PREFACE

The papers included in this supplementary volume relate in general to the period during which the United States was still neutral and are arranged as in preceding supplements. Under certain topics they run beyond the date April 6, 1917, because of the continuation of discussion of subjects arising in the earlier period, as in the case of the importation of goods of German origin detained in the Netherlands and that of the removal of German reservists from American ships; or because of the analogous character of subjects, such as the return of diplomatic officers from and to countries with which relations were severed after the declaration of a state of war with Germany. Papers relating to the development of the policy of Latin-American countries are printed for the entire year, to maintain the unity of the subject and because the countries which, one after another, severed relations with Germany or declared war based their action on the same grounds of the violation of neutral rights as those taken by the United States. For similar reasons papers relating to China and Siam are included for the period ending with China's declaration of war, on August 14; and a few relating to the action of Liberia are of later date than that country's declaration of war, August 4.

Brackets, [], occurring in the text enclose editorial insertions. These are of two main types: (1) words or phrases, in ordinary type, supplied to fill in omissions or replace obviously garbled passages in telegrams; and (2) suggested corrections, in italics, following words or phrases which appear to be incorrect. When there is not sufficient evidence to indicate what has been omitted or garbled, or when the words which might be suggested would so seriously affect the sense of the document that supplying them would involve more than an editorial responsibility, notice is taken of defects in the text by the insertion, within brackets, of "omission," "garbled groups," or "sic." Insignificant words are corrected or inserted without distinguishing marks.

Parentheses, (), occurring in the text are in the documents themselves. Besides their ordinary use for punctuation, these marks were also employed, in the deciphering and decoding of telegrams, to enclose words or phrases suggested by the decoders as possibly the intended readings of garbled groups which yielded unintelligible or no results. When so employed they have been allowed to stand, unless comparison with other documents showed the suggested reading to have been obviously either correct or incorrect. In the latter case the text within parentheses has sometimes been replaced by an editorial insertion within brackets.

Translations as found in the files have been revised and corrected if found faulty by comparison with texts in the original language or other versions available, but care has been taken to avoid altering in any significant respect important texts that were acted upon or used as sources of information in their existing form.

The general principles governing the compilation and editing of these papers are stated in the preface to Foreign Relations, 1914, Supplement, pp. iii-iv.

1805. At 2.30 this afternoon M. Briand, President of the Council, handed me at the Foreign Office the reply of the Allied Governments to the President's suggestion contained in your circular telegram of December 18.¹ Baron Beyens, Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs, was present and in the name of his Government handed me a separate note stating that while the Belgian Government had joined in the reply of the Allies yet, because of the peculiar situation of Belgium in this war and because of the aid given her by American citizens and the sympathy they have shown in her great distress, the Government of the King was desirous of setting forth that situation and proclaiming its gratitude to the United States in a separate communication.

M. Briand stated that in view of the President's communication having been published as well as the answer thereto of the Central powers, the public in France and the Allied countries is in an expectant frame of mind eager to know the answer of their Governments which is daily awaited; that for this reason as well as the impossibility of keeping confidential in so many countries a communication of this importance it has not been found feasible to conform in this regard to the President's wishes as much as he would be pleased to do so. It is the desire and intention therefore to publish it on Friday morning the 12th, he feeling sure that this delay will give the President time to take full cognizance of the communication before it is made public and will show the desire of the Allies to give deference as far as it has been possible to his wishes in this respect. Both Ministers were very cordial in their declarations voicing their appreciation of the President's motives.

Translation of the two notes will follow in separate telegrams by sections.

PARIS, January 10, 1917, 8 p. m.

1806. My 1805. Translation of French note as follows:

The Allied Governments have received the note which was delivered to them in the name of the Government of the United States on the 19th of December, 1916. They have studied it with the care imposed upon them both by the exact realization which they have of the gravity of the hour and by the sincere friendship which attaches them to the American people.

In general way they wish to declare that they pay tribute to the elevation of the sentiment with which the American note is inspired and that they associate themselves with all their hopes with the project for the creation of a league of nations to insure peace and justice throughout the world. They recognize all the advantages for the cause of humanity and civilization which the institution of international agreements, destined to avoid violent conflicts between nations, would present; agreements which must imply the sanctions necessary to insure their execution and thus to prevent an apparent security from only facilitating new aggressions. But a discussion of future arrangements destined to insure an enduring peace presupposes a satisfactory settlement of the actual conflict; the Allies have as profound a desire as the Government of the United States to terminate as soon as possible a war for which the Central Empires are responsible and which inflicts such cruel sufferings upon humanity. But they believe that it is impossible at the present moment to attain a peace which will assure them reparation, restitution, and such guaranties to which they are entitled by the aggression for which the responsibility rests with the Central powers and of which the principle itself tended to ruin the security of Europe; a peace which would on the other hand permit the establishment of the future of European nations on a solid basis. The Allied nations are conscious that they are not fighting for selfish interests, but above all to safeguard the independence of peoples, of right, and of humanity.

The Allies are fully aware of the losses and suffering which the war causes to neutrals as well as to belligerents and they deplore them; but they do not hold themselves responsible for them, having in no way either willed or provoked this war, and they strive to reduce these damages in the measure compatible with the inexorable exigencies of their defense against the violence and the wiles of the enemy.

It is with satisfaction therefore that they take note of the declaration that the American communication is in no wise associated in its origin with that of the Central powers transmitted on the 18th of December by the Government of the United States. They did not doubt moreover the resolution of that Government to avoid even the appearance of a support, even moral, of the authors responsible for the war.

The Allied Governments believe that they must protest in the most friendly but in the most specific manner against the assimilation established in the American note between the two groups of belligerents; this assimilation, based upon public declarations by the Central powers, is in direct opposition to the evidence, both as regards responsibility for the past and as concerns guaranties for the future; President Wilson in mentioning it certainly had no intention of associating himself with it.

If there is an historical fact established at the present date, it is the wilful aggression of Germany and Austria-Hungary to insure their hegemony over Europe and their economic domination over the world. Germany proved by her declaration of war, by the immediate violation of Belgium and Luxemburg, and by her manner of conducting the war, her simulating contempt for all principles of humanity and all respect for small states; as the conflict developed the attitude of the Central powers and their allies has been a continual defiance of humanity and civilization. Is it necessary to recall the horrors which accompanied the invasion of Belgium and of Serbia, the atrocious régime imposed upon the invaded countries, the massacre of hundreds of thousands of inoffensive Armenians, the barbarities perpetrated against the populations of Syria, the raids of Zeppelins on open towns, the destruction by submarines of passenger steamers and of merchantmen even under neutral flags, the cruel treatment inflicted upon prisoners of war, the juridical murders of Miss Cavell, of Captain Fryatt, the deportation and the reduction to slavery of civil populations, etc.? The execution of such a series of crimes perpetrated without any regard for universal reprobation fully explains to President Wilson the protest of the Allies.

They consider that the note which they sent to the United States in reply to the German note will be a response to the questions put by the American Government, and according to the exact words of the latter, constitute "a public declaration as to the conditions upon which the war could be terminated."

President Wilson desires more: he desires that the belligerent powers openly affirm the objects which they seek by continuing the war; the Allies experience no difficulty in replying to this request.

Their objects in the war are well known; they have been formulated on many occasions by the chiefs of their divers governments. Their objects in the war will not be made known in detail with all the equitable compensations and indemnities for damages suffered until the hour of negotiations. But the civilized world knows that they imply in all necessity and in the first instance the restoration of Belgium, of Serbia, and of Montenegro, and the indemnities which are due them; the evacuation of the invaded territories of France, of Russia, and of Roumania with just reparation; the reorganization of Europe, guaranteed by a stable régime and founded as much upon respect of nationalities and full security and liberty, economic development, which all nations, great or small, possess, as upon territorial conventions and international agreements suitable to guarantee territorial and maritime frontiers against unjustified attacks; the restitution of provinces or territories wrested in the past from the Allies by force or against the will of their populations, the liberation of Italians, of Slavs, of Roumanians and of Czecho-Slovaks from foreign domination; the enfranchisement of populations subject to the bloody tyranny of the Turks; the expulsion from Europe of the Ottoman Empire decidedly [foreign] to western civilization. The intentions of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia regarding Poland have been clearly indicated in the proclamation which he has just addressed to his armies. It goes without saying that if the Allies wish to liberate Europe from the brutal covetousness of Prussian militarism, it never has been their design, as has been alleged, to encompass the extermination of the German peoples and their political disappearance. That which they desire above all is to insure a peace upon the principles of liberty and justice, upon the inviolable fidelity to international obligation with which the Government of the United States has never ceased to be inspired.

United in the pursuits of this supreme object the Allies are determined, individually and collectively, to act with all their power and to consent to all sacrifices to bring to a victorious close a conflict upon which they are convinced not only their own safety and prosperity depend but also the future of civilization itself.

Copy of Belgian note as follows:

The Government of the King, which has associated itself with the answer handed by the President of the French Council to the American Ambassador on behalf of all, is particularly desirous of paying tribute to the sentiment of humanity which prompted the President of the United States to send his note to the belligerent powers and it highly esteems the friendship expressed for Belgium through his kindly intermediation. It desires as much as Mr. Woodrow Wilson to see the present war ended as early as possible.

But the President seems to believe that the statesmen of the two opposing camps pursue the same objects of war. The example of Belgium unfortunately demonstrates that this is in no wise the fact. Belgium has never, like the Central powers, aimed at conquests. The barbarous fashion in which the German Government has treated, and is still treating, the Belgian nation, does not permit the supposition that Germany will preoccupy herself with guaranteeing in the future the rights of the weak nations which she has not ceased to trample under foot since the war, let loose by her, began to desolate Europe. On the other hand, the Government of the King has noted with pleasure and with confidence the assurances that the United States is impatient to cooperate in the measures which will be taken after the conclusion of peace, to protect and guarantee the small nations against violence and oppression.

Previous to the German ultimatum, Belgium only aspired to live upon good terms with all her neighbors; she practiced with scrupulous loyalty towards each one of them the duties imposed by her neutrality. In the same manner she has been rewarded by Germany for the confidence she placed in her, through which, from one day to the other, without any plausible reason, her neutrality was violated; and the Chancellor of the Empire when announcing to the Reichstag this violation of right and of treaties, was obliged to recognize the iniquity of such an act and predetermine that it would be repaired. But the Germans, after the occupation of Belgian territory, have displayed no better observance of the rules of international law or the stipulations of the Hague convention. They have, by taxation, as heavy as it is arbitrary, drained the resources of the country; they have intentionally ruined its industries, destroyed whole cities, put to death and imprisoned a considerable number of inhabitants. Even now, while they are loudly proclaiming their desire to put an end to the horrors of war, they increase the rigors of the occupation by deporting into servitude Belgian workers by the thousands.

If there is a country which has the right to say that it has taken up arms to defend its existence, it is assuredly Belgium. Compelled to fight or to submit to shame, she passionately desires that an end be brought to the unprecedented sufferings of her population. But she could only accept a peace which would assure her, as well as equitable reparation, security and guaranties for the future.

The American people, since the beginning of the war, has manifested for the oppressed Belgian nation its most ardent sympathy. It is an American committee, the Commission for Relief in Belgium, which, in close union with the Government of the King and the national committee, displays an untiring devotion and marvelous activity in revictualing Belgium. The Government of the King is happy to avail itself of this opportunity to express its profound gratitude to the Commission for Relief as well as to the generous Americans eager to relieve the misery of the Belgian population. Finally, nowhere more than in the United States have the abductions and deportations of Belgian civilians provoked such a spontaneous movement of protestation and indignant reproof.

These facts, entirely to the honor of the American nation, allow the Government of the King to entertain the legitimate hope that at the time of the definitive settlement of this long war, the voice of the Entente powers will find in the United States a unanimous echo to claim in favor of the Belgian nation, innocent victim of German ambition and covetousness, the rank and the place which its irreproachable past, the valor of its soldiers, its fidelity to honor, and its remarkable faculties for work assign to it among the civilized nations.

The Imperial and Royal Government had on the 5th instant the honor to receive through the obliging medium of the Government of the United States of America the reply of the states at war with it to its note of December 12, in which the Imperial and Royal Government in concert with its allies declared its readiness to enter upon peace negotiations. Jointly with the allied powers the Imperial and Royal Government did not fail to subject the reply of the enemy governments to a thorough examination which brought the following result.

Under pretense that the proposal of the four allied powers lacked sincerity and importance the enemy governments decline to accede to the proposal. The form they gave to their communication makes it impossible to return an answer addressed to them. The Imperial and Royal Government nevertheless wishes to disclose its views to the neutral powers.

The reply of the enemy governments shuns every discussion of the means to bring the war to an end. It confines itself to reverting to the facts anterior to the war, to the alleged strength of their military situation, and to the motives for the peace proposal as supposed by them.

The Imperial and Royal Government has no present intention to launch into a renewed discussion of the antecedents of the war, for it is convinced that a straightforward, impartial judgment has already and irrefutably established, in the eyes of all mankind, on which side lies the responsibility for the war. With particular reference to Austria-Hungary's ultimatum to Serbia, the Monarchy has given in the years that preceded that step sufficient evidence of her forbearance in the face of the tendencies and hostile and aggressive doings of Serbia which were growing worse and worse up to the time when the infamous Sarajevo assassination put any further leniency out of the question.

Likewise any discussion of the point of determining on which side the advantage lay in regard to the military situation seems idle, as the answer to that question may unhesitatingly be left with public opinion throughout the world. Besides a comparison of the ends sought by the two groups in the present conflagration implies the solution of that question. While Austria-Hungary and its allies from the beginning of the war, never aimed at territorial conquest but rather at their defense, the contrary stands true for the enemy states which, to mention but a few of the objects they harbor in this war, crave the annihilation and spoliation of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, the conquest of Alsace-Lorraine, as also the partition of Turkey, and the curtailment of Bulgaria. The four allied powers therefore may consider they have achieved the purely defensive ends they seek in that war while their adversaries are more and more removed from the accomplishment of their designs.

If the enemy governments term "stratagem" the proposal of the four allied powers which is said to lack sincerity and importance, it is clear that we have here but an absolutely arbitrary assertion of a biased judgment incapable of proof so long as the peace negotiations have not begun and consequently our peace terms are not known.

The Imperial and Royal Government and the governments of the allied powers acted in perfect sincerity and good faith when they proposed peace negotiations for they had to reckon with the contingency of their explicit proposal to make their terms known immediately upon the opening of the negotiations being accepted. On the contrary the adversaries were those who, without offering any counter proposal, declined to acquaint themselves with the contents of the proposal of the four allied powers. If the adversaries demand above all the restoration of invaded rights and liberties, the recognition of the principle of nationalities and of the free existence of small states, it will suffice to call to mind the tragic fate of the Irish and Finnish peoples, the obliteration of the freedom and independence of the Boer Republics, the subjection of North Africa by Great Britain, France, and Italy, and, lastly, the violence brought to bear on Greece for which there is no precedent in history.

The Imperial and Royal Government lays down as a fact that in concert with the allied powers it had declared its readiness to bring the war to an end by means of an oral exchange of views with the enemy governments and that on the decision of the adversaries alone depended the opening of the way to peace. Before God and mankind it disclaims responsibility for a continuance of the war. Calm, strong, and confident of their right, Austria-Hungary and its allies will carry on the struggle until they gain a peace that will secure the existence, honor, and free development of their peoples and at the same time enable the states of Europe to cooperate in the grand work of civilization on the basis of wholly equal rights.

The Imperial and Royal Government has the honor to apply for your excellency's obliging good offices with a request that you will kindly forward the foregoing to the Government of the United States of America.

Be pleased to accept [etc.]

BERLIN, January 12, 1917, 10 a. m.

[Received January 15, 9.15 a. m.]

4868. Note received to-day from Foreign Office in German and French text. I therefore send French text which follows:

[Translation]

Through the medium of the Government of the United States, the Royal Government of Spain, and the Swiss Federal Government, the Imperial and Royal Government has received its adversaries' reply to the note of December 12 in which Germany, in accord with its allies, proposed an early opening of peace negotiations. The adversaries reject the proposal under pretense that it is insincere and meaningless. The form in which they put their refusal excludes any idea of a reply.

The Imperial Government nevertheless wishes to make known to the governments of the neutral powers its view of the situation. The Central powers have no occasion to revert to the discussions as to the origin of the World War. It is for history to pass judgment on the monstrous responsibility for the conflict. Its verdict will not any more leave out of consideration the encircling policy of Great Britain, the revengeful policy of France, the yearning of Russia for Constantinople, than the provocation from Serbia, the Sarajevo assassination, and the general Russian mobilization which meant war with Germany.

Germany and its allies having been compelled to take up arms in the defense of their freedom and existence consider they have accomplished that end of their efforts. On the other hand, the enemy powers have drifted farther and farther away from the achievement of their plans, which, according to the statements of their responsible statesmen, aimed, among other things, at the conquest of Alsace-Lorraine and of several Prussian provinces, the humiliation and curtailment of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, the partition of Turkey, and the mutilation of Bulgaria. Such demands give at least a strange sound to the pretension of sanction, repatriation, and guaranty in the mouths of our adversaries.

Our adversaries call the peace proposal of the four allied powers a war maneuver. Germany and its allies must enter the most emphatic protest against so false an interpretation of the motives for their step which they have openly disclosed. They were convinced that a just peace, acceptable to all the belligerents, is feasible; that it can be attained through an immediate oral exchange of views and that therefore further bloodshed is indefensible. The fact that they have unreservedly shown their readiness to make known their peace proposals as soon as the negotiations were opened disposes of any doubt as to their sincerity. The adversaries who were given the opportunity to examine the value of that offer neither attempted to do so nor offered counter proposals. Instead, they declare any peace to be impossible as long as they are not assured reparation for invaded rights and freedoms, acknowledgment of the principle of nationalities and the free existence of small states. The sincerity which our adversaries will not acknowledge in the four allied powers' proposal can hardly be conceded to those demands by the world when it recalls the fate of the Irish people, the obliteration of the freedom and independence of the South African Republics, the conquest of North Africa by Great Britain, France, and Italy, the oppression of foreign nationalities by Russia, and, lastly, the act unprecedented in history which is constituted by the violence brought to bear on Greece.

Likewise it ill becomes those powers to complain of alleged violations of international law by the four allied powers, as they themselves have since the beginning of the war trampled the law under foot and torn the treaties upon which the law rests. In the early weeks following the opening of hostilities Great Britain disowned its adhesion to the Declaration of London and yet the text had been acknowledged by its own delegates to be conformable to the law of nations, and, as such, valid. In the course of the war it also violated in the most grave manner the Declaration of Paris, so that its arbitrary measures have created in the conduct of maritime warfare the state of illegality that now exists. The attempt to overcome Germany by starvation and the pressure exercised on the neutrals in the interest of Great Britain are at equally flagrant variance with the rules of international law and the laws of humanity. Another infringement of the law of nations that can not be reconciled with the principles of civilization is the use of colored troops, as also is the transfer of war [sic] in violation of existing treaties the effect of which can not but destroy the prestige of the white race in those countries. The inhuman treatment of prisoners, especially in Africa and Russia, the deportation of the civilian population of East Prussia, of Alsace-Lorraine, Galicia, and Bukovina are as many further proofs of the manner in which our adversaries understand the respect of law and civilization.

Our adversaries close their note of December 30 with a statement laying stress on the peculiar situation in Belgium. The Imperial Government is unable to admit that the Belgian Government always observed the duties imposed upon it by its neutrality toward Great Britain. Belgium applied in a military sense to that power and to France thus violating the spirit of the treaties intended to guarantee its independence and neutrality. Twice did the Imperial Government declare to the Belgian Government that it was not coming to Belgium as an enemy and begged it to spare its country the horrors of war. It offered in that case to guarantee in their entirety the territory and independence of the kingdom of Belgium and to make good all damages that the passing of German troops might cause. It is known that in 1887 the British Royal Government had resolved not to oppose a claim to the right of way in Belgium under those conditions. The Belgian Government refused the reiterated offer of the Imperial Government. The responsibility for the fate that befell Belgium rests upon its Government and the powers which drew it into that attitude. The Imperial Government repeatedly repelled as groundless the charges brought against the conduct of the war in Belgium and against the measures there taken in the interest of military safety. It again enters an energetic protest against those calumnies.

Germany and its allies have made a genuine attempt with a view to bringing the war to an end and opening the way for an understanding among the belligerents. The Imperial Government lays down as a fact that the question as to whether or not that way would be entered, leading to peace, solely depended on the decision of its adversary. The enemy governments declined to do so; upon them rests the whole responsibility for further bloodshed. The four allied powers in their calm conviction that they are in the right will carry on the struggle until they win a peace that will guarantee to their peoples honor, existence, and free development, and at the same time insure for all the states in the European continent the beneficent possibility of cooperating in mutual esteem and on a perfectly equal footing toward the solution of the great problems of civilization.

WASHINGTON, January 15, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY: His Imperial Majesty's Government has instructed me to communicate to your excellency that it experienced the utmost pleasure upon receipt of the President's note of December 18, 1916, regarding peace terms, transmitted through the United States plenipotentiary at Teheran, and to express to you the hope that a step so benevolent and humane will meet with the success it deserves.

I am further instructed to say that, notwithstanding we declared ourselves neutral, a large part of our country has been disturbed and devastated by the fighting of the belligerents within our boundaries. In view of this fact, you can not doubt that we heartily welcome and endorse the move the President has made.

Furthermore, inasmuch as His Majesty's Government understands from the President's note that he desires the preservation of the integrity and freedom of the powers and the weaker nations, and in view of the firm friendship which has always existed between our two countries, it ardently hopes that the Government of the United States will assist our oppressed nation to maintain its integrity and rights not only for the present but whenever a peace conference shall take place.

CONSTANTINOPLE, January 12, 1917, 9 a. m.[Received January 16, 10 a. m.]

2400. My 2395, January 9, 2 p. m.¹ At interview with German Ambassador he stated he also was informed of intended Greek deportation, German Consul at Samsun having reported that Russians had furnished deserters from Turkish Army with Japanese rifles and ammunition found on captives, and that deserters had been sheltered by Greek inhabitants, their relatives or friends. While German Ambassador thought a deportation might be justified as war measure, he had used his influence to prevent same fearing that deportation carried out by Turks meant great hardship and also loss of life. He says German influence with Turkish officials is exceedingly small, if any, that Turks resent German interference, German advice is not followed but contrary action usually taken. Although there are German officials in many Turkish departments, these officials complain to him that their advice is rarely followed and promises to follow such advice are usually broken. He expressed willingness to cooperate to prevent deportation of women and children. I told German Ambassador that should Greek massacres follow Armenian massacres they would create great indignation among neutral nations and Germany would be held responsible for destruction of the Christians in Turkey. Ambassador stated Germany realizes this and desires to prevent action producing such results. Respectfully suggest, if Department desires, that if pressure be brought upon German Government either in Berlin or Washington it may be effective.

German Ambassador who has just returned from Berlin further states that Germany is perfectly willing to confidentially state her peace terms; that Germany willing to give up Belgium retaining certain rights of travel on the Meuse; that Holland, Denmark, and Belgium should remain as neutral or buffer states for England; that French coast land be retained by France in its entirety so that she remain an important and absolutely independent power; that Russian territory be restored; that Serbia and Roumania be treated properly; and that Belgium be indemnified although her conduct as neutral was not correct.

He stated that Germany learned from secret British sources that England's hesitation in stating her peace terms was that her maximum terms as fixed with her allies, such as the cession of Constantinople to Russia, parts of Syria to France or Italy, heavy indemnities to Belgium, and cession Alsace-Lorraine to France, were not feasible, while her minimum terms which could satisfy her alone would lead to serious disagreement with her allies. He also stated that German information from England was that if America brought pressure to bear upon England, England would confidentially state her peace terms out of respect and fear of the President and out of respect for growing peace party in England.

As the German Ambassador voluntarily visited me immediately after his return from Berlin probably these statements were made to me with some authority and for possible communication and suggestion. I send them for what they may be worth.

WASHINGTON, January 15, 1917.

[Received January 16.]

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Pursuant to the orders I have just received from my Government, I have the honor to communicate herein below to your excellency the answer of the Royal Government to the communication of the peace proposal which the Government of the United States was pleased to forward to it through its representative at Athens.

The note bore date of January 8.

The Royal Government acquainted itself with the most lively interest with the step which the President of the United States of America has just taken with a view to the termination of a long and cruel war that is raging among men. Very sensible to the communication that has been made to it, the Royal Government highly appreciates the generous impulse as well as the thoroughly humane and profoundly politic spirit which prompted the suggestion.

Coming from the learned statesman who presides over the destinies of the great American Republic and looking to a peace honorable for all as well as to the strengthening of beneficent stability in international relations, it constitutes a memorable page in history. The remarks therein made about the sufferings of neutral nations by reason of the colossal conflict and also about the guaranties which would be equally desired by the two belligerent parties for the rights and privileges of every state have particularly struck a sympathetic echo in the Greek soul. Indeed there is no country that has had so much to suffer from that war as Greece, although it kept aloof from it.

Owing to exceptionally tragic circumstances it has been less able than the other neutral countries to escape a direct and pernicious action of the hostilities between the belligerents. Its geographical situation contributed to weakening its power to resist violations of its neutrality and sovereignty to which it had to submit for the sake of self-conservation.

At this very moment, deprived of its fleet and nearly disarmed, our country, pestered by a sham revolt which is taking advantage of foreign occupation, is hemmed in through a strict blockade which cuts off all communications with neutrals and exposes to starvation the whole population, including absolutely harmless persons, old men, women, who under the elemental principles of the law of nations should be spared, even though Greece were a belligerent. Yet Greece is still endeavoring to remain neutral by every possible means. Nothing more need be said to show how any initiative conducive to peace, apart from humane considerations of a general character, is apt to serve Greece's vital interests.

The Royal Government would certainly have hastened to the front rank of those who acceded to the noble motion of the President of the United States of America in order to endeavor as far as it lay in its power to have it crowned with success, if it had not been excluded from communication with one of the belligerents while with the others, it had to wait for a settlement of the grievous difficulties which now bear upon the situation of Greece.

But the Royal Government with the full intensity of its soul watches the invaluable effort of the President of the United States of America, desiring its earliest possible success, and forms the most sincere wishes that it will succeed. Having from the very first days of the European war had in mind the establishment of a contact among the neutrals for the safeguard of their common interests, it is glad of the opportunity now offered to have an early exchange of views should it be deemed opportune and declares itself ready to join, when the time comes, in any action aiming at the consolidation of a stable state of peace by which the rights of all the states will be secured and their sovereignty and independence guaranteed.

Be pleased [etc.]

The British Ambassador (Spring Rice) to the Secretary of State

[A copy of the following note from the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to the British Ambassador at Washington was left by the Ambassador at the Department of State on January 16.]

LONDON, January 13, 1917.

SIR: In sending you a translation of the Allied note I desire to make the following observations which you should bring to the notice of the United States Government.

I gather from the general tenour of the President's note that while he is animated by an intense desire that peace should come soon and that when it comes it should be lasting, he does not for the moment at least concern himself with the terms on which it should be arranged. His Majesty's Government entirely share the President's ideas; but they feel strongly that the durability of peace must largely depend on its character and that no stable system of international relations can be built on foundations which are essentially and hopelessly defective.

This becomes clearly apparent if we consider the main conditions which rendered possible the calamities from which the world is now suffering. These were the existence of great powers consumed with the lust of domination in the midst of a community of nations ill prepared for defence, plentifully supplied indeed with international laws, but with no machinery for enforcing them and weakened by the fact that neither the boundaries of the various states nor their internal constitution harmonised with the aspirations of their constituent races or secured to them just and equal treatment.

That this last evil would be greatly mitigated if the Allies secured the changes in the map of Europe outlined in their joint note is manifest, and I need not labour the point.

It has been argued indeed that the expulsion of the Turks from Europe forms no proper or logical part of this general scheme. The maintenance of the Turkish Empire was, during many generations, regarded by statesmen of world-wide authority as essential to the maintenance of European peace. Why, is it asked, should the cause of peace be now associated with a complete reversal of this traditional policy?

The answer is that circumstances have completely changed. It is unnecessary to consider now whether the creation of a reformed Turkey mediating between hostile races in the Near East was a scheme which, had the Sultan been sincere and the powers united, could ever have been realised. It certainly can not be realised now. The Turkey of "Union and Progress" is at least as barbarous and is far more aggressive than the Turkey of Sultan Abdul Hamid. In the hands of Germany it has ceased even in appearance to be bulwark of peace and is openly used as an instrument of conquest. Under German officers Turkish soldiers are now fighting in lands from which they had long been expelled and a Turkish Government controlled, subsidized and supported by Germany has been guilty of massacres in Armenia and Syria more horrible than any recorded in the history even of those unhappy countries. Evidently the interests of peace and the claims of nationality alike require that Turkish rule over alien races shall if possible be brought to an end; and we may hope that the expulsion of Turkey from Europe will contribute as much to the cause of peace as the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France, of Italia Irredenta to Italy, or any of the other territorial changes indicated in the Allied note.

Evidently however such territorial rearrangements, though they may diminish the occasions of war, provide no sufficient security against its recurrence. If Germany, or rather those in Germany who mould its opinions and control its destinies, again set out to domineer the world, they may find that by the new order of things the adventure is made more difficult, but hardly that it is made impossible. They may still have ready to their hand a political system organised through and through on a military basis; they may still accumulate vast stores of military equipment; they may still persist in their methods of attack, so that their more pacific neighbours will be struck down before they can prepare themselves for defence. If so, Europe when the war is over will be far poorer in men, in money and in mutual good will than it was when the war began, but it will not be safer: and the hopes for the future of the world entertained by the President will be as far as ever from fulfilment.

There are those who think that for this disease international treaties and international laws may provide a sufficient cure. But such persons have ill learned the lessons so clearly taught by recent history. While other nations, notably the United States of America and Britain, were striving by treaties of arbitration to make sure that no chance quarrel should mar the peace they desired to make perpetual, Germany stood aloof. Her historians and philosophers preached the splendours of war: power was proclaimed as the true end of the state; and the General Staff forged with untiring industry the weapons by which at the appointed moment power might be achieved. These facts proved clearly enough that treaty arrangements for maintaining peace were not likely to find much favour at Berlin: they did not prove that such treaties once made would be utterly ineffectual. This became evident only when war had broken out; though the demonstration, when it came, was overwhelming. So long as Germany remains the Germany which without a shadow of justification overran and barbarously ill-treated a country it was pledged to defend, no state can regard its rights as secure if they have no better protection than a solemn treaty.

The case is made worse by the reflection that these methods of calculated brutality were designed by the Central powers not merely to crush to the dust those with whom they were at war, but to intimidate those with whom they were still at peace. Belgium was not only a victim: it was an example. Neutrals were intended to note the outrages which accompanied its conquest, the reign of terror which followed on its occupation, the deportation of a portion of its population, the cruel oppression of the remainder. And lest the nations happily protected either by British fleets or by their own from German armies should suppose themselves safe from German methods, the submarine has (within its limits) assiduously imitated the barbarous practices of the sister service. The war staffs of the Central powers are well content to horrify the world if at the same time they can terrorize it.

If then the Central powers succeed, it will be to methods like these that they will owe their success. How can any reform of international relations be based on a peace thus obtained? Such a peace would represent the triumph of all the forces which make war certain and make it brutal. It would advertise the futility of all the methods on which civilization relies to eliminate the occasions of international dispute and to mitigate their ferocity. Germany and Austria made the present war inevitable by attacking the rights of one small state, and they gained their initial triumphs by violating the treaty guaranties of the territories of another. Are small states going to find in them their future protectors or in treaties made by them a bulwark against aggression? Terrorism by land and sea will have proved itself the instrument of victory. Are the victors likely to abandon it on the appeal of neutrals? If existing treaties are no more than scraps of paper, can fresh treaties help us? If the violation of the most fundamental canons of international law be crowned with success, will it not be in vain that the assembled nations labour to improve their code? None will profit by their rules but powers who break them. It is those who keep them that will suffer.

Though therefore the people of this country share to the full the desire of the President for peace, they do not believe peace can be durable if it be not based on the success of the Allied cause. For a durable peace can hardly be expected unless three conditions are fulfilled. The first is that existing causes of international unrest should be as far as possible removed or weakened. The second is that the aggressive aims and the unscrupulous methods of the Central powers should fall into disrepute among their own peoples. The third is that behind international law and behind all treaty arrangements for preventing or limiting hostilities some form of international sanction should be devised which would give pause to the hardest aggressor. These conditions may be difficult of fulfilment. But we believe them to be in general harmony with the President's ideas and we are confident that none of them can be satisfied, even imperfectly, unless peace be secured on the general lines indicated

(so far as Europe is concerned) in the joint note. Therefore it is that this country has made, is making and is prepared to make sacrifices of blood and treasure unparalleled in its history. It bears these heavy burdens not merely that it may thus fulfil its treaty obligations nor yet that it may secure a barren triumph of one group of nations over another. It bears them because it firmly believes that on the success of the Allies depend the prospects of peaceful civilization and of those international reforms which the best thinkers of the New World, as of the Old, dare to hope may follow on the cessation of our present calamities.

NOTE VERBALE

The Secretary of State of the United States has been gratified to receive the unsigned communication dated January 15, 1917, which the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Persia at Washington placed in his hands on that day,³ whereby he is informed of the endorsement given by the Persian Government to the President's note of December 18, 1916, to the warring nations.

The Secretary of State has made due note of this information as well as of the wish of His Imperial Majesty's Government stated in the communication that the Government of the United States will give its assistance in the maintenance of the integrity and rights of Persia whenever a peace conference shall take place.

He stated fixed prices necessary for continuance of war; said England recognized it as a condition for furnishing coal, wheat and steel; also that unless prices were kept down people would rise and war could not continue.

I mentioned rumor that he had given form to Allies' answer. This he neither denied nor affirmed but rather accepted it. He said that he supposed President would now request Germany to define her aims, evidently hopes so.

THE HAGUE, January 8, 1917.

[Received January 22.]

SIR: Referring to my despatch No. 603, of December 30,¹ in regard to the President's note of December 18, suggesting to both parties of the belligerents that they might make a clear statement of the terms on which each side would be willing to consider the question of peace, I have the honour to enclose an extract from the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant in relation to this subject. I give an English translation of this extract herewith:

Mr. Van Best, a member of the House of Representatives, sent in on December 27 the following questions in regard to measures for the promotion of peace:

(1) Is it known to the Foreign Minister that the President of the United States of America has delivered a note for the promotion of peace to the belligerent nations?

(2) Is it known to the Minister that the Swiss Government has been informed of the sending of this note?

(3) Is it known to the Minister that the Swiss Government has sent a note expressing sympathy therewith to the belligerents?

(4) Can the Minister inform us whether the Netherland Government has taken steps in connection with the above-named circumstances for the promotion of peace, and in case it has not done so, can the Minister explain why it was not done?

The answer of Mr. Loudon, Minister of Foreign Affairs, sent in on the 5th of January, reads as follows:

(1) to the first question: Yes.

(2) to the second question: No.

(3) to the third question: Yes.

(4) to the fourth question: The Netherland Government has taken no steps for the promotion of peace in connection with the above-mentioned circum-

The President's Address to the Senate, January 22, on the Bases of a Durable Peace—Confidential Communication by the German Government of its Terms of Peace

File No. 763.72119/405a

*Address of the President of the United States to the Senate, January 22, 1917*¹

GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE: On the 18th of December last I addressed an identic note to the governments of the nations now at war requesting them to state, more definitely than they had yet been stated by either group of belligerents, the terms upon which they would deem it possible to make peace. I spoke on behalf of humanity and of the rights of all neutral nations like our own, many of whose most vital interests the war puts in constant jeopardy. The Central powers united in a reply which stated merely that they were ready to meet their antagonists in conference to discuss terms of peace. The Entente powers have replied much more definitely and have stated, in general terms, indeed, but with sufficient definiteness to imply details, the arrangements, guarantees, and acts of reparation which they deem to be the indispensable conditions of a satisfactory settlement. We are that much nearer a definite discussion of the peace which shall end the present war. We are that much nearer the discussion of the international concert which must thereafter hold the world at peace. In every discussion of the peace that must end this war it is taken for granted that that peace must be followed by some definite concert of power which will make it virtually impossible that any such catastrophe should ever overwhelm us again. Every lover of mankind, every sane and thoughtful man, must take that for granted.

I have sought this opportunity to address you because I thought that I owed it to you, as the council associated with me in the final determination of our international obligations, to disclose to you without reserve the thought and purpose that have been taking form in my mind in regard to the duty of our Government in the days to come when it will be necessary to lay afresh and upon a new plan the foundations of peace among the nations.

It is inconceivable that the people of the United States should play no part in that great enterprise. To take part in such a service will be the opportunity for which they have sought to prepare themselves by the very principles and purposes of their polity and the approved practices of their Government ever since the days when they set up a new nation in the high and honourable hope that it might in all that it was and did show mankind the way to liberty. They can not in honour withhold the service to which they are now about to be challenged. They do not wish to withhold it. But they owe it to themselves and to the other nations of the world to state the conditions under which they will feel free to render it.

That service is nothing less than this, to add their authority and their power to the authority and force of other nations to guarantee peace and justice throughout the world. Such a settlement cannot now be long postponed. It is right that before it comes this Government should frankly formulate the conditions upon which it would feel justified in asking our people to approve its formal and solemn adherence to a league for peace. I am here to attempt to state those conditions.

The present war must first be ended; but we owe it to candour and to a just regard for the opinion of mankind to say that, so far as our participation in guarantees of future peace is concerned, it makes a great deal of difference in what way and upon what terms it is ended. The treaties and agreements which bring it to an end must embody terms which will create a peace that is worth guaranteeing and preserving, a peace that will win the approval of mankind, not merely a peace that will serve the several interests and immediate aims of the nations engaged. We shall have no voice in determining what those terms shall be, but we shall, I feel sure, have a voice in determining whether they shall be made lasting or not by the guarantees of a universal covenant; and our judgment upon what is fundamental and essential as a condition precedent to permanency should be spoken now, not afterwards when it may be too late.

No covenant of cooperative peace that does not include the peoples of the New World can suffice to keep the future safe against war; and yet there is only one sort of peace that the peoples of America could join in guaranteeing. The elements of that peace must be elements that engage the confidence and satisfy the principles of the American governments, elements consistent with their political faith and with the practical convictions which the peoples of America have once for all embraced and undertaken to defend.

I do not mean to say that any American government would throw any obstacle in the way of any terms of peace the governments now at war might agree upon, or seek to upset them when made, whatever they might be. I only take it for granted that mere terms of peace between the belligerents will not satisfy even the belligerents themselves. Mere agreements may not make peace secure. It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or any alliance hitherto formed or projected that no nation, no probable combination of nations, could face or withstand it. If the peace presently to be made is to endure, it must be a peace made secure by the organized major force of mankind.

The terms of the immediate peace agreed upon will determine whether it is a peace for which such a guarantee can be secured. The question upon which the whole future peace and policy of the world depends is this: Is the present war a struggle for a just and secure peace, or only for a new balance of power? If it be only a struggle for a new balance of power, who will guarantee, who can guarantee, the stable equilibrium of the new arrangement? Only a tranquil Europe can be a stable Europe. There must be, not a balance of power, but a community of power; not organized rivalries, but an organized common peace.

Fortunately we have received very explicit assurances on this point. The statesmen of both of the groups of nations now arrayed against one another have said, in terms that could not be misinterpreted, that it was no part of the purpose they had in mind to crush their antagonists. But the implications of these assurances may not be equally clear to all—may not be the same on both sides of the water. I think it will be serviceable if I attempt to set forth what we understand them to be.

They imply, first of all, that it must be a peace without victory. It is not pleasant to say this. I beg that I may be permitted to put my own interpretation upon it and that it may be understood that no other interpretation was in my thought. I am seeking only to face realities and to face them without soft concealments. Victory would mean peace forced upon the loser, a victor's terms imposed upon the vanquished. It would be accepted in humiliation, under duress, at an intolerable sacrifice, and would leave a sting, a resentment, a bitter memory upon which terms of peace would rest, not permanently, but only as upon quicksand. Only a peace between equals can last, only a peace the very principle of which is equality and a common participation in a common benefit. The right state of mind, the right feeling between nations, is as necessary for a lasting peace as is the just settlement of vexed questions of territory or of racial and national allegiance.

The equality of nations upon which peace must be founded if it is to last must be an equality of rights; the guarantees exchanged must neither recognize nor imply a difference between big nations and small, between those that are powerful and those that are weak. Right must be based upon the common strength, not upon the individual strength, of the nations upon whose concert peace will depend. Equality of territory or of resources there of course cannot be; nor any other sort of equality not gained in the ordinary peaceful and legitimate development of the peoples themselves. But no one asks or expects anything more than an equality of rights. Mankind is looking now for freedom of life, not for equipoises of power.

And there is a deeper thing involved than even equality of right among organized nations. No peace can last, or ought to last, which does not recognize and accept the principle that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that no right anywhere exists to hand peoples about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were property. I take it for granted, for instance, if I may venture upon a single example, that statesmen everywhere are agreed that there should be a united, independent, and autonomous Poland, and that henceforth inviolable security of life, of worship, and of industrial and social development should be guaranteed to all peoples who have lived hitherto under the power of governments devoted to a faith and purpose hostile to their own.

I speak of this, not because of any desire to exalt an abstract political principle which has always been held very dear by those who have sought to build up liberty in America, but for the same reason that I have spoken of the other conditions of peace which seem to me clearly indispensable—because I wish frankly to uncover realities. Any peace which does not recognize and accept this principle will inevitably be upset. It will not rest upon the affections or the convictions of mankind. The ferment of spirit of whole populations will fight subtly and constantly against it, and all the world will sympathize. The world can be at peace only if its life is stable, and there can be no stability where the will is in rebellion, where there is not tranquility of spirit and a sense of justice, of freedom, and of right.

So far as practicable, moreover, every great people now struggling towards a full development of its resources and of its powers should be assured a direct outlet to the great highways of the sea. Where this can not be done by the cession of territory, it can no doubt be done by the neutralization of direct rights of way under the general guarantee which will assure the peace itself. With a right comity of arrangement no nation need be shut away from free access to the open paths of the world's commerce.

And the paths of the sea must alike in law and in fact be free. The freedom of the seas is the sine qua non of peace, equality, and cooperation. No doubt a somewhat radical reconsideration of many of the rules of international practice hitherto thought to be established may be necessary in order to make the seas indeed free and common in practically all circumstances for the use of mankind, but the motive for such changes is convincing and compelling. There can be no trust or intimacy between the peoples of the world without them. The free, constant, unthreatened intercourse of nations is an essential part of the process of peace and of development. It need not be difficult either to define or to secure the freedom of the seas if the governments of the world sincerely desire to come to an agreement concerning it.

It is a problem closely connected with the limitation of naval armaments and the cooperation of the navies of the world in keeping the seas at once free and safe, and the question of limiting naval armaments opens the wider and perhaps more difficult question of the limitation of armies and of all programmes of military preparation. Difficult and delicate as these questions are, they must be faced with the utmost candour and decided in a spirit of real accommodation if peace is to come with healing in its wings, and come to stay. Peace cannot be had without concession and sacrifice. There can be no sense of safety and equality among the nations if great preponderating armaments are henceforth to continue here and there to be built up and maintained. The statesmen of the world must plan for peace and nations must adjust and accommodate their policy to it as they have planned for war and made ready for pitiless contest and rivalry. The question of armaments, whether on land or sea, is the most immediately and intensely practical question connected with the future fortunes of nations and of mankind.

I have spoken upon these great matters without reserve and with the utmost explicitness because it has seemed to me to be necessary if the world's yearning desire for peace was anywhere to find free voice and utterance. Perhaps I am the only person in high authority amongst all the peoples of the world who is at liberty to speak and hold nothing back. I am speaking as an individual, and yet I am speaking also, of course, as the responsible head of a great government, and I feel confident that I have said what the people of the United States would wish me to say. May I not add that I hope and believe that I am in effect speaking for liberals and friends of humanity in every nation and of every programme of liberty? I would fain believe that I am speaking for the silent mass of mankind everywhere who have as yet had no place or opportunity to speak their real hearts out concerning the death and ruin they see to have come already upon the persons and the homes they hold most dear.

And in holding out the expectation that the people and Government of the United States will join the other civilized nations of the world in guaranteeing the permanence of peace upon such terms as I have named I speak with the greater boldness and confidence because it is clear to every man who can think that there is in this promise no breach in either our traditions or our policy as a nation, but a fulfilment, rather, of all that we have professed or striven for.

I am proposing, as it were, that the nations should with one accord adopt the doctrine of President Monroe as the doctrine of the world: that no nation should seek to extend its polity over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own polity, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful.

I am proposing that all nations henceforth avoid entangling alliances which would draw them into competitions of power, catch them in a net of intrigue and selfish rivalry, and disturb their own affairs with influences intruded from without. There is no entangling alliance in a concert of power. When all unite to act in the same sense and with the same purpose, all act in the common interest and are free to live their own lives under a common protection.

I am proposing government by the consent of the governed; that freedom of the seas which in international conference after conference representatives of the United States have urged with the eloquence of those who are the convinced disciples of liberty; and that moderation of armaments which makes of armies and navies a power for order merely, not an instrument of aggression or of selfish violence.

These are American principles, American policies. We could stand for no others. And they are also the principles and policies of forward-looking men and women everywhere, of every modern nation, of every enlightened community. They are the principles of mankind and must prevail.

318. For the President's personal and immediate information:

Called this morning on the Minister of State to pay respects on my return, accompanied by Counselor of Embassy. Minister introduced subject of President's so-called peace note and address to Senate of January 22. He said that tone of Spain's reply to note would have been different if it had been delivered to Spanish Government before delivery to belligerent nations, and especially if Spain had been previously consulted. This reply by no means intended to close door to future cooperation looking towards peace. On the contrary he expressed desire to cooperate with the United States. The Minister said that Spain looks upon herself and United States as leading neutrals, and that Spain occupies distinctly different position from any other European neutral, and that as such feels herself in a position to cooperate with the United States as no other neutral can. He also referred to exceptional position of the King of Spain among European rulers and his great personal influence. Minister stated with some emphasis that address to Senate had made excellent impression in Spain, much better than peace note. As the result of conference to-day and other information secured since my return, I am convinced, and Counselor of Embassy concurs, that the cordial cooperation of Spain looking to peace can be secured if the United States Government sees fit to confer with the Spanish Government through such channels as it may select, and in advance of any further public communication with belligerents or other neutrals. I am specially convinced that the Spanish Government feels that its position and position of its King justify a consideration on the part of the United States distinct from that accorded to any other neutral, and that working on this basis its cordial cooperation can be relied upon.

In reply to interpellation in Hungarian Parliament yesterday regarding President's peace address to Senate, Minister President of Hungary, Count Tisza, said, "We are ready to greet with sympathy all endeavors to bring about peace and are therefore inclined to continue interchange of ideas with Government of the United States in concord with our allies." He draws attention to fact that Central powers declared to enter into negotiations and in due time to propose such conditions as in their opinion would be acceptable to opponents as basis of lasting peace. However, conditions of opponents mean dismemberment of Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and Ottoman Empire. As long as opponents do not radically change their intentions there will be lasting difference between their standpoint and that of the President of the United States. Count Tisza refers to principle of nationality and President's words, "every people must have guaranties of free existence, religious liberty, individual and social development," and states that this demand is nowhere fulfilled so much as in the two halves of this monarchy.

be official: Wilson offers in the first place, in confidence, peace mediation based on his message to the Senate, that is, without interfering in the matter of the territorial conditions of peace. He said that Wilson did not consider as confidential his request, simultaneously addressed to us, for a disclosure of our peace conditions.

House related to me in detail the following line of reasoning of the President: That our enemies had publicly announced their peace conditions, which were impossible of acceptance; that, in direct opposition to this, the President had thereupon announced his program; that from now on we too were under the moral obligation of disclosing our peace conditions, because, otherwise, our intentions with regard to peace would not be looked upon as genuine; that after your excellency had informed Mr. Wilson that our peace conditions were of a moderate nature and that we were willing to enter upon the second peace conference, the President was of the opinion that his message to the Senate was in accordance with our views; that Wilson hoped that we would disclose peace conditions to him which could be made public both here and in Germany, in order that they could become openly known throughout the entire world; that if we would only trust him, he was convinced that he would be able to bring about both peace conferences; that he would be particularly pleased if at the same time your excellency would be willing to state that we were prepared to enter upon the conferences on the basis of his message to the Senate; that the reason for our announcement could be explained by the fact that Wilson had now asked us directly for our peace conditions. The President was of the opinion that the Entente note to him was a bluff and, for this reason, need not be taken into consideration; that he hoped with reason to be able to bring about peace conferences and, indeed, at such an early date that unnecessary bloodshed in the spring offensive could be avoided. To what extent your excellency is willing or is able to meet Wilson can not be judged from this side.

In the meantime, I urgently beg leave to make the following suggestion: If the U-boat war is commenced forthwith, the President will look upon this as a slap in the face, and war with the United States will be unavoidable. The war party on this side will gain the upper hand, and we shall not be able, in my opinion, to tell when the war will end, since the resources of the United States are, in spite of all statements to the contrary, very great. On the other hand, if we meet Wilson's proposition and if, in spite of that fact, these plans are brought to naught by the obstinacy of our opponents, it will be a very difficult thing for the President to undertake a war against us, even if we were then to start the unrestricted U-boat warfare. Thus, at the present, all we need is a brief delay in order to improve our diplomatic position. In any event, my view of the situation is that at this time we can get a better peace by means of conferences than if the United States should join our enemies.

Since cablegrams invariably take more than a few days, I ask to be informed by return wireless if telegraphic despatch 157 is not to be carried out on the 1st of February.

1838. The deputies of the Socialist Party met yesterday and passed a resolution approving the admirable address of President Wilson to the Senate. The resolution briefly states in substance that the conception of peace founded upon the free will of the people and not upon the force of arms must be or become the charta of the civilized world, that the President's note now confers a big and immense prestige to this affirmation of justice, inheritance of the French Revolution and tradition of their international congresses especially at a time when it becomes more than ever necessary that the democrats of all nations should rise up against imperialist ambitions and their sanguinary and ruinous consequences. The Socialist group insistently request the French Government to affirm clearly its agreement with the lofty words of reason of the President. To prepare and hasten the just and early end of the war, to insure the future of pacific civilization, the group request the representatives of all belligerent nations to bring pressure to bear upon their labors in order to make a loyal attempt to carry out the noble experiment offered to humanity by the chief of the great American republic.

This group comprises between 80 and 90 members of the Chamber, and its former leader was the noted orator Jaures who was assassinated a few days before the beginning of the war. A senator and a writer on one of the most widely read French papers tell me this morning that the action, accounts of which have been widely published in the press, of this group of Socialists will have great effect in developing sentiment in favor of the President's message. Many professional men in and out of French Government circles have also told me that the message had their hearty approval. The general attitude of the French press has been to endorse its principles as wholly representative of those of the French Republic. Quite generally, however, the position is taken by these writers that peace should only come after victory to the Allies.

1666. My telegram 1662, January 25, 7 p. m. I have received following letter from Minister President, Count Tisza, dated Budapest, January 25:

May I draw your attention in a quite private and confidential way to my declaration made in the House of Commons yesterday concerning the address of President Wilson. Its two essential points are:

First, that the conditions of peace as sketched in the answer of our enemies involve the mutilation and humiliation of Germany and the dismemberment of Austria-Hungary and of Turkey; they are equivalent to a war of destruction, compel us to fight for existence with the utmost energy and are in flagrant contradiction with the views of President Wilson about the peace to be concluded.

Secondly, that the ideal of the free development of all nations in states having their national character cannot be realized in countries with a mixed population. Especially in the southeast of Europe no other solution would approach this ideal so near as the political system of the dual monarchy.

You would render a great service to the mutual good understanding between our countries and the cause of peace if you could bring these facts nearer to the minds of the responsible statesmen and the public of the United States.

The German Ambassador (Bernstorff) to Colonel House

MY DEAR COLONEL HOUSE: I have received a telegram from Berlin, according to which I am to express to the President the thanks of the Imperial Government for his communication made through you. The Imperial Government has complete confidence in the President and hopes that he will reciprocate such confidence. As proof I am to inform you in confidence that the Imperial Government will be very glad to accept the services kindly offered by the President for the purpose of bringing about a peace conference between the belligerents. My Government, however, is not prepared to publish any peace terms at present, because our enemies have published such terms which aim at the dishonor and destruction of Germany and her allies. My Government considers that as long as our enemies openly proclaim such terms, it would show weakness, which does not exist, on our part if we publish our terms and we would in so doing only prolong the war. However, to show President Wilson our confidence, my Government through me desires to inform him personally of the terms under which we would have been prepared to enter into negotiations, if our enemies had accepted our offer of December 12.¹

Restitution of the part of Upper Alsace occupied by the French;
Gaining of a frontier which would protect Germany and Poland economically and strategically against Russia;

Restitution of colonies in form of an agreement which would give Germany colonies adequate to her population and economic interest;

Restitution of those parts of France occupied by Germany under reservation of strategical and economic changes of the frontier and financial compensations;

Restoration of Belgium under special guaranty for the safety of Germany which would have to be decided on by negotiations with Belgium;

Economic and financial mutual compensation on the basis of the exchange of territories conquered and to be restituted at the conclusion of peace;

Compensation for the German business concerns and private persons who suffered by the war; abandonment of all economic agreements and measures which would form an obstacle to normal commerce and intercourse after the conclusion of peace, and instead of such agreements reasonable treaties of commerce;

The freedom of the seas.

The peace terms of our allies run on the same lines.

My Government further agrees, after the war has terminated, to enter into the proposed second international conference on the basis of the President's message to the Senate.

My Government would have been glad to postpone the submarine blockade, if they had been able to do so. This, however, was quite impossible on account of the preparations which could not be canceled. My Government believes that the submarine blockade will terminate the war very quickly. In the meantime my Government will do everything possible to safeguard American interests and begs the President to continue his efforts to bring about peace, and my Government will terminate the submarine blockade as soon as it is evident that the efforts of the President will lead to a peace acceptable to Germany.

The motives of my Government for beginning the submarine blockade are the following: After bluntly refusing Germany's peace offer the Entente powers stated in their note addressed to the American Government¹ that they are determined to continue the war in order to deprive Germany of German provinces in the West and the East, to destroy Austria-Hungary, and to annihilate Turkey. In waging war with such aims, the Entente Allies are violating all rules of international law, as they prevent the legitimate trade of neutrals with the Central powers, and of the neutrals among themselves. Germany has, so far, not made unrestricted use of the weapon which she possesses in her submarines. Since the Entente powers, however, have made it impossible to come to an understanding based upon equality of rights of all nations as proposed by the Central powers, and have instead declared only such a peace to be possible which shall be dictated by the Entente Allies and shall result in the destruction and the humiliation of the Central powers, Germany is unable further to forego the full use of her submarines.

The Imperial Government, therefore, does not doubt that the Government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the Entente Allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the Central powers and that the Government of the United States will further realize that the now openly disclosed intentions of the Entente Allies give back to Germany the freedom of action which she reserved in her note addressed to the Government of the United States on May 4, 1916.²

I am always at your disposal if I can be of any service.

Yours very sincerely,

J. BERNSTORFF

P. S. I could not get the translation of the official answer to the President's message ready in time to send it to you. I was in such a hurry to give you the above most important news; namely, that the blockade will be terminated, if a conference can be brought about on reasonable terms.

[Telegram]

VIENNA, February 5, 1917, midnight.

[Received February 7, 10 a. m.]

1683. Following addressed to Secretary of State at the request of Minister for Foreign Affairs:

The Imperial and Royal Ambassador, Count Tarnowski, has conveyed to me the kind words which you were good enough to express to him concerning Austria-Hungary and I hasten to transmit to you on that account my very best thanks.¹

I need not say I, too, would be very pleased if the diplomatic relations between us and the United States could be maintained intact. But in order to obtain that result I must above all once again ask the Government of the United States to take into consideration the position in which we are placed.

We have declared—openly and honestly—that we only wage a war of defense, that is, that we are ready to negotiate honorable conditions of peace, a peace without victory. These proposals we are still determined to maintain. The basis, according to which there should be neither victor nor loser, was suggested by Mr. Wilson himself and it is now up to the Entente to accommodate themselves to that basis as we did. As long as the Entente will not give up the program published in their last note, a program which aims at the dismemberment of Austria-Hungary, it is impossible for us to talk about peace, and we are forced to defend ourselves with every means at our disposal.

A technical modification of the submarine war is impossible. First of all an exchange of views with our allies would be necessary to that purpose. Moreover—and this is the chief reason—the numerous submarines which have left their ports can not be reached by any orders.

The point of the question is, it seems to me, that Mr. Wilson who proposed a peace without victory should now feel morally obliged to use his influence with the powers of the Entente to make them accept that basis as we accepted it. The President has all the qualities to achieve this—on account of his high position, the personal esteem he enjoys all through Europe and on account of the possibility for the United States, by cutting off the requisites of war, to induce the powers of the Entente to conform themselves to Mr. Wilson's point of view.

I trust that the President of the United States will continue the work of peace he began in a spirit of impartiality and I sincerely hope that he will induce the powers of the Entente to accept, like us, the American point of view, that there should be neither victor nor loser and that the peace concluded should be an honorable one for both sides—a lasting one for the whole world.

Should the President follow this line of conduct not only the terror of the submarine war, but war in general would come to a sudden end and Mr. Wilson's name will shine with everlasting letters in the history of mankind.

I beg to request you kindly to bring the above as well as the answer you might send me to the notice of Ambassador Count Tarnowski.

The President's Proposal to the Allied Powers of Assurances to Austria-Hungary against Radical Dismemberment, February 8—Proposals of the de facto Mexican Government for Termination of the War, February 12—Intercession of the United States in Behalf of Greece

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Great Britain (Page)

[Telegram]

WASHINGTON, February 8, 1917, midnight.

4421. The President directs that you lay the following before the leading members of the British Government in strictest confidence and begs that you will press the points it contains with all the earnestness and directness you would use were they your own personal views. He speaks of the leading members of the Government rather than of the Foreign Office because he does not intend this as in any sense an official but only as a personal message and wishes you to ascertain informally what he might expect should he make the proposals here foreshadowed officially to the Foreign Office.

The President knows that peace is intensely desired by the Teutonic powers, and much more by Austria than by any of her allies because the situation is becoming for many reasons much graver for her than for the others. He is trying to avoid breaking with Austria in order to keep the channels of official intercourse with her open so that he may use her for peace. The chief if not the only obstacle is the threat apparently contained in the peace terms recently stated by the Entente Allies that in case they succeeded they would insist upon a virtual dismemberment of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Austria needs only to be reassured on that point, and that chiefly with regard to the older units of the Empire. It is the President's view that the large measure of autonomy already secured to those older units is a sufficient guaranty of peace and stability in that part of Europe so far as national and racial influences are concerned and that what Austria regards as the necessities of her development, opportunity, and security to the south of her can be adequately and satisfactorily secured to her by rights of way to the sea given by the common guaranty of the concert which must in any case be arranged if the future peace of the world is to be assured. He does not doubt that Austria can be satisfied without depriving the several Balkan states of their political autonomy and territorial integrity.

The effort of this Government will be constantly for peace even should it become itself involved, although those efforts would not in the least weaken or slacken its vigorous action in such a case. The President still believes and has reason to believe that, were it possible for him to give the necessary assurances to the Government of Austria, which fears radical dismemberment and which thinks that it is now fighting for its very existence, he could in a very short time force the acceptance of peace upon terms which would follow the general lines of his recent address to the Senate regarding the sort of peace the United States would be willing to join in guaranteeing. He is urgently desirous that the Entente Governments should make it possible for him to present such terms and press them for acceptance. The present enthusiastic support which the people of the United States are giving his foreign policy is being given, it is very evident, because they expect him to use the force and influence of the United States, if he must use force, not to prolong the war, but to insist upon those rights of his own and other peoples which he regards and they regard as the bases and the only bases of peace.

[Telegram]

LONDON, February 11, 1917, noon.

[Received February 12, 12.10 a. m.]

5665. Your 4421, February 8, midnight. I immediately sought the Prime Minister with whom I had an interview yesterday afternoon. I reminded him of the purely personal and private nature of our conferences and told him that I now had a most important subject to put before him at the President's command in this personal and private way.

I first told him the general substance of your telegram. He welcomed it and before I could mention details he answered every question I had prepared to ask him. The following is the substance of and in part the phraseology of his talk.

He knew that Austria was very eager for peace. She really never wanted war and surely there is no animosity between the British and the Austrians. The new Emperor was especially weary of a war that he had not made but had inherited. Besides Austria was obliged to stop in any event. If the Teutonic powers won she would be a vassal of Germany which would be worse for her than an Entente victory. Austria is now generalshipped and managed by Germany. Her very armies are commanded by Germans. She suffers most from economic pressure. "I know she wants to quit."

Lord Grey said to me months ago when I first asked for the safe-conduct of the new Austrian Ambassador: "We no longer consider that Austria exists except as a convenient German fiction, for Germany dictates her policies, changes her Cabinet and commands her armies."

Mr. George continued: "Of course the Austrian Emperor wishes as far as possible to save his Empire. We have no objection to his retaining Hungary and Bohemia. We have no policy of sheer dismemberment but we must stand by the nationals of our allies, such as the Roumanians, the Slavs, the Serbians, and the Italians. Their just demands must be met by the principle of nationality."

But neither the British Government nor its allies could under straitened [present?] circumstances lose Italy as an ally. The blockade of Germany might be broken on the Austrian side. German troops and German officers who now hold the Austrian armies together could be released to strengthen the German line in more important places. Present military, submarine, and economic conditions [make it undesirable that we should?] even receive a formal offer of peace from Austria. The time for that has passed and has not yet come again. Present conditions must first change. The pre-meditated [premature?] retirement of Austria from the war might bring especial disadvantages to the Entente. Austrians released from the army would go to Germany and be added to German productive power. Austria is now an increasing military and economic burden to Germany and Germany will probably give in sooner with the load of Austria on her back than if Austria were out of the war.

The Prime Minister repeated that the British had not the slightest animosity to the Austrians whose future freedom in fact they wished to safeguard. The present question is purely a question of military expediency regarding the war as a whole and the removal from Germany of the burden of Austria now would add to the strength of Germany. "For these and other reasons," the Prime Minister continued, "we cannot now even receive formally any peace offer from Austria nor authorize any discussion of peace with her on our behalf. We must look at the war as a whole, but if the President should see fit, acting for himself, to receive specific and concrete proposals from Austria, and should be able and willing to transmit them to me through you in private confidence, I should, at the earliest moment, inform you when the time had come for us formally to receive and consider [them]. I shall be willing and in fact very glad to have such proposals proceed on the principles laid down in the President's recent speech to the Senate. Free access to the sea may present difficulties but I should try to remove them."

After the foregoing general declarations by the Prime Minister I put to him seriatim the several questions and propositions contained in your telegram:

1. Question: If the President should transmit officially to the British Government a specific and concrete proposal of peace from Austria what might he expect under present conditions?

Answer: The British Government could not now receive it without risk of weakening the Entente's military and economic pressure and position.

2. Question: Would the Entente Governments consent that assurance be conveyed by the President to the Austrian Government that the older units of the Empire will not be taken from it?

Answer: The British Government could not under present conditions authorize any [assurance] to Austria. The British Government sees no reason to dismember Austria by removing Hungary and Bohemia but the peoples of the Entente Governments, such as Slavs, Roumanians, Serbs, and Italians, as well as Bosnia and Herzegovina, must by the principle of nationality be freed from Austrian control, but the British Government can not now authorize any representations on its behalf.

3. Question: Could Austria have a guaranty of free access to the sea if she should lose her Adriatic coast line?

Answer: This principle is not objectionable but there may be practical difficulties which, however, it may be possible to overcome when the time to discuss this subject arrives.

A necessary inference from the whole conversation is that the only proposal for peace that the British Government would officially receive under existing conditions is a bona fide proposal officially made by Germany [Austria?] at least as specific and concrete as the terms that the Entente powers set forth in their note to the President. Nothing else will be officially received until the issue of the submarine campaign and of the forthcoming great battle in France is decided. The Prime Minister then spoke with warmth and admiration of the President substantially as follows:

We want him to come into the war not so much for help with the war as for help with peace. My reason is not mainly the military nor naval nor economic nor financial pressure that the American Government and people might exert in their own way against Germany; grateful as this would be I have a far loftier reason. American participation is necessary for the complete expression of the moral judgment of the world on the most important subject ever presented to the civilized nations. For America's sake, for our own sake, for the sake of free government, and for the sake of democracy, military despotism must now be ended forever. The President's presence at the peace conference is necessary for the proper organization of the world which must follow peace. I mean that he himself must be there in person. If he sits in the conference that makes peace he will exert the greatest influence that any man has ever exerted in expressing the moral value of free government. Most of the present belligerents will have suffered so heavily that their judgment also may have suffered and most of those that win will want some concrete gain, old wrongs righted, or boundaries changed. Even Great Britain, who wants nothing for herself, will be prevented from returning the German colonies. South Africa and Australia will not permit the giving back of lands that would make them neighbors to German subjects and give Germany secret submarine bases throughout the whole world. The United States wants nothing but justice and an ordered freedom and guaranties of these for the future. Nobody therefore can have so commanding a voice as the President. Convey to him this deep conviction of mine. He must help make peace if the peace made at that conference is to be worth keeping. American participation in the war would enable him to be there and the mere moral effect of this participation would shorten the war, might even end it very quickly.

The present Government is unique in English history. The Cabinet, which is constantly in session, now consists of only five men, the Prime Minister, Curzon, Milner, Bonar Law, and Henderson. . . . The Prime Minister, by public consent, is nearer to a dictator than any man in England since Cromwell. For reasons, therefore, not only of good form but also of principle I was obliged to ask his consent to speak to any other member of the Government. . . . He replied, "No. Speak to no one else for the present. I will take a few into my confidence and tell you whenever there [may] be anything to tell."

I met Minister Balfour at dinner last night and from a remark he made to me I suspect the Prime Minister had told him of this conversation of a few hours before.

The Mexican Consul General at San Francisco in Charge of Mexican Interests (De Negri) to the Secretary of State

[Translation]

WASHINGTON, February 12, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to transcribe to your excellency the following note, which the Secretary of Foreign Relations of my country has been pleased to write to me:

Querétaro, February 11, 1917.

Señor Ramón P. De Negri, Washington, D. C.: Please transcribe to the most excellent the Minister of Foreign Relations of that country the following note:

By direction of Citizen Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the executive power of the Mexican nation, I have the honor of addressing to your excellency the following note, which the above-named high mandatory has seen fit to send to the neutral countries:

It is more than two years since the most gigantic armed conflict recorded in history broke out in the old continent, sowing death, desolation, and destitution in the belligerent nations. The tragic contest has deeply wounded the sentiments of humanity of all the peoples that are not engaged in the struggle, and their standing unmoved before so great a disaster would be contrary to both justice and humaneness. A deep-seated sentiment of human solidarity then constrains the Mexican Government to tender its modest cooperation in endeavoring to bring the strife to an end. On the other hand, the conflagration in Europe has reached such proportions that the situation of the countries which remained neutral has grown more and more trying, bringing them, as it has, to the verge of being involved in that war; and several nations which, at the outset, took no part in the conflict, have found themselves irresistibly drawn into it.

Those countries which at present are still preserving their neutrality in the world and truly desire to keep out of the conflict must combine their efforts toward bringing about the earliest possible termination of the European war, or at least so circumscribing it as to remove the possibility of further complications and thus bring into sight an early ending.

The present European conflict affects the whole world, like a great conflagration, a severe plague, which ought to have been isolated and confined some time ago so as to shorten its life and prevent its spreading. Far from doing this, the trade of all the neutral countries in the world, and that of America in particular, bears a heavy responsibility before history, because all the neutral nations—some more, some less—have lent their quota of money, provisions, ammunition, or fuel, and in this way have kept up and prolonged the great conflagration.

Reasons of high human morality and of national self-conservation place the neutral peoples under the obligation of desisting from that course and of refusing to lend any longer that quota which made it possible to carry on the war for two years and more.

To that end the Government of Mexico, within the bounds of the strictest respect due to the sovereignty of the warring countries, inspired by the highest humanitarian sentiments, and also actuated by the sentiment of self-conservation and defense, takes the liberty of proposing to your excellency's Government, as it is proposing to all the other neutral governments, that the groups of contending powers be invited, in common accord and on the basis of absolutely perfect equality on either side, to bring this war to an end either by their own effort or by availing themselves of the good offices of friendly mediation of all the countries which would jointly extend that invitation. If within a reasonable term peace could not be restored by this means, the neutral countries would then take the necessary measures to reduce the conflagration to its narrowest limit, by refusing any kind of implements to the belligerents and suspending commercial relations with the warring nations until the said conflagration shall have been smothered.

The Mexican Government is not unconscious of its somewhat departing from the principles of international law which have heretofore regulated the relations between neutrals and belligerents when it offers its propositions; but it must be admitted that the present war is a conflict without a precedent in the history of mankind that demands supreme efforts and novel remedies that are not to be found among the narrow and somewhat selfish rules of international law as accepted until now. Mexico believes that, confronted by a catastrophe of such large proportions the like of which never was seen, by a war in which political, social, military, and economic factors that could never be foreseen have been brought into play, it can not go astray in proposing that the remedies to be applied to the conflict be also new, extraordinary, and commensurate with the circumstances.

The Government of Mexico understands that no neutral nation, no matter how mighty, could singly take a step of this character, and that the measure can only be brought to a successful issue through the cooperation of the neutral governments wielding the greatest international influence with the belligerent nations.

It is specially incumbent on the United States, Argentina, Brazil, and Chile in America; Spain, Sweden, and Norway in Europe, as being more influential and freer to arrive at a decision toward the belligerents, to father an initiative which is none the less worthy of thorough study and earnest consideration for its coming from a nation which is supposed to be weakened at present and therefore incapable of any effective international effort.

The Government of Mexico cherishes the hope that if this idea is accepted and put into practice it may serve as a precedent and basis for a new shaping of international law that would give neutrals the opportunity to assist in preventing and mending future international wars while most strictly [respecting] the sovereignty of the belligerents.

Countries thereafter finding themselves on the brink of war, would earnestly ponder before launching into a conflict in which they would be entirely thrown on their own resources, and so would exhaust every means in which to avoid it or shorten its duration if it proved unavoidable.

I avail myself [etc.]. Gen. Candido Aguilar, Minister of Foreign Relations of Mexico.

I have the honor to transcribe the foregoing to your excellency, having thus carried out my Government's instructions.

The Minister in Greece (Droppers) to the Secretary of State

Greek Series

ATHENS, January 13, 1917.

No. 154

[Received February 14.]

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith the original and English translation of a document sent to me by the Minister of Foreign Affairs in a covering despatch dated December 18, 1916.¹ This is the official version of the disturbances which occurred at Athens on December 1, 1916, and contains a number of statements, about which I think that some doubts may be expressed.

In the first paragraphs the point is made that the demand for the surrender of Greek war material to the French Admiral was firmly resisted by the Greek Government. This statement is correct so far as the official reply is concerned, which was made by the Greek Government toward the end of November. But this affair has a long and complicated history. During the month of October a French deputy, M. Benazet by name, had had various friendly interviews with the King and it was understood between them that as an offset to the surrender of the Rupel fortresses to Bulgaria the Greek Government would place at the disposal of the Entente forces in Macedonia a quantity of arms and ammunition. The King in so many words promised this and agreed to the wording of a telegram, which was transmitted by both to Paris, clearly indicating his wish to make these deliveries. Later on, when it was discovered that this act was unpopular, the Greek Government began to bargain as to what amounts and under what conditions the deliveries should be made.

On the day before the conflict of December 1, Admiral du Fournet was in conversation with the King and he states positively that they came to an understanding as to his bringing up marines from the French and British ships; these preliminary measures were taken in the expectation that they would render opposition to the surrender of the war material useless. No real conflict was thought of by the Admiral, as is shown by the fact that the marines were furnished for the most part with blank cartridges. At Roufos, half-way between Piraeus and Athens, the Greek soldiers and officers fraternized with the foreign detachments, offering each other cigarettes. A contingent of British marines was dispatched from Phaleron to an abandoned powder magazine near the cemetery at the northeastern extremity of the city. These men sat down to eat their lunch and were in blissful ignorance of any coming danger. They also exchanged some pleasantries with some Greek soldiers in the neighborhood and were just finishing their lunch, when they heard firing. This probably came from the hill of Philopappos, where a somewhat larger contingent of French marines had been stationed. At once the firing began at all three places, I am informed, simultaneously. The French and British were hopelessly outnumbered. At the powder magazine aforesaid, a machine gun was brought into play by the Greek soldiers and the British either retired into the magazine or marched back to Phaleron. The results of these engagements were, as near as I can ascertain, as follows:

	Killed		Wounded
	Officers	Men	Officers	Men
British.....	0	8	0	30
French.....	4	51	0	150
Greek.....	4	25	4	55

The conclusion at which I arrive is, therefore, that the Greek Government is technically correct in stating that it refused to surrender the arms, but that Admiral du Fournet, thinking that he had the King's acquiescence, ordered the British and French marines on the morning of December 1 to occupy certain places in the city, where they, entirely innocent of any hostile intent, were fired upon by a very large number of Greeks, who were mostly of the "reservist" class, i. e., not on active service, and had hastily been armed the day before by the Government. The statement that the British or French fired first, as stated in the Greek official version, is not tenable.

A guard of French marines had been stationed for some weeks previously in the Zappeion Park Building, not far from the Stadium. These men were also fired upon by the Greek soldiers and took refuge inside the building. A machine gun placed on a hill opposite was worked murderously against them for some time, giving the building a scarred appearance, as though it had withstood a regular siege. This French force withdrew at night by arrangement between the King and the Entente Ministers.

It seems to me quite clear from the orders given by the French Admiral, as quoted in this Greek version, that there was no armed opposition expected. The Admiral thought that pleasant words and good manners would carry the day and found out only too late that the warnings conveyed by outside parties were truer than his own unsuspecting optimism. The fact that blank cartridges for the most part were furnished to the landing parties goes to prove the same view.

As to the contention of the Greek official version that the Venizelists took advantage of the conflict to incite a panic and subvert public order, this is a question of great importance, which requires a separate discussion.

GARRETT DROPPERS

[Enclosure—Translation]

The Greek Government's official version of the disturbances of December 1, 1916

After yielding to the successive demands made by the Entente, the Royal Government, out of consideration for public opinion and the sentiment of the army, sent in two notes a categorical refusal to the last demand of the French Admiral regarding the surrender of arms. It was even signified that the Admiral's insistence and the idea of imposing this demand by force would inevitably provoke a conflict. Nevertheless the Admiral ordered the carrying out of the expedition against the capital, the object of which was, according to the orders seized on a French transport waggon, to occupy several points in the city, barracks, and arms factories, in order to threaten the capital and oblige the Royal Government to agree to the requirements made.

The Royal Government always hoped that the Admiral, in view of our firm resolution to resist every attempt to seize by force the arms and guns demanded, would take into consideration the results of such action. That is why it gave strict orders to the troops to avoid all provocation, enjoining upon them not to be the first to make use of their arms.

Already for some days the Allied aeroplanes had been flying about the palace. Automobiles containing foreigners had been perceived making reconnaissances about the barracks, the stadium, and sundry important points of the city. Maps had been made by the Allies, upon which were marked in different colours the public buildings of the capital, the barracks, and the royal palace in particular being noted. A plan of the town well drawn in squares was to serve for the fire of the fleet and indications of sundry movements, which were to be effected in the centre of the city, had been distributed to the troops.

The morning of December 1 about 3,000 men had disembarked at the Piraeus and marched in three columns upon Athens. They advanced methodically, driving in or taking prisoners our outposts and seized the powder factory and the engineers' barracks. Towards 10 a. m. one of our small detachments, which was withdrawing from the powder factory, was assailed by the French. At 11.15 another small detachment, which was at the observatory, was likewise attacked. On the hill of Philopappos 70 Greek soldiers were suddenly surrounded by three companies. The Greek soldiers were resting, when they saw themselves attacked by the French troops without having time to defend themselves. Four Greek soldiers were killed by French officers, five others were wounded.

About the same time 400 Allied troops occupied the powder magazine near the cemetery, capturing the five men of the guard. At the first shots, heard from a distance, the Allied troops were the first to open fire with rifles and machine guns upon the Greek detachment of 70 men, which was opposite the powder magazine. Finding itself under the fire of the Allies, our detachment was obliged to defend itself by the bayonet and dispersed the foreign detachment, of which 180 men succeeded in shutting themselves up in the magazine. Meanwhile the firing spread around the Zappion, behind which was a Greek detachment, posted there for the defence of the royal palace. This detachment had a field gun. About 2 p. m. this Greek detachment, perceiving that the Allied troops shut up in the Zappion were preparing to make a sortie and fearing that they were going to attack the royal palace, gave orders to fire one cannon shot to intimidate the aggressors. A fusillade commenced, but the fire was arrested immediately, thanks to the intervention of the commanders of the two detachments.

About 5 o'clock the sound of shots revived a general fusillade in the Zappion sector. The Green commander, again suspecting an attack of the Allied troops against the palace, ordered a few rounds of cannon. Fortunately, strict orders were immediately given and the fusillade ceased. During this interval Allied warships fired about 50 projectiles of large and small calibre, most of which fell about the palace. Several houses were damaged and we had some civilian victims to deplore.

Towards evening the order to cease firing was given on both sides. By an agreement between His Majesty the King, the Royal Government and the Ministers of the Entente, it was decided that the Allied troops should retire to their ships while the Royal Government accepted to deliver six mountain batteries, instead of the ten demanded in the Admiral's note.

While these engagements were taking place, Venizelist agents, wishing to take advantage of these circumstances for the premeditated purpose of abolishing the existing order of things, endeavoured to inspire a panic in the city by firing shots from the windows and balconies of several houses. This movement was quickly repressed and the judicial authorities were instructed to take measures in the matter.

Our losses in officers and men are important. There were 4 officers and 26 soldiers killed, and 4 officers and 58 soldiers wounded, without counting the losses incurred in the suppression of the sedition.

Complying with the orders given by the military authorities, our soldiers avoided as much as possible coming to blows with the Allies. Our troops showed the greatest discipline, because although driven from the posts which they occupied, they abstained from making use of their arms and did so only when forced to defend themselves against the fire of the Allies.

It is strictly proved that our soldiers obeyed entirely the orders they received, which were to maintain a passive attitude and not to attack first in any case. The capture of our soldiers, the occupation of our posts, the free passage of the foreign detachments proceeding to the Zappion, the residence of our troops amongst the Allied troops, are proofs that no act of treachery was committed by our soldiers, who could easily have dispersed the foreign troops during their approach to the Capital.

Orders given by the French Admiral and seized among the papers of landing parties, concerning the "demonstration" at Athens, say literally that "force must not be employed except after a summons to retire shall have been made to the troops," and further along: "Firing shall not commence, unless we should be clearly menaced." These orders prove once again that a simple menace on the part of our troops was sufficient to provoke the fire of the Allies. The order of the commander of the landing parties also provided that "the detachment must establish itself, if necessary by force, in the positions, the occupation of which by our troops constitutes a menace against Athens."

We note that the landing troops were supplied with 96 ball cartridges and a certain number of blank cartridges per man, the latter probably being intended to intimidate the Greek troops, but which unfortunately could not help provoking a conflict.

The descent of the Allied troops upon Athens certainly could not have been made with a friendly purpose. The installation of these troops amidst our own and the orders given to them, which did not exclude the employment of armed force, brought about inevitably this sad incident, which our military authorities sought to avoid by every means, recommending the Greek troops to abstain from firing first and to show themselves excessively conciliatory toward the foreign troops.

The Consul at Saloniki (Kehl) to the Secretary of State

SALONIKI, January 8, 1917.

[Received February 14.]

SIR: I have the honor to append a copy of a communication from Mr. N. Politis, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Greek Provisional Government, wherein he solicits the recognition of his Government by the Government of the United States. I verbally informed the Minister that the American Legation at Athens is the competent channel through which a communication of this nature should be submitted. Mr. Politis replied that he had already addressed Minister Droppers in regard to this matter, but had not received an answer. He doubted whether his communication had reached Athens, and therefore would appreciate it if I would make his wishes known to the United States Government.

The supreme authority of the Provisional Government is vested in a triumvirate composed of ex-Prime Minister E. K. Venizelos, General P. Danglis, and Vice Admiral P. Kondouriotis. The Cabinet of the Government is composed of twelve ministers. Governmental and municipal affairs of Saloniki are conducted by adherents of the revolutionary party. Royalists have been removed from every public office in Saloniki and vicinity.

Unlike a de facto government which by its own strength has expelled the regularly constituted authorities from power and replaced them with its own functionaries—or where a portion of the inhabitants of a country separate themselves from the parent state and possess the power to establish an independent government—this de facto or Provisional Government was created by the will and power of the Entente Governments. Without this aid the revolutionary movement would have been short and ineffective.

The de facto government installed at Saloniki is of undefined jurisdiction and power. As to jurisdiction, most of the larger islands of the Kingdom have adhered, in a manner, to the revolutionary movement. Macedonia and Epirus are not in full sympathy with the government here. To the southwest of Saloniki, on the Chalkis Peninsula, the Royalists were too strong for the Revolutionists, who required the assistance of French infantry to save the situation. As to the sovereign power of the local government, it is limited to that which suits the convenience of the armies of the Allies operating in Greece.

The Provisional Government, to use their own appellation, has been recognized as such by the Governments of Great Britain, France, Russia, and Egypt. Great Britain has appointed Lord Granville, lately counselor of the Legation at Athens, as its diplomatic agent to the Provisional Government; France has nominated Robert J. D. de Billy, counselor of the Embassy at Rome, in the same capacity; and the Russian Government has signified its intention of also appointing a diplomatic representative.

The Provisional Government, with an army of less than 3,000 bayonets in the field, declared war on Germany and Bulgaria, and thereby admitted itself into the ranks of the belligerents. The Entente military forces in Greece will not permit the Royal Government to exercise its sovereign right of maintaining law and order throughout the Kingdom. The Allies contend that they have full and just cause for their attitude towards the King. In view of this unique and abnormal situation and in view of the circumstances under which the Provisional Government was created, its right to recognition by a neutral government is considerably impaired.

As a matter of form, this Consulate has recognized the Provisional Government, and feels that such semiofficial recognition is ample under existing conditions.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Greek Provisional Government (Politis) to the American Consul at Saloniki (Kehl)

SALONIKI, December 17/30, 1916.

MR. CONSUL: Referring to our conversation of this morning, I have the honor to confirm, that during the past ten days the Governments of England, France, and Russia have successively conceded to the Provisional Government the right of representation at their capitals, and that in consequence the Provisional Government has proceeded with the nomination of agents to England, France, Russia, and Egypt.

I beg you to have the kindness to make known to the Government of the United States, and express to it, in my name, a desire to know its attitude towards the Provisional Government from an international point of view.

As I have already had the honor to inform Mr. Droppers under date of November 13/26, No. 477, I presume that the Government of the United States, conforming with the practice regularly followed by it on analogous occasions, has already tacitly recognized the Provisional Government as a government de facto.

I hope that, following the action which you are kindly requested to take, you will inform me as to this interpretation and advise me of the decision which your Government makes, especially in view of an eventual representation of the Provisional Government in the United States.

Please accept [etc.]

The Prime Minister's first mood has been completely changed; it was shared and urged as nearly as I can find out chiefly by Curzon, but the Navy in particular and presumably the Army are anxious to cause the possible detachment of Austria-Hungary and their pressure I believe changed the Prime Minister's first view.

If this can be accomplished, they will expect a very much earlier end of the war. Your efforts will be fully and generously appreciated.

CONSTANTINOPLE, January 19, 1917.

MR. AMBASSADOR: The Imperial Ottoman Government has received through the intermediary of the Government of the United States of America the reply of its adversaries to its note dated December 12 last, by which in agreement with its allies it had proposed the immediate entering upon negotiations of peace, so as to spare humanity a further effusion of blood and new sufferings.

The governments of the Entente have refused this offer of peace and of conciliation with the pretext that it is lacking in sincerity and does not possess any base in fact.

The tone in which the governments of the Entente have thought fit to formulate their refusal dispenses the Imperial Government of any need to reply. However, it desires to set forth and to render more precise, before the governments of the neutral powers, its manner of viewing the situation.

The entire world recognizes that the proposal of the Quadruple Alliance, clearly formulated in a spirit of moderation, rests, on the contrary, upon a solid base: as for its sincerity, this has been sufficiently established in the reply which the four allied powers gave to the proposal of the President of the United States of America.

In their reply the governments return to the question of the responsibility for the present war and strive to justify themselves by vain and pompous words which do not agree with the reality of the facts.

The assertions of the powers of the Entente—always the same—having been refuted on many occasions, it would be tiresome to reply to them again. Nevertheless the Imperial Government considers it useful to point out here that the Central powers had no reason to let loose the war, and Turkey had no motive for participation therein—without being compelled—for the simple reason that none of them entertained aspirations to the detriment of the powers of the Entente, which is not the case for these latter.

In reality, who does not know the aims of France upon Syria and Alsace-Lorraine, of Italy upon the southwestern provinces of Austria, of Russia on Constantinople, the Straits, and a large part of Anatolia, and of England upon Mesopotamia and Arabia? Who is not aware of all the intrigues of these powers to prevent the natural development of the Ottoman Empire, so as to some day be able to realize their project of division and that in spite of the principles of nationalities which they always advance, with the evident object of impressing public opinion in their own and in neutral countries? For, in reality, they themselves pay but slight attention to these same principles when they are not in conformity with their own interests: the proclamation of an English protectorate over Egypt, the population of which has no relation with the English race, the annexation of Cyprus where nothing is English, the occupation of Tripoli by Italy where the Italian is only an intruder; the wild project of wishing to accord to Russia Constantinople together with the basin of the Marmara where the great majority of the population is of Turkish race and Moslem, are so many violations of the principle of nationalities of which our adversaries seem to make themselves the apostles so as to justify their desire of vengeance and of conquest.

