First Showing of Dance Drama is Highly Pleasing

BY A. P.

Combining beauty of rhythm, of color, and of music the first presentation of the Dance Drama delighted a capacity audience at the open air theater last night.

Solo dances took precedence over other numbers and were notable for their finish and technique. The staccato swiftness of "Caprice Militaire" and the whimsicality of the "Goliwog Cake Walk" were among the outstanding of these.

"The Cycle of the Hours" was the climax of the program with its array of costumes and the rhythmic movement of the dancers. Music for this feature was written by Dorothy Kornhauser. "Dawn" and "Twilight" were particularly beautiful dances in the final numbers.

Seats for this evening's performance are about sold out, but reserved tickets may be obtained from the W. S. G. A. office and Hooks.

HOLD RECEPTION FOR MOTHERS AT HILLEL

A reception for mothers will be held at 8 o'clock tonight at the Hillel foundation. Installation of the new student council with presentation of emblems to the debating team and of medals to the free-throwing team will precede an address by Leon L. Lewis, secretary of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. The Hillel players will present "A Proposal Under Difficulties," a one act comedy by John Kendrick Bangs.

BADGER HIGH STUDENTS MAY GET FREE TUITION

Free tuition to the university will be awarded Wisconsin High school students receiving high grades in the regents' scholarship examinations which will be given next week. Announcement of the awards will be made at the school commencement exercises.

Regents Authorize Additional Wings For Bascom Hall

Bascom hall will soon undergo radical changes in order to meet the need of additional classrooms, as a result of an authorization of the regents of the university given out yesterday. The Bascom hall improvement includes extension of the central portion of the rear and the construction of a new two story addition to the south wing.

The Bascom hall of the future, under plans now contemplated will be four stories high throughout, with two courts in the center section. The cost of this addition is estimated at $500,000. Bids will be asked both on this project and on that of the men's dormitory units during the coming summer, after completion of specifications by State Engineer Arthur Peabody.

The dormitory units, to be located near the lake shore, at the rear of the home of Dean H. L. Russell, will house some 475 students and 16 proctors, and will cost $500,000. In addition, the first section of a dining hall is to be erected.

There will be a compulsory meeting of all reporters and special writers at 4:30 o'clock Monday afternoon at the Daily Cardinal office in the Union building.

Mother's Here! That's Reason For Smiles and Joy and Vanished Woes

You see it in the smiling faces, in the very walk of the students. You sense it in the air and somehow you are better for the buoyant feeling of well-being.

Mother always gives you that feeling. It is good to know that she is with you. She makes you feel just as she did when you used to run to her with the cut or bruise or the soiled party dress. Anxiety and depression vanish, worry about exams is laid aside for the future.

COMMERCE MEN HEAR STEVENSON

Chicago Financier Talks on Railways at Banquet at Park Hotel

"Three obstacles in the way of railroad consolidation in this country are man's limitations, man's selfishness, and man made laws," declared Andrew Stevenson, Chicago financier in his talk on "The Personal Equation in the Merger of Railroads in the United States" before students in the Course in Commerce and Madison business men at the annual Commerce day banquet at the Park hotel last night. Approximately 175 attended the affair.

Preceding Mr. Stevenson on the program were Prof. F. H. Elwell, representing the faculty of the Course in Commerce, and Colonel Arnold Jackson, representing Madison business men.

In his address, Mr. Stevenson pointed out the fact that American railroads were actually, if not nominally consolidated. Kuhn Loeb and company, and J. P. Morgan company, both of New York City, control indirectly all but 10,000 miles of American railroad lines; and 17 separate railroad systems in the United States control all but 45,000 miles of trackage.

Mr. Stevenson referred to the congressional plan of dividing the country's railroad lines into 25 systems. The need for this he held self obvious, but the plan he said was not yet practicable.

