Generalissimo Stalin referred to Mr. Bevin's recent proposal for handing these islands over to Greek administration. He said that he had no objection in principle to these islands being transferred, but he would not like to see this question settled separately from the Italian peace treaty of which it formed part. The Soviet Delegation at the London meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers had been somewhat offended by the attitude of the British and American Governments, who had seemed to be afraid of agreeing to Soviet trusteeship for Tripolitania. If that could have been agreed, Great Britain would have lost nothing because she already had plenty of bases all over the world, more even than the United States. Could not the interests of the Soviet Government also be taken into account?

Mr. Bevin said that as regards the Dodecanese, he agreed with Generalissimo Stalin. He had made the proposal for immediate transfer to Greece when it seemed that it was impossible to look for any early progress in the making of peace treaties. Now, however, that we had come so far towards agreement in this matter he thought that the transfer of the Islands could well await a final settlement.

As regards Tripolitania, Generalissimo Stalin had touched on a very sensitive point. Mr. Bevin had told M. Molotov in London that he for his part would have been ready to put Tripolitania under Italian trusteeship. But that raised certain difficulties and when the proposal was made for an international trusteeship, by which he understood a four-Power trusteeship, H.M. Government had agreed. He had thought that the Mediterranean being so troublesome and dangerous an area it might be better to have an international trusteeship rather than one individual Government installed as trustee.

Mr. Bevin recalled that in the case of Tangier, the Soviet Government had been consulted and their request to participate in the new arrangements had been acceded to. He thought that international arrangements of this kind might make for peace in the Mediterranean. The matter might be reconsidered again later when our friendship had grown and developed further. Mr. Bevin pointed to the fact that an agreement had now been reached providing for the withdrawal of troops from the Levant. He could not imagine any of the great Powers fighting each other. The last two wars had both been started by Germany. He did not want to rely too much on bases. He preferred to work for the development of better understanding between the Governments.

Generalissimo Stalin said that he noted that the British were not prepared to trust the Soviet in Tripolitania to which Mr. Bevin replied that there was no question of lack of trust but a desire to avoid competition.

GENERALISSIMO STALIN said that, as he saw the situation, the United Kingdom had India and her possessions in the Indian Ocean in her sphere of interest: the United States had China and Japan, but the Soviet had nothing.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that the Russian sphere extended from Lübeck to Port Arthur.

As regards Indonesia, H.M. Government were determined to withdraw from there as soon as possible. British troops were due to leave Indo-China this week, their task there was finished and the Japanese had been completely disarmed. If a settlement could be reached between the Dutch and the Indonesians, British troops would be withdrawn also from there. British intentions were not so reprehensible as Generalissimo Stalin might think.

Generalissimo Stalin said he was not particularly anxious to see the British leave certain territories. That might indeed be to the disadvantage of every one. For instance, the presence of the British in Egypt during the war had been of considerable value.

Mr. Bevin said that H.M. Government had certain responsibilities in that region and must devise means for the defence of Egypt. But in matters of trade, etc., Egypt must be opened to all the world. When we came to deal with that part of the world, seeing that Generalissimo Stalin recognised that the British had a duty to police it, he hoped that H.M. Government could count on the Generalissimo's sympathetic consideration.

Generalissimo Stalin indicated assent.

Mr. Molorov said that he had wanted to talk with the Secretary about the question of the disposition of the Japanese naval and merchant fleet. This question had not been clarified during the discussion yesterday and he wished to find out more about the status of the matter.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had nothing to add to what he had said and that after an exchange of letters on the subject with Mr. Molotov ⁶⁵ he had turned the matter over to the naval authorities and he assumed that it was being carried out. He said that he had had no information since then.

Mr. Molorov replied that he raised the question because the exchange of letters took place over two months ago and he had heard nothing about the matter through any channel.

THE SECRETARY said he would look into the matter upon his return to Washington.

Mr. Molotov said as to the question concerning the Japanese mandated islands which he had raised yesterday he was not going to press the matter but he hoped that at some time he would have an opportunity to discuss it. Mr. Molotov then said in regard to the Assembly that he noted that decision had been taken to locate in the United States.⁶⁶

65 See footnote 55, p. 764.

⁶⁴ Meeting held at Spiridonovka, December 25, 1945, 4:00-4:30 p. m.

⁶⁶ Reference here is to the decision of the London Preparatory Commission of the United Nations General Assembly to locate the United Nations Organization permanent headquarters in the United States. The United States representatives on the Preparatory Commission and its Executive Committee maintained a position of complete neutrality on this question. For documentation on the work of the Preparatory Commission, August-December 1945, see vol. 1, pp. 1433 ff.

THE SECRETARY said that he had had some doubt as to the advisability of this step and that our representative on the Committee in London had been instructed not to work for the United States as the seat of the organization but since other nations desired it we were quite prepared to accept.

Mr. Molorov then reverted to the question of the Japanese merchant fleet and said that in his letter Mr. Byrnes had written that it was necessary to discuss this question with our other Allies as well as the Soviet Union. He wished to know when and where these discussions would take place.

THE SECRETARY said that he would look into the matter upon his return to Washington and it might be possible that one of our representatives could discuss it in London next month. He said that in regard to the merchant fleet we did not consider fishing vessels as coming within that category and that he had never heard any reference to the disposition of the Japanese fishing fleet until the other day when Mr. Molotov mentioned it. He said that we did not consider fishing vessels as forming part of the merchant fleet.

Mr. Molorov asked if it was intended to leave the whole Japanese fishing fleet to the Japanese.

THE SECRETARY said that he had no information on that subject. He added, however, that, according to our naval authorities, during the closing days of the war there had been great destruction of the Japanese merchant fleet vessels and that as a result the size of the Japanese merchant fleet had been much smaller than anticipated.

Mr. Molorov said that, turning to the subject of the forthcoming meeting of the Assembly he would like to know whether the United States had any candidates for the post of Secretary General.

THE SECRETARY answered that we had no candidate; that he had discussed the matter once with Mr. Stettinius, and he knew that there had been some discussion in London on this question.

Mr. Molorov replied that in this discussion several candidates had been proposed, among them Mr. Simic, Yugoslav Ambassador to Washington, who was formerly the Yugoslav Ambassador to Moscow. He said that he thought Mr. Simic would be very suitable as he was a non-party man, an experienced diplomat and objective in his views.

THE SECRETARY said that Mr. Stettinius had mentioned to him only two candidates, one a Canadian, Mr. Robertson, 67 and the other a Dutchman whose name he had forgotten. He said that neither the President nor he were backing any particular candidate.

In conclusion, Mr. Molorov mentioned that he thought that the British proposal on Iran was in general acceptable and asked Mr. Byrnes' views.⁶⁸

THE SECRETARY said that he did not especially like the proposal but if it could be adopted as a possible first step in the direction of a solution he would be prepared to accept it. He said he was particularly anxious to avoid having the question of Iran raised in the world organization, because he was afraid that it would disclose the differences between our three Governments and that he always wanted to avoid.

Moscow, December 25, 1945.

Tripartite Commission for Iranian Affairs

The Governments of Great Britain, U.S.S.R., and U.S.A. have agreed on the formation of a Tripartite Commission for Iranian questions, and are submitting this agreement to the Iranian Government for their concurrence.

The terms of reference are as follows:

- 1. The Commission shall take as its point of departure the fact that during the presence in Persia of Allied troops the Persian economy and governmental organisation have been disturbed and difficulties have arisen between the central government and the inhabitants of certain provinces. The Three Powers recognise that they may have some responsibility for this and should, therefore, endeavour to assist the Persian state in re-establishing normal conditions to the satisfaction of all elements of the population and maintaining friendly relations with other countries.
- 2. With a view to removing the apprehensions of the Iranian Government and causes of international friction, the Commission shall deal with the question of the acceleration of the withdrawal of Allied ing of December 24, 3:15 p. m., pp. 761, 771.

69 According to despatch 2337, January 3, 1946, from Moscow (740.00119-Council/1-346), which transmitted to the Department certain documents and records relating to the discussions of the Iranian question at the Conference, this particular British memorandum as formally submitted to the Conference was used as a basis of discussion at the Informal Meeting of December 25, 5:15 p. m.; it incorporated certain Soviet suggestions and a number of British changes of their memorandum of December 24 on Iran, which is included as enclosure 3 to the United States delegation minutes of the Informal Meeting of December 24, 3:15 p. m., pp. 761, 771.

troops from Iran, which is due to be completed by March 2nd, 1946, at latest, and to make appropriate recommendations to the Governments of the Three Powers.

- 3. The Commission shall keep in mind (a) the undertaking given by Great Britain and Soviet Russia in the Treaty of January, 1942, to respect the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Persia; and (b) the declaration about Persia issued during the Tehran Conference by President Roosevelt, Generalissimo Stalin and Mr. Churchill.
- 4. With a view to reconciling the existing differences between the central Persian Government and certain provinces of the country, the Commission shall advise and assist the Persian Government in the establishment of provincial councils, in accordance with the provisions of the Persian constitution.
- 5. The Recommendations of the Commission (which must receive the approval of the Three Governments before being submitted to the Persian Government) shall cover the whole of Persia including Azerbaijan.
- 6. Existing laws amplifying the relevant provisions of the constitution (with respect to provincial councils) shall be taken as the point of departure but the Commission shall recommend any amendments which seem to be required especially in regard to the elections to the local councils, the powers and duties of the councils and the manner in which they are to be furnished with funds.
- 7. The Commission shall also make recommendations as to the use of the minority languages such as Arabic, Turki and Kurdish for educational and other purposes.
- 8. The Commission shall consult closely with the Persian Government and with representatives of all important elements of the population in the process of formulating its recommendations.
- 9. The Three Powers shall use their best endeavours to persuade the Persian Government to pass into law and to put into execution the recommendations made by the Commission.
- 10. The Commission shall make no recommendation which would weaken the fundamental unity of the Persian State.
- 11. The first provincial elections shall be carried out under the supervision of the Commission.

1. Rumania

Mr. Molorov pointed out that the paper submitted today by Mr. Byrnes on Rumania ⁷² did not refer to Maniu, Bratianu, and Lupu although Generalissimo Stalin had stated in the discussion of this matter that he was in agreement with Mr. Byrnes' amendments provided that these three individuals would not be among the candidates for the Rumanian Government.

Mr. Byrnes said that there was no disagreement on that point. If there was any doubt concerning the agreement a letter could be written to Mr. Molotov. However, it would not be seemly for three great Governments to mention three individuals in a formal paper.

Mr. Molorov said that the important thing was that there would not be any lack of clarity in the future. He would agree to any form of statement of the agreement reached on this point. However, the statement should be written in such fashion as not to give rise to any misunderstanding in the future. The statement could be made either in a letter or in the protocol.

Mr. Byrnes proposed that the statement be made in a letter.

Mr. Bevin said that this would be better. The letter would be signed but not published. Mr. Bevin inquired whether it was intended to have any unpublished protocol for the present conference.

To According to the United Kingdom delegation minutes of this meeting, the following additional persons were present: For the United States—Mr. Matthews; for the Soviet Union—Mr. Tsarapkin; for the United Kingdom—William G. Hayter, head of the Southern Department of the British Foreign Office.

To John H. Watson, Second Secretary of the British Embassy in Moscow.

⁷² No copy of a revised United States delegation paper on Rumania has been found; for the last previous United States paper on Rumania, see enclosure 1 to the United States delegation minutes of the Informal Meeting of December 24, 3:15 p. m., p. 770; for the Stalin–Byrnes discussion on Rumania, see memorandum of conversation by the United States delegation, December 23, p. 750.

Mr. Molotov replied that the protocols of the previous conferences had not been published. Communiqués had been published on the basis of the protocols.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that a letter would be unpublished whereas eventually the protocol would be published. There was no doubt about each of the parties living up to the agreement. The agreement would be placed in writing and each party would have copies.

Mr. Bevin suggested that the instructions to the representatives of the three powers on this question should read as follows: "In accordance with the understanding reached by Mr. Molotov, Mr. Byrnes, and Mr. Bevin, you are hereby instructed that in the formation of the Government referred to in paragraph 1 there shall not be included Mr. Maniu, Mr. Bratianu, or Mr. Lupu." 73

Mr. Molotov agreed to this.

Mr. Molotov then proceeded to the next Soviet objection to the U.S. draft on Rumania. He objected to the phrases "in important positions" and "at least" in the first paragraph of the U.S. draft. However, he was willing to accept the phrase "two members" as distinct from the Soviet wording "1–2".74

Mr. Byrnes said that the phrase "in important posts" ought to be included; otherwise there would be no agreement that these two newly appointed members would be appointed to important posts in the Government. There were many non-important posts in the Government. It would have a very bad effect on public opinion if the impression were created that they would be appointed to minor posts in the Government. The U.S. wording did not specify what posts the new members should occupy.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet proposal referred to the composition of the Government itself, which now included 18 members. The posts would be "appropriate" and the new appointees would be genuine members of the Government.

Mr. Molotov objected to the U.S. wording "who are loyal to the objectives of the armistice" at the end of paragraph one. He said that this was not sufficient.

(740.00119 Council/1–2346) For text of the Secretary of State's letter to Ambassador Harriman, December 26, see p. 801.

Reference here is to the Soviet memorandum on Rumania, included as enclosure 6 to the United States delegation minutes of the Informal Meeting of December 24, 3:15 p.m., p. 773.

The text of the letter from Foreign Secretary Bevin to Ambassador Clark Kerr read as follows: "As you know, you have been appointed to the Commission to advise the King of Roumania on the reorganisation of the Roumanian Government. In that capacity, you should be aware that it was agreed at the meeting of the three Foreign Ministers that each Foreign Minister should instruct his respective representative on the Commission that, in selecting representatives of the National Peasant and Liberal Parties for inclusion in the Government, the names of MM. Maniu, Bratianu and Lupu should not be put forward. You should bear this in mind in the course of your discussions with your colleagues." (740.00119 Council/1-2346) For text of the Secretary of State's letter to Ambassador Harriman, December 26, see p. 801.

Mr. Bevin said that in forming a coalition, it was very difficult to apply the criterion "loyal to the Government" as in the Soviet draft. Mr. Bevin had not been loyal in the Churchill coalition.

Mr. Molotov said that he was sure that Mr. Bevin had never been disloyal to his Government.

Mr. Bevin replied that the term had a different meaning in the English language and would be misunderstood if used in the decision. He proposed to embody the wording "with approved democratic records."

Mr. Molorov said that if different members of the Government could not get along together there could not be a government.

Mr. Bevin replied that in a democratic government decisions once made were carried out. He inquired what the test of loyalty would be.

Mr. Molorov replied that the Commission should choose individuals who were not in conflict with members of the present Government and who would work loyally with the Government. If their previous records were besmirched, they should not be selected.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that the present Government would no longer exist if the King of Rumania appointed a new Government.

Mr. Molorov replied that the bulk of the future government would be identical with the present Government—why would it not be the "present Government?" The head of the Government would remain.

Mr. Bevin proposed to use the wording: "who are prepared to work loyally with the Government thus broadened." He said that it would be up to the Commission to choose individuals conforming to this criterion. The appointees should be men loyal to the present Government. This was the basic pre-condition of their being able to collaborate in it.

Mr. Vyshinski named Mihailache as an example of a Rumanian who would not be an acceptable candidate for the Government. Mihailache had been fighting the present Government for nine months.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that he had been fighting Churchill for 30 years.

Mr. Molotov said that this was a question of a defeated country which had armistice obligations to meet and had only recently emerged from the period of the Antonescu ⁷⁵ regime and the Iron Guard. ⁷⁶ By the term "loyal representative" as used in the Soviet draft Mr. Molotov meant (a) a representative of a non-party group and (b) a man whose relations with the Government had not been "spoiled." He should be a man capable of working with the Government and one who had been loyal in his behavior although he might have disagreed with the present Government. However, this could not be formulated in detail. It was a matter for the representatives to decide.

Mr. Byrnes stated that what Mr. Bevin had said was true. In the U.S. a man would be loyal to the Government but not necessarily to the administration of the Government.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that Generalissimo Stalin had mentioned the example of Dewey.

Mr. Byrnes replied that Dewey was a good example of a man loyal to the Government but not to the present administration. Dewey's position would be that he would be prepared to work with a government thus broadened.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that any person might declare his willingness to work loyally with the government. Maniu might declare such willingness but regardless of that would be unsuitable. The type of person needed was one whose relations with the present Government had not deteriorated.

Mr. Byrnes proposed the words "prepared to work loyally." It would then be up to the Commission to see whether or not a given individual was prepared to work loyally with the Government. The Commission would not leave it up to the individual to say this.

Mr. Molorov proposed the wording: "two members who do not have a reputation of being hostile to the Rumanian Government and are actually prepared to work loyally with it."

Mr. Bevin objected that anyone who had expressed the "slightest view" in opposition to the Government would thus be ruled out.

Mr. Molorov then proposed to accept the original Soviet language as being simpler. The rest could be cleared up by the representatives on the Commission. Personalities could not be discussed in Moscow.

Mr. Byrnes said that he could not agree to the language of the original Soviet draft. He referred to the phrase "truly representative" in the second sentence of the U.S. draft and asked whether this phrase was acceptable.

Mr. Molotov objected that it was redundant.

Mr. Byrnes replied that persons not truly representative of the two parties might be selected. In his conversation with Generalissimo Stalin Mr. Byrnes had added the words "they should be truly representative" to the Generalissimo's statement in order to avoid the charge of selecting persons who in actual fact were not truly representative of their parties.

Mr. Vyshinsky said this would be up to the Commission to decide. Mr. Byrnes replied that if this was so the Commission should be advised explicitly in the draft. Mr. Byrnes might select a Republican whom other Republicans would not consider representative of their party.

Mr. Vyshinsky said that the word "truly" did not add anything. Mr. Byrnes replied that the American people believed that in some instances persons had been selected as representative of a given party who did not really represent the sentiment of that party. If the three Governments wished to select men who were really representative, it would be a fine thing to say so. This would give confidence that such would be done.

Mr. Molotov said that this might give rise to argument.

Mr. Byrnes replied that argument would only arise if the three Governments failed to say that the appointees should be "recognized leaders" so that the Commission would know that the men it chose should be "really and truly leaders of their parties."

Mr. Molotov raised again the question of making specific reference to Maniu, Bratianu, and Lupu. He said that he perhaps should not have made a concession to Mr. Byrnes on this point.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that agreement had already been reached that letters would be written with instructions not to select these three individuals. The important thing was to present a document which would give rise to hope that representation would be given to these two parties.

Mr. Molorov then made the following proposal: to replace the phrase "1-2" by "two;" to delete the reference to Maniu, Bratianu, and Lupu; and to employ the wording "two representatives loyal to the present Government—truly representative of those groups of the National Peasant and Liberal parties not at the present time participating in the present Government." If this proposal was unacceptable, then Mr. Molotov suggested that specific mention be made of Maniu, Bratianu, and Lupu.

Mr. Bevin said that the following language would be more acceptable to public opinion of his country: "The King should be advised that two representatives should be added to the Government, representatives of the National Peasant and Liberal parties. The Commission shall satisfy themselves that

- (a) They are members of the groups of the parties not represented in the Government;
- (b) They are suitable, will work loyally with the present Government, and are friendly to the three Allied Governments.

Mr. Byrnes was inclined to concur in Mr. Bevin's proposal. It had the advantage of giving more discretion to the Commission. He would be willing to accept Mr. Bevin's proposal in the hope of finding a way out.

Mr. Byrnes proposed that the phrase "should declare" should be substituted for the phrase "will declare" in the first sentence of paragraph 2 of the Soviet draft on Rumania. His objection was to the phrase "take note that." The Governments could not take note when there was nothing to note.

Mr. Molotov replied that this phraseology had been taken from the Polish document.

Mr. Byrnes said that he would not object to this phrase if it had already been used in the Polish document.

Mr. Molorov stated that he was prepared to accept the language of Mr. Bevin's proposal with the following suggestion. The first sentence was acceptable without change, as was also (a). However, (b) should read: "They are suitable for this purpose on account of their past political activities" etc.

Mr. Bevin asked whether the intention was to rule out any person who might have said something against the present Government. He was not referring to Maniu, Bratianu, and Lupu.

Mr. Molotov said that this did not follow from his formula.

Mr. Vyshinski said that the Commission would take account of a candidate's whole record rather than any one fact in his record. It was clear that the persons selected should not be rank and file members of their parties.

Mr. Bevin said that he had come to the conclusion that it would be best not to spell out the qualifications of the persons to be chosen since each would have his own ideas on that subject. However, he construed the word "suitable" to mean that a person chosen should be a person of character and ability, physically qualified, and trained for the particular position offered.

MR. BYRNES had wished to use the phrase "truly representative," but he would compromise on the term "suitable."

Mr. Molorov stated that he was willing to accept the language proposed by Mr. Bevin provided Section (b) would read: "suitable for this purpose on account of their past political activities." He was willing to agree that (a) should read, "They are truly representative members" etc. The rest should be left up to the Commission.

Mr. Bevin inquired as to the meaning of "past political activities." Mr. Molotov replied that this criterion would rule out persons who had been compromised by association with such elements as the Iron Guard and the Antonescu group.

Mr. Harriman asked whether a person who had in the past opposed particular measures of the present Government would be opposed.

Mr. Vyshinski replied that such persons would, of course, not be opposed. He had in view compromised persons such as Penescu,⁷⁷ who had dispersed a workers' meeting. Persons of that sort were not desirable.

Mr. Bevin said that it would be left to the Commission to determine the scope of the phrase "past political activities," which, however, he understood, would be limited to collaborators, Iron Guardists, etc.

Mr. Vyshinski assented to this.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that the second sentence of the second paragraph of the U.S. draft included the phrase "free from force or intimidation." He said that there could be no objection to the inclusion of this phrase.

Mr. Molorov replied that the inclusion of this phrase was inconsistent with the final sentence of paragraph 2, which referred to assurances concerning freedom of the press, etc. The document should not be repetitious. Such freedoms excluded the use of force and intimidation.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the assurances referred to in the final sentence of paragraph 2 did not refer to the elections.

Mr. Molotov said that with regard to the elections, the draft stated that they should be "free and unfettered."

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that there might be freedom of the press but at the same time intimidation at the polls.

Mr. Byrnes was sure that Mr. Molotov had no real objection to the words "free from force or intimidation."

Mr. Molorov replied that it would not be correct to include this phrase. It was already being specified that the elections should be free and unfettered. There was no need to offend the Rumanian Government. It would not be seemly to include this phrase. The phrase "free and unfettered" disposed of the matter.

Mr. Vyshinski pointed out that the wording of paragraph 2 of the Soviet draft was that of the original U.S. draft. Now the U.S. Delegation was making new amendments to its own previous language.

Mr. Byrnes replied that the revised U.S. draft was in question.

Mr. Molorov suggested that the phrase "anti-fascist" should be substituted for "anti-Nazi" in the sentence 2 of paragraph 2 of the U.S. draft. This was agreed to.

With regard to the final paragraph, Mr. Molorov stated that it was not clear why the U.S. Delegation had introduced the preamble: "As soon as the Governments of," etc. The conditions upon which the Rumanian Government would be recognized by the Governments of the U.S. and the U.K. had already been set forth in the previous part of the draft.

Mr. Byrnes replied that the United States formula was based on the principle that only a government can decide whether to recognize another government. The Rumanian Government could not be recognized unless the United States Government was satisfied that the steps had been properly taken and the required assurances received.

Mr. Molorov said that the same idea was implied in the wording of the Soviet draft.

Mr. Byrnes said that his aim was to avoid future misunderstandings. If the United States Government did not believe that the tasks had been carried out, it would not take action. There should be no doubt as to where the decision lay.

Mr. Molorov said that it would be very strange if the Commission settled its tasks and then some time were required before the recognition took place. This would imply mistrust of the Commission. Mr. Molotov said that the original United States draft had not included this.

Mr. Byrnes replied that the second draft did, however, include it, pointing out that he had agreed to amendments proposed by Mr. Molotov which had not appeared in the original United States draft.

Mr. Byrnes reiterated that the Commission did not have the right to determine whether one government would recognize another.

Mr. Molotov concurred in this.

Mr. Byrnes said that this should, therefore, be formulated. He added that the success of this whole matter depended upon the existence of absolute confidence among the three governments. If the United States Government did not desire to recognize the Rumanian Government it would not be conducting these conversations regarding it.

Mr. Bevin proposed the following language: "as soon as the Commission reports that these tasks are accomplished and the required guarantees have been received by the respective governments, the Government of Rumania, with which the Soviet Government maintains diplomatic relations, will be recognized by the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom."

Mr. Molorov inquired how long the Commission would take in its work.

Mr. Bevin said that the Commission should work swiftly. Just how long, would depend upon the Rumanian Government; however, the task should not be a long one.

Mr. Molorov said that the language proposed by Mr. Bevin might imply that the Commission should function for a long period of time. He said that the governments should not delay the work of the Commission.

Mr. Bevin said that he had not intended to do that.

Mr. Molotov proposed to accept the language suggested by Mr. Bevin.

Mr. Byrnes said that it was up to the government itself to decide the question of recognizing another government. He desired to retain the words "are satisfied."

Mr. Molotov said that the Commission's report should be an agreed report.

Mr. Byrnes said that he had referred to the document on Poland and discovered that the word "properly" had been used therein. He pointed out that the first sentence of the final Soviet paragraph read: "As soon as these tasks are resolved." He proposed that this be altered to read "properly resolved," borrowing the language of the document on Poland.

Mr. Molotov said that this would be acceptable.

Mr. Byrnes said that he wished to have it clearly understood that the United States Government would determine whether the tasks had been properly resolved and whether the required assurances had been received.

It was agreed that the word "accomplished" should be employed instead of the word "resolved" in the English text.

Upon Mr. Molotov's request, Mr. Byrnes read the text as agreed upon: "as soon as these tasks are properly accomplished and the required assurances have been given, the Government of Rumania," etc. with the remainder of the sentence embodying the language of the Soviet draft.

After a recess for further study of the Rumanian proposals, Mr. Molorov stated that he could not accept the word "properly" in the last paragraph. This formula had been applied to Poland at a time when two governments were in question. However, there were no two governments involved in Rumania and Mr. Molotov could not agree to the use of the same formula.

Mr. Byrnes said that he was disappointed that Mr. Molotov could not agree on this. He had not thought that there would be any further objection. When the language of the United States draft had not been accepted, Mr. Byrnes had suggested the language of the Polish paper as a compromise.

Mr. Vyshinski had said that the word "properly" was superfluous. Mr. Byrnes requested that this superfluous word be included.

Mr. Molorov could not agree to this. He said that the representatives on the Commission would not sign an agreement unless they considered that the tasks had been properly accomplished.

Mr. Byrnes said that he did not wish to eliminate the word "properly," even if it was superfluous.

 $^{^{78}}$ Reference here is to the tripartite agreement on the establishment of a Polish Commission, included as section VI of the Report of the Crimea Conference, Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 973.

Mr. Molorov said, with regard to paragraph 1, that he proposed to delete "on account of past political activities." The phrase "present government" should be retained. The specification that the individuals chosen should be friendly to the three governments would be deleted.

Mr. Harriman said that he had understood from Mr. Vyshinski that this paragraph had been agreed to. The specification that the individuals chosen should be friendly to the three governments had been dismissed as superfluous.

Mr. Vyshinski concurred.

Mr. Harriman said that he wished to confirm that the phrase "present government" was construed by Mr. Vyshinski to mean "the existing government plus two members."

Mr. Vyshinski and Mr. Molotov concurred.

Mr. Molorov said that it was necessary to retain the word "present" since it was not being proposed to set up a new government but merely to amplify the present government.

It was decided to pass on to the question of Bulgaria, leaving the undecided points in the Rumanian proposals.

Mr. Harriman inquired whether the phrase "free from force or intimidation" was to be retained in paragraph two of the Rumanian paper.

Mr. Molotov said that he assumed that it had been agreed to eliminate this phrase.

Mr. Byrnes said that he had not agreed to eliminate it.

Mr. Bevin said that he had proposed an alternative wording.

Mr. Molotov said that he could not agree to this phrase as it was humiliating to the Rumanian Government.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that the first U.S. draft had made specific references to the militia and political police. This had been deleted in favor of the much milder terminology "free from force or intimidation" which Mr. Molotov was now objecting to.

2. Bulgaria

Mr. Byrnes said that he had made a few changes in the U.S. draft on Bulgaria to bring it into accord with what had been agreed at this meeting concerning Rumania. He assumed that it was desirable to use substantially the same language in both cases. (Enclosure no. 1).

Mr. Molotov said that the Soviet draft on Bulgaria reflected the same idea as that which was now being presented by Mr. Byrnes and inquired why the Soviet draft was not, therefore, acceptable.⁷⁹

⁷⁹ Reference here is to the memorandum by the Soviet delegation included as enclosure 5 to the United States delegation minutes of the Informal Meeting of December 24, 3:15 p. m., p. 772.

Mr. Byrnes replied that this was because the draft he was now presenting fully reflected the conversation which he had with Generalissimo Stalin. It embodied the language of the Soviet paper down to the middle of paragraph one, beyond which point it followed the Rumanian proposals as agreed upon today. However, it did not include after the word "suitable," the phrase "for this purpose on account of past political activities."

3. Rumania

Returning to the Rumanian question, Mr. Molorov said that he would agree to delete the phrase "past political activities" provided that Mr. Byrnes would agree to delete the word "properly" in the last paragraph. The word "present" would be deleted from the phrase "present government." At the same time, Mr. Molotov insisted that the phrase "free from force or intimidation" be deleted.

Mr. Byrnes inquired, in connection with the use of the term "properly", whether Mr. Molotov wished the action of the Commission to be final.

Mr. Molotov replied that he did not. He said that the Commission could not itself recognize a government.

Mr. Byrnes said that was his position.

Mr. Molorov stated that the governments, nevertheless, assumed a moral obligation in sending the Commission.

Mr. Byrnes agreed that there was a moral obligation, but stated that this was not a binding obligation. He inquired whether the Commission's report would be unanimous.

Mr. Molotov said that it would.

Mr. Byrnes said that he wished to make it certain that only the United States Government had the right to recognize another government. He wished to make the following statement for the record: The question whether these tasks are accomplished and the assurances received is a question for the decision of the United States Government, which always reserves the right to recognize another government.

Mr. Molorov said that this did not mean that in signing the agreement the Government was not assuming an obligation. It assumed an obligation by sending a Commission.

Mr. Byrnes stated there was a difference between a moral and legal obligation. He said that further, having made the above statement for the record, he would agree to Mr. Molotov's proposal.

Mr. Molotov inquired whether the Rumanian text had been agreed upon in full.

Mr. Byrnes replied that it had but with the understanding which he had just formulated.

Mr. Molorov reread the portion of paragraph one as proposed by Mr. Bevin with the changes agreed to: "The King should be advised that one member of the National Peasant Party and one member of the Liberal Party should be included in the Government. The Commission shall satisfy itself that (a) they are truly representative members of the groups of parties not represented in the Government; (b) they are suitable and will work loyally with the Government."

Mr. Molotov said that he understood the phrase "free from force or intimidation" was to be eliminated from paragraph 2.

4. Bulgaria

Mr. Molorov said that the Bulgarian draft proposed by Mr. Byrnes was acceptable. A modification would be made along the lines of that which had been made in the Rumanian draft so that the text would read: "one member of the Agrarian Party and one member of the Social Democratic Party".

Mr. Byrnes said that there was a difference between the situations in Rumania and Bulgaria. In Rumania there would be a Commission, whereas Bulgaria would merely receive the "friendly advice" of the Soviet Union. It was, therefore, essential to include, as in the United States draft, "as soon as the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom are satisfied that this friendly advice has resulted——"

Mr. Molotov said that the Bulgarian situation, of course, differed from the Rumanian. Elections had been held in Bulgaria. Moreover, there was a Parliament in Bulgaria, but not one in Rumania. The Soviet text made allowance for Mr. Byrnes' considerations. According to this text, if the friendly advice should be accepted by the Bulgarian Government and the additional representatives included, then the Bulgarian Government would be recognized.

Mr. Bevin raised the point that the Soviet draft on Bulgaria should read "will recognize the Bulgarian Government" rather than "will establish diplomatic relations with the Bulgarian Government". Diplomatic relations could not be established until the peace treaty had been concluded. Moreover, this would make the Bulgarian text correspond with the Rumanian text.

Mr. Molorov agreed to this.

Mr. Bevin went on to say that the important point was that the draft should read "as soon as the Governments of the United States and United Kingdom are satisfied", etc. He said that Mr. Byrnes' draft met this requirement, safeguarding the position of the Governments. This was good wording.

Mr. Molorov said that no one could restrict the rights of a government. But there was no reason to write an agreement if governments were not going to be committed thereby to some action.

Mr. Byrnes suggested the wording "just as soon as we are satisfied that this friendly advice has been taken", et cetera.

Mr. Molorov replied that it would be sufficiently definite to say "if this friendly advice is adopted" in accordance with the Soviet draft.

Mr. Byrnes suggested that the words might be used: "if this friendly advice has been accepted and acted upon".

Mr. Molorov proposed the following wording: "If this friendly advice has been taken by the Bulgarian Government and after the said additional representatives have been included in the Bulgarian Government, the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom will recognize the Government of Bulgaria."

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that there would be no Commission in Bulgaria. He said that Mr. Molotov's wording left open the possibility of future argument. He agreed that there was a moral obligation assumed in the appointing of the Commission. But there would be no Commission in Bulgaria. If the Soviet Government believed that its friendly advice had been accepted, it would expect immediate recognition of Bulgaria from the United States and Great Britain. However, if the United States Government did not believe this, it would not be in a position to recognize the Bulgarian Government. Therefore the line should read in accordance with the United States draft.

Mr. Byrnes said that he hoped that no such issue would arise. But he did not wish to do anything which might be a source of controversy between the governments.

Mr. Molorov said that Mr. Byrnes had not requested that a Commission function in Bulgaria. However, there was one way in which the proposed action in Bulgaria differed from that in Rumania. The Bulgarian solution involved the intervention of the Soviet Government by agreement with the other two Governments. The Soviet Government would accomplish in Bulgaria what the Commission would accomplish in Rumania. If this were accomplished, the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom would be morally obliged to recognize the Bulgarian Government. Otherwise it would be embarrassing to both the Bulgarian and Soviet Governments. This is what Mr. Byrnes had proposed.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he had never made any such proposal. He had proposed that the Soviet Government should tender friendly advice to the Bulgarian Government, but he had not agreed that the United States Government would take action toward recognizing the Bulgarian Government on the basis of Soviet friendly advice in the same manner as it would act upon the work of the Commission in Rumania.

Mr. Molorov said that the two situations amounted to the same thing.

Mr. Byrnes said that there was no issue regarding the advice. The issue would be whether the Bulgarian Government accepted the advice.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet draft provided for this by the language "if this friendly advice is adopted".

Mr. Byrnes inquired as to who would decide whether the Bulgarian Government had adopted the advice.

Mr. Molorov replied that only the United States Government could decide this.

Mr. Byrnes stated that this was all he had wished to register.

Mr. Molorov said that in signing an agreement to the effect that the advice had been accepted, the United States Government would be assuming a moral obligation as in Rumania.

Mr. Byrnes said that Generalissimo Stalin had said in his conversation that in view of the Bulgarian elections there was nothing which he could properly do beyond offering "friendly advice" to Bulgaria. Generalissimo Stalin had said that he would be willing to do this. Mr. Byrnes had expressed his full satisfaction. However, Mr. Molotov's draft omitted the important point that the United States Government would have to determine for itself whether the Bulgarian Government had or had not accepted the advice, whether it had accepted it in toto or in part.

Mr. Molorov replied that the United States Government would recognize the Bulgarian Government provided the conditions of the agreement were fulfilled. Therefore what was the purpose of formulating this explicitly?

Mr. Byrnes replied that this very discussion showed the wisdom of doing so.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Government could not permit itself to be in the position implied by Mr. Byrnes' draft. He said that the tendering of friendly advice would not be a separate act on the part of the Soviet Government. The other Governments would also be involved in obligations. However, if the Bulgarian Government did not adopt the advice, then the United States Government would not face any commitments.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether it would be the Bulgarian Government which would satisfy the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom that the advice had been adopted.

Mr. Byrnes proposed to use the wording: "Whenever the Bulgarian Government has satisfied the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom that the advice has been adopted."

Mr. Molorov said he could not accept this. It created a new condition in addition to what the Bulgarian Government was already expected to fulfill. He had not accepted a similar reservation in regard to Rumania.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the Bulgarian Government might appoint representatives who were not really representative of their own parties. The Bulgarian Government might say, however, that these appointments were truly representative. The United States Government might believe otherwise. Perhaps even the Soviet Government would believe otherwise. Would it be left wholly up to the Bulgarian Government to see that the advice had been adopted, with the three Governments having nothing to say about this?

Mr. Molotov proposed to pass on to the next question.

5. TRAN

Mr. Bevin took up the Soviet proposed amendments (enclosure no. 2) to the British draft on Iran. He accepted the Soviet amendment no. 1, regarding the heading of the draft. Mr. Bevin wished, however, to amend the preamble as follows, taking the wording of the Soviet amendment no. 2 as the basis: "The Governments of Great Britain, the U.S.S.R., and U.S.A. have agreed on the formation of a Tripartite Commission for Iranian questions and are submitting this agreement to the Iranian Government for their concurrence." Mr. Bevin wished the draft to read in this way so as not to give rise to the impression that the three Governments were taking action over the head of the Iranian Government.

Mr. Bevin proposed to delete the phrase "as far as possible" from the second paragraph as formulated in the Soviet amendment no. 3. He further stated that he wished to insert the date at which it had been agreed that the Allied troops would be removed from Iran in order to eliminate the possibility of any misunderstanding on this score.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Delegation considered the phrase "as far as possible" to be necessary. He said that it was now winter time. Mr. Molotov did not agree to the insertion of the date March 2 since this date had already been agreed upon.

Mr. Bevin consented to this but inquired why Mr. Molotov insisted upon the phrase "as far as possible."

Mr. Molorov replied that this was owing to the winter season. He said that it would be up to the Commission to determine this point.

Mr. Bevin agreed.

Mr. Byrnes said that he would agree to leaving out the date March 2 but that in that event the phrase "as far as possible" should not be included.

Mr. Molorov said that the use of this phrase would avoid the impression that the troops might be removed in a period of two weeks.

Mr. Bevin stated that in any event there could be some troop removals.

Mr. Byrnes said that the phrase "as far as possible" was superfluous since the Commission would naturally accelerate the withdrawal of troops as far as possible.

Mr. Molotov said that the phrase was necessary in order to avoid false impressions.

Mr. Bevin suggested the phrase "maximum possible acceleration." Mr. Molorov inquired whether that meant that the troops would be withdrawn in five days.

Mr. Bevin said that probably some would be withdrawn in that time.

Mr. Molorov recalled the language of the United States draft regarding the withdrawal from China.⁸⁰ He said that in Iran just as in China no impossible demands should be put forward.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that there was no relation between the situation in China, where the Government had requested the Allies to remain, and Iran, where the Government had asked the Allies to withdraw.

Mr. Molotov said that the Soviet Union had two treaties with Iran.
Mr. Byrnes replied that the Iranian Government was saying that the treaties were not being carried out.

Mr. Molorov said that the texts of these treaties were common knowledge.

Mr. Bevin had no objection to Soviet amendment no. 4 substituting "provinces" for "districts" in the second line of the first sentence of paragraph 4 of the British draft. However, Mr. Bevin objected to the phrase "free use" in Soviet amendment no. 5. He wished to use the language of the British draft on this point since the national language in Iran was Persian just as the national language in the Soviet Union was Russian. The wording of the Soviet amendment implied that the local languages ranked equally with the Persian national language.

Mr. Molorov said that Russian was not the national language of the U.S.S.R. Each Union Republic had its own national language.

Mr. Bevin said that he wished to safeguard Persia's national position. He said it would be a mistake to refer to Iranian languages other than Persian as "national languages." Mr. Bevin objected to the phrase "national minorities." He suggested the wording "the use of racial or non-Persian languages" as a substitute for "free use of the languages of national minorities" as contained in the Soviet amendment no. 5. The concrete details could be decided by the Commission.

Mr. Molorov said that the phrase "free use" should be employed. Mr. Bevin said that according to his information the wording of the Soviet draft at this point would cause trouble with the Persians. Mr. Bevin did not wish to submit a draft which would cause difficulties.

He believed that the phrase "right to use non-Persian languages" solved the problem.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that such a phrase might be taken to mean the French or Russian languages, et cetera, which were also non-Persian languages.

Mr. Bevin said that it might read "local non-Persian languages."

Mr. Byrnes suggested that the Russian text might read "national minorities" and the English text "minorities."

Mr. Molotov said that the word "free" should remain.

Mr. Bevin returned to his proposal to use the wording "maximum possible acceleration." He was afraid that Mr. Molotov's wording would imply undue delay.

Mr. Byrnes said that he would accept Mr. Bevin's wording on this point as a compromise.

Mr. Molotov said that he could not accept wording which would create a false impression. Winter continued to prevail in Persia. The Commission itself would consider this matter.

Mr. Bevin said that his wording implied that the troops would begin to move out, that Iranian sovereignty would function, and that the world would acquire new confidence. Mr. Bevin would like to dispel popular misgiving which had arisen concerning the situation in Tran.

Mr. Molorov suggested that the Iranian question be postponed. He pointed out that this question was not on the agenda.

Mr. Bevin said that if the question was not decided at the present conference, it might be raised at the meeting of the United Nations. Mr. Bevin was very anxious to resolve the question at this conference.

Mr. Molotov complained that Mr. Bevin wished his draft to be accepted without any alterations.

Mr. Byrnes suggested that the Iranian question be reexamined at tomorrow's meeting.

Mr. Bevin, in response to a question from Mr. Molotov, said that he would circulate a British reply on Austria at tomorrow's meeting.

He said, however, that he could not discuss the question of the German fleet at the present conference. He did not have the particulars on the subject and would have to study it.

Mr. Molotov circulated papers on the German fleet and the repatriation of Soviet citizens (Enclosures No. 3 and No. 4).

BULGARIA

It is understood by the three Governments that the Soviet Government will undertake to extend friendly advice to the Bulgarian Government now being formed as to the desirability of including within the Bulgarian Government of the Fatherland Front an additional two members of the Agrarian and Social Democratic Parties who are truly representative of the groups in those parties not represented in the Government, who are suitable and will work loyally with the Government.

As soon as the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom are satisfied that this friendly advice has resulted in the broadening of the base of the newly formed Bulgarian Government as above contemplated, the Government of Bulgaria, with which the Soviet Government maintains diplomatic relations, will be recognized by the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom.

The Soviet Delegation proposes to introduce into the draft on the question of the competence of the Tripartite Commission on Iran ⁸¹ the following amendments:

1. The heading to read as follows: "On the Tripartite Commission for Iranian questions."

st Presumably reference here is to the memorandum by the United Kingdom delegation regarding suggested draft terms of reference for a tripartite commission on Iran, included as enclosure 3 to the United States delegation minutes of the Informal Meeting of December 24, 3:15 p. m., p. 771.

- 2. The draft to begin with the following introductory sentence: "The Governments of Great Britain, the U.S.S.R. and U.S.A. have agreed on the formation of a Tripartite Commission for Iranian questions."
 - 3. Second paragraph to read thus:

"With a view to removing the apprehensions of the Iranian Government and causes of international friction, the Commission shall deal with the question of the acceleration, as far as possible, of the withdrawal of Allied troops from Iran and make corresponding recommendations to the Governments of the Three Powers."

- 4. In paragraph 5 for "certain districts of the country" read "certain provinces of the country".
 - 5. Paragraph 7 to read as follows:

"The Commission shall also make recommendations concerning the free use of the languages of national minorities, such as Arabic, Turki, Kurdish, for purposes of education etc."

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE MEETING OF THE THREE MINISTERS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO THE TRIPARTITE COMMISSION ON THE DIVISION OF THE GERMAN FLEET AND MERCHANT MARINE

The meeting of the three Ministers notes with satisfaction that the Tripartite Commission on the Division of the German Fleet and Merchant Marine has accomplished a great deal of work on the division of the naval fleet and ocean merchant marine.⁸²

The meeting believes that the aforementioned commission should continue its work in order to carry out the division of the fishing, port, technical and river fleets of Germany.

In connection with this, the meeting of the three Ministers instructs the Tripartite Commission, working under decisions of the Berlin Conference, to carry out the division of the fishing, port, technical and river fleets of Germany, thereupon to present to the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Great Britain, and the United States of America an account of its work in the execution of the decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding the division of the German fleet and merchant marine.

CONCERNING THE QUESTION OF THE REPATRIATION OF SOVIET CITIZENS

The Soviet Government has studied the directive of the Government of the United States of America to General McNarney and General Clark on the question of repatriation of Soviet citizens ⁸³ and considers it necessary to state as follows:

In this directive instructions have been issued which meet the desires of the Soviet Government concerning the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet citizens. Nevertheless the Soviet Government in certain respects cannot consider this directive satisfactory. The Soviet Government cannot agree to dividing Soviet citizens into citizens who were on the territory of the U.S.S.R. up to September 1, 1939, and citizens who at this time were not on the territory of the U.S.S.R. Such a division is moreover in direct contradiction to the decision of the Yalta Conference, signed by the Chiefs of State of the U.S.A., Great Britain, and the U.S.S.R., according to which the frontier between the U.S.S.R. and Poland follows the Curzon Line, in conformity thereto, an agreement on the Soviet-Polish frontier was concluded between the U.S.S.R. and Poland. The Soviet Government also cannot agree that citizens of the Lithuanian S.S.R., the Latvian S.S.R., and the Esthonian S.S.R. should not be regarded as citizens of the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Government takes this occasion, in addition to its memorandum of December 19 on this question,⁸⁴ to set forth information at the disposal of the Soviet repatriation authorities regarding the number of Soviet citizens in British and American camps who are subject to repatriation from Germany, Austria and Italy: there are such citizens in Germany—in the English zone, 112,063; in the American zone, 71,376; in Austria—in the English zone, 16,000; in the American zone, 25,000; in Italy, 35,250.

Therefore the data set forth in the British note of 21 December on the Soviet citizens subject to repatriation from Germany, Austria and Italy is not confirmed by the information at the disposal of the Soviet repatriation authorities.

⁸⁸ For text of this directive, see the memorandum from the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee to the Secretary of State, December 21, 1945, vol. v, p. 1108.

This communication is made supplementary to the memorandum of the Soviet Delegation of December 19, 1945.

Moscow, December 26, 1945.

DEAR MR. HARRIMAN: In the discussion as to the appointment of the Commission to advise the King of Rumania on the reorganization of Government, it was agreed by the Three Foreign Ministers that instructions should be issued to their representatives on the Commission that in recommending the two representatives of the National Peasant and Liberal Parties the names of Maniu, Bratianu and Lupu should not be included.86

You are hereby instructed to comply with this agreement.

Mr. Molotov inquired whether his new draft on Bulgaria had been received (enclosure No. 1). In this draft he had met the wishes of his colleagues with regard to paragraph 2 but had reverted to the wording of the original Soviet draft on paragraph 1.88 He stated that he wished the first sentence of paragraph 1 to read that the Soviet Government would assume the "mission" rather than assume the "obligation" as in the draft presented.

Molotov on December 26.

So For the record of the discussion referred to, see the United States delegation minutes of the Informal Meeting, December 25, 5: 15 p. m., p. 781.

Mr. Byrnes said that Mr. Molotov's paragraph 2, while not the same as the one which the United States delegation had proposed, met the argument which he had raised yesterday, but in paragraph 1, the substance of the paper, Mr. Molotov had reverted. Mr. Byrnes thought that it had tentatively been agreed yesterday to accept the first paragraph as finally proposed by the American delegation, based on the language of the Rumanian draft. 90

Mr. Molorov said that the situation in Bulgaria was not similar to the situation in Rumania. In Bulgaria there had been elections. The opposition had boycotted these elections. Therefore the Soviet draft referred to members of the opposition who were loyal to the Government.

Mr. Byrnes said that no one was questioning the desirability of including the stipulation that the selected representatives would work loyally with the Government. This had been worked out yesterday and Mr. Byrnes had been under the impression that this wording was acceptable to all.

Mr. Molorov said that the Rumanian text as agreed upon yesterday was acceptable. However, the situation in Bulgaria was different from that in Rumania. Mr. Molotov was accepting the United States paragraph 2 in his new Bulgarian draft. However, the wording of paragraph 1 should differ from that of the corresponding portion of the Rumanian draft. There were more reservations in the case of Bulgaria.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that the substance of the agreement was in paragraph 1. He reiterated that there was no doubt as to the desirability of adding two men who would be truly representative of groups not now participating in the Government. Furthermore they should work loyally with the Government. This had been agreed upon after much discussion yesterday. The same thing applied both in Rumania and in Bulgaria, namely, that the men selected must work loyally with the Government. Mr. Byrnes said that he would have to explain to the American people why the United States delegation had adopted the position which it did adopt. This would not be an easy task. But if Mr. Molotov would agree to the language agreed to yesterday afternoon, then it would be possible to make this explanation with some hope that it would be accepted.

Mr. Molotov reiterated that there was a difference between Bulgaria and Rumania. He said that the present Soviet draft recognized that the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States would have to satisfy themselves that the prescribed changes had actually been made. The same point had not been made with regard to Rumania. There was also a substantial difference in the first paragraphs of the Rumanian and Bulgarian documents. A special exchange of letters had been agreed upon in the case of Rumania. No individuals were being specified and no letters exchanged in the case of Bulgaria. Furthermore Rumania had had no elections and had no Parliament. Moreover, the Bulgarian opposition had boycotted the elections. In specifying the qualifications of the persons to be added to the Bulgarian Government these differences should be borne in mind.

Mr. Bevin inquired as to the meaning of the phrase "other democratic groups" in the new Soviet draft.

Mr. Molorov replied that this phrase referred to the Agrarian Union and Social Democratic parties, i.e. the Bulgarian opposition.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that paragraph 2 of the Bulgarian document differed from paragraph 2 of the Rumanian document since there would be no Commission in Bulgaria. However, there was no justification of distinguishing between Rumania and Bulgaria as regards the qualifications of the men to be added to the Governments. In both cases the men would be members of opposition parties not now participating in the Government. It would create misapprehension, however, merely to say "opposition parties" in the Bulgarian document. The American people would suppose that an "opposition party" would not amount to very much. In order to avoid this impression the language should refer to the Agrarian and Social Democratic parties specifically.

With regard to the question of loyalty to the Government, Mr. Byrnes stated that Generalissimo Stalin had cited the very good analogy of the position of Mr. Dewey in the United States. Dewey had merely declared that he would work loyally with the Government. This statement had been referred to by Generalissimo Stalin and then agreed upon as text. Dewey had not stated his loyalty to the Democratic Party. Mr. Byrnes called upon Mr. Molotov to agree that the Bulgarian paragraph 1 should specify, just as did the Rumanian document, the qualifications of the men to be chosen.

Mr. Molorov reiterated that according to paragraph 2 of the Soviet draft the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom would not recognize the Bulgarian Government unless satisfied that the prescribed changes had taken place.

Mr. Byrnes replied that in Rumania the new candidates would be selected by the Commission, which would determine their qualifications. In Bulgaria this would be left up to the Bulgarian Government. Accordingly, it was all the more important to spell out the qualifications in the document.

Mr. Bevin suggested the wording: "an additional two members truly representative of the other democratic groups from among representatives of the opposition who will work loyally in the Bulgarian Government". In addition he proposed that the word "suitable" should precede the word "additional" in the second paragraph.

Mr. Molotov said that a more "flexible" formula was desirable. This was supplied by the Soviet wording "loyal representatives of the opposition".

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that the Bulgarian document did not refer to the assurances of the democratic freedoms which were mentioned in the Rumanian document. Mr. Byrnes would have liked to include such assurances. The first paragraph of the Bulgarian document should be similar to the first paragraph of the Rumanian document in order that the American people might be convinced that this was a fair and just agreement.

Mr. Molotov said that he had conceded paragraph 2 to Mr. Byrnes and asked that the Soviet language be accepted in paragraph 1.

Mr. Byrnes proposed to take the United States language in paragraph 1 and return to the original Soviet language in paragraph 2.

Mr. Molorov replied that he had no objection to reverting to the previous Soviet paragraph 2. But it would be necessary to refer to "loyal members of the opposition" in paragraph 1.

Mr. Byrnes again referred to the example of Dewey and said that Mr. Molotov should agree to this as expounded by Generalissimo Stalin. Dewey had declared after the elections that he would work loyally with the Government. That is all that should be required here. It would be difficult to find a true leader of one party who had worked loyally for a party which he had opposed, i.e., a man loyal to his opponents.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Government could not tender to Bulgaria the advice which Mr. Byrnes proposed.

Mr. Bevin inquired what Mr. Molotov meant by a "loyal member of the opposition".

Mr. Molorov replied that by this he meant a person whose relations with the Government had not deteriorated so far that he could no longer work with the Government. Such a person could, however, belong to the opposition. It would not mean that such a person had participated in the boycott since the whole opposition had participated in the boycott. However, there are differences among various persons who had participated in the boycott. It was a question of personalities.

2. IRAN 91

Mr. Molotov stated that nothing had come of the Iranian discussions and that they should be dropped.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether that was the Soviet Government's decision.

Mr. Molotov replied that this was the fact of the matter. He ____added that Iran was not on the agenda.

Mr. Byrnes said that Iran had been on the agenda as enumerated the first day.

Mr. Molorov recalled that Iran had been stricken from the agenda by agreement.

Mr. Byrnes said this was correct but it had also been agreed to discuss Iran.

Mr. Molorov said that Iran had been discussed. Mr. Molotov inquired whether the delegates wished to discuss the Soviet papers on Austria and Germany.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that Austria and Germany were in the same position as Iran. These questions were not on the agenda.

Mr. Molorov said that there had been a lot of discussion on Iran but no settlement.

Mr. Byrnes said that there would never be a time when all questions could be settled. Since many questions had been disposed of and the conference could not remain in session indefinitely, he proposed that the delegates proceed to consideration of the communiqué and protocol. The delegates would be together again in January.

Mr. Molotov remarked that Mr. Vyshinski would be the Soviet representative at the United Nations Conference.

or Despatch 2337, January 5, 1946, from Moscow, transmitted to the Department as enclosure 12 a record of a conversation between Mr. Bevin and M. Molotov on December 26 regarding Iran. In commenting upon the record, the despatch reported that the meeting took place following an unsuccessful attempt by Mr. Bevin, at the suggestion of Secretary Byrnes, to arrange a third interview with Stalin. The despatch also reported that Mr. Bevin held still another private conversation with Molotov regarding Iran in the early afternoon of December 26, just before the informal session of the Conference at 3:20 p. m. According to the information available to the United States delegation at Moscow, it was at this later conversation that Molotov first expressed his disinclination to continue discussion of the British proposal for a tripartite commission on Iran. The despatch also reported that Secretary Byrnes also had one or two short private conversations with Molotov during the evening of December 26 and spoke of Iranian problems, but that no records of such conversations had been made. (740.00119 Council/1-346)

Mr. Byrnes said that he wished to conclude the good work which the conference had accomplished. He did not wish to jeopardize this by attempting to take up all questions at issue. He therefore proposed that the delegates conclude work on the questions which had been settled and then exchange opinions on points outstanding.

Mr. Molorov said that if Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin did not wish to deal with remaining questions, he could but concur. However, there were three further questions which he would like to discuss: (1) the Soviet draft on Austria, 92 (2) the Soviet draft on the German fleet, 93 and (3) the Soviet draft on the repatriation of Soviet citizens. 94 With regard to the latter, Mr. Molotov stated that this was a very sore question for the Soviet Union and that it would be well to make some progress on it.

3. Austria

MR. BEVIN stated that he had no objection to publishing the Soviet memorandum on Austria in the conference protocol, together with the reply which he had prepared. Mr. Bevin said he was tired of having unfounded charges thrown at the British Government. These did not help good relations. He was circulating a complete reply which refuted the allegations made in the Soviet paper. (Enclosures 2a and 2b.)

4. GERMAN VESSELS

With regard to the question raised by the Soviet paper on German vessels, Mr. Bevin stated that he would have to study a report of the Tripartite Commission. He could not do that at the present conference. He understood that there were some vessels ready for delivery apart from the disputed craft. He proposed to leave a letter with Mr. Molotov on this subject.

Mr. Molorov inquired whether the Tripartite Commission could not be authorized to deal with the question.

Mr. Bevin said that the dispute was one which only the Governments could solve. However, he had no details concerning the dispute. He understood that the dispute was limited to a very small portion of the vessels.

Mr. Byrnes said that he did not know the facts in this question but that he had looked up the section of the Berlin agreement bearing on it. He did not understand this proposal to repeal the Berlin decision, which the delegates had no authority to do. Mr. Byrnes read paragraph 4 of the Berlin agreement.⁹⁵ He stated that in conformity with this decision he could only instruct the United States representative on the Allied Control Commission to carry out the decision and report on the progress made. He could ask his representative to take steps to avoid delay.

Mr. Molorov inquired whether Mr. Byrnes had meant to imply that types of vessels not specifically mentioned in the Berlin agreement, such as fishing vessels, should be given to Germany.

Mr. Bevin stated that the dispute in the Commission had arisen over the fact that certain technical craft necessary for ports had been claimed by the Russians as a part of the merchant marine, concerning which no agreement had been reached. Mr. Bevin remarked that no statistics had been received from the Soviet Government on the vessels which they had taken from Germany.

Mr. Molorov suggested that this question be discussed in the Tripartite Commission. He inquired again whether fishing vessels were to be retained by Germany since they had not been specifically mentioned in the Berlin agreement.

Mr. Byrnes replied that the Berlin agreement had commissioned the Allied Control Council to determine which craft were necessary for the German economy and which should be included in the pool for division among the victor powers. He said that he would endeavor to look further into this question.

Mr. Molorov said that Mr. Byrnes had correctly read the relevant paragraph of the Berlin agreement. However, did this mean that all vessels not referred to in the agreement were to be retained by Germany? The Soviet Government did not take this view. It followed a liberal rather than a literal interpretation of the Berlin agreement.

Mr. Molotov said that the Soviet Government desired to have this question discussed in the Tripartite Commission.

Mr. Bevin said that he could not commit himself before he had received a report.

5. Repatriation

Mr. Bevin said that with regard to repatriation, he could not add anything to what he had already said previously. He would like to see this question settled sooner or later. Mr. Bevin had sent the Polish troops back to Poland. The persons sent back had been in the Polish army when he sent them. Mr. Bevin therefore thought he had done his duty with regard to them.

Mr. Molorov said that there was no argument between the Soviet Union and Poland since they had an agreement on this question.

of The reference here is presumably to section IV of the Protocol of the Proceedings of the Berlin Conference, Conference of Berlin (Potsdam) vol. II, p. 1487.

Mr. Bevin stated that when a general peace conference was called and all frontier questions were settled, such matters as that raised by the Soviet delegation would be settled also, presumably on the basis of option within a certain period of time.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Government had a full agreement with the Polish Government with regard to the frontier. He said that the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom had agreed to this frontier at Yalta.

Mr. Bevin replied that there was a misunderstanding here. The Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States had promised to support the Curzon Line but they had never ratified this and had never been asked to ratify it. They had merely pledged to support it at the peace conference.