Turkey has thus been forced to take up arms with her allies for the defense of her existence, of her liberty and of her independence. However, she is of the opinion, together with her allies, that to-day this aim has been attained. On the contrary, the enemy powers are at this moment farther than ever from the realization of their plans and it is precisely because of this that they nervously refuse a loyal proposal and thus deliberately assume the responsibility of continuing the effusion of blood.

In speaking of the protection of the rights of small nations, the powers of the Entente forget too much that independently of the peoples whom they have subjected by violence and whom they crush under their yoke, it is exactly they who so far have caused the misfortune and the ruin of more than one small nation. The example of Serbia whom Russia drove into not accepting in its entirety the Austro-Hungarian note after the horrible crime of Sarajevo, of Roumania whom they drew into their toils by intrigues and by corruption, of Montenegro whom they deceived, and finally of Greece whom they wish to draw into the war by unwarranted proceedings, hitherto unknown in the annals of history. The world which judges governments by their acts, will not be able to discover in the demands of the powers of the Entente the sincerity which these latter refuse to recognize in the proposal of the four allied powers. Besides, it will judge that the alleged violations of international law which are attributed to the four allies can not furnish a ground for complaint to those who, from the beginning of the war, have trodden under foot this law and have torn up the rights upon which it was based. The numerous protests which the Sublime Porte and its allies have been obliged to address since the commencement of hostilities to the governments of the Entente, through the intermediary of the powers charged with the protection of their interests, and of which the neutral states have often received copies, do not permit any doubt to remain concerning this matter. The Ottoman Empire and its allies have made a sincere effort to put an end to the human sufferings resulting from the war; their adversaries have refused the same without any plausible motive.

Consequently the responsibility for the continuance of the struggle falls upon these latter.

Confident in the justice of their cause, the four allied powers shall continue the war until there shall be a peace which guarantees honor, existence, and the free development of their peoples, and which brings to all nations a durable peace, permitting them to devote themselves in perfect harmony to the progress of civilization.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of note No. 71, from the Royal Bulgarian Minister of Foreign Affairs, dated January 20, 1917, containing the response of the Royal Bulgarian Government to the note of the Entente powers.

In this connection it is proper to observe that although I presented to the Prime Minister the answer of the Entente powers (in English) immediately upon receipt, with the statement that the French text would be handed him as soon as received from Paris, the text however has never been received—the present note of the Bulgarian Prime Minister being based, as will be seen, upon the note of the Spanish Minister.

[Enclosure—Translation]

The Bulgarian Minister of Foreign Affairs (Radoslavoff) to the American Consul General at Sofia (Murphy)

No. 71

On the 14th of this month, the Royal Government had the honor to receive, through the obliging medium of his excellency the Spanish Minister at Sofia, the reply of the Entente to the note of December 12 last, by which Bulgaria and its allies declared themselves ready to open negotiations of peace.

Like its allies, the Government of His Majesty made it a duty to seriously study this reply. There was drawn from it the certainty that the form as well as the contents of the communication of the adverse powers forbid a direct reply. Nevertheless, careful of its obligations towards humanity and its own people; desirous also of better disengaging itself from the responsibilities of a prolongation of hostilities imposed on itself and its allies, by the attitude of the common enemy, this Government is bound to acquaint the neutral powers with its point of view on the situation created.

The adversaries of Bulgaria refused to take into account the proposition of the four allied powers dated December 12, under the pretext that it lacked sincerity and had no bearing. They saw in it rather a manoeuvre of war—executed with a view of effecting the evolution of the campaign—only an offer of peace, a manoeuvre having for its object the clouding the public opinion of their own countries, seeking also to mislead, indeed even to intimidate, the public opinion of neutral countries.

Provoked and drawn into the present war by neighbors whose only dream since the beginning has been of its dismemberment, submitting to the judgment of history the fixing of the initial responsibilities. in perfect accord with its allies, Bulgaria protests to-day with all its force against a like interpretation of the motifs which determined the proposition of peace of the 12th December.

The eagerness which the four allied powers have shown in replying to the invitation of the President of the United States of America and the note of the Government of the Swiss Confederacy, is the best proof of the sincerity of their proposition. The Royal Government firmly hopes that its point of view will be shared by the neutral governments, who will acknowledge with it that it is only after an exchange of ideas proposed by the allied powers that the Entente would be able to pronounce by actual knowledge on the real intent of the offer of peace of December 12.

Bulgaria and its allies have made a loyal attempt to put an end to the war and to pave the way for an understanding between the belligerents. The Royal Government is assured that it depends solely on its adversaries to enter the path that leads to peace; but the enemy Governments have refused. The responsibility for a further effusion of blood therefore will rest upon them.

Confident of their rights and in perfect communion with their people, the four allied powers are forced to continue the fight until there comes a peace which will guarantee to them the honor, the existence and the free development of their peoples, and which will assure at the same time to the states of the European continent the benevolent possibility of cooperating, in mutual esteem and on a footing of perfect equality, in the solution of the great problems of civilization.

[Received February 28, 9.55 p. m.]

1730. Department's 1566, 22d. I immediately entered upon the duty requested by your strictly confidential instructions and yesterday morning and this morning had lengthy discussions at my house with Minister for Foreign Affairs. Count Czernin is impressed with the communication verbally made to him, but feels that prohibition against "any other government" ever knowing of transaction must mean all governments apart from Austria-Hungary's allies. With this understanding he to-day hands me this memorandum:

Austria-Hungary is always ready to end this war because she has always waged a defensive war. She, however, emphasizes the fact that she could only enter into negotiations for peace simultaneously with her allies; that she must receive the guaranty that the Monarchy will remain intact; and finally the guaranty necessary to insure the cessation of propaganda on the part of her neighbors, propaganda which led to the assassination at Sarajevo.

The proposals made by Mr. Penfield to Count Czernin as well as those which may be made in future will remain secret; at the same time Count Czernin expects that his reply will remain secret also.

I can state that Minister for Foreign Affairs is keenly desirous of peace and agrees that it must eventually come through President Wilson. Czernin's bona fides and permanent confidence are certain. He thinks that Entente Governments are working for peace at Washington. If you can do so, please rush a telegram that may continue the negotiations. Grew was present at to-day's conference.

Must mention that as answer to my protest against certain journals abusing America and the President, Count Czernin caused the press to cease this altogether and for weeks nothing offensive has been printed. Two important Vienna journals have more than once appeared with editorial pages really benefited.

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1917.

1580. Your 1730, February 27. Assure Count Czernin that his confidence will be strictly observed and that all interchanges will remain secret.

You may further say to him that this Government appreciates the embarrassments of the Austro-Hungarian Government in discussing the desirability of obtaining assurances under present conditions. But, as the present seems opportune for that purpose while doing so at a later time, if certain events should take place, might be impossible or ineffective, this Government earnestly hopes that Count Czernin will reconsider the subject giving especial weight to the fact that conditions in the future may be far less favorable to Austria-Hungary than they are at present. It must be manifest to Count Czernin that this Government in again addressing him on a subject which can only be for the future welfare of his country is inspired by a disinterested desire to be helpful. It would be regrettable if certain perfectly frank interchanges of intention were not made before the progress of the war prevents even their consideration. This Government is loath to believe that Count Czernin is unwilling to obtain for his country certain advantages which this Government feels might be obtained under existing conditions which may not continue long and may not come again.

In presenting the foregoing orally to Count Czernin you will follow the same precautions as to secrecy as set forth in Department's instruction 1566, February 22.

1757. I have lost no time in further discussing with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, with secrecy and circumspection, the subject of your confidential instructions contained in telegrams 1566, February 22, and 1580, March 3. The Minister is keenly alive to the matter and four times has been in conference with me at my house. Naturally he has discussed matter with his Emperor, with whom he has been two days' visit to Hungary. To-day I have been with Count Czernin for an hour and in that time he announced a dozen times that a separate peace is out of the question. He gives me his complete confidence and he does not hesitate to speak feelingly of the good offices you are willing to use on Austria-Hungary's behalf. The subjoined is an exact translation of a memorandum to-day handed me by Count Czernin made in his presence and read to him.

Count Czernin repeats that he is disposed to enter upon conversations to end the war on condition that it is a question of a general peace and not a separate peace. It is absolutely out of the question to separate Austria-Hungary from her allies the Minister asserts with emphasis. Count Czernin states that he is convinced that none of the belligerent groups will be able to destroy its adversaries and that consequently it would appear desirable to put an end to slaughter which in any case will end sooner or later in an honorable peace for all the belligerents.

If the Entente maintains its proposal to enter upon free conversations which in every case must exclude a separate peace with Austria-Hungary, Count Czernin would be disposed to send a man in his confidence to a neutral country to meet a representative of the Entente. The two gentlemen would discuss secretly and freely the basis and the conditions of negotiations for peace.

Furthermore Count Czernin has proposed that his representative as well as a representative of the Entente could meet on neutral territory to discuss there the lot of the prisoners of war, their exchange within possible limits, as well as other similar questions.

The matter is of such moment that Count Czernin asks what Entente belligerent is making the overture upon which your telegrams are based.

I have omitted nothing that might forward the instructions under which I have been working. No offer at this time can induce the Minister to debate any arrangement meaning a breaking away from Austria's allies. There are rumors of Austria-Hungary's tiring of the overlordship of Berlin, but fear alone is enough to stifle any governmental expression of this.

The Secretary of State to the Mexican Consul General at San Francisco in Charge of Mexican Interests (De Negri)

WASHINGTON, March 16, 1917.

SIR: I have to request that you will have the kindness to transmit to the President-elect of the Mexican Republic the following reply to the communication of February 11, 1917, addressed by him to you with instructions to deliver it to the Government of the United States.

In his note of February 11, 1917,¹ the President-elect proposes to all the neutral governments that the groups of contending powers [in the present European conflict] be invited, in common accord and on the basis of absolutely perfect equality on either side, to bring this war to an end either by their own effort or by availing themselves of the good offices or friendly mediation of all the countries which would jointly extend that invitation. If within a reasonable time peace could not be restored by these means, the neutral countries would then take the necessary measures to reduce the conflagration to its narrowest limit, by refusing any kind of implements to the belligerents and suspending commercial relations with the warring nations until the said conflagration shall have been smothered.

The Government of the United States has given careful and sympathetic consideration to the proposals of the de facto Government, not only because they come from a neighboring republic in whose welfare and friendship the United States has a peculiar and permanent interest, but because these proposals have for their end the object which the President had hoped to attain from his discussion a few months ago of the aims of the belligerents and their purposes in the war. Of the futile results of the President's efforts at that time General Carranza is no doubt aware. Instead of the conflict being resolved into a discussion of terms of peace, the struggle, both on land and on sea, has been renewed with intensified vigor and bitterness. To such an extent has one group of belligerents carried warfare on the high seas involving the destruction of American ships and the lives of American citizens, in contravention of the pledges heretofore solemnly given the Government of the United States, that it was deemed necessary within the past few weeks to sever relations with one of the governments of the allied Central powers. To render the situation still more acute, the Government of the United States has unearthed a plot laid by the Government dominating the Central powers to embroil not only the Government and people of Mexico, but also the Government and people of Japan in war with the United States. At the time this plot was conceived, the United States was at peace with the Government and people of the German Empire, and German officials and German subjects were not only enjoying but abusing the liberties and privileges freely accorded to them on American soil and under American protection.

In these circumstances, all of which were existent when the note under acknowledgment was received, the Government of the United States finds itself, greatly to its regret and contrary to its desires, in a position which precludes it from participating at the present time in the proposal of General Carranza that the neutral governments jointly extend an invitation to the belligerent countries to bring the war to an end either by their own effort or by availing themselves of the good offices or friendly mediation of neutral countries.

At the present stage of the European struggle, the superiority of the Entente powers on the seas has prevented supplies from reaching the Central powers from the Western Hemisphere. To such a degree has this restriction of maritime commerce extended that all routes of trade between the Americas and the continent of Europe are either entirely cut off or seriously interrupted. This condition is not new. In 1915 the Central Governments complained of their inability to obtain arms and ammunition from the United States while these supplies were being shipped freely to the ports of their enemies. The discussion of the subject culminated in the American note of August 12, 1915 (a copy of which is enclosed),¹ to the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, upholding the contention of the United States that its inability to ship munitions of war to the Central powers was not of its own desire or making, but was due wholly to the naval superiority of the Entente powers. Believing that this position of the United States is based upon sound principles of international law and is consonant with the established practice of nations, the President directs me to say that he can not bring himself to consider such a modification of these principles or of this practice as compliance with General Carranza's proposal to suspend commercial relations with the warring nations would entail.

The President regrets, therefore, that, however desirous he may be of cooperating with General Carranza in finding a solution of the world problem that is intruding itself upon all countries, he is, for the reasons set forth, unable at the present time to direct his energies toward the accomplishment of the lofty purposes of the President-elect in the way suggested by his proposals. The President would not be understood, however, as desiring to impede the progress of a movement leading to the resumption of peaceful relations between all of the belligerents, and would not, therefore, wish the Mexican Government to feel that his inability to act in the present stage of affairs should in any way militate against the attainment of the high ideals of General Carranza by the cooperation of other neutral governments in the use of their good offices and friendly mediation to bring about the end of the terrible war which is being waged between the great powers of Europe.

779. It is evident from reports from Germany that the Chancellor's speech in the Prussian Lower House on the 14th, in which he definitely committed himself to more democratic government in Prussia and the German Empire was political event of the utmost importance and has greatly strengthened his position. His speech was not prepared but he spoke with deep earnestness and made a profound impression on his hearers. He now commands the confidence of the parties of the Left and the Center. The Liberal press takes the speech as the harbinger of a new epoch. Frankfurter Zeitung writes that a democratic German Empire, the outlines of which are just visible, must and will come since the will of the German people imperiously demands it; for the war has made citizens of the German people and awakes their will to say how they shall be governed. The Berlin Tageblatt says no successor of the Chancellor will ever be able to repudiate the principles to which he has committed himself since they are the principles cherished [by] the vast majority of the German Parliament.

The Socialist Leinert, who spoke after the Chancellor, said that desire at the front was one of determination to do a good job, first with the English, and then with the Prussian Junkers; that the people were fighting to bring the enemy to reason and not for the designs of the Junkers.

The election to fill Liebknecht's Reichstag seat reports an overwhelming victory for Stahl, the candidate of the regular Socialist Party, over the candidate of the Socialist opposition.

GARRETT DROPPERS

[Enclosure]

Report on the Neutrality Policy of Greece

ATHENS, February 11, 1917.

I have often been informed during the past six months in a semi-official manner that it is of the utmost importance that Greece should remain neutral and not mix up in this war. Some weeks ago Mr. Streit, an ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Venizelos Cabinet but since the outbreak of the war an ardent anti-Venizelist and a trusted counselor of His Majesty the King, informed me that it was highly undesirable for Greece to abandon her policy of neutrality, although her sentiments, both official and lay, were undoubtedly favorable to the Entente. Mr. Streit, I may add, is suspected, though on what grounds of evidence I am unable to say, of being a supporter of the Germanophile party in Athens. Putting aside the question of his sincerity, I wish to examine the facts of Greece's neutrality and the reasons of state alleged therefor.

Mr. Streit mentioned two grounds which he thought were conclusive for this policy. One was the situation of the Greeks in Turkey. There were in that Empire several millions of Greeks, whose security for life and property depended upon the fact of Greece's remaining neutral. If Greece entered the war, these people would be despoiled and irretrievably ruined. For this reason the King deserved well of those Greeks who lived under this foreign jurisdiction. The second reason was that Greece had just finished a very exhausting war against Turkey and later against Bulgaria. She needed now to recuperate her forces and resources and not to engage in a new war.

At the time that the first Venizelos Ministry fell (early in March 1915) there was little or no opposition to Greece's entering the war, to the best of my recollection. Leaving this point aside, I was told by the Minister of Foreign Affairs himself of the succeeding Ministry (Mr. Zographos) that he submitted a formal note to Great Britain, offering the participation of Greece in the war on the side of the Allies on certain conditions, of which two were important: (1) That the Greek General Staff should have charge of all land operations against Constantinople; (2) that the Allies should guarantee Greece against attack by Bulgaria not only during the war, but also for some years thereafter. The British Government did not reply to this note. Sir Edward Grey, however, did send an informal reply to the British Minister at Athens, Sir F. Elliot, which I had the privilege of reading. It was simply to the effect that England could not entertain the propositions of the new Greek Ministry.

In substance there was little difference between the Venizelos offer and that of the Ministry which succeeded him, unless we deem important what was the essence of the entire transaction, namely, that Venizelos should have no share in the glory of the undertaking, if it proved successful. England's reasoning may have been that bargaining in the matter of an alliance between the Allies and Greece was unwise; it may have been that she felt herself under obligation to accept nothing less than the Venizelos offer, since England herself had persuaded him to join the Allies and now was unwilling to desert him; it may have been that she distrusted the good faith of the Gounaris Ministry, since the Prime Minister was a noted pro-German. Whatever her reasons may have been, she did not respond to the advances of the Greek Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Prince George returned to Greece in April 1915 soon after the Venizelos Ministry resigned. It is well known that he had vowed never to return to Greece so long as Venizelos was in power, owing to his quarrel with Venizelos in Crete some years before, when the Prince was high commissioner of that island. I had an audience of Prince George soon after his return to Athens. He spoke (I thought, undiplomatically) with the greatest bitterness about Venizelos, indeed, never alluded to him except as "that demagogue." He informed me that now that Venizelos was out of the way, the Greek Government would be free to make an alliance with the Entente powers. This was the very same month that Mr. Zographos had sent his offer to England. On or about May 1 at an evening party attended by the entire Royal Family I spoke with another of the brothers of the King and after some preliminary discussion about politics, in which I tried to fence as much as possible, he said to me: "I can assure you that within six weeks Greece will join the Allies in the war." I, who had read Sir E. Grey's letter, replied that I must beg to differ with this view, and that my impression was that Greece would not enter the war either within six weeks or within six months. The Prince expressed the greatest surprise and asked the reason for my opinion. "That," I replied, "I regret to say I am obliged to withhold." I may add that Prince George, his brother, was at that time just returning to Paris from Athens assuring the members of the Royal Family that he could arrange matters with the French Cabinet and get more satisfactory terms than Venizelos. This promise of Prince George was the basis of the assurance given to me by his brother.

Matters went on from bad to worse in Greece, but finally another election was held, the result of which was that Venizelos was returned to power. There can be no doubt that extraordinary efforts were made in the campaign by the Government to defeat the Venizelists. Nor was Venizelos himself equivocal in his language. If elected, he declared, he would immediately exert all his influence to range Greece in the war on the side of the Entente. It seems to be clear therefore that Greece was not averse to joining the war actively on the side of the Allies. The organs opposed to Venizelos, it must be admitted, emphatically disputed this view. They claimed that it was Venizelos personally that the people voted for, not the war. But apart from this consideration, it is difficult to explain the order for mobilization, which was accepted by the King upon Venizelos' proposal, on any other ground than that the nation would enter the war sooner or later. If on the side of the Allies, then the Venizelos program would be accepted in its integrity; if on the side of the Central Empires (as was at that time obscurely but probably falsely hinted), then in flagrant violation of every pretense of decent public policy.

However, on one ground or another, there was again a difference of opinion between the King and Venizelos and on October 6, 1915, after only five weeks in office the latter resigned. From this time on, for the space of almost ten months the army remained mobilized, but for what purpose no one was able to understand. This condition of things was demoralizing to the nation in more ways than one; the soldiers were in many instances unpaid, their services were employed for the most humiliating detective work, for propagandist purposes, and in the end for not even defending their country against aggression, until finally the Entente powers ordered Greece to demobilize her army, now thoroughly wearied of the thought of war.

During the month of September 1916 there again were rumors that Greece would join the Allies. About the middle of that month the Associated Press correspondent, Mr. P. Hibben, informed me that I could on the most positive authority telegraph to my Government that Greece would join the Allies in the war. When I questioned him closely on the matter, he replied that the King had given him his Royal word of honor to this effect. He stated in the most emphatic terms that the decision would be made public within two weeks. He also gave the same information at the same time to the British Minister, and all the Entente Ministers at Athens were more or less impressed. For various reasons this decision also fell through and Greece remained neutral, though in a very disastrous sense for her own interests. It was on the basis of this information that I sent my despatch No. 156 dated September 22, 1916, to the Department.¹

There are thus two distinct cases—the first in May 1915, the second in September 1916—where the highest personages of the Greek Government gave assurances that Greece would abandon her policy of neutrality and join the Entente. In view of this fact I do not understand how a responsible person can say to me that the King from the start desired to pursue only a policy of neutrality and that he has consistently maintained this effort.

As to the main reason, which Mr. Streit mentioned in justification of this policy, namely, the vast number of Greek Ottoman subjects, who would be injured in life and property by an alliance of Greece with the Entente, I can only reply that such Greek Ottomans have already suffered much during the past two years in any case. Furthermore the Greek Ottomans, to the best of my knowledge, are almost to a man partisans of Venizelos and are not asking for a policy of neutrality. On the contrary, they deem the conduct of affairs in Greece during the past two years highly disastrous to their own interests. But this point is not one on which I have satisfactory evidence, having only such information as comes from the many refugees, who have fled from Turkey to Greece for safety.

people is to remain behind the other peoples in freedom of development. In a special article entitled "The time for action" Scheidemann writes that the reason why the sympathies of almost the whole world are with Germany's enemies is because democratic principles are seen everywhere but in Prussia. Russia was the only country left to which we could point as representing [autocracy] and now the democratic idea has full sway in that great country. Why then does our Imperial Chancellor hesitate to take a step that is absolutely necessary now and can be taken to-day? There are difficulties in the way, it is submitted, but can they be compared for a moment with the difficulties which our people are overcoming every day? Millions are facing death each day, millions are enduring privation; is it for the sake of the Prussia of Westarp and Heydebrand? The arduous tasks are evenly allotted but there is inequality of rights although the poorest sons of the Fatherland have proven the most faithful. Now is the time for resolute action. The difficulties which may arise if the Government now demands free suffrage for Prussia are as light as a feather in comparison with the difficulties which may arise if the Government fails to do so. The times are serious and equal suffrage in Prussia is mature. The Chancellor ought not to delay one day longer. The Prussian people and all the other German peoples will support him to a man if he takes resolute action.

On the seas our enemies are fighting against the submarine war. All international treaties have been abolished. It is impossible to solve any of the essential questions because they are too diffused. Those who want peace must be willing to discuss it practically in a peace conference. Should this show that it is impossible to agree then the war which has never been interrupted by an armistice must continue. The Central powers are willing to negotiate for a fair peace.

Memorandum of the German Government Concerning Defensively Armed Enemy Merchant Ships

The German Government, in its memorandum of February 8, 1916,³ respecting the treatment of armed merchant ships, adduced a number of arguments for no longer considering merchantmen armed by enemy powers as peaceful vessels of commerce but regarding them as belligerents. Evidence in support of its position has largely increased since that time.

As may be seen from numerous press reports and parliamentary proceedings in enemy countries the number of merchant ships armed with heavy guns has grown considerably larger in the course of the year 1916. The limit of the evolution was placed by responsible statesmen of those countries, such as Lord Crewe and Admiral Lacaze, at the arming of all merchant vessels. More particulars will be found in the enclosed resolutions of a conference held at London on December 10, by shipping interests with the assistance of Government representatives. Public opinion in enemy countries has long demanded that guns be mounted at the bow of merchant ships also; as a matter of fact, the use of bow guns has already been established by German naval craft in the Mediterranean.

That the armament of merchant vessels is not intended for defense only but for attack on the German submarines engaged in cruiser warfare is shown by a number of indisputable facts. The secret order of the British Government published with the German memorandum of February 8, 1916, may be here called to mind. In the meanwhile secret admiralty orders, which fully confirm their aggressive character, found on French and Italian merchant vessels, fell into the hands of the German naval forces that captured them. Thus were found on the French merchant vessel Marie Thérèse on October

² Foreign Relations, 1916, Supplement, p. 97.

³ Ibid., p. 163.

29 of this year, confidential instructions of the French Naval Staff, in which the following order is given, among others:

[In French] Open fire as soon as the submarine is within range.

Like directions are given in the secret instructions found on the S. S. Citta di Messina on July 31 of last year:

[In Italian] If a vessel sights a submarine forward and quite near, either below or in the act of coming to the surface, the best maneuver to make is resolutely to steer for it. By so doing it will either strike the submarine and sink it or at least, as has happened in previous cases, kill all or a part of the crew by hurling them against the sides; or it will compel the submarine to submerge and come up abaft, which is a very advantageous position for it. Thereafter it will be necessary to keep close watch astern and to flee at full speed, trying to keep the submarine directly astern if the sea is smooth or not sufficiently rough to prevent the submarine from firing to good effect, if taken in front.

In addition the British Government offered through Lord Crewe, on November 15 of last year, in the House of Lords the following explanation of the orders issued by it, which excludes every doubt:

[In English] The German submarine is an enemy which it is permissible and proper to destroy, if you can, at sight.

This aggressive intent of enemy merchant vessels has become clearly apparent to the German naval authorities. Cases of merchant vessels which, without even being attacked, assume an aggressive attitude toward German submarines, are increasing. Evidence of the carrying out of secret orders has recently been produced; thus the French steamer Mississippi on November 8 of this year opened artillery fire on a German submarine passing by a long way off that had made no move whatever to attack and even had never intended to stop her; likewise, on December 4 of this year, the armed English steamer Caledonia attempted to ram a German submarine although here again there had been no intention, let alone any preparation, to attack on the part of the Germans; again in November, in the English Channel alone, there were recorded three attacks with artillery by unknown enemy steamers on German submarines which had not made the slightest move against the steamers, while six such occurrences took place in the Mediterranean in the past few months.

In this condition of things enemy merchant ships can not in particular cases claim treatment according to the rules of ordinary cruiser warfare; they have rather assumed the character of belligerents under the principles announced by the Government of the United States in its memorandum of March 25, 1916, concerning the status of armed merchant vessels.¹

The American Government proceeds from the principle that the vessel in neutral waters, as well as on the high seas, is to be regarded and treated as a warship when, among other things, it is under commission or orders of a belligerent state to engage in attacks. To be sure the American Government presupposes that the character of a belligerent on the high seas is not established on presumption alone but only on conclusive evidence; this conclusive evidence, however, is so abundant that it leaves no room for doubt. While the American memorandum lays stress on the point that the presence of armament on a merchant vessel does not by itself afford sufficient ground for presuming her to be a war vessel, the German Government ventures to point out that the belligerent character of the enemy merchant vessels now armed is denoted by other weighty circumstances besides the armament itself, among which the above cited instructions of the enemy governments and the actual attacks unexpectedly delivered on German submarines stand foremost.

Further, the American memorandum only considers government commissions to attack as existing when they are attended with a threat to punish failure to attack and with a grant of prize money when the attack is made. Here again the presumptions are proved to exist. For captains who failed to carry out their orders to sink German U-boats, although opportunity offered to do so, are punished in England. The Daily Chronicle reports, as early as the 8th of September, 1915, that Ernest Alfred Sheldon, of the Royal Naval Reserve, captain of an armed merchant ship, was dismissed from the Navy by a sentence of the court martial at Devonport for not attacking a German U-boat. It is further known, from the proceedings of the English Parliament, that for the sinking of, or effort to sink, German submarines not only have rewards been offered by the state, but that claims for such rewards have been examined by government organs and that the reward is given only when the said examination proves satisfactory to the government. Rewards are granted in various forms; they consist mainly of money, therefore resembling prize money, or again in awarding a gold watch or conferring distinction in the granting of a military officer's rank. To all this is added that the men detailed from the English Navy or Naval Reserve to man the guns on English merchant vessels, on which they are regularly placed, do not lose their military character and their subjection to the disciplinary and punitive power of the naval authorities through being under orders on a merchant vessel, and so they are, as before, part of the British naval forces. Ships so armed, manned, and directed are no longer, as the American memorandum requires them to be in order to have their peaceful character recognized, simply armed for self-defense; they rather render, in the manner they are instructed to do, the same services against German submarines as the war vessels detailed for antisubmarine service, and the circumstance that they are at the same time doing commercial service does not make any difference as to their being treated like belligerents by German submarines.

Finally, the American memorandum goes on to say that a warship may properly exercise force to compel a merchant vessel to surrender, if the merchant vessel either offers resistance after a summons or, before the summons, uses its armament to keep the enemy at a distance. It admits, in this connection, the merchant vessel's right to resort to self-defense as soon as it is certain of attack by an enemy warship, as otherwise the exercise of the right would be so restricted as to be made ineffectual; exactly the same grounds support the position that a warship that is entitled to exercise the right of capture may use force when certain of attack by an armed enemy merchant vessel.

The German Government has drawn from the evidence herein above communicated the conclusion, in accord with the American memorandum, that armed merchant vessels of its adversaries in this war are to be treated as belligerents. In this it is fully convinced that it is acting on the same grounds as the American Government took in Secretary Lansing's note of January 18, 1916, to the English Ambassador;¹ for in that note the American Government concurs in the view that under the present conditions of U-boat warfare any armament of a merchant ship appears to have the character of armament for aggression, for the mounting of large guns on merchant ships could only be explained by an intention to place the merchant vessel at an advantage over the U-boat and thereby prevent warning and searching by the latter.

From 5,000 to 10,000 tons and 15,000 h. p., one 6.0 Armstrong, two 4.0 Vickers guns;

Above 10,000 tons and 15,000 h. p., two 6.0 Armstrong and two 4.0 Armstrong guns (figures in English inches).

Guns crews to consist of naval-artillery men with one, two, or three officers according to requirement.

2. French ships.

Up to 1,200 tons and 1,000 h. p., two 3.7 automatic Creusot guns;

From 1,200 to 5,000 tons and 6,000 h. p., two 4.7 and one 3.7 automatic Creusot guns;

From 5,000 to 10,000 tons and 15,000 h. p., one 15.0 and two 4.7 Creusot guns;

Above 10,000 tons, two 15.0 and two 4.7 Creusot guns (figures in centimeters).

3. Russian ships.

Up to 1,200 tons and 1,000 h. p., two 1.85 inch Vickers guns;

From 1,200 to 5,000 tons and 6,000 h. p., two 7.5 centimeter and one 3.7 Creusot guns;

Above 5,000 tons, two 15.0 and two 7.5 Creusot guns.

4. Italian ships.

Up to 1,200 tons and 1,000 h. p., two 5.7 Terni guns;

From 1,200 to 5,000 tons and 6,000 h. p., two 7.6 and one 5.7 Terni guns;

Above 5,000 tons, two 12.0 and two 7.6 Terni guns (figures in centimeters).

The same regulations for guns, crews, and officers apply as for British ships.

German submarine warfare is soon to be extended to the attacking of all armed ships without warning, such ships being considered men-of-war. One official letter I saw stated that Germany would begin this submarine warfare extension, no doubt engendering trouble with the United States, but this could not be helped as such warfare was last resort of German Navy against England. The reason Blaikie of Caledonia did not share Fryatt's fate was that vessel was armed and in reality a man-of-war, and therefore Blaikie was justified in offensive action and submarine was justified in sinking without warning. A number of officers declare that this extended method will go into effect soon.

According to the investigation of the German naval authorities the Norwegian steamer Trippel was stopped by a German submarine on November 10, 1916, and captured after it was ascertained that her cargo consisted of steel and iron for the Italian war command with Genoa as the port of destination. Since it was impossible under the given circumstances to bring the steamer into a German port she was sunk. 4901. Press summary: In Prussian Lower House Von Heydebrand said: If we want to fight out the victory it is absolutely necessary that the weapons be used which afford us the possibility of really winning the victory against our most stubborn and strongest antagonist, England. (Loud applause.) This requires to be said, if our military instances [leaders?], the highest military command, and the Emperor consider it proper and opportune to make the requisite use of unrestrained submarine warfare, the German and Prussian people will be ready to bear the consequences. (Tremendous applause.)

Interruption by Hoffmann: "Who gives you the right to say that?" (Renewed applause for the speaker.) Hoffmann again interrupts: "That is pure madness."

"The interruptions by Deputy Hoffmann do not disturb me. The tone of his remarks is wholly inappropriate. In our present situation we want to win and that is the condition precedent to everything that we hope to reach after the war."

Deputy Herold of Center Party said: "Now that our adversaries have rejected the proffer of peace it is necessary to use all means on land and in the air, over, on, and under, the water. Our submarines can accomplish much more. We leave it to the discretion of our highest military command when this is to take place."

4912. At 7.30 yesterday evening Count Montgelas of the Foreign Office called on me and said that the following note had been sent to the embassies and legations of several neutral nations, particularly Spain and Norway, but was not sent to the United States because that country did not seem to be arming its merchant vessels, that Von Stumm, Undersecretary of State, had asked him, Montgelas, to give me a copy. Montgelas further said that Germany had never receded from the position it took concerning armed merchant vessels in the German note of February, 1916.¹

The note verbale is as follows, and is in French. I send translation and will send original French tomorrow in open cable:²

According to information worthy of belief which the Imperial Government has received from a neutral country, the British Government has endeavored quite recently to decide the neutral shipowners engaged in transportation on its order to arm their ships with cannons. Likewise the armament of these neutral ships has been called for in the most energetic manner by English public opinion.

In view of these proceedings the German Government thinks it ought to call the attention of the neutrals to the fact that under existing conditions, neutral armed merchant ships run the risk of being taken for armed enemy merchant ships and of being in consequence attacked, these latter ships maneuvering often under a neutral flag to lay trap for German submarines. Moreover neutral ships of commerce which may make use of their temporary armament will be treated as pirates by the German naval forces.

The Imperial Department for Foreign Affairs leaves it to the (space for name of legation) to communicate the preceding to its government by telegraph. Berlin, the (-----), to the Legation of (-----).

Many Germans have informed me lately that the public feeling for the resumption of reckless submarine warfare is so great that they do not see how any government can withstand it. I think myself, in spite of assurances from all members of Government that I have talked to, that the course of the Government will be to resume reckless submarine warfare by way of attacks without notice on armed merchant vessels, and that an endeavor is being made to place the United States in a position of tacitly or openly consenting to such attacks without notice on armed merchantmen. The above note verbale as I read it contains a plain intimation that armed enemy merchant vessels are subject to attack without notice, and, if not answered by some declaration from the United States, may lay the way open to Germany to claim that the United States has consented to such attacks. I think the plan is to first compel all neutral governments except the United States to support the German position and thus leave the United States standing alone against all other neutrals. Note the fact of announcement that all recently captured crews taken on armed merchant vessels of enemies will be treated as prisoners of war. If this is accepted, then the ships from which they were taken are recognized as warships and therefore subject to attack without notice.

1654. Your 1436, December 2, 2 p. m.,¹ and 1498, January 16, 4 p. m.² Minister for Foreign Affairs states that, according to data furnished by Austro-Hungarian naval authorities, S. S. Chemung was stopped November 26 last, near Cape Gataby [de Gata], submarine hoisting signal "bring ship's papers on board" and wide warning shot across bow. Weather fine and almost calm. After first shot, notwithstanding lengthy wait, no steps taken on board steamer to lower boat, therefore second shot fired across bow. Signal easily recognizable, distance being about 3,000 meters. Steamer then sent boat with first officer bringing ship's papers, showing cargo to consist war material for Italy. Ship's officer notified ship would have to be sunk. He was asked if there was also ammunition on board, his answer indicating there was none but only "blasting caps" in cargo. Term "blasting caps" not being known on submarine no especial investigation made, since it was assumed if explosives involved officer would have added more explanatory remark, such as "dynamite." Signal "leave the ship" was hoisted and boat returned to ship. Entire crew had made preparation to leave and went into boats with hats, overcoats, walking sticks, and packed valises. It was distinctly seen that abandoning of ship had already been taken into consideration and therefore everything was in readiness. After launching, boats had been rowed away to a considerable distance. First intention was to sink ship from leeward but submarine having approached too close after firing two shots in stern other shots fired from windward at distance of about 100 meters. After two or three shells entire steamer suddenly blew up with violent explosion. Falling of main mast and débris did not damage submarine or lifeboats with Americans in spite of proximity. Suspicion arose that Americans had intentionally refrained from mentioning presence of explosives and captain asked how explosives came to be on board. He replied explosion due to "blasting caps" which were composed of dynamite. Two boats then taken in tow and conducted to coast about 50 nautical miles distant. Boats cast off when coast still 3 nautical miles distant, as unknown steamer appeared about 4,000 meters away steering directly for submarine which submerged. Cargo steamer stopped, taking crew Chemung on board and picking up boats. In submitting above report naval section of Austro-Hungarian Ministry of War adds that it should not fail to mention according to its view crew Chemung in any case intended damaging submarine. Minister for Foreign Affairs refers to Austro-Hungarian prize-court order of November 28, 1914, and says:

It is of course understood that a neutral government is at liberty to resort to diplomatic channels if it finds itself unable to accept a decision of the prize court of last instance as satisfactory. The Imperial and Royal Government would be able to take a position in the matter of the treatment of persons found on board a prize because this question does not belong to the competency of the prize courts.

4939. Undoubtedly Ludendorff is ruler of Germany to-day. What his sentiments towards America are, you may know from what Major Nicolai said to Colonel House.

I get from many quarters fairly reliable information that orders have been given for reckless submarine warfare, probably to commence with a blockade of all English ports and sinking of all ships approaching them with possible exception passenger ships carrying no contraband.

Germans firmly believe American people are not behind President and articles to that effect are published. I could better judge situation if you would send me summaries of notes and memorandum lately sent you by Bernstorff.

Foreign Office does not answer my notes inquiring if Americans among prisoners on Yarrowdale.

You know I handled Sussex crisis, breaking usual diplomatic rules, and I might be of use at this time in this situation, which is apparently being handled exclusively in America, if you kept me informed as to Bernstorff's moves and your policy.

Possibly Germans may propose certified American ships carrying no contraband. At one time Zimmermann showed me several drafts of such proposals which I translated for him.

It is possible that Socialist and Liberal parties may issue an appeal to American people on armed merchantmen question. Have also heard that no definite submarine action will be taken until Tarnowski's report arrives here.

Probably Germany will refuse to release Americans brought in on Yarrowdale on ground that they were on armed merchant ships.

WASHINGTON, January 31, 1917.

[Received 4.10 p. m.]

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Your excellency was good enough to transmit to the Imperial Government a copy of the message which the President of the United States of America addressed to the Senate on the 22 instant. The Imperial Government has given it the earnest consideration which the President's statements deserve, inspired as they are by a deep sentiment of responsibility. It is highly gratifying to the Imperial Government to ascertain that the main tendencies of this important statement correspond largely to the desires and principles professed by Germany. These principles especially include self-government and equality of rights for all nations. Germany would be sincerely glad if in recognition of this principle countries like Ireland and India, which do not enjoy the benefits of political independence, should now obtain their freedom. The German people also repudiate all alliances which serve to force the countries into a competition for might and to involve them in a net of selfish intrigues. On the other hand, Germany will gladly cooperate in all efforts to prevent future wars. The freedom of the seas, being a preliminary condition of the free existence of nations and the peaceful intercourse between them, as well as the open door for the commerce of all nations, has always formed part of the leading principles of Germany's political program. All the more the Imperial Government regrets that the attitude of her enemies who are so entirely opposed to peace makes it impossible for the world at present to bring about the realization of these lofty ideals. Germany and her allies were ready to enter now into a discussion of peace and had set down as basis the guaranty of existence, honor, and free development of their peoples. Their aims, as has been expressly stated in the note of December 12, 1916,¹ were not directed towards the destruction or annihilation of their enemies and were according to their conviction perfectly compatible with the rights of the other nations. As to Belgium for which such warm and cordial sympathy is felt in the United States, the Chancellor had declared only a few weeks previously that its annexation had never formed part of Germany's intentions. The peace to be signed with Belgium was to provide for such conditions in that country, with which Germany desires to maintain friendly neighborly relations, that Belgium should not be used again by Germany's enemies for the purpose of instigating continuous hostile intrigues. Such precautionary measures are all the more necessary, as Germany's enemies have repeatedly stated not only in speeches delivered by their leading men, but also in the statutes of the economical conference in Paris, that it is their intention not to treat Germany as an equal, even after peace has been restored, but to continue their hostile attitude and especially to wage a systematical economical war against her.

The attempt of the four allied powers to bring about peace has failed owing to the lust of conquest of their enemies, who desired to dictate the conditions of peace. Under the pretense of following the principle of nationality our enemies have disclosed their real aims in this war, viz. to dismember and dishonor Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey, and Bulgaria. To the wish of reconciliation they oppose the will of destruction. They desire a fight to the bitter end.

A new situation has thus been created which forces Germany to new decisions. Since two years and a half England is using her naval power for a criminal attempt to force Germany into submission by starvation. In brutal contempt of international law the group of powers led by England does not only curtail the legitimate trade of their opponents but they also by ruthless pressure compel neutral countries either to altogether forego every trade not agreeable to the Entente powers or to limit it according to their arbitrary decrees. The American Government knows the steps which have been taken to cause England and her allies to return to the rules of international law and to respect the freedom of the seas. The English Government, however, insists upon continuing its war of starvation, which does not at all affect the military power of its opponents, but compels women and children, the sick and the aged to suffer, for their country, pains and privations which endanger the vitality of the nation. Thus British tyranny mercilessly increases the sufferings of the world indifferent to the laws of humanity, indifferent to the protests of the neutrals whom they severely harm, indifferent even to the silent longing for peace among England's own allies. Each day of the terrible struggle causes new destruction, new sufferings. Each day shortening the war will, on both sides, preserve the life of thousands of brave soldiers and be a benefit to mankind.

The Imperial Government could not justify before its own conscience, before the German people, and before history the neglect of any means destined to bring about the end of the war. Like the President of the United States the Imperial Government had hoped to reach this goal by negotiations. After the attempts to come to an understanding with the Entente powers have been answered by the latter with the announcement of an intensified continuation of the war, the Imperial Government—in order to serve the welfare of mankind in a higher sense and not to wrong its own people—is now compelled to continue the fight for existence, again forced upon it, with the full employment of all the weapons which are at its disposal.

Sincerely trusting that the people and Government of the United States will understand the motives for this decision and its necessity, the Imperial Government hopes that the United States may view the new situation from the lofty heights of impartiality and assist, on their part, to prevent further misery and avoidable sacrifice of human life.

Enclosing two memoranda regarding the details of the contemplated military measures at sea, I remain [etc.]¹

J. BERNSTORFF

MEMORANDUM

After bluntly refusing Germany's peace offer, the Entente powers stated in their note addressed to the American Government that they are determined to continue the war in order to deprive Germany of German provinces in the West and the East, to destroy Austria-Hungary, and to annihilate Turkey. In waging war with such aims, the Entente allies are violating all rules of international law, as they prevent the legitimate trade of neutrals with the Central powers, and of the neutrals among themselves. Germany has, so far, not made unrestricted use of the weapon which she possesses in her submarines. Since the Entente powers, however, have made it impossible to come to an understanding based upon equality of rights of all nations, as proposed by the Central powers, and have instead declared only such a peace to be possible which shall be dictated by the Entente allies and shall result in the destruction and humiliation of the Central powers, Germany is unable further to forego the full use of her submarines. The Imperial Government, therefore, does not doubt that the Government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the Entente allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the Central powers, and that the Government of the United States will further realize that the now openly disclosed intentions of the Entente allies give back to Germany the freedom of action which she reserved in her note addressed to the Government of the United States on May 4, 1916.²

Under these circumstances Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc., etc. All ships met within that zone will be sunk.

I beg to direct attention to the enclosed memorandum for the details of the proposed measures of war on the seas and to give expression at the same time to the expectation that the American Government will warn American vessels against entering the proscribed areas described in the enclosure, and warn its nationals not to confide passengers or goods to vessels touching ports in the proscribed areas (File No. 763.72/3182).

² Foreign Relations, 1916, Supplement, p. 257.

The Imperial Government is confident that this measure will result in a speedy termination of the war and in the restoration of peace which the Government of the United States has so much at heart. Like the Government of the United States, Germany and her allies had hoped to reach this goal by negotiations. Now that the war, through the fault of Germany's enemies, has to be continued, the Imperial Government feels sure that the Government of the United States will understand the necessity of adopting such measures as are destined to bring about a speedy end of the horrible and useless bloodshed. The Imperial Government hopes all the more for such an understanding of her position, as the neutrals have under the pressure of the Entente powers, suffered great losses, being forced by them either to give up their entire trade or to limit it according to conditions arbitrarily determined by Germany's enemies in violation of international law.

MEMORANDUM

From February 1, 1917, all sea traffic will be stopped with every available weapon and without further notice in the following blockade zones around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the Eastern Mediterranean.

In the North: The zone is confined by a line at a distance of 20 sea miles along the Dutch coast to Terschelling fire [light?] ship, the degree of longitude from Terschelling fire [light?] ship to Udsire, a line from there across the point 62° N. 0° longitude to 62° N. 5° W., further to a point 3 sea miles south of the southern point of the Faroe Islands, from there across point 62° N. 10° W. to 61° N. 15° W., then 57° N. 20° W. to 47° N. 20° W., further to 43° N. 15° W., then along the degree of latitude 43° N. to 20 sea miles from Cape Finisterre and at a distance of 20 sea miles along the north coast of Spain to the French boundary.

In the South: The Mediterranean. For neutral ships remains open: The sea west of the line Pt. del'Espiquette to 38° 20' N. and 6° E., also north and west of a zone 61 sea miles wide along the North African coast, beginning at 2° longitude west. For the connection of this sea zone with Greece there is provided a zone of a width of 20 sea miles north and east of the following line: 38° N. and 6° E. to 38° N. and 10° E. to 37° N. and 11° 30' E. to 34° N. and 11° 30' E. to 34° N. and 22° 30' E.

From there leads a zone 20 sea miles wide west of 22° 30' eastern longitude into Greek territorial waters.

Neutral ships navigating these blockade zones do so at their own risk. Although care has been taken, that neutral ships which are on their way toward ports of the blockade zones on February 1, 1917, and have come in the vicinity of the latter, will be spared during a sufficiently long period it is strongly advised to warn them with all available means in order to cause their return.

Neutral ships which on February 1, are in ports of the blockaded zones, can, with the same safety, leave them if they sail before February 5, 1917, and take the shortest route into safe waters.

The instructions given to the commanders of German submarines provide for a sufficiently long period during which the safety of passengers on unarmed enemy passenger ships is guaranteed.

Americans, en route to the blockade zone on enemy freight steamers, are not endangered, as the enemy shipping firms can prevent such ships in time from entering the zone.

Sailing of regular American passenger steamers may continue undisturbed after February 1, 1917, if—

- (a) the port of destination is Falmouth.
- (b) sailing to or coming from that port course is taken via the Scilly Islands and a point 50° N. 20° W.
- (c) the steamers are marked in the following way which must not be allowed to other vessels in American ports: On ships' hull and superstructure 3 vertical stripes 1 meter wide each to be painted alternately white and red. Each mast should show a large flag checkered white and red, and the stern the American national flag.
Care should be taken that, during dark, national flag and painted marks are easily recognizable from a distance and that the boats are well lighted throughout.
- (d) one steamer a week sails in each direction with arrival at Falmouth on Sunday and departure from Falmouth on Wednesday.
- (e) the United States Government guarantees that no contraband (according to German contraband list) is carried by those steamers.

There is no doubt but that Germany believes that Americans are a fat, rich race without sense of honor and ready to stand for anything in order to keep out of war and Americans in Germany . . . have encouraged them in this belief. The Germans think and newspapers have published that the President's peace moves are inspired by fear only. Please do not give out my conversation with Zimmermann which was confidential. January 31, [1917].

The undersigned, Minister of the Imperial and Royal Household and of Foreign Affairs, had the honor to receive the communication of the 22d instant in which his excellency Frederic Courtland Penfield, had the kindness to communicate the message which the President of the United States of America addressed to the American Senate on the same day.

The Imperial and Royal Government did not fail to subject to an attentive consideration the contents of this significant manifestation full of high moral earnestness. It does not fail to recognize the sublime aims which the President had in view but before all else must point out that Mr. Wilson's desire to pave the way for a permanent peace appears even now frustrated through the rejection which the offer of peace by Austria-Hungary and its allies has experienced at the hand of the enemy.

In August, 1914, Austria-Hungary and its allies took up the struggle which was forced upon them. The consciousness that it was a question of time, defense of their existence and vital interests, gave them strength to withstand the numerical superiority of their enemies and to achieve successes which those of the adversary can not approach. In 30 months of war these successes have been strengthened and increased. In the same measure in which the enemy's plans of conquest have come to naught, Austria-Hungary and its allies were able to consider their purely defensive aims as achieved. This moderate conception and the wish to avoid further useless bloodshed led to the peace offer of the four allied powers. Their adversaries blinded by the delusion that they can even yet give a favorable turn to the course of events and annihilate us have bluntly rejected this offer. They have demanded terms for the conclusion of peace which would assume the complete overthrow of the four allied powers and annihilation for their aims.

God and the world are witness as to who bears the guilt for the continuation of the war. In view of the intention of the enemy to conquer the armies of Austria-Hungary and its allies, to destroy their fleets and starve their peoples, the struggle must take its course on land and sea with all, even the sharpest weapons. The increased use of all means of warfare alone makes a shortening of the war possible. The enemies have already been intent upon stopping the maritime traffic of Austria-Hungary and its allies and preventing all importation by these powers. As on the other seas, so also in the Adriatic they have torpedoed without previous warning hospital ships such as the Elektra and unarmed passenger steamers such as the Duřrownik, the Biokovo, the Daniel Ernoe, and the Zagreb. Austria-Hungary and its allies of their part will henceforth apply the same method in that they will cut off Great Britain, France, and Italy from all maritime traffic and for the accomplishment of their purpose will from February 1, 1917, prevent by every means any navigation whatsoever within a definite closed area.

[Here follows a declaration regarding areas closed to commerce in terms identical with those of the second memorandum enclosed with the German Ambassador's note of January 31, excepting the special proposals therein made concerning American passenger ships.]

This decision has also been made by Austria-Hungary with the intention of shortening the struggle by effective means of warfare and approaching a peace for which it, as distinguished from its opponents, contemplates moderate conditions which are not guided by ideas of destruction now as hitherto animated by the intention that the ultimate aim of this war is not one of conquest but the free assured development of its own as well as of other states.

Sustained by the confidence in the proved valor and efficiency of their military and naval forces and steeled by the necessity to frustrate the destructive designs of the enemy, Austria-Hungary and its allies enter upon this forthcoming earnest phase of the struggle with bitter determination, but also with the certainty that it will lead to successes which will finally decide the struggle of years and thereby justify the sacrifice of wealth and blood.

In requesting his excellency the Ambassador of the United States of America to be good enough to communicate the foregoing to the Government of the United States of America the undersigned avails himself [etc.]

WASHINGTON, February 3, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: In acknowledging the note with accompanying memoranda, which you delivered into my hands on the afternoon of January 31, and which announced the purpose of your Government as to the future conduct of submarine warfare, I would direct your attention to the following statements appearing in the correspondence which has passed between the Government of the United States and the Imperial German Government in regard to submarine warfare.

This Government on April 18, 1916, in presenting the case of the Sussex, declared—

If it is still the purpose of the Imperial Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether.

In reply to the note from which the above declaration is quoted your excellency's Government stated in a note dated May 4, 1916—

The German Government, guided by this idea, notifies the Government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders: In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.

But neutrals can not expect that Germany, forced to fight for her existence, shall, for the sake of neutral interests, restrict the use of an effective weapon if her enemy is permitted to continue to apply at will methods of warfare violating the rules of international law. Such a demand would be incompatible with the character of neutrality, and the German Government is convinced that the Government of the United States does not think of making such a demand.

knowing that the Government of the United States has repeatedly declared that it is determined to restore the principle of the freedom of the seas, from whatever quarter it has been violated.

To this reply this Government made answer on May 8, 1916, in the following language—

The Government of the United States feels it necessary to state that it takes it for granted that the Imperial German Government does not intend to imply that the maintenance of its newly announced policy is in any way contingent upon the course or result of diplomatic negotiations between the Government of the United States and any other belligerent government, notwithstanding the fact that certain passages in the Imperial Government's note of the 4th instant might appear to be susceptible of that construction. In order, however, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the Government of the United States notifies the Imperial Government that it can not for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of citizens of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other government affecting the rights of neutrals and noncombatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint; absolute, not relative.

To this Government's note of May 8 no reply was made by the Imperial Government.

In one of the memoranda accompanying the note under acknowledgment, after reciting certain alleged illegal measures adopted by Germany's enemies, this statement appears—

The Imperial Government, therefore, does not doubt that the Government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the Entente allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the Central powers, and that the Government of the United States will further realize that the now openly disclosed intentions of the Entente allies give back to Germany the freedom of action which she reserved in her note addressed to the Government of the United States on May 4, 1916.

Under these circumstances Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc., etc. All ships met within the zone will be sunk.

In view of this declaration, which withdraws suddenly and without prior intimation the solemn assurance given in the Imperial Government's note of May 4, 1916, this Government has no alternative consistent with the dignity and honor of the United States but to take the course which it explicitly announced in its note of April 18, 1916, it would take in the event that the Imperial Government did not declare and effect an abandonment of the methods of submarine warfare then employed and to which the Imperial Government now purpose again to resort.

The President has, therefore, directed me to announce to your excellency that all diplomatic relations between the United States and the German Empire are severed, and that the American Ambassador at Berlin will be immediately withdrawn, and in accordance with such announcement to deliver to your excellency your passports.

[Circular Telegram]

WASHINGTON, February 3, 1917, 1 p. m.

You are instructed to notify immediately the Government to which you are accredited that this Government, in view of the recent announcement of the German Government of its intention to renew indiscriminate submarine warfare, has no alternative but to pursue the course laid down in its note to the German Government on April 18, 1916.¹ It will, therefore, recall the American Ambassador and his suite at Berlin and will forthwith deliver to the German Ambassador here passports for him and his suite.

You will also say that the President is reluctant to believe that Germany will actually carry out the threats made against neutral commerce, but, if it is done, the President will ask from Congress authority to use the national power to protect American citizens engaged in peaceable and lawful errands on the high seas. The course taken is, in the view of the President, in entire conformity with the principles enunciated by him in his address to the Senate on January 12 [22nd],² and he therefore believes that it will make for the peace of the world if the other neutral powers can find it possible to take similar action to that taken by this Government.

Immediately make full report by telegraph of the reception of this announcement and of suggestion as to similar action.

Address of the President of the United States to Congress, February 3, 1917

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: The Imperial German Government on the 31st of January announced to this Government and to the governments of the other neutral nations that on and after the 1st day of February, the present month, it would adopt a policy with regard to the use of submarines against all shipping seeking to pass through certain designated areas of the high seas to which it is clearly my duty to call your attention.

Let me remind the Congress that on the 18th of April last, in view of the sinking on the 24th of March of the cross-channel passenger steamer Sussex by a German submarine, without summons or warning, and the consequent loss of the lives of several citizens of the United States who were passengers aboard her, this Government addressed a note to the Imperial German Government in which it made the following declaration:

If it is still the purpose of the Imperial Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether.

In reply to this declaration the Imperial German Government gave this Government the following assurance:

The German Government is prepared to do its utmost to confine the operations of war for the rest of its duration to the fighting forces of the belligerents, thereby also insuring the freedom of the seas, a principle upon which the German Government believes, now as before, to be in agreement with the Government of the United States.

The German Government, guided by this idea, notifies the Government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders: In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.

But (it added) neutrals can not expect that Germany, forced to fight for her existence, shall, for the sake of neutral interest, restrict the use of an effective weapon if her enemy is permitted to continue to apply at will methods of warfare violating the rules of international law. Such a demand would be incompatible with the character of neutrality, and the German Government is convinced that the Government of the United States does not think of making such a demand, knowing that the Government of the United States has repeatedly declared that it is determined to restore the principle of the freedom of the seas, from whatever quarter it has been violated.

To this the Government of the United States replied on the 8th of May, accepting, of course, the assurances given, but adding:

The Government of the United States feels it necessary to state that it takes it for granted that the Imperial German Government does not intend to imply that the maintenance of its newly announced policy is in any way contingent upon the course or result of diplomatic negotiations between the Government of the United States and any other belligerent government, notwithstanding the fact that certain passages in the Imperial Government's note of the 4th instant might appear to be susceptible of that construction. In order, however, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the Government of the United States notifies the Imperial Government that it can not for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of citizens of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other government affecting the rights of neutrals and noncombatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint; absolute, not relative.

To this note of the 8th of May the Imperial German Government made no reply.

On the 31st of January, the Wednesday of the present week, the German Ambassador handed to the Secretary of State, along with a formal note, a memorandum which contains the following statement:

The Imperial Government, therefore, does not doubt that the Government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the Entente allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the Central powers, and that the Government of the United States will further realize that the new openly disclosed intentions of the Entente allies give back to Germany the freedom of action which she reserved in her note addressed to the Government of the United States on May 4, 1916.

Under these circumstances Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the Eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc., etc. All ships met within the zone will be sunk.

I think that you will agree with me that, in view of this declaration, which suddenly and without prior intimation of any kind deliberately withdraws the solemn assurance given in the Imperial Government's note of the 4th of May, 1916, this Government has no alternative consistent with the dignity and honour of the United States but to take the course which, in its note of the 18th of April, 1916, it announced that it would take in the event that the German Government did not declare and effect an abandonment of the methods of submarine warfare which it was then employing and to which it now purposes again to resort.

I have, therefore, directed the Secretary of State to announce to his excellency the German Ambassador that all diplomatic relations between the United States and the German Empire are severed, and that the American Ambassador at Berlin will immediately be withdrawn; and, in accordance with this decision, to hand to his excellency his passports.

Notwithstanding this unexpected action of the German Government, this sudden and deeply deplorable renunciation of its assurances given this Government at one of the most critical moments of tension in the relations of the two Governments, I refuse to believe that it is the intention of the German authorities to do in fact what they have warned us they will feel at liberty to do. I can not bring myself to believe that they will indeed pay no regard to the ancient friendship between their people and our own or to the solemn obligations which have been exchanged between them and destroy American ships and take the lives of American citizens in the wilful prosecution of the ruthless naval programme they have announced their intention to adopt. Only actual overt acts on their part can make me believe it even now.

If this inveterate confidence on my part in the sobriety and prudent foresight of their purpose should unhappily prove unfounded; if American ships and American lives should in fact be sacrificed by their naval commanders in heedless contravention of the just and reasonable understandings of international law and the obvious dictates of humanity, I shall take the liberty of coming again before the Congress, to ask that authority be given me to use any means that may be necessary for the protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas. I can do nothing less. I take it for granted that all neutral governments will take the same course.

We do not desire any hostile conflict with the Imperial German Government. We are the sincere friends of the German people and earnestly desire to remain at peace with the Government which speaks for them. We shall not believe that they are hostile to us unless and until we are obliged to believe it; and we purpose nothing more than the reasonable defense of the undoubted rights of our people. We wish to serve no selfish ends. We seek merely to stand true alike in thought and in action to the immemorial principles of our people which I sought to express in my address to the Senate only two weeks ago—seek merely to vindicate our right to liberty and justice and an unmolested life. These are the bases of peace, not war. God grant we may not be challenged to defend them by acts of wilful injustice on the part of the Government of Germany!

Austria-Hungary and her allies were forced to commence the indiscriminate submarine warfare because the Entente declined the negotiations for peace on the basis proposed by Mr. Wilson, the basis that there were to be no victors and no vanquished. Austria-Hungary did not cease to point out to Mr. Wilson that she would be always ready to commence negotiations for peace on the basis above mentioned if the guarantees for it would be given. 4994. Chancellor sent for me last night at 6 and I was with Zimmermann at supper later for two hours. Both seemed very much worried over attitude America and continually asked me for news and begged me to help keep peace. Chancellor said the Allies had refused to make peace when Germany wanted to and that President had Germany's peace terms, and so there was nothing left to do but use all means at hand. I said that member of Reichstag had told me that matter might be arranged if food allowed in. Chancellor said it was too late, and that nothing but peace on admirably modest terms would do. I finally got him to tell me what those terms are: Germany to give up Belgium but retaining so-called guaranties such as railroads, forts, a garrison, ports, commercial control, etc.; a slice of France through rectification of frontier; will only give back a small part of Serbia, and Bulgaria can do as she likes with Roumania and everybody must pay indemnities to Germany, etc. If Bernstorff has given President any other terms he is fooling him, but do not quote me to Bernstorff.

Zimmermann said he had often thought of telling me of the pending action in the 10 days before February 1, but knew I would only say it was impossible and would lead to a break, but that they hoped by taking the action first that we would stand for it as the situation had been altered by the peace talk and anyway that we wanted peace.

Suggest if you decide make any threats threaten war. Germans not afraid of break of diplomatic relations which simply means they can go ahead and do what they please and attack us if they win. Chancellor spoke of the great hatred the military and naval people have for America. Even if there is war German military calculate they can starve England before America can do anything. The Ambassador in Spain (Willard) to the Secretary of State

MADRID, February 6, 1917, 11 p. m.

[Received 11 p. m.]

331. Minister for Foreign Affairs at 7 p. m. handed me following copy of reply of Spanish Government to German note of January 31 [for] immediate telegraphic transmission to the Department. The Minister stated that the covering note verbale delivered to me at the same time in reply to Department's circular February 3, 1 p. m., had been cabled Spanish Ambassador, Washington, for transmission to the Department:¹

His Majesty's Government has examined carefully the note which Your Serene Highness was so kind as to deliver to me on January 31st last, announcing the firm intention of the German Government to interrupt, beginning on the day following, all maritime traffic, without other warning and by use of all weapons, around Great Britain, France, and in the eastern Mediterranean, and I should add that its reception has produced a very painful impression.

The correct attitude of neutrality which Spain adopted at the beginning and in which she has maintained herself with unshakable firmness and loyalty gives her the right to claim that the lives of her subjects occupied in maritime commerce shall not be placed in such grave danger; and that this commerce shall not be injured or reduced to such an extent, throughout the zones within which the Imperial Government must struggle in order to reach its aims, by the use of all weapons and by abandoning all the limitations which it has imposed upon itself up to the present time in its method of naval warfare.

Even before the Imperial Government abandoned these limitations the Government of His Majesty protested, as it did not consider them

¹Apparently not received from him; the following translation was forwarded by the Ambassador in Spain as enclosure to his despatch No. 551, Feb. 7 [received Mar. 9] (File No. 763.72/3460):

The Government of His Majesty has received with lively interest the indication contained in the last part of the circular, directed by the Department of State at Washington to the American representatives in the neutral countries, a copy of which his excellency Mr. Willard was so kind as to hand to the Minister of State on February 5.

The reply given to-day by the Government of His Majesty to the note of Germany of January 31, a reply whose sense and general lines were agreed upon in the Council of Ministers of the 4th instant, defines clearly the only attitude which the Government of His Majesty has considered it possible to adopt, taking into account the actual situation of Spain, and the development of its international life in this war.

sufficient to excuse the fulfillment of the conditions of international law: but at the putting into effect the method of war that Germany announces to an extent unfavorable and without precedent, the Spanish Government, taking into account the rights and duties of its neutrality, must present with the greatest right its protest of the Imperial Government, calmly as well as firmly, making at the same time the necessary reservations which the legitimate presumption of the unavoidable responsibility contracted by the Imperial Government, chiefly on account of the loss of lives which must follow its attitude, imposes.

The Government of His Majesty bases its protest on the statement that, to close completely the route of certain seas, substituting the right of capture (undeniable at times) for a pretended right of destruction in every case, is beyond the legal principles of international life; and above all and more than anything to extend the meaning of this right to the destruction, in the form announced, to the life of noncombatants, subjects of a neutral nation like Spain, is contrary to those other principles observed by all nations even in the moments of greatest violence.

If the German Government, as it says, trusts that the Spanish people and its Government will not refuse to listen to the reasons of its decisions and its necessity, hoping that they will cooperate on their part to avoid greater misery and greater sacrifice of human life, it should understand also that the Spanish Government, disposed to offer at the opportune moment its initiative to support and everything that it has to contribute to the coming of a peace which is every day more desired, can not admit as legitimate an exceptional method of war, by which, in spite of its rights as a neutral and its care in fulfilling the duties incumbent upon it in this respect, makes difficult and even hinders the maritime traffic of Spain, compromising her economic existence, and seriously endangering the life of her subjects.

The Government of His Majesty, firmer than ever in the justice that supports it, does not doubt but that the Imperial Government will be inspired by the sentiments of friendship which unite the two countries and will find, within the several needs of the terrible modern war, means by which to satisfy the claim of Spain, based on the unavoidable duty which obliges its Government to protect the life of its subjects and to maintain the integrity of its sovereignty in order that the course of its international existence may not be interrupted and in which it feels itself supported by reason and right.

said that in view of the close cooperation hitherto between the two countries, as well as of the added moral weight which his Government's support of the President's suggestion would lend it, I hoped he could inform me that the Norwegian Government would take action similar to that taken by the Government of the United States. Minister for Foreign Affairs said that in a special meeting of the Cabinet it had been decided to limit the action of the Norwegian Government for the present to a joint energetic protest with the other Scandinavian countries until it could be seen how the German submarine campaign develops. On my inquiring as to the intention of the Norwegian Government if German threats were carried out to the detriment of Norwegian merchant marine, his excellency said that in this case further decisions would be taken jointly with Sweden and Denmark. It seems clear that this Government's attitude toward the President's suggestion is determined by the grave danger from the south inherent in Norway's geographical position.

5616. To the Secretary and President. I called on the Prime Minister yesterday. In a private unofficial talk he said that it would be an affectation to conceal his pleasure at our diplomatic break with Germany. He began immediately to talk about the probability of war following. I reminded him that the United States is arranging peace and that war was not in my vocabulary. He replied that it was well to look a little ahead in a private conversation. He hoped that in no event would our supply of ammunition to the Allies be curtailed, that a much larger supply of steel could be got from the United States which munition factories here badly need, and he asked earnestly about our merchant shipbuilding activities. "Are your shipyards on the Great Lakes doing their utmost? Vast numbers of small ships are now needed and whoever owns a ship can get rich and this condition will not soon change." I reminded him that supplies for belligerents concerned the belligerents, shipbuilding, private concerns in the United States, and not our Government. But such reminders in no way stopped his rapid talk. He continued: "If you are drawn into the war I shall be glad for many reasons but especially because your Government will then participate in the conference that concludes peace. I especially desire this because of your President's cool and patient and humane counsel which will be wholesome for us all." Then he asked, "Is there any way we can serve you? I have already directed our Army Chief of Staff (Robertson) and the first Sea Lord (Jellicoe) to give you all possible information out of our experience that you may ask for. You will find them communicative to you at any time," and he asked if any other departments of his Government could serve us, "if so come and see me at any time and I will open the way." Perhaps you will send me definite suggestions or instructions on this point.

. . . Public as well as official opinion continues to become more cordial. It has not lacked in essence of friendliness, but it was becoming fearful lest we should wander from the road of practical action. Now both the Government and the press understand and heartily appreciate your whole wise and patient course. I think the expectation is general that the Germans will force war on us, but even if they should not, they regard our present attitude with genuine but restrained satisfaction.

330. For communication to the President. In an audience of an hour and a half with His Majesty this morning I was informed that in reply to Germany's note of January 31, Spain will protest against Germany's declaration as interfering with Spain's maritime rights. This protest will apparently ignore the rights of neutrals in general and applies solely to the injustice and injury with which Spain is thereby threatened. In response to my inquiry His Majesty stated that Spain would not break off diplomatic relations with, or declare war, Germany even in the event that Spanish boats were repeatedly sunk without warning and Spanish lives lost. His Majesty said that as Spain was now the sole remaining neutral nation of influence and power, that she represented or would represent a large portion of the world's interest at various belligerent capitals, and that in the interest of humanity she would sink her individuality as a nation in the greater interests involved. However, tone of note may be changed as public opinion here is now much confused and may yet exert decided influence. Shall probably telegraph Department again this afternoon after interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs at 7 o'clock.¹

My general impression from this audience is that His Majesty desires to attain a position of great prominence in eventual peace negotiations.

His Majesty then stated that his Government would have supported the President's so-called peace note if the Spanish Government had been consulted in advance. His Majesty referred with some feeling to the fact that his communication to the President—see Embassy's telegram 240, May 10, midnight [May 11, noon]¹—was not replied to until Department's telegram 172, August 23, 10 a. m.,² and that after his suggestion therein contained, he had anticipated an intimation in advance of any further step in this direction on the part of the President or the Government of the United States.

The Admiralty doubts whether the Germans have as many as 150 submarines in all. In spite of present submarine successes they feel sure of destroying [enough] in a reasonable time to make the sea comparatively safe. Winston Churchill informs me that he has had a careful mathematical study made of whole problem which demonstrates conclusively to him that the submarines must fail to embarrass shipping very seriously for any considerable period. With reference to your letter of February 5, by which you were good enough to communicate to the Royal Government the opinion of President Wilson that it would tend towards peace to adopt, with regard to the new blockade proclaimed by the Germans, action similar to that of the Government of the United States of America, I have the honor to bring to your knowledge the following:

The policy followed by the Royal Government during the war has been one of strictly impartial neutrality. The Royal Government has done everything in its power faithfully to fulfil all the duties which this policy imposes upon it and at the same time it has rendered effective as far as possible the rights derived therefrom.

With a view to obtaining a practical result in upholding the principles of international law, the Royal Government has several times addressed itself to neutral powers in order to effect cooperation with the aforesaid object in view. Above all the Royal Government has not failed to submit to the Government of the United States of America a proposal to this effect.

The Royal Government has observed with regret that the interests of the United States have not permitted her to accept these proposals. The steps thus taken by the Royal Government have led to a system of common measures between Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, with regard to the two belligerent groups.

In the policy followed by the Royal Government in order to maintain its neutrality and to safeguard the legitimate rights of the country, the Royal Government, alive to the indescribable sufferings which from day to day oppress more cruelly all humanity, is ready to seize every opportunity which offers itself in order to contribute to the realization of a near and durable peace.

Consequently it hastened to associate itself with the noble step taken by the President with a view to examining the possibility of instituting negotiations between the belligerents.

The proposal which forms the object of the present correspondence has as an aim the shortening of the evils of the war, but the Government of the United States has chosen as a means of arriving at this end a method absolutely contrary to the principles which have guided the policy of the Royal Government up to the present hour.

The Royal Government supported by public opinion, confirmed by the unanimous resolutions of the country's representatives, intends to follow in the future, as in the past, the policy of neutrality and impartiality towards both belligerent groups and it is not disposed to abandon this policy unless the vital interests of the country and the dignity of the nation oblige her to do so.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Swiss Minister just called and left with me the answer of the Swiss Government to the President's note, which merely states their position.¹

He also gave me a suggestion of an agreement he communicated for the German Government which would construe the treaty of 1799.² This can wait.

After he had presented these two documents, he said he had just received a telegram from the Swiss Government which was an answer to a suggestion made by him that he might be able to do something here to prevent war between Germany and this country. I took down the part of the telegram he read, which was as follows:

They, the German Government, "will be willing to negotiate on any point the United States may ask provided (or except) that the blockade against England be maintained."

I pointed out that this seemed to imply that they would be satisfied with a blockade against England alone. He said he did not know anything about that; he had merely read the message as given in the telegram. I said of course I could not speak for you, but it seemed to me at first glance that they had excepted the one question on which the President had based his breaking off of diplomatic relations.

I asked if he had any suggestions and he said he had none, but he thought possibly something might be discovered which would save the situation, or that we might think of some point that we wished to discuss.

I told him I would submit the matter to you at once, so you could take it up with the President if you thought it desirable.

BERNE, February 10, 1917, 10 a. m.

[Received February 11, 12.20 p. m.]

501. Referring to my telegram No. 488 of February 5, noon.¹ I have received from Dr. Hoffman, Chief of the Swiss Political Department, a supplementary and definitive reply to my note of February 4. The following is a translation of this reply:

Mr. Minister: By my note of February 5,¹ I had the honor to inform your excellency that before determining definitely in regard to the declarations of the German Government relative to the blockade, the Swiss Federal Council desired to enter into communication with the other neutral states of Europe which are in situation analogous to that of Switzerland. I added that the Federal Council desired first to draw the attention of President Wilson to Switzerland's peculiar attitude prescribed by its principles as a state of complete and perpetual neutrality, principles founded on its constitution, on ancient traditions, and on the will of its people.

The Federal Council today can only refer to Switzerland's declaration of neutrality dated April [August] 4, 1914, of which all foreign governments were informed at the time of its promulgation. On that date the Federal Assembly and the Federal Council announced their firm determination not to deviate in any manner whatsoever from the principles of neutrality, so highly cherished by the Swiss people and in such perfect conformity with their aspirations, with their institutions, with Switzerland's situation in regard to other states, and which the guaranteeing powers expressly recognized in 1815. This is the reason the Federal Council and the Federal Assembly have expressly declared that, during the duration of the war, the Swiss confederation will maintain and will defend its neutrality and the inviolability of its territory by all the means in its power.

The events of the present war have fortified the Federal Council in its conviction of the necessity for the maintenance of a strict and loyal neutrality and have furnished the proof that, today as in 1815, the true interests of European politics are furthered by the entity and independence of Switzerland. Switzerland will maintain this neutrality so long as the independence and integrity of its territory, its honor, and its vital interests are not attacked.

The Federal Council must again draw the attention of President Wilson to the unusual geographical situation of Switzerland entirely surrounded by belligerents, and which would certainly become, the moment that Switzerland ceased to be neutral, the theater of the general war.

Regardless of how difficult Switzerland's economic situation may become because of the threatened blockade and regardless of the degree in which the effective execution [of] the blockade may run counter to the principles of international law, the Federal Council can not however decide to follow President Wilson in his demarches regarding the Imperial German Government which have been made necessary by a state of affairs entirely special. Consequently the Federal Council has confined itself to a protest and has reserved all its legal rights resulting from the execution of the blockade announced by the Imperial Government should this blockade prove to be contrary to neutral rights as recognized by the general principles of international law. In particular the Federal Council has reserved all its legal rights in the event that the effective execution of the blockade proving incomplete, should the means used by Germany and its allies result in the destruction of Swiss citizens or of Swiss property.

In submitting the present communication to your excellency in reply to your note of February 4, 1917, I take this occasion to present to you assurances of my high consideration.

505. The following is the reply of the Swiss Government to the German note threatening indiscriminate submarine warfare. A similar reply mutatis mutandis has been addressed to the Government of Austria-Hungary. After repeating the substance of the German note the Swiss reply states:

The Imperial Government could not fail to notice that the measures stated in its note constitute a grave encroachment upon the rights of peaceful trading granted Switzerland as a neutral nation by international law.

The blockade of practically all the ports upon which Switzerland depends constitutes, indeed, a serious menace for the maintenance of our supplies of food and raw material as well as of our exports abroad. Even if, by a friendly agreement with the French Government, the port of Certe, outside the blockaded zone, be used, transportation by sea is limited to such an extent that the most serious damage will be done to our economic welfare.

The blockade established by the Imperial Government follows a series of measures taken by both groups of belligerents in the course of the war by which, in contradiction to international law and international agreements, our economic life has been restricted and against which we have raised our voice in vain. Under all these circumstances the blockade is rendered all the more pressing and grave.

The Federal Council, therefore, is obliged to protest with energy and to reserve all its legal rights against the blockade announced by the Imperial Government and its execution in so far as the rights of neutrals, as recognized by the principles of international law, may be violated. Especially in case the actual enforcement of the blockade should prove incomplete, the Federal Council reserves all its legal rights should Swiss citizens or property be destroyed by the measures applied by Germany and its allies.

The Federal Council, moreover, does not doubt that the German Government will do everything necessary to assure, as far as possible, the security of Swiss citizens and to avoid the painful consequences which the blockade may cause to the economic life of Switzerland.

1551. In the American note of December 6, 1915,¹ to the Austro-Hungarian Government in the Ancona case, this Government called attention to the views of the Government of the United States on the operations of submarines in naval warfare which had been expressed in no uncertain terms to the ally of Austria-Hungary, and of which full knowledge on the part of the Austro-Hungarian Government was presumed. In its reply of December 15, 1915,¹ the Imperial and Royal Government stated that it was not possessed with authentic knowledge of all of the pertinent correspondence of the United States, nor was it of the opinion that such knowledge would be sufficient to cover the Ancona case, which was of essentially a different character from those under discussion with the Berlin Government. Nevertheless, in reply to the American note of December 19, 1915,² the Austro-Hungarian Government in its note of December 29,³ stated:

as concerns the principle expressed in the very esteemed note that hostile private ships, in so far as they do not flee or offer resistance, may not be destroyed without the persons on board having been placed in safety, the Imperial and Royal Government is able substantially to assent to this view of the Washington Cabinet.

Moreover, in the case of the Persia, the Austro-Hungarian Government in January, 1916, stated in effect that, while it had received no information with regard to the sinking of the Persia, yet, in case its responsibility was involved, the Government would be guided by the principles agreed to in the Ancona case.⁴

Within one month thereafter, the Imperial and Royal Government, coincidentally with the German declaration of February 10, 1916, on the treatment of armed merchantmen, announced that "All merchant vessels armed with cannon for whatever purpose, by this very fact lose the character of peaceable vessels," and that "under these conditions orders have been given to Austro-Hungarian naval forces to treat such ships as belligerent vessels."⁵

In accordance with this declaration, several vessels with Americans on board have been sunk in the Mediterranean, presumably by Austrian submarines, some of which were torpedoed without warning by submarines flying the Austrian flag, as in the cases of the British steamers Secondo and Welsh Prince. Inquiries made through the American Ambassador at Vienna as to these cases have, so far, elicited no information and no reply.

Again, on January 31, 1917, coincidentally with the German declaration of submarine danger-zones in waters washing the coasts of the Entente countries, the Imperial and Royal Government announced

to the United States Government that Austria-Hungary and its allies would from February 1, "prevent by every means any navigation whatsoever within a definite closed area."¹

From the foregoing it seems fair to conclude that the pledge given in the Ancona case and confirmed in the Persia case is essentially the same as that given in the note of the Imperial German Government dated May 4, 1916,² viz.:

In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as a naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance, and that this pledge has been modified to a greater or less extent by the declarations of the Imperial and Royal Government of February 10, 1916, and January 31, 1917. In view, therefore, of the uncertainty as to the interpretation to be placed upon those declarations, and particularly this later declaration, it is important that the United States Government be advised definitely and clearly of the attitude of the Imperial and Royal Government in regard to the prosecution of submarine warfare in these circumstances.

Please bring this matter orally to the attention of the Austrian Government and request to be advised as to whether the pledge given in the Ancona and Persia cases is to be interpreted as modified or withdrawn by the declarations of February 10, 1916, and January 31, 1917. If after your conversation it seems advisable, you may hand to the Minister for Foreign Affairs a paraphrase of this instruction, leaving the quoted texts verbatim.

2479. Your 3328, February 5, 7 p. m., just received.¹ My telegram February 6, 11 a. m., through the Danish Foreign Office and my 2475, February 8, 9 p. m., via Berne.² Our relations with Turkey remain normal and perhaps more friendly than for some time past. General feeling would for the present indicate that unless compelled by Germany, Turkey desires to continue these relations. On the 13th instant I am giving a dinner in honor of the new Grand Vizier to which I have invited several cabinet ministers and all heads of diplomatic missions except German. Seeing all this and upon my assurance, all Americans here keep cool and calm.

Persistent unconfirmed and unofficial rumors here that in spite of German domination in Turkey, relations between the Sublime Porte and Germany are far from being cordial especially since Talaat became Grand Vizier, and it is even rumored that in case of hostilities between America and Germany, Turkey would not declare war against America. But these rumors should be accepted with the greatest reserve as they may have been spread purposely to mislead us. On the other hand it may be significant that Djavid who was Minister of Finance when Turkey entered the war and who was one of the four ministers who, as then stated, resigned their respective portfolios as a [protest?] has now been offered the portfolio of finance and has accepted it, as rumored, on condition of cabinet modifying extreme nationalistic policy including improvement of treatment of non-Turkish and non-Moslem elements.

I have suggested Porte to formally notify me of Fuad's appointment as Ambassador at Washington and to request that safe-conduct

The Minister in Switzerland (Stovall) to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

BERNE, February 19, 1917, 12 noon.

[Received February 20, 7 a. m.]

545. The press of the French-speaking cantons of Switzerland has criticized the Swiss Minister at Washington for his activities in behalf of the German offer to secure, without withdrawing the threat of indiscriminate submarine warfare, a renewal of diplomatic relations with the United States.¹ The basis of these criticisms is that it is not clear that Doctor Ritter's proposal originated with the German Government in the form in which it was presented by him. A semi-official communiqué issued yesterday in Berne reads as follows:

The steps taken by Minister Ritter at Washington, tending to a renewal of negotiations between the German Government and that of the United States, have been undertaken without instructions from the Swiss Federal Council or from the Political Department. It will be readily understood that no explanations can be given at Berne as to correspondence between Berlin and Washington which the Federal authorities only transmit without naturally taking any responsibility whatsoever.

The German Government has issued through Wolff Bureau the following official communiqué regarding these pourparlers. This communiqué has been widely published in the neutral press of Europe and reads as follows:

The press has printed a Reuter's agency despatch stating that the Berlin Government had requested Switzerland to inform the Washington Government that Germany remained disposed to negotiate with the United States in regard to the note establishing the blockade and the submarine war provided that the commercial blockade ordered against England were not interfered with by these pourparlers. The Reuter's agency despatch adds that the Government of the United States then communicated to Mr. Ritter, Swiss Minister at Washington, that it could not begin negotiations before Germany had renewed its promises made after the Sussex affair and had withdrawn its decision concerning the aggravation of the submarine war.

The following are the true facts upon which the Reuter's agency despatch is based:

The Swiss Government transmitted to the German Government a telegram from the Swiss Minister at Washington offering, if Germany consented, to serve as intermediary in pourparlers with the American Government in regard to the declaration of the blockade, as the danger of a German-American war could in this way be diminished. The Swiss Government has been requested to inform its Minister at Washington that Germany remained as before disposed to negotiate with the United States on condition that the commercial blockade against its enemies—not only against England—were not jeopardized by these negotiations. It is, generally speaking, scarcely necessary to say that Germany could not enter into negotiations of this character before diplomatic relations had been reestablished between Germany and the United States. Moreover the object of these pourparlers must be limited exclusively to certain concessions regarding the transportation of American passengers in order that the stoppage of importations from abroad, established against our enemies by means of unrestricted submarine warfare, be not weakened in any way whatsoever, even if diplomatic relations should be reestablished. This was all clearly set out in its response to the Swiss Minister at Washington. As has already been repeated by official circles, Germany will not reconsider its resolution to completely stop by submarines all importations from abroad by its enemies.

Memorandum of the Secretary of State

February 21, 1917.

The Swiss Minister called this afternoon and after attending to some other matters I told him that I was perplexed by a statement regarding the overture which he had sent to me on Sunday the 11th on behalf of Germany.¹ I then read to him the annexed telegram received from Berne.² He listened very intently and when I had concluded I said: "It would appear, Mr. Minister, that the overture was suggested originally by you. Is that correct?"

The Minister appeared very nervous and after some hesitation said: "I will tell you the whole story." He then proceeded to relate in substance the following:

Diplomatic relations were broken off on Saturday, February 3. On Monday, the 5th, Count Bernstorff telephoned him that Dr. Kirchwey³ was coming to see him (Dr. Ritter) with a message to be sent through Berne to Berlin and that he approved of the message. Dr. Kirchwey called to see him and showed him the wireless message which had been sent by Bartelme¹ and asked him to send identically the same message to Berlin via Berne. Dr. Ritter replied that he had not yet been authorized to act for the German Embassy and in any event he could see no use in repeating the same suggestions already made by wireless. He finally agreed to send a message stating that "with the approval of Bernstorff" he suggested some steps toward negotiations being taken along the lines of the Bartelme message and asking his Government to repeat the suggestion to Berlin.

Either on Friday evening, the 9th, or Saturday morning following (I am not sure which time he gave), he received the communication, the substance of which was in the paper which he sent me Sunday evening, the 11th. It came from his Government which transmitted it from Berlin. About 10 o'clock on Saturday morning, the 10th, he showed the message or gave a copy of it to Prince Hatzfeldt. About noon Draper of the Associated Press called to see him stating that he had the substance of the overture for negotiations which he (Ritter) had received. Draper repeated what he had learned and the Minister saw that Draper did in fact have the substance, though Draper assured him that he had not obtained it from Bernstorff. The Minister was convinced that Hatzfeldt had told Draper.

The next that the Minister knew of the matter was that he read a statement in regard to the message in the afternoon paper on Saturday, and as he had made an appointment to see Mr. Polk at 6 o'clock that evening he determined to present the overture orally to him, which he did, and after Mr. Polk had communicated the substance to me, he, upon Mr. Polk's stating on Sunday morning that I wished him to put it in writing, did so and sent it to me that afternoon.

Upon the completion of his narrative, which was told in a disjointed and nervous way, and was rather hard to follow, I said to him: "So, Mr. Minister, this plan of an overture originated here in Washington?" "Yes," he answered, "it was all done with the approval of Count Bernstorff." "Dr. Kirchwey appears to have acted as his agent in this matter," I said. "Yes," he replied, "Count Bernstorff asked me by telephone to send a message, which Dr. Kirchwey would come and see me about. I found it just like the Bartelme wireless message so another was made suggesting following the advice in that message."

The Minister said further he would show me the original, and something about a memorandum or paper in Bernstorff's handwriting. I did not understand and obtained no further light although I questioned the Minister about it. I did not press the matter as I feared that it might arouse suspicions in his mind and prevent his showing me the original papers.

The Minister said, on taking his leave, that now that he had fully explained the matter he hoped that no blame could be attached to him and that he wished I would find it possible to let the newspapers know that he had not acted improperly. I told him that if he would show me the originals I had no doubt some statement could be made. He repeated that he would bring me the papers.

