Elsewhere we give notice of the ladies night and dinner of the Men's Community Club to be held at College Camp, familiarly known as "Y" Camp.

These monthly meetings are always helpful and practical in their discussions and are notable for their fine fellowship. The meeting next week is to be doubly significant because it will promote acquaintance between permanent residents and our summer visitors, and because a subject vital to us all is to be presented by an able speaker. Dr. Norman B. Barr thinks deeply and speaks out of a rich and intimate experience.

Make your dinner reservations early.

ACCIDENT FACTS

The 1936 edition of Accident Facts as compiled by the National Safety Council has just been received.

It shows that disregard for the rules of safety cost the United States the lives of 103,000 people and three and one-half billions of national wealth during 1935.

Automobiles killed 37,000, and accidents in the home ran a close second.

31,500 people fell down stairs, from roofs or out of windows, or were fatally cut or burned.

Public accidents, such as drownings, heat prostrations, deaths by freezing and falling on icy pavements, poisoning and careless handling of firearms make up the third classification-18000. Occupational accidents, suffered while the victim during working hours, were 16,500 lives.

It is surprising to know that American citizens are safer at work or at play than he is at home- if he can keep out of the way of automobiles.

More permanent injuries result from domestic hazards than from automobiles, and for temporary injuries, home accidents account for nearly half of the ten million total.

From 1913 to 1935 motor fatalities increased from 4,237 to 37,000.

The automobile danger problem must be handled by the elimination of hazards through a demand for safety highways that will segregate the different types of automobiles.

THE MURDER AT CONWAY'S

Fourth Installment

Wednesday morning Judge James Irving Dunkin, the Yerkey family lawyer and Mr. Daniel Armentraut, the famous detective, arrived by plane from New York.

"Bill's" father is completely prostrated and may never get over the shock of this horrible murder", said Judge Dunkin. "Bill" was a great boy. I have known him since he was a baby and he was as dear to me as my own son. We shall not spare time nor money in apprehending the murderer."

"I knew Mr. Armentraut slightly in New York and I know you have you have great confidence in him, I remarked. "We feel he will have the murderer in a short time. He knows his business."

"It is strange that 'Bill' should have driven up here as he did Monday night and then be murdered as he slept early Tuesday morning, I said."

"Strange and horrible."

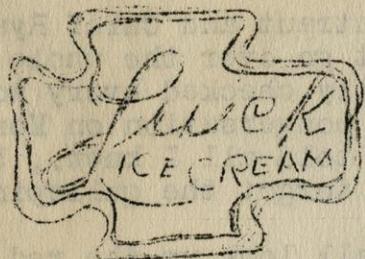

"Everyone in this house is under suspicion naturally, and no one will be permitted to leave the city," he replied.. That fellow Jones and the widow, Mrs. Waters, leaving for parts; Mr. Conway going off some place ostensibly to fish; young Barnett starting for Denver; three men and one woman leaving this house between the hours of the murder and its discovery. Then that other woman unconscious on the floor; the big knife and the slashed window screen. Armentraut will have much of a mix-up to straighten out."

"I'm anxious to have a talk with Marge Eaton", I said. "I'm counting on her. Someone dealt her an awful blow on the head, but she will be all right the doctor assures us; only one must wait until they give us permission to talk with her."

"I shall leave to-night with Bill's body, but if Mr. Armentraut does not find the murderer in a few days I may come back. Mr. Yerkes will feel better if I am here.

"I can understand that," I said.

Armentraut and Chief Ryan and I must go over the whole case. He carefully checked every word of Bill's conversation on Monday night. I told all I knew., but somehow I forgot the galloping horse.

"I shall look up the red headed girl and the dark Spanish looking fellow, and I am going over to Denver and check up on Bill's associates over there and trace his every move," Armentraut declared. "I'll find out where that step-mother is too. She was really an adventurous." Mr. Dunkin was speaking of her and her threats to get Bill. "I don't see how it could have been anyone in this house, though four persons leaving Tuesday morning is certainly queer." "I'm anxious to see this Marge Eaton and hear her story".

"We couldn't explain her presence in Bill's room, but we felt sure she had hot stabbed Bill. There had to be another person involved, of that we were positive. In the meantime Marge was slowly struggling back to consciousness.

Mr. Armentraut and Chief Ryan again questioned Mrs. Conway, Jean, Lawrence, Murdock and Harris. Theis stories were the same, but Mr. Armentraut was positive that Lawrence was concealin something. When Chief Ryan had interrogated Lawrence after his return on Tuesday I had observed his extreme nervousness and his stammering replies and had been convinced he had had some previous knowledge of the murder. Otherwise, Mr. Armentraut was inclined to eliminate them all. In this manner the case rested Wednesday evening. No progress.