Mr. Molorov read the relevant section of the Yalta Agreements.96

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that this section of the Yalta draft had been deliberately altered prior to publication at the initiative of President Roosevelt, who had insisted that it read: "the heads of Government" and not "the Governments" as no President had the juridical right to speak for the Government of the United States. However, there was no reason to believe that the United States Government would not stand by the agreement made by its President.

Mr. Bevin said that his Government accepted the Yalta agreement on this point but that it was necessary to legalize the agreement.

6. TRAN

Mr. Bevin said that he was concerned about the Iranian question. Did the Soviet Government propose not to enter into any understanding regarding the settlement of this problem? Mr. Bevin had discussed this problem with Generalissimo Stalin. Furthermore, he had accepted practically every amendment which the Soviet delegation had proposed to his draft on Iran.

Mr. Molorov said that it was sufficient that views had been exchanged. No decisions had been reached. The question was not on the agenda. Accordingly, there was no need to mention it in the communiqué.

Mr. Bevin stated: "What is my next step?"

Mr. Molorov replied: "You know that well."

Mr. Bevin replied that he thought he understood the situation and that he regretted it. He had desired to clear up this very awkward situation between the two countries, a situation which had evoked a good deal of feeling.

It was decided to recess the meeting.

Memorandum by the Soviet Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 26, 1945.

BULGARIA

It has been settled by the three Governments that the Soviet Government undertakes to give friendly advice to the Bulgarian Government in respect of the desirability of including in the Bulgarian Government of the Fatherland Front, which is now being formed, an additional two members of other democratic groups from among representatives of the opposition who are loyal to the Bulgarian Government.

As soon as the Governments of the U.S.A. and Great Britain are convinced that the friendly advice has been accepted by the Bulgarian Government and the said additional representatives have been included in its body, the British Government and the Government of the United States will recognize the Bulgarian Government, with which the Soviet Government already has diplomatic relations.

GERMAN AND OTHER MILITARY UNITS IN THE BRITISH ZONE OF OCCUPATION IN GERMANY

- 1. On December 19th, the Soviet Delegation circulated to the Conference a Paper containing allegations that in the British zone of occupation in Germany, German and other military formations are being kept in existence in a manner which constitutes an infringement of the Allied agreement on the control of Germany.⁹⁷ The demand was made in this Paper that these formations should be disarmed and abolished.
- 2. The Soviet Paper on Germany made reference to a Memorandum submitted by Marshal Zhukov to the Control Council in Berlin. It made no reference to the reply made on November 30th by Field Marshal Montgomery, in which he gave full account of the Germans held in the British zone, and denied categorically that they were The repetition by the Soviet Delegation of this allegation after its denial by the British Commander-in-Chief is a reflection on his veracity to which the British Delegation takes strong exception.

- 3. In discussion of this matter mention was made of the proposal, originally put forward in Berlin by Marshal Zhukov, that a commission of investigation should be sent into the British zone. This proposal, which was accepted by Field Marshal Montgomery on November 30th on the condition that the Commission should investigate all four zones, was agreed to here by the British Delegation on the same condition.
- 4. On December 21st, the Soviet Delegation stated that they had heard from Berlin that this matter had been satisfactorily settled at the meeting of the Control Council the day before, and that in consequence they withdrew their proposal for a Commission. On the assumption that this statement constitutes a withdrawal of the whole accusation, the British Delegation are prepared to accept it, and to let the matter drop.
- 5. The proposal was made by Field Marshal Montgomery at the meeting of the Control Council in Berlin on November 30th that in future all questions of administration in which the Control Council can properly take an interest, and upon which information is required by the Council, should be dealt with by the appointment of a Commission which in all cases would be free to visit each of the four zones. I support this proposal, and commend it to my colleagues. In this manner the putting forward of allegations based upon incorrect information would be avoided.

GERMAN AND OTHER MILITARY UNITS IN AUSTRIA

1. In a Memorandum dated December 22nd, the Soviet Delegation circulated to the Conference a number of allegations relating to the British zone in Austria suggesting that the British authorities in Austria are deliberately creating an Austrian Army, and retaining in of December 21, 2:30 p.m.; for the minutes, see p. 710.

⁹⁹ Regarding Montgomery's report, made during the 13th meeting of the Allied Control Council for Germany, November 30, see telegram 1154, December 1, from Berlin, vol. III, p. 854.

existence various Corps organized by the Germans from Nationals of other States, and that all these formations are armed.² These allegations, which are entirely without foundation, are categorically rejected. They display a distrust on the part of the Soviet Government which is deeply resented by the United Kingdom Delegation. The United Kingdom Delegation can only conclude that the Soviet authorities in Austria have listened to fictitious tales maliciously recounted to them by persons desirous of creating suspicion and ill-feeling between the Allies.

- 2. The United Kingdom Delegation are the more surprised at the action of the Soviet Delegation in circulating their memorandum in that reports from Vienna show that the whole question of Austrian Military activities has been exhaustively discussed in the Military Division of the Control Commission to the satisfaction of all parties, and that in order to remove any remaining uncertainty a quadripartite Commission of investigation has been set up by the Allied Council to visit all zones and study the whole question on the ground.
- 3. The United Kingdom Delegation consider it important that there should be an end to allegations of this kind made by one Ally against another. It is for this reason that they support the proposal that if there is any matter on which information is required by the Control Councils in either Austria or Germany, the Control Council in question should set up a Commission to establish the facts. Any Commission appointed in this manner should visit all zones, so that complete information can be obtained, and all grounds for suspicion removed.

[According to the United Kingdom delegation minutes of the Informal Meeting of the afternoon of December 26, the meeting was resumed at 11 p. m. of the same day, at which time the Foreign Ministers had before them the drafts of the Communiqué prepared by the Drafting Committee. (The final agreed text of the Communiqué of the Conference is quoted in telegram 4284, December 27, from Moscow, printed on page 815. The Protocol (Report) and Communiqué are also printed in Department of State Bulletin, December 30, 1945, page 1027.) A discussion followed regarding the sections of the draft which concerned China. The United Kingdom delegation record of the discussion is as follows:

"M. Molorov desired to see a reference in the text to 'other organs of authority.'

² Presumably reference is to the Soviet memorandum of December 21, included as enclosure 3 to the minutes of the Informal Meeting of December 21, 2:30 p. m., p. 721.

"Mr. Bevin found it impossible, in the absence of a representative of China, to agree to reference being made to anything but the Cabinet.

"Mr. Byrnes explained that he had asked General Marshall to bring pressure to bear on both factions to secure agreement, and had impressed on him that Marshal [Generalissimo] Chiang Kai-shek should not be allowed to believe that he would receive support in all circumstances, whether he was right or wrong. His suggestion was to add a phrase to the effect: '. . . the broad participation of democratic elements in the National Government.'

"(At this stage the Foreign Ministers' staffs were asked to leave the room.)

"He could, in confidence, inform his colleagues that instructions had been given to all United States Government Departments to withhold all facilities (loans, &c.) so as to ensure that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek would make a real effort to help himself. There had previously been straight talk between General Marshall and the Generalissimo as to what the latter could or could not do, but President Truman and Mr. Byrnes himself had now urged General Marshall to let bygones be bygones and give due respect to the Generalissimo's susceptibilities. Therefore, nothing should now be done which would hamper or handicap the General in the efforts he was now making to secure unity of action in China.

"The Parties then proceeded to discuss the wording proposed by Mr. Cohen, the United States representative on the Protocol Committee, referring to the broadening of the National Government by the introduction of democratic elements.

"Mr. Bevin wanted to know what was meant by 'democratic elements.'

"Mr. Molorov preferred the Soviet wording: '. . . broad participation of democratic elements in the National Government and its other central and local organs.'

"Mr. Byrnes suggested saying, 'all branches of the central government.'

"Mr. Bevin objected to these suggested additions and insisted that as he had only half an hour previously seen the text under discussion he must have time to consider it and propose amendments. It was the first time he had heard of any proposal to amplify the reference to the 'National Government.'

"After a further exchange of views, in the course of which it became clear that M. Molorov wished to have a form of words which would cover not only the Government but also the existing Constituent Assembly, it was finally agreed to insert the following words: '. . . the need for broad participation by democratic elements in all branches of the National Government.'"

After an exchange between Bevin and Molotov regarding the conditions in the British zones of occupation in Austria and Germany, the Foreign Ministers accepted Secretary Byrnes' suggestion that since agreement had been achieved on one subject there was no need to prolong discussions on topics on which there was disagreement. Signing of Protocol

The Delegates assembled to sign the Protocol.

There was a delay and Mr. Molorov explained that his people had "by mistake" included the Bulgarian document in the Protocol. He—stated that they had included the Bulgarian document in the Soviet version. Mr. Molotov inquired whether something along those lines—could not be included in the Protocol after all.4

For Byrnes' account of this meeting, see Speaking Frankly, p. 121; in this description, the time of the meeting is set at 2:30 a. m., December 27.

According to the United Kingdom delegation minutes of this meeting, it had been understood by the British and United States delegations that the business of the meeting would be confined to the signing of the agreed Report and Communiqué which omitted any reference to Bulgaria, upon which no agreement had been reached. After the English language texts had actually been examined and signed by the Secretary of State and Foreign Secretary Bevin, it was found that the Russian language texts were still not ready. When, after an interval, the Russian texts were brought to the conference table, Molotov examined them and said "with a broad smile" that the delay could be explained by the fact that the Russian typists had inserted sections on Bulgaria into the Report and the Communiqué. Molotov hoped that such good work would not be wasted and that the documents would be signed as they were, including the sections on Bulgaria. (740.00119 Council/1-2346)

Mr. Bevin and Mr. Byrnes indicated that a Bulgarian document along the lines of the Soviet version would be unacceptable.

Mr. Molorov said that in that case he proposed the adoption of a draft consisting of the first paragraph in the version presented by the United States Delegation today and a second paragraph in the version presented by the Soviet Delegation yesterday.

In the subsequent discussion Mr. Byrnes appealed to Mr. Molotov to accept the version of paragraph 2 which had been presented by the United States Delegation in its draft.

Mr. Molorov agreed to this proposal. He said that this would confer a good concluding note on the conference. The delegates agreed to the Bulgarian document (see communiqué) on this basis.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether Mr. Molotov wished similarly to reconsider the Iran question.

Mr. Molotov said that there was nothing with regard to Iran which would be suitable for the communiqué.

After a recess, the delegates reassembled in a final formal session and signed the protocol at 3:30 a.m., December 27.

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) to the Soviet People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs (Molotov) ⁵

Moscow, December 27, 1945.

It has been a great disappointment to me that after my friendly exchange of views with the Generalissimo we have been unable to come to a final agreement about the treatment of Iranian questions, and I am sure that my Government will be equally disappointed. However, I will report to them fully the exchange of views that has taken place and the amendments to my proposals which you suggested and I accepted.

I feel that it would not be right to keep the Iranian Government uninformed and I am therefore instructing Sir. R. Bullard to acquaint them with the course of our conversations in Moscow and the proposals which were submitted for their views.

I have informed Mr. Byrnes of the contents of this letter, who is advising his representative in Tehran in a similar sense.

4284. The communiqué agreed to at the Moscow Conference will be issued for release at 10 p. m. Washington time, Thursday, December 27, and simultaneously in the other two capitals; i.e., 3 a. m., December 28 in London, and 6 a. m. in Moscow.

The text of the communiqué follows:

COMMUNIQUÉ ON THE MOSCOW CONFERENCE OF THE THREE FOREIGN MINISTERS

The Foreign Ministers of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, and the United States of America met in Moscow from December 16 to December 26, 1945, in accordance with the decision of the Crimea Conference, confirmed at the Berlin Conference, that there should be periodic consultation between them. At the meetings of the three Foreign Ministers, discussions took place on an informal and exploratory basis and agreement was reached on the following questions:

REPORT OF THE MEETING OF THE MINISTERS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS, THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, THE UNITED KINGDOM

At the meeting which took place in Moscow from December 16 to December 26, 1945 of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United States of America and the United Kingdom, agreement was reached on the following questions:

I. PREPARATION OF PEACE TREATIES WITH ITALY, RUMANIA, BULGARIA, HUNGARY AND FINLAND

As announced on the 24th of December 1945, the Governments of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States have agreed and have requested the adherence of the Governments of France and China to the following procedure with respect to the preparation of peace treaties:

1. In the drawing up by the Council of Foreign Ministers of treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Finland, only ⁷The circumstances of the transmission of this telegram are described in Byrnes, All in One Lifetime, p. 342. A marginal notation on a copy of this telegram indicates that the press release, which was worked out on the basis of the telegram, was sent to the White House at 5:05 p. m., December 27, and was thence relayed to the President in Missouri. For text of the press release, see Department of State Bulletin, December 30, 1945, p. 1027.

members of the Council who are, or under the terms of the agreement establishing the Council of Foreign Ministers adopted at the Berlin Conference are deemed to be, signatory of the surrender terms, will participate, unless and until the Council takes further action under the agreement to invite other members of the Council to participate on questions directly concerning them. That is to say:

(a) The terms of the peace treaty with Italy will be drafted by the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States, the Soviet Union and France;

(b) The terms of the peace treaties with Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary by the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union, the United States and the United Kingdom;

(c) The terms of the peace treaty with Finland by the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom.

The deputies of the Foreign Ministers will immediately resume their work in London on the basis of understandings reached on the questions discussed at the first plenary session of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London.

- 2. When the preparation of all these drafts has been completed, the Council of Foreign Ministers will convoke a conference for the purpose of considering treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland. The Conference will consist of the five members of the Council of Foreign Ministers together with all members of the United Nations which actively waged war with substantial military force against European enemy states, namely: Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom, United States of America, China, France, Australia, Belgium, Byelo-Russian Soviet Socialist Republic, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Greece, India, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Union of South Africa, Yugoslavia, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. The conference will be held not later than May 1, 1946.
- 3. After the conclusion of the deliberations of the conference and upon consideration of its recommendations the states signatory to the terms of armistice with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland—France being regarded as such for the purposes of the peace treaty with Italy—will draw up final texts of peace treaties.
- 4. The final texts of the respective peace treaties as so drawn up will be signed by representatives of the states represented at the conference which are at war with the enemy states in question. The texts of the respective peace treaties will then be submitted to the other United Nations which are at war with the enemy states in question.
- 5. The peace treaties will come into force immediately after they have been ratified by the Allied states signatory to the respective armistices, France being regarded as such in the case of the peace with Italy. These treaties are subject to ratification by the enemy states in question.

II. FAR EASTERN COMMISSION AND ALLIED COUNCIL FOR JAPAN

A. FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

Agreement was reached, with the concurrence of China, for the establishment of a Far Eastern Commission to take the place of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission. The terms of reference for the Far Eastern Commission are as follows:

I. Establishment of the Commission.

A Far Eastern Commission is hereby established composed of the representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom, United States, China, France, The Netherlands, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, and the Philippine Commonwealth.

II. Functions.

A. The functions of the Far Eastern Commission shall be:

1. To formulate the policies, principles, and standards in conformity with which the fulfillment by Japan of its obligations under the terms of surrender may be accomplished.

2. To review, on the request of any member, any directive issued to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers or any action taken by the Supreme Commander involving policy decisions within the jurisdiction of the Commission.

- 3. To consider such other matters as may be assigned to it by agreement among the participating governments reached in accordance with the voting procedure provided for in article V-2 hereunder.
- B. The Commission shall not make recommendations with regard to the conduct of military operations nor with regard to territorial adjustments.
- C. The Commission in its activities will proceed from the fact that there has been formed an Allied Council for Japan and will respect existing control machinery in Japan, including the chain of command from the United States Government to the Supreme Commander and the Supreme Commander's command of occupation forces.

III. Functions of the United States Government.

1. The United States Government shall prepare directives in accordance with policy decisions of the Commission and shall transmit them to the Supreme Commander through the appropriate United States Government agency. The Supreme Commander shall be charged with the implementation of the directives which express the policy decisions of the Commission.

- 2. If the Commission decides that any directive or action reviewed in accordance with article II-A-2 should be modified, its decision shall be regarded as a policy decision.
- 3. The United States Government may issue interim directives to the Supreme Commander pending action by the Commission whenever urgent matters arise not covered by policies already formulated by the Commission; provided that any directive dealing with fundamental changes in the Japanese constitutional structure or in the regime of control, or dealing with a change in the Japanese Government as a whole will be issued only following consultation and following the attainment of agreement in the Far Eastern Commission.
 - 4. All directives issued shall be filed with the Commission.

IV. Other methods of consultation.

The establishment of the Commission shall not preclude the use of other methods of consultation on Far Eastern issues by the participating governments.

V. Composition.

- 1. The Far Eastern Commission shall consist of one representative of each of the states party to this agreement. The membership of the Commission may be increased by agreement among the participating powers as conditions warrant by the addition of representatives of other United Nations in the Far East or having territories therein. The Commission shall provide for full and adequate consultations, as occasion may require, with representatives of the United Nations not members of the Commission in regard to matters before the Commission which are of particular concern to such nations.
- 2. The Commission may take action by less than unanimous vote provided that action shall have the concurrence of at least a majority of all the representatives including the representatives of the four following powers: United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China.

VI. Location and organization.

- 1. The Far Eastern Commission shall have its headquarters in Washington. It may meet at other places as occasion requires, including Tokyo, if and when it deems it desirable to do so. It may make such arrangements through the Chairman as may be practicable for consultation with the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers.
- 2. Each representative on the Commission may be accompanied by an appropriate staff comprising both civilian and military representation.
- 3. The Commission shall organize its secretariat, appoint such committees as may be deemed advisable, and otherwise perfect its organization and procedure.

VII. Termination.

The Far Eastern Commission shall cease to function when a decision to that effect is taken by the concurrence of at least a majority of all the representatives including the representatives of the four following powers: United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China. Prior to the termination of its functions the Commission shall transfer to any interim or permanent security organization of which the participating governments are members those functions which may appropriately be transferred.

It was agreed that the Government of the United States on behalf of the four powers should present the terms of reference to the other governments specified in Article I and invite them to participate in the Commission on the revised basis.

B. ALLIED COUNCIL FOR JAPAN

The following agreement was also reached, with the concurrence of China, for the establishment of an Allied Council for Japan:

- 1. There shall be established an Allied Council with its seat in Tokyo under the chairmanship of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers (or his deputy) for the purpose of consulting with and advising the Supreme Commander in regard to the implementation of the Terms of Surrender, the occupation and control of Japan, and of directives supplementary thereto; and for the purpose of exercising the control authority herein granted.
- 2. The membership of the Allied Council shall consist of the Supreme Commander (or his deputy) who shall be chairman and United States member; a Union of Soviet Socialist Republics member; a Chinese member; and a member representing jointly the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and India.
- 3. Each member shall be entitled to have an appropriate staff consisting of military and civilian advisers.
- 4. The Allied Council shall meet not less often than once every two weeks.
- 5. The Supreme Commander shall issue all orders for the implementation of the terms of surrender, the occupation and control of Japan, and directives supplementary thereto. In all cases action will be carried out under and through the Supreme Commander who is the sole executive authority for the Allied Powers in Japan. He will consult and advise with the Council in advance of the issuance of orders on matters of substance, the exigencies of the situation permitting. His decisions upon these matters shall be controlling.
- 6. If, regarding the implementation of policy decisions of the Far Eastern Commission on questions concerning a change in the regime of control, fundamental changes in the Japanese constitutional structure, and a change in the Japanese Government as a whole, a member of the Council disagrees with the Supreme Commander (or his deputy), the Supreme Commander will withhold the issuance of orders on these questions pending agreement thereon in the Far Eastern Commission.

7. In cases of necessity the Supreme Commander may take decisions concerning the change of individual Ministers of the Japanese Government, or concerning the filling of vacancies created by the resignation of individual Cabinet members, after appropriate preliminary consultation with the representatives of the other Allied Powers on the Allied Council.

III. KOREA

- 1. With a view to the re-establishment of Korea as an independent state, the creation of conditions for developing the country on democratic principles and the earliest possible liquidation of the disastrous results of the protracted Japanese domination in Korea, there shall be set up a provisional Korean democratic government which shall take all the necessary steps for developing the industry, transport and agriculture of Korea and the national culture of the Korean people.
 - 2. In order to assist the formation of a provisional Korean government and with a view to the preliminary elaboration of the appropriate measures, there shall be established a joint commission consisting of representatives of the United States command in southern Korea and the Soviet command in northern Korea. In preparing their proposals the Commission shall consult with the Korean democratic parties and social organizations. The recommendations worked out by the Commission shall be presented for the consideration of the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China, the United Kingdom and the United States prior to final decision by the two Governments represented on the Joint Commission.
 - 3. It shall be the task of the Joint Commission, with the participation of the Provisional Korean Democratic Government and of the Korean democratic organizations to work out measures also for helping and assisting (trusteeship) the political, economic and social progress of the Korean people, the development of democratic self-government and the establishment of the national independence of Korea.

The proposals of the Joint Commission shall be submitted, following consultation with the provisional Korean Government for the joint consideration of the Governments of the United States, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom and China for the working out of an agreement concerning a four-power trusteeship of Korea for a period of up to five years.

4. For the consideration of urgent problems affecting both southern and northern Korea and for the elaboration of measures establishing permanent coordination in administrative-economic matters between the United States Command in southern Korea and the Soviet Command in northern Korea, a conference of the representatives of the United States and Soviet Commands in Korea shall be convened within a period of two weeks.

IV. CHINA

The three Foreign Secretaries exchanged views with regard to the situation in China. They were in agreement as to the need for a unified and democratic China under the National Government, for broad participation by democratic elements in all branches of the National Government, and for a cessation of civil strife. They reaffirmed their adherence to the policy of non-interference in the internal affairs of China.

Mr. Molotov and Mr. Byrnes had several conversations concerning Soviet and American armed forces in China.

Mr. Molotov stated that the Soviet forces had disarmed and deported Japanese troops in Manchuria but that withdrawal of Soviet forces had been postponed until February first at the request of the Chinese Government.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that American forces were in North China at the request of the Chinese Government, and referred also to the primary responsibility of the United States in the implementation of the terms of surrender with respect to the disarming and deportation of Japanese troops. He stated that American forces would be withdrawn just as soon as this responsibility was discharged or the Chinese Government was in a position to discharge the responsibility without the assistance of American forces.

The two Foreign Secretaries were in complete accord as to the desirability of withdrawal of Soviet and American forces from China at the earliest practicable moment consistent with the discharge of their obligations and responsibilities.

V. RUMANIA

The three Governments are prepared to give King Michael the advice for which he has asked in his letter of August 21, 1945, on the broadening of the Rumanian Government. The King should be advised that one member of the National Peasant Party and one member of the Liberal Party should be included in the government. The Commission referred to below shall satisfy itself that

- (a) They are truly representative members of the groups of the parties not represented in the Government;
 - (b) They are suitable and will work loyally with the government

The three Governments take note that the Rumanian Government thus reorganized should declare that free and unfettered elections will be held as soon as possible on the basis of universal and secret ballot. All democratic and anti-Fascist parties should have the right to take part in these elections and to put forward candidates. The reorganized government should give assurances concerning the grant of freedom of the press, speech, religion and association.

A. Y. Vyshinski, Mr. Harriman, and Sir A. Clark Kerr are authorized as a commission to proceed to Bucharest immediately to consult with King Michael and members of the present government with a view to the execution of the above-mentioned tasks.

As soon as these tasks are accomplished and the required assurances have been received, The Government of Rumania, with which The Soviet Government maintains diplomatic relations, will be recognized by The Government of the United States of America and The Government of the United Kingdom.

VI. BULGARIA

It is understood by the three Governments that the Soviet Government takes upon itself the mission of giving friendly advice to the Bulgarian Government with regard to the desirability of the inclusion in the Bulgarian Government of the fatherland front, now being formed, of an additional two representatives of other democratic groups, who (a) are truly representative of the groups of the parties which are not participating in the government, and (b) are really suitable and will work loyally with the government.

As soon as the Governments of the United States of America and the United Kingdom are convinced that this friendly advice has been accepted by the Bulgarian Government and the said additional representatives have been included in its body, The Government of the United States and The Government of The United Kingdom will recognize The Bulgarian Government, with which The Government of The Soviet Union already has diplomatic relations.

VII. THE ESTABLISHMENT BY THE UNITED NATIONS OF A COMMISSION FOR THE CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY

Discussion of the subject of atomic energy related to the question of the establishment of a commission by the General Assembly of the United Nations. The Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United States of America, and the United Kingdom have agreed to recommend, for the consideration of the General Assembly of the United Nations, the establishment by the United Nations of a commission to consider problems arising from the discovery of atomic energy and related matters. They have agreed to invite the other permanent members of the Security Council, France and China, together with Canada to join with them in assuming the initiative in sponsoring the following resolution at the first session of the General Assembly of the United Nations in January 1946:

Resolved by the General Assembly of the United Nations to establish a commission, with the composition and competence set out hereunder, to deal with the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters.

I. Establishment of the Commission.

A commission is hereby established by the General Assembly with the terms of reference set out under Section V below.

- II. Relations of the Commission with the organs of the United Nations.
- (a). The Commission shall submit its reports and recommendations to the Security Council, and such reports and recommendations shall be made public unless the Security Council, in the interests of peace and security, otherwise directs. In the appropriate cases the Security Council should transmit these reports to the General Assembly and the members of the United Nations, as well as to the Economic and Social Council and other organs within the framework of the United Nations.
- (b). In view of the Security Council's primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, the Security Council shall issue directions to the Commission in matters affecting security. On these matters the Commission shall be accountable for its work to the Security Council.

III. Composition of the Commission.

The Commission shall be composed of one representative from each of those states represented on the Security Council, and Canada when that state is not a member of the Security Council. Each representative on the Commission may have such assistants as he may desire.

IV. Rules of procedure.

The Commission shall have whatever staff it may deem necessary, and shall make recommendations for its rules of procedure to the Security Council, which shall approve them as a procedural matter.

V. Terms of Reference of the Commission.

The Commission shall proceed with the utmost dispatch and inquire into all phases of the problem, and make such recommendations from time to time with respect to them as it finds possible. In particular the Commission shall make specific proposals:

(a) For extending between all nations the exchange of basic scientific information for peaceful ends;

(b) For control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes;

(c) For the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction;

(d) For effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions.

The work of the Commission should proceed by separate stages, the successful completion of each of which will develop the necessary confidence of the world before the next stage is undertaken.

The Commission shall not infringe upon the responsibilities of any organ of the United Nations, but should present recommendations for the consideration of those organs in the performance of their tasks under the terms of the United Nations Charter.

The Ambassador in France (Caffery) to the Secretary of State 8

Paris, December 29, 1945—3 p. m. [Received December 29—1:54 p. m.]

7408. At the meeting of the Council of Ministers vesterday the Cabinet discussed the invitation to the French Govt to associate itself with the Big Three and China in the peace treaties settlement with Italy, the Balkan States and Finland. Bidault arrived late at the Cabinet meeting (going directly there from his wedding ceremony) when discussion was in full swing; he left immediately after the meeting on his wedding trip. I, therefore, saw Chauvel 9 this morning to ascertain what decisions had been taken by the Govt and when a reply to our note (Moscow's 457 to Paris) could be expected.

Chauvel was in a state of considerable confusion as to exactly what happened at the Council of Ministers vesterday. He had seen Bidault briefly after the meeting, but the latter was in haste to depart and had given him only a vague account. Subsequently he saw Francis Gay (MRP 10 Minister of State who will act as Foreign Minister in Bidault's absence) but Gay had little more to add.

Chauvel said that from the scanty information at his disposal the Cabinet had decided to reply to our note by asking for further information as to exactly what we envisaged as the role of the Peace

¹⁰ Popular Republican Movement, French political party.

⁸ The Secretary of State left Moscow on the morning of December 27 en route to Washington, where he arrived on the evening of December 29.

⁹ Jean Chauvel, Secretary General of the French Foreign Ministry.

Conference vis-à-vis the countries which would prepare the treaties for submittal to the Conference. (The press reports this. See my 7409, December 29.11) Specifically he "believes the French note will inquire as to how the powers participating in the Conference will be permitted to make known their views. When differences of opinion occur between the two or three powers preparing the treaty and other members of the Conference will the question be put to a vote and if so will the vote be in secret or public?" Furthermore, the French would like to know to what degree the Big Three will take into account recommendations of other powers participating in the Conference. (Until these questions have been answered the French will withhold saying that they would like the Conference to be held at Paris, although it is obvious that they want it here very much.)

I asked Chauvel if the French reply had reached the drafting stage and he replied with considerable embarrassment that it had not, since the Foreign Office itself still did not have sufficient information or minutes of the Cabinet meeting yesterday to permit it to draft. He added that for this reason the indications he had given me above should not be accepted as setting forth the exact sense of the French reply but rather as an indication of what had been told him briefly by Bidault and Gay.

I said to Chauvel that from what little he had conveyed to me it appeared possible that no reply would be forthcoming from the French for at least several days. He agreed that this would probably be the case. I said to him that speaking personally the shilly-shally, delay and questions that the French were posing before giving a final reply reminded me of what had happened when they were invited to participate in sponsoring the San Francisco Conference and that if they carried this on very long they would probably find themselves in the position of having the Big Three and China proceed without them. I said that we would regret this very much as Secretary Byrnes had done what he could to find a solution to this pressing problem which would not compromise France's legitimate interests, that it was solely due to Mr. Byrnes' efforts that France received the consideration she had received.

Chauvel showed great distress throughout the conversation and indicated that the Foreign Ministry would like to go along with us. He repeated, however, that everything was in a terrible state of confusion. Bidault's departure on his wedding trip and the fact that Francis Gay was not well briefed and knew little about pressing foreign questions left the Foreign Ministry in a position where there is no one of Cabinet rank or of sufficient influence to impress on de Gaulle that it is in France's interest to associate itself whole-heartedly with the Moscow decision.

He suggested that I see de Gaulle. I said "No, de Gaulle will not go back on a decision the Cabinet has taken on his insistence and against the opposition of some of the Ministers. I explained all this to Bidault who understood the situation very well and said he would explain it to de Gaulle; but apparently on account of his wedding excitement, et cetera, he did not do so effectively. I know de Gaulle and I know when I can persuade him to change his position, but this time I would only expose myself to a rebuff." I added "I regret you are making it very difficult for your friends to help you, and if you persist in your attitude, you will be left out in the cold."

Chauvel said he understood perfectly, thanked me and said he would do the best he could, as fast as he could.

ANGLO-AMERICAN COOPERATION ON POLICIES AND PROBLEMS CONCERNING THE PROCLAIMED AND STATUTORY LISTS IN THE EASTERN HEMISPHERE ¹

740.00112 Black List/2-645

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, February 6, 1945. [Received February 15.]

Sir: With reference to the Department's telegram 9756 of November 20, 1944 ² requesting this Embassy to discuss with the British the question of suggesting to all Allied governments in the Eastern Hemisphere that they issue lists parallel to the Proclaimed and Statutory Lists ³ and also that they observe these lists in the post-war period, I have the honor to report on the current status of this matter.

The Embassy's telegram 11,192 of December 16² contained the verbatim comments of Mr. E. H. Bliss of the Ministry of Economic Warfare on the Department's suggestions. The following report is submitted to give the Department a summary of the current position which has altered somewhat from that described in the Embassy's telegram 11,192.

(A) Belgium:

In December, it will be recalled, MEW 4 preferred to view the question of an approach to Allied Governments with the suggestion that they issue lists parallel to the Proclaimed and Statutory Lists on a wider basis—at least insofar as the co-belligerents in Western Europe were concerned. At that time the Belgians were merely contemplating economic warfare controls and MEW thought that immediate steps should be taken to speed up their reactions in this respect. The Belgian Government has apparently now promulgated economic warfare controls substantially along the lines desired by the British and, as

The Proclaimed List of Certain Blocked Nationals, issued July 17, 1941, named certain persons deemed to be acting for the benefit of Germany or Italy or nationals of those countries and persons to whom the exportation, directly or indirectly, of various articles or materials was deemed to be detrimental to the interest of national defense. For text of the proclamation, see Department of State Bulletin, July 19, 1941, p. 42. The British Statutory List was similar in scope to the Proclaimed List.

was stated in the Embassy's telegram 402 of January 12,⁵ they will adopt a Black List, although its actual publication in the Official Journal will be delayed owing to the necessity of including the latest supplements to the Statutory List in theirs and the shortage of labor and paper.

(B) Italy:

The position with respect to Italy has not, to this Embassy's knowledge, altered from that described in the Embassy's telegram 11,192. It would appear that we could achieve our aims by a joint approach with the British through or with the approval of the Allied Control Commission. However, as was pointed out in the Embassy's telegram 512 of January 15,5 economic warfare considerations such as the Proclaimed List have not apparently been taken into account with respect to Italy, judging from Tam airgram 24 of October 115 from AGWAR to AFHQ, which set forth the policy of dealings between Italy and neutral countries. The Embassy suggests that appropriate steps be taken through the Allied Control Commission to obtain the issuance and/or observance of the Proclaimed and Statutory Lists by the Italian Government.6

(C) Norway:

There has been no change as regards Norway, but the Department may wish to discuss this question with Mr. Bliss during his visit to Washington following his return from his current visit to Switzerland.

(D) Russia:

The position with respect to Russia in December was rather doubtful, from MEW's point of view, as it was felt that the idea of economic warfare was new to the Russians and it was desirable to give it an opportunity to develop with the Russians. At that time, an approach had been made to the Russians on the Control Commission in Finland because of the resumption of trade between Sweden and Finland. The Soviet representative at Helsinki ⁷ agreed then to measures aimed at preventing Statutory-listed firms in Sweden from dealing with Finland. However, it is believed by MEW that, although these

The Department and the Foreign Office decided that the approach to the Italian Government on the adoption of the Proclaimed and Statutory Lists should be made jointly by the American and British Embassies in Italy. Negotiations began in March, and on August 7, 1945, the American Embassy in Italy cabled that the Italian Government was drafting a decree and that 'its practical effect will be to apply sanctions [to] all persons included in Proclaimed List'. (740.65112A/8-745) Apparently, the Italian Government had not formally adopted the Lists by the close of 1945, but agreement was near.

arrangements are probably adequate for immediate purposes, they do not go far enough, as, ostensibly, they cover only Swedish exporters. Eventually it is hoped to obtain Russian agreement to prevent any transactions with Finland, whether exports, imports, or financial operations on the part of Statutory-listed firms in Sweden. It is also hoped eventually to institute in Finland import control by means of certificates of origin.

Recently, the question of Soviet cooperation in enforcing the Statutory List has arisen in connection with other countries. On January 3, on the basis of a report from Stockholm that Soviet-Swedish trade was shortly to be resumed, MEW cabled to the British Embassy in Moscow suggesting that the Soviet Government be invited to refrain from dealings with and to deny facilities within their control to persons and firms on the Statutory List in Sweden and elsewhere. A copy of the Ministry's Arfar ⁸ 1 of January 3 to Moscow is attached as Enclosure No. 1.9 The reference telegram Arfar 64 from Moscow was quoted in this Embassy's despatch 18,383 of October 3, 1944.9

A further example of the need for an approach to the Soviet Government to obtain its observance of the Statutory and Proclaimed Lists was contained in telegram 79 of December 19° to this Embassy from Ankara, repeating a message to the Department, which stated that Proclaimed-listed firms in Turkey were being allowed to trade with Bulgaria. The Embassy's telegram 341 of January 10 9 informed the Department that MEW, after discussions with the Foreign Office, intended to raise this question as a general issue with the Russian Government as well as to have it raised specifically with the British members of the Allied Control Commission in Bulgaria. January 17 the British Military Mission in Bulgaria was informed in this connection that the British Government has no objection to the principle of the resumption of Bulgaria's foreign trade provided that commercial or financial transactions with Statutory-listed firms are not permitted and also that imports of goods of enemy origin or interest are prohibited by demanding, in the case of imports from Turkey and the four European neutrals, the production of certificates of origin.

On January 31, in order to raise the subject as a general issue with the Soviet Government, MEW wrote to the British Embassy in Moscow, suggesting that a general approach be made to the Russians on this subject. A copy of the Ministry's Savingram is attached as Enclosure No. 2.10

It will be observed that recent events, particularly resumption of trade between Russia and neutral countries and liberated countries in which Russia has a predominant interest, has necessitated a further approach to the Russians for a clearer expression of their position vis-à-vis the Allied lists. It will be noted that the British Savingram of January 31 has left the decision as to the best means of obtaining these ends to the British Mission. The Department may wish to send similar instructions to the American Embassy in Moscow, which is being furnished with a copy of this despatch for its informa-The Embassy suggests, however, that, inasmuch as the original approach to the Soviet Government on the question of observance of the Statutory List was made by the British alone in connection with the Russian Government's observance of the post-hostilities Statutory List (see Embassy's despatch 18,383 of October 3, 1944) it is unnecessary for an approach to be made jointly by the American and British Embassies in Moscow, unless a joint approach is felt by both Missions to be preferable. While it has normally been the practice in the past to make approaches to neutral European governments on a joint basis with the British on listing and other economic warfare matters, the Embassy believes that it may be undesirable to approach another Allied government on a joint basis in such matters. Furthermore, it might be noted that, if the British are successful in obtaining the Soviet Government's observance of the Statutory List with respect to neutral European countries, that Government's observance of the Proclaimed List for these countries would automatically follow.

The Department's reference telegram also raised the question as to whether the Allied Governments had received memoranda similar to that which was sent to the Norwegian Ministry of Supply (reference Embassy's telegram 6538 of August 14, 1944 ¹¹). The Ministry has informed the Embassy that copies of this memorandum have been sent to representatives of the Belgian, French, and Netherlands Governments by the Ministry of Production which, MEW states, is in closer touch with these Allies than MEW.

Respectfully yours,

For the Ambassador:

1. Black List ¹³ Committee February 6 amended decision of October 19 to make no further additions to Black List by agreeing that additions should now be made for substantive cases.

Reurtel 57, January 3.¹⁴ Committee's decision to discontinue practice of automatically including directors and partners of listed firms in Black List still stands. Matter was discussed with Bliss by Peterson ¹⁵ and Andrews ¹⁶ following Department's instruction to former. Committee's decision reached at instigation of Bliss, who wished to have unfrozen Black List as basis for discussion in his visit to Washington following his return from Switzerland.

- 2. Board of Trade representative reported his Department's disagreement with Department's fundamental view that published and confidential lists should continue as complementary weapons of economic warfare as long as blockade and export controls continue. For Department's information, it is unlikely that Black List will continue in effect after cessation of hostilities in Europe, inasmuch as it was promulgated by MEW, which will probably be liquidated shortly after European hostilities terminate. TED ¹⁷ of Board of Trade will probably then assume remaining listing responsibilities largely in connection with post-hostilities Statutory List.
- 3. Embassy would appreciate Department's comments on future of Confidential List ¹⁸ after cessation of hostilities in Europe. Department's 7489 September 14 ¹⁹ indicated Confidential List might be abolished or at least its functions materially reduced if it were retained.

1273. Second section Embassy's telegram 1404, February 8, quite helpful. Department's telegram 7489, September 14,20 is best prediction now possible regarding post-hostilities fate of Confidential List. Department's view of published and secret lists as complementary to which Board of Trade objected is based on premise that as long as export and blockade controls operate to deny goods or facilities to specified persons there must be some way of getting at henchmen in twilight zones about them. The issue is really how long blockade controls will continue to operate and lists remain primarily an adjunct of Obviously, secret lists will go when blockade controls go, and truncated published lists if they remain, will be directed to Department differs from Board of Trade if latter other objectives. proposes to maintain a blockade or export control system with only a published list and that about three-fourths its present size. Such a system would inevitably raise problems adumbrated in Department's telegram 57, January 3,21 regarding which your report of British reaction is awaited by Department. No merit is seen in maintaining the control mechanisms but spoiling their reputation and effectiveness by eliminating or so drastically reducing the lists that the controls operate unfairly, sporadically and perhaps opportunistically. Similarly, regarding British tendency towards a static post-hostilities list, Department tends to favor a dynamic but progressively reduced Proclaimed List until export and blockade controls are lifted. British emphasis on post-hostilities rather than post-blockade as the key date regarding listing seems to be crux of problem. Certainly the freeze of Black List before either country was ready to modify blockade This whole matter will controls indicated a divergence on this point. be raised here with Bliss. 672. ReEmb's 538, February 24, 1 p. m. Kennan and General Spalding 26 have had an interview with Kumykin, head of the Trade Agreements Section of the People's Commissariat for Foreign Trade concerning Soviet recognition of the Proclaimed and Statutory Lists. Kennan described our plans for postwar continuance of the Proclaimed List and said there were two concrete questions which we wished clarified: (1) Would the Soviet Government be prepared to recognize the list in its commercial dealings and (2) to what extent would it wish to make recommendations on the composition of the list.

Kumykin replied that this matter had never before been raised officially with the Soviet Government and there were consequently several questions which he would like to ask with respect to the Proclaimed List. He proceeded to put the following 12 questions. We are unable to give an authoritative reply to most of these questions, and I would therefore appreciate the Department's assistance in answering them.

We have passed on the questions to the British Embassy, which is telegraphing them to London with a request for pertinent information concerning the British Statutory List. The British Embassy is suggesting that London's reply to it on the Statutory List be coordinated with the Department's reply to us on the Proclaimed List, in order to avoid any conflict in what we and they tell the Russians. Questions follow:

- 1. What is the legal basis of the Proclaimed List, what principles were applied in drawing it up, and what criteria governed listing of this or that individual firm.
- 2. What types of specific data were considered in deciding on a listing.
- 3. What agency of the United States Government handles the Proclaimed List.
 - 4. Are the Proclaimed and Statutory Lists identical.
- 5. Is the consent of both American and British Governments now required for the listing of a firm.
 - 6. What is the listing procedure.
 - 7. On what principles will the list be revised for the postwar period.
- 8. Does the present list include firms of the former satellites registered in neutral or Allied countries, or firms which dealt with the former satellite countries. If so, could they be segregated into a separate list.
- 9. Would it be possible to segregate from the present list Japanese firms and firms of neutral countries listed because they were assisting Japan.
- 10. How completely does the list encompass German firms in neutral countries and other firms in such countries that have traded with the Axis.
- 11. Has consideration been given to the inclusion in the list of German and German-controlled firms in countries now or formerly occupied by Germany.
- 12. The list includes firms in many countries which have long been at war with Germany. Presumably the laws in those countries, like the laws of the United States and Great Britain, deprive enemy aliens of the right to use their property and progeny for the liquidation of enemy firms. In these circumstances how can such firms continue to exist and do business in countries at war with Germany.

The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Officers 27

Washington, March 28, 1945—4: 40 p. m.

Inquiries have been received in the Department concerning commercial relations between firms in the Middle East area and entities in liberated areas.

It is highly unlikely that firms in the Middle East area will run afoul of our Proclaimed List policy in their dealings with the liberated areas. The Proclaimed List was not extended to such areas because during occupation trade with any person residing therein was completely proscribed. Post-liberation extension of the List as to these areas is not contemplated. For your confidential information, it is, and very likely will continue to be, this Government's policy to leave to the governments of the Allied liberated countries the determination of the treatment of collaborators and control of possible enemy activity within them. They are also expected to establish controls designed to prevent trade and communication with the enemy and to coordinate such procedures with the economic warfare controls of the British and American Governments. Regarding ex-enemy countries, reliance must ultimately be placed on Allied controls.

This Government is working toward mutual observance of economic warfare controls by each of the liberated countries, including adoption or recognition of the Proclaimed List by them.

The Department suggests that you inform inquirers that they may deal with the liberated areas without fear of penalty, provided they do not knowingly violate any of the controls of this or any Allied government aimed at preventing benefit to the enemy.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

Washington, April 8, 1945—2 p. m.

- 819. Following are answers to questions concerning Proclaimed List:
- (1) Proclaimed List was authorized by Presidential Proclamation of July 17, 1941 under authority vested in the President by Trading with the Enemy Act, Section 5(b) of Act of October 6, 1917

²⁷ To the Diplomatic Officers at Cairo, Athens, Tehran, Baghdad, Damascus, Beirut, Jidda, and Addis Ababa; to the Consular Officers at Jerusalem, Salonika, and Aden. Airgram A-34, February 28, 1945, not printed, had been sent to Ankara.

(40 Stat. 415), as amended, and section 6 of Act of July 2, 1940 (54 Stat. 714).

Proclaimed List is a list basically designed to identify persons and firms abroad with respect to whom any transactions subject to control of the United States Government are prohibited except under license. With the advent of General Ruling No. 11, issued by Treasury Department under date of March 18, 1942,²⁸ persons and firms thereafter included in List became "enemy nationals" under Trading with the Enemy Act, and thus trade and communication with them became completely proscribed. Thus, underlying objective of list is to prevent trading, financial or other transactions which benefit the enemy.

Broadly speaking, listing has been directed against persons and firms considered to be part and parcel of enemy plan of economic aggression, such as enemy-controlled firms, persons having enemy government ties and such other persons and firms actively contributing to enemy war effort.

- (2) Allied official sources have been utilized to fullest extent to obtain evidence on which listing has been based, including, but not by way of limitation, censorship intelligence and reports from allied missions in the field.
- (3) Proclaimed List is administered by an Interdepartmental Committee composed of representatives of Departments of State, Treasury, Justice and Commerce, Office of Inter-American Affairs and Foreign Economic Administration.²⁹ British and Canadian observers also attend Committee meetings.
- (4) Proclaimed and Statutory Lists are identical except for very few discrepancies which are largely due to circumstances of publication. Western Hemisphere names appear in Proclaimed List first and subsequently in Statutory List, while Eastern Hemisphere names appear first in Statutory List.
- (5) While both Governments maintain their freedom of action to list without agreement of the other, in practice unanimity has been regarded as so desirable that there are no instances in which disagreement has resulted in divergence between lists.
- (6) Action is taken on basis of joint recommendations from interested American and British missions. These recommendations are considered in either the British or American Committees, depending upon whether they arise in Western or Eastern Hemisphere.
- (7) With respect to postwar list, US and UK Governments issued public statement simultaneously on September 26, 1944,30 text of which was transmitted to you in Department's 341 of November 2, 1944.31

²⁸ 7 Federal Register 2168.

The chairman was Dean G. Acheson, Assistant Secretary of State.
 See circular airgram, September 21, 1944, Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, p. 188.
 Ibid., p. 193.

- (8) There are a few firms which were included in Proclaimed List because they were controlled from enemy countries other than Germany, Italy or Japan. A few firms and individuals were also listed because of dealings with such enemy countries. It would not be possible, however, to segregate these names from others appearing in published list.
- (9) Same as (8) above, except that Japanese names and names listed for contribution to Japanese war effort are more numerous.³²
- (10) Enemy-controlled firms in neutrals are normally listed. Other firms in neutral countries are listed because of commercial, financial and political activities which benefit the enemy, but it has not been our practice to list automatically for trading with the enemy. In each case consideration is given to whether or not listing can be expected to bring about a curtailment of such trade on the part of neutral firm in question or deter others from similar trade. Listing action is also taken to make an example of firms which have gone out of their way to increase their exports to the enemy or to develop new business in goods for which enemy has particular need or to re-export to enemy goods imported through Allied blockade.
- (11) It has not been necessary to extend Proclaimed List to persons and firms in enemy and enemy-occupied territory. American interests are prohibited by law from trading or communicating with such territory. This Government does not contemplate post-liberation extension of Proclaimed List to areas formerly occupied by the enemy since reliance will be placed upon governments of liberated areas to deal appropriately with collaborators and other undesirable elements and to control possible enemy activity within such countries.
- (12) It has been necessary to maintain Proclaimed List in these countries until such time as they have exercised adequate control over enemy firms and individuals.

Foregoing telegram has been discussed with British here and cable along similar lines will be dispatched shortly from London.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, April 21, 1945—6 p. m.

3144. As a result of discussions with Mr. Foot ³³ and the Department, following consultation in the Proclaimed List Committee, the Department is recommending to the Committee and the identical proposal is being made to MEW and the Black List Committee, a proposal which follows approximately the pattern hereinafter set forth:

1. Shortly after V-E Day,³⁴ the lists for the eastern hemisphere will be reduced by elimination of minor offenders.

2. Approximately 4 months thereafter, a further cut will be made in the lists by the elimination of the intermediate class of offenders.

3. The residual hard core will remain on the lists until the lists are withdrawn, which date is tentatively set at approximately one year after V-E Day, subject to the continuation of adequate controls.

It is being suggested that for the western hemisphere a program very similar to that already in operation will be followed, of withdrawing the list more rapidly in those Latin American countries which cooperate than those which do not.

It has been agreed that a working party will be established in London to screen the names on the Proclaimed and Statutory Lists for the eastern hemisphere area in order to set up the categories which are outlined above. In view of the urgency of this matter it is desired immediately to establish this working party in London in order that at least the category of "minor offenders" can be set up as soon as possible. You are therefore directed to consult with MEW, which will be in receipt of similar instructions, in order to establish such a working party. The urgency of this matter will be appreciated.

In advance of the full text of the Department's recommendation, which is being sent to you shortly, the following are the standards upon which agreement has been reached and which are to be used in establishing the category of minor offenders, which are called Class A in the document:

"It is agreed that the following categories of names will be included in Class A. In all cases regard will be had for the prestige of the lists and for our past public declarations, and for the advice of the missions.

1. Persons whose objectionable operations have been few and unimportant.

³³ Dingle Foot, Parliamentary Secretary, British Ministry of Economic Warfare. Discussions were held between Mr. Foot, representatives of the British Embassy at Washington, and officers of the Department April 16–21, 1945, concerning the withdrawal of the Proclaimed and Statutory Lists after the cessation of hostilities in Europe.

³⁴ Victory in Europe. Germany surrendered on May 8, 1945.

2. Persons whose offenses have consisted in dealings with others on the lists unless (1) such dealings which resulted in listing were carried on after warnings from the missions or (2) were on such a scale as to impair appreciably the effects of listing on the listed firms in question.

3. Persons whose enemy nationality was the principal factor in their listing, except that the possibility that the person may be subject to repatriation should be taken into account in considering such cases for deletion.

4. Persons listed solely or primarily because of their identification with a listed firm should be deleted when that firm is deleted."

This recommendation has a top secret designation and should be communicated only to your British colleague.

This telegram is being repeated to the American missions in Lisbon, Madrid, Bern, Stockholm and Ankara ³⁵ with instructions to forward as promptly to London and to Department their recommendations in the sense of the foregoing.

- 4640. 1. Black List Committee has approved following criteria for listing post VE-Day:
- (a) Important German-controlled firms which have hitherto escaped listing;

(b) Persons known to hold or to conceal or to be transferring enemy assets, loot or assets belonging to enemy leaders or their associates;

- (c) Persons dealing with cloaking or otherwise acting in close association with persons on the Statutory List. (A few additions of this type may be required in order to enforce the list.)
- 2. It is felt the best results are likely to be achieved by making an example of selected important offenders and that it would probably be preferable in many cases to exact a suitably worded undertaking which will be a revision of the current British standard undertaking.

4221. For EWD.³⁷ Reference is made to program for deletion of Class A names from Proclaimed and Statutory Lists immediately after V–E Day and to telegrams which have been exchanged on subject of Class A lists compiled in London for European neutral countries.

It will be recalled that agreement worked out between Dept and Foot indicated drafting of lists of names for immediate deletion from lists on basis of standards which were set out and attached to memorandum expressing basic agreement with Foot. Examination in Dept of names submitted by Working Party in London indicates no substantial adherence has been maintained to standards which were thus set out. Examination of proposed Class A lists for such countries as Turkey, Tangier and other European areas indicates Dept would disagree with deletion of approximately 60% of names recommended by London Working Party. Inclusion of such names as director of Deutsche Bank in Turkey is illustrative of type of difficulty Dept is finding with lists submitted by London Working Party.

This matter is viewed with extreme concern by Dept. At time of discussions with Foot, Dept. pointed out the extremely grave consequences of overly generous deletions from lists immediately after V-E Day. It will be recalled Dept's view was that lists should be maintained with only gradual reductions until lists were entirely eliminated approximately one year after V-E Day, and Dept acceded to British desire to make substantial reduction immediately after V-E $^{^{36}}$ The London Coordination Area was composed of Ireland, Sweden, Switzerland, Portugal and Spain with their possessions, Tangier, Turkey, Iran, and Iraq. 37 Economic Warfare Division of the Embassy in London.

Day only on basis of agreement that only "small fry" and fringe cases would be included in lists of names eligible for immediate deletion.

Dept has been forewarned that Congressional committees and others interested in Economic Warfare will question very seriously desirability of any substantial reduction of lists at this time. In view of this fact and in view of inclusion in lists drafted by London Working Party of names which Dept considers eligible for hard core, it seems impossible to reach agreement on "first bite" deletions by June 2. Moreover it seems clear Dept and London Working Party are proceeding on entirely different basis in compiling lists of persons eligible for immediate deletion. In view of Dept this matter will have to be straightened out before agreement can be reached on Class A deletions unless British are prepared to accept suggestions which have been made and which will continue to be made by Dept.

You are requested to bring these points to attention of British and to emphasize the following: (1) In view of different standards apparently being applied by London Working Party and Dept, Dept cannot agree to deletions of Class A names on June 9 as originally planned; (2) Dept will continue to send its comments on lists submitted by London Working Party, and is willing to send George Baker 38 to London to discuss this entire matter with particular reference to standards being applied in drafting Class A lists: (3) Policy of large scale deletions immediately after V-E Day is being seriously questioned both in Congress and US press. Dept is not willing to assume burden of justifying not only deletion of unimportant fringe cases immediately after V-E Day but also deletion of names which Dept would consider eligible for hard core lists. This point of view was clearly explained to Foot during discussions in Washington and should be emphasized in your discussions with British; (4) It is hoped that postponement of first bite deletions, accompanied by further discussions, can clarify this matter and result in agreement between British and US. Should this not be possible Dept will be compelled to consider maintenance of PL in manner which it will be able to justify, even though this policy means divergence from Statutory List. Department is not prepared to throw overboard the standards worked out in Foot discussions in order to preserve correspondence between Proclaimed and Statutory Lists.

Please report urgently to Dept reactions of British on these views.

5804. For ES.⁴³ At special meeting Standing Committee, June 6, American representatives persuaded Brit not to discuss deletion program at Black List Committee meeting. FO 44 was informed we could not attend meeting if item was on agenda because of secrecy classification. Despite previous agreement to June 23 as outside publication date, Brit were reluctant to postpone publication beyond June 16 unless there was possibility of meeting substantial agreement with Proclaimed List Committee on London revised lists. Standing Committee had decided last week that unless we informed them to this effect early this week question of disagreement should be referred to Black List Committee this week so that unilateral publication could take place June 16 if necessary. Brit finally agreed to extend publication date to June 23 as originally reported Embs 5435, May 30,45 but it is certain that in absence of directive from top Govt levels they will not defer publication beyond this date (ref question your 4518, June 6). Oliver should, therefore, arrive by weekend as suggested telephone conversation.

Thorough discussion at Standing Committee meeting revealed Brit position substantially as follows: Brit experiencing public pressure for removal wartime controls which is expected to increase in near future. Controls have been specifically raised in Brit political campaign. If Statutory List is to remain cases must be strong as weak ones are likely to imperil whole program. Brit feel hard-core cases could be defended for time agreed and intermediate cases for a short time. They believe, however, that some immediate deletions of unimportant and minor cases are needed not only to safeguard program, but as also "payment on account" (to quote Board of Trade) to British public to convince them that steps are being taken towards liquidation of lists as forecast in Selborne's speech in Parliament last Sept. difficult to assess approximate percentage Brit would be willing to accept (your 4518) as they do not wish to operate on percentage or numerical basis. They feel names either do or do not qualify under criteria and mentioned that 5% seemed a reasonable margin for error and differences of opinion on specific cases. We feel that Brit might agree to 15% cited by Dept if it could be reasonably shown in time remaining that London working party and missions were in error to this extent. However, on basis review of lists, we doubt there would be this many cases. Finally, Brit appear aggravated by and unable to understand Proclaimed List Committee's close scrutiny of Eastern Hemisphere lists and numerous objections when Washington has been given relatively, if not entirely free hand in Western Hemisphere deletion program.

CFB feels that in view of Dept's written acceptance (albeit reluctant and with misgivings) of detailed categories of class A minor offenders with Foot, there is little chance in time remaining of altering substantially lists agreed in London for Class A deletion. It seems desirable for tactical reasons that Class A deletions be accepted, for the most part, by Dept to prevent divergence and probable ineffectiveness of lists (our 5688, June 5 46). In time between Class A and Class B deletions, discussions could be held with Brit regarding detailed criteria (not yet defined) for deletions Class B or qualifications for hard-core. If sufficiently liberal criteria agreed upon for Class C retention or restrictive for Class B deletion, Dept's objective for retaining relatively larger intermediate and hard-core lists than currently projected by Brit could be attained.

- 6550. From ES for Collado ⁴⁹ and King.⁵⁰ In view of unfortunate psychological effect of mass deletions in Latin America and recent hardening in attitude toward certain totalitarian states is it possible that the British no longer feel so strongly that published lists should promptly be reduced to small hard core? If so we strongly favor policy of no additional group deletions for following reasons:
- 1) Task of separately summarizing and evaluating evidence in several thousand cases and of reconciling views of missions, London and Washington is both difficult and expensive. With personnel available it is doubtful whether hard core can be agreed upon in accordance with time schedule of Foot agreement. Effort does not seem to be justified by alleged advantages of merely reducing size of lists particularly since we and Brit contemplate their total withdrawal in a few months and since lists have already been reduced by about 25%. The total withdrawal of list will not require laborious review of all listed names.

- 2) Diversion of available trained personnel to categorizing names makes it difficult to give proper attention to other matters which are now urgent such as discovery and freezing of overseas assets. It is also difficult to dispose of important individual cases such as Bata where reorganizations may be desirable before list is withdrawn.
- 3) Political situation in certain areas might be complicated by further large scale deletions. For example, our Emb at Buenos Aires strongly opposes further reduction on political grounds.
- 4) Mass deletion of relatively serious offenders will be difficult to justify before US public opinion particularly in view of continuance of war against Japan.
- 5) The balance of advantage still seems to us to be in favor of maintaining list at approx its present size. See Apr 13 memo ⁵¹ approved by PL Committee. In many countries US and UK missions assert that deletion program is premature. We do not propose continuance of trade controls which are the real barriers to commerce simply to keep lists effective. But as long as supporting controls are maintained for independent reasons we cannot see how size of list materially affects trade.

The foregoing would not preclude continued deletions in Latin America in accordance with the joint US-UK statement of Sept 1944 52 nor would it preclude deletion of meritorious cases. If you agree approach Brit high level to ascertain their willingness to maintain active list at about its present size until its withdrawal approx one year after V-E Day. If Brit not agreeable we will of course continue to attempt to meet Foot agreement schedule so as to avoid divergence.