In view, however, of the Austrian submarine note of January 31, which is almost identical with the German submarine note of the same date, it must be obvious to the Austro-Hungarian Government that the United States can not sever relations with Germany and at the same time receive Count Tarnowski, unless the Austro-Hungarian Government alters its policy or at least assures this Government that the terms of its submarine policy will not be effective against American lives and commerce.

On February 15 Count Tarnowski transmitted to his Government through you the suggestion that Austria-Hungary announce that there are no Austrian submarines operating in the Atlantic and that the submarines operating in the Mediterranean will be confined to certain specified ports.

MEMORANDUM

Text of the note delivered by the Hellenic Government to the Minister of the United States at Athens in reply to the communication relative to the breaking off of relations between the United States and Germany.

Fully aware of the gravity of the step which the Government of the United States has just taken toward the neutral states, the Royal Government certainly need not lay further stress upon the keen interest it takes in any action that may turn to the advantage of the peace of the world. It is likewise glad of the opportunity to make it of record that it entirely shares the policy of the President of the Great Republic in all that relates to the freedom of the seas and the safety of innocent sea trade in time of war. Therefore the Royal Government did not fail to formulate to the German Government express reservations in view of the dangers that threaten the Hellenic flag as a result of the measures recently announced from Berlin through the wireless telegraph station of Athens. Considering, however, the special conditions in which Greece, notwithstanding her neutrality, is placed in the present war, which conditions are known to the Government of the United States, the Royal Government is not in position to contemplate an attitude or take any action looking to more direct protection of its national shipping.

WASHINGTON, February 24, 1917.

File No. 841.857/365

The Consul at Cork (Frost) to the Secretary of State

No. 279

CORK (QUEENSTOWN), February 7, 1917.

[Received February 24.]

SIR: I have the honor to transmit hereby, in duplicate, a copy of a letter and affidavit received this day from Vice Admiral, Sir Lewis Bayly, Commanding, Coast of Ireland, with reference to the sinking of the British collier Eavestone on February 3, 1917, by a German submarine.¹ The affidavit was taken by a shipping agent at Castle-town Berehaven, early on the 6th instant, and appears to coincide substantially with that taken by this Consulate at a later hour on the same day. The affidavits, both that transmitted herewith and that forwarded by my despatch No. 278,¹ of the 6th instant, will be found somewhat elliptical, owing to the natural tendency of the survivors to slur over the attempt to escape from the submarine. As stated in the despatch just cited, however, the Eavestone's efforts at flight could under no canons excuse the submarine's act in deliberately firing upon unarmed small boats.

It should have been mentioned in my despatch No. 278 that the Eavestone, although unarmed, had a gun platform which was described by First Officer Roderick as being conspicuously placed, and as having inspired the submarine with no little mistrust of the Eavestone. This, also, is a minor circumstance. Presumably the platform had been prepared for a gun which was to be placed on the Eavestone when that vessel next returned to a United Kingdom port.

There were no American citizens on the Eavestone with the exception of Richard Wallace, the deceased seaman.

The earlier of the two cable messages to the Department in the Eavestone case was inadvertently not confirmed by a copy to accompany despatch No. 278, owing to the extreme haste in which the latter was completed and mailed. The confirmation copy is accordingly transmitted hereby.

Possibly the Department may be interested in one or two general points relating to the submarine campaign which is being waged off this littoral. Probably the most important generalization to be made is that exceedingly few lives have thus far been lost in proportion to the number of vessels sunk. I should place the number of vessels sunk off this district within the past week at about one dozen; and so far as I am aware the Eavestone case is the only one in which lives were lost at all, although I am by no means positive as to this statement. The Eavestone case, so far as the circumstances could be gathered here, constituted an appalling instance of irritated ruthlessness; almost sufficient, in itself, to obliterate the general impression of reasonable humanity which the campaign creates.

This latter impression may be purely fortuitous. The weather has favored the safety of survivors, as it has been phenomenally clear and calm; and the admiralty patrols have been exceptionally numerous and ubiquitous, so as to be never far off from the scenes of disasters. I was last evening informed by the master of a torpedoed steamer that his vessel was sunk without the faintest warning, and that the submarine was never even seen. (Nevertheless this master saved his entire crew of 40 persons.)

The absence of Americans from the crews of these vessels has been unexpected. Most of the vessels thus far, I think, have been outward bound or from South American ports. I have carefully verified in each instance the absence of Americans on board each vessel; the Admiralty cooperating with just sufficient courtesy so as not to seem eager as to American intervention. The Admiralty are naturally very greatly rushed at this time; and the masters of torpedoed vessels are prone to be busy, excited, and chafed. I have accordingly taken pains not to intrude questions unless American rights were involved.

No descriptions of supersubmarines have as yet been forthcoming; and there appears to be no radical departure in the direction of size or novel devices. The submarines are now habitually taking food and other stores from such vessels as surrender on demand, before sinking the vessels. The method of sinking such ships is by bombs set with time fuses or by overside bombs exploded by electrical wires. In a number of recent cases the submarine has retained the British master as a hostage. Only yesterday the master of the Palm Leaf was so retained. To vessels which offer no resistance the submarines often show much consideration, when they consider it feasible. In the case of the Isle of Arran the submarine returned to the boats at the approach of evening, after four hours' absence, and towed them toward the land for five and one-half hours, casting them off only when a steamer had been sighted which picked them up. I can vouch for the correctness of this story; and it is probable that other similar acts could be recorded were the general conditions other than they are.

The conduct of different submarine commanders varies considerably. In general it would seem that no opportunities of sinking vessels are overlooked, no matter at what cost of life; but it is of course impossible to say whether submarines ever voluntarily refrain from attacking vessels, because in such instances the vessels would be unaware of the self-restraint exercised by the submarines. There is no doubt that when they can safely do so, except in the rarest cases, the submarines take pleasure in extending every courtesy and consideration to the vessels which they destroy; but this attitude is not incompatible with a "beyond good and evil" attitude when anything is to be gained.

5747. My 5746, February 24, 8 a. m.¹ For the President and the Secretary of State. Balfour has handed me the text of a cipher telegram from Zimmermann, German Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to the German Minister to Mexico, which was sent via Washington and relayed by Bernstorff on January 19. You can probably obtain a copy of the text relayed by Bernstorff from the cable office in Washington. The first group is the number of the telegram, 130, and the second is 13042, indicating the number of the code used. The last group but two is 97556, which is Zimmermann's signature. I shall send you by mail a copy of the cipher text and of the decode into German and meanwhile I give you the English translation as follows:

We intend to begin on the 1st of February unrestricted submarine warfare. We shall endeavor in spite of this to keep the United States of America neutral. In the event of this not succeeding, we make Mexico a proposal of alliance on the following basis: make war together, make peace together, generous financial support and an understanding on our part that Mexico is to reconquer the lost territory in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. The settlement in detail is left to you. You will inform the President of the above most secretly as soon as the outbreak of war with the United States of America is certain and add the suggestion that he should, on his own initiative, invite Japan to immediate adherence and at the same time mediate between Japan and ourselves. Please call the President's attention to the fact that the ruthless employment of our submarines now offers the prospect of compelling England in a few months to make peace. Signed, Zimmermann.

The receipt of this information has so greatly exercised the British Government that they have lost no time in communicating it to me to transmit to you, in order that our Government may be able without delay to make such disposition as may be necessary in view of the threatened invasion of our territory.

Early in the war, the British Government obtained possession of a copy of the German cipher code used in the above message and have made it their business to obtain copies of Bernstorff's cipher telegrams to Mexico, amongst others, which are sent back to London and deciphered here. This accounts for their being able to decipher this telegram from the German Government to their representative in Mexico and also for the delay from January 19 until now in their receiving the information. This system has hitherto been a jealously guarded secret and is only divulged now to you by the British Government in view of the extraordinary circumstances and their friendly feeling towards the United States. They earnestly request that you will keep the source of your information and the British Government's method of obtaining it profoundly secret, but they put no prohibition on the publication of Zimmermann's telegram itself.

The copies of this and other telegrams were not obtained in Washington but were bought in Mexico.

I have thanked Balfour for the service his Government has rendered us and suggest that a private official message of thanks from our Government to him would be beneficial.

I am informed that this information has not yet been given to the Japanese Government but I think it not unlikely that when it reaches them they may make a public statement on it in order to clear up their position regarding the United States and prove their good faith to their Allies.

[Circular telegram]

WASHINGTON, February 26, 1917.

The President to-day addressed Congress in joint session on the situation resulting from Germany's new submarine policy and requested authority to take such steps as may be necessary for the protection of American life and property at sea. For your information and guidance the following pertinent portions of the President's address are quoted:

No one doubts what it is our duty to do. We must defend our commerce and the lives of our people in the midst of the present trying circumstances, with discretion but with clear and steadfast purpose. Only the method and the extent remain to be chosen, upon the occasion, if occasion should indeed arise. Since it has unhappily proved impossible to safeguard our neutral rights by diplomatic means against the unwarranted infringements they are suffering at the hands of Germany, there may be no recourse but to armed neutrality, which we shall know how to maintain and for which there is abundant American precedent.

It is devoutly to be hoped that it will not be necessary to put armed force anywhere in action. The American people do not desire it, and our desire is not different from theirs. I am sure that they will understand the spirit in which I am now acting, the purpose I hold nearest my heart and would wish to exhibit in everything I do. I am anxious that the people of the nations at war also should understand and not mistrust us.

I hope that I need give no further proof and assurances than I have already given throughout nearly three years of anxious patience that I am the friend of peace and mean to preserve it for America so long as I am able. I am not now proposing or contemplating war or any steps that may lead to it. I merely request that you will accord me by your own vote and definite bestowal the means and the authority to safeguard in practice the right of a great people who are at peace and who are desirous of exercising none but the rights of peace to follow the pursuits of peace in quietness and good will—rights recognized time out of mind by all the civilized nations of the world. No course of my choosing or of theirs will lead to war. War can come only by the wilful acts and aggressions of others.

You will understand why I can make no definite proposals or forecasts of action now and must ask for your supporting authority in the most general terms. The form in which action may become necessary can not yet be foreseen. I believe that the people will be willing to trust me to act with restraint, with prudence, and in the true spirit of amity and good faith that they have themselves displayed throughout these trying months; and it is in that belief that I request that you will authorize me to supply our merchant ships with defensive arms, should that become necessary, and with the means of using them, and to employ any other instrumentalities or methods that may be necessary and adequate to protect our ships and our people in their legitimate and peaceful pursuits on the seas. I request also that you will grant me at the same time, along with the powers I ask, a sufficient credit to enable me to provide adequate means of protection where they are lacking, including adequate insurance against the present war risks.

THE HAGUE, February 28, 1917.

[Received 11 p. m.]

737. Press summary from Rotterdamsche Courant: German Chancellor said yesterday in Reichstag the United States went a step further than European neutrals. After receiving our note, January 31, President Wilson suddenly broke off relations with us. We have not received any authentic statement of reasons leading to that step. American Ambassador merely informed Foreign Office orally of break and demanded his passports. This form of break between two great nations living in peace with each other unparalleled in history. Failing official information I had to rely on writer's account of President's message, February 3, saying that American Government saw no other course open but the one indicated in note of April 20. This demands prompt refutation. For more than century friendly relations have been cultivated between the two countries, the heritage of Frederick the Great. Since beginning of war things have been different across Atlantic. On August 27, 1913, at time Mexican troubles, Wilson declared neutrality, forbade supply war material of combatants. A year later this was forgotten. America has furnished enormous quantities ammunition to Entente, all the while jealously guarding rights Americans to travel freely to enemy countries on all kinds business even such as had to be paid for with German blood. But it was not deemed proper to insist equally on same right of commerce with Germany. Protests were addressed England but there was, nevertheless, acquiescence in her illegal measures. I emphatically deny that withdrawal our assurances of May 1 affects honor or dignity of United States. We expressly proclaimed at the time that under certain circumstances those assurances would cease to be valid. It is only necessary to read final paragraph our note May 1 [4].¹ German Government was convinced that American Government did not demand restriction in use our weapons while our adversaries were permitted to do as they pleased. We relied on statements of America that she was determined to insist on freedom seas from whatever quarter violated. What American Government said in its note May 10, 1916, was so absolutely contradictory to what we had said with such clearness as to admit no misunderstanding that an answer on our part would not have altered in any way standpoints of the two parties. It is indisputable that conditions giving us full freedom action have long been present. Our enemies have not been induced to respect either international law or dictates humanity. They have still further restricted freedom seas and America has not hindered them. All this is publici juris. Can anyone be surprised, then, at our claiming on January 31 that freedom seas has not been established and drawing our conclusions from that fact? America must know England's countless violations international law. I would fully understand her attitude if she had insisted on observance international laws by all belligerents in same manner or had taken measures stop the war, but I can not possibly conceive that it is vital interest of American people to insist solely on our observance international law. Our enemies and Americans hostile to us pretend there is considerable difference between our actions and England's; that England merely destroys replaceable economic values, whereas Germany destroys human lives which can not be replaced. But reason why American lives have not been jeopardized by England's measures is that America voluntarily submitted to them, so that England was enabled reach her object without violence. What would have happened had Americans attached equal value to unhindered passenger and commercial traffic with Bremen and Hamburg as with Liverpool and London? Had they done so we should have been free from painful impressions that American subjection to English power and control was compatible with neutrality as they construed it, but that acceptance German retaliatory measures was unneutral. We see very well that severance relations and mobilization all neutrals against us were not conceived as measures protection of freedom seas or as plan conducive to the peace demanded by Wilson also, but only contemplate stimulation of efforts to starve Germany and increase bloodshed. We deplore break with nation that seemed destined by history to strive not against us but

When on February 1 decision was taken for ruthless submarine warfare, in view of the previous attitude of the American Government the possibility of a conflict with the United States had to be considered. The facts have demonstrated that this foresight was justified for the American Government broke diplomatic relations and urged other states to join it. Foreseeing these possibilities the Imperial Government not only had the right, but also the duty, to take steps in view of an armed conflict with the United States to compensate for the entrance of new enemies on the scene; therefore the German Minister at Mexico was charged, in the middle of January, in case the United States declared war to propose an alliance to the Government of Mexico. The Minister also received the order to take no action before the certainty of an outbreak of war. It is unknown how knowledge came out of this secret communication. However the treason, for it is certainly that, seems to have taken place on American territory. This notice published in Swiss press under heading "Simple Aveu."

First, it is absurd to suppose that Japan would under any circumstances desert the Allies and join Germany. In the second place, it is preposterous to imagine that Mexico could induce Japan to follow such a course. This plot shows what mental delusion Germany is laboring under to presume that such a course of [conduct] could ever be possible.

The Ambassador in Austria-Hungary (Penfield) to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

VIENNA, March 2, 1917, 5 p. m.

[Received March 4, 12.30 p. m.]

1739. My 1738, March 2, 4 p. m.² Following is aide-mémoire handed me by the Austro-Hungarian Government to-day:³

From the aide-mémoire of the American Embassy in Vienna of February 18, 1917, the Imperial and Royal Ministry for Foreign Affairs understands that, in view of the declarations made by the Imperial and Royal Government on February 10, 1916,⁴ and January 31, 1917,⁵ the Washington Cabinet is in doubt as to the attitude which Austria-Hungary intends to adopt from now on in the conduct of the submarine warfare, and whether the assurance given by the Imperial and Royal Government to the Washington Cabinet in the course of negotiations in the cases of the ships Ancona and Persia has not perhaps been altered or withdrawn by the aforesaid declarations.

The Imperial and Royal Government is willingly ready to comply with the wish of the American Government that these doubts be removed by a definite and clear statement.

The Austro-Hungarian Government may be permitted, in the first place, in all brevity to discuss the methods practiced by the Entente powers in the conduct of naval warfare, because these methods constitute the point of departure of the more severe submarine warfare put into operation by Austria-Hungary and her allies, and because thereby the attitude which the Imperial and Royal Government has so far adopted in the questions arising therefrom is elucidated.

When Great Britain entered into war against the Central powers, only a few years had elapsed since that memorable time when she, in common with the other states, had, at The Hague, begun to lay down the fundamentals of a modern law of maritime warfare; soon thereafter the English Government had assembled in London rep-representatives of the great naval powers to complete the Hague work, principally in the sense of an equitable settlement between the interests of belligerents and neutrals. The nations were not long to enjoy the unanticipated successes of these efforts, which accomplished nothing less than an agreement upon a code which was suitable to give validity to the principle of the freedom of the sea and the interests of neutrals even in time of war.

The United Kingdom had hardly decided to participate in the war before it began to break through the bounds placed upon it by the code of international law. While the Central powers immediately at the beginning of the war had declared their intention of adhering to the Declaration of London, which also bore the signature of the British delegate, England cast aside the most important provisions of this declaration. In the endeavor to cut the Central powers off from importation by sea, Great Britain extended the list of contraband step by step, until it included everything now required for supporting human life. Then Great Britain laid over the coasts of the North Sea, which also constitute an important transit gate for the sea commerce of Austria-Hungary, a closure which she designated as a "blockade" in order to prevent the entrance into Germany of all goods still lacking in the list of contraband, as well as to stop all sea traffic of neutrals with those coasts and to prevent all exportation whatsoever from them. That this closure stands in the most glaring contradiction to the traditional right of blockade established by international treaties has been pointed out by the President of the United States of America himself, in words which will continue to live in the history of international law. By the illegal hindrance of exportation from the Central powers, Great Britain intended to bring to a standstill the countless factories and concerns which the industrious and highly developed peoples had created in the heart of Europe, and to bring their workmen to idleness and thus incite them to insurrection and revolt. And when Austria-Hungary's southern neighbor entered the ranks of the enemies of the Central powers her first act, indeed following the example of her allies, was to declare a blockade of the entire coast of her enemy in disregard of the provisions of law in the creation of which Italy a short time previously had actively participated. Austria-Hungary did not fail at once to point out to the neutral powers that this blockade was void of all legal effectiveness.

The Central powers have hesitated more than two years. Not until then, and after mature consideration of the pros and cons, did they resort to repaying like with like and pressing their opponents hard at sea. As the only ones of the belligerents who had done everything to assure the validity of the treaties which were intended to guarantee the freedom of the sea to the neutrals they bitterly felt the compulsion of the hour which forced them to violate this freedom; but they took the step in order to fulfil an imperative duty toward their peoples and with the conviction that it was adapted to bring about the ultimate victory of the freedom of seas. The declarations which they promulgated on the last day of January of this year were only apparently directed against the rights of the neutrals; in truth they serve the reestablishment of these rights which the enemies have incessantly violated and which they would destroy forever should they be victorious. Thus the submarines surrounding the coasts of England announce to the nations who have need of the sea—and who has not need of it?—that the day is no longer distant when the flags of all states will peacefully wave over the seas in the splendor of newly acquired freedom.

The hope may well be entertained that this announcement will find response everywhere where neutral peoples live, and that it will be particularly understood by the great people of the United States of America, whose most competent representative has in the course of this war advocated in flaming words the freedom of the sea as the street of all nations. If the people and Government of the Union keep in mind that the "blockade" laid by Great Britain is calculated not only to subjugate the Central powers by hunger but ultimately to bring the seas under her supremacy and in this way to establish her stewardship over all nations, while on the other hand the isolation of England and her Allies only serves to make these powers amenable to a peace with honor and to guarantee to all nations the freedom of navigation and sea trade, and thus an assured existence, the question as to which of the two belligerent parties has the right on its side is already decided. Although it is far from the intentions of the Central powers to court allies in their struggle, they, however, believe that they may lay claim to the neutrals appreciating their endeavor to restore the principles of international law and equality of rights of nations in the interest of all.

In proceeding to answer the question asked in the above-mentioned aide-mémoire of February 18 of this year, the Imperial and Royal Government desires first of all to remark that in the exchange of notes in the cases of the Ancona and Persia it had restricted itself to taking a position with respect to the concrete questions which had arisen on those occasions without setting forth its fundamental legal views. However, in the note of December 29, 1915, in the case of the Ancona it reserved to itself the right to discuss at a later date the difficult questions of international law connected with submarine warfare. In returning to this reservation and subjecting the question of the sinking of enemy ships alluded to in that aide-mémoire to a short discussion, it is guided by the wish to show the American Government that it now as hitherto firmly adheres to the assurance given by it as well as by the endeavor to prevent misunderstandings between the Monarchy and the American Union by means of an elucidation of that question arising from submarine warfare, which is most important on account of its bearing upon the demands of humanity.

Above all the Imperial and Royal Government would wish to emphasize that also according to its view the principle established by the American Government and represented by it in several learned documents, that enemy merchant ships, except in cases of attempted flight or resistance, may not be destroyed without the safety of persons on board having been provided for, constitutes, so to say, the kernel of the entire matter. Considered from a higher standpoint, this principle can certainly be incorporated into a broader embodiment of ideas, and in this manner its sphere of application more precisely delimited. From the demands of humanity, which the Imperial and Royal Government and the Washington Cabinet take in the same manner as a guiding rule, the more general principle may be deduced that in the execution of the right to destroy enemy merchant ships the loss of human life should be avoided in so far as this is in any way possible. A belligerent can do justice to this principle only by issuing a warning before the execution of the right. In this respect he can adopt the course pointed out by the said principle of the American Government, according to which the commanding officer of the man-of-war himself issues the warning to the vessel to be sunk in order that the crew and passengers can still at the last moment effect their safety; or the Government of a belligerent state can, if it recognizes this as an unavoidable necessity of war, issue the warning with full effect even before the departure of the ship which is to be sunk; or, finally, it can, in setting into operation a comprehensive measure for combating the enemy's sea trade, make use of a general warning intended for all enemy ships coming under consideration.

The American Government itself has recognized that the principle that the safety of persons on board is to be provided for undergoes exceptions. The Imperial and Royal Government believes that the destruction without warning is not merely admissible in case the ship flees or offers resistance. It appears to it, to give an example, that also the character of the ship itself must be taken into consideration: merchant or other private ships which place themselves in the service of a belligerent as transport, despatch ship or the like which carry military crews or armaments with which to commit hostilities of whatever character may indeed be destroyed without further ado according to existing laws. The Imperial and Royal Government need not recall the case in which a belligerent is freed from every consideration for human life when its opponent sinks enemy merchant ships without previous warning, as has occurred in the already repeatedly censured cases of the ships Elektra, Dubrovnik, Zagreb, etc., as notwithstanding its undeniable right in this respect it has never repaid like with like. In the whole course of the war Austro-Hungarian men-of-war have not destroyed a single enemy merchant ship without previous warning although such warning may have been general.

The oft-mentioned principle of the American Government also admits of several interpretations, particularly in so far as it leaves it questionable whether, as is asserted from many a quarter, only an armed resistance justifies the destruction of a ship with persons on board or a resistance of another character such as perhaps occurs when the crew intentionally fails to place the passengers in boats (Ancona case) or when the passengers themselves refuse to take to the boats. In the opinion of the Imperial and Royal Government the destruction of the warned ship without rescue of the persons on board is also admissible in cases of the latter character, as otherwise it would lie in the hands of every passenger to nullify the right of sinking belonging to the belligerent. Furthermore, it may be pointed out that there is no unanimity as to cases in which the destruction of enemy merchant vessels is admissible.

In the opinion of the Imperial and Royal Government the obligation of issuing the warning immediately before the sinking of the ship leads on the one hand to asperities which might be avoided, but on the other hand it is also under circumstances adapted to prejudice the justified interests of the belligerents. In the first place it can not be ignored that the rescue of persons at sea is almost always left to blind chance as only the choice remains either of taking them on board of the man-of-war which is exposed to every hostile influence or of exposing them to the danger of the elements in small boats and that it therefore far better complies with the principles of humanity to restrain the persons from making use of endangered ships by a timely issued warning. But, furthermore, the Imperial and Royal Government, despite mature examination of all the legal questions coming into consideration, could not be convinced that subjects of a neutral state possess a claim to travel unmolested on enemy ships.

The principle that neutrals even in time of war enjoy the advantages of the freedom of the sea obtains only for neutral ships, not also for neutral persons on board of enemy ships. For, as is known, belligerents are entitled to prevent enemy navigation as far as they are able. Possessing the requisite means of war, they may in doing so, if they consider it necessary for the attainment of their war aims, forbid enemy merchant ships the navigation of the sea at risk of immediate destruction provided they only previously announce their intention, in order that everyone whether enemy or neutral be enabled to avoid placing his life in jeopardy. But even should doubt arise as to the justification of such a procedure and the opponent perhaps threaten with retaliation, this would be an affair to be settled only between the belligerents who, as is recognized, are entitled to make the high sea a theater of their military enterprises, to prevent every disturbance of these enterprises and sovereignly decide what measures are to be adopted against enemy navigation. In such a case the neutrals have no other legitimate interest, and therefore no other legal claim, than that the belligerent give them timely notification of the prohibition directed against the enemy in order that they may avoid intrusting their persons or property to enemy ships.

The Imperial and Royal Government may therefore well assume that the Washington Cabinet agrees to the foregoing arguments which according to its firm conviction are incontestable, as a refutation of their correctness would without doubt be tantamount to—which surely does not accord with the views of the American Government—the neutrals being at liberty to meddle in the military operations of the belligerents, indeed ultimately to set themselves as judges as to what means of war may be employed against the enemy. Also it would appear to be a glaring incongruity if a neutral government should, only for the purpose of enabling its subjects to travel on enemy ships while they could just as well and indeed with far greater safety use neutral ships, stay the arm of a belligerent power which is perhaps fighting for its existence. To say nothing of door and gate being opened to the most serious abuses if one would wish to compel a belligerent to lower his weapons before every neutral who felt inclined to make use of the enemy vessels on his business or pleasure voyages. There has never been the slightest doubt that neutral subjects must themselves bear all injuries sustained in consequence of entering a region on land where military operations are taking place. There is evidently no reason whatsoever for permitting another code to pertain for maritime warfare especially as the Second Peace Conference expressed the wish that pending a treaty regulation of maritime warfare the powers might apply to it as far as possible the existing law for land warfare.

In the sense of the foregoing the rule that the warning must be addressed to the ship itself which is to be sunk undergoes exceptions of various natures: under certain circumstances as in the cases of flight and resistance set forth by the American Government the ship may be sunk without any warning; in other cases a warning is necessary before the departure of the ship. The Imperial and Royal Government may therefore state that whatever position the Washington Cabinet may take with respect to the various questions here raised, particularly with reference to the protection against endangering neutrals, it is essentially of one mind with the American Government. But it has not contented itself in the course of the present war with converting the views represented by it into action but going still further has accommodated its conduct with scrupulous care to the principle set up by the Washington Cabinet although the assurance given by it had only been to the effect that "it is able to agree in substance to the views of the American Government." The Imperial and Royal Government would greet it with particular satisfaction if the Washington Cabinet should be inclined to support it in its endeavor which is borne by the warmest feelings of humanity to guard American citizens from dangers at sea by instructing and warning of its citizens.

As to the circular note verbale of February 10, 1916, concerning the treatment of armed merchant ships, the Imperial and Royal Government must certainly state that it, as is also intimated in the foregoing, is of the opinion that the arming of merchant vessels even only for purposes of defense against the execution of the right of capture is not founded on modern international law. According to every rule a man-of-war is obliged to meet an enemy merchant vessel in a peaceable manner. She has to stop the vessel by means of prescribed signs, enter into communication with the captain, examine the ship's papers, take a protocol, and if necessary an inventory, etc. But the fulfilment of these duties presupposes that the man-of-war will possess entire certainty that the merchant ship will on its part meet her pacifically. However, such a certainty doubtless does not exist if the merchant ship carries an armament sufficient to combat the man-of-war. A man-of-war, however, can hardly be expected to execute her office under the muzzles of hostile guns, be they brought on board for whatsoever purpose. Not to mention the fact that notwithstanding all contrary asseverations, merchant vessels of the Entente powers as has been shown are provided with guns for offensive purposes and also make use of them for such purposes. It would also be ignoring the duties of humanity if the crews of men-of-war would be required to expose themselves to the weapons of the enemy without defending themselves. No state can estimate the duties of humanity towards the competent defenders of the fatherland lower than the duties towards citizens of foreign powers.

According to its conviction, the Imperial and Royal Government would therefore have been able to proceed from the fact that its promise given to the Washington Cabinet did not from the outset extend to armed merchant vessels since these according to existing laws, which restrict hostilities to the organized armed forces, are to be regarded as filibuster ships which are subject to summary destruction. As history teaches, it has according to universal international law never been admissible for merchant ships to resist the execution of the right of capture by men-of-war. But even if a provision of law to this effect could be produced it would not thereby be proven that the ships might provide themselves with arms. It is also to be taken into consideration that the arming of merchant ships must entirely transform maritime warfare and that this transformation can not be in accord with the views of those who are endeavoring to enforce the principles of humanity in maritime warfare. In fact, since the abolition of privateering a few years ago no government has even in the slightest degree thought of arming merchant vessels. In the entire course of the Second Peace Conference, which concerned itself with all questions of the law of maritime warfare, there was not a single word mentioned of arming merchant vessels. Only a single time, and that in an incidental manner, has there been an assertion which is of interest in this matter, and it is characteristic that it was a high British naval officer who frankly declared: "When a man-of-war proposes to stop and visit a merchant vessel the commanding officer before lowering a boat will fire a gun. The firing of a gun is the best guaranty that can be given. Merchant vessels have no guns on board."

Nevertheless Austria-Hungary has also adhered to its promise in this question; in the circular note verbale referred to, the neutrals were timely warned against entrusting their persons and goods to armed ships; also the announced measure was not put into operation immediately, but a delay was accorded in order to enable the neutrals to leave the armed ships upon which they had already embarked. Finally the Austro-Hungarian men-of-war have instructions even in case of encountering armed enemy merchant vessels to be mindful of issuing a warning and of saving the persons on board if this should be possible under the existing circumstances.

The statement of the American Embassy that the armed British steamers Secondo and Welsh Prince had been sunk by Austro-Hungarian submarines is based upon an error. The Imperial and Royal Government has in the meantime been informed that Austro-Hungarian men-of-war took no part in the sinking of these steamers.

In the same manner as in the oft-mentioned circular note verbale, the Imperial and Royal Government—and in this connection it returns to the question of the more severe submarine warfare discussed at the beginning of this aide-mémoire—in establishing a proper term, issued a warning addressed to the neutrals in its declaration of January 31 of this year; indeed the entire declaration is essentially nothing else than a warning to the effect that no merchant ship may navigate the sea zones accurately defined in the declaration. Furthermore Austro-Hungarian men-of-war are instructed to warn merchant vessels when possible even when encountered in these zones as well as to provide for the safety of crews and passengers. Indeed, the Imperial and Royal Government is in the possession of numerous reports that the crews and passengers of ships which have been destroyed in these zones have been rescued. The Imperial and Royal Government is, however, unable to accept a responsibility for the possible loss of human life which nevertheless may result from the destruction of armed ships or ships encountered in the closed zones. Moreover, it may be remarked that Austro-Hungarian submarines are operating only in the Adriatic and in the Mediterranean, and that therefore a prejudicing of American interests by Austro-Hungarian men-of-war is hardly to be feared.

After all that has been set forth at the beginning of this aide-mémoire an assurance is not actually necessary that the closing of the sea zones designated in the declaration in no way serves the purpose of destroying or even endangering human life but that it, aside from the higher purpose of sparing mankind further suffering through a shortening of the war, is only designed to place in the same position of isolation Great Britain and her allies who without having laid an effective blockade over the coasts of the Central powers are preventing sea traffic of the neutrals with these powers and through the pressure make the former amenable to a peace which brings with it the guaranty of durability. That Austria-Hungary hereby employs other means of war than her opponents is chiefly due to circumstances over which man is given no power. The Imperial and Royal Government is, however, conscious that it has made all provisions lying within its power for the prevention of the loss of human life. It would most quickly and surely achieve this aim striven for in the isolation of the Western powers if not a single human life should be lost or endangered in those sea zones.

In recapitulating the Imperial and Royal Government is able to state that the assurance which it gave the Washington Cabinet in the Ancona case and renewed in the Persia case has neither been withdrawn nor restricted by its declarations of February 10, 1916; and January 31, 1917. Within the boundary of this assurance it will in common with its allies henceforth do its utmost to soon restore the blessings of peace to the peoples of the world. If in the pursuit of this aim, in which it well knows it enjoys the entire sympathy of the Washington Cabinet, it finds itself compelled also to prevent neutral navigation in certain sea zones it would not like, in order to justify this measure, to refer so much to the conduct of its adversaries, which appears to it far from worthy of imitation, as to the fact that Austria-Hungary has been placed in a position of self-defense by the stubbornness and hatefulness of her enemies who are bent upon her destruction for which history knows of no more typical example. As the Imperial and Royal Government finds exaltation in the consciousness that the struggle which Austria-Hungary is conducting serves not only the preservation of her vital interests but also the realization of the idea of equal rights of all states, it, in this last and most serious phase of the war, which as it deeply deprecates also demands sacrifices from friends, attaches the greatest value to affirming by word and deed that the principles of humanity are illuminating its course in the same way as the demands of respect for the dignity and interests of the neutral peoples.

5816. For the President and the Secretary only. In reporting on the general feeling here I find that continued delay in sending out American ships, especially American liners, is producing an increasingly unfavorable impression. In spite of all explanations, which are imperfectly understood here, delay is taken to mean the submission of our Government to the German blockade. This is the view of the public and of most of the press. There is a tendency even in high government circles to regard the reasons for delay which are published here as technicalities which a national crisis should sweep aside. British opinion couples the delay of our ships with the sinking of the Laconia and the Z[immermann] telegram and seems to be reaching the conclusion that our Government will not be able to take positive action under any provocation. The feeling which the newspaper despatches from the United States produce on the British mind is that our Government is holding back our people until the blockade of our ships, the Z[immermann] telegram, and the Laconia shall be forgotten and until the British Navy shall overcome the German submarines. There is danger that this feeling harden into a conviction and interfere with any influence that we might otherwise have when peace comes.

So friendly a man as Viscount Grey of Falldon writes me privately from his retirement: "I do not see how the United States can sit still while neutral shipping is swept off the sea. If no action is taken, it will be like a great blot in history or a failure that must grievously depress the future history of America."

THE HAGUE, March 13, 1917, 4 p. m.

[Received 11.50 p. m.]

765. From press and other sources, political situation in Germany may be summed up as follows:

The declaration of unbridled submarine warfare greatly strengthened the hands of the Conservatives, Pan-Germanists, Annexationists, etc., and correspondingly weakened the influence of the Socialists and other advocates of understanding. The [slogan?] now is quite generally decisive victory or destruction; in Bavaria also influential men strongly advocate relentless warfare until England is forced to her knees. Conservative leader Von Heydebrand recently said, "Peace without indemnity spelled ruin." The Pan-Germanists have somewhat hurt their cause by indiscreet utterances and propaganda. The Socialist, Ledebour, was laughed at in the Prussian Lower House for demanding cessation of the under-sea warfare as its results could not compensate for the enmity of America. The position of the Chancellor is extremely difficult; he is hated by the Conservatives and the Pan-Germanists, and seems endangered by the daily heard clamor for the reform of suffrage in Prussia; thus far he has taken no action in this matter and it has been publicly said that if the Chancellor does not act soon he will be swept away by a great popular movement. The Conservatives who are all-powerful in Prussia will fight tooth and nail any attempt at electoral reform in Prussia. In the Prussian House of Lords Count Yoramole delivered an ultra-conservative speech, saying that Germany owed all to Prussia and that it was better to remodel Imperial institutions along Prussian lines than to try to Germanize Prussia. The indications are that there will be no outbreak of the great antagonism between the parties of the Left and the Right as long as the people are shown that the war is being prosecuted to a victorious conclusion which is near at hand. Men like Professor Delbrück, Dernburg and Rohrbach are working quietly for reform and understanding; Riesser, President of the Hansabund, said that the object of the submarine campaign was not to force England to her knees but to make her consider peace. The Socialists seem to be keeping quiet awaiting developments.

CORK (QUEENSTOWN), February 24, 1917.

[Received March 15.]

SIR: I have the honor to transmit hereby, in duplicate (i. e., the original and a copy), an affidavit by a seaman of American nationality and a seaman of Cuban nationality regarding the destruction of the Norwegian bark Blenheim on the 22d instant by a German submarine off the southwest coast of Ireland.¹ A confirmation copy of a cabled despatch in regard to the loss of the Blenheim is also enclosed.¹

The Blenheim case was brought to my attention only when it was too late to take the officers' affidavit without dislocating the traveling arrangements of 14 persons; but I was able to talk with Captain Larsen for ten minutes at Cork just as he was taking his train, and I caused the two affiants to be detained in order that a sworn statement might be provided. Salomon Troiche, the Porto Rican, has lived in San Francisco since the 6th year of his age, and is now 21 years old. He speaks English perfectly, and in addition proved to be highly intelligent and an excellent witness in every way. The Cuban, Rosa, was sworn only to give a little added weight to the affidavit, as he is of a very inferior type and contributed virtually nothing to the document.

The master stated to me orally that he was on the bridge when he heard the warning gun from the submarine, at 9 a. m., and that he immediately flew a flag signal to the effect that he would at once put off to visit the submarine. He estimated the distance as nearly 3 miles at the time the shot was fired; but the submarine had come relatively close to the vessel by the time he reached the former. He considered that the Germans showed every courtesy consistent with the execution of their orders. His other statements were in general confirmation of the facts as incorporated in the affidavit of Troiche and Rosa.

This case merely confirms what was already clear, that when weather conditions are favorable, and there is neither attempt to escape nor alarm from admiralty patrols, the Germans make a virtue of extending civilities to the persons on board the ships they destroy. It does not have any contradictory bearing as to the perfectly unrelenting manner in which the submarines carry out their orders when the situation is adverse to them. I have no doubt that this same submarine in the Blenheim case would have forced the crew overboard in their two leaky boats without any compunction, had the weather been never so inclement.

It may be noted that in none of the cases reported by this Consulate, still, has a submarine been destroyed. The naval officers here are naturally reticent; and I hesitate to seek to pierce their reserve. Nevertheless, from such conversations as I have had with them, and from rumors in circulation here, I have formed the opinion that the submarine situation has been met with moderate, but only moderate, success. There is a strong rumor that a submarine crew was landed here last week; and various other rumors are afloat as to the number of submarines destroyed. The original submarine flotilla which opened the month here appears, as has been reported, to have exhausted its supplies by about the 8th; and would reach Germany about five or six days later. None of the recent cases have indicated that it has as yet returned to the field here; the situation during the past fortnight being only slightly worse than during January, and apparently being produced by about the same submarine force as operated prior to the German declaration of January 31.

The British naval units here have been greatly strengthened since February 1; and are perhaps twice as heavy now as they were on that date. At least six torpedo-boat destroyers of modern pattern, and four British submarines, have been based here freshly; and the crack light cruiser Penelope has become Admiral Bayly's flagship—although whether to supplement or to supplant the Adventure is not yet apparent. There seems to have been an accession of trawlers for convoy work, in addition to the swarm of trawlers on patrol work; and it is my impression that the British submarines are also used, for obvious reasons, in the convoying of ships.

Many large steamers are passing through South Irish waters unmolested.

File No. 701.6311/269

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Austria-Hungary (Penfield)

WASHINGTON, March 18, 1917, 6 p. m.

1606. Your 1760, 14th, 3 p. m. Department appreciates difficulty of your position and hopes a way may soon be found to make it easier. This Government is sincerely desirous of maintaining friendly relations with Austria-Hungary, and in order to accomplish this is prepared to go as far as it properly can. The following recapitulation of the whole question is for your information and guidance in your conversations with the Foreign Office.

On the day of Count Tarnowski's arrival in Washington the Department received the Austrian note of January 31, which was almost identical with the German note. Shortly afterwards Count Tarnowski was informed that this Government obviously could not dismiss Count von Bernstorff and receive an ambassador from Austria-Hungary unless the latter Government receded from the position taken in its submarine note. Count Tarnowski agreed to this and suggested the opening of conversations in the hope that some solution might be found.

The Department instructed you to ask the Austro-Hungarian Government for a restatement of its position. At the same time Count Tarnowski was permitted to send secret messages to his Government through the Department and your Embassy in the conduct of these conversations.

The Austrian restatement transmitted in your 1739, March 2, 5 p. m., carried the following passages:

The entire declaration is essentially nothing less than a notification to the effect that no merchant ship may navigate the sea zone accurately defined in the declaration; . . . that the Imperial and Royal Government is however unable to accept a responsibility for the possible loss of human life which may, nevertheless, result from the destruction of armed ships encountered in the enclosed zones. Moreover, it may be remarked that Austro-Hungarian submarines are operating only in the Adriatic and in the Mediterranean, and that therefore a prejudicing of American interests by Austro-Hungarian men-of-war is hardly to be feared.

The kernel of this communication appears to lie in the foregoing quotations, in that the Austro-Hungarian Government upholds the principle of the declaration of January 31, stating at the same time that the prejudicing of American interests by Austria-Hungary is "hardly to be feared."

The Austrian reply of March 2 was apparently given out officially in Vienna and thereby assumes a rather definite character. In the face of a positive declaration of this kind the American Government can not receive Count Tarnowski without still further exciting a highly aroused public opinion. The delicacy of the Austro-Hungarian Government's position is fully appreciated, but in view of the fact that Austria-Hungary has publicly declared her adherence to a method of warfare which is in direct conflict with the vital interests of this country, a method which has already resulted in the death of more than 200 American citizens, public opinion here would not welcome the reception of an ambassador at this moment.

Ever since his arrival all possible consideration has been shown Count Tarnowski. He has been received informally by officials of the Department whenever he so desired, and the question of his official reception has been frankly discussed with him on several occasions. Count Tarnowski is to-day cabling his Government through you to the effect that the Austro-Hungarian note had been received; that the President had been ill, and that he, Tarnowski, was advised by officials of the Department that it might be better to let the question of his reception rest for the present.

Tarnowski is greatly disturbed over his position.

You may say that this Government deplores the present situation and hopes that a way may be found in due course to eliminate existing difficulties, but that if the Austro-Hungarian Government considers the present situation is impossible of continuance, we shall be glad to receive any suggestions the Minister of Foreign Affairs may have in regard to the matter.

Thirty-three survivors, City of Memphis, do not include Captain L. P. Borum, four other Americans, and four non-Americans, but indications are that these are safe on board some merchant or admiralty vessel which has no wireless. Captain's boat did not separate from others till 1 a. m. to-day and was picked up empty at 10 a. m., weather meanwhile remaining moderate. Vessel cleared Cardiff, 16th, in ballast with 58 persons, including 29 Americans. At 3.55 p. m., 17th, submarine fired warning shot from 3 miles on starboard quarter. Vessel was stopped, submarine approaching to 1 mile fired once more, fragments striking vessel, ship then only being able read submarine signal to abandon ship. Instantly captain replied by long blast whistle signifying comprehension, then gave four short blasts signal to crew to take boats immediately, which was done in 5 minutes, about 4.15; no injuries. Submarine then came up, hailed captain's boat and then fired eight shots, sinking vessel at about 4.40 p. m.; apparent time conversation with captain's boat at present unknown, weather heavy, southwest swell, moderate southwest breeze, sky squally, weather improved during night. First officer's boat picked up by admiralty ship 3.45 a. m. to-day; chief engineer's boat 6.30 a. m. to-day by same vessel, landed Queenstown 4.30 p. m. to-day without accident. City of Memphis carried wireless but did not use same; carried no gun; no attempt to resist, escape. When captain is located he may have further evidence. Survivors here include first officer, Charles G. Laird; chief engineer, W. I. Percy; assistant engineer, Fred Beville; M. J. Dierlam, third officer; W. M. Thompson, third engineer; and P. J. Donahue and T. J. Welch, wireless operators; and 8 other Americans; 10 Spaniards; 2 Danes; and one each Swede, Russian, Chilean. City of Memphis was stopped by submarine February 4 off Scillies (see report Consul Osborne). Failure to use wireless this time was due to experience of former occasion inducing belief that ship would probably be passed if wireless not started. Survivors will assemble Queenstown pending instruction from owners, Ocean Steamship Company, Pier 35 North River, New York. This to Ambassador, Consul General.

Endeavored to make Minister understand difficulties confronting situation at Washington which he generally admits while stating that Austro-Hungarian Government is confronted by increasing difficulties. He means pride of Emperor whose first ambassadorial applicant was Tarnowski and the pressure of the newspapers which can not much longer be controlled. Czernin had hoped his last note might clear the way for Tarnowski. It is unofficially conveyed to me that Austro-Hungarian Government is doing little with submarine warfare and will never molest American vessels. Informally I learn from high sources that Austria-Hungary wants America to continue in charge their interests in Russia and that change to another Government would be blow to humanity.

Superficially the attitude Austria-Hungary to us is all that could be desired but I fear Tarnowski affair can not be held in check much longer. Three times recently Emperor has spoken agreeably of our helpfulness to his people knowing that the statements would be brought to me. It is obvious that Austro-Hungarian Government can not break with Germany. If so the enemies of the Dual Monarchy would crush it in few weeks.

1959. American consular agent, Brest, reports sinking on 15th instant at 8 p. m., of Norwegian steamer Wilfred, from Newport, England, to Gibraltar with coal. He obtained signed statement of two Americans, Bill Southwood, born November 5, 1895, Wayne County, Ky., coal trimmer (bearer of seaman's identification certificate), and John Palmer, born June 28, 1892, Panama (sailor's papers lost, signed on as American), who state that Wilfred did not carry troops and was not armed. German submarine was seen; it allowed crew to take to boats. Wilfred displayed Norwegian flag and regular marks on both sides. Sank 20 miles from Ushant, no vessel in sight. No other Americans on board. Crew reached shore next morning, no casualties. Consular agent states sea was rough and weather cold; his report and the signed statement follow by mail. He has been requested to obtain additional information.

Referring to Department's 1606 of March 17 [18] you may say to Count Czernin that in view of the explicit acceptance and avowal by his Government of a policy which has led to our breach of diplomatic relations with Germany, the President finds it impossible, to his sincere regret, to receive Count Tarnowski.

Express again to Count Czernin our deep regret that the Austro-Hungarian Government should have felt itself obliged to join Germany in its submarine policy even though it be only a verbal and not a physical cooperation, and so interrupt relations which we had hoped might remain friendly in form as well as in fact. Count Czernin should understand that in his inability to receive Count Tarnowski the President is acting without feeling against Austria and merely on principle.

You may also inform Count Czernin that the Embassy will be glad to transmit any instructions which he desires to convey to Count Tarnowski, and that if it is desired to have Count Tarnowski return to Vienna, we would of course make all the necessary arrangements regarding safe-conduct.

[Telegram—Extract]

WASHINGTON, March 31, 1917, 4 p. m.

3467. Your 2563, March 23.¹ The following is secret and merely for your guidance in certain eventualities.

On March 28 the Austro-Hungarian Government was definitely informed that this Government could not receive Count Tarnowski as ambassador in view of the fact that Austria-Hungary upholds the ruthless submarine policy declared by Germany—a policy which has already resulted in the death of 225 American citizens. However, in view of Count Czernin's declaration that "Austro-Hungarian submarines are operating only in the Adriatic and in the Mediterranean, and that therefore a prejudicing of American interests by Austro-Hungarian men-of-war is hardly to be feared," and of this Government's realization that the acquiescence of Austria in Germany's submarine policy was the result of Prussian influence rather than the desire of the Government of Austria-Hungary, this Government has not felt the necessity of severing diplomatic relations with Vienna. Furthermore Penfield has been instructed to inform Count Czernin that this Government hoped to continue to maintain friendly relations with Austria.

Count Tarnowski, who has been in Washington since February 3 waiting to be received by the President, was March 29 advised that he could not be received and that, if he desired to return to Vienna a safe-conduct will be provided for him. On March 28 Penfield was called home for consultation, leaving the Embassy in the charge of Grew as Chargé d'Affaires ad interim.

After the President's address to Congress when that body convenes on Monday next, it is possible that a state of war will be declared between the United States and Germany, in which event it is conceivable that the Austrian Government may be compelled to sever relations with the United States, and thus make it impossible for the Department to communicate freely with you. In this eventuality, therefore, these instructions are addressed to you to be observed only should a break with Austria become a fact.

This Government has had no controversy with Turkey and desires to maintain the friendly relations which have always existed between the two Governments, and there would appear to be no reason, therefore, for severing relations unless it be that the Turkish Government feels compelled to obey the mandate from Berlin. In that eventuality you should make clear the attitude of the United States.

If, however, your passports are delivered to you, you are to turn over the affairs of the Embassy to the diplomatic representative decided upon. The Department will advise you at the earliest possible moment regarding disposition to be made of the interests of other governments now in your charge.

You will return to the United States. The members of your staff will accompany you as far as Switzerland, there to await the Department's further instructions.

I have written no communication to Carranza. I have only forwarded instructions to our representative in Mexico through a channel which seemed safe. We are now instituting investigations to find out how these instructions reached the hands of the American Government. I have instructed the Minister in Mexico to offer our alliance to that country and at the same time to suggest that Japan should join the alliance. I have distinctly pointed out that in spite of the submarine warfare we hope that America will maintain its neutrality. The American Government considers itself entitled to provoke the whole world against us before its country is at war with us. Under these circumstances America cannot blame us for seeking allies after there was a possibility of their declaring war upon us.

535. Following is the German Chancellor's speech from the Berlin Morgen Post, March 30, concerning America:

Gentlemen: In the next few days the representatives of the American people meet who have been called together by President Wilson for an extraordinary session of Congress to decide the question of war or peace between the German people and America. Germany has never had the slightest desire to attack America and even to-day she has not this desire; she has never wanted war with America and she desires it as little as she ever did. But how then has this question come about?

We have told the United States more than once that we have renounced the unrestrained practice of the submarine in the expectation that England would not have brought us to use it and that she would have observed the laws of humanity and of international agreement in her blockade policy. This English blockade I expressly remember was pointed out by President Wilson and his Secretary of State Lansing as illegal and not defensible. (Hear! Hear!) Our expectations to which we have clearly adhered for eight months have been, as you all know, disappointed. England has not only not in the least given up her illegal and indefensible blockade policy but on the other hand has strengthened it, has in secret meetings with her allies declined our peace offer in a haughty manner and has proclaimed a kind of war which goes even further than our annihilation and that of those allied to us. Consequently we have resorted to the unrestrained use of the submarine and we must follow this policy. If the American people can find ground to declare war on the German people with whom they have been at peace for over a hundred years and if they will prolong by this the flow of blood it is not us who are responsible for this. (Applause.) The German people who feel neither hate nor enmity toward America will know also how to endure and overcome this.

The Secretary of State to the Diplomatic Representatives in all Countries

WASHINGTON, April 2, 1917.

The President addressed the special session of Congress this evening in regard to the international situation. After briefly reviewing the submarine controversy with Germany, he pointed out that the present submarine warfare is a warfare against mankind; that in view of developments, armed neutrality is worse than ineffectual and is only likely to produce what it was meant to prevent; that we can not choose the path of submission and are arraying ourselves against wrongs which cut to the very roots of human life. With a profound sense of the solemn and even tragical character of the step, he advised the Congress to declare the recent course of the German Government to be in effect nothing less than war against the Government and people of the United States and proposed that it take immediate steps to put the country in a thorough state of defense and employ all its power and resources to bring the German Empire to terms and end the war. This will involve utmost practicable cooperation in counsel and action with the governments now at war with Germany; the extension of financial credits, material aid, and addition to armed forces of at least 500,000 men upon principle of universal military service. Legislative proposals along these lines will be promptly introduced. We have no quarrel with the German people, but only with the autocratic government which has brought on the present situation. The world must be made safe for democracy which seems to be in the balance. We have no selfish ends to serve. We desire no conquest, no dominion; we seek no indemnities for ourselves, no material compensation for the sacrifices we shall freely make. We are but one of the champions of the rights of mankind.

The following Joint Resolution was immediately introduced and referred to the Foreign Relations and Foreign Affairs Committees which meet to-morrow morning for its consideration:

Joint Resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same:

WHEREAS, the recent acts of the Imperial Government are acts of war against the Government and people of the United States;

RESOLVED, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled that the state of war between the United States and the Imperial Government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and,

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to take immediate steps not only to put the country in a thorough state of defense but also to exert all of its power and employ all of its resources to carry on war against the Imperial German Government and to bring the conflict to a successful termination.

LANSING

*Address of the President of the United States Delivered at a Joint Session of the Two Houses of Congress, April 2, 1917*¹

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: I have called the Congress into extraordinary session because there are serious, very serious, choices of policy to be made, and made immediately, which it was neither right nor constitutionally permissible that I should assume the responsibility of making.

On the 3d of February last² I officially laid before you the extraordinary announcement of the Imperial German Government that on and after the 1st day of February it was its purpose to put aside all restraints of law or of humanity and use its submarines to sink every vessel that sought to approach either the ports of Great Britain and Ireland or the western coasts of Europe or any of the ports controlled by the enemies of Germany within the Mediterranean. That had seemed to be the object of the German submarine warfare earlier in the war, but since April of last year the Imperial Government had somewhat restrained the commanders of its under-sea craft in conformity with its promise then given to us that passenger boats should not be sunk and that due warning would be given to all other vessels which its submarines might seek to destroy, when no resistance was offered or escape attempted, and care taken that their crews were given at least a fair chance to save their lives in their open boats. The precautions taken were meagre and haphazard enough, as was proved in distressing instance after instance in the progress of the cruel and unmanly business, but a certain degree of restraint was observed. The new policy has swept every restriction aside. Vessels of every kind, whatever their flag, their character, their cargo, their destination, their errand, have been ruthlessly sent to the bottom without warning and without thought of help or mercy for those on board, the vessels of friendly neutrals along with those of belligerents. Even hospital ships and ships carrying relief to the sorely bereaved and stricken people of Belgium, though the latter were provided with safe-conduct through the proscribed areas by the German Government itself and were distinguished by unmistakable marks of identity, have been sunk with the same reckless lack of compassion or of principle.

I was for a little while unable to believe that such things would in fact be done by any government that had hitherto subscribed to the humane practices of civilized nations. International law had its origin in the attempt to set up some law which would be respected and observed upon the seas, where no nation had right of dominion and where lay the free highways of the world. By painful stage after stage has that law been built up, with meagre enough results, indeed, after all was accomplished that could be accomplished, but always with a clear view, at least, of what the heart and conscience of mankind demanded. This minimum of right the German Government has swept aside under the plea of retaliation and necessity and because it had no weapons which it could use at sea except these which it is impossible to employ as it is employing them without throwing to the winds all scruples of humanity or of respect for the understandings that were supposed to underlie the intercourse of the world. I am not now thinking of the loss of property involved, immense and serious as that is, but only of the wanton and wholesale destruction of the lives of noncombatants, men, women, and children, engaged in pursuits which have always, even in the darkest periods of modern history, been deemed innocent and legitimate. Property can be paid for; the lives of peaceful and innocent people can not be. The present German submarine warfare against commerce is a warfare against mankind.

It is a war against all nations. American ships have been sunk, American lives taken, in ways which it has stirred us very deeply to learn of, but the ships and people of other neutral and friendly nations have been sunk and overwhelmed in the waters in the same way. There has been no discrimination. The challenge is to all mankind. Each nation must decide for itself how it will meet it. The choice we make for ourselves must be made with a moderation of counsel and a temperateness of judgment befitting our character and our motives as a nation. We must put excited feeling away. Our motive will not be revenge or the victorious assertion of the physical might of the nation, but only the vindication of right, of human right, of which we are only a single champion.

When I addressed the Congress on the 26th of February last,¹ I thought that it would suffice to assert our neutral rights with arms, our right to use the seas against unlawful interference, our right to keep our people safe against unlawful violence. But armed neutrality, it now appears, is impracticable. Because submarines are in effect outlaws when used as the German submarines have been used against merchant shipping, it is impossible to defend ships against their attacks as the law of nations has assumed that merchantmen would defend themselves against privateers or cruisers, visible craft giving chase upon the open sea. It is common prudence in such circumstances, grim necessity indeed, to endeavour to destroy them before they have shown their own intention. They must be dealt with upon sight, if dealt with at all. The German Government denies the right of neutrals to use arms at all within the areas of the sea which it has proscribed; even in the defense of rights which no modern publicist has ever before questioned their right to defend. The intimation is conveyed that the armed guards which we have placed on our merchant ships will be treated as beyond the pale of law and subject to be dealt with as pirates would be. Armed neutrality is ineffectual enough at best; in such circumstances and in the face of such pretensions it is worse than ineffectual; it is likely only to produce what it was meant to prevent; it is practically certain to draw us into the war without either the rights or the effectiveness of belligerents. There is one choice we can not make, we are incapable of making: we will not choose the path of submission and suffer the most sacred rights of our nation and our people to be ignored or violated. The wrongs against which we now array ourselves are no common wrongs; they cut to the very roots of human life.

With a profound sense of the solemn and even tragical character of the step I am taking and of the grave responsibilities which it involves, but in unhesitating obedience to what I deem my constitutional duty, I advise that the Congress declare the recent course of the Imperial German Government to be in fact nothing less than war against the Government and people of the United States; that it formally accept the status of belligerent which has thus been thrust upon it; and that it take immediate steps not only to put the country in a more thorough state of defense but also to exert all its power and employ all its resources to bring the Government of the German Empire to terms and end the war.

What this will involve is clear. It will involve the utmost practicable cooperation in counsel and action with the governments now at war with Germany, and, as incident to that, the extension to those governments of the most liberal financial credits, in order that our resources may so far as possible be added to theirs. It will involve the organization and mobilization of all the material resources of the country to supply the materials of war and serve the incidental needs of the nation in the most abundant and yet the most economical and efficient way possible. It will involve the immediate full equipment of the Navy in all respects but particularly in supplying it with the best means of dealing with the enemy's submarines. It will involve the immediate addition to the armed forces of the United States already provided for by law in case of war at least 500,000 men, who should, in my opinion, be chosen upon the principle of universal liability to service, and also the authorization of subsequent additional increments of equal force so soon as they may be needed and can be handled in training. It will involve also, of course, the granting of adequate credits to the Government, sustained, I hope, so far as they can equitably be sustained by the present generation, by well conceived taxation.

I say sustained so far as may be equitable by taxation because it seems to me that it would be most unwise to base the credits which will now be necessary entirely on money borrowed. It is our duty, I most respectfully urge, to protect our people so far as we may against the very serious hardships and evils which would be likely to arise out of the inflation which would be produced by vast loans.

In carrying out the measures by which these things are to be accomplished we should keep constantly in mind the wisdom of interfering as little as possible in our own preparation and in the equipment of our own military forces with the duty—for it will be a very practical duty—of supplying the nations already at war with Germany with the materials which they can obtain only from us or by our assistance. They are in the field and we should help them in every way to be effective there.

I shall take the liberty of suggesting, through the several executive departments of the Government, for the consideration of your committees, measures for the accomplishment of the several objects I have mentioned. I hope that it will be your pleasure to deal with them as having been framed after very careful thought by the branch of the Government upon which the responsibility of conducting the war and safeguarding the nation will most directly fall.

While we do these things, these deeply momentous things, let us be very clear, and make very clear to all the world what our motives and our objects are. My own thought has not been driven from its habitual and normal course by the unhappy events of the last two months, and I do not believe that the thought of the nation has been altered or clouded by them. I have exactly the same things in mind now that I had in mind when I addressed the Senate on the 22d of January last¹; the same that I had in mind when I addressed the Congress on the 3d of February and on the 26th of February. Our object now, as then, is to vindicate the principles of peace and justice in the life of the world as against selfish and autocratic power and to set up amongst the really free and self-governed peoples of the world such a concert of purpose and of action as will henceforth ensure the observance of those principles. Neutrality is no longer feasible or desirable where the peace of the world is involved and the freedom of its peoples, and the menace to that peace and freedom lies in the existence of autocratic governments backed by organized force which is controlled wholly by their will, not by the will of their people. We have seen the last of neutrality in such circumstances. We are at the beginning of an age in which it will be insisted that the same standards of conduct and of responsibility for wrong done shall be observed among nations and their governments that are observed among the individual citizens of civilized states.

We have no quarrel with the German people. We have no feeling towards them but one of sympathy and friendship. It was not upon their impulse that their Government acted in entering this war. It was not with their previous knowledge or approval. It was a war determined upon as wars used to be determined upon in the old, unhappy days when peoples were nowhere consulted by their rulers and wars were provoked and waged in the interest of dynasties or of little groups of ambitious men who were accustomed to use their fellow men as pawns and tools. Self-governed nations do not fill their neighbour states with spies or set the course of intrigue to bring about some critical posture of affairs which will give them an opportunity to strike and make conquest. Such designs can be successfully worked out only under cover and where no one has the right to ask questions. Cunningly contrived plans of deception or aggression, carried, it may be, from generation to generation, can be worked out and kept from the light only within the privacy of courts or behind the carefully guarded confidences of a narrow and privileged class. They are happily impossible where public opinion commands and insists upon full information concerning all the nation's affairs.

A steadfast concert for peace can never be maintained except by a partnership of democratic nations. No autocratic government could be trusted to keep faith within it or observe its covenants. It must be a league of honour, a partnership of opinion. Intrigue would eat its vitals away; the plottings of inner circles who could plan what they would and render account to no one would be a corruption seated at its very heart. Only free peoples can hold their purpose and their honour steady to a common end and prefer the interests of mankind to any narrow interest of their own.

Does not every American feel that assurance has been added to our hope for the future peace of the world by the wonderful and heartening things that have been happening within the last few weeks in Russia? Russia was known by those who knew it best to have been always in fact democratic at heart, in all the vital habits of her thought, in all the intimate relationships of her people that spoke their natural instinct, their habitual attitude towards life. The autocracy that crowned the summit of her political structure, long as it had stood and terrible as was the reality of its power, was not in fact Russian in origin, character, or purpose; and now it has been shaken off and the great, generous Russian people have been added in all their naïve majesty and might to the forces that are fighting for freedom in the world, for justice, and for peace. Here is a fit partner for a league of honour.

One of the things that has served to convince us that the Prussian autocracy was not and could never be our friend is that from the very outset of the present war it has filled our unsuspecting communities and even our offices of government with spies and set criminal intrigues everywhere afoot against our national unity of counsel, our peace within and without, our industries and our commerce. Indeed it is now evident that its spies were here even before the war began; and it is unhappily not a matter of conjecture but a fact proved in our courts of justice that the intrigues which have more than once come perilously near to disturbing the peace and dislocating the industries of the country have been carried on at the instigation, with the support, and even under the personal direction of official agents of the Imperial Government accredited to the Government of the United States. Even in checking these things and trying to extirpate them we have sought to put the most generous interpretation possible upon them because we knew that their source lay, not in any hostile feeling or purpose of the German people towards us (who were, no doubt, as ignorant of them as we ourselves were), but only in the selfish designs of a Government that did what it pleased and told its people nothing. But they have played their part in serving to convince us at last that that Government entertains no real friendship for us and means to act against our peace and security at its convenience. That it means to stir up enemies against us at our very doors the intercepted note to the German Minister at Mexico City is eloquent evidence.

We are accepting this challenge of hostile purpose because we know that in such a government, following such methods, we can never have a friend; and that in the presence of its organized power, always lying in wait to accomplish we know not what purpose, there can be no assured security for the democratic governments of the world. We are now about to accept gage of battle with this natural foe to liberty and shall, if necessary, spend the whole force of the nation to check and nullify its pretensions and its power. We are glad, now that we see the facts with no veil of false pretence about them, to fight thus for the ultimate peace of the world and for the liberation of its peoples, the German peoples included: for the rights of nations great and small and the privilege of men everywhere to choose their way of life and of obedience. The world must be made safe for democracy. Its peace must be planted upon the tested foundations of political liberty. We have no selfish ends to serve. We desire no conquest, no dominion. We seek no indemnities for ourselves, no material compensation for the sacrifices we shall freely make. We are but one of the champions of the rights of mankind. We shall be satisfied when those rights have been made as secure as the faith and the freedom of nations can make them.

Just because we fight without rancour and without selfish object, seeking nothing for ourselves but what we shall wish to share with all free peoples, we shall, I feel confident, conduct our operations as belligerents without passion and ourselves observe with proud punctilio the principles of right and of fair play we profess to be fighting for.

I have said nothing of the governments allied with the Imperial Government of Germany because they have not made war upon us or challenged us to defend our right and our honour. The Austro-Hungarian Government has, indeed, avowed its unqualified endorsement and acceptance of the reckless and lawless submarine warfare adopted now without disguise by the Imperial German Government, and it has therefore not been possible for this Government to receive Count Tarnowski, the Ambassador recently accredited to this Government by the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria-Hungary; but that Government has not actually engaged in warfare against citizens of the United States on the seas, and I take the liberty, for the present at least, of postponing a discussion of our relations with the authorities at Vienna. We enter this war only where we are clearly forced into it because there are no other means of defending our rights.

It will be all the easier for us to conduct ourselves as belligerents in a high spirit of right and fairness because we act without animus, not in enmity towards a people or with the desire to bring any injury or disadvantage upon them, but only in armed opposition to an irresponsible government which has thrown aside all considerations of humanity and of right and is running amuck. We are, let me say again, the sincere friends of the German people, and shall desire nothing so much as the early reestablishment of intimate relations of mutual advantage between us—however hard it may be for them, for the time being, to believe that this is spoken from our hearts. We have borne with their present government through all these bitter months because of that friendship—exercising a patience and forbearance which would otherwise have been impossible. We shall, happily, still have an opportunity to prove that friendship in our daily attitude and actions towards the millions of men and women of German birth and native sympathy who live amongst us and share our life, and we shall be proud to prove it towards all who are in fact loyal to their neighbours and to the Government in the hour of test. They are, most of them, as true and loyal Americans as if they had never known any other fealty or allegiance. They will be prompt to stand with us in rebuking and restraining the few who may be of a different mind and purpose. If there should be disloyalty, it will be dealt with with a firm hand of stern repression; but, if it lifts its head at all, it will lift it only here and there and without countenance except from a lawless and malignant few.

It is a distressing and oppressive duty, gentlemen of the Congress, which I have performed in thus addressing you. There are, it may be, many months of fiery trial and sacrifice ahead of us. It is a fearful thing to lead this great peaceful people into war, into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars, civilization itself seeming to be in the balance. But the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free. To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured. God helping her, she can do no other.

1969. Foreign Office has just informed me that the American steamer Aztec was torpedoed at 9 p. m. last night far out at sea off Island of Ushant. That one boat from the steamer has been found with 19 survivors, who were landed this afternoon at Brest. Twenty-eight persons are still missing and although two patrol vessels are searching for them, the stormy condition of sea and weather renders their rescue doubtful. Foreign Office not informed of names of survivors. Will cable further details as soon as obtainable.

1974. Referring my No. 1970, 3d.¹ Following taken from deposition of Captain O'Brien, steamer Aztec. Nine-thirty p. m., April 1, 9 miles WSW Ushant Light, when on the bridge, captain saw a large flash on the port side forward of the bridge and simultaneously heard an explosion. The explosion was not very loud but appeared to have great force as the boat seemed to be lifted to one side. No submarine nor torpedo was seen. Ship settled back, began to sink forward, listing to starboard and continued to sink very rapidly. The explosion had disarranged the lighting system and wireless outfit. Ship was in complete darkness. All efforts were made to discover any presence of a submarine, nothing was seen. After 10 minutes the ship was completely under forward so the captain gave orders to stand by the boats to abandon the ship. The moon was shining, but the sky was overcast with frequent hail and rain squalls. A light westerly gale was blowing and sea was very rough. About 9.40 the captain gave the order to abandon the ship. Three boats were launched; boats one and three were on the starboard side, two on the port side. Captain tried to get ship's papers, but when he returned on deck boat number two was gone according to the mate. She had been broken up in getting away from the ship, being on the weather side. Boats one and three were successfully launched, containing all the remaining members of the crew. Owing to darkness and rain it was impossible to tell who was in number three boat. Number one boat contained 19 men; Lieutenant Gresham, 11 of the armed guard, the first mate, the third mate, the third engineer, the boatswain, the wireless operator, the messman, and the captain. He saw no trace of number two boat; number three boat was lost sight of after 15 minutes. The Aztec was visible for about 20 minutes and then disappeared in a rain squall.

The Aztec had her colors flying over the stern, but carried no lights at time of sinking. After three hours number one boat was picked up by a French patrol boat, which, after unsuccessfully searching until after daylight for the other two boats, proceeded to Brest, where the survivors landed on the 2d instant.

2587. Your 3467, March 31, 4 p. m.¹ To-day being Minister for Foreign Affairs' reception I called upon him for usual business and pending matters. In the course of the conversation he showed great desire to know what Congress would do to-day. After several issues were mentioned, I sounded him as to whether Turkey would follow the German lead in case war broke out between the United States and Germany. He replied that the relations of the United States and Turkey were friendly, more so now than for some time, and there is no reason why they should not so continue. The Turkish Government had, therefore, not taken into consideration the emergency of a war with the United States. This reply in no wise commits the Turkish Government, and I am still of the opinion that it is not possible to positively know beforehand what Turkey will do. Enver is expected to arrive from Berlin to-day, probably the bearer of Germany's desire as to Turkey's future action in this matter. It is stated that some German officers here have said that if the United States declares war against Germany, Turkey, as Germany's ally, will have to declare war against America. These officers say that Enver also has so stated. On the other hand, the German Ambassador and diplomatic officers are said to have declared that in case of war between the United States and Germany, Turkey should continue her normal diplomatic relations with the United States, as these Germans are said to be apprehensive of internal disturbances and consider presence of American diplomatic mission here as a guaranty against anti-German rising or against further massacres of Christians. These same Germans, however, are reported to surmise that should there be war between the United States and Germany, latter will compel Austria-Hungary to declare war against the United States.

Should it become necessary to sever diplomatic relations with Turkey, I respectfully suggest that American interests here be confided Swedish Minister who is active, familiar with America, and experienced in his relations with the Turks. His wife is American. His staff is small but I will, if Department approves, leave Heck and Wirth to assist him in American affairs, both having volunteered to remain. It is probable that Germany will take position that all armed ships are war vessels and can therefore be sunk without notice, and if America recognizes right to hold Americans captured on these ships as prisoners of war that Germany will consider America recognizes right to sink armed merchant vessels without notice.

MARSHALL LANGHORNE

Memorandum of the German Government Relative to the Treatment of Neutral Members of Crews of Enemy Merchantmen

Various neutral governments have made representations to the Imperial German Government because German naval forces have made prisoners of war of seamen of their respective nationality belonging to the crews of armed enemy merchantmen. In so doing the neutral governments have relied partly on existing treaties and partly on general principles of international law to which this procedure is contended to be repugnant.

I

Germany has not concluded with any power special treaties regarding the treatment of neutral nationals who perform service on board of merchantmen of enemy powers during a war carried on by Germany. The German Government is not aware of any such treaties between other countries.

The sole treaty which might be considered in this connection is a collective treaty, the ninth Hague convention of October 18, 1907, regarding certain restrictions of the right of capture in maritime war. Article 5 of this convention provides that neutral seamen serving on board of enemy merchant ships can not be made prisoners of war and that officers can not be made prisoners unless they refuse to promise not to serve any more on an enemy ship.

This treaty stipulation is, however, not binding on any of the belligerent powers in the present naval war. For pursuant to Article 9, the convention does not apply unless all the belligerents are contracting parties; now a considerable number of the belligerents, among them Russia and Italy in particular, have not ratified the convention. Thus the convention has no validity in the present war, so that no neutral power can rely on the provisions of Article 5.

II

The action of the German naval forces is likewise unimpeachable according to general principles of international law, for these principles undoubtedly permit neutral seamen serving on enemy merchantmen to be made prisoners of war. In the proceedings relative to the ninth Hague convention this was universally conceded.

Article 5 of that convention originated in a motion of the British delegation, in the course of the discussion of which it was established, especially by the British and the Italian delegations, that the intention of the proposal was to create a privilege theretofore unknown which constituted a marked advance over the existing legal status. (Consult Akten und Dokumente der zweiten Internationalen Friedenskonferenz, Band III, pp. 978, 1074.¹) In agreement with this the report of the committee set forth in detail that according to present day practice of international law the crew, the officers, and the captain of a captured enemy merchantman would be treated as prisoners of war regardless of whether the crew were of neutral or enemy nationality. In its recommendations the report points out that this fully established practice had undergone various [modifications] and terms the resolutions of the examining committee the expression of the universal wish to bring about a moderation, that is to say a change, of the existing practice. (See ibid., pp. 1027-1028.²)

It follows that Germany is undoubtedly justified in applying the existing stricter rules in the treatment of neutral crews of enemy merchantmen in the present naval war.

III

Heretofore the German Government has merely made prisoners of war of such neutral seamen only as had permitted themselves to be hired for service on armed enemy merchantmen. It has already expressed its intention of making these seamen prisoners of war in its memorandum of February 8, 1916, relative to the treatment of armed merchantmen,¹ in which it declared that it would consider such vessels as belligerents. There was moreover agreement at the Second Hague Peace Conference, that the privilege introduced by Article 5 of the convention mentioned could not be extended to the neutral crews of such enemy vessels as took any part in hostilities.

If the German Government has occasionally made exceptions to the rule of treating neutral members of the crews of enemy merchantmen as prisoners of war, this was done for humanitarian reasons and after taking into consideration the circumstance that the men concerned had no knowledge of the armament of the ship or of its consequences in international law when they were hired. The German Government is, however, no longer in a position to permit any such exceptions, since its attitude regarding this question and the general armament of enemy merchantmen has in the meantime become generally known.

IV

The German Government must further keep a free hand for decision as to whether it will not in future treat also the neutral members of the crews of unarmed merchantmen as prisoners of war. It would not only be quite justified in so doing according to the principles of existing international law, as shown above, but such action would also be responsive to the action of the enemies of Germany, since they are conducting naval warfare recklessly and pitilessly in every respect; in addition, the enemy governments have claimed the entire merchant marines of their countries for war purposes, so that every neutral accepting service in an enemy marine aids the war purposes of the enemy.

V

man exposes himself to the danger of becoming a prisoner of war if the ship is captured. It therefore suggests that the neutral governments warn their subjects not to enter the merchant marine of powers at war with Germany.

This Government is most solicitous of the welfare of the American prisoners of war in Germany and requests most urgently a complete report in their regard. Department has already received a list of the prisoners through the International Red Cross and American Red Cross, which shows that about 127 Americans are confined at certain camps. This list was prepared by the War Ministry, Berlin, on April 17. Request that instructions be issued to Spanish Ambassador at Berlin immediately to visit camps and route his report through American Minister at Berne, who is interested in relief of prisoners.

This Embassy has received to-day, in reply to a note communicating text of President's note to belligerents, a note dated January 6 in which the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs states:

I did not fail to bring the text of the said note to the high attention of the President of the Republic, and I am authorized to say that the Government of Brazil, a hearty advocate of international peace and concord, is not indifferent to steps looking toward the reestablishment and stability of such peace and concord. These pacific sentiments, in which the whole Brazilian nation participates, place the Government in the happy situation of being able, without embarrassment to itself, and without lack of consideration toward others, to reserve the right to await the opportunity to cooperate or act in that sense in each instance, which may come under its examination, or which may involve its sovereign rights.

Department's circular of 20th December, my despatch December 26.¹ I received last night following from Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs:

Mr. Minister: It has been an honor to me to receive your excellency's note of December 20 last. . . .

I have read with the greatest care and have made known to the President of the Republic the important communication of the Honorable Mr. Lansing, which reveals at first sight the noble motive that has inspired it. My Government, on being acquainted with it, makes the most sincere wishes that the initiative of President Wilson may produce the results sought with regard to the reestablishment of peace, and holds the idea of the American Government and people on the necessity of procuring, if possible, the future tranquillity of the world and is firm in the interest manifested for the means that urgently must be adopted to free the smallest and weakest nations from the danger of injustice and violence to which they are exposed. The moment having arrived which the [Government of the United States] considers opportune to give practical form to those very noble purposes, which after reestablishing normal conditions will tend toward the reign of peace by justice, Peru will lend to them her most active sympathy, consistent with its traditions and with the sound doctrines to whose service she has always put her most devoted efforts.

May your excellency deign to transmit to your Government the gratefulness of mine for the very valuable information which it has been pleased to give; and accept [etc.] E. de la [Riva] Agüero.

Your February 3, 1 p. m., received last night and communicated at once. Panaman Minister for Foreign Affairs last night and Panaman President and other officials to-day expressed cordial approval and offers of cooperation. Sentiment generally is that of sympathy, the correctness and justness of the President's action. Germany has never had a diplomatic representative here, only consular officers. Is any action regarding them desired?

Canal Zone authorities have taken under detention officers and crews of the German vessels which have been in Colon harbor and have placed American guards in charge. They have likewise detained a number of Germans and are planning to do the same with certain Germans in the cities of Panama and Colon, planning to send them to the United States to avoid possible injury to canal.

At my suggestion Acting Governor of Panama Canal, commanding officer of the Canal Zone, and I, with others, held a conference at length this morning and with Panaman President and advisers this afternoon. All precautions are being taken and Panama authorities are cooperating.

I heartily congratulate the President.

I have had an audience with the President on the Argentine answer to the German note and on the answer they shall make to mine probably to-morrow. The Minister for Foreign Affairs stayed at my request and took a memorandum of the conversation. In the main the President said that the Argentine conception of international law and the intellectual attitude they would assume was at one with ours; but that we were in front of the conflict, while their remoteness and the absence of concrete injury to Argentine rights made the form of their reply appear different. But that diplomatic intelligence would clearly perceive that their reply to Germany was au fond identical with ours. That this reply, "to use my own words," left all doors open; and in case of future concrete injury to Argentine interests they were prepared to take any steps the situation might require at any time. Our ends were the same. But they said that their written reply must be almost limited to the quotation of their reply to Germany. It might express sympathy for the United States in the present situation; but it would be difficult even to incorporate also a phrase of sympathy for our ends, in a public correspondence at so critical a juncture. In conclusion and apart the Minister for Foreign Affairs assured me that the United States "might trust him accordingly."

In the judgment of the Government of Chile the measure proposed is equivalent to a restriction of the rights of neutrals which this country cannot respect because it is contrary to principles long consecrated to the benefit of countries that are foreign to armed conflicts.

The acceptance on the part of Chile of the measure taken by Germany would remove it from the line of strict neutrality which it has followed during the present European conflict.

In pursuance of Department's instruction, circular February 3, 1 p. m., immediately communicated with Foreign Office which made reply late yesterday and transmitted therewith copy of note handed the German Chargé d'Affaires at same time relative to German notification of change in character of submarine warfare.

Note of Uruguayan Government states:

The Uruguayan Government, which has previously supported the efforts made by the United States in defence of the rights and interests of neutrals, recognizes the justice and nobility of the sentiments which have served as guide to President Wilson in this emergency. The Government of Uruguay has answered the note of the German Government rejecting the doctrine upon which it relies to carry on submarine warfare without restrictions.

In the enclosed copy your excellency will find the grounds upon which the Uruguayan protest is based.

The Uruguayan reply proceeds at once to combat vigorously the point of view assumed by Germany, stating:

In view of these circumstances and after a careful and tranquil consideration of the case, the Uruguayan Government believes it a duty to inform the German Government that it can not accept for its citizens, commerce, and vessels the restrictions imposed upon it through the undefined zone of blockade and the form of the submarine campaign.

It still hopes that the Imperial Government will maintain its actions within the limits of right, respecting those principles of humanity and justice so often upheld by its best thinkers which have been the bases of the friendly relations cultivated without alteration by our two countries; but, notwithstanding this hope, this Government reserves the right, which the great German international jurist called indisputable, to take appropriate measures not only against procedure which is contrary to international usages but also against arbitrary excesses which menace. Baltasar Brum.

Your February 3, 1 p. m. I received this afternoon a note from the Minister for Foreign Affairs in reply to my note of the 4th instant, which after referring to my note, continues:

It is inferred from the foregoing that the declaration of the German Empire relative to the establishment of zones of blockade on the European coasts has for the United States a double significance; a general one, which is the restriction of the rights of neutrality, and another that concerns the United States privately, the renewal of acts which the United States had previously and clearly condemned and against which a warning had been expressed in a note of April 18, 1916, to ignore which would result in a rupture of diplomatic relations.

Replying to the query contained in your excellency's note relative to the attitude that will be assumed by Chile in view of the declaration of Germany, to which reference has been made, it is my duty to inform your excellency that Chile defined its situation in a note to the German Empire dated the 8th instant. [Received 9.10 p. m.]

Peru's answer to Germany's notification of unrestricted submarine warfare is more vigorous than her reply to Department's February 3, 1 p. m. After reciting former Peruvian protest it concludes:

To-day, before the new and unlimited menace which the proposal of the German Government creates for neutral commerce within the closed zones, I regret to find myself obliged, with greater reason than before, to reserve anew the interests of my Government and of my fellow citizens and to declare that it can not accept the resolution of the Government of your excellency which is before me, on account of considering it unquestionably opposed to international law and to the legitimate rights of the neutrals.

The recent odious case of the Peruvian boat Lorton, regarding which my Government saw itself obliged to place before that of your excellency a formal complaint, proves all the error and injustice of the submarine campaign which it is proposed to generalize in the unacceptable form of closing enormous zones of free sea and under the gravest menaces against the life and interests of the neutrals.

or indicate the attitude of Ecuador toward the suggestion of the President that all other neutral powers take action similar to that taken by the United States. I understand that this note was written after the subject was submitted to the President of Ecuador and the Council of State. Omitting preliminary recitals the following is the complete text of the note as translated:

Very commendable and worthy of applause has been the determination of the neutral powers that have endeavored to mitigate the rigors of the present disastrous war; as equally are not censurable the principles announced by the Government of the United States in the note of April 18, 1916, directed by the Secretary of State to the German Foreign Office through the medium of Ambassador Gerard in Berlin, as regards the inalienable rights of neutrals, the immunities of noncombatants, and the sacred rights of humanity, universally and during all time recognized by civilized nations.

My Government can never consent that any of the belligerents shall impair or fail to recognize the rights that, as a neutral, international laws and treaties assure to it. Having faithfully complied with the obligations which the strictest neutrality imposes upon it, my Government can not well renounce the rights which grow out of that neutrality, which, in [truth] are but the inherent attributes of national sovereignty.

However, perhaps if some form of joint American action, looking toward the legitimate defense of the rights of neutrals were to be discussed, it would be of great interest to the Government and to know the views of your excellency's Government and of the other American governments in a matter of such a great importance.

WASHINGTON, February 19, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I have the honor to inform your excellency that I have received the following telegram from my Government:

Quito, February 17, 1917.

Minister of Ecuador, Washington. We have answered the cablegram from Mexico as follows: The initiative that we, the American countries, took to secure the union of all in the matter of maintaining the rights of neutrals and allaying the rigors of war, is proof of the conviction they entertain that individual action is fruitless, as joint action will be fruitful. What is lacking is to determine in what form joint action is to be exercised. That may be determined through the immediate meeting of American congress in Uruguay, for instance, for the purpose of agreeing upon measures likely to guarantee the rights of the continental neutrality and allay the rigors of the struggle. Officially lay this idea before the Secretary of State of the United States and the American representatives at the capital where you reside and ask them to forward it to their respective Governments.

Minister of Foreign Relations

The text of the above inserted telegram will have shown to your excellency the object of this note, in the sense of submitting to your excellency's Government's consideration the idea of an immediate meeting of an American congress on continental cooperation in maintaining neutral rights and alleviating, as far as possible, the rigors of war.

None of the reasons on which my Government bases its proposition at the present time, or which lead it to believe that it may bring forward at this juncture the results of American continental union which it promotes, will surely escape your excellency's high ability.

Should your excellency's Government lend its weighty patronage to the defensive and altruistic undertaking the proposition implies, it may be presumed that the most complete success will very soon crown the joint efforts of all the American peoples.

WASHINGTON, February 26, 1917, 11 a. m.

10. The Department has obtained possession of text of telegram sent by Zimmermann, German Secretary of State, to the German Minister to Mexico, which was sent by way of Washington and, we are informed, was forwarded by Bernstorff on January 19.² It states in substance that it is the intention of the German Government to begin unrestricted submarine warfare on February 1; that in spite of this plan the German Government will endeavor to keep the United States neutral, but if they do not succeed the German Government make an offer of an alliance with Mexico as follows: To make war together; to make peace together; Germany to give financial aid and to agree that Mexico is to recapture Arizona, Texas, and New Mexico. Settlement of details are left to the German Minister. German Minister is instructed to inform the President of Mexico of this proposal most secretly as soon as war with United States is certain and to suggest that he should, on his own initiative, approach Japan with some suggestion for an understanding, which is not quite clear, and, at the same time, offer to mediate between Japan and Germany.

You will at once see General Carranza or, if that can not be arranged immediately, the Minister of Foreign Affairs. Read to him the substance of the German note and state that it is probable that the contents of this note will be made public in the United States immediately and suggest as your personal opinion that it might be well for the Mexican Government to make some comment.

Merely for your guidance. The Department does not feel that it can properly withhold from the public the text of this German message. Its publication, however, may cause great consternation and it is possible, unfortunately, that, with the intense feeling aroused, there may be included a degree of uncertainty in regard to the attitude of Mexico unless the Mexican Government can make some statement which might be published simultaneously tending to show their disinterestedness.

He said that he had no knowledge of any representations of the character referred to and that if such representations were made they must have been made directly to Carranza; that the German Minister had several times recently asked him when Carranza would return to the city. Minister for Foreign Affairs went directly to the telegraph office to confer with Carranza. At the Minister's urgent request I gave him a synopsis of German note in Spanish to be used in his telegraphic conference with Carranza. *The Honduran Minister of Foreign Affairs (Vásquez) to the American Minister (Ewing)*TEGUCIGALPA, February 16, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: After giving the most careful consideration to the important note of your excellency, dated the 4th of the current month, which served to communicate to me the breaking off of relations by the Government of the United States with that of Germany, on account of the recent announcement by Germany of a renewal of submarine warfare, without distinction, against merchant ships, the President of the Republic has given me instructions to reply to your excellency in the following terms:

The Government of Honduras finds justified the action of the Government of the United States on breaking off its diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government of Germany, on account of the submarine warfare which Germany is making against merchant ships of belligerents or nonbelligerents without distinction, in contravention of the rights of humanity and the principles of international law.

