation of such a rate; and that the levying of a higher proportionate assessment upon any particular trade would constitute a discrimination warranting a protest in behalf of the trade affected.

4. The levy of likin upon goods being transported under cover of transit passes.

It is not believed that the Chinese Government, in a case in which the facts were undisputed, would attempt to justify such absolute and flagrant violations of the treaty right to the protection of transit passes during the time the goods were actually in transit.

5. The levy of consumption taxes (also called destination taxes, Loti Shui or Loti Chuan) on transit-pass goods upon the surrender of the transit pass at destination.

In reply to the inquiry contained in your No. 147, I have to advise you that the Legation adheres to the view that goods covered by transit pass are properly subject to no further inland taxation, either in transit or after arrival at their destination, whether in foreign or Chinese hands. In this matter, however, as in the cases indicated in the first heading above, the contrary practice has long prevailed in spite of the contention of our Government. The British, moreover, upon whose Tientsin Treaty of 1858 the claim to the exemption of transit-pass goods from all inland charges whatsoever was originally based, have conceded the Chinese claim to a right of further taxation after the goods have completed the transit and have passed into Chinese hands. It is therefore to be feared that protests against the levy of consumption or destination taxes will in all probability continue to be futile.

6. The imposition of a special consumption or destination tax (Loti Chuan) specifically upon foreign goods brought into the interior under transit pass, which tax is moreover calculated upon the basis of the T'ung Chuan, which is understood to be a single tax levied in commutation of the likin and consumption taxes payable upon goods brought into the interior without the protection of the transit pass.

Quite apart from the general question of the legality of destination taxes or other inland charges upon goods covered by transit pass, the Loti Chuan Regulations put into force in Chekiang during October last and understood to have been extended to Anhwei and Kiangsu on the 1st instant, are particularly repugnant to the provisions of the treaties, in that—

a. They seek to establish a form of taxation which is not general in its application but is specifically imposed upon foreign goods covered by transit passes, thereby discriminating against such goods as have sought to avail themselves of the protection of the treaties; and that

b. Whereas the treaty arrangements for covering goods by transit passes were designed to relieve them from the incidence of transit taxes in any form, the levying upon them of a so-called destination tax—which is in fact calculated on the basis of the inland taxes that would otherwise have been chargeable upon them—is in effect to subject them to a portion, at least, of the very charges for complete exemption from which they have already paid the 2½ per cent ad valorem stipulated by the treaties.

Concretely, the result of the Chekiang Regulations is to impose, on goods availing themselves of treaty protection, 2½ per cent plus Loti Chuan equivalent to one-half of the T'ung Chuan, as against the T'ung Chuan which would otherwise have been levied on them. So there would be a higher rate upon treaty-protected goods in any case in which the T'ung Chuan should be calculated at less than 5 per cent. Furthermore, it appears that goods paying T'ung Chuan may be reshipped to another inland port without further charge, whereas goods under transit pass, and therefore paying Loti Chuan, must pay that tax a second time in the case of such reshipment. So that in such cases the goods presumed to be protected by treaty pay the equivalent of full T'ung Chuan in addition to the 2½ per cent already paid for the transit tax, making a net difference of 2½ per cent ad valorem to the disadvantage of the treaty-protected goods.

It is understood that in practice the amount of the T'ung Chuan is at present so adjusted as not actually to impose a heavier taxation upon transit-pass goods as delivered at their original destination in the interior. But even in the absence of such concrete discrimination in cases of that sort, the Regulations are objectionable in that, by imposing a special tax upon transit-pass goods, as such, they destroy the safeguard against excessive internal taxation which the option of using a transit pass was designed to secure.

7. The imposition of an increased likin tax specifically upon foreign goods arriving at an open port under exemption certificate, upon their reshipment into the interior.

As in the cases indicated under the 4th heading above, it is believed that the Chinese Government would not undertake, in any case indisputably involving no complication with other more contentious questions, to defend so manifest a subversion of the rights granted by the treaties in respect to the shipment of imports to open ports under exemption certificates.

With reference to the action thus far taken by the Legation on the several instances of illegal inland taxation recently reported by you, it is to be noted that, with the exception of the Minhang Barrier case and the Nantao Bund case (the former involving the detention of the Standard Oil Company's cargoes under the conditions indicated in the 4th and 5th headings above, and the latter involving the seizure of one of its cargoes under the circumstances indicated in the 1st, 2d and 3d headings), none of these cases are so presented as to afford a basis or warrant for claim for indemnification; and it is the understanding of the Legation that they were brought to its attention not with that purpose but with the object of forming a basis of protest to the Central Government against the various abuses in the matter of inland taxation which have quite recently attained such disquieting proportions in the Provinces of Chekiang, Kiangsu and Anhwei.

Those abuses seem in fact to have become within the past month or so exceptionally flagrant and persistent. It seems clear, moreover, that they are countenanced if not in fact abetted by the Peking Government, as evidenced by the terms of the Chekiang Loti Chuan Regulations and by the Presidential Orders of June 29 and July 8 commending the Governor General of Chekiang for his administration of taxation in his Province. The Legation shares with the British and other Legations, and with other unofficial observers, the conviction that in these three provinces the Government is now making a studied and tenacious effort to determine the bare minimum to which it can pare down its treaty obligations in the matter of inland taxation. And so far as can be ascertained, the Chekiang Loti Chuan Regulations form the crux of this problem. The Legation, therefore, concurrently with the third protest made by the British Legation, on July 7 addressed to the Wai Chiao Pu a note (of which a copy is enclosed) asking for their cancellation. In order to profit by the effect of substantial identity with the views embodied in the British protests, the note urged against the Regulations only the general objections indicated in the 5th heading above; but the Legation is seeking a suitable occasion to urge upon the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Finance the particular objections outlined under the 6th heading.

In conclusion, I take occasion to express appreciation of the manner in which this complicated set of cases has been dealt with and has been presented by the Consulate General and to assure you of the Legation's cooperation for the protection of the privileges to which we believe American citizens to be entitled as a matter of treaty right.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 22, 1915.

SIR: In acknowledging receipt of your No. 588 of March 22, 1915, relating to the imposition upon American goods of certain inland charges considered to be irreconcilible with treaty stipulations, the Department desires to express approval in general of the instruction sent by the Legation to the Consul General at Shanghai under date of July 25, 1914.

In doing this the Department is but adhering to the position which it has supported for many years past and which it believes should not for the present be abandoned.

The Department desires, however, to point out that the statement made on page 2 [under heading 1] of the Legation's instruction just mentioned, to the effect that "the whole of any opened port and not merely a restricted area of it is open to foreign trade", is a contention which the Department makes only with respect to ports opened by treaty and is not insisted upon in regard to ports opened by China of its own volition and with certain restrictions as to the area set aside for foreign residence and trade.

The Department, moreover, while still maintaining the view that goods covered by inland transit pass are properly subject to no further inland taxation either in transit or after arrival at their destination, whether in foreign or Chinese hands, would call attention to the observation made by Minister Calhoun in his despatch of July 2, 1912, to the effect that the phrase "all other inland charges whatsoever" can only mean charges on the goods while in transit; that the provisions of the treaties with respect to the inland transit tax was never intended to prevent the levy of local taxes upon foreign goods after they should have reached their destination; and that "a strict construction of the treaties seems to justify the Chinese in their contention that no such wholesale exemption of foreign goods from taxation (as is claimed by foreign merchants) was intended."

The Department in replying to Mr. Calhoun under date of September 3, 1912, No. 278, said:

While this Government would not be disposed to look with disfavor, in any subsequent discussion of this question, upon such an interpretation as that recommended by the Legation, yet it is believed that the determination of this question might well await any conference of the representatives of the treaty powers at Peking that might assemble to discuss reforms and other questions arising out of the treaties or bearing on the general subject of re-organization in China.

The Department is in full sympathy with the desire of the Chinese Government to increase its revenues by legitimate forms of taxation and would not be indisposed to accept the Chinese view of the "destination tax" and other similar charges levied upon goods after their arrival at their destination, if some definite assurance could be had that the treaty provisions as to the commutation transit tax would not be evaded by a reimposition at the destination, under other names, of the likin, from the levy of which exemption had already been purchased. The Chekiang Liti Regulations, a copy of which you enclosed in your despatch under acknowledgment, show how such evasion of the treaty provisions is attempted when opportunity offers. The Department heartily approves of the protest made against these regulations, and while it may be true, as stated in the Legation's instruction to Shanghai, that our protests against consumption or destination taxes will continue to be futile, such protest, it appears, will continue to be necessary until a general conference of the Treaty Powers shall agree to some such plan as was proposed in the Commercial Treaty of 1903 between the United States and China, whereby in return for the entire abolition of likin, an increase in the customs duties was to be allowed. When such revision of the commercial treaties is undertaken the Department hopes that due provision will be made at the same time to protect American goods against excessive local taxation.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith for the information of the Department a copy of a circular instruction which the Legation issued on June 8 last to the various Consular officers in China, communicating in reply to numerous inquiries the position taken in regard to the Chinese Stamp Tax Law in conformity with the Department's instruction No. 90 of May 4, 1914.⁶⁵

There is also enclosed a copy of a despatch (No. 514) from the Consulate General at Shanghai under date of the 26th ultimo, making certain inquiries as to the effect of the view thus taken; also a copy of the Legation's reply of today's date, stating that the Legation construes the attitude of our Government in this matter as having only the negative effect of relieving its nationals from any obligation and from any correlated disability imposed by the Stamp Tax Law; it cannot be construed as in any way affecting the obligations and disabilities imposed by that law upon Chinese citizens—unless it were that our Government, refusing to recognize the payment of stamp tax as a condition to the legal validity of a contract entered into between a Chinese and an American citizen, might perhaps maintain the position that such a plea could not be effective as a defense to an action in a Chinese court by an American citizen or corporation seeking a remedy under such a contract. GENTLEMEN: In view of the inquiries addressed to the Legation by several of the Consular Officers in China, as to the liability of American citizens for the payment of stamp taxes imposed by the Chinese Government under the Stamp Tax Law enacted in October, 1912, I enclose for your information a copy of the Diplomatic Circular No. 39 of February 19, 1914, to which is appended a translation of the collective note in which the Diplomatic Body advised the Wai Chiao Pu that it could not accept the proposed law as applicable to nationals of the Treaty Powers in China.

In accordance with the terms of this collective note, the Legation regards American citizens and corporations as not being liable to the payment of stamp taxes.

TRANSLATION.

PEKING (February 28, 1914).

MR. MINISTER: In conformity with the desire expressed by Your Excellency in a despatch of September 29 last, the Diplomatic Body has examined the question whether there would be ground to apply, to documents and contracts concluded in China between foreigners and Chinese, the law concerning the stamp tax of which a copy was annexed to the communication cited above.

The Chiefs of Mission are of the opinion that, before pronouncing upon the imposition on their nationals of a new tax not contemplated by the Treaties, they should refer the matter to their respective Governments; and they consequently find themselves obliged to protest against the statement—which can be the result only of misunderstanding—contained in the note from the Wai Chiao Pu, to the effect that they had given their adhesion to the above mentioned stamp tax law thus rendering it applicable to foreigners.

In transmitting these documents to their respective governments, they believe themselves forced to direct attention to certain questions raised by this communication, and to express the opinion that the new law could not in any case be rendered applicable to their nationals in its present form.

SIR: With reference to the Legation's recent circular instruction on the Chinese Stamp Tax Law, to the effect that in the opinion of the Legation American citizens and corporations are not liable to the payment of such stamp taxes, the Standard Oil Company of New York writes me under date of June 23, 1915, requesting information as to the effect of the law on transactions between the Company and Chinese, submitting the following query:

1. Is a native bank order, drawn by a Chinese in the interior, payable to our order in a Treaty Port subject to stamp tax?
2. Is any agency agreement, construction contract, or other similar document, made out between this Company and a Chinese subject to stamp tax, and would stamps have to be affixed before taking such a document before a Chinese Court.

SIR: The Legation has received the despatch (No. 514) of June 26th in which you present in behalf of the Standard Oil Company of New York two queries as to the effect of the refusal on the part of the American Government to recognize the Chinese Stamp Tax Law as applicable to its nationals. In reply, I have to state that inasmuch as the questions presented are hypothetical, the Legation can not undertake to give in advance any authoritative advice or indication of the views by which the action of the Government would be controlled in the event that a case actually involving these questions were to arise.

Although not undertaking, therefore, to express any opinion upon the specific points raised by these inquiries, I have to state, for the information and guidance of the Consulate General, that the Legation construes the attitude of our Government in this matter as having only the negative effect of relieving its nationals from any obligation and from any correlated disability imposed by the Stamp Tax Law; it cannot be construed as in any way affecting the obligations and disabilities imposed by that law upon Chinese citizens—unless it were that our Government, refusing to recognize the payment of stamp tax as a condition to the legal validity of a contract entered into between Chinese and an American citizen, might perhaps maintain the position that such a plea could not be effective as a defense to an action in a Chinese court by an American citizen or corporation seeking a remedy under such a contract.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, July 12, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for the consideration of the Department a copy of an instruction which the Legation is addressing under today's date to the Consulate General at Hankow, in reference to a so-called "99 Mercantile Tax" which the provincial authorities of Kiangsi have attempted to establish. This tax is fixed at 1 per cent on the current price of goods of all kinds entering the Province of Kiangsi, and is declared to be "for the purpose of adjusting the value of the cash notes and assisting the financial position of this province"; and it is further provided that "the tax will be withdrawn as soon as all the cash notes have been redeemed." Complaint against the proposed levy of this tax upon its products was made by the Kiukiang branch of the Standard Oil Company of New York, which, for the purpose of avoiding certain charges of the Maritime Customs for the bonding of warehouses, is accustomed to take its products into the interior of Kiangsi, not under the system of transit-passes provided by the treaties but under an arrangement for the payment to the Native Customs of a provincial tax known as "Pao Shang Piao," which, for the same half-duty charge as the transit pass, assures to the goods while in transit in the province the same general exemptions from local taxation as does the transit pass. The exact nature of this Pao Shang Piao is unknown, as the Consulate General has been unable to procure a copy of the Regulations; but what appears to be the point most essential in this connection is covered by the following quotation from a communication on the subject which the Governor of Kiangsi addressed to the Consulate General on January 12 last:

The Pao Shang Piao was established in the twenty-ninth year of Kuang Hsu (1903-1904) and has been collected after the manner of the Maritime Customs tax. It is collected once for all by the Pao Shang Office, and the office issues a tax-receipt permitting that the goods be shipped to their destination (at the point of destination). When the goods and certificate are in accord, the certificate will be given to the office for cancellation. The goods will not be taxed a second time. * * * The goods which are covered by Pao Shang Piao and are imported into the interior through Hukow, shall not be interfered with, detained or further taxed by either the Hukow or other interior tax offices.

It was contended by the Standard Oil Company that the payment of this provincial tax, which is closely analogous to the transit-pass tax established by the treaties, should similarly entitle them to exemption from "all other inland charges whatsoever," as the treaties provide in favor of transit-pass goods. In accordance with this view the Consulate General refused to recognize the legality of the tax, and so advised the American company. The British Consul at Kiukiang, apparently on the same grounds, advised his nationals in the same sense.

Although concurring in the conclusion that the "99 Mercantile Tax" is illegal as imposed upon goods that have paid Pao Shang Piao, the Legation nevertheless considers that its illegality arises not from any violation of the treaty stipulations in regard to transit-pass exemptions, but from the fact that the effect of payment of the Pao Shang Piao, as stated by the Governor in the communication quoted above, should be to relieve the goods from the incidence of all other local levies while in transit in the Province of Kiangsi.

I beg to request an expression of the views of the Department on the several questions thus raised.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Peking, July 12, 1915.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence, and particularly to the Legation's instruction (No. 1083) of May 11 last, and your despatches of May 18 and June 7 (Nos. 39 and 49, respectively), on the subject of the "99 Mercantile Tax" which the provincial authorities of Kiangsi are attempting to levy upon imports into that province, I have to advise you that, in the opinion of the Legation, there appears to be ample ground for the Consulate General to contest the legality of this tax upon such goods as have paid "Pao Shang Piao"—a provincial tax the precise terms governing which remain unknown, but which the Governor of Kiangsi described to you in a communication of January 12 last (quoted in your despatch of May 18) as exempting from further taxation during transit in the province the goods upon which it had been paid. The Legation therefore approves your action in advising American firms to refuse payment of the "99 Mercantile Tax" under the circumstances indicated, and in so informing the Governor of Kiangsi.

In order, however, to avoid a possibility of misunderstanding as to the principle upon which this view is based, it should perhaps be emphasized that the levy of the "99 Mercantile Tax" under such circumstances appears to the Legation to be illegal not because contrary to the treaty obligations of the Chinese Government but because incompatible with the terms (as stated by the provincial Governor) upon which the provincial "Pao Shang Piao" is levied. Although apparently professing to assure to goods in transit within the province the same general exemptions which they would enjoy under transit pass, that provincial tax does not appear to be wholly assimilable to the half-duty charge which the treaties stipulate as optionally payable in order to relieve imports from "all further inland charges whatsoever"; and the payment of that tax cannot therefore entitle goods to the exemptions specified in favor of transit-pass goods, but only to such exemptions as accrue to the goods under the regulations governing the tax.

The "99 Mercantile Tax" would, on the other hand, no doubt be held to be contrary to the provisions of the treaties if it were levied upon goods in transit under transit pass or exemption certificate, or if it were imposed in violation of the most-favored-nation principle on imports from a particular country, or if it were to violate the national-treatment principle by being directed (even though without actual discrimination in the amount of the charge) specifically against foreign goods as such in contradistinction to native goods.

It would also seem (although on this point the Legation must reserve a decision) that the "99 Mercantile Tax" would not be illegal as applied (always assuming an absence of actual or potential discrimination as among foreign goods or against foreign goods in contradistinction to native) to imports sent into the interior without availing themselves of treaty exemptions under the system of transit passes or of exemption certificates.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Peking, July 16, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a translation of a note, under date of May 15 last, with which the Ministry of Finance, at the request of the Legation, communicated a copy of certain regulations under which it is proposed to levy destination taxes upon foreign goods imported into the Province of Kiangsu and particularly into the walled city of Nanking; also a copy of the note which the Legation yesterday addressed to the Wai Chiao Pu, protesting against the imposition of that tax.

I beg to request the instructions of the Department on the issues thus raised, more especially upon the contention that it is not competent to the Chinese Government to impose upon foreign goods, as such and in contradistinction to native goods, any taxes or dues other than the import duty and optional transit-pass dues expressly stipulated in the treaties, on the ground that such a differentiation would imply the right (as in fact it would afford the opportunity and the temptation) to discriminate against foreign imports.

Under the strict interpretation of the treaties upon which our Government has insisted, transit-pass goods should be held to be exempt from all other inland charges whatsoever, being thus entitled to conditions more favorable than those of "national treatment." Under the more liberal construction conceded by the British, which admits that such goods pass into the course of Chinese trade and become subject to "national treatment" upon the cancellation of their transit passes at destination, and therefore allows of the levy of such further taxes as may be indiscriminately imposed upon that trade, it has been found necessary to insist that all differentiation between foreign and native goods should thereupon cease.

In protesting against the proposed regulations, it has seemed to me advisable to adduce this further consideration, for two reasons:

First, it seemed opportune to point out the fallacy of the Chinese position in claiming the right to levy a destination tax upon transit-pass goods after the completion of their transit on the ground that they are then "on the same basis as all other goods," while at the same time taxing them under the terms of regulations expressly applicable to them as foreign goods. It is possible that a realization of the extent to which their general contention as to the legality of destination taxes is weakened by these regulations may be effective in inducing the Chinese Government to withdraw the regulations—as it could hardly be expected to do otherwise in view of the obduracy with which it has hitherto ignored the protests against the imposition of destination tax upon transit-pass goods and against treating Nanking City as "interior" rather than as an open port.

Second, in the event of such a general adjustment of questions of taxation as was suggested in the Legation's despatch No. 664 of June 11, 1915,¹⁷ it is possible that our Government might consent to adopt the more liberal construction, in which the British Government has acquiesced, as to the effect of the treaties in entitling foreign goods only to "national treatment" after completing their transit to an open port under exemption certificates or to their destination in the interior under transit pass. In that case it would be well to have on record the contention that no regulation differentiating foreign from native goods and imposing upon them other (even if not more onerous) conditions, can be considered as compatible with the "national treatment" which our Government might be disposed to accept as applicable to imports from the United States.

PEKING, May 15, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note regarding the receipt by the American merchants of Nanking of a notification that a destination tax would be levied on all foreign goods coming to Nanking, and asking for a copy of the regulations.

I would observe that miscellaneous foreign goods transported inland to be sold, when covered by a transit pass, are exempt from all taxation at any customs barrier en route from the treaty port to the place of destination. When they have reached their destination the transit pass is surrendered and cancelled. Thereupon the goods are on the same basis as all other goods and should be treated according to the regulations for the interior. This is the intention of the treaties. The regulations of the late Ch'ing Dynasty for the interior provide that after the pass has been cancelled the Chinese merchants who take delivery of the goods shall pay a destination (Loti) tax. When goods are not covered by a transit pass the shippers must pay the half-duty provided for in the transit-pass regulations at a customs station, whereupon they receive a pass in four sections; after which they are exempt from examination on the road. When the goods have arrived at their destination they must pay the destination tax. This has been the practice for over twenty years. This is a tax which is assessed on the Chinese merchants and has nothing to do with the foreign merchants, nor does it conflict in any way with treaty stipulations. I now have the honor to send you the Nanking Destination Tax Regulations, as requested, for your inspection.

*Chargé MacMurray to the Minister for Foreign Affairs.*AMERICAN LEGATION, Peking, July 15th, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to advise you that this Legation has received from the Minister of Finance a copy of the Regulations governing the destination tax which it is proposed to levy upon goods entering the City of Nanking. This was in reply to the request of the Minister, who desired to reassure himself that the proposed innovation would not affect the rights of American citizens under the existing treaties.

I regret to advise your excellency that an examination of these Regulations discloses several points which seem inconsistent with the view of the treaties held by the American Government.

In the first article of the Regulations it is provided that they shall be applicable in all parts of Kiangsu outside foreign concessions and the treaty ports. Inasmuch as the City of Nanking has been open to foreign trade under the terms of the French Treaty of 1858, it would seem that the Regulations would not in any case be applicable there.

As I need scarcely recall to your excellency, the American Government has never recognized the propriety of levying a destination tax upon goods which have paid the import duty and the transit-pass duty entitling them under the treaties to exemption from "all further inland charges whatsoever."

The levy of such a destination tax could be justified, if at all, only on the theory that transit-pass goods, having completed their transit under protection of the treaties, are thereupon merged into the trade of the country so as to be indistinguishable from native goods. It is not consistent with that theory that a destination tax should be made particularly applicable specifically to foreign goods.

Even apart from that consideration, however, I would particularly invite the attention of your excellency to the view that it is the purpose of the existing treaties to specify and provide for all duties and taxes leviable upon foreign imports as such; and that it is therefore illegal to single out foreign goods in order to subject them to further taxes other or higher than those levied upon native goods. Even if the taxes so imposed upon foreign goods could be shown to be no heavier than those imposed on native products, it is evident that the purpose of the treaties in this regard would be defeated if foreign goods, having paid all the duties and taxes provided by treaty, were to be subject to further taxation levied upon them especially, as distinguished from native goods.

Draft Note from the Dean of the Diplomatic Body to the Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

PEKING, July —, 1915.

SIR: On the 18th of September, 1913, the Wai Chiao Pu communicated to the Diplomatic Body the text of the Stamp Tax Law and requested that the Foreign Representatives should accept the same and instruct their respective nationals to comply with its provisions.

After due consideration the Diplomatic Body found that they were unable to comply with this request and this decision was duly communicated to Your Excellency on 28th February, 1914.

The Diplomatic Body have since been surprised to learn that in spite of this communication, several Chinese Government Departments and Public Institutions are endeavoring by various means to coerce foreigners to pay this tax.

The Foreign Representatives desire therefore, to remind the Chinese Government that they cannot agree to the levy of the stamp tax on foreigners and to request that instructions be issued to all Government Departments and Public Institutions to abstain from all attempts either direct or indirect to force foreigners to pay the tax.

While approving the Legation's instruction, the Department believes it would be well to obtain a copy of the Pao-shang-piao regulations, or a receipt showing the payment of such a tax, in order that the propriety of the Standard Oil Company's refusal to pay the "99 Mercantile Tax" may be determined.

SIR: The Department has received your despatch No. 687 of July 16, 1915, with its enclosures relative to the levy of destination taxes upon foreign goods.

You are hereby instructed that in the view of the Department the Chinese Government is not competent to impose upon foreign goods, as such and in contradistinction to native goods, any taxes or dues other than the import duty and commutation transit tax as provided in the treaties.

While objecting to any attempt to discriminate against foreign goods, the Department adheres to the position taken in its instruction of June 22 last; that is to say, it is in full sympathy with the desire of the Chinese Government to increase its revenues by legitimate forms of taxation so long as the taxation is levied alike upon native and foreign goods.

SIR: Referring to the instruction No. 325 of September 17 last, in which the Department confirmed the correctness of the Legation's understanding of the effect of the stamp taxes as stated in its despatch No. 683 of July 9 last, I have the honor to request direct instructions as to the Department's views upon the question suggested in that despatch: whether or not the payment of stamp tax is to be considered a condition precedent to the enforceability in a Chinese court of any contract entered into between a Chinese and an American citizen or firm; and whether or not, in consequence, it should be maintained that a plea of non-payment of the tax would be effective as a defense to an action in a Chinese court by an American plaintiff seeking a remedy under such an unstamped contract. I beg to refer in this connection to my despatch No. 149 of March 10, 1914.⁶⁶

As the Legation has been asked to pass on this point, I have the honor to request telegraphic instructions.

INFRINGEMENT OF AMERICAN TRADE-MARKS IN CHINA—VASE-LINE TRADE-MARK CASE: THE CHESEBROUGH MANUFACTURING CO. v. YUNG CH'I HSIANG ET AL.

File No. 893.54/311.

Consul General Sammons to Minister Reinsch.

No. 374.]

AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
Shanghai, February 2, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy of a self-explanatory letter, on the subject of infringement of trade-marks, from the Japanese Consul General at this port.

It would seem the part of practical business-prudence for American manufacturers who produce goods that at present or in the future may find a market among Oriental peoples to examine the question of trade-mark registration in the Far East. In a number of instances American goods that heretofore found a growing demand have been wholly or partially crowded out by imitations or as the result of the use of trade-marks or "chops" that are palpably infringements.

⁶⁶ For. Rel. 1914, p. 119.

These imitations and infringements are not entirely confined to Japan or the Japanese. For instance, it appears that a number of years ago an action was brought against certain Chinese for selling a brand of condensed milk (Borden's) which was labeled with a trade-mark that was considered an infringement of the American original. In that case the German agents endeavored, through the German Consul General, to interfere on the ground that the trade-mark under which the Chinese were selling the goods had been registered in Germany, but so far as I can ascertain no authentic proof was presented and the native dealer was duly fined in the Mixed Court.

While in some instances other nationals have been concerned in imitations and infringements, the bulk of this kind of interference with legitimate trade comes from Japan and the Japanese.

Soon after I took over charge of this Consulate General, a number of trade-mark cases were brought up, and in some instances it was alleged that the spurious designs were registered in Japan. Ultimately the Japanese Consul General acquiesced in Mixed Court procedure which would be calculated to fine Chinese who were guilty of selling goods under trade-marks that were in infringement of American designs; that is to say, where the American trade-mark in question was not duly registered in Tokyo, either by Japanese or Americans.

More recently the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of American vaseline, instituted action through its New York attorney and an agent here in Shanghai, who applied to an American law firm (Fleming and Davies), with the result that a quantity of vaseline imported into Shanghai from Japan and bearing trade-marks that apparently were intended to deceive the purchaser into the belief that they represented American goods were seized and brought into the Mixed Court.

When this matter was about to be brought up in the Mixed Court, the Japanese Consul General requested (a) that the Japanese assessor be allowed to sit with the American and Chinese officials and (b) that in any instance where Japanese goods, even where covered by a trade-mark that is an imitation of the American label but where the certificate of registration had been granted by the Tokyo authorities, no further Mixed Court action should be attempted, and that the complainants proceed to make application to the Japanese registration office. Finally the Japanese Consul General withdrew his request to have his assessor participate in the judgment and merely requested that he might be allowed to sit and observe the procedure. It is customary on the part of members of the Consular Body to admit the right of any assessor to sit and merely watch the Mixed Court procedure in any case where the Consul General makes the request and asserts an interest therein on the part of his nationals.

After a number of conferences with the Japanese Consul General, he agreed to write the letter, a copy of which I enclose, according to which he was to have about two weeks to bring the questions involved before his higher authorities in Tokyo with a view, as he has agreed, to having the trade-marks that are palpably an infringement of American rights canceled.

In the meantime I have endeavored to expedite matters and provide a practical course of procedure for the future by seeking to arrange with the Japanese Consul General to proceed without delay in Mixed Court cases involving trade-mark infringements and to fine the Chinese retailers provided no certificate of registry is forthcoming; and if there is a certificate of registry to then refer the matter to the higher authorities at Tokyo or Washington to determine questions of canceling the imitation registration, priority of use, et cetera. The Japanese Consul General has agreed to this in principle, but I fear that when the plan is put into operation he will again object to summarily arraigning Chinese sellers of Japanese goods that bear trade-marks that are infringements of American rights.

The Japanese Consul General indicates the belief that it would be an unusual procedure to attempt to have the Mixed Courts here pass upon the rights of Japanese who are selling goods under trade-marks registered by his Government in Toyko, even though such trade-marks may, in fact, be infringements of prior American rights as registered at Washington (but not at Tokyo). The American lawyers concerned, however, have urged summary action and this I have been constrained to avoid in cases where the alleged infringement is supported by a Japanese certificate of registration at Tokyo. Assuming this attitude to be sound, I now seek, on behalf of American manufacturers, to show to the Chinese dealers to what extent the pirating of trade-marks has been carried and to fine them as quickly as possible in instances where the imitation has not been registered.

Coupled with the above outline of procedure and an understanding as to ~~how~~ prompt action may be obtained, I respectfully urge that American trade-marks be properly registered at Tokyo.

It is further assumed, generally, that a provisional registration of trade-marks, for China, with the commissioner of customs at Shanghai does not, for the time being at least, affect the status of duly registered trade-marks in Washington and in Tokyo. Also, in a legal sense, until evidence is produced to the contrary, it seems to be assumed that the Japanese Consul General is sustained in his declaration that he may bring Mixed Court action against Chinese for selling American goods under an original trade-mark which, although duly registered by Americans in Washington, has never been registered by Americans in Tokyo but which, or an imitation or infringement thereof, has been registered by Japanese at the latter capital. Moreover, until or unless the Japanese registration of the infringement or imitation is canceled, they claim the right to proceed to sell their goods in China on an equal basis with the original and genuine American product, regardless of priority of use, et cetera.

The Japanese Consul General has today requested further time—a week or more—in which to secure instructions from Tokyo before action is taken in the vaseline cases. I am granting this extension but, ultimately, I look forward to showing to the Chinese dealers, through Mixed Court procedure, that the Japanese certificates of registration of trade-marks in cases of this kind palpably infringe our rights and that pending the placing of the matter before the higher authorities (at Tokyo or Washington) with a view to canceling the same, proceedings will be held in abeyance. Even though the registration is not canceled, I am hopeful that this plan of procedure will effectually do away with further immediate attempts, at least, to sell such goods in this market. In addition to the above procedure, I hope it may be possible to proceed at once to fine Chinese dealers who are selling goods under infringements or imitations of our trade-marks, even though the same may not be registered by our people at Tokyo. In the vaseline cases it appears that some imitations are not supported by Japanese certificates of registration. In these cases the Japanese Consul General wishes action held in abeyance pending instructions from the Tokyo Foreign Office regarding all the questions involved.

It is gratifying to note that in many instances American trade-marks are now being forwarded to this office in connection with provisional registration with the Chinese commissioner of customs here. While there are no regulations in force in China governing infringements of trade-marks, et cetera, by Chinese, it has been found that protection against infringement by Chinese can be obtained in many instances by representations to the local authorities by the American consular representative nearest the place or places where the violation was practiced. In these cases proclamations and administrative measures promulgated by the local authorities were the means of protection afforded.

However, as intimated in the body of this despatch, this provisional registration is not accepted as affording protection to American trade-marks when the same have been infringed by the Japanese and when such trade-marks have not been duly registered at Tokyo.

In case there should be any objection to the procedure now being followed here, and as herein outlined for the future, I respectfully request to be advised thereof without delay, by telegraph, if necessary.

I have [etc.]

JAPANESE CONSULATE GENERAL,
Shanghai, January 20, 1915.

SIR: With reference to the case against certain Chinese merchants relating to the marketing of the Japanese-made vaseline bearing the trade-mark properly registered at the American Patent Office by Messrs. Chesebrough & Co., on one hand, and also registered in Japan separately by Mr. Matsumoto on the other hand, I beg to state that although the case, as it is proposed, is apparently a case between the Chinese merchants and an American firm, the matter itself is a question relating to the protection of a trade-mark in China which trade-mark carries legitimately both the American and Japanese nature at the same time. Consequently I consider it more advisable for the benefit of our countries to weigh, examine and judge the case in the light of the treaty of 1908,⁶⁸ existing between our countries relating to the mutual protection of patents, trade-marks, etc., in China, which treaty, methinks, at least its spirit, aimed at to cover such a case as we are now confronted.

Moreover, if a judgment were once handed down by the Mixed Court over such a matter, it can not but have a serious bearing on the future trade of Japan as well as America with China, whatever the judgment may be. As I have, therefore, wired to the home authorities in order to be informed of their opinion on the matter, it is requested that you be kind enough to exercise your influence over the complainant not to let him take any action until after about two weeks from now when I expect word may come from the home Government.

In closing I beg to remind you also that in case Messrs. Chesebrough will push his case without first taking the proper procedure to cancel the registration of trade-mark in Japan of Mr. Matsumoto, it is feared that the latter may be compelled to take the same action in the Mixed Court against the Chinese who handle the American goods bearing the trade-mark now at issue, and great entanglement may consequently ensue from such an action which will prove detrimental equally to the interest of both parties.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, February 15, 1915—8 p. m.

Consulate General at Shanghai reports that the American owners of vaseline trade-mark have begun in the Mixed Court prosecutions against the Chinese vendors of a Japanese imitation bearing trade-marks which are registered in Japan but which infringe the American mark protected for use in China both by provisional registration and by proclamation of the local authorities prohibiting infringement and that the Japanese Government sustains contention of its Consul General that failing to obtain by appropriate action in Japan annulment of the Japanese registration American company is not entitled to proceed even in a Chinese court against Chinese who contrary to the laws of China are dealing in an infringement so protected. The Japanese Consul General has therefore not only protested against the prosecutions instituted in the mixed court but also threatens similar retaliatory prosecutions against the Chinese dealing in the American goods bearing the original trade-mark.

That contention if conceded would annul the only protection for industrial property rights that now exists in China and would subject to Japanese domestic law and jurisdiction the right of Japanese subjects to the use in China of any trade-mark which they might choose to register at home.

Unless otherwise instructed I propose to advise the Consulate General at Shanghai in the immediate future that at least in so far as concerns prosecutions by Americans against Chinese the rights of industrial property in China are determinable by local law as based upon priority of use and of registration and proclamation and that Japanese registration cannot interfere with the right of an American company to seek redress in a Chinese court for violations by Chinese citizens of its rights under Chinese law.

AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
Shanghai, February 17, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to further supplement my despatch, No. 374 of the 2d instant by now appending a copy of a formal note of protest which I have received today from the Japanese Consul General:

JAPANESE CONSULATE GENERAL,
Shanghai, February 17, 1915.

SIR AND DEAR COLLEAGUE: With reference to the dispute concerning certain trade-marks claimed both by Messrs. Chesebrough & Co., of your nationality, and Mr. Takejiro Matsumoto, of ours, I have received an instruction from our Home Government which runs substantially as follows:

Although the present case is one which relates apparently to the American and Chinese, it is in fact nothing but a dispute between like trade-marks possessed by both our nationals. As the trade-mark of the above-named American is not registered in Japan, it is not a case coming within the terms of the treaty between Japan and the United States relating to the mutual protection of patents, trade-marks, etc. Moreover, by virtue of Art. V of the Supplementary Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of 1904 concluded between China and Japan, China takes upon herself an obligation to protect our registered trade-marks. It will consequently constitute a violation of the treaty if the Mixed Court prohibit the sale by Chinese of any merchandise by sole reason of bearing the trade-marks possessed by Matsumoto. You (the Japanese Consul General) are, therefore, instructed to protest and to endeavor to prevent the Mixed Court from holding an examination on the matter, which has of necessity a great bearing upon the trade-marks possessed by Matsumoto and registered legitimately at our Patent Office.

Under such instruction you will observe that I am duty bound to act accordingly. So if the case is at last brought before the Mixed Court, I have to lodge a protest against the hearing by the court, and should the court persist upon trying of the case, I shall ask the court to have our assessor sit.

I shall also be permitted to add that at the event of an adversary decision being rendered against Matsumoto, we shall be obliged, how deplorable as it may, to take a recourse to the same procedure as preferred by Messrs. Chesebrough & Co., against Chinese merchants dealing in the American goods bearing the trade-mark possessed by Matsumoto, which course unavoidably may entail a grave complication and loss to both parties, Japanese as well as American.

I have [etc.]

A. ARIYOSHI.

As heretofore indicated in my despatches on this subject, it is my intention, unless otherwise instructed, to recognize the duly authenticated certificates of registration of trade-marks, thus complying in a technical sense with the representations made by the Japanese Consul General. The plan of procedure to which I refer is more specifically outlined on page 4 of my despatch of the 2d instant, as follows:

In the meantime I have endeavored to expedite matters and provide a practical course of procedure for the future by seeking to arrange with the Japanese Consul General to proceed without delay in Mixed Court cases involving trade-mark infringements and to fine the Chinese retailers provided no certificate of registry is forthcoming; and if there is a certificate of registry to then refer the matter to the higher authorities at Tokyo or Washington to determine questions of canceling the imitation registration, priority of use, et cetera.

On behalf of our American interests here, it seems desirable to promptly bring matters of this nature before the eyes of the Chinese concerned and to assist them in comprehending the extent to which our trade-marks are pirated and imitated. I have assumed that this end may be accomplished by suitable procedure in the Mixed Court and by promptly inflicting fines where there is no certificate of registration covering imitations of our trade-marks.

The moral effect of this procedure, coupled with having it understood, in cases where duly authenticated certificates of registration are presented, that the matter, in being referred to the higher authorities, is merely held in abeyance and that the case is not actually forthwith dismissed, will, I believe, prove of great importance. In a technical legal sense, I further assume that this particular feature of my plan of procedure may be deemed untenable, but for practical purposes I believe that it will be possible to secure due observance of such policy.

In conclusion, I may add that, as heretofore pointed out, the Japanese Consul General, having verbally agreed to my plan of procedure, his formal protest on behalf of his Government may be accepted as applying to the jurisdiction of the Mixed Court where trade-marks have been duly registered, under treaty stipulation or otherwise, at Tokyo or Washington, and where obviously the "higher authorities" must ultimately be appealed to in determining the merits of such registrations; that is to say, for an adjustment of trade-mark controversies involving improper and unwarranted registration of imitations, in a commercial sense, of designs possessing priority of use, et cetera.

As I have pointed out to the Japanese Consul General, we do not always know in advance who are responsible for marketing goods under trade-marks that are palpably imitations of American designs. This is particularly true as regards the Japanese imitations of American vaseline trade-marks. The Japanese packages, in most instances, give no satisfactory clue indicating who is responsible. But once the matter is brought into the Mixed Court, all parties concerned may be heard and offenders promptly fined where it appears they are not backed by their own Government's certificate of registration, et cetera.

Non-interference in the Mixed Court, or otherwise, is what actual offenders desire. I assume that various Japanese offenders, in particular, wish to avoid publicity regarding their trade-mark pirating procedure. My controlling thought is to make the facts public and to warn all Chinese traders. Next, delays must be avoided if we are to satisfactorily guard American trade interests. Hence the plan of procedure providing for reasonable promptness in bringing about the preliminary hearing in the Mixed Court.

In no instance have we indicated a policy ignoring duly registered Japanese trade-marks (even if the names are imitations) albeit that procedure has been proposed by interested lawyers.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, February 27, 1915.

SIR: Referring to the Legation's telegram of February 15, 8 p. m., I have the honor to enclose correspondence in reference to certain Japanese infringements of American trade-marks in the China market.

The more complicated situation presented by the Vaseline case involves a claim by the Japanese Consul General at Shanghai, apparently supported by his Government, to suspend—subject to a determination by the courts in Japan of the rival pretensions of American and Japanese claimants—any action instituted by the American owners of a trade-mark in a Chinese court for civil or penal redress against Chinese dealing in infringements of Japanese origin, even though the Japanese claimant makes no pretension of prior use of the mark in China, or of having obtained by registration or proclamation any Chinese sanction for his claim to the use of the mark in this country. I cannot but feel that this extraordinary attempt to extend into Chinese jurisdiction the effect of Japanese domestic regulations would be, if not to deprive Americans altogether of the trade-mark rights secured them by the Treaty of 1903,⁶⁸ at any rate to make enforcement of those rights subject in every case to the determination of a Japanese court.

These cases emphasize the advisability of American exporters to this market availing themselves of the practical expedient of registering their trade-marks in the Trade-Mark Office at Tokyo, in order not only to be able to assure themselves of the right of action against Japanese infringers in the consular courts of Japan in China, as provided by the Treaty of 1908 between the United States and Japan,⁶⁸ but also in order to obviate the possibility of having their treaty rights to Chinese protection against persons and firms under Chinese jurisdiction complicated and called into question. It is respectfully suggested that the necessity of safeguarding their interests by registration in the Tokyo Trade-mark Office should again be called to the attention of American exporters, either through the

The American Vaseline trade-mark was registered in August, 1908, and again in July, 1913; a proclamation in its favor was issued in August, 1913; unable as yet to ascertain whether the Japanese mark has been registered for use in China.

The Japanese Consul General has now been instructed to protest against action in the Mixed Court in cases in which the mark or imitation is registered in Japan, holding that previous registration in China does not apply unless perhaps later for the purpose of determining priority.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, February 18, 1915.

In further reference to Shanghai's despatch No. 374 of the 2d instant, Mr. Reinsch advises Mr. Sammons that, in his view, the rights of trade-mark protection in China, in so far as concern prosecutions by Americans against Chinese, are determinable by the local law as depending upon priority of use, registration and proclamation; he therefore considers that a registration in Japan for use there would confer upon a Japanese infringement no locus standi in the case of an American owner of a trade-mark seeking in a court of Chinese jurisdiction for redress against violations of his rights under Chinese law by Chinese subjects.

[Inclosure 3—Extract.]

Minister Reinsch to Consul General Sammons.

No. 971.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Shanghai, February 26, 1915.

SIR: I take occasion to supplement herewith the telegraphic instructions which I addressed to you on February 18 in reply to your despatch No. 374 of the 2d instant.

In order to clear up certain misconceptions by which the issues in this case appear to have been confused, I would point out that it is the general principle of the American and other Western systems of law that a trade-mark is a property right growing out of the use of a particular distinguishing device adopted for the purpose of trade, and accruing to the user of such an identifying mark independently of any formal act such as registration—such formalities being recognized not as creating new rights but only as attesting and furnishing evidence (of a presumptive force determined by the laws under which the formalities are established) of the existence of a proprietary right in the device. It is believed that the concept of a property right originating in the mere fact of the adoption and use of an identifying device in trade is common not only to the legal systems of the West but also to that of China.

In the nature of the case, however, the protection and enforcement of the rights as recognized give rise to many questions in actual practice, in view of the difficulty of establishing by evidence in each case the duration and extent of use, and the nonexistence of a similar use by other traders. To minimize the practical difficulties thus presented, the system of registration of trademarks has been adopted in most countries, in order to obviate the difficulties of proving industrial property rights, by establishing registration as a more readily available form of evidence in such cases. As indicated above, the degree of presumptive force attaching to registration varies in the several existing systems of registration; in some, notably the Japanese, so much weight is attached to the fact of registration as to give it almost the effect of a presumption of law; but it is understood that even in the Japanese system the principle of proprietary right growing out of priority of use is recognized to the extent of providing means for the cancellation of registrations which infringe upon trade-marks already in use by other traders.

So much general discussion of the subject has seemed necessary in order to dispel the apparent misconception that registration in Japan or elsewhere creates ipso facto a right in any mark for trade in China. In the view of the Legation, the question of the ownership of any trade-mark in China is one of fact as to priority of use and adoption for the trade in China; the essential facts in such cases are determinable in accordance with the legal system and institutions applicable by the jurisdiction to which appeal must be made in order to establish and protect those rights in this country. It is in this connection necessary to envisage the possibility of infringements of American trade-marks by those subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to that of China, and to that of countries (other than the United States) enjoying extra-territorial jurisdiction here.

With reference to the law applicable in cases of infringement by other Americans, the question is one in regard to which comment by the Legation would be superfluous inasmuch as the matter is not of diplomatic but of judicial competence.

So far as concerns protection or redress against persons or firms subject to the jurisdiction of China, I would reiterate the belief that the legal concepts of the Chinese recognize the principle of a property right accruing from the use of trade-marks or chops. As a matter of practical administration, however, it has been found desirable to establish by Article IX of the Commercial Treaty of 1903 an administrative procedure by which the owners of American trade-marks may entitle themselves to protection by the Chinese Government against infringing, imitating, or knowingly passing off imitations of their trade-marks. This treaty stipulation imposes upon the Chinese Government, subject to the formalities of registration and proclamation, the obligation to protect within its territories and against its nationals the following three categories of American trade-marks:

1. Those to the exclusive use of which in the United States the American owners are entitled;
2. Those which they have adopted and used within the territories of China; and
3. Those which they intend to adopt and use exclusively within the territories of China as soon as registered.

It would appear that the owners of the Vaseline trade-mark (which belongs alike to the first and to the second of the above categories) have fully entitled themselves to the protection of this trade-mark by the Chinese Government under the terms of the treaty, having registered the trade-mark and obtained for it the proclamation of the appropriate authorities. It may incidentally be noted that—at any rate in a case involving no contest as to the relative value of registrations as between two or more claimants of a trade-mark—the so-called “provisional registration” of a trade-mark with the Customs at Shanghai must be considered as fulfilling the condition precedent to Chinese protection, stipulated in that regard by the Treaty of 1903. For although the Chinese Government has not yet established offices for the granting of registration “after due investigation by the Chinese authorities and in compliance with reasonable regulations” (as contemplated by our treaty), or “in accordance with the provisions of the regulations to be hereafter framed by the Chinese Government for the purpose of protecting trade-marks” (as contemplated by the Sino-Japanese Treaty of 1903), it has nevertheless established an office for provisional registration under the control of the Maritime Customs at Shanghai, in pursuance of Article VII of the Sino-British Treaty of 1902; and inasmuch as the system of provisional registration thus established affords to American traders the only means hitherto available to them to comply with the treaty requirement of registration with the appropriate Chinese authorities, it seems preposterous to suppose that it is open to the Chinese (or to others for them) to plead that registration under that system does not suffice to fulfil the requirement upon which the obligation of protection by the Chinese Government is conditioned. Under such circumstances the Legation considers that the duty of the Chinese authorities to protect the Vaseline trademark as against their own nationals is a matter of treaty obligation by China to the United States; and it fails to understand on what ground a third party can claim to intervene against the enforcement of that obligation.

In this connection the Japanese Consul General at Shanghai, in his letter addressed to you on the 17th instant, quoted in your No. 392 of February 17th, takes the position that it would constitute a violation of Article V of the Sino-Japanese Treaty of 1904 (doubtless that of 1903 is intended) if the Mixed Court were to "prohibit the sale by Chinese of any merchandise by sole reason of bearing the trade-marks possessed by Matsumoto"; and from the context it appears that the clause "possessed by Matsumoto" is to be interpreted as meaning registered in Japan by Matsumoto.

The treaty provision upon which your Japanese colleague relies would appear to be that contained in the first paragraph of Article V of the Sino-Japanese Treaty of 1903, reading as follows:

The Chinese Government agree to make and faithfully enforce such regulations as are necessary for preventing Chinese subjects from infringing registered trade-marks held by Japanese subjects.

But this provision would sustain his contention only if it were assumed that the phrase registered trade-marks held by Japanese subjects refers to registration in Japan rather than in China. That such is not the true meaning of the provision, however, is to be inferred from the terms of mutuality in which the fourth paragraph of the same article provides for the protection by the Japanese Government of trade-marks "properly registered according to the provisions of the laws and regulations of Japan." But even if the terms of the Japanese treaty did not so manifestly contemplate registration in China as a condition precedent to the protection of Japanese (as of American) trade-marks, I should find it impossible to reconcile myself to the assumption that registration in Japan—a unilateral domestic act involving no consent or even cognizance on the part of either Chinese or Americans—could have the effect of nullifying rights accruing to Americans in China and protected by treaty between China and the United States, or could make the right to protection in such cases subject to determination by judicial procedure in Japan. Although other elements of the problem would have to be taken into consideration if the case presented a rivalry of registrations by Americans and by Japanese in China, it seems clear that the actual facts of the case involving the infringement of the Vaseline trade-mark allow no room for the supposition that by reason of a registration in their home trademark office the Japanese claimants are entitled to oppose the proceedings which the Chinese Government is obligated by treaty to take against such persons under its jurisdiction as violate the rights of the American owners of the trade-mark.

Such cases as this, involving prosecutions against Chinese infringing or dealing in infringements, are to be carefully distinguished from cases involving such action by persons subject to the jurisdiction of nations (other than the United States) possessing extraterritorial jurisdiction in China. In cases of the latter sort, in view of the fact that each extraterritorial court applies to its own nationals a system of law based upon its domestic law, the United States has, by exchanges of notes with various powers and by a treaty with Japan concluded May 19, 1908,⁶⁸ agreed to accept registration, in the appropriate office of the nation whose jurisdiction is appealed to, as determining the right to sue for infringements in that nation's extraterritorial courts. That rule is one of convenience rather than of principle, designed to furnish the reasonably convenient procedure by which American owners of trade-marks may, for example, protect themselves against infringements by Japanese of their rights in China; the application of that rule is to be confined strictly to the cases for which it is provided, and cannot be construed as establishing, vis-à-vis Japan or any other nation with which we have a similar agreement, that we accept the principle that an absolute property right is created by the mere fact of registration in the appropriate office of the other nation.

The fundamental error in the position taken by the Japanese Government in the present case seems to lie in the assumption that registration of trade-marks in Japan does not merely constitute a basis for judicial procedure in Japanese domestic or extraterritorial courts, but creates in favor of its nationals an abstract and absolute property right enforceable even under Chinese jurisdiction without regard to the requirements of Chinese law. The Legation considers that if this contention were conceded it would render potentially subject to Japanese law and jurisdiction the claim of Japanese subjects to use in China any American trade-mark which they might find it expedient to adopt by registration at home, and would effectually annul the only protection for American industrial property rights which now exists in China.

The Legation is therefore instructing you to refuse to concede the right of your Japanese colleague to oppose any obstacle to the prosecution in the Mixed Court of the Chinese dealing in infringements of a trade-mark to the protection of which the American company is entitled by the Commercial Treaty of 1903. You should accordingly withdraw any objections which you have made to the Chesebrough Company's prosecuting this case against the Chinese dealers.

In forwarding to the Department a copy of the present instruction, the Legation is endorsing your recommendation that an effort be made to bring to the attention of American exporters to this market the practical necessity of registering their trade-marks in Japan as a safeguard against infringements originating there.

SIR: Referring to despatch No. 554 of February 27 last, in which the Legation reported concerning infringements of certain American trade-marks (particularly the Chesebrough Company's Vaseline trade-mark), I have the honor to enclose for the information of the Department further correspondence in reference to the Vaseline case.

From Shanghai's despatch of March 27, No. 427, of which a copy was stated to have been forwarded direct to the Department,¹⁷ the ¹⁷ Not printed.

Legation understood that on the hearing of the case against Yung Chi Hsiang and others the Chinese magistrate of the Mixed Court had concurred in fact in the opinion of the American assessor, but that he was unwilling to join in a judgment of conviction without reference to the higher authorities, in view of the representations which the Japanese Consulate General had made to the Chinese local authorities as well as to our Consulate General. On April 14 last, having been advised by the Consulate General that the special envoy or commissioner of foreign affairs at Shanghai, Mr. Yang Cheng, had directed the magistrate to dismiss the prosecution, the Minister and I called at the Foreign Office and explained to the Minister for Foreign Affairs and his secretary, Dr. Hawking Yen, the facts of the case and the view that such action as was contemplated would not only be detrimental to the rights of the American firm in interest, but would also establish a precedent under which the rights and duties even of Chinese subjects in respect to the use of trade-marks in China would be subjected to the test not of Chinese law alone but also of the law of any country whose nationals might register in their home trade-mark offices the marks already registered in China and entitled to Chinese protection. The Minister for Foreign Affairs seemed fully appreciative of the fact that the result of such action would be to oust China from a certain measure of its jurisdiction over its own nationals, and he promised to consult with the other interested Ministries with a view to the issuance of instructions to the Shanghai authorities to remove any obstacle to the rendering of a decision by the Mixed Court. Mr. Lou has subsequently informed me that such instructions were in fact issued, in spite of the fact that the Japanese Legation has made formal written protest against the rendering of a decision in the case by the Mixed Court. There appears, however, to have been some misunderstanding by the Chinese authorities at Shanghai, either as to their instructions or as to the wishes of our Consulate General; for as late as June 24, in reply to an inquiry as to the cause of the delay in the decision, Dr. Yen informed me that the commissioner at Shanghai had reported that the case was held in abeyance at the wish of the Consulate General, which was awaiting further instructions from the Legation.

When at last the case was set for decision, on the 17th instant, it appeared that during the period of delay the Mixed Court magistrate had been dissuaded from the opinion which he had theretofore shared with the American assessors, and declared himself in favor of dismissing the case on the ground that the fact of infringement must first be established in a Japanese court. As soon as possible after receiving the report to that effect in the Consulate General's telegram of July 17, 4 p. m., I wrote Dr. Yen a personal note informing him of this development in the case, and requested him to bring the matter to the attention of Mr. Lou. Considering the views which the Minister for Foreign Affairs has expressed on this subject, I am in hopes that he will at once take steps to counteract the interference of the Japanese authorities which stands in the way of a judgment on the merits of the case. Should no such action be taken, I propose, on receiving from the Consulate General at Shanghai a further report as to the attitude of the magistrate and of the commissioner for Foreign Affairs, to enter a formal protest against the action of a court of Chinese jurisdiction in denying to an American firm the remedies to which they are entitled under Chinese laws for the protection of their treaty rights in the use of their trade-mark in China.

EXCELLENCY: Referring to the conversation of Wednesday last in which I laid before your excellency certain considerations in regard to the prosecution in the Mixed Court at Shanghai of a certain Chinese dealing in a product bearing an infringement of the vaseline trade-mark which is the property of an American company, I have the honor to enclose herewith for your consideration a memorandum setting forth the essential facts in the case.

MEMORANDUM.

The trade-mark Vaseline, the property of the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, an American corporation, was registered for use in China at the registration office maintained by the Maritime Customs at Shanghai, in August of 1908; it was again similarly registered in July 1913, and in the following month a proclamation for its protection was duly issued by the proper Chinese authorities as contemplated by Article 9 of the Sino-American Commercial Treaty of 1903.

The American company was thus entitled under the treaty to the protection of the Vaseline trade-mark against all persons under Chinese jurisdiction and was particularly entitled to seek in the Chinese courts proper civil or penal redress for any infringements of its property right in that trade-mark by persons under Chinese jurisdiction, whether by original imitations of that trade-mark, or by dealing in such imitations wherever originating. In the absence of any evidence that the registration by the American company was invalid because of fraud, there thus accrued to the Chesebrough Company an absolute right to protection arising out of the obligations of the Chinese Government and infeasible by the action of third parties whether of American, Chinese or other nationality.

In February of the present year the Chesebrough Company brought to the attention of the American Consulate General in Shanghai the fact that certain imitations of its products, of Japanese manufacture, were being sold in China under its trade-mark by certain native firms; and it indicated its intention of prosecuting in the Mixed Court the Chinese dealers guilty of infringing its trade-mark by the sale of imitations in violation of Chinese law. It is understood that objection was made by the Japanese Consulate General at Shanghai to the prosecution in the Chinese court of cases involving an industrial property right which might prove to have become associated with the Japanese products in question by virtue of the registration of the Vaseline trade-mark by the Japanese manufacturers in the registration offices at Tokyo. Under instructions from the Government of the United States, however, the Legation advised the American company, through the Consulate General at Shanghai, that it considered the Mixed Court competent to try persons under Chinese jurisdiction for offenses against Chinese law, and that it could perceive no ground on which third parties could deprive American citizens of their recourse to Chinese judicial agencies for the purpose of vindicating the rights accruing to them from the obligations undertaken by the Chinese Government under the treaty with the United States.

The Chesebrough Company accordingly instituted criminal action in the Mixed Court against Kuang Sung Chiang, demanding that the accused be fined, that their stock of the infringing product be confiscated, and that they be permanently enjoined from dealing in such products falsely bearing the Vaseline trade-mark. The case came to trial about the middle of March but the decision has hitherto been reserved.

The Legation is now informed by the American Consul General at Shanghai that the special commissioner for foreign affairs at that port has received instructions to dismiss this case.

On the 14th instant the American Minister laid before his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs the view that the dismissal of this case would not only deprive the American owners of the trade-mark of the rights granted them by Chinese law in pursuance of the Treaty of 1903, but would also establish a precedent under which the rights and duties even of Chinese subjects in respect to the use of trade-marks in China would be subjected to the test not of Chinese law alone but of the law of any country whose nationals might register in their home trade-mark offices the marks already registered in China and entitled to Chinese protection.