Communication mentions extensive work devoted to selection of hard core, suggests Latin American replacement program ultimately must be faced without reliance on long lists but agrees our obligation to favor our friends as long as trade controls remain.
- (2) Letter cites four chief reasons for original plan to reduce lists: (a) Weak evidence against some names will make difficult meeting protests from Govts and parties interested; (b) withdrawal of censorship and economic warfare machinery makes policing long lists difficult; (c) political difficulties encountered with restive neutral govts complaining of discrimination; and (d) some minor offenders coincidently may be best export channels.
 - (3) Main decisions substantially as follows:
- (a) Considering strong desire of American Govt to alter original program British prepared to concur that, provided a suitable alternate arrangement agreeable to both Govts is adopted, the lists shall not be diminished in Sept to hard core. For reasons cited, however, the arrangement should still involve selecting a hard core by application of existing standards rather than removing a further batch of lesser offenders. Feel it impossible to hold existing list less a few meritorious cases until May 1946 and desire at all costs to avoid continuation of periodic deletions which undermine stigma attached to those still on the lists because of impression that any still listed may come off at any time.

(b) British propose hard core be postponed from Sept until Nov and concur entire lists be dropped not later than May 1946. It may moreover be necessary at any time to review specific cases in which some particular Allied interest attaches.

(c) If United States Govt concurs in this compromise British propose that Neth and French Govts represented on London committee be informed. Suggest also that missions in territories where further mass deletions are envisaged before reduction to hard core be instructed to make their recommendations in accordance with compromise plan. Embassy comment: This appears to suggest speed up of deletion recommendations from Latin America.

Urtel 10198 Oct 1.54 PL Committee has been giving careful consideration to various plans re future of List, particularly that suggested to Brit in letter reported your 10197 Oct. 1.55 Committee was disturbed by Brit reply since it in effect rejected possible US counterproposal prior to receipt. In view of Brit position, we are willing to adhere to present formula, namely, reduction of List to hard core in Nov and withdrawal of Lists in May 1946. It is necessary however that Brit agree in return that procedure for determining hard core be acceptance of results of working parties. This means acceptance, on Western Hemisphere side, of names presently approved by working party for hard core plus such additions as may be made by working party in future. It appears to us that only in this way can implementation on a fair and expeditious basis be made of program for hard core reduction in Nov and elimination in May. Otherwise, reexamination of entire program would be necessary.

It should be pointed out that we will use same procedure re working party on Eastern Hemisphere. Dept and other agencies concerned with PL are accepting hard core for Eastern Hemisphere which has been worked out in London and we are neither making nor intend to make independent review. We feel Brit should do same with regard to Western Hemisphere. Gravity of situation in WH is demonstrated by chart being forwarded to you by air mail. Statistical analysis indicates sharp disagreement between Brit in London and recommendations of missions and working party.

Washington, October 20, 1945—noon.

9290. Dept has discussed with Brit Emb here on basis of tel received by them from MEWFO and on basis your 10752, Oct 15 ⁵⁷ question of PL reduction. Please bring following points to attention of Brit:

- (1) PL in Eastern Hemisphere was near peak on V-E Day. As of V-E Day List in Western Hemisphere had already been very substantially reduced. If 35% were calculated as of peak of List in both Hemispheres, the resultant figure would seem to us to be more justifiable.
- (2) While we sympathize with Brit desire to set definite figure at this time, we wish to point out that we suggested establishment of such a figure six months ago but were unable to reach agreement on this basis at that time. We are now faced with situation here in which composition of list must be calculated on basis of over-all policies of our Govts rather than on arbitrary conformity to particular figure. We cannot operate completely divorced from recommendations of missions in Latin America and from desire of those Latin American governments which have cooperated with us to have List maintained for some further period at reasonable figures in order to carry forward replacement and other programs which were initiated only after repeated requests from both of our Govts.
- (3) We wish to point out that in many countries consequences of deleting certain names from List will be the return of properties to their former owners and that to the extent that these returns are made our objectives both of economic security and of possible control of such properties for reparation purposes will be defeated. In this connection we point out that the Inter-American Economic and Social Council 58 will have its first meetings on Nov 15 and at that time it is planned to present an over-all economic security program and program for bringing the excess of German assets above the claims of the other American republics into reparation pot.
- (4) We should point out that the difference between the procedures of the Washington and London Working Parties as described in Brit letter does not to us seem to be real. It is assumed that US representative on London Working Party has concurred in many cases on basis of deference to Brit wishes and that flexibility has been maintained on approximately same basis here in working party negotiations. It is assumed Brit representative has in the main been willing to recommend to his Govt List as it is being compiled by Washington Working Party just as US representative in London has been willing to recommend in its entirety list compiled in London.

- (5) We feel considerations above mentioned make it desirable to proceed along course previously suggested by us, namely, adoption of findings of both Working Parties as final. However, in order to reach agreement on this matter we will be willing to recommend to PL Committee suggested proportion of 35% basing that figure on List on both sides at its peak. We feel this figure would enable us to give some, though far from complete weight, to recommendations of missions and to desires of certain of the other American republics for maintenance of List and to preserve our position pending meeting of Inter-American Economic and Social Council which has been mentioned above. Should it become necessary for unforeseen weighty political reasons to increase very substantially the number of names to be retained for a given country (for your info Dept has Argentina in mind) over that now contemplated for that country, the Committee would probably wish to be free to discuss with Brit a slight increase in the over-all 35%. It is anticipated Brit will not object to this reservation since the increase itself would be political question.
- (6) We feel Nov 12 sets impossible deadline. We shall have to make haste to effect reduction on Nov 29.⁵⁹

CONCERN OF THE UNITED STATES OVER ENEMY AT-TEMPTS TO SECRETE FUNDS OR OTHER ASSETS IN NEUTRAL COUNTRIES; IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SAFEHAVEN PROGRAM 1

800.515/1-1645

The Secretary of State to Diplomatic and Consular Officers Except Those in the American Republics

Washington, January 16, 1945.

Sirs: In a circular airgram of August 19, 1944,2 the Department transmitted Bretton Woods Resolution VI to all diplomatic officers. For the convenience of consular officers, a copy of the Resolution is enclosed herewith.3 Subsequently, in circular airgrams of August 23 and September 28,4 the Department requested the missions located in the neutral European capitals to investigate and report any evidences that enemy capital has been or is being invested in those countries.

This Government is attempting through all available means to obtain information concerning enemy investments and plans, and the activities of persons which could be employed as a means of preserving the enemy's economic, political and military potential abroad after the cessation of hostilities. There is evidence that the enemy, in tacit acknowledgment of defeat, is seeking refuge in neutral and friendly countries for persons and assets in order to remove them from anticipated Allied controls. The primary purpose of this instruction is to direct the Missions' attention to the importance of the Safehaven project as a phase of post-hostilities economic security, to suggest a long-range reporting task, and to have begin as soon as possible a flow of current information regarding suspect persons, entities and transactions. It is not possible to state at this time precisely the disposition which will be made of such assets or to describe in detail the controls which will be imposed upon undesirable persons, because these are matters requiring discussions among and concerted action by the United Nations, or by Allied control authorities. Safehaven information will, however, be of immediate value to this government in formulating plans for the post-war disposition of the enemy's foreign influence and of subsequent and greater value in expediting the execution of such plans. In furtherance of these objectives you are requested to transmit at an early date all presently available information requested hereinafter and to obtain through all possible sources additional data which might prove useful. It is important that each diplomatic and consular office be prepared to keep the Department currently informed on developments in this field for several years following the cessation of hostilities in order that any resurgence of enemy activity may be quelled in its inception.

For the purpose of defining what should be reported under this instruction, the term "enemies" should be understood to include persons or entities in any of the Axis countries, or countries which have been or are allied with the Axis, and nationals of any country who in your discretion could be considered a present or potential threat to the effective execution of Allied control plans. In carrying out this instruction the Mission's attention should be directed in the first instance to firms and individuals domiciled in or controlled from Germany and, with respect to those whose ownership resides elsewhere, to those whose activities fall within the criteria for Proclaimed List action. It is obvious that in this, as in other reporting matters, the Mission is the best judge initially of the relative importance of particular cases and of the priority to be assigned to them. Particular attention is directed to the discretion lodged with the Missions by the above definition of "enemies".

The project outlined below has two aspects, viz: the reporting of current information and analysis of existing information from the Safehaven viewpoint. For the former the Department is largely dependent on the field; the latter requires close cooperation between the Missions and the home agencies working on these matters. Reporting current Safehaven information should be given a very high priority, but the Missions are not expected to report again to Washington detailed information they have already made available. Rather, it is thought that the review of the Proclaimed List required by the Department's circular telegram of September 20 [21],6 will be a convenient occasion for the Missions to begin studying the Safehaven implications of materials already in their files. The Proclaimed List review will undoubtedly reveal cases of interest from the Safehaven viewpoint whose Proclaimed List aspects were not sufficiently important to have resulted in their having been reported previously. Additionally, if Safehaven is kept in mind when the Missions' listing files are reviewed, certain relationships may be found to exist that make it desirable to report now the Missions' post-listing information regarding some Proclaimed List nationals, information that has been recorded in the Missions' files but not reported heretofore for the reason that Proclaimed List reasons did not require such action. While the Missions are concerning themselves with reporting current information and with the longer-range task of reviewing their files, the data already in Washington will be collated. During that process, particular points will arise that the Missions will be requested to clarify; and it is contemplated that at a later date the Missions will be asked to check the accuracy of Washington analyses based on previously reported information. To the extent that Missions have been able before then to forward well-organized analyses based on the materials available to them, of course, the work will be speeded and the necessity for exchanges with the field reduced.

In addition to current reporting, which is almost entirely a Mission responsibility, the following aspects of the project will require close cooperation of the field and the home offices:

A. The preparation of a register of all known enemy assets.

The necessity of such a register for the information of those working on economic security for the post-war world is obvious. The register must, in order to meet peace-table eventualities, be as comprehensive and detailed as possible. The Missions should give first attention to reporting important enemy assets not covered by Proclaimed List or other regular economic reporting. If detailed reports regarding enemy assets have been submitted pursuant to instructions unrelated to economic reporting, the Missions should whenever possible refer to such other reports, in order that they may be found in Washington. In connection with the register, it should be kept in mind that, because of their obvious enemy ownership, some very important German interests in the country to which you are accredited may not have been reported in adequate detail for the register's purposes when the concern was listed. Assets whose enemy ownership is not a matter of common knowledge should, of course, be reported as soon as possible, leaving until later the filling in of details regarding well-known German holdings.

The Missions' reports for the register should show:

(a) A description of the assets including their nature, value, location, etc.

(b) The names of any persons who may be concealing the enemy ownership of assets (such persons should be considered for inclusion in the Proclaimed List) and

(c) The names of the true owners of the assets.

In compiling a register, although equal emphasis should be given to both, a distinction should be made wherever possible between looted assets and other enemy held assets. In determining such a distinction it may be helpful to consider separately those assets owned by enemies prior to 1939 and those acquired since 1939. It may also be helpful to give special attention to those assets which are known or believed to have been owned by persons in enemy occupied areas on or after the occupation of such areas. Looted assets are those owned by persons or firms in territory now or formerly enemy occupied and which since occupation have passed to enemy ownership. They include both properties which have been transferred from enemy occupied territory and properties which originally were located in non-enemy territory but title to which has passed to an enemy.

The types of assets concerned are various, but the following items are of particular interest:

(1) Bank balances and gold holdings and transfers thereof, whether between central banks or otherwise.

(2) Gems, gold privately owned, currency, art objects, stocks of merchandise, etc.

(3) Real estate, including leaseholds (e.g., industrial, commercial, mining, agricultural, and residential properties).

(4) Securities, including investments in securities of neutral and other governments, as well as industrials.

(5) Obligations owing to the enemy in the form of mortgages, bills of exchange, insurance policies, annuities, promissory notes or other evidences of indebtedness or book credits of any kind.

(6) Patents, trademarks and copy-rights and transfers, assignments, licenses, etc. in connection therewith.

(7) Beneficial interests under trusts or estates of deceased persons.

(8) Commercial, industrial, financial or other enterprises which in any way represent enemy assets, looted or otherwise. This item should be broadly interpreted to include old as well as new investments of every kind in which an enemy has an interest. In this connection it will be noted that new investments, both open and cloaked, may represent flight capital or looted assets. Such investments might include holding companies and minority interests in established domestic firms.

You should report in detail concerning any enemy-owned assets which come to your attention. Your investigations should concern not only assets presently located in your area but also those in transit, particularly where the assets emanate from a neutral European country. It is possible that you already have reported such information in connection with a related subject, such as a recommendation for Proclaimed List action, in which case a reference to the number and date of the communication will be sufficient.

B. Reporting on enemy individuals and their activities.

Simultaneously with the compilation of a register of enemy assets, it is desired that the Missions' function of reporting on individuals be oriented to include a survey of enemy persons and their activities. This will require continuous fact-finding on persons of enemy nationality for a period of years in order that the Department will be able to sense any attempts on the part of the Germans in any part of the world to maintain and improve their technical abilities with the view of fitting into a general German plan for a rearmaments program inside Germany at some rather distant future date. To that end you are requested to report on enemy persons in the country to which you are accredited, particularly with regard to the following:

1. Enemy technicians, financial experts or managerial help, particularly recent arrivals, employed by any enterprises irrespective of nationality in your area, or evidence that such persons are attempting to place themselves in positions where they could assist in the development of the industrial and military potential of your territory. This would include persons who are being or may be used to develop Nazi potential through the medium of partnership relations, employment connections or by serving in advisory capacities. You should also report on business enterprises with which these persons are associated and also those which have been so allied with the enemy's economic or military organization in the past that they may offer safe haven for enemy skills by providing opportunities for technical experience, research facilities, etc. It is predictable that the persons who are enemies within the terms of this instruction will attempt to disguise themselves for a considerable period such as by posing as common laborers and refugees.

2. Careful attention should be given to enemy scientists engaged in private, governmental or university research since it is to be expected that such persons will want to maintain and improve their skills and keep abreast of any developments in their respective fields by engaging in research work in all countries affording these opportunities.

The Missions should consider this as a continuing assignment. The order in which individuals are reported on will be governed principally by the Missions' estimates of the relative importance and timeliness of particular cases. Such factors as religious adherence, disayowal of inimical political philosophies, and employment in the country to which you are accredited for several years prior to the outbreak of the war, should not in themselves be considered as sufficient grounds for omitting such individuals from reports on this project. Your reports on enemy personnel should include descriptive data, such as details of training and relevant facts on previous employment. Although information on enemies recently employed in any of the above mentioned capacities is of primary interest, information on individuals employed in this type of activity subsequent to 1933 will be extremely useful. In compiling such information, the following are suggested as possible sources of information: (1) labor registrations; (2) immigration files; (3) police records; (4) university, college and technical school catalogs or faculty biographies; (5) biographical sketches in industrial and scientific publications; (6) Allied intelligence sources.

You should not hesitate to report unconfirmed rumors or attempts by the enemy to transfer his assets to places of safekeeping abroad in anticipation of impending defeat or of the movements of enemy persons seeking refuge for similar reasons. It is possible that the Department can obtain proof from other areas of the world or from enemy territory when Allied control over it is established.

The Proclaimed List should contain the most important persons and firms within your area who fall within the terms of this instruction and therefore it is suggested that the list be reviewed for the purposes stated herein in the initial stages of your work on the project. If you have not followed closely the activities of the listed persons and entities since they have been included in the list, you should now conduct investigations. It is possible that you have already begun the review required by the Department's circular telegram of September 21, 1944, 4 p. m. In cases where you believe the objective of controlling or thwarting enemy activities of the nature set forth in this instruction could be achieved through inclusion of the names of individuals or firms in the Proclaimed List, you should forward a recommendation to this effect with your report.

Your British colleagues have already received instructions covering this subject and have been requested to cooperate with you in this project. You should arrange to consult and work with them as closely as possible in order to attain the maximum of information. Our final objective is to obtain, of course, complete coverage of all sources available to both you and your British colleagues so that the information exchanged may be of maximum mutual benefit. The close liaison with the British presently maintained for listing, economic intelligence, blockade control and related matters should be extended to Safehaven. The Missions may, if they see fit, work out arrangements with the British for dividing the labor of preparing the reports hereinbefore requested. If such cooperation is obtained, it is desirable that both British and American Missions use the report form mentioned below. If the Missions see fit, transactional, operational and progress reports, as distinguished from the individualized status reports called for by this instruction, may be made through the minutes of joint committees in a manner similar to the economic intelligence reporting presently carried on at Lisbon and Madrid by Anglo-American economic intelligence committees. Even if joint reporting should not be feasible in your area, you should provide your British colleagues with copies of your routine Safehaven reports, and it is hoped that they will do likewise for you under their standing instructions to collaborate with you on Safehaven matters. will ensure that Washington, the British home agencies and the London Embassy will all have the same information from the field. The American Embassy at London will be the European Coordination center for Safehaven work; therefore, all communications regarding this project should be repeated or copied to it. Outgoing Departmental communications to you on Safehaven will be copied to London.

You should approach informally other Allied Missions, especially the French, Dutch and Belgian, and discuss with them Safehaven information which you or they may have collected. Your British colleagues have been similarly instructed; and it is suggested, therefore, that any approaches to your other Allied colleagues would be best made in conjunction with your British colleagues.

The chief of mission should designate a qualified Foreign Service or Auxiliary Foreign Service officer to coordinate the fact-finding and reporting on this project in the country to which he is accredited and should solicit the cooperation of all intelligence organizations of this government operating in the country. The coordinating officer should, of course, utilize the commercial, banking and governmental contacts afforded the office of the Commercial Attaché along with the contacts available at the various consular posts.

For the convenience of the reporting officer, the Department has devised a simplified form which may be utilized in forwarding any information, however brief, touching upon this project. A sample of the form is enclosed herewith. The report should be forwarded in hectograph and two copies sent to the American Embassy at London. The Department has no objection to the preparation of such reports under Embassy or Legation directive by the various consulates, provided that the supervising Embassy or Legation checks and approves them before they are forwarded to Washington and London, in order to make sure that all available information has been included. You should repeat to other missions all reports containing information which might conceivably be of interest to them, particularly cases requiring investigation or other action by them.

In order to expedite prompt distribution, all cables, airgrams, form replies, and despatches on this subject should contain the code word "SAFEHAVEN".

You should at all times have due regard for the delicate and highly confidential nature of this project.

This instruction is sent for action to all posts in Spain, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, Eire, Tangier, Turkey, Iran and Iraq. Although it is recognized that these instructions will not apply equally and in some cases not at all, the remaining posts should report in conformity with these instructions any pertinent information coming to their attention.

Very truly yours,

For the Secretary of State:

115. We have under active consideration approaches to all of the neutral European Governments concerning implementation of Bretton Woods Resolution VI (reference Department's circular telegram September 29 °s) and accomplishment of Safehaven objectives (reference Circular airgrams August 23, and September 28 °s). In latter connection you will soon receive by circular airmail instruction details concerning Safehaven project. Approaches to the neutrals will be tailored to fit the peculiarities of each country and will be made at a time when this Government is in a particularly favorable bargaining position. For example, during the recent trade negotiations the Swedish Government recognized and agreed to implement the resolution, and we are further encouraged in our hopes for ultimate success by the enactment of decrees by the Swedish Government aimed at preventing foreign exchange transactions between Sweden and Germany. We contemplate similar demands upon Spain and Switzerland 13 in connection with trade negotiations to be held in the near future with those countries.

We anticipate that our desiderata with regard to Turkey will soon be formulated and submitted for your consideration and recommendation. However, the liquidation of German banks and insurance companies (reurtel 2334, December 9,14 and related communications) present a problem of immediate urgency. It is important that Axis assets presently located in Turkey be preserved in a readily identifiable form as there is a danger that such assets will be obscured or lost track of by transfer of ownership. Although we fully approve of the action of the Turkish Government in ordering the transfer of the assets and policies of the German banks and insurance companies to local institutions, measures should be taken to assure that such assets are preserved for disposition in accordance with Allied policy to be adopted. Therefore, if the Turkish Government has not already done so, we suggest that you urge it to assign immediately to the German banks and insurance companies supervisors or liquidators to prevent dissipation, manipulation, or concealment of assets. It is also suggested that you urge the government to block the proceeds of liquidation and institute any other measures necessary to prevent the proceeds from being made available for free use of the Germans.

It is hoped that you will find it possible to obtain, through the Turkish Government or otherwise, more information than has been possible in the past regarding the use of important German accounts now being transferred to other institutions.

Please report promptly your actions on this instruction and the reaction of the Turkish Government.

have agreed to major points covered in Schmid's 18 discussion with Surrev 19 in Paris.

Throughout negotiations Swiss emphasized concepts of neutrality and sovereignty and have insisted that documents signed cannot mention Resolution VI of Bretton Woods which uses concept "enemy". However in addition to points covered in 1397 Swiss are making general statements in which Swiss Government commits itself "to prevent territory of Switzerland and that of principality of Liechtenstein from being used for disposal, concealment or reception of assets which may have been taken illegally or under duress during the war" and that "every facility will be given to dispossessed owners to claim in Switzerland and Liechtenstein their assets found there. Swiss Government will also "prevent the concealing, disposing of, or dissipation of assets of persons falling under the various blocking decrees issued by Swiss Government in the past or which it will issue in future" and agrees to consult with Government of each blocked country before relaxing or abolishing the control measures.

Points very difficult to obtain were:

- 1. Agreement to take a census of any assets other than German. Only after very strong pressure did Swiss agree to complete census of assets of all blocked countries as indicated in 1397.
- 2. Statement that before relaxing or eliminating any controls Swiss Government will consult with Government of block[ed] country.
 - 3. Agreement to cease purchasing gold from Germany.

Resistance to points (1) and (2) centered in Swiss Bankers Association which has unsuccessfully tried to keep Government from getting information on other than German assets. As indicated in 1397 it was only Saturday that agreement to these three points was

Points discussed with Surrey which have not been specifically agreed to are

(a) Census of patents, trade marks, or gold acquired since 1939. However Swiss have controls over importation, exportation, and all dealing in gold, et cetera, and will reexamine such controls from point of view of Safehaven objectives. Furthermore, we are assured that the compensation office which administers controls has intimate knowledge of all firms dealing with Germany since 1939 and in connection with census and blocking will examine ownership control and dealings with Germany of all Swiss firms, trusts, and holding companies since prior to the war.

(b) Census of foreign currencies held in Switzerland. All trading in such currency has, however, been prohibited and I feel that we can obtain census of dollar currency in connection with the relaxation of United States currency import controls.

^{*}S Presumably Orvis A. Schmidt, Director, Foreign Funds Control, Treasury Department; member of the Currie Mission. Walter S. Surrey, Attaché, U.S. Legation in Sweden.

(c) Census of bearer securities payable in foreign currencies. Swiss have agreed to establish controls over importation of assets which may have been looted and it is agreed by them that bearer securities fall within this category. They are also considering desirability of having Government implement controls of Swiss Bankers Association already in effect.

In view of action already taken by Swiss Government, its general commitments to cooperate on Safehaven program, I feel that firm basis has been established for effective Swiss program and that they will give favorable cooperation to any suggestions we make hereafter in connection therewith.

Text of Swiss commitment on Safehaven, which is being given in a letter separate from that relating to trade items, will be cabled as soon as signed.20 In the interim, suggest that the Swedes be pressed for as effective a program in Sweden as possible.

2099. Safehaven objectives set forth in Department's 1730, March 7,21 are considered of primary importance justifying the refusal to enter into trade agreements with Sweden should it fail to adhere to and implement the Safehaven objectives. Moreover, it will be a matter of necessary self-protection for this Government to review its Treasury general license and blocking policies with respect to any neutral country which fails to execute the Safehaven objectives. Accordingly, Boheman's 22 request for signing of interim agreement with the inclusion of Safehaven safeguard clause, London's 2636, March 14, 252 to Stockholm, and 2673, March 15, 255 to Stockholm, 23 can not be accepted. Pending conclusion of negotiations of Safehaven questions, Department has no objection to tentative unsigned agreement being reached on other outstanding questions even though over-all agreement can not be signed. During period between agreement on such questions and negotiations on Safehaven questions there is no objection to considering agreements reached on other questions as being temporarily operative subject to review should the Swedes fail to satisfy us on Safehaven. It should be made clear to Boheman that within the next few weeks we will enter into negotiations on Safehaven questions, presumably in Stockholm, and that signing of overall interim agreement and post-hostilities supply agreement will be conditioned on satisfactory conclusion of Safehaven aspects of negotiations.

It is believed undesirable to initiate discussions on Safehaven questions with the Swedes before a position vis-à-vis the British has been fully established. In discussing Safehaven objectives with the British it should be pointed out that while there are discrepancies between Swiss agreement and Swedish objectives, it is the Department's intention to use the Swedish objectives as basis of negotiations with other neutral countries. It is hoped that subsequently we can expand the Swiss agreement to cover full objectives set forth in Department's 1730, March 7th. It must be realized that only by obtaining full agreement to those objectives will the Safehaven program be successful. While it is realized that control of Germany will be of substantial assistance in accomplishing our Safehaven objectives, it is believed important that the neutral countries at this time initiate a full program which can be supplemented by appropriate action in Germany at such time as we occupy Germany. However, even subsequent to the occupation of Germany, the success or failure of our SAFEHAVEN program will be dependent in large part on the extent of cooperation which we receive from the neutral countries.

It is requested that you continue discussions with the British on Safehaven objectives reporting British reaction to Washington. It is contemplated that Walter Surrey will return to London and Stockholm in approximately one week in order to participate in Safehaven discussions.

We, on the other hand, feel that it is highly desirable that the United Kingdom together with this Government take a strong and uniform position toward Spain. After due consideration, we have again concluded that wholehearted adoption and implementation of the Safehaven program must be a condition of any agreement or shipment of any supplies. It is our hope that the British will agree with this position and take concurrent action, thus preserving the unity of policy represented by Bretton Woods Resolution VI and the other pertinent policy declarations. Our view is that unless this stand is taken with respect to Spain now, the prospect of any salutary action on the part of Spain in the future would be considerably lessened. As an example of possible further action by this Government, Treasury is prepared to revoke the Spanish General License.

Evidence of weakness now toward Spain might seriously prejudice our position with the other neutrals. Obviously, strong action must be taken before hostilities cease and while Spain is dependent upon the United Nations for essential commodities. The war is at such a stage that we have little need to treat Spain better than other neutrals in order to obtain future supplies or services, and what little there is to gain by such treatment can not in any sense be compared to the stakes in balance in an effective control of German external assets in Spain.

It is understood that MEW ²⁶ has reiterated to British Embassy Washington its desire to make a joint diplomatic presentation of Safehaven note to Spain immediately. Department's telegram 2016, March 15,²⁷ indicates that this procedure is also desire of this Government. It is hoped therefore, that joint instructions can be sent to Madrid in accordance with Department's 2016, March 15, as soon as possible. It is felt, however, that technical advice will not be needed in Madrid until our supply purchase negotiations get underway and until Spanish have an opportunity to study our joint note. Our purposes would therefore be better served by having Bliss ²⁸ come to Washington as soon as possible.

You are instructed urgently to bring these matters to the attention of the British.

> London, March 22, 1945—1 p. m. [Received 11:28 p. m.]

2950. From Hawkins 30 and Stone, 31 SAFEHAVEN. Reference Department's 1730, March 7.32 In view of fact that following communication from Foot 33 raises important political and economic policy questions, this telegram should be called to the particular attention of Clayton 34 and Dunn. 35 Because of their recent experience in Swiss negotiations, we suggest that Currie, Orvis Schmidt and Ordop $\lceil Gordon ? \rceil$ 36 be consulted.

Following is text of Foot's letter to Stone dated March 21:

- 1. We have now considered together with the other interested departments the proposals regarding Safehaven in Sweden put forward by the State Department in their telegram of March 7. Our views are as follows:
- 2. As we have already discovered in Switzerland proposals of this kind affecting the banking practices of neutral countries are apt to encounter very stubborn resistance. As a matter of tactics, it is generally advisable to proceed step by step. We think, therefore, that the best course would be to follow the Swiss precedent and press for a complete census of all Axis assets or if the Swedes prefer it of all foreign assets together with blocking measures of their equivalent. The Swedes have already gone a long way in this direction and I do not think we should have great difficulty in persuading them to go as far as the Swiss. But a demand for a full disclosure at this moment would, we think, lead to a prolonged wrangle and would be of no particular advantage since even if our demand were granted, we could make no use of the information at the present time. Our view is that we should seek an agreement on the Swiss model with all the neutral countries. Thereafter, when the Germans have unconditionally surrendered and the United Nations will presumably be in a position to acquire if they so wish legal title to German assets abroad, we shall be in a strong position to require the governments concerned to reveal to us the information they have accumulated.
- 3. So much for our general view. As regards the detailed proposals our comments are as follows:
- 3.(a) We, of course, agree with the aim of paragraph 6. In the second sentence, 37 however, we should prefer to say that the principles

 Dingle Foot, Parliamentary Secretary, British Ministry of Economic Warfare.

William L. Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.
 James C. Dunn, Assistant Secretary of State for European, Far Eastern, Near Eastern, and African Affairs.

³⁶ Presumably David L. Gordon of the Foreign Economic Administration.

³⁷ The context was concerned with control of transactions involving Swedish nationals and those of Axis or Axis-dominated countries; the sentence under reference read: "The licensing of transactions shall be in accordance with such arrangements as are provided for by the Government of Sweden in agreement with the United States and the United Kingdom." (800.515/3-745) on which transactions shall be licensed will be a matter for agreement between the governments concerned. This would mean the same thing but would probably be much more palatable.

3.(b) We are not at all happy about the proposal in paragraph 5 that the Swedes should provide our governments with full information concerning the movements since 1939 of Axis nationals in Sweden and of persons who come from countries now or previously controlled by the Axis. In the first place, the volume of such information would be enormous and much of it would be of little value. Secondly, we hardly feel that this is an appropriate subject to be dealt with in economic negotiations. Thirdly and most important of all, it occurs to us that "countries previously controlled by the Axis" would include the Baltic States and Finland. If we were to obtain information regarding the refugees from these countries, we could hardly refuse to make it available to the Russians. This might well lead to a demand on the part of the Russian Government that these persons should be handed over. I am sure that you as well as we would prefer that such a situation should not arise.

3.(c) We agree as I have said regarding the proposed census of all enemy assets. We doubt, however, whether we should endeavor to enumerate such assets in our opening proposals. It would, we think, be sufficient to open with a request that the Swedes should adopt much the same formula as the Swiss and then to elaborate the categories of assets during the discussions.

3.(d) As regards the proposed arrangements under paragraph 2 for licensing in accordance with arrangements provided for between the governments, please see the alternative formula I have suggested above.

3.(e) As regards the offer to provide the Government of Sweden with the services of technical personnel, we doubt whether this is necessary or whether it would be wise to suggest it. The Swedes would almost certainly reply that they are fully capable of enforcing their own laws without assistance from foreign governments.

3.(f) Paragraph 9 seems to us to present certain difficulties. We could hardly claim the United States or the United Kingdom have an exclusive interest in the adoption and the full execution of this agreement without bringing in the other United Nations. Moreover, we do not see much advantage in this provision. If the United Nations become the possessors of German assets abroad, we shall, of course, have an interest in their disposition. The second part of the paragraph [which?] deals with the submission of information to our governments by Swedish nationals is, we think, open to strong objection. The Swedes have always shown themselves extremely sensitive regarding communications of this kind. They have made it an offense for Swedish firms to supply our representatives engaged in Black List work with information as to their trades. I do not think there can be the slightest doubt that they would reject this demand and that by insisting on it we should jeopardize the whole of the negotiations.

3.(g) As regards the adoption of Bretton Woods Resolution No. 6 (see paragraph 1) we agree that this is one of the requests which should be put forward. But we feel that as in the case of Switzerland it does not greatly matter whether the Swedes accede to the actual text of the resolution provided that we obtain the substance.

²⁵ i.e., British Statutory List, the equivalent of the American Proclaimed List.

4. It seems to us that the best course would be to follow much the same procedure as in the recent Swiss negotiations. In other words we should appoint delegations with general instructions who would be given authority to make the best possible agreement. This arrangement in our view worked admirably in Bern and we see no reason why it should not obtain equally satisfactory results in Stockholm. It would of course also be necessary to empower the delegations to reach agreement on basic rations, post hostilities allocations and minor amendments to the draft tripartite agreement.

5. If your Government agrees we shall be prepared to fall in with their suggestion and send a delegation to Stockholm in the near future.

6. It will, of course, be necessary to consider the position of the Russians and the French. We think the best course would be to inform the French and Soviet Governments of our intended negotiations and leave it to them to suggest or refrain from suggesting that French and Soviet representatives should take part in the discussions. (End of Foot's letter).

British informed us after receipt of their answer that it applies not only to Sweden but to all the neutral countries (including Spain). (Foot's letter covers not only Department's 1730 39 but also Department's 2099, March 17, 2016, March 15 40 and 2111, March 19.)

Embassy believes that British answer discloses following two main divergences between Department's 1730 and British views: (a) British feel that request for disclosure of census and freezing information should come after we occupy Germany. (b) British do not believe that we should ask for information on persons and in any event such request should not be made at this time. Because of overriding desirability of obtaining a joint United States-United Kingdom Safehaven program these differences should be resolved if at all possible. Accordingly Embassy makes following observations:

- (a) British view against requesting full disclosure of freezing and census information is based on timing and tactics and does not appear to constitute any major difference in principle. Accordingly our authorities might wish to consider: Firstly, obtaining British agreement that both Governments will jointly support a request for such information at an appropriate later date. Secondly, in order to prevent any subsequent neutral argument based on estoppel, neutrals should be informed verbally during negotiations that we shall request full information at a later date.
- (b) If our authorities feel that notwithstanding paragraph 3(b) of British answer Sweden should be requested for information on Axis and other related persons such request could be deferred to a later date. Perhaps Department will wish to instruct Embassy to seek British agreement to ask Sweden to make information about specific individuals available at our request. If British object to this demand being associated with economic discussions the approach on this one point could be separate but simultaneous and made jointly by American and British Ministers. Embassy understands that Swedish control of all aliens in Sweden is so thorough that Swedish Government undoubtedly has requisite information available at any time.

Embassy believes that British answer does not arise from any lack of appreciation of importance or urgency regarding Safehaven and that divergences are mainly the result of genuine differences in tactics and timing. British strongly believe that we shall gain more in negotiations with neutrals by not asking too much and they feel that we should not get into the position of giving way on substantial points thus jeopardizing obtaining such objectives at a later date. Moreover, British repeatedly emphasized in our conversations with them that ultimately we can accomplish far more if we enlist neutral cooperation at the outset rather than force neutrals into unwilling compliance with our demands.

800.515/4-445: Telegram

Washington, April 4, 1945—5 p. m.

2607. Discussions have been held between the Department and the British Embassy in Washington with respect to the Safehaven program and to the method of bringing our Safehaven objectives to the attention of the neutrals, particularly Sweden and Spain. We have considered, in these discussions, the proposed statement of Safehaven objectives which the Department transmitted to you with respect to the Swedish negotiations,⁴¹ the Department's proposals for incorporation of these objectives in a note to be presented at a high diplomatic level in Spain, and the British suggestion that an immediate approach along briefer and more general lines be presented to the Spanish Government at a high diplomatic level. The following are the points which seem relevant here after full discussion between the Department and the British Embassy. This telegram has been jointly drafted.

(1) It would appear that there has been some misapprehension as to the attitude taken by the United States Government on presentation of the Safehaven objectives. The Department's position is that a full and complete statement of all of our Safehaven objectives, both those which we might expect to obtain in the immediate future and those on which we might expect some resistance, should be presented at the outset. In the case of Sweden, this seems desirable because of the fact that Boheman has requested such a statement. In the case of Spain, this seems to the Department to be desirable because it will give to the Spaniards at once a full statement of those objectives which we consider important with respect to Safehaven, and will eliminate as far as possible presentation of a series of new requests from time to time.

- (2) On the other hand, the Department is convinced that those persons who may conduct the negotiations or who may discuss such diplomatic representations as may be made, should be given full discretion with respect to the negotiations which they may carry on with the interested neutral governments. The Department is of the opinion that the persons negotiating on the technical level, as seems likely in the case of Sweden, or in the first instance on a high diplomatic level followed by negotiations on a technical level, as is suggested in the case of Spain, should have full discretion to gauge the measure of resistance which may be encountered with respect to certain of our objectives and to withdraw, for the present, those of these objectives which they may consider would stand in the way of achieving an immediate desirable result on the balance of the objectives. In other words, the Department's position is that although a full statement of our objectives should be transmitted to the neutrals, our negotiators should have ample authority, as was the case in the Swiss negotiations. to come away with the best bargain which may appear to them to be possible.
- (3) In further amplification of this position, it may be stated that we would consider as the hard core of our Safehaven objectives, beyond which our negotiators should not retreat, the following points:
 - (a) Subscription in principle to Bretton Woods Resolution VI.
- (b) An immediate freeze of all Axis assets or assets held for the account of the Axis or its nationals, within the particular territory concerned.
- (c) Agreement to freeze satellite country assets, should the US and UK so request.
- (d) Immediate inception of a census of all assets designated under sub-paragraphs (b) and (c) above, when and if applicable. We assume that such a census would be the inevitable consequence of any adequate freeze.
- (4) It is believed that if this position is adequately explained, it will be apparent that the differences between our position and that which has been expressed by the British will not seem great. The Department is prepared to introduce what seems to it sufficient flexibility into our tactics by giving discretion to the negotiators but prefers to have a full statement as indicated above presented at the outset of any negotiations either on the diplomatic or technical levels.

- (5) We are prepared as soon as the British are ready to authorize an immediate diplomatic approach jointly by the British and United States Ambassadors in Madrid. We would suggest that in this approach the Ambassadors should, as indicated above, present our full desiderata but, at the same time, make it clear that we expect immediate implementation of the points made in paragraph (3).
- (6) On the question of Foot's letter,⁴² and the actual statement on the Safehaven objectives which should be presented, discussions are going forward and another telegram to follow shortly will be sent.⁴³ With respect to the USSR and France, see our separate cable.⁴⁴
- (7) We feel that those making the presentation may bear in mind and accordingly modify the presentation to reflect the more immediate urgency of certain of our objectives (such as the freeze). This should not, however, be done in such a way as to detract from the importance which we attach to all of our stated objectives.

Washington, April 4, 1945—5 p. m.

- 2608. Reurtel 2950, March 22, 269 to Stockholm. Department and other interested agencies have considered carefully various questions raised in Foot's letter to Stone. As in the case of Department's immediately preceding telegram, the following arises from full discussions with British Embassy here:
- 2. It is believed that if we could get full disclosure at this time, considerable advantages would result which would not arise from obtaining information subsequent to Germany's unconditional surrender. Information obtained from Sweden could be used as check on information subsequently obtained from Germany, it would provide leads for investigations in Germany, and would considerably expedite our work in Germany. Accordingly, it is believed advisable [&]quot;Telegram 2609. April 4. not printed; it conveyed the Department's position, to be discussed with the British, that the Soviet Mission in Sweden and the French Missions in both Sweden and Spain should be informed of any impending approaches to these neutral governments but that it should be made clear that there would be no postponement pending the comments of the French and Soviet Missions (800.515/4-445).

to include in our statement of SAFEHAVEN objectives at this time request for information obtained from complete Swedish census, leaving open, if necessary, possibility of compromise on basis of agreement on full disclosure at a future determined date along the lines of our preceding telegram.

- 3(a). Suggested change satisfactory.
- 3(b). Paragraph 5, Department's 1730, March 7, 428 to Stockholm, 46 was intended to cover principally persons of Axis nationality. Concerning those who possess nationality of Axis-occupied or previously occupied countries and Finland, it would be satisfactory to have agreement whereby Swedes submit information only on those who may be classified as Quislings. This is the intention and meaning of sentence 3, paragraph 5.47 Under this construction, volume of information which Sweden would have to submit would not approach unmanageable volume. Since information on persons of Axis nationality properly forms a part of Safehaven objectives, there is no reason why it should not be included in interim and post-hostilities negotiations. It is not our intention to make this presentation so general as to include the whole problem of asylum but rather to emphasize or call attention to the fact that the problem of asylum has a Safehaven aspect which can not be ignored.

We agree, therefore, that provided considerations in previous sentence are made clear to the neutral authorities, our negotiators may have discretion as to the way in which this aspect of the problem is presented.⁴⁸

- 3(c). Enumeration of assets in pending proposals is designed to assist Swedes in understanding our intentions and extent of coverage of proposed agreement. It is in line with numerous requests of Boheman for clear statement of what it is we want. Should Sweden agree to give equally broad meaning to term assets but, at the same time, to desire, for political or other reasons, not to have definition set forth in agreement, such compromise would be satisfactory to us.
 - 3(d). Proposed change satisfactory.
- 3(e). Offer to provide Swedes services of technical personnel was designed to eliminate argument by Swedes that their lack of technical ⁴⁶ See footnote 21, p. 862.

⁴⁷ This sentence read as follows: "The Government of Sweden also agrees to submit similar information [i.e., relating to residence, occupation, travel, etc.] on all persons who have come to Sweden since January 1, 1939 from countries which were previously satellites of the Axis countries or from countries now or previously controlled by the Axis countries where the evidence reveals that such persons are or may have been acting for or in the interest of the Axis or Axis controlled countries." (800.515/3-745)

⁴⁸ The sentence under reference indicated that such information was sought

The sentence under reference indicated that such information was sought as would be relevant to ascertaining whether the persons under investigation ". . . are or may be acting for or in the interests of Axis or Axis controlled countries or who in the period following the occupation of such countries by the United Nations may work against the interests of the occupying authorities." (800.515/3-745) personnel prevents execution of program. We are willing to eliminate this proposal from agreement provided we are free to make it should Swedes raise lack of personnel argument.

- 3(f). We agree to the elimination of this paragraph (paragraph 9, Department's 1730, March 7) on the understanding that our requirements, so far as the obtaining of information is concerned, are adequately covered by paragraph 4, Department's 1730, which deals with the submission of information arising from census.
- 3(q). It is believed that we should press for adherence to Bretton Woods Resolution VI and we suggest deletion of the words "adopt and" from paragraph 1 of Department's 1730. In this connection, see section 3(a) of our preceding telegram.49
- 4 and 5. Department believes that initial negotiations on SAFE-HAVEN should be tied up with negotiations of interim agreement and that these negotiations should be handled by Legations in Stockholm. It is believed that negotiations should begin with presentation of our specific Safehaven objectives, possibly on informal basis with Boheman and others. In previous negotiations with Swedes, it has been found that use of high-powered missions from Washington and London with attendant publicity has made negotiations more difficult. Accordingly, it is believed advisable for American-British representatives in Stockholm to conduct initial Safehaven negotiations as part of interim agreement. Should development of negotiations reveal that missions from Washington and London would be advantageous, then such missions could be sent. In this way we will be in a position to take advantage of suggestions and services of our friends in the Swedish Foreign Office and other agencies which cannot be accomplished when negotiations become matter of public knowledge and affords opportunity to those Swedish officials not sympathetic to our purposes to offer serious opposition.

MAS telegrams 574 and 616, respectively.

Telegram 2609 not printed, but see footnote 44, p. 870.

(a) Foot agreed with Department's 2607 and accordingly British are sending paraphrases of Department's 2607 and 2608 to Stockholm with instructions to their Minister to concert with his United States colleague in approach to Swedish Government along lines of these two telegrams.

(b) Foot was in general agreement with Department's 2608 and his only comment was a comparatively minor one on paragraph 3(b)thereof. He felt that second sentence of paragraph 5 of Department's 1730, March 7 52 was too broad and that instead of asking for information regarding all movements since 1939, it might be preferable to confine our request to limited categories of information.

- (c) Foot thought that a more effective approach to Russians and French than that suggested in Department's 2609 would be to have our Missions in Moscow and Paris deliver communications, in general terms, to the Russian and French Governments. Such general communications should indicate our Safehaven aims and general approach to Swedes and leave it to the Russian and French Governments to comment or request participation. If French desired to participate in Stockholm negotiations, British would feel compelled to accept French participation. British urgently desire American views on this point.
- 2. Embassy believes that British reactions to Department's 2607 and 2608 mark most satisfactory progress towards American views and that suggested difference in tactics in approaching Russians and French should not delay our joint approach to Swedes along lines of Department's 2607 and 2608.
- 3. Foregoing is limited to approach to Swedes. Embassy will discuss with British Safehaven approach to Spaniards and if any substantial divergences are disclosed, Foot can discuss them in Washington where he should arrive on April 16.53

the territories of Europe which were previously and some of which are still under their domination, would lead to attempts to consummate such transactions in other countries. Moreover, the United Nations have perceived cause for anxiety in the possible flight of Axis capital for the use of war criminals and other dangerous persons and other Axis manipulation of assets located abroad to the detriment of both the peace and security of the post-war world and the welfare of the country in which such assets were located.

The Government of the United States has indicated its strong interest in these matters by its subscription to the United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943,⁵⁵ to the Gold Declaration which was issued on February 22, 1944,⁵⁶ and by its endorsement of Resolution VI adopted at the United Nations Financial and Monetary Conference, held at Bretton Woods, New Hampshire. The Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace ⁵⁷ has endorsed all of these measures. The Governments of Switzerland and Sweden have also undertaken certain measures to attain the objectives discussed in this note. In these steps, the United Nations have participated and cooperated, and the interest of various of the United Nations in these measures has been directly expressed to the Government of Spain.

On October 2, 1944, the American Ambassador had the honor to present to the Minister of Foreign Affairs a note which enclosed a copy of Resolution VI of the United Nations Financial and Monetary Conference, and which requested the Government of Spain to take steps to implement that Resolution. On November 6, 1944, there was addressed to the Minister of Foreign Affairs the Embassy's note no. 3334 with respect to the statement of gold policy, in which assurances were requested that Spain would make no future purchases of gold in which there appeared any direct or indirect enemy interest. Until now, no comment has been received with respect to either of these communications.

The attention of the Government of Spain is again called to Bretton Woods Resolution VI and the statement of gold policy contained in the Embassy's note dated November 6, 1944. Attention is also called to the United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943 wherein the signatory nations, including the Government of the United States, expressed their intention to regard as invalid all transfers of looted property.

It is earnestly desired that the Government of Spain join other peace-loving nations in subscribing to the principles of, and in the full and effective implementation of the terms and spirit of these declarations. In order to state specifically the present implications of such implementation the following list of objectives is presented:

1. That the Government of Spain announce publicly its intention to adhere fully to the terms and spirit of Bretton Woods Resolution VI, the Gold Declaration of February 22, 1944, and the principles enumerated in the United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943.

2. That the Government of Spain freeze immediately and simultaneously with the public announcement referred to in Paragraph 1, all assets referred to in Items 3 and 4 below, and other such assets as may be subsequently uncovered by the Government of Spain or brought to its attention by the United States. Further in this connection that the Spanish Government investigate all transactions involving the transfer of assets to Spain or a change in title in assets located in, or managed from, Spain which have occurred since January 1, 1939 between Spanish subjects or persons subject to Spanish law or persons acting on behalf of such persons on the one hand, and persons or subjects of Axis or Axis-controlled countries, or persons, wherever situated, acting on their behalf, on the other hand, if such transactions involve sums exceeding ten thousand dollars or assets valued at ten thousand dollars or more, regardless of the amount of money involved in such That the Spanish Government immobilize assets so transferred where there is evidence that persons or subjects of Axis or Axis-controlled countries or persons acting in their behalf have an interest in such assets, direct or indirect, or where there is an obligation, expressed or implied, owing to such persons or subjects arising out of such transactions. That the Spanish Government make available full details to the US and UK Governments concerning any such transactions where there is evidence of such interest in the assets so transferred or where the assets were transferred without the payment of adequate and appropriate compensation. The principles for the licensing of transactions involving the assignment, transfer, withdrawal, payment, hypothecation, or other disposition of such assets shall be in accordance with such arrangements as are provided for by the Government of Spain, in agreement with the United States. Any such arrangements shall provide for submission to the United States of full information on all licenses so issued.

3. That in order to execute fully its controls, the Government of Spain immobilize and facilitate the return of any looted assets, as described in Bretton Woods Resolution VI, regardless of present ownership of such assets.

4. That the Government of Spain conduct a detailed census of all assets, regardless of form, located in Spain or held abroad through persons or firms in Spain which, or any interest in which, direct or indirect, is owned or controlled or held by, in behalf of, or in the name of, persons and firms who are nationals or residents or domiciled in Axis countries or in countries at any time controlled by Axis countries. The term assets, as used in this connection, shall include, but not by way of limitation, any real property or interest therein, enterprise (commercial, industrial, financial or scientific), security, or interest therein, patents, trademarks, corporate and contractual rights, including management contracts, patent licenses and arrangements, insurance policies and reinsurance contracts, bank accounts and deposits, including trusteeship accounts, safe deposit boxes, vaults, checks, drafts, credits, gold and other precious metals, options and any other types of arrangements or undertakings, written or unwritten. Further in this connection, that the Government of Spain provide that the penalty for failure to report fully or correctly will be sufficiently severe as to compel the submission of full and correct information even when large assets are involved, and that the Government of Spain make available to the United States the information obtained from the census.

- 5. That the Government of Spain provide the United States with full information concerning all persons in Spain who possess the nationality of Axis countries and all such persons who have entered into Spain since January 1, 1939 and who are presently in Spain, regardless of present nationality. Such information shall include details as to their residence, occupation, travels from Spain made since initial entry into Spain, and such other information as will be relevant to ascertaining whether such persons are or may be acting for or in the interests of Axis or Axis-controlled countries or who, in the period following the occupation of such countries by the United Nations, may work against the interests of the occupying authorities. Also, that the Government of Spain submit similar information on all persons who have come to Spain since January 1, 1939 from countries which were previously satellites of the Axis countries or from countries now or previously controlled by the Axis countries where the evidence reveals that such persons are or may have been acting for or in the interest of the Axis or Axis-controlled countries. It is further recommended that the Government of Spain submit similar information to the United States on all persons who, during the period of hostilities, may enter Spain from Axis or Axis-controlled countries and such other persons as may be referred to the Government of Spain by the United States.
- 6. That the Government of Spain establish effective controls with respect to any transactions with the Axis or Axis-controlled countries, or the nationals of such countries in order to prevent entry into Spain from such countries of any assets or the removal from Spain to such countries of any assets. The principles on which transactions shall be licensed will be in accordance with such arrangements as are provided for by the Government of Spain in agreement with the United States. Any such arrangement shall provide for the submission to the United States of full information on all such transactions which are authorized.

The Ambassador in Spain (Armour) to the Secretary of State

Madrid, May 1, 1945—7 p. m. [Received May 2—6:30 p. m.]

- 912. I presented to the Foreign Minister ⁶⁰ at noon today a note embodying the contents of Department's telegram No. 668, April 22, 6 p. m. ⁶¹ The following changes were made in its text:
- (a) There was inserted at the beginning of the penultimate sentence of article two, section 2 612 "That all future transactions in such assets be prohibited except under license by the Spanish Government and the principle for licensing of transactions, etc."
- (b) The date January 1, 1939 was changed to September 1, 1939 wherever it occurred in the original text. It will be recalled that the Spanish Civil War did not terminate until April 1, 1939 and for a period of several months thereafter German and Italian soldiers, officers, etc., were being repatriated. Little new capital flowed into Spain during the months immediately succeeding the termination of the Civil War. As a change in date was necessary, in agreement with the British Chargé, it was determined that the date of the outbreak of European hostilities would be reasonable.

I stressed to Lequerica the great importance attached by our Government to this matter, making it clear that I felt Spain's economic relationship not only with the United States, but with all of the United Nations, would be influenced by the extent to which the Spanish Government was disposed to cooperate in carrying into execution the measures proposed.

While stressing the importance we attached to all the points set forth in the note, I said that immediate action on points 1 and 2 (Bretton Woods Resolution VI and freezing of German assets) was essential, as well as agreement to set up forthwith machinery to undertake census of all assets (point 4), described in points 1 and 2.

⁶¹ See last paragraph of telegram 3158 to London, supra.

⁶¹a Reference is to paragraph numbered 2 in the telegram printed supra.

I mentioned to the Minister the prompt and effective action taken by the Swiss Government in relation to freezing, adding that proposals along lines similar to those made to Spain were being made to the Governments of Sweden and Portugal.

The Minister, who had an opportunity only to glance over the long note, said that he was impressed by the importance of the matters dealt with in it and assured me that it would be given the immediate attention of his Government. It was agreed that he would call me in again if possible before the end of the week to give me a preliminary reply for communication to my Government.

The British Chargé d'Affaires followed me in to the Minister handing him a note almost identical in phraseology with our own. Mr. Bowker's oral remarks to the Minister followed substantially the same lines as mine.

Last evening my British colleague and I called in the French representative and handed him in advance copies of our respective notes. Mr. Truelle told us that, in view of the fact that he had already made representations to the Spanish Government on certain of the points affecting French interests set forth in our notes, he did not feel any action on his part was called for at this time and I judge that unless he receives specific instructions from his Government he will take no further action for the present.

1732. 1. Purchase of 3,000 kilos gold from Reichsbank; your 1983, April 5, 2194, April 14, and despatch no. 11432 April 13,62 has been discussed with Lauchlin Currie. Currie recalls having been advised by Swiss during negotiations that they would not purchase gold from German controlled sources except for expenditures set out in categories (a), (b) and (c) of paragraph III of Professor Rappard's letter of March 8 63 and that even such gold would not be purchased until all German official resources in Switzerland had been exhausted. We, therefore, regard Swiss purchase of this gold for utilization against categories (b) and (c), while funds were available to German Legation for these expenditures, as obvious subterfuge on the part of the Swiss and clear cut contravention of spirit of undertaking given by the Swiss.

- 2. We fail to understand Kohli's 64 reference, reported in despatch no. 11432, April 13 to statement of SNB 65 official that gold was being checked against Reichsbank's declaration as to origin, etc. but "would give rise to no question as to being 'looted' gold". Kohli's statement appears to ignore Allied gold policy to regard all gold emanating from German controlled sources as loot, irrespective of whether pedigree establishes pre-war German ownership. Swiss were advised of this policy at the time of presentation of Legation's Aide-Mémoire dated August 24, 1944 66 concerning the Gold Declaration of February 22, 1944, and it was further stressed by Allied delegation in course of discussions with Swiss. Legation will recall statement made that Germany had long since exhausted all its pre-war gold resources and any possible accumulation from current production, and that, by necessity, any gold offered by Germany must be presumed to be looted. Swiss no doubt realize that widespread looting of gold by Germany is one of the principal factors bearing on Allied decision to prevent, in so far as possible, realization by Germany on its gold holdings.
- 3. Since conversion of gold in question into Swiss francs appears to have been accomplished and proceeds blocked in separate account with SNB, there appears to be nothing to be gained by asking Swiss to maintain complete immobilization of this account until all German official assets are applied against all three categories of agreed upon expenditures.
- 4. Please discuss substance of foregoing with your British and French colleagues with view to lodging immediately tri-lateral protest to Swiss authorities strongly calling attention to this violation of the spirit of the undertaking given by the Swiss.
- 5. Please keep Department fully informed of your discussions with the British and French and report further developments.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Portugal (Baruch) oral statement by the Ambassador to the Spanish Foreign Minister that proposals along similar lines are being made in Portugal, and (2) the reported action of the Portuguese Government in severing diplomatic relations and freezing German assets.

This will confirm the opinion stated in London's 99, April 30 to you (repeated to Department as 4379) ⁶⁷ that your note should follow the instructions to Madrid repeated to you in Department's 635, April 22. ⁶⁸ You are authorized to make such amendments in language as you may deem desirable, particularly those necessary to take cognizance of any action which the Portuguese Government may thus far have taken in furtherance of our objectives.

We are informed by British Embassy here that British Embassy at Lisbon has suggested a prohibition on all dealings in foreign currencies. We agree with this proposal and request that it be included in your note. In our opinion it is not, however, of sufficient importance to be singled out as a "hard core" objective by the Ambassador in presenting the note to the Foreign Minister.

We leave to your discretion the action to be taken on the subject of Portuguese-German contracts completed in contemplation of defeat. We would have no objection to your including in your formal note a suggestion for declaring such contracts null and void (reurdes 1707, April 10 69), or would we object your following the procedure suggested in your 920, April 27, which you repeated to London as 210.69

The foregoing instructions should be accepted as a reply to your telegram 952, May 2 69 (repeated to London as 218) which we assume was sent prior to your receiving London's 99, April 30 (repeated to Department as 4379).

In answer to the specific questions asked in first paragraph of your 952, we point out that proposed note quoted in your despatch 1707 did not include fully the four "hard core" objectives since it omitted the freeze of satellite countries, subscription in principle to Resolution VI, and limited the suggestion for blocking and a census to German (as opposed to Axis) persons and interests.⁷⁰

STOCKHOLM, May 9, 1945. [Received May 30.]

Sir: I have the honor to refer to the Department's telegram 802, May 3, 1945, 6 PM,⁷¹ to the Legation, repeated to London, number unknown, approving certain changes in the text of the provision to be incorporated in the so-called "Tripartite Interim Trade Agreement" and the "Tripartite Post Hostilities Supply Agreement", and to transmit herewith five copies of the final draft of Annex A to this agreement as informally presented to the Swedish Government.

Respectfully yours,

HERSCHEL V. JOHNSON

[Enclosure]

Draft Provision for Inclusion in Tripartite Trade Agreement

It is agreed that the following provision shall be incorporated in the so-called "Tripartite Interim Trade Agreement" and the "Tripartite Post Hostilities Supply Agreement":

"The Government of Sweden as an integral part of this agreement agrees to adhere to the terms and spirit of Bretton Woods Resolution VI, the United Nations' declaration of January 5, 1943, and the gold declaration of February 22, 1944. The Government of Sweden agrees further to implement this undertaking by continuing in force such measures as have already been instituted by it for this purpose and to institute and maintain the additional measures set forth in Annex A to this agreement and made a part hereof, and to give favorable consideration to such other measures as may in the future be necessary for the full execution of this undertaking."

ANNEX A

The Government of Sweden, pursuant to its undertaking as set forth in paragraph of the Anglo-American-Swedish Trade Agreement (the Tripartite Post Hostilities Supply Agreement), undertakes to assist fully the United Nations in carrying out the spirit and purposes of Resolution VI of the Bretton Woods Conference and in all other ways within its power to prevent the use by Axis interests of the laws, territory, and institutions of Sweden for Axis purposes during the present war and thereafter. For the purpose of accomplishing this objective the Government of Sweden agrees to put into force without delay the following measures and to give favorable consideration to instituting such other measures as may in the light of experience and changing conditions be necessary to the execution and effectiveness of this undertaking. For their part the United States and the United Kingdom recognize that the Government of Sweden has already instituted certain measures directed at the implementation of certain of the provisions set forth below. The term Axis as used throughout this agreement includes Germany, including Bohemia and Moravia, and Japan.

- 1. The Government of Sweden agrees formally to make known its decision to adhere fully to the terms and spirit of Bretton Woods Resolution VI, the United Nations' declaration of January 5, 1943, and the gold declaration of February 22, 1944, all attached hereto and made a part of this agreement.
- 2. The Government of Sweden agrees to freeze immediately all assets referred to in items 3 and 4 below, and other such assets as may be subsequently uncovered by the Government of Sweden or brought to its attention by the United States and United Kingdom. It shall be deemed sufficient for the Government of Sweden to freeze any Axis interest in an asset, as such interest is referred to in paragraph 4 below, rather than the asset itself, provided that such interest is so limited as not to make necessary the freezing of the asset in order to freeze effectively such interest in the asset, and provided further that such action is first agreed to by the governments concerned.

The principles on which the licensing of transactions involving the assignment, transfer, withdrawal, payment, hypothecation, or other disposition of such assets may be made, shall be a matter for arrangement between the governments concerned. It is further agreed that full information on all licenses issued shall be made available to the United States and United Kingdom.