The Government of Honduras believes that the declaration of the United States Government will produce the effect of guaranteeing, on the part of Germany, the neutral merchant marine in free waters; but in case that this should not happen and on that account should supervene more serious difficulties between the United States and Germany, Honduras will hasten to declare her attitude in such conflicts.¹

MEXICO CITY, March 10, 1917, 10 a. m.

13. Returned last night from Guadalajara. Spent several days in the company of the First Chief who expressed a very sincere desire to arrange all matters which have arisen or may arise in a spirit of accommodation. On the subject matter of your No. 10, February 26, 11 a. m., he was extremely cautious. He said that Mexico had not received up to the present time from Germany any proposition whatever of alliance; that for his part his sincere desire was that the war should not come to this side of the Atlantic; that the peace note of Mexico¹ was based on this hope, and upon the humane motive of helping as far as possible to reestablish peace, and in compliance with the highest duties of self-preservation and defense. He spoke at length of his great desire to have the neutral powers accept some plan, not necessarily his, which would bring peace and did not seem to fear Germany's future policy in case neutrals should or could impose peace at this time. He said that you had not replied to his note; that he hoped you would accept in principle, and if you will so accept he would suggest that conference of all the neutral powers be called in Washington where all are represented diplomatically with a view to discovering the most convenient form of contributing to the early restoration of peace in Europe, and he said it was immaterial whether the ideas proposed in his note should be adopted or others which the conference might deem more appropriate. In answer to my direct question as to his attitude in case Germany should propose an alliance, he said that Mexico desires to avoid becoming involved in the war and again referred to his note, but he avoided saying directly that such a proposition would be rejected. Personally I do not think Mexico would under present circumstances accept alliance referred to but I think First Chief wishes withhold categorical statement to that effect in the hope of inducing our Government to accept his peace proposals or a peace conference of neutrals.

While both he and Minister for Foreign Affairs were very careful and guarded in their utterances, I gathered that their sentiments inclined somewhat toward Germany. As I was leaving the Minister for Foreign Affairs yesterday, in reply to my statement that I was rather sorry I would not be able to send to the President a frank and categorical statement of Mexico's attitude if an alliance with Germany should be proposed, he said that his Government wished to proceed step by step and that no doubt after a report had been received to their note the First Chief would confer with me again after having returned to the Capital next week, and he said that in any case Mexico's conduct would be just and correct whether any statement was made or not; that they believed that actions spoke better than words.

Please advise me opportunely of any action on the Mexican note.

Congress convened at 4 o'clock this afternoon. Thirty minutes later Senate unanimously passed measure authorizing the President to declare war on Germany. Fifteen minutes after six, House unanimously passed the act, members standing and cheering. Act becomes effective on publication by the President in Official Gazette to-night. Act gives fullest power to the President allowed under the Constitution. Measures providing funds Quartermaster General, imposing war taxes must be introduced separately.

Part of preamble follows:

The fact that the United States of America has declared on the 6th instant the existence of a state of war between it and the Imperial German Government presents the exact and due opportunity for setting such situation since the historic ties and the gratitude which bind us to the great American Republic impel us to take the field where she is going to struggle for the right to use the high seas, the freedom of commerce, the respect due neutrals, and international justice.

The act follows:

ARTICLE 1. A state of war is hereby formally declared to exist as from this date between the Government of Cuba and the Imperial German Government and the President of the Republic is hereby authorized and directed to employ all the forces of the nation and the resources of our Government to make war upon the Imperial German Government for the purpose of upholding our rights, safe-guarding our territory, providing for our security, preventing any acts which may be done to our injury and defending navigation of the high seas, the freedom of commerce, the rights of neutrals, and international justice.

ARTICLE 2. The President of the Republic is hereby authorized to dispose of the land and sea forces in such manner as he shall deem necessary, utilizing the existing forces, reorganizing them or creating new ones, and to dispose of the economic resources of the nation as required.

ARTICLE 3. The President of the Republic will report to Congress the measures which he shall adopt in fulfillment hereof.

PANAMA, April 9, 1917, 5 p. m.

[Received April 10, 8 a. m.]

The following is the part of the proclamation which precedes that sent in my telegram of April 7, 10 p. m. The two constitute the whole:

The Congress of the United States of America has declared that a state of war exists between that country and the German Empire and such declaration imposes upon the Republic of Panama grave and unavoidable obligations.

If any other country were affected the elemental duty of Panama would be to maintain itself within the limits of a strict neutrality, but it being a conflict in which is involved the United States of America, a nation which by virtue of a perpetual public treaty guarantees and maintains the independence and sovereignty of Panama and has constructed within Panama territory a wonderful work necessary for the commerce of the world and whose preservation is essential for the development and progress of our country, neutrality is impossible.

Our clear and indisputable duty in this dreadful hour of human history is that of a natural ally whose very existence is linked in a perpetual and indissoluble manner with the United States of America and this is the meritorious attitude which it is incumbent upon us to adopt. And as such a situation creates danger for our country it is the duty of the Panaman people to cooperate with all the energies and resources at its disposal for the protection and defense of the Panama Canal and to safeguard the territory of the nation.

The attitude of the Panaman people was foreseen and interpreted by the National Assembly in a resolution unanimously approved on the 24th of February last and confirmed afterwards in the introductory clause and in the text of law 46 of 1917 and the moment has arrived for the executive power to act in accordance with the declaration of the supreme body of the Republic.

[Received April 13.]

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I have this moment received from my Government instructions to advise that of your excellency that on yesterday his passports were handed to the Minister of Germany at Rio de Janeiro and a telegram was sent to our Minister at Berlin instructing him to ask for his, thus bringing to an end the diplomatic relations of Brazil with that Empire.

By note of February 9 last, Brazil protested against the manner in which the German Government seeks to hamper maritime commerce with the enemy countries and declared that Government responsible for injuries to persons or property of Brazilian citizens in the lawful exercise of their rights on the high seas if proved to be in violation of the principles of international law or of the conventions signed between the two countries. And in order to remove all doubts on that point our Legation at Berlin, on February 13, notified the German Government that "we consider essential to the maintenance of relations with Germany that no Brazilian vessel be attacked in any way and under any pretext whatsoever, even that of carrying contraband of war, the belligerents having included everything in that category."

My Government was grieved to learn of the sinking of the Brazilian steamer Paraná at 11 p. m. on the 3d of this month while approaching the port of Cherbourg at reduced speed and showing the regulation lights and also in large illuminated letters the word "Brasil." The ship was not summoned to stop for an examination of her papers and cargo, was torpedoed without warning, five cannon shots being fired into her besides. Although nearby and in full sight, the submarine extended no assistance to the shipwrecked crew. Several Brazilians lost their lives, others were injured in that brutal attack on a ship of a neutral country. The President of the United States of Brazil judged that the incident left no room for explanations or diplomatic negotiations with the Government of Germany towards which that of Brazil has ever fulfilled its promises and obligations freely entered into and, to his regret to be sure, resolved to break our diplomatic and commercial relations with the German Empire.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 11th [12th] instant whereby you acquaint me with the severance by your Government of the diplomatic relations between Brazil and the German Empire because of the unjustifiable sinking of the Brazilian steamship Paraná by a German torpedo boat, without warning or exercise of visit and search according to the rules of international law, and with the loss of Brazilian life.

This act, in flagrant disregard of all the accepted tenets of international law and of the fundamental law of humanity, is but another instance of the ruthless international unmorality of the German Government and its utter contempt for the established rights of neutrals. The United States discerns in it a parallel to the repeated overt acts of savagery committed against American ships. My country has been constrained to treat these deeds as constituting a manifest aggression by Germany against a pacific neutral state which renders the continuance of normal relations impossible. The destruction of the Paraná puts Brazil in the same category with the United States as a victim of unjustifiable wrong-doing. For us, no recourse was open save the recognition of the fact that war was actually being made upon our flag, and nothing remained for us but fulfilment of the duty to meet the shameful attack by taking up arms in accordance with the dictates of the law of civilized nations, thus meeting criminal aggression by a resolute defense of our national rights which are those of mankind.

WASHINGTON, April 18, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: In a letter dated the 10th of this month of April and received by me to-day, the President of Guatemala tells me:

In consequence of the declaration of war on the Imperial German Government by the United States of America, my Government, ever true to its long standing friendship with the American Government and people, among the series of measures it will order in evidence of the fact that it will face every responsibility attending its identifying itself with the principles proclaimed by the Washington Government, has decreed, as a preliminary and in order to guard the country against any attempt from abroad, a suspension of the guarantees in the border departments, in keeping with paragraph 18, Article 77 of the Constitution. Thus will an effective watch be kept over every element who would disturb the peace and who will be prevented from crossing into the neighboring countries with preconceived purposes. On the other hand, standing firmly and consistently with the American nation, as you well know and as the inclosed memorandum the original of which was delivered to the most excellent the Minister of the United States further evidences, I only trust that upon receipt of this communication you will lay before the Department of State my intentions as set forth in the said memorandum, which are incorruptible and sincere, to which end I hope that the American Government will be pleased to offer to me all suggestions that it may deem suitable in the matter.

In compliance with the letter of the President of Guatemala, I have the honor to enclose a copy of the memorandum therein referred to, and beg the Secretary of State to be so good as to give me the requisite indications to have the action of the Government of my country continue to demonstrate by practical acts that it has identified itself with the principles which the enlightened American Government has proclaimed for the good of mankind and with the applause of the world's conscience.

To that end, I take pleasure in placing myself entirely at your excellency's disposal to report to the President and Government of Guatemala all that may contribute to continuing in Guatemala the realization of the expression of the fervent wish by which the country is animated to adhere to and uphold the lofty and noble attitude of the American Government.

JOAQUÍN MÉNDEZ

Guatemalan Minister of Foreign Affairs (Toledo Herrarte) to the American Minister (Leavell)

MEMORANDUM

The Government of Guatemala, faithful to its traditional and unalterable friendship with the Government of the United States of America and convinced, moreover, that it defends the cause of justice and right, declares: that it is disposed to cooperate with the American Government and people in the most loyal and unrestricted manner, to the successful ending of the war which has been brought on them by the conduct of the Imperial German Government.

In consequence of the above principle it has already decreed, under date of the 7th instant, the suspension of guaranties in those departments of the Republic bordering on neighboring states, which will enable it to exercise complete control and strict vigilance over all foreigners who may endeavor to subvert order or to cross over into contiguous countries with suspicious purposes.

Furthermore, the Government of Guatemala is ready to sever its diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government and to do everything which may be considered necessary for the triumph of the American arms. In all those measures or dispositions which the American Government may deem conducive to the success of the above purpose, it will be aided by the Government of Guatemala with the greatest promptitude, energy, and efficacy.

The Government of the United States can readily understand that the Government of Guatemala in taking this attitude not only brings upon itself the hatred and ill will of the German element residing in this Republic, an element which, with hostile purposes, is working in Mexico and in the neighboring Central-American nations, but exposes itself to the attacks of the above-mentioned countries, who have been awaiting a favorable opportunity to disturb the present state of affairs in Guatemala and thus cause her ruin and loss of prestige.

Therefore, the Government of Guatemala, in order to safeguard the sacred interests entrusted to it and to be able to take upon itself before the nation and before history the great responsibilities which the present situation entails, proposes to the American Government the conclusion of a pact of alliance which could be offensive and defensive, or only defensive, and which in the present circumstances could be brought about by a simple exchange of notes of mutual assurance between diplomatic representatives duly authorized to that effect.

He stated that he expected that said congress would come to an agreement morally favoring the United States and Allies much like the last Argentine note to the United States. The deliberate violations of law by the Imperial Government, the slaughter of American citizens and the wanton attacks on American vessels by German submarines, in utter disregard of the promises given, have defeated the President's efforts to preserve friendly relations and have forced this country to abandon a neutrality which it could no longer maintain and maintain its honor and rights.

At the time General Carranza's offer was received the situation was such that mediation did not seem practicable. The President therefore deferred instructing you in regard to the matter in the hope that a favorable opportunity might arise which would permit of a more responsive communication to General Carranza's tender of good offices.

It is deeply regretted that events have not developed in a way to make for the acceptance of General Carranza's counsel and assistance. The President hopes, however, that he may always rely upon the same friendly spirit of conciliation in dealing with the many important matters concerning Mexico and the United States.

124. The President desires that you take an early opportunity to discuss the present situation very frankly with General Carranza. You may say that this Government relying upon his declaration of Mexico's neutrality in the war between the United States and Germany confidently expects his Government to prevent Mexican territory from becoming a base of hostile acts toward the United States. General Carranza is, of course, aware that numbers of German subjects have passed and are passing from the United States to Mexico. Their known activities in the latter country cause this Government to be apprehensive of complications which the President is anxious to avoid. Appreciating the frank avowal of neutrality by General Carranza it seems needless to express the hope that he will take prompt and effective steps to prevent illegal acts of German subjects in Mexico which may interrupt or injure the trade of countries friendly with Mexico, jeopardize the lives and property of their citizens, or in any way compromise the neutrality of Mexico.

Your April 22, 2 p. m. Yesterday I told the Minister for Foreign Affairs the substance of your reply to his question concerning the proposed conference of American nations excluding the United States. He seemed much disappointed, reminding me that the Argentine Government in its answer to my note had taken an attitude of taking sides with the United States in a manner unprecedented in its history. He then asked me a great many questions as to the meaning of the State Department's answer; whether it meant that it disapproved of the conference in toto and whether it would have made any difference in the answer if the United States had been included in the invitation. I, of course, told him that he could interpret the meaning of the reply as well as I could myself, but that it did not seem necessary to suppose that it meant any more than it said. I adverted to the fact that there had appeared in the Buenos Aires press a telegram from Washington said to be given out by the Department to the effect that the United States would not take part in such a conference for fear of giving offense to the powers of the Entente. He said that that should not be the case, hinting strongly that the design of the Argentine Government in calling the conference was to line up the American republics with the attitude taken by President Wilson. I asked him whether he wished me to send any further question to my Government and he said that he would let me know to-day after conversing with the President.

MEXICO CITY, April 25, 1917, 8 p. m.

133. I have just had an hour's conversation with President-elect Carranza in the course of which I read to him paraphrases of your telegrams No. 123, April 21, 7 p. m., and 124, April 21, 8 p. m. He thinks it will be a good plan if the representatives of the Allied powers now in Washington, along with the preparation of plans for the prosecution of the war, could agree upon an outline of terms of peace; that these terms might be communicated through their diplomatic representatives in the United States to the Latin-American neutral powers who would act as mediators in their presentation to the German Government. He intimated that it might be possible, if these neutrals found the terms just and equitable, that in presenting them to Germany they might state that unless accepted these neutral nations would take sides with the Allies. He said that this was a thought which has occurred to him but that he did not wish to make the suggestion in any official way and asked me to telegraph it to you for such consideration as it might merit.

In the course of the conversation I explained to him fully the considerations which had driven us into the war and pointed out to him the danger which Mexico and other American nations would incur from an inconclusive peace, which would leave the military party in Germany as a standing menace to all nations who wished to work out their destinies in unarmed peace. I think he is coming to a juster appreciation of the great issues involved in the war and of Mexico's interest as affected thereby.

The Mexican Government receives every day by telegraph a synopsis of what is said in the leading papers of the United States relating to Mexico, and he complained of the misstatements and decidedly distrustful and hostile attitude of our leading papers with regard to Mexico in its relation to the war and asked me to endeavor to put things in their true light before the Department which he hoped might discourage the circulation of absurd and baseless stories about Mexico. He said that he was very much pleased with the interview I had given out yesterday and that it would have an excellent effect in reestablishing mutual confidence.

He stated that he would be very glad to receive any evidence or information we might have showing German activities tending to compromise Mexican neutrality, and that he would take immediate steps to frustrate them. He said that the recent taking over of various British railways was not to be regarded in any way as hostile to Great Britain or the enemies of Germany, but that such measures became necessary in connection with the activity of the various insurrectionary bands operating along those railways and for the safe movement of traffic.

I feel sure that Mr. Carranza fully realizes the desirability and necessity of Mexico maintaining strictly its neutrality.

His attitude was frank, cordial, and rather encouraging.

Memoranda of the Chief of the Division of Latin-American Affairs of the Department of State (Stabler)

April 21, 1917.

On Saturday, April 21, Mr. Ménos, the Haitian Minister, called at the Latin-American Division by appointment and informed Mr. Stabler that he had received a cable from his Government stating that the President of Haiti had held numerous conferences with General Cole, of the forces in occupation, in connection with Haiti's entrance into the war with Germany on the side of the United States; that General Cole had conveyed to the President a statement that it would be advisable for Haiti to take this step, but that the President, in view of possible opposition, desired to be assured of proper aid and assistance in case the Government of Haiti decided to break relations with Germany and declare war. Mr. Stabler said that he would immediately take up this matter with the Secretary who would then instruct him to answer Mr. Ménos' inquiry in the premises. Mr. Ménos said he would be glad to have this information as soon as possible.

April 24, 1917.

Mr. Stabler spoke with the Secretary this morning with reference to Mr. Ménos and requested to be informed as to whether the Government of the United States would give proper aid to the Government of Haiti, should she break off relations and declare war with Germany. Mr. Lansing instructed Mr. Stabler to state to Mr. Ménos that the United States would give all aid to Haiti in such eventuality.

As General Cole had cabled the Navy Department requesting the same information, Mr. Stabler asked Mr. Lansing if he was authorized to give the Navy Department the same information as Mr. Ménos in order that they might answer the cable. Mr. Lansing told Mr. Stabler he might do this.

Mr. Ménos called at the Department this afternoon at the request of Mr. Stabler and was informed by the latter that the United States would give all proper assistance to him in case of a declaration of war with Germany. Mr. Ménos asked what specific aid the United States might give. This Mr. Stabler said it was impossible at the moment to say as the question of furnishing aid was one which depended entirely upon the circumstances which might arise.

In speaking with Mr. Ménos Mr. Stabler, as is the custom, used the French language and informed him that the United States would give Haiti tout appui which he considered a correct translation of what the Secretary had instructed him to say. Mr. Ménos said would this mean in English "all proper assistance." Mr. Stabler said it would.

At the Pan American Union on the occasion of the reception by the Secretary of State to Mr. Balfour, Mr. Ménos spoke to Mr. Stabler and informed him that he had sent a telegram to his Government, based on a conversation he had had with Mr. Stabler, and had said that the United States would give appui convenable to Haiti, in case of her breaking off relations and declaring war. Mr. Stabler said that of course was one translation, but that as he had informed him, the translation should be tout appui.

Ascertain and cable attitude of Cuban Government toward disposing of German vessels to the United States which are understood to have been seized by that Government, and if these vessels are not seized what the attitude of the Cuban Government will be toward seizing or requisitioning them.

If Cuba is willing to dispose of these vessels the United States Shipping Board recommends the following method of procedure:

It should be suggested that Cuba take the following steps, by proper legislation or order:

(1) Authorize her proper officials to seize the vessels, and on proof that they are of enemy nationality, assume title thereto on behalf of the Cuban Government.

(2) Provide by appropriate legislation for a board of competent appraisers (who need not be citizens of Cuba), to be appointed by the President of Cuba, to assess their present value (unaffected by seizure or prospect of seizure by the Government), and report the same to the President of Cuba.

(3) Authorize the President of Cuba to sell the ships to the United States, at a price not less than that fixed by the board of appraisers.

(B)

Congress should be requested to authorize the United States Shipping Board, with the consent of the President, to purchase vessels from the Cuban Government, at a reasonable price to be determined by the Shipping Board.

(C)

The Shipping Board should make a formal offer to buy the ships from the Cuban Government, on the following terms:

(1) The vessels to be delivered immediately;

(2) The Board to pay the Cuban Government the price determined upon by the Cuban Board of Appraisers (provided the personnel of the board is first approved by the Shipping Board), plus all reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the seizure, condemnation, and sale, with interest from the date of delivery.

There has been no interruption in our diplomatic relations with the nations whose friendship we have always cultivated, and we are at peace with all. We have adjusted our conduct to the precepts of international law by maintaining the strictest neutrality in the gigantic struggle in which for nearly three years the great European nations have been engaged, and no one can reproach us with the slightest violation of our duty as neutrals. In conformity with this line of conduct, when on February 23 of this year the German Legation by order of its Government informed our Foreign Office of the unusual extension that said Government had resolved to give submarine warfare in open disregard of the practices accepted until now, it was answered that Venezuela would adjust its conduct to the principles of international law regulating the rights and duties of neutrals. Until now nothing has taken place whereby we have directly suffered in consequence of the operations of the German submarines; we have not found ourselves, therefore, involved in the complications that have forced the United States to go to war against the German Empire. Venezuela, consistent with its policy of respect to right, preserves unimpaired the right of defending the life and property of its citizens and follows the course of events with a solicitous regard growing out of the principles in the defense of which the United States has entered the war, as well as on account of the traditional friendship which binds it to this nation and the general interests common to the republics of the continent.

The Department instructed the Ambassador to inform the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Argentine that it was obviously impossible for the Government of the United States to make any expression of its views particularly at this time.

You may also inform the Minister for Foreign Affairs that, inasmuch as the Republic of Cuba has declared war against Germany, that the Republic of Panama has severed relations with Germany and placed itself side by side with the United States in cooperation during the war, that as the Government of Guatemala and the Government of Brazil have broken relations with Germany, that the Government of Bolivia has done likewise, it would appear that such a conference as that outlined by the Argentine Republic could not be considered as representing Latin-American feeling, as many nations had already outlined their policy.

You may also intimate to the Minister for Foreign Affairs that this Government is regarding with the most careful scrutiny the attitude of the Government of Honduras at this time and will continue to so regard her future action.

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1917, 5 p. m.

Your May 9, 9 p. m., and May 11, (?) a. m.¹ The Ambassador at Buenos Aires has reported to the Department that in February of this year the Government of the Argentine made overtures to certain Latin-American nations in an endeavor to call a peace conference to be held at Buenos Aires. After the breaking of relations by the United States with Germany the proposal of the Argentine Government to hold a peace conference was abandoned and it was said she was endeavoring to call a commercial conference of American nations. Later the Ambassador reported that the Government of the Argentine had informed him that it was desired to call in Buenos Aires a conference of the nations of America to decide upon what course should be pursued in the present war.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Argentine asked the American Ambassador to ascertain the views of the Government of the United States in regard to this conference, saying that as the United States was now a belligerent it would not be included in the invitation to attend the conference.

In reply the Ambassador was instructed to inform the Government of the Argentine Republic that it was obviously impossible for the Government of the United States to give any expression of its views at the present time. The Ambassador reported that this reply was disappointing to the Government of the Argentine and nothing further has been heard by this Government regarding the conference.

It is suggested that the Government of Panama reply to the Government of the Argentine that its decision in regard to the war has already been made, that it has broken off relations with Germany

Paraphrase of Telegram Received by the Argentine Embassy

The Argentine Embassy has received official information in regard to a meeting of the American nations at the initiative of the Argentine Government with the purpose of trying to come to an understanding between them on the occasion of the present war and its aggravation from day to day. The Argentine Government thinks that the American nations should concrete an uniform judgment in that regard, bringing into realization the earnest desire of establishing ties capable of strengthening their situation and personality in the general concert of the nations. The idea has been accepted by Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Chile, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Guatemala, Nicaragua, San Salvador, Ecuador, Honduras, Costa Rica, and Haiti, and the Department of Foreign Affairs is expecting the responses of the other nations in order to propose the date for the international meeting. The Argentine Government will be desirous to know the thought of the Government of the United States about this initiative and thinks that it is most interesting that it realizes the true spirit and purposes of such a meeting, lending to it its moral adherence.

The fact that the Government of the United States of America was already in war with Germany when the idea of this meeting was initiated was the reason why it did not receive the same invitation sent to the other American nations.

It is unnecessary to say that in initiating this idea the Argentine Government has not been prompted in any way or shape whatsoever to separate itself from its traditional policy toward the United States which has always been consequent [sic] and frank. The most constant cordiality and friendship of our relations with the American people as well as our plain recognition of the justice of its position publicly stated when the state of war with Germany was declared, are facts conclusive enough to prove that any act initiated or seconded by the Argentine Government can not be interpreted as in any way unfriendly by it toward the United States.

Memorandum of the Counselor for the Department of State (Polk)

[Extract]

May 17, 1917.

On May 15 the Brazilian Ambassador read me despatches from his President and from his Minister of Foreign Affairs bearing on the future attitude of Brazil in this war. The gist of both messages was that Brazil was prepared to abandon its position of neutrality towards Germany. One note stated that they would be willing to grant our warships the right to refit in their ports, and the Brazilian Government might take over a portion of the patrol of the northern coast of Brazil. As the Minister of Foreign Affairs put it, Brazil would give their moral, economic, and political support to the United States in exchange for some trade guaranties and for some agreement, not necessarily a treaty, covering the position that this Government would take in case Germany should later consider Brazil an enemy as a result of this action.

The Ambassador said he realized that it would be difficult to be specific as to what this Government would do to protect Brazil in case of attack by Germany, but he would like to bring the matter up for discussion and consideration. I asked him what he meant by trade guaranties, and in substance they mean that this Government would see they continued to receive from the United States necessary supplies, particularly wheat and coal, and that shipping used in trade with Brazil would not be withdrawn for use in transatlantic trade to a degree that would seriously embarrass Brazil. I asked him if he had any details as to the amount of shipping and foodstuffs and merchandise they would require. He said he had not but would make some investigations and let me know. He said that he had received this telegram last week, and he would like to have some sort of message to send his Government this week. . . .

The Ambassador returned to-day and said that although he did not yet have information as to food supplies necessary, he would like to have some message to send his Government as they were holding Congress until they could get a reply from us.

[Telegram]

RIO DE JANEIRO, May 22, 1917, 11 p. m.

[Received May 23, 10.35 a. m.]

President of Brazil sent to Congress this afternoon the following message:

Gentlemen of the National Congress: In the message which I sent to the National Congress on the 3d of the present month, I stated that I had issued decree No. 12458 of the 25th of April last relative to the neutrality to be observed by Brazil in view of the existing state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

I issued this decree, although commercial and diplomatic relations with Germany had been suspended in accordance with decree No. 11037 of August 4, 1914, which set forth the international agreements of the two conventions at The Hague to which Brazil had been a party, defining the rights and duties of neutral powers and persons, but avoiding in this document the terms used in previous acts of this nature and directing only that the Brazilian authorities observe and comply with the rules of neutrality until such a time as they should be otherwise directed.

The government could go no further; but the Brazilian people through their vested legislative authority can, without bellicose intentions but with firmness, take into consideration the fact that one of the belligerents is an integral part of the American continent and that with this belligerent we are united by a traditional friendship and by the same political ideals in the defense of the vital interests of America and the principles of international law.

This has been the universal principle to which Brazil has adhered. The Republic remains faithful to the uninterrupted traditions of its foreign policy; to-day it can not repudiate the idea which inspired the note of protest of the Empire of Brazil, bearing the date of May 15, 1866, when a European squadron bombarded a South American city.

² This telegram reads: "Brazil unable repair interned merchant vessels. Suggest purchase or charter. . . ." (File No. 763.72/4762.)

Our tenet then was this: That the nations of this continent, whose wealth and population are spread over extensive and undefined coast-line, require more than others that the principles of modern civilization shall be maintained and shall constitute their most efficient protection.

Emphasizing finally that the policy of continental solidarity is not a policy of this epoch of government nor of this régime but a traditional policy of the Brazilian nation, I submit the case to the judgment of the National Congress, convinced that if perchance any resolution is adopted it will strengthen more than before the happy understanding which exists between Brazil and the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to report that a most satisfactory meeting was held last Monday afternoon at the summer home of the President of Panama for a general talk and conference relating to measures for the proper defense of Panama and the Canal Zone, and to the situation generally, incidental to the war with Germany.

The meeting was held pursuant to my suggestion to the military authorities of the Canal Zone, and in making the suggestion I had the idea in view that such a conference, from time to time, would serve to add very materially to the interest and enthusiasm of the Panaman officials. The suggestion was very heartily accepted by Brig. Gen. E. H. Plummer, Commanding General of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone, and it was equally acceptable to the Panaman authorities when I took the matter up with them after General Plummer concurred in it. I enclose a copy of my note making the suggestion.¹

The Department will remember from my despatches prior to this we have had conferences at my suggestion, but this one was on a larger scale with more officials formally invited.

General Plummer called to the conference the Governor of the Panama Canal; Commander Cone, the Marine Superintendent of the Canal; Capt. H. D. Mitchell, Chief of the Canal Zone Police and Detective Service; Maj. Oliver Edwards of the Staff of the Commanding General; Capt. Chas. E. T. Lull, who has succeeded Major Edwards as intelligence officer; Maj. J. K. Miller, the Provost Marshal, and Maj. H. A. White, the Judge Advocate on the Staff of the Commanding General. The Secretary of the Legation, Mr. Curtis, accompanied me and I also asked Mr. Alban G. Snyder, the American Consul General here. President Valdez and all his Cabinet were present with the exception of Sr. Dr. Morales, who is in Washington, and in addition there were present Sr. Ernesto Arias, the Captain of the Port of Panama; Sr. Rodolfo Estripeaut, the Commandante of the National Police of Panama; the Governor of the Province of Panama, and the Mayor of this city.

I opened the conference by stating the general object of it, chiefly that of conferring for the purpose of better and more effective co-operation, and stating to President Valdez that we would be most pleased to hear from him and to have any suggestions that might occur to him, saying incidentally that his knowledge of local conditions in the Republic of Panama was, of course, much better than we could have and also highly valuable. The President responded that they stood ready and willing to do their best and to cooperate with us to the extent of their ability, and very gratifyingly stated that they preferred to defer to our military authorities for all plans of defense of a military nature, on account of their better acquaintance with the subject.

The matter of the development of agriculture in the Republic and of improving the food supply was discussed at some length; the question of adopting a censorship of the mails, which had already been taken up with the Foreign Office of Panama; the matter of adopting the registration, similar to that being carried on in the ports of the Canal Zone for people who might be going and coming in small vessels that touched in Panaman ports, were all taken up and full accord was found on the part of the Panamans.

General Plummer agreed to transmit in writing suggestions relating to the matters mentioned and methods akin to them.

The meeting was a very harmonious one, and I am sure productive of much good.

Embassy's telegram of May 22, 6 p. m.¹ President Braz sent the following message to Congress this afternoon:

I submit to your consideration with the accompanying authenticated documents the information received from the Brazilian Legation in Paris, regarding the sinking by a German submarine of another Brazilian merchant steamer. The Brazilian nation is fully aware of the attitude which the Government adopted upon receiving from Germany the declaration that she intended to establish a blockade by submarines of the west, as well as of a part of the southern coast of Europe, thereby curtailing the freedom of the seas and extending indiscriminately to all parts of the world war in its most violent form. The Brazilian Government at that time presented its protest and upon the occasion of the torpedoing of the Paraná broke diplomatic and commercial relations with Germany. The torpedoing of a second ship, without warning, and the fear that our fleet and our foreign trade will continue to suffer, obliges the Government to resort to measures of defence, upon the nature of which the National Congress will decide. The members of the Government, in bringing this matter to the attention of Congress, do not seek to evade responsibility or to refrain from expressing an opinion thereon. They believe that the employment of the merchant ships of German nationality anchored in Brazilian ports is urgently necessary apart from any idea of seizure, which would not accord with the spirit of our legislation and would be at variance with the general feeling throughout the country. The employment of such ships is warranted by the principles of the Hague convention of October 18, 1907. These vessels would be held as compensation until it should be proved that they constitute private property (which even in time of war should be respected and which Brazil will respect), or that they are the property of companies of an official nature or under official supervision.

In any case it appears to this Government that measures should be taken immediately to safeguard the public interest and the dignity of the nation.

Brazilian Senate passed yesterday, in the form received from the Chamber, bill revoking decree of neutrality in the war between the United States and Germany and authorizing the Government to utilize interned German merchant vessels. The decrees of neutrality relating to the other Allies remain unaltered. President signed bill last night and the act is already in force.

Though Brazilian Government does not expect that the amount of coffee exported to England will be greatly increased, it desires prohibition be lifted for local political reasons and to prevent German sympathizers from utilizing disadvantageously to the Allied cause in Brazil the embargo of Brazil's chief export and source of wealth at the moment Brazil is prepared to support the cause of the Allies.

Brazilian Government is unwilling to revoke neutrality decrees affecting the Allies until England takes favorable action. Foreign Office will sincerely appreciate the good offices of the American Government.

[Translation]

WASHINGTON, June 4, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: The President of the Republic has just instructed me to inform your excellency's Government that he has approved the law which revokes Brazil's neutrality in the war between the United States of America and the German Empire. The Republic has thus recognized the fact that one of the belligerents is a constituent portion of the American Continent and that we are bound to that belligerent by traditional friendship and the same sentiment in the defense of the vital interests of America and the accepted principles of law.

Brazil ever was, and is now, free from warlike ambitions, and while it always refrained from showing any partiality in the European conflict, it could no longer stand unconcerned when the struggle involved the United States actuated by no interest whatever but solely for the sake of international judicial order and when Germany included us and the other neutral powers in the most violent acts of war.

While the comparative lack of reciprocity on the part of the American republics has hitherto divested the Monroe Doctrine of its true character, permitting an interpretation based on the prerogatives of their sovereignty, the present events, now bringing Brazil to the side of the United States at a critical moment in the history of the world, continue to impart to our foreign policy a practical form of continental solidarity; a policy, however, which was also that of the former régime whenever one of the other sister friendly nations of the American Continent was concerned. The Republic has strictly observed our political and diplomatic traditions and remained true to the liberal principles in which the nation was nurtured.

Thus understanding our duty, and taking the position indicated by Brazil's antecedents and the conscience of a free people, whatever developments the morrow may have in store for us, we shall conserve the constitution which governs us and which has not yet been surpassed in the guaranties due to the rights, lives, and property of foreigners.

In bringing the above stated resolution to your excellency's knowledge I beg you to be pleased to convey to your Government the sentiments of unalterable friendship of the Brazilian people and Government.

That before accepting he will declare this in a letter to the Argentine Government and make it a condition that a statement of this nature should be communicated by it to the United States. That, furthermore, Peru reserves her liberty of action should circumstances alter before the conference which is to meet here in August; that Peru has had one ship sunk by the Germans and no reparation made so that her situation differs from that of Argentina which received reparation and apology. WASHINGTON, June 14, 1917.

[Received June 15.]

[Enclosure—Telegram—Translation]

The Chilean Minister of Foreign Affairs (Huidobro) to the Chilean Ambassador at Washington (Aldumate)

SANTIAGO, June 14, 1917.

No. 51. Yesterday I returned the following answer to the note of the Chargé d'Affaires of Brazil:

Mr. Chargé d'Affaires: I have had the honor to receive your polite note dated the 4th instant, by which, in the name of His Excellency the President of Brazil, you are pleased to apprise Chile that the Brazilian Republic has resolved to revoke, in the present state of belligerency between the United States of America and Germany, the decree which fixed its rules of neutrality in the European war.

In reply I take pleasure in saying to you that Chile, bound to Brazil of old by the closest ties of fraternal cordiality, has watched with the keenest interest in these difficult times the developments in its foreign policy brought about by the efforts made in the present European conflagration to impose restrictions on the maritime sovereignty of the neutral powers.

My Government understands that the measures adopted by Brazil under these circumstances are not prompted by warlike ambitions but by the lofty spirit of defense of, and regard for, its rights and in compliance with the declarations on the same subject, which I have already had occasion to formulate in common with the other Latin-American nations.

The identity of juridical conceptions and the fitness of a policy of harmony on the American Continent are factors which constrain the Government and public opinion of Chile to lament, now more than ever, the cause from which those events have sprung.

You further say that the policy now pursued by Brazil is traditional, has precedents in the old régime, and has always been observed when the interests of sister and friendly nations of this continent were affected.

My country is particularly sensible of, and gratified by, that recollection.

Your communication ends with an honorable declaration of principles making it of record that, whatever may happen, the Government of your Republic will not swerve from the duties flowing from its conscience of a free people and will maintain the guaranties due to all rights, public and private.

These lofty views will meet with the unanimous applause of all the peoples for whom juridical culture constitutes one of the most valued conquests of civilization.

I renew to you [etc.]

Following is literal copy of Executive order of Uruguayan Government issued to-day.

Considering that in various communications the Government of Uruguay has proclaimed the principle of American solidarity as the criterion of its international policy, understanding that the grievance against the rights of one country of the continent would be considered as a grievance by all and provoke them to uniform and common reaction, second, that in the hope of seeing an agreement in this respect realized between the nations of America which may make the practical and efficient application of such ideals possible, the Government has adopted a watchful attitude with reference to its action, although it has signified in each case its sympathy with the continental nations which have seen themselves obliged to abandon their neutrality;

Considering that, as long as such an agreement is not made, Uruguay, without acting contrary to its sentiments and convictions, could not treat the American nations which in defense of their own rights find themselves compromised in an intercontinental war, as belligerents; and

Considering that this criterion is shared by the honorable Senate; The President of the Republic, at a general Cabinet meeting, decrees:

(1) To order that no American country which in defense of its own rights should find itself in a state of war with nations of other continents will be treated as belligerents;

(2) That it is ordered that existing decrees which may be in opposition to this resolution are to remain without fulfillment;

His Majesty's Government were approached some weeks ago by the Government of Brazil in regard to the prohibition of the importation of coffee into the United Kingdom.

His Majesty's Government had agreed to allow the importation of an amount of Brazilian coffee equivalent to 25 per cent of total imports into the United Kingdom in 1916 from all sources. They are now further considering the importation under license of a small proportion of the normal imports of Brazilian coffee into the United Kingdom if carried on German vessels recently taken over by the Brazilian Government, on condition that these vessels should bring to the United Kingdom other cargo of national importance or else that on their arrival at a British port they should be put at the disposal of the Ministry of Shipping.

His Majesty's Ambassador has received instructions to ascertain from the Government of the United States whether they would have any objection to the adoption of this proposal.

You will take this matter up discreetly with the Argentine Government and inquire whether Argentina could arrange their present plan of export allotment to foreign countries in such a way that Great Britain and France can obtain from Argentina unconditionally a larger quantity than at present, and thus render great material help to the United States in its efforts to prevent any shortage in the supply of wheat to our Allies in Europe, which would be disastrous to the great cause for which we are struggling.

The French Government informs Department that Argentina is shipping grain and foodstuffs to Spain and is not making shipments foodstuffs of satisfactory amounts to France.

The suffering of humanity will not have been sterile during these years of terrible war, which draws into it the most powerful and most pacific democracy of history, if with its efforts there is raised the new edifice of international society on the immutable base of justice and respect for sovereignty.

Brazil, Cuba, Bolivia, and Panama have suspended their diplomatic relations with the Central powers.

Uruguay has taken the initiative so that the South American states may receive in their ports the American warships in the conception of sister nations and not belligerents, a conception compatible with the terms of benevolent neutrality to whose rules my Government has adhered with sympathy.

Greatest applause by audience and Congress followed declarations favorable to United States. This prolonged.

Leading dailies have strong editorials commending President's favorable attitude toward United States.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the Department's confidential telegram of July 2, 5 p. m. I feel that the officials of the Government here have assumed a more friendly attitude during the last few weeks. In a conversation with the Minister for Foreign Affairs a few days ago he said that if our South Atlantic Fleet should come to the West Coast and make a visit of courtesy to Valparaiso, it would be received as a friendly fleet.

Heretofore the Minister has been anxious that nothing should be done by our fleets or boats of any kind that could give the German Government any cause to complain of Chile's conduct. I have reason to believe that some of the high officials of the Government are giving serious consideration to the question of Chile's alignment with Brazil and the United States. The inquiry of the Chilean Ambassador in Washington, in view of the above situation here, is most interesting and significant.

Your cipher telegram August 2, 6 p. m.¹ Referring to my despatch of July 3. Conversation therein referred to occurred with Minister Huidobro. The Cabinet resigned almost immediately. The Tocornal cabinet which followed lasted only seven days before tendering resignation, but is still in office due to inability of political parties to agree upon internal affairs in which they are completely absorbed, measuring every act by its probable effect upon the coming elections. Yesterday the Minister for Foreign Affairs informed me that if our fleet should come to Chilean waters it would be received as a friendly visitor and treated as well as anywhere else. I discreetly gave him an opportunity to say an invitation would be extended of which he did not take advantage.

High officials here have expressed the opinion that an invitation extended by Chile would amount to an abandonment of neutrality, a step they are not yet ready to take. The Subsecretary of State for Foreign Affairs assumes an attitude of indifference with respect to visit of the fleet. The one newspaper that has discussed possible visit recommends the Government to adopt a resolution with regard to it in accord with principles of Americanism evidenced by action of Brazil, Uruguay, and Argentina.

don Government in securing the removal of the prohibition of the importation of Brazilian coffee into the British Isles, I regret exceedingly to communicate to you that this concession was granted with the condition that it should only be transported in the former German interned ships—a condition decidedly displeasing to Brazil.

Since there are no German ships in Brazil—all of those formerly under the German flag having been incorporated into our own merchant fleet and, therefore, are Brazilian—I can not understand this condition. It was our desire to employ them all, the units which previously composed our fleet and the former German vessels, without distinction, in the European and American trade.

This reservation on the part of England is so much more lamentable in view of the fact that it had already been decided that one of the first steamers which should sail for Europe, with a cargo of coffee and foodstuffs, would be the former German ship Sierra Salvado, and after that one of our older ships. You will understand, however, that without maintenance and respect for our own liberty of action it would be preferable to renounce whatever concessions Britain offers us.

The Legation of Peru is in receipt of the following information with reference to the claim presented by the Government of Peru to the German Government for the sinking of the Peruvian bark Lorton by a German submarine within Spanish territorial waters, on February 5, 1917.

The German Government having decided to submit the circumstances of the sinking of the Peruvian bark Lorton to a prize court, the Government of Peru has instructed the Minister of Peru at Berlin to state that in accordance with the Declaration of London, invoked by Germany, the sinking of the Peruvian bark Lorton is wholly unjustified, owing to the nationality of the ship, the quality and destination of its cargo, the locality where the ship was sunk, the impossibility for the ship to be acquainted with the German decree establishing a barred zone, which decree moreover the Peruvian Government does not recognize, and the principles ruling maritime warfare and protecting neutral ships.

The Minister of Peru has been instructed further to declare that the Peruvian Government does not and will not accept to submit this question to a prize court, and that it insists upon the reparations and indemnities previously claimed.

mander-in-Chief of the Pacific Squadron, and the Brazilian Minister of Marine by which the Brazilian Navy will cooperate with the American in patrolling the South Atlantic.

According to an agreement between the American and British naval authorities, Admiral Caperton's squadron will patrol the high seas from Fernando Noronha Island, near Pernambuco, to Rio de Janeiro; the British squadron will patrol from that point to the River Plate; and the French from Fernando Noronha to the West Indies. The Brazilian Navy will undertake the patrol of the Brazilian coast and for that purpose has been organized into three detachments, to be known as the Northern, Central, and Southern Divisions. Rear-Admiral Santos will be in charge of the Northern; Rear-Admiral Mattos of the Central; and Rear-Admiral Frontim of the Southern Division.

Under present arrangements the cruisers Deodoro and Floriano; torpedo-boat Tymbira; cruiser Tiradentes; two destroyers; gunboats Missões and Acre; and the despatch-boats Teffe and Jutahy will patrol the northern section. The central section will be patrolled by the two dreadnoughts Minas Geraes and São Paulo; four destroyers; three submarines; and the mine-defense flotilla composed of the Carlos Gomez, the Mario do Couto, and the Jaguarão. The division of the south will comprise the two scout-cruisers Bahia and Rio Grande do Sul; the two cruisers Barroso and Republica; despatch-boat José Bonifácio; and four destroyers. The patrol will begin as soon as the boiler and condenser tubes for several of the units which have been ordered in the United States have been received.

The patrol may be expected to begin about the 1st of September.

It is probable that the mercantile fleet of the Lloyd Brasileiro Line, which is owned by the Government, will cooperate, in the patrol, with the Brazilian Navy. A Brazilian naval officer has been appointed to attend daily at the Embassy to serve as a medium of communication between the Minister of Marine and Capt. Frank K. Hill, U. S. N., the naval attaché. He began his duties to-day.

It is unnecessary to point out the importance of the arrangement outlined above and the effect which it should have in developing the political relations between the United States and Brazil, in checking the devastation of German raiders, and in protecting the Brazilian coasts from attack.

MONTEVIDEO, July 16, 1917.

[Received August 13.]

SIR: I have the honor to advise that the American squadron of the Atlantic Fleet under the command of Admiral Caperton arrived in the port of Montevideo at 4 o'clock in the afternoon on July 10.

Extensive preparations had been made by the Government and the people of Uruguay.

Business was suspended and the people had gathered in great crowds to welcome the fleet as it came into port.

The oldest citizens here say that no other occasion in the history of the country has ever furnished such a spontaneous gathering of all the people.

The Admiral was literally taken by force from his staff of officers as soon as he arrived on shore and the officers of the staff came one by one to the American Legation where the Admiral was to begin his official duties. The soldiers and city police were unable to control the crowds and the Admiral was required to walk the greater part of the way from the port to the Legation, a distance of more than a mile, and surrounded by tens of thousands of people.

In front of the Legation the streets were packed with people and bands were playing everywhere.

The Admiral appeared upon the balcony of the Legation with Dr. Juan Zorrilla de San Martin, the noted Uruguayan orator, and the reception which he received can hardly be described. United States flags were flying everywhere and when San Martin would call upon the people to give their approval to the course which the United States had taken the answer would come back: "America! America! We do believe in America!"

It is estimated that 70,000 people heard San Martin.

I have heard it estimated that 200,000 people were in the streets and on their balconies and house tops during the day to show generally their approval of the action which the Uruguayan Government had taken in inviting the fleet to come to Montevideo.

Admiral Caperton has been most cordially received at Foreign Office, at the War and Marine Department, and by the President.

No effort has been spared by the Government to show its approval of the action of the United States in sending the squadron to Uruguay and the people everywhere endorse the action of the Government.

The officers of the squadron have won the esteem of the people generally and Admiral Caperton is the recipient of unprecedented honors. His sincere and tactful manner of discussing public questions and his generous endorsement of the democratic institutions of the Government have won the confidence and admiration of all.

The policy of American solidarity, which was made the foundation upon which the Government based its right to invite the fleet to this port, has become firmly fixed in the minds of the people and the people pride themselves upon the fact that the American nations are abundantly able to enforce this policy.

New York and Valparaiso. Until the Brazilian Government has found by experience that it can not repair and use all the units, as it ultimately must do, there is little prospect of our obtaining any of them, either by purchase or charter.

Administration leader stated Saturday in Chamber of Deputies that the Brazilian Navy will only maintain a defensive coast patrol, which is equivalent to a patrol against submarine bases and communication between raiders and the shore. The Navy has no intention of patrolling the high seas, which it is expected will be done by the Allies. Brazil, not being a belligerent, has no right of visit and search outside territorial waters and therefore can take no action against raiders on the high seas. Should Admiral Caperton's squadron now be withdrawn, Brazilian coast patrol would become useless and might even be discontinued. The Brazilian Government would become discouraged and Germany's friends would represent, in the three countries where the Admiral had been, that his visits were intended to compel adhesion to United States plan rather than to express appreciation of cooperation in the present or the future.

On the 10th of August last the Congress of Ecuador inaugurated its annual ordinary sessions. The President of the Republic, Doctor Baquerizo Moreno, read personally his message. Regarding the attitude of Ecuador on the present war he said the following, received here by cable:

Our neutrality continues, not without us [sic] having attempted a more ingenuous and frank understanding with all the nations of the American Continent.

We have declared our sympathy, our faith, as often as requested by justice, for the great democratic principles which are the base and foundation of these nationalities. Therefore America will find us always with her.

Further on, speaking of the intervention of some of the American Republics in the war, he said:

The attitude of Ecuador, serene, friendly, within the bounds of the neutrality which we had adopted, has been equal to that of Colombia, Chile, Peru, Venezuela, etc.

He goes on saying:

In maintaining neutrality, we shall not fail to find ourselves forever, preferably, side by side with the requirements of our democratic duties, of our republican duties, and of our duties of sons of America.

At the end of his speech, he recalls that the Chancellery of Ecuador insinuated the idea of a congress of neutrals, which met with the benevolent feelings of the American countries, and that hence Ecuador accepted the invitation of Argentina with the same object.

The Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs subsequently informed the British Minister that it had been decided not to accept the French offer on the ground that the Government hold the ships in trust for Germany and must return them after the war. They desired, however, to recognize the solidarity of their interests with those of the Allies and, for this purpose, they proposed to establish a line of steamers to Europe which would comprise the German ships and the ships of the Brazilian Lloyd. As regards the ships of the Commercial and Navigation Company, they proposed to sell or charter ten to France and three to the United States. These ships only amount to about 25,000 tons.

The British Government attach great importance to these German vessels being placed in service in the Allied interest as soon as possible, but the Embassy are instructed to ascertain the views of the United States Government as to the attitude to be adopted in the matter of the recognition of the transfer of the vessels to the Brazilian flag, seeing that the Brazilian Government apparently intend to return them to Germany immediately on the conclusion of hostilities and may even intend to hold the earnings in trust for Germany.

Following statement by me which is furnished to you for your information and use in event of official inquiry, but not to be given to press by you, will be issued to press here at 2 p. m., September 8:

The Department has secured certain telegrams from Count Luxburg, German Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Aires, to the Foreign Office at Berlin, which, I regret to say, were dispatched from Buenos Aires by the Swedish Legation as their own official messages, addressed to the Stockholm Foreign Office.

The following are English translations of the German text:

May 19, 1917.

No. 32. This Government has now released German and Austrian ships in which hitherto a guard had been placed. In consequence of the settlement of the Monte (Protegido) case, there has been a great change in public feeling. Government will in future only clear Argentine ships as far as Las Palmas. I beg that the small steamers Oran and Guazú, 31st January (? meaning which sailed 31st), 300 tons, which are (now) nearing Bordeaux with a view to change the flag, may be spared if possible, or else sunk without a trace being left (spurlos versenkt).

LUXBURG

July 3, 1917.

No. 59. I learn from a reliable source that the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, who is a notorious ass and anglophil, declared in a secret session of the Senate that Argentina would demand from Berlin a promise not to sink more Argentine ships. If not agreed to, relations would be broken off. I recommend refusal and, if necessary, calling in the mediation of Spain.

LUXBURG

July 9, 1917.

No. 64. Without showing any tendency to make concessions, postpone reply to Argentine note until receipt of further reports. A change in Ministry is probable. As regards Argentine steamers, I recommend either compelling them to turn back, sinking them without leaving any traces, or letting them through. They are all quite small.

The Ambassador in Argentina (Stimson) to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

BUENOS AIRES, September 11, 1917, 12 noon.

[Received 3.40 p. m.]

Minister for Foreign Affairs makes public denial that any undertaking, express or implied, was made by Argentine Government for limiting clearances Argentine shipping to Las Palmas, and refers to flat rejection of protocol proposed by Luxburg, and the fact that since May the following Argentine vessels have cleared for war zone: Union, June 2; Brazil and Bolivia, June 6; Itamberry or Stanley, June 14; Francia, Inglaterra, Peru, and Venezuela, June 26; all for Havre. Of these all have safely arrived at destination except the Brazil and Bolivia, reported leaving Lisbon August 16, the Stanley which left Funchal August 28, Venezuela, Inglaterra, and Peru, which left Funchal August 23, 29, and 30, respectively. The Oran and Guazú mentioned in Luxburg's cable arrived safely at Bordeaux June 4, 8, respectively.

Luxburg is still absent; Lowen¹ refuses interviews. Newspapers state that Foreign Office last night had still not received Naón's cable No. 138, reporting information, although Nos. 139 and 141 duly arrived; therefore Argentine Government is still awaiting official confirmation before taking any action.

Your September 4, 6 p. m.,³ and September 9, 12 noon. In discussing matter of German merchant vessels with Vice President of Brazil you may say that you have been instructed to call attention to the many difficulties which would arise from transfer of these vessels as contemplated to Brazilian flag, pointing out desire of this Government as sincere friend of Brazil that any embarrassment to that Government in this connection be avoided. You may add that such arrangements as suggested in Department's August 29, 5 p. m., would avoid all complications.

The British Government has asked Department whether, in event transfer of flag were made, American cruiser force would capture vessels. Department has avoided making any reply to this inquiry. It is desired that you continue your efforts with Brazilian Government along the lines being pursued by you.

*The Guatemalan Special Mission to the United States to the

MEMORANDUM

The undersigned, Envoys Extraordinary of Guatemala, first present the assurances of their high consideration to the most excellent, the Secretary of State of the United States of America and now proceed to formulate the points upon which they are to negotiate with the enlightened Government of your excellency in the discharge of the special mission with which they have been entrusted.

In the first place, they are to confirm to the Government of the United States the engagement made by Guatemala to cooperate with it in such a manner as may be needful, in the defense of the cause which the United States has espoused, and which Guatemala regards as the common cause of America, involving as it does the rights of all the peoples of the continent, and do so with a statement that in order to make its cooperation effective, the Government of Guatemala must be suitably prepared by obtaining the necessary elements, both with respect to material interests and to the necessity of averting and settling international questions which might benumb or impede its action.

To achieve such a preparation and conformably to the valuable promise of the Government of the United States, that of Guatemala bespeaks its aid in the following form:

1. Support sufficient to secure the money which Guatemala needs to adjust its financial condition, by means of a loan granted on the same terms as the nations allied with the United States have obtained for theirs, it being understood that the Government of Guatemala is ready to give such guarantees as may be deemed necessary for the conclusion of the transaction.
2. Facilities to import from the United States the necessities of life that Guatemala may need and to export to that market the products of the soil of Guatemala.
3. Assurances that Guatemala may depend at all times on the means of ocean transportation which must be had to carry on commercial intercourse between the two countries.

4. To forestall conflicts which both Mexico and Salvador, severally or jointly, might, in accordance with plans already known to the Government of the United States, bring on to Guatemala at her border, the last named country wishes to feel that it may depend on the United States' mediation to avert them, or its assistance to repel them.

5. The boundary dispute now pending between Guatemala and Honduras being one of the means of offence of which Mexico and Salvador would avail themselves to put Guatemala into difficulties, which might restrain its freedom of action should the case rise to cooperate in the United States, the Guatemalan Government deems it advisable to settle this dispute so as to remove any cause of disagreement and to that end bespeaks the potent mediation of the Government of the United States towards inducing that of Honduras to enter into an equitable and fair diplomatic agreement—a memorandum on this point will be submitted separately,¹ and

6. That the American Government extend to the Guatemalan Government the needed facilities to import from the United States the armament required for the defence of its ports and cities, and for the efficient military preparedness of the country in order that it may lend its assistance if need be.

We cherish the hope that the topics briefly stated in this memorandum will receive favorable consideration on the part of the enlightened Government of the United States.

as follows: After receiving telegrams from Molina, Argentine Minister, Berlin, that Bussche, Undersecretary Foreign Office, disavowed Luxburg's proposals, the Argentine Foreign Office waited two days and then, September 19, cabled Molina, ordering him with insistence to demand at once written reply of German Government, so that no doubt remains that it does not support Luxburg, and again, September 21, cabled Molina urgency of reply on which depends the attitude that the Argentine Government will assume. He closed by assuring the House that the Executive would proceed as Argentine citizen or as soldier if necessary.

Pending dinner hour it was given out from administration circles that the President, if compelled to act, would not be satisfied with rupture but would declare state of war and send troops to France.

At 9 p. m. sitting was resumed, and at midnight Minister for Foreign Affairs appeared again and read cable from Molina just received, dated September 22, and incorporating note of Kühlmann, German Secretary of State, dated September 21, and stating that the Imperial German Government absolutely disapproves of Luxburg's ideas which were purely personal, have not influenced nor will influence the decisions and promises of the German Government, Molina adding that Kühlmann's manner was most decisive and that the German press unanimously disapproves Luxburg. Minister for Foreign Affairs closed by saying that the President had come to no decision with respect to this telegram and left it to the House whether it should insist further. Thereupon, at 2 a. m. to-day, the House adjourned till to-morrow.

922. Department has received a confidential cablegram from the Minister at Montevideo stating that Uruguay has proposed an arbitration treaty with Italy and that the Italian Government refuses to agree to such a treaty.¹ The Minister informs the Department that Minister for Foreign Affairs of Uruguay has told him that Uruguay is desirous of assuming a more favorable attitude towards the Entente Allies than she has adopted at present, but that as France, England, and Italy have in the past not shown the Government of Uruguay that consideration it considers itself entitled to, Uruguay desires that arbitration treaties be made with the three above-mentioned Governments before she takes any final steps in their favor. It is understood that the British Minister has promised the Government of Uruguay to secure agreement from his Government for the desired arbitration treaty, and apparently France has accepted the Uruguayan proposal. It would now seem that Italy is the only one of the three nations which does not desire to meet the wishes of the Uruguayan Government.

As favorable action by Uruguay at this time is extremely important to the cause represented by the United States and the Allied powers, the Department instructs you to approach the Government to which you are accredited in a most discreet manner and intimate to it that its acceptance of the proposed arbitration treaty with Uruguay would undoubtedly be a great factor in obtaining a desirable attitude on the part of the Uruguayan Government. Do not go so far as to urge this suggestion. Report immediately by cable as to results of your representations.

Uruguayan Minister for Foreign Affairs has to-day authorized me to say that—

In view of the attitude of the Allied Governments of Europe in refusing to treat Uruguay with the consideration to which she is entitled, we are obliged to maintain our neutrality; in which case we shall be present at the congress of American neutrals which President Irigoyen is about to call together. At that congress Uruguay will explain the reason that she has for remaining neutral and will set forth the following proposition:

That all the neutral countries of America declare that they will not break their relations with Germany as long as the Allies do not assure them that they will not consider any claim of their subjects or companies against American countries except in those cases in which justice may have been denied to them.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs must answer a summons from the Uruguayan House of Representatives at which time he will favor the rupture with Germany if the Allies will consider the well-known claims of Uruguay, otherwise he will favor neutrality. This position will be approved by great majority of Congress.

British Minister does not assure Government that England will agree to treaty, although he promised that assurance would be given Government yesterday. Uruguayan Minister at Rome reported yesterday that Italian Government could not agree to proposed treaty. In the meantime enemy activities here are more pronounced. Unless energetic steps are taken to secure favorable action on part of Allied Governments to Uruguayan proposal, this Government will join conference of neutrals called by Argentine President. [Received October 4, 11.30 a. m.]

The Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs will advise the President to request the American Government to arrange with the Governments of France and Great Britain, especially the former, a plan by which something over 30 of the units of the ex-German fleet, which have been taken over and incorporated into the Lloyd Brazilian fleet, shall be employed to meet the necessities of Brazilian commerce and to assist the common cause of the Allies, both commercial and military. These vessels are not ready for sea, are in need of repairs, and are all over 4,000 tons register. The United States would charter them for a year with the privilege of extension on the same terms, would repair them in United States shipyards, and would control the arrangements with the said Allies for their employment.

The French Minister made a proposition to the Brazilian Government some time before ours was received to charter 10 vessels of the Companhia Comercio e Navegação; but when these ships were found to be unsatisfactory in tonnage, the ex-German fleet was substituted for them. Brazil's wish to export to Europe coffee, rubber, and beans was played upon. The charter price suggested was about what the United States is paying for similar vessels ready for sea.

The Minister's proposition provided for the establishment of a triangular passenger and cargo line of ex-German ships between Rio de Janeiro, New York, and France. Presumably he planned that France should subcharter many of the units to us, as well as others of the two French lines to South America which would be withdrawn when the new line was started. Brazil was so captivated by the prospect of extending her export facilities that she did not see that France would enjoy the charter income that otherwise might be hers.

The Foreign Minister estimates that exclusive of the unrepaired vessels of the ex-German fleet, the Brazilian merchant marine represents a little over 1,600,000 tons and that Brazil's present annual exportation amounts to 2,000,000 tons. He favors the creation of such a line as the French Minister proposed and hopes the idea may enter into our plans to insure protection to Brazil's present and future foreign trade. Its incorporation would weaken the President's continued disinclination to part with any of the ships and would remove the embarrassing criticism of exporters.

File No. 763.72/7097

The Department of State to the British, French, and Italian Embassies

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State was informed in the month of August that the Government of Uruguay regarded as most unfortunate the attitude which had been assumed by certain of the diplomatic representatives of the Entente Allied powers at Montevideo, and felt that their efforts to induce the Uruguayan Government to rescind its decree of neutrality in favor of their respective countries, in order that their war vessels might make use of Uruguayan ports, were uncalled for at this time. The Government of the United States considered that the friendly attitude which Uruguay had shown to the cause of the United States and of the Entente Allies was of such a cordial nature and based upon such high principles that it hoped that nothing would occur which might force Uruguay to change her position.

The Government of the United States, therefore, instructed its Ambassadors in London and Paris to bring these facts to the attention of the respective Chanceries of Great Britain and France, with the suggestion that directions might be sent to the representatives of these powers in Montevideo in order that their efforts with the Uruguayan Government, along the above-mentioned lines, might be terminated or postponed until a later date.

The Government of the United States has received information to the effect that the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Uruguay, in conversations with the American Minister, had intimated that an understanding might be reached with the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Italy in regard to the settlement of the differences between Uruguay and these nations in the form of arbitration treaties, the Minister for Foreign Affairs taking the position that Uruguay in the past had not received that treatment from European countries to which she considered herself entitled.

The American Minister received the impression that the Government of Uruguay desired to assume a more favorable attitude toward the Entente Allied Governments, but that it was first greatly desirous of receiving assurances as to its treatment at their hands.

It now appears that His Britannic Majesty's Minister at Montevideo has stated to the Government of Uruguay that he would endeavor to secure the agreement of his Government to the desired arbitration treaty, and that the representative of the French Republic has informed the Government of Uruguay that his Government was agreeable to the Uruguayan proposal, but that the Government of His Majesty, the King of Italy, was averse to entering into such an agreement with the Republic of Uruguay.

Under date of October 2 the American Minister at Montevideo cabled the Department of State that he had been informed in a confidential manner that certain factions in the Government of Uruguay were determined, in view of the attitude which certain of the Entente Allied powers had assumed in refusing to treat Uruguay with the consideration to which she believed herself entitled, to force Uruguay to be present at a congress of American neutrals which the President of Argentina is reported to be about to call. It is also reported that should Uruguay be present at the congress, she will give the above-mentioned reason as an explanation for her remaining neutral.

It appears also that Uruguay proposes making the following statement: That all the neutral countries of America should declare that they will not break relations with Germany until they are assured by the Entente Allied powers that the latter will not press any claims of their nationals or companies composed of their nationals against American countries, except in those cases where there is a denial of justice.

It is also understood that the Uruguayan Minister for Foreign Affairs is to be interpellated in the Uruguayan House of Representatives in regard to Uruguay's present international position, and that if satisfactory arrangements can be agreed upon with the above-mentioned powers, he will do all in his power to bring about a more favorable attitude on the part of his Government.

On October 3 the American Minister at Montevideo cabled the Department of State that he had been informed that the Argentine Minister in Montevideo had advised the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Uruguay, in a confidential manner, that the Argentine Government wished to call at Buenos Aires a congress of the neutral countries of Central and South America, excluding the United States.¹ It appears that the object of the congress will be to create pressure in favor of peace and in case this is not obtained, to decide an attitude abandoning neutrality.

In his cable the Minister further reported that he had received an intimation from Uruguayan officials to the effect that the tendency toward neutrality in Uruguay was being fomented by the attitude of certain of the Entente Allied powers in not wishing to come to an agreement with Uruguay on matters which she considered affected her sovereignty.

The foregoing information is communicated to the representatives of Great Britain, France, and Italy, in Washington, as of particular interest at this time, and the Government of the United States feels that on account of the importance of the friendly attitude of Uruguay it would be of great service to the cause of the United States and the other nations which are at present aligned against the Imperial German Government, should the contemplated action on the part of certain factions in Uruguay be avoided.

law, could not but experience a feeling of great surprise, if not embarrassment, in learning that at this particular moment one of the most advanced and important of the American nations should raise such a conditional issue; as it had, upholding the Pan-American ideal, expressed its adherence to the principles enunciated by the United States in the present war against the German Government, which principles are also shared by the Entente Allied powers.

Although imbued with these feelings this Government, in a desire to aid in the just settlement of any differences of opinion between Uruguay and other nations, did not hesitate to bring the substance of the statements contained in the above-mentioned cablegrams to the attention of the representatives of Great Britain, France, and Italy, stating that the matter was presented to them merely for their information. It was added that the United States desired to make no comment thereupon, in view of the fact that such an advanced and highly placed member of the family of nations as Uruguay could only act with that justice and nobility of purpose which has always characterized it, and for which reasons the United States has always been rightly proud of its friendship.

Department's October 1, 5 p. m. Under date October 4 Department has received a confidential cablegram from Ambassador at Rome,¹ stating that he had discussed the matter with the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Italy, who stated that he could not sustain the position should he agree to exclude from arbitration whatever Uruguay might consider withdrawn therefrom by her laws and decisions. After considerable discussion he said he was willing to negotiate the arbitration treaty; first, on either original terms proposed by Italy and agreed to by representatives of Uruguayan Government, terms identical with those in Italian treaty with Argentine and other South American Republics, or, secondly, on terms contained in United States arbitration treaty with Uruguay. This last, the Ambassador states, he seemed to believe would be accepted by Uruguay, if this solution suggested by United States. The Ambassador understood Minister for Foreign Affairs desired that case of ship Maria Madre was to be settled separately, although Ambassador believes position on this might have been changed.

Department wishes you to exercise your judgment in making use of information contained in this cablegram. Before taking any action you should ascertain whether Italian Minister has made further representations or has presented views of his Government, as outlined in Ambassador Page's telegram to Department. The Peruvian Minister (Freyre) to the Secretary of State

[A copy of the following translation of a telegram from the Peruvian Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Peruvian Minister at Washington, was handed by the Minister to the Secretary of State on October 8, 1917:]

LIMA, October 6, 1917.

After having vainly endeavored to procure that the German Government settle our claim for the sinking of the Peruvian bark Lorton, which occurred in February of this year and constituted a violation of the fundamental principles of international law, the Peruvian Government was compelled to exact of the Imperial German Government a satisfactory solution of the question, within a term of eight days. The German Government, however, declared to the Peruvian Minister at Berlin that a solution of the question within a peremptory term was absolutely impossible. I, therefore, decided to inform Congress of the Government's resolution to break diplomatic relations with Germany, and Congress approved this resolution by a vote of 105 to 6. Instructions have been forwarded immediately to the Peruvian Minister at Berlin that he demand his passports, and passports have been handed to the German Minister at Lima. We will address a direct communication on the subject to the United States Government; in the meanwhile, you are instructed to make it acquainted with the situation.

Following is copy of decree of Uruguayan Government now in effect, breaking diplomatic relations with the German Government:

Montevideo, October 7, 1917.

In view of the authority granted Executive power by law of the nation of this date, authorizing said power to declare diplomatic and commercial relations broken between Uruguay and Imperial Government, and the reasons which have caused the legislative decision, which are absolutely shared by the Executive power, the President of the Republic at a general Cabinet meeting decrees:

ARTICLE 1. From the date of the present decree diplomatic and commercial relations between Uruguay and the German Imperial Government remain broken.

ARTICLE 2. That the respective passports be handed over to the diplomatic representative of that Government, all the guaranties for his personal safety being granted to him at the same time until his removal from the country.

ARTICLE 3. That telegraphic instructions be transmitted to the functionaries of the Republic in office in Germany to the effect that they immediately abandon the German territory, requesting the same guaranties which are granted to the German representative by the Government of Uruguay.

The Ecuadoran Minister for Foreign Affairs (Tobar y Borgoño) to the Secretary of State

QUITO, September 11, 1917.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: The various situations that have successively arisen in America as the result of the present war, have confirmed the Ecuadoran Chancellery in what has ever been its belief and aspiration: the union and solidarity of all the countries of the continent. To bring about that union and solidarity has been its wish since the beginning of the war and is also now when peoples of America are being swept into the great tempest.

God grant that it be possible to arrive at a Pan-American understanding under which our continent will present a strong united front to the world for the realization of the common ideals of our countries and the defense of the interests of all: that aspiration is voiced in the memorandum which I enclose in this note and of which I beg your excellency to take note.

I avail myself [etc.]

TOBAR Y BORGONO

[Subenclosure—Translation]

MEMORANDUM

On November 20, 1914, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ecuador referred to the Advisory Board of the Ministry, for its examination, the general question of neutrality and its maintenance. The Board, at its session of the 23d of that month, inspired with the ideas of Americanism and continental solidarity that have always been those of Ecuador, named as one of the most effective means of achieving that object that of having "the American governments declare that respect of the neutrality of every one of the American nations is the concern of all." On December 8 that proposition was made known to the Governing Board of the Pan American Union by the Minister of Ecuador at Washington.

Ecuador has not since abated its zeal for an American union with the aim of safeguarding the rights and interests of the whole continent, and has found its inspiration therefor in the profound conviction that isolation could be but harmful to the various peoples of America, since their interests are common to all and hence the earnest desire to protect them must likewise be common to all, and since union and concord must necessarily prove highly fruitful to the continent in general and to each one of its peoples in particular.

The present war, which unfortunately has already extended its scourge to America, can not leave unconcerned the states which are still standing on the brink of the strife: common interests, sentiments of fraternal affection and sincere sympathy, bind the neutral

American peoples to those who are already suffering the consequences of the conflict, on account of taking a position in keeping with what they deem necessary to maintain their dignity and defend their rights. Neutrality, though they observe it, may not prevent the first-named peoples from being led by their sympathies, born of the most genuine Americanism, to take a benevolent attitude toward American belligerents or American peoples who, though they have not reached the stage of belligerency, have assumed certain positions which they consider the best fitted to safeguard their national welfare, their own honor, and justice.

The countries most distant from the seat of war are suffering from the consequences of the struggle, their trade has endured hard blows: the present maintenance of the interchange of commodities and the guaranty of its future must prompt them to seek common means of defense since the threat is also a common one.

The Ecuadoran Chancellery thought that these interests in which the whole continent is concerned might be discussed by representatives of the whole continent in an American congress: no program was mapped out; none of the concrete points to be taken up was then made known. The object Ecuador had in mind was solely to let America come to an agreement on all that related to its interests and welfare; no topic foreign to that concept of purest Americanism was to be broached or included in the program. Problems of a domestic character, which unhappily divide some American countries, questions upon which all do not agree, were to be excluded. The contemplated congress had a special object, American concord in a situation in which the whole continent was concerned.

Grieved at seeing the plague of war spread to some of the countries on this side of the Atlantic, Ecuador had to reiterate its earnest desire that the most perfect Americanism should animate at this juncture the sister republics of the continent: in the note of April 23 the Legation of Brazil at Quito was told that Ecuador could not but feel sincere regret at seeing American countries with which Ecuador had close ties of interest, sympathy, and traditional and even solemn friendship, placed in a position where they considered it necessary to sever relations with the belligerents and even to join in the struggle, as the United States and Cuba had done. On June 27 the same statement was confirmed in reply to another note from Brazil which said that the highest spirit of Americanism animated that country.

The same spirit impelled the President of the Republic, on the 4th of July, to send an expressive telegram of congratulations to the President of the United States; it is also reflected in the Presidential message to the Congress of 1917, in which it is said that—our relations with the other countries continue on the same footing of cordiality; we are adhering to neutrality but not without having brought about a most frank and open exchange of views with all the nations of the American Continent. We have manifested our sympathies and our faith on every occasion when justice demanded or the great principles of democratic rule, fundamental to these nations, required. America, then, will always find us with her. Ecuador is one of her daughters, and the Republic is her soul and life. We shall never fail to side with and give preference to that which our duty demands of us as democrats, republicans and sons of America.

If, then, such has been the Ecuadoran policy, there should be no occasion or reason for Ecuador to depart from it to-day; the Minister of Foreign Affairs so declared to the National Congress, and that body concurred in this view of affairs when it declared its satisfaction with the course followed by the Chancellery in this matter.

America will ever find Ecuador ready to join with the other American peoples for the defense and security of what appertains to the whole continent and of all that which may serve as a guaranty of the American common interests; but to do this effectively an agreement must be arrived at, America must be truly one, and the various international entities which make up America must act as one.

In his message of January 22 last to the Senate, President Wilson said that nations should avoid in the future entangling alliances whose result was competition for power, which would not come to pass when all united in following the same course, animated by the same purpose. If not all, why could not the nations of America at least reach an agreement which would unite them forever in common ideals of peace and defense? The Ecuadoran Chancellery thinks it can be done, since all were born to political and international life through the great and noble effort of their independence, all have struggled to make a reality of the principle of human equality and natural liberty, and all also strive as one to make the Government of the people by the people another tangible and permanent reality in the world.

In this manner only will the American peoples present to the world a strong front commanding respect, so that being strong and commanding respect they may be heard at the present hour and heeded in the future.

The Ambassador in Brazil (Morgan) to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

RIO DE JANEIRO, October 12, 1917, 10 p. m.

[Received October 13, 11.50 a. m.]

The President of Brazil, who has just resumed his official duties after a month's absence, has authorized the Foreign Office to announce through the press and to the Foreign Embassies and Legations in Rio de Janeiro interested in the ex-German vessels that the Brazilian Government will neither alienate nor charter those ships but will organize with them transatlantic steamship lines under the Brazilian flag and with Brazilian crews, which will benefit Brazil and the Allies. The formation of those lines is dependent upon a previous understanding with the nations friendly to Brazil, with which Congress has instructed the Government to combine in formulating measures to protect and defend navigation and freedom of commerce. Coincident with this announcement the Brazilian Government has informed the Embassy that the President has confined [informed?] it in a personal message that two steamship lines consisting of 58 vessels of the present Lloyd Brazilian fleet, which includes ex-German vessels, will be established or expanded between Brazil and the United States and between Brazil and Europe. A new direct line of the Lloyd Brazilian which will not touch Brazil, wholly composed of 19 ex-German vessels, will also be established between United States [and Europe to] serve Brazilian interest and those of the Allied nations in transportation supplies with a view to a more rapid termination of the war. "Supplies" will be understood to include troops.

These 19 vessels, all of which must receive their major repairs in the United States, include 1 ship, the Blucher, of over 12,000 tons gross tonnage, 2 of over 9,000, 1 of over 8,000, 2 of over 6,000, 3 of over 5,000, 5 of over 4,000, and 5 of over 3,000 gross tonnage. Total tonnage of 19 vessels is 112,227 gross tonnage.

If the American Government should approve the proposal, a representative of the Lloyd Brazilian and the Brazilian Government with full powers would be stationed at New York City to see that the employment of these vessels is wholly for the benefit of the United States Government, which would control their movements and utilization with the single reservation of the maintenance of the general principles indicated in the above quotation. Though the vessels would appear to continue under the control of the Lloyd their actual employment would be directed by the American Government.

The financial arrangements relating to the vessels' employment would be made between the American Government and the Brazilian Treasury Department. They would probably be based on gross tonnage and the cost of repairs.

The maintenance of the Brazilian flag would soon have the effect of bringing Brazil actively into the war and since none of the vessels are at present provided with crews their operation would inevitably be confided to Americans.

The Brazilian Government is committed to the shipping policy outlined above which has features in common with that which Uruguay has adopted.

The British Embassy have received instructions from His Majesty's Government to communicate to the State Department the following particulars as to negotiations which have been proceeding with the Government of Uruguay in connection with the proposed signature by France and Great Britain of the arbitration treaty proposed by the Uruguayan Government.

The British and French Governments have now decided in principle on the acceptance of the proposed treaty, a course which was recommended as desirable by the Department in their communication of October 5. As a return for their acceptance of these proposals they have placed before the Uruguayan Government the following suggestions for the disposal of the German ships in Uruguayan ports on their requisitioning by the Uruguayan Government.

They feel that the United States Government will appreciate the steps taken, and that it will be borne in mind that the conciliatory attitude of the Allies in this question has resulted in furnishing new resources to fortify the Entente against the common enemy.

President of Brazil sent to Congress this afternoon following message regarding the torpedoing of the Lloyd Brasileiro steamer Maçao, former German steamer Palatia:

Members of the National Congress: It is my painful duty to communicate to the National Congress that the Government has been informed through telegraphic messages from London and Madrid that a German submarine has torpedoed Brazilian ship Maçao and that her commander has been seized.

The mere fact that this is the fourth Brazilian ship which has been sunk by German naval forces is a very serious matter, which moreover is aggravated by the seizure of the Brazilian commander.

Members of the National Congress, we must face the situation and recognize at once that a state of war is imposed upon us by Germany. Our prudent attitude will not prevent us from seeing the facts as they are; on the contrary, we now feel at liberty, in order to maintain the dignity of our country, to recommend belligerent retaliation.

In case Congress does not decide otherwise, the Government will order the occupation of the German warship which is in the port of Bahia and the imprisonment of her crew, besides decreeing the military internment of the crews of the ships which we are utilizing.

It appears that the moment has arrived to make legal our defensive attitude which has been justified by recent events and to develop the organization of national resistance; we will thereby complete the evolution of our external policy in readiness for any aggression that Brazil may in future suffer.

which it was stated that the Argentine Government had approached the Government of Peru, setting forth its project to assemble an American congress at Buenos Aires for the purpose of reaching an understanding on the subject of the war, if the consent of the United States were obtained, to meet the first fortnight in January 1918; that the Government of Peru desired to know the opinion of the Department of State in the matter, and whether the American Government would attend the congress, which wishes to proceed in harmony with the United States.

Mr. Stabler informed Mr. Freyre that he would discuss the matter with the Secretary and would later inform him as to the Secretary's views.

Mr. Stabler then spoke with the Secretary of State and read him the memorandum left by the Chargé d'Affaires. The Secretary instructed Mr. Stabler to inform Mr. Freyre that in view of the fact that no representations had been made to the Government of the United States by the Argentine Government in this regard, it was obvious that the Department of State could express no opinion on the matter.

The views of the Secretary of State, as outlined above, were telephoned to Mr. Freyre who asked that he be informed when the United States was in a position to give him a definite statement in this matter, and also, if it were possible, to be informed when the Argentine Government presented its proposal to the Government of the United States. Mr. Stabler said he would so inform the Secretary.

The French Minister here showed me telegram to-day from the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, quoting the French Ambassador in Washington as follows: "Mr. Polk of State Department advises me that the United States Government is in no position to recommend that French sign an arbitration treaty with Uruguay."

As agreement for arbitration treaty has already been reached between France and Uruguay, I have thought some mistake may have occurred in transmission of this message. Will Department advise me in this connection so that position of the United States Government may not be misunderstood here?

The Minister in Uruguay (Jeffery) to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

MONTEVIDEO, November 5, 1917, 3 a. m.

[Received 1.55 p. m.]

Your October 29, 7 p. m. Uruguayan Minister for Foreign Affairs says that one of the conditions on which England agreed to sign arbitration treaty with Uruguay was that three-quarters of the total tonnage of the German vessels here should be used in the trade between Europe and Uruguay. Later the United States Shipping Board made a proposal to Uruguay for ships which was not accepted. Then Shipping Board made a proposal as follows: an American company was to be organized under Uruguayan laws to take over ships. By the terms of this proposition the ships were to be taken to the United States for repairs, after which a sufficient number would be used for traffic between the United States and Uruguay; remaining ships to be used according to agreement between these countries. Objection is made to requirement that ships must be in charge of American captains as this is contrary to provisions of Uruguayan laws. Minister says that to be able to accept proposition of Shipping Board it is necessary to obtain from England and France consent that ships be given different destination and used in different traffic. It would also be necessary for American company to adjust itself to conditions provided by the law regulating the use of German vessels, which is at present being considered in the House of Representatives. British Minister in memorandum to me says:

It is my understanding that the ships shall be used in agreement with British Government; that Government insists that the greater part of tonnage shall be used in the trade with Europe. The French Government is acting in agreement with British Government. It is clear that the French Government will not sign arbitration treaty until British Government is satisfied on this score.

British Minister says that the firm of Houlder Bros. of this city in conjunction with Dodero Bros. of Buenos Aires is prepared to charter ships on terms which appear liberal or to operate ships for the account of Government and to undertake all repairs. I am informed that Houlder Bros. represent English capital of the Royal Mail Steamship Co. This proposition is practically same as American proposition except as to use and destination of ships. It is supported by British Minister, who tells me that the negotiations should not be interfered with or embarrassed by other propositions. French Minister told me in the presence of British Minister that his Government would not sign arbitration treaty until British Government signed the treaty. In my opinion the Uruguayan Government will be greatly pleased if Governments at Washington and London can reach an agreement by which most of ships may be used in traffic between the United States and Uruguay, in which event American capital could be used in securing control of ships.

The Secretary of State to the Guatemalan Special Mission to the United States

The Secretary of State of the United States wishes to assure Mr. Manuel Echeverria y Vidaurre, Mr. Manuel Girón, and Dr. Claudio Urrutia, Envoys Extraordinary of Guatemala in Special Mission to the United States, of the genuine pleasure which he has experienced in receiving them. He further desires to express to them the gratification which the Government of the United States has felt in knowing that their primary object in coming to the United States was to endeavor to render more efficient the generous cooperation and independent stand which the Government of Guatemala, among the very first of the American nations, boldly proclaimed to the world. In championing the cause of right and humanitarianism and in placing herself by the side of the North American Republic, which had taken up arms in support of the cause of democracy, the Government of Guatemala has made it clear that this is the common cause of America, involving the rights of all the peoples of this continent.

In replying to the memorandum of September 14,¹ which the Special Mission was good enough to present to the Secretary of State, setting forth certain points which the Government of Guatemala considered were important factors for the purpose of making its cooperation more effective, involving the safeguarding of material interests and the settlement of international questions, and to the additional memoranda, submitted on September 18,² September

27,¹ and October 12,¹ after conferences at the Department of State, referring in detail to the specific matter involved, the Secretary of State, in the name of the Government of the United States, desires to acknowledge the receipt of these important documents. In so doing he wishes to inform the Envoys Extraordinary that the questions which they have so ably presented therein have been receiving that most careful and painstaking consideration by the various governmental departments, which such momentous and far-reaching questions merit, and that on account of the numerous details which have had to be taken into account and the legal complications which recent developments in the legislation of the United States have occasioned, he is only now in a position to give a definite response to their inquiries and requests which form the basis of the present negotiations. In the accomplishment of this purpose the Government of the United States desires to present the following statements for the consideration and possible action of the Government of Guatemala, through the medium of its distinguished Special Mission.

The cooperation which the Government of Guatemala has offered to the Government of the United States in the present conditions, brought about by the state of hostility existing between this Government and the Imperial German Government, is understood by the United States to consist of the generous offer by the Republic of Guatemala of the unrestricted and free use of its ports and territorial waters on the Atlantic as well as on the Pacific coast; the unrestricted use of its inland transportation facilities, which is understood to mean the railroads and wagon roads throughout the Republic, for purposes of common defense, and also any other specific cooperation which the Government of the United States may ask of the Government of Guatemala.

These offers have been received and accepted in the same spirit in which they have been so wholeheartedly tendered, and it has been noted with a deep sense of gratification that the first step in this cooperation was the severance of diplomatic relations on the part of Guatemala with the Imperial German Government, followed by the taking of precautions to render null the pernicious activity of various German agents in Guatemala, who were attempting to harm the common cause of Guatemala, the United States, and the Allied powers. In this connection the Government of the United States is convinced that nothing will be left undone by the Government of Guatemala to see that these subjects of the Imperial German Government, either consular officers or agents remaining in Guatemala and who may be engaged in fomenting plots or employed in other hostile activities, may be prevented from taking any action which might have a harmful effect in that part of the world in which Guatemala plays so important a rôle.

In view of the position assumed by the Government of Guatemala, under direction of the Chief Executive of that Republic, Licenciado Don Manuel Estrada Cabrera, called by his country bene merito de la Patria, and feeling confident of his continued cooperation, in any further desires of the Government of the United States, this Government wishes to convey to him, through the valuable medium of the Envoys Extraordinary in Special Mission, the assurances that in contemplating any readjustments of commercial and shipping facilities the United States will not be unmindful of this position.

The opinion expressed by the Government of Guatemala as to the necessity for favorable conditions affecting the material interests of the two Republics is fully sympathized with and concurred in by the Government of the United States and for that reason it desires to lend its best efforts to giving all possible reciprocal aid to the Government of Guatemala.

1. With particular reference to the matter of the facilities which the Government of Guatemala requests shall be accorded to it in order that the necessities of life which that Republic needs may be imported from the United States, it is desired to state that due note has been taken of this request and a careful study has been made of this question.

As is well known to the Special Mission, there has been created in the United States, by Executive order, an administrative section of the Government known as the War Trade Board, which passes upon all applications for licenses to export from the United States to any other country such articles as have been enumerated in the lists published subsequent to the above-mentioned Executive order. In view of the utmost necessity for taking the most careful steps to prevent any articles which might be of service or use to the enemy from reaching their hands, and on account of the reports of the Food Administration of this Government, which clearly indicate that the greatest care must be taken to mobilize the material resources of the country through painstaking conservation, the Executive order prohibits the export from the United States, without license, of every article, excepting to the Allies, Guatemala, and to certain countries for which there is a special list.

In order to meet the wishes of the Government of Guatemala, to which country on account of her cooperation the Government of the United States desires to afford every facility for the prompt execution of all licenses for articles which she might wish to import, this Government will give immediate instructions to that effect, and will further undertake, should necessity arise, to give very careful consideration to the question of establishing special license bureaus at the ports from which exports to Guatemala are embarked, in order that no undue delay may be occasioned.

In regard to those commodities which Guatemala has been in the habit of importing from the United States, it is desired to inform the Special Mission that certain of these are now being conserved and are not being exported except by special arrangement, but in view of the specific request of the Department of State and pending the termination of the present negotiations with the Special Mission, licenses are being granted by the War Trade Board for the export to Guatemala of these articles.

In order that the export of all articles to Guatemala may be continued, it is desired that the Government of Guatemala give a solemn undertaking to the effect that neither of these articles, nor articles which they may replace, will be exported or reexported from Guatemala.