SQUEEZE PLAYS IN SEVENTH FATAL TO BADGERS, 7 TO 2

Few Hits, Clever Base Running Features of Game With Minnesota

By STAN KALISH

By the clever use of the squeeze play the Minnesota baseball nine triumphed over the Badger team 7 to 2 in a Big Ten contest yesterday afternoon at Camp Randall.

It was a game featured by few hits, but clever base running and application of baseball knowledge. Up until the fatal seventh inning, when the Gophers sneaked five runs across the plate, the game looked like a tight affair. Clausen, who worked on the mound for the Badgers, held his opponents to a solitary hit, which was scratch single and a lone run.

Squeeze Play Fatal
the other hand, Andehsonh1rlit.
On the other hand, Anderson, the Gopher moundsman, had granted five hits, but however had held the Badgers to but one run. Then came the fatal seventh for the Wisconsin nine. A hit, a walk, an error, and the application of the squeeze play netted five runs.

The first scoring of the game in the fourth inning when Christgau, Gopher catcher, was hit by Clausen; he advanced when Rasey was thrown out by Ellingson at first, and scored when Smith singled through shortstop. Wieland made a spectacular stop of Smith's drive, but the ball was going too fast to hold on to and it rolled away, Smith going to second.

Edwards First Badger Score
The first Badger score came in the sixth inning. With one out, Edwards singled to right field and stole second base. He went to third when Christgau overthrew second when he stole; and scored when Foote fumbled the overthrow which had rolled to center field.

Then came the "Minnesota inning." Rasey singled to left field and went to second on a wild pitch by Clausen. Smith drew a pass. Rasey scored when Ellingson chose to put out Smith at second on Mason's fielder choice, but he threw the ball wild, Smith going to third and Mason advancing to second base. Hall flied out to Steen, but Anderson scored Smith on a squeeze play when he laid a perfect bunt along the first base line. He was safe at first on the play, Mason going to third. Mason scored on Foote's bunt, another squeeze play, and Foote was safe at first, Anderson going to third. Guzy flied out to Steen, but Ascher tripled to left field clearing the bases. Christgau was an easy out.

Last Runs in Eighth
The last Gopher run came in the eighth inning when Rasey drew a walk and went to third on Wieland's error, who fumbled Smith's ground. He scored on Hall's out.

The last Badger run was made in the eighth inning by Ellingson. He singled to right field and went to second when Edwards drew a pass and advanced to third when Anderson gave another pass out, this time to Larson. Ellingson scored when Ascher muffed Donagan's grounder.

Shimek Withdrawn

From Chicago Race

MILWAUKEE—Coach Connie Jennings of the Marquette university track team on Thursday announced he had withdrawn Marquette's entries in the Finnish-American games in Chicago next Sunday because Melvin Shimek, his star distance man, has been "off color" in his trial spins this week. Jennings now is devoting a great deal of time to Shimek and hopes to have him in shape for his two-mile run in the western conference meet at Ohio state university June 5 and 6. The Marquette ace will get another chance at Harold Phelps, the Iowa runner, who is the only man ever to defeat the local lad either in high school or collegiate distance competition.

McTigue-Berlenbach Bout To Be Hot Affair

NEW YORK—Mike McTigue will go into the ring at the Yankee Stadium at ten o'clock tonight to defend his world's lightweight crown against Paul Berlenbach, knockout king.

Berlenbach is a favorite with many, but assurance by the champion that he is in excellent trim, and that his right hand is working to order, have given some fans a different view of the battle.

Tony Marullo, New Orleans light heavyweight will find himself busy in the ten round semi-round final handing Jack Delaney, Bridgeport battler, who is a challenger for the title which McTigue is defending.

The judges gave Frankie Genaro, American flyweight king a verdict over Harold Smith, Chicago bantam in a ten round go at Brooklyn last night.

Style Demands a Bright Colored Bradley

The dark colored bathing suit is a thing of the past. It has gone the way of the voluminous bloomers and the old-fashioned breast stroke. Today your suit must be smartly fashioned and brilliant in color. You'll find these requirements in a Bradley—last minute well-cut style and gorgeous plaids, bright checks, stripes and solid colors.