The American Legation accordingly hopes that the Chinese Government will see its way to withdraw any obstacle which may have been interposed to the vindication of the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company's rights in a court of Chinese jurisdiction.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, June 16, 1915.

SIR: The Legation has received the despatch No. 503 of the 9th instant, in which you transmit for its information a memorandum by the assessor dealing with the conclusions arrived at by the Mixed Court in the case of Connell Brothers against Hsu Ho Ching, in the matter of infringement of the Eagle Brand trade-mark. If this memorandum is correctly understood, its purport is that the Mixed Court handed down no decision in the case but confined itself to a recommendation that the principle at issue should be referred to the respective representatives in Peking of the interested parties—American, German and Chinese.

Should this understanding of the action taken by the Mixed Court prove correct, the Legation fears that it may have established a precedent exceedingly dangerous to the trade-mark rights of Americans in China. From the instructions that have been sent you in reference to the Vaseline cases, to which the present case should be assimilated, as indicated in the Legation's telegraphic despatch of June 4, 2 p. m., it is to be inferred that it is the view of our Government that the judicial protection of American trade-marks in China against the infringement or dealing in infringements by Chinese vendors is an absolute treaty obligation undertaken by the Chinese Government, which cannot be suffered to be questioned or made subject to the veto of the Chinese executive authorities, and in which the consular or diplomatic representatives of a third power can have no locus standi by reason of the fact that the infringements originated in their country. In that view of the case, "the representatives in Peking of the interested parties," have no competence whatsoever to intervene in the judicial proceedings; and the inclusion in that category of the representatives of German interests begs the question that the nationals of a third country can obtain, by registration of an American trade-mark in their home registration offices, a right to intervene and to obstruct the Chinese Government's fulfillment of its treaty obligations to the American Government.

The Legation has accordingly telegraphed you that the case should be treated as a judicial matter not subject to review by any executive authorities—particularly by the representatives of German interests—and that the Consulate General should therefore use all proper endeavors to bring about the decision of the case by the Mixed Court.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 7, 1915.

SIR: In continuation of despatch No. 695 of July 20 last, with which the Legation forwarded for the information of the Department certain correspondence in regard to the infringement of the Vaseline trade-mark, I now have the honor to enclose copies of further correspondence on this subject.

I regret that, by reason of the necessity of despatching the pouch in time to catch the S. S. Manchuria, I must forward this correspondence without awaiting the fuller report on the case which is being sent by Consul Gauss. I must therefore confine myself at this time to such comment as is necessary to explain the recent developments of the case, reserving for the future such conclusions and recommendations as I anticipate it will be necessary to bring to the attention of the Department.

In the phase of the case which was reported in my No. 695 of July 20, the efforts of Mr. Gauss were primarily directed towards disabusing the minds of the special commissioner for foreign affairs, and the magistrate of the Mixed Court of an impression which they seemed to have derived during the period before Mr. Gauss assumed charge of the Consulate General in early July, that the matter was one on which the American Government had no decided views and to which it attached no importance. The efforts of the Legation were similarly directed towards impressing upon the Foreign Office a realization of the fundamental importance and significance of the case, alike from the viewpoint of American trade-mark rights under the treaties and from that of the Chinese Government as involving a new encroachment upon its sovereignty. As indicated in my previous despatch, the Minister of Foreign Affairs received these representations with apparently complete and sympathetic appreciation of the issues involved, and repeatedly gave satisfactory assurances in reply to my various requests that the Shanghai authorities be instructed in the sense of the views which he apparently shared with the Legation. In making these requests, I endeavored to make it plain that the Legation assumed no right to influence the decision of the Mixed Court on the merits of the case, but desired and insisted solely that no other outside influence should be permitted to cause the court to renounce its obligation to give justice to the American complainants as against persons under its jurisdiction violating Chinese law as established in accordance with our treaty rights. These representations were apparently so successful that on August 11 Dr. Hawklings L. Yen, his secretary, took occasion to inform me that on the previous day the Minister for Foreign Affairs had telegraphed through the special commissioner for foreign affairs at Shanghai the specific and categorical instruction that the Mixed Court should exercise full jurisdiction in the case. It was therefore not surprising, though very gratifying, to receive from the Consulate General at Shanghai the telegram of August 19 reporting that the Mixed Court had given judgment in favor of the American owners of the trade-mark, sustaining the principle of priority as against the Japanese contention that the rights of the American owners in China had been annulled by the action of Japanese manufacturers in registering the mark as their own in Tokyo.

It was, on the other hand, a matter of the keenest disappointment and chagrin to receive the telegram of August 23 in which the Consulate General reported that, after the departure of the American assessor on leave, it had been discovered that the Chinese version of the judgment was radically different, and even contradictory to the English judgment as reported to the Consulate General by the assessor. I took prompt occasion to see the Minister for Foreign Affairs and sought to impress upon him the incompatibility of this Chinese judgment with the instructions which he had sent to Shanghai.

The report from Consul Gauss, under date of August 25, was received on the 28th ultimo. I at once brought the substance of this report to the attention of Dr. Yen, orally, and asked for an appointment to discuss it with the Minister. In the meanwhile, I addressed to the Foreign Office a note under date of the 30th ultimo, upholding the position taken by the Consulate General; namely, that the English text of the judgment, as discussed between the American assessor and the magistrate, and agreed upon between them, and read and recorded by the assessor, should be considered and executed as the authoritative text.

It proved impossible to arrange an appointment with Mr. Lou until the 31st ultimo; he outlined to me a "full report" that he had received from Magistrate Kuan, which made no mention at all of the English judgment, but reported that the judgment as drafted and read and entered by him in Chinese was fully concurred in by the American and Japanese assessors. I reminded Mr. Lou that the Japanese assessor was not sitting in the case and had no locus standi in reference to it; and in regard to the concurrence of our assessor, I pointed out that the magistrate's statement on that point was flatly negatived by the directly contradictory judgment which Mr. Bishop had read and entered on the English charge sheet. The Minister then talked of the unfortunateness of the misunderstanding that had arisen, and said that it would require a great deal of investigation to clear up; and he said he would ask the magistrate to report concerning the English judgment to which he had omitted to make reference in his despatch, and offered to communicate with me further when that supplementary report should have been received. I remarked that the immediate question was whether or not Americans could obtain from a Chinese court the enforcement of their rights under the treaties. Mr. Lou asked what could be done; and I repeated the suggestion contained in my note of the previous day, that the English judgment should be regarded as authoritative, and so executed, the magistrate meanwhile amending his unsigned Chinese version so as to bring it into accord with the English judgment that had in fact been agreed upon. I went on to say that after all it was not for our Government to devise a way out of the difficulty, but simply to hold the Chinese Government to full compliance with our treaty rights by whatever means might be available under the Chinese system; and, in conclusion, I remarked that it was essential to know whether we could count upon Chinese sovereignty to enforce our rights, or whether that sovereignty was disposed to renounce in favor of a foreign government the fulfilment of its obligations towards the United States. I could obtain from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, however, no more definite statement than that he would look into the matter diligently and see what could be done.

The telegram from Consul Gauss under date of the 4th instant, and his despatch No. 583 of the same date report what appears to be the final settlement of the case. I can not but concur in his decision that this final compromise judgment must be accepted as the best result obtainable under the circumstances.

SIR: Until such time, in the next few days, as I am able to obtain a copy of the Chinese text of the judgment of the Mixed Court and a copy of a seven-page protest filed by the Japanese assessor, I quote for your information the English text of the judgment as written on the charge sheet by Assessor Bishop and by him communicated to me this afternoon:

The Court finds that the plaintiff's goods were first used and are therefore entitled to protection. The Court further finds that the goods of the defendant are so similar to those of the plaintiff as to constitute a violation of the rights accorded to the plaintiff by the treaty. The verdict is therefore that the defendants are guilty. The goods of the defendant are to be held by the Court, and the defendants cautioned against the future use of similar articles.

AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
Shanghai, August 25, 1915.

SIR: With reference to my telegram of August 23, I have now the honor to submit for the Legation's consideration a report on the judgment in the case of the Chesebrough Manufacturing Co. vs. Tsang San Daung et al., in the Mixed Court at Shanghai on August 19.

On August 14, Mr. Bishop had an interview with Magistrate Kuan and reported to me that the latter was willing to agree to the judgment as desired by this Consulate General and that Thursday, August 19, had been set for the date of delivering such judgment.

On Wednesday, August 18, while at a reception at the Austro-Hungarian Consulate General, Magistrate Kuan mentioned to Vice Consul Perkins that this case was coming up on the following day and that he had a compromise judgment to propose of which he requested that Mr. Bishop be informed. Something interfered to interrupt this conversation, but Mr. Perkins informed me of it promptly and the following morning I saw Mr. Bishop, informed him that Magistrate Kuan had spoken of having a compromise judgment and that he should be careful not to agree to any judgment that did not fully lay down the principle of priority of use, et cetera, for which we had been contending.

On Thursday evening Mr. Bishop came into my office from the Court and reported that he had finally succeeded in having the judgment rendered; that the judgment as delivered supported the principle of priority of use; and he indicated that the Chinese text of the judgment had gone even so far as to say that the priority had been established by twenty years use on the market.

Mr. Bishop reported that at the protest of the Japanese assessor the goods of the defendant which it had originally been agreed to "confiscate" had been "held for the consideration of the court" which might be said to be practically equivalent since no disposition of them could be made without our consent. He also said that as this case was a criminal one, the magistrate had held that an injunction could not properly issue, but that he had agreed instead to a warning.

I instructed Mr. Bishop to obtain copies of the English and Chinese texts of the judgment, for transmission to the Legation and the Department, and also a copy of the written Japanese protest which I understood had been put in.

On Friday afternoon, I asked Mr. Bishop whether he had yet obtained the judgment from the Mixed Court, as I had requested. He replied that he had the English text, which he handed to me and to Attorney Davies and said that the Chinese text and the copy of the Japanese protest were being sent to him by the court.

On Saturday noon there was handed to me a letter from Magistrate Kuan to Mr. Bishop with attached copy of the Chinese text of the judgment of the court which was evidently in direct contradiction of the judgment as reported to me by Mr. Bishop.

Mr. Bishop had left for Japan on vacation early Saturday morning, so I could not consult him on the matter.

If the Chinese text of the judgment is permitted to stand, serious harm will have been done to the American contention of principle in these cases.

I have, therefore, instructed Vice Consul Perkins, who is resuming his duties as assessor during the absence of Mr. Bishop, to write to the magistrate protesting against the Chinese text of the judgment as not representing the real judgment which, apparently, from the endorsement of the assessor on the charge sheet, had been agreed upon by him with the magistrate.

The attorney for the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company will consider the advisability of immediately bringing a similar action against other Chinese.

Judgment of the Mixed Court in Chesebrough Manufacturing Co. v. Yung Kee Chiang et al. for infringement of trade-mark.

After questioning, it has been clearly shown by the plaintiff that this kind of vaseline has been in the Shanghai market for over 20 years, and it is alleged that the goods which the defendants have been selling were bought from the Osaka Japanese merchant, Sung Peng Tz'u Lang, and imported to Shanghai.

As to whether these goods are an infringement of the trade-mark of the plaintiff, this question belongs to the Japanese courts for an authoritative decision.

Inasmuch as the defendant's goods now held in the court somewhat resemble the plaintiff's mark, the stock is to be detained for examination and consideration.

The present case being a criminal action, this court does not deem it fit to grant the application of the plaintiff for an injunction against the sale of the defendant's goods.

Should the plaintiff file any further suits against the defendants, we will institute further inquiries and deal with the case according to its merits.

The defendants are hereby released and the case finished.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Peking, August 30, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: I have on several occasions had the honor to discuss with your excellency the principle of jurisdiction involved in the case, recently pending in the Mixed Court at Shanghai, in which an American firm, the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, was prosecuting certain Chinese citizens, Messrs. Yung Kee Chiang et al., for knowingly passing off an imitation of the Vaseline trade-mark belonging to the American company and entitled, under the terms of Article IX of the Treaty of Commerce concluded between the American and Chinese Governments in 1903, to the protection of the Chinese Government to the full extent of Chinese jurisdiction. Your excellency will recall that I have had occasion to urge, and to note your concurrence in the view, that the present case admits of no legal locus standi in favor of third parties of other nationality, inasmuch as it concerns only the treaty obligation of Chinese sovereignty to protect American trade-mark rights from abuse by persons subject to that sovereignty, whether by direct infringement or by giving currency to such infringements originating elsewhere.

This Legation has now received from the American Consulate General at Shanghai a report to the effect that on August 19 the judgment in this case, as agreed upon by the magistrate and the American assessor, was delivered in favor of the American plaintiffs, and was noted in English upon the charge sheet by the American assessor in the following terms:

Judgment. Chesebrough Manufacturing Co. v. Yung Kee Chiang et al.

The Court finds that the plaintiff's goods were first used and are therefore entitled to protection. The Court further finds that the goods of the defendant are so similar to those of the plaintiff as to constitute a violation of the rights accorded to the plaintiff by the treaty. The verdict therefore is that the defendants are guilty. The goods of the defendant are to be held by the court, and the defendants cautioned against the future use of similar articles.

It is with the utmost chagrin, however, that the Legation has learned that the judgment which the magistrate entered upon the Chinese charge sheet is essentially different from that upon which he had agreed with the American assessor and in which he acquiesced when it was read by the assessor as the final decision in the case, and gave judgment in the following terms in favor of the defendants on the ground that the fact of infringement must be determined, even as between American and Chinese citizens, by a Japanese court:

[Translation from the Chinese text.]

Judgment of the Mixed Court in Chesebrough Manufacturing Co. vs. Yung Kee Chiang et al. for infringement of trade-mark.

After questioning, it has been clearly shown by the plaintiff that this kind of vaseline has been in the Shanghai market for over twenty years, and it is alleged that the goods which the defendants have been selling were bought from the Osaka Japanese merchant, Sung Peng Tzu Lang, and imported to Shanghai.

As to whether these goods are an infringement of the trade-mark of the plaintiff, this question belongs to the Japanese courts for authoritative decision.

Inasmuch as the defendant's goods now held in the court somewhat resemble the plaintiff's mark, the stock is to be detained for examination and consideration.

The present case being a criminal action, this court does not deem it fit to grant the application of the plaintiff for an injunction against the sale of the defendant's goods.

Should the plaintiff file any further suits against the defendants we will institute further inquiries and deal with the case according to its merits.

The defendants are hereby released and the case finished.

Dated the 19th day of the 8th moon, 4th year of the Chinese Republic.

Your excellency will not fail to note that between the English judgment agreed upon between the magistrate and the assessor, and entered by the latter upon the English charge sheet, and the Chinese version put forth by Magistrate Kuan, there is a discrepancy not merely accidental but fundamental: whereas the judgment agreed upon gives the decision in favor of the plaintiff in recognition of the rights and obligations of Chinese sovereignty for the purpose of jurisdiction in such cases, the Chinese version of it acquits the defendants on the ground that the obligations of the Chinese Government to citizens of the United States under the terms of the Treaty of 1903 are subject to the determination of courts of Japanese jurisdiction.

Such a decision, even if regularly rendered and valid, could scarcely be accepted by my Government as consonant with its treaty rights; and the refusal of a Chinese court to take jurisdiction for the protection of American treaty rights against abuse by citizens of China cannot but be regarded as a denial of justice.

It is the fact, however, as admitted by Magistrate Kuan in an interview with American Vice Consul Perkins, that the Chinese version of the judgment in this case is not the actual judgment of the Mixed Court, inasmuch as it does not accord with the understanding reached between the magistrate and the assessor, and does not bear the signature of the assessor or the seal of the Court. The Legation therefore fully approves the contention set forth by Mr. Perkins, acting as American assessor, in a communication addressed to Magistrate Kuan on the 24th instant in the following terms:

STR: By your letter of August 19 you transmit to this office a Chinese text which you say is the decision rendered after consultation in the above case.

I have the honor to point out that this Chinese version is directly opposed to the English version of the judgment of the Court as it was read in open court, in your presence and with your evident sanction and approval, by the American Assessor, Bishop, who sat in the case.

The judgment of the Court as read by Mr. Bishop appears in his handwriting on the English charge sheet.

The Chinese text submitted by you is distinctly opposed to all principles of right and justice.

Furthermore it has not been sealed by the Court nor signed by the Assessor. It is, therefore, not to be considered as authentic.

That the American Assessor did not agree to such judgment but arrived at an entirely different agreement with the Court would appear from his endorsement made at the time on the English charge sheet.

I am accordingly instructed to inform you that the endorsement of the Assessor on the charge sheet, having been read in open court as the judgment of the Court in the case, in your hearing and with your apparent approval and consent, will be considered by this Consulate General as the binding judgment of the Court.

I am [etc.]

M. F. PERKINS,
American Assessor.

In accordance with this view, I have the honor to request that your excellency may be so good as to take such action as may prove feasible in order to assure that the actual judgment of the Mixed Court, as read and entered on the English charge sheet by the assessor in the case, may be recognized as effective, and duly executed in spite of the contradiction inherent in the garbled Chinese version thereof.

In making this request, I beg to reserve for eventual consideration such action as the Government of the United States may deem to be necessary in the event of a denial of justice to its nationals, as also such representations as it may seem fit to make in reference to the conduct of Magistrate Kuan.

I avail [etc.]

AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
Shanghai, September 4, 1915.

Mr. Gauss reports that after a prolonged discussion the magistrate has omitted from the Chinese text in the Vaseline case the sentence in regard to the fact of infringement being a matter for determination by the Japanese courts; and that Magistrate Kuan and Assessor Bishop have signed the English and Chinese judgments, the two texts to be considered as representing the opinion of the court, save for the fact that the sentence "verdict of guilty" has been deleted from the English text; this was a concession to the magistrate, in order to induce action to break the persistent deadlock, it being considered that the fact of the defendant's guilt appears from the sense of the judgments.

It seemed desirable to accept the settlement above outlined, in view of the weakness of the excuse of misunderstanding made by the assessor.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 22, 1915.

SIR: In further reference to the case arising out of the sale by Chinese dealers of a Japanese infringement of the Vaseline trade-mark, I have the honor to transmit for the information of the Department, copies of further dispatches¹⁷ from the Consulate General at Shanghai which indicate the final settlement arrived at in the case.

The judgment in this case, releasing the defendants but detaining, under circumstances which are tantamount to confiscation, the stock of goods bearing the infringing trade-mark, is not wholly unsatisfactory, inasmuch as it implies a recognition of the trade-mark rights of the American owners, and of the jurisdiction of the Chinese court in enforcing those rights as against Chinese dealers in the infringement. The judgment is unsatisfactory, however, in that it leaves those principles to inference, and cannot but appear inconclusive by reason of that fact and of the further fact that no definite penalty was imposed upon the defendants, nor was there even a direct statement of their guilt. In order to obtain a more conclusive judgment on the question at issue, I have taken occasion to suggest to Consul Gauss that he discuss with the attorneys for the American owners of this trade-mark the feasibility of their instituting new criminal proceedings against other dealers in the infringement, or (preferably) of seeking in the Mixed Court a civil injunction restraining the defendants in the present criminal case from further dealing in the infringement.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs has not yet replied to my note of August 30 last, although his secretary some days ago advised the Chinese Secretary of the Legation that a copy of the compromise judgment, as signed on September 4, had been received by the Ministry, and would shortly be communicated to the Legation in reply to that note.

I propose, upon receiving such explanations as the Foreign Office may offer in regard to the fundamental discrepancy between the English and Chinese versions of the judgment, as pointed out to it in my note of the 30th ultimo, to emphasize the fact that the Chinese version originally recorded by Magistrate Kuan was categorically opposed to the instructions which the Minister for Foreign Affairs personally promised me to send him, and which Dr. Yen told me explicitly, on the 11th ultimo, had been telegraphed to Magistrate Kuan, to the effect that the Mixed Court should exercise full jurisdiction in the case.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Peking, September 30, 1915.

SIR: In continuation of dispatch No. 761, of the 22d instant, I have the honor to submit for the information of the Department a translation of the note¹⁷ in which the Foreign Office, replying under date of the 22d instant to the Legation's note of August 30, communicated to the Legation the text of that judgment with the comment that it had been discussed with and approved by both the American and Japanese assessors. There is also enclosed a copy of the note¹⁷ by which the Legation on the following day pointed out that the case was one between Americans and Chinese, in which no other nationality was involved, and requesting for its files another statement of the settlement which should not confuse the question at issue by irrelevant references to third parties.

Lest any misunderstanding should arise out of the ambiguous phraseology of the note from the Foreign Office, which seems to imply that the final judgment was signed by the Japanese assessor, I have to report that the Legation has communicated with the Consulate General at Shanghai and has ascertained that such is not the case.

When calling on the Minister for Foreign Affairs yesterday afternoon I took occasion to express to him the unwillingness of the Legation to accept the note of the 22d instant as concluding the matter, in view of its gratuitously confusing the question of jurisdiction involved by setting forth the concurrence of the Japanese assessor—in entire disregard of the contention upon which the Legation has rested the case, and which the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in conversations with me and with the Chargé d'Affaires during my absence, has accepted as being the sole contention compatible with Chinese sovereignty under the existing treaties. In reply, the Minister consented that the Foreign Office note of September 22 and the Legation's reply of the 23d should both be returned, and that this exchange of correspondence should be considered as non avenu.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 26, 1915.

SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of the Legation's despatch No. 695 of July 20, 1915, with its enclosures, relative to the Vaseline and Eagle Brand milk trade-mark cases.

The Department understands that the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, an American corporation, had registered at the appropriate office at Shanghai in pursuance of the provisions of Article 9 of the Treaty of October 8, 1903, the company's trade-mark Vaseline; that imitations, of Japanese manufacture, bearing the company's trade-mark were sold in China by certain Chinese; that criminal proceedings were brought in the Mixed Court at Shanghai against one Kuang Sung Chiang [Yung Kee Chiang?] for the purpose of having him penalized for infringement and enjoined from further dealing in imitation goods bearing the company's trade-mark; and that the Chinese magistrate withheld judgment of conviction on account of representations made by the Japanese Consulate General at Shanghai to the local Chinese authorities, and later declared that the case should be dismissed on the ground that the fact of infringement should first be established in a Japanese court.

It is the opinion of the Department that the Chinese magistrate's view of this case is wholly unwarranted and that if judgment be withheld or the case dismissed in accordance with this view there would be a violation of the treaty obligation of the Chinese Government fully "to protect any citizen, firm or corporation of the United States in the exclusive use" in the Republic of China "of any lawful trade-mark which they have adopted and used or intend to adopt and use, as soon as registered" (Art. IX, Treaty of October 8, 1903), and the company would be deprived of the judicial remedies provided by Article IV of the Treaty of November 17, 1880.

Mr. MacMurray's proposal to protest to the Chinese Government in the event that the magistrate fails to render judgment on the merits of the case is approved, and in communicating the protest to the Foreign Office you are authorized to say that this Government reserves the right to present, in behalf of American citizens or corporations, claims for damages resulting from such denials of justice. It is deemed inadvisable, however, to propose arbitration of such claims at the present time.

SIR: We have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 30th of August regarding the suit brought by an American merchant against a Chinese for dealing in goods bearing a fraudulent trade-mark.

We instructed the customs taoyin of Shanghai to order action to be taken and now have his report stating that the Mixed Court judge, acting with Mr. Bishop, the American Vice Consul, carefully considered the case and both altered the discrepancy found in the texts of the judgment and wrote out a judgment according to what they had agreed upon, which they signed, so closing the case. The taoyin reports having verified the copies.

We have to observe that the Mixed Court magistrate, having secured the approval of Vice Consul Bishop, both have signed the judgment. Therefore the case is definitely disposed of, as we trust you have already been notified by the American Consul General at Shanghai. We now enclose a copy of the judgment for your inspection.

Judgment in the Vaseline trade-mark case: The Chesebrough Manufacturing Company vs. Yung Ch'i Hsiang and others for infringement of trade-mark.

After questioning, it has been clearly shown by the plaintiff that this kind of vaseline has been in the Shanghai market for over twenty years, and it is alleged that the goods which the defendants have been selling were bought from the Osaka Japanese merchant, Sung Pen Chu Tz'u Lang and imported to Shanghai.

Inasmuch as the defendant's goods now held in court bear a mark somewhat resembling that of the plaintiff's, the goods are to be detained for examination and consideration.

The present case being a criminal action, this court does not deem it fit to grant the application of the plaintiff for an injunction against the sale of the defendant's goods.

Should the plaintiff file any further suits against the defendants, we will institute further inquiries and deal with the cases according to their merits.

The defendants are hereby released and the case closed.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THE TREATY OF APRIL 6, 1914, BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND COLOMBIA.¹

File No. 711.21/314a.

The Secretary of State to the Minister of Colombia.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 4, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. MINISTER: The President and I deeply regret the delay that has occurred in the consideration of the treaty between your country and ours. While we feel sure that a majority of the Senate has, at all times, been favorable to the ratification of the treaty, there has been a strong and persistent opposition which has made it impossible for us to move more rapidly than we have. The new Senate, we are convinced, will be more favorable to the ratification of the treaty than the Senate which has just adjourned.

The President has considered for several days the advisability of calling a special session of the Senate, but this Congress had been in session almost continuously since its first assembling, longer than any previous Congress; and, after consideration, he decided that the situation was not such as to make it wise to convene the Senate in extra session at this time. We believe, too, that the sentiment in favor of the treaty will grow as its terms are better understood and that the prospects of ratification will therefore be better if action is delayed.

Please assure your Government that the President has lost none of his interest in the success of the treaty and will press its consideration at the next session. We appreciate the speedy and favorable action taken by your Government and we trust that your people will have patience and await the action of our Senate.

LEGATION OF COLOMBIA,
New York, March 12, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. BRYAN: The delay that unfortunately has occurred in the consideration of the treaty between your country and mine has caused me keen regret also, for I did hope that it would be ratified by the Senate just adjourned. But the circumstances that you mention in your communication of the 4th inst., to which I refer, seem to have been unavoidable.

I have no misgivings as to the final outcome of this important matter, and my faith is strengthened by your conviction that the next Senate will be more favorable to ratification of the treaty.

I cannot believe for one moment that representatives of a nation whose fair dealings are recorded on the pages of history will fail to do justice to Colombia, especially when His Excellency the President and his high-minded Secretary of State have shown so much interest in the success of this treaty, which—if ratified—will renew the good friendship between our countries.

I am transmitting these views to my Government, assuring them at the same time [of] our common faith in the final ratification of the treaty.

Dr. Suárez was much pleased and expressed his appreciation and thanks for your kind attention, of which he would hasten to inform the President.

On the 10th the Minister gave the contents of your letter to the editor of the "Nuevo Tiempo," in which it was published on the 11th.

This caused a most favorable impression as the people were without definite news of the treaty and great anxiety was felt as to its fate in the Senate. While regret was expressed that a special session would not be called, the intentions of the President and yourself and the fact that Colombia could count upon your every effort to obtain favorable action by the Senate, was very satisfactory.

LEGATION OF COLOMBIA,
Washington, April 17, 1915.

SIR: The enemies of the Treaty between Colombia and the United States have fought it, and will go on fighting it, without regard to means however unlawful they may be. Through the press they have published all sorts of falsehoods and calumnies. It is said that Colombia has "associates," thereby suggesting persons with whom she will share the indemnity for the damages suffered by the loss of Panama.

The declaration and statements made by my Government and by this Legation have not been sufficient to destroy such a stupid calumny.

One of the falsehoods that the enemies of the treaty continue to spread is that this agreement of justice and international harmony was shaped in virtue of intrigues and influences of political persons and lawyers who took part in the settlement of the questions. In this particular your excellency's honorable testimony will be of high service to show the truth and I respectfully beseech for it, in order to have a genuine statement in an official note from your excellency that the treaty signed April 6, 1914, between Colombia and the United States was performed without absolutely there having been at work any influence of political personages or lawyers or any other class of people.

The diplomatic antecedents of said treaty began to be prepared with the Root-Cortés Treaty under Mr. Roosevelt's administration, they were continued by Mr. Taft's administration and had their natural and logical complement in the treaty whose approval by the American Senate some people want to prevent at any cost by the use of means contrary to truth and justice.

In the hope that your excellency will be pleased to give me the testimony hereby requested,

Complying with your request for my testimony in this regard, I beg to say that in the negotiating of the treaty the United States was animated by no other motive than to restore the ancient friendship that had existed between the two countries by settling in a friendly, honorably [sic] and just way the differences between them arising out of the events which took place on the Isthmus of Panama in November 1903, and that the United States was in no wise, as all who are conversant with the negotiations are aware, influenced by any outside sources. I have no doubt that the negotiations on the part of Colombia were conducted with the same high motive and I have no reason to believe, and I do not believe, that the Government of Colombia, whose integrity is too well known to be doubted, had any other object or aim. As you correctly state the treaty was negotiated and concluded without "there having been at work any influence of political personages or lawyers or any other class of persons."

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As you are doubtless aware, I have purposely refrained from intruding the grievances of Colombia upon you in all these months of stress and worry during which you have handled the most delicate international situations in a manner worthy of the highest traditions of diplomacy. But the time has come when my Government will no longer permit me to maintain an attitude of expectancy, and I have sent you a brief memorandum from my Government emphasizing the importance which the Republic of Colombia attaches to the prompt ratification of the Treaty of the 6th of April, 1914. Should you deem it expedient, my Government has no objection to its immediate publication.

I need not say, my dear Mr. Secretary, how deeply I trust that the Senate of the United States will approve the treaty entered into at the instance of the United States and already approved by the Colombian Congress.

Twelve years have passed since Panama was taken from Colombia, and for more than three years I have laboured here to arrive at a solution which four of my predecessors had sought in vain. I am unaffectedly anxious over the outcome, more especially as I foresee that in case the treaty fails to receive the approbation of the American Senate, and as a preliminary step to what action my Government may decide upon, the Republic of Colombia will be obliged to withdraw from the Pan American Union as it would no longer be compatible with our national honor to retain membership in a corporation ostensibly created to promote harmony among all the nations of America and capable of existence only on the basis of justice and fair dealing.

We are at a point in history where, more than ever before, the unification of all the interests of our continent is a matter of vital concern to the great Republic of the North whose statesmen—among whom you occupy so distinguished a position by virtue of your high moral and intellectual attainments—cannot fail to see that in union lies the future safety of the New World.

something; and as to ask (pedir) means to beg (rogar) or demand (demandar) in the sense already stated, and to beg (rogar) or demand (demandar) have the same explicative value as the verb to ask (pedir), it is evident from this analysis that the interpretation given by me of the word "request" conforms in every respect with the definitions given it by the Diccionario de la Lengua Castellana, on which I have founded my reply to your excellency's note.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

The Costa Rican Minister has just been here. It seems that his Government feels aggrieved, first, because they construe the emphatic request of our December 18 as a demand, and, second, because it was presented to the President instead of to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs. I have given the Minister a paraphrase of my telegram to you of December 24 [29], and have also given him a memorandum of which the following is a copy:

The Secretary of State, in communicating the above paraphrase to the Minister from Costa Rica, assured him that no offense was intended in the form in which the previous communication was presented. While the American Minister was asked to "approach the President" with the matter, there was no intention of slighting the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the Secretary expressed himself as certain that the Minister to Costa Rica, in carrying out the letter of the request, had no thought of ignoring or giving offense to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs. He feels sure that this explanation will remove any feeling that has been aroused, in view of the desire of both countries to preserve the good will and amity that have so long existed between them. Communications between the Governments ought to be of the most intimate and friendly character and it is the intention of this Government that they shall be. The Secretary expressed regret that there should have been any misunderstanding in regard to the present case or that anything should have been said or done which could in any way cause irritation.

The Minister seems perfectly satisfied with this explanation. It might be well for you to call upon the Minister of Foreign Affairs and explain to him in the sense of this memorandum that in asking you to approach the President we did not mean that you should ignore the Secretary but that you had followed the telegram literally without any intention of slighting him or giving offense. The matter is probably cleared up before this by the communication of our answer of December 24 but I tell you of my conversation with the Minister here so that you may be fully informed as to the facts in the case. Please remove any false impression that may have been made by the language of the original despatch.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 20, 1915.

Chinese Minister reports that President of Cuba has suspended until now Act of Congress of May, 1913, imposing five hundred dollars head tax on Chinese immigrants, but that Cuban Government has now rescinded suspending order and Act now becomes effective. We are informed that the tax will prohibit Chinese immigration and we are asked to use our good offices to secure relaxation of the measure.

Please make inquiry and report situation and whether it is possible to secure any modification in favor of Chinese.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Havana, January 27, 1915.

Referring to the Department's telegram of January 20, Chinese Chargé d'Affaires called on me. He had information of Department's instruction and recognized delicacy and difficulty of my approaching the Cuban Government in the matter. I introduced the subject to the President in a personal and most informal conversation and got from him Government's version. There is conflict about facts. He said that he wished to be as lenient as possible under the law but Chinese had abused concessions and forged certificates. I gave him to understand we wish to help if there was a way to do so and that the Chinese would be pleased if final action were not taken until their Minister comes here in March and presents his credentials. The President seemed somewhat favorable to that suggestion.

SIR: Referring to the memorandum dated January 16, 1915, which you left at the Department of State on January 18, requesting the exercise of the good offices of the Government of the United States with the Government of Cuba toward obtaining a restoration of the order of the President of that Republic dated November 14, 1913, suspending the operation of the law governing the admission of Chinese into Cuba to such extent as to permit the acceptances of certificates issued by the Chinese Legation at Habana as sufficient evidence of the right of Chinese applicants to be admitted to that country and also remitting the head tax of five hundred dollars for each Chinese admitted, I have the honor to enclose herewith paraphrases of telegrams exchanged between the Department and the American Minister at Habana on this subject.

CHINESE LEGATION,
Washington, February 19, 1915.

SIR: Referring to your note of the 28th ultimo, informing me of the assistance given by the American Minister at Havana toward obtaining the restoration of the order of the President of the Republic of Cuba, dated November 14, 1913, regarding the admission of Chinese to that country, I have the honor to inform you that the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires at Havana has been instructed to follow the suggestion made by the American Minister to the President of Cuba as stated in the Minister's telegram to the Department of January 28, 1915, to the effect that final action should be deferred until a later date, which suggestion seemed to meet with the President's favorable consideration.

It has long been the purpose of the Chinese Government to conclude a treaty with the Government of the Republic of Cuba as a basis of future intercourse between the two countries, and I have been authorized by my Government to open negotiations with this end in view. When I was in Cuba in December last for the purpose of delivering my credentials as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic of China to the Republic of Cuba, I fully informed the Cuban Government to that effect. Now while treaty negotiations are pending between the two Governments it would seem inopportune to raise any question at the present time that might cause embarrassment in the negotiations. The American Minister's suggestion points a way out of the difficulty. I take the liberty of asking, therefore, that instructions be given him to cooperate with the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires at Havana to secure the consent of the Cuban Government to allow the question of admission of Chinese into Cuba to remain in statu quo by rescinding the recent order revoking the order of November 14, 1913, above mentioned, until the conclusion of the proposed treaty between China and Cuba.

SIR: The Department encloses a copy of a note dated February 19, 1915, No. 46, from the Chinese Minister in Washington, with reference to the admission of Chinese into the Republic of Cuba.

It appears from the correspondence on this subject that in November, 1913, the President of Cuba suspended the operation of the law passed by the Cuban Congress in May, 1913, imposing a head tax of five hundred dollars upon every Chinese immigrant, irrespective of his occupation. Recently the President of Cuba issued an order rescinding his action in November, 1913.

You are instructed to use your good offices, in cooperation with the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires at Habana, towards securing the consent of the Cuban Government to allow the question of admission of Chinese into Cuba to remain in statu quo pending the conclusion of certain treaty negotiations now under consideration by the Chinese and Cuban Governments, and referred to in the enclosed note. With this end in view you will lend your good offices, in cooperation with the Chinese representative in Habana, towards inducing the Cuban Government to allow the suspending order of November, 1913, to remain in effect pending the conclusion of the proposed treaty between China and Cuba.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Habana, April 12, 1915.

SIR: Referring to the Department's instruction No. 150, of February 27, 1915, directing me to lend my good offices, in cooperation with the Chinese representative in Habana, towards inducing the Cuban Government to hold in abeyance its most recent order in regard to Chinese immigration until the conclusion of the proposed treaty between China and Cuba, I have the honor to report that I found it impracticable to cooperate with the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires because of the change then taking place, the former Chargé just leaving and the new Chargé not yet taking up these matters with me; but that I spoke to the President informally and asked him whether he would prefer me to take the matter up with him in that way, or officially through the Secretary of State. He thought it would better serve to get the fundamental issues brought forward more definitely if I would adopt the latter channel of communication. I therefore wrote the Secretary of State as in the enclosed copy of my note of March 11, to which the enclosed reply has just been received.

It will be observed that the Cuban Government recognizes as the only law governing immigration the order of the American Military Government of 1902.

I invite attention to the last paragraph of Mr. Desvernine's note, in which this Legation is invited to give its views. I feel that on account of the general belief in the Government here of the practice of fraud in Chinese immigration and of the opposition to more Chinese coolies entering the country, there is very little prospect of accomplishing anything without the presence of the Chinese Minister. This Legation, it appears to me, has gone as far as the delicacy of the situation will now permit.

EXCELLENCY: I am instructed by my Government to use the good offices of this Legation towards securing the consent of the Cuban Government to permit the question of the admission of Chinese into Cuba to remain in statu quo pending the conclusion of a treaty between the Government of Cuba and China, negotiations for which the Chinese Minister to the United States and Cuba has been instructed by his Government to open with Cuba. I understand that the Chinese Minister is coming to Habana within a short time in the expectation of arranging said treaty.

The friendly interest of my Government in this question is doubtless intensified by the fact that the first action in the matter of Chinese immigration is attributed to the Governor of Cuba during the American occupation.

It would be a great satisfaction to me if I were able to assist in bringing to a conclusion an understanding on the question of immigration mutually satisfactory to Cuba and China.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Habana, April 7, 1915.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note No. 301, dated the 11th of last month, in which, in the name of your Government, you request my Government's consent to allow the question of the admission of the Chinese into the territory of the Republic to remain in statu quo pending the celebration of a treaty between the Governments of China and Cuba.

With reference to this particular question I would call the attention of your excellency to the fact that the problem of Chinese immigration has had the constant attention of my Government since Military Order No. 155 was issued on May 15, 1902, by which the whole subject of immigration into this country was regulated, sections VII and VIII of which provide that the provisions of the preceding sections shall not be applicable to the Chinese, whose immigration had been prohibited, and while such prohibition should continue the admission of any Chinese coolie into Cuba would be unlawful.

On August 11, 1904, the President of the Republic issued decree No. 237 for the purpose of construing the qualifications of Chinamen excluded under the law.

It was found that the admission of Chinese had become so excessive that the Government was obliged to correct it and issued decree No. 603 on May 19, 1913, in which the quality of a Chinese merchant or student was more exactly construed, these being, outside of the diplomats, their secretaries and servants, the only classes legally permitted to enter Cuba. This decree was to take effect on July 1 of said year, but at the instance of the Chinese merchants its enforcement was postponed by the decree of the 12th of the above-mentioned month and year till the 1st of October following. On June 24, 1914, it was again suspended by decree No. 599 until December 31, 1914, on which date by decision of the Cabinet of Secretaries decree No. 1223 was issued annulling No. 1078 of November 1913. This last decree conferred upon the Chinese Legation in Habana the right of certifying that the applicant for admission is not a coolie, and said applicant being in such case exempted from the bond required by article 5 of decree No. 603, which since January 1 last has been in full force. The bond in question is thus reestablished as originally provided in decree No. 237 issued by President Estrada Palma. The purpose of both decrees is to maintain in full force sections VII and VIII of Military Order No. 155 upon the principles of which they are predicated.

By virtue of the foregoing and of the suggestions contained in your excellency's note, which I am answering herewith, this Department has the honor to state that the status quo is at bottom the legislation on this subject as enacted by the above-mentioned Military Order of 1902 and the subsequent regulations which have been cited above—legislation which will be kept in force as long as demanded by the needs of the country. It affords me pleasure at the same time to express to your excellency our appreciation of your offer of good offices and to state that we would be very glad to know what is the Legation's idea of an arrangement which would be equally satisfactory to the Governments of Cuba and China respectively.

In view of agreement entered into with the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires a decree was issued April 9 last extending to May 31, the time granted by decree of November 31, 1914, for admission into this country of all those Chinese holding certificates issued by the Chinese Legation of Havana prior to date mentioned allowing them to appear in the list of names sent to the Department of State in accordance with the rules established in the decree of December 31, 1914. Treaty Series No. 608.]

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas a Treaty between the United States of America and Denmark looking to the advancement of the cause of general peace was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Washington, on the seventeenth day of April, one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, the original of which Treaty, being in the English and Danish languages, is word for word as follows:

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of Denmark being desirous to strengthen the bonds of amity that bind them together and also to advance the cause of general peace, have resolved to enter into a treaty for that purpose and to that end have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States: The Honorable William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State; and

His Majesty the King of Denmark: Mr. Constantin Brun, His Chamberlain and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties agree that all disputes between them, of every nature whatsoever, which diplomacy shall fail to adjust, shall be submitted for investigation and report to an International Commission, to be constituted in the manner prescribed in the next succeeding article; and they agree not to declare war or begin hostilities during such investigation and report.

ARTICLE II.

The International Commission shall be composed of five members, to be appointed as follows: One member shall be chosen from each country, by the Government thereof; one member shall be chosen by each Government from some third country; the fifth member shall be chosen by common agreement between the two Governments. It is understood that the fifth member of the Commission shall not be a citizen of either country. The expenses of the Commission shall be paid by the two Governments in equal proportion.

The International Commission shall be appointed within four months after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty; and vacancies shall be filled according to the manner of the original appointment.

Unless otherwise agreed between the parties the procedure of the International Commission shall be regulated by the prescriptions contained in the Convention signed at The Hague on October 18, 1907, for the peaceful settlement of international disputes, Chapter III.

ARTICLE III.

In case the High Contracting Parties shall have failed to adjust a dispute by diplomatic methods, they shall at once refer it to the International Commission for investigation and report. The International Commission may, however, act upon its own initiative, and in such case it shall notify both Governments and request their co-operation in the investigation.

The High Contracting Parties agree to furnish the Permanent International Commission with all the means and facilities required for its investigation and report.

The report of the International Commission shall be completed within one year after the date on which it shall declare its investigation to have begun, unless the High Contracting Parties shall extend the time by mutual agreement. The report shall be prepared in triplicate; one copy shall be presented to each Government, and the third retained by the Commission for its files.

ARTICLE IV.

The High Contracting Parties agree that, upon the receipt of the report of the International Commission as provided in Article III, they will immediately endeavor to adjust the dispute directly between them upon the basis of the Commission's findings. The High Contracting Parties, however, reserve the right to act independently on the subject matter of the dispute after the report of the Commission shall have been submitted.

ARTICLE V.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Majesty the King of Denmark.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible. It shall take effect immediately after the exchange of ratifications, and shall continue in force for a period of five years; and it shall thereafter remain in force until twelve months after one of the High Contracting Parties shall have given notice to the other of an intention to terminate it.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty and have affixed thereunto their seals.

Done in duplicate in the English and Danish languages at Washington this 17th day of April, in the year 1914.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN [SEAL.]
C. BRUN [SEAL.]

And whereas the said Treaty has been duly ratified on both parts, and the ratifications of the two governments were exchanged in the City of Washington, on the nineteenth day of January, one thousand nine hundred and fifteen;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twentieth day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth.

President Jiménez is threatened with trouble which may take formidable proportions in the near future. Horacista party for more than a week past has been assailing the Government with blackmailing; and Arias, Minister of War in Jiménez' cabinet, has already made Jiménez pay tribute from his personal resources. Arias now threatens to join forces with the opposition; and this morning he offered his resignation to the President. The reason for resignation of Arias, as given by President Jiménez is, first, that Arias objects to American influence; and, further, that the President refuses Arias a free hand in running the Government according to Arias' standards. President Jiménez finds great difficulty in the situation and asks for Legation's advice and support. He has resisted Arias' demands to control appointments. Jiménez asks further in the present difficulties to delay the reforms sought by us.

The Dominican Government intends to forcibly eject the governor, also the military commandant of Puerto Plata, as both refuse to vacate except upon terms which the Government refuses. The governor of Puerto Plata has censored the Dominican Government's messages sent by French Cable Co. Dominican Government today requested that State Department allow sufficient funds to suppress successfully the threatened resistance. The Dominican Government urges that the trouble is purely local and should be suppressed by its own military forces rather than by American forces. Legation is asked to transmit by consular code Dominican Government's message to its officials of Puerto Plata.

Dominican Government requests thirty thousand for munitions of war and one thousand daily for fifteen days.

I am convinced that should uprising at Puerto Plata be permitted without interference from us it would encourage the belief that the old revolutionary methods could be again employed with impunity. Please instruct.

Answering your February 1, 11 a. m. Agree with you that it is necessary to let insurrectionists know at the very beginning that this Government will support Jiménez and furnish all the force necessary to enable him to maintain order and administer the Government. It is advisable, however, that Santo Domingo officials make the demand, so that our force will support Government, rather than take the initiative. Indications as you report them point to the beginning of another revolution unless immediate action is taken. Please advise Jiménez as follows and report his views with your own recommendations:

As at present informed, we advise that President Jiménez send immediately as many soldiers as his vessels will transport to Puerto Plata. Dominican Minister estimates this number at six hundred and fifty. Have troops land at convenient distance, then have commander of American ship accompany Jiménez's representative when he makes demand for surrender of the offices, American commander to notify the insurgent officials that this Government will support President Jiménez with any force necessary to suppress insurrection. If this does not compel surrender of offices, consult President Jiménez and advise us as to further requirements. We deem it unwise to authorize the thirty thousand dollars and one thousand dollars per day as requested, but will make allowance necessary for proposed expedition and decide on further allowance if above suggestion, when carried out, does not end insurrection.

Answering your February 2, 5 p. m. President Jiménez accepts your advice as to plan of campaign against an insurrection in Puerto Plata. Equipment of forces begins at once. President Jiménez states that the Dominican Government cannot entertain proposal from the insurrectionary leaders to turn over government to a commission on condition that Feliu and Pegero receive salaries for time when both were in rebellion against Bordas Government. Aside from the humiliation of the proposal to disregard the existing Government the insurrectionary leaders would set aside the rule laid down by the Department, namely: No money for revolutionists. Please give the instructions for the allowance necessary to equip expedition as initial expenses will be several thousand dollars. Political plot under way here to impeach President Jiménez on the charge that he failed to act in carrying out congressional resolution to remove Johnston and on further charges of frivolous nature made against Velásquez, Minister of Fomento; both charges aimed at American influence here. Constitution provides that majority of both Houses can impeach President. Upon such vote President ipso facto loses executive power and election of new president must follow by Congress. Vidal and Arias supporting plot, with the Horacistas assisting. This plan offers malcontents a way to upset the Government without resorting to revolution. Arias is the candidate for the presidency, supported by members of Legislature who desire to shake off restrictions on looting of Government funds. Several secret meetings have already been held and certain members of Cabinet are said to sympathize with the project. I recommend that politicians be given to understand that Jiménez cannot be impeached for good faith with us.

Dominican Government advises that the Horacista party is secretly preparing to start a revolution immediately. The pretext will be a failure of Dominican Government to keep its pledges to hold a constitutional convention for reforms. Dominican Government requests immediate advance $30,000 for preparations. Dominican Government anxious to suppress expected revolution themselves without calling for open assistance of the United States until assistance is absolutely necessary. Munitions of war should be purchased and money expended under observation of the United States. I believe the Department should take positive action at the outset of any actual break to convince revolutionists American Government will itself suppress revolts. Opposition do not believe American Government will interfere notwithstanding all assertions by us. This crisis has solidified Dominican Cabinet for the present.

Answering your April 18, 11 p. m. It is not wise to authorize the expenditure of additional money for military purposes. Unless this Government assists the Jiménez Government the insurrection would be likely to spread, reviving the old conditions of lawlessness. As our Government must furnish assistance it would be better to do so at once and thus save the Jiménez Government needless expense.

You will therefore advise President Jiménez to demand the resignation of Arias and any other members of the Cabinet who are conspiring with the insurrectionists. Also advise him to arrest these conspirators at once if they attempt to interfere with the orderly administration of his Government. You will see these revolution leaders also and notify them that this Government will hold them personally responsible for any attempt which they make to interfere with the Government whether that attempt is made by them directly or through their supporters. This Government meant what it said when it declared that it would tolerate no more insurrections in Santo Domingo and it will furnish whatever force may be necessary to put down insurrections and to punish those guilty of exciting or supporting insurrections.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, July 7, 1915—6 p. m.

President Jiménez informed me today that former Governor Feliu of Puerto Plata with a force of men, number unknown, has gone to the bush against the Government in that province; that the opposition is prepared for revolution in other provinces and other outbreaks likely; that the Government can overcome Puerto Plata uprising but Government forces limited; that he has no proof against Arias but that unless he changes his activities the President will dismiss him soon; that if impeachment of the President is attempted, as in such event would be likely by Congress which is controlled by Arias and opposition, he will take matters into his own hands; that Arias is the cause of the trouble with Congress over budget and greatest stumbling block of the Government.

As to Arias I ventured to repeat assurances of the Department heretofore given (your January 12, 8 p. m., April 9, 7 p. m., and April 20, 2 p. m.) but it was evident that the President desires reassurance from the Department in view of hinted assumption of dictatorship in case of attempted impeachment. It might be suggested to the President that Congress constitutionally expires on July 27 and if he is on the point of being voted out of office before that time he could then assume dictatorship. There is no just cause for impeachment.

Believe the United States should be prepared to land expeditionary force the moment it becomes evident Government cannot promptly put down uprising or that it is spreading. The President made no request in the premises.

has recently returned from the United States and is in Puerto Plata. Vidal thought to have left New York City on the Iroquois but if not his activities in New York should be investigated with a view to arrest. The Government has made a considerable number of arrests here and in Puerto Plata of conspirators against the public peace. Enforced enlistment for the army also rigorously proceeding. The Dominican gunboat Independencia has left for northern points. Censorship on cables and telegraph.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, July 14, 1915—8 a. m.

Referring to my cable of July 9, 8 a. m. Situation not improved. Government taking energetic measures and shipping munitions and men to various points. Macoris armed bands had been committing depredations. President Jiménez and some of the opposition leaders insist people of this country want peace and that disorderly element alone taking advantage of situation. Arrests and enforced enlistments are causing departure to the bush here and elsewhere and wholesale arrests are considered necessary. Significant thing is that already heavy inroads on funds appropriated for other purposes have been made for war operations. President seems determined at all costs to compel order. Feliu not yet decisively defeated.

President intimated yesterday afternoon without any suggestion from me that presence of American war ship here and one in Puerto Plata would be of great assistance to the Dominican Government, but distinctly stated that he made no request. In view of the source of suggestion believe this form of aid to Government should be first tried and at once.

Inform President that as Department will enforce policy of above telegram with strictness, his assumption of dictatorship not desirable unless impeached, as suggested in your July 7, 6 p. m.

Protest strongly against diversion of funds as contrary to the convention, and state that the Department will be very slow to accept political conditions as reasons for future advances to cover these diversions.

Also point out that this Government has given every evidence of its interest in Santo Domingo's orderly development and of its willingness to assist the Jiménez Government by advice, by concessions, by advances of funds. That this Government is greatly distressed at spread of present disorder which may now require this Government to fulfill the assurance given under the Department's instruction of April 9, 7 p. m. and therefore hopes that the representations to be made by you under this instruction to the opposition leaders will enable the President to prevail upon the political sense of the opposition in order to establish quiet.

Vidal was arrested on his return here and is a prisoner. I also despatched a telegram to Horacio Vasquez at Moca and sent similar telegram to each American consular representative in this country with instructions to bring telegram to attention of proper persons and anticipating Vasquez telegram might be inaccurately published by recipient I ventured to give a copy to press myself as an open letter to leader of opposition. Telegram is a combination of excerpts from "Wilson plan", your April 9, 7 p. m., and your July 16, 4 p. m. Publicity has the approval of Government. President now acquiesces in your views as to dictatorship. Government has not revealed to me definite plan as to Arias but with arrival recently of Enrique Jiménez some change in the Ministry imminent after adjournment of Congress.

Have made both verbal and written protest against diversion of funds. Administration of army and republican guard inefficient and wasteful but impossible to determine yet the ability of the Government to cope with situation as its seriousness not yet fully gauged nor effect yet known carrying out your instructions will have. Important leaders have announced stand against revolution and situation improved Puerto Plata; more serious in East. No doubt however of magnitude and wastefulness of suppressive effort already made and of considerable disorganization of Government finances which will result even if disorders abate.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, July 22, 1915.

SIR: Referring to your cable dated July 16, 4 p. m., and to my reply dated July 22, 5 p. m., in reference to the disorders that have occurred and the efforts of the Government to suppress them, I have the honor to inclose herein copy of the open letter I telegraphed to Horacio Vásquez at Moca, to all the American Consuls and Consular Agents in this country, and which I gave to the press.

I also inclose copy of a note I directed to the Foreign Office under to-day's date, embodying the protest I was instructed to make in reference to diversion of funds. I ventured to embody in this note portions also of the instructions contained in your January 12, 8 p. m. and April 20, 2 p. m., which had not previously been conveyed in writing and which I considered had an intimate connection with the protest against the diversion of funds to put down the disorders. Of course even without directly calling attention to the desire of the United States to itself suppress disorders which would otherwise require extra-legal expenditures by the Dominican Government, the remedy of that Government, in the face of our protest, should be obvious to them. * * *

The protest against the diversion of funds should have a good effect in another direction in that, if the Government, as a great many well-informed people believe, because of the extraordinary opportunities for graft in the largely increased expenditures of money for rations and supplies, presented by disturbances in scattered portions of the country, has encouraged, or provoked the outbreaks by arrests and threatened arrests, to escape which many join outlaw bands, that Government will now, in view of the protest by the United States, hesitate to continue in its course and take measures to see that officials in the provinces, who among others would profit by it, are also restrained.

The Jiménez Government since the return of the commission from Washington appears to be in a somewhat more yielding mood than heretofore and the present time, in view of the concessions obtained by the Government from Washington, would appear to be a good time to urge reforms, in case intervention shall not prove to be necessary during the present disturbances.

As you are aware, under the Wilson Plan the United States has pledged its word to the world as the nearest friend of the Dominican Republic to support the Government elected by the people and to insist that revolutionary movements cease and that all subsequent changes in the Government of the Republic be effected by the peaceful processes provided in the Dominican Constitution.

President Jiménez having last October been chosen President by the people under the Wilson Plan, he will receive from the United States any assistance necessary to compel respect for his administration.

The United States is greatly distressed at the spread of the present disorders which may now require that Government to fulfill the assurances given to the world and to the Dominican people; and I have been instructed by the United States Government to call to the attention of the leaders of the opposition not only the foregoing, but also that, in the event of the necessary landing of troops to enforce order and respect for the choice of the people as President, those leaders who are or may be actually engaged in, or are secretly encouraging the disorders will be held personally responsible by the United States.

EXCELLENCY: Confirming the representations I had the honor to make verbally to your excellency and to the President in our interview of the 19th inst., in compliance with instructions from my Government received by telegram on that day, I desire now, in writing, to again protest strongly against any diversion of funds under the law, whether already made or about to be made by your excellency's Government, that is to say, by spending in excess of the amount provided by law for the expenses of the Executive, or of the Departments of Interior and of War and Navy, and by drawing for the excess upon the amounts provided by law for other departments, as being an increase of the public debt in violation of the Convention of 1907.

The Department of State of the United States will be very slow to accept political conditions as reasons for future advances to cover these diversions.

I am also instructed to point out that the American Government has given every evidence of its interest in the Dominican Republic's orderly development and of its willingness to assist the present Government by advice, by concessions made to it and by advances of funds before they were strictly due; and this Legation has also indicated under previous instructions received by it that President Jiménez may count on the full support of the United States Government in putting down any revolution brought against his Government and that as long as the American Government must furnish aid it would be better to save the Dominican Government needless expense by giving to it the assistance of all necessary forces to put down any revolution or any conspiracy aimed at impeding the orderly administration of that Government.

It will be seen that he practically admits the right of revolution for violation of the law by the Government and infringement of personal rights, neither of which things were done by this Government until after the disorders started and an incipient revolution had to be dealt with.

I also enclose copy and translation of the reply to my note of protest against the diversion of funds, copy of which I enclosed in the despatch referred to above. I have reason to believe that the note was written for internal political purposes alone as the President has never dissented from verbal suggestions of armed aid either before or since the note was written, and he stated to me yesterday that, in spite of the demands of the opposition press that he make a vigorous reply to the hint of intervention in my telegram to Vásquez, he would not do so.

As for the statement in the Dominican Government's note that the budget has not been exceeded, it is in contradiction of what the President himself had said to me on two occasions, and at best is technically true only; for example, the entire credit provided in the budget for the fiscal year from July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916, may not yet have been exceeded.

MR. CHARGÉ: I acknowledge receipt of your polite note No. 167 of yesterday's date confirming the representations which you made to His Excellency the President of the Republic in my presence on the afternoon of the 19th instant.

I have been specially charged by the President of the Republic to express to you that the Dominican Government without going outside the limits of the present budget has succeeded in meeting the expenses necessary for the reestablishment of public order, disturbed a few days ago.

The interest which your Government has in aiding in the maintenance of order in this Republic might well consist merely in appraising the efficiency of the rapid measures taken for its financial rehabilitation which, if they had not been taken, would have resulted in an increase of the evils, necessitating much greater economic sacrifices and leaving in a state of complete failure the plan of organization under which gradually the different branches of the public service were becoming more efficient.

I am also charged to express to you that the Dominican Government believes that its forces are sufficient to reestablish public order each time it is disturbed, and that it therefore has no need of the spontaneous aid to that end offered by the American Government, thus avoiding in addition the sacrifice of American lives in our international conflicts.