If this undertaking is given and the proper guaranties are furnished, the Government of the United States will pledge itself to do all in its power to see that the needs of Guatemala are properly cared for, due consideration to be given, however, to future contingencies.

2. The Government of the United States feels as much interest and concern as does the Government of Guatemala in the matter of ocean transportation between the two countries, and is particularly desirous that the proportion of tonnage now engaged in the traffic between United States and Guatemalan ports shall be maintained at its present ratio, both on account of the desire that reciprocal treatment be accorded Guatemala, for the aid she is rendering the United States, and with a view to continuing without restriction the receipt of those valuable and much needed products which Guatemala supplies. Very careful consideration has been given to this matter and an endeavor will be made to prevent any unnecessary change in the present conditions. Nevertheless, in order adequately to meet the uncertain exigencies of war, the Government of the United States has under consideration the development of a towing barge system suitable for ocean transportation, to be operated from New Orleans, La., and would be glad to discuss with the Government of Guatemala suitable bases of cooperation with a view to extending such a service to Guatemalan ports, thus facilitating the direct exchange of Guatemalan products with those of the United States and particularly with those of the Mississippi Valley.

3. The question of the present economic condition and the financial needs of Guatemala, so clearly set forth in the comprehensive memorandum of the Special Mission, has had the careful attention of the officials of the Treasury Department who have made themselves conversant with all of the phases of the matter. In reply to the specific request contained in the above-mentioned memorandum, the Government of the United States finds itself, unfortunately, in the present position of having to inform the Government of Guatemala that legal inhibitions do not permit it to comply with this request. However, the Government of the United States desires to say that if there is any assistance which it may render to the Government of Guatemala by placing the experience of the Treasury Department at the disposal of that Government, it is needless to say that the most hearty cooperation of the Secretary of the Treasury may be relied upon.

4. As has been the practice in the past, and particularly in view of the present cooperation which is being given by the Government of Guatemala to the Government of the United States in the conflict with the Imperial German Government, it is desired to state that the same facilities are open to the Government of Guatemala for the importation into that Republic from the United States of that armament required for the defense of its ports and cities and for the efficient military preparedness of the country.

5. The statement of the Special Mission with reference to any possible attacks upon the sovereignty of Guatemala has been given most earnest consideration by the Government of the United States. As the Government of Guatemala was informed on May 1, 1917, through its Legation in Washington, when the Government of the United States accepted with gratitude the friendly cooperation of Guatemala in the present war against the Imperial German Government, the lasting friendship and the earnest and steadfast support of the United States is assured for the purpose of carrying out the plans for common defense.

The Treaties of Washington, signed by the Central American States in 1907, would seem ample guaranty for the maintenance of peace and friendly intercourse between the signatory nations, but should the occasion arise, the friendly nations of the Western Continent may rely, as always, upon the pacific efforts of the United States for the adjustment of difficulties between them.

6. The Government of the United States has given careful consideration to the interesting exposition which has been made by the Special Mission of Guatemala of the differences of opinion existing between the Governments of Guatemala and of Honduras as to the delimitation of their respective frontiers, and it is noted with pleasure that the memorandum presented by the Special Mission indicates that the best way to attain a satisfactory settlement of the question would be by means of the negotiation of a full and definite boundary treaty, equitable to both countries in which each of the truly sister Republics, as set forth in the memorandum, might yield some territorial claim, in the interest of harmony. The United States, being anxious that the boundary disputes between the two countries may be satisfactorily and speedily settled, will cheerfully extend to both countries, if desired by them, its impartial good offices and mediation, in order to facilitate the adjustment of the controversy.

WASHINGTON, November 14, 1917, 7 p. m.

You are instructed to communicate the following to the Argentine Government: The British and French Governments are prepared to purchase the surplus wheat of the Argentine Republic, approximately two [million] five hundred thousand tons, and some other cereals and to divert to the Argentine Republic trade the shipping and coal necessary to transport these cereals to Allied European ports, and under existing conditions it is not feasible to export gold for that purpose either from Allied countries or for their account from the United States which has limited the export of gold. The British and French Governments, therefore, propose that the Argentine Government and banks promptly work out some plan whereby the obligations of Great Britain and France shall be issued to represent purchase price of the Argentine Republic cereals and made the basis of the issue of Argentine circulation. The United States Government approves this plan and offers its good offices and co-operation in aiding in its consummation.

The following is for your information and guidance: Above note is being sent after consultation in London by Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Crosby with British Chancellor of the Exchequer and French Finance Minister, whose Governments are sending copies of above note to their respective diplomatic representatives in the Argentine Republic with instructions that simultaneous presentation be made by diplomatic representatives of three countries who should fully cooperate. It is important that proposed arrangements be made without delay in order that plans for diversion to Argentina of necessary shipping and coal should be made at once. You should explain that we are cooperating in this transaction because of our general interest in the Allies' food situation and because our own plans for exporting cereals will be affected to some extent by arrangements made for export of Argentine surplus. British and French diplomatic representatives have instructions as to financial details of the proposed arrangement. You are expected to facilitate negotiations in every way in your power. You will appreciate, and British and French diplomatic representatives will doubtless explain in case of need, that the limited shipping and bunkering coal of the world must be very carefully allocated so as to most effectively feed the Allied nations with due regard to the rights of neutrals. Manifestly in this policy the United States must cooperate with European Allies. There is a rumor that there is a movement on foot to purchase Argentine surplus cereals for Spain, and suspicion is that this would be for German account. You will realize, and British and French diplomatic representatives will doubtless make plain if developments so require, that under existing conditions Allies could not be expected to provide facilities of any kind for shipments to Spain of cereals thus purchased. It seems therefore certain that Argentine cereal surplus can be exported to Europe only under some arrangement with Allies; also explain that existing abnormal conditions in world trade and finance render necessary that each country selling to European belligerents shall finance trade balances in some such manner as is now proposed for Argentina. Our Government having already made loan arrangements concerning balances in its favor, please keep this Government fully informed regarding developments and bear in mind necessity for prompt settlement.

MEMORANDUM

In reply to the Argentine Government's invitation to attend a Latin-American congress at Buenos Aires, the Government of Peru replied that Peru would gladly attend the congress had she not already traced a well-defined line of conduct in presence of the actual war by such solemn acts as her severance of diplomatic relations with Germany and her declaration to adhere to Pan-American solidarity, based upon the principles proclaimed by the President of the United States.

Despite this refusal, the President of Argentina insisted that Peru should attend the congress, appealing to the ancient friendship which has always existed between Peru and Argentina.

The President of Argentina states that Peru may defend in the congress the doctrine of solidarity with the United States, and obtain thereby a resolution by the congress to the effect that all America should sever relations with Germany as a proof of American solidarity.

The Government of Peru considers that the policy of this continent should be one with the policies of the United States; that in consequence of the attitude of the United States in this war, the Monroe Doctrine must necessarily become firmer and ampler; and that the defense of the United States and all other American nations against German imperialism requires, as an essential condition, a uniform policy throughout the entire continent. The Government of Peru is willing to cooperate most decidedly for the attainment of such a purpose.

As the President of Argentina has declared moreover to the Government of Peru that the Argentine Government is disposed to sever diplomatic relations with Germany, were the congress at Buenos Aires to pass a resolution to that effect, should the Government of the United States deem it convenient to achieve such a result, the Government of Peru could state that it will attend the congress at Buenos Aires, provided the congress deal before all with the question of the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, and provided furthermore that the Government of Argentina agree to support this proposition.

If the American Government approves of this plan we would attend the congress at Buenos Aires, after having obtained that Bolivia, Ecuador, and Uruguay agree to withdraw from the congress, were the motion to break relations with Germany not approved.

We desire to know the opinion of the United States Government of the subject, in order either to persist in our refusal, or to proceed according to the plan herein outlined.

MR. MINISTER: I have the high honor to communicate to your honor that the Government of the Republic, under date of the 7th of the current month of October, declared its diplomatic and commercial relations with the Imperial German Government to be severed, and being expressly authorized by the legislative power, it has just proclaimed under date of to-day a decree revoking the dispositions in force with reference to neutrality of the Republic with respect to France, England, Belgium, Italy, Portugal, Russia, Japan, Serbia, Roumania, and Montenegro, which had been proclaimed under different dates on account of the state of war in which said nations were engaged with the German Government.

¹Ante, p. 356.

In adopting such an attitude, Uruguay does so because it understands that it is not possible for it to remain any longer as a simple spectator in this world struggle in which the supreme interests of democracy are fighting against the autocracy of the German Empire, in which struggle those countries which are tied to Uruguay by the same communion of ideals are taking part and to which it must bring its assistance and moral support.

Uruguay enters to form part of that league of honor to which President Wilson referred when, without passion and having no material interests to serve, he proclaimed his honest policy.

In taking this action Uruguay has no private grievance to avenge nor any direct offense to repress. Its attitude is based solely upon the principle of elevated solidarity with the defenders of right and justice who are at this time the noble defenders of small sovereignties unselfishly fighting for the world democracy.

Paraguayan Minister for Foreign Affairs informed me to-day that his Government had been sounded by the Argentine Government as to whether Paraguay would attend a Central-American congress but that Argentina had not committed herself definitely as to whether she meant a conference of all American states or only of neutral ones. The Minister said that he strongly favors a conference of all the American states as indicated in his telegram to the Pan American Union, reported in my telegram November 7, 4 p. m.¹ He added that if a congress of neutral American states takes place, Paraguay will send representatives but that her delegates will be instructed to vote that all important decisions of the congress as to policy be referred to a conference of all the American states.

Pursuant to Department's previous instructions, I am making every effort to discourage the Paraguayan Government from supporting the idea of a congress of neutral American states.

WASHINGTON, November 23, 1917, 6 p. m.

Your November 16, 4 a. m.² Government of Peru has informed this Government that Peru replied to invitation of Argentine Government to attend conference at Buenos Aires, stating Peru had already traced a well-defined line of conduct in actual war and regretted that this would prevent her from attending. Despite this refusal President of Argentina insisted Peru should attend stating that Peru might defend in conference doctrine of solidarity with United States, and obtain a resolution by conference to effect that all America should sever relations with Germany as proof of American solidarity.

Government of Peru states that President of Argentina has moreover declared that Argentine Government is disposed to sever relations with Germany should conference at Buenos Aires pass resolution to that effect. Government of Peru has asked this Government whether it deems it advisable for Peru to state to Argentine Government that it would attend conference, provided conference deals before all with question of severance of diplomatic relations with Germany and provided furthermore that Government of Argentina agreed to support this proposition, and that if Government of United States approved of plan Peru would attend conference after having obtained agreement from Bolivia, Ecuador, and Uruguay that they would withdraw from conference were motion to break relations with Germany not approved.

Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires at Washington was informed by Secretary of State that this Government approved of plan as outlined, and Chargé d'Affaires so informed his Government.

On November 20 Peruvian Chargé informed Department that under date of November 19 his Government had advised him that it was expecting a reply from Argentine Government to above-mentioned plan and that Government of Uruguay had accepted the plan.

On November 20 the Peruvian Chargé received a telegram from his Government saying that President of Argentina informed Peruvian Minister at Buenos Aires on November 19 that the conference at Buenos Aires would be empowered to decide upon severance of diplomatic relations with Germany and also upon question of war, but that he declined to bind himself by previous engagement to continue to discuss the subject. Peruvian Minister will see him again and has been instructed by his Government to insist upon plan.

You may confirm statement made by Government of Peru to Government of Uruguay that plan had met with the approval of the Government of the United States.

PANAMA, November 9, 1917.

[Received November 24.]

SIR: Amplifying my cablegram of November 7th, 8 p. m.,¹ I have the honor to report that on that date the National Assembly of Panama, after the receipt of the message from the President of Panama detailing to them the various steps taken by him in proclaiming a state of war and pledging cooperation with our Government, followed by certain other acts, passed unanimously a resolution approving same. The resolution is as follows:

The National Assembly of Panama, in view of the message that His Excellency the President of the Republic has addressed to this Assembly, under to-day's date, regarding the state of war in which the nation finds itself with the German Imperial Government since April 7 of this year,

Resolves: That all the Executive acts and measures adopted by the President in connection with the state of war with the German Empire, in which the nation finds itself since April 7, 1917, and of which the President of the Republic informs this Assembly in his message of to-day's date, are hereby approved.

There was introduced by Señor Dr. Eusebio A. Morales, the Secretary of Government and Justice in the Cabinet of President Valdes, the bill giving the President fuller power for the future, which was predicted by me in my cablegram of November 5, 4 p. m.²

I enclose (enclosures Nos. 1, 2, and 3) clippings from the Panama Morning Journal and the Star and Herald of this city giving an account of the proceedings of the day and containing the text in full of the President's message, of the resolution copied above, and of the bill referred to.²

As the session of the Assembly approached, Secretary Morales expressed himself as more and more convinced that legislative action along the line of said bill should be taken, and he stated that they had definitely determined to introduce such a measure. After drafting the bill he submitted it to me and I at once made the suggestion to him, after reading it hurriedly, that inasmuch as they had concluded to introduce such a bill it occurred to me that it would be well to have a resolution passed, also, definitely ratifying and approving the acts taken by the President of Panama after the adjournment of the last session of the National Assembly. Secretary Morales replied that they had considered that, but that he feared the fact of the introduction of such a resolution might suggest a questioning by some one of the legal right of the President of Panama to have proclaimed war as he did by his proclamation of April 7 last. I answered that it seemed to me that the resolution would not have the effect of originating such any more than the bill that he had decided to introduce, especially if the resolution came from the Assembly itself and if it were passed unanimously as he stated that he had no reason to think that it would not be. I took occasion to remark that it seemed that nothing else would be advisable to be done, certainly not another formal declaration of war, which really might be the cause of the questioning mentioned. The conclusion was then reached to have the President outline to the Assembly the action taken by him with reference to the war and to have the resolution mentioned passed.

I submitted the bill to a conference to which I asked the Military Commander of the Canal Zone, the Judge Advocate on his staff, and Judge Frank Feuille, Special Attorney for the Canal. Several small amendments to some of the articles were suggested as the result of this conference, all having the effect to broaden the application of the provisions of the articles, and all but one were accepted by Secretary Morales, that one he claiming to be unnecessary because the Spanish interpretation of the provision was broader than the customary English of it and sufficiently so to meet the purpose intended.

Article 47 of the Constitution of Panama, to which the first article of said bill refers, provides that certain individual rights enumerated in prior articles of the Constitution may be temporarily suspended in the case of foreign war or menacing internal disturbances, but provides also that this suspension must be decreed by the National Assembly when it is in session, but when it is not then by the President of the Republic in a decree bearing the signature of all of his secretaries and that the same decree must convoke the National Assembly for the purpose, laying before it the reasons for the suspension. The individual rights specifically set forth in prior articles of the Constitution relate to the right of every person to travel freely within the territory of the Republic; to not be molested in person or in home, except under legal written authority; in default of such authority to have the right of being released on personal petition or on the petition of any other person; to express freely one's thoughts by speech or writing, by the press, or other means regarding the official acts of a public functionary; to practice any profession or honest occupation without having a degree or being a member of an association, except that certificates may be required to practice medicine or allied professions; and not to be deprived of property except in conformance with law.

As reported in former despatches, we have now pending before the Panaman authorities requests to require the registration and reporting of Germans and subjects of the allies of Germany; to adopt regulations requiring registration and permits on the part of everyone leaving or coming into the ports of Panama and Colon; the adoption of regulations and cooperation with us in the matter of the control of exports and of trading with the enemy; and have already had put into practice a censorship both of cables and of the mails of Panama; and in addition to the internment of Germans from the Republic heretofore effected, it is intended in the next few days to ask for the apprehension and internment of about 20 more German subjects.

The only likelihood of any serious objection to the bill mentioned above is that which may possibly arise against the broadness with which the first article of the bill authorizes the suspension of constitutional guaranties, and this objection if raised will be by the opposition political element growing out of an uneasiness that the administration in power might take advantage of the situation in the Assembly elections of next year.¹

November 26, 1917.

The Peruvian Chargé d'Affaires called on Mr. Stabler on November 24, and informed him that he had received a telegram from his Government in further reference to the conference to be called by the Argentine Government at Buenos Aires, stating that the Peruvian Minister in Buenos Aires had not been summoned by President Irigoyen for an interview as he had been promised, and, therefore, some doubt existed in his mind whether the Argentine Government would accept the Peruvian plan.

The Chargé said that his Government had also informed him that it had heard rumors to the effect that the Argentine Government, through its Ambassador at Washington, was approaching the Government of the United States in regard to inviting the United States to attend the conference.

Mr. Freyre asked Mr. Stabler whether he could give him any information in regard to this rumor. Mr. Stabler replied that he had no knowledge of any action in this connection on the part of the Argentine Ambassador, but that he would speak with the Secretary and inform Mr. Freyre on Monday as to the Secretary's reply.

Mr. Freyre emphasized the fact that, in view of the approval given by the United States to the Peruvian plan, he hoped that the United States Government would take no further action in regard to the conference without informing the Peruvian Government. He added that should the United States accept the invitation to attend, while the Peruvian plan was still in its present status, it would have a very embarrassing effect on both the Government and himself. Mr. Stabler assured the Chargé d'Affaires that the Government of the United States would take no further action in regard to the conference without speaking with him.

The following proposal is being made by the Government of the United States to Uruguay through its Legation here:

The United States to undertake repairs necessary to render the vessels seaworthy; bearing the cost of repairs in the first instance, but deducting this cost from the charter hire as it shall become payable for the use of the vessels. The vessels to be chartered to the United States by a "bare boat" form of charter party, for the duration of the war at an agreed fair price for vessels of this size, speed, and general character. realizing as he did that the sentiment of the United States was becoming less friendly. He then brought up, as he had done at other times, the fact that he had shown great sympathy with the United States when the Government of the United States declared war upon Germany, and that he had even been accused by the German Government of being unneutral at that time. He then referred to the Toro case, calling attention to the fact that he had demanded a complete explanation from Germany as well as full reparation; that this had been given as it had been to no other government and that therefore the incident was closed. He added, however, that I should not from this consider his attitude as conclusive; that Argentina might take some conclusive step at any time but that should some such step be taken it could only be a declaration of war. . . .

He then took up with me the question of the Pan-American congress saying that he greatly deplored the apparent misunderstanding of the Government of the United States of his attitude in this matter. The purpose of such a congress he said was far from hostile to the United States, and to prove this to me he invited me at some near date to visit him again to go over the correspondence on the subject which he possesses. He then asked me whether the United States would attend the congress were an invitation tendered to them, assuring me that he would gladly tender such an invitation. I gave him no definite assurances in the matter, being without instructions from the Department.

He ended by inviting me to come to see him any afternoon without the formality of requesting an audience. His manner throughout was extremely earnest.

PANAMA, November 27, 1917.

[Received December 15.]

SIR: I have the honor to enclose the Spanish text and translation of the cablegram which the Government of Panama has sent to Argentina in response to the latter's cable invitation, under date of October 28, proposing the holding of a congress of Latin-American nations in Argentina the first fortnight in January for the purpose of making a joint declaration in reference to their attitude in the pending war.¹ I refer to my cablegram of October 29, 5 p. m.,² and to my despatch No. 1642 of October 29,¹ reporting this move on the part of the Argentine.

The Secretary of Foreign Affairs of Panama, in the response mentioned, after expressing appreciation for the courtesy shown by the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of Argentina in addressing Panama in this matter, states that the Panaman Government "regrets that the motives which led it to decline the first invitation sent on May 9 have not changed." After the receipt of instructions from the Department asked for in reference to the reply of Panama to be made to the invitation of Argentina of May 9 last, and to my communication of same, the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of Panama, under date of May 22, 1917, responded to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of Argentina—that the line of conduct observed by my Government respecting the war has been clear and unequivocal. Relations were broken with Germany and common cause made with the United States offering them all cooperation. These circumstances virtually exclude the Republic of Panama from the reunion which your excellency proposes, . . .

I refer to my cablegram of May 22, 7 p. m.,¹ and to my despatch No. 1446 of June 28, 1917.²

The response of Panama to this last invitation has just now been given me by the Secretary of Foreign Affairs. No answer had been received to my request for instructions with reference to what, if anything, the Department would like for me to say to Panama regarding its response, which request was contained in my cablegram of October 29, 5 p. m.³ Secretary Garay framed the cablegram, a copy of which is the enclosure herewith,² on the theory, he told me, that such a response would at least not be objectionable or inappropriate.

WASHINGTON, December 15, 1917, 6 p. m.

Your December 6, 11 p. m.⁴ Department considers it unwise for you to go to see President of Argentina at this time without a further definite invitation from him. In view of President Irigoyen's statement in regard to attitude of United States to conference, he would probably consider any visit you might make, without further indication of a desire on his part to see you, as a manifestation of the wish of this Government to participate. The Government of the United States feels that this congress should not be held unless it is called for the purpose advocated by Peru (see Department's November 24 [23], 6 p. m., to Legation at Montevideo,⁵ repeated to you by that Mission, with reference to your November 14, 1 p. m., to Department²; see also your December 10, 4 p. m.⁶) and unless Peruvian program is adhered to by Argentina and other attending nations.

Should you be invited to call upon the President and should he tender a formal invitation to the United States to attend conference, you will make no comment but say you will refer the invitation to your Government.

For your information. Department understands that Brazil wishes to prevent the conference, but that if this is impossible, desires to impose conditions advocated by Peru. Department has received information to the effect that Venezuela, Colombia, and Costa

Referring to the Department's telegram of December 11, 7 p. m., Uruguayan Government states:

In order that France and England might accept the arbitration treaty, Uruguay agreed that it would utilize at least six of the German vessels between those countries and River Plata. If the United States can obtain from them cession of this tonnage, always on the understanding that they will [keep] their promises to Uruguay, this Government sees no objection in it.

Uruguayan Government decrees that bids for the chartering of the German vessels should be made. The United States Government could make its bid through the American company and it would be well received by Uruguayan Government. The German vessels must be utilized in the interest of Uruguay in its relations with Europe or the United States and must fly the Uruguayan flag. Bids for charter of German vessels will be considered after a completion of repairs. Should invitation for bids bring no results the Uruguayan Government will then adopt plan, as such may be most convenient for working ships.

that against Germany and the Germans. I believe every American official here thought as I that the Department desired Panama to follow after action taken by our Government against Austria-Hungary. Authorization given by the last National Assembly was based on a state of war with Germany. The Department seemed doubtful of the right of Panama President to take the action he did with the National Assembly adjourned but very anxious that such action be taken though left them without instructions. The Department approved of the steps taken by me. I refer to instructions 359 April 2 and 373 and 374 April 25 last.¹ I was solely animated by the belief that the Department would like action at this time before adjournment of National Assembly and that I was doing, judging from former indication, what the Department desired. My suggestion was made informally and I stated at the same time that I was not acting under instructions. I am advised now that the Panaman [Government] would have acted without suggestion but I was then uneasy about adjournment of the Assembly. I regret exceedingly if I misinterpreted the wishes of the Department. The following is the resolution adopted by the National Assembly:

The National Assembly of Panama in view of the message of the President in which he advises the National Assembly of the declaration of war made by the Congress of the United States of America on the Austro-Hungarian Empire and considering, that the Republic of Panama has expressed before, in its laws and resolutions, its firm willingness to lend to the United States of America all the powers and cooperation it may be capable of in the present war, making common cause with the democratic nations which are fighting to impede the predominance of the world by the Teuton powers: be it
Resolved, That the Republic of Panama be declared in a state of war from to-day December 10, 1917 with the Austro-Hungarian Empire;

That the President be invested with the necessary powers to co-operate with the United States of America in the prosecution of the war in accordance with [the constitution] and the principles of international law.

In the first place he has stated to me, although he had already read the Luxburg telegrams, that he would [not] break with Germany on account of anything that has occurred hitherto. It must further be remarked that no ship has been permitted to clear for the war zone under the Argentine flag since the Pueyrredon; see my November 22, 11 a. m.¹

[Received 11.07 p. m.]

My December 26, 3 p. m.¹ British Minister has just given me a copy of a convention determined in conversation last evening between him and the French Minister on the one side and the Minister for Foreign Affairs on the other. As will be noted the parties named in the convention are only Great Britain, France, and Argentina, but Article 6 is substantially the same as Article 4 in the triplicate memorandum quoted in my November 22, 1 p. m.,¹ that is to say Article 6 reads—

The Governments of the United States, France, and Great Britain when they provide the ships necessary for the exportation of the mentioned products (that is to say the wheat, etc., from Argentina) will permit the exportation of the combustible which is necessary for Argentine internal consumption.

I would call the Department's attention to the dangerous latitude in this clause, inasmuch as it is not definitely specified whether the amounts of the combustible, id est, oil and coal, referred to is limited by the capacity of the wheat ships or whether the amount of the [same] shall be determined by the total internal needs of Argentina.

The convention requires the consent of Department of Justice, but the Minister for Foreign Affairs assured British Minister that he could get this consent next Monday if an answer could be received from the Allies' Governments by that time.

A full translation of the entire convention follows:

Between the Government of the Argentine Republic and the Governments of Great Britain and France it has been agreed to celebrate the following convention.

ARTICLE 1. The Governments of France and Great Britain will buy in the Argentine Republic the surplus of wheat and other cereals for the approximate quantity of 2,500,000 tons, having to export the same before November 1, 1918. They agree to pay a minimum price of 12 ₧ 50 per 50 kilograms of wheat; 7 ₧ per [100] kilograms oats; and 15 ₧ per 100 kilograms of linseed, all of good quality f. o. b.

ARTICLE 2. The Governments of France and Great Britain shall not be obliged to buy the cereals before mentioned when their price in the market exceeds 15 ₧ per 100 kilograms of wheat, 7 ₧ per 100 kilograms oats, and 15 ₧ per 100 kilograms linseed.

ARTICLE 3. The Argentine Government shall open a credit in favor of the Government of Great Britain up to the sum of 100,000,000 ₧ Argentine gold equivalent in lawful money and an equal credit up to the same sum to the Government of France.

The amounts drawn on such credits shall bear 5 per cent interest per annum.

ARTICLE 4. The Argentine Government shall be permitted to draw on the Governments of France and Great Britain up to the total of the sums of which they had disposed under the above credits when the rate of exchange in favor of the Argentine Government does not exceed 50 pennies upon England and 5 fr. 60 upon Paris.

The resulting balance shall be liquidated by the Governments of France and Great Britain within the period of 24 months from the signature of this convention, unless further extended by mutual consent by delivery of the amount in actual gold.

The Governments of France and Great Britain shall deposit in the respective Argentine Legations obligations equivalent to the amounts of the sums of which they shall have disposed under the credits granted.

ARTICLE 5. The credits granted shall be utilized for the purchase of Argentine cereals and can also be used for the acquisition of other products of the country.

ARTICLE 6. The Governments of the United States, France, and Great Britain in providing the necessary ships for the exportation of the products mentioned shall permit the exportation of combustible which is required by the internal consumption of Argentina.

ARTICLE 7. This convention is ad referendum for the Argentine Government, which shall obtain the necessary authorization from the National Congress.

I desire to call the Department's attention to the importance of instructing me immediately as to whether it wishes me to signify the approval of the Government of the United States of this convention; as otherwise, when the convention is submitted to Congress on Monday the fact that the United States has not expressed disapproval may be interpreted as a demonstration of approval.

has addressed to the governments of the Allies and the Central powers now at war and the text of which your excellency has been good enough to transmit to me under instructions of your Government.

China, a nation traditionally pacific, has recently again manifested her sentiments in concluding treaties concerning the pacific settlement of international disputes, responding thus to the [wishes] of the peace conferences held at The Hague.

On the other hand the present war by its prolongation has seriously affected the interests of China, more so perhaps than those of other powers which have remained neutral. She is at present at a time of reorganization which demands economically and industrially the cooperation of foreign countries, cooperation which a large number of them are unable to accord on account of the war in which they are engaged.

In manifesting her sympathy for the spirit of the President's note, having in view the ending as soon as possible of the hostilities, China is but acting in conformity with not only her interest but also with her profound sentiments.

On account of the extent which modern wars are apt to assume and the repercussion which they bring about, their effects are no longer limited to belligerent states. All countries are interested in seeing wars become as rare as possible. Consequently China can not but show satisfaction with the views of the Government and people of the United States of America who declare themselves ready and even eager to cooperate when the war is over by all proper means to assure the respect of the principle of the equality of nations whatever their power may be and to relieve them of the peril of wrong and violence. China is ready to join her efforts with theirs for the attainment of such results which can only be obtained through the help of all.

I have discussed Department's circular of February 3, 1 p. m.,¹ with the President, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Premier, and Minister of Finance. Cabinet meeting took place to-day but no decision yet arrived at.

I have been questioned on the following points relating to eventuality of China's being drawn into the war in consequence of taking the action suggested: first, could assurances be given that Chinese arsenals and military forces would not come under foreign control; secondly, could assurances be given that China would be admitted to full membership in the peace conference; thirdly, what would be relations of the powers now entering the war to the London agreement not to make separate peace? I confined myself to conjectures but should be assisted by having your instructions on these points.

Our influence with the Chinese has been markedly impaired by the publication of the proposed cooperation with Japan in the canal projects, more particularly because the Japanese reports have given rise to the belief that the Americans took the initiative in seeking Japanese assistance.¹ . . .

Please keep me informed of the action of other neutral powers which would also influence China.

The Cabinet met again to-day, and the Minister of Finance informs me that the sentiment in favor of joining the United States is gaining strength phenomenally. He intimates that the chief obstacle to such action is the fear concerning arsenals. If I can be authorized to give to the Chinese Government the assurance that $10,000,000 will be loaned from American sources to improve arsenals and that the United States Government will agree to funding of its portion of Boxer indemnity in long-term bonds and to urge the same course upon the Allied powers, I feel assured that the Chinese Government will forthwith associate itself with the American action. The former is the more important. Should the arrangement for funding the indemnity require action by Congress, it is possible that the Chinese Government might be persuaded to act upon the assurance that the administration would at some opportune time recommend appropriate legislation to that effect.

The Chinese officials recognize the justice of the cause espoused by the United States as well as the desirability of China's associating itself with the measures taken, but they will not act unless they can have effective assurances that their national independence will be safeguarded by the United States as by the means suggested above, which would be a very moderate amount of support.

My telegram of February 6, 11 p. m. In a further [conversation] Minister of Finance stated that the Chinese officials are increasingly disposed to associate their Government with the action of the United States but are deterred by the fear that evident necessity for more adequate military organization might lead the Japanese Government to seek from the Allies mandate to supervise such organization: and that to avert the possibility of Japan's creating such a situation the Chinese Government considers it to be of the utmost importance to have some assurance that means will be provided to enable it to undertake the requisite measures independently with American financial assistance and guidance. In view of his urgent request for some immediate assurance on which the decision of the Government can be made, before other influences can be interposed, I shall feel justified in addressing the Minister for Foreign Affairs as follows, if it appears that by doing so without delay a favorable decision may be obtained.

I have recommended to my Government, in the event of the Chinese Government's associating itself with the President's suggestion, the Government of the United States should take measures to put at its disposal funds immediately required for the purposes you have indicated, and should take steps with a view to such a funding of the Boxer indemnity as would for the time being make available for the [purposes?] of the Chinese Government at least the major portions [of] the current indemnity installments: and I have indicated to you my personal conviction that my Government would be found just and liberal in effecting this or other such arrangements to enable the Chinese Government to meet the responsibilities which it might assume upon the suggestion of the President. I should not be wholly frank with you, however, if I were to fail to point out that the exact nature of any assistance to be given or any measures to be taken must be determined through consultation of various administrative organs, in some cases including reference to Congress, in order to make effective such arrangements as might have been agreed to between the executive authorities of the two Governments: and I, therefore, could not in good faith make in behalf of my Government any definite commitments upon your suggestions at the present time.

I do, however, feel warranted in assuming the responsibility of assuring you in behalf of my Government that by the methods you have suggested, or otherwise, adequate means will be devolved to enable China to fulfill the responsibilities consequent upon associating itself with the action of the United States, without any impairment of her control of her military establishment and general administration.

I venture the hope that this action which I shall take only under imperative immediate necessity will meet your approval and that my position in this matter may be strengthened by authorization to affirm the acceptance by our Government of the principle of affording China such financial assistance as Great Britain, for example, has given Russia.

PEKING, January 10, 1917.

[Received February 8.]

SIR: During the recent past, various Chinese officials—their excellencies the President, the Premier, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and others—have confidentially discussed with me the position of the Chinese Republic with respect to the settlement after the war. I, therefore, have the honor to report to you on this matter and to request your instructions.

During the course of the war China has been more immediately and directly affected by hostile action between the belligerents, as to her own territory, than any other power. This happened primarily in connection with the defense and siege of Tsingtao, but there have also been many other similar cases, though of less importance.

The Chinese Government feels that because territorial rights located in China are involved in this war, it would be proper for the Chinese Government to be consulted when the final settlement is made after the conclusion of hostilities. Most of the high officials of China are inclined to believe that the Chinese Government should be represented in any conference of the belligerents which may be called to effect a settlement.

On the other hand, it is also apprehended by them, as well as by others, that should China be drawn into the discussions connected with the adjustment of the position and the rights of the belligerents, it might easily happen that the European powers and Japan would see in China a convenient victim for transactions and deals by which they would give to each other mutual "compensations," or would give to one group of powers "compensations" for concessions which they might make in other parts of the world. Should the representation of China at the peace conference invite such a development, such representation would by all means have to be avoided. It is, however, felt by the Chinese that this matter of "compensations" might be brought up in their absence, without their knowledge and without an opportunity being given them to state their views. It appears to them that this would be an even more undesirable situation, and they are inclined to make an effort to be included in whatever conferences may be held. They do not, however, fail to see that unless it suits the special convenience of a group of powers or unless it is not strongly opposed by any one power, their inclusion in such a conference would not be probable. The Japanese have already hinted that they would gladly undertake to represent the interests of China at such a conference; that they would fully protect China and might even admit a Chinese attaché to the Japanese delegation. This is, of course, the last thing that the Chinese desire.

Under the circumstances, it is very difficult to determine with any degree of assurance what would be the safest course for China to pursue. Considering the manner in which international bodies [decisions] are often formulated, it would even easily be possible to give to a general resolution of abstention from interference in China such a form as would guarantee and fortify such claims already existing.

The following alternatives of policy suggest themselves, several of which might concurrently be put in action:

First: China might formally notify the belligerent powers, at the time of the calling of their conference, that she desires to be directly represented therein as far as the disposition of any rights affecting China should come under discussion. Should China be admitted, her delegation could then insist upon a strict limitation of the action of the conference to the rights of Germany in Shantung, which are alone directly involved in the war. Should there be an attempt made to discuss broader questions, the Chinese Government might then state that as such a discussion would affect other powers, the questions should be, if discussed at all, submitted to a special conference where the latter could be represented. The weakness of the claim of China to be represented in the congress arises from the fact that the Chinese Government has already (in 1915) agreed with Japan to sanction any transfer, which may be made at the conclusion of the war, of the rights of Germany in Shantung to Japan.

Second: The Chinese Government might formally notify the belligerent powers that it takes it for granted that any discussion of the transfer of the rights of Germany in Shantung to Japan will be confined strictly to the scope of such rights hitherto specifically and formally recognized by China; and that should the discussion pass beyond this limit the Chinese Government would desire to be represented at the conference.

Third: China might take it for granted that the conference of belligerents would not concern itself with Chinese affairs beyond the rights of Germany in Shantung; and it might then rely upon the general conference of all powers, which will undoubtedly be convened shortly after the war, to give more definite protection to her rights. The work of such a general conference, which would undoubtedly attempt to fortify and perfect the method of arbitration of international disputes, and the effectiveness of international law, and which might find means for providing a sufficient joint guaranty assuring to any power desirous of invoking the protection of international law and of international courts the right to do so, would materially assist China in maintaining her independent position and governmental rights; provided that unfavorable specific action at the conference of the belligerents may be avoided.

Fourth: Should the general situation of the powers in China and the status of the Chinese Government be brought up for discussion at the end of the war, it would appear eminently desirable that there should be called a special conference on Chinese or Far Eastern Affairs, at which all the powers having important interests here should be represented. From such a conference it might be possible to obtain a reenforcement of the integrity of China and of the policy of equal opportunity; find expression in a specific formal declaration to the effect that the powers will not seek for themselves in the Chinese Republic any special territorial or general rights of preference, and that they will oppose no obstacle to the development by the Chinese Government and people, with their own or foreign capital, of any part of China. If absolutely necessary, the special status of Manchuria and parts of Mongolia might be recognized, provided that the principle of equal rights and privileges be formally established throughout the rest of China.

The development of events will possibly indicate with greater definiteness which will be the proper course for the Chinese Government to pursue. Meanwhile, however, the high officials of the Government have repeatedly expressed to me their confidence that they may count on the assistance of the American Government in aiding them to prevent any development during, or at the end of, the war which would make of China a field of "compensations" or would result in general declarations that would give scope to the further development of special spheres and preferences.

I have the honor especially to request an expression of your views or instructions with respect to the action of the Chinese Government with regard to international conferences as affecting these general rights, in the maintenance of which the American Government has always been interested.

My telegram of February 8, 12 midnight. Chinese Government has now replied to the following effect to my note in pursuance of your telegram:¹

Chinese Government being in accord with the principles set forth in your excellency's note and firmly associating itself with the Government of the United States, has taken similar action by protesting energetically to the German Government against the new measures of blockade. Chinese Government also proposes to take such action in the future as will be deemed necessary for the maintenance of the principles of international law.

It has at the same time addressed to German Minister note of protest expressing the hope that the proposed measures will not be carried out and adding that—

In case contrary to its expectations its protest be ineffectual, the Government of the Chinese Republic will be constrained to its profound regret to sever the diplomatic relations at present existing between the two countries.

It is also making to me by a note verbale the following confidential communication interpreting the note quoted above:

In case an act should be performed by the German Government which should be considered by the American Government as sufficient cause for declaration of war between the United States and Germany, the Chinese Government should [at] least break its diplomatic relations with Germany.

This identification with the policy [of] the American Government, though conforming incompletely with its action already taken, appears to be the utmost that can be immediately obtained in view of strong German influences and apprehensions of other dangers and obstacles. In order to bring it about, I found it imperatively necessary to give the assurances referred to in my cipher telegram February 7, 6 p. m., which, however, I have pointed out apply to the consequences of action taken concurrently with the United States.

The strongest exertion of influence and persuasion was necessary to obtain this result in the face of numerous unfavorable factors. The most potent [factor] in our favor was the confidence felt by the Chinese in the aims of the American Government and their reluctance to fail to respond when invited to associate themselves with its action.

Although the assurances I have given apply only in the case of China's complete identification with our action, I would most earnestly urge that the Chinese be not rebuffed in the action they have taken or be made to feel that by being alone in committing themselves to our leadership they have merely risked having their military resources placed under Japanese control instead of being assisted by the United States to fulfil the responsibilities undertaken at the President's invitation.

It is here understood that leadership assumed by the United States entitles the American Government to a decisive voice as to the form to be given any military assistance that may be rendered China, that it could legitimately and with propriety take the initiative in planning the nature of such assistance, and certainly that a proposal for single control by any other nation could not be effectuated over the head of the American Government. Our national security demands that there should be no surrender of Chinese sovereign rights of military control through admissions which would lay a heavy burden on the American nation in the near future; it is recognized that by using the position secured through the action of China the American Government could effect an arrangement which would be just to the vital interests of China as well as of the other powers, or at least could prevent unilateral harmful action.

SIR: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your despatch No. 1335 of January 10, 1917,¹ concerning the possible representation of China in any conference of the present belligerents for the re-establishment of peace.

The Department has considered very carefully the several suggestions made by you as to possible courses of procedure to secure for China the protection of her interests.

The American Government is deeply concerned for the continued preservation of China's territorial integrity and administrative entity and the maintenance of the open door for trade and equality of opportunity for all nations in the commerce of China. This Government naturally, therefore, desires the Chinese Government to have such representation in any conference of the present belligerents as the hostilities conducted by them within the boundaries of China entitle it to receive. It seems to the Department that China would do well to await the further development of events. This may indicate the proper course to take. It is not impossible that China may itself become a belligerent before any such conference is held and thus have an undoubted right to the representation desired. The Department, at present, however, is not disposed, in the event of hostilities between the United States and Germany, to urge China to declare war also on Germany. The course of events may make such a course advisable, but it is evident that the United States would not be able to give China the assistance proposed in your telegrams of February 6, 1 p. m., February 6, 11 p. m., and February 7, 6 p. m.,² if serious opposition should be offered to such assistance. Attempt to override that opposition might precipitate the very aggression which China fears. . . . The Vice President, Premier, and other influential leaders, partly from fear of Japan and partly to advance their political ambitions, are disposed to fall into line. The President favors cautious action. Referring to my cable of February 28, 7 p. m. On account of non-appearance of a satisfactory reply to its protest to Germany, the Chinese Government is now confronted with the necessity of deciding upon a further course of action as its position is fundamentally identical with that of the American Government in that both are neutral and seek no national advantages but only the maintenance of their essential rights. The Chinese Government thinks association with the United States in this matter natural. But Japan is urgently advising union with the Allies, whose representatives, under instructions, have invited China and offered certain inducements, such as the postponement of Boxer indemnity. . . .

The preference of the Chinese Government for alignment with the United States would determine their action, could they be sure of moderate recognition and support. Such action would receive passively or spontaneously the applause of the Allies. The features of the situation are alike favorable to a maintenance of Chinese rights and American vital interests if some financial assistance can come from American sources and the American Government will secure for China a voice in the possible conferences. The very fact of China's being in this matter associated primarily with the United States will make it impossible to impose upon her exclusive outside control of her military establishment.

It is essential that I should have your instructions as I am asked to state the attitude of the American Government.

SIR: Supplementing my telegrams of February 6, 1 p. m. and 11 p. m., 7, 6 p. m., 8, 12 p. m., 9, 12 p. m.,¹ 10, 1 p. m.,² and 12, 4 p. m.,³ I have the honor further to report on the steps taken in connection with the instructions contained in your circular telegram of February 3, relating to the protest against the German policy of submarine warfare.

Upon receiving your instructions, I immediately informed the Minister for Foreign Affairs, his excellency Dr. Wu Ting-fang, who being ill at present has been represented by his son, Mr. C. C. Wu. I also immediately arranged for interviews with their excellencies the President, the Premier, and the Minister of Finance. During the period from February 4 to 8 I had numerous interviews and conferences with these high officials, as well as with other members of the Cabinet.

In urging that China should associate herself with the policy and action of the American Government in this important matter, I made use of the following arguments:

I stated that the position of the American Government was not based upon any desire to secure national profit or advantage of any kind whatsoever at the expense of other nations, but that it identified American national action with a purpose to vindicate the fundamental rights of all nations, to protect them against further inroads, and to secure the existence of a community of nations mutually respectful of their rights. From both parties of belligerents, the United States, as well as other neutrals, had been made to suffer many serious infractions of its rights; the American Government had met these with strong protests in the hope that at the end of the war common agreement might revindicate and give force to the rights thus disregarded. But when the wilful oversight of neutral rights went to the extent of imperiling not only neutral property but the lives of its citizens, the American Government was obliged to take more forceful action. In this matter the interests of China are entirely parallel to those of the United States: both nations are peaceful and see in the maintenance of international right and peaceful conditions a vital guaranty of their national safety. Through association with the United States, China would enter upon this controversy with a position consonant with every tradition and interest of her national life, a position which would have to be respected by friends and foes alike, as dictated by the highest principles which could guide national action. By taking this action, China would improve her independent standing among the nations, she would have to be consulted during the course of the controversy and at the conclusion of the war: she would, in all this, be most closely associated with that nation which she has always looked upon as peculiarly friendly and just to her. In addition to these arguments, many favorable results were discussed which China would obtain in her tactical position in international diplomacy.

Many arguments were advanced by the Chinese officials in doubt of the policy suggested: it was stated that China had not led up to a breach with Germany by notes of protest, such as had made the action of the United States seem natural and unavoidable; Germany had of late years always been considerate in her treatment of China, a sudden breach might seem treacherous; it might also be taken by Japan as so surprising an action as to give a favorable pretext for pressing the dreaded demands of Group V.¹ It was also apparent that the representatives of the European Allies were not in a position to give China, at the present time, any advice favorable to the action suggested.

I pointed out in turn that were the action suggested once taken by China, the representatives of the Allied powers would have no choice but to applaud it, which some of them at least would do from the fullness of their hearts. As far as Japan was concerned, the situation would be such as to indicate that that country, too, would decide to express approval of the action. Having taken a definite position on this side of the controversy, without yet entirely associating herself with the Allies, China would be in a position to command their good will; any interference with China's sovereign rights would be rendered more difficult because of the situation thus created. It was almost inconceivable that coercive action should be taken against a friend who had declared himself. Moreover, the United States having taken the initiative in inviting China to participate in the protest, it would be unlikely that any action could be taken over the head of the United States or without consulting the American Government.

As to the suddenness of the action suggested, I urged that the action of the German Government in announcing unrestricted submarine warfare was itself so astounding in its disregard of neutral rights that no action taken in reply could be considered too drastic. It was virtually a threat to kill Chinese citizens navigating certain portions of the high seas; and injury could be prevented only by taking a determined and forceful position.

I was also asked whether, should China follow the lead of the United States, it would then not be made easier for the Allies, under the leadership of Japan, to invite China to join them upon conditions laid down by Japan: I stated that I did not believe such to be the case, particularly if China closely associated herself with the policy of the United States step for step.

Early in the course of the discussions, I was informed quite positively that no action would be possible unless the American Government could give to China some sort of adequate assurance that China would be assisted in bearing the responsibilities which she might incur through taking this step, without an impairment of her sovereign rights and her national control. In my mind, I felt it as a matter of course that should China follow the lead of the American Government, the latter would not allow China to suffer in consequence thereof through lack of every possible support in helping China to bear the responsibilities assumed by her and to prevent any disastrous consequences falling upon her as a result of her action.

I also felt that quick and definite action alone could bring the results desired by the American Government; I felt that the effect upon Germany of the American protest would be enhanced by the early concurrence of important neutral powers. It also appeared to me that the first impulse, apparently present among a number of influential Chinese leaders in favor of associating themselves with the United States in this matter, would result in action only if a prompt decision could be made before all sorts of unfavorable and obstructive influences actually present could get to work. German influence itself, due to a wise course of policy towards the Chinese, has been very strong during recent years and could go far to neutralize action after the danger had once been fully realized.

When, on February 8, it became absolutely certain that the action counseled by the American Government could be obtained in principle, but only upon definite assurances that in the event of action being taken by China the latter could count upon the support of the United States, I felt it necessary to address to the Foreign Office the note embodied in my telegram of February 7, 6 p. m. I did this upon the conviction that at a time when immediate action was necessary and when I could not have your specific instructions, you would support me in action based upon the firm belief that the Government would act in a manner consonant with its position as a powerful Government in its relations with those who gave support and associated themselves in carrying through a policy of fundamental importance.

As the secret assurances given by the Chinese Government to the effect that China would "at the least break its diplomatic relations with Germany" in case "an act should be performed by the German Government which should be considered by the American Government as a sufficient cause for declaration of war between the United States and Germany" would not become operative until further action by the United States, they therefore left further opportunity open for determining the exact nature of the action to be taken by China. I stated to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, through his representative, that China found herself in a most favorable position. If she would take firm and decided action on the submarine question, and should be induced by the American Government to follow this up with more drastic action, she had the assurances that reasonable support would not in such an event be denied her.

On February 8 I had a joint final conference with the Premier, the Ministers of Finance and the Navy, and Mr. Wu. At the session of the Cabinet immediately following, the action was taken which has been reported in my telegram of February 8, 12 p. m. A formal notification was given to the Legations concerned on February 9. On February 10 the entire Cabinet reported to a secret session of Parliament on the diplomatic action taken. The report was well received, only a few questions being asked dealing with the procedure followed. No vote was taken on this matter, as it was considered by way of report on action by the Cabinet within the range of its legal functions.

With regard to the results of the important action taken by the Chinese Government, as far as they have become apparent up to the present time, it may be said that in matters of internal affairs the action has been beneficial in increasing harmony among the different factions, as well as the self-respect of the Government. The fact that China has, without coercion, taken a definite stand on a momentous matter and that her choice in associating herself with another country in this step has been entirely free, has inspired the Chinese with hope for the future. They feel that in taking a position for international right, they are strengthening the forces which make for the independence of their country. Among the military leaders the influence of Germany is very strong. Both the Premier and the Vice President are very friendly to Germany: they admire the perfect organization which has produced the remarkable military successes of this war; they also look upon Germany as a just and reasonable friend of China. Nevertheless, they have come to see that a more fundamental national interest should ally them with the international policy championed by the American Government. Accordingly, for once all important sections of public opinion are united.

As far as foreign influence and opinion are concerned, the representatives of the Allied Governments have come forward with their approval of the Chinese course of action as was to be expected. In the words of the Belgian Minister, "The air has been cleared; a weight has been lifted off China and the powers. The stock of America has risen one hundred per cent. The Japanese Government fully realizes this new factor and is governing itself accordingly."

I have the honor to enclose, for your information, copies of two despatches (Nos. 1166 and 1170) of February 7 and 9, respectively, from the Consulate General at Shanghai, and articles from the Peking Gazette of January 22, February 7, 8, 10, and 12, and from the Peking Daily News of February 7, 8, 10, and 13, in which the recent diplomatic developments are discussed.¹

PEKING, March 12, 1917, 1 p. m.

[Received March 12, 9.45 a. m.]

The decision of the Cabinet to break off diplomatic relations with Germany has been communicated to both Houses of Parliament and endorsed in both by a vote of confidence. I am informed the decision is to be made effective to-morrow.

Premier still maintains that no commitment as to further action has been made: . . .

The reports of the recent decisive deliberations of the Cabinet show that the action of the American International Corporation, causing the Chinese to believe that Americans could not be safely trusted, has been damaging to our commercial interests.² But this handicap might have been overcome, if it had been possible to assure those who have confidence in our leadership of our Government's readiness to do what it could to enable China to meet the responsibilities involved; but without any confirmation of even such general assurances as I reported in my telegram of February 9, 12 midnight,³ they have no cogent alternative to offer to those won over to Japan and have to let the decision go by default.

Department's cipher telegrams of February 17, 4 p. m.,¹ and March 2, 5 p. m.² The Department appreciates action of China in awaiting the decision of this Government concerning the assurances which you proposed to give the Chinese Government on condition of action by it concurrent with that of the United States.

After careful reconsideration of the whole matter, this Government sees no reason to alter its decision communicated to you in the telegram of February 10, 4 p. m.³

The Department is supporting China's efforts to obtain a loan in the United States. There are serious obstacles in the way but the approaching visit of Mr. Abbott⁴ to Peking may possibly remove them.

The United States is not in a position to guarantee China a voice in possible conferences but desires China to have such a voice and in so far as practicable will use its influence to that end.

It must be understood, however, that this Government is not bidding against the Entente for adherence of China to American course of action. There appears to have been on the part of the Legation a misunderstanding of the President's circular invitation to neutral governments. All other important neutrals having declined that invitation, the adherence of China without other powers would be insufficient for purpose originally intended. But the Department is of course deeply interested in the welfare of China and can not but feel that if the Chinese Government will refuse to place itself in a position which will give others a reasonable excuse for demanding control of its military resources there will be no need to seek protection against such domination.

desires you to say to the Chinese Government that the American Government has learned with appreciation that China will support the United States in breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany and trusts that the assurance given you that no commitment as to further action has been made indicates an intention to await the movement of this Government. You may say too that it is reported in the United States from unofficial sources that there is intriguing in China for the division of that country between a republic in the south and a monarchy in the north, and that this Government strongly deprecates a revival at this time of monarchical schemes or the promotion of any movement tending to promote discord in China or loss of territory by the Republic. For your guidance it is important to bear in mind that the American Government is disposed to regard as inadvisable a declaration of war by China upon Germany at this time, if such declaration would mean the control of China's military resources by a foreign power.

After the breach of diplomatic relations with Germany had been consummated on March 14 the Minister for Foreign Affairs handed me note verbale enumerating the following desiderata:

1. Suspension of Boxer installments for 10 years.
2. The immediate imposition of a surtax of 50 per cent on the present import duty; thereupon a revision of the tariff, so as to produce an effective 7.5 per cent duty; and finally after the abolition of likin, the customs régime of the MacKay treaty.

3. Cancellation of the provisions of 1901 protocol relating to Legation guards and to exclusion of Chinese troops from Tientsin.

An identical statement was given to the Entente powers and neutrals.

In a later conversation about this the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Premier stated that the Chinese Government proposed these measures as due to China from nations desirous to strengthen her position and not as conditions for entering the war. He stated that China was continuing to associate herself with the policy of the United States as was shown by the fact that direct notice of her impending action was given at their capitals to all the powers above mentioned and that relations had not been broken off with Austria-Hungary.

He then asked me whether the attitude of the American Government toward China was still the same as on February 8. I replied that the situation had of course been modified through China's entering pourparlers with the Entente powers, looking toward a policy different from that of the United States. He stated that the Chinese Government had kept its hands entirely free; that while there was a party favoring cooperation with Japan, they had by no means convinced the Government; that pourparlers had been caused by the urgent advances from the other side which required a reply, and that the entire formal action of China accorded with that of the United States. He also said that should the American Government now abandon interest in China, the Chinese Government would be driven into the arms of Japan, and again asked me whether our attitude had changed. I replied that if the Chinese Government had at the first suggestion from the Allies stated unequivocally that her position being similar to that of the United States she was following the same policy, there would have been no occasion for a change; that the good will of the United States persisted, but it is natural the American Government should feel a less keen interest in a measure as China relied on others; that however there was no intention of abandoning China; on the contrary if the Chinese Government should act with circumspection, the American Government would as heretofore exert itself to protect the independent position of China, to encourage sound loans, and to assist China to get representation in the peace conference. In this sense also I promised to suggest to you favorable consideration of the desiderata above mentioned with regard to import duty and Boxer indemnity.

Since the Chinese tariff is fixed by treaty, the Department will use its best endeavors to obtain such revision of the treaty as will permit an imposition of a surtax of 50 per cent of present import duty and later a duty of effective 7.5 per cent ad valorem, provided Entente powers also agree to such increase and on further condition stated at end of this telegram.

Concerning postponement of indemnity payments see Department's telegram of August 20, 1914, 4 p. m.¹ Provided Entente powers consent to postponement for time named of indemnity payments, the Department will attempt to arrange similar postponement of indemnity payments due United States upon the following conditions:

SIR: In continuation of my No. 1390 of February 14 last,¹ and supplementing my telegrams of February 21, 6 p. m.,² and February 28, 7 p. m.,³ I have the honor further to report on the Chinese protest against the German policy of submarine warfare.

Thus far the Chinese Government has not received a formal answer from the Government of the German Empire. Dr. W. W. Yen, the Chinese Minister at Berlin, telegraphed that he had been informed by the German Foreign Office that instructions were being sent to the German Minister at Peking. At the same time Mr. Zimmermann stated that Germany found herself compelled by the action of her enemies to take radical measures of defense, but that every care would be exercised to avoid injury to Chinese citizens. As stated, the German Legation has not yet transmitted to the Foreign Office a formal reply to the Chinese note.

Immediately after the announcement of the position taken by China, the Japanese, who had up to that point discouraged Chinese intervention, suddenly changed; they veered around so completely that the officious Japanese press, following the lead of the Foreign Office, stated that China had not gone far enough. Thenceforward, increasingly strong pressure has been exerted by the Japanese Foreign Office upon the Chinese Government, through the Chinese Minister at Tokyo, with a view to inducing China to associate herself with the Allies.

Among high Chinese officials, the alternative of joining the Allies is at present considered as the course which will probably have to be taken. The Vice President, whose connection with the Shanghai opium purchase has injured his standing, appears to see in a war policy an opportunity of rehabilitating himself. General Tuan Chi-jui and a number of the older officials are working with General Feng Kuo-chang, as they see a good chance of getting the upper hand over Parliament and the President. Those leaders who are specially under the influence of Japan are naturally in favor of the suggested policy. There is considerable danger that the movement, if carried through, would be entirely reactionary in character, as far as Chinese political institutions and practices are concerned. It is of course not known what arrangements have been concluded between General Feng and General Tuan, both of whom are rivals for the presidency. But it is suspected that should no arrangement concerning the succession to the presidency prove possible, all these forces may unite in an attempt to restore the Manchu Dynasty and perpetuate the rule of the more reactionary elements.

If it had been possible for me to give any assurance of an active interest on the part of the American Government in having China continue to follow a concordant policy with the United States in this matter, it would have been possible very decidedly to influence the currents of opinion among the high Chinese officials. Under the circumstances I had to confine myself to advising caution in taking any further steps and to pointing out that China was entitled to receive assurances as to essential points protective of her vital rights before committing herself to any joint action.

In confidential conversation I asked the British Chargé d'Affaires what effective assurances they could offer China were she to cooperate with the Allies. He stated that he hoped that China could be safeguarded. I am now informed that, in behalf of the Allies, the French Minister called at the Foreign Office and expressed the readiness of the Allies to give assurances with respect to financial matters, such as the postponement of the instalments of the Boxer indemnity and the upward revision of the Chinese customs tariff. The Chinese themselves are more deeply concerned over the matter of the exercise of their sovereign rights in connection with army control. Should the Allies be able spontaneously to give joint assurances to the effect that in the matter of military collaboration the Chinese Government will be allowed to take its own action with only such assistance as it may itself invite, I believe that the Chinese Government would be very likely to associate itself with the Allies.

There are herewith enclosed a copy of a despatch (No. 1174) of the 12th ultimo from the Consulate General at Shanghai, transmitting certain newspaper reports concerning the subject matter of this despatch, as well as clippings from the Peking Gazette of February 28 and March 1, on the same subject.¹

in the south, due to popular misunderstanding, to continuing German influence, and to sporadic radical opposition against the Government. The desire to be associated with the American policy, however, remains strongest and China undoubtedly could be brought into the war were it urged.

The Japanese endeavoring to bring China into the war through assuring Premier that financial and other advantages would be obtained through them from the Allies. The latter benefits were, however, not forthcoming as apparently the European Allies were not desirous to enlist China under such auspices. Both the British Chargé d'Affaires and other prominent Allies have repeatedly assured me of their desire that China should stay closely by the side of the United States in this matter. Since America declared war Japanese insistence has almost disappeared. The Premier is embarrassed because the promised assurances were not received upon which he based the general tenor of his policy. The pro-Japanese party including the monarchists are discouraged by these events and the revolution in Russia. The Japanese themselves are nonplussed.

While I have abstained from advising the Chinese to enter the war there are many reasons which would render such action desirable. Aside from the beneficent influence on Chinese internal development of such alliance with the Allied powers, a declaration of war would eliminate all chances of China being used by our enemies and after some preparation would afford a source of real assistance in the conduct of the war. No one is in a position now to interfere with the entry of China. Should Russia be materially weakened the situation would not remain so favorable. Should China enter the war at this time, acting independently in conjunction with the United States and the Allies, the situation in the Far East could be prevented from assuming a character of menace to the United States as it otherwise might.

Another alternative would be the issuance of a declaration to the effect that the Chinese Government, in further association with the policy of the United States and in a spirit of friendship for the Allies, would hold herself prepared to take such military measures against Germany as the action of that power against China should require.

China, either as an ally or associate, would naturally hope to be treated by the United States as are our other Allies with respect to assistance in supporting financial credit for bringing about necessary preparation. Such financial assistance would fundamentally solve the question of Chinese independence and the right of Chinese democracy and republican institutions to develop freely. I beg to request your views or instructions on this matter in consideration of the direct bearing of American action regarding Europe upon the present and future security of ["open door"?] and American rights in China.

[Extract]

No. 1412

PEKING, March 9, 1917.

[Received April 16.]

SIR: In continuation of my No. 1407 of March 1 last,² and with reference to your telegraphic instructions of March 2, 5 p. m.,³ I have the honor further to report on the Chinese protest against the German policy of submarine warfare.

The Chinese Government has been subjected to persistent pressure on the part of Japan, exercised personally by Viscount Motono on the Chinese Minister at Tokyo, with a view to inducing China to follow the lead of Japan in joining the Entente Allies.

This pressure was accompanied with expressions of resentment because in the previous instance the Chinese Government had not consulted with Japan. Joint action with Japan was made attractive by the offer of financial assistance on easy terms.

On Saturday, March 3, the Cabinet, after long continued daily deliberation, decided that it was necessary to break off diplomatic relations with Germany. It was also agreed upon that this decision should be communicated to the Japanese Government by telegraph, together with the further statement that the Chinese Government was willing to consider entering the war upon receiving specific assurances upon the matter of the postponement of the Boxer indemnity payments, the increase of the customs tariffs, and the revision of the protocol of 1901.

On March 4 a meeting of the Cabinet took place in the palace of the President, at which the latter expressed dissent from the policy of informing the Japanese Government of the steps to be taken before the policy had been passed on by Parliament. The Premier insisted that the sending of the telegram to the Chinese Minister at Tokyo was a purely administrative matter which was within the proper functions of the Cabinet. As the President did not agree, the Premier stated that under the circumstances it would be impossible for him to continue at the head of the Government. He ordered a special train and proceeded directly to the railway station. Before he could leave, the Vice President went to the station and attempted to persuade the Premier not to leave, but the latter persisted.

Such was the situation which I had to meet in endeavoring to carry out the instructions contained in your telegram of March 2.¹ As Dr. Wu Ting-fang, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, was still incapacitated through his illness, I communicated with the Minister of Finance, in order to get a clearer view of the situation than could be gathered from the confused reports current at the time. Dr. Ch'en stated that it had not been the intention of the Cabinet to commit itself to any joint action or consultation with Japan, to the exclusion of other powers. He admitted, however, that it had seemed necessary to do something to give the Japanese Government "face," because of the resentment felt by the Japanese, their insistent pressure, and the consequences which were feared should they be antagonized. He stated that the Cabinet had been discouraged by failure to receive from me any clear indication as to the policy of the American Government; and he proceeded to say that the confidence of the Chinese in Americans had been most seriously shaken by the manner in which the American International Corporation had betrayed the interests of China to Japan in the Shantung canal matter.² Those skeptical of American courage and backbone were many, on account of this regrettable move, he said, and they argued that as America was so weak as to run to Japan with matters entrusted specifically to Americans, it might after all be better for the Chinese to deal directly with Japan. Dr. Ch'en stated that this was by no means his opinion or that of the majority of the leaders, but that it was difficult to meet unfavorable statements, such as above outlined.

From other sources I learned that those men who are committed to the support of Japanese policy in China had been very active during the preceding weeks, as indeed I had many opportunities for observing before the decision of the Cabinet was taken. . . .

To resume the recital of the events of the last few days: On March 5 I had a full discussion of the political situation with the President, in which he explained his position as based upon the belief that notice of an impending breach of diplomatic relations with Germany should not be given to any power before Parliament had acted. I acquainted His Excellency with the purport of your instructions of the 2d instant,¹ and he stated that he was fully agreed as to the wisdom of carefully considering every step and of not, in taking any one step, unnecessarily committing the Government to further action. On the same day I also informed Dr. Wu, who was able to receive me, of the views of the Department as contained in the above instructions.

On March 6 the Vice President proceeded to Tientsin, in order to induce the Premier to return to his post. The Vice President succeeded in his errand, and General Tuan returned to Peking the same night. I made an engagement to see him, and on the evening of March 7 had a long and serious conversation with him. The Premier stated to me that because of the failure of the German Government to give any assurances in the matter of submarine warfare, and of the fact that in the sinking of the Athos several hundred Chinese laborers had lost their lives, it had appeared necessary to the Cabinet to decide upon an early severance of diplomatic relations. I expressed to the Premier the opinion that if the decision as stated by him was considered necessary, it would appear to be a safe course of action for the Chinese Government, in taking the step decided upon, to keep itself entirely free as to any further measures to be taken and also that it would not in the course of the negotiations entangle itself with any particular power. I stated my opinion to the effect that for the time being China could not reasonably be urged to go beyond the decision as indicated. This action would constitute the strongest possible condemnation of the German policy of submarine warfare; it left the Chinese Government free in the future to take such further action as conditions might require. Thus, for instance, privileges still enjoyed by German residents in China could be withdrawn by way of reprisal should German action become particularly injurious to China. The Chinese Government could also show its friendly attitude for the belligerent Allies in facilitating the export of laborers and needed merchandise; and it would hold in reserve a declaration of war, to be used only when such a course of action would appear to be absolutely demanded by new facts, and would be made safe by proper assurances. The Premier expressed complete agreement with these views; he stated that he hoped to keep the hands of the Government free. He intimated, however, that the strongest kind of pressure was being exerted by Japan to force China into the Alliance. Throughout this conversation, in which I communicated to General Tuan the tenor of your instructions of March 2, I took care to give my remarks the character of information as to the attitude of the American Government and of a forecast of the probable results of any action taken by the Chinese Government without seeming to press upon the latter any particular course of action.

I am now informed that the wording of the telegram to be despatched to the Chinese Minister in Tokyo, for the information of the Japanese Government, has been modified so as to make it purely a matter of information and to eliminate any expressions which might be interpreted as an admission of the Japanese claim that the Chinese Government should consult particularly with Japan in this matter. The proposed action is to be reported to Parliament to-morrow. My information is that the members of Parliament are overwhelmingly in favor of breaking off relations with Germany. . . .

Your cipher telegram of April 23, noon. The Chinese Minister has repeatedly conferred with the Department during two or three weeks past and in answer to his inquiry as to assistance under provisions of the pending bill he was referred to the language of the bill which provides that—

For the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security and defense and prosecuting the war by establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to purchase, at par, from such foreign governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, their obligations hereafter issued, bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this Act.

He was told that if China should be among those then engaged in war with our enemies she might have some reason to expect such financial assistance.

The military governors, now here in conference, are in favor of declaring war, and the President and Parliament will most likely be asked to make a decision next week. Premier stated to me that if China entered the war the Chinese Government would be ready if need be to furnish as many men as could be armed and equipped.

I beg to be informed whether under the law just passed it would be possible to extend financial assistance to China in order to enable the Chinese Government to prepare reserve forces for the war and cooperate in other ways, particularly in the matter of food supply.

The Chargé in Siam (Arnold) to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

BANGKOK, April 28, 1917, noon.

[Received April 29, 4.50 a. m.]

The Russian Minister handed to me last night an aide-mémoire, which he also presented to the Minister for Foreign Affairs and representatives of the Allies, and requested that I transmit it to my Government. Summary of aide-mémoire follows:

If any uncertainty existed as to the advisability for Siam's participation in the great Alliance we must admit that the situation has radically changed since the advent of the United States gave the final stamp and seal [to?] the character of the conflict. The war has ceased to be of one coalition against another, but has become a world struggle for the rights of humanity and the liberty of the nations of the earth. We must consider ourselves not only as representatives of our respective governments, but the representatives of the new community of nations and it is our sacred duty to make it triumph wherever we can, and it is not indifferent that a country like Siam should or should not join the Allies. We think that these ideas are beginning to penetrate the Royal Government, which begins to see clearly the trend of events. We must show them that having taken part in two Hague conferences it is not only the right of Siam but its duty to participate in the world struggle for the respect of these standards. If they are not willing to bear their share in the efforts for these rights of mankind they can not expect to reap the benefits as they who fought for them. We have, therefore, no time to lose in persuading the Siamese Government that action be taken at once so as to prevent any counter action of the enemy, particularly that they may not have time to damage their vessels interned in Bangkok.

The French, Russian, and Italian Ministers have received instructions from their Governments to induce Siam to break off the relations with Germany. The British Minister is opposed to it.

PEKING, March 28, 1917.

[Received May 1.]

SIR: I have the honor to report further concerning the severance of diplomatic relations between China and Germany, and to enclose herewith certain articles,¹ dealing with this matter, published in the Peking Gazette of March 23, 24 and 26, and the Peking Daily News of to-day's date; as well as an extra copy of a despatch (No. 10), dated the 16th instant, from the Consulate General at Canton, of which a copy has already been forwarded to the Department, and which is of special value as indicating the attitude of the southern part of China.

The severance of diplomatic relations brought with it a number of difficult technical questions, due to the régime of extraterritoriality and the existence of German municipal concessions. The Chinese did not always clearly distinguish between the effects of a breach of diplomatic relations and the results which would follow a declaration of war. As under existing conditions, China could give little military support to the Allied cause, one or two of the Allied Ministers urged strongly upon the Chinese Government that the chief manner of showing its benevolent neutrality, or eventually their good will as Allies, was by taking severe means against the Germans residing in China. The Chinese themselves being not unfriendly to the Germans and predisposed to deal gently with them, were nevertheless inclined to take advantage of the opportunity for recovering authority in the German concessions and making a breach in the system of extraterritoriality by giving wide scope to the breaking off of diplomatic relations.

It might have been argued that the only effect of the interruption of diplomatic relations was the departure of the German Minister and consuls, whose places were to be taken by Dutch officials, with all other relationships left unchanged. The Chinese decided to go beyond this minimum, giving as their reason for such action the principle of national protection and self-preservation. The policing of the German concessions was immediately taken over by the Chinese. The question of the actual relationship of the police to the German municipal authorities and the Dutch consular representatives has not yet been fully determined. It has been suggested that the Chinese authorities should inform the Dutch representative that the police were placed at his disposal for maintaining order in the concessions, but that the Chinese authorities reserve the right to issue orders to the police directly should conditions require.

I have been informed that after the Chinese police had entered the concession at Tientsin, the French and Japanese Ministers tried to prevail upon the British Chargé d'Affaires to join them in a protest with a view to having the policing turned over to one of the Entente powers, in this case Japan; and that the British Chargé d'Affaires stated that he considered the policing of the German concession by the Chinese as a simple and natural solution. The action of the Chinese was taken immediately after the breach of relations.

An even more difficult question has arisen in connection with extraterritoriality. The Chinese argue that the right of consular jurisdiction is one which can not be transferred from the officials of one country to those of another without the consent of the Chinese Government. They have been urged to assume jurisdiction over the Germans and to create a mixed tribunal, composed of Chinese and foreign judges, to adjudicate any actions brought against Germans. They have so far not decided to do this, although they see in it a possible method of establishing a precedent for such courts through which the system of extraterritoriality might be modified in favor of national sovereignty. The Dutch Minister, who discussed the matter with me and whose views appear to me as well founded, insists that the treaties with Germany are in no way affected through the absence of German diplomatic and consular officials, and that the officials representing German interests have a right to exercise consular jurisdiction at least as long as a state of war does not exist. I believe that the Chinese are inclined to accept this view, but that they will insist, in cases where political crimes are charged—such as espionage, plotting to destroy public property, etc.—that the Chinese Government will have to be represented by a magistrate in the judicial trial. Chinese officials have informed me that at all events they shall have to reserve this right: they base their position on the action taken by the American Government in the case of two Japanese spies in 1894. (United States Foreign Relations, 1894; pages 95 and following.)

The French Minister has been urging the Chinese to go to the extreme length in this matter. In conversation with me he stated that the absence of the German Minister and consuls ipso facto suspended the treaty granting extraterritorial rights. He stated that it was desirable to inflict the greatest possible damage on Germans and that the Chinese could see [?] their account in this policy through recovering national jurisdiction. M. Conty considered it natural that the Chinese should thus recover their sovereign rights, a view which differs materially from his former attitude on such matters. When I asked him whether the exercise of authority by the Chinese over Germans and eventual harsh measures against them might possibly react unfavorably against all western nations, due to the fact that the Chinese masses do not distinguish clearly between the different countries (as indicated in my despatch No. 1418 of March 20 last¹), he stated that we must take care of such dangers as best we could. His attitude gave to everyone here the impression that his sole purpose is to inflict injuries on the enemies of his country, and that should trouble arise he would be ready to commit his interests to the protection of Japan. As far as I can gather, this particular attitude is not shared by the British and Russian representatives, who have however necessarily abstained from any definite advice or action.

On March 14 when the breach of diplomatic relations was announced by the Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Ministers of the Entente powers, they presented to him a questionnaire as to the effect which the Chinese Government was ready to give the action taken, with respect to the treatment of German residents, disposal of German vessels, the rights of the German bank, and the treatment of German employees in the Chinese public service. On March 23 the Chinese Government answered to the effect that it had placed police control over the German merchant vessels in Chinese ports, and that it had dismissed employees in the operating department of railways, but that in other respects it had made no changes. I am informed that the Allied ministers then expressed the opinion that all German employees should be immediately dismissed; that the German bank, being partially a Government institution, should be prevented from doing further business, and that the German ships should be sequestered by the Chinese Government. No action has thus far been taken by the Chinese Government in response to these suggestions. German residents in China have, however, been ordered to register with the Chinese authorities for purposes of police protection.

I have the honor to enclose a paraphrase of a telegram, dated March 25, 5 p. m., from the Consul General at Shanghai, expressing the apprehensions of the American community in connection with the eventual assumption of jurisdiction over Germans by the Chinese Government; as well as a paraphrase of the telegram sent in reply.¹

It is my personal belief that the Chinese will proceed with circumspection in this matter, and should they upon the eventual outbreak of war assume jurisdiction over Germans, a form of mixed tribunal will be created which will give assurance of a just determination of actions. Notwithstanding the above, many difficult questions will undoubtedly continue to arise due to the exceptional international arrangements in China.

The political question as to the further action to be taken by China is a subject of intense discussion among all parties and classes. There is no question but that the prevailing opinion is strongly in favor of assimilating the Chinese course of action to that of the United States. This is apparent from newspaper discussions and from personal expressions coming from all parts of China. The Parliament itself is strongly in favor of this policy.

Among the high officials themselves, the prevailing desire is undoubtedly also for such a policy. They have, however, been induced to assume an attitude which appears to be more in accord with a policy ultimately to associate themselves with the Allies, though they strongly deny having committed themselves to such a course. I have already reported upon the motives which have induced them to take a somewhat equivocal position. The action of the American International Corporation in making, behind the back of the Chinese Government, an arrangement which is considered universally by the Chinese as a betrayal of their rights, has deeply shaken the confidence of the officials, who know about this matter, in American integrity. The financial needs of the Government, coupled with the political ambitions of certain leaders, have induced them to accept proffered financial assistance from Japan. A strong pro-Japanese clique, comprising Liang Ch'i-ch'ao, Tang Hua-lung, Ts'ao Ju-lin, Lu Tsung-yü, and others, is at work with the Premier. As the solution of all the difficult questions concerning the concessions and extraterritoriality is also represented to be easier should war be declared, all factors cooperate to create in the official mind a predisposition to give favorable consideration to the suggestion of the Allies. Substantial benefits are hoped for as a result of such association in lightening the financial burden of China and making possible an increase of customs revenues.

Notwithstanding all these factors, I believe that even the majority of the officials, situated as described above, would prefer to continue in close association with the United States.

[Enclosure]

The Consul General at Canton (Heintzleman) to the Minister in China (Reinsch)

CANTON, March 16, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Legation that I was advised by the Civil Governor and the Admiral in charge of the Naval College and docks at Whampoa, on the evening of the 14th instant, that a telegram had been received from Peking in the afternoon of that day announcing the severance of diplomatic relations between China and Germany. Admiral Teng stated that he had been directed by the Naval Board to maintain most careful watch over the German gunboat Tsingtau, which has been interned at Whampoa since the beginning of the war, so that no harm could be done the vessel. He added that the Tsingtau would be placed, as a precautionary measure, in the Whampoa dock and that the crew of four, who had been retained on board as caretakers, would be removed from the vessel and brought to Canton to be interned. The same treatment was to be accorded the two or three German merchantmen and their crews at Swatow.

The Vice Consul for the Netherlands advised me yesterday that he had received a telegram from his Minister at Peking that the Dutch Government was entrusted with the protection of German interests in China. This morning I was informed by the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and also by a representative of the Civil Governor that the Department of the Interior had reported the rupture of friendly relations with Germany and had instructed the local authorities to protect German subjects. Dr. Lin, of the Civil Governor's Secretariat, stated that no word had yet been received from the Foreign Office. He also told me that he had just called on the British Consul General, informing him of the instructions received from Peking and accordingly extending an offer of the local authorities to place Chinese police on Shameen to assist in preventing any disturbance or destruction of property by the Germans. Mr. Jamieson replied that Chinese police assistance was not desired and that he would assume full responsibility for the safety and proper conduct of the German residents on the British Concession. Mr. Jamieson suggested that the Chinese ask the German Consulate and business houses on Shameen not to fly the German flag; also that the Germans be forbidden to use so generally their motor boats which were moored off Shameen. The Chinese are prepared to comply with Mr. Jamieson's wishes in both matters. Dr. Lin told me that the German in charge of the smokeless powder factory here would be relieved of his duties at once; and he thought the question of the Germans in the customs and postal services would be disposed of at Peking. Dr. Lin added that the secretary in the German Consulate would be permitted to remain as custodian of the consular archives and property.

The news of the action of the Central Government in breaking off relations with Germany is not being received with enthusiasm by the natives of the southern provinces. The Cantonese have been rather inclined toward Germany in their sympathies since the outbreak of the war, but this was chiefly due, not to any positive friendliness toward Germany, but rather to Chinese suspicion and fear of Japan and, likewise, to their experience of British and French encroachments on Chinese territory in the past. Moreover, Chinese military circles here, as elsewhere in China, have been impressed by the fighting power of Germany, though they profess an aversion to the essentially military fabric of that country. These facts serve to explain, in part at least, the attitude of South China on this question.

Many influential southern men and institutions have expressed themselves strongly and fearlessly against any rupture of relations with Germany. On the other hand, I have been unable to find a single official, public institution, or newspaper advocating such a course. Four members of the Kwangtung Provincial Assembly had jointly despatched a telegram to the Central Government urging that China should continue to maintain strict neutrality in the war and that she should not sever existing relations with Germany. The Seventy-two Commercial Guilds and the Nine Charitable Institutions had also telegraphed the Central Government petitioning it to remain neutral during the present crisis over the German submarine policy. The Provincial Assembly was expected to take similar action. The local chamber of commerce had telegraphed to the President, the Cabinet, the Parliament, and the United Chamber of Commerce protesting against the entry of China into the war, stating that by doing so trade would be adversely affected and the nation not benefited. They declared that the Government should preserve strict neutrality. The Acting German Consul here recently called on the Military Governor of this province, who had at the time as a guest the Military Governor of Kwangsi, Chen Ping-kun. Both Governors assured Mr. Tigges that the present crisis would not change their friendly attitude toward the Germans in the Two Kwangs. A senator from Kwangsi, educated in Germany, had addressed a memorandum to the Premier setting forth the reasons why China should not break off diplomatic relations with Germany and pointing out the dangers and disadvantages China would encounter in consequence of a diplomatic rupture.

An important factor determining the attitude of the Cantonese on this question was the historical opposition between North and South and a desire to embarrass the Central Government in any measure which the latter was believed to view with favor. The Kuomintang, whose southern members include leaders of such wide influence here as Ts'en Ch'un-hsuan, Tang Shao-yi, and Sun Yat-sen, is clearly identified with the protests sent to the Government against any extreme measures toward Germany, and Sun Yat-sen's recent telegram to the British Premier was given wide publicity here and sympathetically commented upon by the officials and press. There can be no doubt that this recent action of the Central Government adds another disquieting factor to the local situation in that it affords an opportunity for Canton to oppose Peking. One local newspaper in a leading article made the following statement, which, however, should be taken as indicating the attitude of the extreme radicals, of whom, however, there are many, in the matter:

While China should stand with America in the attempt by peaceful measures to check ruthless submarine warfare and protect the interests of neutrals, yet if China really wishes to go to war, let the fourth revolution, which is expected, come immediately in order that the old corrupt officialdom may be eliminated once for all. Let the young republicans arise against internal foes to help China become a nation really independent!

In explanation of the reference to the disquieting political conditions here, I should report the constantly recurring rumor as to impending trouble in Yunnan. I am privately informed that the French diplomatic agent at Yunnan had told the agent of the Standard Oil Company there that he really believed that Yunnan would take the lead in another revolution of secession on the part of the southern provinces against the Central Government about April 1. Mr. Wilden, who has since been promoted as Acting Consul General for France at Shanghai, stated that he was not sure as to the date, but that he had many reasons to believe that the trouble would begin about April 1. My British colleague here tells me that he has information to the effect that the trouble brewing in Yunnan will commence about June 1. While these are merely rumors, in which too much reliance can not be placed, yet it is certain that the government of Yunnan is now receiving large amounts of guns and ammunition and that the general dissatisfaction throughout the southern provinces with the Central Government, as it is constituted at present, is growing. The chief menace in the situation lies in the provincial armies and the need of funds to pay the wages of the soldiers in arrears; and there is a real and justified fear that the problem of raising money will supply the seed of another revolution, since fresh taxation to maintain the military establishment or to meet interest charges on loans for that purpose will surely increase the prevailing discontent. There can be little doubt that the Kuomintang is working for the separation of the South from the North, and it is quite natural that this idea is receiving a stimulant through the failure of the authorities to solve the financial and other problems confronting them. There is also to be considered the strong provincial feeling and the desire for local autonomy which incline towards a system of government less autocratic than that regarded as superimposed from Peking. This intense sectionalism, which has doubtless given rise to the traditional opposition between North and South, continues to foster this spirit of hostility. The most hopeful element in the situation is the general belief that China's attitude in the submarine controversy with Germany was taken in response to a request of America, in whose sincere friendship the people have every confidence and whose sympathy and helpfulness is acknowledged to be of vital importance to them; and the ground for hope lies in the likelihood that the southern Chinese will be loath to have this action, which grew out of the close relationship with America, appear to be the cause of a popular uprising or the beginning of another era of unrest in South China.

I shall keep the Legation fully and promptly informed of further developments in the situation.

File No. 763.72/4612

The Minister in China (Reinsch) to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

No. 1449

PEKING, April 13, 1917.

[Received May 12.]

SIR: In connection with my Nos. 1429 of March 28¹ and 1448 of April 13,² I have the honor to submit a brief résumé summarizing the essential features in the development of the diplomatic situation after February 8, the date of the Chinese protest against the German submarine warfare issued in response to the American invitation. On February 13 his excellency Lu Cheng-hsiang called on me and stated that the Chinese Government was being strongly urged by Japan to commit itself to a war policy; that there was considerable opposition to such a policy in the interior of China; that particularly among the Mohammedans of western China the danger of an uprising appeared imminent. He asked me what financial assistance China could expect from the United States in order to enable her to face this danger. I stated to him that the matter had already been submitted to the American Government for its decision. Mr. Lu then informed me that he considered China, before committing herself to the war, should endeavor to obtain such assurances from the Allies as would guarantee her financial independence.

On the same day Mr. Lu had interviews with the British, French, and Russian Ministers; in these he stated that the Chinese Government could not undertake the responsibility of taking any further steps in the direction of war without having the assurances of the powers that they would allow China certain financial benefits, particularly the postponement of the Boxer indemnity installments during the remainder of the war, and an increase of the customs duties to which China is entitled by treaty. He added that it would also be necessary to cancel the agreement for the exclusion of Chinese troops from Tientsin. Mr. Lu acted as the unofficial representative of the Premier. The fact that the suggestions were first taken up with the European Allies indicates the desire to avoid committing the conduct of Chinese foreign affairs to the hands of the Japanese. If, however, hopes had been entertained that assurances would be immediately obtained from the European Allies, such expectation had to be given up as they could not act without more general consultation. On the next day, therefore, Mr. Lu submitted the same suggestion to the Japanese Minister as well as to the Belgian and Italian representatives.

On March 2 Mr. Liang Ch'i-ch'ao came to see me and asked me many leading questions, all of which gave me to understand that he was determined to push the Premier into a war policy and that he was confident of his success in this effort. Thus he asked me whether I did not believe that it would be wise and safe for China to enter the war if she should receive adequate assurances on the matter of financial support and the independence of her military establishment. Thereupon he stated that China had such assurances, including specifically oral assurances on the part of Japan that no control would be asked over the Chinese military system. He asked me whether such oral assurances were sufficient, to which I replied that the recipient of such assurances must form his own opinion as to their sufficiency.

On March 3 the Cabinet decided to break off diplomatic relations and practically to endorse a policy looking to entry into the war.

On March 4 the President objected to such action being taken without reference to Parliament. This opposition led to Tuan's flight to Tientsin, already reported on. Upon his return from Tientsin on March 7 I had an interview with the Premier in which he stated that China would not commit herself at the present time to a policy of declaring war.

On March 10 Parliament approved of the breach of diplomatic relations, which was notified to the representatives of the powers on March 14 as reported in my No. 1448 of to-day's date, and in No. 1429 of March 28.

In the unofficial and official explanations of his policy, made to members of Parliament and to the Parliament in session, the Premier gave to understand that he was in possession of assurances from the powers which made it safe for China to take the step of breaking off diplomatic relations and to look forward towards taking further appropriate action.

After March 14 there seemed to take place a gradual cooling off in the war policy. It is apparent that this was due to the realization that binding assurances were as distant as ever. The loan of 20,000,000 yen seemed less attractive, when, instead of being made purely against treasury notes as was first intimated, it was found by the Japanese representative that after all it would be to the best interest of all if some security, namely the land tax, were insisted upon. Efforts, however, to induce China to take a further step continued, . . .

Towards the end of last week the representatives of the Entente powers agreed to suggest to their governments an answer to the Chinese proposals of March 14,¹ which can not but be extremely disappointing and irritating to the Chinese and which will further accentuate the disappearance of the hopes aroused earlier by the Japanese representative. I am informed that these proposals include the deferment of the Boxer indemnity installments until the end of the war and the immediate increase of the customs duties by 30 per cent, as well as the withdrawal of the prohibition against stationing Chinese troops in Tientsin; but these concessions are coupled with the provision that all outstanding diplomatic claims of the representative nations against China shall be immediately settled. . . .

Under the circumstances, as set forth, it is apparent that the strongest motive which would now induce the Chinese Government and people to arraign themselves on the side of war against Germany will be found in the action of the United States, and the most natural policy for China would be to associate herself still more completely with American action. There are certain factors opposed to the war. My information leads me to believe that throughout the center and south of China the commercial classes are not favorable to taking any further step. This is due partly to the fear of the uncertainties inherent in war, and partly to propaganda on the part of the German merchants who still remain in China. I believe, however, that should war be declared, especially in association with American action, no serious opposition would subsequently be incurred from the above sources.