- 3. In order to execute fully its undertaking the Government of Sweden agrees further to immobilize and to dispose of any looted assets as such assets are described in Bretton Woods Resolution VI, regardless of present ownership of such assets, in accordance with the terms and spirit of Bretton Woods Resolution VI.
- 4. The Government of Sweden agrees further to conduct a detailed census of all assets regardless of form located in Sweden or held abroad through persons or firms in Sweden which, or any interest in which, direct or indirect, is owned or controlled or held by, in behalf of, or in the name of, persons and firms who are nationals or residents of or domiciled in Axis countries. The census shall be constructed to include full information about such aforesaid ownership, control, interest or holding where such ownership, control, interest or holding has not been lost as the result of, or has been obtained through, any transaction involving the transfer of assets to Sweden or a change in assets located in, or managed from, Sweden, where the transaction has occurred since January 1, 1939, between Swedish subjects or persons subject to Swedish law or persons acting on the behalf of such persons, on the one hand, and persons or subjects of Axis countries, or persons, wherever situated, acting on their behalf, on the other hand, including cases where the assets were transferred without the payment of adequate or appropriate compensation.

The term assets as used in this agreement shall include but not by way of limitation any real property or interest therein, enterprise (commercial, industrial, financial or scientific), security, interest, patent rights, corporate and contractual rights including management contracts, patents, licenses and arrangements, trademarks, insurance policies and reinsurance contracts, money, checks, drafts and all other negotiable and non-negotiable instruments, bank accounts and deposits, including trusteeship accounts and safe deposit boxes and vaults and their contents, gold and other precious metals and stones, personal property, options and any other types of arrangements or undertakings written or unwritten. The Government of Sweden agrees further to make available to the United States and United Kingdom the information obtained from the census, and in accordance with existing practice to permit Swedish nationals or persons subject to its jurisdiction to make available any information directed to the purposes of this undertaking to the United States or the United Kingdom, either directly or through the Government of Sweden.

The Government of Sweden agrees further to conduct a similar census on all assets located in Sweden or held abroad through persons or firms in Sweden which, or any interest in which, direct or indirect, is owned or controlled or held by, in behalf of, or in the name of, persons and firms who are nationals or residents of or domiciled in Axis satellite countries, such census to be taken only at such time as the Governments of the United States and United Kingdom may request with respect to all or any one of such countries. Similarly, at the time of such request the Government of Sweden agrees to make available all information concerning such census to the United States and United Kingdom and further that the provisions of section 2 above shall be made applicable to the investigation and freezing of such Axis satellites' assets. The term "Axis satellites" shall for the purposes of this provision include Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary and shall also include Austria as constituted prior to March 15, 1938. and Italy.

5. The Government of Sweden will provide the United States and the United Kingdom with full information concerning all persons in Sweden who possess the nationality of Axis countries and of those formerly of Axis nationality who have entered into Sweden since January 1, 1939, and who are presently in Sweden, where the evidence reveals that such persons may themselves be hiding, or may be assisting in or may be parties to or may have knowledge of the hiding of, assets owned or controlled by, or in which an interest is held by, Axis countries, or persons located in such countries or persons acting on their behalf. Such information shall include details as to their residence, occupation, travels from Sweden made since initial entry into Sweden and such other information as will be relevant to the purpose for which such information is desired. The Government of Sweden also agrees to submit similar information on all other persons who have come to Sweden since January 1, 1939, where the evidence reveals that such persons may themselves be hiding, or may be assisting in or may be parties to or may have knowledge of the hiding of, assets owned or controlled by, or in which an interest is held by, Axis countries, or persons located in such countries or persons acting on their behalf. The Government of Sweden agrees further to submit similar information to the United States and the United Kingdom on all persons who during the remaining period of hostilities may enter Sweden from Axis countries and such other persons as may be referred to the Government of Sweden by the United States and United Kingdom, for the purpose of determining whether such persons are themselves hiding, or assisting in or are parties to or have knowledge of the hiding of, assets owned or controlled by, or in which an interest is held by, Axis countries or persons located in such countries, or persons acting on their behalf.

- 6. The Government of Sweden will establish effective controls with respect to any transaction with the Axis or Axis controlled countries, or the nationals of such countries in order to prevent entry into Sweden from such countries of any assets or the removal from Sweden to such countries of any assets. The principles on which transactions may be licensed shall be a matter of arrangement between the governments concerned. It is further agreed that full information on all licenses issued shall be made available to the United States and the United Kingdom.
- 7. The Government of Sweden after the foregoing measures have been put into effect agrees to investigate all suspicious cases including but not limited to cases referred to it as being in such category by the United States or United Kingdom and to report the results of all such investigations to the United States and the United Kingdom. The Government of Sweden further agrees to prosecute vigorously violations of the measures referred to in this agreement and to take such other steps as are necessary to obtain rigid enforcement of such measures.
- 8. In order to facilitate the execution of this agreement the Government of Sweden agrees that the facilities of the Joint Standing Committees 72 in Stockholm, London and Washington, or sub-committees thereof shall be made available for handling of questions related to this agreement or to the execution of the terms of this agreement.

MADRID, May 23, 1945. [Received May 30.]

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the Spanish text and an English translation 73 of the response of the Minister of Foreign Affairs to my note of May 1st 74 concerning Axis assets and activities.

The Minister declares that the Bretton Woods resolution and complementary declarations embody principles which have already been incorporated within Spanish law and which have been followed in Spanish practice. He gives full assurances that the Spanish Government adheres to the principles of these resolutions and declarations and points out that the decree law of May 5th converts these principles into a national reality.

It will be observed that the note makes no direct reference to undertaking the census of assets and individuals requested in my note of May 1st nor does it contain a definite promise that all of the information obtained by the Spanish Government as a result of its investigations will be made available to the British and American Governments.

In conversations which have been proceeding between the British Commercial Secretary and American Commercial Attaché with the Director of Political Economy who has been charged by the Minister to create and direct the organization necessary for implementing his assurances, the latter has expressed the intention to make accessible to the British and American experts the information gathered on all assets. Information concerning German individuals engaged in economic activities will also be accessible to us. He points out that the census of assets and individuals necessarily complements the investigations which the Spanish Government is undertaking and therefore the Spanish note should be interpreted as assuring a census of economic activities.

Respectfully yours,

For the Ambassador: RALPH H. ACKERMAN Commercial Attaché

- 1037. SAFEHAVEN. Urtels 1010, May 10, 1223, June 6, 1232, June 8.75 In connection with administration of freezing regulations and related problems, you should be guided by following:
- 1. It is proposed that Allied authorities in Germany will vest all German external assets. See Deptel 1015.⁷⁶ Policy regarding ultimate disposition of these assets will be determined by occupying powers through diplomatic channels or through Allied Control Council or Reparations Commission.⁷⁷ To end that occupying powers' freedom of action remain unprejudiced you should see that (a) German assets are maintained and not dissipated in any manner during this interim period; (b) Span[ish] take no action which would prejudice effectiveness of vesting decree or of any action to be taken with respect to disposition of such assets, and that (c) Span take every action to uncover and block German assets to facilitate their ultimate delivery to Allied representatives for disposition.
- 2. If Span attempt to dispose of German assets, you should indicate that as subscribers to Bretton Woods Resolution VI they have committed themselves not only to "take measures to prevent the concealment, by fraudulent means or otherwise, of assets belonging to enemy, their leaders, associates, and collaborators" but also to hold these assets in such manner as will "facilitate their ultimate delivery to postarmistice authorities". Thus, under Resolution and our Safehaven note, their function is merely to immobilize German property until delivery is made to Allied authorities.

⁷⁵ None printed.

To Dated June 15, not printed; it stated that the U.S. Government considered that German state-owned corporations in Spain were subject to the same control by the American and British diplomatic missions as German Embassy buildings. In assuming control of German assets, the missions would be acting as trustees for the Allied Control Authority for Germany. (800.515/6-1545)

- 3. You should, if at all possible, prevent Span from intervening or liquidating any firms, urtel 1232 June 8.
- 4. In addition, you should under no circumstances encourage Span to vest German interests. You should prevent such action and Span should merely uncover and block German assets pending Allied assumption control over them for final disposition.
- 5. Where individuals voluntarily hand over to you assets belonging to Germans, your 1015 May 11,78 you should take those assets in accordance with advice given you in our 836 May 18.79 Span need not be informed unless you deem it expedient and in no case should they be regarding receipt media of exchange. We wish to emphasize again that you should not under any circumstances indicate to Span that disposition of such property will be made in conjunction with them.
- 6. You should advise Span that their licensing policy with respect to blocked German assets should be designed to uncover and prohibit disposition or dissipation and concealment of Axis assets. Therefore, licenses should be granted only in cases of extreme hardship and then only after consultation with you and Brit. It is important that operations of Axis owned or Axis controlled enterprises should not result in exportation of assets. Such enterprises must be restricted to domestic operations.
- 7. With respect to policy to be followed regarding Axis personnel, you already have been instructed as to removal of personnel from properties you take over. As to other properties you should confine yourself for present to requesting removal of particularly notorious and dangerous individuals who would be apt to cause injury or loss to incipient ACC interests. Repatriation policy still developing.⁸⁰ Further instructions on control of personnel will be forthcoming.
- 8. Once occupying powers have agreed to issuance of vesting decree discussed in Deptel 1015, program based on excellent suggestions in your 1232 as modified by this telegram can be followed. We share your feeling Span control action beyond blocking would result in concealment and dissipation of German assets. Therefore, if Span take any action to prejudice ACC interest as outlined herein and in our 1015, such as vesting, intervention, liquidation, forced sale or similar action, you should, in concert with your Brit colleague, make an immediate approach to Span on highest diplomatic level strongly protesting such action as departure from Bretton Woods Resolution VI ultimate return to the person depositing it (800.515/5-1145).

and point out such acts would be interpreted as inimical to interests of US and UK as well as the United Nations generally. where intervention or liquidation may already have taken place, you and Brit should insist, as representatives of two principal members of ACC, you have direct interest in any such action and no person should be appointed and no acts taken without your prior consent.81

Sтоскносм, July 20, 1945—1 р. т. [Received July 21—1:24 a. m.]

2544. Review of our Safehaven objectives (my 1438, July 20, repeats this to London for Herschel Johnson 82) was held with Swedes yesterday in order to ascertain how far they had gone in meeting our requests and to induce them to satisfy outstanding requests. Legation's 2514, July 17, 1426 to London.83 See also Legation's despatch 5543, May 9 transmitting text of our objectives as informally presented to Swedish Govt. Swedes have met all our requests and even gone further.

Introduction Annex A to text: Swedes agreed to assist the United Nations in carrying out policy laid down in United Nations' Declaration Jan 5, 1943, Gold Declaration Feb 22, 1944, and Resolution VI Swedish Govt agrees to continue in force "as Bretton Woods. long as it is deemed necessary" such measures already instigated [instituted?] for above purposes and to give favorable consideration to such other measures as are indicated in declarations and resolution. Thus full compliance with introduction has been obtained.

1. Pgh references are to statement our objectives. Swedes advise that since Bretton Woods Resolution VI is not an international document but only an agreement by economic experts of certain countries to request other countries to take certain steps, Swedish Govt cannot formally adhere to Bretton Woods Resolution VI. Swedes have, however, in minutes of meeting of King and Cabinet which have been si Telegram 1571, July 20, 9 p. m., from Madrid, transmitted the following message to the Department: "We and British are submitting identic formal notes to Foreign Office informing it that powers occupying Germany claim title to control of German-owned or German-controlled assets and requesting that Spanish Govt take no action which would conflict with this control which must be recognized as having come into existence." made public (transmitted Leg's despatch 5789, July 5 84), stated that legislation to control (German) assets and to provide for restoration looted property is in adherence to above declarations and with requests set forth Bretton Woods Resolution VI. They agree, moreover, to hold press conference in near future at which time they will reiterate their intention to fulfill demands and spirit of demands of Bretton Woods Resolution VI and above declarations. Swedes thus comply fully with this request.

- 2. Swedes have now frozen all German assets in Sweden. All liquid assets had been frozen previously. Swedes agree that the principles for the licensing of transactions involving frozen assets shall be a matter of agreement between the British, Swedes and ourselves. They agree that full information on all licenses issued will be made available to the UK and US. Swedes thus fulfill this request.
- 3. Sweden has already taken necessary steps to comply fully with our request for the immobilization and disposal of looted assets in accordance with Bretton Woods VI and in so doing they went so far as to change existing civil law and establish special administrative board for hearing such cases and expediting action on them.
- 4. (a) Swedes are issuing on July 21 a new census (previous census issued beginning of year covered liquid assets and debts) which will cover all types of assets referred to Pgh 4. Census was drafted on basis our discussions and requests at various meetings. With reference to dual census Swedes agree in principle with holding of another census to cover the history of transactions in Sweden of German assets. Agreement on this was reached after considerable discussion in which it was pointed out that a failure to investigate transactions in German assets as distinguished from census on assets themselves. as is being done in census issued July 21, will cut Swedes off from a valuable and necessary source of information. We argued that by getting a transaction history from a special census Swedes will obtain information on assets in Sweden from persons who no longer have any interest in such assets and who are therefore not likely to give false replies to census, whereas a person now holding a German asset is more likely to violate regulations by not reporting it. We impressed Swedes with fact of our experience and of tremendous benefits we obtained from holding a "transaction census" in addition to an "asset census". However, Swedes point out that to require a statement on all transactions in German assets in Sweden since 1939 will be administratively impossible. Accordingly it was agreed that a feasible method for holding such census would be worked out by us in consultation with Swedes.
- (b) While Govt of Sweden will not make available to US and UK the actual census forms as completed by Swedish residents, they will make available to the US and UK all information on German assets in Sweden obtained from the census and from other sources. We expect full and complete compliance with this. This agreement will have to be cleared with the new govt in beginning Aug but we are assured that Govt will approve since administrative agencies and Foreign Office will so recommend. Agreement on this question came after considerable and protracted discussion in which we emphasized the need for complete and frank exchange of information and need for us to know what assets are in Sweden in order to be in a position to discuss disposition of such assets at a future date. We pointed out that an exchange of information of this type is in no way an attempt on our part to administer Swedish law nor does it in any way constitute an invasion of their sovereignty. We emphasized that without agreement to make available such information to us the Swedes will not have fulfilled the spirit of Resolution VI and that obviously such failure would cause an unfavorable reaction in US and UK.

- (c) Concerning permission to Swedish nationals to make available to us any information directed to Safehaven investigations the following agreement was reached: The chief of the administrative agency handling Safehaven at a press conference will announce it is duty of all Swedes to bring to that agency any information they may have concerning the existence of German assets in Sweden. However, it is informally agreed but will not be publicly announced that should US or UK Legations or their personnel obtain information from Swedes or residents in Sweden concerning Safehaven, this information with name of the source can be made available to Swedish Safehaven agency for appropriate investigation without any risk to source being prejudiced vis-à-vis Swedish law. In other words for first time we have right to interview persons on Safehaven questions without those persons giving information being subject to penalties for violation of Swedish law.
- (d) Govt of Sweden agrees to freeze and to conduct a census of all Axis satellite countries' assets upon notification to Swedish Govt that such countries as have representatives here do not object to such freezing and census. Govt of Sweden will further agree to conduct a similar census and freezing of all assets of formerly occupied countries upon receiving a request from such countries to take such action. This agreement goes beyond what was actually requested in our objectives since we did not refer to formerly occupied countries nor did we include all satellites. Legation should appreciate being advised by Dept as to procedure to be followed in notifying Swedes of agreement of satellite countries and in having formerly occupied countries make known their request to Swedes. (Legation's 2502, July 17, 1421 to London.)⁸⁵ Thus full compliance with Pgh 4 has been obtained.

- 5. With ref to obtaining of information from persons who possess German nationality (i.e., in Sweden on German passports). full details on this are being obtained from German Legation and if necessary additional information can be obtained from Swedish Govt. With ref to former Germans now stateless in Sweden it was agreed that Swedish representatives of the Safehaven agency and the Foreign Office will recommend to the next Govt that full information be given us on such persons, that we will investigate the history of these persons through the facilities available to us in Germanv and will advise Swedes of those who are considered dangerous and those who are considered bona fide refugees. . . . Obtaining of this agreement was one of most difficult aspects of negotiations. Swedish opposition to it was to avoid prejudicing publicly refugees in Sweden, the greater percentage of whom are undoubtedly bona fide, and not to establish a precedent for submitting information on refugees which might be embarrassing to the Swedes should a request be made concerning refugees from Baltic countries by USSR. It was pointed out to Swedes that in other countries, particularly Switzerland, it has been found that stateless persons have in fact acted in collusion with former German Govt and have acquired a stateless status at the request of former German Govt or its officials or groups within Germany and that what Germans did in Switzerland they unquestionably did here. It was pointed out further that since Swedes in their initial census have not made it applicable to stateless persons (though this will be done) it is essential that through some means or other they ascertain now who are undesirable refugees who may be hiding German assets. Swedes were advised that if they failed to submit such information to us they were leaving a large hole in their controls and they would not be acting in a full spirit of cooperation. This agreement which we are assured will probably be accepted by the Govt will cover fully our request Pgh 5.
- 6. Swedes have established effective controls on transactions with other countries. Accordingly no further action beyond administration will be required for this. The Swedes agree to make available information on licenses granted and to decide with us on principles of licensing. Thus full agreement with Pgh 6 has been obtained.
- 7. Sweden agrees to investigate all suspicious cases including those referred to it by US and UK and to report on such investigations to US and UK and take necessary freezing action where required. Swedes also agree to prosecute vigorously violations of measures referred to above. Thus full agreement on Pgh 7 has been obtained.

8. Swedes agree to use facilities of JSC in Stockholm, London, and Washington or special committees thereof for handling of all questions relating to this agreement.

Subject to Swedish Govt's approving submission to us of all information on German assets obtained from census or from other sources and subject to approval of Swedish Govt for a list of former Germans now stateless both of which we are assured will be approved, and subject to satellite countries stating they have no objections to freezing of their assets, and occupied countries requesting a freeze, we have obtained full and complete compliance with our objectives as drafted in Washington. One remaining question is holding of another census in order to fulfill our request for a "transaction census" but there is agreement in principle on this. Thus Sweden has as a result of the negotiations taken or agreed to take all of the action contemplated by our requests. It is intention of Swedish Govt to write us a letter stating that they have decided to assist United Nations in carrying out policy set forth in the two declarations and Resolution VI and to continue in force all measures instituted for this purpose and to give favorable consideration to such other measures as are indicated as being necessary. Swedes will probably include a statement in their letter that such action does not prejudice question of ultimate disposal of German assets in Sweden. On this question the Swedes state that they believe that claims arising out of German debts to Sweden which occurred prior to outbreak of war should be treated on a different basis from claims which arose from loans made during war concerning which Swedes have none. On basis of the Swedish action which goes even farther than we had requested (thus it includes freezing occupied countries and all satellites), Legation recommends that the policy set forth Legation's 2528, July 19 to Dept, 86 1431 London, 35 Moscow, 8 Lisbon, 41 Bern, 2 Ankara and 10 Buenos Aires, be followed (cf. Rubin's second proposal point 3 Paris' 105, July 10, 4132 Dept; 87 506 London, 174 Moscow, 220 Lisbon, 287 Bern, 6 Ankara, 5 Buenos Aires).

It is emphasized that agreement to transmit information to us on German assets here and the proposed agreement to submit to us a list of all former Germans now stateless is to be kept secret and under no circumstances should it be referred to in any public statement or to any other Govt. If Dept contemplates, however, issuing a statement concerning Swedish adherence to Bretton Woods and its full cooperation with it, Legation should appreciate an opportunity of first checking such statement. Such statement should refer to Sweden's "voluntary action".

Swedish Govt takes position that compliance with our requests, and steps taken by them to control German-owned firms, requires us to delete such firms from Proclaimed List upon being satisfied that control is effective. Swedes will appoint interventors to administer such Deletion will in no way prejudice our future claims against such German assets since it is fully agreed that deletion will not change fact that such firms are German assets. We strongly urge that such request should be met and should be so stated in our reply to Swedish letter. This was discussed with Fleming when he was here who fully concurred. British also concur. Legation therefore strongly urges that following be agreed to: firms which are listed solely because of enemy ownership will be deleted promptly from published lists once two Legations are satisfied that control is satisfactory. In this connection it is to be noted that we are very impressed with caliber Swedes administrating controls, their energy and desire to do an effective job and to cooperate 100 percent with us, and care they are taking in picking good persons to administer firms. We believe that to refuse Swedish request will be a wholly unwarranted action and will weaken effective administration they are establishing as well as raising serious political question with Swedish Govt who will then question our good faith. Urgent acceptance of this principle would therefore be appreciated. London please discuss with MEWFO.88

Dept's comments on above agreement would be appreciated in order that we can advise Swedes of Dept's reaction.

Washington, July 31, 1945—6 p. m.

1469. Following are views of Safehaven authorities on your 2544 July 20 (your 1438 to London, 36 to Moscow):

Introductory statement as to period in which Safehaven agreement shall remain in force is too vague. We suggest it be amended to read "as long as it is deemed necessary by US and UK Govts in consultation with Swedish Govt."

4. (a): You are commended on presentation of argument for dual census. You might point out to Swedes that while investigation of all transactions since 1939 might be administratively impossible, dual census would greatly facilitate investigation of suspicious cases.

(b): Our objective would be accomplished by Swedish Govt making available results of census. However you should reserve right to see actual forms on specific cases in which you have particular interest.

Request you insist letter Swedish Govt proposes to write you contain statement of Swedish adherence to two declarations and Resolution VI. We should have preferred public declaration by Swedish Govt. of their adherence as was done by Span[ish] and Port[uguese] Govts, and failing this we think it entirely reasonable to require such adherence in secret letter. Request you to submit verbatim text of letter before accepting it.

We do not agree that Swedish acceptance of our Safehaven requests justifies deletion of German firms from Proclaimed List even should we be satisfied Swedish control is effective. So long as PL is maintained, there is little likelihood a German firm will be deleted unless it is completely liquidated. Swedes should not appoint interventors to administer such firms. Consistent with policy stated Deptel 1416, July 24,89 (6100 to London, 167 to Moscow) administration or liquidation should be conducted under your guidance by your appointees and salaries paid out of firms' assets. No objection your appointing Swedish nationals. Dept suggests you submit estimate of personnel which will be needed to perform Legation's supervisory functions.

The Ambassador in Turkey (Wilson) to the Secretary of State

Ankara, August 2, 1945—7 p. m. [Received August 2—2:18 p. m.]

1050. For Acting Secretary. I am concerned over likelihood of conflict between our political aims and our Safehaven objectives as regards Turkey. Please see my 1018, July 27, 2 p. m.90 which indicates US may be expected to carry burden of convincing Turks of advisability of accepting international control of Straits.⁹¹ This will be a large order and if we are to have any hope of success it will require that we enjoy confidence and good will of Turks.

For documentation on this subject, see ibid., vol. I, pp. 1010 ff., and vol. II, pp. 1420 ff.

On other hand, please see Dept's airmail instruction 735, July 12. This means US is to be spearhead of move by four occupying powers to apply to Turkey a Safehaven program comprising far-reaching demands many of which even with best of will on part Turks, are impossible of fulfillment by Turkish Govt due to their lack effective administrative organization and well-known inability to establish and execute adequate controls. This is same program we have applied to Sweden. However, a country like Sweden highly organized and extremely well administered, can execute such program successfully. Conditions prevailing in Turkey are so foreign to those existing in a country like Sweden that it would be asking the impossible to apply such a program to Turkey. It appears, moreover, that Dept intends to treat Turkey in same manner as we treat Argentina (see Paris' 4132, July 10, rptd to Ankara as 6, and my 995, July 20 93).

Another and seriously complicating factor is that we plan to have Russia join in these demands on Turkey. Now, while Turkey might be disposed to give US and Britain Safehaven assistance and data within Turkey's limited capabilities, Turkey will certainly refuse, in view existing tension relations with Russia, to comply with farreaching demands and give confidential information to USSR. Fact that we were taking initiative these demands with Soviet participation would of itself serve arouse suspicion of Turks, thereby prejudicing possibility constructive achievement in political field. I, of course, appreciate that Soviet Union as one of four occupying powers must be given opportunity to join in Safehaven program. While this must be borne in mind, we should not lose sight of fact USSR today would jump at chance to use Safehaven demands of character we are proposing as stick with which to belabor Turkey.

In view situation described, I recommend consideration be given to revising program of Safehaven demands on basis actual conditions in Turkey and political angle concerning USSR. My 1026, July 28 92 recommended Lawson, 94 who is in charge of our Safehaven work, be ordered to Dept immediately for consultation in connection with Dept's instruction 735.92 Revised program could be drawn up with benefit Lawson's knowledge conditions here.

Since dictating foregoing I have discussed briefly with British Ambassador 95 these proposed Safehaven demands. His reaction strengthens my belief that (a) they lie far beyond possibility Turkish fulfillment and (b) if Soviet Union joins in these demands it will

> London, August 20, 1945—7 p. m. [Received 7:55 p. m.]

8411. In response British invitation Rubin has been in London since August 14 and has participated with Safehaven and Treasury representatives of Embassy in discussions with British Ministry of Economic Warfare Foreign Office, Foreign Office and Treasury on subject of German external assets. Preliminary meeting held August 14 with British and meetings held next 2 days with French present. British pointed out that neutral replies to our démarches would probably question our right to German external assets and insist that neutral claims should be satisfied out of such assets. Primary problem raised by British was how to meet these objections.

Memorandum drafted by Rubin and cleared with Collado 99 was submitted merely as expression of opinion on basis of which recommendation would be made to US Government. On same basis, viz., that participants in meeting would recommend memorandum, as modified during meetings, to their Governments, memorandum was approved. Memorandum being sent forward in entirety via Andrews of London Embassy, leaving here August 18. Substance of memorandum is as follows:

1. Potsdam protocol waives USSR rights in receiving German external assets except in countries reserved in protocol.3 US, UK and France must act re others although our view (this point not discussed with British or French) is that USSR should be consulted before contemplated program is inaugurated.

 $^{^{97}\,\}rm Telegram$ 830, August 11, 6 p. m., to Ankara, informed the Embassy that, since section IV, paragraphs 8 and 9 of the Potsdam Communiqué excluded the Soviet Union from reparations interest in German external assets in Turkey, there was no need to ask the Soviet diplomatic representative to associate himself with the Safehaven requests of the British and American representatives. The Embassy was also told that no approach should be made to the Turkish Government on Safehaven until further notice. (800.515/8-245)

- 2. It may be expected neutrals will contest Allied claims to such assets. To obviate difficulties involved in neutral position so far as possible, following program should be presented to neutrals by three Governments concerned, acting on behalf United Nations:
- A. Allies have suffered great damage during course of war including severe depletion of natural resources. Neutrals have profited at least relatively and partially because of programs Allies forced to undertake to prevent more aid to enemy such as preclusive purchasing.
- B. A necessary (though not sufficient) condition of neutral eventual participation with other nations on a full association basis is that they make some contribution to rehabilitation of countries which have suffered immense damage in fight against Fascism. Though surrender of German assets is not really contribution by neutrals, willingness to have such assets used in such manner may be taken as evidence of their willingness to share some of burdens with United Nations. Neutrals should therefore consent to program designed both to eliminate German influence and to realize on German external assets for such purposes.

- C. Program to be presented envisages liquidation of German external assets, with compensation to German owners in German currency, purchasers to be either United Nations or neutral nationals. In all cases circumstances of sale and purchasers must be subject to approval of Three Powers acting on this matter. Elimination of undesirable persons of course one of primary conditions. Proceeds of sale to be made available to United Nations, acting through Three Proceeds would be used, in discretion of Three Powers, for such purposes as reparation, rehabilitation, payment for essential imports into Germany. To meet probable neutral objection that this may represent large scale capital withdrawals from their territory, Three Powers will agree to use proceeds for purchase to extent practicable of local products in accordance with fairly long range program to be worked out with neutrals. Such program would contemplate purchasing, to extent possible, local indigenous products which might otherwise be export surpluses, such products to be shipped (probably on repatriation [reparation?] account, though neutrals have no legitimate interest in this point) to United Nations for relief and rehabilitation, perhaps to Germany as essential imports (if approved by Allied Control Commission) to relieve possible burden on occupying powers. Such program damages neutral economy and foreign exchange position as little as possible, gives neutrals advantageous procedure for liquidating German investment in their territory and makes products immediately available to meet United Nations needs.
- 3. If agreed in principle, US to draft note incorporating above for concurrence UK and France. In addition following points included in memorandum but not to be included in note to neutrals.
- A. Legal objections may be expected. These will include argument Allies have no jurisdiction and, even conceding jurisdiction, have failed to exercise their power to act as government of Germany. Memorandum states that question of extraterritorial effect of decree is largely political and that legal objections raised by neutrals can be cured by their own political decision to cooperate and public statement that such decree as Allied Control Commission may issue is in accordance local public policy. Also that Allied Control Commission has full governmental powers under surrender documents and lastly that Allied Control Commission will (if it has not by then already done so) issue appropriate vesting law. British feel that issuance of vesting law should be postponed pending this approach to neutrals; Rubin indicated his views that order should be issued as soon as possible, given agreement with USSR that US, UK, and France would manage external assets in neutrals. At French suggestion memorandum also includes paragraph to effect that Allies will cause German Government, when constituted, to recognize validity of steps taken by Allied Control Commission or by neutrals, with Allied Control Commission consent, under this program but not of steps otherwise taken by neutrals.

B. Rubin memorandum suggested that claims of neutrals be rejected outright, on ground advances to Germans represented by German clearing deficits should not be given any priority or even equal position with claims of Allies attributable to war damage, etc. British indicated belief that we should clarify our position re other types of claims as well as clearing balances. This portion of memorandum as modified by British indicates that:

(a) Claims arising out of war transactions—clearings—to be rejected outright;

(b) Pre-war debts—memorandum indicates that neutrals should not be informed of this now, but that offering the neutrals chance to use German assets to pay these claims, provided amount of claims is not large "might be considered as less prejudicial" than other alternative concessions. We reserved our position completely after indicating reluctance to make this concession.

(c) Unmatured pre-war debts—to remain for such treatment as future may bring to all such claims.

- (d) Claims with respect to property in Germany. Neutrals cannot sell their property and expect to transfer proceeds out of Germany. However we recognize in general their right to property though like all other property in Germany it must be subject to general program of removals, requisitioning, etc., against payment comparable to that given to German nationals. Program of removals as it affects United Nations and neutral property is expressly reserved as subject for further negotiation. Discussion at meeting indicated that British position was not yet formulated on extent to which United Nations or neutral ownership should impede program of removals for reparation purposes.
- 4. Suggested Department consider above urgently on principles. If approved in principle Department will, under terms of memorandum, have obligation of drafting proposed démarche.
- 5. There was also discussed possible desirability of establishing an informal consultative body, on which US, UK and France would be represented, to deal with current operating problems with respect to German external assets and to discuss policy questions in first instance, referring major questions to governments. Such a body would deal with such problems as British proposal that paper bags paid for by Germans and now held in Sweden be shipped to British Zone in Germany and problem of disposal of German owned canned fish discovered in Tangier. Until action by Allied Control Commission on vesting or similar order such body would discuss manner of disposition of German external assets and serve as allocation agency under plan described in above memorandum. This suggestion had been discussed by Rubin with Fagen 4 and Labouisse 5 in Paris. tion seemed to have favourable reception here, all being agreed some expeditious method of dealing with operating problems and an informal forum for preliminary policy discussions were needed. Suggest this be given consideration with view to formulating definite proposal.

6. Proposal contained in this telegram has been approved by Clayton, Collado and Stinebower. 6

Above sent Department, repeated Paris 537 via courier pouch for information and comment, Moscow 300 for information and comment on question of consultation with USSR on this proposal and to USPolAd ⁷ Berlin 86 from Winant for Murphy and Pauley.

they should likewise be exceedingly reluctant to remove restrictions from Swiss assets. The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Portugal (Baruch)

Washington, August 23, 1945—7 p. m.

1388. Your 1721 Aug 13,¹¹ rptd London as 403, raises two distinct questions: (1) freezing of satellite assets and (2) unblocking and dissipation of German assets covered by Portuguese freeze.

As to point (1), no final decision has yet been reached on freeze of satellite assets but Dept fails to see how affirmative decision on this question would create complications if Portuguese are sincere in their undertaking to effectively adhere to and implement Bretton Woods Resolution VI and related SAFEHAVEN requests.

So far as point (2) above is concerned, as Emb is aware (see Dept's 948 June 15,¹² rptd London as 4828), series of reports from Madrid in recent months has indicated grave danger Spain would dissipate German assets, public and private, in absence of early indication of ACC ¹³ vesting action. Notification to neutrals of Allied assumption of title or control of German assets was, of course, stopgap measure.

Statement contained in your 1721 to effect that subsequent unblocking of German assets impels concealment and dissipation of liquid resources, considered together with your Safehaven reports nos. 300 and 316 of Jul 19 and Jul 30 respectively, indicates that dangers largely comparable to those existing in Spain are now manifest in Portugal. In this connection you should examine Dept's 1037 Jun 19 to Madrid (rptd to you as 962, to London as 4930) in the light of local situation and be guided by policy stated therein to extent applicable to local situation. In addition, Emb is instructed to consult with Brit and to take following action immediately:

(1) Request Portuguese to permit review of authorizations granted to German firms listed in Safehaven reports nos. 300 and 316. If examination discloses that operations of firms are not limited to domestic activities, licenses should be so restricted. Firms should be permitted to withdraw from their blocked accounts fixed monthly amounts which should be limited to minimum figure necessary to support approved domestic operations. Licenses should contain express prohibition against any alterations whatsoever in capital structure of firm.

(2) Monthly reports of all expenditures should be required from licensed firms and made available to you and Brit for examination. They should be checked carefully for excessive or abnormal expenditures and for transactions which appear to indicate that firms are concealing or dissipating their assets.

- (3) Should such reports, or other available info, disclose concealment or dissipation of assets, or attempts to do so, you should first request Portuguese to revoke firm's operating license. If Portuguese decline to revoke license or revocation does not produce desired results, you should consult with Brit with view to prompt appointment of temporary Allied management having complete power over company, including dismissal of undesirable personnel. You may base authority for such action on Allied assumption of supreme authority in Germany and refer to notification to Portuguese of claim to title or control of German external assets.
- (4) You should adhere to foregoing procedure with respect to future licenses granted to German entities for so-called normal commercial operations, except that you should press Portuguese to obtain prior concurrence of you and Brit in granting of initial licenses. See numbered pgh 3 Dept's instruction 86 Aug 7 ¹⁵ (copy to London).

Dept has noted that Emb's note 60 of May 7 to Portuguese ¹⁵ did not include an important desideratum, as requested by Dept in model note, ¹⁶ i.e., that Portuguese authorities should consult with you as to principles underlying licensing of transactions involving assets covered by freezing decrees. Emb should press for exchange of views with Portuguese on this question in order that policies adopted by local authorities in this connection will not negate primary purposes of blocking controls.

Dept views problem in Portugal with great concern. It is emphasized that Emb should do all in its power to forestall any action either by Portuguese authorities, or private interests, which would prejudice the eventual and complete assumption of Allied authority, by means of ACC vesting action, of German assets within Portuguese jurisdiction.

Keep Dept fully informed of action taken on foregoing basis and of significant developments.

Washington, September 5, 1945—8 p. m.

4192. Reurtel 4982 Aug 17.18 All functions of US Censorship ceased as of Aug 15. For several months prior to that date Dept and Treas endeavored to forestall demise of Censorship on basis its major importance to Proclaimed List and Safehaven programs. However, notwithstanding strong objections expressed to Byron Price 19 in letters under signature Secs State and Treas, 18 Censorship was terminated with Presidential authorization. Price has indicated to Dept that with capitulation of Japan, mission of Office of Censorship has been completed and Agency will be demobilized as swiftly as possible, that censoring operations have entirely ceased, but that Censorship will pass on to Dept for next 30 days any info of interest received from other United Nations censorships. At end of 30-day period whole allocation machinery will be disbanded. War Dept has been asked by Censorship to allocate to Dept any intercepted info developed by their Censorship groups in occupied territory abroad and War Dept now considering whether it can also allocate to other agencies info developed by whatever civilian censorships are operating in Europe month from now.

Dept wishes to stress that demise of Censorship in no way affects policy to continue PL ²⁰ or follow active Safehaven program. Effectiveness of these programs will now depend to greater degree on ingenuity of missions and substitute techniques developed to offset loss represented by dissolution of Cenorship.

Re position to be taken with Fr[ance], see Dept's cirtel Aug 18 ¹⁸ suggesting discussions with Fr authorities as to desirable censorship techniques. Some of Dept's suggestions in this connection will have already been adopted by Fr censorship. Dept's position vis-à-vis European govts as to censorship matters has, of course, been weakened by cessation of Censorship activities in US and it is recognized that question of local censorship is one for indigenous govts to decide. It is hoped, however, that liberated govts will maintain censorship until such time as their internal controls are effective and that basic purposes sought by Dept's aforementioned cirtel can be achieved.

The Minister in Switzerland (Harrison) to the Secretary of State

Bern, September 28, 1945—9 a. m. [Received 1:11 p. m.]

4236. At his invitation I called upon Mr. Petitpierre,²² who handed me following note dated Sept. 25 in reply to my note August 3 (Legtel 3799, Aug. 4; ²³ repeated 1321 London; 636 Paris; 60 Lisbon; 35 Stockholm.)

(Official translation)

Federal Political Dept. has honor to acknowledge receipt of note 2132 by which the Legation of the USA informed it that the American Govt requests to exercise right of ownership to or control of German assets in Switzerland.

Federal Council has examined this request. It does not clearly see legal basis on which it (this request) rests. According to Federal Council's conception actual occupation of German territory by Allied Powers can hardly have any effects (effets) beyond German borders.

Aside from these legal considerations, Federal Council wishes point out that on March 8 it reached agreement with American, British and French Govts concerning question of German assets in Switzerland 24 which had already been rendered inalienable (indisponibilité) [(indisponibles?)] on Feb. 16. These blocking measures have since then been perfected (complétées) and reinforced. The census of German assets in Switzerland, which the Confederation is carrying out in its own interest and for its own needs, is nearing an end. Federal Council would only be able to give its opinion on other measures once results of this investigation had become known.

With regard to looted assets which might be in Switzerland, Dept. considers it opportune to call attention to that which had been agreed upon by signatory govts of above-mentioned agreement. Federal Council confirming its decision "to prevent territory of Switzerland and that of principality from being used for disposal, concealment or reception of assets which may have been taken illegally or under duress during war", expressly declared that "in framework of Swiss legislation as it stands today or as it will be completed in future, all facilities will be given to dispossessed owners to claim in Switzerland and Liechtenstein assets found there". Furthermore, Swiss Govt, desirous of contributing within scope of its possibilities to reestablishment of legality—decided as it is to give its support in this connection to effort of Allies—would appreciate if the states, patrimony of which has been object of acts of spoliation, should communicate to it lists of assets stolen from their legitimate owners in order to establish if they are in Switzerland and, if so, to facilitate restitution thereof.

Federal Council, furthermore, has no intention of protecting assets belonging to German nationals who have during period of hostilities committed crimes or acted contrary to international law (droit des

My British colleague also received from Mr. Petitpierre parallel reply his note of Aug. 3.

After informing Mr. Petitpierre that I would submit text his reply I took opportunity impress upon him our dissatisfaction with slowness in effecting census inadequacy measures taken and non-cooperation (Legation's 4211; ²⁵ repeated London 1407; Paris 692, Sept. 25) and that in concert with my British and French colleagues we intended to take up this matter with him within next few days. Petitpierre assured me that Federal Council desired fulfill their engagements and that he would be glad receive and discuss any proposals we might care present. For this purpose my British and French colleagues and I propose call upon Petitpierre and expose our desiderata which appear required in light of such difficulties as outlined in my 4211.

London, September 30, 1945—1 p. m. [Received September 30—10:25 a. m.]

10176. For Clayton. Since Mr. Bevin ²⁶ was engaged with the Foreign Ministers at the time of the receipt of your message (8515, September 27 ²⁷) I arranged to have the substance of it delivered at once to his Secretariat notifying Bevin. Arrangements were made to have it referred to the experts in the German Dept and in the Economic Warfare Dept who are dealing with the question of German external assets.

Discussions yesterday with the Economic Warfare Dept revealed continued strong British objections to the immediate issue by ACC (Allied Control Council) of a vesting decree. Reasons for the British stand are as follows:

1. His Majesty's Government object on both legal and tactical grounds to the immediate issue of a decree vesting German external assets in a body to be created by the Control Council for this purpose.

²⁵ Not printed.

²⁶ Ernest Bevin, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

²⁷ This message (printed in vol. III, p. 840) instructed Ambassador Winant to take up with Mr. Bevin the question of British delay in approving the United States proposal in the Allied Control Council for a decree on vesting and marshalling of German assets.

2. It is certain that the neutral governments will not readily admit the Allied claim to ownership of German assets in neutral countries. The Swedish Government have asked on what grounds this claim is based and His Majesty's Government do not see what effective reply can be given to this enquiry. It is impossible to contend that the effect of the surrender has been to vest in the Control Commission the title to all German assets abroad since this in substance means that the Control Council has by virtue of the surrender wider powers over German assets abroad than an ordinary sovereign government generally has over property belonging to its nationals situated in foreign territories.

The British representative on Control Council has been given these reasons as a basis for attempting to convince his American and French colleagues that an immediate vesting decree would be unwise.

Should the British representative be unsuccessful he must refer back to London for further instructions.

Because of this necessity for reference back to London I consider it most unlikely that a unanimous decision in favor of an immediate decree will be reached at the October 1 meeting.

- 3. Moreover His Majesty's Government have grave doubts whether it would be in Allied interest to maintain any such contention. The Allied Governments are more likely in the future as in the past to wish to uphold the right of their own courts to decide on the validity of transfers, effected under foreign laws, of property situated within their jurisdiction. It seems to His Majesty's Government that it would be a mistake to upset or make exceptions to these legal principles for the sake of German assets in neutral countries at any rate so long as there is any chance of obtaining some part of Allied demands by other arguments.
- 4. These "other arguments" are of course Mr. Rubin's proposal that the Allies should approach neutral governments not on the ground that the Allies are legally entitled to German external assets but on the ground that they have fought the neutral countries' battle and saved them from Nazi tyranny and have suffered terrible losses in consequence. The Allies are morally justified therefore in asking that German external assets should be handed over to them as a small makeweight for their sacrifices. Immediate issue of the decree will seriously prejudice any chance of success which the Rubin proposal may have since it will at once raise the issue of the legal right to vest and thus precipitate the discussions with neutral governments which it is so desirable to avoid.
- 5. An argument which has been advanced in favor of the immediate issue of the decree is that delay will give Germans in neutral countries more time to conceal their assets. This argument is hardly tenable. In the first place the issue of the decree will not in itself prevent concealment and in the second place such a public declaration of Allied intentions as the issue of the decree might accelerate and stimulate concealment.

- 6. The fact of issuing the decree will not effect the transfer of German external assets into Allied hands. The decree will have no validity in neutral countries unless and until it is recognized and enforced by the governments and the courts of those countries. It will be open to German concerns in neutral countries to plead duress and it is difficult to believe that the local courts will reject this plea which will be based on the incontrovertible ground of a decree of expropriation. In other words German concerns in neutral countries will have obtained the very thing for which they are seeking. In the opinion of His Majesty's Government no harm could be done to Allied interests if the issue of the decree were postponed until after the Rubin approach had been tried and failed.
- 7. It would be interesting to know what action the US, Russians and French Governments contemplate when it seems certain the Allied claim to German external assets is rejected by neutral governments on legal grounds. His Majesty's Government would find it very difficult to follow them in extreme measures such as cutting off exports to those countries since they consider that neutral resources should be used to the utmost possible extent in rehabilitating the devastated regions.
- 8. It is undeniable that the vesting decree creates a precedent which other governments may follow in future. Protests against the illegality of expropriation by other governments will lose much of their force if the latter can point to similar action in the past by the Allied Governments.

position of Fr and inevitability of delay in convincing other Allied govts of desirability of freeze, Dept and other interested agencies are prepared to drop question of freezing of assets of formerly-occupied countries in Sweden and Portugal. Brit Emb here states its govt agrees. Dept feels that realistic view calls for elimination of time-consuming aspects of Safehaven program on which little dividends can be expected. It would be desirable for Stockholm and Lisbon to suggest to their Allied colleagues with whom program has been discussed that while we will not press for complete freeze it would be highly beneficial to Safehaven for them to suggest ad hoc blocking to Swedish and Portuguese Govts in appropriate instances. Altho Dept has not favored a selective freezing operation this would seem to be an acceptable compromise at this stage of discussion.

2) Stockholm is requested to consider whether it is feasible to suggest to Swedes census of assets of formerly-occupied countries, as has been done in Portugal, without freeze of such assets.

So far as dual census in Portugal is concerned, Dept continues of view that suggestions for such census outlined in Dept's air mail instruction 86 of Aug 7, 1945 ²⁹ should be communicated to Portuguese authorities, particularly since it does not appear that Portuguese have been requested to undertake investigation of transactions involving transfer of enemy assets to Portugal since Jan 1, 1939. Dept, however, is willing to defer to Lisbon's judgment in this connection if Emb considers that arrangements already instituted are adequate to insure that transfers of enemy assets can be traced.

3) Question of freezing of assets of Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania is continuing under consideration.

troductory conversation Villiers expressed considerable exasperation over delay of US in adopting "Rubin approach" in contrast with ready British and French acceptance. Playfair emphasized that differences between us have been as to tactics and not as to objectives. He said British have felt that approach should be made to neutrals before issuance of vesting decree. He also stressed that primary objective in British view is to get rid of German influence and that while something should be realized question of receipts is distinctly secondary.

I pressed British strongly for immediate adoption of vesting decree pointing out that questions raised by neutral govts as to our legal authority seem to necessitate some action which would provide an answer as a basis for making our approach. Playfair agreed that this argument has validity. He finally admitted that British Commander in Germany had been instructed that if question of vesting decree is raised by US at Coordinating Committee meeting on October 26 he should not object to adoption of decree.³¹ Playfair said the wording of decree is an entirely separate matter and thought it should be possible to reach agreement on the wording in legal directorate. He made clear that while British would agree they are not convinced this is proper action although he admitted that something must be done to resolve present stalemate.

With reference to sanctions Playfair and Villiers both thought this is matter to be considered in light of answer to our notes and circumstances prevailing at the time. I pointed out that it was hardly wise to initiate a program without some idea of what we shall do if neutrals refuse to agree. Villiers suggested that a flat refusal is unlikely and thought it hopeless to raise a hypothetical question and to get any answer in the British Govt as to what might be done under circumstances which cannot readily be envisaged. He asked what form of sanctions we would propose and pointed out that British financial position vis-à-vis neutrals is not such as to make pressure through financial measures very useful. He said flatly British would not cut off coal to Switzerland or Sweden in order to get cash. I pointed out that there are various means of exerting pressure and that the question was not one of getting cash but of getting rid of Germans. Finally in response to direct question as to whether British Govt would be willing to exert pressure on neutrals Playfair and Villiers said that while they are without authority to com-

Strong discussion of the decree at the Sixteenth Meeting of the Coordinating Committee, see telegram 869, October 28, 1 p. m., from Berlin, vol. III, p. 887; approval was given by the Control Council at its Tenth Meeting, October 30, as reported in telegram 896, October 31, 6 p. m., from Berlin, ibid., p. 848. mit British Govt they felt that the answer was "in principle yes" for the purpose of getting rid of German influence. They made clear that their feeling is that compromises would have to be made in practice regarding the actual disposition of German assets as between the neutrals and the Allies. I pointed out that it makes a great deal of difference what kind of compromise is proposed and referred to the disagreement which has arisen regarding the Italian war debts to Switzerland. Neither Playfair nor Villiers was familiar with this matter but agreed that subject was one on which no compromise could be made.

I pressed very hard for the initiation of some consideration as to what can be done by way of putting pressure on the neutrals. Villiers was very stubborn in his insistence that this would not be useful but I think Playfair agrees to necessity. I will discuss the matter privately with him and urge again its importance. British urge that notes to neutrals be presented as soon as possible and felt that best approach was on apparently already previously suggested point, drafting by British and US Missions in neutral countries with reference to London and Washington. They said their missions are already at work on this and urged that we instruct ours to collaborate with them. They hoped that Oliver 32 and Baker 33 might be able to discuss text of notes and suggested that they come up to London from Paris for a day or so for this purpose. [Reinstein.]

As indicated last paragraph my 4236, (repeated London 1416; Paris 698; Lisbon 70; Stockholm 42 and Madrid) September 28, and after concerting action with my British and French colleagues I have discussed with Mr. Petitpierre present unsatisfactory situation with regard to our efforts to unearth German assets in Switzerland and in particular our dissatisfaction with lack of cooperation on the part of Swiss officials and their apparent failure to implement the March agreement. I called his attention inter alia to certain specific instances in which we felt that there had been a failure to live up to the March commitments to comply with promises for exchange of information to prevent the dissipation of German blocked assets and to plug loopholes in the existing federal decrees. I also urged the desirability for closer collaboration and direct contact with the SCO (Swiss Compensation Office). To that end I handed Mr. Petitpierre informally, and my British colleague has done likewise, an aidemémoire listing suggestions as to measures to be taken by the Swiss authorities as follows:

"1. To provide us in detail with the information procured by them as a result of the census of German assets and to provide for full exchange of information in the interim stages of investigation.

"2. To forbid with adequate penalties the alienation, hypothecation, conversion, removal or disposal of or any transfer of right in German or German controlled property without Allied approval to annul any such transactions already effected and in general permit the Allies to participate in the control through a licensing system of all transactions involving such property.

"3. To impose adequate penalties for failure to comply with the decrees and regulations with respect to German or German controlled property.

"4. To reduce present exemptions under the census decree relating to moveable property from the present limit of 25,000 francs to 10,000 francs

- "5. To establish a special tribunal to hear cases involving looted property, amend the statutes of limitation with respect to the recovery of stolen property for the purpose of assuring the rights of persons whose property was seized by the Germans, exceptionally in such cases to place the burden of proof upon the holders of looted property and to permit representations on behalf of dispossessed persons by their Governments.
- "6. To require a declaration under the census regulations of all royalty, annuity, patent licenses and exploitation rights regardless of values.
- "7. To require declarations with respect to the property of all individuals of German nationality without exception as well as all individuals who held German nationality at any time since January 1, 1937.
- "8. To inspect safety deposit boxes held by or on behalf of Germans and communicate the results to the Allied authorities.
- "9. It is understood that all the foregoing shall apply equally to Liechtenstein and is not intended to be all inclusive."

Mr. Petitpierre took notes of the various points which I had made. He said the census would be expected [to] be completed by middle of next month and if progress appeared to have been slow and perhaps disappointing the magnitude and complexity of the task should not be overlooked. He assured me that he would give prompt consideration to our suggestions, some of which he already felt might be accepted and promised to discuss the matter with me further as soon as possible. In conclusion I pressed the urgency for effective action or otherwise our task would become increasingly difficult.

1. Federal Council cannot admit that attitude it has had up to now regarding German assets in Switzerland not in line with engagements which result from agreement March 8, 1945.³⁵ It notes that the requests made by US Legation in its aide-mémoire of Oct 15 cannot be based on clauses of this agreement but go beyond what had been agreed upon at the time.

2. Federal Council as already stated in its note of Sept. 25 (cf. Legtel 4236, Sept. 28) does not discern juridical basis of Allied demands. It would be glad to receive necessary clarification in this connection. Nevertheless, how Allies, as occupying powers of Germany, could invoke rights which, if put forward by regular German Govt, would never have been accepted by Confederation can be

Washington, November 10, 1945—10 a.m.

9901. Since ACC has now issued external assets vesting decree,³⁷ following model draft note to Swiss ForMin has been prepared which if Brit and French agree would be presented in parallel démarches to other neutrals also by our Missions in these countries:

"I have the honor, under instructions from my Govt, to make the following communication to Your Excellency.

On October 30, the Allied Control Council, representing the four Govts exercising supreme authority in Germany, adopted a Law establishing a German External Property Commission and vesting in this Commission all rights, titles, and interests in or with respect of any property outside Germany owned by German nationals within Germany or by certain German citizens or legal entities outside Germany.

A copy of this Law is enclosed as an annex to this note.

The attention of the Govt of Switz is called to the introductory clause of this Law stating the Council's determination 'to assume control of all German assets abroad and to divest the said assets of their German ownership with the intention thereby of promoting international peace and collective security by the elimination of German war potentials.'

My Govt wishes me, further, to make clear its purpose in supporting the program to be administered by the German External Property Commission. The primary objectives are to achieve security by completely eliminating Germany's economic and financial potential for another war, and to devote these resources to the relief, reparation, and rehabilitation of countries devastated by German aggression. Restoration of the damage done in their territory will substantially depend on the rapidity with which these countries obtain the means of importing goods despite their present unfavorable foreign exchange position. Thus, realization for reparations account of the value of German external assets will largely tend to promote restoration of their trade with Switzerland and thereby Switzerland's participation in European reconstruction.

³⁶ James Mann, U.S. Treasury Department representative in Switzerland.

In view of the foregoing, my Govt assumes that the Govt of Switz will give full effect to this decree and cooperate in its implementation.

My Govt is not unmindful of the fact that the control and disposition powers to be exercised by the German External Property Commission raise economic questions of great importance to the Govt of Switz. It is thought desirable that there be worked out in consultation with the Govt of Switz such arrangements consistent with the objectives of the Law, as will avoid economic dislocations and advance our mutual interest in a harmonious solution to this problem.

For these reasons it is proposed that a meeting be held between representatives of the Allied Govts acting on behalf of the Control Council and representatives of the Govt of Switz to reach agreement on the manner in which German property in Switz can best be administered, liquidated or otherwise disposed of. It is suggested that this meeting be held in Washington during the week beginning Jan 10 and in any case not later than Jan 31. The agenda of this meeting would comprise agreement on the disposal of these assets in such a way as to protect Swiss interests as well as those of the United Nations (including approval of purchasers, terms of sale, etc.) and on currency or foreign exchange questions arising out of the use for reparations and rehabilitation of the funds so realized. It is also expected that an understanding can be reached on the domestic decrees and orders necessary to achieve our objectives, on the establishment of administrative machinery for full intergovernmental cooperation, and on any other related questions which the Govt of Switz wishes to propose for discussion. An early reply to this invitation would be appreciated.

I understand that the Brit and French Ambassadors are addressing to Your Excellency a communication in similar terms. Accept, etc."

London and Paris should discuss proposed note with Brit and French Govts, explaining that we feel it avoids raising legal questions, indicates tangible advantages to neutrals are obtainable through their cooperation with us, and while couched in sympathetic terms does not plead or otherwise show weakness. Brit and French notes however need not be identical with ours though they should avoid indicating any substantial difference between Allies. You might remind Brit that Swiss are trying to stir dissension between us and therefore their note should not be susceptible of such exploitation.

In notes to other neutrals dates would of course be changed. Our suggestion is that we negotiate with Swedes first during week beginning Jan 3 and with Spaniards week beginning Jan 17. Negotiations with Portuguese can take place beginning about Jan 24. Please report promptly response of Brit and French Govts and if they agree suggest they inform their missions so that notes can be presented quickly.

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Missions Abroad 39

Washington, November 15, 1945—1 p. m.

After further consideration, Dept has come to view that from an external security standpoint blocking of assets in neutrals of satellite countries (Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria) is not of major importance. In view of current British position cited London's 10004 Sept 26 ⁴⁰ (rptd Paris 618, Stockholm 607, Bern 287, Lisbon 213, Moscow 325, Madrid 254) and fact that Soviets have not withdrawn their opposition to freezing of both public and private assets of satellite countries, there would seem to be little hope of pursuing matter to any concrete advantage. Dept is therefore willing to withdraw from its original position espousing complete blocking of above countries in neutrals as a primary SAFEHAVEN objective.

Consistent with foregoing Dept has no objection to Madrid's approval (Madrid's 2222 Oct 30,⁴¹ rptd to London as 6120) of ad hoc releases of assets of Hungarian, Rumanian and Bulgarian citizens from Spanish blocking decree, provided no info is available militating against such action.

Foregoing decision is not to be considered a renunciation of claims to such German external assets in neutrals as may eventually be found to have been secreted therein under the cloak of satellite ownership.

Sent to London for discussion with British, and to Paris, Stockholm, Bern, Lisbon, Moscow, Madrid, Ankara, Buenos Aires and Dublin for information.

5468. For Angell,⁴³ No. 45. Before receiving your 44 (Emb's 6556) Nov 12 ⁴⁴ and 45 (Emb's 6557) Nov 12,⁴⁵ Dept had drafted and sent to Paris proposed text of note to neutrals on external assets. If not already done, please arrange that copy of this tel (Deptel 9901 Nov 9 [10] to London, rptd to you as 5257) be shown to you.

Our views on questions raised in your ref tel and in Angell 14 Nov 3^{46} are as follows:

1. Our proposed note is designed to reveal only our general position to neutrals and request them to meet with us promptly at a fixed date for negotiations. This would reduce possibility of rejection of note as Fr fear, and also tend to prevent negotiation by diplomatic communication which would delay solution. In this respect, Brit proposed note and Fr proposal that negotiations be conducted by Missions on Iberian Peninsula and special delegations elsewhere are unacceptable. We believe more can be obtained by having neutrals meet with us individually in Washington or perhaps Paris where negotiations can be conducted by appropriate personnel from Brit, Fr and Am Govts. We suggest, therefore, that Brit note be changed in this respect to conform with our proposed note.

Although we feel that Brit note overstresses legalistic arguments, we see no objection to notes differing in form or emphasis if above changes are made. Only other change we recommend in Brit draft, if ours is unacceptable to them, is elimination of phrase in pgh 4(a) "with compensation to the German owners in German currency". Vesting decree left this question open and we feel it is preferable to eliminate ref to compensation. Also we suggest that Brit modify their note to mention specific date on which negotiations should begin.

- 2. We agree with you that Fr plan for arbitrary percentage of net proceeds for neutrals is not acceptable. If concessions have to be granted, we suggest that they be worked out to discriminate between various types of neutral claims against Germany. Our present position is that concessions could be considered only with regard to prewar debts.
- 3. We do not agree that we bring into negotiations entire question of maintenance of Proclaimed List. If neutrals raise this question, we should be prepared to bargain on it but it is contrary to our interests to show a willingness to give up this control prematurely. It appears to us that we can most effectively ensure liquidation or reorganization of firms on our terms if we retain them on list until such time as arrangements satisfactory to us have been made.
- 4. Your pgh (c) on disposition of assets raises administrative question involving IARA ⁴⁷ relations with German external property commission of ACC. A subsequent cable being drafted deals with question of liquidation and administration as well as disposition of external assets.
- 5. Dept is considering question of sanctions raised in your ref tel and we feel strongly that agreement on this subject should be obtained before entering upon negotiations with neutrals. Supply sanction is not only one available and we are considering others involving frozen funds, seizure of neutrals' property in Germany, etc.
- 6. We suggest that Swedes be tackled first in negotiations, with Swiss second, Spain third and Port fourth. We prefer Washington as situs but should like your views on desirability of holding negotiations in Paris which has advantage of central location and presence of all Allies concerned. However, can adequate housing and other arrangements be made?

preference for Department's draft model note (Deptel 9901, November 10 to London, repeated 5257 Paris) and consequently they feel Paris draft note (Angell's 45 November 12 to Department 49) should be dropped. However they strenuously contested Washington as place for negotiations (Embtel 12569, December 1 to Department 50 repeated 763 Paris). We emphasized Washington as situs because maximum pressure could be exerted there upon neutral representatives. Villiers and Brandt felt that even if neutrals agreed, this would require more time to complete negotiations because neutral negotiators would have to refer back to their Governments on every important point. Our reply was that even if this were true we preferred Washington . . . Once having obtained favorable results from the Swedes, we would be in a far better position to insist upon our demands with the other neutrals. We have emphasized that Department will be adamant on this point and our impression is that Villiers and Brandt may well give way. Accordingly we urge that Department, in any discussion with British Embassy insist upon Washington as situs negotiations.