Moreover, the Dominican Government thinks that any such measures might have the effect of causing national sentiment, urged on from interested sources, to convert the assistance into a situation of hostility before the American forces.

Perez Perdomo, able Minister of Finance, resigned today and Minister for Foreign Affairs not yet chosen. Old age and feeble health of President Jiménez and dislike of burdens of office together with intrigues for the presidency of both Arias and Velasquez within and of Vásquez without the Government makes conditions uncertain and fraught with danger of situation arising here in case of death or resignation of Jiménez somewhat similar to Haitian upon the death of President there. Think it would be advisable to have constantly within short sailing distance from here a United States vessel and ample force of marines or perhaps Porto Rican regiment ready for immediate service.

While conditions with respect to armed uprisings are improving political and financial conditions are far from satisfactory. Perdomo resignation decided loss to honest government. Velasquez still in interior treating with the revolutionist Felio.

Principal rebel chiefs Macoris, among them Calcaño who destroyed records of and looted customhouse La Romana, have made terms with Government whereby, so I am informed reliably, they are promised road building contracts and appointment of district rural police whose salaries under the law are paid by same sugar estates whom chiefs had robbed. They are also given personal guaranties and Calcaño himself is now at liberty in this city, also I am reliably informed that followers of these chiefs continue under arms in the interior Macoris. Besides the disorders Sanchez, an important leader in this province, envious of terms granted Macoris leaders has repudiated his peace agreement and started trouble at Bani.

Enrique Jiménez who negotiated terms reported to have frankly admitted to sugar estates inability of Government to cope with situation and to have suggested paying half of cost of new rural guard under American which suggestion repelled by sugar estates owing probable failure of Government to pay its half.

There is still no prospect of important military move except perhaps against Feliu. Developments of last few days reveal inconceivably weak and temporizing policy. Doubtful if, even with arrival today of munitions, anything will be accomplished towards restoring order. The Government's finances are badly disorganized, its forces as inefficient as ever, and its policy an inducement to take the field.

Present condition of affairs warrants serious consideration of our rights in the light of following documents: Memorandum of Department for Fort Commission dated August 10, 1914,³ published here known as "Wilson Plan"; policies of Department embodied in Legation's telegram to Vasquez, published here; and formal protest regarding diversion of funds, contained in note to Foreign Office (see my despatch No. 189 dated July 22). In any event I cannot emphasize too strongly my conviction that we should make no further advances or concessions of any kind to the Dominican Government under the convention, except on terms (see my despatch No. 200 dated August 26⁴) in spite of fact that our firmness might result in decided increase of present revolutionary movement. Under present conditions, money would be wasted without accomplishing any permanent improvement.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, November 30, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to call to your attention the practice of the Dominican Government in transporting to Porto Rico not only undesirable revolutionists, but also men charged with common crimes.

I particularly refer to the bandits who attacked revenue cutter No. 3 some months ago, shooting and very seriously wounding the Captain, J. F. Neilsen. The names of these bandits are Emiliano Rojas, Julio Bonetti and Ramón Batista. The Government assured Mr. Johnson that these men would not be given "safe conduct", but would be prosecuted, yet, in spite of this assurance, "safe conducts" were given to all three, and they were shipped to Porto Rico.

Juan Calcaño, who attacked and looted the customhouse at La Romana, was also sent to Porto Rico with a "safe conduct."

I have brought this matter to the attention of the Government, but no action has been taken as yet to punish these men for the crimes they have committed. A revolution was in progress at the time, and these men, although operating in the name of the revolution, were in reality nothing more than marauding bandits.

I suggest that the Porto Rican authorities keep a strict watch on the men in question so that they could be easily found, if any action is taken here looking to their punishment.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 9, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your consideration a memorandum in which attention is most respectfully called to certain political and financial conditions now existing in the Dominican Republic and suggesting the adoption of some reforms which, if put into operation, will aid materially in securing permanent peace and prosperity in that country.

It is earnestly hoped that you may find it convenient to call at the Department at an early date in order that this important matter may be discussed with you personally. An expression from you as to the date when a conference with you can be arranged will be appreciated.

I am [etc.]

W. J. BRYAN.

[Inclosure.]

The Department of State to the Dominican Legation.

MEMORANDUM.

The United States desires to assist the Dominican Republic in putting certain needed reforms into operation to insure the peace and prosperity of that country.

First. A decree placing the collection of the internal revenues under the receivership. At the present time the internal revenue is hypothecated for many years in advance, and brings in no revenue to the Dominican Government. It is estimated that from this source the Government should receive approximately two thousand dollars daily, whereas at the present time it is receiving nothing. This Department is informed that revenue stamps can be redeemed at the present time for about ten cents on the dollar, and it is strongly recommended that all hypothecated stamps should be immediately redeemed at the best rate possible.

Second. Official recognition of Charles M. Johnson [Johnston] as comptroller of finances for the Dominican Republic, whose duties shall be: (a) to prepare a budget for the Dominican Republic based upon his knowledge of income and probable expenditures; this budget to be rigidly adhered to; (b) to approve and countersign all payments made by the Dominican Government, it being understood that no payment shall be valid unless countersigned by the comptroller. This reform is really essential if the finances of the Dominican Republic are to be rescued from the deplorable condition in which they are at present. It is estimated that under the present administration of Dominican finances the debt of the country is increasing not less than one thousand dollars daily. It may be of interest in this connection to state that the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, in a communication bearing date of January 4, 1915, reports that, carrying out instructions of this Department of September 15, 1914, October 23, 1914, and December 14, 1914, directing that the general receiver of Dominican customs pay to the Dominican Government the sum of five thousand dollars daily from and including September 1, 1914, and an additional sum of two thousand dollars daily for the period of October 23-31, 1914, inclusive, there have been paid to the Dominican Government sums in excess of the customs revenues properly accruing to that Government as follows:

For September, 1914-----	$114, 194. 17
For October, 1914-----	97, 267. 98
For November, 1914 (estimated)-----	58, 147. 19
For December, 1914 (estimated)-----	75, 000. 00
Total (estimated)-----	344, 609. 34

The Bureau of Insular Affairs further states that to reimburse the general receiver of Dominican Customs for the excess amounts paid by him to the Dominican Government as aforesaid it was necessary, or it will be necessary, to draw upon the convention fund with the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, and such withdrawals from the convention fund, amounting to $344,609.34, are treated "as advances to the Dominican Government to be paid at a future date." He further suggests the advisability of asking for a ratification by the Dominican Congress of the advances from the convention fund that have been made solely upon Executive request.

Unless Mr. Johnson [Johnston], the recently appointed comptroller of finance, is given such authority as he must have in order to successfully carry on the work for which he has been selected, it will be useless to continue him in the service, and without the supervision of such an officer it is very evident that the finances of the Dominican Republic will continue to drift into an even more deplorable condition.

Third. As the Dominican Government is threatened by no external enemies, the presence of a Dominican army (which is always in an inefficient state of discipline) is regarded as an incentive to disaffected political leaders to start internal revolutions. As the expenditures of the military establishment amount to nearly fifty per cent. of the total budget, it is most desirable that President Jiménes issue a decree largely reducing the expense of the army, so that education and public works may receive their just proportion of the public revenues. The United States will be pleased to give President Jiménes any assistance he may desire in reorganizing the police force of the Republic, or in the creation of a constabulary, to take the place of the army and rural guard as now constituted.

Fourth. Amending the contract of Mr. A. J. Collett. It is necessary that clauses III and V of the present contract be amended in order that this official may have proper authority to render the most efficient service to the Dominican Government.

Proposed amendment to Clause III:

The Director General of Public Works shall be removed only for cause, satisfactory proof of which shall be first submitted by the Dominican Government to the Department of State at Washington.

Proposed amendment to Clause V:

The Director shall be given authority to employ and discharge his subordinates, it being understood that in recommending appointees to the Dominican Government preference shall be given to citizens of the Dominican Republic who may be qualified and competent in every way to properly discharge the duties which may be assigned them by the Director General of Public Works.

Fifth. Wireless and land telegraph and telephone systems. It is earnestly recommended that these systems be placed under the control of the Director General of Public Works. This change is recommended in order that the three services may be under one head, which means their most economical administration.

Superintendent of the wireless and land telegraph and telephone systems. The United States Navy Department recommends that these systems be placed under the direction of an American manager. Mr. Roscoe Kent, an experienced operator, has been selected for this work, and is ready to enter upon his duties when a suitable contract can be agreed upon. The compensation of this officer is to be three hundred dollars, gold, a month, and two hundred dollars traveling expenses, each way, from his home in the United States to Santo Domingo. He is to be allowed thirty days' leave of absence each year, exclusive of the time occupied in traveling from Santo Domingo to New York City and return.

In order to insure an efficient service, it is necessary that the superintendent of the wireless and land telegraph and telephone systems shall be free to employ and discharge all subordinates; and that he shall be removed from office by the Dominican Government before the expiration of his contract only for proven incompetency or for malfeasance in office, and it is extremely desirable that in the event of his discharge written charges should be filed at the American Legation for transmission to the Department of State for its consideration, it being understood that the appointee shall not be removed by the Dominican Government without the approval of the Department of State.

This contract, as well as the one with Mr. Collett, the Director General of Public Works, should be for three years, renewable, however, with the consent of both parties.

Dominican Government has attempted removal of deputy receivers long in service. Baxter has accepted one, but not others on ground that the political appointments to service without his approval will destroy efficiency. Baxter asks me to lay before State Department wisdom of taking receivership out of politics at once and that Dominican Government recognize civil service rules by receiver for Dominican employees; that no appointments be made in customs service without the consent of receiver, such stand being justified by convention and existing agreement with Jiménes Government. I agree with Baxter's position. Financial expert's statement shows a present deficit from September to January of nearly half a million dollars.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 12, 1915—6 p. m.

After conference with the Dominican Minister here we ask you to make the following suggestion to President Jiménes: Internal revenue stamps given away or sold at a big discount will, if used, very much reduce the revenue from internal revenue sources. We advise, therefore, that the President issue a proclamation declaring the old stamps invalid and non-receivable, at the same time offering to redeem outstanding stamps at the price paid for them plus legal rate of interest from date of purchase. This will give internal revenue at once and from the money thus received the old stamps can be redeemed, the burden of proof being upon those presenting stamps for redemption to show the amount actually paid for them.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 15, 1915—2 p. m.

Your January 11. Department approves representations made to President regarding deputy receivers.

Deputy receivers will not of course be allowed to take part in politics. It is advisable to consult Government in regard to new appointments, but faithful and competent deputies should not be discharged on purely partisan grounds. The application of the civil service to the deputy receivers should be recommended to the Government. If, according to convention and existing agreement of Jiménez Government the civil service rules are recognized, the Government will be expected to conform to them.

In view of deficit, impress upon President Jiménez necessity for,

First: Reduction of expenses;

Second: Collection of all internal revenues provided for by law; and

Third: Increase in internal revenue by invalidating of outstanding stamps and selection of new sources of revenue.

The Government should be put upon a self supporting basis at once. It will be moving toward bankruptcy as long as expenditures exceed income.

No. 9.]

DOMINICAN LEGATION,
Washington, January 20, 1915.

MR. SECRETARY: In compliance with my Government's instructions and in confirmation of what I said to Mr. Bingham at our interview on the 15th of this month, I have the honor to submit to your high consideration the views and purposes of the Dominican Government in the matter of appointing customs officers of the Republic.

President Jiménez understands, and I take pleasure in so saying, that the efficiency of that service must find its main foundation in the most perfect harmony between the Government and the receivership. The Government for its part will not be lacking in interest toward attaining that end.

It is meet that we recall that the high customs officials possess a dual character; as interventors they represent the Government that appoints them; as receivers appointed by the receivership, they represent the receiver general. That dual representative character can only be made possible by agreement between those who grant it.

Other employees in each customhouse do not represent the receivership and, consequently, they are appointed by the President of the Dominican Republic who takes into account not only the political interests of which he is the representative and leader, but also the efficiency of the customs service. It may be that, in the past three years, owing to the baneful conditions that prevailed in the Republic and the successive changes of Provisional Governments, appointments were made that were not satisfactory, but those conditions no longer prevail and we have to deal with a settled Government that will devote its earnest attention to the organization of all the public services and will not stint its aid to the receiver general for the greater efficiency of the customs service.

In that sense and in evidence of its decided interest in restoring and maintaining a good organization of the customs service, the Government of President Jiménez will not force upon the receivership employees that are objectionable or who are obviously incompetent for the posts to which they may be nominated, but the Government cannot acquiesce in and feels it its duty to oppose the attitude recently assumed by Mr. Baxter, receiver general of customs, who for and by himself conferred upon himself powers that never were wielded by his predecessors, because they belong to the Dominican Government alone. President Jiménez, for the sake of cooperating in the establishment of an able customs department, will give his best attention to such recommendations as may be offered to him by the receiver general, but he will not renounce or relinquish his right to appoint the employees. That right has never been disputed but has always been recognized (see page 23 of the Sixth Annual Report of October 20, 1913, of Walker W. Vick) by the predecessors of Mr. Baxter, who recently declined to recognize it not only by rejecting appointments made by the President of the Republic, but also in issuing regulations by which he establishes, in two paragraphs, civil service rules in the Dominican customs.

The Dominican Government does not dispute the desirability of the system which the receiver general wants to establish but holds that the system will be good when it is valid and not before, that is to say when it is set up by the juridical person and that is competent to do so, and the Government alone is so competent.

Neither can the Government yield to the desire expressed by Mr. Baxter that political considerations shall have no weight in the appointment of customs officers. It is very well for Mr. Baxter to insist upon efficient men being nominated, but it is President Jiménez' duty to reward his friends with offices, and the mere circumstance that an officer has been in the customs service several years does not afford sufficient reason for his retention in office, especially in the case of a person belonging to the opposition who fought President Jiménez at the last elections and whose place may be given to an honorable and competent person.

It is proper to remark that the attitude assumed by the receiver general is not only embarrassing to the administration of President Jiménez but is also openly antagonistic to the purposes of the Department of State. The aid and support that have been repeatedly offered amount to nothing if the officers of the Government of the United States at Santo Domingo strive to obstruct the Government.

The Government of President Jiménez would be very much gratified if Mr. Baxter were instructed through the proper channel not to exceed his powers and to try in that way to preserve the harmony that must exist between the Government and the receivership and if he were directed at the same time to withdraw his civil service regulations which the Government may establish in accord with him.

No. 128.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 15, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note No. 9, dated January 20, 1915, regarding appointments in the service of the receivership of the Dominican Republic.

In this connection your attention is invited to section 1 of the American-Dominican Convention of 1907, as follows:

That the President of the United States shall appoint a General Receiver of Dominican customs, who, with such Assistant Receivers and other employees of the Receivership as shall be appointed by the President of the United States in his discretion, shall collect all the customs duties accruing at the several customhouses of the Dominican Republic * * *.

This clearly gives to the President of the United States authority to appoint the persons who shall collect all the customs accruing at the several customhouses of the Dominican Republic. It is understood that this construction of section 1 has been uniformly adhered to, though in practice, as will appear, the full authority has not been exercised.

⁶ Not printed.

The first difference in construing this article of the convention arose in 1907 and, taking advantage of the presence in the United States of the general receiver and of the Secretary of Finance of the Dominican Republic, Señor Velasquez, a conference was held in Secretary Root's office. A provisional agreement was reached relative to the appointment of subordinate officials under the receivership at the several customhouses in the Republic. The then Secretary of State agreed that the Dominican Government might name the collectors of customs, provided such appointments were agreeable to the general receiver, with the further proviso that no one of them should continue in the service if the general receiver notified the Government that such a person was not acceptable to the receivership.

This agreement was, from the point of view of the receivership, not satisfactory nor was it indeed ever carried out. The general receiver in April, 1909, complained of failure to carry out this agreement; again, in January, 1910, attention was called to the difficulty of having removed an exceedingly incompetent collector at the port of Santo Domingo. Again, in September, 1910, the general receiver recommended certain administrative reforms affecting the customs personnel, which, as a whole, was reported to be incompetent, the bulk of the appointees being reported to be political favorites, and many of them undesirable.

A similar condition was reported in May of 1911, with reference particularly to the port of Puerto Plata. The change of the Dominican administration at the close of the year 1911 was followed by a controversy with the general receiver over personnel, which continued throughout that administration, and in July, 1912, it was reported that there had been 67 separations from the customs service for various causes, representing 44% of the entire personnel and that competent employees had been dismissed in order to make room for political appointees without experience or training. It is fair to state that many of the removals were made on the ground that the employee was disloyal to the Government, and the fact that such disloyalty existed cannot be questioned.

The difficulty has been, therefore, that the Dominican Government has not been sufficiently interested in the efficiency of the personnel and has desired and has made changes without reference to the efficiency of the service. On the other hand the Dominican personnel has not at all times been loyal to the Government.

In the administration of the customs service it has been the desire of the President to obtain:

First, efficiency in collecting the revenues;

Second, economy in the administration;

Third, the use of the maximum of Dominican employees with a minimum of American employees compatible with the first two objects.

In order to meet the wishes of the Dominican Government, and without waiving the obvious construction of section 1 of the convention, or the power to put it in full effect, if necessary, the Secretary of State in 1907 held that the Dominican Government might name the Dominican customs employees, provided said appointments were agreeable to the general receiver and that no such employee should continue in the service if the general receiver notified the Government that such a person was not acceptable to the receivership.

This was acceptable to the Dominican Minister to the United States and to Señor Velasquez, at that time Minister of Finance of the Dominican Government. This agreement was frequently ignored by the Dominican Government.

Desiring, however, to treat the Government of President Jiménez with every confidence it is believed that the following should be agreed upon:

First: Persons in the receivership employ should be removed only for disloyalty to the administration or for causes affecting their efficiency. The Government may allege either cause, the general receiver only a cause affecting efficiency. If, after hearing, the Government is satisfied of the disloyalty of the employee, it may remove him. If, after hearing, the general receiver is satisfied that an employee is not competent or is unfitted, the Government will, on recommendation of the general receiver, remove him at once.

Second: The Government will make no appointment to fill a vacancy until the general receiver certifies to the competency and fitness of the candidate.

Third: After July 1, 1915, no new appointment will be made in the service to higher positions when the general receiver certifies that there are fully qualified persons occupying positions in a lower grade, and the vacancy will be filled by the appointment of one of the persons in the lower grades certified by the general receiver to be qualified for promotion.

Fourth: The location, assignment and transfers of persons in the customs service will be exclusively controlled by the general receiver.

It is desired to impress on the Dominican Government that the cost of collecting the revenue has been and will be materially increased by incompetent personnel; that the number of American and supervisory employees could be materially decreased if the Dominican Government would permit a continuity of service so that the Dominican employees could become competent to perform their duties; that, in fact, if by appointing an incompetent person it becomes necessary for the general receiver to employ a competent person to overlook his work, it would really be an economy for the Dominican Government to pay the incompetent person and keep him away from the customs service altogether.

It should be made clear that while the President of the United States has a right under the convention to appoint the entire personnel engaged in collecting customs duties at the several customs houses of the Republic, it was not his desire so to do. It was the desire of this Government simply that the general receiver should, with reference to the appointment of the Dominican personnel, be given the same authority and confidence which would be given an official of the Dominican Government performing this duty; and this authority and confidence required that no appointment be made without the certification of the general receiver of their competency, and that removals of incompetent or dishonest persons be promptly made, on the recommendation of the general receiver. On the other hand, the general receiver not being so thoroughly acquainted with local conditions, the question of loyalty to the Government of employees should be passed on by the Dominican Government.

The foregoing is submitted with the belief that if observed in good faith by the general receiver and the Dominican Government, most of the friction which has arisen heretofore will be avoided; that in a very short time the personnel of the service will be such that there will be no temptation on the part of one or the other party to the agreement to make any change therein not in the interest of efficiency of the service.

The general receiver has shown his desire to avoid any question of favoritism by providing a system of examinations which would determine the competency of persons to be appointed. The Government, then, might nominate persons whose competency would be subsequently passed on or might make appointments from a list to be furnished by the general receiver, of persons whose competency had previously been passed on.

If the foregoing recommendation of an agreement is carried out, it should be understood that it in no way cancels section 1 of the convention, which might be put in full force if at any time in the future it should become necessary to protect the customs service; that the agreement is intended to show that it is the desire of the United States to give to the Dominican Government as full control over the Dominican personnel in the customs service as it would have in an efficient customs service in which this Government had no intervention and to retain to the general receiver only that power which is customary in a well organized service and without which efficiency is impossible.

ON THE APPOINTMENT OF CUSTOMS SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

[Translation.]

Respecting the customs service employees, the Dominican Government understands that the treaty now existing between the Dominican Republic and the United States of America does not restrict, cannot restrict nor has it at any time restricted the power which the President of the Dominican Republic holds, by virtue of the Constitution and other laws of the country, to appoint customs inspectors and other employees of the same service, independently of the general receiver and of the employees of the receivership, whose appointments are by the treaty made by the President of the United States.

This point was definitely settled by the Dominican Congress in approving the Dominican-American Convention of February 8, 1907, and understood in the same sense by the American Government, as shown and confirmed in the letter of the Honorable Secretary of State, Mr. Root, to the Dominican Minister in Washington, dated May 24, 1907.⁷

Upon assuming his office, Mr. W. E. Pulliam, the first general receiver of customs, appointed by virtue of the convention of February 8, 1907, believed, as at present Mr. Baxter believes, that he could object to the appointment of inspectors and other employees nominated by the President of the Dominican Republic, and after much discussion on the subject in Santo Domingo, he returned to the United States with the intention of clearing up the question, taking advantage of the presence in Washington of the then Secretary of the Treasury, Señor Velazquez. In the office of Mr. Root and jointly with him, the matter was discussed by Mr. Pulliam, and the judgment of the Dominican Government was again confirmed in this respect, in the sense that being to the best interests of the Dominican Government to obtain and assure the best assistance in its customs service, both parties, the Government itself as well as the general receivership, should endeavor to maintain the most complete harmony among the employees, and if at any time it should happen that any one of the employees appointed by the Dominican Government should prove incompetent for the post to which he has been nominated the general receiver may, through the Secretary of the Treasury, request the Dominican Government to remove such employee and obtain such removal and in a like manner the Dominican Government may request of the general receivership the removal of any of its employees who may prove incompetent and a detriment to the service.

This decision has been maintained firmly, with no thought of modifying it in any respect until now, since the arrival of Mr. Baxter in Santo Domingo, the decision given by the Honorable Secretary Root having obtained on the two or three occasions which had to do with the removal of employees. That this judgment always has prevailed is confirmed by the fact that nothing to the contrary is to be found in the files of the offices of either country from the beginning of the carrying out of the treaty up to the present date, but certain reports in its favor are to be found from the general receivership.

The Dominican Government being interested in the establishment of an excellent customs service in the country has not attempted at any time, in its desire to effect certain removals from the service, to exchange a competent personnel for an incompetent, but merely to replace competent employees, openly disaffected and hostile to the present administration by those others of absolute honesty and competency who are friendly, or not hostile to the administration. As the predominant interest of both Governments is to obtain an efficient customs service, the Dominican Government, in whose name the commission is authorized to speak, can not see why there should be any difference between its judgment and that of the American Government in this respect.

In the Dominican Republic up to the present date, there is no law whatsoever establishing the civil service; but in all pertaining to the employees of the customs service there has always been a tendency on the part of the Dominican administration to effect as few changes as possible, which has resulted in the fact that to-day the greater portion of the customs employees in active service have been many years so engaged.

The Dominican Government sincerely hopes that the judgment which has always prevailed respecting the appointment of customs employees, may be maintained.

[Memorandum.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 8, 1915.

The receivership of customs in the Dominican Republic was established in the interests of the Republic. The general receiver should be guided in all his acts solely by the interests of the Dominican Republic and should conduct himself as would a faithful official of that Government. He should be consulted by the Government in all acts that affect the receivership or the customs service just as it would a Dominican official of the administration having its confidence. He will conduct himself towards the Dominican Government in a similar manner.

The appointment of the personnel of the receivership is a function of the President of the United States. It is understood, however, that the general receiver will not employ in the receivership Dominican citizens, or foreigners resident in the country not Americans who have political ties in the country, without first advising the Dominican Government of the names of the persons to be employed and, if the Government alleges reasons satisfactory to the general receiver why such persons should not be employed, he will be guided thereby, because it is not deemed proper that the general receiver should have in his employ Dominican citizens or certain foreigners to whom the Government has well-founded opposition.

In a similar manner, while the appointment of American citizens in the receivership is left entirely to the President of the United States, or to a person designated by him, the Dominican Government is not deprived of the right of reporting misconduct of such employees, and allegations of misconduct will be carefully examined in the first place by the general receiver and, on appeal, by the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, and if the charges are well founded and justify such action, such employees will be removed from the service.

[Memorandum.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 8, 1915.

After a careful consideration of the objections submitted by the Dominican Commission to the status of the financial expert, who at the suggestion of His Excellency, the Provisional President of the Dominican Republic, General José Bordas Valdés, was designated by the President of the United States under article 1 of the convention of February 8, 1907, the President of the United States has decided to avoid any question of the legality and propriety of the appointment of a financial expert for the Dominican Government or in the assignment of duties to such an expert which would in any way conflict with the Constitution or laws of the Dominican Republic.

But having in mind that the execution of the convention of 1907 requires special vigilance, and the United States Government desiring to aid sincerely the Dominican Government in the solution of its economic and financial problems, as the Government of the Dominican Republic loyally recognizes, the President of the United States has decided to assign certain additional duties to the general receiver of Dominican customs and his assistants named under article

1 of the convention of February 8, 1907, with the object of assuring strict compliance with the Treaty, and at the same time that the Dominican Government may obtain the benefits of a sincere assistance of the Government of the United States without contravening the laws of the Dominican Republic.

In addition to such duties as may have heretofore been assigned to the general receiver, he will be directed to devote, personally or through his assistants named under article 1 of the convention of 1907, special attention to those clauses of the convention of 1907 having to do with "the retirement and extinction of certain concessions and harbor monopolies which are a burden and hindrance to the commerce of the country" and to the allotment of the unexpended balance of the proceeds of the bond sale authorized by that convention "to the construction of certain railroads and bridges and other public improvements necessary to the industrial development of the country" and to the observation required by that clause of the convention which provided that "until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States."

In order that he may effectively assist in preventing the unnecessary increase of the public debt of the Dominican Republic and be in a position to advise the United States Government of the necessity of increasing such debt, in case the necessity should arise, and to advise the United States Government as to the many financial questions which are constantly arising in the performance of the duty imposed on the United States Government by the convention of 1907, there will be assigned to him the following specific duties in the performance of which he will require the good will and cooperation of certain executive officials of the Dominican Government:

A. He will advise the proper Dominican officials in the settlement of all the outstanding indebtedness of the Republic;

B. He will make to the Dominican Government recommendations looking to the improvement of the system of public accountability;

C. He will make to the Dominican Government suggestions of equitable means of increasing the public revenues and of so adjusting the public disbursements thereto that deficits may be avoided;

D. He will inquire into the validity of any and all claims which may be presented against the Dominican Government and will advise the officials of the Government in advance of his views in the premises;

E. He will request information from time to time, through the Secretary of Finance and Commerce as to the public accounts of the Dominican Government and of the departments and bureaus thereof, in order that the Government of the United States may be assured that the public debt is not increasing, and will advise the Government of errors and discrepancies therein and will make recommendations looking to their adjustment or to the protection of the Government against irregularities.

The President hopes that the Dominican Government, in case the suggestions and recommendations of the general receiver are not adopted, will advise the United States Government of the reasons why they are not adopted. Such statements will be taken into consideration by the United States Government in determining its action on financial questions arising under the American-Dominican Convention of 1907.

MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the two documents which embody the points in the questions discussed at the Department of State by the Special Commissioners of the Dominican Government that have been agreed upon. The commissioners direct me to give notice of their most sincere thanks.

They also direct me again to reiterate in the name of the commission, the views maintained by it at the conferences in regard to the customs officials. According to the said views the appointment of the said officials is vested by the Constitution in the President of the Dominican Republic. That power was freed from any mistaken appreciation by the declarations made by the Congress of the Dominican Republic upon its approving the Dominico-American Convention of 1907, as well as by those also made on that occasion in the name of the American Government by the Honorable Elihu Root then Secretary of State and by the facts unbroken since the said treaty of 1907 went into operation until now.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington June 26, 1915—5 p. m.

The President has sent to this Department the telegram of President Jiménez in which the latter suggests that Charles M. Johnston be prevented from assuming any office in the Dominican Republic.

Please call upon President Jiménez and discreetly but forcefully call his attention to the fact that Mr. Johnston went to Santo Domingo with the understanding that he was to remain for three years while performing duties clearly agreed upon between the two Governments. If President Jiménez will specifically set forth his complaints against Charles M. Johnston the Government of the United States will carefully examine allegations of misconduct and act after reaching its conclusions.

It was recently agreed between the Dominican Commission and this Government that Mr. Johnston's employment as financial expert should terminate June 30, 1915, and that July 1, 1915, he should become an employee of the receivership. Mr. Johnston left here June 17 and carries five important letters of instructions which you should read. This Government desires to give full consideration to the wishes of the President of the Dominican Republic but is loath to consider the removal of any employee under the receivership, at least not until a full hearing has been allowed, as the appointment of the personnel of the receivership is a function of the President of the United States.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, July 6, 1915—11 a. m.

Dominican Congress recently passed budget carrying appropriations $300,000 in excess of reliable estimates of revenues and containing other provisions obnoxious to the Dominican Government. The President under the Constitution, chapter 7, returned the bill with amendments, among others, reducing expenditures $300,000. Congress rejected the amendments but not by two-thirds vote required by the Constitution to effect passage freed from President's amendments. The President has sent to Congress a special message urging reconsideration in view, among other things, of international obligations not to increase the public debt but he has no hopes of favorable action. This would leave old budget in force which carries $5,000,000 which is $600,000 more than estimated revenues. Minister of Finance however says that he can continue to operate under that budget in such a manner as to keep obligations of the Government within the revenues and that old budget would be better than the new budget unamended.

Old budget continued in force by necessary decree, owing to failure of Congress, prior to adjournment, either to pass pending budget over Presidential amendments to certain items or to accept the amendments. Plan is, however, to operate by not availing of certain appropriations and by leaving unfilled certain offices with the result that total of items for which Government should become indebted will not exceed estimated income. This is plan under which same budget operated under Johnston, financial expert part of last fiscal year. Recommendations of the American Legation in regard to Dominican financial affairs.

FINANCIAL CONDITIONS IN THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC PRIOR TO JULY 7, 1915.

During the six months preceding July 7, 1915, being the first six months of the administration of President Jiménez, the adjustment of the current obligations of the Government to its revenues showed a steady improvement until, during the last two months of the period, a small balance remained at the end of the month with which to pay a portion of the current excess obligations of the previous months. Nothing however was done during this period to improve the defective administration organization of the army and navy and the Republican Guard, under the departments of War and Navy and Interior, respectively, in anticipation of the constantly expected revolution, even though with the aid of only current appropriations and revenues the organization could have been made sufficiently effective to quell any disturbances that have yet arisen with despatch and at small extraordinary expense. During this period also occurred the elimination of the American "Financial Expert" from control of the expenditures and the substitution of the General Receiver of Customs in an advisory capacity.

The budget in force for the fiscal year July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916, is the same as that for the two preceding fiscal years and carries appropriations about $600,000 in excess of estimated revenues. However, the plan of operation under which favorable results were obtained under this budget last year during the last few months is to be followed again and that plan is to not avail of certain appropriations and to not fill certain offices so that the total obligations of the Government shall not be greater than its estimated revenues. This plan is excellent if adhered to. A promise was obtained from Mr. Perdomo, the late Minister of Finance, now spoken of as Dominican Minister in Washington, to publish a list of the items suppressed, in order to give some measure of certainty and binding force to the plan of operation, and I shall also now try to obtain publication of the list from the new Minister of Finance when appointed, and transmit a copy to the Department. Two copies of the budget now in force were transmitted to the Department in the Legation's No. 327, dated August 19, 1913.⁶

CONDITIONS SINCE JULY 7, 1915, AND AT THE PRESENT TIME.

On July 7, 1915, an armed revolutionary movement broke out, led by Ex-Governor Quirico Feliu, of Puerto Plata, and he still remains at large with a varying number of followers, requiring the Government to keep on a war footing until he is captured or terms are made with him. Efforts are now being directed to the latter end. Several bodies of self-styled revolutionists, who have become little better than brigands, also are at large. Since the beginning of the present uprising it is calculated that the Government has exceeded its ordinary expenditures on its two armed forces by over $40,000. There are in the budget items totaling $24,000 to which by a stretch of the letter of the law, in some cases, these war expenditures could be charged. This leaves up to the present moment at least $16,000 expended for which there is no appropriation. Not only this amount but also the $24,000 credit in the budget has to come out of the current revenues, leaving the corresponding amount on the civil side of the budget unpaid until the expended sum of $40,000 is accumulated month by month out of the current revenues. In order to repay the entire amount these would have to exceed the estimates by $16,000.

The situation is then at the present time that the Government has ample ready money in its current revenues with which to meet war expenses. These are paid in cash and as many of the civil obligations are left delinquent or unpaid as may be necessary. Salaries of civil employees in this city are now being paid for the first half of the month of July and are therefore one and a half months behind. Salaries in the interior are somewhat further behind.

The present and past method of payment of war expenses is conducive to graft and therefore to only half-hearted attempts, on the part of those entrusted with the task, at putting an end to the condition of affairs requiring the Government to be on a war footing. Rations money, for example, is paid direct to the respective Ministers or local commanders and transmitted from hand to hand to its final destination, the individual soldier or republican guard, as the case may be. That tremendous leakage and inefficiency results from the present system has been admitted to me by the new Minister of Interior and Police, Mr. Enrique Jiménez, late Dominican Minister at Washington, who has some excellent plans of reform, but who is now and has been since his arrival here engaged solely in the task of interviewing bandit and revolutionary leaders with the object of inducing them to lay down their arms, which many of them have done but whether from patriotic or other motives I do not know.

The only resources of the Government, in view of the provisions of the Convention, are of course its current revenues, until it is allowed to borrow money by the United States.

⁶ Not printed.

PROPOSED REMEDIES: 1, FOR THE LIQUIDATION OF DIVERSIONS OF FUNDS ALREADY MADE; AND 2, FOR THE REESTABLISHMENT OF THE FINANCES OF THE DOMINICAN GOVERNMENT UPON A SOUND BASIS, ONCE ORDER IS SECURED.

1. If the revenues exceed the estimates and the finances are honestly administered, both of which things there is some ground for expecting, the diversions could be made good within a reasonable time. If however the diversions cannot be replaced out of revenues in excess of estimates, the remedy would seem to be to add the debt to the total now outstanding and unprovided for and to begin again the attempt to keep current obligations within current resources. In order to lay the basis for requesting retrenchment, which might be thought to be the obvious remedy, it would be necessary to demonstrate to the Dominican Government, 1, that diversions were in fact made in excess of budgets credits; and, 2, that the diversions, or excess of credits, could not in all probability be recovered from revenue in excess of the estimates. "One" could not be demonstrated to an unwilling government without the right to examine all Government books and accounts; and "two" is not capable of proof as it is a question of opinion upon which experts might differ.

2. The reestablishment of the finances of the Dominican Government upon a sound basis could only be brought about, it would seem, through American control, 1, of the total of the annual appropriations; 2, of the expenditure of the revenues; and, 3, of the administration and direction of the national armed forces. "One" and "two" are fairly obvious. "Three" is added because in no other way can public order be assured, without which liability of the Government for money damages incurred as the result of disorders, and of course not ordinarily provided for in a budget, cannot be prevented.

RECOMMENDATIONS WITH A VIEW TO SECURING THE PROPOSED REMEDIES.

The remedy proposed above for the reestablishment of the finances on a sound basis could probably only be obtained in its full extent as the result of intervention. It is however the only complete remedy that presents itself for the solution of those defects that have developed up to the present time in the financial system of the Dominican Government. A surprisingly large part however of the program stated can in my opinion, in spite of the apparent obstacles, be secured without intervention by firm adherence to one simple principle or policy, namely, to make no concessions in the matter of deviation from the strict terms of payment to the Dominican Government provided in the Convention until not only all the lesser reforms heretofore suggested to, or the subject of negotiation with, that Government have been first provided for in legal form, but also a measure of control over the appropriations and expenditures, commensurate in each case with the importance of the deviation, and consistent with the objections admitted to the late Dominican Commission in Washington, has been granted.

Some of the reforms referred to are: 1, Publicity for, or, better, a decree naming, the items suppressed in the current otherwise admittedly excessive budget; 2, Wireless service, including both collection and disbursement of revenues, under Department of Public Works with an American expert as sub-department head; 3, Government-owned railroad under Department of Public Works while making repairs and for a reasonable time thereafter or until its inability to operate the road at a profit for the Government is demonstrated; and, 4, Reform of the army and republican guard.

GENERAL COMMENTS.

In view of the fact that it is inevitable that the Dominican Government will soon be asking the United States to permit advances, or to make concessions such as diversions from the sinking fund or the public works fund, I feel strongly that the policy outlined would be successful and that it would be a great misfortune for this country if we did not take advantage of the opportunity which will be presented to enforce internal reforms. Tremendous pressure will of course be brought to bear upon both the Department and the Legation to grant the appeals for money without the delay incident to first obtaining provision for the desired reforms. It will undoubtedly be urgently represented, for example, that the particular concession asked for is imperatively needed to prevent the Government from immediately falling. In view however of the money obtainable weekly from the Receivership, there can not in my opinion arise a need for money so pressing that it cannot await the settlement of negotiations; and, even if the payments should be made monthly as contemplated by the Convention the Government would at most have to postpone payment of any particular pressing obligation a month.

The Dominican Commission in Washington took the attitude that the Convention should be reexamined with a view to the elimination of financial control exercised by machinery not named in the Convention itself. In view of our concession on this point we could now with propriety take the attitude that in future we too would be guided by the strict terms of the Convention and that no matter what the new necessity might be we would not again depart from the Convention, at any rate without first receiving in return not only all we had expected to receive out of a spirit of gratitude for concessions already made to this Government, but also some additional concession in return for the new one made. In my opinion only by trading concessions within our lawful power to grant or withhold can we hope successfully to impose upon the Dominican Government measures for internal reform which as such we cannot in all cases clearly demand as of right. Placing the matter upon a strict basis of compensation could not be justly criticised in view of our failure to always obtain results reasonably to be expected from merely placing the Dominican Government under obligation to us.

The General Receiver with whom I have conferred is in agreement with me as to the probability of the Dominican Government soon needing funds in addition to those to which it is strictly entitled under the terms of the Convention, with which to pay salaries of civil employees now in arrears as a result of the use of the convention receipts in whatever extent was necessary to pay the extraordinary expenses of the Government while on a war footing, and that a crisis of a serious nature might result if the money is not forthcoming. I am not wholly clear as to his opinion with reference to the advisability of holding back concessions, no matter what the consequences of the greater or less delay involved in first settling negotiations, for the purpose of securing the desired reforms. The point of view of the General Receiver is naturally less influenced than the Legation's by the desire to secure success for those specific policies in this country of the Department whose carrying out is not sought through his efforts alone, although his cooperation as the General Receiver of Dominican Customs is invaluable and always earnestly desired and sought by the Legation. It may perhaps be urged that because we are publicly "supporting" this Government, because we urged it to suppress the revolution and because much money is necessarily spent in so doing, we should promptly acquiesce in plans to facilitate the Dominican Government in obtaining money that belongs to it but which is now tied up in the public works fund or in which it has a degree of ownership such as the Convention sinking fund. In answer it may be said that our support of the Government is of course in this connection merely as against revolutions, and this support would be given whether it granted the reforms we have urged, or may urge, or not. Moreover at the same time that we urged the prompt suppression of the disorders we in addition formally protested against any increase of the public debt and called attention to our expressions in the past to the effect that we are willing to support the Government with armed forces and that it should not be put to needless expense in putting down revolutions. It is also a fact that as previously pointed out no diversions would have been necessary had proper heed been given to suggestions of reform, both financial and military, and that unfortunate consequences of inability to obtain extra-convention funds must be laid at the door of the Government itself.

However, the recommendations presented herein are not based upon the premise that the needs of the Dominican Government will not be real or that its requests will be unreasonable or that we could not with propriety grant them. The recommendations are merely that concessions should be granted only upon reasonable terms first complied with by the Dominican Government. A crisis which might result from delay on our part might even bring about the desirable result of placing matters upon a permanent and sound footing by bringing home to this country a full realization of the obligations of a nation under its treaties and towards the family of nations in the matter of keeping its house in order. If a new revolution resulted from our delay, this would in my opinion be better than yielding and failing to obtain those reforms without which in any event the country could not long exist as an independent nation.

In this connection I would further respectfully recommend that the moment further difficulty is encountered here in the matter of settling any of the matters now under negotiation with this Government, that the Convention basis of payment of the customs revenues to the Dominican Government at the end of each month be reestablished, but only in case a request from the Dominican Government for an advance of funds or for some other concession shall not already have been made.

The problem of the payment of the liquidated and unliquidated claims against the Government, amounting to about $7,000,000 up to the present, will be treated in a supplemental report.

Respectfully submitted,

STEWART JOHNSON.

No. 139.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 17, 1915.

SIR: The Government of the United States is anxiously concerned over the present unsettled conditions, both political and financial, in the Dominican Republic. This Government, by reason of the obligations assumed and by virtue of the authority given under the provisions of the convention concluded on February 8, 1907, is particularly interested in the material progress and welfare of the Dominican Republic and to that end is most anxious to secure the early reestablishment of a permanent peace throughout the country.

The two or three years following the enactment of the Dominican convention in 1907 seem to have passed without a violation on the part of the Dominican Government of clause III of that convention. Since 1910, however, it appears that the exigencies of the conditions in the Republic to which you are accredited have gradually caused first one of its administrations and then another to disregard the provisions of clause III of the solemn covenant entered into between the United States and the Dominican Republic. The Government of the United States, finding the administration of affairs at Santo Domingo in a deplorable condition, towards the close of 1912, was compelled to send delegates from this Department and that of War, Mr. Doyle representing the former and General McIntyre the latter, to compose the differences of factional leaders.¹¹ The result of their friendly good offices was that Archbishop Nouel became President.

Before this event the Dominicans had incurred by degrees a relatively large indebtedness entirely without the consent of the United States and in absolute contravention to the terms of the convention. The Government of the United States finally gave its approval, with reluctance, to an increase of a million and one-half dollars of the public debt of Santo Domingo, because it was thought that the Nouel administration could not survive unless it repaid those to whom money was due.

It seems to have been represented that one and one-half million dollars would suffice to pay the current debts of the Dominican Republic at that time. This proved to be untrue. The payment of certain accounts, and the ignoring of others resulted in hard feelings on the part of those unpaid and in severe criticism of the Bordas government, which followed the short-lived administration of Archbishop Nouel.

Again, in 1913, this Government studied the Dominican problem with especial care and deep interest and sympathy. Governor Osborne, First Assistant Secretary of State, was charged with the duty of calling the attention of the administration of José Bordas Valdés to the necessity properly to respect and to live within the terms of the convention. To his representations, Governor Osborne received assurances that the Dominicans would accommodate expenditures to revenues, and that they would faithfully observe the terms of the convention.

Within a few months after the visit of Governor Osborne, it became only too apparent that there was general carelessness and improvidence in all financial matters; that the Bordas administration, without obtaining the consent of the United States, was increasing its indebtedness on every hand in an alleged effort to put down a revolution; and that the salaries of Government employees were not being paid, which caused so much discontent as to threaten the stability of the Bordas régime.

Seeking a remedy for these distressing conditions, the United States, after careful consideration, became convinced that a regular payment of salaries to all employees of the Government would go far to remove the odium to which officials of the Bordas Government were becoming subjected, and thus allay, if not prevent, the armed protests which starvation and abuse were slowly forcing upon employees of the Government. For this purpose, the United States viewed with favor a suggestion to secure for the Dominican Republic some form of financial control, in the hope that thereby a remedy would result, at least in part, by securing an adjustment of expenditures to revenues. Actuated by the highest motives and in the belief that a competent financial comptroller would be of material assistance, the Department of State conferred freely with Mr. Peynado, the Dominican Minister to the United States, and later with Mr. Soler, who succeeded Mr. Peynado.

¹¹ For. Rel. 1912, pp. 366 et seq.

These conferences and the many and extended communications passed between the Governments resulted in the appointment of a financial adviser to the Dominican Republic. So keen, however, was the rivalry between the various contending political factions, that no loan plan was approved at that time.

During eight months the financial adviser exercised his functions to the best of his ability and achieved the saving of considerable sums, in so far as it was possible, to the Government. Due to his active services, Government employees were regularly paid, but this novel condition did not obtain over a period sufficient to demonstrate whether an honest handling of public funds would permanently remove one of the main causes of factional strife.

The continuous state of internal disturbance which existed in the Dominican Republic from the time of the arrival of the financial adviser until the retirement of the Bordas administration (when the Provisional Government of Dr. Báez assumed control of that Republic), resulted in the failure to confirm or ratify the official recognition of the office of financial adviser.

Prior to the recognition of the Jiménez Government by the United States, Mr. Jiménez and Mr. Velásquez assured this Government that the appointment of the financial adviser would be ratified and, in addition to this, other assurances were given, but not respected.

Even so, the Department, anxious to cooperate with Dominicans in every proper way, received the commission which President Jiménez sent to Washington. In view of that body's firm assurance that the Dominicans would live within their revenues, provided the office of financial adviser were abolished, the Department, in June, 1915, acquiesced in many of the suggestions submitted by the Dominican Executive through the special commission, which visited Washington in that month. Since the departure of that commission the Department has confidently expected that the Dominican Government would receive sympathetically, and respect in full, according to agreement, the indications of the receivership, to which by common consent the modified powers of the financial adviser had been transferred.

The Department has awaited the receipt of some plan looking to the adjudication and final liquidation of the very considerable current indebtedness which has been accumulating slowly under previous administrations and rapidly under the Jiménez administration, and it has naturally expected to be informed that the daily increase of this indebtedness had ceased.

To its surprise and deep regret, no favorable information has come to hand. From a variety of sources advices have been received that the Jiménez Government is increasing the indebtedness of the Dominican Government at the rate of from one to three thousand dollars per day. In addition to this it is alleged that the extreme peculations taking place in the collection of the internal revenues are being used largely to benefit politicians, while the civilian employees of the Government go unsalaried and unfed. So extreme does the struggle for a division of the spoils appear to be, that natural remedies, such as a loan, which, if properly used to defray current indebtedness, would be of very material value in the proper conduct of economic affairs, go unconsidered. It is said that the financial policy now pursued can but result in the Government playing into the hands of money lenders.

The present current indebtedness is variously described at from five to seven million dollars. This staggering statement clearly indicates the existence of some fundamental improprieties in the present Government. If tribute is being paid to prevent those who otherwise would do so from starting revolutions, if the officers of the Jiménez Government are enriching themselves and leaving in want civilian employees of the Government, it can but be manifest that such a state of discontent will soon be reached as will threaten the very existence of the present administration.

Complaints against the Government of President Jiménez are general, incipient revolutions have been afoot for more than a month, and no adequate steps have been taken to provide the prompt measures necessary to quell those uprisings against the government, at their birth.

It is, therefore, evident that since 1910 there has been a continuous violation of the provisions of the convention of 1907, especially in that part which reads:

Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States.

In direct contravention of the foregoing solemn undertaking, the Dominican debt has been increased by some seven millions of dollars. Closely associated with this regrettable failure to comply with treaty obligations, there has been a continual internecine struggle to obtain control of the Government and Government funds, which has resulted in a state of revolution so continuous as almost entirely to interrupt all national development in the Republic.

It is not amiss here to recall that in 1907 the indebtedness of the Republic amounted approximately to thirty million dollars, which through the good offices of the United States, was finally reduced to some seventeen million dollars. Twenty million in new bonds were then issued, which, with the four million in cash accumulated under the modus vivendi, enabled the Dominican Government to pay its adjudicated debt of seventeen million, purchase and extinguish certain onerous concessions at a cost of one and one half million, and provide a handsome surplus for public works necessary to rehabilitate the deplorable condition of the country. Since that time, aside from paying interest, the total of twenty millions has been reduced by some three and one half million; this reduction being accomplished by payments made under the convention, and through earnings thereon.

During this same time, and without achieving the least permanent good, the various administrations in the Dominican Republic have, in direct violation of the convention, increased the total debt of the Republic by about seven million dollars. It is, therefore, self-evident that should this procedure be allowed to continue, the life of the convention may be eternal, and the objects for which it was created and enacted, be defeated.

While this Government has recognized its perfect right to insist that the Dominican Republic should observe all the obligations of the Convention of 1907, especially those regarding the increase of the public debt and the obligation to give full protection to the general receiver, so that the free course of the customs should not be interrupted, it has now, for the first time, determined that further violations of the obligations of the convention, which the Dominican Republic freely assumed, shall cease.

The Department maintains that a strict compliance on the part of the Dominican Government, of clause III of the convention of 1907, in which the Dominican Government is prohibited from making any increase in its public indebtedness without the sanction of this Government, will constitute a most effective deterrent to all those who might contemplate the instigation of political disorders, to which the Republic has been subject for many years. The creation of a floating indebtedness, directly or indirectly, must certainly be interpreted as contravening the provisions of the convention of 1907. Failure to meet budgetary expenses, the appropriation of sums in excess of probable revenues, the purchase of supplies and materials no adequate provision for the payment of which has been made, are considered by this Department as a contravention of clause III and should be discouraged.

It is the opinion of the Department that the wisest course to be adopted to attain this end will be to secure the conclusion of an amended convention, more comprehensive than that of 1907.

If, however, it should become apparent that this cannot be accomplished, you will so report to the Department, and, after receiving the necessary instructions, you may then send to the Dominican Minister for Foreign Affairs a note setting forth the vital parts of this instruction, and render the interpretation of the Convention of 1907, as set forth in enclosure hereto, which should secure immediately the appointment of a financial adviser, and provide for the organization of an adequate customs guard or constabulary.

The Department intends to request the detail of an officer of Engineers of the United States Army, in the capacity of military attaché to your Legation, who will make a careful inspection of all public works heretofore constructed under American supervision, on which more than two and one half million dollars have already been expended, and who, after thorough examination into the needs of the Republic, will make such recommendations as in his best judgment seem most advantageous, for the employment of the remainder of the public works fund.

It is needless to point out to you the great interest taken by the President in the success of your present mission and the particular satisfaction it will afford should you meet with success in your endeavors to carry out the purpose of this Government to establish lasting peace and so to secure an orderly development of the natural resources of the Republic.

You may inform the Government to which you are accredited, that the United States interprets the convention of 1907 to give it the right:

A. To compel the observation of Article III of the convention in the appointment of a financial adviser.

B. To provide for the free course of the customs by the organization, on a much larger scale, of what is now known as the Dominican Customs Guard, or by the creation of a constabulary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 21, 1915—6 p. m.

Department appreciates the seriousness of the economic situation which confronts the Minister of Finance and suggests that a precise statement showing amounts of internal revenue collectible and Dominican Republic's total income and outgo must be made, verified by receivership, and submitted to the Department before it can seriously consider a loan.

In addition to this, a complete examination, audit, and if possible adjudication of the floating debt should be made and forwarded to the Department immediately after verification by receivership.

Minister Russell expects to sail for Santo Domingo Thursday; shortly after his arrival he will propose the adoption of measures calculated to give practical and, it is hoped, permanent relief.

While the Department views with sympathetic interest efforts of Dominican Republic looking to retrenchment and economy in administration and is deeply interested in the financial rehabilitation of the Republic, it is constrained to believe that any further increase of indebtedness to the Convention Fund should not be incurred unless some satisfactory plan for repayment be first arranged, such as that now proposed by the Dominican Government through a loan, to obtain which the Department is ready to lend all proper assistance and therefore has requested the data as set forth in its telegram of September 21, 6 p. m.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, October 29, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the financial situation of the Dominican Republic is rather desperate and calls for immediate attention. I enclose you herewith copies and translations of memoranda furnished me by the President.⁶ From these memoranda it appears that there is a daily deficit of $1280, with a daily income of $6000. The Minister of Finance informs me that the daily deficit is at least $3000.

The customs receipts this year will approach very near to the $4,000,000 mark, and if all of the internal revenues could be relied on to reach the treasury the total revenues of the Government would be more than sufficient to meet budgetary expenses. The total indebtedness of the Government is somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000. The auditor of the treasury is at least six or seven years behind with his books and it would take a force of expert accountants at least a year to bring order and intelligence out of this chaos.

A very considerable part of the debt is represented by stamped paper in the hands of speculators who purchased it at an enormous discount, and which has been canceled by the Government, thereby creating a claim. It would seem that the holders of this paper should only be reimbursed in the amount invested, with a fair rate of interest, or that some equitable arrangement should be made by which the holders could receive on certain securities of this character a reasonable advance plus interest to be agreed upon.

Large sums of money not provided for in the budget are being expended daily on what is known as "raciones"—sums for maintaining the military, republican guard, and other quasi military bodies. The budget carries an appropriation of $25,000 a year for a corps of generals under the orders of the President. This sum is being drawn in monthly quotas. The sum of $2000 per day is being expended in "raciones" (rations).

The present Minister of Finance is a very honest man, and is earnestly striving to reduce expenditures and eliminate filtration. Internal revenues amount to only $450,000 annually that reach the treasury—they should be at least $1,200,000 with economical, honest and efficient methods of collection. The Minister of Finance informs me that the budget is to be reduced in the sum of $800,000 by the Congress called for October [November] 20.

Back salaries due under this administration amount to about $200,000.

Congress may be induced to sanction the reforms planned by the Minister of Finance from selfish motives, as all their salaries and mileage will have to be paid from the proceeds of a loan, or advances to be refunded from a loan. The Minister of Finance is really in earnest in his program for economy and reform, and says that he has the promise of support from Congress.

Before considering increase of indebtedness to convention fund and proposed loan or any non-constructive measures which would afford but temporary relief, the Department will await a report of your efforts to obtain revised convention contemplated in instruction No. 139 of September 17, which was drawn solely with a view to assist the Dominican Government in devising some means to provide permanent financial relief, to improve present unsatisfactory land laws, and to preserve public order so as to secure Dominicans in the peaceful development of the vast natural resources of their country.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, November 5, 1915—5 p. m.

Your November 4, 4 p. m. By last mail, due New York about 8th, I have reported on improbability of securing approval of Congress to amendments to convention outlined in your instruction No. 139. President still absent from the city and uncertain when he will return. Minister of Finance still requests approval of advances to pay salaries and says that disbursement of all such advances will be absolutely controlled by Johnston who can withhold payment if not legitimate or there is any attempt to divert sums for other purposes. I still strongly advise against any advances unless controlled by receivership as well as all disbursements of Government. The one thing Congress is very sure to do will be the authorization for a loan. I am of the opinion that the issue should be made at once, and that after Department receives my number 13, October 29, I be instructed by cable to proceed in accordance with instructions in your No. 139.

No. 22.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, November 8, 1915.

SIR: Referring to my No. 13 of the 29th ultimo, I have the honor to report that the financial situation is still in a hopeless state. I have had several interviews with the Minister of Finance, who is a very upright man, sincerely intent upon reforms, and whom, under different circumstances, it would be good policy to aid.

The receivership pays to the Government as its share of customs receipts $28,000 weekly on account of the sum due at the end of the month. One quota of $28,000 was paid on the first of the month and a similar quota is to be paid to-day. The deputy receiver general states that the amount due the Government for this month can not fall below $125,000, at the lowest, so that with the four weekly quotas of $28,000—$112,000—the Government would still have due it at least $13,000 at the end of this month. The Minister of Finance requested the deputy receiver, in line with this method of payment, to advance to-day three weekly quotas of $28,000 instead of one—this for the purpose of paying salaries due in the Cibao, and making payments to senators and congressmen, who it is stated will not come to the capital unless paid. The deputy receiver called to see if I could not have these advances approved. I advised him to take no such action without special instructions, as I was sure that the State Department would not approve.

The Minister of Finance says he is reasonably certain that Congress will adopt his plan of reforms, but there is grave doubt of this.

The amount of the Government's share of the customs receipts for September was $138,000; for October, $139,000; so that the amount of $125,000 as probably due at the end of this month is reasonably safe.

If a loan is approved by Congress, from which is to be paid salaries in arrears, it is a question as to whether this will result in a benefit to the country. Speculators, among whom figure prominent political personages, have bought up these salary accounts at a very high rate of discount, so that money paid on this account will go into the pockets of these speculators who are expecting a loan for this very purpose. So that as urgent as is the need of money the approval for a loan might not bring relief to the people, and unless Congress enacts the necessary laws for retrenchment and reform, and there is complete control of the disbursements of the Government, history will repeat itself and the same conditions will be continuously arising.

[Telegram.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, November 10, 1915—5 p. m.

Minister of Finance today requested advance of $60,000 a month for two or three months giving receivership control all budget disbursements. In case Congress passed reform program to be presented at the end of this month advances from the receivership would be covered from public works funds in Guaranty Trust Company, these latter to be paid back with a part of the loan to be negotiated for canceling the public debt. In case Congress did not pass loan bill or in case advance in question were not used for the purpose indicated, namely, payment of salaries, receivership would have right to withhold advances and could reimburse itself by retaining two thousand dollars daily of Government portion of collections. Minister of Finance wanted me to authorize this without consulting Washington and upon my explaining that it was impossible to do so stated that he could no longer continue in office and would resign immediately. Crisis of some sort imminent and if Congress authorizes loan when approval is asked of our Government I think moment most opportune to withhold all approval until we can secure amendments to convention suggested in your instruction number 139, in the meanwhile presenting at once note in accordance with instructions just referred to as requested in my telegram of November 5, 5 p. m.