Slip into a Bradley and as you sit on the pier in the warm, friendly sunshine you'll be conscious that your suit is among the best in style, cut, and color.

APRON STRINGS

John and Mary are grown up now. Today they are playing the host to their own dear Mother; and it is an unmistakable sign of independence and maturity when children receive their parents as guests.

Not long since, everything that John and Mary did revolved somehow or other around Mother. Her favorite room, whether it was the kitchen or the sewing chamber, was the haven whither every adolescent problem was brought and solved. Here the interesting events of the day in school were related; sorrows and troubles were smoothed over; disappointments were replaced by hope and happiness. Here John came when his clothes needed mending, or when he really wanted a strong ally to help him persuade Father that he really needed a bicycle, or a pony. Hither Mary came to ask permission to go to her first party, and to plan the dress for that great occasion.

Not long since.—And now and again those intimate scenes are renewed when John and Mary spend a few fleeting days near Mother at vacation times. But even these happy, rare moments only tend to emphasize the change that has taken place, the realization that the children have already grown up. For the discussions now are on new and strange problems, which Mother can't entirely grasp. No longer the little intimate trifles of the day; but now it's talk about courses, about activities, and big things going on, about strange people and new friends whom Mother doesn't even know, about changing ideas and ways of looking at things, and (with unwitting cruelty) the boredom of home life and the old surroundings.

Father, who pays the bills, perhaps thinks that John and Mary are still children; Mother knows that they have grown up.

Some feelings of sadness must underlie Mother's happiness today. Amid the excitement of seeing John's and Mary's rooms, of visiting with them all their favorite haunts, of meeting their instructors and friends, of going to the various entertainments of the day and the banquet in the gymnasium—amid all these happy pastimes Mother won't be able to forget the newness and strangeness of it all. Secretly she may wish that this were just an ordinary day, instead of a special one, with a special program for her own amusement. She would like to be her children's confidant in the little things they do, even though for one day only. She would like to have brought along a box of cookies, if she thought they wouldn't care.

But why these sentimentalities? Isn't Mother delighted to see John and Mary again? Doesn't she know that her children must grow up, and that one day they must care for her as she formerly did for them? Today is Mother's day, and everything John and Mary do will be intended to give her a good time, and to show their regard for her. Let her happiness belong to the present alone; and let her pride her hopes belong to the future.

WARS PAST AND FUTURE

In the mind of the new student, imbued with the idealism and unconventionalities of the new age, the conception of what Memorial day signifies is a bit inconsistent, or at best rather vague and uncertain.

Certainly he holds the memory of our soldier dead in greatest reverence. He thrills to see the flag unfurled from every home and public building. The martial air played by the band as it marches sets him all a-tingle; the dirge that accompanies the sacred memorial ceremony sweeps him with irresistible emotion. He feels patriotism throbbing in his veins, and he glories in the nation of which he can count himself a citizen. He realizes that those honored dead have been the winners and preservers of that nation, that they have offered their lives, while others have offered less, and some nothing at all. Reverence and gratitude: our soldier dead inspire and merit the deepest emotions that can stir the mighty heart of a nation.

But the idealism of the new age looks forward to a day when the necessity for bearing arms and for laying down one's life for one's country in that particular way will pass out of existence. Memorial day, of course, looks backward; but it makes the thoughtful man and woman also look forward, and wonder. When another quarter century has passed into history, will the roster of our dead heroes, read each Memorial day service, be swelled by another great conflict? The whole world hopes not; the modern ideal is that it will not.

But when the troops fall into line this morning, even though it be with muffled drum and retarded step, out of honor for those who are dead, there will be real doubt in the minds of many whether the most vital significance of the day has to do with wars past, or with wars future. It is true that the staunchest soldier and most enthusiastic militarist fervently hopes that wars in the future may be averted, and he believes firmly that his preparedness activities are the surest way of realizing that hope.