Another element is constituted by the southern revolutionists in Tang Shao-yi and Sun Yat-sen. These men seem to be determined to cause difficulties to the Government at any cost. They have declared themselves as opposed to war and state that they fear unrest and other bad consequences. It is possible that they might help to realize their apprehensions.

A conference of the representatives of the military governors has been called to meet in Peking on April 21. The main subject of discussion for this conference will be the policy with regard to Germany. Should the military leaders be willing to hold themselves responsible for the consequences in the provinces, it now seems likely that the Cabinet would then propose to Parliament a declaration of war against Germany. The Premier and the majority of the Cabinet are in favor of such a step.

There are herewith enclosed for your information certain articles from the Peking Gazette and the Peking Daily News, relating to the subject of this despatch, including an editorial dealing with the American declaration of war.¹

The French Ambassador (Jusserand) to the Secretary of State

[Translation]

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1917.

[Received May 17.]

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I took care to report to my Government the conversation I had on the 5th instant with the Counselor of the Department of State regarding the contingency of instructing the representative of the United States at Bangkok to urge, in conjunction with the Allied agents, the Siamese Government to break its diplomatic relations with Germany.

In his reply to my communication, the President of the Council, Minister of Foreign Affairs, while admitting, as had been remarked by Mr. Polk, that the material interests of the United States in Siam are comparatively unimportant, feels that the Government of the United States will surely realize the great interest involved in overlooking no opportunity to weaken our enemies, and the advantages that all the Allies would derive from a further diminution of the foothold of the Germans in the Far East.

These advantages would be of various kinds. To begin with, a breach between Siam and Germany would enable the first-named country to make a final end of the intrigues which the Germans from French and English possessions in Asia, who took refuge in Siam, have not ceased to foment, in concert with the German residents of the country, among the Hindoo and Annamite elements, in spite of the satisfactory measures taken by the Siamese Government.

Furthermore, as your excellency is aware, German commercial houses are powerful in Siam and companies of that nationality control three-fourths of the sea trade of Bangkok. Finally, a number of German cargo boats are tied up in that port and a rupture might enable the Allies to make direct or indirect use of them.

In requesting me to impress your excellency with these various arguments, the Government of the Republic wishes me to urge upon you the advisability of having the Federal Government which, on account of the presence of an American advisor at Bangkok, enjoys great influence in Siam, join in the efforts of the Allies to endeavor to deal the economic position of Germany in the Far East another blow that can not but be deeply felt by her.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 12th instant in which you communicate to me the views of the President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the French Republic, regarding the importance to the interests of the nations in arms against Germany of a rupture of the diplomatic relations between Siam and Germany.

The American Government having in February last suggested to the Government of Siam that it would make for the peace of the world if the neutral powers could find it possible to take action similar to that of the United States by breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany, and having been told in reply that while the Siamese Government sympathized with the motives of the United States they preferred to maintain neutrality, the present moment does not appear to me to be opportune for a renewal of the suggestion.

SIR: In continuation of my despatch No. 1449 of April 13, 1917,¹ I have the honor to report on the further development of the diplomatic situation in connection with the question as to whether China is to declare war against Germany. I am also enclosing newspaper articles containing reports and discussions in connection with this matter.²

On April 18, when I was calling upon him, Doctor Wu broached the question of financial assistance to China by the United States in the event of China declaring war upon Germany. Doctor Wu made some inquiries in connection with the bill for financial assistance to the Allies, and asked me whether China would be included in this assistance. I stated that I had no instructions but that I could say, as a matter of personal opinion, that if China were to cooperate with the United States she would be given as favorable treatment as other associated powers. Doctor Wu then asked me as to what amount of assistance China might expect and mentioned the figure of $100,000,000. I stated that I could offer no estimate as to the probable amount of such assistance, that, however, plainly, the European belligerents who had made enormous sacrifices and who were in the thick of the battle would require particular attention. Doctor Wu then asked me whether I would wire to my Government for information. I stated that I could do this but that it was not likely that the matter of assistance to China could be formally considered until China had actually entered the war.

On the same day I had a long conversation with the Premier. The Premier proceeded on the assumption that the United States had joined the Entente; he said he had been so informed by the Japanese and French Ministers; he also stated that he had no apprehensions of any danger with respect to the attempted control of the Chinese military establishment by Japan because he had received assurances on that point from the Japanese. He gave the impression of continuing in his purpose to enter the war. He also gave the impression, at the time, of relying a good deal on Japanese assurances. In this and subsequent conversations, I tried to make the Premier understand that the United States is not interested in the special European war aims of the Allies, but cooperated with them independently for the purpose of strengthening international law and the security of the community of nations; also that with respect to the war the position of China was very similar to that of the United States.

After the conversation I intimated to Mr. C. C. Wu, who had been interpreting for the Premier, that the latter gave the impression of having rather completely committed himself to Japanese guidance.

On April 21, when I saw the Premier again, he gave me a different impression. He informed me at this time that the Japanese Minister had made inquiries as to whether a contract had been concluded in connection with the Shanghai arsenal. The Premier, as is his usual attitude, seemed again to be most desirous of keeping closely associated with the United States. In talking with him at this time, and with the President on the same day a little later, concerning possible financial assistance from the United States, I stated, having in mind the information meanwhile received from you on this matter, that the language of the bill providing for financial assistance would include China were China a belligerent at the time the bill should become a law, and that China could, therefore, look forward to a favorable consideration of her needs in the event of participating in the war. I made this as a statement of fact and made it plain that the United States was not bidding or holding out an inducement for China's entry into the war, but would act in accordance with the requirements of the case and the traditional American friendship with China.

On April 23 I had a long conversation with the Premier. He stated that China was ready to do her part in the war, that she could furnish a force of 100,000 or 200,000 men, or a million or even more, if only the armament could be provided. He implied that the efficiency of her action would depend to a large extent upon the financial assistance she could receive for making the necessary preparations. The Premier was at this time much concerned about reports from Russia, particularly regarding the danger of a separate peace; I stated that a strong movement for a separate peace would not be likely in Russia unless after a radical change in the German form of government.

During all this and the subsequent time discussions were going on between the Chinese Government and the different ministers. The Entente powers could not reach a common basis of action, particularly on account of the opposition of the Japanese to an increase of the Chinese tariff to an effective 5 per cent. In conversation with me the Russian Minister also stated that it would seem unjust to ask Russia to postpone all her Boxer indemnity because, in this way, Russia would be giving up much more than the other powers. I did not ask him an obvious question at this point.

The Premier, in order to strengthen himself in his war decision, had called a conference of all the military governors. Nine governors general came to Peking for this conference, including the Governors of Chihli, Hunan, Hupeh, Shantung, Kiangsi, and Fukiens; all the other provinces were represented by delegates. The conference has held a number of meetings and by April 28 had come to the decision to support the war policy.

On April 29 I entertained the members of the conference at my house. In conversation with the governors general the war situation was discussed. It was interesting to see how these men, who had formerly been so pro-German, now viewed the probabilities of war.

On May 2 the representatives of the Allied powers again made an inquiry as to whether China would not now decide to enter the war. The position they had now for some time taken was that China should not attempt to get definite assurances but should take action friendly to the powers who would then reciprocate in the same spirit. On the day subsequent, as I have been informed in strict confidence, the Japanese Minister called upon President Li and assured him that it was in the interest of China to enter the war, and that should any local disturbances happen in China in consequence of such a step the Japanese Government would immediately come to the assistance of China. The President did not consider this information very appropriate.

The decision of the Chinese Government to enter the war had now matured; backed by the united action of the military governors, the Cabinet (i. e., in this case the Premier) submitted to the President and to Parliament the decision to enter the war. The policy of the Premier is set forth in the article upon the Chinese foreign policy by Liang Ch'i-ch'ao, copy of which is herewith enclosed.¹

The decision of this momentous question is now before Parliament. The complicated character of the situation is indicated in the article on "The War and Political Parties" from the Peking Gazette of May 10 which is herewith enclosed.¹ The leaders of the different parties in Parliament have assured me that as to the policy of entering the war the majority in both Houses are favorably disposed. The opposition party, which has the majority in Parliament, is, however, not willing to authorize a declaration of war unless unmistakable assurances are given that the war power will not be used by the men who surround General Tuan, and who inspire his action, for the purpose of overriding Parliament. They fear that the extraordinary war powers and the extraordinary war funds will be used to the disadvantage of the majority party in Parliament and, possibly, for the purpose of suppressing Parliament entirely. They, therefore, insist that before a decision is taken the Cabinet should be reconstructed in such a manner as to give assurance that the entourage of General Tuan can not dominate the situation.

The entourage spoken of is composed of three elements: First, the military element which endeavors to control the entire military party in behalf of General Tuan; the chief representative of the Premier on the military side is General Hsu Shih-chang. Secondly, the leaders of the Chinputang party, particularly Liang Ch'i-ch'ao, Hsiung Hsi-ling, and Tang Hua-lung. As this party helped Yuan Shih-kai to overthrow Parliament in 1913, so the Kuomintang fear that they may again assist in the destruction of Parliament in order to increase their own power. Thirdly, the narrower pro-Japanese ring, headed by Ts'ao Ju-lin and Lu Tsung-yü.

The Kuomintang (party) fear that the combination of the Chinputang (party) with the military element would in the event of war be strong enough to oust their opponents from public life. The Premier has already hinted that if Parliament does not approve the war policy it will be dissolved. The President shares the apprehensions of the Parliamentarians and desires a reconstruction of the Cabinet.

The Cabinet itself is in a pitiful condition. The position of Doctor Ch'en Chin-tao has been filled through the appointment of Li Ching-hsi, the nephew of Li Hung-chang; but Li will not assume office until the present problems have been solved. It is possible that the President might wish to appoint him Premier of a reconstructed Cabinet, leaving General Tuan in the position of Minister of War. This would be acceptable to the Parliamentarians. They would be willing to forego having a Cabinet composed of their partisans as long as representative and reputable public men were selected. The Ministry of Communications has been vacated; the Minister of Education, also acting Minister of the Interior, is seriously ill; the Ministers of Justice and of Agriculture and Commerce have lost their influence with their party in Parliament—the Kuomintang.

On May 8 I had a conversation with President Li. He is favorable to a declaration of war provided it can be obtained without doing violence to Parliament. On May 9 I had a long conversation with the Premier in which he expressed himself on many important matters. A memorandum of this conversation is herewith enclosed.

[Enclosure]

Memorandum of the Minister in China (Reinsch) of a Conversation with the Premier (Tuan), May 9, 1917

The American Minister spoke to the Premier in connection with the proposed first bond issue on the railway undertaken by the Siems-Carey Company.¹ He pointed out that delay in this matter was dangerous because conditions in New York might change at any time so as to cause the revocation of the authority now in the hands of Mr. Carey to conclude the loan. The Premier agreed and promised to give instructions to the Acting Vice Minister of Communications to complete the transactions without delay.

The Premier then went on to discuss the existing political situation. He stated that Parliament was indeed opposed to a declaration of war, but that the policy would be carried through regardless of this opposition. He stated that if Parliament were obstinate it would be dissolved. The American Minister expressed surprise at this statement as well as his hope that the question might be settled without resorting to such methods, as it would make a very bad impression in the United States and other Western countries if Parliament were overridden in so important a matter, and that it would accordingly be difficult for the United States to be of assistance to China should such a situation come about.

The Premier stated that the opposition of Parliament was disregardful of national interests, and based merely upon a desire to secure partisan advantage; he stated that the national need for war action had been fully explained to Parliament and opposition could only have a selfish motive. The Minister stated that should rash action be taken against Parliament it would probably precipitate internal trouble and would bring on the danger of foreign intervention. The Premier replied that he was confident that any local opposition could be handled by the Government.

Going on to discuss the attitude of Japan, the Premier said that the Japanese Minister had assured him that if he should follow a strong policy he could count on Japanese support, that in fact Japan would support the party which showed itself the strongest; he said that circumstances forced the Chinese Government to take an attitude friendly to Japan, but that it was his policy not to give up any valuable rights, and also to strengthen China in every way so that resistance might be offered to any attempted injustice. He asked whether we could have confidence in the Southern leaders of the Kuomintang; he had proof that both Sun Yat-sen and Tsen Liang-kuang had given written assurances to the Japanese Consul General at Shanghai that were either of them to be made President of China they would conclude a treaty with Japan granting to the latter rights of supervision of military and administrative affairs, more extensive than those asked for in Group V of the "Twenty-one Demands."¹ The Premier asked whether such men and those whom they controlled could be considered safe leaders.

The Premier also stated that it was his policy to resist every attempt made by an outside power to gain control over the military establishment of China, but that he believed it dangerous to give a formal assurance to this effect to the American Government at this time, because it would be interpreted as an act of hostility by the Japanese Government. Such a thing could not be kept confidential, as is shown by the manner in which negotiations in connection with the Rosseter contract leaked out.

Reverting to the Parliamentary situation, the American Minister stated that it was his impression that the leaders of the younger elements among the Parliamentarians trusted the Premier and would be glad to associate themselves with him were they at all encouraged. He expressed his opinion that dangerous dissension could be avoided and national unity established on a firm basis if Parliament were won over instead of being antagonized. He again emphasized the fact that it would be difficult for the United States to be helpful should reactionary methods be applied.

From the foregoing it is evident that the Premier relies to some extent on Japanese assistance, hoping, however, to maintain his independence of action; he is irremediably opposed to the majority party in Parliament; he believes that by strong action against Parliament the authority of the Government can be vindicated; he counts on the united support of the military party. He was most frank in his expressions, stating that he spoke as a friend without reserve.

In the course of the conversation the bill now before Parliament to reserve iron deposits for development by Chinese who have sufficient capital was touched upon. The Premier stated that a member of Parliament had already made an agreement with Japanese capitalists to turn over to them the mines in Hunan Province, while a Cantonese agent was buying up claims in Anhui for the Japanese. While this [was] done without authority it leads to claims which are only got rid of with great difficulty.

Premier and Minister for Foreign Affairs yesterday addressing the Diet, just opened in special session, expressed profound gratification the entrance into war of the United States, which Viscount Motono called "An event without precedent in the annals of history"; referring to the close collaboration of the two nations against the common enemy as "tending, in a marked manner, to make our cordial relations more close and to unite our efforts with the greatest sincerity." In reply to a question whether any pledge had been secured looking to retention by Japan of Tsingtao and the islands taken from Germany, he stated that the Japanese Government has taken properly effective measures to protect Japan's rights and interests in Shantung and the Southern Islands and concluded: "Am very confident that upon restoration of peace the Allied powers will not object to such arrangements as Japan will deem necessary in order to ensure peace in the Orient." Interpellated with reference to the recent American note to China,² he said that when Ambassador Sato on June 15, handed the Japanese memorandum³ to the Secretary of State "the latter stated that inasmuch as the Governments of Japan, Great Britain, and France deemed it unnecessary to warn China he was in full accord with the view therein expressed." When interpellated in the same connection as to the giving out by an official of the Foreign Office of statements calculated to disturb the good feeling existing between Japan and the United States (see my telegram of June 1, 11 p. m.)⁴ Viscount Motono declined to reply.

SIR: There has just come to my notice an article published by Mr. Samuel G. Blythe in the Saturday Evening Post entitled "First Time in Five Thousand Years," which deals with the action taken by the Chinese Government against Germany on February 9. The manner in which the American suggestion of action was presented to the Chinese Government was reported to the Department in my No. 1390 of February 14, 1917.¹ From this report it will be evident to the Department that Mr. Blythe could not be aware of the really essential steps taken in this important negotiation.

As to the incidental activities of various outsiders, men of influence with the Chinese, out of which Mr. Blythe weaves his interesting story, I have no detailed information concerning the accuracy of any of the incidents set forth by Mr. Blythe. In his effort to tell a dramatic story, Mr. Blythe has, however, injected an element which, to my knowledge, was not actually present, in that he sets forth that a certain group of men acted concertedly, as a temporary informal organization, under the direction of the American Minister. It is known to me that a number of influential men, of both American and British nationality, believed that it was highly desirable, both from the point of view of Chinese and Allied interests, that China should take action; in using their influence to assist in bringing about this end they acted spontaneously with the sole connecting link of a common purpose. The sum of their influence probably did make itself felt among various groups of Chinese public men. But their mode of action, as far as I know, differed in no way from that which takes place ordinarily and at all times in efforts to influence public opinion.

As far as the Chinese are concerned, my action was confined strictly to the negotiations as reported in despatch No. 1390; my conversations were chiefly with the Premier, incidentally with the President, members of the Cabinet, and Mr. C. C. Wu, representing the Minister for Foreign Affairs. The action of the Chinese Government was taken solely on the basis of the facts and considerations laid before them.

As there is no hope of the Central European powers modifying their policy of submarine warfare, a policy contrary to Prussians' [provisions of] international law and violating the principles of humanity, the Chinese Government has therefore declared that a state of war exists simultaneously between China and Germany as well as Austria-Hungary at 10 o'clock a. m. of the 14th day, 8th month of the 6th year of the Republic of China, and that all the treaties of whatever nature between China and Germany as well as Austria-Hungary are abrogated, as well as all such provisions of the protocol of September 5, 1901, and other similar international agreements as only concern China and Germany and Austria-Hungary. SIR: I have the honor to enclose a copy of the note addressed by the Legation to the Foreign Office on August 14¹ upon the occasion of the declaration of war between China and Germany in accordance with your telegraphic authorization. A copy of the text of the assurances in French, in the version contained in the notes as handed in by those Allied ministers who make use of the French language, is here inserted.

Mon Gouvernement est en l'occurrence heureux de donner au Gouvernement Chinois l'assurance de sa solidarité, de son amitié, et de son appui. Il fera tout ce qui dépendra de lui pour que la Chine bénéficie dans ses rapports internationaux de la situation et des égards dus à un grand pays.²

The Chinese Government had suggested the following form:

Mon Gouvernement est très désireux d'accorder à la Chine tout son concours afin de lui faire obtenir la jouissance des avantages résultant de l'égalité (entre puissances) dans les rapports internationaux.

As it, however, seemed that the use of the term "equality among the powers" might be held to involve admissions contrary to the continuance of the régime of extraterritoriality, it was decided to substitute the version actually adopted.

As previously reported to the Department I had repeatedly made efforts to effect an agreement for a declaration favorable to the maintenance of the sovereign rights of China, beginning with my conversation with the Japanese Minister reported in my despatch No. 1335 of November 1, 1916 [*January 10, 1917*³]. When China was considering the entry into the war I suggested the desirability of the making of such a declaration and hinted to the Chinese officials concerned that they might be successful in obtaining upon this occasion a statement which would fortify the sovereign rights of China. The colleagues with whom I incidentally took up the matter were not unfavorable or opposed to the idea. It would undoubtedly have been possible for the Chinese Government to secure a more specific declaration than the one actually made, but as often happens instead of taking advantage of the position which the readiness to declare war gave them, and boldly proposing such a declaration as a necessary condition, they discussed the matter too long until the substance of the declaration had been worn down to the rather empty formula finally adopted. Nevertheless the use of the phrase "the regards due to a great country" was extremely flattering to Chinese amour propre and the note was received as an assurance of cooperation in maintaining Chinese sovereignty.

At conference to-day composed of Liberian Secretary of State, Captain of Bacchante, and representatives of France, Great Britain, and United States it was unanimously agreed that following severance of relations with Germany all Germans should leave Liberia. Before agreement is made effective instructions are requested on the following points. First: Should international character of German Receiver, Customs entitle him to differential treatment? Secondly: How should case of the Consul for Norway who is German subject be handled? Thirdly: Can arrangements be made permitting Germans who leave to take residence in Spanish territory? If not, what should be their destination? Fourthly: Can safe-conduct for German Consul to Germany be procured from Allied powers?

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have just received instructions from the Government of the Republic of Liberia that relations between her and the Imperial German Government have been severed, and the exequatur of the German representative has been revoked; and that the attitude of the Liberian Government is one of sympathetic cooperation with the United States and the Allied Governments of Europe.

I have been instructed to inform the great Government of the United States whom Liberia considers to be her great and good friend. In support of these instructions I respectfully ask for a conference at such time as may be convenient. I shall upon your designation of the day and hour hasten to Washington.

SIR: Confirming my telegram No. 2086 of the 8th instant,¹ relative to the attitude of the French Government regarding the breaking off of relations between the Liberian and the German Imperial Governments, I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy and translation of a note from the Ministry for Foreign Affairs sent me following the verbal statement made by that Ministry on which my said telegram was based.

[Enclosure—Translation]

The French Ministry for Foreign Affairs to the American Embassy

The American Embassy has been good enough to communicate with the Ministry for Foreign Affairs regarding the steps to be taken to facilitate the severance of relations between Liberia and Germany, and to express the hope that when this severance shall have been accomplished, the Cabinets of Paris and London will entertain the question of the resumption of commerce between France and the United Kingdom and Liberia, under conditions to be agreed upon.

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs has the honor to inform the American Embassy that a telegram has been received from the French Chargé d'Affaires at Monrovia to the effect that diplomatic relations between Liberia and Germany have been broken off and that the delay granted to German residents to leave Liberia has been limited to a fortnight.

Mr. Baret added that President Howard had expressed the wish to be able to notify the Germans as soon as possible as to the country in which they would be interned and as to the name of the ship which would transport them to destination.

When directing the Ambassadors of the Republic at Washington and at London to bring this information to the knowledge of the Federal and the British Governments, the President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, requested Messrs. Jusserand and Paul Cambon to inform Mr. Lansing and Lord Robert Cecil that, in his opinion, all mobilizable Germans resident in Liberia should be interned in American, British, or French territory, and that those who are not mobilizable should be sent back to Germany. Messrs. Jusserand and Paul Cambon must have added that the Government of the Republic would be willing to intern the mobilizable Germans on French territory.

On the other hand, the Ministry for Foreign Affairs has begged the Ministry of Marine to come to a direct understanding with the American and British Admiralties regarding the transportation of German residents in Liberia to the country on the territory of which they are to be interned.

When the Germans domiciled in Liberia shall have left that country, the Government of the Republic will not raise any opposition to the normal resumption of Franco-Liberian trade, every precaution being taken, of course, in order that the business of German firms possessing establishments in Liberia should not be carried on under cover of native or neutral intermediaries.

I am advised by the Admiral that the President of Liberia made known to him his disinclination to accept any advice to send German subjects to an enemy country, and I have been asked to concur in his proposal to be made to the British Government to the effect that German subjects be sent to Spain, and I have answered that while personally I do not see any grounds for objection I must await further instructions before acting. At the same time I urged that Liberia should not be put in the position where it must choose either to disregard the advice of its friends or appear to act under pressure. The majority of the Cabinet, including the Liberian Minister for Foreign Affairs, will steadfastly vote to follow the advice of the Government of the United States regardless of personal views of the President as I am advised by Liberian Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Liberian Government answered yesterday to the effect that, as evidence of its sincerity in changing its proclaimed neutrality, it is willing to adopt said proposal with the full realization that such a step constitutes an act of war against Germany as soon as it is advised as to the attitude of the Governments of the United States of America, Great Britain, and France on the following points, whereon an expression from the said Governments is besought, to wit: First, that said Governments make no peace with Germany, jointly or severally, without including in the terms thereof provisions for the protection of Liberia against German aggressions after the war. Secondly, that upon the departure from Liberia of all German subjects, the restrictions placed upon Liberian commerce by the Government of Great Britain and its Allies be immediately removed and every facility afforded Liberia for the restoration and development of its commerce with them.

Following is memorandum from British Embassy dated June 8:

His Majesty's Government have no desire to hamper Liberian trade, and the restrictions which have been placed upon that country have been directed solely with the object of preventing Germans from trading under cover of Liberians.

These restrictions His Majesty's Government would be prepared to withdraw on the following conditions.

- (a) All Germans to be removed from Liberia.

- (b) Effective steps to be taken by the Liberian Government to prevent the carrying on of German firms by nominees who would subsequently, after the war, hand them back to their original owners as going concerns.

His Majesty's Government attach very considerable importance to this latter condition, and they feel they would find it impossible to withdraw, as they would wish, all existing trade restrictions unless it were carried out. They will, however, be ready to consider favourably any concrete proposals for the rehabilitation of Liberia as soon as the Germans now there are definitely removed.

[Enclosure]

The Liberian Secretary of State (King) to the Acting German Consul (Dopffel)

MONROVIA, May 8, 1917.

SIR: As the policies of a nation must always be adjusted to meet new conditions affecting its vital interests, as they arise from time to time, so the transpiring of certain events in connection with the great European War, which has staggered humanity in its ruthless operations and stupendous financial output, have rendered necessary a change of Liberia's attitude of strict neutrality, hitherto assumed and consistently maintained. I refer to the new German submarine program, drawn up by the Imperial German Government, and put into execution on the 1st day of February of the present year: the detail operations of which you are very well conversant with and informed.

While Liberia has endeavoured to stand aloof from a conflict, the original causes of which were of purely European concern and interest, yet the method adopted by the Imperial German Government and its allies to vindicate what they conceive to be their national rights and honour, and to bring to their arms a speedy and successful victory by such means as the sinking of unarmed ships of their enemies and neutrals without warning; the bombardment of undefended towns and villages; and the violation of the rights of small neutral states, are such flagrant violations of the rules of civilized warfare as to justly create, on the part of Liberia, grave apprehensions and fears of the eventual permanent establishment of the doctrine of "might" over "right" in the realms of international relations: which doctrine, if allowed to obtain, can only result in the

Hence the Government and people of Liberia can not any longer, in their own interest, continue to view with indifference and unconcern the present world's cataclysm, especially since the new German submarine program seriously threatens the lives of Liberian citizens travelling, on the high seas, as passengers and crew on Allied and neutral ships.

Although Liberia is fully conscious of her utter inability to enforce upon any of the belligerent nations respect and due regard for the rights and safety of her citizens, yet that fact will not deter her from protesting, by the most effective means at her disposal, against any attempt to infringe upon her sacred international rights—in spite of the veiled threats made by the Acting Imperial German Consul in his published statement of War News, issued and circulated in this city under the official seal of his Imperial Government on the 21st of April, to the effect that powers of the third and last importance will be held to strict accountability for all damages done to German interest, the bill for which will be presented and payment thereof enforced after the happy issues of the war.

The Liberian Government is, therefore, constrained, as an earnest protest against the continued enforcement of the new German submarine program, which threatens the lives of Liberian citizens as well as grave financial and economic embarrassments to the Republic, to sever relations with the Imperial German Government, and to revoke the exequatur granted to Germany's official representative at this Capital.

MEMORANDUM

The present situation with regard to the negotiations concerning Liberia is that His Majesty's Government stated that it would be ready to withdraw all restrictions on Liberian trade provided that all Germans were removed from the country and that the Liberian Government took such measures as would effectively prevent German businesses from being carried on by persons who would merely act as representatives and restore them to their original owners in statu quo as soon as the war is over. The United States Government agreed to these conditions, but they desired that guarantees should be provided of a nature to insure that Liberia would be free from molestation on the part of Germany, both during and after the war.

With regard to this latter point, it is manifest that Liberia can only be attacked so long as the war lasts from the sea, and the British naval forces at Sierra Leone will furnish all necessary protection.

With regard to the post bellum period, His Majesty's Government would be ready to unite with the Governments of France and the United States in giving a firm assurance to protect Liberia against the attacks from Germany to the best of their power. They have sent instructions to the British representative to join with his United States and French colleagues to make a communication in this sense to the Liberian Government. The French Government have agreed already to this step.

The French Admiralty will doubtless make the necessary arrangement with the Liberian authorities, as soon as that Government accepts the proposed guarantees, for the deportation of the Germans.

As soon as the German subjects in the country have been carried away, and the Liberian Minister states that the German firms are being closed, the restrictions which were placed on trade with Liberia in order to wreck German enterprises there will be cancelled.

Less objection would be seen to an agreement limited in effect to duration of present war, but this would seem to be unnecessary in view of assurance given in the British memorandum of July 14, mentioned in Department's July 18, 6 p. m., that British naval forces at Sierra Leone will furnish all necessary protection to Liberia so long as present war lasts. This assurance together with the assurance that Great Britain will cancel trade restrictions and the interest which Liberia knows the United States takes in her welfare should satisfy Liberian Government; but if that Government enters into an agreement with France and Great Britain limited to duration of present war, such agreement should make it clearly understood that any naval or military base established thereunder, within the jurisdiction of Liberia, will be promptly discontinued upon termination of present war.

Joint resolution declaring war against Germany unanimously passed by Liberian Congress an hour later. All German men in Monrovia were arrested by Liberian soldiers before commander came ashore and all except the manager of each firm, who are left here to inventory and turn over German property to the Liberian Government, were taken aboard French naval vessel at 4 o'clock p. m.

French naval vessel sailed last night for Grand Bassa, thence to Sinu and thence to Cape Palmas where all German men will be taken aboard after a sufficient wait to enable them to inventory and turn over their property to the Liberian Government. Returning from last mentioned place, managers left here, Grand Bassa, and Sinu, together with all Germans at Cape Mount, will be picked up, and the French naval vessel will then proceed to France.

Women and former German Consul and Receiver will sail under safe-conduct at the earliest practicable date for Germany via Scandinavian states.

The conduct of Liberian soldiers admirable. No disorder among the populace.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: My Government informs me that it has received from our Consul at Monrovia a report to the effect that the Liberian Government expressed a wish that the German Consul, the German Receiver, and the German women and children be put as early as possible on an English or Spanish steamer bound for England, whence they would proceed to Germany by way of a Scandinavian country.

The answer to Mr. Baret was that there was no objection to that arrangement on the part of the Government of the Republic, but that he should concert with his American and English colleagues. It should further be understood that the steamer will not call at the Spanish port where those Germans could not easily be prevented from landing and staying.

I have the honor to bring the foregoing to your excellency's knowledge for all pertinent purposes.

File No. 763.72/6631

The Liberian Consul General at Baltimore (Lyon) to the Secretary of State

BALTIMORE, August 28, 1917.

[Received August 29.]

SIR: I have the honor to submit in connection with my interview, as per instructions, and to enclose a memorandum giving Liberia's account of the several incidents leading up to the severance of diplomatic relations between her and the Imperial German Government for your careful and respectful consideration.

LIBERIA'S IMPRESSION

Liberia has always had reasons to believe that both England and France desired to draw her into the war for the purpose of having her included in their great program of German commercial exclusion from Africa after the war. Liberia's impression has been more recently emphasized by official interviews with the representatives at the Capital.

LIBERIA'S SYMPATHIES

The sympathies of Liberia have always been with the Allies. In fact Liberia could never wish for German success in the face of German treatment of her on numerous occasions as well as her treatment of the native races in Africa. Liberia has studiously kept out of the war because she believed that it was a white man's war for supremacy in the world. She resisted strenuously every effort made to get her into it until the United States, her only real friend, decided to go in and sent her, in common with the other neutrals, her circular letter which is here incorporated:

[Here are inserted a note of the American Minister to the Liberian Secretary of State, February 5, 1917, enclosing a copy of the circular telegram of February 3, ante, page 108; and the reply of the Liberian Secretary of State, summarized in the Minister's telegram of February 6, ante, page 458.]

In the circular, the United States Government took the step she felt forced to take; and even here Liberia remained neutral. But when the United States declared war against the Imperial German Government, then Liberia felt that she was bound to carry out her promise to sever diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government, the common enemy of human liberty.

LIBERIA RELIES UPON THE STRONG ARM OF THE UNITED STATES

Liberia in taking action in accord with the United States reminded the United States concerning her impotent condition either to render military aid to the United States or to defend herself against the superior forces of the Imperial German Government during and after the war, and would therefore rely upon the strong arm of the United States to protect her against the eventualities accruing from such a course.

EQUIVALENT TO A "QUID PRO QUO"

It was quite natural, and indeed logical, for Liberia to assume that since the United States had suggested the course, which Liberia afterwards adopted, that that fact in itself was equivalent to a quid pro quo, in so far as the United States and Liberia were concerned. The action, therefore, which was taken by Liberia was based upon this logical interpretation, and Liberia felt and still feels that the United States is in a better position to get from the powers concerned the necessary guaranties for her future safety.

PUBLIC OPINION DIVIDED IN LIBERIA

Liberian public opinion was divided on the Government's course.

(a) Some were of the opinion that before severing diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government the Liberian Government should require a guaranty from the United States Government of future protection from German retaliation and indemnities.

(b) Others were of the opinion that the Liberian Government should act on the suggestion of the circular letter of the President of the United States without any formal guaranty or expressed quid pro quo, since the United States had been extending protection to Liberia in many of her diplomatic tangles with European nations. Now was the time for Liberia to manifest faith in the integrity of the United States Government.

THE LATTER OPINION PREVAILED

The latter opinion, therefore, prevailed that Liberia should fulfil her promise and pool her fortunes with the United States. Liberia also remembered that she was accused of being pro-German, and feared that the least hesitancy on her part might be construed by both England and France as pro-German sentiment, hence she decided to act upon the circular letter. But before doing so a conference with the Allied representatives was held; Liberia was represented by the Secretary of State. At this conference Liberia made known her decision to the Allied representatives, and asked them, for reasons, to make the fact known to their respective Governments for instructions.

THE ALLIED INSTRUCTION TO THEIR REPRESENTATIVES IN LIBERIA

Legation of the United States of America,
Monrovia, Liberia, May 7, 1917.

Honorable C. D. B. King,
Secretary of State,
Monrovia.

SIR: We, the undersigned, have the honor to respectfully request that you arrange an audience for us and the captain of His Britannic Majesty's Royal Navy with the President of the Republic of Liberia at the Executive Mansion on Tuesday, May 8, 1917, at 10.30 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, whereby we may advise the Liberian Government to perfect its decision to sever relations with Germany, in obedience to instructions so to do from our respective Governments, which have been cabled to us upon our requests following the conference to which we were bidden by you at the State Department April 20, 1917.

We desire also on the occasion of said audience to bring to the attention of the Liberian Government matters, which we deem to be a logical corollary to the severance of said relations, in the form of proposals, a copy of which is herewith enclosed for your advance consideration and examination.

With assurances [etc.]

James L. Curtis
American Minister Resident

E. Baret

French Chargé d'Affaires

M. Y. H. Parks

Acting British Consul-General

THE PROPOSALS OF THE ALLIED REPRESENTATIVES

At a conference held at the American Legation, May 6, 1917, at 4.30 p. m.

Present: French Chargé d'Affaires
Captain Armstrong, H. B. M. R. N.
Acting British Consul-General
American Minister Resident

The consensus prevailed that the following proposals should be broached to the Liberian Government as the advice of said conferees:

1. That the German Consul be notified that relations are severed between Liberia and Germany.

2. That simultaneously a thorough search be made of the homes and place of business of all German subjects resident here, and arms and ammunition of all description found therein be confiscated by Liberia.

3. That the British war vessel with its marines render such assistance as specifically requested by the Government of Liberia.

4. That all German subjects should be removed from Liberia.

5. That safe-conduct for the German Consul from Liberia to his home be requested from the Allied powers.

6. That the names of German subjects willing to leave Liberia as interned civilian non-combatants be secured by the Liberian Government and also the names of those unwilling to go under such an arrangement, in order to facilitate any further action that exigencies may suggest to Liberia.

7. A reasonable time be allowed German subjects to arrange their business affairs, to wit: not less than two weeks.

8. That a suitable patrol of the city be ordered by the Liberian Government during the search and disarming of German subjects.

(a) Signal officers from the battleship are permitted to land for the purpose of communicating with the ship in case of any resistance being offered by the Germans to the carrying into effect of the suggestions made in paragraph 2.

PROPOSAL No. 4

When the representatives of the three Allied powers advised that German subjects residing in Liberia should be deported, the questions "whereto" and "by whom" arose. Liberia has no concern as to where the Germans are sent, whether to France, England, or anywhere else. Her sole and only business is to see, as best she can, that their deportation does not entail on her future troubles. What Liberia wants is assurance and the Germans may be sent anywhere.

Liberia has not forgotten 1913, when for four months three German warships were in her harbor making all sorts of demands on her for the trouble which they themselves had created in River Cess, at which time all the world was silent. Liberia contends, if it is desired that she take a step which will benefit the cause of the Allies, she is agreeable to taking that step if the Allies assure her that they will stand by her when demands will be made on her by Germany for having taken that step.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE ALLIED POWERS

When the question "whereto" was put to the representatives of the Allied powers they did not answer. Subsequently they met Secretary King at the State Department and the French Chargé d'Affaires informed the Secretary that he had received instructions that the Germans should be sent to France and that the British Government concurred in this. Secretary King then inquired of the British Consul and of the American Minister Resident if they had also received similar instructions and they replied in the negative. Secretary King then informed the Allied representatives that as the Liberian Government had received a joint note from the three of them advising the removal of the Germans, and had in turn addressed a note in reply to them jointly, inquiring where the Germans were to be removed to, he could make no reply for the Government of Liberia until he had heard from all of them, or at least from a majority of them, but assuring the French Chargé d'Affaires that he would take note of what he had said as to his Government's instructions.

WHAT HAPPENED ON THE FIFTH OF JUNE

On the fifth of June, by appointment of the three representatives of the Allied powers, the Secretary of State met them. The French representative handed in his answer saying that his Government required the Germans to go to France, that is to say, all of mobilizable age (none are over 45), and that the ex-German Consul would be permitted to return to Germany via Holland or Scandinavia in a ship that would touch at an English port, in order that the right of search might be made, and that under no circumstance was he to touch French soil.

The British representative then read his, which stated that his Government had been advised that the French Government was making certain representations to the Liberian Government in reference to the Germans which they hoped would be complied with as speedily as possible.

The American Minister Resident, at this date, was still without instructions.

LIBERIA'S REPLY TO THE ALLIED REPRESENTATIVES

Having heard from a majority of the Governments, Liberia replied that she was prepared to comply with the demands or requirements of the Allies, but was of the opinion that such an act would be construed as one of hostility and therefore would be prepared to do so when the three Governments, the United States, Great Britain, and France, assured her that they will not severally or jointly make peace with Germany without safeguarding her vital interests against German aggression after the war; and secondly, that after all the Germans have left Liberia, that Great Britain and her Allies remove the restrictions placed on Liberian commerce.

I am instructed that the Secretary of State convoked them and read Liberia's decision to them jointly, and discussed it, and then gave each representative a copy, which they promised to submit to their respective Governments.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT'S JULY 23 TO CONSUL GENERAL LYON

The State Department's July 23 to Consul General Lyon completes the assurance which Liberia desired before attempting to carry out the proposals referred to. For the sake of record the Secretary's letter is herein incorporated:

Meanwhile, it may be of interest to you to know that the Department of State received a memorandum from the British Embassy here, dated July 14, stating that as soon as the German subjects in Liberia shall have been carried away and the Liberian Minister of Foreign Affairs shall have stated that the German firms are being closed, the restrictions which were placed on the trade with Liberia will be cancelled, and that the Department cabled to the American Minister at Monrovia on July 18 that it regarded this assurance adequate and that he may, therefore, advise the Liberian Government that the Government of the United States sees no objection to Liberia's taking the contemplated steps with regard to Germany.

I have [etc.]

WITH REFERENCE TO RECEIVER LANGE

It is Liberia's opinion that the decision to remove Germans should not include Receiver Lange and the German doctor for reasons. The removal of Mr. Lange would put the board into the hands and control of England and France, a condition which threatens to nullify the American side of the loan agreement. If Lange is removed, Worley should be given a proxy in order to retain the balance of power.

OF VITAL IMPORTANCE TO LIBERIA

1. That the Allies assure Liberia that they will not severally or jointly make peace with Germany without safeguarding Liberia's vital interest against German aggression after the war.

2. Liberia is of the opinion that when the Germans are removed the next step will be a demand that the German cable property be handed over to England and France.

3. Liberia is unwilling that either England or France should assume control of the cable and wireless stations.

4. She is quite willing that the United States should take charge of these institutions rather than England or France.

5. In the event that the United States will not assume charge of these stations, then Liberia will take charge of them with the understanding that the United States will give its aid and assistance.

6. I am instructed to cable the Department's answer to the foregoing.

[Received September 14.]

SIR: I have the honor to report for the further information of the Department in connection with the previously reported proposed convention, embracing the matters and things promised and undertaken by Liberia, Great Britain and France, quid pro quo, that the said convention was not proposed or suggested by the Liberian Government but by the Acting British Consul General, who represented that he was under instructions to insist upon the consummation of such a convention by and between the Government of Liberia on the one hand and the Governments of the United States, France, and Great Britain on the other, and that the Governments of the United States, France, and Great Britain were in complete accord on the matter.

In private conference between the representatives here of the latter Governments, and also in the conference with the Liberian Secretary of State, I declined to concur in the necessity or desirability for said convention and the Liberian Government was not insistent on any convention. However, to meet what the Liberian Government believed to be a condition precedent on the part of the British Government, a tentative draft of the proposed convention was made and submitted to the three foreign representatives concerned, which I promptly declined to sign or discuss until instructed in connection therewith.

I accordingly cabled the terms of said proposed convention to Department, and two days thereafter the British Consul General advised me of his receipt of instructions to delete all reference to the convention from the joint communication to be transmitted to the Liberian Government.

As Liberia considers the counsel of the Government of the United States both wise and disinterested, the subsequent bringing of the views of Department relative to the convention to its attention sufficed to effectually and finally dispose of the convention proposal and to write finis to the vexatious question of the deportation of the Germans and the corollaries thereto.

JAMES L. CURTIS

[Enclosure]

The Liberian Secretary of State (King) to the Acting Spanish Consul (Hoenigsberg)

249/C. F.

MONROVIA, July 17, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 3d instant, in which you inform me that you have been instructed by your Government to say that the Imperial German Government, referring to the treaty of commerce between the Republic of Liberia and Germany, dated the 31st of October, 1867, and with respect to Article 2 thereof, insists that this treaty is not abolished by a simple rupture of diplomatic relations, and that in consequence liberty of sojourn as well as of commerce remains guaranteed to subjects of the two contracting parties. Therefore, deportation or internment of the German subjects in Liberia against their will, as well as the liquidation of their businesses is inadmissible; and in view of the foregoing, you are ordered by your Government to "energetically protest" against any arbitrary action contrary to the stipulations of said treaty of commerce, and to formally declare that the Imperial Government has to render Liberia responsible for any damage that might result therefrom.

The Liberian Government, after a very careful consideration and study of the view taken by the Imperial German Government of the Treaty of Amity, Commerce and Navigation, between Germany and Liberia, and the effects of the present rupture of relations between the two Governments upon the provisions of this treaty, as set forth in your said note, now begs to submit the following as its reply thereto:

1. While it is conceded by the Liberian Government that all subjects of the German Empire have the right under Article 2 of the treaty of 1867, between the North German Confederacy and the Republic of Liberia, to reside and carry on trade in Liberia, yet it does not admit that by said treaty Liberia divested herself of the right inherent in her, as a free, sovereign, and independent state, to close her doors at any time to any foreigner or group of foreigners who for social, political, or economic reasons, she may deem expedient to exclude from her territories.

Realizing this inherent right, the Legislature of Liberia at its session of 1915-16 enacted a law regulating the residence of aliens within the Republic. This law provides, inter alia, that—

The President of Liberia is hereby invested with authority to deport or cause to be deported from the Republic, any alien permanently or temporarily residing therein, whose presence would by the authorities be deemed a menace to public security, or who is otherwise or in anywise undesirable as a resident within the borders of the Republic.

The validity and soundness of such legislation, on the part of the Legislature of Liberia, has never been questioned or contested by the Imperial German Government as an infringement upon the treaty rights of German subjects in Liberia; but, to the contrary, the German residents, with the knowledge and tacit approval of their Government, have most cheerfully and willingly complied with all of its conditions and provisions.

The right, therefore, of the Government of Liberia to expel from the Republic such foreigners whose presence are a menace to its security and political safety being thus tacitly admitted by the Imperial German Government, it only remains to show in what way would the continued presence of the Germans in Liberia be in any way a menace to the Republic's present safety and security, in order to justify their expulsion.

In the President's proclamation of June 28, 1917, copies of which were duly forwarded you, it is stated that the engagements growing out of the definite alignment of the Republic of Liberia with the Allied powers now at war with the German Empire render the continued residence of German subjects within the borders of the Republic a source of embarrassment to the Government of Liberia. This fact alone renders the Germans undesirable in Liberia, and, therefore, in the opinion of the Liberian Government, would justify their expulsion.

2. The Liberian Government regrets its inability to follow the Imperial German Government in its conclusions that Article 2 of the treaty of commerce between Liberia and Germany, concluded the 31st of October 1867, "is not abolished by a simple rupture of diplomatic relations."

In the consideration of treaties and their binding effects it will be discovered that there are several circumstances under which a treaty may be modified and abrogated. As for an instance: "When a state of things which was the basis of the treaty, and one of its tacit conditions no longer exists." (See Moore's International Law Digest, volume 5, page 319, paragraph 720.)

. . . By reference to the treaty of 1867 between Liberia and Germany it will be discovered that said treaty is not only a treaty of commerce, as would appear from the observations made upon the same by the Imperial German Government, as set forth in your said note, but also a treaty of "amity."

The title and Article 1 of said treaty read as follows:

TITLE

"Treaty of Amity, Commerce and Navigation between the Republic of Liberia and the North German Confederacy, concluded October 31st, 1867, ratified by the Senate December 20th, 1867, ratifications exchanged April 28th, 1868."

ARTICLE 1

"There shall be perpetual peace and friendship between the Republic of Liberia and the North German Confederacy, their subjects and citizens."

From the above-quoted title and article of said treaty, it can not but be apparent that the basis of the treaty was that of "amity" or friendship between the Republic of Liberia and the North German Confederacy, their subjects and citizens.

The announcement, by the Liberian Government in its note addressed to the then Acting Imperial German Consul at this capital on the 8th of May last, of the rupture of its relations with the Imperial German Government was not intended as a mere empty diplomatic statement, but as a solemn declaration on the part of the Liberian Government of the breach, by Germany, of that "amity" or friendship which, according to the terms of the treaty of 1867, should be the basis of the relations between the two Governments.

Therefore, it is the opinion of the Liberian Government that the rupture of that friendship, which was the basis of the treaty between Liberia and Germany, operates as a suspension of Article 2 of said treaty until the resumption of friendly relations between the two Governments.

Furthermore "If a treaty," says Mr. Taylor, an eminent authority on International Law, "is consistent at the outset with the right of self preservation it is an implied condition that it shall remain so. . . ."

"Therefore, a treaty which was not intended to be a menace to the life or independence of a state at the time of its execution becomes voidable the moment subsequent events invest it with that character."

Now, the progressive destruction of that system of rules which have for centuries given security to international relations; the denial to neutrals the right freely to travel the ocean highways of the earth; the repudiation, without just and legal causes, of international engagements, are all acts committed by Germany in the present world's war, which seriously menace the life and independence of Liberia, and therefore at once render voidable, on the part of the Liberian Government, the treaty of 1867 between Germany and Liberia.

As to the request of the Imperial German Government, made through your Government, that a safe-conduct for every German without distinction of age and sex who would be willing to leave Liberia for Spain, or any other neutral country, be procured by the Liberian Government, I beg also to say that in view of the position taken by the Liberian Government upon the treaty of 1867, as herein above indicated, it is not conceived that such obligations rest upon the Liberian Government, except in the case of the former Acting Imperial German Consul and the German Receiver of Customs.

With the continued assurances of my high esteem and profound respect,

I have [etc.]

MONROVIA, July 21, 1917.

SIR: The undersigned representatives of the Government of France and the Government of His Britannic Majesty, duly accredited to the Government of Liberia, have the honor to reply to the note 194/D of the Liberian Government, dated June 6, 1917, as follows:

1. That His Britannic Majesty's Government and the Government of the French Republic are not now prepared to consider the proposal of the Liberian Government that the treaty of peace should provide to free Liberia from German aggression after the war, but the representatives of the two above-mentioned Governments at Monrovia are now jointly instructed to make a communication to the Liberian Government, with their American colleague, to the effect that His Britannic Majesty's Government and the Government of the French Republic and that of the United States are willing to jointly give to Liberia a firm assurance that they will defend her to the best of their power against such aggression.

2. That all necessary protection from the sea, which appears to be the only side on which Liberia can be attacked, will be given during the war by His Britannic Majesty's naval squadron at Sierra Leone.

The above two paragraphs refer to guaranties against molestation of Liberia during or after the war.

The deportation of Germans to France will be arranged at once by the French Admiralty in conjunction with the Liberian authorities upon the above guaranties being accepted by draft convention from the Liberian Government.

The danger of German firms in Liberia resuming business after the war will have been removed by the winding up of such firms, which we understand is now in progress, and by the deportation of the Germans.

The removal of restrictions on Liberian trade will follow, as these were imposed in order to destroy German trade.

Upon the acceptance of the above guaranties by the Liberian Government, it is hoped that we will be immediately notified, so that the Chargé d'Affaires of the French Republic may summon a French warship to effect deportation before the German subjects become aware of the action of the Liberian Government in this regard.

With renewed assurances [etc.]

E. BARET

M. Y. H. PARKS

I acquiesce in the foregoing, and am in accord with the advisability of deporting the Germans.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your joint note addressed to the Liberian Government on the 21st of July of the current year, embodying the guaranties which the Governments of Great Britain and France, and that of the United States acquiescing, are willing to give to the Liberian Government with respect to the deportation to France of the German residents in Liberia of mobilizable age, and the protection of Liberia against German aggression during or after the war.

In reply I am directed by the President to say, that the said guaranties are, in his opinion, quite adequate, and are therefore acceptable to the Liberian Government, who have, accordingly, declared a state of war existing between Liberia and the German Empire, as from the 4th of August 1917, and taken the necessary steps for the deportation to France of all unofficial German subjects in Liberia of mobilizable age by the French cruiser Desaix now within the territorial waters of the Republic.

I am further instructed by the President to say, that should the establishment of a naval base in Liberia be found necessary, by His Britannic Majesty's Government, in order to afford the naval protection contemplated in paragraph two of your said note, permission for same will be immediately granted upon the understanding that such naval base thus established will be within the jurisdiction of Liberia and will be promptly discontinued upon the termination of the war.

Assuring you of my personal devotion to the common cause with which our respective countries are now identified, I beg to subscribe myself [etc.]

Effect shall be given to this order in the application of order of 11th March, 1915, to goods which previous to the date of this order have been discharged at a British or Allied port being goods of destination or origin or property which was enemy, though not German, and all such goods shall be detained and dealt with in all respects as is provided in order of 11th March, 1915.

LONDON, February 22, 1917.

[Received 10 a. m.]

Order in council, March 11, 1915, modified by proclamation dated 16th, promulgated 21st [as] new order, after reciting that German memorandum declaring that after February 1 neutral ships will navigate certain zones at their risk and similar directions by other enemy powers are in flagrant contradiction with rules of international law and treaty obligations of enemy and, therefore, renders it necessary to adopt further measures to prevent commodities from reaching or leaving enemy countries, announces that from and after February 16:

1. A vessel which is encountered at sea on her way to or from a port in any neutral country afforded means of access to the enemy territory without calling at a port in British or Allied territory shall until the contrary is established be deemed to be carrying goods with an enemy destination or of enemy origin and shall be brought in for examination and if necessary for adjudication before the prize court.

2. Any vessel carrying goods with an enemy destination or of enemy origin shall be liable to capture and condemnation in respect of the carriage of such goods provided that in the case of any vessel which calls at an appointed British or Allied port for the examination of her cargo no sentence of condemnation shall be pronounced in respect only of the carriage of goods of enemy origin or destination and no such presumption as is laid down in Article J shall arise.

3. Goods which are found on the examination of any vessel to be goods of enemy origin or of enemy destination shall be liable to condemnation.

4. Nothing in this order shall be deemed to affect the liability of any vessel or goods to capture or condemnation independently of this order.

5. This order is supplemental to the orders in council of the 11th day of March, 1915, and the 10th day of January, 1917, for restricting the commerce of the enemy.

[Enclosure]

Report drawn up by the Committee on the Administration of the Order in Council of March 1915, addressed to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and the President of the Board of Trade, and presented to Parliament, February 1917

SIRS: The committee appointed to enquire whether any avoidable delay is caused by the methods hitherto adopted for dealing with ships and cargoes brought into British ports under the order in council of the 11th March, 1915, and to make such general recommendations as they might think fit for improving such methods, have completed their investigation and have now the honour to submit the following report:

1. NATURE AND SCOPE OF ENQUIRY

Neutral vessels are brought into British ports under the order in council of the 11th March, 1915, in order that the belligerent may be satisfied as to the character, ownership, destination, or origin of the cargo which they carry. Whether any delay caused by the methods employed in dealing with ships and cargoes so brought in is or is not avoidable must be determined by reference to the delay which is inseparable from the effective exercise of this right.

That its exercise must involve some delay is plain. This would be true even if the belligerent were to rely exclusively on the older practice of search at sea. But we are satisfied upon the evidence that the maintenance of this practice is neither possible, in view of the increased size of ships, nor, in view of the conduct of enemy submarines, desirable in the interests of neutral lives and property.

Not only so, but to exercise the right solely by means of the older practice would be tantamount to a complete abandonment of the right itself. The documents carried on a ship no longer furnish conclusive, or necessarily even presumptive, evidence of the true character, ownership, or destination of the cargo. The great increase of facilities by which goods can be circuitously conveyed to or from an enemy country, and the existence of other and speedier means of communication between traders than the ship carrying the goods, afford almost infinite opportunity for concealment. The documents which would disclose the true nature of the transaction, the contracts, correspondence, and cables may pass independently. Unless, therefore, the neutral is provided with better credentials than the documents carried by the ship, the evidence of the real facts has to be sought for by the belligerent from sources outside the ship.

Some alteration, then, not of principle but of practice, became necessary; and the machinery for carrying into effect the order in council of the 11th March, 1915, is the modern equivalent of the older methods. In order to determine whether the delays resulting from the modern methods can be diminished or avoided, we have considered it our duty to investigate, point by point, the whole of this machinery, and have examined witnesses from all the departments concerned.

2. METHODS EMPLOYED IN DEALING WITH SHIPS AND CARGOES UNDER THE ORDER IN COUNCIL, MARCH 11, 1915

(1) Visit at Sea.—All ships intercepted by the patrolling squadrons are visited, the time occupied in so doing being about three hours, except in heavy weather, when delay occurs till the weather moderates sufficiently to permit of boarding. On a decision being taken to send the ship in, she is despatched under an armed guard to the most convenient port, called a port of detention; in the case of ships going "northabout," for the most part to Kirkwall or Lerwick, but sometimes, if westward bound, to Stornoway, or very occasionally to Ardrrossan. Ships going "southabout" are detained in the Downs or sent into Falmouth or Dartmouth.

(2) Visit and Search at the Port of Detention.—On arrival at a port of detention the ship is visited by the customs officers, who examine the manifest, bills of lading, and any other relevant documents which she may be carrying, and prepare a detailed analysis of her whole cargo. Ships detained in the Downs are visited and reported upon in the same way by the naval authorities.

The question whether cargo is to be discharged or released has to be determined by different authorities in the case of westward and eastward bound ships, and the procedure by which information as to their cargoes is transmitted also differs slightly. In the case of westward-bound ships, the analysis of the cargo is sent to the Admiralty, the Foreign Office, and the Board of Customs. If the ship is proceeding southabout and the cargo comprises less than 25 items, the analysis is sent by telegram, and if more than 25 items, by train. If the ship is proceeding northabout, the analysis, whatever the number of items, is sent by telegram. In the case of eastward-bound ships the analysis is sent to the Admiralty, the Foreign Office, the Board of Customs, and the War Trade Intelligence Department, invariably by telegram.

3. WAR TRADE INTELLIGENCE DEPARTMENT (EASTWARD-BOUND SHIPS)

In the War Trade Intelligence Department every kind of information which can in any way assist in disclosing the real destination and ownership of cargoes, gathered from various sources, of which cables, wireless messages, confidential reports, and intercepted letters form part, has been indexed, collated, and focussed as it came to hand. A separate file or dossier is kept for individual ships and traders, while selected members of the staff make a special study of all facts relating to particular commodities or groups of commodities. The Department is thus ready to prepare a report embodying all information relevant to each item in the list as soon as it receives the detailed analysis of the cargo supplied by the customs officers, or, in the case of slower ships, the manifest forwarded independently by the British consul.

The time occupied in the preparation of this report varies, of course, with the number of separate items comprised in the cargo. Where the manifest has reached this country in advance of the ship, all the necessary work can be done before her arrival, and in such cases the report is made at once. When the first intimation of the nature of the cargo is contained in the customs cable, this is impossible. But as a general rule the organisation already indicated enables the War Trade Intelligence Department to furnish its report upon a customs cable received in the morning by 3 o'clock the same day. Even in exceptional cases a delay of 24 hours is rarely exceeded.

4. THE CONTRABAND COMMITTEE

The report by the War Trade Intelligence Department upon cargoes eastward bound is then put before the Contraband Committee, a committee composed of a representative of the Admiralty, the Foreign Office, and the Board of Trade, and now presided over by Mr. Ernest Pollock, K. C., M. P. The work of this committee is both onerous and responsible, and its urgency necessitates daily sittings. Its functions are to consider promptly what is the real ownership or destination of the cargo, to place the goods in the prize court only if there is reasonable ground for concluding that they are of enemy ownership or destination, to detain them for further investigation in cases of doubt, and in all other cases to secure their release at the earliest possible moment, without the delay and formality of prize-court proceedings.

In the course of their enquiry, the Contraband Committee have to determine whether the cargo in question is covered by any of the agreements which have been made with traders or shipowners, collectively or individually.

These agreements vary much in scope, but all result in lessening the inconveniences arising from the exercise of belligerent rights. There are, for instance, undertakings from neutral shipowners or consignees, either general or relating to specific shipments, for the return of the goods to this country in consideration of the ship being allowed to proceed without discharging here; undertakings from traders that goods shall not reach or have not originated with the enemy; undertakings to comply with restrictive conditions in consideration of bunkering facilities; or, again, so-called rationing agreements, which assure free passage to such quantities of particular commodities as are bona fide required for the use of the neutral country to which they are consigned. These have recently been supplemented by a scheme of proposed bookings or letters of assurance, under which shipments can be submitted to and sanctioned in advance by the committee.

The advantages of these arrangements are twofold. They shorten and facilitate the labours of the Contraband Committee and, what is vastly more important, they secure for neutrals the speedy release of ship and cargo.

In cases not covered by any agreement, the committee, upon the evidence before them, and in the light of the experience they have gained in dealing with other cargoes, are generally in a position to determine at once whether the cargo is to be released or detained in whole or in part. But if the available evidence, while suggesting an enemy destination, is insufficient for them to act upon, they obtain through the Foreign Office, where their meetings take place, such further information as can be supplied by our diplomatic or consular services in the country to which the goods are ostensibly consigned. Unless any such further enquiries are necessary, the decisions of the Contraband Committee are arrived at forthwith, and the whole of each day's business is disposed of before the committee adjourns.

5. ENEMY EXPORTS COMMITTEE (WESTWARD-BOUND SHIPS)

In the case of westward-bound ships, it is the origin rather than the destination of the cargo upon which, apart from questions of ownership, the seizure depends. The decision of this question rests with the Enemy Exports Committee. This committee sits every day at the Foreign Office. It is composed of representatives of the Foreign Office, Admiralty, and Board of Trade, and is presided over by the Right Honourable Commander Leverton Harris, R. N. V. R., M. P.¹

The methods of this committee are substantially identical with those of the Contraband Committee, but its labours are much simplified by the fact that it has been found possible, by the use of certificates of origin and licences, to give free passage to the bulk of west-bound traffic.

The best evidence, perhaps, of the advantages of such arrangements in abridging delay is that during the last six months this committee has ordered only some ten ships into port for discharge, while many ships have been allowed to proceed without their papers coming before the committee at all.

Even in cases where the ship's papers are laid before the committee for consideration, a delay is not necessarily involved. Westward-bound ships often, and liners almost invariably, call of their own accord at a United port. In such cases their papers are taken off in the Downs or at Kirkwall as the case may be, and, if in order, are transmitted to meet the ship at her port of call.

6. ADMIRALTY MARSHAL'S DEPARTMENT

If it is decided to release a ship, instructions are sent by telegram either to the Board of Customs, or to the naval authorities in the Downs, and she is allowed to proceed forthwith. If it is decided that cargo is to be seized, instructions to that effect are similarly given to the Admiralty Marshal as well as to the Board of Customs, particularising the items which are to be discharged. The Admiralty Marshal then telegraphs the necessary orders to the customs officers at the port at which the ship is lying, who, acting on behalf of the Marshal, make the formal affidavit of seizure.

It is to be noted that, at this stage and in all subsequent dealings with cargo which has been ordered to be discharged, the customs officers at the various ports act as agents for the Admiralty Marshal.

¹ Sir Alfred Bateman, K. C. M. G., succeeded Commander Leverton Harris as chairman in June, 1916.

7. COMMITTEE FOR DIVERSION OF SHIPS IN WAR TIME

Simultaneously with the instructions to his agents, the Admiralty Marshal gives the Admiralty Committee for the Diversion of Ships in War Time particulars of the ship and of the quantity and nature of the cargo to be discharged.

This committee, by a system of daily returns, keeps in touch with the conditions prevailing in the various ports, and assigns to the ship the most suitable port for her discharge. This decision involves many considerations. Regard must be had to the size and draught of the ship, to the facilities of the port for dealing with the particular cargo to be discharged, to the supply of labour, and to the accessibility of markets, particularly if the cargo is perishable. The materials for such a decision are all before the committee in their daily advices, and they have the additional advantage that their secretary is a member of the Port and Transit Committee which was created to enquire into "all the difficulties and congestion arising at ports in the United Kingdom and to regulate the work and traffic thereat." The report which this committee receives, disclosing fully the position at all ports in regard to berths, labour, &c., is, through the secretary, at the disposal of the Committee for the Diversion of Ships. The selection of a port, however, is not finally made until the port authority has been communicated with by telephone, and it has been definitely ascertained that the cargo can be dealt with. Thus the committee confirm the correctness of their own decision and the port authorities on their side are informed of all that it is material for them to know before the ship starts from the port of detention.

It has occasionally happened on Saturday afternoons or on Sundays that there has been no responsible person at the port of discharge to give the assurance that the ship could be dealt with if ordered there, and a ship has consequently remained at the port of detention until such assurance could be obtained. This appears to us to be a defect in practice rather than in method. Such occurrences have been infrequent and the remedy is obvious.

Subject to this exception and to the fact that application has sometimes to be made to many ports without success, the choice is made promptly. The name of the port is forthwith communicated to the Admiralty Marshal, who now has jurisdiction over the cargo, and by him to his agents.

8. PORT OF DISCHARGE

A ship which has been required to discharge is taken under an armed guard to the designated port and there awaits her turn. How soon she can be dealt with depends upon the degree of congestion prevailing in the port and the supply of labour available. Undoubtedly these factors have not been such as to favour a speedy discharge; but we find that every available facility has been provided and, unless preferential treatment is to be accorded to diverted ships, quicker despatch is not feasible.

If the ship has no agent at the port to which she is ordered, she may be under the disadvantage that no arrangements can be made for discharge before her arrival. In practice vessels have lost, perhaps, a tide from this cause, but the delay is due rather to the ship than to the methods upon which we are reporting.

Having discharged the required items of her cargo, the ship has not to await a further reference to the committee or the Admiralty Marshal, but obtains her clearance forthwith.

Subsequent evidence may of course cast suspicion on further items of the cargo, but should their discharge involve the removal of the hatches a second time, the practice is to give the ship the benefit of the doubt.

9. PROCURATOR-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT AND PRIZE COURT

We have traced the dealings with the suspect cargo down to the time of its discharge from the ship. In all subsequent proceedings the Procurator-General's Department and the prize court are alone concerned. The affidavit of seizure having already been made, the first step taken by the Procurator-General before preparing the case for trial is, in the interest of claimants, to give notice of the seizure to the consuls of those countries whose nationals are concerned.

The goods have been put into the prize court on the authority of the Contraband Committee or of the Enemy Export Committee. The necessity for prompt decision by these committees renders it imperative that they should act on evidence less formal and conclusive than that which is required in a court of law. While the materials before them may raise so strong a presumptive case against the goods as amply to justify a provisional detention, the preparation of the formal case and of the evidence to be put before the prize court necessarily involves a much more detailed and comprehensive enquiry. The Procurator-General, who is also the Treasury Solicitor, controls the whole of the prize-court work. The actual litigation is conducted by the law-courts branch of his Department, which is in touch both with the Contraband Committee and the War Trade Intelligence Department. A representative attends the meetings of the Contraband Committee, and a branch of the Department works in the War Trade Intelligence Department. This branch receives from the War Trade Intelligence Department its report to the Contraband Committee, and, from the representative attending the Contraband Committee, a report of the grounds for the committee's decisions. Thus the Procurator-General's Department has easy access to the materials assembled in the War Trade Intelligence Department, and is in a position to carry the enquiry beyond the point at which it was presented to the Contraband Committee.

The cases to be presented are of great complexity; the essential documents have generally to be procured from other countries, often after much difficulty and delay, and since the possibility of fabrication can not be ignored, the genuineness of the documents when forthcoming may have to be tested by further investigation.

If, in the course of preparing the case, the Procurator-General is satisfied that he is not likely to succeed ultimately, the court will release the goods upon his application. We would point out that any undue delay can be controlled by an application, on the part of the claimant, to the court, and that such applications have been very few. On the other hand, applications by claimants for postponement of trial have been numerous.

With regard to the prize court itself, we find that it is well able to deal with all, and more than all, the cases ready for trial. Not only are there no arrears, but the court disposes of its business by sitting three or four days a week.

SUMMARY

Such is the system now in use. Described in detail it may seem elaborate and complicated, but the situation which it has been framed to meet is many-sided. In practice it works smoothly. It originated in the fact that methods of search sanctioned by usage in the past are now impracticable, and that the evidence which, in the shape of documents carried on the ship, the neutral shipowner and trader were required to provide, has been robbed by changed conditions of much of its value. Other evidence, therefore, or guaranties must be forthcoming if the rights of the belligerent are to be preserved. The system has been so constructed as to furnish facilities by which, if he is disposed to avail himself of them, the neutral can provide such evidence or guaranties, and so be assured of the minimum disturbance of his trade.

The present system has been built up gradually as the need for it arose. On the outbreak of the war there was little more than the nucleus of an organisation for dealing even with prize. It was inadequate for this purpose owing to the altered conditions to which we have referred, and still more so for coping with the larger situation created by the order in council of the 11th March, 1915. For these reasons not only has the old organisation been expanded, but the new and supplemental machinery, which we have detailed, has been set up. So considerable has been the change that it would be truer to say that a new organisation had to be created to meet the new conditions than that an old and inappropriate one has been applied to work for which it was never intended. A ruling consideration throughout has been the desire to impose on neutral shipping as little inconvenience as is consistent with the interception of the enemy's sea-borne commerce, and it has been very apparent to us in the course of our investigations how steadily the officials concerned have kept this object in view.

It is quite clear that by the establishment of the Contraband and Enemy Export Committees many ships which would otherwise have to be brought into port for discharge are enabled, after a short delay, to proceed upon their course. The committees act as courts of preliminary enquiry, sift the available evidence, and at once release the vessel when the prima facie case is not sufficiently strong. In the absence of such committee, all vessels stopped and all goods brought in would have to be placed in the prize court by the Procurator-General and adjudicated upon by the court.

It is evident from the very nature of the work both of the War Trade Intelligence Department and of the Contraband and Enemy Export Committees, that it tends to become both more expeditious and more effective as their experience and stock of information increase. The time occupied in collating materials and considering them can not, in our opinion, be fairly described as delay, much less avoidable delay. We have no evidence that any increase in the staff of the War Trade Intelligence Department would be of substantial advantage. The work appears to be decentralised as far as it safely can be, having regard to the fact that it depends in a peculiar degree for its efficiency upon the accumulation of experience by individuals. As a matter of fact, the Department is able to supply material to the Contraband Committee as quickly as that committee can deal with it.

Similar considerations apply to the Contraband Committee, and it would, in our view, lose efficiency if it were to sit in two or more divisions.

While the work of the Enemy Export Committee is comparable to that of the Contraband Committee, the questions for its determination are so different that the two bodies could not advantageously be merged in one.

The materials for the decisions of the Enemy Exports Committee are derived from the same source as those of the War Intelligence Department, and are collated and indexed, on a similar system, but by a separate staff. There does appear, therefore, in this respect to be a certain amount of duplication of effort, though the information obtained by the War Intelligence Department covers a far wider field than that required by the Enemy Exports Committee. No delay, however, is imposed upon ships or cargoes by this overlapping, and we have therefore not considered how far, if at all, it can be avoided.

It was not to be expected that a system which has developed as the necessity arose should have worked smoothly and well from the beginning. Until it was complete, there were undoubtedly stages at which delay took place. Ships, for instance, were at first kept an undue time at Kirkwall or Lerwick awaiting the visit of the customs officers. This was due to the shortage of staff, and to the inexperience of the customs officers at that time in the new work required of them. Again, there appears to have been insufficient connection between the Contraband Committee and the Procurator-General's Department, and it would perhaps be true to say generally that there was some lack of co-ordination between the Departments, and that information did not pass freely from one to the other. But these defects were remedied at an early stage.

The congestion at the ports of discharge, which is a persistent source of delay, is consequent upon a state of war. So long as that congestion exists, its effects must be felt by ships brought in under the order in council, as by all others; but they are dealt with in their turn and given at least equal facilities.

Owing to the geographical position of such neutral countries as Holland and Denmark, Norway and Sweden, the task of discriminating between cargoes of enemy or of neutral destination must be beset with difficulties. The various agreements concluded have done much to lessen inconvenience and promote co-operation. As a result of these agreements vessels are detained, either on the high seas or at the port of detention, only for a time sufficient to establish their credentials; they are not called upon to discharge any cargo, and thus not only save their own time, but assist the discharge of other vessels by lessening the congestion at ports. It is, of course, for neutrals themselves to determine whether the restrictions imposed by these agreements are not more than counterbalanced by the advantages which they confer. However this may be, it is, in our opinion, plain that their more general acceptance would still further lessen the occasions of delay.

It is a matter for remark that although the existence and proceedings of this committee have been advertised in the press of this country and of neutral countries, no specific cases of delay have been brought before us by complainants. It may not be unfair to suggest that when complaints of delay have been made they arise rather from objections to the provisions of the order in council of the 11th

March, 1915, than to the machinery by which those provisions are enforced.

We have been unable to discover that, consistently with the effective exercise of belligerent rights, there is any avoidable delay caused by the existing methods of dealing with ships and cargoes brought into port under the order in council of the 11th March, 1915, and we do not offer any suggestions for the improvements of those methods.

In conclusion, we should like to record our appreciation of the zeal and ability of our secretary, the Hon. S. O. Henn Collins, and our assistant-secretary, Sub-Lieutenant Sir F. Newnes, Bart., R. N. V. R.

BRITISH CONTROL OF NEUTRAL SHIPPING THROUGH BUNKERING AGREEMENTS AND BLACK LIST OF NEUTRAL SHIPS

WASHINGTON, December 28, 1916, 7 p. m.

4224. Department has had several interviews with Crawford, of British Embassy, on subject of bunker agreement. Several cases have arisen recently where American steamship lines have been told that they could not charter or use ships of other neutral countries, which ships had signed bunker agreement, unless American company agreed to bind not only chartered ships but also all the ships owned by the American company. Careful examination of bunker agreement and statement of subordinate British official indicates an intention to secure control of all neutral shipping through so-called agreement. If the agreement were limited to the chartered ships which signed agreement, Department could understand position of British Government, but the attempt to control American ships not requiring British facilities is entirely unreasonable and can not possibly be permitted by this Government. Crawford states he has cabled in detail to his Government views of the Department. Investigate subject and report as promptly as possible any information you can gather.

4232. Colombian Maritime Co. (Ltd.), New York corporation, president of which states no belligerent capital of any description is employed in its business, complains its steamship Balboa placed on black list. British Consul General, New York, explains to company this action taken because vessel carried from Buenaventura to Canal Zone goods consigned to Schutte-Bunemann & Co., New York, which is understood to be on black list. President of company represents British Government have refused coaling privileges to other vessels desired to be chartered by company because of this blacklisting Balboa; that it is feared agents Balboa, as well as shippers who may ever have occasion use other means transportation, will discontinue patronage Balboa, through fear being blacklisted if patronage continued. It appears cargo which resulted in blacklisting was carried on initial trip in which Balboa entered into competition with Pacific Steam Navigation Co., British concern, which had previously enjoyed monopoly carrying business between Buena-ventura and Canal Zone, and that consequently any disadvantage caused Balboa will occasion corresponding advantage to British concern. Bearing in mind neutral character commerce between South America and United States, attention British Government should be recalled to following statements in its note October 10,¹ which do not seem to be entirely consistent with action in this case: First. "Government United States can feel confident this system of prohibitions will not be carried further than is absolutely necessary." Second. "To allow it to interfere with what is really genuine neutral trade of country with which we desire closest commercial intercourse, would be contrary to British interests." Third. "Self-interest alone would render His Majesty's Government anxious not to place upon statutory list names of any firms which carry on genuine bona fide neutral trade." Mention may also be made of British Government's disavowal of intention "merely to foster their own trade at the expense of that of neutral countries."

Communicate with the Foreign Office in the sense of the foregoing, and say that since it is readily perceivable that the effect of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as apparently applied in this case, is inflicting great and undeserved injury on neutral citizens and commerce, and since this action of the British Government appears to be contrary to the British declarations and assurances regarding the black-list measures, this Government believes that, upon a reconsideration of the case, the Balboa will be removed from the black list.

Unofficially in the course of conversation he said he was trying to prepare also a comprehensive statement which would cover as many cases of this kind as possible and explain fully the position of his Government and the principle on which it is proceeding. He went on to say in this private conversation that the whole trouble was at bottom a submarine trouble. European neutral shipping companies whose ships normally ply between England and continental countries are alarmed by German submarines and seek business on the American side of the Atlantic. These measures of bunker agreement and objections to chartering are meant to discourage such European neutral ships from deserting European waters.

I remarked that his purpose was obvious but that the trouble was with his methods. But I felt sure we should welcome such a comprehensive statement.

The foregoing gives the key to the British action, and they use bunker agreements and such like devices in their effort to justify their action. Their comprehensive statement, so far as I can see, can hardly be bomb proof.

I ventured to suggest that he can not charter and insure Scandinavian ships himself and thus in a practical way avoid this kind of trouble. I venture also to suggest to the Department as a purely practical measure the encouragement of American coal merchants to provide coal for American ships at some American West Indian port.

I shall insist on prompt answers to each of your instructions.

One of the conditions of British bunker agreements with neutral shipowners is that such shipowners undertake not to surrender the control of any of their vessels to a third party without the previous consent of British Government, given only if such third party subscribes to the same conditions. Since the large majority of neutral shipowners in all European countries have accepted these conditions, it is concluded that they are found in practice advantageous to such shipowners. Regarding American shipping firms British Government has done nothing more than to advise them of the actual conditions in bunker agreements with neutral European shipowners to be followed in cases where latter desire to charter their vessels to third parties. Since a very considerable number of American firms have voluntarily expressed their willingness to subscribe to these conditions it would appear that they are satisfied some positive advantage will accrue to them from their acceptance. British Government is, of course, desirous that American shipping firms should consult it as to the trade in which vessels in their service may be engaged in the light of the possibility that such ships may be employed to supply enemy commerce raiders as happened in 1914 on various occasions. The use of the word "control" however puts the entire question into a legal and controversial channel out of which British Government would prefer to keep it. It is hoped that British policy may be now more clearly understood in view of present discussion of the matter between State Department and British Embassy.

Reported that committee representing Entente Allies formed at London to supervise and control chartering neutral steamships plying between Allied and neutral ports, and that rates acceptable to that committee must be agreed to as a condition precedent to obtaining bunker coal in England. Investigate, and if this or similar measure actually in effect or contemplated give briefly your opinion as to probable effect upon American shipping and ocean freight rates.

5577. Your 4364, January 30, 4 p. m. Am informed by competent private authority that committee referred to propose to fix charter rates and in certain cases indicate persons of Allied nationality whom they approve as charterers of neutral vessels. It is probable that type of cargo and voyage will also be stipulated. Neutrals may bid against the price set for Allied charterers and, provided they are willing to perform the stipulated service, will probably be able to obtain the ship in question, other things being equal. British coal will be given only where conditions set by committee are met by neutral charterer. It is hoped by these measures to concentrate any neutral tonnage coming into the market on services most needed by the Allies and to regulate the movement of freight by the reduction of ballast voyages.

It is hoped the plan will reduce ocean freights and apart from the effect of possible high neutral charter bids it will probably do so.

WASHINGTON, March 20, 1917, 4 p. m.

4566. Department's 4400, February 5, 9 p. m. The changes in international circumstances since the date of the telegram noted seem to suggest the expediency and desirability of definitely disposing of the question of goods of German and Austrian origin detained at neutral European ports by a general or blanket permit to cover all merchandise of American destination which arrived at such ports prior to June 1, 1916, without other qualification. Regardless of conditions of purchase the Department is unable to see how the release of these goods can benefit the German sellers, but it is plain that their continued detention will, on the other hand, damage the interested American owners. Through the undertaking given by Great Britain, whereby uninterrupted shipment was allowed merchandise proven to have been bought and paid for prior to March 1, 1915, goods to the amount of some $14,000,000 were released. It is thought that the value of merchandise remaining is approximately $3,000,000, a considerable portion of which is detained because of expiration of time limitation imposed. There has always been a certain amount of controversy about the sufficiency of evidence which formed the basis of rejections of applications in a fair number of other cases and the Department has been compelled to meet much criticism from interested quarters because of its inability to influence the British authorities in making more liberal decisions. Aside from these considerations much of the merchandise involved is subject to deterioration and the owners will have to meet losses caused thereby in addition to heavy storage costs. The Department believes that the release of this merchandise at the present time will be productive of much good and it hopes that the British Government will let itself be influenced by the considerations specified, which you are instructed to emphasize in your further unofficial endeavors to make the general arrangement about which you were instructed on February 5.

*The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Balfour) to

LONDON, March 5, 1917.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I have given careful consideration to the note which your excellency was good enough to address to me on the 12th ultimo (No. 2954) representing to me the desire of certain American firms to obtain permits from His Majesty's Government to enable them to ship from Rotterdam goods contracted for and purchased by them.

2. I have assumed that the goods in respect of which facilities are desired have originated in countries with which His Majesty's Government are at war, although your excellency's note does not contain any explicit statement to that effect, as in any other event His Majesty's Government would not presumably be expected to offer any special facilities.

3. Without certain further particulars in regard to the exact scope of the request now made by your Government, and in regard to the actual circumstances which have prompted it, His Majesty's Government find it difficult to formulate any definite reply to your excellency's enquiry.

4. The request, as His Majesty's Government understand it, is that they should make a general statement of the policy which they intend to follow in regard to goods of enemy origin destined for the United States of America and now awaiting opportunity of shipment, and there appears to be a suggestion that this policy should be framed with a view to allowing the shipment of all such goods. The motives for the request are stated to be the changed conditions which have lately come about in the shipping situation and the loss which further delay in the shipment of these goods would put upon the American firms concerned.

5. If the object of the communication which your excellency has made by instructions of your Government is in fact as suggested above, your excellency will doubtless understand that a question of considerable importance would be raised which would demand the most careful consideration on the part of His Majesty's Government, and before proceeding to examine the matter in detail they would be glad to be assured that they have rightly understood the intention of the United States Government.

6. I have the honour therefore to request that your excellency will be so good as to furnish me with an exact statement of the points in regard to which the United States Government desire that His Majesty's Government should give a general ruling or statement, and it would perhaps assist them in considering the matter in all its aspects if an indication could be given of the manner in which the present shipping conditions are held to have affected the situation.

The United States Government would doubtless refuse to support any application for shipment of such goods but your excellency will see from this instance that if any further facilities are to be granted for shipment of enemy's goods from Rotterdam to America the utmost care will have to be exercised to insure that only bona fide applications are granted and that orders of this kind will receive no consideration.

5169. Foreign Office is now considering a recommendation from British Embassy that all German and Austrian goods consigned to firms in this country be released provided (1) they are paid for, (2) they are now at a neutral port, and (3) application for their passage through the blockade shall have been filed with the British Embassy prior to November 1, 1915. Upon fuller consideration of matter it is realized that inasmuch as former requirements did not embrace filing of proof of payment as a condition of release of goods, to do so now would be to institute an entirely new procedure and require reopening of cases in such a way as to cause both Governments much trouble through the series of inquiries that will be demanded. As a result of an informal discussion the British Embassy and the Department are in agreement that the suggested procedure ought to be avoided and that an arrangement should be substituted releasing all goods at neutral ports, leaving the question of delivery and payment therefor, if not already effected, to the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act now pending before Congress and whose passage seems practically assured. The British Embassy, however, feels indisposed to interpose at this stage of the Foreign Office's consideration of the case a proposal which reverses its former recommendation on the subject, but has suggested that you might personally advance and urge the substitution proposed without prejudicing the general question. Considering the Embassy's and the Department's joint desire to dispose of the entire matter with as little regard to detail as possible, you are requested to follow this suggestion as vigorously as possible, assuming full responsibility for the Department's acquiescence in the substitute proposal in case the point is made that the Department has agreed to the plan now under consideration. This matter of importance as Congress is being urged to investigate.

6917. Replying to my representations based on your 5179 [5169?], July 18, 6 p. m., Foreign Office states this matter recently formed subject of telegraphic correspondence with British Ambassador, Washington, who on July 14 reported the anxiety of United States Government that shipment to America be allowed of all German goods now at Rotterdam having been paid for by the American importers, and Sir Spring Rice was informed that to expedite dealing with the matter British Government desired to be furnished with detailed list of such goods giving name of applicant in America, name of vendor in Germany, number of cases, bales, etc., nature of contents, present whereabouts of goods, and their value in each case, but the United States Government's request was understood to refer only to goods for which appraisals were filed with British Ambassador, Washington, before November 1, 1915. Reference is made to the suggestion in your 5169 that the question of delivery and payment, if not already effected, should be dealt with under provision of Trading with the Enemy Act pending before Congress, and it is pointed out British Government have no knowledge of these provisions but presume the act is framed to prevent shipment to America of enemy goods not yet paid for. If so, British Government are ready to consider the proposal on receiving definite information regarding provisions of act and its operation, and Sir Spring Rice has been instructed to suggest that the list as above indicated would prove the best alternative. Foreign Office adds that British Government are sincerely desirous of effecting a satisfactory settlement of this matter and feel confident no serious or essential difference exists between their attitude and that of United States Government. The Counselor for the Department of State (Polk) to the Commercial Adviser of the British Embassy (Crawford)

WASHINGTON, September 26, 1917.

MY DEAR SIR RICHARD: Referring to previous negotiations for the uninterrupted shipment of German and Austrian goods lying in neutral ports, I beg to enclose herewith a list which gives such details regarding these shipments as I understood to be desired by your Government.¹ The details include the names of the American importers and of the German and Austrian vendors, the respective marks of the various packages, the total value of each lot, the names of the warehousemen or storage companies with whom the goods are stored, and remarks, where appropriate, concerning particular pertinent facts.

In giving consideration to the particular cases involved, the Department has adhered strictly to the arrangement which was informally agreed to by us at our conference on the subject on August 6 last, namely, that only the release of importations would be considered that were actually in a neutral port and paid for prior to April 7[6], 1917, the date of this country's declaration of war against Germany.

Practically all the information indicated in the list in reference, except that relating to payment and the names of the vendors, was received from the American Legation at The Hague. Necessarily in many cases the values corresponding to the several shipments are approximations only, but they are believed to be as accurate as the circumstances allow.

The question of payment, where not previously determined in the course of earlier consideration of exceptions to the provisions of the order in council of March 11, 1915, has been carefully investigated in each case, and the list I am now recommending for release embraces only those cases of whose payment there is reasonable certainty. There have been found certain cases payment for which is alleged by the owners, but about whose payment there appears to be reasonable doubt. I have reserved these cases for a later list in order that their consideration may not prejudice prompt action upon the cases first named. I have dealt with these doubtful cases in another letter of this same date, to which I respectfully invite your attention.¹

As this manner of concluding the question of these detained goods has been agreed upon in principle, I hardly feel it necessary to emphasize my interest in having the first list accepted and the goods corresponding thereto released at the earliest moment possible. The owners of these goods are daily importuning the Department's good offices in hastening the release of the shipments, urging in this connection the practical consideration that the shipments consist largely of holiday merchandise whose value to them would be greatly enhanced by their receipt for timely distribution to the local markets before Christmas. Further, the present uncertainties in the matter of transportation between Holland and this country gives added weight to the anxiety to the owners of the goods lest they arrive too late for sale this year.

I might note that the total approximate value of the detained goods at Rotterdam as reported by the Legation at The Hague is $3,956,056 (M. 684,210; Kr. 44,970; Fl. 9,413,258). The list transmitted herewith embracing the cases recommended for release, aggregates $1,725,260. The cases which are reserved for later consideration represent a value of $1,474,300.

For convenience, conventional values of the several foreign denominations used have been employed in arriving at the foregoing values in dollars rather than the rates of exchange currently prevailing in the several cases: marks, $0.238; florins, $0.402; kronen, $0.202; francs, $0.20.

MY DEAR MR. No time was lost in transmitting this statement to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who, in a telegram just received, directs us to acquaint you that His Majesty's Government are happy to give immediate effect to the desire of the United States Government as expressed in your letter. They will accordingly allow to come forward, without interruption on their part, all the merchandise for which such favourable treatment was bespoken in your statement above referred to. They note further that you have reserved seven cases for presentation later as soon as full proof of payment is in your hands. . . .

I may add finally that none of the permits will authorise transshipment at British ports, but will only be available for direct shipments from Rotterdam to the United States.