Minister of Finance agrees to continue in office until Department answers this telegram and his request now is for two advances of sixty thousand dollars each.

Receivership informs me that they interpret their instructions as allowing advance at once up to total probable balance of Government share for November under system of weekly quotas of twenty-eight thousand dollars and pursuant to this interpretation they expect to advance up to total balance for November within the next few days. Control offered by Minister of Finance is an administration order giving receivership power to verify in the office of the controller that advances will be used for the purposes for which they are made and that war or other expenditures shall not exceed budget provision and if ascertained that budget being violated, advances not yet made to be withheld. This control, if effective, would endanger passage of the proposed and original agreement and probably under such an order Johnston will not dare to go so far. Please reply by telegraph immediately.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 14, 1915—5 p. m.

Referring to your November 10, 5 p. m. you may present note rendering interpretation contemplated in enclosure to instruction 139 of September 17.

The Department would prefer to have the office of financial adviser so established that it would not be subject to abolishment by future administrations. But in view of past experiences with financial adviser as such the Department is willing to have his duties and rights vested in the receivership, provided that it is properly authorized to exercise full budgetary control and all the powers of a financial expert, as described in the Department's letter of June 1, 1914, to Charles M. Johnston,¹² excepting only the portions of the seventh duty thereof which refer to control over receivership.

In insisting upon constabulary, you will not fail to point out that once organized it will provide ample protection to constituted authority at a minimum of cost and that it will be subject to the central control which would place it beyond the domination of provincial administrators. The maintenance of the constabulary will be less onerous and far more effective than the present system of army, and customs guard and guardia republicana.

Upon receipt by you of note accepting above conditions Department will if you so recommend arrange advance of one hundred twenty thousand dollars.

Note presented to Minister for Foreign Affairs yesterday.¹³ Congress called for today but there was no session. It seems pretty certain that Horacistas will use our demands in propaganda to start revolution. Some possibility that President may resign and Congress would have to name successor until elections are held. Desiderio Arias in conjunction with Vidal can control Congress and Arias would undoubtedly be named President which would be terrible calamity to the country. How far will the Department go to prevent this if President should resign? If anything is done it must be along the line of preventing Congress from electing Arias or any tool of his.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, December 9, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that soon after the President's return to the capital I had an interview with him on the subject matter of the note I presented to the Government on the 19th of November.¹⁴ The whole country had been flooded with exaggerated reports as to our demands and anti-American feeling ran high. The Minister for Foreign Affairs had refused to give information to the press or public as to the contents of the note, and his reticence gave rise to all sorts of rumors circulated for political purposes. Patriotic meetings were held in the North and societies formed for the purpose of exciting the people to prepare themselves against the foreign invader.

The President had been informed from here of the presentation of the note, and he telegraphed General Horacio Vasquez to come to the capital to consult on "grave affairs." Vasquez arrived here and was given a tremendous ovation, and "down with the Yankees" was the slogan of the hour. General Vasquez requested an interview with me, which was given him, and he had a conference of two hours. He talked of the mal-administration of President Jiménez and the necessity for an immediate change. I informed him of the attitude of our Government as per your telegraphic instructions, and he was more conciliatory. He said that he and his party were opposed to any revolutionary movement looking to the overthrow of President Jiménez, or forcing his resignation; that he was desirous of supporting the President, but that owing to the economic crisis he would insist immediately upon the reforms suggested by our Government, consonant with patriotism.

Luis Felipe Vidal, the leader of the "legalistas" also had an interview with me, and talked of the impeachment of the President. His tone also changed when I acquainted him with the attitude of our Government.

¹⁴ See the instructions therefor in the Department's telegram of November 14, 5 p. m., p. 330. The note is below, Inclosure 1.

The President dwelt at some length upon the injustice of holding his administration responsible for the bad condition of the country and the financial deficit, when, as he stated, previous administrations were to blame.

I have been persistently regaled with dissertations on the bad faith of our Government in the matter of the incompetency of the American officials sent here in positions of trust. I have replied to all these complaints that the Government was not aware of these conditions, and that if the Dominican Government placed the matter before me I would bring it to the attention of the State Department and the question would be arranged. The President said that he would prepare a memorandum to be presented through the Foreign Office. I am waiting for this memorandum to forward with my report in connection therewith.

I am inclosing herewith copies and translations of the correspondence between this Legation and the Government in the matter of the note.

Congress is in session and is considering the new budget presented to it, which is some $300,000 less than the present budget.

The public debt, including nominal value of claims presented amounts to over $6,000,000 and the claims commission is still at work.

Excitement has subsided for the present, but the situation is difficult on account of the intriguing ambitions of the several members of the Cabinet.

No. 14.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, November 19, 1915.

MR. MINISTER: In accordance with instructions I have the honor to say to your excellency that the Government of the United States is anxiously concerned over the present unsettled conditions, both political and financial, in the Dominican Republic. My Government, by reason of the obligations assumed and by virtue of the authority given under the provisions of the convention concluded on February 8, 1907, is particularly interested in the material progress and welfare of the Dominican Republic and to that end is most anxious to secure the early establishment of a permanent peace throughout the country.

The two or three years following the enactment of the Dominican convention in 1907 seem to have passed without a violation on the part of the Dominican Government of clause III of that convention. Since 1910, however, it appears that the exigencies of the conditions in the Republic, have gradually caused first one of its administrations and then another to disregard the provisions of clause III of the solemn covenant entered into between the United States and the Dominican Republic. The Government of the United States, finding the administration of affairs at Santo Domingo in a deplorable condition, towards the close of 1912, was compelled to send delegates from the Departments of State and War, Mr. Doyle representing the former and General McIntyre the latter, to compose the difference of factional leaders. The result of their friendly good offices was that Archbishop Nouel became President.

Before this event the Dominicans had incurred by degrees a relatively large indebtedness entirely without the consent of the United States and in absolute contravention to the terms of the convention. The Government of the United States finally gave its approval, with reluctance, to an increase of a million and one half dollars of the public debt of Santo Domingo, because it was thought that the Nouel administration could not survive unless it repaid those to whom money was due.

It seems to have been represented that one and one-half million dollars would suffice to pay the current debts of the Dominican Republic at that time. This proved to be untrue. The payment of certain accounts, and the ignoring of others resulted in hard feelings on the part of those unpaid and in severe criticism of the Bordas Government, which followed the short-lived administration of Archbishop Nouel.

Again, in 1913, my Government studied the Dominican problem with especial care and deep interest and sympathy. Governor Osborne, First Assistant Secretary of State, was charged with the duty of calling the attention of the administration of José Bordas Valdés to the necessity properly to respect and live within the terms of the convention. To his representations, Governor Osborne received assurances that the Dominicans would accommodate expenditures to revenues, and that they would faithfully observe the terms of the convention.

Within a few months after the visit of Governor Osborne, it became only too apparent that there was general carelessness and improvidence in all financial matters; that the Bordas administration, without obtaining the consent of the United States, was increasing its indebtedness on every hand in an alleged effort to put down a revolution; and that the salaries of Government employees were not being paid, which caused so much discontent as to threaten the stability of the Bordas régime.

Seeking a remedy for these distressing conditions, the United States, after careful consideration, became convinced that a regular payment of salaries to all employees of the Government would go far to remove the odium to which officials of the Bordas Government were being subjected, and thus allay, if not prevent, the armed protest, which starvation and abuse were slowly forcing upon employees of the Government. For this purpose, the United States viewed with favor a suggestion to secure for the Dominican Republic some form of financial control, in the hope that thereby a remedy would result, at least in part, by securing an adjustment of expenditures to revenues. Actuated by the highest motives and in the belief that a competent financial comptroller would be of material assistance, the Department of State conferred freely with Mr. Peynado, the Dominican Minister to the United States, and later with Mr. Soler, who succeeded Mr. Peynado.

These conferences and the many and extended communications passed between the Governments resulted in the appointment of a financial adviser to the Dominican Republic. So keen, however, was the rivalry between the various contending political factions, that no loan plan was approved at that time.

During eight months the financial adviser exercised his functions, to the best of his ability and achieved the saving of considerable sums, in so far as it was possible, to the Government. Due to his active services, Government employees were regularly paid, but this novel condition did not obtain over a period sufficient to demonstrate whether an honest handling of public funds would permanently remove one of the main causes of factional strife.

The continuous state of internal disturbance which existed in the Dominican Republic from the time of the arrival of the financial adviser until the retirement of the Bordas administration (when the Provisional Government of Dr. Báez assumed control of the Dominican Republic), resulted in the failure to confirm or ratify the official recognition of the office of financial adviser.

Prior to the recognition of the Government of President Jiménez, by the United States, President Jiménez and Mr. Federico Velasquez assured my Government that the appointment of the financial adviser would be ratified and, in addition to this, other assurances were given, but not respected.

Even so, the Department of State, anxious to cooperate with Dominicans in every proper way, received the commission which President Jiménez sent to Washington. In view of that body's firm assurances that the Dominicans would live within their revenues, provided the office of financial adviser were abolished, the State Department, in June, 1915, acquiesced in many of the suggestions submitted by the Dominican Executive through the special commission, which visited Washington in that month. Since the departure of that commission the Department of State has confidently expected that the Dominican Government would receive sympathetically, and respect in full, according to agreement, the indications of the receivership, to which by common consent the modified powers of the financial adviser had been transferred.

The Department of State has awaited the receipt of some plan looking to the adjudication and final liquidation of the very considerable current indebtedness which has been accumulating slowly under previous administrations and rapidly under the Jiménez administration, and it has naturally expected to be informed that the daily increase in this indebtedness had ceased.

To its surprise and deep regret, no favorable information has come to hand. From a variety of sources advices have been received that the Government of President Jiménez is increasing the indebtedness of the Dominican Government at the rate of from one to three thousand dollars per day. In addition to this it is alleged that the extreme speculations taking place in the collection of the internal revenues are being used largely to benefit politicians, while the civilian employees of the Government go unsalaried and unfed. So extreme does the struggle for a division of the spoils appear to be, that natural remedies, such as a loan, which, if properly used to defray current indebtedness, would be of very material value in the proper conduct of economic affairs, go unconsidered. It is said that the financial policy now pursued can but result in the Government's inevitable bankruptcy.

The present current indebtedness is variously described at from five to seven million dollars. This staggering statement clearly indicates the existence of some fundamental improprieties in the present Government. If tribute has been paid to prevent those who otherwise would do so, from starting revolutions, or to quell incipient revolutions; if the officers of the Government of President Jiménez are enriching themselves and leaving in want civilian employees of the Government, it can but be manifest that such a state of discontent will soon be reached as will threaten the very existence of the Dominican Republic.

It is, therefore, evident that since 1910 there has been a continuous violation of the provisions of the Convention of 1907, especially in that part which reads:

Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States.

In direct contravention of the foregoing solemn undertaking, the Dominican debt has been increased by some seven millions of dollars. Closely associated with this regrettable failure to comply with treaty obligations, there has been a continual internecine struggle to obtain control of the Government and Government funds, which has resulted in a state of revolution so continuous as almost entirely to interrupt all national development in the Republic.

It is not amiss here to recall that in 1907 the indebtedness of the Republic amounted approximately to thirty million dollars, which, through the good offices of the United States, was finally reduced to some seventeen million dollars. Twenty million in new bonds were then issued, which, with the four millions in cash accumulated under the modus vivendi, enabled the Dominican Government to pay its adjudicated debt of seventeen million, purchase and extinguish certain onerous concessions at a cost of one and one half million, and provide a handsome surplus for public works necessary to rehabilitate the deplorable condition of the country. Since that time, aside from paying interest, the total of twenty millions has been reduced by some three and one half million; this reduction being accomplished by payments made under the convention, and through earnings thereon.

During this same time, and without achieving the least permanent good, the various administrations in the Dominican Republic have, in direct violation of the convention, increased the total debt of the Republic by about seven million dollars. It is, therefore, self-evident that should this procedure be allowed to continue, the life of the convention may be eternal, and the objects for which it was created and enacted, be defeated.

While my Government has recognized its perfect right to insist that the Dominican Republic should observe all the obligations of the convention of 1907, especially those regarding the increase of the public debt and the obligation to give full protection to the general receiver, so that the free course of the customs should not be interrupted, it has now, for the first time, determined that further violations of the obligations of the convention, which the Dominican Republic freely assumed, shall cease.

The Department of State maintains that a strict compliance on the part of the Dominican Government, of clause III of the Convention of 1907, in which the Dominican Government is prohibited from making any increase in its public indebtedness without the sanction of the Government of the United States, will constitute a most effective deterrent to all those who might contemplate the instigation of political disorders, to which the Republic has been subject for many years. The creation of a floating indebtedness, directly or indirectly, must certainly be interpreted as contravening the provision of the Convention of 1907. Failure to meet budgetary expenses, the appropriation of sums in excess of probable revenues, the purchase of supplies and materials, no adequate provision for the payment of which has been made, are considered by the Department of State as a contravention of clause III and should be discouraged.

My Government therefore has decided that the American-Dominican Convention of 1907 gives it the right:—

A. To compel the observance of article III by insisting upon the immediate appointment of a financial adviser to the Dominican Republic, who shall be appointed by the President of the Dominican Republic, upon designation of the President of the United States, and who shall be attached to the Ministry of Finance to give effect to whose proposals and labors the Minister will lend all efficient aid. The financial adviser shall render effective the clauses of the Convention of 1907 by aiding the proper officials of the Dominican Government in the adjudication and settlement of all its outstanding indebtedness; devise and inaugurate an adequate system of public accountability; investigate proper means of increasing the public revenues and of so adjusting the public disbursements thereto that deficits may be avoided; inquire into the validity of any and all claims which may be presented against the Dominican Government; countersign all checks, drafts, warrants or orders for the payment of Dominican funds to third parties; enlighten both Governments with reference to any eventual debt and to determine if such debt is or is not in conformity with the convention of 1907; compose whatever differences may arise between the receivership and the Department of Treasury and Commerce, in which matters not requiring the intervention of both Governments are involved; assist the proper officials of the Dominican Government in the preparation of the annual budget and to aid them in correlating the governmental expenditures thereto; recommend improved methods of obtaining and applying the revenues and make such other recommendations to the minister of finance as may be deemed necessary for the welfare and prosperity of the Dominican Republic; provided, that the authority of the general receiver as described in article I, to collect and apply the customs revenues shall in no way be affected by this interpretation.

B. To provide for the free course of the customs and prevent factional strife and disturbances by the creation of a constabulary, which the Dominican Government obligates itself, for the preservation of domestic peace, security of individual rights and the full observance of the provisions of the convention, to create without delay and maintain. This constabulary shall be organized and commanded by an American to be appointed, as "Director of Constabulary," by the President of the Dominican Republic, upon nomination of the President of the United States. In like manner there shall be appointed to the constabulary such other American officers as the director of constabulary shall consider requisite; also there shall be appointed by the President of the Dominican Republic, on the nomination of the director of constabulary, such Dominican officers as, in the judgment of the director of constabulary, may be desirable from the standpoint of efficiency. The Dominican Government shall clothe these officers with the proper and necessary authority and uphold them in the performance of their functions. The Dominican Government shall authorize for the constabulary such commissioned officers, and enlisted men (non-commissioned officers and privates) as the director of constabulary may deem necessary for the proper preservation of peace and order, within the Republic, and shall ratify and promulgate such regulations as to pay of personnel, enlistment, appointment and reduction of non-commissioned officers, discharge, discipline, etc., as the director of constabulary may recommend; provided that the President of the United States shall decide any question of regulation affecting the organization upon which the Dominican Government and the director of constabulary may fail to agree, and shall by agreement with the Dominican Republic fix the salary of the director of constabulary.

The constabulary thus provided for, shall, under the direction of the Dominican Government have supervision and control of the arms and ammunition, military supplies and traffic therein, throughout the country.

In regard to the financial adviser I will say to your excellency that my Government would prefer to have this office so established that it would not be in danger of being abolished by future administrations, but, in view of past experiences with the post of financial adviser, is willing to have his rights and duties vested in the receivership, provided that said receivership is properly authorized to exercise full budgetary control, and is given all the powers herein set forth in section "A."

In insisting upon the establishment of the constabulary your excellency can not fail to see that its organization will afford ample protection to the constituted authorities at a minimum of cost, and will be subject to the control of the central Government, thus placing it beyond the domination of provincial administrators; and the maintenance of this constabulary will be less onerous and far more effective than the present system of the army and customs guard, and guardia republicana.

In requesting your excellency to give this matter your serious and immediate consideration,

I take [etc.]

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to Minister Russell.

No. 582.]

MINISTRY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,

Santo Domingo, Dec. 8, 1915.

MR. MINISTER: I acknowledge receipt of your courteous note No. 14 of the 19th of last month.

The President of the Republic on his return and after being acquainted with the contents of said note has instructed me to state to you as follows.

The Dominican Government has done everything in its power to avoid and later suppress disorders which have given rise to expenses and a consequent unstable condition of public finance to which your excellency refers in said note. It avoided said disorders with a due regard to the laws, guaranteeing to each citizen his rights, although some were making seditious use of said rights.

Disorders were repressed by detaching armed troops to combat the rebellion and succeeded in putting it down completely. But the Dominican Government, like any other government in the world in like case, could not prevent that public disorder and the sacrifices made to re-establish order were burdensome to the public finances and even interrupted the orderly march of institutions and the collection of internal revenue.

So sincere has been the purpose of the Dominican Government to rectify these irregularities and adopt a program of strict organization in all branches, that the increase in the frontier guard and the decree lately issued in regard to arms and ammunition are giving those satisfactory results that were looked for, administratively as well as politically.

It is not the Government's fault that the enemies of public peace, in less than a year, raised the standard of revolt on three different occasions, requiring the use of resources and energies which it was always the purpose to apply to the development of the great interests of the country.

Public order disturbed, the prime duty was to restore it. Without peace there is no progress, nor welfare, nor organization. Proof of all this was the offer which, through your Legation, the American Government made, months previous, an offer which the Dominican Government appreciated but which it could not accept. And this, because each nation has what might be called its national criterion, and it is indisputable that ours, still very young, looks always with the greatest fear on all interference which later may bring vexatious questions in regard to its sovereignty.

After the termination of the civil war, which undoubtedly gave rise to involuntary irregularities in the carrying out of the "Law of public disbursements"; on account of the supreme obligation and the unavoidable necessity to restore peace the Dominican Government has devoted itself in an unequivocal manner to the task of strengthening, not only the political conditions, but also the economic and financial conditions of the Nation. For that purpose Congress was called and there has been submitted to it a project of a "Law of public disbursements" consonant with present revenues, and there will be shortly other projects of law also submitted, all tending to restore financial normality, as the Government not only desires to bring this about, but also sees the imperious necessity of its accomplishment, as it is well aware that stability does not arise from armed forces, but from the harmonious march of all the healthy activities of the country.

The answer which Don Juan I. Jiménes and Don Federico Velásquez y H., chiefs of the coalition parties, gave to the Honorable J. C. White prior to the taking of the oath of office by the former, carries with it the assurance of continuing to respect the acts of former Governments, as they thought then and consider to-day that the Power cannot be considered as continuous.

As a proof of such an affirmation and in view of the fact that the creation of the office of financial expert lacked legislative sanction, the present Executive Power submitted to Congress, with its observations, a bill relative to this matter.

When the present Government was inaugurated a financial instability existed. In addition to the large expenditures in the administration of General José Bordas Valdés, and of the four million dollars of stamped paper which had disappeared from the National Treasury, the present Government found that the administration of Dr. Báez had left a deficit of $269,609.34 due the public works fund, and also $100,000 for salary due Government employees. This brief statement will be opportunely amplified by an explanatory communication which will give a true statement of the public debt and will show your excellency that the present Government cannot be charged with the responsibility in the matter, and show at the same time how exaggerated has been certain data which it appears has been submitted to your excellency.

It is perfectly well understood that the convention is a treaty, is an international law which fixes with precision the duties of each one of the contracting parties.

The present administration aspires to maintain itself within its provisions and calls attention to the fact that the irregularities caused by the maladministration of previous governments and of the three revolutions that occurred during this administration, have in no wise affected the service of the public debt, which is religiously paid, and the bonds maintain a value in foreign markets which emphasizes the seriousness with which international agreements are carried out.

For the reason that it is not likely to bring about the end desired, the Government does not acquiesce in the suggestion of your excellency to secure the reestablishment of the office of the financial expert, eliminated by agreement between the two Governments after the Washington Government heard the statements of the Dominican commission. The financial expert serves no useful purpose because, even though his work should be advantageous for the one side, on the other side it would constitute a permanent element of intransigibility and annoyance for the Dominican people who have unanimously expressed themselves as opposed to such an official. To re-establish this office therefore, would be cause for stirring up an absolutely dangerous public sentiment. And as the purpose of the American Government is to sincerely assist the Dominican Government in the fulfillment of its duties, that aid should assume a form devoid of all danger, of everything which might wound a national sentiment jealous of its sovereignty. The intelligent aid of the American Government to the Dominican Government, in the matter of finances, ought not to be along lines outside of those prescribed by the provisions of Article III of the convention, all of which was cleared up by the negotiations of the Dominican commission.

In regard to the transformation of the public forces into a civil guard organized and commanded by American officials designated by your Government and appointed by the Dominican Government, there is the same objection as in the matter of the financial expert. That which is sought for is not a peace obligated by force, which is always precarious, but a moral peace, resulting from tranquility of mind and a cessation of warlike acts, and a desire for financial welfare.

And the establishment of a police as proposed, interpreted by the Dominican people as an abdication of the national sovereignty, far from being a pacificating element would be, on the contrary, an inextinguishable germ of trouble, of protest, and of violent attacks—all of which would bring about a situation much more lamentable than the present.

The question is not one of those to be settled by the increase or the abolition of the armed forces of the Republic. The most important side of the matter is the economic side, and with the re-establishment of the producing vitality of the country social and political phenomena which are at present a source of alarm both to native and foreigners will be easily and advantageously modified.

This is the constant aim of the Government, and the foreign aid which it may need and which on several occasions the American Government has offered and which will be accepted with thanks, must be of that character which does not wound the susceptibilities of the Dominican people, as everything which disturbs peace of mind must, perforce, act contrary to the whole social life of the Dominican Republic.

With the re-establishment of economic normality the Dominican Government will take especial care not to exceed its expenses, to regard scrupulously the management of internal revenue and to avoid all difficulties that may work against the organization and development of the forces of the Republic—all with the most absolute regard for its international obligations.

LEGATION OF ECUADOR,
Washington, February 9, 1915.

MR. SECRETARY: Mr. James C. Hallock, an American engineer, assistant chief of the department of public works of the city of Newark, and Señor Carlos Dávalos, an Ecuadorian in the service of the American Exporter, who are the two members chosen by Ecuador at the general meeting of shareholders for the election of the board of directors of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, sent me, on the 5th instant, a report which includes the following:

At the monthly meeting of February 2 the proceedings of the executive committee at its meeting of Saturday the 16th of January of this year were made known and were as follows: Authorize the vice president, Mr. Farr, to write to the Department of State of the United States asking it to protest through its diplomatic agent to the Government of Ecuador against its applying part of its receipts to payments to the banks instead of meeting its obligations entered into with the company to which those receipts had been assigned. Mr. Hallock said that there was no occasion whatever to apply to the Department of State in the matter and that the company should always arrive at a direct understanding with the Government of Ecuador.

I do not know whether the communication approved in the afore-said executive committee has yet been forwarded to your excellency, but, knowing as I do the superior judgment with which your excellency usually discriminates and decides which public business belongs to the province of diplomacy and which relates to the ordinary transactions of operators and contractors, I indulge the belief that your excellency will have answered Mr. Farr's application as it deserves and spurned the idea that the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company is ever to make diplomatic questions of every matter that can well be settled directly with my Government or in the courts the case arising.

Should your excellency deem it expedient to talk over this matter personally with me, I should be glad to have an interview with your excellency on any day and at any hour you may be pleased to appoint.

So far the Department has not received notice of the intention of the company to proceed in the manner which was stated to have been proposed in the meeting referred to by you. ECUADOREAN LEGATION,
Washington, March 13, 1915.

MR. SECRETARY: In accordance with the agreement reached with your excellency at our interview of the 4th instant, I had the pleasure of talking over the matter with Mr. William Heimke, Chief of the Latin-American Division, to whom I have begun giving brief information concerning the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Building and Operating Company in Ecuador.

As that was the first opportunity I had had to discuss the matter with the learned Mr. Heimke, I began with a statement that it did not come into the class of international or diplomatic questions, and that while the Department of State and the Ecuadorian Legation frequently deal with the case, it is because the railway building contract stipulates arbitration, in accordance with the law of Ecuador, and under that contract the President of the United States and that of Ecuador (or their appointees if they are unable to agree or accept the office) were designated as arbitrators to settle every difference between the contracting parties.

I also told Mr. Heimke that the railway company should be called upon for a copy of the by-laws by which it was governed until 1909 and those that have been framed since that date up to the present, repealing or amending the original ones; and that the company or the official concerned, should, in sending the copy, report upon or certify the following points:

(a) The board or corporation which drew up or amended every one of the by-laws.

(b) The dates and places when and where that was done by the board.

(c) The names of stockholders, directors or their attorneys who attended the sessions of the said boards and, in particular, of those who represented the interests of Ecuador.

(d) The office in which are at present filed the journals and documents relating thereto.

As I also offered to Mr. Heimke, in the act of ratifying my conference, to send him a copy of the report prepared by the Ecuadorian arbitrator, Dr. don Alfredo Baquerizo Moreno, I do so by enclosing herein a duly certified copy of the said report. But as it is fair and necessary that my Government should, for its part, know the report submitted to your excellency's Department by Arbitrator A. L. Miller, I beg your excellency to direct that a copy of that report be delivered to me.

I deem it proper to say to your excellency that all the other papers referred to by the arbitrator are filed in the archives of your Department as well as in those of the Department of Public Works of Ecuador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

SIR: On April 3, 1914,² the Legation at Quito was instructed to present to the Foreign Office of Ecuador a protest against any operation of the contract of the J. G. White Company for the sanitation of Guayaquil which would infringe on the prior claim of the Guayaquil & Quito Railroad Company to certain defined revenues of the Republic of Ecuador.

The Guayaquil & Quito Railroad Company have again addressed the Department submitting that they are informed that the "Chief Executive has been authorized to apply as much as 40 per cent of all the Government income to the payment of debts in current accounts with the banks of the country, and to use for the same purpose up to 60 per cent of the funds provided for public credit and public works", and that such a disbursement of the Government's income could not be carried out without infringing upon those contractual duties which the Government has with the Guayaquil & Quito Railroad Company. You will bring this renewed protest of the Guayaquil & Quito Railroad to the attention of the Foreign Office of Ecuador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 26, 1915—4 p. m.

Our attention has just been called to the following telegram sent by the President of Ecuador on February 8 to Cooper, secretary of the foreign bondholders:

Doctor Juan Cueva García is authorized agent New York. London services will be renewed when causes for suspension disappear and when bondholders, unbinding themselves from the company, join their endeavor with that of the Government to force the company to fulfillment of its obligations. Railroad gives an annual revenue of £220,000 more or less and would produce more with a better administration; the operating expenses could be limited to half the above sum. For what reason council bondholders does not use its rights in benefit of its clients and Ecuador. Salt funds remittances order to be resumed.

PLAZA.

You will please call upon the Foreign Office and secure information upon the following points: Does the Government mean by its telegram that it desires to have the mortgage foreclosed and the rights of the stockholders forfeited? If so upon what ground does it seek to bring this loss upon the investors? The settlement made in 1908 shows that the railroad was built at a cost of about twenty millions of dollars, something less than twelve millions of which were secured by the sale of bonds and the remainder advanced by the stockholders and construction companies. This settlement was agreed to by the Government and provision made for the payment of the interest on the bonds. At the time of the signing of the original contract the revenues of the country amounted to about four millions of dollars; now, largely through the development and progress made possible by the railroad, the revenues approximate ten millions. Upon what basis in law or equity does the Government seek a forfeiture of the rights and interests of the stockholders. For two years this Government has been endeavoring to secure a settlement of pending disputes but without avail. Finding that objection was made to the arbitrator appointed under the preceding administration, he was recalled and another arbitrator, Judge Miller, whose impartiality could not be questioned was selected, his selection being accepted and approved by both Governments. When he went to Quito he found the Ecuadorian representative unwilling to consent to the arrangement which was made here before Judge Miller started. This Government is ready to do anything in its power to secure a just and satisfactory settlement between the Government and the railroad but it does not understand the Government's attitude at this time in attempting to act with the bondholders to the ignoring of the stockholders. Neither does it understand the suggestion in regard to the operating expenses of the railroad, in view of the fact that the directors appointed by the Government have made no protest as to present methods employed by the company and have suggested no changes or improvements. Please take the matter up with the Government. In securing this information inform them that while this Government is anxious to prevent any injustice being done to the Government of Ecuador, it feels it its duty to insist upon justice being done to American investors.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 12, 1915.

SIR: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your note of March 13, 1915, in connection with your interview with Mr. Heimkè, Chief of the Latin American Division, regarding the questions outstanding between the Government of Ecuador and the Guayaquil & Quito Railroad Company, with which this Department and the Government of Ecuador have been occupied for so long a time.

The Department also refers to your note of February 9, 1915, in which you raise the question as to the Department's discrimination between "which public business belongs to the province of diplomacy and which to ordinary transactions of operators and contractors," and in which you express the hope that the Department will not become a party to the wish of the railroad company to make diplomatic questions of matters that can all be settled directly with your Government or in the courts of your country.

In reply to the requests in your note the Department does not see its way to ask the railroad company to furnish a copy of its by-laws to the Government of Ecuador. Those by-laws and amendments which it is in the interests of the Foreign Office at Quito to obtain, can doubtless be had from the company directly, as well as that data concerning the meetings of the board and the names of the stockholders to which you refer.

A careful study has been made of the certified copy of the report prepared by Señor Baquerizo, forwarded in your note of March 13. The form and contents of this document do not, in the opinion of the Department, invest it with that value which it is customary to attach to a formal report, and, as the arbitration with which it deals had no result, the Department has been at no pains to publish the findings of the American arbitrator, Judge Miller, so that, as in the case of a similar request from the railroad company, the Department will be unable to furnish the Government of Ecuador a copy of Judge Miller's report, this not being a public document.

Your suggestion with reference to the provisions in the contract between your Government and the Company for the arbitration of the matter in dispute loses force by reason of the circumstance that attempts at arbitration twice arranged by this Department have in each instance failed; and, referring especially to your note of March 13, 1915, the Department, after mature deliberation, has concluded that it is amply justified in taking up, diplomatically, the present status of the relations of the Government of Ecuador and the Railway Company, and accordingly has instructed the American Minister at Quito to make various inquiries of the Government of Ecuador with respect to its attitude towards the Company, as you were informed upon your visits to the Department on May 6 and 7.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, May 19, 1915—4 p. m.

Department's instruction Number 61. Matter presented to the Minister for Foreign Affairs May 8; substance of answer follows:³

My Government considers that it is incompatible with the sovereignty of Ecuador or with its position as a free and independent nation to accept the intervention of any power in a matter where diplomatic action has no proper place. This excuses me from going into details regarding the points to which your excellency refers in the note which gives ground for the present note.

The Minister contends that the Railway Company should deal with the Government of Ecuador directly and not through the diplomatic channel except in cases where there is a refusal or denial of justice. He says:

It is to be supposed that in the present case my Government has no thought of impairing obligations already established but, rather, proposes to favor them directly or indirectly. The Railway Company has not an atom more interest than the Government of Ecuador in the faithful fulfillment of the contract between them, even in the part of it which contains obligations imposed on the Government alone.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, June 4, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that on April 28, 1915, I brought the substance of Department's April 26, 4 p. m., to the attention of the Foreign Office in my note No. 127, wherein I asked that "the information requested be furnished as quickly as possible to the end that I may comply with the instruction of the Department, and cable the information promptly."

On May 14 the note of the Minister for Foreign Affairs with its enclosure prepared by the Fiscal Attorney and approved by the Minister of the Interior was delivered to this Legation, and copies thereof, with translation, are herewith enclosed.

I think the Department will observe not only a complete failure to reply to the inquiries submitted, but also an express purpose not to furnish the desired information, for the reason stated: that it is the contention of the Government of Ecuador that the subject presented is not proper to be dealt with through the diplomatic channel.

The Department will recall that the same question was raised by the Minister for Foreign Affairs in his note No. 192, of June 22, 1914,⁴ in reply to my note No. 66, of May 16, 1914.

I would greatly appreciate receiving an instruction from the Department containing a full statement of its views on the question raised by the Government of Ecuador, so that I may have the benefit of them before answering the note of the Minister.

Referring to the communication of the Fiscal Attorney contained in the enclosure, and to the coarse and impolite language employed by him, I will say to the Department that on reading his production my first impulse was to return that enclosure to the Foreign Office with a polite note declining to receive it because of the character of the language used. But upon reflection I determined not to do so unless so instructed by the Department.

MINISTRY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Quito, May 14, 1915.

Mr. MINISTER: I have the honor to inform your excellency that I am in receipt of your esteemed note No. 127, dated April 28 last.

Your excellency transcribes in that note the substance of a cablegram which you have received from the Department of State at Washington, relating to another telegraphic despatch addressed by the President of Ecuador to the council of bondholders at London, a copy of which has been reproduced in the communication of your excellency.

In view of what the President of Ecuador has said, the Department of State at Washington addresses to my Government through the Legation, of which your excellency is so worthily in charge, a series of questions.

I could properly, within the strict right which Ecuador has, decline a reply through the diplomatic channel, because, as I have always expressed to your excellency, the diplomatic channel is acceptable only in cases of denial of justice, very different from the present one.

But as the question relates to concrete assertions made by the Department of State at Washington on a matter so important to Ecuador as this is, being that of the railway between Guayaquil and Quito, I see in this occasion an opportunity for your excellency's Government to learn what the officials of Ecuador think on this matter.

On receiving your excellency's note which causes the present one, I thought it my duty to bring it to the knowledge of the Ministry of Public Works, who in their turn thought it expedient to bring it to the knowledge of the Fiscal Attorney of Ecuador in connection with their business with the railway company. I have today received the answer of the Ministry of Public Works, and I feel it not only a duty of courtesy to bring it to the knowledge of your excellency, so that you may kindly transmit it to the Department of State at Washington, but also an adequate means of giving the Department a notion of the basis on which my Government rests in order to hold: 1st, that this matter does not belong to the diplomatic channel; and 2d, that the Railway Company, even outside of that channel, cannot justly complain of the acts of Ecuador, which are inspired by fundamental and even instinctive conceptions of legitimate defense.

On account of what I have just expressed, and, making the proper reserve to the end that the present procedure of this Chancellery cannot be taken as a precedent in the sense that it (the Chancellery) consents to discuss this matter diplomatically, I have the honor to send to your excellency together with this note an authentic copy of the one which has been addressed to me by the Minister for Public Works.

The undersigned would consider the present occasion a fortunate one if it were to assist in giving to the Government of the United States an adequate idea of the justice whereby Ecuador is supported in its differences with the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company and of the earnest desire of my Government to discover a solution for the existing contention, and a means of stopping the enormous losses caused by a railroad which, as is affirmed by such an authorized organ as the "Financial Times" of London, has the unenviable reputation of holding the world's record for losses or bad administration.

The Minister of the Interior to the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

MINISTRY OF THE INTERIOR,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS,
Quito, May 13, 1915.

MR. MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS: From your note of the 1st instant, No. 261, this Ministry has learned of the note which his excellency the Minister of the United States addressed to you, quoting [etc.]. Said note, on account of its importance, was referred to the Fiscal Attorney charged with affairs connected with the Constructing Company of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway, and the Fiscal Attorney has addressed to me the following:

The Fiscal Attorney to the Minister of the Interior.

QUITO, May 11, 1915.

TO THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR:

Enclosed with your note of the 6th instant I found a copy of the communication which the Minister of the United States sent to the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The Government of Washington once more on this occasion insists in protecting officially, through diplomatic channels, the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, with which the Government of Ecuador contracted for the construction and co-administration of the railway indicated by the name of the said company; and I therefore consider it the duty of the Ecuadorian Foreign Office to repeat the abundant and conclusive reasons (not yet, to my knowledge, refuted by the American Government) which Ecuador has before now given for denying to the United States the right of presenting diplomatic claims or asking in any form for explanations not relating to one of the cases of damage to a subject of the claimant government which are contemplated by international law.

The United States of North America constitute a powerful nation that proclaims the principle of equality before the law with all other peoples, including the weak; and the good friendship that exists between the Republic of Ecuador and that nation deserves to be carefully maintained and cultivated by us; and precisely because of those two motives I believe we should always take refuge in the rigorous application of the prescriptions of international law, the only fairly solid foundation for this class of relations, and not accept any diplomatic discussion with respect to the difficulties provoked from day to day by the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company; these should be settled by a direct agreement between the interested parties, or by judicial sentence.

This opinion, held by the Government of Ecuador, has been declared several times by the Ministry of Foreign Relations to the American Legation; and, not to quote any but recent cases, I shall recall only the notes of May 6 and 14, 1912,⁵ published in the memorial which that Ministry presented to the nation that year; that of April 1, 1913,⁶ which appears in No. 176 of the Registro Oficial of the 5th of said month; and that of June 22, 1914.⁴

And if in the cases to which those notes refer the aforesaid declaration was opportune, with much greater reason is it so now, when the representative of the American Government goes to the inconceivable extreme of believing that the contents of the cablegram he has received authorizes him to request information from the Ecuadorian Foreign Office: not with respect to the cause of some aggression upon the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, but regarding the intention of the President of the Republic, in addressing to the secretary of the council of foreign bondholders, London, the cablegram of April 8—a request extremely vexatious to the Republic of Ecuador, which ought to call itself neither independent nor sovereign if it had not the ability and courage firmly to reject such a pretension.

The American Government undoubtedly very well knows, for its circumspect character would withhold it from addressing the Government of Ecuador until after having informed itself thoroughly of the facts, that the constructions of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway has given rise to rights and obligations intimately relating to the Government of Ecuador, owner of the property, the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, which entered into contract with the Government for the construction of the railway itself, and the bondholders in whose hands are the bonds issued with the Government's guarantee and by the sale of which the railway company has been provided with funds.

This union of the three parties interested in the enterprise of the said railway arises from mention in the railway bonds and in the bonds of the preferred stock (prior lien bonds?) of the contracts on which the respective bond issues are based; and from the fact that all three appeared as parties to the transaction of September 30, 1908, executed by public instrument in Quito, and likewise modified on December 8 of the same year.

According to those contracts, the fundamental right of the bondholders consists in their being paid punctually every year, in two half-yearly dividends, the sum of eight hundred and fifty-nine thousand seven hundred and forty American dollars gold ($859,740), to which sum at present the interest and sinking-fund of the railway bonds and of the prior lien bonds amount; and to ensure the effectiveness of that right, the contracts themselves contain a number of powers and privileges that they may exercise, either against the railway company, which is the principal party bound and has to effect the payment out of the profits of the railway, or against the Government of Ecuador, which is the surety with a part of its customs' receipts.

The correlative right of the Government of Ecuador as surety consists, consequently, in looking to it that the railway company pay that annual debt to the bondholders from the proceeds of the traffic, all of which go into the company's hands; and that the bondholders oblige the company to effect said payment as provided by the contracts.

And no one can quote a code of any legislative body belonging to a people even half civilized from which it does not appear that the surety or bondsman has the perfect right to adopt the measures calculated to protect his interests, and oblige the creditor duly to make good his claim against the debtor; especially if that right is clearly and expressly recognized in solemn compacts, and when the debtor, as in the case with the railway company, is one who has contracted the habit of disposing at his pleasure of the funds meant for said payment, and lacks property of his own with which to respond to the surety for the amounts the latter finds himself obliged to disburse from year to year.

Now, then, the railway company does not pay this debt to the bondholders. Why? Did the American Government take the trouble to inquire, before its representatives in Quito addressed to the Government of Ecuador the offensive note we have before us? If it has indeed made the inquiry, and if the railway company has given some explanation after its own fashion, what opinion has the American Government formed of that reply? and what steps has it taken to ascertain the accuracy thereof before wounding the dignity of a small nation, which it calls a friendly nation?

In the allegation presented by the Fiscal Attorney to the arbitration tribunal are set forth the charges of negligence and fraud which the Government of Ecuador brings against the railway company; a copy of that allegation is on file in Washington, in the State Department, translated into English, handed in there by the North American arbitrator, Mr. A. L. Miller, who retired without having fulfilled his mission.

Just as Mr. Miller in 1914, so also Mr. Janes could have made the same investigation in 1913; but Mr. Janes likewise failed to fulfill his mission, and returned to the United States, giving rise to an unexpected discussion which may have been one of the reasons why Mr. Wilson relieved him from his office and replaced him by Mr. Miller. [Here follows a long digression intended to show that the failure to arbitrate was wholly due to unreasonable behavior of the American arbitrator.]

These are, in substance, the reasons why the arbitral award has not yet been rendered; and with respect to said reasons absolutely nothing had been discussed before Mr. Miller submitted them, much less had any agreement whatever been entered into in Washington or in any place.⁵

The person, therefore, who submitted to the consideration of the Washington State Department the cablegram addressed to Mr. Cooper by General Plaza gave a false report to Secretary Bryan when he affirmed that the Ecuadorian arbitrator had not consented to arrangements made before Mr. Miller came to Ecuador.⁷

But there is nothing surprising about that falsehood, since the informant is even ignorant of the name of Mr. Miller, whom he calls "George"⁸ instead of "Alexander L."

Mr. Miller has also, on his part, submitted a report to Secretary Bryan, and therein he has probably stated the motives that induced him to withdraw from Ecuador without pronouncing sentence. At my verbal request, as Fiscal Attorney, when I was in New York, the Minister Plenipotentiary of our Republic, Dr. Gonzalo S. Córdova, asked the State Department for a copy of that report. With that report before us we could then see whether the Government of Ecuador would again be called upon to submit to inexplicable demands, in order that the arbitration suit might come to an end; but the State Department replied that it had not yet resolved to make public the document in question.

The great efforts the Government of Ecuador has made since October, 1911, to bring about the arbitration stipulated for in 1897 and 1898 with the railway company have thus been inefficacious, and the company continues to receive the proceeds of the railway and to dispose thereof, without paying its debt to the bondholders.

The Government of this Republic has not been able by friendly efforts to bring about the correct administration of the railway, nor to get access opportunely and without difficulty to the books, bills, and other original documents necessary in order to examine and certify to the effectiveness of all the expenditure, and ascertain and verify the true cost of operation, in spite of the special clause which, to this end, is set forth in the contract of June 14, 1897.

And although because of the acts of the North American arbitrators the arbitration stipulated with the company has suffered the fate we have already witnessed, the means the Government of Ecuador will employ to save its fiscal interests will under all circumstances be just and honest, it being well understood that in urgent cases, in which there is palpably not only the grave danger but the certainty of irreparable damage such as is caused by the railway company, it amounts to the same thing as far as the application of justice is concerned whether the sentence of the tribunals of justice precede or immediately follow it.

The Government of Ecuador, furthermore, very well knows what is the real importance attachable in the market to interests which, lacking any intrinsic value to sustain them in the field of truth, law, and good faith, have hastened with their surreptitious information to seek support from the Government at Washington; for the majority of the shareholders or stockholders, both of the common stock of the "B" class and of the preferred stock, have long since put up their shares for sale at the price of $750,000.

Nothing of what has been said above, of course, implies hostility to the company, and still less a failure to recognize the great benefits which the railway is called upon to contribute toward the progress of the country, once said railway line is finished and administered in the conditions which have constituted the hope—almost fatally frustrated up to date—of the Ecuadorian people.

And, while on this topic, there is need of rectifying the error into which the American Legation has fallen in stating that the railway has already produced the economic marvel of duplicating the Ecuadorian customs' revenues; for it does not take into account the fact that, unfortunately, the duplication and reduplication of the duties are the real cause of that increase, and not any commercial activity that the railway ought to have promoted but has not done so on account of the innumerable disadvantages under which the service is performed. The railway of high tariff charges, of frequent abuses in the itinerary, neglected, dangerous, practically irresponsible, with frequent derailments and slides which oblige the passengers to spend long hours by day and by night without any accommodation whatever among the snows of the Andes, causing the loss of essential connexions, has not been a stimulus but on the contrary a cause of discouragement to the commerce of the country.

⁷ For. Rel. 1913, pp. 502 and 503.

⁸ A probably unintentional misreading of "Judge."

In short, it seems to me, Mr. Minister, that the Ecuadorian Foreign Office is in a position to refuse to give the information asked for by the American Legation, founding its refusal on the precepts of international law and, if the Government so please, on the antecedent facts that I have to that end cited above.

MANUEL R. BALAREZO.

The Fiscal Attorney to the Minister of the Interior.

QUITO, May 13, 1915.

TO THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR :

After having written my note of the 11th instant there was delivered to me, at my verbal request, by the Undersecretary of the Ministry of Foreign Relations, a copy of the original English of the American note, and in said copy I find the following sentence with regard to the arbitrator, Mr. A. L. Miller: "His selection was approved and accepted by both parties."

As this statement does not appear in the copy you were pleased to send me, I said nothing about it in my above-mentioned note, and for that reason I have pleasure in pointing out to you in the present, which is complementary to the previous note, that it was not necessary for both parties either to approve or accept the appointment of either one of the arbitrators in order that they might assume the character of such.

The words of pleasurable acceptance, or other analogous terms, with which an agent of the Ecuadorian Government may have welcomed the appointment of the new arbitrator ought therefore to be regarded as the language of courtesy or as an expression of the great consideration justly due to President Wilson and to Mr. Miller, but not as belonging to the number of the requisites the case might demand for carrying on the arbitration.

I call your attention to this point because it may perhaps be advisable for the Minister for Foreign Affairs to be pleased to make it plain to the American Legation.

MANUEL R. BALAREZO.

This Ministry regards as well founded Dr. Balarezo's observations; and although therein all the points the clearing up of which was indispensable have been dealt with, I wish to add some slight observations for the purpose of preventing the truth from suffering any impairment.

The shareholders of the Southern Railway Company have endeavored, as Dr. Balarezo states, to sell their shares, both of the common and of the preferred stock, to the Government of Ecuador, for the sum of $750,000, the nominal value of the first-named being properly $284,320, and of the second, the preferred stock, $286,320.

The Government of Ecuador agreed to enter into negotiations for the acquisition of the said shares at the price of $600,000; and although for some time it has not been possible to continue said negotiations on account of the difficulties that have arisen, the business is still pending, as has been declared in a communication from the representative of the heiress of the late Mr. A. Harman, to whom said shares belong.

In Mr. Norton's report, read at the meeting of the shareholders in New York on March 2 of the present year, there appear the figures relative to the profit and loss account of the Southern Railway for the year counting from July 1, 1913, to July 1, 1914, which items, examined in the light of the contracts and of the facts, put it beyond all doubt how irregular and damaging is the present administration of the railway.

The constructing company ought to have made a first-class railway, with stations and rolling-stock in harmony with that classification. The length of the railway is only 287 miles. That being the case, the operating expenses connected with the maintenance of the track and of the equipment, the cost of fuel and water stations, miscellaneous expenses, etc., can not in a normal year amount to the exorbitant sum of two million, three hundred twenty-four thousand, nine hundred and thirty-three sures (S/2,324,933).

How can the Government accept as correct such heavy expenditure, when it is not even credible? According to the above-mentioned report, the maintenance of the line during the said year cost S/644,818, and in the maintenance of the track there was invested the sum of S/418,170; but it is known to Ecuador, that in the former no renewals of any importance were made; the work was confined to the removal of obstacles caused by the badly constructed original embankments, the repairing of bad ties, and other expenditures of slight significance. And, with respect to the maintenance of the equipment, the administrators of the railway did not then make any innovation whatever in that wretched and scant equipment with which the company has been effecting the transportation of passengers and freight, neglecting its duty under the contracts to construct a railway with first and second class cars for the transportation of passengers, and sufficient cars for the conveyance of freight.

How then could there be expended in said year in the maintenance of the track and of the equipment the sum of S/1,062,988 when it is clear the administrators of the Southern Railway made no innovations of any importance, either in the track or in the equipment?

I call your attention to the item in the said profit and loss account, that appears as the amounts of the expenditures for fuel and for water stations, the former being S/812,544 and the latter S/91,347 (sucres). With respect to the latter item, it is incomprehensible in what said amount could have been spent, since the maintenance of the water-tanks costs very little, and if these are at any time repaired, the expenditure should not exceed a few sucres. With respect to the other item, it would be necessary to have a careful investigation made by an expert, both as to all the fuel the company has imported into Ecuador, and the quantity which should be employed, according to technical knowledge, in transportation, and that which has otherwise been disposed of; and I am sure that such an investigation would prove that the fuel for transportation could not have been consumed in such excessive quantities as would be indicated by the figures given by President Norton.

With reason, therefore, in the article published on March 30 of the present year in the "Financial Times" of London, it is stated that said account of profit and loss indicates something very curious, taking into account the statement made by Mr. Norton himself to the effect that the Southern Railway in Ecuador is one of the best lines, even in respect of rolling-stock; "for which reason it would be", says the article, "a matter of common interest to know exactly how much unspent money has been included in operating expenses."

How, therefore, can the Government of Ecuador remain indifferent, in the face of that administration of the Southern Railway, which neither conforms to the stipulations of the contracts nor to the transcendent interests of Ecuador? Why, therefore, is not the Government of Ecuador to employ all the means that law and right provide for the fulfilment of the object Ecuador had in mind in making great efforts and concessions for the construction of the Southern Railway, and to enforce honest compliance with all that has been agreed upon?

Many other observations I might make; but I leave to your learned judgment, Mr. Minister, all the rest that you may think it advisable to state.

Among these may be mentioned the Huigra-Cuenca Railway (Messrs. Orenstein, Koppel & Company), the Curaray Railway and the sanitation of Guayaquil. MEMORANDUM.

The British Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the memorandum from the Department of State, dated the 7th May last, on the subject of the attitude of the Government of Ecuador towards the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company. In this memorandum was enclosed a paraphrase of a telegram sent to the American Minister at Quito by the Secretary of State on the 26th April last, in which reference was made to an attempt on the part of the Ecuadorian Government to act with the bondholders, and to ignore the rights of the stockholders of the railway company.

Sir Cecil Spring Rice has now received copy of a letter addressed by the council of foreign bondholders in London to Sir Edward Grey, from which it appears that the position, as regards this point, is as follows:

So long as the service of the railway bonds is maintained by the Government in accordance with its contract no foreclosure proceedings can be instituted. The Government of Ecuador has however announced its intention not to make any further payments for the service unless and until the bondholders foreclose on the line and so eliminate the present stockholders. It is stated that this action has been prompted by the representative of Germany. The council think that the attitude of the Government and its desire to make use of them as an instrument in effecting its purpose are made clear in the telegram sent to them by the President of Ecuador on the 8th February last, which was quoted in the instructions sent to the American Minister at Quito on April 26.

The council of foreign bondholders express great disappointment at the course adopted by President Plaza in this matter.

The British Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the reported intention of the Government of Ecuador to raise a loan of three million dollars in the United States.

Sir Cecil Spring Rice understands from verbal communications which have passed with the Department of State that the American Minister at Quito has been approached by the Ecuadorian Government on this subject, but that the United States Government do not feel disposed to encourage such a loan until the Ecuadorian Government has made some satisfactory arrangement in the case of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway, the affairs of which have recently formed the subject of correspondence between the Department and this Embassy.

On enquiry in London Sir Cecil Spring Rice is authorised to state that His Majesty's Government have learnt with much satisfaction of the attitude which the United States Government propose to take in the matter of the proposed loan, and that they will, if approached on the subject, likewise refuse any assistance.

The Ecuadorian Government urgently requests the Department's active assistance in its efforts to procure loan. The situation is critical. The army and civil employees are unpaid and unless loan is secured soon another uprising against the Government is probable. If the loan is secured now with the assistance of our Government the establishment of better relations will be aided and consequent advantages secured. I earnestly recommend prompt assistance. I am reliably informed that railway company is assisting and hope that council of foreign bondholders will also help. The British Chargé d'Affaires and I agree that until the loan is secured it is inadvisable and futile to urge remittances on delinquent coupons or payment of obligations from Ecuador to railway company.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 23, 1915—5 p. m.

Your telegram of July 19, 2 p. m. The Department is given to understand by Mr. Farr that the railway company would have no objection to the proposed loan, provided that part of loan proceeds are to apply to payment of arrears in interest and sinking fund on first mortgage prior lien, condors and salt bonds, amounting in all to some two and one half million dollars which would of course necessitate increase of loan to five or six millions; and provided further that necessary customs units pledged for service of bonds under 1908 agreement remain inviolate and that some equitable settlement be made regarding the company's claims against the Government of approximately nine hundred thousand sucres.

The Department is inclined to believe that the railway company's conditions are not unreasonable and feels that it would not be justified in assisting the Ecuadorian Government to procure a loan unless some satisfactory arrangement were made looking to the settlement of all differences between the Government and the railway company and the bondholders.

For your information the British Ambassador has advised the Department that his Government will, if approached on the matter refuse any assistance.

A paraphrase of this instruction has been sent to the British Embassy here and you may show this telegram to Mr. Jerome.

Quito, August 9, 1915—4 p. m.

Department's August 6, 2 p. m. President Plaza denies any intention of asking Congress for authority to suspend all payments until settlement of differences with railway company. In a memorandum of ten pages delivered to this Legation today he consents to pay arrearage of interest on bonds from proceeds of loan but denies that Ecuador owes railway company anything. His memorandum will be sent at once by mail.

SIR: Referring to my telegram of August 9, 1915, 4 p. m., and previous telegrams to and from the Department, relating to conditions upon which the Department might be willing to assist Ecuador in obtaining a loan, I have the honor to enclose herewith copies of a memorandum prepared by the President of Ecuador and delivered to this Legation on August 9, 1915, together with translation thereof, which memorandum is in reply to a memorandum submitted by me to President Plaza on July 28, 1915, in which I gave to him the substance of the Department's telegram of July 23, 1915, 5 p. m.

MEMORANDUM.

The Government of the United States of North America would decidedly support the placing of a loan for Ecuador in the New York market, provided that part of the proceeds of such a loan were devoted to paying the matured coupons of the bondholders of the Ecuadorian public debt, and the pecuniary claims formulated against the Ecuadorian treasury by the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company.

I. PAYMENT OF THE ARREARS ON THE BONDS OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.

This wish on the part of the American Government coincides absolutely with the desires of my Government, which, notwithstanding its conviction that the operation of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway should yield sufficient profits to attend to the punctual payment of the interest and sinking-fund of the railway bonds, would be disposed to assign, out of the loan to be contracted, the amount that might be necessary for the payment of what we owe to the bondholders.

But these declarations on my part call for one or two comments. I must first of all call attention to the strict punctuality that characterized my administration during the years 1901-1905 in the payment of these obligations, the default in which dates from Sr. Alfaro's second period. Then I must point out that I have observed the same punctuality even in the years 1912 and 1913 and the first half of 1914, in spite of the heavy extraordinary expenses entailed on me by the internal war in which we have so long been engaged, for it must be remembered that since August 11, 1911, the life of the country has been abnormal. Again, it is indispensable to remark that the great decrease in the customs receipts of the country, caused by the European war, is the only reason for our having suspended, during the past year, the service of the public debt; for we have suffered a diminution of nearly 6,000,000 sucres in the fiscal revenues, and an additional charge of 6,000,000 in war expenditure during 1914 and up to date in the present year.

Extraordinary and fatal circumstances are therefore those that have made it impossible for my Government to attend duly to that sacred obligation.

But it has never been in the mind of our public powers to disregard the fulfilment of that duty; and the proof thereof is that, by the law of October 10, 1913, the contracting of a loan of £2,000,000 was authorized, in order, out of the proceeds thereof, to attend to the payment of debts, and among them preferably that of the overdue coupons.

From another point of view it is indispensable to record that if His Excellency President Wilson and his Honorable Secretary of State would grant us the favor of listening only two hours to our representative in Washington and to the financial agent of this country, Messrs. Córdova and Cueva García, the American Government would become fully convinced of the following great and painful truths:

1st. The operation of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway has yielded a sufficient income to sustain its administration and maintenance and to contribute large amounts towards the service of the railway bonds.

2d. But the total receipts of the business have been invested by the company's board of directors, without the consent of our Government, in incredible expenses of administration, and in reconstructing the railway line and acquiring rolling stock and the consequent accessories, because the line was constructed flimsily without the slightest professional conscience; and because there is the testimony of the high officials of the company that confirms the fact that, with the income of only a section of the railway, that of Guayaquil-Alausí, the Alausí-Guamote section was constructed;

3d. So certain is the very bad and deficient construction of the line that, when the company tried to effect the delivery thereof to our Government, the latter could not accept it, because from the survey and inspection of the work it appeared that it was purely provisional, since it was badly ballasted, without permanent bridges, with the very worst stations, and very scant rolling-stock. Since then (the year 1911), the company has changed ties, refilled the embankments, acquired bridges, etc., out of the proceeds of the railway, without ever delivering to the Government one single cent.

4th. These unquestionable facts, that no employee of the company could deny if he were called upon to declare under oath before any American judge, prove that the Guayaquil & Quito Railway, which should have cost Ecuador only the amount agreed upon of $12,282,000 gold, and delivered by us in bonds of our debt, has cost up to date some millions more; for to the $5,000,000 that our Government added to that amount agreed upon, and which brings it up to the sum of $17,000,000 gold—the cost of 266 miles of railway—there must be added the amounts which should have been received by our Treasury as profit on the operation of the railway, which profit, instead of serving to pay off the interest and sinking-fund of the bonds, has been employed by the company, without the consent of our Government, for the construction and administration of the line; and

5th. The American Government and people are completely unaware of the incalculable damage that this railway company causes the commerce of the United States and the just aspirations of its officials to win for the honor of their country a decisive influence in the nations of Central and South America, made to be felt by its diplomacy, its capital and its industries. The procedure observed by the company in its relations with the Ecuadorian Government, people and industries is so absolutely unacceptable that it has ended by creating an atmosphere of misgiving in our country respecting the influence of American capital, politics and efforts. And so abusive and illegal is this procedure, that I entertain the profound conviction that the Government of the United States would never tolerate it even for a moment in any company of whatever nature which might attempt to adopt it in the territory of the Union.