- 2. Villiers endeavoring clear Department's model note immediately with other interested British agencies. If latter agree, Villiers concurs that British and French notes should follow Department's note very closely.
- 3. Subject to clearance with other interested British agencies, Villiers and Brandt agree with paragraph 6 Deptel 10216, November 23 to London (repeated Angell 45 51) that we take Swedes first in our negotiations, Swiss second, Spanish third and Portuguese fourth. They emphasized, however, that notes to these four countries should be presented simultaneously. They are reluctant, however, to include in their notes any definite date for negotiations but would include in Swedish note request for immediate negotiations.

London and Paris have been instructed to propose joint meeting for discussion question German assets during January next by when expected Swiss census and classification will be substantially completed for practical purposes. Ministers will also suggest Bern for meeting.

German assets are being classified as (a) those in Switzerland prior to January 1933, (b) those originating between that date and September 1, 1939, (c) from that date to January 1942 [1943] (Stalingrad), and (d) from then until February 1945, (blocking decree). Mr. Petitpierre felt that category (a) was a Nazi of long standing, (b) as mostly refugee from Nazi control, (c) probably small, as this was period when Germans were confident of victory and (d) period when Nazi assets might be expected to have sought refuge.

Probably Swiss will wish to discuss PL and blocking (certification) with US also.⁵³

London, December 7, 1945—7 p. m. [Received December 8—1:37 a. m.]

- 12851. 1. British have now agreed to Dept's model note (Deptel 9901, November 10 to London, repeated 5257 Paris, 1845 Madrid, 1768 Lisbon, 2083 Stockholm, 3271 Bern) and are dropping Paris draft. British have telegraphed Washington and other missions accordingly. Text of British draft note which follows very closely Dept's note is being transmitted to Dept (Embtel 12852 December 7 to Dept, 4 repeated Paris 779 for Angell). Missions please request text from British colleagues.
- 2. Main difference in text British note is omission of phrase "acting on behalf of Control Council" in first sentence, penultimate paragraph, Dept's note, in order to forestall any possibility Russian participation MEWFO urges similar change in Dept's note and feels strongly in view British concessions particularly their agreement to Washington as situs for negotiations, we should give way on this point.
- 3. British urge soonest possible presentation notes and therefore feel that unless Missions have compelling local reasons for proposing changes, our notes should be presented as now drafted subject modification urged paragraph 2 above.

- 4. British advise Swiss Minister London has approached Foreign Secretary expressing willingness discuss Safehaven and suggesting Bern as situs for discussions. In view this development, British think advisable negotiate with Swiss first and, if so, they suggest notes to Sweden. Spain and Portugal should request answer regarding negotiations "at a very early date". British state our proposed schedule negotiations is "very optimistic".
- 5. We discussed with Brandt Dept's position that presentation of notes be delayed until agreement reached with British and French on sanctions (Deptel 10595, December 6 to London ⁵⁵ repeated 5708 Paris for Angell). He expressed no dissent and merely stated that we must await Dept's promised telegram regarding sanctions. He emphasized again the necessity for soonest possible action.
- 6. We invite Dept's specific attention to second sentence of fifth paragraph of Dept's note which indicates our intention to devote German external assets to "relief, reparation and rehabilitation of countries devastated by German aggression". This statement appears also in British note. MEWFO has queried whether UK would obtain its share as a "devastated country". Apparently they are satisfied on this point. We feel that under this provision the UK's [U.S.?] could not claim any part of German external assets for itself and we therefore assume that our authorities have decided to forego any share thereof. If our assumption is incorrect, then this provision should be changed.

399. Freezing of assets in Sweden of countries formerly occupied by Axis was fully considered during course of recent negotiations with Swedes on Safehaven matters. Dept had strongly favored such freezing as only satisfactory way in which to block and identify enemy assets which may have been secreted in neutrals through names of persons in liberated countries. Question however turned out to be time consuming problem incommensurate with dividends to be expected, Swedes were in opposition to such freeze in absence of acquiescence of countries concerned and several liberated countries had serious objection to freeze on grounds of incompatibility with previous relaxations of controls over their assets by neutrals. Matter was therefore dropped in agreement with Brit so far as Sweden is concerned. Assets of most formerly occupied countries in Switzerland and Spain however were blocked early this year assuming approval of countries concerned. Dept has no objection to Danish authorities requesting Swedes to freeze Danish assets Sweden if they feel that such action would facilitate Danish SAFEHAVEN program but Leg should not press Danes to take this action.

1. Following is outline of Washington Embassy's Arfar ⁵⁷ 1051, December 10 to MEWFO answering MEWFO's 1305, December 7:

(Outline begins.) State Dept reports that apparently Angell and Waley ⁵⁸ still prefer Paris draft while French views still unascertained. Sanctions and inducements proposals regarding neutrals still being considered in Washington "at a high level". Broadly speaking proposed inducements are (firstly) unblocking (secondly) some relaxation of special blocking (thirdly) invitation join Bretton Woods acceptance Safehaven requirements as removing an obstacle to admission to United Nations and admission of organizations such as ECO.⁵⁹ Proposed sanctions are (a) "discrimination" in commodities under our control e.g. coal, rubber and petroleum (b) subjecting commercial transactions to special Treasury licensing (c) possibly denying exchange with Germany of materials and services. (Outline ends.)

- 2. Embassy observes that no reference is made by British in reporting Dept's views to possibility refusal returning to neutrals property owned by them in Germany.
- 3. We endeavored obtain MEWFO's reactions to above sanctions and inducements but were informed that these are essentially political and economic policy problems to be determined principally by other British depts e.g. FO, Treasury, etc., and not by Safehaven authorities. Also that those Depts had these problems under consideration but no conclusions reached yet. We urged British decide on these proposals before Christmas (subject to Dept's forthcoming sanctions telegram) and emphasized Dept's views that notes to neutrals could not be presented until British, French agree on sanctions. MEWFO referred to Arfar 1305 which pressed Washington for presentation notes before sanctions agreed. We answered presentation notes not so imperative now in view Swiss request to negotiate and emphasized Washington would be adamant and no progress possible without prior sanctions agreement.

- 4. MEWFO official reverted to usual argument that British unable apply sanctions because their necessity foster European trade, etc. He thought British would not object to our applying such sanctions unilaterally. His personal view was British would support such unilateral sanctions in the sense that if we withheld e.g. oil from Switzerland, British would refrain from sending oil. We replied this would be very unsatisfactory and urged necessity of united front against neutrals particularly regarding sanctions.
- 5. Regarding Waley and Angell preferring Paris draft MEWFO confirmed British agreement on Dept draft as reported in MEWFO's Arfar 1292, December 5 to Washington,⁶⁰ repeated 186 Paris and transmitted in Embassy's A-1313, December 8 copied to Paris. (See also Embtel 12851, December 7 to Dept, repeated 778 Paris.)
- 6. We also discussed whether in view Swiss request for Safehaven negotiations it would be necessary or desirable to present Safehaven note to Switzerland. Embassy believes on basis information available here would be mistake present full Safehaven note to Swiss (with appropriate minor modifications) in view Swiss démarche. If Dept feels a note to Swiss is necessary or desirable then we believe such note should merely consist of acceptance Swiss suggestion for Safehaven negotiations emphasizing Washington as situs for negotiations and indicating when they should commence. Since primary objective of Dept's draft already achieved by Swiss offer negotiate it would be mistake give Swiss chance to argue on other points in Dept's draft note. MEWFO official was inclined to agree personally. This procedure would not affect presentation notes to other neutrals.

693. To Dept and Treasury as 693 from Legation and Feig. 61 Meeting held on December 15 with Danish Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Finance and Commerce 62 at which my British colleague 63 and I requested effective Safehaven program in Denmark. We referred specifically to failure thus far of Danish Govt in implementing satisfactorily existing Safehaven legislation and strongly stressed need for immediate and vigorous action.

We took approach that we felt certain that Danish Govt agrees in principle and that we are ready to lend all possible assistance and give full cooperation toward this end.

As indication of our desire to cooperate we submitted an aidemémoire containing inter alia outline of broad Safehaven objectives, suggested measures necessary and important to an effective Safe-HAVEN program, suggestion for an Anglo-American-Danish working party, and specific case summaries involving some leading enemy firms against which action appeared inadequate. Copy of aidemémoire will be transmitted by despatch.64

Feig explained in some detail the implications, operation and other technical aspects of an effective Safehaven program and pointed out some of shortcomings of present Danish program.

I stressed importance of quick, effective action with respect to Safehaven program because of its influence on other important matters such as defrosting.

Minister of Foreign Affairs expressed appreciation for proffered assistance and stated his agreement in principle. He said he was prepared to take steps immediately to expedite Safehaven program and that he welcomed suggestion for a tripartite working party. Such a working party was formed on the spot and first meeting arranged for December 18. Feig is to act as technical advisor to working party.

My reaction to meeting is (a) Danes now fully appreciate that US and British Govts are seriously interested in Safehaven problem (b) leading Govt ministers and other officials appear disposed to carry out an effective Safehaven rapidly in implementation of such a program (c) the working party will provide an effective medium through which to expedite implementation particularly if Legation can retain services of Feig to guide working party.

From Danish Govt official we learned informally that Danes have under consideration an enemy property sequestration measure.

We have just seen Arfar 1067, December 15, British Embassy, Washington to MEWFO which reported: (a) US proposals regarding sanctions now agreed and signing expected Monday.⁶⁵ (b) British Embassy urged Department reconsider its position that sanctions be agreed before presentation notes and Department undertook to do so before proposals signed.
- 2. In subsequent comprehensive discussion of reference Arfar Embassy again urged necessity immediate agreement on sanctions before any further action regarding neutrals as expressed paragraph 3 Embassy's 13174, December 15, to Department repeated 803 Paris for Angell. We said we could not possibly commence negotiations with Swiss (or even set date) until sanctions agreement reached. Any attempt to thrash out over-all policy questions involved in sanctions while negotiations going on would enable Swiss to discern disunity between ourselves and would stiffen Swiss resistance and probably cause them to try to play us off against each other. We repeated US would be absolutely adamant that sanctions be agreed before Swiss suggestion accepted. We therefore again pressed for immediate decision by interested British agencies on sanctions outlined in Washington Embassy's Arfar 1051, December 10, to MEWFO (Embtel 13174) subject to Department's forthcoming sanctions telegram. MEWFO official with whom we spoke said he personally quite agreed and would endeavor obtain sanction views of British authorities.

Washington, December 21, 1945—9 p.m.

11022. With ref to proposed note to neutrals transmitted Dept's 5257 Nov 9 [10], to Paris, 66 Dept's 5468 Nov 23 (45 for Angell) and 10216 to London commenting on Angell's 44 (Paris 6556 Nov 12 67), this Govt considers it essential that full agreement be reached by Brit, Fr and US, prior to negotiations, on use of sanctions against those neutrals which do not satisfy us in proposed negotiations. While this Govt is hopeful that negotiations can proceed without requiring any threat of such sanctions, it is basic to negotiations that if they do reach stage where any neutral country does not concur with our basic proposals as set forth below, that negotiators shd be in position to state to neutrals steps which will be applied by Brit, Fr, US and other Allied Nations, in event negotiations do finally fail.

Regarding legal justification of Vesting Decree and our request for recognition of its extraterritorial effects, this Govt shares the Brit view that legal argumentation with neutrals shd be avoided if possible. However, in view of fact that neutrals already have raised legal issue—some of them by expressing desire to know what our legal justification was and others by flatly refusing to recognize ACC as having right to act as Govt of Germany—it might become unavoidable to come out with statement explaining legal basis on which we are proceeding.

As matter of fact, present situation in Germany is unprecedented. Hence, no terminology of international law writings or of applicable court decisions can be used to describe it. However, neutrals must recognize that with surrender of Germany, then existing govt in Germany has ceased to exist. Whether transfer of governmental power to victorious powers was implied by act of surrender or whether vacuum was created which had to be filled to avoid chaos, four occupying powers have "assumed supreme authority with respect to Germany, including all powers possessed by the German Government" according to declaration made at Berlin on June 5, 1945.68 Under terms of surrender, Germany agreed to give effect to any orders or decrees issued by occupying powers. Hence, Law No. 5, "Vesting and Marshalling of German External Assets", is of no less binding force than would be any law enacted by former German govt.

As to contents of law, there can be no question about right of a goyt, to marshal and to take over foreign exchange assets. Number of precedents were established during recent years, not only by former German govts but also by other govts. Justification for such laws has been up to now economic self-defense of the particular country. In case of law in question, reason for its promulgation was self-defense of whole civilized world.

Then-remaining question is whether exercise of such legislative power shd be granted extraterritorial effect. This basically rests on question as to whether, under well recognized principles of comity, it will be granted such effect unless acceptance of such legislation as having extraterritorial effect is held to be contrary to policy or public interest of foreign govt. On basis of issues of morality as well as practical issues involved neutral govts would be fully justified in stating that granting of extraterritorial effect to Vesting Decree is not against their policy or public interest. Morality issues have been fully explored in Rubin memo.⁶⁹ With ref to practical issues it can be pointed out that by recognizing Vesting Decree and by negotiation on disposition of assets, purchaser of an Axis interest in neutral countries will be in position to obtain clear title. On other hand in event that neutrals do not recognize Vesting Decree, title to German assets located in neutral territory will be subject to future contesting claims.

In considering those sanctions which are available and which will be effective, this Govt believes possible use of such sanctions in negotiations shd be brought into use only if neutrals fail to agree: 1) that ACC Vesting Decree applies to all German assets in neutral countries: 2) that all German assets shall be made available to ACC for reparation purposes. With ref to second criteria, this Govt would during course of negotiations consider, if necessary, reduction of second standard to permit neutrals to receive satisfaction of their pre-war claims out of German assets located in neutral country provided, of course, that effective job is obtained with respect to uncovering and turning over to ACC all German external assets. Obviously, however, such satisfaction could not be on 100% basis since many claims are founded on such investments as Dawes bonds, Young bonds, tec., concerning which obviously only small percentage satisfaction would be justified. Exact proportion can be determined after such claims have been reviewed, and also on basis of effectiveness of neutrals in cooperating in marshalling German assets. Initially, however, all funds would be given to ACC which would then pay out agreed to percentage to neutrals.

Sanctions to be applied against neutrals can be divided into two categories:

I. Inducement to neutrals by way of certain steps which would be taken by Brit, Fr and US and other United Nations to remove certain existing controls, shd neutrals satisfy us on above two basic points and shd execution of agreement reached with neutrals prove satisfactory.

II. Sanctions which would be imposed over and above maintenance of existing controls.

In case of inducements, following would be included:

1. Deletion from PL and S Lists ⁷² of German-owned or controlled firms and subsidiary organizations upon liquidation or sale of such firms to satisfaction of Brit, Fr and US and neutrals involved.

2. Institution of procedure for defrosting blocked neutral assets in US, UK and Fr and other United Nations.

3. Quick removal, wherever possible, of all special licensing procedures covering financial and trade transactions.

4. Some satisfaction of pre-war claims as outlined above.

With respect to imposing of new sanctions on neutrals, (Standard II) this Govt considers that the threat of concerted use of all available sanctions shd be available to negotiators. This Govt considers following sanctions are now available:

1. Modification of existing freezing controls over assets and funds of neutrals or neutral nationals in Brit, Fr and US and other United Nations. This would include, for example, withdrawal of general licenses now available to neutrals in favor of institution of specific licensing procedure.

2. Withholding from neutrals of all surplus property located abroad in which they may be interested.

3. Withholding of shipment of certain allocated products (such as coal) to neutrals from US, UK and Fr as well as general embargo on trade with Germany. In addition, US would be prepared through use of specific licensing procedure referred to in 1, above, to use such licensing procedure in such way as to restrict neutral purchases in Brit, Fr and US. In this connection, consideration can be given to withholding of certain shipping facilities in order to insure satisfactory execution of any trade restrictions that may be imposed, if such is found necessary and feasible to implement trade sanctions.

4. Refusal to neutrals of admission to Allied organizations such as European Coal Organization, etc.

5. Exclusion of neutrals from International Bank and International Monetary Fund proposed at Bretton Woods.

6. In addition, willingness of neutrals to comply with above demands could be considered with ref to their admission to membership in UNO.⁷³

Shd Brit and Fr suggest additional available sanctions this Govt is anxious to be so advised and would give them favorable consideration.

In presenting this proposal to Brit and Fr, you are instructed to point out to them that this Govt considers satisfactory conclusion of proposed negotiations with neutrals to be of highest importance, justifying, if necessary, the concerted use of above-described sanctions. Agreement on sanctions would merely constitute agreement to means of assuring execution of External Vesting Decree which was promulgated by Brit, Fr and US. Moreover, this Govt is of opinion that by having full agreement on use of such sanctions prior to negotiations and availability of sanction argument during course of negotiations, negotiators will be placed in better position of achieving our objectives without, in fact, having to resort to use of any or all of the above sanctions. Moreover, in event some neutrals satisfy us during course of negotiations, it is considered necessary that non-agreeing neutrals, shd not receive same treatment as those neutrals who satisfy us. such time as the imposition of sanctions may become necessary with respect to any neutral, the decision on the extent to which we will apply such sanctions will naturally take into consideration then existing political and economic conditions with respect to that neutral.

London and Paris are therefore requested to inform Brit and Fr of this Govt's recommendations as set forth above, and to report to Dept on their reactions and on progress of your discussions.^{73a}

Subsequent efforts by the United States and French Governments to induce the British Government to change its position proved unsuccessful. 740.00119 Control (Germany)/12-2145

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury (Vinson)

Washington, December 26, 1945.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As you know, there have been extended discussions between officers of our two Departments on the subject of implementation of the law vesting German external assets, which was recently issued by the Allied Control Council, and on the impending negotiations with the European neutral countries on recognition of this law and disposition of these assets. These discussions have involved the manner in which the negotiations with the neutrals are to be carried out, and the sanctions and inducements which will be available to the negotiators. The enclosed copy of a cable, which has been sent by the Department today,⁷⁴ reflects one aspect of the substantial agreement achieved in these discussions.

It is my understanding that the Treasury Department objected to the use in the draft cable of certain words which made it specifically appear, in presenting this matter to the British and French Governments, that unilateral action with respect to sanctions would under no circumstances be taken by this Government. This language has been stricken, and you will note that the cable now recommends only that the threat of concerted action should be available to our negotiators.

I should like to make clear, however, as has previously been indicated in informal conversations by officers of this Department, that it seems most unlikely that this Government will unilaterally impose sanctions of the type set forth in the cable. It is the Department's carefully considered view that such action as the withdrawal of presently outstanding general licenses, the limitation of scarce supplies, and the like, will be ineffective and therefore economically as well as politically undesirable unless joined in by at least the United Kingdom and France. I need hardly point out, for example, that limitation of coal supplies by the United States will be of no valuable effect if other countries are in a position to and in fact do make coal supplies available to the neutral countries. In addition, you will recognize the strong political undesirability of such unilateral application of sanctions as would make it appear that this program is solely of concern to the United States, rather than being the United Nations program which it properly is.

One further change has been made in the cable. As has been pointed out by the Department informally, the circumstances of our relations with the neutral governments at any given future moment cannot now The decision on application of the agreed sanctions can be made only in the light of all of the existing relevant conditions and circumstances. Other programs may have to be considered. the extent possible, the Department is anxious to reach firm agreement with the British and French Governments on a program which would, in whole or in part, be put into operation should negotiations with the neutrals fail. Nevertheless, the decision to apply the measures suggested in the enclosed cable must be made only in the light of overall considerations of policy affecting our relations with the country in question. To reflect this point, an additional sentence has been added to the draft cable. This sentence, which has been inserted at the end of the third from last paragraph of the telegram, reads "At such time as the imposition of sanctions may become necessary with respect to any neutral the decision on the extent to which we will apply such sanctions will naturally take into consideration then existing political and economic conditions with respect to that neutral."

I believe it important to outline briefly the approach which the Department will instruct the principal Allied negotiator to make with reference to inducements and sanctions. Initially, it should be pointed out to the neutrals that it is our common desire to eliminate existing financial and trade restrictions in so far as these restrictions arise out of the Allied economic warfare program. Allied desire to return to free trade, international cooperation and understanding has been fully stated on numerous occasions. Unfortunately, but understandably, the removal of such restrictions and the inclusion of the neutrals at this stage in the United Nations' program for international cooperation and understanding cannot be undertaken while Axis persons, funds and entities remain relatively free in areas outside of Axis territory. Our program for reestablishing free trade and international cooperation cannot be satisfactorily executed while those forces which fought against these doctrines continue to exist. While we are just as anxious as the neutrals to terminate our so-called "black lists", our blocking of neutral funds, our financial restrictions on current transactions and similar controls, such controls cannot be removed until agreement is reached which will not only achieve our security objectives, but will also assure that those countries which were devastated and depleted by Axis aggression have made available to them the maximum possible of Axis funds for rehabilitation and reparation.

Failure to reach agreement on these issues, it should be indicated, will necessitate our reviewing the further steps that must be taken to protect ourselves and to achieve our objectives. Such steps will require additional supervisory controls over trade and financial restrictions to assure that our security objectives are met. Obviously, we are not any more anxious than the neutrals to embark upon such a program, which is in opposition to our desires as it is to theirs. It is for that reason that we seek in the spirit of negotiation to achieve our objectives. Presumably, the neutrals share our anxiety to prevent future aggression and to assist in the relief and rehabilitation of devastated and depleted areas. The fact that without reaching agreement on these objectives we not only cannot find our way clear to remove existing controls, but must consider imposition of increased controls, distasteful though they may be, should sufficiently underline the importance with which we view the question of Axis assets and persons.

I feel that by discussing inducements and sanctions along the above lines, we present a reasonable and strong case, which makes very likely our obtaining our objectives. Should we subsequently find that our objectives are not being met, we can specify in greater detail those additional steps which we will have to undertake. This further step will depend, as stated above, on all the existing relevant conditions and circumstances.

Sincerely yours,

Dean Acheson

- (3) While Dept concurs fully with Brit desire to present notes as soon as possible, Dept believes it important to reach agreement on application of sanctions before presentation of notes. In view of desire for Swiss to negotiate (see 4 below), Dept considers that delay presentation of notes is feasible since we can informally advise Swiss that we will be prepared to meet with them early next year. Dept suggests that we aim for Jan 28 as date at which to institute negotiations with Swiss and early part Jan as latest date for presentation of notes. London's and Paris' immediate consideration of Dept's sanctions tel would facilitate presentation notes and institution negotiations. London's 13124 Dec. 14,76 799 Paris, 378 Bern, 327 Madrid, 267 Lisbon, 683 Stockholm, appreciated in this respect.
- (4) Dept concurs that in view representations of Swiss Ministers London and Wash for negotiations with Swiss, Swiss should come first, with request for Wash as situs. This would appear to be satisfactory to Stockholm in view pgh 2 its 3613 Dec 11. However, note to Swedes could set forth tentative date for which invitation would be made.
- (5) Despite Swiss Aide-Mémoire ⁷⁷ requesting negotiations, Dept believes it would nevertheless be desirable to present proposed note to Swiss which at time of presentation can be pointed out to be acceptance of their offer to negotiate (London's 13174 Dec. 15, 803 Paris; Angell's 145, Paris' 7137 Dec. 12 Angell's 5 to Bern, 3 to Madrid, 12 to London). In this way we will be able to make clear to Swiss our terms of reference for negotiations. Before making final decisions, Dept would appreciate receiving Bern's views.
- (6) With ref Paris' 7604 [7004] Dec. 6,78 113 from Angell, 848 to London, Dept appreciates Angell's recommendation that status of ACC reps should be determined and clearly stated in advance. Dept is currently considering this question with War Dept and Clay, taking into full consideration Angell's comments his 113, and will advise you of decision reached. You will be advised further on this.
- (7) With ref Angell's 145 (Paris' 7137 Dec. 12,79 12 from Angell to London), Dept appreciates very much his cooperation. With ref situation Madrid, negotiations with Spain can be conducted after Swedes and Swiss negotiations and, if necessary, nature of negotiations there can be altered. Dept is presently clearing with Treas tel to Madrid authorizing sale of Bakumar so as recommended by Madrid.

- (8) With ref pgh 4 Stockholm's 3613 Dec 11, it seems likely that reparations agreement will provide for some of Germany's external assets to accrue to US. However, consideration is being given to a procedure which will circumvent any weakening of our moral argument. Since we plan to permit desirable local neutral interests first crack at purchasing German-owned or controlled cos, neutrals possible fear of Allied imperialistic attempts would be unjustified. In view of London's apparent clearance of Wash as situs, Brit Legs opposition would presumably be corrected by appropriate directions from London. Fr approval Wash duly noted and appreciated (Paris' 7163 Dec 14).
- (9) Concerning Stockholm's pgh 3, its 3613 Dec 11, Dept agrees fully on necessity reaching agreement with Brit, Fr on both inducements and sanctions prior to negotiations. Dept appreciates Leg's comments re Russia, unilateral sanctions and Brit special interests, and its decisions will naturally take into consideration these aspects problem. Dept agrees Stockholm's 3649 Dec 14 s1 that all three notes to Swedes should be identical with respect to specific date. London and Paris are requested to press this point with Brit and Fr. Specific tentative date can be agreed to once date for Swiss is set.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN MEASURES FOR THE PROTECTION AND SALVAGE OF ARTISTIC AND HISTORIC MONUMENTS IN WAR AREAS¹

The Acting Secretary of State to the Chairman of the Roberts

Commission ²

Washington, February 27, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Roberts: This letter refers to certain previous correspondence and specifically answers your letter dated October 30, 1944.3

A. Summary of certain previous correspondence regarding restitution plans:

- 1. Letter from Justice Roberts to the Secretary of State, July 27, 1944.⁴ Quotes the Secretary's letter to the President (June 21, 1943⁵) outlining the functions of the Commission. States that the Commission's functions "During the War" are being performed, and that it stands ready to perform the functions indicated for it "At the Time of the Armistice"; asks to be advised of any directives being considered by the State Department "for incorporation in the armistice terms insofar as these affect works of art or historic monuments".
- 2. Letter from the Secretary of State (Hull) to Justice Roberts, September 2, 1944: 6 "The Department of State has not considered any specific directives on the restoration of works of art and historic monuments to be included in the Armistice terms, but it has formulated certain statements of policy with respect to reparation, restitution, and property rights vis-à-vis Germany which are applicable in part

For further information on this subject, see Report of the American Commission for the Protection and Salvage of Artistic and Historic Monuments in War Areas (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1946); this report is generally known as the Roberts Commission Report, since the Chairman of the Commission was Associate Justice of the Supreme Court Owen J. Roberts. See also the statement by Assistant Secretary of State William L. Clayton made before the Subcommittee on War Mobilization of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs on June 25, reprinted in Department of State Bulletin, July 1, 1945, p. 29.

Roberts, had been established on August 20, 1943; for documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, pp. 469 ff.

to works of art and historic monuments." These statements of policy were attached in a memorandum. The Secretary asked for an expression from the Commission "with regard to the application of the principles set out in the . . . memorandum to the restoration of looted artistic and cultural objects".

3. Letter from Justice Roberts to the Secretary of State, October 30, 1944. Enclosed a document entitled "Principles for the Restitution of Works of Art, Books, Archives, and Other Cultural Property", dated October 11, 1944, as the Commission's recommended principles.

Urged consideration of 1) the military directives issued by SHAEF,^s and 2) draft directive prepared by American Delegation to EAC,⁹ to be issued to the Commander in Chief of the Forces of Occupation, and stated that these need clarification and broadening in scope.

Enclosed also the recommendations of the Macmillan (British) Committee, dated September 20, 1944.¹⁰ The Roberts Commission agreed therewith, but with two reservations regarding the proposed International Commission viz., 1) if such an International Commission is formed it should not only be advisory to the Commander of the Occupation Forces, "but should be the international agency to exercise the trusteeship of the cultural materials in Germany referred to in the 12th principle suggested by this (Roberts) Commission, and 2) any such international agency should be a United Nations organization".

4. Justice Roberts to Mr. MacLeish, February 3, 1945, ¹¹ answering Mr. MacLeish's request to Mr. Crosby, January 18, 1945, ¹¹ for the Roberts Commission's recommendations concerning the formation of a Restitution Commission on Art and Cultural Objects, and whether it should have advisory or adjudicatory powers. The Roberts Commission was of the opinions: α) that an overall Restitution Commission should be formed, with a branch on art and cultural property; b) that the latter should be advisory, the adjudicatory powers being lodged in another branch of the overall Restitution Commission; and c) it is premature for the Roberts Commission to state whether the so-called Vaucher Commission ¹² could be the advisory branch until the State Department has defined the constitution and functions of the overall Restitution Commission.

- 5. Letter from Mr. MacLeish to Justice Roberts, February 7, 1945, ^{12a} acknowledges receipt of Justice Roberts' letter of February 3, 1945, and promises early answer.
- B. Questions in the above correspondence to which the present letter is an answer:
- 1. Does the Department of State approve the twelve principles submitted by the Roberts Commission on October 30, 1944?
- 2. What is the position of the Department on the three "matters not covered", (A), (B), and (C), mentioned in the same document?
- 3. Has the Department defined its own position on the structure of the overall Restitution Commission, and on the sub-commission, or sub-commissions, which will deal with the restitution of art and cultural objects?
- C. With respect to the twelve (12) principles recommended by the Roberts Commission in the document entitled "Principles for the Restitution of Works of Art, Books, Archives and Other Cultural Property", dated October 11, 1944, and submitted with Justice Roberts' letter to the Secretary of State, dated October 30, 1944, I have the honor to inform you as follows. I shall repeat the recommendations seriatim:
- 1. There should be an unlimited obligation on Germany to restore identifiable looted works of art, books, archives, and other cultural treasures.

Approved.

2. Restitution should be restricted to identifiable property in existence prior to German occupation.

Approved, with the modification that the words "of cultural objects" be inserted after the word "Restitution".

3. Looted property should be restored to the existing governments of the territories where the property had its situs and not to former owners individually.

Approved.

4. Looted property should be returned in the condition in which it is found.

Approved.

5. The return of such property should not count as a credit against Germany's other reparation obligations unless those obligations are expressly based on the removal of the property.

Approved, with the modifications that the word "other" be stricken, a period inserted after the word "obligations", and the rest of the sentence be stricken.

¹²a Not printed.

6. In any case where damage to property is caused by a bona fide effort by the Germans to save the property, reparation may not be charged.

Not approved, on the ground that a general, not a specific, question of reparations accounting is involved.

7. All property removed to Germany during the period of German occupation (except for current output as contemplated under paragraph 2 above) shall be presumed to have been transferred under duress and accordingly treated as looted property.

Approved.

8. If identifiable looted works of art, books, archives, and other cultural treasures cannot be found, there should be an obligation on Germany to replace such articles by a comparable work of art of cultural treasure from their own public or private collections.

Approved.

9. There should be established by all European countries, neutrals as well as belligerents, a freezing control on the exportation and importation of works of art, books, archives, and other cultural property.

Approved.

10. The destruction of identifiable looted property by Allied bombing or other military action should not relieve Germany of the obligation to make reparation or to replace that property with other equivalent art.

Approved.

11. In the application of the principle of replacement, such replacement should be so limited as not altogether to deprive Germany of access to cultural materials.

Approved.

12. To carry out effectively the policies above set forth, consideration should be given to the creation of a United Nations committee, empowered to hold in trust and to administer the cultural resources of Germany, in order to repair, so far as possible, the injury done to communities and peoples deprived of access to art galleries, libraries, scientific museums, and cultural materials generally.

Approved in part. The general plan in Section (E) of this letter provides for a special section of the Restitution Commission to deal with the restitution of art and cultural objects. In addition, it is suggested that there be set up an International Advisory Art Commission, possibly composed of representatives of the national commissions of the interested governments.

The Department has not formulated a policy on the suggestion that the cultural resources in Germany be held in trust and administered in a manner to make them most available to the people of the devastated countries. It is noted that such a plan would be a substitution, at least in part, of the principle of replacement referred to in Item no. 11. A program of this type would necessarily require agreement on the part of the governments concerned. The Department feels, however, in view of the fact that the United States was fortunate enough not to have any of its cultural treasures looted or destroyed, that it would be difficult politically for this Government to advance such a proposal.

- D. With respect to the three "matters not covered", viz. (A), (B), and (C), mentioned in the same document, the position of the Department of State is as follows:
- (a) Property appropriated by Germany from her own nationals. The Department has under serious consideration the difficult legal, political, and economic questions involved in the restitution of property appropriated by Germany from her own nationals, but conclusions with respect to this question cannot as yet be stated.
- (b) Cultural property which was formerly in an Allied country found in another Allied country, as, for example, paintings from a French Museum found in Holland.

(See comment under (c))

(c) Allied art property found in neutral countries.

With respect to these two points, the Department has already taken steps to obtain application of the principles enunciated in Bretton Woods Resolution VI.¹³ A detailed explanation of the steps taken is attached as Annex A, entitled "Memorandum on Endorsement of Bretton Woods Resolution VI".¹⁴

E. Machinery for Restitution of Art and Cultural Objects

The Department regards the problem of implementing the restitution and replacement of cultural objects as part of the broader problem of providing machinery for carrying out the policy of the Allies with regard to restitution in general. The nature of that problem will be different after the establishment of the Allied control machinery in Germany from what it will be in the preceding (or "SHAEF") period. This reference to the desirability of dealing with all questions of restitution under a single Restitution Commission does not indicate that the same policies will necessarily be followed in the restitution of all kinds of property. The handling of the more permanent cultural objects may present special problems and needs and hence may call for different procedures.

In the proposals of the European Advisory Commission regarding the control machinery for Germany ¹⁵ there appear two provisions which have a very important bearing on the present subject matter. The first is the proposed creation of a control organ called "Division of Reparation, Deliveries, and Restitution", which would be an integral part of the general control machinery. The second is a clause which expressly states that United Nations organizations which may be admitted by the control authorities to operate in Germany will, in respect of their activities in Germany, be subordinate to the Allied control machinery and answerable to it.

Present thinking in both the United States and British Governments favors the early establishment of a Restitution Commission, composed of representatives of the U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R. and the interested European Allies, which would be charged with the execution of Allied policy relating to the restitution and replacement of all kinds of looted property. It is likely that such a Commission will be a subordinate organ of the Reparation Commission, but in any event it will, almost unquestionably, be subordinate to the Allied control machinery in Germany.

The Department believes that such a Commission should be guided by the principle of returning looted property to the government having jurisdiction over the situs from which the property was taken. It is felt that if the Commission were to go further and attempt to adjudicate disputes with respect to ownership, liens, etc., it would soon become a center of controversy. Such disputes should be settled as nearly as possible in the circumstances which obtained before the looting took place, and this can best be accomplished in the manner indicated.

The nature of the responsibilities of a Restitution Commission will probably necessitate its being organized by sections, each section to be composed of experts in a given field. One of such sections would probably be a Division on cultural objects, works of art, etc., made up of representatives of all the countries represented on the Restitution Commission. To this section would fall the duty, within the limits of the policies laid down by the Restitution Commission (and ultimately by the Allied Control Authorities), of locating, identifying, safeguarding, restoring or replacing all types of cultural objects.

¹⁵ For text of the Agreement between the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union on Control Machinery in Germany, signed at London, November 14, 1944, and text of the amending agreement between the three signatory powers and the Provisional Government of the French Republic, signed at London, May 1, 1945, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series No. 3070; or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements, vol. v (pt. 2), p. 2062. For documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 100 ff.; ibid., 1945, vol. 111, pp. 160 ff.

It is felt in the Department that if restitution machinery of the type sketched above is agreed to by the major Allies and established, it may well be supplemented by an international advisory art commission, composed perhaps of representatives from the various national commissions. Such an advisory commission should, in the opinion of the Department, be established at the earliest possible moment in order that it may advise the military authorities during the SHAEF period. Such a body should have no adjudicatory function, but should be purely advisory.

Sincerely yours,

Joseph C. Grew

3381. Comea ¹⁶ 203. The problem of restitution of cultural property looted by Germany requires especial consideration in the European Advisory Commission as a particular aspect of general problem of restitution. Consideration of this problem will be greatly expedited if I can be enabled promptly to circulate a draft agreement on principles to govern cultural restitution.

Except in two details noted below, the draft which follows is based on Mr. Grew's letter of February 27, 1945, to Justice Roberts, chairman of the American Commission for the Protection of Artistic and Historical Monuments, which Sumner Crosby, special adviser to the Roberts Commission and to the Department, was instructed to show me.

The French memorandum on restitution (EAC 45/22)¹⁷ which sets forth policies incompatible with United States views on restitution, will form the basis of EAC discussions unless I can circulate a United States draft agreement in time to secure its adoption as a basis of negotiations.

The United States draft directive (EAC 44/31)¹⁸ on arts and monuments provides for joint action in identifying and safeguarding cultural objects pending action for their restitution.

Text of proposed draft agreement follows, with order of articles changed for security:

¹⁸ Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, p. 1060.

 $^{^{16}\,\}mathrm{Series}$ indicator for telegrams from the United States delegation to the European Advisory Commission in London.

¹⁷ Dated March 3, not printed; it called for firm measures to insure prompt return of confiscated material and replacement of art treasures in case the originals had been lost or destroyed (740.00119 EAC/3-345).

The Governments of the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America and the Provisional Government of the French Republic have agreed on the following principles which will govern the restitution of works of arts, books, archives and other cultural property looted by Germany:

books, archives and other cultural property looted by Germany:

[Here follows list of principles similar to articles 1–8 and 11–12 in the draft agreement submitted to the European Advisory Commission on June 11, 1945, printed on page 943.]

The draft makes two additions to the principles set forth in the letter of the Under Secretary. Both are urged by Mr. Crosby and the responsible officers of the United States control group.

The second sentence of article 4 provides that once an object has been returned to a claimant country and accepted by it, that country may not claim additional replacement in kind as compensation for damage to that object. Without this provision a claimant could accept the return of a looted object and still request replacement in kind as compensation for damage or deterioration suffered by it. If such multiple or overlapping claims were allowed, the administrative problem of effecting cultural restitution would be fairly complicated. The words "within a period of 2 years after the surrender or defeat of Germany" have been added in article 8. Some time limit is necessary in order to avoid indefinite prolongation of restitution procedures and in order to impress on the Germans the need for full and speedy cooperation. The French proposal on restitution (EAC 45/22) provides in paragraph 2 a time limit of 6 months. This limit seems too short in view of the conditions likely to prevail in Germany during the first 6 months after defeat.

I trust the Department will promptly authorize circulation of this draft agreement on the EAC.

principle with the British proposal, but we are inclined to favor a total prohibition on all imports and exports to, from, and within the Continent, including Turkey. There are outstanding advantages to be gained from such a prohibition: (1) British and American control authorities would be relieved of an administrative burden. (2) Total prohibition is the surest way to eliminate foreign markets, intracontinental and transoceanic, for looted art. The Roberts Commission on further examination of the British scheme (Redept's 2120, March 19 21) feels that unless an elaborate administrative mechanism is established, the scheme as proposed is unworkable for the following reasons: (a) lack of data on any but most famous paintings, (b) possibility of substitution of copies without detection, (c) inability of control authorities to determine artistic or intrinsic characteristics which give value to objects. (3) deprivation of foreign markets should tend to preserve the status quo. This we consider highly desirable until Allied Control Commissions, and liberated, and perhaps neutral, governments have not only instituted restitution measures but also have made such measures effective.

The prohibition would be effective until a licensing system is established in the particular country concerned. Each country would be required to assume the responsibility of establishing its own licensing procedure. As soon thereafter as British and American authorities are satisfied that the controls are adequate, licensed shipments could be permitted to pass through the blockade. Assumption of this responsibility by the governments of the liberated areas would be consistent with our past statements in which we have recognized their primary interest and responsibility in matters relating to restoration of looted properties. We believe such countries will, as in the case of other Safehaven 22 desiderata, be glad to support our demands upon neutral governments for institution of similar measures.

The total prohibition can, of course, be made effective immediately insofar as the Western Hemisphere is concerned by operation of the blockade. As for the Eastern Hemisphere, we should have to rely upon the local governments.²³ The Department is prepared at this time to approach the European co-belligerents along the foregoing lines and also to include the freeze and licensing suggestions in our Safehaven negotiations with neutral countries. promptly as possible. You should impress upon them the urgency of the matter, particularly since we should wish to include this point in the Safehaven discussions presently under way in Sweden, Spain, and Portugal.

Covering letter of the Belgian Ambassador urges the immediate establishment of an inter-Allied organization representing all looted countries to supervise the execution of cultural restitution. ²⁴ In telegram 4091, April 21, 1945, from London, the Secretary of State was informed that the British Consul at Bilbao had received an application for shipment to Buenos Aires of a portrait of José Rafino de Olasco, a copy of an original by Spanish Artist Hernando Alvárez Sotomayor. Photostats of this portrait were submitted to the Macmillan Committee which raised no objection to the shipment. The American Embassy at Madrid was informed by the Embassy at London to this effect. Ambassador Winant requested instructions "whether MEW should authorize such exports if Macmillan Committee approves without our having received advice from Washington regarding findings of the Roberts Commission." Memorandum by the United States Representative on the European Advisory Commission (Winant)

London, June 11, 1945.

DRAFT AGREEMENT ON PRINCIPLES GOVERNING RESTITUTION OF CULTURAL PROPERTY 28

1. There shall be an unlimited obligation on Germany to restore identifiable looted works of art, books, artistic or historic archives and other artistic or historic property.

²⁷ Not printed; see footnote 20, p. 940.

²⁸ The text of this draft had been sent to Mr. Winant in telegram 4490, June 5, 7 p. m., to London, not printed. The document was circulated in the European Advisory Commission on June 11, and a copy was transmitted to the Department as an enclosure to despatch 23642, June 13, from London, not printed.

- 2. Looted property shall be claimed through the existing Governments of territories where the property had its situs and not directly by the former owners individually. Looted property or replacements therefor shall be delivered to such Governments.
- 3. The return of such property shall not count as a credit against Germany's reparation obligations.
- 4. Looted property shall be returned in the condition in which it is found. If a claimant Government accepts a returned object in a damaged or deteriorated condition it may enter a claim on reparation account for such damage or deterioration but may not demand replacement in kind in compensation therefor.
- 5. The destruction by Allied bombing or other military action of artistic or historic property known to have been looted shall not relieve Germany of the obligations to make reparation or to replace that property with other comparable artistic or historic property.
- 6. Restitution of artistic or historic objects shall be restricted to identifiable property in existence prior to German occupation.
- 7. All artistic or historic property removed to Germany during the period of German occupation shall be deemed to have been transferred under duress and accordingly treated as looted property.
- 8. If works of art, books, historic or artistic archives and other artistic or historic property known to have been looted cannot be found within a period of two years after the unconditional surrender or defeat of Germany, there shall be an obligation on Germany to replace such articles by comparable objects from German public or private collections.
- 9. Works of art and objects of artistic and historic value used in connection with religious ceremonies or edifices of any faith which have proved ecclesiastical ownership prior to 1938 may not be used for replacement in kind.
- 10. Pending the determination of claims for restitution or replacement in kind, works of art, books, artistic or historic archives and other artistic or historic treasures in German public or private collections may not be used for reparations.
- 11. In the application of the principle of replacement, replacements shall be so limited as not altogether to deprive Germany of artistic or historic materials.
- 12. The four Governments will urge that all European countries establish a freeze on the exportation and importation of works of art, rare books, artistic or historic archives and other artistic or historic property in order to cooperate in preventing the concealment of artistic or historic property which has been looted by Germany. The freeze should be followed by provision for the licensing of transactions which would have no harmful effects and which would provide a means for carrying on such commercial transactions as may be possible and proper.

1834. For Pauley.²⁹ Dept understands that you and Mr. Clayton ³⁰ in approving General Clay's ³¹ proposal for transfer of German art treasures to US for safekeeping expressed reservation concerning issuance of public statement making clear that such works of art would eventually be restored to Germany.³²

General Clay has advised War Dept that President had previously approved issuance of such a statement and has asked for further instructions.

Dept is strongly of opinion that both our own people and German people should be assured that we are not appropriating German art treasures. Although Germans may be required to replace in kind looted works of art, books, artistic or historic archives and other cultural treasures which have been destroyed or irreparably damaged, German art should not be appropriated for other purposes. US should set high standard of conduct in this respect and not expose itself to public criticism which would be certain to develop in Allied countries as well as in Germany if it appeared that the US was indulging in "cultural looting." We believe that a statement should be issued in Germany by General Clay, and here by the Dept, making clear that German art treasures are being sent to US only for safekeeping and that they will eventually be returned intact except for such levies as may be made upon them to replace looted artistic or cultural property which has been destroyed or irreparably damaged.

Washington, August 22, 1945—noon.

1884. On August 1, 1945 Secretary of State addressed following letter to Molotov.³⁸

"The United States Zone Commander has informed me that he now holds in the United States zone large amounts of art objects which may be considered in three classes:

of Mr. Pauley; it was transmitted to London in telegram 5109, June 23, 1945, not printed.

³⁸ Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Molotov, People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union. An identical letter was sent on the same date to Ernest Bevin, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

³⁵ Not printed; it stated that the Department had not received any report setting forth the comments of the British Government on the American proposal for a freeze on the shipping of art objects to, from, and within Europe (800.515/5–1245).

a. Works of art taken from the countries overrun by Germany and readily identifiable as publicly owned, and works of art taken from private owners in the overrun countries by seizure and without compensation.

b. Works of art taken from private collectors in the overrun countries for which some compensation is alleged to have been made to the owners.

c. Works of art which were bona fide property of German citizens or institutions.

Instructions have been issued to the Zone Commander to return the works of art of the first two categories to the governments of the countries of origin as rapidly as arrangements can be effected. With respect to the second category, receipts will be taken indicating the amount of compensation alleged to have been paid by the Germans.

It is contemplated that the third category of works of art will be shipped as rapidly as arrangements can be effected to the United States for care and safekeeping, for which adequate facilities do not exist in Germany. Their eventual disposition will be subject to future decisions."

In reply dated August 8 transmitted by Soviet Embassy here ³⁹ Molotov took note of the instructions with reference to points a. and b. of Secretary of State's letter and then stated in paragraph 2 "with respect to the instructions mentioned in point c. we cannot concur. As you remember, in the declaration of January 5, 1943,⁴⁰ the Allied governments warned the governments and citizens of neutral countries that they reserved to themselves the right to declare invalid any transfer of property rights to plundered property and any transactions involving this property, so much the more because there are no grounds for establishing in this respect any privileges whatever for German citizens and institutions".

Dept can not understand this paragraph, particularly since the statements therein do not appear relevant to the disposition of art in category c, which is art of bona fide German ownership.

Please obtain clarification from Soviet FonOff.41

Dept in past has always accepted replacement in kind with respect to restitution of art as distinct from restitution of objects of no unique cultural value. On June 5 Dept transmitted (no. 4490 43) to Winant draft agreement on restitution of art approved by State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee and Roberts Commission which provided "if works of art, books, historic or artistic archives and other artistic or historic property known to have been looted cannot be found within a period of two years after the unconditional surrender or defeat of Germany there shall be an obligation on Germany to replace such articles by comparable objects from German public or private collections". Moreover, all countries which lost part of their cultural patrimony to Germans strongly insist on replacement in kind.

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) to the Secretary of State

London, September 17, 1945.

DEAR MR. BYRNES: In your letter of 1st August,⁴⁷ which you wrote to me from Potsdam, you mentioned, among other things, that it was contemplated that works of art, in the United States Zone of Germany, which were the bona fide property of German citizens or institutions, would be shipped as rapidly as possible to the United States for care and safe keeping, for which adequate facilities do not exist in Germany.

I very much hope that you will be willing to reconsider this suggestion. It seems to me open to a number of important objections. In particular—

- (1) The removal of German art treasures to an allied country in this way would be likely to arouse quite unnecessary ill feeling among Germans and make the task of the Controlling Authorities more difficult.
- (2) The allied countries might also feel resentful, since, although there is no agreed allied policy on the matter, they are counting on obtaining some of these art objects as replacement in kind for some of their own looted art treasures which cannot be found.
- (3) The transport of these art objects overseas and their subsequent return would seriously endanger them and might result in the deterioration of many.

I note that you say there are no adequate facilities in Germany for their safe-keeping. I am bound to say, however, that this does not accord with my information and I suggest that the matter should be ⁴⁵ In telegram 532, September 15, 1945, 6 p. m., from Berlin, Mr. Murphy notified the Secretary of State that the United States Group Control Council planned to make an aunouncement concerning the removal of art to the United States on September 17. The announcement would employ the wording transmitted by the Department with the additional paragraph: "The return of readily identifiable art objects to the liberated countries is already underway." 496. Urtel 499 Sept 11.⁴⁹ Dept appreciates your efforts re return to Belgium of Van Eyck triptych ⁵⁰ and arrangements for initiating similar restitution to other liberated Allied countries. Arrangements approved for admission American zone of French, Belgian, Dutch and Russian fine art representatives and Dept supports your advice to MFA&A that Polish and Czech representatives be invited since program for cultural restitution should be expanded as possible to include all interested United Nations.

Also concur in policy of making former belligerents "wait in line" for return of removed art objects until program for liberated Allied countries sufficiently developed. Until time when return of cultural objects to these countries begun, restitution should be limited to objects having mainly religious significance or use, such as Holy Right Hand of St. Stephen which recently returned to Budapest. Dept believes no return of imperial regalia should now be made to Hungary or Austria, nor should bodies mentioned urtel be handed to Germans.

Devolution of responsibility for handling art objects on representatives of receiving governments and absolution AMG ⁵¹ from any claim for deterioration or otherwise approved. Dept, however, does not concur in inclusion in receipts of proviso that any sum paid by Germans for returned art objects will be credited against reparation claim of receiving government. Resolution of this question can more appropriately be made coincident with examination and discussion of reparations claims to be submitted by invited governments.

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Missions 52

Washington, October 29, 1945—11:55 a.m.

- (1) For some time the Department has been concerned with the problem of tracing looted or Axis-owned art objects sent out of Axis or Axis-occupied territory. It is the policy of the Department to cooperate in the restitution of loot and the discovery of Safehaven funds, objects, or personnel.
- (2) This Government is now considering with the French and British Governments a proposal ⁵³ to invite the Governments of Sweden, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, and Turkey to issue a decree or customs regulation prohibiting the export of works of art, books, artistic or historic archives and other artistic or historic property above a declared minimum value, X, except under license.
- (3) It is proposed that license applications valued between X and Y and concerning which any doubt exists in the minds of the customs authorities as to enemy taint or suspicion of loot should be referred to the United States, the United Kingdom and French missions.
- (4) License applications for exports above a certain declared value Y should be referred automatically to the United States, the United Kingdom and French missions.
- (5) The decree or regulation should require the exporter to file with the license application for exports of art objects over X value, a photograph of each object accompanied by a statement containing name of the artist, full description with date of production, name of owner, date of his acquisition, and if acquired on or after September 3, 1939, full details of acquisition and names and addresses of previous owners since September 3, 1939.
- (6) Customs authorities would then refer cases falling under 3 or 4 above with photograph and accompanying statement to the United States, the United Kingdom and French missions for transmission to the Macmillan Committee, London, the Roberts Commission, Washington, and the Service de Récupération Artistique, Paris, respectively.

Drawn up as a joint proposal by the American Embassy at London and the British Ministry of Economic Warfare, Foreign Office, the draft, designed to implement paragraph 12 of the United States "Draft Agreement on Principles Governing Restitution of Cultural Property," p. 943, was transmitted to the Secretary of State by the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) in telegram 9692, September 19, 1945, 7 p. m., not printed (800.515/9-1945). The proposal was approved by the Secretary of State in his telegram 9205, October 17, 1945, 6 p. m., to London (800.515/9-1945).

- (7) The Department has suggested to London and Paris that the values X and Y be set at $500.00 and $5000.00 respectively.⁵⁴
- (8) It is assumed that the liberated countries have or will introduce adequate export controls of works of art.
- (9) It is also proposed that the governments of the liberated countries be approached with the suggestion that they supply lists of identifiable looted works of art to the governments of the European neutrals and Turkey, and to the three art commissions.

The Department is concerned with the possibility that art objects may be utilized for financing a resurgence of Axis activity in foreign There are continuing indications of movements of looted and Axis-owned objects to all parts of the world. The art may be smuggled in personal luggage or forwarded through regular and open channels with no indication of origin and true ownership. The Department anticipates that persons having in their possession enemyowned and stolen art objects will attempt to conceal them for a number of years in the hope that public and official interest and alertness will subside with the lapse of time. It is also reasonable to assume that such persons will be eager to export them to the United States, preferably from a non-European port, thereby gaining the double advantage of profiting from the high prices offered in the American market and arousing less suspicion than would attach to a shipment from Europe.

⁵⁶ Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. π, p. 243.

If the art market in its area is an actual or potential outlet for Axis-owned or looted art, the missions should report in detail information concerning the market and the leading personalities connected with it. Reports from the mission should also describe laws or regulations, if any, applicable to works of art other than the usual import and export declarations.

Information concerning particular instances of traffic in art objects, suspected or known to be enemy tainted, should be promptly reported. Reports on cases in the rumor stage or under investigation or recommended for intelligence investigation should be graded Secret or Confidential depending on the nature of the material.

When reports of suspected loot or Safehaven art objects come to the attention of officers in the field and there is ground for suspecting that an investigation of the matter would lead to the detection of important persons or plans connected with underground Axis activities, the mission should proceed with caution. Considerations of immediate sequestration, recovery, or restitution of the art object should be subordinated temporarily to the successful operation of intelligence activities designed to disclose to the appropriate agencies of this Government the important Axis persons and plans involved. Reports on such matters should be graded "Secret" during the continuation of such operations. Every effort should be made, however, to prevent the destruction of or injury to valuable or irreplaceable objects of cultural interest.

Reports on art works suspected of being or known to be Axis-owned or looted should give the most complete and accurate information obtainable, including but not limited to the following points. Fragments of information or rumors should be reported if more complete data are not available:

(1) Description of work:

a) Title if any

b) Name of artist or school

c) Date or period of production

d) Material or medium

e) Size (Exact dimensions in centimeters)*

f) Labels and marks

q) Value

h) Three photographs, if possible, of the more valuable paintings or sculpture

i) Citation to published reproduction

(2) Present location

(3) Names and addresses of:

a) Possessor, storage establishment or shipping agent

b) Ostensible owner, handler, cloak, or dealer

c) Real owner at date of report with date of his acquisition and terms or method of acquisition

^{*(}Without frame, mat, or pedestal, etc.) [Footnote in the original.]

- (4) Provenance: List previous owners including names of collections and museums with dates of transfer and terms of sale.
- (5) Give such information as can be obtained regarding the movement or shipment of the art object from the time it left an Axis or Axis-occupied country until it reached its present location, including dates of shipment, names of countries and cities from and to which the object was shipped, names and addresses of the shippers, consignees, or other handlers.

As a matter of administrative convenience, the following definition of "art object" prescribed by the Bureau of Customs for use by collectors of customs under the Trading with the Enemy Act may be used for the purpose of Safehaven reports on looted or Axis-owned art:

- ". . . the term 'art object' shall include any of the following, if there is reasonable cause to believe that the article or lot of articles included in one importation, export shipment, or sale lot (i) is worth $5,000 or more, or (ii) is of artistic, historic, or scholarly interest irrespective of monetary value:
 - (a) paintings in oil, mineral, water, or other colors, tempera, pastels, drawings and sketches in pen, ink, pencil, or water colors, engravings, woodcuts, prints, lithographs, miniatures;

(b) statuary, sculptures;

(c) chinaware, glassware, pottery, porcelain; (d) rugs, tapestries, laces, and other textiles;

(e) jewelry, metalwork; (f) books, manuscripts, archival materials and records;

(g) furniture; (h) curios

A background report on "Looted Art in Occupied Territories, Neutral Countries and Latin-America" has been completed by the Foreign Economic Administration and is enclosed for the mission's information.⁵⁸ The picture of the situation set forth in this report is being continually modified by reports received from the field. It is the intention of the Department to keep the missions informed of current developments in connection with this problem affecting the respective areas.

The Secretary of State to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin)

Washington, November 27, 1945.

Dear Mr. Bevin: I regret that some delay has occurred in sending you a definite reply to your letter of September 17, 1945 on the contemplated transfer of German works of art from the United States zone to the United States. The reason for this delay was the result of my desire to meet your wishes in this matter, which involved discussions with a number of officials.

The situation is now as follows: There will not be any large movement of German art treasures to the United States; the bulk of such objects will remain in Germany. However, it has not been possible for our military authorities to find adequate storage facilities for all these art treasures where they could be properly cared for and would not deteriorate. Consequently, we have decided to bring to this country, as a temporary measure, approximately one carload, and arrangements have been made to that end. This action is strongly recommended by our experts in the field who are convinced that the selection they have made cannot be properly cared for in Germany during this winter. We have made arrangements to ship these art treasures under expert supervision.

In these circumstances, I hope you will agree that there is no serious objection to the trustee arrangements which we have made in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES

Memorandum for the Coordinating Committee, Allied Control Authority ⁵⁹

CORC/P(45)185 (DRDR/P(45)14 Revise) [Berlin,] 6 December, 1945.

Interim Restitution Deliveries (Cultural Objects)

1. Pending settlement of the outstanding problems of restitution it is proposed that interim measures shall be put into force forthwith

⁵⁰ This paper was sent to the Department with despatch 1589, December 28, from Berlin (not printed). The memorandum had been accepted by the Reparation, Deliveries and Restitution Directorate, where it originated, and submitted to the twenty-sixth meeting of the Coordinating Committee on December 12, where it was also approved with the changes indicated. A brief report on the approval of this document is contained in paragraph 3 of telegram 1252, December 13, 2 p. m., from Berlin, vol. III, p. 1462.

for the return of Works of Art and other Cultural Objects taken by the Germans from territories now liberated.