EXCELLENCY: From time to time during the present war, as your excellency is aware, the Government of His Britannic Majesty have given notice of certain delimited areas of the high seas, designated as "military areas" or "danger areas," within which merchant shipping of all kinds, fishing craft, and all other vessels, were warned that they would be subject to the gravest dangers from mines laid by His Majesty's Government, and from hostile operations, and that they would enter such waters at their peril. This matter was referred to in the Department's memorandum of August 13, 1914,¹ and has been the subject of subsequent correspondence between the American Ambassador at London and the British Foreign Office.

As the question of appropriating certain portions of the high seas for military operations, to the exclusion of the use of the hostile area as a common highway of commerce, has not become a settled principle of international law assented to by the family of nations, it will 1967. Department's 2060, March 10. In a note received to-day from Foreign Office in reference to nondelivery and return of commercial letters sent from the United States to Greece, it is stated that as result of a series of grave acts contrary to neutrality committed by the Royal Government of Greece for the benefit of belligerent enemies and to the prejudice of the Government of the Republic and of its Allies, the latter found themselves compelled, under date of December 7 last, to take certain measures of defense, amongst others the closing and blockade of the territories under the authority of the said Royal Government. Although this measure, of which the Journal Officiel last December gave public notice, involves the seizure and stoppage of all such communications, it seemed possible in the interest of foreign private individuals not to seize their correspondence but order its return to the senders. This practice will come to an end as soon as the necessity for the measure taken shall have disappeared. While awaiting this result the Foreign Office expresses the hope that the Government of the United States will only see in the return of correspondence a manifestation of the constant solicitude of the French Government to restrain as much as possible the difficulties which a state of war unfortunately involves for citizens of countries foreign to the conflict.

WASHINGTON, April 6, 1917.

SIR: The Department has received numerous complaints from American citizens that remittances to persons in Germany, Austria-

Hungary, and to neutral countries, have not reached their destinations, owing to their detention, as it is reported, by British authorities. Many of these complaints have been forwarded to you for investigation and report.

In the particular case mentioned in your despatch No. 5425, of December 13, 1916,¹ special attention is invited to the statement in the British note verbale enclosed therewith that "in these circumstances I regret that it is impossible to forward the packet to its destination as it clearly falls within the class of documents in regard to which both our Governments are, I think, agreed that their transmission by mail confers no immunity from the exercise of belligerent rights." As the Department does not understand exactly what is intended by the words "no immunity from the exercise of belligerent rights," full explanation of the British procedure regarding the detention of drafts, securities, etc., is requested—i. e., whether such drafts are to be returned to the senders; if not, whether they have been seized as contraband and are to be placed in prize court; or whether they are to be detained until the end of the war. In short, the Department desires that you report fully regarding the intended disposition by the British authorities of the detained securities in "the exercise of belligerent rights."

This information is requested for the use of the Department and the senders or owners in this country and not for the purpose of urging the transmittal of the articles to Germany or Austria-Hungary at the present time.

Adverting to this Government's note to Great Britain of May 24, 1916, that "money orders, checks, drafts, notes and other negotiable instruments" may be classed as merchandise,² you are directed, on appropriate occasion, to inform the British Government in any discussion of individual complaints of this character, that this Government reserves all rights in the premises to press claims for unjustified losses or delays that may have been caused to American citizens through the detention of such articles by British authorities.

Similar instructions have been sent to the Embassy at Paris.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Department's instruction No. 1572 of the 7th of last March directing me to obtain from the Foreign Office replies in detail to certain inquiries which have been addressed to the Postmaster General, relative to the arrangements made by the French authorities with regard to detained mail matter.

Representations were made at the Foreign Office, to which a reply has been received, enclosed in copy and translation,¹ stating that such correspondence has been preserved, and that care has been taken in order that eventually it may be forwarded to its destination. With regard to letters seized on the sea, a distinction is made between those containing contraband of war and those which are considered dangerous to the interests of national defense. The first of these categories is immediately referred to the prize council, which does not have to await the end of the war in order to render its decision; and the second category is kept apart until a definite decision can be taken with regard to it.

The Foreign Office adds, however, that the right of detaining such correspondence is in accordance with belligerent rights, as defined in exchanges of views between the American and French Governments.

Although the number of documents, which have been intercepted, is so great that it has not yet been found possible in the majority of cases to bring the prize court proceedings to a conclusion, no claimant has yet availed himself of the right accorded by paragraph 5 of the order in council of 11th March 1915 to institute proceedings for the return of the remittances which he claims.

5761. Your 4476, February 23, 6 p. m. I have gathered from my conversations and [at?] the Foreign Office on this matter that the British Government do not question or dispute the principle we contend for. But their argument I understand will turn on facts in each case. They contend that German military system differs radically from British or American system and that a German reservist is not parallel to an American militiaman. Every such reservist is part of armed forces of enemy, he has an assignment in a definite military unit, he is at call of military authority. Officer reservist's pay begins wherever officers are as soon as they are called. The reservist now detained in Great Britain regards himself I am told as in German army, therefore, the long British argument now in preparation will try to prove that case of reservists is wholly different in German army from reservists in any other army and that they are in fact part of trained and organized force of enemy.

As to continuance of detaining reservists it is increasingly improbable that more will be detained because of physical difficulty of travel, but only for this reason and not because the British Government are likely to change their views. I do not believe they will yield main contention in this respect. I await further instructions.

4747. Your mail despatch No. 5931, March 9.¹ Department is advised that on February 3 last while proceeding from Montevideo to Boston, two neutral ports, American steamer Allaguash was stopped in longitude 35° 40' W. and latitude 13° 32' S. by the British cruiser Amethyst, and visited and searched by Captain Earl of the British cruiser, together with 20 armed men. All hatches were opened, tanks sounded, and ship's papers and cargo thoroughly examined, with the result that everything was found in proper order; however, two firemen, signed on before the American Consul at Montevideo on January 19 in place of two seamen who had mutinied and were paid off in Buenos Aires before the American Consul General, were removed from the Allaguash by the boarding party and taken on board the cruiser. These two men were named Paul Bottcher and Gustav Spengler and are reported to be of German nationality. The Allaguash, after having been detained for five hours, was permitted to proceed on her voyage. Department is advised that the captain protested against the seizure of the firemen because it affected the seaworthiness of the ship, but that the British officer treated the captain discourteously.

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Balfour) to the American Ambassador (Page)

LONDON, May 31, 1917.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I have the honour to inform your excellency that His Majesty's Government have given attentive consideration to the memorandum which you were good enough to communicate to me on the 29th December last in which were stated the views of the United States Government on the questions raised by the removal, effected by the British naval authorities, of certain persons, subjects of a country at war with the United Kingdom, from the United States steamers Henry S., Marcus L. Urann and Ausable. In your note No. 3806 of the 25th ultimo, your excellency requested that the case of the removal of two German subjects from the United States steamer Allagush by His Majesty's ship Amethyst on the 3d February last might be considered together with those just cited.

Having regard to the entry of the United States into the present war as a co-belligerent with Great Britain against the German Empire and to the arrangement proposed in your excellency's note No. 3807 of the 25th April and accepted in my note of the 30th instant, by which the warships of each of the two countries are free to arrest enemy subjects found travelling on merchant vessels flying the flag of the other, His Majesty's Government presume that your Government no longer desire that the persons removed from the ships above mentioned should forthwith be set at liberty. It appears to His Majesty's Government unnecessary in the circumstances to examine the contention of the United States Government that a reservist called, or liable to be called, to the colours of his national army is not to be classed among the combatant persons who might, according to the rule laid down in the ancient treaties quoted in your memorandum and to the provisions of Article 47 of the Declaration of London of 1909, be removed from a neutral ship by a belligerent without prize-court proceedings being taken against the carrying vessel, or the further contention that, if any persons may be so removed, it is only in cases where their destination is enemy territory. It will be sufficient merely to indicate the practical grounds on which His Majesty's Government feel that to accept the view of the United States Government that a belligerent must not interrupt the transport of enemy persons, however clear and unconditional their military or naval character, by a neutral ship without bringing the latter before a prize court, is under the conditions of modern commerce contrary to the interests of all parties concerned.

Your excellency's memorandum sets out the facts in regard to the theory and past practice of the Governments of the United States and of this country in the matter. His Majesty's Government would be prepared to admit the proposition that during the greater part of the nineteenth century the practice of the two countries was not to remove enemy persons from neutral vessels on the high seas without placing such vessels in the prize court. The conditions of passenger traffic by sea have, however, greatly changed, and experience has, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, shown that a reconsideration of the matter may be in the interests both of belligerents and of neutrals. The treaties referred to in Viscount Grey's memorandum of the 15th July last,¹ and enumerated in your reply of the 29th December show that there is warrant in the old practice of many countries for the adoption of a different policy, and the proceedings of the London Naval Conference show that the reasons which press in this direction have secured recognition among the most important maritime states.

The practice followed by British warships during the present war of removing enemy subjects from neutral merchant ships on the high seas while allowing the vessels concerned to pursue their voyages, even if it is a modification of the practice previously followed by Great Britain, is a modification which His Majesty's Government have adopted largely out of regard for the interests of neutral shipping. To detain a vessel and to bring her before a prize court with a view to proceedings to ascertain whether she had been employed by the enemy for the transport of the enemy persons on board, and was liable to condemnation accordingly, would impose great inconvenience and heavy loss on the owner of the ship, on the fellow passengers of the enemy persons concerned, and on the owners of the cargo. A return to the older practice in those cases where no questions affecting the cargo are involved, and where His Majesty's Government have no wish to secure the condemnation of the vessel, would seem to be contrary to the interests of all parties and to be tantamount to ignoring altogether the conditions in which modern passenger traffic by sea is carried on.

In the great majority of cases it is probable that His Majesty's Government would have no wish to press for the condemnation of the ships by the prize court and it would not be their desire to detain the vessels for longer than the period necessary for the removal of the enemy persons on board. In such circumstances they can not believe that any neutral government would prefer that their vessels should be detained and sent in for adjudication by a prize court, in order that the ship's owner in each instance might have an opportunity of establishing that the carriage of any noxious individual on board was quite unwitting on his part.

The practice at present being followed is so clearly to the general advantage that His Majesty's Government do not propose to modify it and send in the (neutral) vessel for adjudication before a prize court except in the case of a neutral country whose government may express a definite wish to that effect, and which may be prepared to come to some understanding that they will not look to His Majesty's Government to compensate the shipowners for the losses entailed.

THE PREVENTION OF RECRUITING WITHIN THE UNITED STATES: THE CASE OF ADDIS AND BLAIR¹

File No. 763.72111R24/30

The British Ambassador (Spring Rice) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1917.

SIR: I have the honour by direction of Mr. Secretary Balfour, His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to have recourse to your accustomed courtesy in order to bring the following facts to the knowledge of the competent authority of the United States Government.

On July 8, 1915, an indictment was found in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California against two British subjects alleging a violation of section 10 of the criminal code relative to enlisting for foreign service.

It will doubtless be within your recollection that the question at issue was the interpretation of the clause in the Neutrality Act as to "hiring and retaining" (section 2 of act of April 20, 1818). It appeared to be the view of the United States authorities that the clause while permitting the collection and despatch to Europe of subjects and citizens of governments which had compulsory military service forbade similar action on the part of British subjects in this country.

As soon as I was informed that the matter had been taken up judicially I applied for a ruling to your Department and was informed that the matter being sub judice the Department must await a regular legal decision. In order to obtain such a decision it was agreed that the facts in the case should be submitted to the court without reserve and by consent. I informed you in my note of July 28, 1915, that I had caused British subjects to be informed that all steps taken with a view to assisting British trained men to return to England must cease pending an authoritative decision. I also informed you that my Government, according to its invariable rule, proposed to take no further action till the judicial remedy is exhausted.²

I venture to bring these facts again to your courteous attention in order that it may not escape your notice that from the date above mentioned—July 28, 1915—till the present moment, this matter has remained undecided. It is unnecessary for me to point out that the fact that no decision has been taken, and no change made in the neutrality laws, has had the practical result of debarring British subjects from the right exercised by other nationals, of assisting other British subjects to return to England for service.

In the opinion of Mr. Secretary Balfour the time has now come when it is his duty to invite your attention to the fact that the delay in rendering the legal decision is such as to give a reasonable ground for diplomatic representation and I am accordingly instructed, with all respect, to submit the question, by this official channel, to the consideration of the United States Government.

CECIL SPRING RICE

File No. 763.72111R24/32

The Secretary of State to the British Ambassador (Spring Rice)

WASHINGTON, April 6, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, in due course, of your note of February 15, 1917, wherein complaint was made as to alleged delay on the part of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in the matter of the trial of two British subjects indicted for a violation of section 10 of the criminal code relative to enlisting men for foreign service, i. e., the case of the United States vs. Blair et al.

A copy of your note was transmitted to the Attorney General of the United States, and I have now the honor to advise you of his reply, in substance as follows:

His Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs is doubtless aware that a delay in the action of a United States court (if such delay exists, which is denied) affords no "ground for diplomatic representation." British subjects in the United States who violate its laws are entitled to no greater privileges with respect to the courts than American citizens, and the rights of American citizens with respect to action of Federal courts are confined to such rights as enure under Federal statutes and under the Constitution.

In the present case, the defendants were tried in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. They were found guilty. The judge rendered a decision (contained in his charge to the jury) construing, adversely to their contention, the statute under which they were indicted. This decision settled the law upon this point, unless and until it should be overruled by a higher court on appeal. After the date of this decision, all persons in this country, whether Americans or otherwise, were bound to obey the law as so laid down. Your excellency has stated that the decision "has had the practical result of debarring British subjects from the right exercised by other nationals, of assisting other British subjects to return to England for service," but it should be borne in mind that the facts relative to British subjects are such as to make them liable to the penalty prescribed if they violate the law of the United States. Similar facts with respect to subjects of other nations would make such subjects equally liable to the same penalty. The terms of the law make no discrimination between nationalities; and if it does not have the effect of preventing certain nationals of other countries from assisting other nationals of their own country to return for service, it is because the facts as to these nationals of other countries are not, or have not been, identical with the facts relative to nationals of Great Britain.

The statement made by your excellency, in your note of July 28, 1915, that you had "caused . . . British subjects to be informed that all steps taken with a view to assisting British trained men to return to England must cease pending an authoritative decision," is acknowledged as an instruction to your countrymen to obey the laws of the United States; and a decision of the District Court of the United States is (until changed by a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, or of the Supreme Court) an "authoritative decision." The decision of the District Court in the present case simply affirms what has already been decided to be the law for many years prior by other district courts of the United States.

Furthermore, the Attorney General desires to point out that in fact there has been in the present case no unreasonable delay whatever, and, moreover, that it has been by reason of the various legal maneuvers of the defendants themselves that decision was not had by the court many months ago.

The indictments were filed July 8, 1915. Owing to defendants' demurrers, trial was not had for three months, viz., on October 18, 1915, and a verdict of guilty was returned October 30, 1915. After motion for a new trial by the defendants, sentence was imposed October 30, 1915. The defendants' appeal was not entered and record filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals until December 20, 1915. The defendants (plaintiff in error) did not file their brief until March 16, 1916. The case was argued March 27, 1916, and the Government was granted leave by the court to file its brief, which was filed September 27, 1916. The defendants filed a reply brief October 5, 1916. Decision was rendered in the case by the Circuit Court of Appeals, February 19, 1917, i. e., within four months after the final brief was filed by the defendants. In view of the size of the docket of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and the very large number of cases argued before that court, the decision was rendered in an unusually short space of time. The court's action was exceedingly expeditious, and contrasts, on this point, exceedingly favorably with the practice of other circuit courts of appeal.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals was disappointing to this Government, owing to the fact that through breach of good faith on the part of the defendants, the court did not decide the substantive point of law presented in the case, but reversed the decision of the District Court on the ground that the method of presentation of the case, i. e., by stipulation of facts, was insufficient. This failure to obtain a final decision was due entirely to the action of the defendants themselves, of which this Government has just ground for complaint.

The British Ambassador (Spring Rice) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, December 14, 1917.

SIR: I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your courteous letter of the 27th of November, in which you are good enough to transmit to me warrants of pardon received from the Attorney General granted to Dr. Thomas Addis and Mr. Ralph K. Blair, convicted by the Federal Court at San Francisco for an infraction of the neutrality laws of the United States, on account of their activities in facilitating the passage to Great Britain of trained British soldiers.

In accordance with your request I have not failed to transmit the warrants to their destination.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter I venture to express the hope that, if there be no objection, an expression of my thanks may be conveyed to the President for his exercise of Executive clemency. I would also beg you, if this be in accordance with precedent, to express, on behalf of this Embassy, a warm acknowledgment of the courtesy and the conciliatory spirit with which this difficult and embarrassing subject has been handled by the Department of Justice, with whom, by and with the consent of the State Department, I have from time to time conferred.

I take this occasion of reviewing in summary form the events which led to the conviction of these gentlemen. When war broke out the problem which presented itself to my Government, in an urgent form, was the collection and transport from foreign countries of the great number of trained British soldiers whose services were required at home. German and Austrian consuls were allowed to make money advances for the return of German and Austrian trained men to their native countries. I had every reason to suppose that my own Government would be accorded equality of treatment. After taking legal advice from the best available authority I caused Messrs. Addis and Blair, who had volunteered their services, to be informed that there was no objection to their assisting in the selection and despatch of trained British soldiers, subjects of Great Britain and resident in this country, who might desire to return home to place their services at the disposal of their Government, provided there was no binding contract to serve on arrival in England. The Department of Justice took a different view of the law and proceedings were instituted. I at once appealed to your Department, urging that it was not in conformity with equality of treatment, or international law, that British subjects should be discriminated against on the ground that compulsory military service was not enforced in Great Britain: I also drew attention to the fact that the United States was in a similar situation and that it was not to be expected that such a discrimination should be made against my country by the one great power which, like ourselves, was not a military nation.

You replied that the interpretation of the law was a matter for the courts to decide and that you could not discuss the matter until the legal remedy was exhausted. You were good enough to place me in communication with the Department of Justice with a view to securing a prompt decision. An agreement was accordingly made with a view to this object. Unfortunately the case broke down on a technical point and it became necessary to order a new trial. I was bound to acquiesce. But the defendants, who were anxious to place their services at the disposal of the British and United States Governments, now that the United States had entered into the war, thought it would be wiser to plead guilty at once and appeal for Executive clemency in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case. They pleaded guilty: and were condemned to pay a fine (without imprisonment). The fine was paid but they were under the disabilities of condemnation for infraction of the law. Their appeal for Executive clemency met with success. And as far as they are concerned the matter is at an end. The legal remedy is thus exhausted and I now have the honour to recommend to your consideration the diplomatic aspect of the case.

Firstly, as to the plea of guilty put up by Messrs. Addis and Blair. It was not in any way an admission of criminal intent and was intended as a mere admission of the facts, submitting them to the action of the courts. So far indeed was there no criminal intent that they gave proof of a very earnest desire to refrain from anything which would be in contravention of the laws of the United States. Their plea was put in entirely on their own responsibility and presumably with a view to avoiding further personal inconvenience and an indefinitely prolonged litigation. It was not done at the instance of His Majesty's Government, in whose eyes the intentions of Messrs. Addis and Blair were altogether innocent. But the courts of the United States have condemned them and have interpreted the law in the sense that the acts done by Messrs. Addis and Blair were illegal.

Secondly, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government the law as thus interpreted is not in conformity with the law of nations or with the equality of treatment which Great Britain has the right to claim, and I have therefore the honour to suggest for the consideration of your Government that if this view appears to them well founded, such amendments may be introduced into the existing neutrality laws as may be judged right and proper, and may establish equality of treatment for the future.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note No. 607, of December 14, 1917, wherein, in acknowledgment of my note of November 27, 1917, transmitting warrants of pardon for Dr. Thomas Addis and Mr. Ralph K. Blair, convicted by the Federal Court at San Francisco for an infraction of the neutrality laws of the United States on account of their activities in facilitating the passage to Great Britain of trained British soldiers, you review the events which led to the conviction of these gentlemen and express the opinion of your Government that the law as interpreted in this case is not in conformity with the laws of nations or with the equality of treatment which Great Britain has the right to claim, suggesting that, if this view appears to this Government to be well founded, such amendments may be introduced into the existing neutrality laws as may be judged right and proper and may establish equality of treatment for the future.

In reply I have the honor to say that, pursuant to your request, the contents of your note have been communicated to the Attorney General for his information and consideration.

TREATMENT OF ARMED MERCHANT SHIPS IN NEUTRAL PORTS—ATTITUDE OF EUROPEAN NEUTRAL COUNTRIES TOWARD AMERICAN ARMED MERCHANT SHIPS

File No. 763.72111/4353

The Secretary of the Treasury (McAdoo) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, December 21, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the instructions to the collectors of customs issued in accordance with your advice, whereby they have to make a report to this Department of the armament of every arriving merchant vessel of a belligerent nation when the armament of that particular vessel has not been previously reported on, and await authority to clear the vessel.

This Department has noticed that the large number of such reports received during the last six months are all substantially the same, and does not recall a case where clearance has been refused. It further appears that delay and expense are entailed upon many of the vessels by reason of having to obtain authorization from Washington for clearance.

Under these circumstances it seems desirable that some plan be devised whereby collectors may not in general be required to request specific authority for granting clearance to armed merchant vessels.

I suggest that this might be accomplished by giving collectors general instructions under which they will continue to report through this Department every arrival and departure of such vessels, but will not require special authorization for clearance unless their examination discloses something of an unusual character.

In this connection I inclose herewith for your information, a copy of a letter dated the 18th instant, from the collector of customs at Boston, requesting that instructions be issued authorizing him to clear any vessel where the conditions are exactly similar to those already reported to the Department in the case of other vessels, it being understood that the assurance of the consul that the vessel is armed for defense only will be received before clearance is issued.¹

Attention is invited to the collector's statement that this authority is requested to obviate the necessity of telegraphing or telephoning to this Department in cases where vessels remain in port but a short time and where it is a serious inconvenience and loss to the steamship companies if clearance is delayed.

In view of the large numbers of vessels which are daily being reported upon, I shall be pleased if you will give this question your early consideration.

By direction of the Secretary.

Respectfully,

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 30, enclosing the report of the collector of customs at the port of Baltimore, concerning the French S. S. L'Erdre, which arrived at that port on December 27 with armament mounted on board.¹

This Department has observed that the armed ships arriving at American ports are in many instances commanded by men of naval experience, and that the gun is served by naval gunners, members of the naval reserve of the respective governments, or "demobilized" members of the Navy. I should be grateful therefore if you would issue instructions to the various collectors of customs to add to their list of points now covered by their reports on armed vessels the additional point whether, in case such naval men form part of the complement of the vessel, they are in the service or pay of the government of the vessel's nationality.

In the case of the French S. S. L'Erdre, you are informed that this Department perceives no objection to the clearance of the vessel so far as the armament is concerned, provided the gunners are not in the service or the pay of the French Government, and that the collector of customs has received from the French Consul General at Baltimore a formal assurance in writing that the gun will be used only for defensive purposes. If, however, the gunners are in the pay of the French Government, clearance should be withheld and the conditions of the service of these men on the L'Erdre reported to this Department for further consideration.

The Secretary of State to the French Ambassador (Jusserand)

WASHINGTON, January 6, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: It has been brought to this Department's attention that on November 8 last, the French S. S. Mississippi fired on a submarine in the English Channel prior to warning or attack by the submarine. This report is virtually confirmed by the affidavits of the first lieutenant, the second captain, and the second lieutenant of the vessel, which is now at the port of New York. The following statement from the affidavit of the second lieutenant is pertinent:

My station was at the stern in command of the gun, and the captain told me to be prepared to fire at the submarine at a range of about 4,000 yards. The captain sent the second captain to the stern to instruct me to fire one shot when he gave the signal. The captain gave the signal by raising his hand and I fired one shot, and reloaded the gun and remained ready to fire another.

The facts before the Department indicate that this action was initiated by the Mississippi and therefore offensive in its nature—a circumstance which might well be regarded as placing this vessel in the class of offensively armed ships, to which this Government is firmly convinced the hospitality usually granted to merchantmen in United States ports may be denied. As, however, this is the first instance of the sort which has come to my Government's notice, and out of regard to the possibility of a mistake in this case, the vessel will be allowed to depart as usual, on your Government's assurance. I would, however, be remiss in my duty if I did not bring this case to your notice with the request that it be brought to your Government's attention, with the opinion of my Government, as herein expressed.

In this relation I attach a copy of instructions said to have been issued by your Government to merchant sea captains, and in force in October and November last on French vessels.¹ These instructions (if genuine) lay the armament on merchant vessels of France open at least to the inference that its purpose is for offensive attack on submarines of the enemy. I have, therefore, to ask that you be good enough to advise me at the earliest moment as to whether these instructions have been issued to the masters of French merchant vessels by your Government and are now in force. I would be grateful if you could inform me on these points as soon as possible.²

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 21, suggesting that some plan be devised whereby collectors of customs would not be required to request specific authority in each instance for granting clearance to armed vessels arriving at ports of the United States.

² There appears to have been no reply to this note.

After very careful consideration of the request contained in your letter this Department has come to the conclusion that, in view of the fact that heavier armament is being placed on the vessels, that men of naval experience are being used to operate such armament, and that incidents have recently taken place tending to indicate the possibility of complications in the matter of armed merchant ships, the present is inopportune to undertake a modification of the plan now in operation.

The Ambassador in Great Britain (Page) to the Secretary of State

LONDON, January 5, 1917.

[Received January 15.]

SIR: With reference to your telegram No. 4216 December 27, 1916, 4 p. m. and my No. 5416 of the 4th instant ¹ in reply, I have the honor to submit the following report. The difficulties in the way of obtaining any reliable information on this subject have been great, and I have not in fact succeeded in ascertaining anything worth mentioning in regard to the reported activities in developing railroad terminals and dock facilities at Halifax, North Sydney, and St. John's, nor on the point of the possible detail of disguised cruisers to protect the lines of trade, but I have gathered privately from an Admiralty source that though the British authorities do not appear to have taken any very definite steps as yet they are undoubtedly considering steps for the further protection of their merchant shipping to meet the increased dangers they apprehend.

The British Government does not appear to know exactly where they stand with our Government with regard to the arming of British merchantmen. In spite of our general pronouncement to the effect that merchantmen may properly be armed for defensive purposes they do not know how this would work out in practice or whether our authorities have laid down specific rules as to what constitutes defensive armament or what such rules might be. They understand in a general way that there is to be a limitation in number and in calibre of guns and that they should be mounted at the stern, failing which that ships might be classed as warships.

The British authorities look for a recrudescence of submarine activity off the American coast as soon as the Allies' reply to the President's note is made public, and they feel it their duty to see to it that their ships are adequately armed to meet this menace since from time immemorial it has been the undisputed right of merchantmen to arm for defense. In old times it was not thought unusual for a merchantman to be armed not merely with bow and stern chasers but with broadsides as well, and the necessity for this sort of armament is greater to-day than ever before, for, whereas in old times a hostile cruiser would be sighted on the horizon and the merchantman would take to flight using her stern chasers for defense, to-day a hostile submarine might suddenly appear on the surface a mile ahead of the merchant ship and if the latter mounted guns only at the stern she would be in no position to defend herself. So much for the number and position of guns.

With regard to the calibre, the Admiralty has knowledge that the new German submarines carry comparatively heavy guns with a range of something like 8,000 yards. A merchantman with guns of less range might just as well be totally unarmed.

A point which seems to me to be of some importance is that the British Admiralty holds that there is nothing in the question as to whether British merchantmen are armed for defense or offense. Whatever the armament might be a merchantman to-day could be armed only for defense, since there is nothing afloat against which she could take the offensive. She can not be armed for the purpose of seeking out and destroying less heavily armed enemy merchant ships since none such is at present on the high seas, and it is not reasonable to suppose that a merchant ship, being without armor—no matter how numerous or how heavy her guns might be—could possibly be so rash as to attack an enemy man-of-war, but a heavy and mobile armament obviously seems necessary for merchantmen to meet the present submarine menace, and, if there is any danger of British merchant ships being refused clearance papers in American ports because of this, they may have to give up using American ports whenever possible.

I do not know that any difficulties have lately arisen in American ports with regard to this matter, but the British disposition appears to be that they can not afford to take the risk of arming their ships properly and then have three or four large ships libeled and interned at New York. This would be too expensive a way of ascertaining the attitude of our Government.

The foregoing should I think be considered in connection with the article I enclose on arming merchantmen from yesterday's Morning Post and with the attached telegram in that newspaper from its Washington correspondent which states that the question of arming merchantmen is being reconsidered by the Neutrality Board, but that the President is opposed to permitting merchant ships to be more heavily armed than at present.¹ This telegram also states that at present merchantmen are allowed two 6-inch guns at the stern but no more.

Another danger in New York Harbor under present conditions is that the municipal regulations appear to make it necessary for all ships entering that port to take up a pilot, who is taken on board outside territorial waters. This compels ships to come practically to a dead stop outside the 3-mile limit and would give a lurking hostile submarine an enormous advantage in attacking. The British Government, however, for obvious reasons has no desire at this time to make any efforts toward inducing neutrals to extend the limits of their territorial waters.

The Collector of Customs at Norfolk (Hamilton) to the Secretary of the Treasury (McAdoo)

NORFOLK, February 17, 1917.

SIR: Acknowledging receipt of departmental telegram of yesterday evening, directing this office to obtain and forward to the Department facts and affidavits regarding newspaper reports that British S. S. Oxonian, now in the waters of this district, sank a submarine about December 28, 1916, I have the honor to report that failing to locate last evening the master of the Oxonian, which is at Newport News, it was ascertained to-day that the master was in Norfolk, and he was requested to visit this office, which he did, accompanied by Mr. W. M. Royds, British Vice Consul.

Upon the usual questions being put to the master of the Oxonian with reference to the gun on board his ship, the master answered these questions as shown by the enclosed.¹

When specifically asked as to what use the gun on the Oxonian was placed on her voyage from Alexandria, Egypt, to Newport News, the master answered that his instructions were to make no statement.

When asked if he fired upon a submarine or other vessel of war before the latter gave warning, he repeated that his instructions were to make no statement, and further declined to make statement of any kind regarding newspaper reports that the Oxonian engaged and sank a submarine about December 28, 1916.

The above facts were reported by telephone to the Department to-day, and the following instructions were received: "Withhold clearance S. S. Oxonian until further orders from the Department. Peters."

This is to acknowledge and confirm receipt of above instructions, which will be carried out.

Respectfully,

No distinction is made between neutral and belligerent vessels nor between merchant vessels armed by private owners or by Government authorities. Merchant vessels armed with more than one cannon have frequently entered Spanish ports within last two years and if armament is obviously for defensive purposes only Minister of State informs me the number of cannon is ignored. Minister further states that no modification of this regulation is now contemplated but that at any moment circumstances may demand a change of policy, in which event the Embassy will be promptly informed.

I drew from Foreign Minister the statement that for the present armed American merchant vessels, whether armed by the Government or by the owners, would be allowed freely to enter and depart from Swedish ports as heretofore. In reply to my inquiry the Minister for Foreign Affairs confidentially stated that Sweden did not care to set a precedent on this question at present, but preferred to await developments, and that in not definitely committing themselves at present, Sweden obviated what might lead to some embarrassment with neighboring countries. I learned to-day from high Swedish official that Danish representative will make a similar reply.

798. Department's 438, March 13, 4 p. m., and circular March 16, 2 p. m. Communication dated March 22 received to-day from Minister for Foreign Affairs containing following information:

By virtue of the Royal Decree of July 30, 1914, the presence of war vessels or vessels assimilated thereto belonging to foreign powers within the territorial waters and the inland waters of the Netherlands is not permitted.

Armed merchant vessels fall within the category of vessels assimilated to war vessels without any distinction being made between the case where the owner of the ship has furnished her with armament on his own authority and the case where the foreign government has placed a military force on board the vessel for her protection.

The Royal Decree does not apply to the colonies of the Netherlands.

Copy of the above-mentioned decree was contained in Legation's despatch No. 120, dated July 30, 1914.¹ The affair of the Princess Melita, a British armed merchantman which was refused admission at Rotterdam until it had disarmed, made an issue by the British Government in connection with obtaining freedom of entry of armed merchantmen into Dutch ports. The Minister for Foreign Affairs informs me to-day that his Government would prefer not to change its laws of neutrality during the war unless a practical necessity arose. Neither English nor French armed vessels have entered any port in Denmark and no permission for such entrance has been asked. If a case arose the Danish Government would then make a decision. The Foreign Minister impressed upon me his Government's great respect for the United States, the delicacy of Denmark's position so near Germany, and his belief that [the entrance of] our country into the war would be a terrible misfortune for Denmark.

In reply I have the honor to say that up to this time no Italian vessel armed fore and aft has yet made application for admission to and clearance from a port of the United States, and the decision of the Government of the United States as to the treatment which will be accorded to an Italian vessel so armed would depend upon the facts presented in the case of each particular vessel. In two or three cases which have occurred of merchant vessels of other Entente powers entering American ports with guns under 6 inches mounted fore and aft, no objection to their stay and departure has been raised by this Government, if, upon investigation, the facts indicated that the vessels were armed for defensive purposes, and the proper consul at the port of entry of such vessels gave a formal assurance that the armament was for defensive purposes only. Your telegram regarding German merchant ships. No German ships in United States ports have been placed under guard and crews interned except one German vessel which came into Norfolk as a prize and subsequently was libeled by the owners and now in the custody of the United States court. German merchant ships merely war bound in United States ports have only been under such surveillance as has been necessary to protect the vessels themselves and the navigation of American waters. In one or two cases where a German vessel has been sunk in the navigable channel, thus being a danger to navigation, the persons responsible have, I am advised, been prosecuted. In view of the practice in the United States and the present critical situation, I venture to suggest that German merchant vessels war bound in Hawaiian ports be not seized by Hawaiian authorities nor their crews taken into custody, and that action against them be limited to legal procedure for violations of law. Such practice would be consistent with the handling of similar cases in the United States and would not subject the Government to criticism for initiating harsh measures.

The Attorney General (Gregory) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Replying to your telephone inquiry as to what action this Department has taken relative to crews of German ships since February 3, I desire to say that on February 2 the Department sent the following telegram to United States attorneys at ports where German or Austrian ships were known by this Department to be in United States waters:

You are especially directed, acting with the collector of customs and the marshal, to take prompt measures against destruction of German ships in waters within your district. It is possible that attempts may be made by their crews to sink or destroy such ships. Your attention is especially called to the following statutes: 30 Statutes 1152, sections 15 and 16; Revised Statutes, 4602; Criminal Code, sections 286, 296, 300. If you have grounds for suspicion of plans to violate, commence conspiracy proceedings at once. Confer with marshal as to appointing such deputy marshals as may be necessary to deal with situation and report fully. Do not hesitate to take vigorous action if situation seems to demand the same.

On February 6 and 7, the United States attorneys at the following points were instructed not to institute any criminal prosecutions, and to dismiss any suits already instituted, as follows:

Do not institute any criminal prosecution against officers of crew of German or Austrian vessels for destruction or injury to machinery until you report fully to me and receive specific instructions. If any suits or arrests based on above action have been instituted, dismiss the same. Proceed under 30 Statutes 1153, section 16, in case vessel has been sunk or is obstruction to navigable waters.

Philadelphia, Pa.
Richmond, Va.
Tampa, Fla.
New Orleans, La.
Portland, Oreg.
Macon, Ga.
Honolulu, Hawaii.
Pensacola, Fla.

San Juan, P. R.
Boston, Mass.
New York, N. Y.
Baltimore, Md.
Houston, Tex.
Seattle, Wash.
San Francisco, Calif.

So far as the Department knows, no criminal prosecutions are pending against the crews of any of the ships in these ports, and any prosecutions that were instituted have been dismissed.

On February 4 instructions were sent to the following United States attorneys to prosecute for any violations of the immigration law, as follows:

Commissioner of Immigration has issued instructions to immigration officers throughout the country and Porto Rico and Hawaii to take into custody all officers and crews of German and Austrian merchant vessels lying in ports of the United States if the crews shall attempt to leave the vessels, and also to arrest and detain any members of such crews who may already have left. You and the marshal are instructed to take all steps that may be necessary to prosecute any violations of the immigration law.

Pensacola, Fla.
Tampa, Fla.
Charleston, S. C.
Wilmington, N. C.
Houston, Tex.
San Juan, P. R.
Honolulu, Hawaii.
New York, N. Y.
Boston, Mass.

Philadelphia, Pa.
San Francisco, Calif.
Seattle, Wash.
New Orleans, La.
Portland, Oreg.
Baltimore, Md.
Richmond, Va.
Macon, Ga.

Later, the Department, on February 7, instructed the United States attorney at Pensacola, Fla., to discontinue any proceedings for violation of section 8 of the Immigration Act.

On February 7, the United States attorney at Wilmington, N. C., was instructed to take no action for arrest of officers or members of the crew.

On February 7, the United States attorney at Seattle, Wash., was instructed to discontinue proceedings for violation of section 8 of the Immigration Act.

On February 7, the United States attorney at Honolulu cabled that he would dismiss all arrests made under the provisions of Revised Statutes, section 4602.

So far as the Department is informed at the present time, there are no criminal proceedings pending, instituted by it against crews for violations of the Immigration Act.

You will note that the Department has issued no instructions to refrain from prosecuting, or to dismiss prosecutions, for violations of the criminal laws relative to the obstruction of navigable channels. It was the intention of the Department to prosecute all persons guilty of violation of these laws, and particularly the officers and crew of the steamer Liebenfels at Charleston, S. C. The United States attorney at Charleston, I understand, is still waiting for specific instructions with regard to this case.

Respectfully,

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence relative to the treatment of German vessels and their crews in Philippine waters,¹ I beg to quote below a cable just received from the Governor General of the Philippine Islands bearing to-day's date:

Referring to telegram from your office of 15th inst., German vessels in Philippine ports are in custody of collectors of customs; have constabulary guards on board and sufficient technical personnel furnished at Manila by United States Navy, and at other ports by customs, to safeguard the vessels and prevent deterioration. All instructions contained in your telegram of February 7 literally carried out immediately on receipt; in fact everything you required had already been done before the receipt, except to notify them that they might dismantle their vessels. The greater part of the officers and crews taken from the German ships in Manila Harbor were, upon written request of German Consul and of their own volition, transported at the expense of the Government to Baguio where they are quartered in government buildings and fed at the expense of the Government. They are perfectly free to come and go as they wish, are not guarded, and are managed by a committee of their own officers. They are apparently well pleased with their condition. The masters of all the vessels in Manila Harbor have filed formal protests against their occupation by our guards. These protests were filed under instructions from their New York office.

This cable is in reply to our cable to the Governor General of the 15th instant, as follows:

Referring to telegram from this office of the 7th instant, what is present status of German vessels and of their crews?

My cable of the 7th, referred to above, was as follows:

It is of utmost importance that it be made plain that German merchant ships have not been seized and that crews are not in any sense imprisoned or interned, but that steps taken are purely for the protection of the harbor and other shipping. Suggest that you inform German Consul that the Insular Government claims no interest in ships and will permit their crews to dismantle them if they desire, but can not permit their destruction in the harbor or at places where other shipping will be endangered. Also that officers and crews of ships be accorded all the rights and privileges of other foreigners temporarily resident in the Islands and be made to understand that their movements are entirely unrestricted, subject only to the common obligation of all to obey the law.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER

SIR: This Legation had already brought to the attention of your Department the fact that German merchant ships which are interned in Honolulu had been seized by the local authorities, and their officers and crews removed.

Upon intervention of your Department the United States troops have been removed from these ships and their crews released.

I am now informed by Mr. John W. Cathcart, lawyer in Honolulu, that during the stay of United States troops on these ships, considerable looting has been done. The respective cable, dated February 18, reads as follows:

Captains all vessels now preparing statements showing detailed items of looting which should be ready next week. Statements will show many articles missing and cover many pages, for [?] too much to cable. Generally speaking great looting took place of bed and table linen, tableware, provisions, engine room stores, wines, and other articles belonging to vessels, also clothing and personal effects, American and foreign moneys, and other valuables belonging to crews. Judging from reports already received, impossible now to approximate losses but believe will run into thousands of dollars; will mail detailed statements at earliest possible moment.

I am furthermore informed by the Hamburg American Line in New York that German ships in Manila and Colon have also been seized, their crews arrested, and U. S. soldiers put on board. It seems that looting has been done also on these ships since the crews were removed. The Hamburg American Line wired me under date of February 16 as follows:

Message from our agents in Manila reads: Owing to pilferage and damages committed on some steamers by Government guards, we consider it necessary to take inventory all ships before customs authorities, fixing liability prior to making application for return of crews aboard message ends. We (Hamburg American Line) have instructed our agents at Honolulu and Manila as follows: Take inventory of ships effects on basis claims for articles looted by troops. Status of all our ships and crews at all ports except Manila and Colon now satisfactorily arranged as crews returned to ships without restrictions and guards removed from ships. At Manila and Colon, ships in charge of troops or guards and officers and crews removed. Manila advises further: Crews removed to Baguio contrary to press cables local Government has no instructions return ships. According to message Feb. 4 from our agents at Colon officers and crews removed from ships captains and wives interned at Hotel Washington officers and crews in Fort Randolph. Today Colon advises us Governor Panama Canal replies to your recent inquiry at no time has been intention definitely seize ships on contrary vessels were taken and being held simply as safety measure protect channels structure of Canal until he receives advice to contrary from Washington deems preferable allow matters remain as are at present.

I have the honor to submit these facts to your excellency and would be obliged, if instructions could be given that investigations are made immediately in Honolulu, Manila and Colon.

WASHINGTON, March 10, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your two notes of February 21 and 24, 1917,¹ in regard to the alleged seizure of German merchant ships at Colon, Honolulu, and Manila, and to looting said to have taken place during the occupation of the vessels by the American authorities.

Concerning the alleged seizure of German merchant ships, it may be pointed out that the measures taken by the authorities of this Government in placing guards on the vessels and detaining their crews were only for the preservation of American life and property, or in order to prevent possible obstruction of navigation. This action was taken in accordance with the laws of the United States, and never has there been on the part of this Government a seizure of German vessels in the sense of a transfer of ownership.

I beg to advise you further that this Government has requested an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the present status of the vessels. It now appears (1) that the guards placed on board the vessels at Honolulu have been removed; (2) that the crews of the vessels at Colon who objected to detention have been released and that two of the men who took advantage of this privilege subsequently returned voluntarily to the detention quarters. Also, in order properly to safeguard the Canal it is considered necessary to retain charge of the vessels under the authority of the Governor. Furthermore, (3) the vessels at Manila, whose machinery, except in one instance, was seriously damaged by their crews and preparations made for their sinking, have been taken in charge by the Governor General of the Philippines in accordance with the law to prevent or suppress lawless violence. I may state, in this connection, that when their crews were removed they were transported to Baguio upon the written request of the then German Consul, where they are not guarded and are apparently well pleased with their condition.

With regard to the looting of the vessels at Honolulu and Manila, I beg to advise you that the matter is being investigated by the

All complaints are being carefully investigated and complainants advised that articles will be restored if recovered and suitable recompense will be made for articles found to have been lost if any government agents or guards responsible.

It would appear that the vessels are now under the control of their German crews, except that supervision over them is exercised by the United States customs officials.

The collection of statistics requires the publication of totals of goods exported. There seems to be no reason, however, why publication of the manifests of individual vessels should be made, and under the circumstances such publication seems undesirable. I have given instructions that the practice of publication of manifests of particular vessels, where it exists, be discontinued, and that publication of export figures be given only by total articles and by countries.

MEMORANDUM

With reference to the British Embassy's memorandum of March 23, 1917, communicating the request of the British Government, that, in the present circumstances, the publication of information regarding the sailings of Allied vessels be withheld until at least seven days have elapsed after the departure of the vessels, the Department of State advises the British Embassy of the receipt of a letter of April 3, 1917, from the Secretary of War, in response to a letter from the Department of State requesting official confirmation of the understanding of the Department of State that information regarding the cargo and destination of vessels passing through the Panama Canal is no longer made public.

The Secretary of War states that it has been decided by the Panama Canal authorities, as a precautionary measure, to omit from the Panama Canal Record the weekly and monthly reports of traffic, and to suppress generally data which indicate the bulk and direction of traffic through the Canal and its terminal ports and might assist hostile movements against it. It is added, however, that the statistical records will be kept as before, and that whenever it is deemed advisable to resume their publication summaries will be prepared to cover the period during which publication shall have been omitted.

Rules of January 24, 1917, Governing the Granting and Issuing of Passports in the United States

1. [Same as rule 1 of January 12, 1915.¹]
2. [Same as rule 2 of December 17, 1915.²]
3. [Same as rule 2 of January 12, 1915.¹]
4. [Same as rule 3 of January 12, 1915.¹]

5. Applications.—(a) Affidavit of applicant.—A person who is entitled to receive a passport, if within the United States, must submit a written application, in duplicate, in the form of an affidavit, to the Secretary of State. If he is going to a belligerent country he should submit his application in triplicate. The application should be made by the person to whom the passport is to be issued and signed by him, as it is not proper for one person to apply for another.

The affidavit must be made before a clerk of a Federal court or of a State court authorized by the act of Congress of June 29, 1906, to naturalize aliens, within the jurisdiction of which the applicant or his witness resides, and the seal of the court must be affixed; but in any place where there is a Federal court the affidavit must be made before a clerk of such court, unless there is in such place an agent of the Department of State, in which case the Secretary may, in his discretion, require the application to be made before such agent. It is always preferable that the application be made at or near the place where the applicant resides. Where the application is not made in such place, the applicant must give the name and address of a reputable professional or business man having his office or place of business in the place where the applicant resides, so that the clerk of court, or the Department's agent, or the Department itself, may make the necessary inquiries of such person. Where it is necessary to make such inquiries by telegraph, the applicant will be required to bear the expense thereof. Clerks of courts and the Department's passport agent in New York City will be expected to observe the above rules with particular care.

The applicant must state from what point he intends to leave the United States, and the date of his intended departure, and also, if by a port of the United States, by what ship he intends to sail. The clerk of court or agent of the Department of State before whom the application is made must mail it directly to the Department of State.

Each application must be in the hands of the Department of State or its agent at least five days before the applicant's departure from the United States.

If the applicant signs by mark, two attesting witnesses to his signature are required. The applicant is required to state the date and place of his birth, his occupation, the place of his permanent residence, and within what length of time he will return to the United States with the purpose of residing and performing the duties of citizenship. He is also required to state the names of the foreign countries which he expects to visit and the objects of his visits thereto. The latter statement should be brief and general in form, thus: "Commercial business."

The applicant must take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

The application must be accompanied by a description of the person applying, and should state the following particulars, viz: Age, ----; stature, ---- feet, ---- inches (English measure); forehead, ----; eyes, ----; nose, ----; mouth, ----; chin, ----; hair, ----; complexion, ----; face, ----; special identifying marks, if any (scars, birthmarks, etc.), ----.

(b) Letters from commercial concerns, etc.—A person who applies for a passport in order that he may go abroad on commercial business must support his application with a letter from the head of the firm in the interest of which he intends to go abroad. Such letter must state not only the names of the foreign countries which the applicant expects to visit and the object of his visits thereto, but, in addition, whether or not the applicant is a salaried employee of the firm concerned and, if so, how long he has been known to the firm and for what period of time he has been in their employ. If the applicant is going abroad on a commission and not a salary basis, that fact also should be specifically stated. If the applicant for a passport is himself the head of the concern for which he is going abroad, he must submit a letter from another officer of the concern or a letter from the head of some other reputable concern who has had business transactions with the applicant and has knowledge of the business in which the applicant is engaged and the object and necessity of his proposed trip abroad.

The applicant who is going abroad for any purpose other than commercial business must satisfy the Department of State that it is imperative that he go, and he should submit satisfactory documentary evidence substantiating his statement concerning the imperative-ness of his proposed trip.

In view of the necessity of exercising the greatest possible care to prevent the fraudulent procurement of passports, the Department of State will be obliged to hold firms responsible for letters which they issue to applicants for passports.

(c) Photographs.—The application must also be accompanied by triplicate photographs of the applicant, on thin paper, unmounted, and not larger in size than 3 by 3 inches. If the applicant is going to a belligerent country, he must submit four copies of his photograph. One must be attached to the back of each application by the clerk of court or the Department's agent before whom the application is made, with an impression of such officer's seal so placed as to cover part of the photograph but not the features, and the other sent loose, to be attached to the passport by the Department. The loose photograph must be signed by the applicant across its face, so as not to obscure the features, and the signature thereon must correspond to the applicant's signature affixed to the application. Photographs on cardboard or postcards will not be accepted.

(d) Witness.—The application must be supported by an affidavit of at least one credible witness, who has known the applicant at least two years, stating that the applicant is the person he represents himself to be and that the facts stated in the application are true to the best of the witness' knowledge and belief. This affidavit must be made before the clerk of court or the Department's agent before whom the application is executed, and the witness must accompany the applicant when he makes his application. The witness must be an American citizen, established in a recognized profession or business and having his office or place of business within the jurisdiction of the court or the Department's agent (e. g., a clergyman, lawyer, physician, banker, broker, real-estate dealer, or merchant). The witness, in signing the application, should state the nature of his profession or business and his professional or business address. The applicant or his witness must be known to the clerk of court or the Department's agent before whom the application is executed or must be able to satisfy such officer as to his identity and the bona fides of the application. No lawyer or other person will be accepted as witness to a passport application if he has received or expects to receive a fee for his services in connection therewith.

16. Surrender of old passports.—An applicant for a new passport who holds an expired or unexpired passport or passports should submit the latter to the clerk of court or agent of the Department of State before whom he executes his application for a new passport. In such case the clerk of court or agent of the Department of State will cancel the old passport by cutting out a piece of the seal thereon and stamping, or writing in indelible ink, the word "Canceled" across the face of the passport, which may then be returned to the applicant. After canceling an old passport the official who takes the application should make a notation on the margin thereof, giving the number and date of issuance of the passport canceled.

GENTLEMEN: The rules under which the presumption of expatriation arising under the provision of the second paragraph of section 2 of the act of March 2, 1907, may be overcome are set forth in the circular instruction of April 19, 1907, entitled "Expatriation,"³ as amended by the circular instruction of May 14, 1908.⁴ Special rules applicable to special countries are laid down in other circular instructions. Attention is also called to the General Instruction No. 466 of June 1, 1916, entitled "Proposed Return to the United States of Naturalized Citizens Against Whom the Presumption of Expatriation has Arisen."⁵ The present instruction is intended to amplify and explain, rather than to amend, previous instructions concerning this subject. In particular the Department desires to emphasize the importance of having expatriation cases more fully investigated by diplomatic and consular officers, and reported with greater particularity and care. In some instances it appears that the affidavits which naturalized citizens submit to overcome the presumption of expatriation are taken by diplomatic and consular officers and forwarded to the Department in a merely perfunctory way and without any real inquiry into the true facts and merits of the cases. Thus it sometimes happens that naturalized citizens who have brought upon themselves the presumption of expatriation by protracted foreign residence, and are not really residing abroad for any reasons which make it possible for them to overcome the presumption under the standing regulations, are allowed to evade the law by submitting affidavits in which the facts of their cases are concealed or misstated, while other persons similarly situated, who submit true statements as to the causes of their foreign residence, are cut off from the protection of this Government, under the statutory provision in question.

In endeavoring to ascertain whether the residence abroad of a naturalized citizen in his native land or elsewhere is of a permanent character it is pertinent to inquire whether he owns the house in which he is living or has leased it for a long term of years, or whether on the contrary he has rented it for a short term only or is merely boarding or visiting friends or relatives. It is also important to ascertain the nature of the occupation which the person concerned is pursuing abroad, with particular regard to the question whether such occupation appears to have the character of permanence.

When a naturalized citizen alleges that he is residing abroad to promote American trade and commerce an effort should be made to ascertain the real nature of the business in which he is engaged, and particularly whether the promotion of American trade and commerce is principally involved and forms the bulk of such business. The name and address of the American firm represented should be stated. In a case in which it is alleged that the firm represented is American, but the facts indicate that the firm's domicile is abroad, the proportion of its capital owned by Americans should be stated and the nature of the business carried on by the concern should be explained. In doubtful cases an inspection of the place of business and the books of the concern may be necessary.

Among the most common excuses for protracted foreign residence are health, education, and the necessity of taking care of aged parents. As to the first, a certificate of a reputable physician should always be required, but it is obviously impossible to place absolute confidence in such certificates. Persons having perfectly sound health are rare, and nearly every person can obtain a certificate of a physician stating that he suffers from ill health of some kind. The general physical appearance of the person in question should be given some consideration, but it is quite important, in this regard also, to ascertain the nature of his occupation, and whether it is of a character which a person living abroad principally because of ill health could reasonably be expected to follow. It is also obviously important to consider whether the climatic or other conditions of the place where the person resides are especially beneficial to those who suffer from his particular complaint, or whether residence in the United States would not be quite as beneficial.

With regard to the matter of education it may be observed that the presumption of expatriation may be overcome by a person who shows that he is residing abroad temporarily to avail himself of special advantages, offered by the place of his residence, for the particular studies which he is pursuing. It may occasionally happen that a parent may satisfactorily explain his own protracted foreign residence by showing that he is living abroad to enable a child to pursue special studies in music, art, or some other branch of culture which can not be pursued in the United States; but as a rule it is not sufficient for a parent to show that he is residing abroad to educate his children in the ordinary courses of study, which could be followed just as well in the United States. Generally speaking such a reason for foreign residence would seem to strengthen, rather than overcome, the presumption of expatriation, for it is undoubtedly expedient as a rule that children who are to reside in this country and perform the duties of American citizenship should be brought up in this country and given an American education.

The Department has sometimes held that persons have overcome the statutory presumption of expatriation by showing that it was necessary for them to reside abroad to take care of aged and infirm parents and that they intended to return to the United States to reside when such necessity ceased to exist. In these cases the Department has held that "an unforeseen and controlling exigency" had prevented an earlier return to this country. It is important in a case of this kind to ascertain whether the parents are so situated that they actually need the son's presence, whether the desire to care for them is the true, determining cause of the son's protracted foreign residence, and whether he entertains a definite intention to return to the United States as soon as he can properly do so. It is essential to ascertain the attendant facts and circumstances in order to distinguish bona fide cases of the kind mentioned from cases of persons who return to reside with their parents merely for the purpose of inheriting property, or succeeding to the farming or other business carried on by their parents. In these cases, as well as the other cases referred to above, it is important to ascertain whether the persons concerned, upon going abroad, disposed of or retained such property or business as they might have acquired in the United States; also to ascertain whether, on the one hand, they left their families in this country or, on the other, have taken their families with them abroad or have married and begun to raise families since going abroad. The relevance of such facts hardly needs explanation.

When a person alleges that he will return to the United States when the present war is over special care should be exercised to ascertain whether the actual difficulties of travel or other conditions arising from the war prevent a return to the United States, or whether the war is seized upon as a convenient excuse to prolong the foreign residence.

When an applicant for an American passport or consular registration certificate is of military age his case should be examined with special care, with a view to ascertaining whether he has a true intention of returning to the United States and is temporarily residing abroad for some reason which brings his case within the scope of the rules whereunder the presumption of expatriation may be overcome, or whether the contrary is true and he wishes to obtain American protection merely to enable him to escape performance of military service in the country of his residence.

Diplomatic and consular officers in reporting expatriation cases to the Department should not only take pains to see that the pertinent facts are fully and correctly set forth, but should also be careful to state as definitely as possible their opinions as to whether the evidence is sufficient, under the rules, to overcome the presumption of expatriation. Unless expatriation cases are reported as indicated above it is difficult for the Department to make satisfactory decisions.

The Assistant Attorney General (Warren) to the Counselor for the Department of State (Polk)

[Extract]

WASHINGTON, January 11, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. POLK: I have just learned to-day by telegram from the United States attorney that the jury in the Bopp neutrality cases in San Francisco has found all five defendants guilty on both indictments—that is, guilty of conspiracy to prepare a military expedition, and guilty of a conspiracy to restrain interstate and foreign trade by blowing up bridges and ships in violation of the Sherman Law. The five defendants were Consul General Bopp, the Vice Consul, Von Schack, the Attaché of the Consul, Von Brincken, the Consul General's spy, Charles C. Crowley, and another of his tools, Margaret Cornell. . . .

Yours very cordially,

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1917.

[Received January 13.]

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: The Imperial Consul General Franz Bopp has been relieved by me from his office at San Francisco, Calif., until further orders. I have temporarily placed in charge of the office the Imperial Consul General Erich Zoepffel, now at Seattle, Wash. The Imperial Consul Emil Ohrt, formerly at Kobe, Japan, now detailed to the Consulate at Cincinnati, Ohio, will provisionally take charge of the Consulate in Mr. Zoepffel's place.

I have the honor to ask that Herr Zoepffel at San Francisco and Herr Ohrt at Seattle be provisionally authorized to discharge their consular duties.

Vice Consul von Schack, at San Francisco, has likewise been provisionally relieved from his office.

EXCELLENCY: This Department is in receipt of information from the Department of Justice that Mr. Franz Bopp, Consul General of your Government at San Francisco, Calif., has been indicted and convicted in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California for violation of the criminal laws of the United States.

Under these circumstances, it is my regrettable duty to inform you that Mr. Franz Bopp has ceased to be persona grata in the office of Consul General of Germany at San Francisco.

I have the honor, therefore, to enclose the formal revocation and annulment of the exequatur issued to him in that capacity.¹ The appropriate officers of this Government have this date been informed of this action and I shall be obliged if you will make it known to Mr. Bopp.

I shall be further obliged if, in communicating this information to your Government, you will be so good as to express the Department's regret at this occasion which makes its action necessary and to announce the pleasure with which the Department will receive a request from your Government for the recognition of a new consul general at San Francisco.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note No. B 473 of January 12 in regard to the disposition of Mr. Franz Bopp, formerly Consul General at San Francisco, Mr. Erich Zoepffel, lately at Seattle, Mr. Emil Ohrt, lately at Cincinnati, and Mr. Eckhard von Schack, lately at San Francisco. It is understood that Mr. von Schack, who was indicted and convicted, together with Consul General Franz Bopp and others, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California for violation of the criminal laws of the United States, has not been recognized by this Government since July 13, 1914, when provisional recognition was accorded him as being in charge of the German Consulate General at San Francisco, during the absence of the Consul on leave for six months.

Owing to the new assignments of Mr. Zoepffel at San Francisco and Mr. Ohrt at Seattle, provisional recognition is hereby accorded them as being in charge of the consular offices of your Government in those cities pending the receipt of the commissions of formally appointed officers and the issuance of their exequaturs.

the former German Ambassador when he left this country. We had then added that, according to information given verbally by your Department to this Legation, German Consul General Bopp, Vice Consul von Schack, and Chancellor Kaufmann, all of whom located at San Francisco, were detained by the court and could not leave the United States. In reply to this, the German Government has addressed to the Swiss Legation at Berlin the following note, dated February 22:

As the Swiss Legation communicates, the American Government is retaining in San Francisco German Consul General Bopp, Vice Consul von Schack, and Chancellor Kaufmann because of legal proceedings against them. The German Government has only incomplete and unofficial news regarding these proceedings. It is not in a position to judge whether, against its firm conviction, these three officials are really guilty of offenses against American laws. The latter seems improbable inasmuch as they are three officials of the same office, and it is hardly to be presumed that three members of the same office would commit in common the offense of transgressing the limits of the competency attached to their official position and infringing upon the laws of the United States. It seems more logical to believe their alleged offense to be the result of an erroneous conception on the part of the prosecuting officials of certain official acts of the former. However, the German Government fully agrees with the United States Government that persons violating the laws of the country, whether private citizens or officials, have to be treated according to these laws and that they cannot be exempted from prosecution. On the other hand, the German Government believes that the American Government is not unaware of the difficulties existing at the present moment in adhering to and applying this principle. It is of the opinion that the best solution of these difficulties would be found in an agreement that in view of the breach of diplomatic relations and the attendant discontinuance of consular rights and immunities the prosecution of actions taken in an official capacity and which presumably exceeded their rights be stayed. Practically, this would mean that legal proceedings against the three German officials would be deferred until after the re-establishment of diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States. The German Foreign Office prays the Swiss Legation to inform the United States Government of this opinion and to invite the latter to ask the three officials whether they will declare that after the re-establishment of diplomatic relations they will place themselves at the disposal of the American courts for the completion of the case against them. In case the three officials agree to this declaration and the United States Government accordingly agrees to free departure from the United States of the three men, the German Government hereby expressly assures that it will oblige the three officials to place themselves at the disposal of the courts of San Francisco after the re-establishment of diplomatic relations. Should the United States Government hesitate to allow the three officials free return to Germany, then the German Government proposes to approach a neutral government, perhaps the Spanish or the Swiss, to receive the three men during the suspension of diplomatic relations between the two countries. The neutral government in question would then be asked by the German Government also to oblige the three officials to return to the United States after the re-establishment of diplomatic relations.

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1917.

SIR: I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of your note of February 28, transmitting the proposal of the Imperial German Government that Messrs. Bopp, von Schack, and Kaufmann be allowed freely to leave this country on the understanding that they will, upon the resumption of diplomatic relations, return to the United States and place themselves under the jurisdiction of the courts to stand trial on the charges which have been made against them.

I note the intimation in the German Government's communication that under existing circumstances the Government of the United States would experience difficulty in affording a fair trial to these German officials. I can not allow this unwarranted assumption to pass without comment.

Not only is there no ground for the doubts expressed on this score, but the German Government must have been able to observe for itself that in the treatment accorded Count von Bernstorff and to German officials and subjects generally the American Government and people have shown the most scrupulous regard for their obligations of protection and courtesy. In view of your opportunities for observing German subjects and interests in this country, I need hardly assure you that nothing has occurred to warrant any doubt as to the ability or willingness of the courts of this country to administer justice with their usual fairness.

I can not see that any reasons exist which would warrant this Government in acceding to the rather unusual request of the Imperial German Government and will be much obliged if you will so inform it.

The Minister of Switzerland, representing German interests in the United States, presents his compliments to the Secretary of State, and has the honor to communicate to his excellency text of a cable message received from the Swiss Foreign Office:

According to information [received] new proceedings to be instituted against German Consul General Bopp and Vice Consul Schack, interned Fort McDowell, for alleged violation American neutrality. Imperial Office requests confirmation and eventually counts of charges brought against these two officers. If bail can prevent imprisonment pending trial it is to be charged to German fund.¹

SIR: The Department is in receipt of your letter of October 19, 1917,³ transmitting a memorandum from the Swiss Minister relative to the cases of former German Consul General Bopp and former German Vice Consul von Schack.

In reply to the request for details regarding the present state of the judicial processes in which Consul General Bopp and Vice Consul von Schack are involved, I desire to say as follows:

Bopp and Von Schack were indicted for violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law and for violation of Section 13 of the Federal Penal Code, relative to military enterprises and expeditions within the United States. They were tried by a jury in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, were found guilty, and were duly sentenced to terms of imprisonment and fines. They took an appeal in the cases and were admitted to bail pending appeal. While the appeal was pending, a state of war was declared with Germany, and under the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, relative to alien enemies, Bopp and Von Schack were arrested and interned.

During such internment another and separate indictment was found against Bopp and Von Schack by the grand jury for violation of Section 13 of the Federal criminal laws, relative to military enterprises or expeditions, connected with the Maverick, the Annie Larsen, and the so-called Hindu plots. This indictment related to an entirely different crime from that for which Bopp and Von Schack had been already tried and convicted. They will be put upon trial on the latest indictment sometime during November, 1917.

I desire to say that in no event will this Department assent to the release of these men on bail pending the trial on the indictment, inasmuch as they are now interned alien enemies.

Respectfully,

For the Attorney General:

You may request the German Government to deliver passports to you and your staff, and you will leave Germany as soon as practicable. You and Grew to return to the United States; Wilson is assigned to Switzerland; Kirk to The Hague; Scotten and Osborne to London.

Refer to Department's 2944 of April 28, 1916,¹ and request the Spanish Ambassador to be so good as to care for American diplomatic and consular interests in Germany. The Department has telegraphed to Madrid making this formal request of the Spanish Government.

Refer to Department's 2962 of May 1, 1916, and act accordingly.¹ Department has informed London that you will entrust British interests to Netherland Minister; has informed Tokyo that you will entrust Japanese interests to the Spanish Government; has informed the Serbian Government that the Spanish Ambassador in Berlin will care for Serbian interests; and until the Department has received information from the Roumanian Government you may also entrust Roumanian interests to the Spanish Embassy.

Follow Department's 2944 regarding books, vouchers, and accounts relating to expenditures out of funds belonging to British, Japanese, and Serbian Governments. Follow also same procedure with regard to Roumanian funds.

Destroy special green and green ciphers, and deliver other ciphers to Spanish Ambassador.

Your 4971, January 31.¹ You may lease Embassy for another year, beginning July 1.

Advise all American citizens to leave Germany at once. All Embassy special assistants should accompany you and Grew to the United States.

Direct consular officers, including agents, to place consulates and archives in custody of representatives of Spain and proceed with American clerks, including war-relief clerks and George Vaze, to United States where they will be given leave of absence in Department's discretion; except Quarton and Gray who should report to Consul General at Rotterdam, and Reilly to Consul General, Stockholm, and Harter to Consul General, Copenhagen for duty.

Expenses of transportation of families and of storage of household and personal effects or rent of residence where storage not possible or lease of residence not terminable will be paid from time to time upon receipt of accounts and vouchers. Codes, cipher messages or translations, seals and accounts, including all accounts, vouchers, and papers relating to expenses of representing foreign interests and for individual relief, should be delivered to Embassy for transmission to Department.

Rent of offices to March 31 should be paid. Also pay salaries of clerks and employees who are not American citizens to March 31 when services of foreign subjects will terminate. Take receipts covering full period of each payment. Embassy should deliver to Spanish Ambassador list of future payments to be made for rent and similar obligatory expenses of Embassy and consulates after March 31 with blanks and instructions covering such payments. Discontinue all expenses not obligatory.

All money on hand belonging to United States in excess of payments herein authorized should be deposited with Embassy and re-5002. Foreign Office informs me that I and my staff will not be permitted to leave Germany until definite information is received regarding arrangements made for departure of Count Bernstorff and his staff from the United States. Please answer urgently with full details also as to consuls. Foreign Office will send cable to Bernstorff in cipher which censor at Sayville has and hopes it will be delivered. We are not allowed to telegraph to our consuls until we hear your dispositions what [as to] German consuls then on [return]. Reports here German ships and crews have been seized, and Foreign Office says prisoners on Yarrowdale will not be released until news comes that these reports are not true.

WASHINGTON, February 6, 1917, 6 p. m.

222. For paraphrase and transmission through Foreign Office to Spanish Ambassador at Berlin.

Your 5002, February 5. United States Government surprised at attitude of German Government. Complete arrangements have been made for departure of Count and Countess Bernstorff, the Embassy staff, and all German consuls in the United States, with their families, as stated in my 213, February 5.¹ All, about 200 in number, will sail on Frederik VIII, February 13. In view of complete arrangements in detail for departure of Ambassador and consuls with their families, and extension of every courtesy, consideration, and protection to them in the United States, United States Government expect the German Government will place no obstacle in the way of arrangements for departure, and for actual departure of American Ambassador and consuls, with their families and staffs.

Before Count Bernstorff was given his passports, German steamer Liebfels was sunk in Charleston harbor, forming obstruction to navigation. At about the same time German vessels at Honolulu, Pensacola, and elsewhere were disabled by crews, and became a possible danger to shipping. On account of these incidents, resulting in destruction of property, violation of the laws, and danger to navigation, United States authorities inspected the German refugee ships as a necessary measure looking to protection of life and property. To the same end United States courts having custody of the Appam and Odenwald took special precautions for their safety, and the naval authorities having charge of the interned vessels in the United States threw an armed guard about them for their protection and placed the crew and officers in barracks. These acts can not be regarded otherwise than as consistent with the protection of life and property in the United States, of Americans as well as of German subjects. None of the vessels and crews in the United States have been seized, as reported to Ambassador Gerard by German Government. The German Government, therefore, has absolutely no ground on this account to withhold release of Americans on Yarrowdale. The United States Government expects that no further obstacle will be interposed to their immediate release.

515. Arrived here last night, 120 Americans in all. Our train treated with great courtesy at Swiss frontier by Swiss Government who sent officers to meet us, etc. Before leaving Berlin had half hour talk with the Chancellor; also Zimmermann. Think Germans absolutely taken by surprise by breaking of relations. On Sunday morning after break, Reichstag member Stresemann, who always has been bitter against America, was addressing meeting of his party and telling in detail why America would do nothing and as he concluded a man got up and read from noon paper that America had broken relations. Many prominent Germans told me that Zimmermann more responsible for reckless submarine warfare than anyone; that Emperor thought matter over for three days and finally decided. Ludendorff and Zimmermann are the ones responsible. The Chancellor only wants to hold on to his office. After I demanded passports Count Montgelas of Foreign Office called on me and asked me to telegraph you to get authority to sign treaty which follows paraphrased:¹

Agreement between Germany and the United States of America concerning the treatment of each other's citizens and their private property after the severance of diplomatic relations.

ARTICLE 1. After severance of diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States of America and in the event of the outbreak of war between the two powers the citizens of either party and their private property in the territory of the other party shall be treated according to Article 23 of the treaty of Amity and Commerce between Prussia and the United States of 11th July, 1799, with the following explanatory and supplementary clauses.

ARTICLE 2. German merchants in the United States and American merchants in Germany shall, so far as the treatment of their persons and their property is concerned, be held in every respect on a par with the other persons mentioned in Article 23. Accordingly they shall, even after the period provided for in Article 23 has elapsed, be entitled to remain and continue their profession in the country of their residence. Merchants as well as the other persons mentioned in Article 23 may be excluded from fortified places or other places of military importance.

ARTICLE 3. Germans in the United States and Americans in Germany shall be free to leave the country of their residence within the times and by the routes that shall be assigned to them by the proper authorities. The persons departing shall be entitled to take along their personal private property including moneys, valuables, and bank accounts excepting such property the exportation of which is prohibited according to general provisions.

ARTICLE 4. The protection of Germans in the United States and of Americans in Germany and of their property shall be guaranteed in accordance with the laws existing in the countries of either party. They shall be under no other restrictions concerning the enjoyment of their private rights and the legitimate enforcement of their rights than neutral residents, they may accordingly not be transferred to concentration camps nor shall their private property be subject to sequestration or liquidation or other compulsory alienation except in cases that under the existing laws apply also to neutrals. As a general rule, German property in the United States and American property in Germany shall not be subject to sequestration or liquidation or other compulsory alienation under other conditions than neutral property.

ARTICLE 5. Patent rights or other protected rights held by Germans in the United States of America [or by Americans] in Germany shall not be declared void, nor shall the exercise of such rights be impeded nor shall such rights be transferred to others without the consent of the person entitled thereto, provided that regulations made exclusively in the interest of the state shall apply.

ARTICLE 6. Contracts made between Germans and Americans, either before or after the severance of diplomatic relations, also obligations of all kinds between Germans and Americans shall not be declared canceled, void, or in suspension except under provision applicable to neutrals. Likewise the citizens of either party shall not be impeded in fulfilling their liabilities arising from such obligations either by injunctions or by other provision unless these apply also to neutrals.

ARTICLE 7. The provision of the 6th Hague convention, the treatment of enemy merchant ships at outbreak of hostilities, shall apply to the merchant vessels of either party and their cargo.

The aforesaid ships may not be forced to leave port unless at the same time they be given a pass recognized as binding by all enemy sea powers to a home port or a port of an allied country or to another port of the country in which the ship happens to be.

ARTICLE 8. The regulations of chapter three of the 11th Hague convention relative certain restrictions in the exercise of the right of capture in maritime war shall apply to the captains, officers, and members of the crews of merchant ships specified in Article 7 and of such merchant ships that may be captured in the course of a possible war.

ARTICLE 9. This agreement shall apply also to the colonies and other foreign possessions of either party.

Berlin, February 1917.

He said that if it was not signed that Americans would probably not be permitted to leave Germany and that newspaper correspondents would also be held. I said in the first place, I would not telegraph unless I could do so in cipher and give my own views. Secondly, that anyway relations were broken and, thirdly, that I would do nothing while I was a prisoner, but that once in Switzerland I might consider cabling but I thought it useless as the German propositions to let their ships out in case of war and keeping America from using German patents, even if needed for war purposes, were absolutely ridiculous. I further said that if Americans were not permitted to leave that it was an act of war. He said that the prisoners of war from the Yarrowdale would not be released as German ships had been confiscated in America, and that I could not leave until they knew what had happened to Bernstorff. I said I do not have to disprove these rumors. You have to prove their truth, and I repeat that if you hold Americans here it is an act of war. He then left and I have heard nothing further of matter. Our telephone was cut off, we were not permitted to receive mail or telegrams or to telegraph your instructions to consuls. After some days these regulations were modified. Consuls now are to assemble at Munich and leave. Others already in Berlin will leave with second train of Americans. I shall proceed with staff ordered to America, correspondents, and Americans to Paris, then Spain. Treaty presented by Montgelas follows. I suggest that no such treaty be signed. Few real Americans in Germany and fear of losing ships and property may be restraining force. Please obtain through Spanish Ambassador assurance that our passports from German Government cover passage from Spain to America, otherwise German submarine might take us off outside Spanish waters in case of war.

MEMORANDUM

His Majesty's Government are fully prepared to grant to the late German Ambassador at Washington and the officials in his train a safe-conduct so far as the action of British authorities is concerned. They are not, however, aware of any reason of justice or courtesy why they should take any steps to save the party from dangers caused by the illegal actions of the German Government and why they should alter their general policy with this object. Very great importance is attached to the rule that ships should call at Kirkwall, but if the United States Government seriously wish that Count Bernstorff's ship should not call there, His Majesty's Government will be prepared out of deference to their wishes to waive the rule in this case. In such event special arrangements would be made to search the ship and the passengers at Halifax.

Instructions in the above sense have been sent to His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington.

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy of a note from the Swedish Minister at this Capital, representing Austro-

Hungarian interests in the United States,¹ in which, with reference to the intended departure of Count Tarnowski and the late Austro-Hungarian Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, Baron Zwiedinek, and the persons of their suite, he requests information on the following points:

1. Will there be any restrictions as to the personal goods and effects, particularly jewels and other valuables, they carry?
2. Will there be any restrictions as to money, and, if so, how large an amount may each person carry?
3. May photographs and personal documents (certificates of birth, diplomas, etc.) be carried?
4. May official documents (in plain language) be carried?

Referring to the statement orally made by you to the Assistant Secretary of State that your Embassy had been authorized to grant to the Austro-Hungarian diplomatic and consular officers a safe-conduct so worded as to concede freedom to these officers to pass to their destination, but containing no statement which would in any way conflict with the rights of the British Government to search members of the party and their effects, I beg to say that while this Government, of course, is in thorough accord with the British Government's views in this respect, still, at the same time, in view of the very great courtesy which has been extended by the Austro-Hungarian Government to American diplomatic and consular officers leaving Austria, I venture to express the hope that the Austro-Hungarian party may be permitted to pass with the least possible delay and will be shown every possible consideration.

Return of the American Ambassador from Turkey

File No. 763.72/5428

The Chargé in Turkey (Tarler) to the Secretary of State

No. 912

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 23, 1917.

[Received June 20.]

SIR: Through the courtesy of the Swedish Minister, I have the honor to transmit herewith copy and translation of a note from the Ottoman Minister of Foreign Affairs, dated April 20, 1917, informing the Embassy that in view of the state of war existing between the United States and the German Empire, as the ally of the latter country the Ottoman Government was obliged to break off diplomatic relations with the Government of the United States, beginning from April 20.

This note was delivered to the Embassy at 1.15 p. m. on April 20 by Chevki Bey, director of the cabinet particulier of the Minister of Foreign Affairs. In delivering this note he asked that Mrs. Elkus be informed that the Ambassador would, of course, remain here as long as might be necessary, and also asked if she had any special wishes to communicate to the Minister. All details as to the departure of the Embassy staff and other questions were left until the following day.

For a week prior to the rupture such a move on the part of the Sublime Porte was known to be imminent, and on Monday, the 16th instant, one of the Ottoman Ministers stated that the Cabinet was being "forced" to break relations, and that he feared the communication of this decision to the Embassy was merely a matter of time. Later the Embassy heard that this communication might be put off until after the departure of the Grand Vizier for Berlin on April 21, and as late as the 19th a more reassuring report was also heard, but these proved to be without foundation.

Since the rupture of relations with Austria-Hungary no cipher telegrams from the Department have reached this Embassy, so that it has been necessary to arrange for another channel of communication with the Department. I trust that it has received the several telegrams forwarded in this way, informing it as to the progress of the illness of Mr. Elkus, the imminence of a break in relations, and asking which members of the staff should be left here, etc.

As the Department has been informed, the Swedish Minister here has not yet received instructions from his Government about taking over American interests, so that a final transfer of these interests to his protection has not yet been possible. Mr. d'Anckarsvärd has, however, been very courteous in assisting the Embassy in the present circumstances, and American interests will be definitely turned over to him as soon as he shall have received the instructions from his Government which are foreshadowed by those of the Department.

The attitude of the Foreign Office and of the civil authorities has, since Friday, been of a most courteous nature. There has been absolutely no interference with the normal activities of the Embassy, which in most respects have followed their usual course. There has been no excitement of any sort at the Embassy or at the Consulate General. On Saturday, the 21st, I had an informal interview with the acting Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs, and took up with him the numerous questions arising out of the new situation.

In the first place, it was necessary to make arrangements as to the departure of the Embassy staff, as the Department will observe that in the enclosed note no mention is made of the passports of the Ambassador and his staff being at their disposal. The Acting Undersecretary, Moukhtar Bey, stated that the question of the departure of the staff with or before the departure of the Ambassador had not yet been considered. I left with him two lists of the Embassy and consular personnel; the first containing the names of the Ambassador and the permanent Embassy staff, who would depart with him or remain here to assist the Swedish Minister with American interests; and the second comprising the names of the extra attachés of the Embassy, together with the military attaché and Commander Morton as naval attaché, and the entire consular staff here, who might all leave at once. An early decision in this matter and all possible facilities in connection with the departure were promised. The Dutch and Swedish Ministers also saw the Minister of Foreign Affairs on the same day and urged upon him that the whole official staff should remain here until the Ambassador was able to travel.

I also requested Moukhtar Bey to take up with the Minister and the other departments concerned the question of the journey to Constantinople of all the consuls; of the departure of American citizens from Constantinople and elsewhere in Turkey, informing him that there are now about 75 Americans in this city ready to leave, and that there are approximately 175 other Americans connected with American missionary institutions in the interior who might want to leave soon. As the Austro-Hungarian Government has given a period of but four weeks from April 9 for the passage of Americans across that country into Switzerland, Moukhtar Bey was requested to arrange as soon as possible for the Americans now here to leave for Switzerland. A list of the Americans who have completed all formalities for departure except obtaining the final police permit is herewith enclosed.¹

With respect to the status of American institutions and schools, Moukhtar Bey stated that he understood unofficially that they were not to be disturbed, although he could then give no official assurances in this connection. I have the honor to confirm my telegram, No. 2640 of even date,¹ informing the Department that Djavid Bey, as Acting Minister of the Interior, had sent circular telegraphic instructions to the provincial authorities, instructing them that the rupture of diplomatic relations was not a declaration of war, that American citizens and institutions should be treated by the authorities as heretofore, without however having any official relations with the American consuls.

In spite of the foregoing, on the evening of April 21 two companies of soldiers appeared at the College for Girls in Arnaoud-Keuy and at Robert College, declaring that they had instructions to occupy the buildings for hospital purposes. These soldiers and the officers in command of them are reported to have been civil to the Americans at the two schools. It is further reported that they had previously applied to the local police for assistance in occupying the premises, and that the police told them that they (the police) had instructions from their superiors not to disturb the two American institutions in question. In any event, after an appeal to one of the Ministers, and verbal representations on the part of the Swedish Minister to the Foreign Office, these soldiers left Robert College at about noon on the 22d, and Arnaoud-Keuy later on the same day. The Embassy hears, however, that the military authorities plan to occupy the two colleges after their scholastic year is terminated about May 15.

There has as yet been no move to disturb the Bible House in Stamboul, but the Embassy has not received any information as to what is taking place in the interior, where the local authorities, in spite of instructions, may not have distinguished between a break in relations and a state of war. It seems only too probable that the most these institutions can hope for is to finish their school year unmolested.

I have also the honor to transmit herewith copy and translation of the Sublime Porte's note verbale concerning the departure or internment of the U. S. S. Scorpion. Commander Morton has made a full report to the Navy Department explaining his motives in not trying to leave Constantinople, and this report will probably be taken out by the Ambassador. Beyond the removal of the guns and ammunition, the ship has so far not been disturbed nor been obliged to leave its former moorings, and the guard of 14 men stationed near the Embassy since the internment of the ship has likewise remained there without interference. In this matter also the attitude of the Turkish authorities has been most courteous.

The transfer of the various interests hitherto in the care of this Embassy and of the consulates in Turkey is being gradually carried out. In conformity with the instructions of the Department, Italian and Montenegrin interests have been delivered to the Spanish Legation; British, French, and Russian interests to the Dutch Legation; and Belgian and Serbian interests together with our own to the Swedish Legation.

In the provinces the distribution of all these interests will be very difficult, as there are at present very few neutral career consular officers, and many of the honorary Dutch and Swedish consuls are either German or Austrian subjects. In Jerusalem there is a Spanish career consul, in Beirut and Smyrna there are Dutch career officials, and in Smyrna the Swedish consul is a Dutch subject. In Brusa our interests can be turned over to a career Hellenic vice consul, while in Mersina there is an honorary Spanish consul. In Aleppo it is difficult to make any arrangements, as the only neutral government represented there is Holland, whose interests are in charge of an Austrian subject. In Harput it will be necessary to close the office entirely, as there are no neutral consuls anywhere in that region. At Samsun it is possible that some other neutral government may name Mr. Peter, who is a Swiss citizen, as its consular representative.

The general instructions for the consuls contained in the Department's cipher telegraphic instruction of March 31¹ were forwarded by mail to the various consuls on April 3, and it is probable that they have been received at Smyrna, Mersina, and Aleppo. A brief summary of the essential portions of these telegraphic instructions has also been telegraphed to the consuls at Beirut, Jerusalem, and Harput. The portion of these instructions relating to the work of the Embassy is being followed, but some matters can not be finally closed up until the departure of the Ambassador, and it will be necessary to retain part of the Embassy employees until that time.

The accounts of the Embassy are being closed to-day, and sufficient funds have been procured during the past two days to supply the needs of the various interests for at least a month, until the respective Legations here can arrange for funds through their governments. The Embassy is informed that funds can best be obtained in large sums by opening credits in Holland. The Dutch Legation, which is in charge of the three interests requiring the largest amounts of money, will thus find its task facilitated.

Mr. Peet plans to continue the various soup kitchens and other charitable enterprises which are carried on with American funds at least until the departure of Mr. Elkus, and I have requested the authorities to permit this. Any stoppage in relief and charitable funds from the United States will be sorely felt by many classes and elements in this country.

The illness of the Ambassador began on Wednesday, April 11, and the crisis is taking place to-day and will probably not be definitely passed until the 25th instant. His physicians have been Dr. Bertram V. D. Post, of Robert College, and Dr. Zlozitsky, a German specialist in typhus now stationed here. Various other physicians have also been called into consultation. His care has been of the very best, as several American and Canadian trained nurses were available. His illness has caused deep sorrow here, and there have been a great many manifestations of this feeling in all quarters, as he and Mrs. Elkus have gained the high respect and friendship of all classes. The attending physicians state that Mr. Elkus will not be able to travel before May 25 at the earliest.

The Foreign Office unofficially informs the Embassy that Ottoman interests in the United States, France, Greece, and Roumania will be entrusted to the Spanish representatives in those countries, and that Sweden has been requested to assume the protection of Ottoman interests in Great Britain and Dominions. I was informed also by Moukhtar Bey that the Ottoman Chargé d'Affaires at Washington had been instructed to request passports for himself and all the Ottoman consular officers in the United States. At least a month must elapse before all of the American consular officials in Turkey can reach this city, so that it is probable that they will be able to leave with the Ambassador.

From the foregoing report the Department will note that so far the general attitude manifested towards American interests in this city by the Ottoman authorities has been courteous and all that could be expected in the circumstances. The main question pending at the present time is the granting of final permission for the unofficial Americans to leave for Switzerland within the period fixed by the Austro-Hungarian Government, and a definite decision in this matter is promised for the 26th instant. If this decision is favorable, those who wish to go will be able to get away in time. If unfavorable, there may be a possibility of securing an extension of time from the Austro-Hungarian authorities to enable these nonofficial Americans to go out at the same time with the Ambassador. In any event, the decision of the Ottoman authorities in this matter will indicate their real attitude.

MR. AMBASSADOR: The Embassy of the United States of America having informed the Imperial Ministry of Foreign Affairs by its note verbale of April 8, 1917, No. 2422, that its Government is in a state of war with the German Empire, I have the honor to inform your excellency that the Imperial Ottoman Government, ally of this Empire, is obliged to break its diplomatic relations with the Government of the United States of America beginning from to-day.

The Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the American Embassy

NOTE VERBALE

Gl. No. 9546

Sl. No. 156

April 10, 1917.

The Embassy of the United States of America, by its note verbale dated April 8, 1917, No. 2422, having communicated to the Sublime Porte the proclamation by the President of the Republic of a state of war between the American Government and the Imperial German Government, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has the honor to bring the following to its knowledge:

The Embassy of the Republic is not unaware that every power which respects its duties of neutrality must forbid to the ships of war of belligerents to remain in its ports or roads or in its territorial waters during more than 24 hours; that such power is required to notify them to leave within this period; that if they do not leave the port where they are, the said power has the right to take the measures which it may judge necessary to render the ships in question unable to go to sea during the war; that, moreover, it must detain the officers and the crew who may be subjected to the restrictive measures of which the imposition may appear necessary to it, while at the same time leaving on board the men required for the care of the said ships.