These antecedents, known to me in their minutest details, oblige me to state, with the moral authority to which I am given a right by my personal and administrative honesty, which no one even among my most rancorous enemies fails to recognize and which will be the only possession of mine I shall bequeath to my children, the profound and painful surprise with which I observe the resolute support that is granted by the honest Government of a great nation, such as the Northern Republic, to a company which has evaded all its obligations and refused to recognize any of our rights, creating for its (native) country, capital and men the most lamentable atmosphere it is possible to conceive of, under the shelter, too, of the American Government, which fact it has taken care to proclaim loudly in order to intimidate any one who might dare to remark upon its conduct. Nevertheless, I repeat, notwithstanding these reserves, which I think it my duty to set forth respecting so disagreeable a matter, I declare that we should have no objection to devote what might be necessary of a loan of ten million dollars to the payment to the holders of our bonds of the coupons due, and that such a loan we would guarantee with 50% of our customs receipts for export duties, which guaranty would greatly exceed the amount of the annual service that debt would impose on us.

II. PAYMENT OF THE RAILWAY COMPANY'S CLAIMS.

The suggestion of this condition or demand on the part of the Government of the United States in order that it may help us in the negotiations to which I am referring, and which give occasion to the present memorandum, shows me that His Excellency President Wilson and his Honorable Secretary of State, who have been affording such great proofs of the intense sentiment of justice which inspires their acts, are absolutely, totally unaware of the situation of the railway company with respect to our Government.

If the company thinks it has the right to make claim against our Treasury for, say, ten units, our Government has claims for one hundred units. Such is the proportion. How then can we be resigned to pay what we do not owe, which, even if we did owe it, would never be enough to compensate us for what is due us?

I can understand without difficulty that the company's agents have, on their part, been most careful to work to the end that the American Government should become acquainted only with such information as favors the cause of said company; and I really think they have succeeded to the full extent of their wishes; but it will suffice for my Government to say two words to put things in their true light with respect to the significance of the claims of each of the two parties.

Thus, independently of the foregoing, there is ground for setting briefly forth the circumstances, all of them in favor of the claims of the Government against the company.

1st. In order that the company might finish the line and bring the trains to the city of Quito, and that President Alfaro might inaugurate this work that has cost the country so many sacrifices, the Government lent to the Company many thousand sucres, which the latter has not returned, and which repayment it appears to ignore.

2d. The company organized an exotic firm called the "Express Company" to which it granted the privilege of being the only depositary of freight to be transported by the railway. Whoever sent freight had to come to an understanding with the Express Company, which charged a fixed tariff rate, high of course, and paid the company much lower rates—the minimum the company could charge. By means of this shameless combination, the income resulting from the operation of the line was the most insignificant possible; while the shareholders of the Express, who were the very members of the company's board of directors, filled themselves up with the high rates they charged private consignees. So scandalous was this audacious machination that the company was obliged to suspend it, on the energetic intervention of my Government; but, meanwhile, what is the total of the amounts of which the railway, and consequently our Government, were defrauded by means of this ingenious method of lessening the proceeds of the operation of the line?

3d. Being aware of the pitiful condition of the company, we resolved to deliver to it, with the consent of the bondholders as an extra help, $2,486,000 gold in preference bonds (prior lien bonds), which amount was to be invested in the payment of the debts that harassed the company, in the acquisition of rolling-stock, the putting in order of the stations along the line, the formation of a fund for administration, and for the cancellation and withdrawal of 233 bonds of the special series. Well, with the exception of the payment of those debts, the company did not comply with any of the other conditions in consideration of which the Government of Ecuador and the bondholders resolved to make that considerable pecuniary sacrifice; and the mockery has even gone to the extreme of neither cancelling the aforesaid 233 bonds, worth $233,000 gold, nor their coupons, worth $40,785 gold, since the holders thereof continually claim the half-yearly service before the Republic's trustee in London, the Government of Ecuador being obliged to present a claim to Messrs. E. H. Norton & Co. of New York, who were the financial agents of the company in 1908, the year in which that operation was effected, the principal of which firm being Mr. E. H. Norton, who is to-day the president of the company. Could more evident proof be afforded of the informality, to say the least of it, of the procedure of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company?

4th. It is necessary to call attention to the fact that, in addition to this extraordinary assistance the company received from the Government of Ecuador, the holders of our bonds on their part contributed to help the company by waiving their right to the proceeds of a whole coupon (the one due on July 2, 1907) which amounted to $359,700 gold, which proves more and more that the company has been an immense dump for gold, with no profit to any of the interested parties except the gentlemen who manage the company according to their sovereign will.

5th. The external manifestations of that dictatorial will have sought legal appearances to cover their true significance. Thus, with the object of justifying the incorrect and irritating inversion, greatly prejudicial to our interests, of the funds proceeding from the operation of the railway, the real expenses of administration being deducted, the company has conceived the very curious system of creating a series of stocks, reserve, depreciation, etc., to the accounts of which it assigns those surplus funds, until it leaves our Government without the option to a single cent of said proceeds. In this connection, the company has had the audacity to establish in New York a capital account, to which, according to its own books, there were applied the surplus funds resulting from operation for the year 1911.

6th. What would the Government of the United States of North America say of a railway company operating in its territory that should not keep its books in a scrupulous and frank manner that would show at any moment the details of its administration? Can it be acceptable that the delegates of the Government of Ecuador have no means of studying the book-keeping of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway, constructed with our country's money, simply because the administrators of that railway refuse to permit the examination of all their books and documents?

7th. I do not believe there can be any railway company in the world in the book-keeping of which the accounts of the operation of the line and those relating to construction and reconstruction of same can be confounded. They are direct headings which no one can honestly confound; but in our Guayaquil & Quito Railway the confusion has taken place and does take place systematically, in order, by such means, to employ in the construction of the line the whole of the income derived from operating, and leave the Government without the receipt of a single cent with which to attend to the service of the bonds which have paid and over-paid for that work.

8th. To these merely economic aspects of our claims which amount to a sum much greater, very much greater, than that the Railway Company thinks it has a right to claim, my Government would have to add very bitter complaints about the service of the railway itself, the system of tariffs, the relations of the officials and employees with the public, etc., which complaints an honorable Government like that of the United States of North America could never disregard.

So profound is my conviction respecting these particulars that if it depended on me alone I should not hesitate to appoint as the judge of our cause any honorable functionary of the United States, with the full assurance that he would do us so much justice that it would exceed what we strive for—so unfounded are the claims of the company, and so just our demands.

Then again, in order to accept the suggestion made by the Government of His Excellency Mr. Wilson, our Government would have to ignore the stipulations of the contract that governs its relations with the said Company, which again, for the hundredth time, would thus be in a position to impose its dictatorial will on Ecuador and its Government.

I think that His Excellency the President of the Union can not have appreciated what a step of this kind would mean: it would arouse the Ecuadorian national conscience, totally discredit our Government in the opinion of the public, and increase to the utmost the opposition of the country to anything that might be understood to be related to the United States of North America, against whose interests of every kind the railway has conspired as though dealing with an eternal enemy. Should the American continent learn in all its details what the Railway Company has done with us, I am sure that the whole of America would declare itself in favor of our cause; and this solidarity would be unanimous and warm, should continental opinion learn that said company has the support of a democratic, just and honorable government like that of His Excellency Mr. Wilson.

This must seem strange to the North American Government and people; but if His Excellency Mr. Wilson, wished to learn the details of the annoying history of the Company, I am sure, once he became acquainted therewith, he would not hesitate for a second to exercise his greatest influence in order to reorganize entirely the administration of that Company, sweeping out with an energetic hand all of its employees from the first to the last, and placing at the head thereof an honest and careful functionary thoroughly conversant with railway affairs—a man like Mr. John Smith, the former general manager of the Panama-Colon Railway.

With the direction and administration of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway placed in other hands, the Ecuadorian Government and people would recognize in this change of the situation the direct influence of the Government of the United States; and slowly but surely national sentiment would be modified in favor of the politics and the commercial expansion of the Great Republic.

III. CONCLUSION.

My Government would therefore be much obliged to the Government of His Excellency President Wilson, if conjointly with its support in the negotiations we are carrying on for the purpose of contracting for a loan in the New York market, which loan with that support might be of ten million dollars, it would also resolve to receive information from our representatives, and in accordance therewith to contribute powerfully and decisively towards the reorganization of the Railway Company.

We, on our part, out of the proceeds of that loan, would have great pleasure in paying all arrears to the holders of our bonds.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 11, 1915—6 p. m.

The Department is informed that Ecuadorian Congress has passed resolution declaring arbitration Guayaquil-Quito Railway case canceled under law of Ecuador, and that the Defensor Fiscal has been instructed to take legal proceedings to lay embargo on railway company's properties in order to obtain immediate possession of the railroad.

Should this be confirmed by you, make formal protest against this arbitrary proceeding which would make it necessary for this Government to consider the adoption of such measures as would give ample protection to this American corporation in its just rights.

It is needless again to point out that the failure of Judge Miller's mission, arranged at the particular request of the Ecuadorian Government, was brought about by the failure on the part of that Government to carry out the written undertakings entered into by its accredited representative with this Government. That the Ecuadorian Government should entertain taking any such steps is all the more surprising to the Department at this time when the exercise of its good offices has been requested to assist Ecuador in obtaining a loan in this country, where the effect of the reported proceedings against the railway company will be most detrimental.

Report promptly, as the Department hopes to be able to reply to President Plaza's proposals transmitted in your No. 130, of August 19, within a few days.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, October 19, 1915.

SIR: Referring to the Department's telegram of October 11, 1915, 6 p. m., and to my telegram of October 13, 3 p. m., I have the honor to make the following report.

The first information this Legation received that the Congress of Ecuador was even considering such a resolution was furnished it on the evening of October 6, when a translation of the resolution, and of the report of the mixed committee reporting the same was delivered to the Legation. At the same time the Legation was informed that the resolutions had been considered in secret joint session of the Congress, but that they would probably be considered in open session before the close of Congress, which was to, and did, close on October 8. Accordingly, on October 7 I personally called upon President Plaza, brought the matter to his attention and requested him to use his good offices to prevent the passage of the resolutions. His answer to that request was that he would speak to Dr. Baquerizo Moreno, the President of the Senate, leaving the implication that his remarks to Dr. Baquerizo Moreno would be in harmony with my request.

The next information I received on the subject was that the resolutions had passed Congress at 11 o'clock on the morning of October 8.

Immediately upon receipt of the Department's telegram of October 11, I prepared and delivered to the Minister for Foreign Affairs my note No. 154 of October 13, 1915, of which copies are herewith enclosed. To this note no answer has yet been received.

I also enclose herewith for the information of the Department Spanish copies of the resolutions and the committee report thereon, with translation.

I respectfully point out to the Department that the first paragraph of its telegram above mentioned is not entirely sustained by the resolutions in this, that the resolutions do not instruct the Defensor Fiscal to embargo the properties of the Railway Company in order to obtain immediate possession thereof. But the statement is sufficiently accurate, and certainly all the facts make a case which justify the protest made. Indeed, I should have felt entirely warranted in filing a note of protest even in the absence of any instruction from the Department.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, October 13, 1915.

MR. MINISTER: In compliance with telegraphic instructions from my Government, I have the honor respectfully to invite your excellency's attention to the following important subject, and to submit some views of my Government in relation thereto.

The fact of the passage by the Ecuadorian Congress of a resolution declaring that arbitration of differences between the Government of Ecuador and the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company under the arbitration agreement stipulated for previously has lapsed, and instructing the Fiscal Attorney, in agreement with the Minister of Public Works, to bring and prosecute suit against the Railway Company in the courts of Ecuador, has been brought to the knowledge of the Department of State at Washington.

That action of this nature should have been taken by the Congress of Ecuador is a matter of great surprise to the Government of the United States; and in pursuance of my instructions it becomes my duty to make formal and earnest protest to your excellency's Government against such action, which, if persisted in, would make it necessary for my Government to consider the adoption of such measures as will give adequate protection to this American corporation in its just rights.

That the Government of Ecuador should entertain or consider taking such a step is all the more surprising to the Department of State of my Government at this time when the exercise of its good offices has been requested to assist Ecuador in securing a loan in the United States, where the obvious effect of the reported proceedings against the Railway Company will be highly detrimental.

Your excellency's well known high sense of just, equitable, and fair dealing induces me to believe, with great confidence that your excellency will after due deliberation agree with me, that the action of the Ecuadorian Congress above mentioned was unwarranted and unjustified and not in harmony with the customary friendly relations which, I am glad to say, have existed for so long a time between our respective Governments.

Resolution passed by Congress October 8, 1915.

Whereas the legal term of six months having expired within which the Arbitrators Alfredo Baquerizo Moreno and A. L. Miller should have pronounced on the controversy between the Government of Ecuador and the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company respecting said railway, the arbitration agreement has lapsed; and

Whereas the arbitration agreement having lapsed, legal jurisdiction is restored, according to Article 77 and Clause 2 of Article 82 of the Organic Law of the Judicial Power. Therefore be it

Resolved by the Congress of the Republic of Ecuador:

Article 1. The Fiscal Attorney, in agreement with the Minister of Public Works, shall bring suit to compel the said Company to fulfill its obligations to Ecuador; without prejudice, however, to the negotiation of bases for an extra-judicial settlement or of bases for a new arbitration not open to the objections made to the previous one, said bases to be submitted to the Congress for its approval.

Article 2. With due reserve of rights and until final judgment is rendered, the Executive may provisionally agree with the Railway Company upon a friendly and equitable administration and operation of the railway, disbursement of the proceeds thereof, and application of contract provisions not in conflict with said agreement.

Article 3. The Executive shall publish in the national and foreign press the facts giving rise to the said controversy and the history thereof, and shall disburse for the purpose, out of the extraordinary expense fund, the amount necessary.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, November 2, 1915.

SIR: Referring to my dispatch No. 145, of October 19, 1915, I now have the honor to make the following additional report:

On the evening of October 19, 1915, note No. 212 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in answer to my No. 154 of October 13, 1915, was delivered at the Legation, and I inclose herewith copies thereof, together with translation. On October 20, 5 p. m., I informed the Department by telegraph of the receipt of said note. Upon Mr. Norton's return to Quito on October 28, we had an interview, and as a result thereof I sent my telegram to the Department at ten o'clock on the morning of said day.

The Department will doubtless recall that the Minister for Foreign Affairs has on two prior occasions, in his official notes, raised the question of the right of the United States to deal diplomatically with the differences existing between the Government of Ecuador and the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, and that this Legation has transmitted copies of such notes to the Department.

I particularly invite the attention of the Department to the portion of the note of the Minister for Foreign Affairs herewith inclosed wherein he refers to a note No. 18 addressed by the Secretary of State to the Ecuadorian Minister at Washington under date of May 12, 1915, from which he makes a rather extended quotation.

The Minister for Foreign Relations to Minister Hartman.

No. 212.]

MINISTRY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Quito, October 19, 1915.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your excellency's note No. 154 dated the 13th instant.

Therein your excellency informs me [etc.]

I shall begin by pointing out to your excellency, in reply to the note I have paraphrased above, that the origin of the continual discrepancies which, with respect to the difficulties between my Government and the railway, have latterly arisen between our Governments, is to be found in the fact that there unfortunately exist two different ways of viewing this question: The opinion of the Government of the United States which, contrary to the doctrine accepted by that Government itself in other cases and always maintained by international law, wishes to intervene diplomatically in a matter in which such a course is not admissible; and the opinion of the Government of Ecuador which, in accordance with international law and in harmony with its prescriptions, accepts diplomatic intervention only in cases of a refusal of justice.

The position of the Government of Ecuador has not been controverted with reasons by your excellency's Government, but with acts, such as your excellency's notes which gave occasion for those from this Ministry, numbers 192 of June 22, 1914,⁴ 92 of May 14 of the present year,⁹ 93 of the same date,¹⁰ and the present one.

As long as the intervention of your excellency's Government is not circumscribed by the limits which international law establishes, my Government can not regard it as legitimate, nor can it believe that its differences with the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company are differences with the Government of the United States, with which, during a century of independent life, Ecuador has proceeded, as it wishes to always, in the most perfect harmony. Never, in so prolonged a space of time, has the Government of the great nation of Washington, of Hancock and of Lincoln had occasion for any disagreement with Ecuador. If we except the Santos claim, a small matter rapidly settled by arbitration, the United States has never had anything to demand of this honest and respectful but self-possessed and respectable people called the Republic of Ecuador. It has been reserved to the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, which daily receives so many benefits from the country which it endeavors to involve in diplomatic difficulties, to make an attempt against that tradition of friendship carefully maintained by our Governments.

In consequence I inform your excellency that my Government can not admit that your excellency's Government has the right to protest against an act of the Congress of Ecuador which only affects the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company and can not be a matter for diplomatic action, since it neither is nor implies a refusal of justice.

And so much the less right can I recognize in your excellency's Government to protest against the resolution of the Ecuadorian Congress, which is based on the lapse of the arbitration agreed upon between our Government and the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, since said lapse has been tacitly declared by your excellency's Government in the note No. 18 which the Secretary of State of the United States addressed to our Minister in Washington under date of May 12, 1915. The Government of your excellency and the Congress of Ecuador have therefore concurred on this point; and your excellency may consequently form an idea of the magnitude of our surprise at a protest from the representative of the Government of the United States against what may be said, as far as the grounds therefor are concerned, to be nothing more than the corroboration of the respected opinion of that Government itself. Only, from that point of coincidence, two diverse deductions have emanated:

(a) that of your excellency's Government which seems to incline towards the idea that the arrangement between the Government of Ecuador and the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company should be effected by diplomatic action; and

(b) that of the Congress of Ecuador, which resolves to facilitate said arrangement by judicial action without prejudice to some new possible combination.

The pertinent part of the note of the Secretary of State of the United States to which I refer is in answer to a suggestion made by our representative in Washington, precisely in the effort to seek possible means of a solution. It reads thus:—

Your suggestion with reference to the provisions in the contract between your Government and the Company for the arbitration of the matter in dispute loses force by reason of the circumstance that attempts at arbitration twice arranged by this Department have in each instance failed; and, referring especially to your note of March 13, 1915, the Department, after mature deliberation, has concluded that it is amply justified in taking up, diplomatically, the present status of the relations of the Government of Ecuador and the Railway Company, and accordingly has instructed the American Minister at Quito to make various inquiries of the Government of Ecuador with respect to its attitude towards the Company, as you were informed upon your visits to the Department on May 6 and 7.

If the Government of your excellency supposes itself authorized by the lapse of the arbitration to employ diplomatic action, which sometimes signifies the use of force, to settle with my Government the differences it has with the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, how can it be surprised that the Congress of Ecuador wishes to employ the legal course, that of justice, before its own very respectable tribunals?

Counting upon the benevolence of the Government of the United States, my Government could find in the present an opportunity to ask it respectfully the course it would adopt, if it were in our place, so that, in view of the two failures suffered by the arbitration, of which my Government can not be justly accused, an end might be put to a situation the juridical status of which is immensely prejudicial to Ecuador, because it signifies the permanence of the system of operation of the railway which, according to the well-known phrase of the "Financial Times," beats the world record in the matter of losses and bad administration.

What has been resolved on by our Congress is but a movement of the instinct of national preservation in view of the railway problem, which is the evil that most largely contributes, not only to the unprecedented financial crisis we suffer from in spite of the surplus of our production over our consumption, but also, what is still worse, to nip in the bud every effort to stimulate progress and well-being dependent on financial operations which might have been effected in the United States.

The Congress of Ecuador has therefore been wanting neither in authority, justice nor moderation in the resolution which has given occasion for your excellency's protest, and which, furthermore, does not exclude the possibility of a new transaction that may render judicial action unnecessary.

Congress has neither thought to give offense to the Government of the United States, nor to impair in any sense the harmony of its traditional relations with our Government, because no one in Ecuador confounds so respectable and eminent an entity with the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company; so that there can not be attributed to the Ecuadorian Congress, without conspicuous injustice, purposes or intentions that would be in direct opposition to the desire of all Ecuadorians in the sense of preserving unalterable the relations of friendship with the Government of the United States.

In judging therefore of the resolution of our Congress, I regret to differ from the opinion of so well-balanced and justice-loving a person as your excellency, from whose ideas I can only disassociate myself in so exceptional a case as this, in which it is not possible to judge isolatedly of certain acts that originate in a series of complex antecedents which, in their turn, arise from substantial discrepancies of opinion.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
November 19, 1915—6 p. m.

Referring to the memorandum transmitted in your number 130 of August 19, wherein President Plaza agreed to set aside sufficient of loan proceeds to pay all outstanding indebtedness to bondholders, refused to settle claims of the railway company, asked the Department to hear Ecuador's case against the railway from the Ecuadorian representative here with a view to reorganization of the railway administration, and requested the support of this Government in the negotiations for a loan of ten million dollars, you may inform the President that the Department is willing to lend its assistance so far as it can properly do so in obtaining a loan, provided,

First: that daily payments be immediately resumed for the service of the bonds, the stoppage of which payments have been solely due to the application of pledged customs revenues to other purposes; and Second: that the Government of Ecuador, in view of the statement of President Plaza that he would be satisfied with the judgment of Ecuador's cause by an American functionary, engage itself to designate such official, with the approval of the United States Government, for the purpose of examining into the rightfulness of Ecuador's claims against the railway and the company's claims against Ecuador, and of rendering a final decision, it being understood that the functionary shall not question the settlement under the transaction contract incorporated in the arbitral award of 1908.

As regards the President's request for a hearing for Minister Córdova, the Department offered to give the Minister an opportunity for full and frank discussion of this matter in its note to him of July 30 last. The Minister has made no mention of the matter since that time. As regards reorganization of the administration of the railway, this question might be considered after the functionary has rendered a decision.

You will promptly take up the foregoing with President Plaza and endeavor to obtain his formal acceptance of these stipulations.

In compliance with said instruction, I presented the protest in my note No. 162 dated November 24, 1915, addressed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, but have not yet received a reply. Upon receipt of the reply I will report both its contents and the contents of my note of protest above mentioned.

In further compliance with said instructions, I enclose herewith copies of my note No. 130 of May 8, 1915, to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, together with copies and translation of his reply thereto, of which last-named document I telegraphed the substance to the Department in my telegram of May 19, 4 p. m. I would have reported fully by mail the contents of my protest as well as the reply of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, but in the meantime the identical question raised by the Minister for Foreign Affairs in his note above referred to had been presented again in his note of May 14, to which I referred in my No. 118 dated June 4, 1915. MR. MINISTER: In compliance with an instruction of my Government I have the honor respectfully to bring to the attention of your excellency the substance of a communication addressed to the Department of State by the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company.

That communication states that the Company is informed that the "Chief Executive has been authorized to apply as much as forty per cent of all the Government income to the payment of debts in current accounts with the banks of the country, and to use for the same purpose up to sixty per cent of the funds provided for public credit and public works," and that such a disbursement of the Government's income could not be carried out without infringing upon the contractual duties which the Government has with the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company.

While of course my Government assumes that your excellency's Government does not contemplate any use of the revenues of the country which will infringe the guaranty given the Railway Company, and brings the matter to the attention of your excellency only in a precautionary sense, yet it expresses the hope that it may receive at an early opportunity a definite reply from your excellency's Government, both on the point raised in this note and the one raised in my note No. 66 of May 16, 1914.

MINISTRY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Quito, May 14, 1915.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your excellency's note of the 8th instant, in which you call my attention to the substance of a communication addressed to the Department of State by the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company.

In reply I have the honor to say to your excellency the same that I expressed to you in my note No. 192 of June 22, 1914, in which I gave, in my opinion, a definite answer to that of your excellency No. 66 of May 16 of the same year.

My Government regards acceptance of the intervention of any Power in a matter in which diplomatic action has no legal place as incompatible with the sovereignty of Ecuador and with its status as a free and independent nation.

This excuses me from going into the details to which your excellency refers in the note under acknowledgment.

The railway company is free to deal directly with our Ministry of Public Works and to lay before it the claims that it considers justified by the plans and acts of my Government. That Ministry is the only avenue by which foreign companies, such as the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Company, may approach my Government when, as in the present case, its claims are not based on denial of justice.

Permit me to reiterate to your excellency the language of my note of June 22 last where I say that, considering the spirit of justice that inspires your excellency's Government, and the Panamerican idea of cordial and intimate relations which has been present always, and of late especially, in the relations between Ecuador and the United States, my Government hopes that the Government of your excellency will not find in these questions matter for diplomatic intervention.

The honesty and patriotism on which the leading men of a country necessarily desire to base their administrative acts are antecedents which must not be ignored in examining an accusation, even without giving it full credence but entertaining it only in a precautionary way.

It is to be supposed that in the present case my Government has no thought of impairing obligations already established but, rather, proposes to favor them directly or indirectly. The railway company has not an atom more interest than the Government of Ecuador in the faithful fulfillment of the contract between them, even in the part of it which contains obligations imposed on the Government alone; and the insistence of the Company on seeking shelter in diplomatic action is certainly neither the most upright nor the most appropriate way of settling the pending difficulties.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Quito, [not dated; received December 2, 1915.]

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF ECUADOR IN REPLY TO THE CONFIDENTIAL PROPOSALS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA.

The President of Ecuador has the honor to salute his excellency, the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of North America, Chas. S. Hartman, Esquire, and to beg of him that, in reply to his memorandum of the 22d instant, he will be pleased to transmit to his Government the following answer:

I have studied with particular attention the conditions the Government at Washington formulates in order to resolve to aid our Government in the placing of a loan of ten million dollars; and as the result of that study it becomes my duty to remark on said conditions in the following terms:

FIRST PROPOSITION.

The memorandum to which I refer says:

First. That Ecuador immediately resume daily payments for the service of the bonds, the payments thereof having been stopped solely because of the application of the pledged customs revenues to other and different purposes.

If my Government were in a position to resume the daily payments to which the proposition refers, it would not need to negotiate a loan, nor wait for a foreign power to suggest that measure, since it would of its own accord hasten to adopt it. If we apply for credit abroad it is because we have not the means to pay, on account of the decrease of about five million sucres in our customs revenues, the only ones we possess, for we lack internal taxes of any importance. And as we have not the means of living, which is a government's first care, we have been obliged to employ in administrative expenses all the fiscal revenues, including the revenues designed to cover the guaranty of the railway bonds which should be attended to with the profits of the company, and only in the second place by the Ecuadorian State simply as a subsidiary guarantor.

In normal times, our ordinary revenues suffice to satisfy all our needs. But for the European war which has absolutely restricted our import commerce, and our internal war of three years duration which has obliged us to keep in active service a numerous army which is barely fed, our financial situation would not have needed the help of a loan to satisfy the internal and foreign obligations of the country, so that, with that 45% of the import duties and of the other revenues pledged to the guaranty of the railway bonds, we should have not only enough to cover two coupons of those bonds, annually, but four. And my own Government has proved this during its administration of 1901 to 1905 and 1912 to 1914.

In that connection I recall with legitimate satisfaction that, notwithstanding the heavy disbursements we had to make in 1912, 1913 and the first half of 1914, to quell the internal revolt which afflicted us, my Government punctually attended to the service of the railway bonds, not only in respect of what was due thereby, but paying three of the five coupons which the Government of Sr. Alfaro left in default. It was only on the outbreak of the European war and on account of the falling off of our imports that we were obliged to suspend that service. And, in suspending it, let it be understood that we did so with the firm resolve to resume it as soon as we might be barely in a position to do so, appealing meanwhile to foreign credit to place us up to date with the holders of those bonds. If the Department of State of the American Government and the railway company had not prevented, through their influence, the placing of the loan we have had in project in the United States market, our country would perhaps have obtained it long since, and the bondholders would have been paid.

On account of the wealth of its treasury, the American Government does not appreciate the position of the Government of Ecuador; but if the former could imagine itself with its customs revenues reduced to a minimum, without internal resources, and with the burden of a civil war, I am sure it would agree with us that it could not avoid adopting the measure of investing the whole of the fiscal receipts in the maintenance of public administration. We who have suspended the service of the State's guaranty of the railway bonds have not yet reached the extreme of issuing treasury notes of obligatory circulation. And it is certain that we shall not reach that extreme, even though, as at the present moment, we may not be able to cover even the salaries of the personnel of military, police and civil employees, and confine ourselves to provide the first mentioned with food.

During the Government of Sr. Alfaro, the railway company ignored the bondholders. The payment of five coupons was postponed; and the company said nothing, because in exchange for its passivity the head of that Government, intimately bound up with the company, allowed the latter to do whatever it had a mind to, always to the detriment of Ecuadorian sovereignty and interests. Today it remonstrates, because my Government does not leave it the former margin of arbitrary acts and iniquitous exploitation. Now, in spite of the fact that my Government has employed the services of the railway in the frequent transportation of troops during the three years the revolution has lasted, what we have paid month by month to the company is infinitely less than what the Government of Sr. Alfaro caused the company to earn in freight ad hoc, in an equal proportion of time. It is natural it should complain.

But, on the ground of justice, it is not natural that the Government of the United States should extend its decided protection in terms so unequivocal that said Government should have only pressure for the Ecuadorian Government and favors for the company. Your Government has the undoubted right to deprive us, in its own country, of the benefits of credit; but in doing so, yielding to the efforts of the railway company, and without taking into the slightest consideration the grounds of our complaints and claims, it forgets that our economic ills have their origin in the conduct of that company; for an upright and intelligent administration of the railway should leave over sufficient profits to cover those very obligations that today burden Ecuador, for no other reason than that of its position as guarantor who must pay all instead of the company.

In short, I judge that, unless we obtain the loan, we shall not be able to resume the daily payment to the bondholders of the 45% of the import duties and other fiscal receipts pledged to the service of the railway. On the other hand, I wish to place on record that if we strive to place a foreign loan, it is precisely with a view to cancel all arrears due to the bondholders.

SECOND PROPOSITION.

The memorandum to which I refer says:

Second. That in view of the declaration made by President Plaza that he would be willing to have the cause of Ecuador judged by an American functionary, Ecuador shall agree to designate such official subject to the approval of the United States Government, and that such functionary shall examine into the merits and rightfulness of the claims of Ecuador against the railway company, and the claims of the railway company against Ecuador, and shall render a final decision thereon; it being understood, however, that the functionary so named shall not question the settlement under the contract agreed upon and passed by arbitral award of 1908.

This proposition makes it clear that an erroneous interpretation has been given to the statement made by me in the memorandum of August 9 last. In that document, on page 9, lines 4 to 10 inclusive, I said literally as follows:

So profound is my conviction respecting these particulars that if it depended on me alone I should not hesitate to appoint as judge of our cause any honorable functionary of the United States, with the full assurance that he would do us so much justice that it would exceed what we strive for—so unfounded are the claims of the company and so just our demands.

As is seen by the paragraph transcribed, I made an hypothesis, when declaring that, if it depended on me alone, I should not hesitate, etc. But that step, which I should be ready to take as head of the State, does not depend upon the Ecuadorian Executive, for it is manifest that so important a measure would be solely within the competence of the Legislative Power, unless I resolved to evade the Constitution and the laws, a thing of which I am incapable, and which would settle nothing because such a dictatorial act would lack any validity, present or future. That design did not pass through my mind, for I confined myself to declaring that my faith in the justice of our cause is so profound that, if it were possible for me to do so, I should not hesitate a minute to submit it to the decision of any honorable American magistrate. I said nothing more, for I had nothing more to advance, and I attribute the said erroneous interpretation to a disfigurement of ideas produced in translating the Spanish text of the said memorandum into English.

And today I maintain what I then said: if I were empowered to act discretionally in the settlement of these questions with the railway company—but let it be understood that I am not so empowered and that consequently I can not do so—I should not hesitate to ask of President Wilson himself, or of his Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, that, after studying personally the history of the relations of the Government of Ecuador with the railway company, he decide without appeal all the claims submitted by both parties.

I am not, however, authorized to act as the American Government suggests in its second proposition; and in this respect could do nothing more than seek a way to reach a direct settlement with the company, should the latter formulate concrete and admissible propositions, which settlement would have to be submitted for the approval of Congress.

Without any intention of discussing the point, and with the desire to refrain from accepting a false precedent, I deem it necessary to remark that a manifest error is incurred in making reference to an arbitral award of 1908, which has not existed, for as a settlement was agreed upon at that time the necessity for arbitration was thereby eliminated.¹¹

My Government can not, therefore, accept the propositions of the Government of the United States; the first, because it implies for my country an obligation that the present economic situation does not warrant; and the second, because the Executive is not authorized to accept it.

Hence my confidential memorandum of August 9 last stands unimpaired.

I am pleased to avail [etc.]

Your December 10, 4 p. m. The Department will await receipt of copy of your memorandum of November 22 and of President Plaza's reply of December 7 [2] before giving further instructions in the matter. Meanwhile endeavor to secure resumption of daily payments for the service of the bonds.

The Department is advised that bondholders are becoming impatient at continued failure of Ecuadorian Government to make any remittances for interest and sinking fund of railway bonds. There appears to be no valid reason why daily payments should not be resumed. The Department sees only possible explanation in the desire of the Ecuadorian Government to bring about disassociation of bondholders and railway interests in the hope that this will result in foreclosure proceedings and the elimination of present railway administration. This Government will not countenance any injustice to legitimate American interests and will insist that the Government of Ecuador comply with contractual obligations.

SIR: I have the honor to report that after receiving your telegram of May 1, 1915, relative to the arrest of Mr. Strong, an American citizen who is one of the superintendents of the Manta Railway, I cabled to Consular Agent Santos, through the Esmeraldas Agency, as the only available route, to investigate the matter and report by telegraph and, later, in full by letter.

Mr. Santos received my message while ill in bed with fever; and as Consular Agent Hedian was to pass through Manta en route to Guayaquil, on private business, Mr. Santos requested him to make the investigation.

Mr. Hedian reports to me that he called on Mr. Strong, whom I personally know, who stated he was on board a steamer in the Manta harbor, miles distant, when a train robbery was committed by the revolutionists out on the line. A few days later a local newspaper asserted that the editor was of the opinion that the railway officials were implicated in the robbery, whereupon the Governor of the Province of Manabí, in which Manta is located, ordered the arrest of a number of those officials, but soon afterward liberated all but Mr. Strong, an American, and Mr. Scott, the locomotive engineer of the train, the latter being a British subject.

Mr. Santos telegraphed the Governor asking that Mr. Strong be given his liberty but the Governor refused.

The state of affairs in Manabí is anything but peaceful, the province being practically in the control of small bands of robbers who cannot be termed revolutionists.

Mr. Strong informed Mr. Hedian he was wholly innocent, and knew absolutely nothing of the affair until after it had occurred. He has now been in jail for three weeks with no prospect of even an examination and is suffering in health. Some emphatic move should be made for his relief, otherwise Mr. Strong's release is a question of months.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: Referring to my telegram of May 22, 1915, and other telegrams relating to the arrest and imprisonment at Manta of M. D. Strong, an American citizen, for alleged complicity in the robbery on April 12, 1915, of a train carrying Government money to pay troops, I have the honor to make the following report:

My first information of the occurrence was derived from a telegram from Consul General Goding, dated April 22, which reached me on the morning of April 23. This telegram advised me that a citizen of the United States named Strong and certain British subjects are under arrest on suspicion of being implicated in the robbery of a train on the 12th day of April. They have been denied telegraph communications. For full details I suggest you confer with British Minister.

I immediately called on the British Chargé d'Affaires, and after consultation with him prepared and presented to the Foreign Office my memorandum dated April 23, 1915, duplicate copies of which memorandum being herewith enclosed.¹²

As to the succeeding steps taken in the matter, I respectfully inform the Department that all the vital history of the case up to the time of my telegram of May 22, announcing the orders for the release of Mr. Strong, will be found in my note No. 136 (with enclosures), presented May 22 to the Foreign Office, duplicate copies of which being herewith enclosed.

However, I ought to say that I am purposely omitting to report the contents of two notes received from the Foreign Office, because they contained nothing responsive to my request for information and were entirely useless to me.

I probably ought also to inform the Department that I had several personal interviews with the Minister for Foreign Affairs in relation to the case, to which no reference is made in said note No. 136, as there appeared no reason therefor. And I ought further to say that I believe the Minister for Foreign Affairs acted in good faith and endeavored to comply with my request for proper information; but the Governor of Manabí, encouraged by the Minister of the Interior, who is a bitter foe of the United States, had immediate control of the situation and prevented the information from being furnished.

Before closing this despatch it is both just and proper that I express my sincere appreciation of the prompt and efficient work of our Consul General and Mr. Geo. D. Hedian, our Consular Agent at Esmeraldas, without which no adequate presentation of the case could have been made.

I regard the report of Mr. Hedian as having been largely instrumental in convincing the Ecuadorian Government of the justice of Mr. Strong's cause.

QUITO, ECUADOR, May 21, 1915.

MR. MINISTER: Respectfully inviting the attention of your excellency again to my note No. 131, of May 12, 1915, to your excellency's note No. 91, of same date, in reply thereto, and to my memorandum of April 23, 1915, all relating to the arrest and imprisonment at Manta of Mr. Strong, an American citizen, I now have the honor to submit to your excellency the following facts and observations:

On April 23, 1915, I presented to your excellency a memorandum, wherein, after reciting a telegram from Mr. Goding, American Consul General at Guayaquil, and repeating certain information received by me from Hon. Lucien J. Jerome, British Chargé d'Affaires at Quito, I respectfully asked your excellency's Government for "immediate information, * * * including the nature of the proof which the Governor or other authority has against them (him) giving a complete detail narrative thereof."

In conformity with your excellency's usual courteous and just conduct, your excellency assured me that the authorities in Manabí would be ordered to furnish the desired information promptly, which would, when received, be promptly transmitted to this Legation; and I have no doubt that such orders were given in accordance with your excellency's prompt and courteous assurance. But the authorities in Manabí, responsible for the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Strong, have totally ignored the orders of your excellency's Government and, up to this date, have failed or refused to furnish the information requested of them. I make the foregoing statement with great confidence, for I place so much reliance in the promise of your excellency that I am certain that if the complete detailed narrative of the case, including "the nature of the proof which the Governor or other authority has against him" had been furnished to your excellency's Government in obedience to its orders a copy thereof would promptly have been delivered to me in compliance with your excellency's assurance above mentioned.

After waiting patiently for nine days for the information requested without having received it, I reported the matter to my Government at Washington and asked and obtained permission to have an investigation made immediately through the American Consular Service. And accordingly, on May 2, 1915, Mr. George D. Hedian, American Consular Agent at Esmeraldas, was ordered to undertake the work of investigation.

In compliance with that order, Mr. Hedian left Esmeraldas on May 4 for Manta. He completed his investigations and his report, bearing date May 12, 1915, has been delivered to this Legation. For the information of your excellency, I am enclosing with this note a copy of that portion of Mr. Hedian's report which records the history and result of his investigation.

Accompanying his report, Mr. Hedian has transmitted to the Legation a copy, consisting of 84 pages written in Spanish, of proceedings and testimony taken in the case, which I am herewith submitting to your excellency for inspection and use in connection with this note at this time, with the request that the same may be returned to this Legation after its examination by your excellency, and should your excellency so desire, a copy thereof will be hereafter supplied for the files of the Foreign Office. I also have the honor to enclose for your excellency's information the following:

1. Extract from letter written by Mr. M. D. Strong (the imprisoned American) to this Legation, written from Manta under date of May 2, 1915.
2. Extract from letter from British Vice Consul at Manta to Mr. Cornwall, dated April 19, 1915.
3. Extracts from a letter written by Mr. C. H. Aylesbury to Mr. Jarvis, dated April 21, 1915.
4. Spanish text of a telegram prepared and signed by Mr. M. D. Strong, and directed to this Legation, which was refused transmission by the telegraph agent in Manta, and which reached this Legation May 8, by mail.
5. Telegram from British Consul Wilson to Honorable L. J. Jerome, British Chargé d'Affaires, dated April 22, 1915.

A careful examination of the report of Mr. Hedian, and of the copy of proceedings and testimony taken in the case, and herewith presented for examination, and of the other papers and extracts enclosed, when taken in connection with the deliberate failure of the prosecuting officers in Manabí to obey the orders of your excellency's Government and furnish the desired information as requested, inevitably leads to the following conclusions:

1. That the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Strong was inspired solely and only by the malice and prejudice held against him by the Governor of Manabí.
2. That the officials in Manabí, to whom orders were given by your excellency's Government to furnish promptly the information above mentioned, have ignored and disregarded said orders in contempt of the dignity and authority of your excellency's Government, and in derogation and denial of the rights of a friendly government and country.
3. That there is no testimony in the record presented which even remotely connects Mr. Strong with the commission of or participation in the crime charged, or any other offense.
4. That more than thirty days have elapsed since his arrest, and, so far as this Legation has any information, no formal charge has been filed against him, and no final decision rendered by the 3rd Judge of Letters of Manabí, who is conducting the investigation.
5. That the refusal to admit Mr. Strong to bail is an additional proof that the malice of the Governor against him is the sole and only motive for his arrest and imprisonment.
6. That, by reason of such animosity and malice on the part of the Governor toward Mr. Strong, and of the great influence of said Governor over and upon the courts and juries of the country, it is impossible for Mr. Strong to obtain justice in said courts.

Even the Judge of the Court, conducting the inquiry, has failed to decree that he finds grace presumption of the guilt of Mr. Strong, which the law of Ecuador requires before the accused can lawfully be imprisoned.

So far as the record herewith presented shows, there is not a word of testimony connecting Mr. Strong with the crime, or any crime, directly or indirectly, and no court in the world, where actual justice is administered, would hesitate a moment to discharge him on the showing made. In short, his detention, in the absence of any testimony against him, is a travesty on justice and a reflection on the good name and fame of the Government of Ecuador, brought about by the local officers in Manabí.

While it is true that telegraphic communication with Manta has been interrupted, yet, had the prosecuting authorities been so disposed, the report requested could have easily been furnished by them, and sent by mail by this time; because Mr. Hedian left Esmeraldas on May 4, proceeded to Manta, completed his report on May 12, and mailed it to this Legation. So there is no justification for the delay on the part of the authorities in Manabí.

In view of the foregoing conclusions and arguments, which appear to me to be incontrovertible from the history of the case as presented, and which will, I have no doubt, appeal to your excellency's high sense of justice, it becomes my duty to respectfully express the earnest hope of my Government that your excellency's Government will find it compatible with its high conception of justice and public duty to promptly issue orders to the proper authorities in Manabí for the immediate release and final discharge of Mr. Strong. I need not assure your excellency of what you are already well aware, that if I believed Mr. Strong guilty of any crime or complicity in crime against your excellency's Government, I would decline to intercede in his behalf; for I regard it to be the duty of every foreign resident of Ecuador to obey the laws and respect the dignity and authority of your excellency's Government.

It is my further duty and pleasure to assure your excellency that the granting of this request, so manifestly just and proper, will be appreciated by my Government as additional proof of the friendliness of your excellency's Government toward the Government and people of the United States.

SIR: The Department has received your No. 114 of May 24, transmitting correspondence in relation to the imprisonment of Mr. M. D. Strong.

You will state to the Foreign Office that the Department considers that the Ecuadorian Government should take appropriate action against the Governor of Manabí because of his arbitrary and illegal measures which were responsible for the unwarranted arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Strong. The action taken should include a serious warning to the authorities of Manabí against further ill treatment of foreigners in that province.

TREATY FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF GENERAL PEACE, CONCLUDED BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND FRANCE.

Signed at Washington, September 15, 1914; ratification advised by the Senate, September 25, 1914; ratified by the President, January 14, 1915; ratified by France, December 3, 1914; ratifications exchanged at Washington, January 22, 1915; proclaimed, January 23, 1915.

Treaty Series No. 609.]

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, a Treaty between the United States of America and the French Republic looking to the advancement of the cause of general peace was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at Washington, on the fifteenth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, the original of which Treaty, being in the English and French languages, is word for word as follows:

Treaty to facilitate the settlement of Disputes.

The President of the United States of America and the President of the French Republic, desiring to strengthen the friendly relations which unite their two countries and to serve the cause of general peace, have decided to conclude a treaty for these purposes and have consequently appointed the plenipotentiaries designated hereinafter, to-wit:

The President of the United States of America, the Honorable William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State of the United States; and

The President of the French Republic, His Excellency J. J. Jusserand, Ambassador of the French Republic to the United States;

Who, after exhibiting to each other their full powers, found to be in due and proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE 1.

Any disputes arising between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the French Republic, of whatever nature they may be, shall, when ordinary diplomatic proceedings have failed and the High Contracting Parties do not have recourse to arbitration, be submitted for investigation and report to a Permanent International Commission constituted in the manner prescribed in the following article.

The High Contracting Parties agree not to resort, with respect to each other, to any act of force during the investigation to be made by the Commission and before its report is handed in.

ARTICLE 2.

The International Commission shall be composed of five members appointed as follows: Each Government shall designate two members, only one of whom shall be of its own nationality; the fifth member shall be designated by common consent and shall not belong to any of the nationalities already represented on the Commission; he shall perform the duties of President.

In case the two Governments should be unable to agree on the choice of the fifth commissioner, the other four shall be called upon to designate him, and failing an understanding between them, the provisions of article 45 of The Hague Convention of 1907 shall be applied.

The Commission shall be organized within six months from the exchange of ratifications of the present convention.

The members shall be appointed for one year and their appointment may be renewed. They shall remain in office until superseded or reappointed, or until the work on which they are engaged at the time their office expires is completed.

Any vacancies which may arise (from death, resignation, or cases of physical or moral incapacity) shall be filled within the shortest possible period in the manner followed for the original appointment.

The High Contracting Parties shall, before designating the Commissioners, reach an understanding in regard to their compensation. They shall bear by halves the expenses incident to the meeting of the Commission.

ARTICLE 3.

In case a dispute should arise between the High Contracting Parties which is not settled by the ordinary methods, each Party shall have a right to ask that the investigation thereof be intrusted to the International Commission charged with making a report. Notice shall be given to the President of the International Commission, who shall at once communicate with his colleagues.

In the same case the President may, after consulting his colleagues and upon receiving the consent of a majority of the members of the Commission, offer the services of the latter to each of the Contracting Parties. Acceptance of that offer declared by one of the two Governments shall be sufficient to give jurisdiction of the case to the Commission in accordance with the foregoing paragraph.

The place of meeting shall be determined by the Commission itself.

ARTICLE 4.

The two High Contracting Parties shall have a right, each on its own part, to state to the President of the Commission what is the subject-matter of the controversy. No difference in these statements, which shall be furnished by way of suggestion, shall arrest the action of the Commission.

In case the cause of the dispute should consist of certain acts already committed or about to be committed, the Commission shall as soon as possible indicate what measures to preserve the rights of each party ought in its opinion to be taken provisionally and pending the delivery of its report.

ARTICLE 5.

As regards the procedure which it is to follow, the Commission shall as far as possible be guided by the provisions contained in articles 9 to 36 of Convention 1 of The Hague of 1907.

The High Contracting Parties agree to afford the Commission all means and all necessary facilities for its investigation and report.

The work of the Commission shall be completed within one year from the date on which it has taken jurisdiction of the case, unless the High Contracting Parties should agree to set a different period.

The conclusion of the Commission and the terms of its report shall be adopted by a majority. The report, signed only by the President acting by virtue of his office, shall be transmitted by him to each of the Contracting Parties.

The High Contracting Parties reserve full liberty as to the action to be taken on the report of the Commission.

ARTICLE 6.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and by the President of the French Republic, in accordance with the constitutional laws of France.

It shall go into force immediately after the exchange of ratifications and shall last five years.

Unless denounced six months at least before the expiration of the said period of five years, it shall remain in force until the expiration of a period of twelve months after either party shall have notified the other of its intention to terminate it.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty and have affixed thereunto their seals.

Done at Washington this 15th day of September, in the year nineteen hundred and fourteen.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN JUSSERAND

And whereas, the said Treaty has been duly ratified on both parts and the ratifications of the two governments were exchanged in the City of Washington, on the twenty-second day of January, one thousand nine hundred and fifteen;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twenty-third day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 10, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: It not having been found feasible to complete the International Commission provided for in the Treaty of September 15, 1914 between the United States and France, looking to the advancement of the general cause of peace, within the time specified in the Treaty, which expires tomorrow, I have the honor to suggest for the consideration of your Government that the time within which the organization of the Commission may be completed be extended by an exchange of notes from July 22, 1915, to January 1, 1916.

Your formal notification in writing, of the same date as this, that your Government receives the suggestion favorably, will be regarded on this Government's part as sufficient to give effect to the extension, and I shall be glad to receive your assurance that it will be so regarded by your Government also.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

452. Department's 442, December 31. Representations made as directed. French Government in reply state that the Civil Code makes no distinction between Frenchmen emigrating prior to reaching age of military service and those emigrating after reaching such age. They further state that naturalization of a French citizen only causes him to lose his French nationality when authorized by French Government. They also state that by virtue of fundamental principle of French legislation a French minor cannot effectually change his country or become naturalized before attaining majority; but before reaching his majority every Frenchman becomes liable to military service. Therefore French note concludes Peralme's definite release from military obligations can only take place after accomplishment of his regular military service in France, and after passing the age of thirty-four years, thus passing into the territorial army, when his naturalization in a foreign country would be fully recognized.

493. Your 452 and 453, January 14. Say to Foreign Office this Government still hopes that French Government will discriminate between cases of Frenchmen naturalized as Americans and see its way clear to release those who emigrated before actually becoming liable for military service. On the one hand, loss to France by release of such persons desiring to be released, it is believed, would be negligible. On the other hand, there is no little suffering to such persons and their destitute families in this country, while much feeling is being created by the detention of American naturalized citizens. Department regrets it will be obliged to bring the matter to the attention of the French Government whenever informed of the impressment into the French Army of a naturalized American.

In this connection, mention case of Louis Paul Lacombe, Saint-Roch, Department Aveyron; emigrated age 4 years; naturalized February 8, 1912.

SIR: With reference to your letter² of September 17, 1914, and the Department's reply of September 22, concerning the imprisonment in the French Army of François Pellissier, a naturalized American citizen of French origin, you are informed that the Department has received a despatch from the American Ambassador at Paris, reporting that the French Government declines to release Mr. Pellissier for the reason that he is still considered a French citizen under French law. In explanation of its position in this matter, the French Foreign Minister made the following statement:

The Law of March 21, 1905, provides in Article 1 "that every Frenchman is subject to personal military service." Moreover Article 17 of the Civil Code provides that "if a Frenchman is still subject to military duty in the active army, foreign naturalization shall only allow him to lose his French nationality when said naturalization shall have been authorized by the French Government."

Mr. Pellissier was naturalized American on July 30, 1900; he was still at that time subject to military duty; he should therefore have obtained the authorization of the Government. Inasmuch as he became naturalized without authorization, the military authorities were bound to consider him as having remained French.

The Department is still discussing with the French Government the question of the status of naturalized American citizens of French origin detained in France for military service, but I regret to say that the French Government has not yet shown a willingness to recede from the position indicated in the statement of the Foreign Minister, just quoted.

File No. 351.117/48.

Mr. P. A. Lelong to the President.

NEW ORLEANS, April 8, 1915.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On March 27, 1915, I sent to Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State of the United States, a letter of which I annex a copy. To that letter I am in receipt of an answer, dated April 2, 1915 (of which I annex a copy) signed for the Secretary of State by Robert Lansing, Counselor. From the conclusion thus reached on the facts of my case by the Secretary of State and his subordinate, "I appeal to Caesar." I make this appeal in my own behalf and in behalf of the large number of American citizens similarly situated.

Conceding the proposition that I was born with a dual nationality (if such a thing can exist) this duality of nationality ceased when I became of age and elected to exercise my birthright granted to me by the Constitution of the United States as one born in its territory and under its dominion, took an oath to support that Constitution and held office under its authority, and under the authority of two States of the American Union. This proposition must be true unless the Government of the United States shall permit its organic law to be overridden by the laws of a foreign country. It is manifest that between that Constitution and the personal statutes of France which would make me a French citizen against my will and deprive me of my birthright as one born in the United States, there is an irreconcilable conflict. I cannot believe that you will permit the State Department to commit this nation to the policy outlined in the letter to me from that Department, and thus bow its august neck to the yoke of a foreign statute.

Under this policy, one who had been President of the United States or Chief Justice of its Supreme Court, or a Senator and Representative in the Congress, or Commander-in-chief of its armies or High Admiral of its navies, could be seized in France and put into its armies, or punished for evasion of military duty. I am only a humble citizen, but my rights are as great and sacred as those of any other citizen.

I therefore respectfully ask you and your Cabinet to take up the serious matter herein propounded, to reverse the ruling of the Department of State, and to lay down the proposition that one born in this country of French parents, who elects when he becomes of age to be a citizen of the United States, is such citizen and is entitled to the full protection of the United States both in and out of France, free and exempt from any provision of the French law as to his citizenship.

Your obedient servant,

P. A. LE LONG, Jr.

*Mr. Lelong to the Secretary of State.*NEW ORLEANS, LA., March 27, 1915.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: My father, P. A. Lelong, was a native of France and came to New Orleans when he was about 20 years of age; lived here about 40 years. He died here about two years ago, but about five years before his death, took out naturalization papers.

I was born in New Orleans June 18, 1880. I have never been out of the United States and have regularly voted as an American citizen since I reached the age of 21 years, and if war had ever occurred between France and the United States, I most certainly would have fought for the United States. I have held the office of Township Commissioner in Henderson County, North Carolina; have held several court appointments, both Federal and State, and am a member of the State and Federal bar, and have considered myself as much an American citizen as President Wilson or any of the members of the Cabinet.

I wish to visit France on business in the near future, and am informed by Mr. Ferrand, the French Consul here, that if I go to France I could be either impressed into the French service or punished for not having reported for military duty, and also for having served in the State Militia of Louisiana without permission from the French Government.

I contend that if the French Government had any right to claim me as a citizen under their laws, in time of peace they should have called on me to serve my three years in their military service.

Wishing to know whether my constitutional privileges as an American citizen follow me wherever I go, with its constitutional guaranties, or whether the United States Government will allow the French Government to act in the manner as stated by Mr. Ferrand, the French Consul, I respectfully request an answer at as early a date as possible.

Respectfully yours,

P. A. LELONG, Jr.

[Inclosure 2.]

*The Secretary of State to Mr. Lelong.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 2, 1915.

SIR: The Department has received your letter of March 27, 1915, stating that you expect to go to France on business in the near future and inquiring whether you would be molested by the French military authorities. You say that you were born in New Orleans June 18, 1880, and that your father, a native of France, resided in this country about forty years and obtained naturalization as a citizen of the United States shortly before his death, which occurred about two years ago.

Under the provision of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, all persons born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States. Section 1 article 7 [8] of the French Civil Code states that the following are Frenchmen: "Every person born of a Frenchman in France or abroad." It thus appears that you were born with a dual nationality, and the Department cannot therefore give you any assurance that you would not be held liable for the performance of military service in France should you voluntarily place yourself within French jurisdiction.

I am [etc.]

ROBERT LANSING,
Counselor.

File No. 351.117/49a.

*The Secretary of State to Mr. P. A. Lelong.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 5, 1915.

SIR: The Department has received, by reference from the White House, your letter of April 8 to the President in regard to the Department's letter to you of April 2, concerning the question of your status in France. It appears that you were born in New Orleans, June 18, 1880, and that your father was born in France, resided in this country about forty years, and obtained naturalization as a citizen of the United States a short time before his death, which occurred about two years ago. In reply to the Department's letter to the effect that, although you are a citizen of the United States under the law of this country, you may also be considered a French citizen under French law, you ask the President and his Cabinet "to reverse the ruling of the Department of State, and to lay down the proposition that one born in this country of French parents, who elects when he becomes of age to be a citizen of the United States, is such citizen and is entitled to the full protection of the United States both in and out of France, free and exempt from any provision of the French law as to his citizenship."

The Department's letter mentioned above does not contain any opinion which it feels called upon to reverse. You were merely informed concerning the provision of the French law of nationality under which you might be considered a French citizen in France, and told that the Department is not in a position to give you an assurance that you would not be held liable for the performance of military service in France should you voluntarily place yourself within French jurisdiction. I may add that a conflict of citizenship laws may be satisfactorily adjusted only through a treaty arrangement, and there is no treaty between the United States and France covering the status of persons born in either country of citizens of the other country. While it might be deemed reasonable that a person born in the United States of alien parents should be able to elect American nationality upon reaching majority, to the exclusion of any and all other nationalities, provided he intended to reside permanently in this country and perform the usual duties of citizenship, the Department, in the absence of a treaty provision, cannot assure you that such election would be recognized as effective in France. If at any time in the future you should find it necessary to visit France and should there be molested upon the ground that you are a French citizen, you should inform a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, who would report the matter to the Department in order that it might take such measures in your behalf as would seem warranted by the peculiar facts and circumstances of your case.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 1, 1915.

SIR: I send you herewith a copy of a letter of June 10 from Professor Joseph Seronde, of New Haven, Connecticut, in which he says that he has received from the French Consul General in New York

City a notice to the effect that he is "to be subjected to the full rigor of the law" for not having joined his regiment in France before November 14 last. It appears that Mr. Seronde came to this country at the age of fourteen in the year 1897 and has obtained naturalization as a citizen of the United States, and he says that he did not consider himself bound to obey the military laws of France in view of the fact that he is an American citizen. He enquires whether, in case he goes to France after the war, he will be "disciplined" for having failed to respond to the summons of the French military authorities.

You will please present this case to the French Government and say that this Government cannot recognize the right of French officials to summon citizens of the United States residing within the territory and jurisdiction of this country to leave the United States and go to France to perform military service, whether or not they may be considered French citizens under French law. You may add that this objection applies equally to cases of persons who were born in France and have obtained naturalization as citizens of this country, at the same time renouncing allegiance to their native country, and cases of persons born in the United States of French parents. With regard to the latter it should be remarked that the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that all persons born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States.