- 2. It is proposed that this interim measure shall be applied to identifiable Cultural Objects which have been the subject of an act of dispossession by the enemy and which were located in a liberated territory and removed by the Germans subsequent to the date of the German occupation of that territory. As a first step restitution will be confined to cultural objects whose identification is easy and whose ownership is well known. As soon as adequate machinery for restitution has been developed and transport facilities have improved the scheme will be broadened correspondingly.
- 3. For the purposes of this paper the term 'Cultural Objects' is defined as all movable goods of importance or value either religious, artistic, documentary, scholarly or historic, the disappearance of which constitutes a loss to the cultural heritage of the country concerned. This definition includes as well as recognized Works of Art, such objects as rare musical instruments, books and manuscripts, scientific documents of an historic or cultural nature, and all objects usually found in museums, collections, libraries and historic archives.
- 4. The claimant countries will be asked to forward to each Allied Headquarters in card form, a description of the looted Cultural Objects believed to be situated in his Zone, giving all possible information which will assist establishing the identity of the object and the fact that it originated from the claimant country. (See Inclosure No. 2 °)
- 5. Each Headquarters will maintain a record of the looted Cultural Objects that have been reported by its staff or declared by Germans to be located in that Zone on prescribed property inventory cards. Where objects included in the lists received from claimant countries have not yet been traced the Headquarters will cause inquiries to be made where circumstances permit. (See Inclosure No. 1 °°)
- 6. As and when information concerning the reputed discovery of looted Cultural Objects comes to light it will be communicated to the Government concerned.
- 7. In the case of each object to be transferred to an Allied Government, the Headquarters will appoint two experts to act as adjudicators and will invite the Government concerned to send one expert representative of its own. These three experts will form a panel which shall decide—
 - (a) That the identification of the object claimed has been established.
 - (b) That the object was removed from the claimant country by the Germans.

^{*} Not printed.

- (c) Whether or not the condition of the object is such as to make its restitution satisfactory to the claimant country.
- 8. The findings and recommendations of the panel of experts will be reported to the Headquarters which, where return of the object is recommended, will authorize its return to the claimant country. Each Headquarters will submit to the R.D. & R. Directorate of the Control Council monthly reports of restitution completed in its Zone during the previous month.
- 9. To facilitate arrangements claimant countries will be asked, when necessary, or to establish a liaison officer at an appropriate office of the Zone Headquarters. Liaison Officers will be required to act as link between claimant countries and the Headquarters staff on all matters in connection with claims for restitution of Cultural Objects including the visits of experts.
- 10. Visiting experts will come to Germany as representatives of the claimant Governments and not as representatives of firms or individuals of such countries. An object, even though private property, will be restored to the representative of the claimant Government acting on behalf of the individual concerned and not to that individual.
- 11. The claimant country, through its Liaison Officers, will make the necessary arrangements for packing, loading and transporting the property to be removed through the Military Government Authorities. Where practical difficulties exist the Headquarters may assist with transport and packing. Costs of transportation within Germany and of labour and materials necessary for packing will be borne by Germany. The question of responsibilities for loss or damage in packing and transportation has still to be decided but the Occupying Power will not accept any liability in this connection. 62
- 12. The properly authorized representative of the country concerned will, at the time of transfer, give an official receipt for the object in the form hereto attached. (Inclosure No. 3 63)
- 13. The Headquarters will maintain proper statistics in connection with objects identified and returned.

The Coordinating Committee approved the proposal of the British member, Lt. Gen. [Washington,] January 16, 1945.

Mr. GILPATRIC: While we agree that we should not interfere with UNRRA's drafting,² as it has in the past, its own instructions, we should at least in an informal way as members of UNRRA try to avoid, by talking to our representatives on UNRRA, that organization from taking steps which would cause political complications or go contrary to the announced policy of the United States Government.

In this particular case, the Polish Government in London 3 is the Polish organization represented on UNRRA and not the Sovietsponsored Lublin Committee.4

It would seem to be advisable to follow somewhat the British line in this matter and indicate to UNRRA that we do not feel that it would be politically advisable for it to enter into a formal detailed agreement here in Washington or in London with the Lublin Government.⁵ There is no question but that the UNRRA delegation will have to work with and cooperate with the Lublin Government on the spot and the Polish Government-in-exile has given its consent to this procedure as the only practical way to get relief supplies to Poland under neutral or United Nations supervision. We should, consequently, indicate to UNRRA that there would be no objection to the head of the UNRRA delegation making any kind of an agreement he wants to on the spot but not here before he leaves.

Incidentally, it may be of interest, if you did not see it, that last week there was published in the Chicago Daily News a Moscow dispatch indicating that the reason UNRRA had not been able to send supplies to Poland was due to the opposition of the Polish Government-in-exile and particularly the Polish Ambassador here; ⁶ an inspired story about as far from the truth as we could find. It might be followed up later in order to give the impression that the USSR is all set but that the London Poles and ourselves won't act while as you know the only holdup is Soviet permission for visas and shipping procedures.⁷

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson)

[Washington,] January 19, 1945.

This meeting ⁸ was called at the request of Mr. Klentsov, the Soviet representative, to discuss relations between UNRRA and neutral countries. It grew out of a memorandum presented by Sir Frederick Leith-Ross to the Soviet Deputy Director General in London, ⁹ the gist of which was that UNRRA proposed to enter into discussions with authorities in Switzerland and Sweden and possibly also Spain and Portugal in order to find out what, if any, public or private plans for relief were under way in those countries so that UNRRA might know about such plans and, if possible, orient them in the most helpful direction. As preparation for the meeting, the Director General ¹⁰ circulated a long memorandum on the possible uses of neutrals in relief. This related chiefly to the neutrals as a source of supply and the neutrals as having programs of their own which could only be carried out in a liberated area with the consent of UNRRA.

⁶ Jan Ciechanowski.

^{*8} Meeting of the Central Committee of UNRRA, held on January 18, 1945, at 3:30 p.m.

¹⁰ Herbert H. Lehman.

The meeting was opened by Mr. Klentsov whose remarks may be summarized as follows:

UNRRA's relations with the neutrals should not be governed by general rules, but a special policy should be adopted in the case of each country. The policy advocated by Mr. Klentsov is stated below:

Switzerland: The principles of the Swiss Relief Organization are contrary to those of UNRRA. This is shown by an alleged statement of Mr. Wetter, the head of the Swiss Relief Organization, who is reported to have said that the Swiss would only give relief to Greece among the Balkan countries because Greece only appealed to the sympathies of the Swiss people. Furthermore, statements had emanated from certain Swiss authorities which have attempted to discredit Yugoslavia. These statements are examples of the reactionary and pro-fascist views of the Swiss ruling classes. Furthermore, if raw materials were given to Switzerland for the purpose of manufacturing relief goods, it is probable that Germany would profit. Mr. Klentsov is against any relations between UNRRA and Switzerland.

Mr. Klentsov points out that UNRRA has employed a Swiss citizen, Mr. Habicht, as Assistant Diplomatic Adviser. Mr. Klentsov objects to the employment by UNRRA of any national of a non-member country. He is against sending any UNRRA mission whatever to Switzerland.

Spain: Mr. Klentsov opposes any purchases by UNRRA in Spain or other dealings with Spain because trade with fascist Spain would help Franco.¹¹

Portugal: Here again, the same observations apply as in the case of Spain and Switzerland because Portugal is a pro-fascist nation.

Sweden: Mr. Klentsov inquired whether any relations with Sweden on the part of UNRRA would interfere with the War Trade Agreements and the general blockade arrangements in respect to Sweden. He was assured that they would not and after some discussion expressed himself as satisfied in regard to UNRRA relations with Sweden.

Governor Lehman ¹² then stated that there were no general rules or agreements contemplated with regard to neutral countries and that he proposed to do nothing in any respect contrary to the UNRRA Agreement or to the Resolutions of the Council. In fact, he had been asked when he was in London whether UNRRA would undertake relief work in Rumania and Bulgaria; to which he replied in the negative except in respect to the work required to be done regarding displaced persons in accordance with Resolution 57.¹³

So far as War Trade Agreements and the blockade arrangements are concerned, the Governor stated that he would not even raise questions in that field. He said that Mr. Habicht was a Swiss citizen who had lived in the United States for a long time and had been a member of the secretariat of the League of Nations. He said that he assumed that Mr. Klentsov had nothing against Mr. Habicht personally and that he knew nothing about Mr. Habicht personally. The question was one of employing neutral citizens. On this the Governor read an administrative order to his staff directing that wherever possible persons employed should be nationals of member countries and in no case should be nationals of enemy or ex-enemy countries. Neutrals might be employed when no other qualified person was available and after careful investigation.

¹¹ Gen. Francisco Franco, Spanish Chief of State.

Mr. Lehman had been Governor of New York, 1933-1942.
 For text, see Woodbridge, UNRRA, vol. III, p. 135.

Mr. Klentsov then asked whether there were not enough United Nation citizens for UNRRA's staff; to which the Governor replied in the affirmative except in special cases, such as nurses, doctors, specialists, and in certain localities in the world where competent allied citizens might not be present.

Mr. Klentsov then asked Mr. Ben Smith 14 and me whether we had ever been invited to recommend anyone for the position held by Mr. Habicht and whether, if we had been asked, we could have recommended someone. We both replied that we had not been asked and that if we had been we should have done our best to comply with the request but could not tell at the moment whether we would have been able to produce a suitable person.

Mr. Klentsov then asked me to express my views upon the matter under discussion. I stated the following:

- (a) As to the broad question of having no relations with neutral countries, I did not know that this question was to be raised and could not comment on it without instructions from my Government which I did not have.
- (b) So far as the purchase of supplies was concerned, from the papers submitted by the Director General it was planned that the Combined Boards 15 have indicated a neutral country as the source of supply for UNRRA of certain commodities such as morphine, phos-If UNRRA could not purchase these, then either some member government had to purchase them or UNRRA would have to go without the supplies. I pointed out that economic warfare considerations were not involved since everything was required to be done through the economic warfare authorities of the allied countries.

(c) I thought that as a practical matter some arrangements would have to be made with citizens of neutral countries, such as the Swiss-Swedish Commission in Greece.

(d) So far as the question of Mr. Habicht was concerned, I thought that that matter might well be left in the hands of the Director General and for him to take such action as he thought wise in the light of the discussion which had just taken place.

¹⁴ United Kingdom representative on the UNRRA Central Committee. ¹⁵ Combined Food Board, Combined Production and Resources Board, Combined Raw Materials Board, Combined Shipping Adjustment Board.

Mr. Ben Smith expressed general agreement with the views expressed by me, but was inclined to state in the absence of instructions that he believed that arrangements would prove to be necessary with the neutral countries. Mr. Liu Chieh, the Chinese Minister Counselor, expressed general agreement with me.

The Canadian Ambassador,¹⁷ who was present in his capacity as Chairman of the Supplies Committee, did not comment.

Mr. Klentsov then said that in his judgment this matter was settled by a resolution of the Council which contained a phrase stating that in carrying on its relief activities UNRRA should not impede in any way the prosecution of the war. Mr. Kentsov asked whether UNRRA could have any relations with the countries which he had mentioned without impeding the prosecution of the war. He then said that any member country which wished to could, of course, have dealings with Switzerland, Spain and Portugal, but he insisted that UNRRA which was an international organization must not have such relations and must not send missions to those countries.

I made a motion to adjourn so that the members might consider the views expressed. The Central Committee will meet again on Thursday, January 25 at 3:30 p.m.

After the meeting, Mr. Klentsov said that his instructions required him to make the same observations about Argentina and Turkey, but before doing so he wished to discuss the matter with me. We agreed to meet for this purpose.

[Washington,] January 22, 1945.

Mr. Acheson: It is my feeling that we should not accept Mr. Klentsov's point of view in regard to UNRRA plans to obtain supplies in neutral countries.

UNRRA was set up as a purely humanitarian organization to assist various peoples who have suffered from German aggression and was established as an international organization in order to prevent as much as possible political considerations from creeping into these purely humanitarian activities. There is no question but that the position taken by Mr. Klentsov is motivated by purely political considerations.

¹⁶ Chinese representative on the UNRRA Central Committee.

¹⁷ Lester B. Pearson, who presented his letters of credence on January 22, 1945.

Moreover, with the supply and shipping situation being as it is and the need for relief increasing daily, UNRRA should be permitted to obtain supplies from any available sources without regard to any political considerations whatsoever.

It is my feeling that we should make this very clear to Mr. Klentsov in a most firm manner.

Draft Minutes of the Eleventh Meeting of the Central Committee of the UNRRA Council 18

[Extract]

Washington, January 25, 1945—3:30 p.m.

III. Discussion of the relationships of UNRRA to non-member countries

Mr. Klentsov said that he had presented his recommendations at the previous meeting. He wished to urge on the Committee that it was contrary to the principles of UNRRA that it should have any dealings with Fascist and ¹⁹ pro-Fascist governments, and that in his view any such relations could only discredit the organization. In explanation Mr. Klentsov said that by "relationships" he meant such activities as the dispatch of UNRRA missions to such countries, the discussion of joint relief programs with them, or the procurement of supplies from them.

Mr. Acheson said that he had had some further discussion with Mr. Klentsov on this subject. As he understood Mr. Klentsov's position, there were three points to which Mr. Klentsov strongly objected. He (Mr. Acheson) would like to make his position clear on these three points. As to procurement in neutral countries, Mr. Acheson said he believed that it would be advisable for the Administration to draw upon neutral sources for supply wherever possible since this would lessen the supply burden falling upon the United Nations. As to the employment of neutral nationals by the Administration, he regarded this to be a matter for the Director General's discretion. As to the dispatch of UNRRA missions to neutral countries, he had been unable at the previous meeting to express an opinion. He now wished to say that he could not join in any resolution which forbade the Director General to send such a mission. On this last point, however, he inquired whether the need for a mission was fully established and whether the purposes which the Administration had in view were of sufficient importance to justify any immediate action.

¹⁸ These draft minutes were transmitted to Mr. Acheson on January 30 by P. W. Kuo, Deputy Director General of UNRRA, in charge of the Secretariat. Members and officers of the Committee present were the Director General, Herbert H. Lehman, Liu Chieh for China, Vlas Andreevich Klentsov for the Soviet Union, Ben Smith for the United Kingdom, and Dean Acheson for the United States.

¹⁹ On February 13, 1945. Mr. Acheson was informed by Mr. Kuo that the

The Director General said that, as the members of the Committee knew, no mission to Spain or Portugal was contemplated. One official of the Administration had however been sent to Sweden, while an unofficial representative had been stationed in Switzerland for a considerable time. As the Swiss Government had announced its intention of spending a considerable sum for relief he thought it important that the Administration should know what policy the Swiss Government proposed to adopt. Mr. Klentsov's fears that the Administration might, as a consequence of discussions with the Swiss Government, become involved in relief operations for the benefit of the enemy were groundless. There could be no question of the Administration accepting any contribution from the Swiss Government which had any such conditions attached; but he could see no reason for refusing any assistance which the Swiss Government might be able to offer if it were given unconditionally.

Mr. Smith said he believed that the acceptance of such gifts was foreseen under the Council Resolutions.

Mr. Klentsov asked whether the other members of the Committee wished to express their views on the points he had raised.

Mr. Acheson said that he had already given his views but he would like to express his opinion as to the undesirability at this stage of stressing the political aspects of negotiations with a neutral country such as Switzerland. He wondered whether it was necessary to precipitate such a discussion by sending a mission at the present time.

Mr. Smith asked whether it would not be possible to have a prior discussion of any such approaches by the Central Committee before negotiations were opened up.

The Director General said that he found the position which Mr. Klentsov wanted the Administration to adopt to be a difficult one which would handicap the Administration. For example, in Greece it was desirable that the Administration should work in cooperation with the Swedish-Swiss Commission; by so doing the Administration would gain certain very considerable advantages in respect of shipping. He felt that in such instances the Administration should be free to settle the terms of such cooperation. He was disturbed at Mr. Klentsov's suggestion that UNRRA should have no relations with such authorities.

Mr. Liu said that in his opinion it would be unfortunate if the Administration had to consider the political implications of every step it took; there were certain political issues upon which it was essential to proceed cautiously, but the Administration's work would be seriously delayed if political considerations were introduced into every aspect of its operations.

There being no further discussion, the Director General said that he wished to make a concluding statement which he trusted would meet the views of the Committee.

"In order to avoid future misunderstanding on this subject, the Director General wishes to reiterate that he will, in all relationships with neutral countries, either in connection with the coordination of their relief programs with those of UNRRA or in connection with the procurement of furnishing of supplies which cannot advantageously be secured elsewhere, make every effort to do nothing that might in any way impede the conduct of the war. With this assurance, unless the Director General is otherwise directed by the Council or by the Central Committee under its emergency powers, he will feel justified in carrying on such conversations as in his opinion may be necessary, or in concluding such arrangements as may appear advisable with such governments to secure a coordination of relief efforts. He will, further, feel justified, in the absence of any contrary action by the Council or the Central Committee, in making purchases from neutral countries where such purchases, in his opinion, are necessary for the efficient and prompt carrying out of the duties which have been assigned to the Administration. Such purchases would be made through the national agencies of member countries."

The Director General repeated the assurances he had given previously that in no circumstances would he contemplate taking any action which might be contrary to the interests of the conduct of the war by the United Nations.²⁰

Memorandum by the Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs (Durbrow) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson)

[Washington,] February 6, 1945.

Mr. Acheson: Mr. John Russell of the British Embassy ²¹ gave me a copy of the attached telegram received from London ²² expressing the British Government's apprehension regarding UNRRA's proposal to consign supplies to the Republic of Poland.²³

 $^{^{\}rm 20}\,\rm This$ concluded the Central Committee's discussion of UNRRA's relations with neutral nations.

²² Not printed.

²² Provisional Government of the Polish Republic.

It will be noted that the British Government feels that, if UNRRA is of the opinion that the supplies should, for practical reasons, be consigned to the Republic of Poland, the Administration should make it absolutely clear in a public statement that this does not constitute recognition of that Government; that their dealings with that Government are on a purely de facto basis. The British Government apparently prefers to have the goods consigned to a department of the Polish administration or to an individual by name if that is possible.

The telegram suggests that the British Embassy take up this question with the Department, and if we agree, that the matter should then be taken up informally with UNRRA.

In regard to the suggestion in the last paragraph of the telegram that it would be advisable for UNRRA to adopt the same procedure used by the American Red Cross in Poland, the American Red Cross has informed me that they have consigned their goods to the Polish Red Cross in Lublin purposely in order to avoid any implication that they recognize the Lublin Government.

In view of the British Government's feelings and the complications which might result from any attempt to consign the goods to the Polish Government in Lublin, it would appear advisable that we concur with the British to have the goods consigned to UNRRA in Lublin.

I told Mr. Russell that it was my understanding that we had informally indicated that we felt it would be advisable to consign the goods to UNRRA in Lublin and as far as I know they had agreed to do this.

Since Mr. Russell would like to know what our basic thoughts are on this matter, please let me know what you feel I may pass on to him.²⁴

- 2. Department assumes that recent action in London, now confirmed, by the Central Committee, will lead to public expectation throughout Northwest Europe of more substantial relief than either present supply or shipping availability can possibly permit. It is also anticipated that third governments will not hesitate to let UNRRA take the blame where possible for their own failure to import sufficient civilian supplies to meet urgent needs, especially those of displaced persons within their borders.
- 3. This Government will support UNRRA's request for supplemental supplies to meet the purposes of the Resolution but separate shipping programs cannot be justified. Whatever UNRRA does bring in to Northwest Europe will therefore have to come on military ships or vessels assigned to the national governments. We hope that some small boats may be found available in the U.K. for cross channel direct delivery. The only important and accessible quantities of supplies to meet immediate UNRRA requirements in this connection will be from the U.K. stockpile, and it is hoped that the U.K. will cooperate in this respect, especially since London originated this new responsibility for UNRRA.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of European Affairs (Hickerson)

Mr. Menshikov came in to see me yesterday afternoon by appointment made at his request. He is one of the Deputy Directors General of UNRRA and is in charge of the Bureau of Areas.

²⁷ Stanley K. Hornbeck, Ambassador to the Netherlands Government in Exile located in London.

²⁸ Reference is to the "Resolution for Emergency Relief Programs", approved by the UNRRA Central Committee on February 26, 1945; for text, see Woodbridge, UNRRA, vol. III, p. 174. Reference to London is due to the fact that the resolution was initiated by the Subcommittee on Welfare for Europe and then passed on to the Central Committee by the Committee of the Council for Europe; see ibid., vol I, p. 78, and vol. II, p. 344. For an account of the Northwest Europe Emergency Supply Program, see ibid., pp. 342–347.

Mr. Menshikov said that he was particularly interested in obtaining any possible information in regard to the situation in Poland. explained that UNRRA has a ship loading with supplies which is to sail in a few days for Constanta, the supplies being destined to Poland. He said that UNRRA is having great difficulty in finding anyone in Poland with whom to communicate. He said that about two months ago they decided that as a practical matter they could not effectively communicate with the Polish Government in London in regard to the situation in Poland and that they had been endeavoring to communicate with the local authorities in Poland. He said that they had sent numerous messages but that they had received only one reply. This reply came from some official connected with the Lublin Committee and the reply urged that they expedite supplies via Constanta.

Mr. Menshikov said that in their efforts to communicate with the local authorities in Poland he had tried the Soviet Embassy in Washington as a channel of communication but that this had resulted in no improvement in the situation and UNRRA was still almost completely in the dark in regard to the relief situation in Poland. He inquired whether there was anything beyond the Yalta communiqué 28 which I could tell him about the Polish situation which might help them in their planning.

I told Mr. Menshikov that the State Department wishes to be of every possible assistance to UNRRA and that I could appreciate the difficulties of communication in respect to Poland. I told him, however, that there was very little that I could add to the Yalta Communiqué. I went on to say that he would have noted that Mr. Molotov 29 and the American 30 and the British Ambassadors 31 were constituted as a commission to consult with the Poles from within and without Poland with a view to the reorganization of the Polish Government and the constitution of a Polish Provisional Government of National Unity. I said that it was hoped that this work would go forward rapidly and that the Provisional Government of National Unity could be constituted in a short time. I reminded Mr. Menshikov that the Soviet, United States and United Kingdom Governments will establish diplomatic relations with that government. I added that when the new Provisional Government of National Unity is established there will then be no question as to the Polish authorities with whom UNRRA should deal.32

Washington, March 7, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I enclose the text of a telegram which I have received from President Osmeña on behalf of the Philippine Government.33

As the Philippine Government is a signatory member of the Administration, it may expect to receive assistance in relief and rehabilitation from the Administration, in accordance with the Resolutions of the UNRRA Council. In view of the recent decision of the Central Committee.³⁴ UNRRA is under obligation to provide emergency supplies and services in advance of any application which the Philippine Government may make to be adjudged unable to pay. For my part, I am of course anxious that any assistance which the Philippine Government may stand in urgent need of and which the Administration may be able to give should be rendered.

However, in view of your statements to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs when UNRRA's appropriation was being discussed (Hearings, Committee on Foreign Affairs on H.J. Res. 192, page 45), we have assumed that UNRRA's part in the relief and rehabilitation of the Philippines would be secondary to that played by the United States Government, and in view of the great responsibilities which the United States has acknowledged towards the Philippines, this would seem a natural arrangement. Nevertheless, UNRRA will be operating certain services in relation, for example, to the control of epidemics, the improvement of health conditions and the movement of displaced persons, which will be of concern to the Philippine Government, and services of this character will, of course, be made available to the Philippine Government if this is desired by them.

I should be grateful, therefore, if you would inform me of your Government's policy towards the problems of relief and rehabilitation in the Philippines.

Very sincerely yours,

HERBERT H. LEHMAN

840.50 UNRRA/3-745

The Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson) to the Director General of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (Lehman)

Washington, March 19, 1945.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR LEHMAN: I have your letter of March 7, enclosing a copy of a telegram sent to you by President Osmeña on behalf of the Philippines Government, and inquiring as to the United States policy of relief and rehabilitation in the Philippines.

In the immediate future, the United States Army will be responsible for all civilian imports into the Philippines, as is the case during the so-called military period in other liberated areas. I am, however, summarizing herewith the interim plans being sponsored by civilian agencies of this Government for relief to the Philippines, as I am sure that you will want to take them into consideration in reaching a decision as to the extent of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration's participation in that effort.

Except for supplies procured and delivered by the military as part of what might be called a Pacific Plan "A", and a small barter program of trade goods involving about $5,000,000, which will be used primarily to stimulate production of abaca—a critical war material, only one civilian supply program, presumably for delivery in the post-military period, has been contemplated by a United States agency which, in turn, has been authorized to sustain a loss if necessary, although procurement and distribution are to be implemented as a commercial transaction. This latter program was originated by the Department of the Interior and the Philippine Division of the Department, in consultation with representatives of the Commonwealth and the Foreign Economic Administration. The program was then adopted by the Commonwealth as an immediate and practical civilian supply target, and submitted for procurement to the Foreign Economic Administration through the Department of the Interior. The cost of this program is estimated at between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000, and I have asked that details of the supplies and quantities to be furnished should be made available to you promptly and in full.

If UNRRA does undertake relief and rehabilitation responsibilities for the Philippines, I would expect coordination of civilian supply arrangements between the Administration and this Government. Until such a decision is reached, I suggest that UNRRA consult informally with the United States agencies concerned as to changes that may occur in their present planning or objectives. Similarly, we would like to be kept informed of the progress in your discussions of this problem with the Philippine Government.

At the moment, and as a preliminary response from the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration to the Commonwealth Government, I should think you might want to offer the same sort of assistance to the Philippines as is being extended to the countries of Northwest Europe, in accordance with the Resolution passed by the Central Committee on February 26.37

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

840.50 UNRRA/3-2045

The Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson) to Mr. Myron C. Taylor, Personal Representative of President Roosevelt to Pope Pius XII

Washington, March 20, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Taylor: The Department has noted with particular interest recent cables and despatches in which you have reported on various aspects of the problem of coordinating the proposed UNRRA program of relief for Italy with that of American Relief for Italy.³⁸ There are several important considerations in this matter, especially those bearing on the relations of other governments with UNRRA. After discussing these matters with the Secretary, he has asked me to write to you in some detail because of my familiarity with the deliberations at Montreal,³⁹ and the subsequent negotiations which the Department has carried forward since with UNRRA and British officials relative to the proposed relief for Italy through UNRRA.

This Government was the original sponsor of UNRRA participation in alleviating Italian distress. We have been and still are impressed with the over-all Italian relief supply problem as a financial one for which, thus far, no satisfactory solution has been found. The Italian Government is fully aware of the difficulties involved, and, I think, appreciates that the Montreal agreement, covering limited UNRRA activities in Italy,⁴⁰ was, in the first instance, a method of adding to the Italian foreign exchange resources.

There is never a gain without some loss in multilateral arrangements, and one corollary of accepting UNRRA funds and assistance for Italy is the concurrent obligation to accept UNRRA's method of operation. This latter is a compromise of many views and does not therefore reflect all of the principles which this Government has sought to protect through the President's War Relief Control Board.41 In addition, we have been subject to active pressure on the part of some of the UNRRA member governments to establish that organization as the coordinator of all voluntary relief activities under Article IV(2) of the UNRRA Agreement.⁴² I am enclosing for your information in this connection copies of an exchange of memoranda with the British Government 43 in which you will note our acceptance of the general principle that UNRRA must be given a large measure of responsibility for the coordination of private effort related to specific relief functions which it undertakes by agreement with governments of liberated areas.

³⁷ In a letter of March 26, 1945, the Director General informed Mr. Acheson that he had offered to President Osmeña to set aside a provisional fund of $1,000,000 for relief supplies to meet the immediate emergency (840.50 UNRRA/-3-2645).

American Relief for Italy has done outstanding work, thanks primarily to your efforts. The Department is very anxious that the autonomy of these operations remain undisturbed, not only because of their importance to the Italian people, but also because foreign governments should clearly understand the difference between voluntary relief activities of the American people and those which are undertaken by an international organization of which this Government is only one of forty-four members.

I am sure that the appropriate officials of the Italian Government are aware of the U.S. interest in relieving the destitute civilian population of Italy by any means possible. The fact that this must be done through two separate channels presents a problem of coordination of effort and is one which the Italian Government itself must help to solve in the first instance. I am therefore sending a copy of this letter to Ambassador Kirk 44 for his information.

I have also asked Mr. James A. Stillwell, 45 who will be in Rome in the near future as an officer of the Department thoroughly familiar with Italian supply procedures and developments, to put himself at your disposal for any detailed information on UNRRA activities here on which you may desire further enlightenment.46

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs (Thompson)

[Washington,] March 24, 1945.

The Polish Ambassador said he presumed I had seen the announcement made by UNRRA that a Soviet citizen ⁴⁷ had been made head of its mission to Poland and that the only Polish authority with which UNRRA would deal on Polish relief matters was the "Polish Provisional Government in Poland". The Ambassador inquired whether the State Department had been concerned in this matter.

I replied that UNRRA was an international organization and that the State Department had not been consulted.

The Ambassador said that the Soviet Union was even more of a receiving country for UNRRA relief than was Poland and that the Polish people would not understand how American relief can be distributed under Soviet auspices. He said he intended to see Mr. Lehman and might be obliged to issue a statement. He hoped, however, that the matter would be brought to the attention of the Secretary and that the Secretary would be able to make some statement on the matter, perhaps at his press conference in reply to a question.⁴⁸ that concluded with the Yugoslav Government.⁵³ This telegram directed the insertion of a clause as follows: "Whereas the democratic government of Albania (hereinafter referred to as the government) exercises administrative authority in Albania within the meaning of Resolution I 54 of the Council".

We and our British colleagues agree that the use of the expression "democratic government of Albania" is highly undesirable and we have arranged for AFHQ to telegraph urgently to the British Military Mission at Tirana asking Brigadier Hodgson 55 to explain our position to Hendrickson and to ask him to refrain from using that terminology if in any agreement that may be negotiated. We have stated that reference to the Albanian regime should follow lines of draft prepared for military relief agreement which is: "Colonel General Enver Hoxha, Commander-in-Chief, Albania National Army of Liberation, and Principal Albanian Military Authority." We have also emphasized that in no circumstances should the agreement imply recognition of Hoxha's regime as government of Albania.⁵⁶

In order that there may be no further hitch in this matter we hope that Department will explain to Governor Lehman that this action is in keeping with our policy and that of Great Britain with respect to question of non-recognition at least for time being of present ANLA 57 regime.

The Polish Ambassador (Ciechanowski) to the Acting Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs (Thompson)

Washington, April 7, 1945.

DEAR MR. THOMPSON: With reference to our two conversations ⁵⁹ on the subject of the decision taken by the Hon. Herbert H. Lehman, Director General of UNRRA, of interrupting contact and collaboration between the Polish Government and UNRRA,—I have, after consultation with my Government, today sent a letter to Governor Lehman, of which I send you a copy.

Hoping to see you soon, I am [etc.]

J. Ciechanowski

[Enclosure]

The Polish Ambassador (Ciechanowski) to the Director of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (Lehman)

[Washington,] April 7, 1945.

Sir: On March 23rd, the daily press published two press releases issued by the UNRRA, announcing: (1) the resignation of Mr. John P. Gregg as head of the mission of UNRRA experts designated in October, 1944 to carry on UNRRA relief in Poland, (2) the appointment by yourself of Mr. M. Menshikov, a Deputy Director of UNRRA, to head a mission designated to go to Poland for the purpose of negotiating an agreement for relief and rehabilitation in that country with the local Soviet sponsored authority, acting there at present.

These UNRRA press releases also contained the information that all matters relating to relief for Poland would henceforth be exclusively discussed and settled by UNRRA with representatives of the so-called provisional government at present acting in Poland and that UNRRA officials would no longer maintain any contact with the Polish Government.

On March 26th I called on you personally to ask you kindly to explain your decisions about which the Polish Government had not been directly informed. In our conversation you confirmed the above press statements. You explained that you had taken the decision to discontinue contact with the representatives of the Polish Government in all matters relating to Polish relief for "practical reasons" and that, for the same reasons you thought fit henceforth to deal in all matters of Polish relief exclusively with the so-called "provisional government in Poland."

⁵⁰ The first conversation took place on March 24; see memorandum on p. 973. The second conversation was held on March 31; memorandum of this conversation not printed.

I beg to confirm what I then told you, that I consider this decision as an unilateral action, devoid of legal foundation, and, as such, one which the Polish Government cannot agree to take into consideration. Moreover, this decision appears to me to be harmful, inasmuch as it introduces an element of political expediency contrary to the spirit of UNRRA and entirely unrelated to the nature of relief work for which it was organized.

I take this opportunity of reminding you, Mr. Director General, that, from the outset, the Polish Government gave you every proof that it was solely concerned in cooperating with you in order to assure the speediest and most effective functioning of UNRRA relief in Poland. The Polish Government actively and effectively collaborated in every way to assist you in all the phases of relief planning and urged you repeatedly to speed the dispatch of a mission and of food and other supplies to Poland. The Polish Government made it perfectly clear in numerous conversations and in writing, that it raised no objections to any contact and coordination of the UNRRA mission in the course of its work in Poland with any local authorities and organizations within the limits prescribed by Resolutions of the Council of UNRRA.

I am compelled to remind you that the Polish Government is one of the Founder-Member-Governments of UNRRA and, as such, on the basis of Art. 2 of the Agreement signed in Washington on November 9th, 1943,60 it is entitled to all the rights enjoyed by Member-Governments and cannot admit that the Executive Authority of UNRRA should sever relations with its representatives by unilateral decision of the Director General, whose statutory functions do not entitle him to take such a decision. In accordance with Article III of the Agreement, even the Central Committee of UNRRA, -one of its highest authorities—"shall invite the participation of the Representative of any Member-Government at those of its meetings at which action of special interest to such Government is discussed." No subject can more closely concern the Polish Government than the problem of relief for Poland in all its aspects, and consequently, no decision of the Director General can deprive the Polish Government of its right to maintain contact and to collaborate in these matters with the Executive Authorities of UNRRA. Nor can any circumstances be invoked which could authorize the Director General or any other Officials of UNRRA to refuse to maintain such contact, allegedly "for practical reasons".

⁶⁰ Department of State Executive Agreement Series No. 352, or 57 Stat. (pt. 2), 1164; for related documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, pp. 851 ff., and pp. 1014 ff.

Consequently, I am compelled to express the opinion that the decision taken by you exceeds the limits of your competence under UNRRA Statutes.

The Polish Government reserves all its rights, as a Member Government of UNRRA, in relation to the unilateral decision taken by you without previous consultation with the Executive Committee and without consulting the Polish Government, directly interested.

840.50 UNRRA/5-1645

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to President Truman

[Washington,] May 16, 1945.

A decision must be made on the important and delicate question of which Poles (London or Warsaw) should be invited to the next UNRRA Council Meeting scheduled to start in London on July 16. Invitations to the meeting must be sent out sixty days ahead of the scheduled date.

The London Poles are charter members of UNRRA and are now taking part in its committee meetings. On the other hand, if UNRRA supplies are to be sent to Poland, they will be delivered under the supervision of Warsaw Poles.

The following alternatives present themselves:

1. Invite the Warsaw Poles.

This would be counter to the position taken by us at Yalta and San Francisco.⁶¹

2. Apply the San Francisco formula of inviting no Poles.

In view of the attitude assumed by the Soviet Government regarding the Yalta-Polish decision and the arrest of the sixteen underground leaders, 2 to refuse to invite the London Poles to a meeting of an organization of which they are members would constitute a more severe blow to that Government than not inviting them to San Francisco. By excluding the London Poles, domestic repercussions might ensue in the United States and Soviet propaganda would probably make capital of this action as proof that the West had completely washed its hands of the London Poles. On the other hand, having set the precedent at San Francisco of not inviting any Poles until a new government is formed, we would be on much safer grounds. Moreover, this formula would avoid the risk of precipitating a serious breach with the Soviet Union on questions involving a purely humanitarian organization, when the issues are much more fundamental and should be faced and dealt with on a purely political plane.

⁶¹ Reference is to the United Nations Conference on International Organization, held at San Francisco, April 25-June 26, 1945; for documentation, see vol. 1, pp. 1 ff.
⁶² For related documentation, see vol. v, pp. 361 ff., passim.

3. Invite the London Poles.

This is the legal solution since they are members of the organization and have a legal right to attend. On the other hand, if we adopt this solution we must face the possibility that the Soviet Union might withdraw from UNRRA, together with Czechosolvakia and Yugoslavia, which would have very far-reaching repercussions. It could be argued that the London Poles be invited as the legal members of the organization but that they would be replaced as soon as a new government of national unity is established.

While we are definitely of the opinion that we should adopt the second solution, the British Government has indicated that it feels that the London Poles should be invited on legal grounds.⁶³

The question has been discussed with Governor Lehman who is inclined to handle the matter in the following manner:

- 1. If the United States Government desires to apply the San Francisco formula while the British Government still desires to invite the London Poles, the Governor will accept responsibility and apply the San Francisco formula without calling the Central Committee of UNRRA (composed of U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R., and China) and thus put the question up to the Council to decide after it convenes in London.
- 2. If the American and British Governments should decide that they would wish to have the London Poles invited the Governor feels that such action in all probability would bring about a serious rift in UNRRA if not its complete dissolution. In this event his present inclination is not to accept the responsibility for so serious a step but to call the Central Committee and let them decide the question. This would undoubtedly precipitate the whole question with the Soviet representatives and might even cause the Soviet Union to refuse to attend the Council meeting. If the British and United States Governments made an issue of this matter it might cause the Governor to resign rather than to take any responsibility for breaking up the organization he heads.

I would appreciate having your decision in this matter.64

The United States Representative, Committee of the UNRRA Council for the Far East (Acheson), to the United Kingdom Representative, Committee of the UNRRA Council for the Far East (Butler)

Washington, May 18, 1945.

My Dear Sir Paul: At the Lapstone meeting ⁶⁵ of the Committee of the UNRRA Council for the Far East, Mr. Abbot Low Moffat ⁶⁶ raised, on behalf of the United States Government, the question of extending the scope of UNRRA activities so as to include Korea, Formosa and Thailand. Because of his delayed arrival, it was impossible for several of the representatives to consult their governments on this subject prior to adjournment and he therefore did not introduce a resolution. But the representatives present personally were in favor of the proposal and it was agreed that the question should be raised at the next meeting of the Committee.

It is the view of this Government that it is highly desirable that the full scope of UNRRA activities in Asia should be determined as soon as possible, so that necessary planning may be undertaken by the Administration.

Korea is technically enemy territory, being part of the Japanese Empire. However, it was proclaimed by the Cairo Declaration of December 2 [1], 1943 ⁶⁷ that in due course after the war Korea should regain its independence. Its people, except for a relatively small number, are not Japanese, and victory over Japan will result in their liberation from Japanese domination.

Similarly, Formosa is technically enemy territory, but its restoration to China was also pledged in the Cairo Declaration. Of its six million inhabitants, less than three hundred thousand are Japanese. Furthermore, the Chinese plans for relief and rehabilitation already submitted to the Administration include relief and rehabilitation in Formosa.

Under Subdivision 3 of Part I of Resolution 1,68 the Administration is precluded from operating in enemy areas without specific authorization of the Council.

Thailand is considered by this Government as a friendly country occupied by the enemy. We continue to recognize the Thai Minister in Washington, although we do not recognize the present government of Thailand.⁶⁹ On the other hand, a state of war exists between Thailand and the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and Czechoslovakia. We recognize that under these circumstances the Administration is also bound by the provisions of Subdivision 3 of Part I of Resolution 1 and may not operate in Thailand without specific authorization. There is mounting evidence of the desire of the Thai people to be liberated from the Japanese yoke and to aid the United Nations cause. Whether Thailand be regarded as a friendly country occupied by the Japanese or as an enemy satellite state, we believe that the UNRRA Administration should have the power to extend any needed relief to Thailand under the same conditions as apply to aid to other areas liberated from the enemy. In all probability, according to our information, medical supplies, which are not in short world supply, and clothing will be the only important items of relief required.

It is the view of this Government that it would be of great psychological value in the prosecution of the war against Japan if the United Nations declared that Korea, Formosa and Thailand, which are non-Japanese areas annexed to Japan or occupied by the Japanese, shall be considered as liberated areas for purposes of relief and rehabilitation by UNRRA. Furthermore, the actual relief of these areas following their liberation will be an essential factor in assuring stability and economic progress in eastern Asia.

As this is a matter of primary concern to the nations represented on the Far Eastern Committee of the Council, it is our view that a recommendation to the Council on the question of extending the scope of UNRRA activities in eastern Asia should originate in the Committee for the Far East.

Because of the differing relations which exist between Thailand and the several governments represented on the Committee, the language of the attached draft resolution has been neutrally worded so as not to prejudice the position of any government.

This draft resolution represents the view of this Government, and has been submitted to the UNRRA Secretariat for the agenda of the meeting of the Far Eastern Committee of the Council. This will presumably take place in London prior to the next meeting of the Council commencing July 16. I should appreciate immediately learn-

Draft Resolution

Whereas for the effective carrying out of its duties in the Far East, it is important for the Administration to know in what areas it should be prepared to operate; and

Whereas it is desirable that the Administration should be prepared to operate in Korea, in Formosa and in Thailand, which are non-Japanese areas annexed to Japan before the war or occupied by the Japanese during the war; and

Whereas Korea and Formosa are still technically enemy areas, and the Administration, pursuant to Part I of Resolution 1, is precluded from operating therein without specific authorization by the Council; and

Whereas a state of war exists between Thailand and certain member governments and similar specific authorization is required to enable the Administration to operate in Thailand;

Be it Resolved that the Committee of the Council for the Far East recommends to the Council adoption of the following resolution:

RESOLVED that Korea, Formosa and Thailand shall each, for the purpose of determining the scope of Administration activities with respect to such areas, be considered a liberated area within the meaning of Part I of Resolution 1, and the Administration is hereby authorized to operate in such areas upon the same terms and conditions as in other liberated areas.

The indicate letters were sent to the representatives of Australia, China, the French Republic, India, the Netherlands, New Zealand, and the Philippine Commonwealth. In a memorandum dated July 26, by the Chief of the Division of Southeast Asian Affairs (Moffat) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton), it was stated that the United States, China, the Philippine Commonwealth, and France approved the resolution; Great Britain and New Zealand opposed inclusion of Thailand: no word has been received from Australia, India, or the Netherlands, but it was thought that they would support Britain (840.50-UNRRA/7-3045). French approval, however, did stipulate clearly that it would not involve any political commitment for France, which was still at war with Thailand (840.50 UNRRA/7-1245).

This raises a vital issue on principle. Many Poles and other East European displaced persons with whom UNRRA now has to deal in Germany will be unlikely for the present at any rate to have the "approval" of the Governments in power in their countries of origin; and if the principle were once admitted that a Government could exclude large categories of its nationals abroad from receiving relief on political grounds UNRRA would be unable to take care of very large numbers of people in Germany or elsewhere for whose relief no other provision exists.

2. In accordance with Resolution 2, paragraph 1,⁷² UNRRA must distribute relief "without discrimination because of race, creed or political belief". In accordance with Resolution 1 part 2 paragraph 2,⁷³ UNRRA has to undertake first to care for persons "found in any areas under the control of any of the United Nations who by reason of war have been displaced from their homes" and secondly "in agreement with appropriate Governments, Military Authorities or other agencies to secure their repatriation or return". Thus although the consent of the appropriate Government is necessary for repatriation it is not necessary for care. We agree with Acheson that the words "in agreement with the country of which they are Nationals" in Resolution 57 74 apply not to the words "for the care of" but only to the words "repatriation and return". There is therefore in our opinion sufficient legal ground to rebut the Yugoslav contention.

⁷¹ UNRRA was exploring with the Department of State and the British Embassy possible solutions to the problem of displaced Yugoslavs (840.50 UNRRA/5-1945).

For documentation on the overall question of displaced persons and refugees, see pp. 1146 ff.; see also Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. I, Index, p. 1064, and vol. II, Index, p. 1611. For UNRRA's role in general displaced persons operations, see Woodbridge, UNRRA, vol. II, pp. 469 ff.

- 3. It is a fundamental principle of UNRRA's work that there is to be no discrimination on grounds of race, religion or political belief; but if UNRRA is precluded from assisting large categories of displaced persons not in sympathy with the Governments which have since come into power in their countries of origin, discrimination on grounds of political belief will certainly be being applied and there will be a serious risk of UNRRA relief becoming simply a means of political pressure. This would be open to the strongest objection.
- 4. In any case it has always been contemplated that UNRRA should look after all displaced persons until their non-repatriability has been established and for a reasonable period thereafter. This surely presupposes, that UNRRA will be looking after people who may not (repeat not) be approved of by the Governments in power in their countries of origin at any rate for some considerable time.
- 5. In these circumstances we feel strongly that objections of Yugoslav Government should be disregarded and that UNRRA should assume responsibility for care of these Yugoslavs in Italy, Greece and elsewhere irrespective of their political colour.
- 6. We agree with Marris that appeal to Central Committee 75 would be valueless.

The Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson) to the Counselor of the British Embassy (Marris)

Washington, June 7, 1945.

DEAR DENNY: Thank you for your letter of May 23, and the attached copy of the telegram from London supporting our view that UNRRA should assume responsibility for the care of Yugoslav displaced persons in Italy, despite the objections of the Yugoslav Government.

I now understand from UNRRA that they have communicated with Keeny in Italy, both by telephone and cable, advising him that the whole subject of treatment of United Nations displaced persons, under Resolution 57, will be referred to the Third Council Meeting for clarification, and, in the meantime, authorizing him to provide for the displaced Yugoslav nationals in Italy.

Keeny is therefore apparently authorized to proceed along the lines we have recommended, and to answer any complaint made by the Yugoslav representatives with the response that their views in the matter should be referred to the Council.

I think the position UNRRA has taken is a very satisfactory interim answer to a troublesome problem. Since the question is already included on the provisional agenda for the Council meeting, I should like to arrange, at an early date, for consultation between us as to the approach to be taken by the two governments when this question is raised at the London meeting. It might be useful to postpone such discussions, however, until we hear the Soviet comments on the provisional agenda, and particularly this item in the Central Committee.

Mr. Alexander C. Kirk, United States Political Adviser on the Staff of the Supreme Allied Commander, Mediterranean Theater (Alexander), to the Secretary of State

Caserta, June 11, 1945—11 p. m. [Received 11:09 p. m.]

2580. Messrs Robertson (British) and Cohen (American) UNRRA representatives have just arrived at Caserta from Tirana where they conferred with General Hoxha with regard to conclusion of agreement for transfer of relief from ML (Albania) 77 to UNRRA. Preliminary draft of agreement which was shown by mistake to Hoxha by Oakley Hill 78 now at Tirana referred to the Hoxha regime as the "Albanian Government". An impasse has now been reached as Hoxha refused to sign an agreement unless some reference is made to Govt of Albania. It has now been suggested by above mentioned UNRRA representatives that a way out might be to refer to Hoxha's regime in first part of agreement as "National Liberation Government of Albania" but that at the end of the agreement would be a pgh stating that the agreement could not be interpreted as indicating that Hoxha's Govt had been accorded recognition by any of the govts included in UNRRA.

We stated to these gentlemen and board agreed that it was undesirable to use the term "government" in the agreement and suggested that the title "present administration of Albania" might be used.

Will Dept please take up this matter with UNRRA as soon as possible and inform us of its views? Suggest Embassy in London be kept informed as Messrs. Robertson and Cohen are leaving for London tomorrow and will keep in touch with our Embassy for a decision in this matter.

We are in touch with Jacobs 79 and he hopes that some satisfactory formula may be found so that an agreement may be concluded. In the light of Hoxha's recent behavior and increasingly stringent measures which he is taking against both Hodgson and Jacobs to say nothing of the fact that he has just requested OSS to leave the country, we consider that we should remain firm and oblige Hoxha to accept our view in this matter.

Memorandum by the Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs (Durbrow) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson)

Mr. Acheson: The Polish Ambassador today handed me the attached note 80 containing the outline of the exchange of correspondence between the Polish Government in Exile and UNRRA relative to the question of the decision taken by Governor Lehman not to send a notification to the Polish Government about the forthcoming meeting of the UNRRA Council.

It will be observed that the note asks that the United States Government "draw the attention of the Director General of UNRRA that the non-notification of the Polish Government about the forthcoming session of the Council is contrary to the Rules of Procedure and that it should kindly request the Director General to carry out his duty of notification . . ."

The Ambassador orally stated in presenting the note that he had been instructed by his Government to remind the United States Government of the following points:

- 1. Poland as an original member of UNRRA has carried out all of its obligations, paid its dues and the Polish Government in Exile consented to have UNRRA deliver supplies to Poland by using such facilities as the Lublin Government might be able to make available to it.
- 2. Governor Lehman consulted the Polish Government in Exile in February, 1945 about the date and place of the forthcoming Council meeting and, although the Polish Government agreed to the suggestions made by Governor Lehman, a notification was not sent to the Polish Government about the meeting.

 3. The representatives of the Polish Government have been and

3. The representatives of the Polish Government have been and continue to be active in assisting UNRRA on the various committees and sub-committees of the organization.

4. In the opinion of the Polish Government in Exile, the fact that no notification was sent to it was due to pressure brought by the Soviet Government, which itself has not cooperated with UNRRA and is also a receiving country.

5. The Ambassador stated that his Government hoped to have an early reply from the American Government expressing their views on this subject.

I made no comment to the Ambassador other than to state that I would bring this matter to the attention of the appropriate officials of the Department.⁸²

Except for small amounts brought originally into the country, it has replaced with much publicity and for obvious political purposes, a token amount of grain claimed to have been imported from Russia. However amounts of food and supplies removed to Russia have been negligible. Coincidental with the cession of Ruthenia to Russia, 86 all Soviet forces to be withdrawn from Prague by July 3 and Soviet garrisons substantially reduced throughout country. 2360. ReDeptel 1437, June 27, 8 p. m.*s In view of lack of accurate information in Moscow concerning use of food or other essential supplies by Soviets in Poland and Czechoslovakia, reply to Dept's 1178, May 30, 5 p. m. was delayed pending discussion of subject with Poles who were expected to arrive shortly in Moscow.

Reports reaching Embassy from various outside observers who were in these areas during Red Army offensive agreed that Soviet troops in large measure lived off the country and carried only limited food supplies with their armies. Drain on local food reserves during this period was therefore probably heavy. When Soviet troops moved into Germany, size of Soviet forces in Poland was considerably reduced, but indications are that considerable garrison force still remains quartered principally in smaller towns and villages. High official of Warsaw Govt has informed me that Soviet forces in Poland no longer requisition local food supplies in large quantities and depend largely on supplies sent from Soviet Union. Other Polish sources not heretofore associated with Warsaw Govt report that Soviet forces in Poland are still drawing heavily on local food reserves particularly grain and cattle when available. Embassy has no data whatsoever on size of such requisitions and does not feel in a position to make an estimate.

No information is available here concerning requisitions of supplies in Czechoslovakia beyond reports that during offensive operations in that country as well Soviet forces were dependent largely on local food supplies.

In contrast to supplies utilized by Soviet forces in Poland considerable publicity has been given to relief shipments to Poland from Soviet Union. These were destined chiefly for relief of civilian population of Warsaw and consisted of substantial shipments of grain and smaller shipments of sugar, tea, soap and medical supplies. Gifts of 1000 trucks have been made to cities of Warsaw and Lodz and Soviet cotton is being supplied to meet requirements of Lodz textile industry.

There have been no reports of shipments of food or relief supplies to Czechoslovakia from the Soviet Union.

I feel that the information available here regarding Russian use of food supplies in these countries is inadequate to permit a decision on withholding UNRRA's supplies and would recommend that a decision be postponed until our Missions at Warsaw and Prague have had an opportunity to investigate the situation and report.

At yesterday's meeting of CCE of UNRRA re discussion continued on Ribar's 90 "resolution in relation to violation of fundamental principles in respect of providing supplies to different liberated countries." Commander Jackson 91 said full report on operations would be submitted to Council. He pointed out that rate of shipment of supplies depended on several factors (such as availability of different types of goods, shipping and foreign currency, date of liberation and port capacity) which varied from country to country and from time to time. He conveyed to Committee Lehman's personal assurance that supplies had been and would continue to be distributed equitably according to need. Lehman also requested that general conclusions should not be drawn from report on current operations and that discussion on general issue should be deferred until the Council meeting. so Neither printed. Telegram 6517 transmitted a report of the June 26 meeting of the Committee of the Council for Europe (CCE) at which the resolution under reference in this telegram was introduced; a copy of the text was quoted in airgram A-717. The resolution stated that shipments of supplies to Greece during May and those scheduled for June and July amounted to 70 percent of the total allocated for Czechoslovakia, Poland, Yugoslavia, Greece, Albania, and Italy, although Greece contained only approximately 10 percent of the population of these countries. The resolution cited four Council resolutions as being contravened including Resolution 7, paragraph 1 of which stipulated that no discrimination on political grounds be made in the distribution of relief supplies. - 2. Penrose 93 said that a monthly report on current operations was too limited as basis for discussing general subject of equity of distribution which should be discussed in terms of overall programs. Such a discussion should be held on CCE after proper notice or at Council meeting. He therefore suggested resolution be withdrawn.
- 3. Ribar replied that he wanted assurance that supplies to Yugo would be increased. He still felt that population should be principal factor determining allocations and that on this basis supplies had not been equitably distributed. He was strongly supported by Ilyuschenko 94 (Soviet) who said resolution could not be withdrawn although some modification of language might be made. Ribar proposed two modifications which merely deleted specific reference to political discrimination and revised wording of last two paragraphs slightly.
- 4. Penrose pointed out that resolution still conveyed strong implication that there had been discrimination in allocating supplies. He said this reflected upon US through its position as one of the supplying countries and through its membership on intergovernmental allocation authorities. He repudiated suggestion that the US would in any way be a party to political discrimination or inequity in relief. The US had deliberately chosen to make its contribution to relief through an international organization rather than by unilateral action. He again urged withdrawal of resolution and said that if passed it might have serious effects.
- 5. Hasler 95 (UK) said most of supplies sent to Greece and Yugo so far had not been procured by UNRRA but merely taken over from military and paid for by UNRRA. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson)

[Washington,] July 5, 1945.

Mr. Marris called at his request and handed me the attached communication. He told me that he was under instructions to make an oral statement at the same time, which he did, reading from a cable. The statement was to the general effect that the British Government was not taking an ultimate or final position, in the communication just handed to me, that it would at no time be willing to consider treating Thailand as a liberated area. The position was rather that at this time, and in view of the fact that the Thai Government was at war with the British and was occupying certain provinces of Malaya and Burma, the British Government could not accede to our suggestion that Thailand be treated as a liberated country.

Mr. Marris went on to express the earnest hope that we would be able to modify our position so that this issue would not arise at the Council meeting in London as it would cause serious embarrassment to the British Government. This embarrassment, he stated, would have no compensative benefit to anyone because in all probability it would be some time before operations of any sort could be conducted He hoped that before the time for relief operations in that country arrived, circumstances will have so changed that the British Government might be able to meet our views. I told Mr. Marris that the views expressed by him and in the communication would have the most careful consideration in the Department, which would communicate with him as soon as possible. I also informed him of Mr. Clayton's 98 appointment as United States representative upon the Council and said that I believed, therefore, that the communication referred to would come to Mr. Marris through some other officer than myself.

1194. After considerable discussion among interested officials here recommendation has been made to the President that US join in sponsoring at UNRRA Council meeting in London additional contributions by all contributing countries based on one percent of their national incomes.³ This should produce equivalent of eighteen hundred million dollars which together with present assets should permit UNRRA to complete its task in Europe and Far East. In Europe the program would probably continue through harvests of 1946.

We took this approach in place of purely US program because of desire to back first United Nations organization which we had originally sponsored and to foster international rather than national considerations in handling relief and rehabilitation matters. In addition contributions by other nations amounting to one-third of total can most easily be obtained through UNRRA.

In connection with this proposal we will urge expansion of UNRRA program in Italy 4 to take care of its basic import requirements for about one year starting in Fall (probably November) of 1945. Such a program would include items such as food, raw materials, coal, agricultural supplies, medical supplies and some machinery and equipment. We estimate UNRRA cost for Italy under this program would be approximately $500 million.

British are thinking along substantially same lines although their proposal involves immediate additional contribution of only one bil-

You have with you two memoranda prepared under date of July 10 on Displaced Persons and the UNRRA problem in clarifying its functions in that regard. One of these memoranda was submitted by Mr. Wilcox, pointing out the urgency of reaching agreement with the Russians on this question. The other was prepared by Mr. Warren, suggesting a possible compromise between the UNRRA suggested resolution and the Russian position.

We have now discussed this matter with the British, who agree that a solution must be sought between the three governments, and who will work with us in preparing a draft for presentation to the Russians in London prior to the Council Meeting. If the occasion arises, in the course of your discussions with the Russians, you may wish to put them on notice of our feeling that UNRRA's directives on displaced persons' activities must be clarified, and that we hope they will be prepared to discuss a compromise solution of the present impasse in the course of the London Council Meeting.

[Annex]

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton)

[Washington,] July 10, 1945.

This memorandum discusses a problem scheduled to come before the UNRRA Council meeting in London which may evoke sharp differences of opinion between the U.S. and U.S.S.R. unless representatives of the two countries can reach agreement in advance of the meeting.

The Problem

A member government of UNRRA, Yugoslavia, has raised the following questions with UNRRA officials and UNRRA has agreed to raise them at the UNRRA Council meeting in London in August:

- 1. Does UNRRA have the authority to assist displaced persons in enemy or ex-enemy areas without the agreement of the country of which the displaced persons are nationals?
- 2. Does UNRRA have the authority to assist displaced persons who do not wish to be repatriated?

UNRRA has been assisting such persons, although the UNRRA Resolutions are not entirely clear as to whether a member nation has the power to prevent its displaced nationals from securing UNRRA assistance in such cases. The U.S.S.R. supports the Yugoslav position that UNRRA does not have such authority, whereas the United States has taken the position that UNRRA does or should have such authority. The central question is whether a member government of UNRRA may deny UNRRA assistance to those of its displaced nationals whom it regards as undesirable or possibly disloyal citizens.

A division of opinion between the United States and the U.S.S.R. on this problem might endanger the future of UNRRA. An open split at the Council meeting between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. would have additional unfortunate consequences. It is important therefore, that Mr. Byrnes or Mr. Clayton try to get Foreign Commissar Molotov 10 to agree to the U.S. view in Berlin 11 in advance of the UNRRA Council meeting.

The Director General of UNRRA is proposing that the appropriate Resolution (57) be amended to give UNRRA express authorization to assist displaced persons in all areas, except persons who have been taken into the custody of appropriate military or civil authorities for collaborationist or criminal activities. The proposed amendment is set forth in page 5 of the attached UNRRA document.¹²

Recommendations

- 1. That the recommendations of the Director General of UNRRA be supported unequivocally by the U.S. representative at the UNRRA Council meeting.
- 2. That Mr. Byrnes or Mr. Clayton discuss the matter with Foreign Commissar Molotov and such other foreign officials as are deemed appropriate, prior to the UNRRA Council meeting, and make clear the U.S. position.

Discussion

- 1. The spirit of the UNRRA Resolutions is unquestionably against discrimination in the distribution of supplies on the grounds of political belief. Resolutions 1, 2 and 7 may be cited.¹³
- 2. Acceptance of the Yugoslav request that assistance be withheld from its displaced nationals who have not been designated by it, would put upon UNRRA extremely heavy, if not completely impossible, administrative burdens. UNRRA would almost certainly become involved in controversies with the member governments. In case of failure of a government or UNRRA, acting for said government, to certify persons, UNRRA would be in the position of denying the barest means of life to displaced persons.
- 3. It was certainly not contemplated by the U.S. Congress or by the U.S. public that UNRRA aid to distressed and displaced persons would be subject to any such local political controls. Acceptance of the Yugoslav proposal would mean that UNRRA could not assist German and Polish Jews who do not wish to return to their home countries. It is difficult to imagine Congress appropriating additional funds for UNRRA if such actions as Yugoslavia proposes are possible and likely. Failure of Congress to appropriate funds would probably kill UNRRA.

