DIRECTORY OF WISCONSIN DAIRY MANUFACTURING PLANTS

Containing Dairy Statistics For Wisconsin
For the Year 1932

For many years a dairy manufacturing plant directory has been made available showing the name and address of the licensed operators and the factory name and location. To further improve the directory it seemed advisable to add factory numbers and operators' license numbers.

The importance of our dairy manufacturing plants can scarcely be estimated for it is in them that the important, scientifically controlled and exacting methods of manufacture must be carried on. Progress by new and improved methods of production must here be put into practical use. The knowledge of the scientist becomes the method of procedure in our factories. Progress in dairy manufacturing machinery, equipment and supplies can only find application in our dairy plants and from time to time we find newer and better equipment replacing old and worn equipment.

About twelve years ago Mr. A. J. Marschall conceived the educational value of a cheese factory grounds improvement contest which is now being carried on cooperatively by the Department of Horticulture of the University of Wisconsin and the Marschall Dairy Laboratory. A study of the pictures of the various cheese factories and their surroundings at the beginning and the end of a yearly contest is indeed gratifying and shows what can be accomplished when interest is centered on a particular project.

This directory of dairy manufacturing plants shows that at the beginning of 1934, 539 butter factories, 2,136 cheese factories, 83 condenseries, 57 milk powdering plants, 532 receiving stations and 112 plants manufacturing casein in Wisconsin were in operation. It is in these plants that a large portion of the milk produced by approximately 2,000,000 cows is converted from the excellent though very perishable food product, milk, into less perishable forms of equally nutritious and healthful dairy food products for which Wisconsin has become famous. Because of the lack of dates and records it cannot be stated historically who first discovered cheese—"Ages and ages ago, so legend tells us, a lone Asian traveler, preparing for a journey, filled his canteen (made from a dried sheep-stomach) with milk. Starting out early in the morning, he plodded on hour after hour through the heat of the day. Having a long, hard journey before him, he did not stop for his noon-day meal but trudged along through the mountainous passes until long after night-fall. It was then that his thirst became so great that he stopped to refresh himself with a drink of milk. Unable to pour any liquid from his canteen, and puzzled as to what had happened to the contents, he cut open the skin and there, much to his amazement, he found in place of the milk, a mass of white curd. In his haste, the traveler had selected a sheep-stomach which had not quite dried and in which the 'rennin' was still active. It was the action of this rennin which had curdled the milk."

History does tell us that in Southern Europe tribes of Asia used cheese as a means of reckoning their wealth. In the time of Homer the Greeks knew about cheese making. Cheese made from mare's milk and goat's milk was mentioned by Hippocrates and in Biblical times we find the boy David carrying cheese to the Captain of warriors in camps and so I might go on as others have done for pages and pages developing the history of the various types of this important food.

Concerning the early history of the uses of butter Hayward reports the following:

"In early times butter was employed in many ways. The Hindoos used it for the greatest and holiest sacrifices in their worship. The Greeks and Romans did not use butter as a food, but as the standard remedy for injuries to the skin. The soot of burned butter was regarded as a specific remedy for sore eyes. The Romans also used it as an ointment to enrich the skin and as a dressing for the hair. In the time of Alexander I. certain of the Macedonians anointed themselves with milk oil; and Galen records that in many cold regions people used butter in the bath. Historians speak of butter used as a remedy for wounded elephants, and within a century butter was used in large quantities in Scotland and North England for smearing sheep, also as oil for lamps. Besides being applied externally, it was used internally for various troubles. In Spain, as late as the seventeenth century, butter was to be found in the medicine shops for external use only. In the middle of the previous century 'A medicinal and economic treatment of butter' sets forth in detail the value and use of butter as a remedy. In rural districts in Germany at the present time fresh, unsalted butter is much used as a cooling salve for burns.

"Aside from its use as a food, a cosmetic, and a medicine, the use or possession of butter was long regarded as indicating wealth, and so served to distinguish the rich from the common people. Evidences of this still exist. In both Chilas and Darel a practice exists of storing up butter in the ground. Butter so stored is left a number of years, and, to insure its not being disturbed, a tree may be planted over it. Under these conditions it turns deep red and is highly prized. The owner's wealth is computed by the quantity of butter he has stored up in this manner.

"Butter was enjoyed as a food by comparatively few people in its early history; those who did so use it seldom ate it fresh. The general practice was to melt it before storing away, and instead of being a spread it was employed to enrich cooked foods. Others, even in comparatively recent times, used the rancid stores butter as an appetizer. In Dardistan peasants are said to highly value salted butter grease that has been kept a long time, and that which is over one hundred years of age is greatly prized.

"Little is known of the part which butter played as an article of commerce in ancient times. However, an early historian states that in the first centuries butter was shipped from India to ports of the Red Sea. In the twelfth century Scandinavian butter was an article of over-sea commerce. The Germans sent ships to Bergen, in Norway, and exchanged their cargoes of wine for butter and dried fish. It is interesting to note that the Scandinavian king considered this practice injurious to his people, and in 1186 compelled the Germans to withdraw their trade. Toward the end of the thirteenth century, among the enumerated wares of commerce imported from thirty-four countries into Belgium, Norway was the only one which included butter. In the fourteenth century butter formed an article of export from Sweden. It may be fairly inferred that butter-making in north and middle Europe, if not indeed in all Europe, was introduced from Scandinavia.

"John Houghton, an Englishman, writing on dairying in 1695, speaks of the Irish as rotting their butter by burying it in bogs. His report was confirmed by the discovery, in 1817 and later, of butter thus buried, packed in firkins. This burying of butter in the peat bogs of Ireland may have been for the purpose of storing against a time of need, or to hide it from invaders, or to ripen it for the purpose of developing flavor in a manner similar to cheese ripening."