You may also say to the French Government that it is hoped that instructions will be issued to diplomatic and consular officers of France in this country to desist in the future from summoning for military service in France persons who are residing in the United States and are citizens of this country.

[Inclosure.]

Mr. Joseph Seronde to the Department of State.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., June 10, 1915.

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt from the French Consul General in New York of a notice to the effect that I am "to be subjected to the full rigor of the law" for not having joined "my regiment" before last November 14th. I am an American citizen, having lived in this country since the age of 14 and having been duly naturalized in the State of Connecticut, Fairfield Co. As an American citizen, I did not consider myself bound to obey other laws than those of the United States, and the French Consul's notice comes as a disagreeable surprise, all the more as he knows the facts I have just stated. I should like to know exactly what my status is. Am I to be outlawed in France for fulfilling my duties as an American citizen, or shall I lose my citizenship by returning to France? I understand that I should also be "disciplined" for having failed to come sooner. It is of course evident that nothing can happen as long as I remain in this country; but, a professor of languages, it is often necessary for me to go abroad; I have, in fact, planned to do so when the war is over. Does my American citizenship offer any protection? I am French only by birth, practically, since my education was made in this country, where I have resided continuously since 1897. I should be very grateful for any information you can give me.

Yours very truly,

TAXATION OF THE COMPAGNIE FRANÇAISE DES CÂBLES TÉLÉ-GRAPHIQUES, A FRENCH COMPANY, IN THE UNITED STATES.

File No. 811.73/15.

The French Ambassador to the Secretary of State.

[Translation.]

FRENCH EMBASSY,
Washington, November 23, 1914.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: The "Compagnie Française des Câbles Télégraphiques" requests me to lay before your excellency its claims and desiderata in regard to the taxes levied by the States of Massachusetts and Connecticut on its land line from Orleans, Mass., to New York.

Some years ago the company was allowed by the Federal Government to land its cables on territory of the United States and in 1879 was granted the "right of way" between its landing point and New York, that is to say, across the two above-named States, on condition that a like privilege would be granted to American companies in France.

That condition was fulfilled; the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the Commercial Cable Co., which own a land line from Havre to Paris, pay no taxes thereon.

Our company therefore believes itself entitled to the same treatment and to the enjoyment of the privileges provided by the Post Road Act of Congress of 1866.

The French company's agent further argues that his line never failed to render, whenever the opportunity offered, every possible service to American interests. Thus as the last instance, it was able to assist the citizens of the United States who were in Europe at the beginning of the hostilities by forwarding, free of charge, hundreds of telegrams routed by that line.

I venture to commend to your excellency's most benevolent attention a request which seems to be well founded in every particular, and I shall be very thankful to you for any step you would kindly take toward having justice done to the French company's petition.

Be pleased to accept [etc.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 23d ultimo in which, at the request of the Compagnie Française des Câbles Télégraphiques, you present its protest against the taxes imposed by the States of Massachusetts and Connecticut on the land lines of the company from Orleans, Massachusetts, to New York City.

In reply I have the honor to say that, upon acceding to certain conditions considered as proper by the President, the Compagnie Française du Télégraphe de Paris à New York, now the Compagnie Française des Câbles Télégraphiques, was given permission to land its submarine cable at Cape Cod, Massachusetts, in 1879, provided that the French Government granted reciprocal privileges of landing in France upon the same terms to any company formed by citizens of the United States which may apply for such landing privilege.

The required assurances were received from the French Government and the cable of this French telegraph company was permitted to land at Cape Cod. But, from an investigation of its records, the Department is unable to ascertain that there is any treaty, understanding or agreement between the United States and the French Government, or between the United States and the Compagnie Française des Câbles Télégraphiques that would exempt from taxation the pole lines of this company from its cable landing at Orleans, Massachusetts, to its destination at New York City.

[Translation.]

FRENCH EMBASSY,
Washington, May 28, 1915.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: By letter of December 16 last your excellency was pleased to tell me that while permission to land a cable at Cape Cod had been granted in 1879 to the Compagnie Française des Câbles on condition that reciprocal landing privileges in France be extended on the same terms to American companies, no agreement had been entered into under which the said company could be exempted from taxes that some local authorities might see fit to assess upon the land line connecting its cable with New York.

To the best of my knowledge the said authorities had never, until quite recently, advanced any such claim, but they are now doing so in a very pressing manner and against the protest of the French company, which informs me today that the Massachusetts authorities insist upon immediate payment.

Informed of these unexpected demands, for which there is no corresponding precedent in France, my Government wishes me to submit the following to your excellency:

The reciprocal agreements of 1879 were accepted in entire good faith and until now likewise carried out by both Governments. In promising each other they would allow the landing of cables they understood that it must of course apply to cables that could be put to practical use. In no case could the cable be landed in the principal city to be benefited, viz, New York in the United States and Paris in France, and it never occurred to any one that the companies in interest could be hampered in the operation of their cables by transit taxes that this or that local authority might see fit to levy. (If the proposition were admissible, the ill will of some official wielding authority at any point crossed by the land line would suffice to preclude the operation of the cables by laying arbitrary taxes.)

The French and, up to date, the American administration had realized the danger and unacceptability of such claims.

Article 6 of the memorandum of conditions required in 1879 for the landing of cables provides that citizens of the United States shall, in the matter of privileges, be placed upon a footing of equality with French citizens. Placing upon that provision the only construction that seemed acceptable, and of course expecting reciprocity, my Government gave the American cable companies free access to the capital and did not permit any taxing of their land lines by the departments, cities or localities over which they run.

In a communication that I have before me, the Ministry of Commerce of the Republic declares that the treatment accorded in France to the American companies is exactly that enjoyed by the French company itself. He uses the following language on this point:

The French administraton in a general way places at the disposal of the several companies wires connecting their landing stations with their respective offices. When available those wires are let without charge; when laid at the request and for the exclusive use of the companies they pay the cost of laying but in no case is there any tax collected for their use.

Specifically, my Department does not demand any payment or dues for the use of the three wires it has placed at the disposal of the Anglo and Commercial Companies between Havre and Paris; the city of Paris, whose underground conduits are used for those wires, does not collect any tax from those companies on that account.

My Government feels certain that when they concluded the agreement of 1879 the French and American administrations had in mind reciprocal fair treatment and not mutual impediments such as those which the Massachusetts authorities seem to be bent on inviting. It believes it has all the more reason to hope that, thanks to your excellency's obliging intervention, the present difficulties will be removed as, on the one hand, the relations between the two countries are quite as friendly now as then and, on the other hand, the French company, which does not handle any local telegraphic messages and cannot be classed with the American companies that do that kind of business, never missed an opportunity to give evidence of the feeling it bears toward the country which its cables contribute to connect with ours. It believes it always displayed the greatest zeal in all that relates to the American Government's service; it grants it the free use of its means of communication for the transmission without charge of its cablegrams to its several representatives abroad and it indulges the belief that its usefulness to American citizens during the present crisis has been as far reaching as the circumstances allowed.

I should be very thankful to your excellency if you would kindly give your attention to a matter which calls all the more for an early solution as the authorities are pressing their demand for the payment of taxes on the French company.

Be pleased to accept [etc.]

File No. 811.73/18.

The Secretary of State to the French Ambassador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 7, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: The Department has received and given very careful consideration to your excellency's note of May 28 wherein, by instructions from your Government, you again invite attention to the matter of the taxation by the authorities of the State of Massachusetts of the Compagnie Française des Câbles and to the request of the company that these taxes be remitted.

The Compagnie Française des Câbles appears to be successor in interest to the Compagnie Française Télégraphie [du Télégraphe] de Paris à New York, to which permission to land its submarine cable on the shores of the United States was granted by the President of the United States in 1879.³ Your excellency calls attention to the facts that the treatment accorded in France to American cable companies is the same as that enjoyed by French companies; that the French administration, in a general way, places at the disposal of the several companies wires connecting their land stations with their respective offices; that when available, such wires are laid without charge, but that when laid at the request and for the exclusive use of the companies, such companies pay the cost of laying but are in no case assessed for the use thereof. Your excellency further states that the City of Paris, whose underground conduits are used for the wires of those companies, collects no taxes for the use of such conduits. Your Government deems it proper, therefore, to invite attention to these facts and to the provisions of paragraph six of the conditions upon which the Government of the United States permitted the landing of the French cable at Cape Cod, which conditions stipulated for a certain equality of treatment of the Governments of the United States and France and of their respective citizens, with reference to the cable in question; and to express the hope that this Government will take steps looking to the remission of the taxes imposed by the authorities of the State of Massachusetts upon the Compagnie Française des Câbles.

It seems appropriate in replying to your excellency's note to invite consideration of two points which seem to have particular bearing on the matter in question; namely, first, the purpose of the conditions upon which the landing of the French cable at Cape Cod was permitted and the significance of the terms used in the memorandum of those conditions; and, second, the nature of the taxes imposed by the State of Massachusetts upon this company.

It is believed that, upon a careful examination of these conditions in the light of the correspondence with reference thereto which passed between the Secretary of State and the French Minister, particularly the note addressed by the Secretary of State, on October 27, 1879, to the Minister and a similar note dated September 22, 1875, which was referred to in the former as explaining fully and explicitly the character of reciprocity which the conditions were designed to effect, it will be apparent to the French Government that the object sought to be accomplished by these conditions were of a two-fold character; namely, first, that of preventing the formation by the company of a monopoly of submarine telegraphic communication between the United States and France; and, second, that of guaranteeing to the Government of the United States and to its citizens the use of the cable on terms of equality with those enjoyed by the French Government and its citizens, a certain preference being required in the transmission of the messages of the two Governments over those of their private citizens. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of these conditions were directed towards the accomplishment of the first of these purposes while the remaining paragraphs were intended to effect the second.

The Secretary of State, in the above-mentioned note of September 22, 1875, said:

He [the President] will not prohibit or object to the landing of a "cable" connecting the United States with other countries, which allow citizens of the United States, individually or collectively, or associated with those of other nationalities, cooperated or otherwise, freely to land cables on their shores, and to connect the same with lines operating on the land, and which grant entire facility for the transmission by their land lines of messages to and from the cable line, so that messages transmitted or to be transmitted by the cable line shall have the same facilities and be charged no higher rates for transmission and delivery by the land lines, and shall be delivered in the same manner, as messages originating in the country and transmitted only over the land line. Government messages (as well those of the United States as those of the country connected by the cable with the United States) should be entitled to precedence of transmission by the cable, and also by the land lines of the country connected by cable with the United States, and be delivered without delay.

Paragraph six of the conditions in question, to which your excellency refers as having particular bearing on the matter now under consideration, provides:

That a citizen of the United States shall stand on the same footing, as regards privileges, with the citizens of France.

It seems evident, therefore, that the purpose of this paragraph was to guarantee to American citizens the use of the cable on terms of equality with those enjoyed by the citizens of France. It will be observed in this relation that the matter was considered by this Government entirely from an international standpoint and that questions such as that of the taxation of the property of the cable companies, which, in the United States, would have involved a consideration of the rights of the States through which the lines of the company might pass, were not made subjects of the correspondence. The Department is therefore unable to perceive that the conditions to which the French company consented when it landed its cables on the shores of the United States have any bearing upon the present request of the Compagnie Française des Câbles that it be exempted from the taxes imposed by the State of Massachusetts.

To concede that these conditions are properly to be construed as obligating the Government of the United States to accord to the cable company in this country the same treatment accorded it by France would be to make the regulation of purely domestic matters in the United States dependent on the action of the French authorities. Such was obviously not the purpose of the conditions, which merely indicated this Government's views as to the proper method of conducting such cables when established and indicated its willingness to permit the landing on its shores of any cables to be conducted in accordance with such views.

The Department has received from the tax commissioner of the State of Massachusetts a copy of the act of the Legislature of that State which requires the levying of the taxes to which the Compagnie Française des Câbles objects and has the honor to enclose a copy⁴ thereof for the information of your Government. This law which apparently became effective on April 10, 1913, provides:

that underground conduits, wires and pipes laid in public streets * * * and poles, underground conduits and pipes together with the wires thereon or therein laid in or erected upon private property or in a railroad location by any corporation, * * * shall be assessed to the owners thereof in the cities and towns in which they are laid or erected.

It will be observed that the tax authorized by this law is not a tax based upon the use of the telegraph lines but one to be assessed upon the value of the conduits and other property of all corporations operating telegraph lines within the State of Massachusetts; that it applies uniformly to all corporations, American as well as foreign; and that there is, therefore, no probability of discrimination such as the French Government apprehends might result. On the other hand, should it be found possible by the Government of the State of Massachusetts to make an exception in the application of the law in favor of the Compagnie Française des Câbles there would then seem to be presented for consideration the further question as to whether the making of such an exception would not constitute a discrimination against other companies similarly situated. Should the Compagnie Française des Câbles consider that any tax levied against it by the authorities of the States through which its lines pass is illegal, discriminatory or confiscatory, it has access, of course, to the appropriate courts for a proper adjudication of the question.

⁴ Not printed.

Your excellency is doubtless aware of the fact that matters regarding the taxation of physical property are, generally speaking, within the competency of the respective States wherein the property is situated. The inability of the Federal Government, therefore, to comply with the French Government in this matter by requiring, as a matter of grace and favor, a remission of the taxes of which the Compagnie Française des Câbles complains is to be attributed to no lack of appreciation on its part of the benefits derived by it through the transmission by the company of the official messages of this Government without cost, which however, appears to be a compliance by the company with its agreement to accord to the Government of the United States, in return for the privilege of landing its cable on the shores of this country, like treatment with that accorded to the Government of France.

The situations of the two Governments with regard to this matter seem to differ in that while the land lines used by the several companies in France appear to be owned by the French Government, which permits their use by these companies without compensation, the corresponding lines in the United States are the private property of the respective companies and, as such, are in the same category as other private property with respect to the matter of taxation.

While recognizing no legal right in the Compagnie Française des Câbles to claim exemption from taxation of its property in the United States, the Department has, in recognition of the services rendered by the company to the Government of the United States and as an evidence of its desire to comply so far as possible with the wishes of your excellency's Government in the matter, taken pleasure in laying the views of the French Government before the Governor of the State of Massachusetts and in expressing to him the hope of the Department that the authorities of Massachusetts will give them most friendly consideration and will bear in mind the benefits reaped by the Government of the United States. The Department will be glad to communicate with your excellency with regard to the views of the Governor of Massachusetts in the matter as soon as his reply is received.

Accept [etc.]

ROBERT LANSING.

File No. 811.73/18.

The Secretary of State to the Governor of Massachusetts.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, July 7, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the request of the Compagnie Française des Câbles, which appears to own and operate a submarine cable connecting the United States and France and a land line used in conjunction therewith running from Orleans, Massachusetts, to New York City, that it be exempted from certain taxes assessed by the authorities of the State of Massachusetts upon its property situated within that State. This request of the company is transmitted and supported by the Government of France.

In 1879 the Compagnie Française Telegraphie [du Télégraphe] de Paris à New York, which appears to have been succeeded in interest by the Compagnie Française des Câbles, made application to this Government, through the French Legation, for permission to land its proposed cable on the shores of the United States. In reply the Secretary of State transmitted, through the French Minister, a memorandum of the conditions upon which the landing of the cable would be permitted. This memorandum reads as follows:

MEMORANDUM OF CONDITIONS REQUIRED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

1. That the company receive no exclusive concession from the Government of France which would exclude any other line which might be formed in the United States from a like privilege of landing on the shores of France and connecting with the inland telegraphic system of that country.

2. That the company shall not consolidate or amalgamate with any other line, or combine therewith for the purpose of regulating rates.

3. That it shall give precedence in the transmission of official messages to the Governments of the United States and France.

4. That charges to this Government shall be at the rate of those to the Government of France, and the general charges shall be reasonable.

5. That the Government of the United States shall be entitled to the same or similar privileges, as may by law, regulation, or agreement be granted to the French Government.

6. That a citizen of the United States shall stand on the same footing, as regards privileges, with the citizens of France.

7. That messages shall have precedence in the following order: A. Government messages; B. Telegraphic business; C. General business.

8. That the line shall be kept open for daily business, and all messages, in the above order, be transmitted according to the time of receipt.

The conditions set forth in this memorandum were accepted by the French Minister in behalf of the company on November 7, 1879, and the cable was landed and put into operation on November 20, 1879.

It appears that the Legislature of Massachusetts passed a law, approved April 10, 1913, which authorized the assessment of a tax upon the conduits, wires and other property of all corporations operating telegraphic lines within the State of Massachusetts and the French Ambassador, by note dated November 23 last, called the Department's attention to the matter and intimated that the French Government would regard with pleasure the making of an exception in the application of this law in favor of the Compagnie Française des Câbles. The Department replied that it was unable to discover any treaty, understanding or agreement between the United States and France or between the United States and the Compagnie Française des Câbles exempting the company from such taxation. The Department has now received a further note from the French Ambassador dated May 28, 1915, a translation of which is inclosed herewith for your information. The Ambassador states in this note that the French Government accords to American cable companies in France the same treatment enjoyed by French companies; that the French administration, in a general way, places at the disposal of the several companies wires connecting their land stations with their respective offices; that when available such wires are laid without charge but that when laid at the request and for the exclusive use of the companies, such companies pay the cost of laying but are in no case assessed for the use thereof. He also states that the city of Paris, whose underground conduits are used for the wires of such companies, collects no taxes for the use of such conduits. In view of these facts and of the terms of the above-mentioned conditions upon which the cable of the Compagnie Française des Câbles was permitted to be landed in the United States, the French Government conveys its impression that the reciprocal treatment stipulated for in these conditions should be construed as entitling the Compagnie Française des Câbles to the same treatment in the United States with respect to taxation as is enjoyed by American cable companies in France.

In reply to this note the Department pointed out to the Ambassador that the objects sought to be accomplished by the conditions in question were merely those of preventing the formation by the company of a monopoly of submarine telegraphic communication between the United States and France, and of guaranteeing to the United States and its citizens the use of the cable on terms of equality with those enjoyed by the French Government and its citizens, and informed him that the Department does not perceive that these conditions have any legal bearing on the request of the Compagnie Française des Câbles that it be exempt from the taxes in question.

The Department also forwarded to the Ambassador, for the information of his Government, a copy of "An Act [of the Legislature of Massachusetts] relative to the taxation of the poles and wires of street railway companies" approved April 10, 1913, which is understood to be the law authorizing the taxes complained of, and pointed out that the taxes provided for by this law are to be assessed, not upon the use of telegraph lines, but upon the value of the conduits and other property of corporations operating telegraphic lines within the State of Massachusetts; that the law applies uniformly to all corporations, American as well as foreign; and that there is, therefore, no probability of discrimination against the Compagnie Française des Câbles such as the French Government apprehends might result; but that in case of the assessment to the company of taxes regarded by it as illegal, discriminatory or confiscatory the company would of course have access to the appropriate courts for a proper adjudication of the question.

There appears to be an equitable consideration in this matter, however, which has seemed to me of sufficient import to warrant its being brought to your attention. It seems that under the agreement between the French Government and the Compagnie Française des Câbles the latter transmits over its cables the official telegraphic communications of the French Government free of charge. It results, therefore, that in accordance with paragraph four of the conditions imposed by this Government upon the landing of the cable in the United States, which require that the charges made for transmission of the official messages of the United States shall be the same as those required for transmission of similar messages of the French Government, the company is required to transmit official messages of this Government free of charge. This results in a saving to this Government of several thousand dollars annually. The Compagnie Française des Câbles is the only submarine cable company which accords this favorable treatment to the Government of the United States and, while this is of course strictly in accordance with its agreement, it would seem to entitle the company to as liberal consideration as the Government of the United States or of the several States concerned can consistently bestow. I have the honor, therefore, to invite your attention to these facts and to the request of the French Government and this I do with every confidence that the authorities of Massachusetts will give the claims of the company as presented by the French Government friendly consideration, and will bear in mind the benefits reaped by this Government as hereinbefore stated.

The French Ambassador has been advised of this communication to you.

The note will be made known to the company and French authorities concerned; they will consider the question of principle therein argued.

In the second part of your letter, your excellency was so good as to say that, taking into account the services rendered to the Federal Government by the French company, you had commended to the most favorable consideration of the Governor of Massachusetts the request presented through me so that it may be, if possible, acceded to in practice.

While wishing that this solution at least may come about, I venture to call to mind in this connection that a like claim has been made by the State of Connecticut and that the circumstances would seem to warrant a similar appeal to the Governor of that State.

Your excellency invites attention to the fact that taxes against this company have also been assessed by the State of Connecticut, and suggests that the circumstances would warrant a communication to the Governor of that State similar to that addressed to the Governor of Massachusetts.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the request of the Compagnie Française des Câbles, which appears to own and operate a submarine cable connecting the United States and France and a land line used in conjunction therewith running from Orleans, Massachusetts, to New York City, that it be exempted from certain taxes which appear to have been assessed by the authorities of the State of Connecticut upon its property situated in that State. This request of the company is transmitted and supported by the Ambassador of France.

[The paragraphs here omitted are identical with those in the letter to the Governor of Massachusetts.]

The Department also pointed out to the Ambassador that the law of the Legislature of Massachusetts complained of applies uniformly to all corporations, American as well as foreign; and that there is, therefore, no probability of discrimination against the Compagnie Française des Câbles such as the French Government appears to apprehend might result; but that in case of the assessment to the company of taxes regarded by it as illegal, discriminatory or confiscatory the company would, of course, have access to the appropriate courts for the proper adjudication of the question.

There appeared to be an equitable consideration in the matter, however, which seemed to me of sufficient import to warrant its being brought to the attention of the Governor of Massachusetts. It seems that under the agreement between the French Government and the Compagnie Française des Câbles the latter transmits over its cables the official telegraphic communications of the French Government free of charge. It results, therefore, that in accordance with paragraph four of the conditions imposed by this Government upon the landing of the cable in the United States, which require that the charges made for transmission of the official messages of the United States shall be the same as those required for the transmission of similar messages of the French Government, the company is required to transmit official messages of this Government free of charge. This results in a saving to this Government of several thousand dollars annually. The Department therefore invited the attention of the Governor of Massachusetts to these facts and to the request of the French Government and expressed its confidence that the authorities of Massachusetts will give the claims of the company as presented by the French Government friendly consideration, and will bear in mind the benefits reaped by this Government as hereinbefore stated.

In a note dated July 12, the French Ambassador states that the State of Connecticut has also assessed taxes against the property of the Compagnie Française des Câbles in that State. I have the honor, therefore, to bring the matter to your attention in the same spirit in which it was brought to the attention of the Governor of Massachusetts.

The Executive Secretary of Connecticut to the Secretary of State.

HARTFORD, August 3, 1915.

SIR: Governor Holcomb has directed me to acknowledge receipt of and to reply to your letter of the 26 ult., concerning taxation of the Compagnie Française des Câbles, with its enclosure of a copy of the memorandum of the French Ambassador.

For many years the statutes of this State have imposed a tax upon all telegraph companies doing business within the State. Previous to 1913 the basis of taxation was the number of miles of wire in use. In 1913 the law was amended so that the gross earnings of each company furnished the basis for the tax. Where the business of a company was not located wholly within the State, a proportion of the gross earnings which bears to the total the same ratio that the number of miles of wire operated in this State bears to the total number of miles of wire in use by the company gives the valuation upon which the tax is imposed. The rate of this tax is three per cent. Every such company is required once a year to make a return to the tax commissioner of the State giving its name and location, total gross earnings, whole number of miles of wire in use by it, and number of miles of wire used by it in the State. In the event that any such company fails to make this return, the State board of equalization, from such data as it can find, makes an estimate of the gross earnings upon which the tax should be paid. Every company is given the right to appear before the board of equalization and to be heard upon the amount of the valuation for taxation.

Until about two years ago the Compagnie Française des Câbles made no return to the tax commissioner, nor did the State board of equalization attempt to establish any valuation for taxation purposes in this State, the fact that this company was operating wires here never having been brought to the attention of the tax commissioner. The compagnie was then requested to make a return under the law, but refused to do so. The board of equalization, therefore, adopted as a valuation for taxation purposes the sum of thirty thousand dollars. This obligated the compagnie to pay to the State the sum of nine hundred dollars each year. The compagnie has never paid anything, nor have any steps yet been taken to compel it to do so.

The tax commissioner, whose duty it is to see to the collection of this tax, is at present away on his vacation. Governor Holcomb has directed that the matter be brought to his attention as soon as he returns, and that all available information be at once transmitted to you, with such suggestions or recommendations as he can make, with reference to the proper course for the State to adopt. As the law stands, the compagnie is liable for this tax, and it is the duty of the tax commissioner to collect. The only proper and legal method of obviating the payment is by act of the Legislature, exempting it from taxation. The Legislature of 1915 adjourned in May, and there will not be another session until January, 1917. The Governor will take up with the tax commissioner the matter of taking no steps to force payment of this tax until the Legislature has had an opportunity to determine whether or not it will exempt the compagnie. After this conference Governor Holcomb will at once inform you what the policy of this State will be in the interim before the meeting of the next General Assembly.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington August 11, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: Referring to previous correspondence and particularly to your excellency's note of May 28, 1915, and to this Department's reply under date of July 7 last, in regard to the request of the Compagnie Française des Câbles that it be exempted from certain taxes imposed by the State of Massachusetts, the Department advises you of the receipt of a letter,⁴ dated the 19th ultimo, from the Secretary to the Governor of Massachusetts with which he encloses a communication received by him from the Massachusetts Tax Commissioner from which it appears that the Compagnie Française des Câbles is a foreign corporation having a place of business within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, namely at Orleans and Lakeville; that under the provisions of the tax laws of Massachusetts foreign corporations are taxed on their tangible property situated within the Commonwealth (Chapter 516, Acts of 1909, section 2); that by the provisions of Chapter 458 of the Acts of the year 1913, poles, underground conduits and pipes, together with the wires therein or thereon are made subject to taxation as personal property by the local assessors; and that under the authority of these statutes the assessors of the town of Lakeville assessed the property of the Compagnie Française des Câbles situated within the town and are now moving for the collection of the tax. In consequence of this tax, the company raises the question as to whether it is, under the memorandum of agreement between the Governments of the United States and France, entitled to exemption from taxation in the State of Massachusetts. The tax commissioner states that it appears that local taxation is the only taxation in question and that the State of Massachusetts has always treated the business of the company as interstate business and not subject to the interference or control of the laws of that State; that no transit tax and no tax for the privilege of doing business has ever been levied upon the corporation in the State and that the tax imposed is one solely upon property situated within the State.

In the opinion of the tax commissioner there is technically nothing in the conditions of the agreement of 1879 between the Governments of the United States and the French Republic which controls the right of taxation by the State of Massachusetts, but that the spirit of the conditions and the act of reciprocity on the part of the Government of the French Republic in exempting from taxation the property of American cable companies doing business in France would seem to entitle the request of the Compagnie Française des Câbles to consideration.

In forwarding this opinion to the Department the Secretary to the Governor of Massachusetts suggests that the representative of the Compagnie Française des Câbles communicate and confer with the Massachusetts Tax Commission about the middle of December next in order that an amendment to the existing laws of Massachusetts may be formulated which would grant the exemption desired by the company.

The Department has taken due note of your statement that the tax commissioner who has the matter in charge is absent on his vacation, and that when he returns, the Governor will take up with him the question whether he shall refrain from enforcing payment of the tax until the Legislature shall have had an opportunity to determine whether or not it will exempt the company from payment.

The German Embassy presents its compliments to the United States Department of State and has the honor to inform the Department that according to telegrams received from the Imperial Consulate in Seattle, Wash., a charge of conspiracy has been made against the acting Imperial Consul, Mr. W. Müller, and the Secretary of the Consulate, Mr. Schulz. They have been released on bail of $1,000 each. The police also made a search at the Imperial Consulate without showing any order or warrant.

The acts of the authorities of the State of Washington appear to be in contradiction with articles 3 and 5 of the consular convention between the German Empire and the United States of America of December 11, 1871.

that the local authorities of the State of Washington are still holding Mr. W. Müller and Mr. Schulz under bail of $1,000 each. This is the case, though the Federal public prosecutor himself told Mr. Müller that the local authorities had no jurisdiction at all in the matter.

Allow me further to bring your kind attention to Sec. 256 of the Judicial Code of the United States, in force January 1, 1912, which reads as follows:

The jurisdiction vested in the courts of the United States in the cases and proceedings hereinafter mentioned, shall be exclusive of the courts of the several states: * * * Eight: Of all suits and proceedings against consuls.

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 5, 1915.

The German Ambassador has brought to the Department's attention information received by him regarding the arrest of the German Consul at Seattle and the Secretary of the Consulate on a charge of conspiracy, as defined by a statute of your State. The Ambassador represents that the action of the authorities appears in contravention of articles 3 and 5 of the consular convention concluded December 11, 1871, between the United States and the German Empire, and calls attention to section 256 of the judiciary act approved March 3, 1911, which vests jurisdiction in the courts of the United States, exclusive of the courts of the several States, in all suits and proceedings against consuls and vice consuls.

It appears to the Department from the information in its possession somewhat doubtful that the action of the local authorities has been at variance with the treaty provisions to which the Ambassador refers. Article 3 of the treaty confers on consular officers personal immunity from arrest "except in the case of crimes". Article 5 stipulates that consular archives shall be inviolable and that offices and dwellings of consuls shall also be inviolable and shall not be invaded by the local authorities except in the case of pursuit for crimes. It seems possible, however, that in instituting the proceedings in question the local authorities in Seattle may not have given consideration to the provisions of the judiciary act to which the Ambassador refers.

In this relation I may invite your attention to a communication received by the Department from the Attorney General of the United States under date of February 24, 1914, in relation to a case wherein a prosecution for a statutory crime was instituted against a foreign consul in California. The case was dismissed by the court on a question of jurisdiction. In this communication the Attorney General said:

From a careful investigation of the authorities it would seem that there is no way to reach the Consul by criminal proceedings. It is settled that the State courts have no jurisdiction, and apparently the United States courts would have none, since the offense referred to is not made a crime by any law of the United States. It is true that in the case of In re Iasigi, 79 Fed., 751, 753, there is a dictum of Judge Brown to the effect that the Federal courts would have exclusive jurisdiction of offenses by consuls, whether at common law or under State or United States statutes. There does not appear to be, however, any authority upholding this view, and a manuscript opinion of the Attorney General to the contrary in the Kosloff case is referred to in Moore's Digest, Vol. 5, p. 66. On the whole I am of the opinion that there is no jurisdiction in the Federal courts to proceed against a consul except where he has offended against some specific criminal law of the United States.

I would be glad if you would promptly bring my telegram to the attention of the appropriate authorities in Seattle. You will appreciate that, irrespective of what the facts may be in relation to the alleged commission of the crime with which the Consul is charged, it is desirable that the local authorities should avoid action which might give just grounds for complaint that proceedings were taken against the Consul which were not warranted under the law of this country.

I would also appreciate receiving from you at your early convenience full information regarding the nature of the charges against the Consul, the evidence on which these charges are based and the character of the proceedings instituted against the Consul.

Counselor Lansing to the German Ambassador.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 5, 1915.

Sir: I beg to acknowledge your personal note of March 28, 1915, wherein, with reference to the arrest of the Imperial German Consul at Seattle, you call my attention to section 256 of the judiciary act approved March 3, 1911, which vests jurisdiction in the courts of the United States exclusive of the courts of the several States in all suits and proceedings against consuls and vice consuls.

The Department has, by telegraph, brought the substance of your communications to the Department in relation to this matter to the attention of the Governor of Washington to the end that, irrespective of what the facts may be in relation to the alleged commission of the offense with which the Consul is charged, no proceedings may be taken against him which are not warranted under the law of this country.

In this relation I may refer to the fact that in the memorandum addressed by you to the Department under date of March 18, 1915, you stated that the acts of the local authorities appeared to be in contravention of articles three and five of the consular convention concluded December 11, 1871, between the United States and the German Empire. From the information in possession of the Department, it seems to me doubtful that the authorities have acted at variance with the provisions of the treaty. In referring to article three of the treaty, I presume you have in mind the provision thereof in relation to the immunity of consular officers from arrest and imprisonment. I beg to call your attention to the fact that such immunity is not granted to these officials, in the language of the treaty, "in the case of crimes." Article 5 of the treaty stipulates that consular archives shall be inviolable as shall also offices and dwellings of consuls which shall not be invaded by the local authorities except in the case of pursuit for crimes. So far as the Department is informed, it does not appear that any action has been taken by the authorities in violation of these stipulations.

The Department has requested from the Governor full information regarding the nature of the charges against the Consul, the evidence on which these charges are based, and the character of the proceedings instituted against the Consul.

SIR: Replying to your telegram of April 5, in relation to the arrest by local authorities, of the German Consul and his secretary at Seattle, Washington, I beg to say that on April 6, I wrote the Prosecuting Attorney of King County, in which county the city of Seattle is located, and enclosed to him a copy of your telegram requesting that he make reply to same. Under date of April 8, I received a letter from the Prosecuting Attorney of King County, a copy of which I herewith enclose, feeling that this letter is probably a clearer explanation of the situation than I would make if I endeavored to cover it in my letter.

I am sure that no further action will be taken by the Prosecuting Attorney until we have again had opportunity to hear from you. I shall be pleased indeed to hear from you further regarding the situation and you can be assured will do what I can to assist in avoiding any embarrassment of an international character.

ERNEST LISTER.

Prosecuting Attorney Lundin to Governor Lister.

SEATTLE, WASH., Apr. 8, 1915.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of April 6, enclosing copy of a telegram dated April 5, from W. J. Bryan, Secretary of State, received.

The German Consul Müller, his Secretary Schulz, and one Tarnasky, are charged by information in the superior court of this county with the crime of conspiracy, the charge being that they conspired together to corrupt John Murdock, the agent of the Seattle Dry Dock & Construction Co. This is a gross misdemeanor under our law. Tarnasky made a complete confession of the conspiracy. The agent Murdock was to receive $1,000 or $1,500 which the German Consul told him had been telegraphed for. The agent had taken from the Construction Company's files and had concealed in his home copies of way bills. Some five conferences were had between the agent and the Consul's representative, the last of which was with the German Consul himself.

The agent of the Construction Company was a clear cut, reliable young man of twenty-one years, and his reputation and standing have been ruined by virtue of this conspiracy to bribe him.

My investigation shows that this is not the only instance in which the German Consul has attempted bribery of this nature.

This office has given much consideration to the provisions of the judiciary act referred to, and we admit that jurisdiction of the State's courts in this matter is not clear. However, the matter has not been settled, and it was our intention to submit the question of jurisdiction to the court.

It is not my desire to cause any embarrassment to the Government of the United States, nor would I, as Prosecuting Attorney of this county, assume to interfere with diplomatic relations between the United States and another country. If, therefore, the State Department feels, after being fully acquainted with all the facts, that the prosecution of the German Consul and his secretary will embarrass the United States in the diplomatic relations with Germany and accordingly requests me to discontinue the prosecution of this case, I will consider it my duty to be governed by such request. If this is done, however, and the Consul is allowed to continue in his official capacity in Seattle, it would seem to me that this State ought to have some positive assurance that his future conduct would be in accordance with the laws of the State.

This information was filed March 17; The Consul put up a bond for his appearance, and nothing further has been done in the case. Our laws provide the trial must be had in sixty days after the filing of the information, and it is necessary that the preliminary steps be taken at once. Therefore, whatever action is taken in this matter, must be in the very near future.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Your excellency was so good as to inform me by your kind note of the 10th instant¹ that the authorities of the State of Washington had been instructed, irrespective of the question whether or not the charges brought against Consul Müller and Secretary Schulz are well founded, to take no measure that is not in harmony with the laws of the United States.

I have the honor most respectfully to observe to your excellency that the authorities of the State of Washington in compliance with the instructions given them by your excellency should, in my opinion, first put an end to a situation which breaks that harmony which your excellency acknowledges to be necessary between the State and the Federal law.

It is now a month since Consul Müller and Secretary Schulz have been held to bail in the sum of $1,000 each unlawfully imposed upon them. This situation, which I have tried to remedy in two oral interviews and five previous notes and communications, will not however be brought to an end by the State authorities of Washington until they are positively directed to do so; for they might have interpreted the instruction to take no action that conflicts with the Federal law in the narrow sense, surely not intended by your excellency, or as merely forbidding them to take any positive action in the future in violation of the Federal law. I, on the other hand, simply asked for the recall of a measure taken in the past the effects of which are still felt in the present.

I have the honor most urgently to beg your excellency once more to cause the situation, the unlawfulness of which is not open to doubt, to be brought to an early end.

I have received your letter of April 12, enclosing copy of letter addressed to you by Mr. Lundin, Prosecuting Attorney for King's County, Washington. Mr. Lundin's letter has been appropriately communicated to the German Ambassador. I appreciate your prompt action in this matter and also Mr. Lundin's purpose to act in harmony with the Department.

While there may be no recorded judicial interpretation of the provision of the judiciary act referred to in the Department's letter of April 5, it seems reasonably certain that the State courts have no jurisdiction in the case pending against the German Consul. For this reason and for other reasons which I need not state in view of Mr. Lundin's position as set forth in his letter to you, the Department deems it desirable that the case be dismissed. I believe I am in position to assure you that prompt and effective steps will be taken entirely to remove the possibility of further difficulties between the authorities of the State of Washington and the Consul.

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Fort Erie, December 29, 1914.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report in reply to your telegram, dated Washington, December 28, 1914.

On Monday morning December 28, about 10 o'clock, Walter Smith of Arthur Street, Buffalo, and Charles Dorsch of Calumet Street, Buffalo, were shot while duck hunting by soldiers of the Canadian Militia. Smith was killed instantly while Dorsch was shot through the upper portion of his right lung.

These men had been shooting ducks in violation of the Canadian laws and at the time of happening they had decoys set in the river and had been shooting over these. They were situated on a ridge of ice that had formed about 200 yards from the shore line directly south of the foot of Garrison Road in this village.

From witnesses that I have examined it appears that these men were ordered to come ashore by Police Officer Delaney who intended arresting them for violation of the game laws. To make his command more emphatic he had summoned three of the soldiers from their quarters in the Town Hall with the intention of having them fire over the heads of the duck hunters and in this way frighten the men into surrendering. Several shots were fired with instructions not to hit the men. Instead of obeying the command to pull their boat up on the ice, they both started to row toward the American shore and had rowed 5 or 6 strokes when they both were hit by bullets fired from the guns of the soldiers.

Lying in the bottom of the boat they drifted down stream until almost in front of the Consulate where their boat was towed ashore by another fisherman. Seated in the Consulate, I noticed several running along the shore and went out to see what the trouble was. When the boat was landed I could see Smith had been killed instantly, a bullet entering directly between the eyes and passing out the back of the head. He had been seated in the bow seat of the boat and had fallen over backwards, his hands stretched out as if he had been grasping the oars. Dorsch was seated in the stern seat and had fallen forward on his side. He was groaning and bleeding from the mouth and nose. Dr. Douglas was on the scene immediately and we had him rushed over to the General Hospital. He was too badly hurt to make a statement. I questioned the three soldiers who had been implicated, immediately, as they were all present at the time the boat was landed. They all stated that they had no intention of hitting the men. They are all pretty badly frightened and it is my own opinion that there was no intent on their part to more than badly frighten the duck hunters by shooting as close as they possibly dared. Poor marksmanship on their part must be their accounting for the tragedy.

The boat at the time of landing contained 2 guns, one a pump gun and the other a double-barreled shot-gun. Several ducks and decoys as well as empty shells were in the bottom of the boat.

Coroner Dr. J. R. Mencke took charge of the body of Smith and after a preliminary inquest yesterday afternoon the body was turned over to his relatives and removed to Buffalo last evening. An inquest will be held by Coroner Mencke on Wednesday afternoon, December 30, in the Fort Erie Town Hall, at which I shall be present.

When I could get into communication with the General Hospital this afternoon I learned that Mr. Dorsch was resting comfortably and would recover. I shall endeavor to get a statement from him tomorrow and forward the same to the Department.

The three men who did the shooting are Corporal Kayo, of Midland, Private MacIntosh of Kingston, and Private Kinsman of Galt, Ontario. These men have been placed under arrest and are being held prisoners in the Fort Erie Town Hall until an investigation is made.

SIR: I have the honor to report the finding of the coroner's jury in their inquest on the death of Walter Smith, of Buffalo, N. Y. as follows:

We find that the deceased, Walter Smith, met his death on Monday forenoon, December 28, 1914, while evading arrest for unlawfully shooting duck out of season in Canadian [territory] by a bullet delivered accidentally from the rifles of the 3 militiamen who were called upon by Provisional Officer Thomas Delaney to assist him.

JOHN LAYLE, Foreman.

I personally attended this inquest, which was held in the Fort Erie Town Hall, Wednesday afternoon, December 30, 1914, and am enclosing full minutes of the proceedings.¹

Immediately after the coroner's inquest there was conducted a military inquiry by Lieutenant Colonel Rose, in charge of the 44th Welland and Lincoln regiment, Colonel Ptolomy in command of the military district in which Fort Erie is, and Captain N. G. Fite in charge of the detachment stationed at Fort Erie. Their report was not divulged but forwarded immediately to Ottawa.

I have twice called upon Charles Dorsch in the General Hospital and find his condition greatly improved. I have assurance from his doctor that his recovery is certain unless unexpected complications set in. I endeavored to get a statement from him yesterday but he asked to be excused until today, in making one, as he did not feel strong enough at that time to tell his version. Today he refused absolutely to give me any statement saying that his attorney had forbidden him to say anything about the affair.

SIR: With reference to my letters of December 29 and December 30¹ relative to the death of Walter Smith at Fort Erie, I have the honour to inform you that the Canadian Government has ordered a military inquiry to be held into this case, which is now in progress. At the same time the Provincial Government of Ontario has been requested to furnish a full report on the affair viewed in its civil aspect.

The Governor General of Canada, His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, begs me to convey on the part of the Dominion Government an expression of their profound regret at this unfortunate occurrence and to inform you that as soon as the inquiry is completed a full report will be communicated.

SIR: With reference to my note of the 4th instant relative to the untoward incident at Fort Erie, I have the honour to inform you that I have today received a telegram from His Royal Highness the Governor General of Canada, which is to the following effect.

From information received from the Attorney General for the Province of Ontario as to the nature of the evidence given at the coroner's inquest it appears that the object of the shooting was deterrent, as the deceased and his companions were engaged in shooting out of season and unlawfully; and that the injury which resulted in the regretted death of the deceased was entirely unintentional. The Canadian Government is, however, of opinion that the person who fired the fatal shot ought to be placed on his trial and steps will accordingly be taken for that purpose. In the view of the Canadian Government the circumstances which so unfortunately resulted in the death of the deceased are such that as an act of grace suitable compensation should be made to the family of the deceased and to the person injured by the shooting.

I hasten to communicate the above for the information of your Government and at the same time to renew in the name of the British and Canadian Governments the expression of their sincere regret at this untoward occurrence.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 8, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: I again draw your excellency's attention to the occurrence which took place at Fort Erie, Ontario, on December 28, 1914, in the course of which Walter Smith was killed and Charles Dorsch was seriously wounded through the acts of Officer Delaney of the Ontario police force and Corporal Archie Kayo and Privates Edmond MacIntosh and Leslie Kinsman of the 44 Militia stationed at Fort Erie at the time, while attempting, in their capacity as officers and soldiers under orders, to effect, as they claim, the arrest of Smith and Dorsch for violation of the Canadian game law.

I have now received reports of the circumstances of the affair, including sworn statements of eye witnesses and a transcript of the testimony of witnesses taken at the inquest held by the Canadian authorities into the death of Walter Smith. From the facts disclosed it seems clear that the offense for which the arrest of the two men was sought was a minor one, said to have occurred within the jurisdiction of Ontario; that no resistance was offered or violence threatened by the injured men at the time; that the killing and wounding were inflicted intentionally, or, if not, through the gross and culpable negligence of the officers and soldiers in the most reckless manner in which they used their arms; and that the killing of Smith and the wounding of Dorsch were without justification or excuse. It is not believed that the acts of these Canadian officers and soldiers, as shown by the evidence at hand, will be justified or condoned.

The case is one in which, it is confidently believed, the Canadian authorities will take prompt and appropriate steps for the proper punishment of those shown to be guilty and for compensation to the relatives of the deceased and to the wounded man; and with this end in view I call your excellency's attention to the matter.

The tragedy happened in the waters of the boundary stream between the United States and Canada, so long free from regrettable incidents of this character, although the inhabitants of both countries are in constant intercourse and are closely united by industrial ties and mutual interest. Naturally, the killing of Smith and the wounding of Dorsch in circumstances so unfortunate have provoked no little feeling of resentment on the American side of the boundary; and, as delay in a satisfactory settlement will tend to increase this feeling, I feel justified in urging you to inform me at as early a date as possible, of the intentions of the Canadian Government in the premises.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that on Friday afternoon, January 8, 1915, Chief Mains, of Niagara Falls, Ontario, in charge of the Ontario police in the district of which Fort Erie is a part, came to Fort Erie and arrested Provincial Police Officer Thomas Delaney, and Corporal Archie Kayo, and Privates Edmond MacIntosh and Leslie Kinsman of the contingent of the 44th Regiment, stationed here. The arrests were made on the charge of manslaughter in connection with the killing of Walter Smith and the wounding of Charles Dorsch on December 28, 1914, at Fort Erie.

The men arrested were taken to the county jail at Welland. Attempts to secure release on bail for the men have been fruitless. The Crown Attorney, Mr. Cowper, has announced the preliminary hearing of the men will be held Wednesday afternoon, January 13, 1915, and that they will be tried on March 2, at Welland, when the spring assizes open.

Justice Middleton fixed bail for Delaney at $30,000, and $20,000 for each of the militiamen. He also ruled that each of the prisoners might give his personal bond for half the amount of the bail. Officer Delaney was released last evening on giving his personal bond for $15,000 and on the bonds of 2 responsible persons for $7,500 each. [Extract.]

No. 13.]

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Niagara Falls, March 3, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I attended the opening of the March assizes at Welland, Ontario, yesterday. It was at this term of court that the peace officer Thomas Delaney, and the Canadian soldiers Kayo, MacIntosh and Kinsman, were to have been tried on a charge of manslaughter for having caused the death of Walter Smith, an American citizen. * * *

Under Canadian criminal procedure, persons accused of crime are presented to the grand jury, and if indicted are tried immediately, or at least almost invariably at the same term of court. The case is not sent on for trial to another court or another term of court, as is usual in most of our State courts in the United States.

Accordingly upon the convening of court at Welland yesterday, the grand jury was empanelled and charged shortly after 1 p. m., the hour of opening the session. Thirteen grand jurors were drawn and sat, and as a grand jury were charged by Chancellor Sir John Alexander Boyd, K. C. M. G., who presided over the court.

Among other things the judge instructed the jury as to the number (7) necessary to concur in an indictment, and stated to the jurors that they should take into consideration the fact that some $16,000 had been paid by Canada because of the shooting; and that in so far as money could compensate in a matter of this kind, a just compensation had already been made to the victims of the occurrence. Their verdict showed the effect of the judge's charge.

How such a verdict as "no bill" could have been reached by any intelligent and fair-minded jury on the evidence adduced before it, I cannot imagine.

The evidence taken upon the coroner's inquest is convincing to a degree as to the criminal negligence and utter disregard of human life evidenced by the officers in attempting these arrests. Reinforced as this evidence was by the stories of two disinterested eye witnesses (Mr. Sheridan and Mrs. Carlton Wilson, the former of whom describes the shooting most minutely, as does also the latter with a positive assertion that she saw the two soldiers kneeling on firing the last and fatal volley, evidently taking deliberate aim) it is inconceivable that a fair minded jury attempting to do substantial justice could fail to indict, that the truth might be brought out upon a trial.

Charles Dorsch, the man who was wounded, appeared before the grand jury and gave his testimony. He did so at the special request of Crown Attorney Cowper.

In reply, I have the honor to say that the Department is gratified that the British authorities have seen fit to take prompt steps to make a just disposition of this regrettable occurrence by apprehending and bringing to trial the persons who did the shooting and by indemnifying the wounded man and the mother of the man killed.

The Secretary of State ad interim to the British Ambassador.

MEMORANDUM.

The Secretary of State ad interim deems it proper to call to the attention of his excellency the British Ambassador information which the Department of State has received regarding the action of a Canadian judge in giving a charge, apparently highly improper, to the grand jury which was empaneled to consider the cases against the men who, in December last, shot the American citizens Walter Smith and Charles Dorsch at Fort Erie, Ontario.

As his excellency was informed in a note dated January 8, 1915, the Department of State, after investigation of this occurrence, was of the opinion that the killing of one of these American citizens and the wounding of the other was without justification. The Department of State after having received assurances that suitable steps would be taken to redress these injuries through proper steps being taken to bring to justice the guilty persons and through the payment of indemnities to the wounded man and to the relatives of the deceased, was glad to learn that indemnities were promptly paid by the Canadian authorities. But the Department regrets that it has received authentic information to the effect that the judge, in instructing the jury, informed them to the effect that they should take into consideration the fact that an indemnity of some $16,000 had been paid by the Canadian Government, and that insofar as money could afford compensation in a matter of this kind, just compensation had been made to the victims. From the information before the Department of State it seems reasonably certain that the action of the jury in failing to indict the men who did the shooting was influenced by this obviously improper statement on the part of the Judge.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 11, 1915.

File No. 342.112Sm6/26.

The British Ambassador to the Secretary of State.

MEMORANDUM.

The British Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State, and with reference to Mr. Lansing's memorandum of the 11th June last, on the subject of the case brought against the persons responsible for the shooting of the American citizens Walter Smith and Charles Dorsch in December last, has the honour to state that the observations contained in that memorandum with regard to the failure of the grand jury to indict these persons were duly brought to the attention of the competent authorities in Canada.

As a result of a careful examination of the case, these authorities have reached the conclusion that there was nothing in the charge to the grand jury, if taken as a whole, of a nature to influence the grand jury to find no bill, and they do not consider that the action of the jury in failing to indict the men who did the shooting can properly be attributed to the passage in the charge which is quoted in the memorandum from the Secretary of State. The considerations which led the jury to find no bill can of course, in view of the grand jurors' oath to observe and keep secret the Kings' counsel, his fellows' and his own, not be the subject of accurate information, independently of such inferences as may be drawn from the words of the charge, and it is thought that the learned judge did not refer to the payment of an indemnity in such terms as could be interpreted by the jury as an instruction that the payment could possibly justify or atone for any offence against the criminal law which had previously been committed by the persons whose presentment was under consideration.

The Canadian authorities are not disposed to deny the duty imposed on the local government, both for the proper administration of the criminal law and by good international practice, to have resort to the ordinary proceedings to put upon their trial the persons who were responsible for the shooting; but on the other hand, in the present case, where there can be no question of malice, it would not appear to be incumbent on such Government to have recourse to extraordinary proceedings.

The Government of Canada have in these circumstances decided that the documents in this case, including the memorandum from the Secretary of State under reply, should be referred to the authorities of the Province of Ontario, who are responsible for the administration of criminal justice in the province, in order that they may consider the advisability of renewing proceedings in the matter by a fresh presentation to a grand jury.

COPYRIGHT ON UNPUBLISHED MUSICAL WORKS FOR REPRODUCTION BY MECHANICAL MUSICAL CONTRIVANCES GRANTED BY THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN RECIPROCALLY.

File No. 811.54441/11.

The Secretary of State to the President.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 30, 1914.

TO THE PRESIDENT:

I have the honor to invite your attention to the unsatisfactory state of the copyright relations between the United States and Great Britain which have existed since January 1, 1912, on which date the British Consolidated Copyright Act of December 16, 1911, became effective, and to enclose herewith for your information on the subject copies of two memoranda¹ of the Register of Copyrights, dated December 9, 1912, and January 6, 1914, respectively, both of which have been approved by the Librarian of Congress, in which the matter is dealt with at some length.

It will be noted from these memoranda that on the one hand American citizens not resident in British Dominions, who are authors of unpublished works, i. e., dramas, musical compositions, lectures and other productions for oral delivery and original works of art, paintings and sculpture, can not now obtain for their works in Great Britain the protection afforded to British subjects by the British Copyright Act now in force and that as a consequence they also lose protection for such works throughout the countries of the International Copyright Union, as well as the right to compel the payment of royalty for the use in Great Britain of unpublished musical works for reproduction by mechanical musical contrivances.

On the other hand it appears that British authors of musical works cannot take advantage in the United States of the provisions of Section I (e) of the Copyright Act approved March 4, 1909, to acquire copyright controlling the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically their musical compositions. It will also be noted that the suggestion was made by the Register of Copyrights that the matter might be adjusted to the mutual benefit of both countries by an agreement between them whereby the British Government, under the provisions of Section 29 of the British Copyright Act of July 1, 1912, would issue an Order in Council, as authorized thereby, directing that the provisions of the Act shall apply, with regard to the unpublished works of American authors,

(1) to literary, dramatic, musical, and artistic work, or any class thereof, the authors whereof were at the time of the making of the work citizens of the United States, in like manner as if the authors were British subjects; and

(2) in respect of residence in the United States, in like manner as if such residence were residence in the parts of His Majesty's dominions to which this Act extends;

in exchange for which reciprocal protection of their musical works in the United States would be extended to British subjects by the issuance, under the provisions of Section 8 (b) of the Copyright Act of March 4, 1909, of a Presidential Proclamation extending to the subjects of Great Britain the protection afforded by this Act.

This Department has for some time been in correspondence with the British Government on the subject and has received from the American Ambassador at London a despatch¹ dated November 27 last reporting that the British Government has expressed its willingness to issue such an Order in Council as is mentioned above upon receipt of assurances that a Presidential Proclamation extending to British subjects the protection in the United States provided for by Section I (e) of the Act of March 4, 1909, would be issued by this Government. A copy of the proposed British Order in Council having been forwarded with the Ambassador's despatch, it was, on December 18, forwarded to the Librarian of Congress for his consideration and an expression of his views as to its sufficiency and as to whether in consequence of its proposed issuance this Department would be justified in recommending the issuance of such a Presidential Proclamation as that just referred to. I have the honor to enclose for your information a copy of the Librarian's reply¹ and, in conformity with the recommendations therein made, to enclose also for your signature, should you approve thereof, a proposed Proclamation² to be issued by you under the provisions of Section 8 (b) of the Copyright Act approved March 4, 1909, extending to British subjects the protection afforded by Section I (e) of that Act, including copyright controlling the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically a musical work.

The British Government has expressed a wish that the proposed Order in Council and Proclamation may take effect as of date of January 1, 1915.

Respectfully submitted:

Proclamation 1289.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS it is provided by the Act of Congress of March 4, 1909, entitled "An Act to Amend and Consolidate the Acts Respecting Copyright," that the provisions of said Act, "so far as they secure copyright controlling the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically the musical work, shall include only compositions published and copyrighted after the Act goes into effect, and shall not include the works of a foreign author or composer unless the foreign state or nation of which such author or composer is a citizen or subject grants, either by treaty, convention, agreement, or law, to citizens of the United States similar rights":

And whereas it is further provided that the copyright secured by the Act shall extend to the work of an author or proprietor who is a citizen or subject of a foreign state or nation, only upon certain conditions set forth in section 8 of said Act, to wit:

(a) When an alien author or proprietor shall be domiciled within the United States at the time of the first publication of his work; or

(b) When the foreign state or nation of which such author or proprietor is a citizen or subject grants, either by treaty, convention, agreement, or law, to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens, or copyright protection substantially equal to the protection secured to such foreign author under this Act or by treaty; or when such foreign state or nation is a party to an international agreement which provides for reciprocity in the granting of copyright, by the terms of which agreement the United States may, at its pleasure, become a party thereto:

And whereas it is also provided by said section that "The existence of the reciprocal conditions aforesaid shall be determined by the President of the United States, by proclamation made from time to time as the purposes of this Act may require":

And whereas satisfactory official assurance has been given that, by virtue of the authority conferred by the British Copyright Act,

² See the next paper.

1911, a British Order in Council has been issued of even date with this Proclamation directing:

1. That "the Copyright Act, 1911, including the provisions as to existing works, shall, subject to the provisions of the said Act and of this Order, apply—

(a) to literary, dramatic, musical and artistic works the authors whereof were at the time of the making of the works citizens of the United States of America, in like manner as if the authors had been British subjects:

(b) in respect of residence in the United States of America, in like manner as if such residence had been residence in the parts of His Majesty's dominions to which the said Act extends.

Provided that—

(i) the term of copyright within the parts of His Majesty's dominions to which this Order applies shall not exceed that conferred by the law of the United States of America:

(ii) the enjoyment of the rights conferred by this Order shall be subject to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by the law of the United States of America:

(iii) in the application to existing works of the provisions of Section 24 of the Copyright Act, 1911, the commencement of this Order shall be substituted for the 26th July, 1910, in subsection 1 (b)."

2. That "this Order shall apply to all His Majesty's dominions, colonies and possessions with the exception of those hereinafter named, that is to say:—The Dominion of Canada, The Commonwealth of Australia, The Dominion of New Zealand, The Union of South Africa, Newfoundland."

3. That "this Order shall come into operation on the first day of January, 1915, which day is in this Order referred to as the commencement of this Order.

And the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury are to give the necessary Orders accordingly."

Now, therefore, I, WOODROW WILSON, President of the United States of America, do declare and proclaim that one of the alternative conditions specified in section 8 (b) of the Act of March 4, 1909, now exists and is fulfilled in respect to the subjects of Great Britain and the British dominions, colonies and possessions, with the exception of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and Newfoundland, and that such subjects shall be entitled to all the benefits of section I (e) of the said Act, on and after January 1, 1915.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth.

AT THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE
THE 3RD DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1915.