¹³ Texts in Woodbridge, UNRRA, vol. III, pp. 42, 46, and 47, respectively.

4. The U.S.S.R. takes the position, we understand, that since UNRRA is a United Nations organization, its beneficiaries should not be tainted by collaborationist activities or associations. The U.S. position has been that it is difficult to identify collaborationists, that the power of member governments to declare displaced persons ineligible for UNRRA assistance on political grounds might easily be abused, that such distinctions would result in gross inhumanities, and that displaced persons actually in the custody of appropriate military and civil authorities on collaborationist or criminal charges have not and should not be assisted by UNRRA.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Director General of UNRRA (Lehman)

Washington, July 24, 1945.

My Dear Governor Lehman: As you know, the principal United States effort to contribute to Yugoslav relief and rehabilitation will at least initially be through UNRRA. Since a large part of UNRRA supplies for Yugoslavia will come from United States sources, we are well aware that the success of the UNRRA program for Yugoslavia will depend to a great extent upon the efficient functioning of the United States supply and allocation machinery. I want to assure you that we will give UNRRA every possible assistance in procuring and shipping supplies scheduled to go to Yugoslavia from the United States, and I am reminding the several agencies concerned of our policy in this regard by sending them copies of this letter.

In view of the severe world-wide shortage of many types of supplies and the resulting urgent demands on the United States from all claimants, it is necessary however that UNRRA requests for supplies for Yugoslavia be based on accurate information as to conditions within the country. It is particularly important that there be adequate assurances that all indigenous supplies needed for relief purposes are kept within the country and not exported and, together with imported supplies, are distributed efficiently and without discrimination.

I am asking our Ambassador at Belgrade ¹⁴ to render all possible aid and assistance to the UNRRA Yugoslav mission in achieving its objectives, and I hope that your mission can keep him informed of its activities.

Sincerely yours,

Joseph C. Grew

2687. UNRRA delegation to Poland arrived in Moscow on July 23. Members are Menshikov, ¹⁵ Weisl, Teesdale, Stein, and Americans Hays, Wilson, Anderson, Schacter, Holle, and Miss Mott. They came via Tehran and Moscow at insistence of Menshikov and Russians. They were met here by Vice Commissar of Foreign Trade Sergeev and entertained by him at an elaborate luncheon following day. Menshikov apparently intends to keep delegation here for several days despite outspoken desire of the other members to proceed to Poland and get to work as soon as possible.

Members of the commission have confidentially stated that there was no reason for entry via Moscow insofar as UNRRA is concerned and they deplore extra $20,000 expended and time lost in order to enter via this route. They comment that there is obviously strong Russian interest in having them arrive in Poland only after stopping in Moscow. They have also been greatly perturbed over delay of several months due to Russia's refusal to grant permission to enter Poland and were considerably annoyed when Soviet representatives moved to have expunged from the minutes of committee meeting in London statement to effect that unwillingness of the Soviet Government to grant visas to them or [for?] entry to Poland had been sole cause of delay. Soviet representative insisted on substitution therefor of statement that delay had occurred as a result of the failure of the Polish Govt. to invite delegation. Despite the fact that the committee had had in hand for some time a telegram from Polish Provisional Govt. extending such invitation and despite outspoken opposition of non-Soviet members of committee Lehman directed from UNRRA Has that minutes be changed to meet Soviet wishes.

Menshikov who in addition to his job as Deputy Director General is now head of Bureau of Services ¹⁶ of UNRRA in charge of health, welfare and displaced persons was originally instructed to stay in Poland only long enough to negotiate basic agreement with Polish Govt covering UNRRA operations and to leave implementation of agreement to an American successor. Just before leaving Washington, however, Menshikov succeeded in having his orders changed to include his remaining in charge in Warsaw throughout initial period of operations after agreement is concluded. Teesdale the accountant is much perturbed over Russia's insistence on retaining the 5.3 official rate for UNRRA transactions in Russia rather than granting the diplomatic rate of twelve to one. Inasmuch as the delegation intends to depart for Poland within 2 or 3 days and in accordance with special instructions the US Army Finance Officer here is prepared to provide up to 6,000 gold seal dollars in US currency for the running expenses of the group during first three months in Poland, the problem is not at present an acute one. Teesdale feels, however, that Russians themselves are likely to request large deliveries from UNRRA and that in that event rate would be extremely important in reimbursement of salaries paid and expenses incurred in Russia.

1172. (1) This Government will propose to the UNRRA Council at its forthcoming meeting in London, August 7, that the present contributions to UNRRA be doubled so that the Administration can complete the relief programs presently contemplated for Eastern Europe and the Far East. We are using in this tentative budget the present UNRRA Chinese program as screened in collaboration with CNRRA 22 which amounts to approximately 817 million dollars exclusive of shipping.

(2) Above for your confidential information. You will be kept informed of developments. There have been indications that some of the FEA 23 representatives in China have informed Chinese Government officials that FEA rather than UNRRA would be the main channel for supplying China's relief needs.24 It is realized that such rumors weaken the position of both UNRRA and of CNRRA. In view of this Government's decision to seek full support for UNRRA activities in the Far East, you may wish to emphasize to members of your staff the line which will be followed in London and to request avoidance of discussing the relative position of UNRRA and FEA in future Chinese supply programs until the Council has taken a final decision on our recommendation.

The Acting Director General of UNRRA (Hendrickson) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton)

Washington, 30 July, 1945.

DEAR MR. CLAYTON: Attached you will please find a copy of a letter 25 which we have today dispatched to the several Combined Boards.²⁶ So that you may be fully acquainted with the chronological background of this matter, I am transmitting to you the following facts.

On 24 July 1945, Mr. V. A. Klentsov, the U.S.S.R. member of the UNRRA Council notified me orally but formally that the U.S.S.R. is requesting the United Nations through UNRRA to provide them with $700,000,000 worth of relief and rehabilitation supplies. He indicated at that time that the details and specifications of those supplies will be made available to us in the near future.

This Administration immediately requested the Canadian Ambassador to the United States, Mr. L.B. Pearson, to take the necessary steps prescribed in UNRRA's Resolution No. 14,27 to determine the ability of the U.S.S.R. to pay for relief and rehabilitation supplies in suitable means of foreign exchange.

In the meantime, Mr. Klentsov called on me again on 30 July 1945 and left a memorandum with me, copy of which is attached.²⁵ This memorandum contains a limited statement as to the breakdown of supplies required by the U.S.S.R.

So soon as more details become available to us, we shall again be in touch with the several Combined Boards.

Sincerely yours,

ROY F. HENDRICKSON

"Be it resolved:

1. That CCFE ³³ recommends to the Council adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved: In accordance with the provisions of part one of resolution one the Administration is hereby authorized to operate in Korea and Formosa upon the terms and conditions applicable to liberated areas.

2. That the committee invites the Director General to study the question of what relief operations may be required in Thailand, should it be decided at a later date that the Administration should extend its operations to that country, to prepare tentative plans for such operations, including their probable cost, and to report back to the next meeting of the CCFE."

Topic 3. Alternative wording for resolution might be:

"Resolved: In accordance with provisions of part one of resolution one the Administration is hereby authorized to operate in Korea and Formosa upon the terms and conditions applicable to liberated areas. The Council also invites the Director General, prior to a determination of what relief operations may be undertaken in Thailand, to ascertain whether deterioration of food, clothing, housing and health conditions has occurred below the minimum which the Administration feels to be necessary, to prepare tentative plans for relief operations which would be essential to restore such standards, including estimates of probable cost, and to report on these matters to the Central Committee or to the Council at its next meeting."

for $700,000,000 of UNRRA assistance and has been advised that the Soviets have stated informally to UNRRA that they have made this request because Lend-Lease and credit negotiations have "failed".43 We have reviewed the course of discussions on Lend-Lease and credits from incomplete files which Collado 44 brought along and have requested Ambassador Harriman to advise us specifically as to the status of his talks with Mikoyan.45

I should like your views with respect to the $700,000,000 request. The weight of opinion within the delegation is against any such use of UNRRA funds. It is argued that the approval of such a program would require the contributing countries to furnish that much additional money. The British have indicated pretty clearly that they are not prepared to do so. A number of members of the delegation feel that the Congress would be unlikely to approve additional funds for the purpose. The extension of long-term credits for capital goods through the Export-Import Bank and eventually the Bretton Woods Bank 46 should fully meet Russia's financial needs. It is unlikely that the type of supplies which Russia is requesting could be furnished in large volume in any event without taking needed supplies from other European countries.

Other members of the delegation argue also convincingly that UNRRA was established to provide relief and emergency rehabilitation for devastated areas. The possibility of obtaining reconstruction credits was not supposed to be a barrier to the receipt of UNRRA assistance. Russia has been more extensively devastated than any other country in the world. While her reconstruction potentialities are very great her reconstruction relief and rehabilitation needs are also very large. Russia's sacrifices in the war have been enormous and her standard of living always low is probably as low or lower than that of any other European nation. Her case for aid differs from that of China, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Yugoslavia and even Greece and Italy only in degree and a committee set up under Resolution 23 47 might find it difficult to pronounce Russia a paving country in view of the recent Chinese case and in fact all the earlier precedents. Moreover, the Soviets will probably compare unfavorably the proposed treatment of Italy an ex-enemy with that of Russia.

It is believed here that the Soviets will attempt to force a decision of the Council at this meeting. It is our belief that we should try to leave the matter open rather than to try to achieve a flat turn down at this time. If the matter is left open we may be able to achieve a successful meeting of the Council and the request may possibly be subsequently withdrawn or sidetracked in view of the credit negotiations.

Our present thinking suggests the immediate appointment of a Resolution 23 committee to meet with the Russians at once and request a presentation as to need and ability to pay. This may in itself result in the desired postponement until after the Council meeting is over.

I should appreciate an urgent expression of the Department's views both with respect to the credit procedure and to the UNRRA procedure. I have repeated this to Ambassador Harriman requesting that he send the Department and me his views.

6627. For Clayton. Discussions have been had with Acting Secretary ⁴⁸ and Acheson on questions raised in your 7910 of August 6. Will advise further if Secretary upon his return has additional comments.

We believe it very unlikely that additional contributions to cover Russian request, together with other planned operations, could be obtained from Congress. It is important therefore if entire program is not to be jeopardized that Russian request be either withdrawn or otherwise disposed of prior to presentation of UNRRA program to Congress.

You may, if you believe it advisable, convey to Russian UNRRA delegation anticipated difficulty in securing from Congress UNRRA contribution containing funds for Russia in view of their strong foreign exchange position, other assistance from Eastern European countries, receipts from reparations, and possibility of credits from Ex-Im Bank and World Bank.

Our goal should be to avoid approval by the Council of an operating budget containing Russian program. Department believes you should decide, in light of discussions in London, whether our objective can best be obtained by attempting to secure an immediate decision by [Sub]committee under Resolution 23 adverse to Russian claim as a non-paying government, or by attempting to delay decision in hope that Russians can subsequently be persuaded to withdraw their claim or a decision adverse to them later obtained under Resolution 23.

We agree that Russians should be advised that Ex-Im Bank is now in position to go fully into proposals which they may put forward. We are asking Harriman to make such a suggestion to them. The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

8010. For the Secretary, Acting Secretary and Acheson from Clayton. Thanks for the prompt response to my message outlining the problems raised by the Russian request for UNRRA assistance. We shall be guided by your views and will certainly seek to persuade the Soviets to withdraw their demand when other avenues of assistance are open to them. I think we must be prepared for Russian refusal to follow our recommendation since publicity already given may raise quite a point in prestige. I therefore wish to summarize the background of recent developments here in the event that we must make a decision to include Russia either as a competing claimant for the projected increase to contributions that we have in mind or the occasion of requesting even more funds for UNRRA than the one percent additional contribution would provide.

- 1. We met with the Russians Monday night ⁴⁹ and outlined the views generally expressed in my 7910.⁵⁰ The Russians were obviously unwilling to commit themselves to UNRRA operations in Italy or Austria until their case was acted upon and in effect requested perfunctory clearance by the Resolution 23 [sub] committee. We assume that they have requested Moscow for instructions in view of our position as expressed at that meeting since they have not suggested any further conference on the subject.
- 2. We have had several conferences with the British and Canadians [in] which we have emphasized our anticipation of the difficulties that would be encountered in securing additional funds for UNRRA to meet Russian demands. The British of course are even more reluctant to contribute relief to Russia in view of their over all financial position.

⁵⁰ Dated August 6, p. 1003.

- 3. Pearson ⁵¹ stated that if the Soviets did not withdraw their request Canada would find it difficult to secure any additional UNRRA contribution if the Russian claim were to be rejected. While it is of course impractical at this stage to estimate the firmness of the British position I doubt that they would fail to go along if the whole future of UNRRA were at stake. Marris ⁵² said he thought they would follow our lead when we reached a position. I do anticipate that they would urge that any Russian program must come within the additional one percent maximum contribution.
- 4. If the Russians intend with this request to open the door to proper supervision of UNRRA operations within Eastern Europe including their own country to a reasonable extent it is an important development. There is no evidence of this as yet but we were encouraged today to hear from them that they accepted our proposed resolution on new membership including the Argentine which we told them would not be presented if they were going to raise objections. We have not heard that they will attempt to meet our views on displaced persons and there has been insufficient discussion of past and proposed UNRRA operations relating to displaced persons to indicate the extent or nature of their criticisms.⁵³ Lehman informed me yesterday that Sergeev 54 had requested him to treat the Russian request as an additional requirement for new funds in his presentation of reports to the Council. Whether this indicates that the Russians remain firm in their position or whether they were seeking to avoid the impression of Russian needs being met at the expense of requirements of other claimants is a question.
- 5. It would be useful to have your views on Congressional reaction to approving funds for UNRRA as part of the relief pool within the maximum appropriation we have in mind. It may be very difficult and perhaps undesirable to eliminate Russia as a limited UNRRA beneficiary and I should want to be rather careful in suggesting to any other govt that public or Congressional opinion would resist direct relief to Russia unless you concur. [Clayton.]

2820. Reference London's 274, August 6, 8 p. m.⁵⁵ For Asst Secretary Clayton. In accordance with your request, for your information I cannot agree with the Russian statement that "Lend-Lease and credit negotiations have failed".

The United States made a most generous proposal for credit arrangements under Lend-Lease which if the Soviets had accepted would have provided for a continuation of certain shipments. The Soviet declined to accept our proposal because of a difference between our offer of 23% percent interest as against their insistence on 21/4 percent and because they wished the United States Govt to sell supplies to them at a loss. Mikoyan overplayed his hand and no doubt thought that the supplies they needed would be in such oversupply after the war that they could be purchased at lower prices and at better credit The negotiations for a credit for reconstruction have been held up pending the necessary congressional authority to the Export and Import Bank. There is now no reason why the Soviets cannot now negotiate a credit.

I have little to add to the Acting Secretary's cable to you No. 1760, August 7, 8 p. m. 56 in which I fully concur on the subject of Russia's request for UNRRA assistance. It may be of interest for you to know that Doctor Michael, this Embassy's Agricultural Attaché, believes that there should be enough food from sources available to Russia to sustain the Russian people on a minimum diet. There will, of course, be a shortage of fats and meats for a desirable diet although an increase over last year.

I feel also that we should bear in mind the fact that Lend-Lease supplies came forward to the Soviet Union in large volume by shipments leaving the United States up to the end of May. A very large quantity of these supplies are available for current use including food, trucks, raw materials, machine tools, et cetera.

Large numbers of Russian troops are living off the country in Germany and the satellite countries. In general, Russia's situation cannot be compared with the difficult position of countries which were completely occupied by the Germans.

Washington, August 10, 1945—5 p.m.

6758. For Clayton. The Secretary has now had an opportunity to consider your 7910 of August 6 and 8010 of August 9. He agrees that to increase the prospective operating budget of UNRRA by $700,000,000 for Soviet relief would make the US contribution beyond what could be obtained from Congress. For us to agree to such a budget in London would be to undertake something which we could not accomplish. You should stress that as we have repeatedly said to Congress UNRRA funds are not regarded by us as compensation for suffering or effort in the war but to furnish the necessities to liberated areas where, except for UNRRA assistance, they would not be available.

The Soviet Union has already had vast assistance from the United States and the Ex-Im Bank and Bretton Woods legislation both contemplate substantial US dollars being available for Soviet purchases. These steps, taken together with the Soviet foreign exchange position, make it clear that imports from the west to the Soviet Union do not in any way depend upon the furnishing of UNRRA relief. Furthermore, if the Soviet Union is regarded as a nonpaying country, then the whole conception becomes meaningless.

The Soviet position, which is the same as that taken by them at Atlantic City 62 and Montreal,63 is that they are entitled to relief because of the greatness of their sufferings and contribution to victory. A discussion along these ideological lines has always proved fruitless. The point as we see it is that certain imports have to be furnished by UNRRA or they will not be furnished at all. The burden of these is chiefly on the US and is already greater than we may be able to meet. To add more, which is not necessary, may well bring about the collapse of UNRRA. This we are unwilling to risk. We are all the more unwilling to do this since we have already passed the financial legislation which makes it entirely possible to finance Soviet needs.

Your reference to the undesirability of eliminating Russia as a limited UNRRA beneficiary leads us to suggest that the Russian position might be met by including in the maximum UNRRA program as hitherto conceived a much smaller sum, say fifty to one hundred million for emergency relief in Soviet territory under the resolutions adopted by the Central Committee last spring.64 This would leave for the future the question of whether the Soviet Union would be called upon to repay. 6771. For Clayton. Reference ur 8011 August 9.65 Commonwealth Govt has taken no steps to consult US regarding financial question involved in its request for UNRRA assistance. In absence of any discussions we have no information extent of Philippine request or basis on which it attempts to justify status as non-paying govt. Filipinos have previously been informed that 15 million dollars was available in War Dept to be turned over to Commonwealth Govt for relief purposes upon its request but no request has been received. No definite or final plans have been developed by Philippine Rehabilitation Commission but on June 7 Senator Tydings 66 outlined a relief program which included a proposed gift of $100,000,000 for rehabilitation purposes together with a 3-year loan to supplement Philippine Govt revenues. 67 It is anticipated that Congress will give the whole matter prompt consideration when it reconvenes. The case for such assistance might well be prejudiced with Congress if an UNRRA program had been approved.

There is a large circulation of pesos at present time which are interchangeable with dollars. Filipinos would have dollar funds to finance such supplies as may be sold for pesos in the Commonwealth whether such supplies are furnished through private channels, which US is attempting to encourage, or by UNRRA. In event of UNRRA imports, govt would have available for payment to UNRRA dollars equivalent to amount of pesos it received from sale of UNRRA supplies and retired from circulation.

It is view of Dept that Filipinos should approach US with reference to their relief needs rather than attempt to secure UNRRA assistance.

6842. For Clayton. Reur 8016, August 9. Following is paraphrase of note handed to Grew Aug 10 by Soviet Chargé d'Affaires on displaced persons.

Begin paraphrase. Replying to your memorandum of August 1, 1945, s raising the question about the furnishing of UNRRA aid to displaced persons in enemy and formerly enemy regions without consent of the government of the nation to which displaced persons belong as well as regarding assistance to displaced persons not wanting to be repatriated, you are informed by me as follows:

It is belief of the Soviet Government that in regard to furnishing of aid to displaced persons now in enemy or formerly enemy regions UNRRA should follow Resolution number 57 adopted at Montreal in September 1944 at the second session of the UNRRA Council. It is provided in this Resolution that aid may be rendered by UNRRA to the mentioned displaced persons upon consent of the government of the country of which they are citizens.

The Soviet Government considers that, in light of this Resolution, UNRRA can not furnish assistance also to displaced persons not desiring to be repatriated. As an organization of the United Nations UNRRA should not put itself in opposition to the United Nations governments, a situation which may be inevitably brought about if it furnished to such displaced persons who are citizens of one of the United Nations aid and assistance. Soviet Government can not agree to your proposal in view of the above. Signed V. Molotov. End paraphrase.

In view of above Dept is not asking Harriman again to raise question in Moscow.

At Washington Central Committee meeting July 18, Thorp attending, Klentsov asked question concerning displaced persons. Feller 69 reported on operations with particular regard to difference between controlling resolutions. Minutes record his saying "The Council was being asked to reconcile these differences at its next session". No vote of any kind was taken.

- 1. "In addition to the authority provided in Resolution 1, Part II (2) Resolution 57 and Resolution 60 the administration is authorized to carry out the operations for care contemplated in such resolutions pursuant to agreements reached between the govts exercising administrative authority in the areas in which the displaced persons involved are located and other govts concerned for the care of displaced persons and as to conditions under which such persons shall be repatriated, returned to their homes or removed to other areas. Prior to the conclusion of such agreements the administration is authorized to care for the displaced persons concerned.

2. The authority of the administration provided in the foregoing paragraph with respect to operations in any area shall be reviewed by the Council or the Central Committee at the end of 6 months from the date of the assumption of responsibility by the administration for such operations in such area.

3. The administration is authorized to make agreements with the govts or occupying authorities in control of areas of Germany for the care or transportation of displaced persons provided that the basic supplies, equipment and transportation whether indigenous or imported necessary for the care and transportation of displaced persons within Germany shall not be a charge on the resources of the administration."

6930. First two numbered paragraphs of revised draft resolution on displaced persons quoted in your 8213, August 14, acceptable to Dept. Paragraph 3 is unclear. Difficulty is that "resources" may refer either to supplies or to funds. Therefore, paragraph might be interpreted as preventing UNRRA using its own supplies in caring for said DPs. We assume it is intended to relate to ultimate payments in accordance with general principles governing imports into Germany. Provision is acceptable if clarified along latter line.

1. Far Eastern Council Committee of UNRRA will probably meet early next week with either Gilpatric or myself in attendance. I assume that Soviets will be elected to membership at that time. Major point of discussion in view of prospective end of war in Pacific will be UNRRA program of operations and consideration of UK and Australian insistence that Far Eastern Regional Office be organized along line of Regional Office in London.

- 2. China definitely opposed to UNRRA FERO on ground that almost entire UNRRA effort will be concentrated in China as compared with several missions of equal stature operating in Europe. We expect agreement that Office of Director General Secretariat and activity of COFE (Committee for the Far East) will be established in some part of liberated China as soon as practicable but share Chinese view that FERO would lead to administrative difficulties and prestige problems with various countries in furnishing top personnel for it. We have thus far taken the line that question was primarily one for administration to solve. Jackson 75 here and Hendrickson in Washington seem to be the only two UNRRA officials favoring UK plan. Neither of these officials has been thus far concerned in UNRRA Far Eastern planning.
- 3. Advice from you is requested as to whether we should associate ourselves with Chinese insistence that no FERO be established or whether question should be postponed pending clarification of many relevant relief and supply policy questions when hostilities cease. We assume that you would agree with our tentative position that UK proposal for a FERO immediately should be resisted.

8544. My telegram 8499, August 22.77 For the Secretary, Thorp, Phelps 78 and Wilcox 79 from Clayton. Following my telephone conversation with you Monday 80 events in the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration Council have rapidly come to a head. The Council today formally approved the Italian and Austrian resolutions 81 as passed yesterday in the committee on policy. The Council will tomorrow consider the question of Korea, the enlargement of the Central Committee and the report of the Committee on Financial Control regarding the auditors report.82 The major issue of additional contributions regarding which no proposals have yet been made in any committee meeting is scheduled to be taken up Friday 83 which will be the concluding day if all goes well.

Meanwhile I have been in constant touch with the Russians, British and Canadians regarding the Russian request for 700 million dollars and its relation to additional contributions. The Russians recognizing I believe that they could not get definitive action here have privately suggested several resolutions which would leave the door open for them to press their case subsequently in United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration and the Central Committee. Moreover they have shown signs of weakening with respect to the full 700 million dollars.

The British, Canadians and we have prepared as a final position the following documents which carry out the proposal which I outlined to you on the phone:

1. Draft resolution on further contributions.

2. Draft letter to the Soviets from the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian members of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration Council.

"The United States, the United Kingdom and Canadian delegations have given very careful consideration to the draft resolution with respect to the distribution of United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration supplies which you handed to us 2 days ago and which we discussed with you last evening.

We have concluded that this matter might best be handled in the over all resolution on additional financial contributions which must be adopted by the Council if activities of United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration are to be continued and completed.

There is attached a copy of the draft resolution which we have prepared in order to make it possible for the three of us to recommend to our respective Govts that they each make available their share of the requisite funds.

As we indicated in our conversation last evening we believe it absolutely essential if we are to obtain the money that our Govts should be able to demonstrate to their legislatures that there will be provided a more effective type of control over the use of these funds than has existed in the past.

It is our understanding that if this resolution is adopted by the Council the application of the United Soviet Socialist Republics for United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration assistance will after the Council meeting be replaced by applications on behalf of the Ukrainian and Byelo Russian Soviet Socialist Republics. These new applications will of course be considered by appropriate committees to be established in accordance with Resolution 23. We are satisfied from what you have told us that the facts will permit the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian representatives on such committees if the additional funds contemplated in the resolution are made available by the three principal subscribing govts to support the eligibility of the two republics for receipt of free assistance in the amount of 250 million dollars for the two together.

We need hardly assure you that we are making this proposal because in our opinion it is the only one which will enable us to secure further funds for United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration and also to provide the assistance referred to in the previous paragraph.

We hope therefore that you and your Ukrainian and Byelo Russian colleagues will be able to accept the arrangements set out in this letter and that therefore you and they will be able to associate yourselves with the passing of this financial resolution through the Council."

3. Draft reply by the Soviets.

"I wish to inform you that we have considered the letter of August 22 signed by the members of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration Council representing the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada and that we will support the resolution on additional contributions to United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration which was attached to that letter.

You are further informed that I have consulted with the delegates of the Byelo Russian and Ukrainian delegation and we accept your suggestions of action on applications for assistance from United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration."

Only the draft resolution has been handed to the Soviets this afternoon. Recommendation 4 is an effort to meet their proposed texts and we have indicated that we would gladly drop it. We all set a great deal of importance on recommendation 2.

I have made it entirely clear that our support of such a resolution in the Council is subject to our reaching a private understanding with the Soviets regarding their request for United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration assistance, and that any additional United States contribution is of course subject to congressional action. I then orally outlined the proposal regarding up to 250 million dollars for the Ukraine and White Russia as contained in the draft letter to Sergeev. I stated that I could not make such a draft letter to Sergeev. I stated that I could not make such a proposal definitely without your approval and that while you knew in general of my views regarding such a proposal you had expressed neither approval nor disapproval. The British told the Soviets that they also would have to receive ministerial approval. (Following the receipt of the information regarding continued shipments from the Lend Lease pipeline pending mutual agreement on terms contained in your 7056 of August 20 85 Bevin and Dalton have as a matter of fact somewhat reluctantly approved full British participation in additional contributions of one percent to United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration provided the above resolution and proposal regarding 250 million dollars are accepted by the Soviets. The Canadians have full authority to accept these arrangements.)

The Soviets at first argued about the 700 million dollars; then tried to broaden recommendation 4; but finally as we remained firm agreed to cable to Moscow our final position provided that I would simultaneously request your approval to make my proposition definite in the event of Moscow's agreement and that the British would also seek ministerial approval. It was agreed that we would all seek definitive instructions by Friday morning London time.

It is my belief and that of the British and Canadians that the Soviets are definitely weakening and probably will agree to trade on the basis we put forward. I accordingly request authority to make the arrangement which I have outlined above provided the Soviets agree. [Clayton.]

I am attaching a personal letter from Mr. Carl B. Spaeth, Acting Diplomatic Adviser of UNRRA, regarding the current situation of UNRRA relief in Yugoslavia. Would you please see that this letter reaches the interested officers, not only in your Division, but also in SE.⁸⁶ As I understand Ambassador Patterson is now in Washington, it might be helpful to see that his attention is drawn to this statement of the issue, as presented by Mr. Spaeth.

The Acting Diplomatic Adviser to UNRRA (Spaeth) to the Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox)

Washington, 20 August, 1945.

Dear Clair: As you know, there have been charges from time to time that UNRRA relief in Yugoslavia is being distributed on a discriminatory basis, and it is true that until recently we have had difficulty making arrangements for our own observers to follow the distribution process. However, the Yugoslavian Government recently granted the necessary permits to our observers, and we have now had a cable from our mission in Belgrade of which the following is a close paraphrase:

"Observers free to move within their assigned areas. Temporary difficulties experienced on account of passes and lack of personnel transport now overcome. Observation of distribution in all states receiving UNRRA supplies has been continuous. Because of transport difficulties it has not been physically possible to distribute supplies equitably to all areas of need. For example, Dalmatia, because of proximity to ports, has received greater share than Bosnia, North Croatia, and Slovenia. This situation now improving due to improved rail communication, arrival of additional motor transport and use of Sibenik and Trieste as receiving ports. In all areas observers give no evidence of discrimination though because of autonomy of local government units in distributing supplies methods vary somewhat between different localities. General situation to date is that supplies have been far short of actual need in all areas and distributions have had to be sporadic. In many ports supplies so small as to permit only small distribution to small percentage of population classified as being in greatest need. No evidence of any discrimination and any discrimination in so classifying. Main criticism is lack of information from Central Government on distribution plans and policy.["]

⁸⁶ Division of Southern European Affairs.

In view of the fact that Ambassador Patterson and others of the Department have expressed concern about the charges of discrimination, you may wish to draw this letter to their attention.

Sincerely yours,

CARL B. SPAETH

Memorandum by the Chief of the War Areas Economic Division (Gilpatric 87) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton)

[London,] August 24, 1945.

I think it wise to confirm the several discussions and conclusions of the Delegation on the subject of the Displaced Persons Resolution as finally passed by the Council.88 You will recall that in the draft which we presented to the Policy Committee and that in the British draft which was ultimately revised as the final document, we took the position that the authority of UNRRA to care for displaced persons in ex-enemy areas, with or without the express permission of the governments of origin concerned, was limited to six months, on or before which time the matter would be reviewed by the Central Committee. This decision means that while we all hope UNRRA activities with regard to displaced persons can be liquidated within six months, we are postponing decision as to extension of such activities beyond that time until more facts and details are at hand. I think I am right in stating here that our position was unanimously approved by all of the Delegation who were in London at the time final action was taken.

⁸⁷ Mr. Gilpatric was also adviser to and executive secretary of the U.S. delegation to the Third Session of the UNRRA Council, London, August 7-25, 1945.

Several members of the Delegation have pointed out that the position which we have accepted on displaced persons, as outlined above, is at some variance with the understanding reached earlier in our deliberations that we would put a definite limit of six months on UNRRA D.P. operations. I personally do not remember that we reached any irrevocable decision of this nature, and I am sure that I would have personally not concurred because, while I am just as anxious as anyone else to get UNRRA out of the displaced persons operations, I do not think, on the basis of information presently available, that we can set any such definite time limit without the possibility of finding a residual responsibility and no machinery to cope with it. I do think that we all agree that UNRRA should get out of D.P. operations as quickly as ever possible, and if you are in accord, I propose to inform the British and other key governments interested that, in following through on the resolution which the Council passed we do propose to seek termination of UNRRA's D.P. responsibilities when the situation is reviewed at the end of six months, unless there are compelling justifications for UNRRA continuing such activities. If such is the case, our position will also be that continuation is on a strict ad hoc basis.

The Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, August 29, 1945—3 p. m. [Received August 30—1:12 a. m.]

3098. I have not seen the recent interchange of cables with Clayton which led up to the decision referred to in circular August 24, noon ⁸⁹ that UNRRA would recognize allocations of the Ukrainian and Byelorussian republics together up to 250 million dollars.

I concurred with the Department's thought that it is unnecessary to give the Soviets UNRRA assistance and that their needs should be taken care of through credit facilities. It is therefore not clear to me why it is advisable to deviate from this opinion.

From a political standpoint if UNRRA assistance is to be given to the Soviets I would consider it far better to do so direct to the Soviet Government rather than to become involved in the fiction that the Ukrainian and Byelorussian republics are independent economic units. This Embassy has no information to justify such a conclusion. I am fearful that the precedent of accepting the theory of their economic independence will be used to our detriment in political or other questions in the future. In addition if it is decided that UNRRA shipments should be made to the Soviet Union I feel that they should be made on a reimbursement basis.

On the question of whether UNRRA assistance should be made to the Soviets at all I feel I should expand the reasons given in my No. 2820 August 9, 3 p. m.

Preliminary reports indicate that the over-all Russian food situation will be better during the next 12 months than in the past in spite of the loss of lend-lease shipments. Part of this is due to the extraction by the Soviets of agricultural products including livestock from Soviet occupied and liberated areas and the fact that the occupying Russian armies live off the land. In addition the Soviets are making trade agreements with the neighboring countries under their political control without regard to their effect on the economic conditions in the west. As a result of these Soviet policies we are faced in Germany and Austria with the necessity of importing food from the west as against obtaining it from these countries themselves or from the countries from which agricultural products had normally been obtained. We find ourselves therefore forced to furnish food to several countries either directly or through UNRRA.

If the Soviets had cooperated in reestablishing normal interchange of goods in Europe I would have taken a different view of UNRRA assistance to the Soviet Union. As they have not agreed so far to this policy and are unlikely to do so it seems we should protect United States interests by offsetting our obligations in other parts of Europe through declining UNRRA shipments to the Soviet Union.

I am not familiar with the items other than food which the Soviets are requesting from UNRRA. In this connection I feel we should bear in mind that the Russians are stripping the occupied countries of large quantities of clothes, agricultural machinery and plant equipment et cetera under the guise of war booty. The effect of this in Germany and Austria will be to increase the difficulties in reestablishing economic life on a self-sustaining basis and add to the cost to the United States in this connection.

Another aspect of the problem is the fact that the Russians in spite of the shortage of labor on the farms and elsewhere are maintaining an enormous military establishment. Only 13 classes are to be demobilized before the end of this year—55 to 43 years of age. I hear repeated stories of the discontent of the Russian people over their not obtaining more consumer goods. UNRRA aid may well tend to permit the Soviet authorities to maintain a larger army than they otherwise would by assisting to fill the gap which the Russian people appear to be demanding for a more comfortable existence.

I realize there may be many reasons with which I am not familiar that have led Clayton to make his recommendation. On the other hand before final decision is reached I hope our over-all relations with the Soviet Union will be given full weight. Having observed carefully the effect on the Soviet Government of our generous lend-lease policy over the past 4 years I have not found that we have obtained any benefit in good-will on the part of the Soviet Government in connection with their actions which affect our interests. During the war we have obtained in my opinion full value for our lend-lease shipments through the strengthening of the Soviet war effort. However now that the war is over I see no gain to the United States in dealing with the Soviets on any other than a realistic reciprocal basis. I have found in my experience that such a policy is understood and respected by the Soviet Government and is more apt to obtain reasonably satisfactory results.

I have discussed this message with General Deane ⁹⁰ and he concurs. Sent Department as 3098, repeated London to Winant for Clayton as 428.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, September 5, 1945—6 p. m. [Received 10:15 p. m.]

- 9075. Moscow's 3098 to Department 91 concerning the USSR application for UNRRA aid has been repeated to us. We have following comments:
- I. 1. The Soviet application was not surprising. We understand that Soviet representatives had some time ago informally inquired of UNRRA regarding possible assistance for USSR but did not pursue this when it was clear that because of shipping limitations relief goods could only be sent at expense of lend-lease war materials.
- 2. The Soviet were fully entitled to make an application within the terms of UNRRA agreement and council resolutions. It would have been inconsistent with obligations of member countries if one of them had arbitrarily intervened to try to prevent consideration from being given to a Soviet request.
- 3. The argument that any Soviet request should be turned down in advance on the simple ground that the Soviet should finance all it needs by credits cannot be sustained. Ability to obtain credits does not necessarily disqualify a country from UNRRA aid. Some areas which are getting UNRRA aid are already or may soon be able to get loans for reconstruction purposes. UNRRA aid is for relief and early rehabilitation only.

- 4. The argument that Soviet should be refused aid on basis of reports of Soviet removals of goods from eastern territories would apply with much more force against credits than against consideration of UNRRA aid. The quid pro quo for credits is future repayment. The quid pro quo for UNRRA aid is factual demonstration of relief needs.
- II. 5. But the issues raised by the Soviet request went much further. It is a fact that no other Allied civilian population suffered hardships and devastation comparable to what the Soviet endured, that no other Allied Army lost so many men as they did and that no other Allied war workers lived and worked on such meager rations as they received. If we were generous in supplying them with goods they were generous in sacrificing lives and homes to speed the success of the common cause.
- 6. In face of these facts we believe it would have been disastrous if the US had taken the position during the Council meeting that full and free relief should be supplied to two countries which fought against us and our Allies and at the same time the Soviet request to rally [to be summarily?] rejected.
- 7. If refused, the Soviet could have appealed to the Council and widespread publicity would have been given to this evidence of Allied disunity. The ordinary person everywhere would have pointed to the readiness of the US to give UNRRA free goods for ex-enemy countries and their refusal to support the same treatment for one of our two great Allies which had suffered unparalleled losses.
- 8. We are convinced that Mr. Clayton acted wisely and to the minimum extent necessary to avoid a complete impasse and we would urge support of his recommendation.⁹²

- 3. Some of the economic arguments for any assistance to any part of Russia—pros and cons—were included in Clayton's tel of August 6 from London.⁹⁵
- 4. Russia, it is true, has substantial gold holdings, credit potentialities, and—most important—a great power of recuperation. On the other hand, Russia, especially in the two republics, has made greater physical sacrifice, suffered more devastation, and lowered its already low standard of living below that of any repeat any European nations.
- 5. The availability of external credit is not regarded under the UNRRA plan established at Atlantic City in 1943 as a necessary reason for denying free assistance. Resolution 14, Section 18 states:

"It shall be the policy of the Administration that an applicant government shall not be required to assume the burden of an enduring foreign exchange debt for the procurement of relief and rehabilitation supplies and services."

- 6. The Russian case differs only in a matter of degree from those of Poland, Czechoslovakia, and China. China has substantial gold and dollars, already has received large U.S. credits, will receive additional credits, and always has been considered a proper recipient of UNRRA aid. We are now considering reconstruction credits to Poland and Czechoslovakia.
- 7. The UNRRA administration had let it be known that it had always considered Russia eligible for UNRRA assistance.
- 8. The unfortunate publicity re Russian request would have made a flat turn-down politically very difficult.
- 9. The Washington Post and other U.S. papers had favored UNRRA aid to Russia.
- 10. The Canadian delegate ⁹⁶ publicly favored aid to Russia, and moreover stated that the Canadian people would regard a turn-down as an indication of strong anti-Soviet attitude, which might jeopardize Canada's further financial participation in UNRRA.⁹⁷
- 11. The termination of lend-lease 98 hardened the attitude of the Russian delegates.

- 12. The Russian argued privately that the contrast between our attitude on Italy and Austria, and on Russia was intolerable and threatened to bring this point before the Council.
- 13. Clayton became convinced that Russia would break up UNRRA, by forcing some form of Council action on the Soviet proposal, and by vigorously opposing the Italian action which was essential to Congressional approval of the additional contribution to UNRRA. unless some trade was made. The Russians insisted on their full request of $700 million right up to August 24.
- 14. It was found possible to provide $250 million out of the funds of UNRRA—including the additional one percent contribution without reducing other programs and giving Italy and China the amounts we had proposed.
- 15. Clayton had offered to recommend the solution finally agreed to the Department provided the Russians withdrew their large request, admitted Italy,99 agreed to go through all of the UNRRA procedures including the arrangements for UNRRA missions in their areas, and permitted the establishment of effective program control over all UNRRA operations. This the Russians, on August 24, agreed to, and it became possible amicably to finish up that day the work of the UNRRA Council meeting with resolutions enabling a satisfactory completion of its job in Europe and the Far East.
- 16. We thus felt the whole UNRRA negotiation with the Russians had been quite successful, and that the entire results of the Council meeting had been rather better than we had hoped for.

Dept recognizes that this incident was only one step in a broad series of political and economic dealings with the Russians. We did protect all of the UNRRA principles, saved UNRRA, and at the same time achieved an understanding with Russia whereby her continued pressure for additional aid from UNRRA should be entirely eliminated, and her request very substantially cut down. Dept is moving to implement item XX of the Berlin Protocol re Eastern Europe, and is separately instructing you and General Draper re reparations. Other economic conditions are being drawn up for inclusion in any Eximbank credits to Russia along lines of Clayton's Potsdam memo to vou.3

330. Department may wish to invite personal attention of Director General Lehman of UNRRA to fact that Soviets continue to capitalize UNRRA deliveries to Zecho as though they were gifts from Soviet Union. This they are enabled to do partly because physical deliveries have been arriving from east via Constanza, partly because UNRRA's chief representative in Zecho is Soviet citizen who is in charge of deliveries, and partly because Zecho Minister [Ministry?] of Information which controls press, radio and all other means publicity is more or less controlled by Communists. As result this most unfortunate combination of circumstances Zecho public has never been informed that UNRRA is 72% American and that Soviet is not even a contributing member. At no time insofar as I have been able to ascertain has any reference been made either by Alexejev or Czech press or radio to fact that UNRRA is primarily dependent on U.S. and [apparent omission] Soviet method of capitalizing UNRRA deliveries to Zecho is a public ceremony to be held in Praha today on occasion of delivery of 1250 trucks and at which Alexejev will speak. If he pursues his customary course by failing to make any reference to participation of U.S. or other countries in UNRRA and is surrounded on occasion of presentation in public by numerous Russian generals and other high Russian officials, impression will continue to prevail among uninformed public that people of Zecho are beholden to Soviet Union for what UNRRA does. On a previous occasion a train arriving from east with UNRRA deliveries was covered with Soviet flags and banners. At public demonstration to greet the train numerous speeches were made thanking Soviet Union for its bounty.

The Ambassador in Poland (Lane) to the Secretary of State

Warsaw, September 24, 1945—2 p. m. [Received September 27—10:45 p. m.]

- 286. Following are answers to questions Department's telegram 105, September 14 based on observations Embassy staff and reports from reliable sources:
- 1. Certain UNRRA articles have been placed on sale in the open market at exaggerated prices but this practice according to UNRRA representatives here has ceased at their request (see my telegram 200, September 5 for Lehman ⁵).

- 2. Pilferage has been reported particularly in connection with supplies arriving through Constanza but it is reported that much of this pilferage had taken place prior to arrival of shipments in Poland. It is expected that this situation will improve now that UNRRA ships are arriving at Danzig-Gdynia. Embassy has no reports of deflection of UNRRA railway shipments within Poland but it must be recognized that this risk exists. For example, it is reported that shipments of coal destined to Warsaw and other cities are sometimes forcibly re-routed by Russians to USSR.
- 3. There is no doubt that much of the UNRRA material expected here will be required to replace articles removed as war booty by Soviets. It is reported that western Poland and other areas have been stripped by the Soviets of all farming and dairying machinery (see my telegram 182, August 31 ° re conversation with Mikolajczyk). Wholesale pillaging (see my telegram 133, August 24 reporting Vice President Grabski's opinions 7) appears to be dwindling, probably because there is little left to pillage; nevertheless Embassy still receives sporadic reports of such activity on part of Russians.

Polish officials are aware of whereabouts in Germany of Polish live-stock removed from country by Germans (see my airgram A–21, August 31 s) but they are reluctant to have them returned to Poland for fear they will be seized by Soviets. If these fears are well founded there is certainly the possibility that some of the livestock imported by UNRRA would suffer similar fate.

UNRRA representatives here report Polish authorities very willing to comply with UNRRA's suggestions regarding distribution and dis-

Feeling was reported to be rising against the Soviet Army because of its lawlessness, and the Poles were said to be unwilling to re-settle areas occupied by the Red Army for this reason. Mikolajczyk had complained about this situation to Marshal Konstantin Konstantinovich Rokossovski, Commander of the Soviet Northern Group of Forces, who claimed that army deserters alone were responsible for the trouble. Not printed; it transmitted information received from an official of the Polish Ministry of Agriculture, who stated that of 3,900,000 horses in Poland at the outbreak of the war only 500,000 remained. My informant states that it is "common knowledge" in Brno that substantial quantities of UNRRA supplies intended for Czechoslovakia are sent to the Soviet Union either before or after they reach the city and that there is every reason to believe that an arrangement was made some time ago between the food authorities in Brno and the Soviet Forces of Occupation under which the city is exempted from part of the fresh meat deliveries to the Soviet Army which would otherwise be required in exchange for the delivery to the Soviet armed forces over a period of time of UNRRA canned meat. My informant added that although the local press in Brno has repeatedly given publicity to "Soviet contributions to UNRRA" he doubts that all of public have been misled in view of fact that public recognizes packaging of UNRRA supplies as of American rather than Soviet origin.

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews) to the Secretary of State

The British have recently expressed to the Department ¹⁰ concern at the size of Tito's Yugoslav army and the effect of the maintenance of this large force on the UNRRA program in that country, resulting either directly by diversion of supplies to that army or indirectly by the fact that those troops, if demobilized, might contribute to increase agricultural production in Yugoslavia. The British have made two proposals in this connection 1) that the two principal supplying nations, the United States and Britain, ask Governor Lehman to reduce or suspend UNRRA supplies to Yugoslavia until the army is demobilized or 2) that an UNRRA "vetting" mission with large British and United States contingents be sent to investigate the situation particularly in the light of the present size of Tito's army.

¹⁰ By aide-mémoire of October 11, 1945, not printed.

On October 11, Mr. Balfour ¹¹ of the British Embassy discussed with Under Secretary Acheson his Government's proposal for a "vetting" mission. It was indicated in this connection that the British had in mind the political aspects of such a mission and it is believed that in the first proposal made to you by Lord Halifax similar motives were at least partly behind the British suggestion.

We feel that it would be inadvisable to involve UNRRA in political matters even if Governor Lehman should be agreeable, which seems unlikely. In any case, we have in the meantime suggested to the British and to Moscow a joint approach to Dr. Subasič ¹² and Marshal Tito ¹³ urging them to reestablish the basis for cooperation which we recommended at Yalta ¹⁴ be put into effect and we believe this line preferable to that of exerting pressure for political ends on Tito indirectly through UNRRA or otherwise.

However, we agree that, political considerations aside, the continued existence of an army of 600,000 or more men in Yugoslavia constitutes, at least indirectly, a drain on UNRRA supplies and that if a portion of these men were demobilized they would be in a position to assist in increasing the local Yugoslav agricultural production materially. Tito maintains and recently told our Congressman Mundt and Mrs. Bolton that a program for demobilizing 200,000 troops has been completed. 15 On the other hand, he subsequently said in an address to the officers corps in Belgrade that he intends to "strengthen" his army. But the army does not seem to be the sole problem faced by UNRRA in Yugoslavia. While there is a sizable production in the northern regions, a lack of transport prevents distribution from that area to the less productive populous southern and western sections. In addition, transport problems are hampering the distribution throughout Yugoslavia of UNRRA supplies now being landed at Adriatic ports. Consequently, a reduction in the army would not, in our opinion, provide in itself a solution to the relief problem in Yugoslavia and it seems to us that it is merely one of a number of factors to be considered by UNRRA in connection with the continuance or readjustment of the UNRRA program in that country.

337. Urtel 330, Sep 10. General situation regarding distribution of UNRRA supplies has been called to attn of Gov. Lehman who agreed to take immediate steps as reported in Deptel 252, Sep 21. Report in urtel 408, Oct 2, also called officially to attn UNRRA Washington with request that action be taken to prevent diversion of UNRRA supplies to Soviet forces. UNRRA has appointed Richard Brown as deputy to Soviet chief of UNRRA mission, Praha, with instructions to report directly to Gov. Lehman on UNRRA situation in Zecho and to supervise UNRRA observers in field.

Although action may ultimately be taken by UNRRA to correct abuses in distribution and prevent misrepresentation of source of supply, Dept considers that important political principle is involved in claiming unilateral credit for an international undertaking and in diversion of supplies. Dept considers this particularly important in view of your reports on state of Zecho public opinion. You are therefore requested in your discretion to bring facts reported in your 330 informally to attention of chief of UNRRA mission and call to his attn principles enunciated in various resolutions on policy of first session of UNRRA council, as well as specific provisions of Zecho-UNRRA agreement of 26 Feb 1945 17 providing for Zecho Govt responsibility for distribution and outlining precise powers and functions of UNRRA field mission. You may suggest that chief of mission issue a public statement to the effect that incorrect info has been circulated concerning source of UNRRA supplies, stating that you propose also to bring it to attn Zecho Govt and, if situation not corrected, you will be forced to consider taking such steps as may be necessary. If he refuses to make such a statement, as Dept anticipates, you may make similar informal request of Zecho Govt for its views concerning operation of Zecho-UNRRA agreement. If adequate statements or explanations are not forthcoming Dept would appreciate your views whether any further appropriate action may be taken.

The Secretary of State to the Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee (Cannon) 18

Washington, October 31, 1945.

Dear Mr. Cannon: In my letter to you of October 22, 1945, 19 expressed the view that it would be unfortunate to include new and restrictive conditions in the pending UNRRA appropriation legislation. In this connection I would like to refer to one of the conditions which has been proposed in various forms relating to the freedom of properly accredited representatives of the press of the United Nations to enter areas receiving UNRRA assistance. I have already indicated to you that I did not believe this proposal, in any of its forms, should be accepted.

I want, particularly, to explain my views on this matter. The reason for my belief, as I am sure you know, has nothing to do with the intrinsic merit of the suggestion: I am thoroughly in favor of that.

I do not believe, however, that the bill appropriating the remaining funds already authorized for our participation in UNRRA is the appropriate device through which to seek the result we all desire.

It would be fortunate indeed if we could provide succor under ideal conditions of all kinds, but hunger and cold and tragedy will not wait upon perfection. We cannot put ourselves in the position of denving promised relief to millions of human beings because we have failed to secure our other objectives in advance.

It is my firm hope that all people may soon enjoy complete access to the news as well as freedom of speech and of belief and of assembly, but I fear that the attachment of conditions in our appropriation bill may hurt rather than help us in our efforts to achieve these ends.

To carry on our foreign relations we have regular mechanisms of international intercourse. We are using these with vigor to implement our foreign policy. We have already met with a considerable degree of success in providing our correspondents access to the news, and I am convinced that the course we are following is the correct one. We must seek our ends by negotiation and agreement, not by ultimatum.

Sincerely yours,

James F. Byrnes

The Ambassador in Czechoslovakia (Steinhardt) to the Secretary of State

Praha, October 31, 1945—midnight. [Received November 4—1:18 a. m.]

516. Immediately upon receipt of the Dept's 337 of Oct 26 I asked Alexejev, Chief of the UNRRA Mission in Zecho, to call to see me. At a conference this afternoon I brought to his attention the facts reported in my 330 of Sept 10 to the Dept and referred to the principles enunciated in various resolutions on policy of the UNRRA Council as well as specific provisions of the Zecho-UNRRA agreement of Feb 26, 1945. I also called his attention to the criticism prevalent in Praha and the US of UNRRA operations in Zecho and enumerated to him the four principal criticisms: (a) Failure to adequately inform the Zecho public of the role played by the US in UNRRA, (b) allowing the belief to prevail in some quarters that UNRRA supplies originate with the Soviet Union, (c) permitting UNRRA supplies to be distributed to obtain local political advantages, (d) failure to provide any food or clothing for the children or destitute of Praha.

In reply Alexejev pointed out that efforts have been made since the arrival of Hitchcock 21 as Press Relations Officer to publicize the participation of the US in UNRRA and referred to recent newspaper clippings as evidence that the corrective steps had not been without success. As to the belief in some quarters that UNRRA supplies originate with the Soviet Union, Alexejev cited two instances in local communities where the population had indicated that they were aware of the fact that UNRRA supplies were largely provided by the US, adding that in his opinion much of the population was by now aware of this fact. As to the receipt by the Soviet Army of a considerable quantity of UNRRA canned meat in Brno, Alexejev said that this matter was still under investigation, the preliminary inquiry having disclosed that there has been "an exchange" with the Soviet Army of UNRRA canned meat for fresh meat. Alexejev then admitted that there had been maldistribution of UNRRA supplies in some places which might have occasioned talk of political advantages for some and said that he was taking corrective measures. measures he said would include the opening of an office in Bratislava and a more thorough inspection wherever distribution is made. to the failure to provide any food or clothing for Praha he at first suggested that American voluntary organizations meet this requirement saying that conferences were being held with Dr. Sharp and Mrs. Gates on this subject. When I pointed out that the city of Praha with seven percent of the entire population of Zecho was entitled to at least some share of UNRRA deliveries to Zecho irrespective of any aid that might be rendered by American relief agencies, he was inclined to agree observing that this was a matter for the Czech authorities.

I gained the impression that Alexejev is seriously concerned with the criticism which his administration has avoided [incurred?] and that subject to his limited capabilities and experience and such instructions as he may receive from time to time from the Soviet Embassy he is making a serious effort to remove the causes of complaint. He said he welcomed the impending arrival of Richard Brown who as his administrative assistant would be placed in charge of distribution.

In fairness to Alexejev I should add that substantial progress has been made during the past few weeks in correcting the erroneous impression regarding the origin of UNRRA supplies.

In view of the arrival in Praha of Hitchcock as Press Relations Officer for UNRRA and the impending arrival of Brown as Deputy Chief, both of whom are Americans, I suggest that no further action be taken by the Dept until the result of their joint efforts can be appraised. I shall, of course, continue to report developments. As soon as Alexejev has completed his investigation of the Brno incident and reported to UNRRA I will furnish the Dept with any further information obtainable. I request that the Embassy's source of information be protected.

[Washington,] November 7, 1945.

I have been informally advised that Governor Lehman met with President Osmena of the Philippines this morning to discuss the pending Commonwealth request for UNRRA assistance. Governor Lehman suggested a continuation of the program of emergency assistance to the Philippines and offered to set aside $2,000,000 for this purpose in addition to the $1,000,000 already spent as an emergency measure. Osmena seemed quite satisfied with this arrangement, and the Director General feels that he has full authority to proceed without reference to the Council or the Central Committee. I have asked that we be officially notified of this development in the event that you wish to advise the Secretary, and possibly Messrs. Ickes, 22 McNutt, 23 and the President at your scheduled meeting next Tuesday.

I believe that the above action grows out of a conversation which Colonel Wood 24 and I had with the Director General in which we tentatively suggested that an emergency program be continued for the Philippines, and that their over-all request be left pending, without action by either UNRRA or the Resolution 23 Committees until some clarification of the U.S.-Philippine relief program, now before Congress, was forthcoming. Such a procedure would avoid any embarrassment for the U.S. in having a Philippine request for UNRRA assistance come before a financial committee at a time when we did not know what unilateral action was contemplated by this Government and the Congress. If the development reported above is a fact, we are also spared any embarrassment should the question of UNRRA aid to the Philippines be raised in the course of the Congressional hearings on the new UNRRA contribution.²⁵ requested to authorize the additional one percent contribution recommended at the recent UNRRA Council meeting in London.

A significant factor in the success of the Congressional approach will be the Department's difficulty in justifying any failure on the part of other contributors to fulfill their original financial undertakings to UNRRA. This failure received considerable attention from Congress and the press during the recent hearings, and will be given even more scrutiny if action has not been taken by the other contributing governments before the new hearings are completed. Action by the governments now in arrears will have a definite effect on the willingness of the Congress to vote an additional one percent contribution by the United States to UNRRA and it is, of course, apparent that without an additional US contribution to UNRRA, the aims and objectives of the Administration and its member governments cannot be accomplished.

As of September 30 the status of contributions to UNRRA was as follows (in thousands of US dollars):

Country	$Authorized\ or\ in\ process$	Paid or available	$egin{aligned} Balance \ due \ in \ 1945 \end{aligned}$
Colombia	$2,356	$52	$2,304
Costa Rica	400	0	400
Dominican Republic	350	245	105
Mexico	3,602	1, 14 8	2,454
Panama	409	$^{'}142$	267
Uruguay	520	485	35
Venezuela	1,017	17	1,000
Ecuador	150	0	150
El Salvador	129	5	124
Bolivia	95	32	63
Paraguay	38	10	28

You are requested to bring the above points forcefully to the attention of the appropriate government officials. An important service can thus be rendered to the UNRRA program. This subject has been fully discussed with the British and Canadian Governments, whose missions, the Department understands, will receive similar instructions.

840.50 UNRRA/11-945: Airgram

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Brazil (Berle)

Washington, November 9, 1945.

A-1031. [The first paragraph of this airgram is identical with that of circular airgram of November 8, 3:50 p.m., printed supra.]

Consideration will also be given at the next UNRRA Council meeting to the possible addition of several new members to the Central Committee. If, as seems desirable, this Government is to support the nomination of Brazil to be one of these, it is important that preliminary steps be undertaken in the very near future to support this position with the other interested governments. The US initiation of action in this regard would only be justified if Brazil should find it possible to increase her present contribution to UNRRA, or at the least, to take definitive steps in that direction before the meeting of the Council which is expected to take place late this year or early in 1946.²⁸

At the same time it should be borne in mind that the action taken by Brazil will have no small influence on the action to be taken by the Congress in considering an additional contribution to UNRRA. During the recent hearings both the Congress and the press gave considerable attention to the fact that many governments had failed to make available to UNRRA the contributions which had been previously agreed upon. The British and Canadian Governments have joined this Government in calling these facts to the attention of certain of the American Republics and it is not unlikely that favorable action by Brazil in regard to an additional contribution will also have the effect of spurring other governments especially those in Latin America to fulfil their existing obligations, if not to pledge further contributions.

It is apparent that without additional contributions to UNRRA the aims and objectives of the Administration and of this Government cannot be accomplished.

You are requested to take appropriate measures to bring this matter to the attention of the Brazilian Government and thus render an important service to UNRRA as well as this Government.²⁹

The Director General of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (Lehman) to the President Pro Tempore of the Senate (MeKellar)³⁰

Washington, 9 November, 1945.

My Dear Senator McKellar: Your letter of November 3 regarding H. J. Res. 266 30a has just reached me. I will, of course, be glad to come before your Committee at any time I am invited to do so.

May I again urge as strongly as I can that the Congress reach a prompt decision regarding the funds that may be made available now and hereafter for the work of UNRRA. As I have already testified, UNRRA is now without available funds. Its work has already been curtailed. It will cease entirely within a short period unless we are given the additional necessary funds. The need is so urgent, the case of millions of human beings so desperate, that we can no longer wait in taking action without causing untold suffering.

May I again express the deep hope that the bill when passed will not contain crippling restrictions. Since writing to you on November 2 in regard to the Brown amendment 31 attached to the House bill appropriating funds for UNRRA, I have given further thought to the matter and I feel that I should add this post-script to my earlier communication. I believe more strongly than ever that the enactment of this amendment would be most unfortunate.

The opportunity for public service offered me as Director General of UNRRA appealed to me strongly. I have felt that through this organization, created to minister to the urgent needs of survivors of a tragic war, the humanitarian impulses of the American people would find a fitting expression. As my whole life has been devoted to public service and to humanitarian causes, I need hardly tell you that, with a full appreciation of the manifold difficulties, I was not only willing but eager to play a part in this challenging endeavor.