"That evening I had three visitors."

It was about 7:30 when Murdock sauntered into my room.

He sat down casually and pulled at his pipe.

"Mr. O'Brien," he began slowly, "there's a peculiar angle to this affair I'd like to see cleared up."

"Yes, several angles I'd like to see cleared up", I answered.

"No doubt Yerkey had been murdered before I came home. I wonder how much before? I got in about 3:30".

"You didn't see nor hear anything?" I asked.

"Not a thing. But here is something I want explained. This coat was hanging on the back of my door. When I heard Mrs. Conway scream I grabbed it and slipped it on. I felt something in the pocket. Imagine my surprise when I found I had Bill Yerkey's bill-fold full of money."

"How did it get in the pocket?"

"That's what I want to know. Somebody put it there, but who was it? And why?"

"Where is it now?"

"I'm sure I don't know. I was terribly excited. The door of Lawrence's room was open and I tossed it behind the door. I was glad to be rid of it."

"You didn't mention this to Chief Ryan nor to Armentraut."

"I'll say I didn't!, and I'm not telling anyone except you."

"I think it wise not to mention it. It may be necessary to tell your story later on to clear yourself or somebody else wrongfully accused," I remarked.

"Tuesday evening I saw Jean Jean planting something in her flower bed and I could swear it was that bill-fold. I went down to investigate but Harris came around the lilac bush. We rather surprised one another. I wondered at the time if he had been watching Jean too."

"Why did you think she was burying the bill-fold?"

"Well, she acted so queer about it all, and I caught a glimpse of the object as she put it in the hole. It looked like the bill-fold."

THE BELFRY PLAYERS

CLASSIFIED ADV.

THE Belfry Players go into their last week of rehearsal on "Hay Fever" by Noel Coward, with the usual excitement and tension of the presentation looming just ahead of them. A props committee has been appointed consisting of Betty Post, Wilda Dailey, and Ethel Morris of Chicago and Fontana, new members of the group. They will be scouring the countryside for the seemingly impossible articles always demanded by a play.

Bob Birdsall just returned to Fontana from California has loaned the players a number of his original drawings to be used in the stage setting.

The audience might find the rehearsals even more hilarious than the actual finished performance. Picture blond Ann-Harding-esque Lucile Niesam, Charles Bernau, suave and dignified, Ruth Busher, the flapper, blushing and giggling; Adele Dupre, as the vamp making love to the hostess's husband, played by Wendell Hollison; Joe Jiegnan, very English, very correct, doing his best to escape from the actress' wiles as exerted by Esther Hotton; Phil Hatfield torn between the charms of the flapper and the vamp; and Olive Longland, the Irish maid, shocked by the entire proceeding.

The players expect all difficulties to be ironed out, however, before the presentation of "Hay Fever" at the Belfry Theatre on August 5, 6, 7, and 8.

When Irving Berlin composed the song "Let's Face The Music and Dance", popular song hit, he did not have either the words or music in mind twenty-four hours before.

"Plenty of mystery", observe Murdock.

"Here are some items I have listed," I said.

'Who killed Yerkey?

What was Marge doing in his room?

Who hit her?

How did the billfold get

What was Jean hiding in the garden?

How did Harris happen down there?

Why did Jones leave?

Why didn't Mr. Conway take the car and where did he go?

"Mysterious enough", said
Murdock. "I wonder how long it

WOODLAWN

Of all the dining and dancing places around this region, WOODLAWN on Lake Delavan is the most delightful.

The smooth, rythmical music of Noble Donnelly's Gold Coasters and the marvelous harmony of The Stylists, a trio, together with the soft lighting and the slithery floor, make dancing an effortless pleasure.

The prices are reasonable, only one dollar per couple cover charge, on week days and two dollars on Friday and Saturday.

Harry and Bill Melges are gracious hosts and make everyone feel at home.

WHERE CAN WE SEE THE COMET ?

Look eastward around 10 p.m. and you will recognize the group of stars made by the square of Pegasus, the little Job's Coffin and the three bright stars in a row with Altair in the middle. The crosses indicate how Peltier's comet from night to night among these stars. It can easily be seen with the naked eye, but the tail stands out better when a binocular or other small telescope is used. Unfortunately the bright light of the moon will interfere with the visibility later in the week.