Present,
The King's Most Excellency Majesty
Lord President
Mr. Secretary Harcourt
Viscount Knollys
Mr. Arthur Henderson
Lord Chamberlain
Sir William Macgregor
Lord Justice Bankes

Whereas by a Proclamation of the President of the United States of America, dated the 9th April, 1910, the benefits of the United States Act of 1909, entitled "An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting Copyright," were extended to the Subjects of Great Britain and her Possessions, but no provision was made therein for the protection of the musical works of British Subjects against reproduction by means of mechanical contrivances:

And whereas His Majesty is advised that the Government of the United States of America has undertaken, upon the issue of this Order, to grant such protection to the musical works of British Subjects:

And whereas by reason of these premises His Majesty is satisfied that the Government of the United States of America has made, or has undertaken to make, such provision as it is expedient to require for the protection of works entitled to Copyright under the provisions of Part I of the Copyright Act, 1911:

And whereas by the Copyright Act, 1911, authority is conferred upon His Majesty to extend, by Order in Council, the protection of the said Act to certain classes of foreign works within any parts of His Majesty's Dominions, other than self-governing Dominions, to which the said Act extends:

And whereas it is desirable to provide protection within the said Dominions for the unpublished works of Citizens of the United States of America:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, and by virtue of the authority conferred upon him by the Copyright Act, 1911, is pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. The Copyright Act, 1911, including the provisions as to existing works, shall, subject to the provisions of the said Act, and of this Order, apply—

- (a) to literary, dramatic, musical and artistic works the authors whereof were at the time of the making of the works Citizens of the United States of America, in like manner as if the authors had been British Subjects:
- (b) in respect of residence in the United States of America, in like manner as if such residence had been residence in the parts of His Majesty's Dominions to which the said Act extends.

Provided that—

- (i) the term of Copyright within the parts of His Majesty's Dominions to which the Order applies shall not exceed that conferred by the law of the United States of America:
- (ii) the enjoyment of the rights conferred by this Order shall be subject to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by the law of the United States of America:
- (iii) in the application to existing works of the provisions of Section 24 of the Copyright Act, 1911, the commencement of this Order shall be substituted for the 26th July, 1910, in subsection 1 (b).

2. This Order shall apply to all His Majesty's Dominions, Colonies and Possessions, with the exception of those hereinafter named, that is to say:—

The Dominion of Canada.
 The Commonwealth of Australia.
 The Dominion of New Zealand.
 The Union of South Africa.
 Newfoundland.

3. This Order shall come into operation on the 1st day of January, 1915, which day is in this Order referred to as the commencement of this Order.

And the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury are to give the necessary orders accordingly.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 3, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: It not having been found possible to complete the International Commission provided for in the Treaty of September 20, 1913, between the United States and Guatemala, looking to the advancement of the general cause of peace, within the time specified in the Treaty, which expired February 13, 1915, I have the honor to suggest for the consideration of your Government that the time within which the organization of the Commission may be completed be extended by an exchange of notes from February 13, 1915, to January 1, 1916.

Your formal notification in writing, of the same date as this, that your Government receives the suggestion favorably, will be regarded on this Government's part as sufficient to give effect to the extension, and I shall be glad to receive your assurance that it will be so regarded by your Government also.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

ROBERT LANSING.

The Minister of Guatemala to the Secretary of State.

LEGACIÓN DE GUATEMALA,
Washington, November 3rd, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of to-day, in which your excellency suggests, that as it was not possible to complete the International Commission provided for in the Treaty of September 20, 1913, between the United States and Guatemala, looking to the advancement of the general cause of peace, within the time specified in the treaty, which expired February 13, 1915, that the time within which the organization of the Commission may be completed be extended by an exchange of notes from February 13, 1915, to January 1, 1916.

In answer to your excellency's note, I beg to state that the Government of Guatemala receives the suggestion most favourably, and I therefore believe that this answer of mine in the name of my Government can be regarded as the completing of the exchange of notes.

I avail myself of the opportunity to renew to your excellency the assurances of my highest consideration and esteem.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Guatemala, March 9, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on the first day of the current month the Congress of Guatemala was convened in this capital. The message of President Manuel Estrada Cabrera was read to the Congress by the Foreign Minister.

That message I am forwarding in the pouch today with translations of the only two matters of particular interest to the Department which President Cabrera discussed in his message.

I have [etc.]

WILLIAM HAYNE LEAVELL.

[Inclosure—Translation—Extract.]

Relations between Guatemala and the United States have been maintained according to the traditional bases of cordiality and sympathy. The Government of the Republic has been in continual communication with the Government of the great American nation and has viewed with gratitude the important initiatives taken by the Government of this friendly nation. The disastrous war which has been going on in the Old World since the month of July has brought about suddenly a situation which is unique in the New World and owing to this situation the necessity has arisen for the peoples of this hemisphere to settle many problems, principally economic ones, which did not exist formerly. As the centers of European production and the markets which consumed a great part of the American exports are for the moment closed, it has become necessary to turn our eyes to other countries and nothing is more natural than to take into consideration the geographical situation of the countries which are nearest to us in order to obtain with these countries better conditions for the marketing of our fruits as well as the centers of produce which are indispensable to the feeding of our commerce of importation. In order to facilitate this, various means have been suggested in the United States and an international conference is now being arranged. This conference has been called together by the American Government and will be for the purpose of discussing the most expeditious and surest methods for bringing about more considerable commercial and financial relations between the United States and the nations of Central and South America. * * *

The facility which will be lent by the new lines of steamships now gathering in the ports of Central America constitutes another factor in the development which, owing to international commerce, we hope will take place in a short time in these countries.

The opening of the Panama Canal, which has created a new commercial era for all the countries of the world and especially for the countries which like ourselves surround the Caribbean Sea, will without doubt be one of the most important events of the present century. Guatemala, courteously invited, will be represented at the ceremonies arranged for the celebration of this great incident and will make manifest the importance of the event and the firm friendship which unites us with the Great American Republic. * * *

The great success at the Exposition of Ghent and the Exposition of Tropical Products in London, lead one to believe that an equal or even greater success may result at the exposition arranged for at San Francisco, California, in celebration of the inauguration of the Panama Canal, in the presence of which Guatemala could not remain indifferent in view of the real love that this country bears toward all progress and in view of the strong ties that unite us with the older sister of the countries of America, the democratic and liberal Republic of the United States.

HAITI.

CONCLUSION OF A TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND HAITI FOR THE FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND TRANQUILLITY OF HAITI. CONCLUSION OF A MODUS VIVENDI.¹

Admiral Caperton to the Secretary of the Navy.

[Telegram—Paraphrase—Extract.]²

U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," August 7, 1915.

I have had daily conferences with the President of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, with Senators, Deputies, ex-Cabinet Ministers, and many leading Haitians. In the presence of Congressmen, Dartiguenave, President of the Senate, stated that Congressmen are agreed that Haiti must and will accede gladly to any terms proposed by the United States. Now, they say they will cede outright without restriction St. Nicholas Mole, granting us the right to intervene when necessary, customhouse control, and any other terms. Only they beg to avoid as far as possible humiliation. They insist that no government can stand except through protection of the United States. Without this protection there would be nothing but anarchy in Haiti according to their statements. Most Haitians now fear that the Americans will withdraw their troops.

Immediately it is extremely desirable to reestablish government. Next Thursday, August 12, unless otherwise directed, I will permit Congress to elect a President.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 12, 1915.

For more than a year the Haitian Government has been familiar with the terms of the treaty contained in Department's instruction of July 2, 1914,³ with which they have already expressed their agreement regarding principal parts. Recently, however, assurances have been received that Haitian authorities are willing now to go farther than before, including cession to the United States of Mole St. Nicholas. In view of the friendly attitude of the Haitian Government as shown by these proposals, you will please prepare forthwith a draft of a treaty as outlined in this cablegram. Without delay submit it informally to the President elect, and advise him that the Department believes that, as a guaranty of the sincerity and interest of Haitians in the orderly and peaceful development of their country, the Haitian Congress will be pleased to pass forthwith a resolution authorizing the President elect to conclude, without modification, the treaty submitted by you.

When officially notified that such a resolution has been passed by Congress, extend to the President elect the formal recognition of this Government and simultaneously conclude with the newly elected President of Haiti, to end that it may be forthwith submitted for ratification by the present Haitian Congress before its adjournment, a treaty in strict accordance with the draft referred to, with the following alterations and additions:

Alterations:

Omit from Article I the words: "if he shall deem it necessary and expedient, or if the Haitian Government shall request," so that that portion of Article I, referring to the appointment of Financial Adviser, shall read as follows: "and the President of the United States shall designate a Financial Adviser to the Republic of Haiti, who shall devise an adequate system of public accounting, et cetera," making corresponding changes throughout the treaty, particularly in Articles IV and VIII. Omit last two words, "of accounts" at end of Article I.

In Article II after the word "Receivership" add "and to the Financial Adviser"; change "its" before "execution" to "the."

In Article III substitute "Financial Adviser" for "General Receiver" in both instances.

First paragraph Article IV will read: "All sums collected and received by the General Receiver shall be applied, first, to the payment of the salaries and allowances of the General Receiver, his assistants and employees and expenses of the Receivership, including the salary and expenses of the Financial Adviser; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of the Republic of Haiti; and, third, to the maintenance of the constabulary referred to in Article IX; and then the remainder to the Haitian Government for purposes of current expenses. Second paragraph of Article IV will end with words "previous month."

Additions.

After Article VIII, insert articles as follows:

Article IX. The Haitian Government obligates itself, for the preservation of domestic peace, the security of individual rights and the full observance of the provisions of this treaty, to create without delay and [an] efficient constabulary composed of native Haitians. This constabulary shall be organized and officered by Americans, designated by the President of the United States, which officers the Haitian Government shall appoint and shall clothe with the proper and necessary authority and uphold in the performance of their functions. The constabulary herein provided for shall, under the direction of the Haitian Government, have supervision and control of arms and ammunition, military supplies, and traffic therein, throughout the country. The high contracting parties agree that the stipulations in this article are necessary to prevent factional strife and disturbances.

Article X. The Government of Haiti agrees not to surrender any of the territory of the Republic of Haiti by sale, lease, or otherwise, or jurisdiction over such territory, to any foreign Government or Power except to the United States, nor to enter into any treaty or contract with any other foreign Power or Powers that will impair, or tend to impair, the independence of Haiti.

Article XI. The Haitian Government agrees to execute with the United States a protocol for the settlement, by arbitration or otherwise, of all pending pecuniary claims of foreign corporations, companies, citizens or subjects against Haiti.

Article XII. The Republic of Haiti, being desirous to further the development of its natural resources, agrees to undertake and execute such measures as in the opinion of the Government of the United States may be necessary for the sanitation and public improvement of the Republic, under the supervision and direction of an engineer or engineers, to be designated by the President of the United States, and appointed and authorized for that purpose by the Government of Haiti.

Article XIII. The United States shall have authority to prevent any and all interference with the attainment of any of the objects comprehended in this convention as well as the right to intervene for the preservation of Haitian independence and the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty.

Article XIV. The present treaty shall be approved and ratified by the high contracting parties in conformity with their respective laws, and the ratification thereof shall be exchanged in the City of Washington as soon as may be possible.

Article XV. The present treaty shall remain in full force and virtue for the term of ten years, to be counted from the day of exchange of ratifications, and further for another term of ten years at the request of either party.

In faith whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention in duplicate, and have thereunto affixed their seals.

Necessary full powers will be cabled you with least possible delay.

Referring to last paragraph of Department's telegram [dated August 12], despatched through the Navy Department at two a. m. this morning, your full powers signed by the President today read as follows:

Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, To all to whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

Know ye, That reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity, prudence and ability of Robert Beale Davis, Junior, Chargé d'Affaires of the United States at Port au Prince, I have invested him with full and all manner of power and authority for and in the name of the United States to meet and confer with any person or persons duly authorized by the Government of Haiti, being invested with like power and authority, and with him or them to negotiate, conclude and sign a treaty looking to the strengthening of the amity existing between the two countries by the most cordial cooperation in measures for their common advantage.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand at the City of Washington, the fourteenth day of August in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fortieth.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 18, 1915—5 p. m.

Department's telegram to you August 10, midnight [noon]⁴ and that was delivered to you through the Navy, 9:40 a. m. August 15, should make perfectly clear to you the treaty which the United States deems necessary for maintenance of domestic peace in Haiti. The Department expects prompt ratification by Haiti of this treaty, powers to conclude which were cabled you August 14.

As soon after ratification as possible, the Department contemplates using its unofficial good offices to obtain immediate renewal of railroad construction so as to furnish means of livelihood for some of the large number of unemployed throughout the country.

Meanwhile and in order to provide sustenance for starving natives and to bring in marauders who constitute a grave public menace, it is desired that you confer with Admiral Caperton to the end that under his direction such public works may be conducted as will relieve the urgent need for employment and cause those who now promote factional disorders and unrest to lay down their arms and desist from efforts to foment strife. Extreme care should be taken not to exceed the customary scale of wages for such employment and every safeguard should be observed to insure that each individual receive his full due and be protected absolutely from all forms of petty graft. Admiral Caperton will therefore receive instructions to take charge, if possible upon the invitation of the de facto authorities, of such customhouses as are necessary to provide the funds: (1) to employ, keep occupied, and pay the individuals in question; (2) to establish peace throughout the country; (3) to support the Dartiguenave Government.

⁴ See Political Affairs.

To aid in the establishment of peace and in order to give the people renewed trust and confidence and to inspire them in the pursuits of industry and commerce, it is thought desirable that you confer with Archbishop Conan to the end that it be proclaimed to the natives through the clergy, and where possible by an American officer through the clergy, that they will be protected from interference in their rights to barter and sell their products and to enjoy the fruits of their labors.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

For your guidance in informal conversations with the de facto President, you may use the following as your views of the motives and purposes of the Government of the United States:

To establish a stable government and lasting domestic peace so that the Haitian people may safely enjoy their full rights of life, liberty and property and all patriotic citizens may be encouraged to participate in the development of their country, the treaty submitted ought to be ratified immediately, and at the same time the Haitian Government should invite this Government to enter into a modus vivendi embodying the same terms as the treaty and to operate thereunder until the United States Senate has acted upon the treaty

⁵ Printed in the telegram referred to.

You might express the conviction that, in case such a request for a modus was made, the Haitian Government would not find this Department unsympathetic toward any proper effort which might be made to place the Haitian finances on a sound basis so that the Haitian Government may be able to pay promptly adequate salaries to its officials; to establish a good school system; to build roads and generally facilitate the transportation and marketing of the products of the country; to extend and perfect the present telegraph lines and erect and maintain wireless stations; to undertake harbor improvements and municipal sanitation; and, by carrying on public works of this nature, to furnish employment to the people and afford them opportunities to improve their industrial and intellectual condition.

To the end that this economic development may be freely and safely undertaken by the Haitian people, it seems indispensable to organize and maintain a trained constabulary which will take the place of the Haitian army and which, well officered and properly equipped and disciplined, will possess sufficient power to preserve order, suppress insurrections, and protect life and property throughout the Republic.

With the great resources of Haiti undeveloped because of the frequent political disorders and the constant danger to life and property, the de facto President must desire to adopt measures which will remove these obstacles. Believing him to be inspired by patriotic motives and the sincere purpose to improve the conditions of the Haitian people by maintaining peace and securing to them their individual rights, he will undoubtedly aid in carrying out the steps suggested. In his efforts he may confidently expect the United States, which seeks only the welfare of Haiti and its people, to give to him such protection and assistance as it may properly render.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Having seen that the Haitian Government did not seem disposed to act promptly, I informed the Government on Saturday [August 21] that I hoped to be advised on or before August 25 of the passage of a resolution by the Chambers authorizing the President to conclude, without modification, a treaty in accordance with submitted draft; and reminded them once more that under my instructions passage of such resolution was a condition precedent to treaty negotiations.

At noon Minister of Foreign Affairs himself delivered a note in reply and said that he begged to state officially that should the United States insist upon other action than that which the Government had expressed itself in the note as willing to perform, the President and Cabinet would be forced to resign. In the note the Government says, after expressing its great desire to enter into an arrangement with the United States, "it holds itself at the disposition of your Government to commence pourparlers"; and further: "Anxious to avoid all difficulties which would be of a nature to alter the good relations which exist between Haiti and the United States, the Haitian Government would be disposed, since the United States insists upon it, to suggest to the Legislative Chambers the vote of a resolution expressing the desire to see the President of the Republic conclude a convention with the United States to the best reciprocal interests of the two countries."

The difficulty rests upon the expression "without modification" as given in my instructions. In the opinion based on what I have been able to learn through unofficial channels, it is the hope of the Government to begin pourparlers to the end that customs control may be avoided.

Even should the Government make good its statement as to resignation, in view of all the circumstances as one sees them here, I believe it will be highly detrimental to a satisfactory and permanent settlement of the question if any concession be made at this time since none of the conditions imposed can be omitted without endangering the efficacy of the entire plan.

Unless I receive instructions to the contrary, I shall continue to use my best efforts to have treaty signed under the conditions of my original instructions.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 24, 1915—9 p. m.

The United States desires to deal justly and considerately with Haitians. It covets no Haitian territory, nor does it desire to usurp Haitian sovereignty or seek treaty conditions other than for the welfare of the Haitian people.

When the Haitians, as reported in Admiral Caperton's telegram dated August 7, proposed to cede outright, without restriction, Mole St. Nicholas, the Government of the United States, in its desire to avoid anything that would seem like an infringement of the territorial sovereignty of Haiti, declined to insert such a provision in the treaty. This action on the part of the United States stands as an evidence of its good faith and unselfish motives.]

Reposing full credence in the statements which Dartiguenave and the members of the Haitian Congress had made to Admiral Caperton, the Department naturally expected a speedy ratification of the treaty, and it expected that at the same time a resolution would be passed by the Haitian Congress inviting the United States to enter into a modus vivendi which, having provisions similar to the treaty, would be operative until action on the treaty by the United States Senate.

Your August 23, 4 p. m., indicates that the de facto authorities give little evidence of their purpose to comply with their offers of August 7.⁶ If the previous understanding, which has influenced the conduct of this Government, does not result in a prompt ratification of the treaty, then this Government will be compelled to consider the adoption of one of the following courses: First, establishing there a military government until honest elections can be held; second, permitting the control of the government to pass to some other political faction representative of the best elements of Haiti whose members will be willing to join in the prompt reestablishment of a stable government and permanent domestic peace. |

In the event of the resignation of de facto authorities, Admiral Caperton will be instructed immediately to take the necessary means to accomplish one or the other of the two objects.

Use the foregoing discreetly and orally impress upon the President elect, and his supporters, serious consequences which may result if they should force this Government to adopt one of the above alternatives. It seems to this Government that the adoption of the treaty as proposed is the simplest method of establishing the stable and efficient government desired by all.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, August 25, 1915—6 p. m.

Yesterday in an unofficial talk with the Minister of Public Instruction he said that the convention submitted was altogether satisfactory and could be signed provided the United States would agree to the change of a few details which in no way affected the basic principles involved. Later Deputy Cham, the most intimate friend of the President-elect, confirmed this and suggested that I talk with the President privately and unofficially. I agreed and last night had talk with the President. He corroborated information already received and seemed most sincere both in his desire to conclude treaty as soon as possible and belief that such an agreement would be had. I told him that while I was not authorized to sign any treaty other than the one submitted I would not object to forwarding to Washington his desired changes, should they prove to be as I had been led to believe. He promised me to notify me of the exact changes desired at the first possible moment and has just informed me that he expects to be able to do so to-morrow.

Unreliable political enemies of the Haitian Government are attempting to stir up animosity against Government and American intervention and chances for successful negotiations greatly increased if we take no steps, other than those which are a military necessity for preservation of peace and order, which would arouse public opinion and consequently make ratification more difficult to secure. On receipt, will telegraph desired alterations for Department's consideration.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, August 28, 1915—10 a. m.

Fears expressed in my August 23, 4 p. m., materialized yesterday when Minister for Foreign Affairs submitted written reply of Haitian Government to treaty submitted. Practically every stipulation of original treaty is either omitted or so changed as to defeat its purpose.

I have this morning replied to the same and after reminding Minister for Foreign Affairs that I had been repeatedly assured that we were in accord as to all principles involved, differing only as to slight matters of detail, as the basis (my August 25, 6 p. m.), I declined to discuss the same and requested an expression of opinion as to acceptability of the draft as originally submitted.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, August 30, 1915. 10 p. m.

Pursuant to my request for an expression of opinion as to draft of treaty originally submitted, I succeeded yesterday in having President and Cabinet go into detailed discussion with me as to original proposition. After a conference of seven hours they would, on behalf of Government, agree to sign the treaty modified as below set out.

Insist that plan for the control of customs as proposed infringes upon the existing bank concessions, and insist this difficulty should be removed before the question finally discussed. State that they are willing to give the control of customs if this difficulty is removed, adding however that even after removal of difficulty they would insist on changes which would give the United States control but not administration.

Declare that financial adviser altogether impossible of acceptance as infringing on the constitutional powers of Minister of Finance.

Declare that Article 13 acceptable in substance but not in form but refused to submit a form which would be acceptable to them.

Decline to accept the clause allowing renewal, substituting one making it optional with either party to conclude agreement at the end of ten years.

Desire to substitute word "American" for the word "foreign" in Article 11.

In Article 10 wish to omit "except to United States" and the word "other".

Desire appointments be made by the President of Haiti from a list submitted by the President of the United States instead of directly by President.

Other minor details in wording are also desired.

They declare a treaty as above indicated is the utmost they can agree to, giving unconstitutionality, fear of popular opinion and impossibility of receiving support of Chambers as reasons why more can not be conceded. Evident disinclination of several Cabinet members to really attempt to arrive at an agreement is very apparent. They state that Government will resign rather than agree to original stipulations; seem to be working for a delay. President himself seems sincerely desirous of reaching agreement, but does not appear to be a man of sufficient force to control Cabinet and Chambers.

In view of possibility of their sincerity and a fall of the Government, have not delivered contents of your August 28, 8 p. m.,⁸ as it may very possibly result in United States being obliged to take steps referred to in your August 24 and consequently think it advisable to advise you and allow opportunity for decision as to which course to pursue in such an eventuality.

In my opinion think it advisable to resume taking of custom-houses.

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 1, 1915—1 p. m.

Your August 30, 10 p. m. Department has taken careful note of Haitian opinion regarding modified treaty Haitians would agree to sign, and that they are willing to give control, but not administration, of customs, provided the proposed control does not infringe upon existing bank concessions.

This Department, desiring to evidence consideration for contracts which the Haitian Government had made with the National Bank of Haiti, made perfectly clear to the president and manager of the latter and to the French Ambassador that it would probably become necessary for this Government to take charge of the principal Haitian customhouses, so that the proceeds therefrom might be used temporarily to provide sustenance for starving natives; to bring in marauders, who constitute a public menace; to undertake such temporary sanitation and public works as would be necessary to relieve the urgent need for employment; and to cause those engaged in factional strife to lay down their arms. They were informed that Admiral Caperton would be instructed accordingly and that it is the desire of the American Government that such discretionary use of the funds be ended at the earliest possible moment and that at the opportune moment this Government will, by the exchange of notes with the French Government, make clear its intention with respect to the terms of the agreement between the Republic of Haiti and the National Bank of Haiti, in the interpretation of which it is thought that the French and the American Governments can so agree as to avoid any conflict whatsoever with the convention which this Government now presents to the Republic of Haiti for ratification.

All the above, fully understood by the French interests and by the French Ambassador, brought forth from the president of the Bank the expression that,

In case the United States deems it proper to extend its action to all the other customhouses in Haiti, in order that the money may be fully collected and deposited with the desired regularity, the Bank will be quite willing to carry, in a special account, according to the desires of the United States Government, the funds received from this source.

Therefore, from the above the Republic of Haiti may clearly see that no obstacle prevents its full acceptance of the clauses of the convention that relate to the customs. In the administration of the customs control the United States naturally desires to make use of as many competent Haitians as show themselves to be patriotic and desirous of respecting the spirit of the convention.

In connection with the financial control the Department's recent action in connection with Mole St. Nicholas shows clearly its desire to respect the Constitution and sovereignty of Haiti. There will be, however, no reasonable prospect of relief to the Haitian people or of the rehabilitation of Haitian finances if the funds from customs are to be left as a possible invitation to some ambitious revolutionist to overturn the Government and to reproduce the recent wanton acts, security from which the proposed convention is thought fully to provide. The Financial Adviser will be an officer attached to the Ministry of Finance, of whose recommendations the Minister will be expected to avail himself, which will not affect his constitutional prerogatives.

The Department has no objection to changing the form of Article 13, provided the precise spirit of the language expressed therein is conveyed in other phraseology more pleasing to the Haitians.

If the Haitians object to the renewal clause, Article 15 may read,

The present treaty shall remain in force until the payment or retirement of any and all bonds which have been issued by the Republic of Haiti or which may be issued during the next twenty years.

The United States, compelled by the appalling conditions in Haiti to undertake the establishment of peace in the Republic, is fully convinced that the proposed convention is necessary to make peace permanent and to give Haiti a new basis of credit.

The next concern of the United States is to see prosperity throughout the Republic. Haiti should appreciate that means for economic and industrial development cannot come from within and that foreign capital must be sought and secured, and this cannot be expected unless there is reasonable assurance against internal dissensions. Therefore the period during which peace in Haiti is assured will measure the extent to which foreigners may be expected to invest in the country. Not until the proposed convention is ratified and those in authority manifest a disposition to pursue a progressive policy for the development of Haiti, can foreign capital be expected.

Since submitting the convention it has developed that Haiti cannot be expected to repay an adequate loan within ten years, and a short term for the life of the convention will be disadvantageous to Haiti, in whose interests this Government would prefer to see the proposed convention continue until it had served its full usefulness.

There remains now therefore to be discussed the phrasing of Article 13 and the life of the convention. In all other respects the Department must insist that the treaty stand substantially as submitted. There should be no apprehension that the United States will abandon those who may be instrumental in adopting or carrying out the plan proposed.

The Department approves your action in not making use of its August 28, 8 p. m.,⁸ which was intended for your information and guidance only.

Indications now are that certain members of Cabinet will resign and their places will be filled by men more in sympathy with the desires of the United States.

Should President agree to sign the treaty, must I insist on a previous resolution by Chamber of Deputies authorizing him to act?

Since the United States has agreed to allow certain modifications of the treaty, and a resolution embodying "without modification" is no longer applicable, does the Department desire a resolution of any kind, or would signing under constitutional powers suffice?

Government informs me unofficially that our declaration of martial law yesterday afternoon has greatly strengthened its position, and will facilitate speedy ratification by Chamber of Deputies in case treaty agreement arrived at.

I have just returned from a conference with President and Cabinet which began at three this afternoon, at which time I had demanded a definite answer regarding treaty. Minister for Foreign Affairs and Minister of Public Works refused to accept Financial Adviser which, however, declared to be essential. Whereupon the President requested and accepted their immediate resignations. Remainder of Cabinet agreed to accept the treaty substantially as submitted. The President then asked me to allow him a short delay to enable him to fill vacancies in the Cabinet, to which I agreed. He then requested a conference with me tomorrow morning to discuss appointees. Resignation of Minister for Foreign Affairs removes cause of previous delays and will doubtless enable the President to expedite signing. President's action today seems to indicate that he now realizes the necessity for action without further delay and that he has determined to use all means to attain this end.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, September 10, 1915—4 p. m.

Used best efforts to have Haitian Government agree to sign the treaty as submitted. Haitian Government declare that it is impossible to secure ratification in that form but states that treaty modified as set out below will be ratified by Haitian Congress. New Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Borno, assured me that should United States insist on original draft he will resign rather than sign same as he is convinced that the Government could not hope to have this action ratified by Congress.

He declared before submitting his proposed changes that they were made in the attempt to concede all United States demands but to do so in a manner less humiliating to the Haitian people and also to avoid certain points which in the opinion of the Government are not possible under the Haitian Constitution. [

In my opinion the Government is sincere in its declaration as to its inability to sign original treaty and I believe if it is insisted upon the Government will fall. I also think treaty below submitted would be ratified without further modification. I am assured of this by the President and Minister of the Interior who were former presidents of the Senate and Congress and who are very influential in those bodies.

However, in case the United States Government finds modified treaty acceptable, I request exact instructions as to previous resolution of Congress. My personal opinion is that it is unnecessary and will cause delay but I have no means other than by the Government's assurances and personal expressions of legislators to satisfy myself of conditions set forth in your telegram September 5, 3 p. m.

The following changes in the original draft⁷ of treaty submitted represent the desires of the Haitian Government:

Preamble. Omit word "unsatisfactory". Omit all between word "finances" and words "to maintain". Omit all between words "its people" and words "and the United States".

Article I. "The Government of the United States will, by its good offices, aid the Haitian Government in the proper and efficient development of its agricultural, mineral and commercial resources and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a firm and solid basis."

⁷ For. Rel. 1914, p. 349; and, ante, Department's August 12, 1915.

Article II. Article I of original draft to become Article II and to read: "The President of Haiti will appoint, after a previous agreement with the President of the United States regarding such appointments, a General Receiver and such aids and employees as may be necessary, who shall collect" and so on to the semicolon, which is changed to a period. New sentence: "The President of Haiti shall appoint, after a previous agreement with the President of the United States regarding such appointment, a Financial Adviser who shall be an officer attached to the Ministry of Finance. The Financial Adviser shall, etc." same text to "and generally, etc.," which becomes "and make such other recommendations to the Minister of Finance as may be deemed necessary for the welfare and prosperity of Haiti."

Articles II and III original draft accepted.

Article IV original, after the words "Financial Adviser," add: "which salaries will be determined by previous agreement; second, etc."

Article V original, after "employees" add: "and the salary and expenses of the Financial Adviser,".

Articles VI and VII original, same.

Article VIII original, change the words "the assent of" to read: "a previous agreement with".

Article IX original, after "efficient constabulary" add: ", urban and rural, to be"; after "Americans," add: "appointed by the President of Haiti after a previous agreement with the President of the United States. The Haitian Government shall clothe these officers with the proper etc.", to the end of the sentence, followed by this additional sentence: "These officers will be replaced by Haitians as they, by examination conducted under the direction of the senior officer charged with the organization of this constabulary, are found to be qualified to assume such duties." Remainder same.

Article X original, omit words "except to the United States" and "other."

Article XI original, substitute "American" for "foreign". Add as additional sentence: "The Haitian Government agrees to conclude with other foreign Powers, should they so request, arbitration treaties for the settlement of pending claims of their corporations, companies, citizens or subjects against Haiti."

Article XII, substitute words "high contracting parties" in place of "Government of the United States".

Article XIII original, to read: "The high contracting parties shall have authority to take such steps as may be necessary to insure the complete attainment of any of the objects comprehended in this treaty and, should the necessity occur, the United States will lend an efficient aid for the preservation of, etc.", to the end of the article.

Article XIV of the original, same.

Article XV original, in place of "at the request of either party" substitute "if, for specific reasons presented by either of the high contracting parties, the full purpose of this treaty has not been accomplished."

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 11, 1915—3 p. m.

In view of possibility of future misunderstandings as to correct interpretation of treaty provisions growing out of alleged differences of intent between the English and French texts, which, as in the case of the 1907 Convention with Santo Domingo, might result in delays and unnecessary expense and trouble for both Governments, the Department desires you to obtain from President Dartiguenave, through an exchange of personal and informal notes, or by any other desirable means, an undertaking to the effect that in the event of any question arising as to a correct interpretation of any clause of the treaty, the English text shall prevail.

The Department hopes to receive by the first of next week advice of the satisfactory conclusion of the treaty.

LANSING.

File No. 711.38/29.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 12, 1915—3 p. m.

Your September 10, 4 p. m. Preamble to treaty submitted by Department August 12, 1915, was prepared in July 1914. As Haitians were familiar with it then, and it but moderately described conditions in Haiti last month, the Department proposed to let that preamble stand as a partial exposition of the necessities for making the convention.

Since Dr. Borno, now Minister for Foreign Affairs, has stated to you that Haitian counterdraft treaty, as submitted in your cable under acknowledgment, was made to concede all demands of the United States in manner less humiliating to Haiti, the Department accepts the Preamble and Article I as drafted by Haitians.

You will not fail to point out to the new Minister for Foreign Affairs that his use of the phrase "United States demands" is not in consonance with the voluntary offers made by those who, after the carnage at Port au Prince in August last, upon seeing the national existence threatened and descending into anarchy, undertook to head a government only after receiving the assurance that the marines would remain on the ground and preserve life and order. The things which the United States considers to be necessary for the rehabilitation of Haiti fall far short of the offers freely made by these Haitians to Admiral Caperton on August 7, 1915. The Department therefore expects that this cable, which reflects a most liberal spirit on the part of this Government to show every possible consideration for Haitian sensibilities, will put an end to questions of further amendment and result in an immediate conclusion of the treaty as herein described.

If the consummation of this treaty does not affect the assurances of the President and Minister of the Interior conveyed in your September 10, 4 p. m., you need not require previous resolution by Congress, provided the Haitian Government undertakes to enter into modus vivendi as explained in the Department's telegram of August 24, 9 p. m.

Article II of Haitian draft to read as follows: "The President of Haiti shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of the United States, a General Receiver, etc.," to end of sentence. Second sentence to read: "The President of Haiti shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of the United States, a Financial Adviser, who shall be an officer attached to the Ministry of Finance, to give effect to whose proposals and labors the Minister will lend efficient aid." Last sentence Haitian draft this article accepted.

Articles III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, and IX of Haitian draft accepted.

Article X of Haitian draft accepted with the following changes: After "Americans" read "appointed by the President of Haiti, upon nomination by the President of the United States." Fourth sentence to read: "These officers will be replaced by Haitians as they, by examination conducted under the direction of a board to be selected by the senior American officer of this constabulary, are found to be qualified to assume such duties."

The Department has no objection to Article XI of Haitian draft, being conscious of the right of the high contracting parties, should they so desire, to enter into a subsequent convention or treaty altering or superseding the provisions of the treaty now to be concluded.

The Department wishes to lay stress upon the importance and advisability of permitting the text of Article XI of the original draft to stand in the place of the text proposed for Article XII of the Haitian draft. The adjustment and liquidation of Haitian debts may not prove feasible if their settlement should be left to as many arbitrations as there may be nationalities of holders. It is self-evident that an arrangement for present loan can only be made through a single plan of adjustment. The Department is unable to perceive how the Government of Haiti can fail to understand the disinterested purpose of the United States in placing itself between the Government of Haiti and the possible excessive demands of all foreign claimants. Original draft this article therefore stands.

Articles XIII, XIV and XV of Haitian draft accepted.

Articles XVI of Haitian draft, after the word "parties," change to read "the purpose of this treaty has not been fully accomplished."

In view of the general acceptance of the modifications proposed by the Haitian Government, this Government repeats its expectations that the treaty will be concluded and ratified without further delay.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Port au Prince, September 14, 1915—8 p. m.

Early this morning Haitian Minister for Foreign Affairs called at American Legation and announced Haitian Government ready to sign the treaty as proposed your telegram September 12, 3 p. m., enter into modus vivendi embodying same terms as treaty, and submit treaty for immediate ratification. My instructions regarding modus vivendi contemplate previous vote same by Haitian Congress. Haitian Minister for Foreign Affairs declares Haitian Government fully empowered to request and enter into such an agreement without previous vote by Haitian Congress.

It is respectfully submitted that this is preferable mode of procedure as under it treaty stipulations will be binding upon Haitian Government from the signature, and this would obviate possible foreign courts unexpectedly blocking operations under same by failure to ratify or to request modus vivendi.

In a conversation with Haitian Minister for Foreign Affairs and Minister of Finance this afternoon they point out that Haitian Government has only about 600,000 gourdes with which to meet running expenses and pay arrears in salaries, etc., which are still owing for fiscal year which ends with this month. Also pointed out necessity for funds for meeting Government expenses until details of operation of the treaty arranged and income realized under its operation.

For reasons above and also desiring to have law which authorized issue of 8,000,000 gourdes, only 3,000,000 of which have been issued, repealed by Haitian Congress, they are most anxious to have an official statement to the effect that the United States will use its good offices to aid Haitian Government in securing immediate temporary loan for these purposes. I stated that in my opinion it would not be difficult to secure such a loan upon ratification of treaty.

Basing calculations on amount already owing and on advances formally made under budgetary convention, Haitian Government will require from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 in order to liquidate this year's past due debts and to furnish funds for this in future. A statement by United States that it will aid in securing loan for above purposes will be greatly beneficial to Government both in securing ratification and with public generally.

Await your answer as to this and also as to mode of securing modus vivendi.

Your September 14, 8 p. m. You may conclude treaty without requiring passage of a resolution by Congress authorizing the President of Haiti to enter into a modus vivendi, provided that modus vivendi be signed simultaneously with the treaty.

Upon ratification of the treaty the United States will lend its good offices to secure such loans as may be necessary. It is thought desirable that a commission with full powers be sent to Washington to negotiate this loan and likewise to arrange all pending differences with the National Bank of Haiti and with the American Railway Company, to assist in the settlement of which this Government will also lend its friendly good offices.

Meanwhile, upon ratification of the treaty by the Haitian Congress, this Government will take the necessary steps to obtain an advance by the National Bank of Haiti of $100,000 to meet pressing needs.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith the original and copy of the treaty signed September 16, 1915.

As will be observed, in Article X there is added to the text the phrase: "and in the presence of a representative of the Haitian Government" in the sentence referring to the replacing of the American officers of the constabulary by Haitians. Also, in Article XIII the method of naming the engineer, or engineers, is made to conform with the method of appointment of officials under the other articles.

These changes—the first merely a matter of words, and the second already approved by the Department for all other appointments under the treaty—were made without previous advice from the Department because the shortness of the time before the closing of the session of the Legislature made it necessary to act at once, and also because of their unimportance. I trust the Department will approve.

Draft of Treaty Between the United States and Haiti Concerning the Finances, Economic Development and Tranquillity of Haiti.

Preamble.

The United States and the Republic of Haiti desiring to confirm and strengthen the amity existing between them by the most cordial coöperation in measures for their common advantage;

And the Republic of Haiti desiring to remedy the present condition of its revenues and finances, to maintain the tranquillity of the Republic, to carry out plans for the economic development and prosperity of the Republic and its people;

And the United States being in full sympathy with all of these aims and objects and desiring to contribute in all proper ways to their accomplishment;

The United States and the Republic of Haiti have resolved to conclude a Convention with these objects in view, and have appointed for that purpose, Plenipotentiaries,

The President of the United States, Robert Beale Davis, Junior, Chargé d'Affaires of the United States;

And the President of the Republic of Haiti, Louis Borno, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Public Instruction, who, having exhibited to each other their respective powers, which are seen to be full in good and true form, have agreed as follows:

Article I

The Government of the United States will, by its good offices, aid the Haitian Government in the proper and efficient development of its agricultural, mineral and commercial resources and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a firm and solid basis.

Article II

The President of Haiti shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of the United States, a General Receiver and such aids and employees as may be necessary, who shall collect, receive and apply all customs duties on imports and exports accruing at the several custom houses and ports of entry of the Republic of Haiti.

The President of Haiti shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of the United States, a Financial Adviser, who shall be an officer attached to the Ministry of Finance, to give effect to whose proposals and labors the Minister will lend efficient aid. The Financial Adviser shall devise an adequate system of public accounting, aid in increasing the revenues and adjusting them to the expenses, inquire into the validity of the debts of the Republic, enlighten both Governments with reference to all eventual debts, recommend improved methods of collecting and applying the revenues, and make such other recommendations to the Minister of Finance as may be deemed necessary for the welfare and prosperity of Haiti.

Article III

The Government of the Republic of Haiti will provide by law or appropriate decrees for the payment of all customs duties to the General Receiver, and will extend to the Receivership, and to the Financial Adviser, all needful aid and full protection in the execution of the powers conferred and duties imposed herein; and the United States on its part will extend like aid and protection.

Article IV

Upon the appointment of the Financial Adviser, the Government of the Republic of Haiti, in coöperation with the Financial Adviser, shall collate, classify, arrange and make full statement of all the debts of the Republic, the amounts, character, maturity and condition thereof, and the interest accruing and the sinking fund requisite to their final discharge.

Article V

All sums collected and received by the General Receiver shall be applied, first, to the payment of the salaries and allowances of the General Receiver, his assistants and employees and expenses of the Receivership, including the salary and expenses of the Financial Adviser, which salaries will be determined by previous agreement; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of the Republic of Haiti; and, third, to the maintenance of the constabulary referred to in Article X, and then the remainder to the Haitian Government for purposes of current expenses.

In making these applications the General Receiver will proceed to pay salaries and allowances monthly and expenses as they arise, and on the first of each calendar month, will set aside in a separate fund the quantum of the collection and receipts of the previous month.

Article VI

The expenses of the Receivership, including salaries and allowances of the General Receiver, his assistants and employees, and the salary and expenses of the Financial Adviser, shall not exceed five per centum of the collections and receipts from customs duties, unless by agreement by the two Governments.

Article VII

The General Receiver shall make monthly reports of all collections, receipts and disbursements to the appropriate officer of the Republic of Haiti and to the Department of State of the United States, which reports shall be open to inspection and verification at all times by the appropriate authorities of each of the said Governments.

Article VIII

The Republic of Haiti shall not increase its public debt except by previous agreement with the President of the United States, and shall not contract any debt or assume any financial obligation unless the ordinary revenues of the Republic available for that purpose, after defraying the expenses of the Government, shall be adequate to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for the final discharge of such debt.

Article IX

The Republic of Haiti will not without a previous agreement with the President of the United States, modify the customs duties in a manner to reduce the revenues therefrom; and in order that the revenues of the Republic may be adequate to meet the public debt and the expenses of the Government, to preserve tranquillity and to promote material prosperity, the Republic of Haiti will cooperate with the Financial Adviser in his recommendations for improvement in the methods of collecting and disbursing the revenues and for new sources of needed income.

Article X

The Haitian Government obligates itself, for the preservation of domestic peace, the security of individual rights and full observance of the provisions of this treaty, to create without delay an efficient constabulary, urban and rural, composed of native Haitians. This constabulary shall be organized and officered by Americans, appointed by the President of Haiti, upon nomination by the President of the United States. The Haitian Government shall clothe these officers with the proper and necessary authority and uphold them in the performance of their functions. These officers will be replaced by Haitians as they, by examination, conducted under direction of a board to be selected by the senior American officer of this constabulary and in the presence of a representative of the Haitian Government, are found to be qualified to assume such duties. The constabulary herein provided for, shall, under the direction of the Haitian Government, have supervision and control of arms and ammunition, military supplies, and traffic therein, throughout the country. The high contracting parties agree that the stipulations in this Article are necessary to prevent factional strife and disturbances.

Article XI

The Government of Haiti agrees not to surrender any of the territory of the Republic of Haiti by sale, lease, or otherwise, or jurisdiction over such territory, to any foreign government or power, nor to enter into any treaty or contract with any foreign power or powers that will impair or tend to impair the independence of Haiti.

Article XII

The Haitian Government agrees to execute with the United States a protocol for the settlement, by arbitration or otherwise, of all pending pecuniary claims of foreign corporations, companies, citizens or subjects against Haiti.

Article XIII

The Republic of Haiti, being desirous to further the development of its natural resources, agrees to undertake and execute such measures as in the opinion of the high contracting parties may be necessary for the sanitation and public improvement of the Republic, under the supervision and direction of an engineer or engineers, to be appointed by the President of Haiti upon nomination by the President of the United States, and authorized for that purpose by the Government of Haiti.

Article XIV

The high contracting parties shall have authority to take such steps as may be necessary to insure the complete attainment of any of the objects comprehended in this treaty; and, should the necessity occur, the United States will lend an efficient aid for the preservation of Haitian independence and the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty.

Article XV

The present treaty shall be approved and ratified by the high contracting parties in conformity with their respective laws, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged in the City of Washington as soon as may be possible.

Article XVI

The present treaty shall remain in full force and virtue for the term of ten years, to be counted from the day of exchange of ratifications, and further for another term of ten years if, for specific reasons presented by either of the high contracting parties, the purpose of this treaty has not been fully accomplished.

In faith whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention in duplicate, in the English and French languages, and have thereunto affixed their seals.

Your September 24, 7 p. m. House committee will present on Monday or Tuesday a unanimous report in favor of treaty and the House is expected to give large majority vote. Then it will go before the Senate. I have just had a conference with Minister for Foreign Affairs as to the action of that body and he and the President believe it will be voted. However, there will be opposition in the Senate due to the desire of certain members with presidential aspirations to see present Government fall, also to influence of certain foreigners here who are attempting to block treaty through the Senate.

President is determined to reach an agreement with the United States and, in my opinion, should he find Senate will not ratify the convention, he will go to the length of dissolving Congress, calling constitutional convention to modify Constitution and to vote treaty; and in the meantime the Government, there being no legislative body in session, will enter into modus vivendi; all of this, of course, provided that the United States continues its support.

Although I do not think this eventuality will arise, I would like to have instructions regarding the same in advance. I respectfully submit that in the light of conditions here, should the Senate's unwillingness to ratify force such action, it would be to the best interests of both the United States and Haiti for the United States Government to support Dartiguenave.

To prevent ill-advised legislators from seeking to produce a situation out of which one of their number may hope to ascend to the presidency, you should, if the fears expressed in your September 25, 3 p. m., seem likely of realization, opportunely let it be known that this Government will not countenance efforts, either direct or indirect, to overthrow Dartiguenave administration, to support which the United States purposes to lend all proper aid so long as that administration shall adopt the steps necessary to give to Haiti peace and prosperity.

Every effort should be made to obtain ratification promptly by Congress now in session as the Department would view with regret course forecast in your telegram under reference.

On account of dilatory tactics of the committee the Government decided yesterday to force action today. AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: Referring to the matter of treaty negotiations between this Legation and the Haitian Government, I have the honor to make the following report:

* * * On September 20, 1915, four days after the signing of the treaty, I received a letter, apparently originally dated on that day but redated September 16, 1915, copy and translation of which are herewith enclosed, * * *. Inasmuch as this letter was written and received subsequent to negotiation and signing of treaty and could therefore have no bearing or effect upon the same, I replied stating that, as to Article 6, in my opinion the interpretation placed thereon by the Haitian Government was correct; as to Article 9, I stated that I felt sure the United States would cooperate with the Haitian Government in such proper reduction of customs duties as did not infringe upon the terms of the treaty; as to Article 2, I declined to express any opinion as to the proper interpretation thereof; as to Article 14, I informed the Haitian Government that the Government of the United States had informed me that it considered it its duty to sustain a constitutional government and aid the people of Haiti in maintaining domestic peace throughout the country. Copy of this letter is herewith enclosed.

At practically all of the interviews above referred to, I was accompanied by Lieutenant E. G. Oberlin, U. S. N., who as Aide to Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton, U. S. N., and his personal representative ashore, not only performed his duties as such, but by reason of his knowledge of the French language and Latin temperament, was of the greatest assistance to this Legation during the period of treaty negotiations. Lieutenant Oberlin was indefatigable and his efforts in behalf of securing the signing of the treaty materially aided in the attainment of that result.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to Chargé Davis.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Port au Prince, September 16, 1915.

MR. CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES: The result of our conference of yesterday held at the Department of Foreign Affairs, is that the Haitian Government accepts the principle that, in case there should arise any difference whatsoever relative to the correct interpretation of a clause of the convention agreed upon between us, the interpretation based upon the English text shall prevail between the parties.

I have, however, with the design of avoiding for the future any discord on the important points, to call your attention to the interpretation that the Haitian Government gives, first, to the words of Article 6, "shall not exceed five per centum." The Government understands that the expenses and allowances foreseen may necessarily reach five per centum; that is the maximum; in fact, it may be that they remain below five per centum. Second, to the words "collect, receive and apply" of Article 2, 1st paragraph. The Government understands that by these words is meant a service of receipts (collect and receive) and of payment (apply, see Article 5). The Receiver General and the aides and employees, who shall be named by the President of Haiti upon the nomination of the President of the United States, form a service for the collection of all the customs duties, an office distinct from the customs service, properly speaking, which consists in the storage, examination and taxation of the merchandise in conformity with the tariff. Consequently, the Haitian employees of the customs service shall hold their commissions exclusively from the President of Haiti; but the latter, however, in accordance with the idea of efficacious aid of the President of the United States, will make the appointments in the customs only in accord with the Receiver General who, on his part, shall have the right to delegate in the customs such aides and employees of his office as it may please him to choose, to control the customs operations.

Please accept [etc.]

LOUIS BORNO.

[Inclosure 2.]

Chargé Davis to the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, September 20, 1915.

EXCELLENCY: In reply to your note received this morning, I beg to express my pleasure at seeing that the Haitian Government accepts the principle that, should any future misunderstanding arise as to the correct interpretation of treaty provisions, growing out of alleged differences of intent between the English and French texts, the English shall prevail.

Regarding the meaning of Article 6, I beg to state that in my opinion your excellency's construction is the correct one.

As to Article 9, I am sure that your excellency's Government will find the United States Government disposed to cooperate in any proper reduction of customs duties which does not infringe upon the terms of the treaty.

Regarding Article 2 of the treaty, I am unable, at this time, to agree to any construction. My Government has expressed its willingness, after the treaty has been ratified and a modus vivendi entered into, to receive at Washington a commission of Haitians, with full powers, to consider the details of the operation of the treaty and generally to undertake a comprehensive readjustment of the finances and other matters tending to reestablish quickly normal conditions in Haiti. Therefore, the construction of this article, which necessarily entails a decision as to all working details, is a matter for discussion by the commission, and I therefore can admit of no construction which might possibly restrict the commission in its work of arranging the details of the operation of the treaty.

Regarding Article 14, I beg to draw your excellency's attention to the words "will lend an efficient aid". This undertaking by the United States Government naturally implies the lending of its armed force should internal strife or uprising endanger the existence of the Government, and my Government has further officially informed me that the United States considers it its duty to support a constitutional government and aid the people of Haiti in maintaining domestic peace throughout the country.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, October 26, 1915—4 p. m.

Senate committee has completed its report but the secretary did not finish making copy of the same in time for presentation at today's session. It is believed that it will recommend certain changes but the Government is indifferent to the nature of recommendations as it has a majority in the Senate in favor of ratification of the treaty as submitted.

Referring to the Legation's No. 47.^s My physical condition has become so much worse since that time that on advice of doctor I am compelled to request permission return to the United States by the next boat; otherwise I am in constant danger of recurrence of blood poisoning of which I have already suffered two attacks. I have now done all that I can to assure ratification of the treaty and am confident that steps already taken will bring about that result in the near future. Also I have secured formal assurance from the Haitian Government that modus vivendi will be entered into immediately after ratification. Lieutenant Oberlin is fully conversant with all negotiations since the election of the President and his advice and services could no doubt be available for whoever may be temporarily in charge of the Legation. Therefore I do not see that my absence under these circumstances can endanger successful conclusion.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 5, 1915—6 p. m.

The Department is reliably informed that certain of the Haitian Senators, inspired by lobbyists who seek to defeat the ratification of the treaty for purely personal ends, are endeavoring to prevent action by the Haitian Senate until after the United States Senate shall meet, prior to which time it is a part of their plan to send deputations to this country to conduct a lobby here in the hope of producing a political situation in this country which will result in the withdrawal of the American marines from Haiti. In these circumstances the Department suggests that it might not be amiss for President Dartiguenave to call in his Senators, and one by one to question them directly regarding their connection with such a plan. Cable result of his investigation. Also press for immediate ratification.

LANSING.

File No. 711.38/48.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 8, 1915—5 p. m.

The Department regrets that the Senate committee failed to recommend ratification of the treaty as signed and that it has proposed certain modifications regarding the Financial Adviser, particularly in view of the manifest desire of the people of Haiti that the treaty be ratified without delay, so as to secure, with the assistance of the United States, conditions of peace and prosperity. Inasmuch as President Dartiguenave is assured of a majority in favor of ratification without modification, it would seem as if the time had come to press for a vote by the Senate.

As to President Dartiguenave's suggestion regarding a note, which it is presumed he requires to increase majority vote in the Senate, the Department believes that the ends sought by the President might be obtained by the Haitian Government transmitting to the Legation a copy of the committee's report when published, and inquiring whether this Government would be prepared to entertain the proposed modifications; to which the Legation should answer to the effect that this Government earnestly believed that the interests of Haiti would best be served by the prompt ratification of the treaty as signed, and that this Government counted upon the earnest effort of the Government of Haiti to obtain favorable action by the Senate.

23109. Arrange with President Dartiguenave that he call a Cabinet meeting before the session of Senate which will pass upon ratification of treaty and request that you be permitted to appear before that meeting to make a statement to President and to members of Cabinet. On your own authority state the following before these officers:

I have the honor to inform the President of Haiti and the members of his Cabinet that I am personally gratified that public sentiment continues favorable to the treaty, that there is a strong demand from all classes for immediate ratification, and that treaty will be ratified Thursday.

I am sure that you, gentlemen, will understand my sentiment in this matter and I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has the intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished and that it will forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti so as to insure internal tranquility necessary to such development of the country and its industry as will afford relief to the starving populace now unemployed. Meanwhile the present Government will be supported in the effort to secure stable conditions and lasting peace in Haiti whereas those offering opposition can only expect such treatment as their conduct merits.

The United States Government is particularly anxious for immediate ratification by the present Senate of this treaty, which was drawn up with the full intention of employing as many Haitians as possible to aid in giving effect to its provisions, so that suffering may be relieved at the earliest possible date.

Rumors of bribery to defeat the treaty are rife but are not believed. However, should they prove true those who accept or give bribes will be vigorously prosecuted.

It is expected that you will be able to make this sufficiently clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification.

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

Fellow Citizens:

At the meeting of November 11 the Senate of the Republic sanctioned the Haitian-American Convention. This event, the most important in our national history, is the foundation of Haitian independence, of the solemn consecration of the new era of progress for the nation after the days of the 27th and 28th July, which days we can not think of without a shudder of horror.

If you will consider the vote of the convention for its merits and patriotism, you will render with me legitimate homage to the honorable members of the Legislative Corps who have shown once more their sense of duty in the face of a situation exceptionally grave for this unhappy country. They have come together in large numbers to open finally the road of material and thorough evolution which has always been their object. Honor, therefore, to the saviors of the country's glory for their act of which the magnanimity is only equalled by their heroism, [worthy] to have the right to the benediction of our posterity. * * *

Without entering into a discussion of facts anterior to the coming of the Americans, remember that in a moment of our supreme despair the powerful and generous nation of North America saw our unhappiness, took pity on us and came in the name of humanity and universal fraternity to offer us the hand of friendship and of succor. Was it necessary to repel, even under a disguised form, as several people of the type of many of my predecessors seem to think, this friendly aid?

Being persuaded of the loyalty of the Government of the United States and convinced that its people, who by means of their works have become so great as to become our ideal, desire fully to guide us in the route which centuries of civilization have made, which we, unhappy slaves of false reasoning brought about by jealous prejudices, have never tried to find, I have not a second of hesitation.

I wish here to thank cordially my official collaborators whose experience, wisdom and imperturbable conviction, together with their ardent faith and their devotion, have been the strong aid to my firm resolution.

You have not been strangers to the struggle brought about by diversity of opinion whereby people opposed to the convention struggled against the Government to prevent its acceptance. We have defended it foot by foot and have guaranteed its various clauses in order to overcome the imminent peril with which lack of reflection and blindness was liable to threaten our national sovereignty. And who can deny that the formal refusal to accept the convention would have been the destruction of our independence? * * * In the future the people will see that we have done the best thing and that we have acted for love of country. * * *

Therefore fellow citizens, let us wish success to ourselves and glory for the world of civilization. I repeat that the new era has begun but the fruits of our labors demand that you repudiate forever the past shame, the nefarious past which has made a blot upon the immortal names of our ancestors. * * *

Having thought well over this convention and with firm realization of the future join in crying: Long live Peace and Union, long live Work, long live Regenerated Haiti!

Considering that, pending the exchange of ratifications of the Treaty of September 16, 1915, it is essential that a provisional arrangement be entered into between the two Governments with a view to guarantee the working of the administrative services, the repression of disorder and the maintenance of public peace:

The following Modus Vivendi has been agreed upon between the Government of the United States of America and the Haitian Government, represented respectively by Arthur Bailly-Blanchard, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, and Louis Borno, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

The treaty signed September 16, 1915, between the United States and the Republic of Haiti, and ratified by the Haitian Chamber of Deputies on October 6, 1915, and by the Haitian Senate on November 11, 1915, shall go provisionally into full force and effect from this date and shall be operated thereunder⁹ until the Senate of the United States has acted upon the Treaty, under reserve of the

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Cape Haitien, January 27, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the extraordinary revolution in the northern part of Haiti, which, indeed, was only the continuation in arms of the leading federals of the old Zamor party, joined by an almost unanimous defection from the ranks of the Theodore party, is now nearing its close. The unusual feature is that there has been practically no fighting at all. Not a single shot has been fired at Cape Haitien or anywhere in the neighborhood. The fusion of the two parties mentioned, reinforced by practically all the neutral elements, is so close and intimate that no opposition to the movement has so far been made or is expected to be made anywhere throughout the three departments of the North, the Northwest and the Artibonite.

The reasons for this singular state of affairs are not far to seek. The old Zamor party held many of the important strongholds, which they refused to surrender to the new Government of Davilmar Theodore, and this chief was in such haste to have himself installed as president that he hesitated to risk a further effort to continue the work of subjugation. The generals of this party in other parts remained under arms to cooperate with those holding the forts.

When President Theodore was elected, his followers flocked to Port au Prince expecting to reap the rewards of ten months of struggle and hardships. The President found himself in a position where he was unable to satisfy the demands of his friends and had to suffer the consequences. As the revolution, like most of its predecessors, was made for money and nothing but money, the ignorant followers of the President became much incensed, refusing to believe that the head of a government was unable to find the means of meeting obligations toward those who had put him in power. His failure to supply their demands was attributed to his cupidity and lack of good faith, and he immediately became the most unpopular man in Haiti.