Today the military science department of the university will go on parade. Some three score men of advanced rank, who have given willingly and generously of their time and strength in the service of their country, largely in the hope that thus they are doing their part to make such a catastrophe of the recent war impossible in the future, will be rewarded by receiving the commission of second lieutenant in the officers' reserve forces of the United States; other local awards for military excellence will likewise be given out at the review.

But what about these future wars? Are we on the right track? It seems like the only logical and sane track to be following; and yet few individuals deep down in their hearts feel that it will lead us anywhere but to that war which we all want so much to avert. It is a perplexing question, and one which will somewhat dampen the first patriotic thrill of the young idealist today. Would that the day could be devoted to memorials alone, and that memories and apprehensions could be eliminated!

ANDREW STEVENSON

Once in a while a speaker with a real message mounts the platform to tell his auditors the truth exactly as he sees it. We are prone to expect "revelations," "startling statements" rather than sober digest as the essential elements for the maintenance of interest. Last night a man with neither oratorical eloquence nor a repertoire of sensation addressed a group of students and business men on the ordinarily considered "dry" subject of railroad combination. Mr. Stevenson, in his talk to students in the course in commerce last night kept his audience constantly interested for the simple reason that he had the rare gift of knowing exactly what he was talking about. It is refreshing to know that some men, at least, can supplement general statements with vital and significant details.

World-Intercollegiate Life

The fact is that not only are the students of Europe very much in touch with each other today across national frontiers, but the students of the whole world are beginning to feel that they belong to one class, one movement—one "estate" as it were of the world realm. More than at any other time since the Middle Ages students of various lands now travel, visit each other and seek to establish direct connections. As a consequence a World-Intercollegiate Life is developing.

This World-Intercollegiate Life is taking care of itself. It is the business of no organization or movement to foster it. The spirit of the age and the various student activities, national and international, are favorable towards its development.—The Vox Studentum.

SENIOR LEADERS
LIKE PICNIC IDEA

New Plan is an Attempt to Avoid Speeches, Says
Bergstresser

Leaders in the senior class yesterday expressed themselves to be in favor of the senior picnic which is to be held Friday night, June 19, in connection with the class day exercises.

"We've been trying to get away from the standard speeches which have been given in past years," John Bergstresser, president of the class, declared, "and I believe that the class sing, and especially the class picnic, will be a mighty fine substitute for them. It will give everybody a chance to get together in a last informal time."

"I like the idea," said Dorothy John, vice president of the senior class, "and I am glad to see that the class as a whole is responding to it so well."

"As I see it, this sing and picnic is a forerunner of the many affairs of its kind which we will have here every year when the Memorial Union building is completed," Les Kissel, president of union board, asserted. "I believe that then we will be having many such gatherings on the terrace which will be constructed behind the building for that purpose."

"I understand that the tickets are selling pretty fast at the Kamera Kraft shop," Wes W. Dunlap, editor of the Daily Cardinal said, "so the class must like the picnic idea."

Philadelphia Club Woman Suggests Wearing of Carnation as Symbol

The custom of honoring mothers on a special day in May has been observed in this country for more than 15 years.

Mother's Day was first celebrated May 10, 1908, in Philadelphia at the suggestion of Mrs. Anna Jarvis, a Philadelphia club woman. Mrs. Jarvis suggested that the second Sunday in May be set aside each year to the wearing of the carnation, the mother's symbol, in commemoration of the home influence. This suggestion was followed for many years, and even today the red carnation is still worn by Americans as symbolic of the living mothers, and the white carnation as symbolic of the dead.

The public schools of Philadelphia adopted the custom of paying tribute to the mothers of the country on the inspiration of Martin D.

Brumbaugh, Philadelphia, who combined Mother's Day with Peace Day, May 18, 1918.

Wisconsin always has honored her mothers at some occasion during the school year. Various campus organizations have entertained the mothers, during some week-end with dinner parties, picnics, and launch rides. Each organization celebrated the occasion according to its own social calendar, and the movement was entirely unorganized.

This year the first Mother's week-end as a school tradition is being observed.