Such is the system which is followed in international law and which has also been sanctioned by Articles 12, 13, and 24 of the Hague convention of 1907 concerning the rights and duties of neutral powers in case of maritime war.

Consequently, the Imperial Ministry has the honor to request the Embassy of the United States to be good enough to invite the ship of war Scorpion to leave the port of the capital and the Ottoman territorial waters within the aforementioned period of one day, beginning with the receipt of the present communication.

The required notification in this connection has been made directly by the Imperial Ministry of Marine to the commander of the said ship.

The Ambassador formerly in Turkey (Elkus) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, June 10, 1917.

[Received June 28.]

SIR: I had the honor to inform you by my telegram of June 4¹ that on the 2d instant I arrived in Switzerland with the following members of the staff of the American Embassy at Constantinople: Mr. Tarler, Mr. Milmore, Mr. Schmavonian, Mr. Leavitt and family, Mr. Montgomery and family, Mr. Engert, and Mr. Edelman of Damascus. Mr. Heck and his family and Mr. Wirth remained at Constantinople, attached to the Swedish Legation there.

As you have already been informed, I was taken ill on the 11th of April last. On that day, I had called on Djavid Bey, the Turkish Minister of Finance, who frankly stated to me that the German pressure on the Sublime Porte to sever diplomatic relations with the United States was becoming stronger every day. From his statements I arrived at the conclusion that the break was not far off. When it was understood that I had contracted typhus, there was a general expression of sympathy on the part of the higher Ottoman circles. H. I. M. the Sultan sent an aide-de-camp to the Embassy with a kind message to Mrs. Elkus. The Grand Vizier,

The Minister of War, and the Minister for Foreign Affairs sent representatives to inquire after me. Senators and many other dignitaries personally called at the Embassy for the same purpose.

In the afternoon of Friday, the 20th of April, a note was received at the Embassy, dated the same day, and announcing the rupture of diplomatic relations. Very strong pressure must have been brought on the Turks to have written and sent a note on a Friday, unless it was done so, deliberately, to give that impression. The note, a copy of which was sent to you, mentioned nothing as to holding passports at my disposal, and the Turkish ministers stated that there could be no question of departure until I had completely recovered.

The day following the break, Talaat Pasha left for Germany. In his absence, Djavid Bey acted as Minister of the Interior. The Embassy was later informed that on the 21st of April he sent telegraphic instructions to the provincial authorities telling them that a rupture of diplomatic relations was not a state of war and therefore that American citizens, as well as American institutions, should be treated exactly as before the break, with the only difference that the said provincial authorities would have no official relations with the American consuls. These instructions have had a favorable effect, and I believe that American citizens and institutions in Turkey have had as good a treatment as one might expect under the circumstances. I can cite the example of the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut which was ordered to be closed by the Governor General immediately upon his learning of the break, but which was afterwards reopened and allowed to continue its classes until the end of the academic year. The Grand Vizier and other ministers have stated that, according to a decision of the Council of Ministers, American institutions will not be interfered with so long as an actual state of war does not exist between Turkey and the United States.

The Turkish ministers showed courtesy and consideration until the last day. Between the break and the date of our departure, Djavid Bey received Mr. Schmavonian several times at his private residence, and during these interviews current Embassy matters were discussed. The Grand Vizier also received him several times at the Sublime Porte. Talaat Pasha expressed great regret at our departure, stating that both Mrs. Elkus and I had gained popularity in Constantinople. He was very cordial to Mr. Schmavonian, complimented him for the work he had done in connection with the Embassy, and extended all facilities for his departure with me. After the break, which came on April 20, 1917, Mr. Tarler, in conformity with the diplomatic rules, was in charge of the Embassy work. The Swedish Legation took official charge of American interests in Turkey on the 26th of April. In appreciation of the work done by Mr. d'Anckarsvärd, the Swedish Minister, and his staff, I wrote him a letter, a copy of which will be sent to the Department. But the heavy burden of the work after April 20 came on Mr. Tarler and the other members of the Embassy staff. While I appreciate the work of every one in his branch and the esprit de corps shown by all, I am gratified to inform the Department that, after my recovery, I heard a general expression of appreciation for Mr. Tarler's work and indefatigable efforts during those critical days. Mr. Tarler's work, I respectfully submit, deserves some recognition from the Department.

Between Constantinople and Berne, the Turkish, Bulgarian, and Austrian authorities showed every mark of courtesy and facilitated my journey. At Constantinople, on the day of our departure, Djavid Bey called at the Embassy, the Grand Vizier sent a representative to the station to wish us farewell, while a representative from the Foreign Office accompanied us as far as the frontier. Neither my baggage nor that of the Embassy staff was examined anywhere. I brought with me two pouches containing despatches and mail.

Mr. Peet, who is now in Switzerland, estimates that there remain in Turkey-in-Asia about 20 Americans who desire to leave, and there are about 10 such in Constantinople. The Swedish Minister in Constantinople is trying to arrange through the Austro-Hungarian Embassy there to obtain from the Austro-Hungarian Government a further delay for American citizens to pass through Austria. As regards the remaining American consular officers in Turkey, they will proceed to Switzerland after they arrive at Constantinople. Mr. Nathan with his wife and child arrived at Constantinople on May 29, the day of my departure, at noon, too late to leave with me.

The Minister of Switzerland, representing German interests in the United States, presents his compliments to the Secretary of State, and has the honor to enclose copy of a letter transmitted to this Legation by the Consulate of Switzerland in New York, with reference to obtaining a license under the Trading with the Enemy Act in order to continue to occupy certain premises at 11 Broadway, New York City, the lease for which was originally concluded by the German Government with the Broadway Realty Co.¹

The Minister begs leave to direct his excellency's attention to the statement in this communication that the Swiss Consulate is occupying these premises as agent for the German Government. It is the opinion of this Legation that the Swiss Consulate can in no event be required to apply for license under the above-mentioned act, in view of the fact that the representation of German interests in the United States was undertaken by this Legation with the express consent and agreement of the Government of the United States, a fact which, in itself, is a due and sufficient authorization for these consuls to administer the affairs of German subjects in the United States.

The Minister, therefore, would appreciate it if instructions to this effect would be issued to the proper authorities of the Government of the United States, and that in the particular case here submitted, his excellency would kindly undertake to correct the erroneous statement of the functions of the Swiss consulates in the United States.

The Secretary of State to the War Trade Board

WASHINGTON, November 27, 1917.

GENTLEMEN: The Department encloses herewith, for consideration, a copy of a memorandum from the Legation of Switzerland, dated October 31, 1917, together with copies of enclosures received therewith,¹ in relation to a demand made by the lessors that the Swiss Consul in New York obtain a license, under the Trading with the Enemy Act, in order to continue to occupy certain premises at

No. 11 Broadway, the lease on which was originally concluded by the German Government with the Broadway Realty Co.

The Department does not concur in the opinion expressed by Masten and Nichols, counsel for the lessors, that the premises in question are occupied by the Swiss Consul "as agent for the German Government," and that he, therefore, should secure a license to continue to occupy them.

Upon the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, this Government on February 6, 1917, consented to the Swiss Government assuming charge, through the Swiss Minister, of German interests in this country, and to it taking over, through the Swiss consular officers, the German consulates in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Paul, Denver, and Manila. It is the opinion of the Department that the Swiss consular officers took charge of the German consulates as representatives of the Swiss Government and that they did not thereby become "officers," "officials," or "agents" of the German Government within the meaning of the Trading with the Enemy Act, and that this act, reasonably construed, ought not to be held to apply to them.

The Department requests, therefore, that the War Trade Board take such steps as it may deem best to secure the Swiss Consul from interference as by issuing a license to the lessors in the event that it is considered necessary for them to have one.

1587. Please convey informally to the Foreign Office the substance of the following: As the Austro-Hungarian Government is aware, the care of its interests in Russia was taken over by the American Embassy at Petrograd about the same time as those of Germany. Because of the physical conditions under which both civilian and military prisoners of war have been kept in Russia, it was found essential in the interests of efficiency to handle Austro-Hungarian and German relief work through a single organization. The relief committees in the different camps are composed of both Austro-Hungarian and German subjects; joint schools, hospitals, etc., managed by both nationalities, have been established and in many other respects which will be apparent to the Foreign Office the administration of Austro-Hungarian and German interests has become almost inseparable. In the course of the last two years and a half the Embassy at Petrograd has built up a large organization which in order to meet existing conditions has handled Austro-Hungarian and German relief matters as a single subject, except as regards the actual receipt, distribution, and accounting of funds.

Since the severing of diplomatic relations with Germany, German interests in Russia have been turned over to the Swedish Minister at Petrograd. The American Embassy in its endeavors to carry on the separate administration of Austro-Hungarian relief has already encountered serious practical difficulties and it is feared that unless the interests of both Austria-Hungary and Germany are placed in the same hands the interests of the subjects of both will suffer. In view of the facts outlined above, which will doubtless go far to render ineffective the work of the American Embassy in caring for Austro-Hungarian interests, the Department will be pleased to receive information as to whether the Austro-Hungarian Government desires that the Embassy continue its representation as at present.

Please make it very clear that the question is now raised solely in the interests of Austro-Hungarian prisoners of war. It is felt that this Government would be lacking in friendliness if it failed frankly to point out the disadvantages under which it will now have to carry on its work on behalf of Austro-Hungarian subjects in Russia. The Department is confident that the Austro-Hungarian Government will understand the spirit in which this communication is made, which is applicable to the situation in Russia only.

1770. Department's 1587, March 8, regarding care of Austro-Hungarian interests in Russia. Following is translation of aide-mémoire from Minister of Foreign Affairs, dated March 18, replying to Embassy's aide-mémoire of March 10 in which Department's communication was informally conveyed to the Minister:

In the very esteemed aide-mémoire No. 12114 of the 10th instant the Embassy of the United States of America was pleased to allude to the fact that the protection, not only of the Austro-Hungarian citizens detained in Russia partly as prisoners of war and partly as civilian internes, but also of the German subjects under the same circumstances with which the American Embassy in Petrograd was hitherto charged had been organized and effected in accordance with a well-thought-out and combined system, but that this manner of working had naturally become impossible from the moment the protection of German interests in Russia had devolved on Sweden.

This new situation has now given rise to some practical difficulties and the American Government, therefore, thinks it necessary to take the question into consideration as to whether it would not be in the interest of the Austrian and Hungarian citizens concerned if their protection were now again to be placed in the same hands as that of the Germans.

The Imperial and Royal Government is able fully to appreciate the idea prompting this step of the Washington Cabinet and sees therein a renewed proof of the profound seriousness and scrupulous conscientiousness with which the American Government undertakes its duty as a protective power. But this very recognition, strengthened and increased hereby, inspires the Imperial and Royal Government with the sincere wish that the United States Government may see its way to continuing its eminently humanitarian activity in Russia, thus procuring the Imperial and Royal Government the satisfactory assurance it so highly esteems that the care of the interests here at stake, whereby the fate of individuals is so vitally affected, will remain in the same tried and trustworthy hands as hitherto.

If, therefore, as the Imperial and Royal Government believes it may confidently hope the United States Government should find itself disposed to continue the protection of the Austrian and Hungarian citizens in Russia in spite of the practical difficulties it has pointed out, which moreover the American functionaries concerned will doubtless be able to overcome by means of their eminent and intimate knowledge of the conditions in question, this will certainly constitute yet a further claim to the gratitude which the Imperial and Royal Government owes to the very meritorious activity the American Government has so generously displayed since the beginning of the war for the good of the Austrians and Hungarians that are suffering the tribulations of captivity.

BRUSSELS, February 1, 1917.

[Received 8.15 a. m.]

38. I have the honor to request that the following communication be transmitted to the President:

Dear Mr. President: The German Government of Occupation in Belgium has just communicated to me the tenor of a communication made by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the Imperial German Government to the American Ambassador at Berlin stating that the Central powers have declared a blockade of the English, French, and Italian coasts. Thus far the ships of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, transporting food to the Belgian people and the inhabitants of the north of France, have been compelled to touch at an English port in order to permit the British Government to satisfy itself that these ships were not transporting contraband of war. If this measure is maintained, that is to say, if in future the ships of the commission are compelled to touch at an English port, the inevitable consequence will be the suppression of the relief to this people already so sorely tried. Therefore, I respectfully beg you to intervene with the British Government in order if possible that it may take no measure that will have the effect of breaking down the relief. This great humanitarian work, which has always enjoyed your high patronage, has had the effect thus far of saving from ruin and distress more than seven millions of Belgian civilians, and more than three millions of French who otherwise would have perished. The maintenance of the relief is all the more necessary and urgent because in the midst of the severest winter that this country has known for years the deplorable situation of the poor is aggravated to point that must excite the pity of every human heart. Any interruption, even [if it] were momentary, in the provisioning of the country would menace with famine ten millions of human beings already deep in misery. I beg you, therefore, in the names of all these suffering ones to effect if possible some arrangement by which the ships of the commission can continue to bear their saving cargoes of [food to] these people. I am assured by the German authorities that the Imperial German Government has no intention of interfering with the humanitarian works of the Commission for Relief in Belgium. The situation could be saved if the control exercised heretofore in English ports were exercised instead either at the port of embarkation or at the port of debarkation in Holland. A communication similar to this is being sent by his excellency the Spanish Minister to his Catholic Majesty and by the Dutch Chargé to Her Majesty, the Queen of the Netherlands. In the autumn of 1914 I had the honor to despatch a telegram to you, and in your great heart you found a way to succor the civil population of this land and Northern France, and it is the hope of all those who at great sacrifice have now for more than two years devoted themselves to that great work that your great influence may be exercised to secure its continuance.

4386. Belgian relief. Department would be glad if you would express to the British Government the strong feeling of this country and of the Government that the relief of the Belgian and occupied French population must in any event continue; for this country will wish to show no less interest in this great work of humanity than has been shown during the last two years by the British and French Governments. Should it become impossible for the Americans to remain in Belgium and in control, Hoover considers it very desirable that the work of relief should be taken over by the Dutch Government, a transfer which could probably be best negotiated by the Belgian Government and the American Minister at The Hague. We have telegraphed Whitlock asking him to remain at his post and asking him to secure from the German authorities for members of relief the treatment of diplomatic and consular staff. Mr. Hoover desires you convey following message to Poland and Kellogg:

I think it extremely desirable for all members in Belgium to remain at their posts, even after departure of diplomatic and consular staff if Germans will guarantee their freedom to depart if situation becomes entirely untenable. Wish you to take Mr. Page's advice in all matters and to consult freely with Belgian and British Governments, particularly on following questions. First. Change if any in sailing directions of ships afloat, such change if any to be issued by British Admiralty. Second. Whether and by what route ships at present in Rotterdam and Atlantic ports should sail. If new British mine field does not interfere represent to British Government strongly desirability of taking route outside war zone. At the same time ask Spanish Ambassador if he will communicate through Brussels and Berlin that as British mine field and necessity to bunker in United Kingdom and conditions of charter and insurance renders Falmouth channel route the only practicable passage the Germans should agree at once to respect relief ships on this route and issue passes to this end, and that all departures are held up meantime. 248. For your information. German Ambassador accompanied by his staff has to-day been handed his passports. Ambassador Gerard and his staff have been instructed to leave Berlin at once, and similar instructions have been sent to all the consuls in the German Empire.

Inasmuch as you are accredited to the Belgian Government, the Department believes that you should remain in Brussels unless the German authorities express the desire to have you leave Belgium, in which case you should turn Legation and archives over to Spanish representative and take up your residence near the Belgian Government at Havre.

In the event of your leaving Belgium, you should instruct the consuls at Antwerp, Brussels, Liège, and Ghent to place consulates and archives in custody of representative of Spain and proceed with American clerks to the United States where they will be given leave of absence in Department's discretion, except Nasmith who should report to Consul at Amsterdam for duty.

Expenses of transportation of families and of storage of household and personal effects or rent of residence where storage not possible or lease of residence not terminable will be paid from time to time upon receipt of accounts and vouchers. Codes, cipher messages, or translations, seals and accounts, including all accounts, vouchers and papers relating to expenses of representing foreign interests and for individual relief should be delivered to Legation for transmission to the Department.

Rent of offices to March 31 should be paid. Also in the event of consuls leaving, pay salaries of clerks and employees who are not American citizens to March 31, when services of foreign subjects will terminate. Take receipts covering full period of each payment. Legation should deliver to Spanish Minister list of future payments to be made for rent and similar obligatory expenses of Legation and consulates after March 31 with blanks and instructions covering such payments. Discontinue all expenses not obligatory.

In the event of consuls leaving, all money on hand belonging to United States in excess of payments herein authorized should be deposited with Legation and receipt taken. Legation should deliver to Spanish Minister amount sufficient to meet expenses of Legation and consulates for 6 months, taking receipts therefor. Remainder should be taken to Havre. Funds held on account of foreign governments for relief and other purposes should be delivered to diplomatic representatives selected by those governments to take charge of their interests, taking and forwarding to Department receipts in triplicate for exact amount so delivered.

Mr. Hoover is very anxious that members of the relief commission remain at their stations, but it seems to the Department and to him that you should obtain an undertaking from the German authorities that members of the commission should be considered as members of your staff in the event of the withdrawal of Americans from Belgium.

We consider necessary that no vessels start from American ports until definite understanding reached between German and British Governments. Shipments from this Kingdom likewise held. Please ask that German Government continue present protection between English ports and Rotterdam and overseas; otherwise shipments originating England, amounting over one fifth our [supplies], will be cut off and not replaceable, also ships arriving and cargoes now here will be excluded. This will break down ravitaillement. Impossible to communicate with and warn ships soon to arrive. It is necessary that ships coal United Kingdom. The German prohibited area with the new British mine field practically excludes vessels from approaching Holland. Dutch frontier now open and Gregory advised to ship all Dutch and commission products possible into Belgium and northern France. On the request of Lord Eustace Percy we have asked Gregory to assure people that in event of difficulties between Germany and the United States the work will be continued under the Dutch, Spanish, and Danish Ministers.

Percy says the Treasury is still discussing with Belgian Government details of the loan. Hopes matter will be settled soon. French and German Governments agree to all our recommendations except Treasury as above. Percy has advised Treasury that loan must be settled at once or increased subsidy granted. Believe possible thus to secure temporary relief.

Department is informed that British and German mine fields combined effectually shut off approaches to Holland to North Sea route; in consequence neutral owners and insurers Belgian relief ships refuse take this risk, and, therefore, German proposal wholly impracticable. Germans have indicated to this Government they can respect Atlantic seaboard ships en route to Falmouth and have indicated to Netherland Government that they can respect ships en route Flushing to British coast. There is, therefore, absolutely no reason why they should not extend this respect to Belgian relief ships between Falmouth and Thames. Furthermore, great majority of ships must touch at United Kingdom ports in order to coal. German proposal absolutely infeasible and unworkable, and entire responsibility for the starvation of the Belgians and French people rests squarely on their shoulders unless they are prepared to respect the flag of mercy of the Belgian relief hitherto. 5612. Following confidential for Hoover:

British Government agrees commission vessels to leave Rotterdam without touching United Kingdom and to send Samland northern [route] and without touching United Kingdom, but afterwards canceled; because, although Germans have altered danger zone and now state vessels may approach channel five miles wide between German zone and British mine fields which Foreign Office advises is blocked by Dutch field, both Dutch and British Admiralties consider it hazardous; therefore outgoing vessels Rotterdam held. British authorities have not yet agreed incoming boats to proceed direct without touching United Kingdom; awaiting German reply to commission's new request through Von Stumm and Merry del Val for safe-conduct through channel and from United Kingdom to Rotterdam; confident they will do everything we find necessary.

In reply to former request through German and American Legations at The Hague, Berlin answers February 4:

Relief ships now Rotterdam can not coal at Barry Dock, England; all ships now in England must leave February 4; all British ships sailing to-day or in future can not navigate in danger zone, but must take route indicated by German navy. Commission steamers can no longer come here; only Dutch paddle steamers can travel between Holland and England. Germans then specify that paddle ships must follow line between Flushing and Southwold.

There are seven loaded steamers, British ports, 24,000 tons; eight steamers approaching British ports which can not be communicated with, loaded, 48,000 tons; two ships of which no reports between the United Kingdom and Rotterdam, loaded with 11,000 tons; seven vessels outbound in Rotterdam, 29,000 tons. Leopold II left Barry February 1 for Sandy Hook; Liège left Barry February 2 for Sandy Hook. In addition in ballast in the United Kingdom outbound three vessels, 18,000 tons, and on the high seas en route to loading ports under our protection we have four boats of 18,000 tons, also three ships in American ports 11,000 tons. Your Washington No. 1 just received and forwarded Whitlock. German officers in Brussels leaving to-day for conference at Berlin regarding status of commission. Poland and Kellogg.

5652. Your 4386, February 3, 4 p. m. Instruction in first paragraph promptly followed. The future of the commission is under constant discussion between commissioners here, Spanish Ambassador, myself, and British Government and German Government through Spanish Ambassador and his Government. There is hope that working arrangement may be restored if we keep out of war. In case Americans are forced to leave Belgium the most probable course of events will be as follows: the Hoover Commission will be liquidated, the British, French, and Belgian Governments will provide for future work. We shall advise with them as far as they desire and permit. The Spanish Ambassador will expect, under direction of his Government, to remain on the reorganized commission and to help constitute it. He has so informed the British Government and me. His view is that if Americans are forced off the commission, the commission will still exist in spite of liquidation and consist of him and his Spanish associates together with other diplomatic patrons and members except me. The real reconstruction of the commission it seems to me must rest upon the three governments most directly concerned, namely British, French, and Belgian who will then take up question of reorganization with the Spanish Ambassador and other diplomatic members.

British Government has agreed that commission ships, in or out bound, need not touch at United Kingdom ports but, for your confidential information, must touch at British ports elsewhere, as Halifax, or Bermuda, or West African Coast. Merry del Val, through Spanish Ambassador, Berlin, and our Rotterdam office through German Legation, The Hague, and Brussels office, and British Foreign Office through King of Spain, are asking German Government, on basis concession British Government, that boats not required touch United Kingdom, to modify German regulations as follows:

1. All relief vessels from overseas or Rotterdam subsequent to February 1 which do not touch at United Kingdom ports shall be furnished safe-conduct passes by German authorities and when protected with commission signs and marks shall be allowed to approach or leave Rotterdam by either north or south routes through German danger zones and overseas without molestation by German authorities.

2. Relief steamers now in United Kingdom and steamers which cleared overseas ports before February 2 which may arrive later furnished safe-conduct passes and unmolested to Rotterdam or overseas.

3. All vessels No. 2 allowed touch United Kingdom ports unmolested.

4. All relief ships carrying United Kingdom purchases protected between Rotterdam and United Kingdom, both directions.

5. German Government to arrange for coal for relief ships, Rotterdam.

1867. Through the courtesy of the Danish Minister here I have to-day seen and taken affidavit of B. E. A. Moller, Danish citizen, only survivor of Danish steamer Lars Kruse, who stated under oath that the vessel was carrying a cargo of corn for the Committee for Relief in Belgium from Buenos Aires to Rotterdam. Vessel bore customary distinguishing marks and was unarmed. At 12.10 a. m., February 4, from 20 to 30 miles northeast of Ouessant, while deponent was asleep, violent explosion occurred, steamer sinking in three minutes. Officers and crew consisted of 18 men. Those who did not go down with steamer clung to overturned lifeboat but gradually succumbed to cold and exposure. About 8.30 a. m., he saw a steamer and a submarine. Signaled to latter which saw him but made for steamer which was subsequently sunk between 12 and 1 o'clock. At 2 p. m., he was taken on board submarine which was of German nationality, but he saw no number. At 4.30 he was put into lifeboat of latter steamer and was rescued by French torpedo boat. Weather at time of explosion calm, fair, ground swell, bright moonlight. A submarine could have easily operated under existing conditions. Explosion occurred well astern at hatch No. 4, and deponent does not believe that it could have been caused by a floating mine, but being asleep at the time is unable to say whether explosion was caused by torpedo or mine. Captain of German submarine asked deponent name of the steamer to which he belonged and whether it had been torpedoed or destroyed by mine. There were no Americans on board the Lars Kruse.

Moller, who is 38 years of age and has been following the sea for 18 years, made favorable impression on me for his honesty and intelligence.

Affidavit will be forwarded by mail.

5673. Director Gregory at Brussels informs Commission for Relief in Belgium that Von der Lancken, Civil Governor of Belgium, has reported to him that the German Government will no longer permit American members of commission to exercise functions in Belgium and Northern France. Hoover and his American associates can, in my judgment, pursue only one course, namely: inform the German Government immediately that every American retires, get all American members out of Belgium and France in whatever way their exit can best be managed by Gregory, with whom Poland is conferring by telegraph, and close the commission's business immediately in Belgium and France and liquidate it as soon as possible. We shall have to leave to the decision of the British, French, and German Governments the work for the future. Americans can now retire with clean record and make dignified exit without parley, leaving the onus on the German Government.

I regard it as of the very highest importance that Hoover announce retirement under German order, emphatically and immediately. Further discussion may lose the present tactical advantage.

I await Department's instruction to me to retire as patron of commission which I hope will be given.

Please inform Hoover of the contents of this and your instructions to me.

526. Department's 249 [248] to Brussels. Mr. Whitlock has directed me to report regarding situation in Brussels. Lancken went to Berlin, February 5, for conference regarding commission for relief and during his absence Von Bissing sent representative to request Mr. Whitlock to stay in order to insure commission's continuance. In view of Department's telegram 249 [248?] Mr. Whitlock assented, provided conditions were made acceptable. On February 8 Lancken returned to Brussels and on the evening of February 9 informally told Mr. Whitlock that it was the authorities' desire that the relief continue, and invited him to stay "honorary chairman." However, his prerogatives as Minister have been suspended. He can not have a pouch or use a cipher. He is no longer addressed officially and he was requested to lower the flag at once. Lancken also informed Mr. Whitlock that the relief commission would have to be cut down to five or six controlling members and that the privilege of traveling in automobiles would be suspended. He also refused to [consider them as Legation] members in case of war, in so far as applies to members, even though the United States Government agreed to guarantee in writing the safe-conduct of the remaining German citizens [in case enemy aliens?] were interned in America. Mr. Whitlock requested that the above statement be embodied in a formal note to the Spanish Minister, to which Lancken acceded. I left Brussels on the morning of February 11 and at that time the Spanish Minister had received only a rough draft, which was very vague and in no way specified the privileges which would be accorded those members who stayed.

In view of the above facts, Mr. Whitlock respectfully and urgently requests the opinion of the Department as to what course he should pursue. He is willing to make any personal sacrifice, provided in the Department's opinion this would help insure the continuance of the relief. The only means [of] communication being through the secret use of Spanish Minister's pouch in Brussels, Mr. Whitlock suggests that the Department's reply be sent by cable to the Legation at The Hague for transmission in this way. Mr. Whitlock would also be grateful for instructions as to [whom] British, Serbian, Japanese, Danish and Liechtenstein interests should be transferred.

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1917, 5 p. m.

253. Department has been informed that the German authorities in Belgium have refused to recognize your diplomatic standing and have deprived you of the freedom of communication with this Government, and that you have been requested to lower the American flag over the Legation. Furthermore, this Government learns that the German authorities have ordered the reduction of the personnel of the American relief commission to five or six members stationed in Brussels, without freedom of movement.

While the German authorities express a willingness for you yourself and a few of the relief staff to remain in Brussels, it must be obvious that your position is untenable, and that the relief commission in these circumstances can not execute the responsibilities which rest upon them in guardianship and administration of the food supplies.

Confronted by this situation you are instructed to inform the German authorities that this Government and the relief commission, which have shown such devotion to the relief of the Belgians during the last two years are prepared to continue this same neutral and humanitarian service, but that such service can only be continued by a continuance of former privileges of yourself and the relief commission. Failing immediate action on the part of the German authorities, you and all of the Americans in the relief work are to withdraw at once from German occupied territory. In these circumstances you are instructed to make it clear to the German authorities that the sole responsibility for the withdrawal and for the consequent interruptions of supplies rests upon them alone.

The Department desires you to assure the Belgians and the French people within the occupied territory that this Government and the relief commission will leave no stone unturned to secure the reestablishment of the relief in the hands of some other neutral organization, if the German authorities will provide facilities of administration and freedom of relief ships from attack.

[Telegram]

BRUSSELS, February 16, 1917.

[Received February 21, 12 p. m.]

40. The news of the rupture in our diplomatic relations with the German Government was known here through Reuter and Wolff despatches on Sunday, February 4. The Department's telegram No. 248 of Saturday, February 3 did not reach me until Wednesday, February 7. In the meantime, Lancken was in Berlin and I was awaiting instructions. The announcement of the rupture had created a panic among the Belgians who feared that the Legation would leave Brussels and the work of the commission come to an end. Incidentally, Bissing sent a staff officer to tell me that he hoped that a press report from Washington stating that I might remain in Brussels was true. I had incessant appeals, official and otherwise, from Belgians to continue the relief work. They would view the immediate departure of the Americans with despair and American pride would be touched were the splendid work of the commission now to fail. My feeling that the humanitarian work was paramount to other considerations was strengthened by the receipt of Department's telegram No. 249 of February 4, changing the instructions as originally written and envisaging the continuance of the relief. It has been this consideration, the fate of the (seven?) millions of people whose lives hang on the American relief work, that I have tried to keep before me in the continuous and difficult negotiations of the last fortnight. Lancken on his return from Berlin told me that the German authorities hoped that the relief work would be continued, and that while the privileges of the American delegates would be curtailed, they were anxious that the directors of the commission remain in charge and made the suggestion that I remain, not in a diplomatic capacity, but to assist in relief work. The American delegates were to be gradually withdrawn and replaced by delegates of other nationalities. My duty would have been simple and obvious had the relief work not been involved. I told Lancken that I should remain provisionally to see if the future of the commission could be assured, provided my Government approved, and provided also that the German authorities assure me the consideration due in such cases, when and whenever I might decide to leave Belgium. The proposal to replace gradually the American delegates by those of other nationalities was the plan repeatedly considered by Hoover as proper to this very emergency, and Gregory had already begun to adjust the work to this basis when Hoover's despatch No. 135, February 12, ordering the immediate withdrawal of all Americans in the commission,¹ was received. This despatch produced its sensation and at a conference, at which the German authorities, the patron minister, the Comité National, and the commission were represented, it was stated on behalf of the Germans that the American delegates might continue to exercise their functions as in the old time, though certain substitutions would be necessary on the [military] front. Gregory thereupon agreed provisionally to remain and to continue the work and so advised Hoover in his telegram of the 14th. I am of the opinion, and Gregory agrees with me, that in the interests of the relief this tentative plan should be approved. The American delegates can continue, as long as the present situation remains unchanged, to work in Belgium. But the position of the Americans here will grow more and more delicate and should the present state of things degenerate into war, become wholly impossible. It would be folly to indulge in any illusions on this score and I, therefore, suggest that Hoover take immediate steps to meet all possible eventualities and that as rapidly as it can be done without impairing the efficiency of the commission the American delegates be replaced by others. Gregory says that in any event he will not remain longer than April.

In the meantime my own situation is anomalous, embarrassing, and of course untenable. The Germans, while showing me personal courtesy, no longer consent to my having the services of the courier, or to my use of the cipher, and only in certain exceptional cases will they accept and forward telegrams en clair. For a week after we heard of the break in relations I kept the flag on the Legation. Lancken remarked one day after, in the course of a conversation, that this was not correct. He said nothing beyond making this observation, but inasmuch as according to the protocol he was right, I felt that it was better to avoid any complicating incident, if possible, and so had the flag down the following day.

Thus in relation to the Germans I seem to have no diplomatic character but to have become a distinguished personality, the degree of whose distinction depends on their uncertain and whimsical mood. Nevertheless, I have felt that I should delay my departure at least until the changes in the personnel of the commission are effected and the American delegates have left or until the continuance of the relief work, so far as it lies within my power to contribute to that end, is in some other way assured. I have the official assurance of the authorities that I may depart at any time with all the consideration due to ministerial rank. I am giving the representation of American interests to the Spanish Minister, as well as Japanese, Serbian, Danish, and Liechtenstein interests heretofore committed to my care. He will not however raise his flag on the Legation until I go, and the Legation staff will continue to do the work. According to an official note delivered to me by the Dutch Chargé d'Affaires, the British Government has asked the Netherland Government at The Hague to assume the protection of British interests here. I am therefore turning over the protection of British interests to the Dutch Chargé d'Affaires.

I am making arrangements for the immediate departure of the consuls, their families and personnel, and for such Americans as desire to leave Belgium. Other than those engaged in the relief work there are about 75 Americans left in Belgium. Missionary establishments have their houses and interests here and prefer to remain.

43. Department's February 15, 5 p. m., received to-day through Spanish Minister. Since February 15, German authorities have agreed to restore to commission delegates, including those in northern France, all their privileges, and the commission has received a despatch from Hoover instructing it to remain. Provided that these assurances are carried out, Gregory is entirely satisfied with situation as regards commission; all delegates are anxious to remain and carry out work if satisfactory. Crux of the difficulty is divergence of opinion between the English and German Governments concerning route for ships. If ships can not come the relief obviously can not go on. Under the circumstances I assume that that portion of Department's instruction under acknowledgment which relates to commission is now inapplicable. As regards my own position, while I am shown every personal courtesy, the Germans will hardly yield the point of diplomatic recognition. The German concessions concerning the commission seem, therefore, only to render my own position still more difficult. Both German and British Governments are trying to throw, one on the other, the responsibility of failure to continue relief work and the Germans at least would be glad of an excuse to place the blame on the American [Government?]. Inasmuch as a solution is momentarily expected I shall, in the absence of contrary instructions, delay my departure for a few days, feeling that if the relief work must fail it would be better from the American point of view were it to come to an end because of the inability of the German and British Governments to agree or because of curtailment of commission privileges at hands of Germany rather than on a point of diplomatic privilege.

There are now in United Kingdom ports 14 commission vessels, containing 58,000 tons foodstuffs, which are detained here by German threats. That statement by the Germans that commission had opportunity to change their destination and that vessels had ample time to proceed Rotterdam via northern route is untrue. An informal suggestion has been made by the German Legation, The Hague, to commission that it may be possible to arrange to dispatch vessels now held in United Kingdom direct to Rotterdam. Some cargoes are already deteriorating. British Foreign Office, commission, and Poland believe that if no positive assurance of safe-conduct is obtained from Germans by March 3 further delay will be useless and all vessels should be sent to Rotterdam direct across channel, protected with full markings but without safe-conduct pass. Would the Department inform German Government that if any of these ships are torpedoed by German submarines the United States Government will hold German Government responsible for interfering with food supplies to Belgium and northern France, which were imported under their safe-conduct?

256. Your No. 40, February 16, and undated message transmitted by Langhorne on 25th. Department desires to be informed whether agreement provides for withdrawal of whole relief staff on the same terms as Legation in case of necessity. If, as it seems, you are being treated with consideration, and if your voice in relief matters has same respect from German authorities as other ministers, Department thinks it desirable for you to remain for the present.

Hoover and his colleagues outside of Belgium are of the opinion that staff of mixed neutrals forming part of Commission for Relief in Belgium could not successfully carry on the relief, although it would no doubt be more agreeable to Germans and some Belgians. They, therefore, hold the view strongly that in the ultimate interests of the Belgians any change of staff made in Belgium should involve its complete change to a single nationality appointed by and under the direct patronage of some particular government; and they hold that because of intrinsically more influential position of Netherland Government, the possibility of Dutch supplies, and the high esteem of the Dutch people held in America, thus securing moral and charitable support here, and the ability of the Netherland Government to furnish civil servants to undertake the work, that such a course should be pursued. Hoover has been informed that this course has been approved by the British Government in case the Americans must retire, and consequently that the British are committed to continue the support of the relief. It was to force this issue that Hoover gave his former direction, and he believes this course is in the best interest of the Belgian and French people, although it may cause a few days stoppage of imports from Holland if the change should become necessary, which in any event does not arise for the present. In case withdrawal of American staff from Belgium and its replacement by Dutch, Hoover proposes to carry on outside operations until satisfactory arrangements are effected to relieve him and his colleagues.

In view of Hoover's instructions to the commission to remain, we no longer discussed that point but confined our remarks to my position. Lancken assured me again of their great desire to have me remain for the benefit of the relief, stating that he considered my presence and my personal influence with the different national elements involved of the utmost necessity. He was disposed to accord me all the privileges of a practical nature that I have formerly enjoyed, but on the question of the form of diplomatic recognition he said that they could not yield in principle because the United States had notified Germany of its desire to have no further diplomatic relations with it. As to the flag he preferred that I should not fly it on the Legation, because he said that as they were probably on the eve of great military movements the city is full of troops and he feared that some irresponsible soldier might provoke an incident that would aggravate the situation. As to the courier he proposed an arrangement that would permit me free correspondence, but insisted that my courier go out with that of the Spanish Legation. I told him that this was a privilege I already enjoyed and that the concession did not seem very large. He then asked me to wait until to-day when he would send me a letter. I have just received the letter which addressed me personally and assiduously avoiding any reference to a recognition of my diplomatic quality, is merely a polite repetition of his desire and of the desire of the Governor General to have me remain. Under the circumstances, I am informing the Germans that I shall withdraw at once from the occupied territory. 744. Foreign Office has sent me a communication enclosing a copy of note, dated February 17, 1917, addressed by German authorities at Brussels to the Dutch Chargé d'Affaires at Brussels, together with a copy of Dutch Chargé d'Affaires' reply thereto.

Following is summary of note, February 17:

German authorities do not consider that severance of diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States has created a new situation with regard to revictualing of occupied territories of Belgium and northern France, inasmuch as the revictualing is under the protection of the Dutch and the Spanish Governments on same basis as that of American Government. German authorities are willing to give such assistance in connection with revictualing as they have granted for maintaining and as is in conformity with the agreements already concluded. As some members of relief commission may return to the United States, it will probably be considered advisable to replace them by other suitable persons, the commission having always contained neutral members of different nationalities. The Governor General of Belgium submits for consideration the desirability of certain American members remaining in the direction of the commission at Brussels, and in the event that the Dutch Chargé d'Affaires considers this advisable, the Governor General would be willing to have Mr. Brand Whitlock cooperate with the commission. German authorities ask that Dutch Chargé d'Affaires arrange with Mr. Whitlock the nature of his cooperation.

Following is summary of Dutch Chargé d'Affaires' reply:

Dutch Government considers it desirable in the interests of revictualing of occupied territories that the Americans continue in every instance their functions in connection with the relief commission, and that the decision regarding the form which Mr. Whitlock's cooperation would take in connection with this work rests exclusively with the German authorities and with the Minister.

WASHINGTON, March 5, 1917.

[Received March 7.]

SIR: As soon as this Legation had taken over German interests the question arose as to whether I could, according to the American-German arrangement of 1914, continue to issue safe-conducts for the steamers which the American Commission for Relief in Belgium is continually sending to Holland. I immediately asked my Government to submit the question to the German Government and am now authorized to issue certificates of safe-conduct for all steamers of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium leaving the United States with cargoes consigned to that commission. The steamers must, however, take the course north of the Shetland Islands, remain outside the blockade zone declared by the German Government, and avoid the English Channel.

I have the honor to inform your excellency of the above, and for your information beg to enclose herewith copy of the certificate of safe-conduct¹ issued by this Legation in accordance with the arrangement set forth in the memoranda, dated November 23, 1914, and December 24, 1914, from the German Foreign Office to the American Embassy at Berlin.²

46. Referring again to Department's telegram 256, February 26, 5 p. m. Telegrams have passed between the King of Spain and the Queen of the Netherlands, and understand an exchange of views between the two Governments resulting in an agreement on their part that in the event of the Americans withdrawing from Belgium they will offer to replace the delegates by men of their nationalities, a majority of whom will be Dutch, but it is their desire that the commission continue under its present patronage and as nearly as may be as at present organized with the offices at London, New York, and Rotterdam conducted as at present by Americans, and if possible with an American director in Belgium. Loudon, Dutch Minister for Foreign Affairs, says this plan has the support of the Allied governments and that he has recruited enough Dutchmen to replace the American delegates in Belgium and Northern France.

I have an official letter from the Dutch Chargé d'Affaires here stating that he is ready at any time to designate the Dutchmen for this service. Inasmuch as this plan, as well as Hoover's plan and all the several plans proposed for the reorganization of work, contemplates replacing the American delegates in Belgium by Dutchmen, I think that the Dutchmen should be designated at once and that they should come in as understudies to the Americans, and that as soon as possible the Americans be relieved. The Germans have several times officially reiterated their assurances that the delegates may leave when they desire and have frequently promised to put these assurances in writing though they have not yet done so. One can place so little reliance in their promises, whether oral or written, when it suits their convenience to disregard them, that I strongly feel it to be my duty to recommend early action that will permit the American delegates to depart before the situation becomes more difficult.

5811. Your 4386, February 3, 4 p. m.¹ For Secretary and Hoover:

If the commission had withdrawn when break occurred with Germany and remained out, the blame would clearly have fallen on Germany. The constant controversies and entanglements that have since come show clearly that the Germans are maneuvering to throw blame on the commission and then to dismiss and eject it. I had advised commissioners here immediately to withdraw from France and Belgium. They wish Hoover to give Poland authority to take this action. Now information comes through Hoover that the Department has taken subject in hand, the commission, therefore, I presume, can not act except under instructions of the Department. Is this correct?

Delay in withdrawing will in my judgment result in the humiliation of the commission and in its ejection.

Kellogg reports hopeless conflict of opinion in Brussels. The Belgians wish Americans to remain even in case of war. Gregory favors remaining till war is declared; Whitlock favors immediate withdrawal. Meantime neither southern nor northern route to Rotterdam is safe.

I await and ask for instructions from Department.

We believe Germans are using dilatory tactics for purpose complicating shipping situation and forcing British action unloading cargoes which will enable them to make reprisals, possibly ending relief, and by clever compromises with our director Belgium, France get us in position where we can not charge withdrawal to them. Spanish Ambassador contends that after our withdrawal the Spanish are the commission; Allied Governments practically accept this view against our emphatic disclaimer. 4527. Your 5811, March 9, 10 a. m., and 5819, March 9, 5 p. m. Hoover strongly holds view, and Department agrees with him, that the relief commission has now become a national matter, and that any action on its part to bring about voluntary liquidation or cessation of its work would have a disastrous effect on public opinion. If conflicts arise between the Allied Governments and the Germans as to the handling of food, shipping, and other matters in connection with the relief, it is all the more essential that the committee make every effort to solve these difficulties as they arise; if a solution is not found, the responsibility for failure will not rest upon the commission. But for the commission to force a liquidation along the lines suggested in Mr. Poland's telegram would be positively disastrous. In general it is Hoover's view that the relief commission should continue its work until the last possible moment, and until it is forced out by one government or the other. Hoover is leaving immediately for London, where he will arrive about March 24. It is important that in the meantime no action shall be taken looking to withdrawal. So long as the American members of the commission remain at their posts the attitude of the Spanish as indicated by Mr. Poland need cause no concern.

The Department has to-day telegraphed Mr. Whitlock that it feels strongly that the commission should continue its work until forced to desist. He is instructed to take no steps looking to withdrawal pending receipt of further instructions.

MY DEAR MR. MINISTER: In view of the very serious difficulties in carrying on the relief work in Belgium and northern France, this Government feels that no useful purpose is to be served by maintaining a staff of American delegates in the territory occupied by German troops. I have to-day, therefore, by direction of the President, instructed the American Minister at Brussels to withdraw from Belgium, accompanied by all American officials and the American members of the Commission for Relief in Belgium.

It is, of course, essential that the humanitarian work of the commission be maintained and my Government is, therefore, glad to approve the proposal made by you on February 14, to the effect that "the Netherland Government would be glad to form a committee of Dutch subjects who would work under its patronage and take over . . . the duties till now performed by the American commission."

I venture to suggest, therefore, that you be good enough to inform your Government of the proposed withdrawal of the American members of the commission and to propose that the Rotterdam office of the Commission for Relief in Belgium be consulted as to the number of Dutch subjects it may be necessary to send into Belgium to carry on the work.

File No. 124.55/13½

Statement Given to the Press by the Department of State

WASHINGTON, March 24, 1917.

By direction of the President, the Minister at Brussels has been instructed to withdraw from Belgium, with all diplomatic and consular officers, and take up his official residence at Havre.

After consultation with the Commission for Relief in Belgium, Mr. Whitlock has also been instructed to arrange for the departure of the American members of the commission.

This step, the seriousness of which is fully appreciated by the Government, was taken only after careful consideration and full consultation with all the interests involved.

When diplomatic relations with Germany were broken off the normal procedure would have been to withdraw the Minister at Brussels and the American members of the relief commission. Both this Government and the commission, however, felt a heavy moral responsibility for the millions of innocent civilians behind the German lines, and it was decided that the work of the commission must be kept going despite all difficulties until continued American participation became impossible. For over two years it has been the single-minded purpose of this Government and the commission to see that these ten millions of civilians were fed, and, with this end in view, the Americans concerned have submitted to restrictions imposed on them by the German authorities which, under ordinary conditions, would never have been tolerated.

Immediately after the break in relations the German authorities in Brussels withdrew from Mr. Whitlock the diplomatic privileges and immunities which he had until that time enjoyed. His courier service to The Hague was stopped; he was denied the privilege of communicating with the Department of State in cipher, and later even in plain language. The members of the relief commission were placed under great restrictions of movement and communication which hampered the efficient performance of their task. In spite of all these difficulties the Government and commission were determined to keep the work going till the last possible moment.

Now, however, a more serious difficulty has arisen. In the course of the past 10 days several of the commission's ships have been attacked without warning by German submarines in flagrant violation of the solemn engagements of the German Government. Protests addressed by this Government to Berlin through the intermediary of the Spanish Government have not been answered. The German Government's disregard of its written undertakings causes grave concern as to the future of the relief work. In any event it is felt that the American staff of the commission can no longer serve with advantage in Belgium. Although a verbal promise has been made that the members of the commission would be permitted to leave if they so desire, the German Government's observance of its other undertakings has not been such that the Department would feel warranted in accepting responsibility for leaving these American citizens in German-occupied territory.

This Government has approved the proposal of the Netherland Government to send into Belgium a certain number of Netherland subjects to carry on the work thus far performed by the American staff.

50. I have the honor to report that I arrived in Berne this evening at 6 o'clock accompanied by entire staff of Legation, by Diederich and his staff, Johnson and his staff, and by all the members of the Commission for Relief in Belgium with the exception of 10. We had already sent out 7 members of the commission who, after having been 50 hours en route, arrived here Saturday afternoon, March 31. Nasmith left at 1 o'clock Monday for Holland. The family of Heingartner preferred to remain at Liège until the arrival of the son from Vienna. The German authorities readily agreed that they might leave when they desire. They were going to retain Sherman but I induced them to recede from this determination, and he came out with his family. Arrangements have been made for the departure of the few remaining Americans who wish to leave Belgium. I also brought out Chinese Legation consisting of 15 persons, including Chargé d'Affaires, Secretary of Legation, and their families, and the son of the Minister.

The 10 members of the commission who remained in Brussels are Gray, who preferred to stay as temporary director; Neville, Degruchy, and St. Amour, accountants, who remained at Gregory's instructions to close their books; and Wickes, Stone, Pate, Van Hee, Dangerfield and Carstairs, who, in accordance with regulations governing persons coming from zone of military operations, were required by the military authorities to remain in Brussels. They will remain for a period not exceeding four weeks from the date of their leaving Étape and in the meantime will assist in installing new members of the commission. Absolute written guaranties have been given by German authorities for their safe-conduct in any event. They are being courteously treated, and no apprehension need be felt concerning them.

German authorities first told me that these members of the commission would have to be in quarantine in Germany for a period of four weeks before they would be able to depart. They were induced to relax this measure so far as it concerned the delegates in the territory of the general government whose quarantine would then consist merely in a brief sojourn in Brussels. Finally, after several conferences, they abandoned this requirement altogether save as it applied to the six men previously mentioned, in whose case military authorities were inflexible and insisted on applying a rule that governs everyone who has been in the zone of military operations.

Then other difficulties arose. The authorities stated that the Legation could go at any time, the consuls and the commission would be required to remain because it would be impossible to provide special train for all the party. I replied that unless the consuls and the commission were permitted to accompany me I would not leave Belgium until after they had gone. This state of affairs continued until last Friday, when in a final interview with Lancken I told him that whatever the consequences I would not leave until after the others. After that their attitude changed and every courtesy was shown us. A special train was provided, and we left Brussels at 5 yesterday afternoon, April 2, and were taken to Zingen on the Swiss frontier by the most direct route as guests of the Imperial Government.

I should like to express my appreciation as well as that of the entire party, of the courtesy shown to us by the Governor General himself, by Baron von der Lancken, of the political department, by Count von Moltke, who made the arrangements for the train, and by Baron von Falkenhausen, who accompanied us to the frontier. Our departure from Brussels caused real sorrow and the scenes attending it were most touching. Silent crowds surrounded railway stations and gathered at street crossings, waving farewells. I had advised against manifestations and this mute sorrow was more affecting than the demonstration that would have occurred in normal times. I received addresses and deputations from the city of Brussels, the city of Antwerp, from proximate communes, the national committee, the National Bank, etc.

We were met at Zurich by the American Minister to Berne.

All members of the party are well, but because of the excessive anxiety as to the last 14 months we are all so weary that we shall take a few days rest in Switzerland. I shall then proceed directly to Havre.

German Government notified commission February 2 that no protection would be given relief ships except by route north of duly declared war zone. Ships then in war zone must leave by most direct route before certain date. Forty-seven thousand tons foodstuff then in stock in United Kingdom awaiting shipment Rotterdam; over 49,000 tons at sea arrived United Kingdom later. Overlapping of war zone with mine zones made proposed German route impracticable. War zone readjusted, northern route to Rotterdam reopened 28th February when traffic resumed. Safe-conduct passes issued by Swiss Minister, Washington; safe-conduct ships from United Kingdom refused until 3d April. Twenty-four thousand tons delivered Rotterdam during February; 9,000, March. Relief commission requires 120,000 tons per month foodstuff. Situation now most critical. German submarines have failed to adhere to any of the undertakings guaranteeing safety to commission ships. Following ships carrying commission markings and safe-conduct passes torpedoed outside war zone with considerable loss life in last two weeks during broad daylight. Euphrates, 4,250 tons; Feistein, 4,600 tons; Trevier, 4,300 tons; Anna Forstenes, 3,000 tons; Camilla, 2,600 tons. Two others reported lost; three other ships shelled and escaped sinking but with loss of life. Since 28th February six steamers arrived Rotterdam, five sunk in violation of undertakings to Spanish and Dutch Governments. Sinking brings sacrifice of innocent seamen and suffering to 10,000,000 Belgian, French men, women, children. In view of fact that four last torpedoed steamers sailed from America under safe-conduct, Swiss Minister, Washington, it is desirable vigorous protest be made to German Government through Swiss Government.

In view of the serious loss of both the ships and the cargoes of the Belgian Relief Commission, His Britannic Majesty's Government have regretfully arrived at the conclusion, in the absence of any apology or expression of regret by the German Government for the mistakes of their naval officers and in the face of the justification which they appear to advance in the intercepted German wireless message to the United Press of April 20, that the outrages were quite deliberate and that it is their intention to continue them.

His Majesty's Government are most anxious to maintain the relief but are reviewing the situation in the light of the outrages on relief vessels, and the French Government are being consulted as to the course to be pursued. In the meantime, the commission in London have been informed that His Majesty's Government would not, as at present advised, feel justified in allowing further relief vessels to proceed in the absence of reliable evidence to the effect that the Germans do not intend to sink them.

LONDON, January 2, 1917, 1 p. m.

5397. Department's 4231, December 29, 3 p. m. Hoover submits following statement:

There has been no apparent change in German policy since the President's protest. Deportation continuing on a large scale, now apparently three to five thousand per week. Despite assertions made to the President no distinction is made as to whether deportees are unemployed or not, and in fact there seems a definite policy to secure all members of certain trades and the desire to secure these and other skilled labor leads press gangs to delegate choice of those in actual employment. Moreover, they have taken altogether up to December 15 over 700 persons employed by the commission, despite the exhibit of credentials and their specific agreement with us to the contrary and against our protest. Furthermore, our American members have witnessed the taking of several thousands, particularly from Flanders, to northern France and together with local French people are now being forced to work for the German army in the preparation of timber and fascines for the trenches. Refusal to perform such labor has here been met with refusal of food and other brutal acts. It is also reported to us from what we believe to be reliable sources that Belgian and French civilians have been deported to work on trench construction in northern France, and certain deportees have been recently returned wounded by shell fire. Of the deportees to Germany some 300 have been returned to Hainaut Province, of whom a part were apparently returned because physically unable to work, but the remainder maintain that they were returned because of their steadfast passive resistance to pressure although they were entirely refused food over a considerable period and were ultimately returned for their recalcitrancy; their appearance confirms this. Altogether the assurances given the President that only unemployed people were taken and that they are not being employed on military work or brutally treated are absolutely untrue, not only before but since assurances were given. It does appear that the civil government in Brussels has made some efforts to prevent brutality in selection, to confine selections to unemployed, and to protect the employees of the commission, and they have even solicited complaints; but they appear unable to control the military press gangs or effect any remedies. It does not appear to us, however, that protest from the President, based on failure to carry out assurance given as to the method or purpose of these deportations, is consonant with the attitude that the Americans should take, for the real issue is the very act of forced deportation as being a violation of the most primary human liberty and international law. Any protest on method or purpose alone will be construed as a recognition by America of the right to force civilians from their homes and country. I am now convinced that the Entente Governments will take no action against the relief as a consequence of these deportations as they are convinced that stoppage of relief has been no remedy and they generally recognize would only accentuate the misery.

The hourly witnessing of these outrages and the prayers to the Americans from a people now in a state of complete terror, since Americans have been so peculiarly their protectors during the past two years, make it difficult for us to control the natural feelings of our staff and we can only hope that no untoward incident may occur. My impression is that any further protest at the moment in the name of humanity and international law would have no other effect than to produce irritation and the usual denials, although if other means fail a renewed protest should be delivered with the utmost vigor as a definition of America's attitude and as a deterrent to other outrages which may be contemplated.

For immediate practical purposes in the hope of remedying or ameliorating this particular evil, I would like to suggest a personal and private message from the President to the Emperor in the belief that the Emperor is intrinsically a humane man and generally desirous of promoting peace; such message to take the general line that the constant filtration of reports of these deportations and their surrounding circumstances is to-day one of the strongest stimuli to resolution for continuance of the war amongst the population in the Entente countries and has afforded an unparalleled basis of anti-German propaganda among neutrals, which no assertion of benevolent intentions can counteract; for the fundamental basis of deportation and compulsion of the population to work against its will and conscience being wrong can only bring suffering and criticism; that if Germany is genuinely anxious for peace she can scarcely hope for sympathetic sentiment to grow abroad to that end coincident with these acts, and that a total cessation of the deportations and forced labor and the return of the deported Belgians and French to their homes would be not only an act of great magnanimity but also of the greatest assistance in the promotion of peace sentiment.

BRUSSELS, January 2, 1917, 6 p. m.

[Received January 5, 8.15 a. m.]

29. Department's 243, December 29, 3 p. m. It is extremely difficult to obtain accurate information regarding deportations because of the lack of facilities for communication in Belgium. We have no intercourse with the Étape; that is, that part of Belgium which is exclusively under military jurisdiction comprising the two Flanders, certain parts of Hainaut and Luxemburg, and all northern France. It is also difficult to employ calm and restrained expression in the presence of an event so shocking to every sentiment of liberty and to our conception and tradition of human rights. One feels too peculiarly impotent because any efforts to alleviate has the sad possibility of increasing the sufferings of the helpless folk one tries to aid.

Deportations continue sporadically, one day in this commune and one day in that. It is estimated that between sixty and one hundred thousand men have been taken. Of these possibly two thousand have been returned. Our own and other neutral Legations have brought to the attention of German authorities many cases that did not seem to fall within the categories expressly exempted by the German reply to neutral protest. Necessarily because of the extreme delicacy and tension of the situation these representations have been discreetly and unofficially made. We have confined ourselves to the transmission of complaints or petitions left at the Legation. Perhaps unluckily the numbers of exceptions thus reported and acted upon by us run into the tens of thousands so that to grant them all would amount to a practical abandonment of the policy. The German authorities say that these are receiving attention.

The men returning from Germany bring distressing accounts of suffering, hunger, lack of shelter, and of cruelties employed to force them to sign contracts of employment. Making all possible allowance for exaggeration the conditions must be most pitiful.

My one hope in the midst of the black depression caused by this unprecedented measure lies in the fact that the higher civil officials are not in sympathy with the policy and are doing what they can to bring about a response. I have had to-day a long conversation with Lancken, and he tells me unofficially and confidentially that the deportations will gradually cease although this is by no means to be taken as an official promise to the Government. They realize that the policy is a mistake, but their peculiar pride will not permit them to appear before the world as having yielded to external influences and protests or to the threats of adversaries. I pointed out to Lancken that the continuance of the policy placed in jeopardy the chances of peace; they realize this and may be influenced by it. This consideration I think, if emphasized in the right quarter in a manner that would not give offense, might prove effective as bitter criticism only aggravates and does not soften the military party.

The later preparations, I observe, are made with more care than those that preceded the earlier deportations. They are to take men at Malines on January 4 and I have arranged to have Herter¹ witness the deportation as Lancken's personal but unofficial guest.

The continued requisition of stocks and materials in the few industries still in operation complicates the situation by increasing the number of unemployed and thereby formally exposing them to deportation.

It is unnecessary to add that publication of this despatch would compromise our efforts to influence the situation and to render service in isolated cases. My only hope, unless peace comes soon, lies in our good offices and the steady influence of public opinion, which acting on German Liberals may bring this dark chapter to a close.

Employment of Belgian Laborers in Germany

I

The compulsory employment of Belgian laborers in German works is utilized by our enemies as a welcome occasion in order to stir up the public opinion of neutral and hostile foreign countries against this alleged recent violation of the Belgian people. This propaganda threatens to assume considerable proportions, and it may even be considered likely that the Entente will attempt to induce neutral governments or high neutral personages to make a formal protest. An explanation of the causes and effects of the disapproved measures therefore appears necessary in order to prevent a one-sided judgment of the question.

Those who, far away from the scenes of the war, are able to judge the conditions in the territories occupied in the west only in a superficial manner, will perhaps not understand so easily that the measures taken are not only by no means injurious to the population of these regions from an economic standpoint, but had become to a certain extent a social necessity owing to the peculiar conditions prevailing there. He who wishes to comprehend this must first picture to himself the extent and effects of the nonemployment in Belgium. The chief cause of this is the British naval blockade, which is being ruthlessly enforced even against Belgium. Belgian industry is so greatly dependent on the importation of raw materials and the exportation of manufactured articles that the almost complete stoppage of foreign trade by England necessarily entailed automatically the paralyzation of by far the greater part of Belgian industries. This is especially the case with the important iron and steel industries, textile and clothing industries, and the ceramic and glass industry, which together employed over half a million workmen in time of peace, as well as with the leather, tobacco, paper, and chemical industry. Even fishing has entirely ceased in consequence of the blockade of the North Sea coast. A number of other enterprises had to be suspended because the materials used and their transportation had become so dear that the work was conducted at a loss; this occurred, among others, with the building industry (employing in peace 95,000 laborers) and the wood and furniture industry (80,000 laborers). The important mining industry owes it only to the extensive exportation of coal to Germany that it is able to employ about nine-tenths of its 145,000 laborers, and the stone quarries also employ one-third of their force, which had hitherto consisted of 35,000 hands, in order to fulfil orders which are mostly German.

That, as frequently asserted in Belgium, requisitions of raw materials and machinery by Germany have considerably increased the unemployment is not true for the reason that these requisitions were made primarily in factories which were unable anyway to keep running owing to one of the aforementioned causes.

The result of these occurrences is that, out of 1,200,000 men and women who worked in Belgian industrial enterprises before the war, and who represent about half of all persons in Belgium engaged in earning a living, 505,000 (including 158,000 women) are entirely, and 150,000 (including 46,000 women) partially, unemployed. Altogether there are therefore 655,000 persons, formerly earning their living by labor in industry, who are now dependent upon public assistance, a number which, added to 293,000 wives and 612,000 children of the unemployed, reaches a total of 1,560,000 needy people and represents about one-fifth of the entire population of Belgium.

In so highly a developed industrial nation as Belgium this state of affairs, without precedent in history, had necessarily to entail the gravest economic and social troubles. The sums expended up to the present in order to furnish the bare minimum needed for existence to the unemployed persons and those dependent upon them already amount to over 300,000,000 francs and are likely to amount to no less than 20,000,000 francs a month in future. Even though foreign countries undertook to finance the work of affording this assistance, nevertheless Belgian national economy must eventually bear the burden. The equivalent of these expenditures, which are not made for productive labor, is not only entirely lost to Belgian economic life, but even does it considerable injury. The laborers are so accustomed to idleness by the help afforded them that a Belgian employer at present has difficulty in finding the necessary workmen to keep his enterprise going.

If this fact, in view of the above-cited large number of unemployed, in itself throws a sharp light on the economic troubles created in Belgium by unemployment, then the present condition must be characterized as wholly intolerable from a social standpoint if we picture to ourselves the consequences which the long continuing idleness produces for the laboring population. It is obvious that a trained laborer will lose his ability through long years of idleness, and his value to Belgian industry will therefore be seriously diminished. Even the unskilled laborer, who has been accustomed to a constant exertion of his strength, will be physically impaired by remaining unoccupied for a long time. In a moral way a continuance of present conditions will be absolutely devastating in its effects. The feeling of humiliation experienced by morally sound persons when they have to beg their living from foreign charity is in the long run entirely lost by the laboring classes, and they cease to be proud of being able to support their families by their own efforts. The saying that idleness is the beginning of vice is verified to an enhanced degree in the case of the materially inclined Belgian laborer, and the consequences are drunkenness and moral degeneracy in wide circles of these classes of the population, among whom family life also incurs many dangers.

All these circumstances, as well as the gradual impoverishment of the laborers' families, who are able to satisfy only the most necessary material needs after consuming all their savings, must inevitably involve a weakening of the whole power of the Belgian people.

II

Baron von Bissing, Governor General of Belgium, early realized the grave significance of this question to the population of the territory under his administration, and he consequently turned his whole attention to it from the beginning of his official activity. As far as the requirements of warfare permitted, he encouraged the revival of commerce and industry and favored every importation and exportation that was at all possible under the British blockade. He also exhorted the Belgian communal administrations to undertake emergency work that would be of utility to the general public, provided this would not cause any overburdening of the communal finances. The constantly increasing assistance to the unemployed has also been the subject of his unceasing solicitude, as he had long since recognized that such assistance would encourage aversion to work and thus enlarge the number of unemployed. He has, therefore, repeatedly instructed the authorities under him to see that the help afforded unemployed did not become an obstacle to their resumption of work, and he has also induced the heads of the assistance committees to act along the same lines.

By all these measures it was possible to limit, but by no means remove, the evil, for the reason that the deeper cause, the British naval blockade, made its effects felt more and more as time went on. The Governor General was accordingly obliged, even last year, to resort to a more powerful means in order to counteract the increasing habit of idleness on the part of the people. At the instance of shrewd Belgians, and with the cooperation of the proper Belgian Ministry, he issued an order in August, 1915, against shirking of labor, which order was supplemented and strengthened in March of this year. These orders contemplate a compulsory removal to the places of work only when the laborer declines without sufficient grounds a job offered him at appropriate wages and within his capacity, and in this connection any ground of refusal based on international law is regarded as sufficient. A workman can accordingly not be forced to participate in warlike enterprises. The orders are directed primarily against certain organized influences which wish to keep the laborers from voluntarily accepting remunerative work only because it was offered by Germans. They are founded on sound legislative considerations, which restrict the liberty of the individual in the interest of the general public.

The evil conditions which existed even at the time of issuance of these orders having in the course of time become entirely intolerable, the orders are now to be enforced more extensively than hitherto. Before they are applied, a proposition is made to the unemployed workman that he voluntarily enter into an advantageous labor contract, and only in case he stubbornly refuses (usually as a result of incitement) are forcible measures employed. The unemployed who go to Germany are placed on an equal footing there with the German laborers, and they receive higher wages than were ever known in Belgium. Care is taken to send part of these wages to the families remaining behind. The laborers are likewise allowed to carry on correspondence by letter with their families, and they are granted leave to go home at regular intervals. At their request they may even take their families with them to Germany. Provision is also made for religious service in their mother tongue.

III

The great advantages which accrue to Belgian laborers from the opportunity thus offered them to work, as compared with their previous sorry plight, are so obvious that for a year tens of thousands of them have been voluntarily availing themselves of the offer and have found remunerative labor in Germany. Happy to have escaped the misery caused by many months' idleness and the humiliation of public assistance, they have been able to restore their physical and moral strength by returning to their normal occupation. By the labor of their hands they can again raise their families up to a higher standard economically and make savings for the future. The temporary transplantation to another home does not frighten them, as Belgian laborers are used to wandering and have, in time of peace, often hired out for work in the southern industrial section of the country or in northern France for several months for the sake of a much less increase in wages than that now offered. The transfer of Belgian laborers to Germany therefore means a considerable improvement in the situation of these laborers and the abolition of conditions which have become intolerable.

THE JURISDICTION OF AMERICAN COURTS OVER SHIPS REQUISITIONED BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS: THE CASE OF THE "ATTUALITA"

The Counselor of the Italian Embassy (Brambilla) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, September 12, 1916.

[Received September 13.]

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: The Ambassador has directed me to inform you that although the Italian Consul at Philadelphia had on August 28, ultimo, caused to be sent to the United States District Court at Richmond, Va., a certificate stating that the Italian S. S. Attualità had been requisitioned by the Royal Government, and subsequently notified the above court, by a letter dated August 29, that, as a consequence of its requisition, the said ship could not be subjected to attachment, the Attualità was attached upon arriving at Norfolk, Va., on the 9th instant, following a libel filed against her with the United States District Judge at that port by the owner of the Greek S. S. Mina.

The Ambassador wishes me to point out to your excellency that, although the United States Government have never disputed the right of a requisitioned ship to be exempt from attachment and although judges of American courts have not only repeatedly confirmed it in their judgments, but expressed the opinion that, as in the case of the Greek S. S. Athanasios—

It may also be noted that, under existing treaties and what has hitherto been considered accepted international usage, it would be the duty certainly of the executive, and probably of the judicial, branch of the United States Government to assist the Consul General of Greece in carrying out the orders of his king in respect of the Athanasios, inasmuch as such orders in no wise interfere with the peace, order, or dignity, of the United States, however destructive they may be to a private contract between subjects of Greece and Great Britain. (Judge Hough of the District Court—New York, Nov. 15, 1915.)

and in the case of the Italian S. S. Luigi—

It is far more important for the courts of the United States to recognize the international rule of comity that an independent sovereign can not be personally sued, because such a suit would be inconsistent with the independence and equality among the nations of the state which he represents, than it is to take cognizance of private rights, if, by so doing, that rule is violated. If, therefore, by means of the attachment against the Luigi now under requisition as a public vessel of the Italian Government, the authority of the court is indirectly exercised or attempted to be exercised upon the Italian Government, so as to be inconsistent with the independence and equality of that government, the writ of attachment must be quashed. (Judge Thompson of the District Court—Pennsylvania, February 22, 1916.)

the case of the Attualità and some previous cases show that Italian requisitioned ships are, in certain instances, subjected to attachment by American judicial authorities.

Whilst instructing me to beg your excellency to kindly take up the matter with the Department of Justice in view of obtaining the prompt release of the Attualità, Count Cellere has, therefore, requested me at the same time to add that he would greatly appreciate it if the Department of State would suggest some procedure by which it may be possible to protect Italian requisitioned ships in the enjoyment of their rights and avoid the considerable delays and losses to which the Royal Government has been exposed through the attachment in American ports of ships requisitioned by them.

Whilst awaiting the favour of a reply which I may communicate to the Ambassador, I beg to remain [etc.]

[Translation ¹]

No. 2977

BEVERLY FARMS, MASS., October 2, 1916.

[Received October 4.]

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: On September 12 last, by a letter addressed to your excellency, Signor Brambilla, Counselor of the Royal Embassy, had the honor to inform you that although the Italian consular officer had officially declared to the Federal magistrate that the Italian Steamer Attualità was a steamship requisitioned by the King's Government and therefore was not attachable, the said steamer, pursuant to the application of the owner of the Greek S. S. Mina, was held under a writ of attachment issued by the District Court of Norfolk, Va.

The principle that a steamship requisitioned by a friendly government must not be liable to attachment being an accepted principle that never was questioned by the Government of the United States, I ventured to represent to your excellency in the above-mentioned letter that requisitioned Italian steamers had been and (as evidenced by the Attualità case) continued to be subjected to attachment by the American judiciary. I, therefore begged your excellency to be pleased to acquaint the Federal Department of Justice with the fact that had been brought to your notice, with a view to an early release of the Attualità. And I asked at the same time that you kindly suggest some procedure that would make it possible to protect requisitioned Italian steamers in the enjoyment of their rights as well as to avoid the considerable delays and the no less considerable loss entailed on the King's Government by the attachment in American ports of steamers requisitioned by it.

Your excellency will readily understand that I must be somewhat grieved at finding that I have not up to date had the honor to receive an answer to the above-mentioned note of September 12 and, instead, that the steamship Attualità is still held under attachment. Neither the official attestations of the Royal consular officer nor the subsequent official declaration of this Embassy made in the second note of September 18 to your excellency¹ have availed to prevent the attachment being brought into court for a hearing. And while, on September 23, the District Court of Norfolk, upon an argument of the cause, decided it had no "jurisdiction" over the steamer and ordered its release, the Court of Appeals has stayed execution of that judgment and, in turn, set the 5th of this month for the date of a further hearing, thereby leaving open, before all, the possibility of an eventual denial of the unquestionable right of the King's Government.

The importance of the statement I have the honor to lay before you can not escape your excellency when considering the painful impression this attitude of the American judiciary is bound to create among the officials of the Kingdom and would create on public opinion in Italy, if known. The S. S. Attualità, which is not liable to attachment on account of its being requisitioned by the King's Government, has been detained under an attachment in an American port since the 9th of September. It is still subject to the judgment of the court. The Italian Government is suffering considerable loss therefrom. The Royal Embassy had the honor to bring the case to your excellency's notice as early as the 12th of September, and asked at the same time a suggestion as to the procedure which might insure to the King's Government for the future the enjoyment in American ports of the rights that appertain to it in the matter of steamers belonging to the state. It was all the more necessary and urgent to define such a procedure as cases of attempted attachment may recur at any moment. I have not yet had the honor to receive an answer to that note.

Your excellency will therefore indulge my again drawing your benevolent attention to the case and again appealing to your authoritative intercession for measures to be applied now and suggestions likely to smooth in the future the way to a practical recognition of a sovereign right of the Italian State.

I thank your excellency therefore in advance and renew to you [etc.]

The Counselor of the Italian Embassy (Brambilla) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, October 13, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: The Ambassador has instructed me to inform your excellency that, although he has not yet had the honour of receiving a reply to his note of the second instant, he supposes that the Department of State is by now fully acquainted with the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond, Va., of October the 6th, in the case of the Italian S. S. Attualità. He, therefore, directs me to submit to your excellency's consideration the fact that, according to counsel of this Embassy, no form of redress against the decision of the above Court of Appeals seems now to be possible, except by a petition to the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari to be filed by the United States Attorney General upon request of His Majesty's Embassy to the Department of State.

Whilst reiterating the formal protests of the Royal Government against the assumption of jurisdiction by United States courts over an Italian requisitioned ship, a proceeding so inconsistent with the rules of international courtesy which are universally observed when the sovereign rights of a foreign state are involved, the Ambassador now directs me to point out to your excellency the even greater inconsistency with those rights of the further procedure now fatally arising out of a situation of which the entire responsibility rests with the Government of the United States. The very shortness of the term of 10 days granted by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for a petition to the United States Supreme Court would suffice by itself to show how utterly impossible it is to apply procedures framed for private individuals to cases where the very essence of the right of sovereignty and the supreme power of dominion of a foreign state are involved, as it would be hardly reasonable to expect the necessarily slow moving and complicated machinery of a modern state, often separated by thousands of miles from its representatives abroad, to move with a celerity of which it is actually incapable.

Although all previous friendly representations made by this Embassy to the Department of State have remained, so far, unheeded, the Ambassador is confident that your excellency will realize the difficulty of the situation with which he is now confronted notwithstanding all the efforts made by this Embassy with a view of reaching an amicable settlement of this question. He trusts that your excellency will realize that it is utterly impossible for His Majesty's Government to submit to any procedure inconsistent with the dignity of a sovereign state and that it would be hardly just to expect an ambassador to take any steps in questions of such vital importance without even having time to receive instructions from his Government.

WASHINGTON, October 26, 1916.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the communications addressed by your Embassy to the Department under dates of September 12, October 2, and October 13, 1916, respectively, with regard to the proceedings instituted in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia against the Italian steamer Attualità which you state has been "requisitioned" by your Government. In one of these communications you represented that the action of a court of this country in taking jurisdiction in this case is inconsistent with "the rules of international courtesy which are universally observed when the sovereign rights of a foreign state are involved." And you requested that steps be taken with a view to the early release of the vessel, and that I suggest some procedure "that would make it possible to protect required [requisitioned] Italian steamers in the enjoyment of their rights as well as to avoid the considerable delay and the no less considerable loss entailed on the King's Government by the attachment in American ports of steamers required [requisitioned] by it."

The Department has examined the judicial proceedings taken in the case of the steamer Attualità, and the questions raised by your communications respecting this case have received the Department's attentive consideration.

Briefly summarized, the facts and circumstances in connection with your complaint are as follows:

On September 9, 1916, a libel was filed in the court by the owner of a Greek steamer called the Mina to recover damages to the amount of $800,000 for the losses resulting from a collision between this vessel and the steamship Attualità, which occurred in the month of July, 1916, in the Mediterranean Sea. Counsel for your Embassy appeared in the case as amicus curiae and moved to have the vessel released on the ground of its governmental character. It appears that during the course of the proceedings an appearance was also made by the master of the vessel in behalf of its owners and other interested persons.

On the receipt of the note addressed to the Department by the Counselor of the Embassy under date of September 12, 1916, the Department communicated it to the Attorney General with the request that the contents thereof be laid before the court, and it appears that in accordance with this request the following statement was presented to the court through a representative of the Department of Justice:

I, Richard H. Mann, United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia, acting under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, respectfully bring to the attention of the court that the Attorney General of the United States has received from the Secretary of State of the United States a communication dated September 15, 1916, to the effect that the Secretary of State has been advised by the Italian Ambassador that the Italian steamship Attualità, which has been libeled and attached in this proceeding, was at the time of the said attachment and is now requisitioned by the Italian Government, and was at the time of said attachment and is now in the service of the Italian Government; and I am further directed to call the attention of this court in this connection to the Luigi, 230 Federal Reporter 493.

In bringing this matter to the attention of the court, the United States does not intervene as an interested party, nor do I appear either for the United States or for the Italian Government, but I present the suggestion as amicus curiae, as a matter of comity between the United States Government and the Italian Government, for such consideration as the court may deem necessary and proper.

On September 28, 1916, the District Court ordered the release of the vessel.

An appeal from the court's decision was taken by the libelant to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. This tribunal apparently held that the ship was not immune from the jurisdiction of the courts of this country, and it reversed the decree of the lower court and remanded the case for further proceedings.

I desire to present to you certain considerations prompting me to reach the conclusion that the decision of the higher court does not conflict with established principles of international law and practice, or involve, as stated in Mr. Brambilla's note of October 13, "procedure inconsistent with the dignity of a sovereign state," which this Government would not knowingly sanction or defend.

In the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals and in arguments of counsel, reference is made to the case of The Exchange (7 Cranch 116), in which the Supreme Court of the United States held that the public armed vessels of a foreign nation may, upon principles of comity, enter the harbors of this country with the presumed license of the Government, and while there are exempt from the jurisdiction of local courts.

Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in rendering the opinion of the court, said that the "perfect equality and absolute independence of sovereigns, and this common interest impelling them to mutual intercourse, and an interchange of good offices with each other, have given rise to a class of cases in which every sovereign is understood to waive the exercise of a part of that complete exclusive territorial jurisdiction, which has been stated to be the attribute of every nation."

It appears that he divided these cases into the following classes: (1) the immunities accorded the person of the sovereign in a foreign country; (2) the immunities granted by civilized nations to foreign diplomatic representatives; (3) the immunities allowed the troops of a foreign prince which are permitted to pass through his dominions; and (4) the immunities granted to public armed vessels.

In order to determine which, if any, of these rules is applicable, it is important to ascertain the exact status of the steamer in question. The only information on this point contained in the communications under acknowledgment is that the vessel has been "requisitioned" by the Italian Government. From the record of the court proceedings, however, it appears that under Italian law the owner of a steamer whose services are "requisitioned" by the Italian authorities is paid a compensation by the government calculated on a specifically prescribed basis; that the contract of the enrollment of the crew continues in force during the period of "requisition"; that the owner is obligated to pay the master and crew, as well as all expenses of operating the ship, and the cost of insurance against misfortunes; that the vessel must be returned to the owners at the termination of the period of requisition in a condition defined by the terms of the requisition, and that damages sustained by the vessel in consequence of the services performed must be determined by a technical commission and paid to the owners.

It further appears that under the terms of the requisition of the Attualità, an arbitral procedure is provided for the adjustment of all controversies between the Italian Administration of War and the owner of the vessel in relation to the interpretation and fulfillment of the conditions of the contract of requisition as well as all other matters growing out of the requisition except the amount of compensation to be paid the owner; and that the Italian authorities hold the owners of the vessel responsible for the cargo from the time it is loaded until it is unloaded.

The Attualità, therefore, appears to be not only not an armed public vessel of the Italian Government, but not even a merchant vessel owned by that Government. She seems to be merely a merchant vessel—owned by private persons as heretofore, and fully equipped, insured, manned, and operated by and at the expense of the owners, who are responsible for any damages sustained by the ship in the course of the services performed as well as for the cargo on board—whose services are purchased for a stated period by the Italian Government for a stipulated compensation. I do not perceive that this private character of the vessel is in any way impaired by the fact that the contract of employment is compulsory rather than voluntary.

It seems obvious, therefore, that the Attualità can not be regarded as entitled to any of the immunities under the rules pointed out by Chief Justice Marshall in the case of the schooner Exchange. Nor do I perceive that there is any other rule of international law or comity granting this vessel immunity from the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts of this country in a case of this character. The object of the court in taking jurisdiction is, I presume, to determine whether the vessel or the owner is liable for the alleged marine tort on account of which the vessel was libeled. The courts are open to the owners of the vessel to defend their rights in the proceedings instituted against it and to endeavor through appropriate proceedings to have set aside by the court of last resort the decision holding the vessel for trial. It seems clear, therefore, that the action of the court in taking jurisdiction in the case on its merits does not necessarily result in directly or in indirectly impleading the Government of Italy.

The Circuit Court of Appeals in its opinion commented briefly on the consequences of granting immunity to a privately owned merchant vessel engaged in the regular trade, though temporarily in the service of the government. The court said:

There are many reasons which suggest the inexpediency and the impolicy of creating a class of vessels for which no one is responsible in any way. For the public armed ships of a sovereign, and for those whether armed or not, which are in the actual possession, custody and control of the nation itself, and are operated by it, the nation would be morally responsible although without her consent not answerable legally in her own or other courts. For torts and contracts of an ordinary vessel it and its owners are liable. But the ship in this case, and there are now apparently thousands like it, is operated by its owners and for its actions no government is responsible at law or in morals.

The persons in charge of the navigation of the ship remain the servants of the owners and are paid by the owners. The immunity granted to diplomatic representatives of a sovereignty, to its vessels of war, and under some circumstances to its other property in its possession and control, can be safely afforded because the usual limited numbers and the ordinarily responsible character of the diplomats or agents in charge of the property in question and the dignity and honor of the sovereignty in whose services they are, make abuse of such immunity rare. There will be no such guaranty for the conduct of the thousands of persons privately employed upon ships which at the time happen by contract or requisition to be under charter to sovereign governments.

There are other practical reasons which impel me to my regret to disagree with the contentions advanced in the communications under acknowledgment. If those contentions were admitted, American tribunals might become impotent to determine even the rights of American citizens in cases of maritime torts, salvage, and contracts involving such vessels, and therefore no remedies would be open to American citizens in such cases except through diplomatic channels. Indeed, it would seem that, if your excellency's contention is followed to its logical conclusion, the courts of this country would be precluded from the administration of criminal jurisprudence in cases where the arrest of any persons connected with such vessels for any offence committed within the territorial jurisdiction of this country might involve a delay in departure from port.

There is a further consideration to which I must call your excellency's attention. The steamer Attualità and other private merchant vessels whose services have been required by belligerent governments during the present war have freely entered and cleared in the ports of this country in conformity with the laws and regulations observed by other private merchantmen and have not claimed the immunities from local laws and regulations accorded to public vessels of war by the universal practice of nations.

Should this Government concede the contention which I understand you to make: namely, that vessels having the status of the steamer Attualità should be given in this country a treatment assimilated to that accorded to vessels of war, and should not be subjected to the laws and regulations generally governing merchant vessels in foreign ports, a grave question might, in my judgment, be raised as to the propriety of this Government's permitting such vessels freely to enter, remain at will, and leave the ports of this country, and to transport therefrom merchandise of all kinds, including articles of contraband of war for the direct use of belligerent governments.

The cases of the Athamasios (228 Fed. Rep. 558), and the Luigi (230 Fed. Rep. 493), referred to in the Counselor's note of September 12, do not appear to me to form a precedent applicable to this case, as it is evident from the reports of these cases that the question of the immunity of the ship from judicial process was not involved in the decisions in these cases.

Furthermore, even though these two decisions might be considered as giving a measure of support to your excellency's contentions with respect to the immunity of the steamer Attualità, it should be observed that they were rendered by a court inferior to the Circuit Court of Appeals against whose decision in the case of the Attualità your Government now complains.

Since it appears that the action of the Circuit Court of Appeals in refusing to deny the foreign libellant the opportunity to establish his rights in an admiralty court of this country was in conformity with the practice of the courts of the United States to take jurisdiction in controversies in admiralty between foreign vessels, and since it further appears that the proceedings in this case did not involve any attempt to exercise jurisdiction over the Italian Government or its property, I can not bring myself to share the view of the Counselor of the Embassy in his note of October 13, that the judicial proceedings which have taken place contravene "the rules of international courtesy which are universally observed when the sovereign rights of a foreign state are involved," or to admit that this procedure is "inconsistent with the dignity of a sovereign state."

I earnestly hope that a further consideration of the case will convince your excellency of the soundness of the views of this Government as to the course adopted, and that you will reach the same conclusion as to the embarrassments and complications which would undoubtedly arise if any other course were pursued, for I am convinced that you are as anxious as I am to avoid creating new controversies of a far more serious nature relating to vessels under contract to your Government entering American ports as private vessels of commerce.

As to means of avoiding the delay and loss to the King's Government growing out of legal proceedings of this sort, upon which you desire some suggestion, I have no doubt that the court would entertain a proper application of the owners to release the vessel under bonds pending the final disposition of the case, as was done in the case of the Italian steamer Luigi.

WASHINGTON, December 14, 1916, 4 p. m.

682. Your 750, December 11, 3 p. m. In note dated October 26, 1916, Department communicated to Italian Ambassador reasons why it did not consider it was in position to take steps looking to release steamer Attualità. In note, December 8,¹ Department informed Ambassador that for reasons set forth in previous note the Department must adhere to views therein contained to effect that action of court in taking jurisdiction in case this vessel was not at variance with international law or international custom and Department again pointed out, as was done in note October 26, that courts are open to owners of vessel to defend their rights and to endeavor to have set aside by court of last resort decision holding vessel for trial, and that inconvenience resulting from detention vessel could doubtless be avoided in case owners should enter bond as was done in case of an Italian steamer called the Luigi.

Baron Sonnino apparently is in error with respect to statements made regarding agreement with Department that no ships requisitioned by Italy would be subjected to seizure, Department having entered into no such agreement. You may communicate with Foreign Office in sense foregoing.

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1917.

[Received May 14.]

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: With reference to the correspondence exchanged with your excellency in the case of the S. S. Attualità and with special reference to my note of November 20, 1916,¹ I have the honor to confirm to your excellency that in the spirit of the law in force in the Kingdom the transfer of the flag of Italian steamers is prohibited. This prohibition was first established by a decree—law of April 1, 1915, and since confirmed by a decree of the Lieutenant of the Kingdom of April 2, 1916, which superseded the first.

As it appears from information received at the Embassy that Judge Waddill of Norfolk is about to decree the forced sale of the Attualità, I have the honor to beg your excellency kindly to apprise for all pertinent purposes, the above-named judge of the existence of the aforesaid prohibition. I enclose to that end a certified copy of the Lieutenant's decree of April 2, 1916.¹

In performing the duty of renewing in this instance the reserves previously made regarding the action taken by the Government of the United States and the courts of Norfolk and Richmond in the case of the S. S. Attualità which as a requisitioned vessel is not subject to foreign jurisdiction, I extend to your excellency, together with my thanks for the transmission hereby requested, the sentiment of my highest consideration.

WASHINGTON, May 29, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 12th instant in which you request that this Department apprise the United States judge at Norfolk who, you state, is about to decree the forced sale of the Italian steamship Attualità, that under the laws in force in the Kingdom of Italy the transfer of the flag of Italian steamers is prohibited.¹

I regret that I do not consider that I am in a position to interfere in any way in this case in its present status.

According to my information the case was tried on its merits by a court of competent jurisdiction, and both parties litigant were given a full opportunity to present their cases to the court, which I understand has entered a decree finding that the steamer Attualità was wholly at fault in connection with the collision which took place between it and the steamer Mina. I am further informed that the case has been referred to a commissioner to ascertain the amount of damages resulting from the collision to the last-mentioned vessel and its cargo.