The opposition centered around General Vilbrun Guillaume Sam, and up to the present date all the generals commanding troops in the three departments mentioned have communicated with him by letter or by delegation declaring their adhesion to the revolution and acceptance of his candidacy for the presidency.

General Metellus, the famous Caco general, who has been often referred to in despatches from this Consulate, came into Cape Haitien on Saturday morning the 16th instant with a thousand men and has remained here since that date to accompany General Guillaume to Port au Prince. Although he has heretofore been considered a savage and the terror of the surrounding country, not a single act of disorder has been committed here by him or his troops since his arrival, and the general conduct has been such that the situation has more the appearance of a great holiday than of a revolution. There is the utmost order, tranquility and respect both of foreign and native interests.

General Guillaume was awaiting the arrival of General Constantin Vieux from Fort Liberté in order to set out on his march in the direction of Port au Prince. General Vieux arrived yesterday morning and the departure has been fixed for to-morrow, 28th.

Vilbrun Guillaume Sam is now considered as the future President of Haiti. In fact, it is believed here that he will march to Port au Prince without any opposition and that the Government of Theodore will fall without the firing of a single shot.

This information is given that you may make such arrangements for their coming as may be necessary. In order that the President may be as fully informed as possible before preparing final instructions will you please cable information on the following points:

First: Was Theodore regularly elected by the Legislature? If so was he elected for a full term or for the remainder of term partially expired? If latter how much time remains before the next election?

Second: When will the Legislature be elected again and what are the qualifications for suffrage? How large a vote is usually polled at the regular elections?

Third: What is the general disposition of the Legislature? Was it coerced into the selection of Theodore after his successful insurrection or was he really the choice of the members? Do a majority of the members now support him voluntarily, and is there a likelihood of their supporting any other successful revolutionists?

Fourth: What is the status of the revolution in that country now and what is the prospect of its success or of its suppression?

Fifth: Are there any economic questions involved in the insurrection, or is it purely personal and due to the ambition and popularity of the leaders?

You may add information on any other question which you regard as important for the President to know.

The city has been practically without food and with no water for the past three days and revolutionists having stopped all incoming foodstuffs and cut off the entire water supply, a condition which they declared would continue as long as President Theodore remained in office. This along with the fact that the city is surrounded by revolutionists determined him to leave at once and at midday he boarded the southbound Dutch vessel now in port. He was escorted through the streets by a mounted guard amid little excitement. Order prevailed. The revolutionary army of Vilbrun Guillaume is expected to arrive Port au Prince tomorrow. Except for desultory firing the city is quiet. There has been considerable firing during the past two nights as is customary here when a change in government is imminent. Your cable February 20, 3 p. m., not entirely clear; but to avoid delay pending complete repetition hereby requested, following answers are submitted:

First. Theodore was regularly elected President according to the Constitution of Haiti by the Senate and House in joint session for a full term of 7 years. See my telegram of November 7¹¹ and November 13, 3 p. m.¹¹

Second. The term of the present [Chamber of Deputies?] expires the end of 1916. Senators are elected by the [Chamber of Deputies?] for a term of 6 years and renewed by the session every 2 years.

Members of Chamber of Deputies elected by the people.

For detailed information see American Constitutions, edition 1905, volume 2, page 59, and following paragraph. The candidates elected as a rule are the candidates of the Government.

¹¹ For. Rel. 1914, p. 359.

Third. The Legislature was not coerced into the election of Theodore, who received the entire vote.

The proclaiming of a successful revolutionary leader as Chief of the Executive Power is tantamount to his election as President. Upon his entrance in the capital the Chambers are convoked and he is invariably elected.

Fourth. The revolution is successful. All revolutionary leaders have declared allegiance to Vilbrun Guillaume Sam, who is expected to arrive Port au Prince tomorrow, 25th. Chambers convoked yesterday in extra session and according to all precedents will elect him for the term of 7 years.

Fifth. The overthrow of the Theodore Government was due in part to personal ambition of Vilbrun Guillaume Sam and to the fact that the Government being without funds and unable to secure any the troops received no pay, as had been promised after his election, for 10 months campaign and they therefore returned to the North and joined the revolution; also economic conditions here due to European war and internal unrest resulting in business stagnation and creating a poverty-stricken condition throughout the country. Further, Theodore surrounded himself with members of the former Simon Government the most unpopular faction in Haiti which contributed to a great degree to his downfall.

Port au Prince, March 25, 1915.

Vilbrun Guillaume Sam Government was recognized by Germany and Italy yesterday. French Minister has recommended recognition to his Government. In view of the above, which modifies conditions existing at the departure of Commission, it would seem now even more advisable to recognize the present Haitian Government than it was under the conditions when this matter was discussed by Commission and recognition by the United States dependent on agreement by Haitian Government to Articles 4 and 5 of your November 12, 2 p. m., and added Article of your November 16, 11 a. m.¹² seems to be mode of procedure best calculated under these circumstances to favorably dispose this Government towards a settlement of matters embraced in Articles 1, 2 and 3 of your November 12, 2 p. m., as to which negotiations could be had after recognition. I therefore respectfully submit to the favorable consideration of the Department recognition of present Haitian Government upon: First, the signing of a protocol for the settlement by arbitration of pending claims of American citizens against Haiti in which [if deemed advisable?] might be included Article 2 of your November 12, 2 p. m. Second, a written agreement embracing Articles 4 and 5 thereof.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Port au Prince, June 23, 1915.

No. 43.]

SIR: Confirming my cablegram of June 20 and previous relevant messages regarding the revolutionary situation in the North, I have the honor to report that after some days of desultory fighting just outside of Cape Haitien, the Government troops on June 19 surprised the forts protecting the town, which were held by the revolutionists, and shortly afterwards entered Cape Haitien. The rebel army, preceded by many women and children, retreated in good order and it is thought will continue the revolution.

During several days prior to the taking of Cape Haitien, the French Minister here received a number of telegrams from his Consular Agent at Cape Haitien expressing anxiety for the safety of the refugees in the Consulate, and also fear of pillage should the revolutionists be compelled to give up the city. As this Legation was in daily communication with the American Consul there, and knowing that the French Agent was having his first experience with a revolution, I felt confident that should there be any real cause for anxiety I would be advised thereof directly by Mr. Livingston, and I awaited some expression of concern from him before reporting the situation as grave to the Department.

The French Minister, however, deemed the situation sufficiently acute to warrant a request that a ship be sent if possible, and on the morning of the 18th the Descartes entered the harbor here, sailing that afternoon for Cape Haitien where sailors were at once landed and at the time of this writing still maintain a guard at the French Consulate, the bank and bishopric.

The success of the Government up to this time has been very largely due to the fact that the arrival of a part of the new issue of paper money, voted by the Theodore Government last December, has given the Government funds for rationing and paying the army, while the revolutionists have practically no financial backing at all.

Just how much of this paper money has already been issued it is impossible to say, but as the whole issue is 8,000,000 gourdes, and as the Government since the taking of the Treasury from the Bank has converted all pledged and unpledged duties to its own uses, it would seem that it will be sometime in the future before a lack of money will hamper operations against the revolutionists.

Inasmuch as the overthrow of both the Zamor and Theodore Governments was almost directly attributable to lack of money, it would seem that the present Government has an excellent chance of putting down the revolution, or, in any case, of maintaining itself in power for some time to come.

Aside from the continued seizing of men and forcing them into the army, no effects of the revolution are visible at Port au Prince.

Of this action I have informed Commanding Officer Descartes and also that I am prepared for the protection of the interests of French citizens at Cape Haitien, also of those of other foreign nations; and that should he be called elsewhere he may be assured that after he leaves, the interests of citizens of France would be handled in the same way as the interests of the citizens of the United States.

U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," August 7, 1915.

General Bobo formally resigned the position Chief Executive Power and dismissed his cabinet ministers before the landing at Port au Prince today. By his orders all his generals in the North were telegraphed to deposit their arms with the American forces at Cape Haitien. He promises to use every effort for good order. Similar promises have been given by Bourand and to his troops in the North have been sent similar instructions. Because it did not keep faith, I have curtailed the power of the revolutionary committee, for this resulted in not having a serviceable committee. My orders are gladly accepted and executed by the civil officials of the late Government. The immediate election of a President is clamored for by all classes of Haitians. For regular Government, Congress with civil functionaries and all necessary organizations except President and Congress not exist legally. There are only two serious candidates, Bobo and Dartiguenave; Congress probably will elect the latter.

I have had daily conferences with the President of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, with Senators, Deputies, ex-Cabinet Ministers, and many leading Haitians. In the presence of Congressmen, Dartiguenave, President of the Senate, stated that Congressmen are agreed that Haiti must and will accede gladly to any terms proposed by the United States. Now, they say they will cede outright without restriction St. Nicholas Mole, granting us the right to intervene when necessary, customhouse control, and any other terms. Only they beg to avoid as far as possible humiliation. They insist that no government can stand except through protection of the United States. Without this protection there would be nothing but anarchy in Haiti according to their statements. Most Haitians now fear that the Americans will withdraw their troops.

Immediately it is extremely desirable to reestablish government. Next Thursday, August 12, unless otherwise directed, I will permit Congress to elect a President.

In view of the fact that the Navy last night informed Admiral Caperton that he might allow election of a President whenever the Haitians wish, and of the impression which exists here that the elections may take place Thursday next, it is desired that you confer with the Admiral to the end that, in some way to be determined between you, the following things be made perfectly clear:

First: Let Congress understand that the Government of the United States intends to uphold it, but that it can not recognize action which does not establish in charge of Haitian affairs those whose abilities and dispositions give assurances of putting an end to factional disorders.

Second. In order that no misunderstanding can possibly occur after election, it should be made perfectly clear to candidates as soon as possible and in advance of their election, that the United States expects to be entrusted with the practical control of the customs, and such financial control over the affairs of the Republic of Haiti as the United States may deem necessary for an efficient administration.

^s Not printed.

The Government of the United States considers it its duty to support a constitutional government. It means to assist in the establishing of such a government, and to support it as long as necessity may require. It has no design upon the political or territorial integrity of Haiti; on the contrary, what has been done, as well as what will be done, is conceived in an effort to aid the people of Haiti in establishing a stable government and in maintaining domestic peace throughout the Republic.

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Cape Haitien, August 12, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, owing to the excitement here following the recent events at Port au Prince, culminating in the death of President Vilbrun Guillaume Sam, the commanding officer of the U. S. S. Eagle placed a guard of 20 men at the French Consular Agency where several prominent revolutionists had taken refuge since June 19 when the Government troops retook the town. These men remained at the Consular Agency until August 4, the day following the departure of the principal Government generals. On that day the Nashville landed sixty men and those from the Eagle remained as a part of the landing party. This reassured the refugees and they left the Consular Agency.

General Blot, commander in chief of the Government forces, left for Monte Christi on a Haitian gunboat during the night of the 3d with his family and the most active of his generals and men. Many of the Government troops voluntarily laid down their arms and took refuge in the yard of the Bishop's residence. Others went aboard the Haitian gunboat Nord Alexis, but a good contingent remained with their arms and marched out of town in the direction of Port au Prince. Those remaining here, about 750 in all, were sent to Port au Prince on board the Nord Alexis.

The Jason arrived from Port au Prince on the 3d instant with a commission composed of Archbishop Conan, ex-President Legitime, Lieutenant Coffee, Flag Secretary of Admiral Caperton, Charles Zamor and Edmond Polynice. The commission returned on the 5th with Dr. R. Bobo and staff, General Bourand who commanded the Government troops at Fort Liberté, Ouanaminthe adjacent territory, and a few other prominent citizens.

The U. S. S. Connecticut arrived on the 6th instant and immediately landed about 63 marines. After the departure of the Eagle on the 8th, the Connecticut landed 108 bluejackets, making a total of about 230 men landed.

Captain Durell of the Connecticut and Commander Olmsted of the Nashville have taken temporary charge of the administration of affairs in the city. Most of the former Haitian employees have been restored to their places, with one American at the custom house and others at the port. They are beginning now to clean up the town so far as the limited means at their disposal will permit. Everything is working smoothly and the people are taking it good-naturedly.

Captain Durell has received instructions to give 100 gourdes to each principal officer and 10 gourdes to each private who comes in and surrenders his arms. Arrangements are being made to carry out these instructions; but word comes this morning from Port au Prince that Dr. Bobo may start a revolt in case he is not elected. One of his emissaries is expected on the steamer that is due here to-day.

Yesterday the accompanying printed translation of the enclosed proclamation by Admiral Caperton was distributed throughout the city and made a good impression.

Commander Olmsted is in charge of the forces ashore.

PORT AU PRINCE, September 2, 1915.

To-morrow September 3, I will proclaim martial law at Port au Prince for the following reasons: 1st, on account of the increasing uneasiness; 2d, the propagation by the newspapers and public men of inflammatory propaganda against the Government and the American occupation; 3d, because present Government is confronted with conditions which it is apparently unable to control; 4th, because some of the government officials are disloyal to the present Government; 5th, in order to better support the present Government. The Chargé d'Affaires concurs with me in this action. I am forwarding the proclamation by radio.

PORT AU PRINCE, September 3, 1915.

Following proclamation published to people of Port au Prince:

Information having been received from the most reliable sources that the present Government of Haiti is confronted with conditions which they are unable to control, although loyally attempting to discharge the duties of their respective offices; and the facts having created a condition which requires the adoption of different measures from those heretofore applied; and in order to afford the inhabitants of Port au Prince, and other territory hereinafter described, the privileges of government, exercising all the functions necessary for the establishment and maintenance of the fundamental rights of man—I hereby, under my authority as Commanding Officer of the Forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters, proclaim that martial law exists in the City of Port au Prince and the immediate territory now occupied by the forces now under my command.

I further proclaim, in accordance with the law of nations and the usages, customs and functions of my own and other Governments, that I am invested with the power and responsibility of government in all its functions and branches throughout the territory above described; and the proper administration of such Government by martial law will be provided for in regulations to be issued from time to time, by the Commanding Officer of the Forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters.

The martial law herein proclaimed, and the things in that respect so ordered, will not be deemed or taken to interfere with the proceedings of the Constitutional Government and Congress of Haiti, or with the administration of justice in the courts of law existing therein, which do not affect the military operations or the authorities of the Government of the United States of America.

All the municipal and other civil employees are, therefore, requested to continue in their present vocations without change; and the military authorities will not interfere in the functions of the civil administration and the courts, except in so far as relates to persons violating military orders or regulations, or otherwise interfering with the exercise of military authority. All peaceful citizens can confidently pursue their usual occupations, feeling that they will be protected in their personal rights and property, as well as in their proper social relations.

The Commanding Officer of the United States expeditionary forces, Colonel Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, is empowered to issue the necessary regulations and appoint the necessary officers to make this martial law effective.

Done at the City of Port au Prince, Haiti, this third day of September, A. D. 1915.

HAITIAN LEGATION,
Washington, September 4, 1915.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: In the course of the conversation I had with you this morning, I had the honor to draw your attention to a telegram which the President of the Republic of Haiti was pleased to send me yesterday. The cablegram I received from His Excellency Mr. Dartiguenave positively says that the American forces landed in Haiti have successively taken possession of the Haitian customs and even of the custom house and the government of Port au Prince. It points out that this arbitrary measure, which implies the forcible and premature enforcement of the draft of convention between the two Governments, together with the threat of American authorities to declare martial law in Haitian territory, had the effect of rousing popular feeling to the highest pitch and of endangering a situation whose satisfactory settlement appeared to be in sight. It calls to mind the conciliatory spirit which animates the Haitian Government, and which is evidenced by the counter-draft delivered on August 26 last and the conference held at the National Palace at Port au Prince on the 29th of the same month from 5 p. m. until midnight, when an agreement was nearly reached upon an exchange of views tending to adapt the propositions of the Government of the United States to the provisions of the Haitian Constitution, which can not be ignored, and to the susceptibilities of the nation.

President Dartiguenave, adding that since last Sunday he has received no answer concerning certain amendments which the Government of the Republic of Haiti deems necessary, still indulges the hope that the present tension, thanks to the tact and coolness of the responsible parties, will soon vanish and he is fully disposed to conclude an agreement that will be in perfect harmony with the principle of the independence of the State of Haiti.

In transmitting to you the foregoing paraphrase of the cablegram from the Chief Magistrate of the Republic which it is my honor to represent here, I stand convinced that the Government of the United States, which never bent its energy on crushing the weak, will dismiss and disown any idea of violence against the Haitian nation and any plan against its institutions.

HAITIAN LEGATION,
Washington, September 6, 1915.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Since I had the honor of writing you under date of September 4, about a recent telegram from the President of Haiti, the Haitian Government has informed me that Admiral Caperton after taking possession of seven Haitian custom houses including that of the capital, and putting them in charge of directors selected by him, proclaimed martial law throughout the territory of the Republic unduly occupied by the American forces, and appointed simultaneously a governor for Cape Haitien and a chief of police and a harbor-master for Port au Prince.

I have had the honor to talk with you on several occasions of facts that may be regarded as encroachments on the rights of sovereignty and independence of the Republic of Haiti; but you were so good as to give me, as to the intentions of the Government of the United States, assurances that did not fail of favorable reception. Yet my Government, confronting the last measures taken by Admiral Caperton, cannot but doubt whether these acts and orders, the effects of which deprive it of the exercise of the essential prerogatives vested in it by the Constitution, do not amount to a manifest invasion of the autonomy of the country whose institutions it is commissioned to defend.

It has in consequence instructed me to let you know how glad it will be to receive through me such explanations as may dispel the justified alarm of the Haitian people.

[Not dated; received September 7, 1915.]

In northern Haiti the Cacos situation is becoming critical. Because of their leaders, who are endeavoring to obtain exorbitant bribes, these Cacos will not come within our lines and surrender arms and will not disband. Repeated efforts have been made both through channels in the north and through their leaders in Port au Prince, and liberal offers of 15 gourdes per soldier and 100 gourdes per chief have been made to pay for their rifles and to give them sufficient money to return to their homes; but the offers were not accepted.

In Cape Haitien these Cacos have again begun investing the town and are preventing market people and food stuffs from entering. As recommended in my radiogram 16029 (S. D. 1141) I believe that furnishing work on railroad construction in the vicinity of Cape Haitien might induce many men to desert their chiefs and go to work. In this connection unless prompt measures are taken I shall be forced to consider very soon offensive operations against these Cacos.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 10, 1915—6 p. m.

In a note dated the 4th instant, Mr. Solon Ménos paraphrases a telegraphic instruction from President Dartiguenave wherein he pointed out that the arbitrary action of the United States forces in taking possession of customhouses, together with the threat to declare martial law, had aroused popular feeling to the highest pitch and had endangered a satisfactory conclusion of present negotiations, which he hoped would lead to an agreement in perfect harmony with the principle of the independence of Haiti. Mr. Ménos in conclusion expressed his belief that the United States, which never bent its energy on crushing the weak, would dismiss and disown any idea of violence against the Haitian nation or any plan against its institutions.

Mr. Ménos wrote again on the 6th to the effect that he had been informed by his Government of the declaration of martial law in the territory of Haiti, unduly occupied by American forces, which had led his Government to doubt whether these acts did not amount to a manifest invasion of the autonomy of the country whose institutions it was commissioned to defend; also that his Government would be glad to receive, through him, such explanations as would dispel the justified alarm of the Haitian people.

The department is loath to believe that Mr. Ménos has faithfully reflected the attitude of his Government in this matter, particularly in view of the resignation of Minister Sannon, and would be pleased if President Dartiguenave could see his way to write you informally to that effect and to state that these instructions were given to Mr. Ménos without his knowledge or consent. The President may be fully assured that his communication will be treated as strictly confidential.

I am to-day advising Mr. Ménos that his two notes and our informal conversations can, under present circumstances, only have an unofficial character. I shall also repeat my conviction that it will be to the best interests of Haiti for negotiations to be carried on at Port au Prince, exclusively.

Admiral Caperton to the Secretary of the Navy.

PORT AU PRINCE, August 13, 1915.

Considerable destitution exists among the lower classes in Port au Prince. On the morning of August 13, a woman and child were found dead in the open market-place in the vicinity of Rue de St. Honore and Rue de Centre, their deaths having been due, without question, to starvation. A very intelligent woman, claiming to be a school teacher, appeared this morning and showed what purported to be an acknowledgement of indebtedness due her for pay as school teacher for the month of January. She claims that neither she nor family have had anything to eat for two days. Other cases similar to this have been brought to my attention; and some cases where families have been without food for 24 to 48 hours. The starting of public works and establishment of peace will, without doubt, furnish employment to many men who are now without food; but this will not, in all probability, reach the women and children who have no men to support them.

I request that this matter be brought to the attention of the Red Cross Society, with the request that they send representatives and undertake relief work at Port au Prince. I suggest the Red Cross Society cable me $1,000 to carry on relief work until they arrive. Referring to the Department's radiogram No. 14002, there are no influential Haitians who have funds for properly organizing a relief society; the country is destitute from lack of crops and industry due to continuous revolution.

August 14, 1915.

The revolutionary leader, Daguesseau Montreuil, arrived at Cape Haitien on the morning of August 13. He communicated with the revolutionary committees at St. Marc and Gonaives, and sent a telegram to the revolutionary committee at Cape Haitien to the effect that Bobo was very strong politically. It is suspected that he will urge the ex-Bobo troops to maintain their present stand and not surrender their arms. The committee of public safety appointed by Bobo still continues to exist and to be a menace at Cape Haitien. No troops have presented themselves to surrender arms as yet.

I immediately informed the Commanding Officer of the Connecticut that no revolutionary activities of any kind would be tolerated in Haiti and especially within the limits of my command; that it is the duty of all citizens to support the present Government; and that if Montreuil, or any other Haitian, attempted revolutionary activities of any kind, he is to be arrested at once.

I received on this day Department's radiogram No. 12014, stating that the Red Cross Society had contributed $1,000 to relieve the destitute among the lower classes at Port au Prince.

August 16, 1915.

On this day information was received from fairly reliable sources, that the Cacos forces were concentrating at Le Borgne, on the north coast of Haiti, west of Cape Haitien, and at Pt. Sonde, just east of St. Marc, on the Artibonite River; that the Cacos were becoming restless as they had not received pay for some time; and that the leaders appear to fear that they will lose control over their men.

The Cacos question will be the most difficult one for the United States to solve in Haiti, as these men have long been used to the wandering life of a bandit and to a life without work. I made arrangements for the bank at St. Marc, under the direction of the American officer at that place, to pay those Cacos who belong to any military organization a sum of money if they would surrender their arms and return to their homes, in the same manner as was done at Port au Prince and Cape Haitien. The Castine has been ordered to St. Marc and will take charge of such payment.

The offer of money to the Cacos to surrender arms and disband is entirely in the nature of pay for military services rendered in the past, as they form the majority of the military organizations in the North. At present considerable difficulty is being experienced at Cape Haitien in getting the Cacos to come in and deposit their arms, although the money is waiting for them and they have been so informed.

The Cacos question is a most serious one and will probably not be successfully handled until a reliable constabulary is established and money comes into the country to provide work for these men.

Under date of August 16, the American Consular Agent at Port de Paix informed the Commanding Officer of the Connecticut that Port de Paix was entirely and openly hostile to the Government of President Dartiguenave, which has not been recognized at that place yet, and that the population was ready to join the Cacos. The Consular Agent stated that General Cherfilus had been called to Port de Paix with an armed force to take possession of the town and to join the Cacos army and the population there, which is to commence what they term "guerre internationale" against Dartiguenave and the American occupation; that there was a strong rumor that a division of the Cacos was on the march there via Le Borgne; that if this is true there will be serious danger to foreign life and property; and that the population is very excited and inclined to excesses.

A committee—consisting of Archbishop Pichon, Reverend Turnbull, U. S. Vice Consul Battist, Senators L. Herrison and Villard, Madame Vve Fils-Aimé, president, and Madame E. Solages, treasurer of St. Vincent de Paul's Hospital—under direction of Lieutenant Oberlin, is engaged in alleviating the suffering of the starving poor at Port au Prince with funds provided by the American Red Cross Society.

August 18, 1915.

In order to give further publicity to my offer to pay the soldiers upon coming within the United States lines, depositing their arms, and returning to their homes, fifteen gourdes apiece and to each chief one hundred gourdes, I directed the Commanding Officer of the Castine to publish the Department's proclamation and this information at Gonaives; the Commanding Officer of the Connecticut at Port de Paix; the Commanding Officer of the Eagle at Leogane, Petite Goave, and Miragoane; and I asked the American Consul at Port au Prince to take the necessary measures to direct the consular representatives at Port de Paix, Aux Cayes, Jaemel and Jeremie to publish the proclamation and give this notice to the people in their districts.

Colonel Waller returned from Gonaives Monday. Conditions that town relative to food and water supply so intolerable as to require immediate action. Therefore directed railroad be opened to Ennery in same manner as was done at Cape Haitien. When Cacos learned of preparations for opening railroad they started firing and began destroying railroad tracks one half to one and one-half miles outside Gonaives. Detachment of 24 marines immediately proceeded along railroad, where about 50 Cacos from behind barricades across railroad opened fire on our men at 25 yards distance. Firing was returned by our troops and Cacos were driven into bush for mile and one-half. No casualties our forces. One chief and five other Cacos killed and one chief wounded. Sniping from bush to east of towns continues at intervals. Cacos' chief had been warned in morning against interfering with food and water supply. Have approved Commanding Officer Castine action and have directed him open railroad to Ennery without delay and keep it open and take such action as necessary to secure food and water supply for towns and free entry of coffee. SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for the information of your Department, a copy of a letter dated November 20, 1915, received from Rear Admiral Caperton, Commander of the Cruiser Squadron, Atlantic Fleet, relative to the operations of the Cruiser Squadron in Haitian waters from November 7 to 19, inclusive.

W. S. BENSON.

[Inclosure—Extract.]

Admiral Caperton to the Secretary of the Navy.

November 7, 1915.

Colonel Waller reports that operations are progressing well against the Caco bandits, and that the bandits are scarce at present. It is his opinion that the North will soon be quiet, but that our troops will be active for a few days more. He will interview several Caco generals tomorrow.

I directed the commander of the Fifth Naval District to occupy the custom-house at Aquin in accordance with orders previously issued.

November 8, 1915.

Operations against the bandits in the North continues. Our forces have been divided into small columns and are patrolling the country in all directions, and the bandits have been almost completely broken up.

November 10, 1915.

On this day the Commander of the Expeditionary Force reported that Forts Selon and Berthol had been captured on November 8; that the Cacos had fired [fled?] at the sight of our men; and that all in the Caco country were displaying white flags. He further reports that a band of 15 bandits was trapped near Grande Rivière, and that 2 were killed and 9 wounded. He also reports Limonade quiet and states that he was satisfied that the movement crushed was more than an aggregation of ordinary brigands. The Commander of the Expeditionary Force will now start operations to the west of the railroad and toward Ranquille.

November 13, 1915.

The Commander of the Expeditionary Force reports from the North that a general movement westward towards the Cape Haitien-Bahon railroad started this morning, and will be finished tomorrow to the line Grande Rivière-Bahon; that Limonade and Le Trou also were being occupied; that few Cacos were seen; that there were 3 killed and 6 wounded among them; and that there were no casualties on our side. He further reports that it is quiet south of Behon; that the district between the railroad and San Raphael will be cleared next week if necessary; and that this district has already been patrolled and partly cleared. He further reports that conditions are quiet and that more people are going to work on the farms.

November 16, 1915.

The Commander of the Expeditionary Force returned to Port au Prince on this day. The operation against the Cacos toward Dondon, Fort Rivière and Ranquille began this morning. Conditions to the eastward of the Cape Haitien-Bahon railroad are quiet, and no further trouble is anticipated in this district.

November 18, 1915.

On 17 November Fort Rivière was captured by forces under the command of Major Butler. All avenues of escape had been previously closed so that no Cacos escaped. Fifty-one Cacos were killed, including General Joseph and 3 division chiefs, and all others were captured. There were no casualties to our forces. Major Butler's force consisted of the 13th Company of Marines, Captain C. Campbell; marine detachment from the Connecticut, Captain F. A. Barker; 5th Company of Marines, Captain W. W. Low; a seamen company from the Connecticut, Lieut. S. D. McCaughey; and an automatic-gun detachment from the 3d Company. The assault was made by Major Butler with the 5th Company, supported by five other companies. A hand-to-hand conflict in the fort lasted ten minutes. Forty-seven rifles and considerable ammunition found in the fort after the capture. This fort is made of masonry and brick of most substantial construction. It will be leveled to the ground.

The fact that this fort was taken without a single casualty on our side speaks well for the ability and judgment of all officers concerned.

November 19, 1915.

The operations against the Caco bandits in North Haiti during the last three weeks has resulted in the dispersing of the Cacos, the capture of many of their strongholds, the destruction of quantities of arms and ammunition, and the bringing of peaceful conditions throughout the Caco country. This area is included within the lines Cape Haitien, Minthe, the mouth of the Massacre River, and Cape Haitien. This area is now patrolled throughout by our forces, is now peaceful, and the country people are now busy with their crops. Our patrols are also at present operating from Gonteau, from Port de Paix for a distance of eight miles to the southward and from St. Marc to the Artibonite Valley. These latter areas are quiet and patrols from Gonaives and St. Marc found the people friendly and welcoming our detachments.

The last movement of the Cacos appears to have been of a revolutionary nature against the present Government and the American occupation, as well as brigandage. While petty brigandage will continue from time to time, yet it is hoped that no more such organized brigandage or revolutionary activities will occur. Our casualties to date in this campaign are one officer and one man wounded.

November 19, 1915.

On this day I received Department's radiogram 22018, in which the Department directs that, in view of the heavy losses to the Haitians in recent engagements, our offensive operations be suspended in order to prevent further loss of life.

It is presumed that the Department understands that patrolling in North Haiti is now under way by our forces, and that hostile contact with the bandits may unavoidably occur from time to time, resulting in loss of life. The operations we have been conducting are purely of a defensive character for the preservation of law and order, the suppression of revolutionary activities against the present Government and military intimidation of the people and for the protection of life and property of the innocent farmers and tradesmen who form by far the majority of the population in the districts patrolled. The Cacos against whom these operations have been undertaken, are bandits purely and simply, owing no allegiance to the Government or any political faction, but organized under petty chiefs for the sole purpose of stirring up strife against the Government, and robbing, pillaging, and murdering innocent people. The suppression of this brigandage and these activities is absolutely essential to peace and security in Haiti. It will be remembered that there is no Government authority in these areas at present and that we have disbanded the Haitian army, which has heretofore been the only means of protection to the inhabitants. The operations now undertaken should continue until this brigandage is suppressed or the constabulary is ready to relieve our forces. Having undertaken this intervention, any diminution in the protection and support offered the Government and the people of Haiti by the United States will greatly harm our prestige. Our action in suppressing these bandits is approved by the Haitian Government, and, in the case of most of the members of that Government, most enthusiastically.

It is absolutely necessary that the present movement continue to the southward to include Hinche at least, where arms and ammunition have been collected for delivery to our forces in accordance with the agreement of Quartier-Morin; and furthermore, if Hinche is not occupied it will therefore form a base for future revolutions. It is of course possible that some slight opposition may be encountered at Hinche although we are assured there will be none. In view of this vital necessity, unless otherwise directed, I will continue the movement to Hinche.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 29, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith 2 reports from the Commander of the Cruiser Squadron, Atlantic Fleet, covering the operations of the squadron in Haiti and Haitian waters from November 20 to December 16, 1915.

Very sincerely yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,

[Inclosure—Extract.]

Admiral Caperton to the Secretary of the Navy.

November 20, 1915.

On this day I received a radiogram from the Department stating that the Department was impressed with the number of Haitians killed; that it feels that a severe lesson has been taught the Cacos and it believes that a proper patrol can be maintained to preserve order and protect innocent persons without further offensive operations. The Department directs that, should these measures prove inadequate, I inform the Department before taking steps that would result in loss of life on either side, except in case of urgent necessity.

November 21, 1915.

At 30 minutes past midnight, November 21, Colonel Waller directed all the forces in the North to suspend operations except patrolling, pending further instructions; and at 12.30 p. m., November 21, he communicated the Department's instructions to the forces in the North and gave instructions accordingly.

November 22, 1915.

Later reports from North Haiti indicate that when Fort Rivière was rushed by the 5th Company of Marines, 29 Cacos were killed in the mêlée. Many jumped over the parapet and attempted to escape. These were attacked by the remaining companies and 22 were killed. It is not known how many escaped or how many were in the fort when the attack was made. My radiogram 12018 was in error relative to the captures made at Fort Rivière. There were none captured there. 42 prisoners were captured that day, but elsewhere.

November 25, 1915.

On this day, President Dartiguenave called at the French Legation and formally apologized for the violation of that Legation on July 28, 1915. The Haitian shore battery fired a salute of 21 guns to the French flag. This salute was returned gun for gun by the French Cruiser Descartes with the Haitian flag at the main. At 12.40 p. m. the Descartes got under way and stood to sea.

November 29, 1915.

North Haiti continues to be patrolled by the marines. This country remains quiet. Captain Campbell's company, which went to Hinche, found the population there and en route apparently delighted to see our troops and that vicinity quiet and orderly.

November 30, 1915.

Colonel Cole, commanding the 1st Regiment of Marines at Cape Haitien, reports that entire North Haiti is quiet, though there are a few scattered outlaws who commit depredations from time to time between Le Trou and the border. Our patrolling continues in North Haiti.

December 11, 1915.

The situation in Haiti remained unchanged on this day, except that a small band of 16 armed bandits, under a leader named Tijacques, pillaged the town of Gross Roches the night of 9-10 December. Marine patrols have been sent out to capture them. There is considerable unrest on the Dominican side of the border in the vicinity of Monte Cristi and Dajabon.

December 13, 1915.

The situation on this day remained unchanged, except that part of the band implicated in the pillaging of Gross Roche were overtaken by a marine patrol. These bandits refused to surrender and broke for the bush, firing a number of shots. One bandit was killed, several wounded, and five taken prisoners by the patrol. Two of the prisoners afterwards escaped. The Haitian authorities at Perches captured two Cacos charged with looting and turned them over to the patrol. These affairs are of very minor nature.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.¹³ DIFFICULTIES BETWEEN THE NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI AND THE HAITIAN GOVERNMENT. CUSTOMHOUSES TAKEN IN CHARGE BY AMERICAN NAVAL FORCES.

File No. 838.00/1377.

Memorandum re the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti, submitted to the Department of State by Mr. Wehrhane January 4, 1915.

The National Bank of the Republic of Haiti is a French institution, created as a limited liability stock company under the laws of ¹³ Continued from For. Rel. 1914, pp. 334-382.

France, having a French charter, as the successor of the old Bank of Haiti, which was entirely owned by French people. The present stock is divided between American and French interests, with a small amount held by German interests.

None of the capital of the Bank was furnished by or are any of the shares of the Bank owned by the Government of Haiti, the only relationship between the Government and the Bank being found in certain contracts providing for a loan by the Bank to the Government of three million francs and a contract under which the Bank performs for the Government the service of the Treasury, receiving all revenues of the Government and making payments therefrom for the account of the Government. The contract with the Bank contemplated an entire reform of the Haitian currency and provided in this connection that the Bank should have the exclusive note-issuing privilege maintaining a gold reserve equal to one-third of the amount of notes so issued. Apart from its contractual obligations, the Bank has in the past under a convention made from year to year voluntarily advanced to the Government the sums necessary to meet certain salaries and governmental expenses.

As a result of almost continuous revolutionary conditions for the last three years, the revenues of the Government have fallen off to such an extent that it can no longer repay the advances made by the Bank, and the Haitian Government is at the present time indebted to the Bank to the extent of approximately one and a half million dollars. Owing to the large indebtedness of the Haitian Government to the Bank, the Bank does not see its way clear to make further loans to the Government, and this refusal is the reason for the present animosity toward the Bank.

Out of the proceeds of a loan made in 1910 to the Haitian Government coincident with the reorganization of the Bank, a sum of ten million francs was set aside for the monetary reform which was to be undertaken under certain conditions. A portion of this sum has been used to retire Haitian paper money under a law of retrait, the operation of which law was suspended on August 14, 1914, on account of the existing serious revolutionary conditions. The remainder of the unused portion of the ten million francs ($2,000,000) is held by the Bank in trust, to be applied toward a monetary reform whenever the necessary legislation shall have been enacted. The original contract provided that the equivalent of ten million francs should be furnished when and as required for purposes of the monetary reform. It did not, however, stipulate that any amount need be sent to Haiti until required for the purpose.

Legislation just now promulgated by the Haitian authorities providing for the creation of a new Bank, for the emission of a large issue of paper money, the forcible taking from the Bank's vaults of $65,000 in gold, are all violations of the contract between the Bank and the Government and these acts put in jeopardy the property and rights, not only of the American holders of the stock of the Bank, but those of the French and German stockholders as well. Even more serious than this, however, are the threats made by Haitian officials of bodily injury to some of the officials and employees of the Bank. These threats have resulted in the forced retirement of the acting director, Mr. Desrue, the compulsory closing of the Bank and threats of imprisonment and bodily injury to American and French citizens employed in the Bank.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

The Department of Foreign Relations has asked, by note received last night, the good offices of the Legation for transmission to Mr. Wehrhane of the following reply to his telegram¹⁴ addressed to the President of Haiti, which was forwarded through the Department and this Legation:

[Translation.]

HENRY H. WEHRHANE,

Vice President National Bank of the Republic of Haiti, New York:

In answer to your telegram the President of Haiti charges me to express his satisfaction at seeing the Bank, actuated by condition of the country, disposed to propose arbitration for the settlement of the difficulties pending and at last decided to an understanding with reference to this matter to be adopted to improve the financial and economic situation of the country.

He regrets, however, not to be able to consent to send to the United States Doctor Heraux, Minister of Finance, accompanied by one or more colleagues, to the end of negotiating agreements and to lay, should there be occasion, the basis of a new budgetary convention. He thinks preferable that the Bank enter into relations with the Haitian Minister at Washington, who will receive full powers to that effect. In the meantime the President thinks that the Bank, previous to any negotiation, would give indisputable proof of the sincerity of its sentiments by consenting to execute without delay the two laws recently voted by the Legislative Body which place at the disposal of the Government certain credit balances of which the payment is imperatively claimed for the urgent necessities of public service.

LEGATION OF HAITI,
Washington, January 11, 1915.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 31, last,¹⁵ about the shipment on the Machias of moneys allotted for the redemption of the paper money of Haiti.

Confirming my letter of December 29 last,¹⁶ I beg leave to add the following remarks:

I. Under the contract perfected at Port au Prince on September 5, 1910, the Banque Nationale d'Haiti, constituted as a French corporation with its home office at Paris and main establishment at Port au Prince, is really a State Bank which enjoys all the citizenship rights of Haiti and is charged with the Treasury service of the State both at home and abroad. It is even privileged to issue notes regarded as currency with full and unlimited legal tender force throughout the territory of the Republic. Being responsible custodian of public funds and subjected to the supervision provided by the regulations of the Treasury service, it cannot, so far as its relations with the State of Haiti are concerned, claim to be a mere private bank with full freedom of action. Least of all can it be one of its rights deliberately to ignore the provision of the public law of the Nation whose revenues it holds by persisting in regarding as revolutionary a Government that has been constitutionally established.

II. As a matter of fact, the Haitian authorities have at no time offered, attempted or threatened in any way to seize and use for current expenses the whole or any part of the ten million francs allotted for the redemption of paper money. The law of August 14, 1914, and the bill introduced in the Legislature on November 25 last on the subject of issue would suffice, if there were no other circumstance, to show their true intention on this point. On the other hand Port au Prince witnessed no riot, either in December last or earlier, directed at the Bank or imperiling the above-specified fund.

It is, moreover, needless to say that even if, as is wholly improbable, the said fund had been forcibly taken out of the Bank by rioters or revolutionists, the said Bank, in such a case of vis major, would have incurred no responsibility and the loss would have been that of the Republic of Haiti, to which the fund belongs.

III. It appears from a search made on December 28 last by one of the examining magistrates of the civil tribunal of Port au Prince that not more than $160,000 were found in the redemption fund where there should have been one million. The consequence is that the amount taken from the deposit is even larger than that stated by the Bank to the Department of State. But no matter what the amount is, the Bank had no right to lay hand upon it except for redemption. Its responsibility cannot be made less by the circumstances that the money was removed to some place where it could bear interest, for its assuming guardianship rights of the Republic of Haiti and attempting to supersede by high-handed methods the Haitian Administration in the husbandry of public funds cannot be admitted. And this misuse of a deposit is all the more serious as it is that same Bank, which, as early as August 27, 1914, suspended payments "because of the impossibility of fetching funds for the budgetary convention," that would now expose the redemption fund to the risk of a speculation made even more precarious by the present general crisis.

IV. At all events, the Bank knew, when the funds were put on board the Machias, of the presence in Haitian waters of one of the steamers of the Royal Dutch West India Mail, the Prins der Nederlanden which usually carries gold and which after sailing from Port au Prince on December 13, last, returned and taking its final clearance on the 18th arrived at New York on the 25th of that month. But that apparently was not what the Bank wanted. It no doubt considered it important to have officers and seamen land from an American gunboat and do unusual service at the risk of stirring up some regrettable agitation. In other words it sought and procured, in contravention of a weak State's rights, an act of moral violence from one of the greatest Powers of the world.

I beg leave to be excused from insisting on the interest the Government of the Republic of Haiti has in maintaining its protest.

Be pleased to accept, [etc.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, January 11, 1915.

SIR: I have the honor to report that in pursuance of the complaint embodied in a letter from the Director of the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti, under date of December 29, 1914, and after conference with the French Minister here, who took a similar course in the defense of the French interests in the Bank, the Legation, pending further instruction, addressed a note to the Foreign Office, dated December 30, 1914, of which a copy is herewith forwarded, making the most express reserves as to the action of the Haitian authorities in executing the decree, rendered by default and in violation of Article 24 of the contract of the Bank, which prescribes that all differences between the Haitian Government and the Bank must be submitted to arbitration.

I also enclose copy and translation of the note verbale, dated January 8, 1915, received from the Foreign Office in reply.

As you will observe, the Foreign Office, after recalling that, according to the contract of the Bank, all diplomatic intervention is formally prohibited and that further, even if such were possible, the fact of the Bank being a French corporation having its principal office in Paris, should exclude in any case American intervention, the French being represented in Haiti by the Legation of the French Republic, informs this Legation in a purely unofficial manner as to the rights of the Haitian Government in that which concerns the decree of référé of October 20 last, and finally states that the Haitian Government is ready to submit the differences to arbitration, as provided for in Article 24 of the contract of 1910. Of this the Bank was informed.

MEMORANDUM.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, December 30, 1914.

The director of the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti has informed this Legation that, in execution of a decree of the juge des référés rendered against the Bank on the 20th of October last, by default, the Haitian authorities presented themselves yesterday at that establishment and took from its vaults the sum of $66,910 gold.

The Legation of the United States deems it its duty to make its most express reserves on the execution of the aforesaid decree, rendered under judicial authority and contrary to Article 24 of the contract of the Bank, which specifies that all differences between the Haitian Government and the Bank are to be submitted to arbitration.

[Inclosure 2—Translation.]

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to Minister Blanchard.

NOTE VERBALE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Port au Prince, January 8, 1915.

By its memorandum of December 30, last, the Legation of the United States set forth that it is its duty to make its most express reserves on the execution against the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti of a decree of the juge des référés rendered on the 20th of October last between the State and that institution. The Legation adds that this execution is contrary to Article 24 of the contract of concession which specifies that all differences between the Haitian Government and the Bank must be submitted to arbitration.

In reply to this memorandum, the Department of Foreign Affairs expresses, first of all, its special satisfaction in noting that the Legation of the United States, in invoking, for mediation, Article 24 of the contract of concession of 1910, testifies to its formal intention, in conformity with the rules of international law, to maintain itself strictly within the limits drawn by this contract.

Under such conditions, it is with entire confidence in the adhesion of the American Legation that the Department of Foreign Affairs reverts again to this double observation: that Article 24, upon which the Legation feels bound to form its reserves, stipulates in express terms, "All diplomatic intervention is formally prohibited," and that, in addition, Article 3 of the contract of concession establishes without question that the Bank is a French corporation having its principal office in Paris, which even if diplomatic intervention were possible, should exclude, in any case, American intervention, the French having to represent them in Haiti the Legation of the French Republic.

It is, therefore, by virtue of the same contract invoked by the memorandum of December 30 last, that the Department of Foreign Affairs is obliged to oppose the intervention of the Legation of the United States.

However, the position of the parties having thus been clearly determined and all equivocation in this regard being dissipated, the Department of Foreign Affairs sees no objection to informing the American Legation, in a purely unofficial manner, as to the incontestable rights of the Haitian Government in that which concerns the decree of référé of October 20 last.

Article 24 of the contract of concession states that in case of a difference between the Government and the Bank the point in controversy shall be submitted to arbitration.

In law any contestation is susceptible of being affected, under normal conditions, by various circumstances.

Hence the distinction established between that which constitutes the basis of the contestation and that which constitutes the incidents.

The basis will remain, in any case, submitted to the competent tribunal—in the present case, to arbitration; whereas, the incident, according to its nature, may necessitate the intervention of another jurisdiction.

It is thus that it is recognized that "the constitution of an arbitral tribunal to decide on the difficulties already arisen and to arise in the liquidation of a company, places no obstacle in the way of the provisional jurisdiction of the juge des référés, in case of urgency." (Pandectes Françaises; Référé No. 380.)

Provided, therefore, that there be urgency, the juge des référés is competent. He decides on the urgency of the case, leaving out entirely the basis of the contestation.

Concerning the present difference, the decree of référé of October 20 has simply decided the absolutely urgent question of the execution of a law of the Legislative Body placing at the disposition of the Executive Power the amounts which are the exclusive property of the Haitian State.

The basis of difference continues to remain entire in spite of the decree of référé.

And it is exactly this difference that the Government is ready to submit to arbitration provided for in Article 24 of the contract of 1910.

Your January 4, noon. Communicated with Williams who states that no threats had been made against him or any employee of the Bank. The only threats made were directed against Desrue, French, director of the Bank, immediately after the taking of the gold. On his complaint, along with the French Minister, I at once called upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs and demanded that he be protected. The Minister although insisting that Desrue was a Frenchman and the Bank a French company in which the stockholders if American were anonymous, courteously accepted my intervention in the light of good offices. He gave us the most formal assurances that Desrue would have full protection adding however that as to his legal liability justice would follow its course. The French Minister is using all his influence to prevent provisional arrest and so far the case is still pending.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, January 15, 1915.

SIR: In compliance with the Department's cable instructions of December 31,¹⁷ received January 2, regarding interference by the Haitian Government in the affairs of the National Bank of Haiti, this Legation addressed under date of January 5, 1915, a note to the Foreign Office, copy of which is herewith enclosed, together with copy and translation of the note, dated January 12, received in reply.

As you will observe, the Minister of Foreign Relations states that just previous to the time of the receipt of the above-mentioned note from this Legation, the Haitian Government, by reason of its sincere desire to arrive at a final conciliation with the Bank, had suspended all prosecutions against it; and through the good offices of the Department of State had exchanged propositions of agreement.

After enumerating the several points of this Legation's note of January 5 and before answering the same, the Minister of Foreign Relations declares his reply to be made under the express reserves of the declarations relative to Articles 3 and 24 of the contract of the Bank, made in preceding notes, which articles, as the Department is aware, are the two which establish the identity of the Bank as a French corporation and prohibit all diplomatic intervention.

It will be further observed that after setting forth the functions and identity of the Bank, the Minister of Foreign Relations declares that since certain obligations to the Haitian Government have been created both by its contract and by the laws of Haiti, the Bank for any infraction thereof is amenable to all legal means capable of compelling it to comply with the terms of its contract of concession.

The Minister of Foreign Relations further states that the Government has never intended, and does not intend, "to interfere with the Bank", and only asks to live in harmony with its Treasury; but that if in the course of proceedings begun, or to be begun, for any violation of the penal code, the Bank, with a view to escaping the consequences of its acts, should close its doors, the Haitian Government will be guided in its action by the terms of the contract binding the parties and by the civil code of Haiti which, being the same as that of France, is consequently the civil code of the Bank, a French corporation.

Regarding that portion of this Legation's note relative to "the arbitrary conduct of the authorities with regard to foreign interests", the Minister of Foreign Relations states that he regrets that no specific charge was mentioned, and adds that foreign interests in Haiti are represented by seven legations and a large number of consulates, from none of which has a complaint been received.

On the day after the delivery of the above protest at the Foreign Office, Mr. Williams, the acting manager of the Bank, called at this Legation and stated that there was a very marked change in the attitude of the Government officials toward the Bank; and further stated that every facility had been afforded him to have the money in the different branch offices of the Bank, situated at different towns around the coast, brought to the Bank here at Port au Prince, a measure which he deemed absolutely necessary to enable the Bank to meet the demands for cash which its ordinary transactions required.

Up to the time of this writing the Government has continued in this attitude, and has done nothing further to hinder the operations of the Bank.

MEMORANDUM.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, January 5, 1915.

In pursuance of instructions from the Department of State, the Legation of the United States protests against any interference with the Bank of Haiti in view of the fact that it is owned and operated by Americans and other foreigners.

In case the Bank is forced to close and cease operations by the present Haitian Government, the Government of the United States will not recognize any forfeiture of the charter of the Bank resulting from such forced closure.

The Legation is further instructed to add that the United States Government is deeply concerned over the reports which have reached it as to the arbitrary conduct of the authorities in dealing with foreign interests in the Republic.

[Inclosure 2—Translation.]

*The Minister for Foreign Affairs to Minister Blanchard.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Port au Prince, January 12, 1915.

MR. MINISTER: Through the good offices of the Department of State, propositions of agreement have for some days been exchanged between the Haitian Government and the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti. In its sincere desire to facilitate this agreement, in its clear wish to come to a final conciliation of mutual interests, the Government has suspended all prosecution against the Bank and withholds the acts which it was about to notify to this State's Treasury both in view of the arbitration provided for by the contract and by reason of the charges of guilt raised against it. And it is just at this moment, when it seems that the conflict created by the illegal attitude of the Bank seems to be calmed, that the Legation of the United States, upon instructions of the Department of State, communicated to my Department a memorandum dated January 5th and forwarded to my office on the 7th, which comprises:

1. A protest against any interference with the Bank of Haiti.
2. The declaration that "if the Bank is forced to close and cease operations by the present Haitian Government, the Government of the United States will not recognize any forfeiture of the charter of the Bank resulting from such forced closure."
3. The advice that reports have reached the Government of the United States relative to "the arbitrary conduct of the authorities in dealing with foreign interests in the Republic."

It is, Mr. Minister, under the express reserves of the declarations made in my preceding notes relative to Articles 3 and 24 of the contract of concession of the Bank, that I today reply to the memorandum of January 5.

The National Bank of the Republic of Haiti is bound to the Haitian State by a formal contract which charges it with the service of the Treasury, with the collection of our revenues, with the execution of our budgets, which gives it the formal quality of a functionary responsible for the public moneys, dependent, consequently, upon the Government of the Republic. Hence there exist between this Government and the Bank necessary, obligatory, indispensable relations created as much by the contract itself and natural consequences, as by the laws of the Republic.

Each time that the Bank of Haiti violates the texts which regulate these relations, as it violated them when it refused the Government the assistance which it had pledged itself to furnish it in return for considerable privileges which have been accorded it; each time it violates, as it did on December 17 last in withdrawing and exporting the funds of the Haitian Treasury, the penal law which protects the State against the infidelity of its accountants and depositaries of public moneys; each time it refuses obedience to legislative measures which dispose of the amounts belonging not at all to the cash of a private bank, but to the cash of the National Treasury—under all these circumstances, the Haitian Government will have the right and the duty to employ against it all legal means to compel it to respect its contract and the laws of the nation.

The Government has never intended and by no means does it intend "to interfere with the Bank"; but it will not tolerate that the Bank, on its side, interfere with the rights and interests of the State. It only asks to live in perfect harmony with its Treasury; it claims from it but one thing; i. e., that it execute loyally its obligations towards the Republic.

If in the course of the just prosecutions which have been commenced or which may tomorrow be exercised against it or its responsible agents—whether for the violations of its obligations, for the criminal act of December 17, or any other infraction of the penal law—the Bank, with a view to escaping from the consequence of the eventual condemnations, thinks that it may close its doors and cease operations, the Haitian Government, to determine its attitude towards it, will be guided by the terms of the contract which bind the two parties and the dispositions of the Civil Code of Haiti which is none other than the Civil Code of France and consequently the civil code of the Bank, a French company.

In that which concerns the reports which have reached the Government of the United States "as to the arbitrary conduct of the authorities in dealing with foreign interests in the Republic," the Department of Foreign Affairs can not but regret that, on a question of such great importance, the memorandum of January 5 did not mention anything precise and confined itself to a vague incrimination.

Foreign interests are represented in Haiti by seven legations and by a large number of consulates. Yet from not one of these various representatives, and not even from the American Legation, has the Department of Foreign Affairs received a complaint against the Haitian authorities. This is a fact absolutely conclusive, which can not fail to attract the attention of the Government at Washington, the vigilant guardian of American interests.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
 Port au Prince, February 1, 1915.

Your January 26, 6 p. m. In an interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs Friday morning I complied with your above instructions. Considering this grave he insisted that it be in writing and accordingly I addressed to him a note confirming verbal communication to which he will reply.

In the conversation he insisted that the Haitian Government had never intended using other than legal means to remove the funds now under seal at the Bank and stated that it was the Bank which had first asked that seals be lifted, claiming the funds to be Bank property and not funds of the retraits as claimed by the Haitian Government. In view of this the judicial authorities called at the Bank to lift seals and remove the fund in controversy to another banking house where it would be placed under seal pending decision. However, his reply will be given in writing.

The facts, as far as I can ascertain, are as follows: The bank having addressed a letter to juge d'instruction stating that contrary to what Mr. Desrue, director of the Bank, had supposed and declared, the funds of the retraits according to a telegram from New York were fully and well conserved by the council of administration, and consequently the funds under seal and all other funds at the Bank and agencies being the property of the Bank or of depositors, asked that seals be lifted. The Government sent judicial authorities to lift seals, also to remove money to another banking house claiming it to be retraits money. This Williams refused after which it was most persistently reported that an attempt would be made to forcibly remove funds.

In view of the possibility of such attempt being made, the Legation, in constant touch with the Bank, was prepared to take the necessary steps to prevent same.

Port au Prince, February 6, 1915.

SIR: Referring to the Department's cable of January 26, 6 p. m., and my February 1, with reference to the removal of the funds from the Bank, I have the honor to report that on the 23rd of January the Foreign Office addressed a note to the Legation, a copy and translation of which is herewith enclosed, stating that on the 15th of January Mr. Williams, director ad interim of the Bank, had forwarded a letter to the juge d'instruction stating that contrary to what Mr. Desrue had declared there was no longer any portion of the re-trait fund at the Bank, and further that the funds under seal there belonged to the Bank. In presence of this attitude of the Bank the Haitian Government had determined that justice should follow its course.

I acknowledged receipt of this note and contented myself with saying that the matter would be brought to the attention of the Department, as I did not consider that the Legation should intervene in a difference between the Haitian Government and its Treasury.

Upon investigation it was ascertained that the director of the Bank, Mr. Williams, had, as stated on the 15th of January, addressed a letter to the juge d'instruction which, up to my enquiry, I had neither seen nor been apprized of. In the letter Mr. Williams states that Mr. Desrue, the former director of the Bank, could only make suppositions as to the identity of the funds at the Bank but that subsequent to the time of Mr. Desrue's declaration to the juge d'instruction a telegram had been received from the New York office of the Bank, stating that the funds of the re-trait were fully and well conserved by the council of administration. In this letter he requests that the seals be lifted from the funds in the Bank's vaults since they were the private property of the Bank and of private individuals.

Whereupon the Haitian judicial authorities called at the Bank to execute a judicial order which provided for the lifting of the seals of the funds in question but which also contemplated the removal of these funds to another banking house to be placed there under seal. This latter part of the order Mr. Williams reported was not read to him, and it was only on his demand to see the order that he became acquainted with its full contents.

Meanwhile, Mr. Williams had locked his safe and after reading the order refused to allow it to be executed in any particular, and upon advice of the counsel of the Bank declined to sign the procès verbal of the proceedings.

Mr. Williams at once reported to the Legation the above and stated that in his opinion based on all that he had heard with regard to the matter, the Haitian Government would attempt to remove the funds by means of force. He said that in such case it would take at the shortest five or six days to break open the vault. I advised him to let the Government use force effectively inasmuch as the time which would necessarily be required to force open the safe would enable the Legation to take necessary steps to prevent any actual removal of the Bank funds by force.

This attempted removal was reported by Mr. Williams in a telegram which passed through this Legation and the Department.

On receipt of the Department's January 26, 6 p. m., I reported, complied verbally with the instructions therein contained and at the request of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, corroborated the same in a note.

On February 3 the Minister of Foreign Affairs replied and stated that the Haitian Government had never had the intention of using forcible means to remove the amounts under seal at the Bank. Copy of this note is enclosed.

As you will observe in the note from the Foreign Office above referred to, the Minister states that his Department does not intend to renounce its contractual right already affirmed to reject diplomatic intervention, and is ready to submit to arbitration as provided for by the contract of the Bank all differences raised between the parties.

He further states that the Haitian Government in the presence of a profound and general emotion produced by the open hostility, by the unheard-of conduct of the Bank, sees itself constrained to submit to the country, without delay, all the documents, diplomatic or otherwise, which bear on the subject.

This announcement was rendered immediately effective by the publication in Le Moniteur of this note and also of the note dated January 12, 1915, which was enclosed in my No. 29 of January 15, 1915, an unheard-of proceeding and contrary to all diplomatic usage but one which the Haitian Government has of late made constant use of. A communication addressed to the French Minister with reference to the Bank was also published in the same issue.

I have [etc.,]

A. BAILLY-BLANCHARD.