As I pointed out to you in my recent letter, UNRRA is a relief organization dedicated solely to the purpose of bringing urgently needed supplies and services to starving peoples. On this account, I feel keenly that it would be unworthy of the United States to place political conditions on its participation. I have the greatest sympathy with the American desire to see the press accorded fullest freedom everywhere. I do not feel that it is proper, or that it would be effective, to attempt to impose this condition as the price of continuing relief. On the contrary, I believe the only result of such an attempt would be to impair the ability of UNRRA to perform the humane task to which it is dedicated.

Should we raise political conditions now not contemplated at the time we made our current commitment, we would inevitably place our own good faith in question. At the very least we would invite other countries to follow our lead, attaching conditions to their grants. The task of UNRRA has not been an easy one. Under these circumstances it would become well-nigh impossible. The United States would be held responsible for whatever suffering might be entailed.

³¹ Representative Clarence Brown, of Ohio. For text of the amendment, see Congressional Record, vol. 91, pt. 8, p. 10283.

I am again laying my views before you because of my profound conviction that I do not exaggerate the gravity of the situation.32

HERBERT H. LEHMAN Very sincerely yours,

"Reference is made to our conversation of August 24, in which we agreed on a text of a resolution regarding additional contributions which was subsequently adopted by the UNRRA Council. During the conversation, you agreed on behalf of the delegations of the USSR, Ukraine, and Byelorussian SSR and we on behalf of our respective delegations to the following understanding.

"The application of the USSR for receipt of free UNRRA assistance will be replaced by applications on behalf of the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Republics for receipt of relief and rehabilitation supplies in the amount of 250 million dollars. In the consideration of the applications of the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Republics by an appropriate sub-committee to be established in accordance with Resolution 23, the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian representatives undertake to support the applications of the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Republics for receipt of free relief and rehabilitation supplies from UNRRA in the amount of 250 million dollars. We are satisfied from what you have told us that the facts will justify us in taking this course. It is understood that there will be a maximum simplification of the procedure of considering the applications, and that every effort will be made to avoid delay either in reaching a decision or in rendering the assistance required. It is understood that, if the additional funds contemplated in Resolution 80 ³⁶ are not forthcoming from the three principal contributing countries, a new situation will arise in which all concerned with the present exchange of letters will endeavour to ensure a reduction by the Administration of all outstanding claims, including those of the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Republics, sufficient to bring them within the limits of the funds available.

"We would appreciate your confirming the correctness of this statement of our mutual understanding."

641. For the Dept and Director General Lehman of UNRRA from Richard Brown. A report received from the Czech Government concerning the alleged transfer of unrationed meat to the Soviet Army confirms the fact that 10,000 pounds of unrationed meat were transfered to the Soviet and Rumanian armies in Brno. At the time the transfer was made inadequate instructions had been given [for distributing?] ³⁷ UNRRA supplies.

The report of the Czech Government although similar in many respects to the [independent investigation made by Mission's staff] ³⁸ which was facilitated by the Government does not satisfy me as I regard the report as inadequate.

Alexejev and I have also addressed a strong letter to the Minister of [Food] ^{39a} pointing out the incomplete aspects of the report and insisting that improved investigating and accounting facilities in connection with the distribution of UNRRA supplies be instituted immediately.

STEINHARDT

840.50 UNRRA/12-145

Colonel C. Tyler Wood, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton), to the Director of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (Lehman)

Washington, December 1, 1945.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR LEHMAN: As you know, supplies for Italy from the United States are presently being procured through the use of the Italian dollar account and through a joint FEA-Army account which was approved by Congress. The Italian dollar account will be fully obligated by December 31, 1945, but, because of the nature of the goods programmed, deliveries will extend through the early months of 1946. The FEA-Army account, used for the procurement of basic subsistence supplies, will be sufficient only to provide such supplies for loadings through the month of December.

By December 10, 1945, arrangements must be made and commitments must be entered into for procurement of coal, petroleum, food and shipping services in order to have goods go forward to Italy during the month of January. Similarly additional commitments must be made by January 10, 1946, in order to have supplies go forward during the month of February 1946.

On November 14 you informed the Central Committee of UNRRA that UNRRA would be willing to provide approximately $60,000,000 necessary for the procurement of supplies for Italy for the month of January 1946, contingent upon Congressional approval of the $550,000,000 appropriation. If the $550,000,000 appropriation now before Congress is approved before December 10,41 I assume therefore that you will make available out of such appropriation the funds necessary for procurement and shipment in January to Italy of supplies in an amount believed to be approximately $60,000,000. While it is realized that UNRRA always retains the power of diversion to other destinations, you will recognize that there would be no other funds or supplies available under this arrangement for procurement for Italy for this month should such diversion take place.

If UNRRA undertakes this commitment a similar problem will arise by January 10 in connection with February shipments for Italy. At this time it is of importance to us to have some understanding as to your intentions with regard to the February shipments. Could you inform us that you will allocate to Italy a proportionate share of any supplies available for February shipment, provided that by January 10 the progress of the proposed legislation for the authorization of an additional $1,350,000,000 from the United States appears reasonably satisfactory to you? 42

While it is exceedingly difficult for you at this time to make positive commitments until funds have been appropriated, nevertheless you will realize that we need the information requested above in order to present to responsible American authorities the grave situation which would exist in Italy should UNRRA be unable to give the Department the requested assurances or should the appropriation be unduly delayed or not approved.

I think it important to point out that it is not our view that Italy should be treated preferentially with respect to other countries receiving UNRRA's assistance. However, because there has been in existence a supply program for Italy separate from UNRRA and in support of a military occupation, it is necessary for us to see to the establishment of an orderly transition from one program to the other and to provide against a break in the pipeline of supplies.

Sincerely yours,

C. Tyler Wood

840.50 UNRRA/12--345

The Director of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (Lehman) to Colonel C. Tyler Wood, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton)

Washington, December 3, 1945.

DEAR COLONEL WOOD: I have your letter of December 1st concerning supplies for Italy.

As you know, Italy, as an ex-enemy country, has not been among the countries for which UNRRA has had responsibility. At the meeting of the UNRRA Council in London in August 1945, however, on motion of the United States delegate, it was agreed that Italy might be considered eligible for relief and rehabilitation supplies from UNRRA and it was understood that shipments to Italy were to be financed from funds acquired from a second one percent contribution.⁴³

In view of the necessity for supplies in Italy during the critical winter months and the termination of the Army-FEA program in December, I informed the Central Committee of UNRRA in November that I would make available up to $60 million worth of supplies for Italy if the $550 million appropriation, due under the first one percent contribution, were made available. I gave this assurance not because Italy was an UNRRA responsibility, but in order that there might not be a break in the supply line with consequent misery and starvation in that country.

UNRRA is faced, however, with a very grave situation. The Congressional delay in acting upon the $550 million appropriation has already necessitated cuts in our shipping program for December and January. We have simply not had the funds to carry on our functions properly and even if Congress makes available the $550 million by December 10th—the date which you mention as a dead-line—it will be extremely difficult to procure and obtain the supplies in time to maintain the flow of supplies when FEA-Army shipments cease at the end of December.

The $60 million out of the $550 million will not be sufficient to maintain programmed shipments to Italy in February. Accordingly, it is essential that this Administration have in hand funds out of the second one percent contribution before the end of December in order to finance the February supplies. If these additional funds are not received, shipping programs not only for Italy but all other countries receiving UNRRA supplies will be disrupted. We shall, however, make such February shipments as may be possible to Italy having in mind, of course, our responsibilities to other nations and reasonable assurance that a second one percent contribution will be made available by the United States.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that the responsibility rests squarely on the State Department to obtain the necessary funds from the United States for the continuance of UNRRA's relief program for all recipient countries and in particular Italy. It is essential that the United States Government assure to UNRRA the funds which are necessary for the continuance of its program.

Sincerely yours,

HERBERT H. LEHMAN

"This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 1945, addressed to Mr. Sergeev, regarding the rendering of assistance from UNRRA to the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republics.

"I note with satisfaction the statement contained in that letter that the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian representatives will assist the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Republics in the receipt of free relief and rehabilitation supplies from UNRRA in the amount of 250 million dollars, and also that there will be a maximum simplification of the procedure of considering the appropriate applications and that every effort will be made to avoid delay in rendering the assistance.

I am glad to advise you that the above-mentioned statement has already been partly carried into effect by recommendations of the subcommittee and by decision of the Director General on furnishing by UNRRA of free relief and rehabilitation supplies to the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Republics.

"At the same time I would like to note that, having acquainted themselves with the resources at UNRRA disposal and having in mind that the Ukraine and Byelorussia are among the countries most heavily ravaged as a result of enemy occupation, the Governments of these Republics have full confidence that their requests for receipt of assistance from UNRRA, submitted as it was agreed with you in the minimum amount of 250 million dollars, will be fully met in as short a period of time as possible from the resources which are already at the disposal of UNRRA from the first contribution of member-countries under the Resolution No. 14 ⁴⁴ of UNRRA Council.

plans had been prepared there would undoubtedly be discussed the question of American policy in aiding Italy during the hearings with respect to UNRRA appropriations. A practical answer to that question even if only for provisional application is critically needed at this moment since the approach of the reported Congressional recess in December without definite action having been secured on the authorization and appropriation of the new one percent contribution to UNRRA, makes a gap in the basic supply line to Italy a real and very dangerous possibility. It leaves those who are in charge of supply program in a position where they do not know who will be responsible for loading supplies for Italy after 31 December less than a month from today.

In my opinion it is of crucial importance to our political and economic policy toward Italy and to world stability in general that supplies continue to arrive in a regular flow throughout the winter months in at least the monthly quantities provided for in the FEA $100,000,000 program.

Since insofar as is known here the UNRRA appropriation is not now assured as to the time factor I urgently recommend that the Dept consider seriously the possibility of obtaining from Congress another special emergency interim appropriation, comparable to the FEA $100,000,000 appropriation which can be used to keep the supply line open during at least the next 2 months (January and February loading). If this particular arrangement is not practicable some similar action should be taken to accomplish immediately the same purpose since the time is so short that the agencies here charged with the supply program cannot continue to gamble on the uncertain progress of the UNRRA legislation in Congress, as far as January and February loadings are concerned.

For necessary orientation here an urgent reply in connection with the foregoing and indicating expected course of action would be appreciated.

and nature of the request for UNRRA assistance from the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republics. You refer in your reply to the confidence of the Governments of these two Republics that their requests for receipt of UNRRA assistance, within the terms agreed upon between us, would be fully met from the resources of the Administration available out of the original contribution of the non-invaded member governments.

It would not be possible for me to accept this interpretation of the arrangements agreed upon between us in London. You will recall that the original letter from Mr. Pearson, Mr. Noel-Baker and myself stated:

"It is understood that if the additional funds contemplated in Resolution 80 are not forthcoming from the three principal contributing countries, a new situation will arise in which all concerned with the present exchange of letters will endeavor to insure a reduction by the Administration of all outstanding claims, including those of the Ukrainian and Byelorussian Republics, sufficient to bring them within the limits of the funds available."

I have consulted with Mr. Noel-Baker and Mr. Pearson, who share my views in the above regard. I am sending this letter without waiting for the delay which would be involved in having all three of us sign it ⁴⁷ so that you may inform the Governments of the Ukraine and Byelorussian Republics promptly of our views in this matter in order to avoid any misunderstanding of the agreement reached between ourselves and you in London. ⁴⁸

2291. Reur 3868 Dec. 3. Governor Lehman has indicated he will finance January shipments to Italy from $550 million remaining balance of original contribution which is expected to be appropriated within next 2 days.

On basis of most recent developments in connection with UNRRA appropriations there is good chance that Congress will act on proposed new one per cent contribution to UNRRA prior to Xmas recess. Every possible means is being used to point out to Congressional leaders urgency of immediate action. Special legislation for Italian relief could probably not be put through Congress any quicker than the UNRRA bill itself and might in itself delay the UNRRA appropriation and raise questions regarding similar problem affecting other countries whose supply pipelines will run out if UNRRA funds are not appropriated immediately.

Dept is fully aware of serious results which a break in supply pipeline would bring about. Believe AC ⁴⁹ and UNRRA staffs in Rome should make plans on assumption that supplies will be shipped and will be financed by UNRRA. Further information will be sent as soon as developments occur.

The Secretary of State to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget (Smith)

Washington, December 8, 1945.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: With what I trust is now the imminent approval by the Senate of the authorization for an additional UNRRA contribution as voted by the House of Representatives, 50 the immediate urgency of the relief problem in the countries receiving or to receive UNRRA's assistance makes it incumbent upon me to request that a full appropriation of the funds authorized be sought from the House Appropriations Committee and the House itself prior to any recess this year. I had hoped that the critical importance of action on the new U.S. contribution to UNRRA, in accordance with the recommendation made last August by the UNRRA Council, would have so impressed itself on Congress, and the people of this country in the course of the recent public hearings before the Foreign Affairs Committee,⁵¹ that the Department would not have to resort to special pleading or procedure to insure that UNRRA's treasury would have the funds necessary to carry on its vital effort to ward off starvation and disease among almost two-thirds of the war-ridden populations of the civilized world.

Reports reaching me daily of the destitution and increasing unrest in these countries, due to the present uncertainty of receiving even the irreducible minimum of essential civilian supplies in the winter months ahead, indicate such a serious threat to our foreign policy objectives and humanitarian commitments that I sincerely believe I would be derelict in my responsibilities as Secretary of State if I did not now seek extraordinary measures of support to insure that UNRRA would not fail in its all important task because a delay in our democratic processes caused a failure to furnish UNRRA with the sine qua non of its success—the financial support of the United States.

I therefore request your fullest cooperation, and through you, that of the Congress, in completing legislation making funds available to UNRRA in the earliest possible time. Specifically, I would like to begin appropriation hearings before Mr. Cannon's 52 Committee in the House of Representatives as soon as enabling legislation has been passed by that body. I would also like to have the House Appropriations Committee act upon the immediate appropriation of the whole contribution of $1,350,000,000 at that time. I will summarize what I believe to be the logical and special reasons for this request.

The members of Congress, and especially the members of the Appropriations Committee, are at present fully familiar with UNRRA's financial needs, and with the details of UNRRA's proposed scope of operations as well as the provisions being made by the Department to insure effective United States participation in the work of UNRRA and control of our contribution to it. It is quite a normal procedure for any agency seeking funds from Congress to request appropriations to cover one year's operations, as this estimate proposes to do. Administrative and fiscal problems are thereby considerably reduced. is particularly important to make a lump sum appropriation in the case of UNRRA to avoid repetition of the difficult circumstances in which we have found ourselves this fall in carrying out our responsibilities, and I am sure the Congress can readily satisfy itself that the Department has taken all the steps necessary to insure a satisfactory control over and protection of the United States contributions. There is the further point that the leadership of this country and the Congress in taking such action will undoubtedly promote fuller and more prompt support from other governments contributing to UNRRA. The Department, may I add, intends to pursue this latter point vigorously with other governments.

In the case of UNRRA, there are cogent and special reasons for seeking the immediate appropriation of the second UNRRA contribution, which reasons are in the national interest, as well as to the advantage of UNRRA and its operations. UNRRA's responsibility is not alone one of relief—although that is certainly the overriding consideration at the moment. UNRRA is responsible for furnishing the minimum rehabilitation supplies essential to the production and maintenance of relief articles, services, and distribution. We deliberately broadened the scope of UNRRA to this limited extent in order to avoid any obligation for continuing indefinitely non-recoverable relief expenditures abroad. We are hoping that UNRRA's work can be completed by the end of 1946 in Europe and three months thereafter in the Far East. The UNRRA member governments, including those receiving its aid, support this objective.

We must all admit, however, that attaining this goal will depend upon the success of the 1946 harvest yield in the receiving countries, and the rehabilitation of ancillary services. This means that UNRKA's deliveries of rehabilitation supplies must reach and pass their peak before the spring, in addition to the shipment of tremendous quantities of food and clothing. The responsibility of UNRRA not only to procure a maximum amount of foodstuffs in surplus areas in the immediate weeks ahead but also to secure production and delivery of raw materials, agricultural and transportation equipment, and other essential rehabilitation supplies must be apparent.

The Department will do all in its power to assist UNRRA in the proper and prompt expenditure of the new contribution in accordance with the objectives stated above. We are also charged with facilitating the disposal of the United States war surpluses here and abroad, and have shared with Congress the desire that our contributions to UNRRA should be an important method of achieving this end. The availability now of the additional United States contribution to UNRRA in full will permit maximum efficiency in integrating surplus disposal with the UNRRA supply programs—both in planning, and in actual transfer and delivery. I cannot over-emphasize the need for funds to be available in full, with a minimum of administrative restrictions, if the Department is to succeed in successfully accomplishing this two-fold task.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES

Washington, December 10, 1945—5 p. m.

- 449. 1. For consideration of UNRRA program for Yugoslavia Dept requests whatever info you can supply on following subjects.
- 2. What is present size of Yugoslavian Army? At what rate are demobilization and recruitment actually taking place? What are official demobilization and recruitment plans? If possible give monthly rates and predicted situation 6 months and year ahead. To what extent do following factors affect demobilization situation: temporary absence civilian employment opportunity; ability of Army to feed, clothe and house soldiers more efficiently than at home; government's concern with controlling opposition.

- 3. To what extent is Army being used for productive purposes, such as reconstruction roads, ports, houses, agricultural production, distribution of relief, etc. How much is this situation determined by government's ability to organize for efficient use?
- 4. Dept understands British are also interested in above questions, but US approach to Yugo Gov't should be independent.
- 5. Dept also desires whatever substantiation you have of charges political use UNRRA supplies by Yugo Gov't. Ambassador Kirk reported recently your Mission has information on this question which we have not yet received.

The Director General of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (Lehman) to the Secretary of State

Washington, 12 December, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: In my letter of 3 December to Mr. C. Tyler Wood, I indicated the gravity of the situation with respect to shipments of relief supplies for Italy. Despite the absence of assurance from the United States Government that an additional contribution of $1,350,000,000 will be made by the United States to UNRRA, I have issued instructions that approximately $60,000,000 out of the first United States contribution to UNRRA be made available for the procurement of supplies and shipping services so as to permit the continuation of the present pipeline of relief supplies to Italy in January. However, the availability of this $60,000,000 depends upon the completion of the appropriation of the $550,000,000 now pending. Some of the supplies to be shipped to Italy in January, especially coal, should have been financed not later than December 10. Neither the United States Government nor UNRRA were in a position to finance those shipments by that date. Other supplies should be financed not later than December 15.

I am writing you this letter in order to make certain that you are aware of the fact that our inability to finance the January shipments in time will inevitably result in delays in the January shipments to Italy and I would appreciate it if you would take the necessary steps to acquaint the pertinent officials of the State Department both here and abroad so that they may be aware of the circumstances which have resulted in those delays.

Sincerely yours,

HERBERT H. LEHMAN

The Chargé in China (Robertson) to the Secretary of State

Chungking, December 15, 1945—10 a.m. [Received December 15—7:15 a.m.]

- 2165. After consultation with UNRRA officials in Chungking and Shanghai, Embassy's comments on points raised in Department's circular telegram of December 4, 3 p. m.⁵³ are as follows:
- 1. Assuming that tentatively agreed upon figure of $550,000,000 for China is carried out, it is unlikely that UNRRA field mission will suggest any changes in schedules revised after end of war, unless there are difficulties in securing one category or another. It is possible that Chinese Government itself may suggest changes. Current trend in their thinking is to put emphasis on transportation and basic raw materials rather than on processed foodstuffs or industrial equipment.
- 2. Embassy is in a position to make only a perfunctory examination of the program. On the basis of this examination it believes that the program is on the whole a fairly well balanced one. Embassy is of opinion that Chinese tendency to emphasize transportation and raw materials is a correct one and that some revision in this direction might be useful. Emphasis on railroad equipment should have very careful consideration with relation to local political situation. As long as Communist forces operate freely, it seems likely that they will tear up railroad equipment as fast as it is laid down. There are, of course, areas in which this does not apply and emphasis should be there rather than in questionable ones. Possibly more should be done to expand river transport program.
- 3. While tentative allocations is only one half of the Chinese request, Embassy is of opinion that it is a reasonable figure in relation to China's ability to effectively utilize and absorb a large volume of supplies.
- 4. UNRRA officials regard food, clothing, medical supplies and transportation as of primary importance and the first to be supplied. The character of the supplies should be in the field of raw materials rather than processed goods wherever practicable. If cutbacks must be made discussions with UNRRA officials indicate they should be made in industrial equipment, fishing equipment and tractors.
- 5. China's allocation is admittedly low both in relation to her absolute needs and also on a per capita basis. But according to UNRRA surveys present organization of CNRRA, silted condition of rivers at leading ports and lack of water, railroad, and highway transportation facilities all render it extremely doubtful if not improbable whether China will be able to accept delivery of and distribute even the $350,000,000 allotment for the first 6 months of 1946. Therefore it appears that it would not be economically desirable at this time to increase or to raise the question of increasing China's allotment.

 $^{^{53}}$ Not printed; it requested an appraisal from various diplomatic missions on summaries of proposed UNRRA programs, which summaries were contained in another circular telegram, also not printed, of the same date (840.50 UNRRA/12-445).

According to reliable sources, CNRRA is burdened with the difficult administrative problems confronting most Chinese Government agencies. While efforts are currently being made by UNRRA to aid CNRRA in improving its internal administration, and while CNRRA is delegating some of its responsibilities to other Chinese Government agencies, unless and until definite evidence is forthcoming that present allocation can be more efficiently handled there is little point in considering increasing it. Hendrickson discussed with Chargé certain administrative weaknesses in both CNRRA and UNRRA field mission in China just before leaving for America and consultation with him will reveal practical problems involved.

- 1. Both Houses of Congress this week voted 550 million dollar balance of first US contribution to UNRRA 55 which has since been made available to Administration.
- 2. Enabling legislation for new US contribution of $1,350,000 passed House last week and was reported out favorably and without change by Senate Foreign Relations Committee December 13. Senate acceptance is anticipated before Christmas recess next week.
- 3. Senate passed, on December 14, deficiency bill including 750 million dollar appropriation for UNRRA against second contribution when enabling legislation becomes law. No difficulty in House approval of this appropriation foreseen, and final action anticipated before recess.
- 4. In accordance with above, Department expects by end of next week that new US contribution will have been finally authorized and that 750 million dollars of it will be available to UNRRA for immediate purchases. This sum, with 550 million dollars already appropriated in December, will cover all necessary UNRRA procurement in US through middle of March, prior to which time it is hoped balance of second contribution will have been appropriated. 798. We estimate present Yugo Army is from 550,000 to 600,000 men including security police and militia but excluding Air Force and Navy. We cannot obtain actual rates of demobilization and recruitment at present. Apparently not many recruits have been called up in past few months and demobilization is taking place in accordance with law of October 26 releasing all men except those born in 1920 to 26 inclusive. Demobilization of officers is dependent [apparent omission] army proper is concerned since secret police is more effective instrument for this purpose and presumably will be kept at any level required.

Army is not generally used for productive purposes but has sometimes been used on special emergency jobs such as bridge building and some harvesting. Failure to use army regularly for productive work probably due mainly to desire to maintain its prestige especially since large numbers of POW's have been used for road repair, etc.

We do not wish to change [charge?] that Yugo Govt is making direct political use of UNRRA supplies. Valid evidence is scant and substantiation difficult. Moreover, we feel that question is academic. Whether army garrison near a given town uses UNRRA food or whether it requisitions so much local food that community has to be maintained by UNRRA food does not seem vital. We believe that govt uses food, clothing and medical supplies in general as political weapons. Opponents of regime cannot get "character records", cannot therefore get work, have to exist on less rations than workers and are often unable to get certain supplies including some medicines available to workers. UNRRA supplies therefore assist govt to carry out discrimination even though govt may avoid actual unfairness in use of UNRRA items alone.

Our Military Attaché 56 has seen large quantities of US Army shoes worn by Yugo soldiers and being transported in Yugo trucks to military headquarters.

Following two contradictory beliefs each held by members [numbers?] of people: 1. That bulk of UNRRA supplies come from Russia. 2. That bulk comes from USA and England and will have to be paid for by Yugo Govt.

⁵⁶ Col. Douglas B. Smith.

It appears that the Yugo Govt will pay the American people for their part in supporting UNRRA only by ingratitude. Yugo propaganda has taken no effective steps to counter the above beliefs. It never mentions that USA supplies bulk of UNRRA funds and goods or that any come from Britain. It continues to circulate only unfavorable news about USA and only favorable news about USSR. Speakers at group meetings often credit Russia for UNRRA help although numbers of persons have told us they are not deceived and know it comes from America.

ANGLO-AMERICAN NEGOTIATIONS RELATING TO THE PROVISION OF CIVILIAN SUPPLIES FOR LIBERATED AREAS: 1 THE ROSENMAN MISSION

840.24/12-2644

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the Department of State 2

[Washington,] December 26, 1944.

THE MAINTENANCE OF THE CIVILIAN ECONOMY OF LIBERATED AREAS IS AN ESSENTIAL INSTRUMENT OF TOTAL WAR

Total war is the use of all national resources and power to achieve national policy. It is not restricted to the employment of force against the enemy; nor to support of allied force. It involves also the full use, if possible, of the help of new populations transferred from the side of the enemy. At the least, it requires every effort to prevent these populations from becoming a positive obstruction.

Supplies to the liberated countries sufficient to keep the people effectively at work in the great scheme of the war is as essential as any part of the war plan. The war can be lost in the liberated countries. It cannot be won without success in the liberated countries.

² Copies were transmitted on January 2 and 3, 1945, to the Assistant Secretary

Everyone is agreed that in the immediate wake of battle military necessity requires that disease and starvation be prevented. Otherwise the liberated civilians will present a hazard to the conduct of operations and the maintenance of lines of supply. Our conception of total war has not gone much farther.

This is not true of our enemies. From the start they have seen the basic political and military necessity of incorporating the new populations into their systems of production, and, by employing them fully, of minimizing the forces of unrest.

The people of the liberated countries and those of Eastern Europe are the most combustible material in the world. They are fighting people. They are violent and restless. They have suffered unbearably. They understand the necessities and will bear the privations of the battle period.

But they will not and cannot understand or tolerate a situation in which, after the battle has passed them, they cannot go to work to supply themselves and the armies. To put them to work requires supplies and ships. It is argued that these are more needed to prosecute the war in other theaters.

The argument makes no sense to Frenchmen, Belgians, Dutchmen, Norwegians, and Greeks who have been put to work for years by the Germans. It means idleness, the most meagre existence, frustration. With these have come and will come agitation and unrest. With them also come arbitrary and absolutist controls. Then follows the overthrow of governments with rival aspirants for the succession from the right and the left. And with this comes also dissension among the great powers, with one backing one faction; and another, another faction. North Africa, Yugoslavia, Greece, should furnish illustration enough.

On the negative side, the neglect of civilian supply in the liberated countries will directly impede and hamper the war by creating civil disorder, diverting military force (as in Greece) and by causing dissension and distrust among the allies.

It does something much worse than all of these. These disorders weaken the will of our own people to fight the war. A victory which, as it progresses, means first civil war, then conflict among the major allies, and, finally, a dictatorship of the right or left, does not appear to the British and American democracies as worth the sacrifice which this war will mean in the most painful forms during 1945.

It is foolish to close our eyes to the reality of this danger. The will of the democracies to make war can be so weakened by disillusionment with the results as to have the most far-reaching military consequences.

On the positive side, to win the war requires that we win the battle of the liberated countries. Here millions of people have been transferred from the enemy's camp to ours—people who can work, perhaps fight in the prosecution of the war, but all of whom must rebuild their country in some pattern—the one for which we are expending untold efforts, or some other.

In the view of this Department, it is of the most supreme political and military importance to this country to bend every effort to the full utilization of the liberated countries in the war. They should be fully and immediately incorporated in the economic and psychological alignment against both the physical enemy and the political and ideological system of the enemy.

For these reasons the supply of liberated countries to restore work and production is a part of our total war.

Mr. Richard Law, Minister of State of the British Foreign Office, had come to Washington December 16, 1944, to discuss economic matters, shipping, and food for liberated areas in Europe. A memorandum of agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom concerning the shipment of supplies to liberated European countries during the first six months of 1945 was initialed at Washington January 14, 1945, by Dean Acheson for Harry Hopkins, Special Assistant to President Roosevelt, and Mr. Law; for text, see Foreign Relations, The Conferences at Malta and Yalta, 1945, page 420. This memorandum was approved by General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, United States Army, and Admiral Ernest J. King, Commander in Chief, United States Fleet, and Chief of Naval Operations. to give due recognition to the problem. It would be most unfortunate if the Allies were to take this view of the recent shipping conversations in Washington and you should take steps to counteract such an impression if it exists. It should be pointed out that this government has for some time been fully aware of the importance of the shipment of essential civilian imports for the liberated countries not only for relief but also to permit a revival of industrial and agricultural activity which will contribute to the production in those countries of essential civilian and war needs. It can be stated that a survey of the world shipping situation has been made by the US and UK Governments and that throughout these discussions the needs of the liberated countries have been most sympathetically considered by this government along with the other urgent war needs. The import programs of the liberated governments have been endorsed for planning purposes and the agencies of this government will do everything possible to facilitate procurement of such supplies as we may be asked to furnish.

The Ambassador in France (Caffery) to the Secretary of State

Paris, January 28, 1945—3 p. m. [Received January 30—3:38 a.m.]

- 398. 1. I feel that the impression received by Ambassador Winant as reported in the first sentence of the Department's 263 January 23 7 is fully justified. It has been apparent to us for some time that the British were adroitly maneuvering themselves into the position of being considered the advocates and leaders for the French in Washington. The fact that Richard Law, Thomas Brand 8 et al accompanied Monnet 9 to Washington and were ostensibly instrumental in bringing about the shipping meetings et cetera naturally reinforced their position.
- 2. We had already informed the French along the lines suggested in the reference telegram. In fact being aware of prevailing attitude we have sought to counteract it in our daily contacts with the French. Judging from recent statements made by French officials to members of my staff I believe that the French authorities are beginning to realize that United States of America aid to France has not been extracted by combined French British pressure. On the other hand the Department will appreciate that from time to time in the past we have given in to the French after considerable pressure at times abetted by the British.
- 3. Unsolicited concessions by the United States of America to France can of course go a long way toward overcoming the impression that pressure is required. In this connection it would be most helpful if the Embassy could receive advance information from the Department before concessions whether or not solicited are made. For example we have heard from the French that a master Lend-Lease agreement on the British model is about to be signed.¹⁰ If we could have been informed that we were prepared to make such an agreement before the French in Washington had been notified that information could have been usefully employed here.

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Eden) to the Secretary of State 12

[Yalta,] February 7, 1945.13

My Dear Secretary of State:

SUPPLIES FOR LIBERATED AREAS

I think it would be desirable to take stock of this position before the Conference breaks up. During Mr. Law's visit we established the principle of national government import programmes and agreed that procurement should proceed so that supplies should be readily available for shipment. In the case of France and Belgium token allocations of shipping were made for the first quarter which covered 40% to 50% of their requirements.

At this Conference the Combined Chiefs of Staff have recommended to the Prime Minister and President that supplies for liberated areas should be included in the basic undertakings in support of the overall strategic concepts, and it has also been agreed that first priority in shipping should be given to the basic undertakings.

The basic undertaking reads as follows:

"Having regard to the successful accomplishment of the other basic undertakings to provide such supplies to liberated Europe as will effectively contribute to the war-making capacity of the United Nations." 14 and is not entirely satisfactory since the qualification puts liberated areas supplies on a lower category than the other basic undertakings. The Minister of War Transport ¹⁵ assures me, however, that from his point of view it is workable and I have therefore told the Prime Minister ¹⁶ I do not object to it.

I hope therefore that from now on an increasing flow of supplies will get to those countries. I am, however, disturbed by the continuance of disturbing reports from nearly every country. Shortage of food continues in Belgium and liberated Holland as well as Mediterranean countries. Lack of transport is universal and in the case of France and Belgium there is a serious lack of raw materials. We should therefore keep a careful eye on the position and I think it would be wise to call for a progress report from the United Kingdom and United States officials concerned before the end of March.

In the meantime I would like to know whether you would agree that our policy should be on the following lines.

- 1. That responsibility for civil imports should pass from Theatre Commanders to National Governments or U.N.R.R.A. acting on behalf of a National Government as soon as conditions permit. Generally speaking this should be done as soon as we are satisfied that the National Government can procure and distribute supplies efficiently and the Theatre Commander has been able to make port and inland transport capacity available. A start might be made in France in the near future and negotiations are already proceeding for the transfer of the Greek, Yugoslav and Albanian programmes to U.N.R.R.A.
- 2. That as far as possible the programme should be established on the spot by using the Four Party Committee procedure. The National Government, the Supreme Commander and the United States and United Kingdom Embassies are all represented on these committees.
- 3. The National Governments or U.N.R.R.A. should present their shipping programmes direct to the Combined Shipping Authorities. These programmes should be monthly loading programmes set out area by area covering as long period ahead as is possible.
- 4. We should take steps to see that adequate priority is given to the essential needs of liberated areas by our production and food authorities, bearing in mind the other competing claims on our resources.
- 5. Special attention should be paid to every possibility of increasing transportation supplies. I understand that there will be a substantial though temporary easing in the shipping position immediately after V.E.¹⁷ day and this may give an opportunity to ship trucks and railway equipment which is otherwise difficult to lift. For instance, is there any possibility of increasing the allocation of United States light trucks to liberated areas either by increased production or reallocation of existing production?

We might also consider whether it would be advisable to bring this situation to the attention of the Prime Minister and the President during the Conference or whether it would be sufficient if you and I took the matter up with the United States and United Kingdom Departments concerned on our return.

Yours sincerely

ANTHONY EDEN

[Yalta,] February 10, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Eden: I have received your letter of February 7 on the question of supplies for liberated areas and have read it with much interest.

In the shortness of time that remains while we are here together I do not feel that I can give this complex and important problem sufficient study to enable me to give you my full comments on your letter. I shall, however, keep the matter closely in mind and immediately upon my return to Washington will give you a full reply.

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Eden) to the Secretary of State

[Yalta,] February 11, 1945.

My Dear Ed: I had hoped to table the question of Relief Supplies for Europe, which is dealt with in the enclosed memorandum, at one of the meetings of Foreign Secretaries.

As, however, there has not been time to do this, I am sending it to you and M. Molotov ¹⁸ for your consideration. ¹⁹

Yours very sincerely

ANTHONY EDEN

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the British Delegation

Relief Supplies for Europe

The problem of relief for Europe increases in proportion with the area and population liberated. It is already acute in Mediterranean and North-West European countries, and we assume that the difficulties are equally large in Eastern European countries. The position is made increasingly difficult by scarcity of shipping and bottle-necks in port capacity and inland transport. The shortage of shipping is likely to continue after the end of the German war and will remain a limiting factor on the quantity of bulk commodities, particularly food and coal, which can be imported from overseas into Europe. The most important problem is food.

¹⁸ Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Molotov, Soviet People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs.

¹⁹ In acknowledging this letter the Secretary replied on February 11, stating that he would refer the question immediately to the Department for prompt and careful consideration (840.48/2-1145).

2. If therefore a scarcity of food in large areas of Europe is to be prevented on a scale which would lead to disease and unrest and endanger the economic and administrative structure, the three Great Powers should plan to make the most of resources available from all sources. It is therefore suggested that:

(1) All measures to encourage local production of food-stuffs and raw materials in short supply in German and previously German-occupied territories should be taken.

(2) The level of food production in areas which normally have exportable surpluses should be maintained or increased. The most important of these are eastern Germany, Hungary and Roumania, in all of which the production of food has been affected adversely by the recent course of the war.

(3) Imports from overseas into the deficiency areas, local production and imports from surplus areas in Europe should be co-ordinated in such a way as to prevent disease and unrest.

Sufficient information is not available to enable us to put forward a definite proposal at this conference. We suggest therefore that the question be remitted for immediate further study in Moscow by officials of the three Governments who are expert in such matters. Other related questions such as the use of the services of U.N.R.R.A. and the possibility of using Black Sea ports for the import of relief supplies might usefully be discussed at the same time.

The British Embassy to the Department of State 20

His Britannic Majesty's Embassy refers to its Aide-Mémoire of June 8 and to the State Department's Aide-Mémoire in reply of the same date 21 regarding the sharing of the burden of the cost of provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe outside their own territories, in so far as the burden does not fall on the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. His Britannic Majesty's Embassy also refers to the Memorandum of the Canadian Embassy 22 on the same subject, a copy of which was furnished to this Embassy.

2. In the light of the proposals which have since been considered by the United States Government, the Canadian Government and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, it is recommended that the ultimate burden of the cost of provision of such supplies should be borne in the following manner:

²⁰ This memorandum was also given to the Canadian Government. ²¹ Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 11, pp. 312 and 313, respectively. ²² Dated June 2, 1944, not printed.

(i) That the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian Governments shall agree on the provision of the supplies required up to a value not exceeding $1 billion;

(ii) That, unless other arrangements are mutually agreed upon, payment in full shall be requested of all governments or authorities of liberated or conquered areas to which such supplies are furnished;

(iii) That such amounts as prove to be irrecoverable from such governments or authorities shall be borne by the supplying governments in the following proportions:

by the United States —67% of such irrecoverable amount by the United Kingdom—25% of such irrecoverable amount by Canada — 8% of such irrecoverable amount

(iv) That receipts collected from the recipient governments or authorities shall be divided as may be necessary in order that the ultimate deficit be shared in the proportion set out in (iii) above;

(v) That the three Governments shall consult together from time to time in order to decide whether a claim shall be maintained against any government or authority which at any time indicates its inability to meet any request for payment;

(vi) That if at any time it shall appear that the total irrecoverable deficit amounts or is likely to amount to 400 million dollars, the three Governments concerned shall consult together in order to consider whether civilian supplies can continue to be provided under this arrangement.

The Canadian Embassy to the Department of State

MEMORANDUM

- 1. In its memorandum of June 2nd, 1944 ²³ the Canadian Embassy informed the Department of State of the willingness of the Government of Canada to participate with the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom in the provision of military relief supplies to Europe by temporarily financing orders placed in Canada and by sharing the ultimate net cost in proportion to Canada's military participation in the liberation of Western Europe. This proportion was estimated at approximately 8%.
- 2. In its reply of Sept. 12th ²³ the Department of State informed the Canadian Embassy that the Government of the United States accepted the suggestion of an 8% participation by Canada in the ultimate cost of military relief in Europe.
- 3. On the basis of this exchange the Government of Canada proceeded with the measures necessary to enable the fullest use to be made of Canada as a source of supply in the confident expectation that arrangements would be made to ensure that Canada's contribution to the ultimate cost would not exceed the agreed percentage.

- 4. Discussions among representatives of the three participating Governments have continued throughout the intervening period with a view to reaching formal agreement on the terms of the arrangement for providing military relief supplies on a combined basis. In these discussions it has now been made known that the Executive Branch of the Government of the United States is not in a position to undertake at this time to make such payments to Canada ultimately as may prove necessary to ensure that Canada's contribution to the final net cost shall be limited to the accepted share.
- 5. During this period responsibility for financing procurement has been conditionally accepted by Canada in excess of the $45,000,000 (Canadian) made available by the Canadian Treasury Board for the purpose, and supplies have already been shipped or ordered for shipment to a value in excess of the agreed share of the anticipated maximum ultimate cost.
- 6. In the continued absence of the firm assurances to which it regards itself as reasonably entitled the Government of Canada is now compelled to reconsider its position. Accordingly, the Canadian Embassy has been instructed to inform the Department of State that, pending the outcome of this reconsideration, the Government of Canada is reluctantly taking the steps necessary to limit its commitments under the arrangement:
- a) The Canadian authorities will endeavour to finance the procurement of those military relief supplies which have already been ordered.

b) The Canadian authorities are reserving the right to reconsider items on which responsibility for financing procurement has already been conditionally accepted, but which have not yet been ordered.

been conditionally accepted, but which have not yet been ordered.

c) The Canadian authorities are ceasing, at least temporarily, to accept any further responsibility for financing the procurement of military relief supplies.

393. Memorandum on problem of relief supplies for Europe was delivered to Secretary by Eden on last day of Crimea Conference with request that Molotov and Secretary consider the problem promptly. No indication whether comparable memorandum delivered to Molotov.

Please advise Department whether this matter has been discussed with you and whether you have personnel who could conduct such discussions. Also Department would appreciate any views as to Soviet attitude toward distribution of food surpluses from areas uncovered by Soviet armies and any other comments on the Eden proposal.

Moscow, February 28, 1945—5 p. m. [Received 11:27 p. m.]

586. ReDept's 393 February 22, 11 p. m. I did not see the memorandum on problems of relief supplies for Europe handed to the Secretary by Eden at the Crimea Conference nor had I heard of it before. The food supply in the Soviet Union is still extremely short. All information available from conquered and liberated areas, including eyewitness reports of our ex-prisoners of war from Poland indicate that the Red Army is largely living off the country, particularly in the forward areas. It may be assumed that it is the Soviet Government's intention to use all surplus foods in the areas occupied for their own purposes for a considerable time. It is difficult to believe that we will be able to induce the Soviet Government to change this policy as long as their own people are badly off for food, particularly as they have been through a number of years of subnormal diet. Government may, however, be willing to make some generous gestures in direct dealings with Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. I would expect that any relief to shipping would come only through the reduction in the importation of food to the Soviet Union under Lend Lease. I would be somewhat more hopeful in connection with other commodities. We have indications the Russians are ready to consider giving us some petroleum products from Rumania, including bunkers. I believe that the whole subject is a matter which should be studied with the Soviet Government but I feel strongly that we should be making our plans for the immediate future regardless of these discussions, for the reasons I have given above.

When we have recognized the new government in Poland 24 it may also be well to have direct discussion with it. Dr. Michael, Agricultural Attaché, would be a most useful and competent advisor in connection with the food discussions. He, however, left Moscow en route to Washington February 23. I would recommend that he return to Moscow at such time as these discussions take place. There are other individuals in the Embassy and the supply section of the military mission who could be helpful but I would recommend that some man familiar with the subject in all its aspects be sent from Washington to head up the negotiations.

President Roosevelt to the British Prime Minister (Churchill) 25

Washington, February 28, 1945.

710. I have been advised that the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Forces requires an additional 69,000 tons of food during March to meet civilian supply contingencies arising in the 21st Army Group area of Belgium and Holland. SCAEF 26 advised the Combined Chiefs of Staff of these needs in Scaf 27 215 dated 25 February 1945.

In order to meet these needs it will be necessary for the supplies to be shipped from the UK to the 21st Army Group. I understand that the British Government is now considering whether the 69,000 tons should be drawn from the stockpile now allocated to SCAEF for use in the B-2 area of Holland (eastern Holland). If so, it appears obvious that the withdrawal from the B-2 stockpile must be covered by immediate replacement from stocks now in the U.K.

I hope you will see your way clear to have the U.K. agree to replace the Dutch B-2 stockpile to the extent required to protect SCAEF against anticipated Dutch civilian supply needs.

diverting 30,000 tons of wheat in transit to U.K. and 21,000 tons ex SHAEF's general reserve held by us for them in this country. The April deficiency will have to be met from U.K. stocks as there is no time to meet the demand from any other source.

- 2. We cannot meet certain items at all because we have no stocks available. These details are being arranged with the agencies concerned.
- 3. I want to impress upon you that we shall require immediate replacement of a large part of these food stuffs, and the provision of ships to carry them.

The Department of State to the British Embassy

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State refers to the British Embassy's memorandum of February 12, 1945 explaining the manner in which the British Government proposes to account for the lend-lease element in any civilian supplies provided by the United Kingdom to liberated and conquered areas. The Department takes pleasure in confirming that the arrangements which the British Government proposes to adopt are satisfactory to the Government of the United States.

The Department of State is advising the appropriate authorities of the United States Government of the contemplated arrangements in order that the necessary steps may be taken, in cooperation with representatives of the British Government, to work out the detailed procedures for implementing these arrangements.

basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe should be borne, in so far as the burden does not fall on the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. The Department understands that a similar communication has been addressed by the British Government to the Canadian Government.

The proposals contained in the Embassy's memorandum under reference are acceptable to the Government of the United States. The Department of State is also informing the Canadian Embassy at Washington of the views of the Government of the United States. The Department suggests that, if the proposals are acceptable to the Canadian Government, they shall be considered as constituting an agreement among the three governments.

2301. From Judge Rosenman. Upon my arrival I was shown copy of Mr. Eden's letter and memorandum dated February 7 and February 11 at Yalta to you on subject of supplies for liberated areas and your acknowledgement of February 10 and February 11 30 promising a full reply immediately upon your return to Washington.

In view of fact that the proposals in Mr. Eden's letter cut broadly across the field of the survey which I have undertaken for the President it occurs to me that you may wish to delay a definitive reply to Mr. Eden at least until my tentative conclusions have been reached and forwarded to the President. I have with me in London representatives of the various agencies involved viz. FEA, State, Treasury, and Civil Affairs of the US Army, and we are studying the various matters suggested in the above correspondence on the ground here and in France, Belgium and the Netherlands.

In any event I should greatly appreciate seeing the text of your reply, if possible, in advance of its delivery. [Rosenman.]

"During my absence the members of the Mission have held discussions and accumulated information on various aspects of the supply problems for NW Europe liberated areas. The members of the Mission have worked closely with the Embassy and MEA ³¹ which have made available to them their knowledge and experience. Several discussions have also been held with technical personnel of the British Government with particular reference to the organization procedure and functioning of the British machinery for liberated area's policy and supply problems. Considerable preliminary information has been secured as to current economic and social conditions in France, Belgium and Holland. Conversations have been held at the technical level with representatives of the Dutch, Belgian and Norwegian Governments and with UNRRA officials.

"The principal topics examined by the members of the Mission here were as follows: Shipping, port facilities and port clearance; inland transport; coal; petroleum; trade with neutrals; and British stockpiles and the effects of VE day on availability of supplies and UK exports to liberated areas. All these topics, except those directly relating to UK will be examined further on the Continent and the information secured here checked against field reports and observations.

⁸¹ United States Mission for Economic Affairs.

In addition, informal conversations have been held with British and Dutch officials on the extent of destruction, the problems of reconstructions and possible financial assistance which may be required from outside sources. Officials both Governments though willing to furnish available information feel that conversations on these topics are not timely.

"British liberated machinery: The members of the Mission have been very cordially received by their British opposite numbers and have had a good view of the organization in London. They have been impressed both by the high level at which liberated area's problems receive constant attention and by the use of the secretariat system to achieve integration between the various departments concerned.

"International organizations: Members of the Mission have joined in some of the preliminary discussions concerning the European Economic Committee.

"While I am here I will be talking with Ambassador Winant; the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary (with Ambassador Winant); Lord Keynes; 32 Richard Law, Minister of State; Oliver Lyttelton, Minister of Production; Lord Leathers, Minister of War Transport; Sir James Grigg, Secretary of State for War; Colonel Llewellin, Minister of Food; Sir John Anderson, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Thomas Brand, Chairman of SLAO [SLAC]; 33 Lt. - 2531. We appreciate the Department's 1384, February 23 repeated to us for information.³⁶
- 1. We consider that the proposed United States-United Kingdom-USSR discussions in Moscow on general questions of supply and transport in eastern Europe would be of great value. The matter has been discussed with Judge Rosenman and members of his Mission who share this opinion. The Moscow discussions would be complementary to the work of the Rosenman Mission in northwest Europe.
- 2. The results of the discussions in Moscow should in our opinion be available not later than May 15th to allow time for their consideration before the next UNRRA Council meeting which has been suggested for May or early June.
- 3. British officials here have indicated tentatively that, if the meeting is held, they might send three members, one from Foreign Office, one generally familiar with supply matters and third with qualifications as yet unstated. The two latter would be at the technical or operating level. The possibility of a Minister leading the party is not excluded. Brand and Hasler appear to us to be likely candidates. It might therefore be desirable to select United States members with a view to complementing British in special knowledge or experience.

³⁶ Not printed; it repeated to London the substance of telegram 393, February 22, to Moscow, p. 1070.

- 4. The British have had no word from Soviets on the subject since delivery of memorandum to Molotov at Yalta on February 11. Clark-Kerr 37 is being instructed by cable to expedite a Soviet reply.
- 5. If the Department and the Soviet agree to the United Kingdom proposal and if the Department wishes to consider the inclusion among the United States group of any personnel from London we would make the following suggestions:

Loyd Steere, Agricultural Attaché, for his knowledge of European food problems, and Winthrop Brown, MEA, for his knowledge of supply and shipping matters. In addition we suggest Rupert Emerson of the Rosenman Mission, who is familiar with UNRRA and liberated areas matters and who would create a useful link with the work of the Rosenman Mission.

2532. In reading over the Embassy's 2531, March 11, I would like to make the following comments and request a firm commitment by the Department in its reply to the question which I have raised.

In the first place the above message was worked out by the London section of the MEA. You will remember that Hawkins 39 was rejected as head of that Mission and that Blaisdale [Blaisdell],40 who was appointed more than a month ago, has not yet reached London. Therefore, it is without top guidance. I have felt that since the substance related to a matter that you had taken up personally at Yalta that you would want me to forward it. However, after talking with Judge Rosenman and the MEA people responsible for it in the Embassy, I wanted you also to know that they were in agreement with my comments and do not wish to interfere with the work of the European Advisory Commission.

Some months ago I made a collection of all British and United States negotiations that were being conducted at the time and that were available to me, in order to throw some light on Russian methods of negotiation and objectives. I did this to help me in my work with the European Advisory Commission.

In tabulating their approach to problems in the enemy occupied areas of Germany, in UNRRA discussions and elsewhere, it was evident that their concern for the defeated Allies was plainly secondary to satisfying the demands of the three military powers that were responsible for the defeat of Germany. They were completely frank in asking for priority for Russian claims over those of overrun European Allies and there was complete confirmation of this approach in the discussions on reparations at Yalta.

On all the evidence that is available to us there has been and still is extreme suffering and want and wanton destruction in the invaded areas of Russia. I understand and sympathize with the British proposal which, as this message indicates, has support from some of our people, to persuade Russia in joining in contributing to the total need of those suffering from want and need in both eastern and western Europe. The argument is based on the assumption that the Russians have been able to recapture those areas in the east that are referred to as the bread basket of Europe.

Whatever the position of the State Department may be in relation to Russian aid in eastern Europe, with its present knowledge of the political situation in Rumania and Poland, it involves an area completely outside my jurisdiction.

The question which concerns me is the discussion of Russian aid in western Europe with its political implications and direct impact on the work of the European Advisory Commission. It would be very easy in informal consultations by a joint United States-British Mission to Moscow to raise points in regard to the surplus food production in the Russian zone in Germany that would destroy any bargaining power that I might have in negotiating to protect the consumption needs in the American zone without even being aware that there was such a problem.

The same thing could have happened in the ECO ⁴¹ in relation to coal in Germany if we had not had complete coordination between the ECO and the European Advisory Commission because of Hawkins and Penrose.⁴² There is no coal in the United States zone of occupation of Germany.

The question I want to raise and on which I want a firm answer is whether or not you will so coordinate the work of special missions and the establishment of other inter-Allied authorities as not to interfere with the terms of reference of the European Advisory Commis-

London, March 14, 1945—8 p. m. [Received 11:05 p. m.]

2638. Judge Rosenman requests the following message be given to the President:

I have had personal talks in London with the Prime Minister and Messrs. Attlee, Anderson, Law, Lyttelton, Leathers, Grigg and Llewellin of the British Cabinet.

From the talks thus far held, the following is a consensus of views of the members of the British War Cabinet. The northwest European supply problems which are most acute are food, coal and those in connection with transportation equipment (trucks, rolling stock, locomotives and maintenance equipment). Lack of internal transport causes serious dislocation of available local supplies and hampers the movement of imported supplies. This is true throughout northwest Europe. British opinion is that the food situation in France is basically not serious. In Belgium it is improving. All are however deeply concerned with conditions in Holland. The food consumption in liberated Holland is stated presently to be in the neighborhood of 1800 calories per day. In occupied Holland however it is said to have fallen to less than 400 per day and disease and death by starva-tion are already prevalent. Every effort is now being made to build up stocks in Belgium for use immediately upon liberation of areas in northern Holland. The British stress that as the Allied Armies advance in Holland the present food supply problem will become greatly intensified in view of the fact that western Germany is a food deficit area and that importation of food will be required to feed displaced United Nations persons as well as to provide minimum substance among the civilians behind the military lines. Am sending you by courier pouch an interim report on the food problem of northwestern Europe.

The British recognize that the British food stocks are the only source which can be drawn upon quickly for western Europe in case of emergency. They are prepared as in the past to release food to the extent possible to meet emergencies but emphasize that this can at best provide only temporary and limited relief and that such released food should be replaced as soon as possible and that their food stocks must be maintained in order to meet such emergencies.

Some of the British Ministers lay great stress upon the proposal made by Eden to Stettinius and Molotov at Yalta that a conference be held as early as possible at Moscow to discuss among other things the possibility of providing food from the surplus food producing areas under Russian control to northwest Europe. Others of them would like to try it but do not hold out much hope of success. I have discussed this with Ambassador Winant and he has sent a cable on the matter to our State Department (Embassy's 2532, March 11).

The British are also much concerned with the coal shortage which prevails throughout northwest Europe. They believe that while it may be possible eventually to obtain some coal from western Germany this will require the provision of food for miners, the reorganization of mining which is now largely carried on by impressed foreign labor and the probable necessity of supplying some mining machinery to repair damaged mines. Transportation of coal will of course continue to be a serious problem. The British maintain that little if any coal can be made available from the United Kingdom. They hope that some assistance to the general problem will result from the establishment of the proposed European coal organization but they point out that lack of coal will constitute the limiting factor in all industrial activity in northwest Europe.

The British are gratified at the allocation of additional shipping for continental civilian supplies for the next 3 months. They fear however that this relief will be temporary only and they urge strongly that maximum supplies be made available and ready for shipment in order that the fullest possible use be made of the ships which have now been allocated in view of the expected renewed shipping shortage

British feel time has arrived to combine army civil affairs program with national program for France and that we should move rapidly as possible in that direction in other countries.

The foregoing is a summary of British point of view.

I also conferred with Lord Keynes and have already cabled you fully concerning that interview.

Talks have also been held here with Dutch and Norwegian representatives in London. The Mission is proceeding to Paris today.

- 1351. 1. Judge Rosenman requests the following message be given to the President:
- 2. Since my arrival in Paris I have had personal talks with Ambassador Caffery and several members of the Cabinet, including Bidault, Mendes France, Lacoste, Dautry, Mayer, Pleven, Ramadier and Billoux. I have also had detailed discussions at SHAEF and with our Embassy staff covering the whole range of civilian supply for liberated areas and related problems in France, Luxembourg, Belgium, the Netherlands and Norway. I have talked with General W. Bedell Smith 43 and I expect to see General Eisenhower in the near future. Ambassador Caffery is also arranging for me to see General de Gaulle 44 on Saturday, 45 at which time I shall deliver to him the letter which you gave me.

3. Insofar as France is concerned, I am of the opinion that unless it is possible from some source to provide France with more coal than was available in the past winter and with a better balanced diet the cumulative effect of the strains to which the people have been subjected in the past may have consequences of a very serious nature. It is agreed by everyone that coal is the key log in the jam. There appears little likelihood that French domestic coal production can be appreciably increased and you are familiar with the limiting factors of world supply and shipping insofar as imports of coal into France are concerned.

4. Next to coal the major problems appear to be difficulties of internal transport which impede effective distribution of indigenous food resources and certain important dietary deficiencies, notably fats and meat.

5. Once these elementary needs of heat, power distribution and diet are met there is entire agreement that necessary raw materials must be imported to enable industry to start turning over once more and employing idle workers.

6. The problem is serious and complex. I have endeavored in this message only to emphasize its gravity and highlight its major aspects. I shall place in your hands at the earliest possible moment my specific recommendations.

- 7. In conversations with Pleven and French financial people concerning French requirement for financial assistance for rehabilitation and reconstruction the view is general that France will require assistance on a large scale. Pleven has stated that France will make use of the proposed International Stabilization Fund and the International Bank which are currently under discussion by Congress. Pleven was of the opinion that conversations regarding this matter should begin in early summer when France's needs will be more readily determinable than at present.
- 8. I plan to leave soon for Luxembourg, Belgium and the Netherlands.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

Washington, April 1, 1945—11 a.m.

768. 1. After full discussion, it is Department's present view that tripartite conversations in Moscow along the lines suggested in Eden's memorandum delivered to Secretary at Yalta 46 would not serve a useful purpose now. This memorandum suggested discussions between the US, UK and USSR on the maintenance and stimulation of food and other essential production in liberated and enemy territories, particularly Eastern Germany, Hungary and Rumania, and discussions about coordinating imports into deficiency areas both from overseas and from surplus areas. The factors which prompt Department's views are as follows:

- 2. The maintenance and stimulation of production in the South-eastern European ex-enemy countries could not be discussed as a supply problem only since there would be involved the policies of the control commissions and the execution of armistice terms. The same subject as applied to Eastern Germany would fall within the scope of the European Advisory Commission and also would be related to the scheduled reparations discussions in Moscow. The European Economic Committee, whose creation is now being discussed in London, would have within its proposed scope some aspects of this problem as well as the coordination of distribution of surpluses. Concurrent talks in Moscow would seem to be a partial duplication, at least. Likewise, the movement of supplies from Eastern Germany would directly involve reparations problems.
- 3. Qualified observers doubt whether there will be surpluses available for distribution to deficiency areas outside the Soviet zone of operations from areas liberated by Soviet Army due not only to that Army's practice of living off the land, but also to shipments now being made from those areas into the Soviet Union and the probability that forthcoming production of essential commodities in those areas will be greatly reduced.
- 4. In addition to the reasons given above, it is considered very doubtful that factual discussions on supply availability could now be held in Moscow. Such discussions would probably be used as an occasion for raising political and other collateral issues which should be handled in another manner. It is believed that the creation of a new three party discussion group would produce added complications out of all proportion to the results that could be anticipated.
- 5. Accordingly, Department proposes to send memorandum to London for delivery to British Government expressing the view that it would not be desirable to follow up the proposals of the Eden memorandum at this time but rather to leave them in abeyance until the completion of the discussions on the European Economic Committee unless during the course of the reparations discussions it appears advisable for the subject to be brought up there. Please transmit urgently any comments which you would care to make.
- 6. Seriousness of supply situation, particularly of food, and increasing requirements necessitate however a critical review of exports from US, including protocol shipments.⁴⁷ It is probable that the shortness of supply will limit future commitments and may affect performance on outstanding programs. Reference War Department's cable, March 29, to you from Protocol Committee discussions are proceeding here as to action to be taken in the circumstances with respect to protocol negotiations which will soon take place and also as to what steps, if any, can be taken to minimize requirements stated against US supply. You will be kept informed.

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to President Truman

[Washington,] April 16, 1945.

The current discussions of food supplies and requirements in connection with the visit of Captain Lyttelton and Colonel Llewellin have already verified the critical character of the world food situation. Without drastic action and a reduction of consumption to essentials. the minimum needs of the United Nations will not be met in several categories of foodstuffs. Although the current talks may be limited to food, the same conclusion applies to other commodities, notably cotton and wool textiles and coal. I am sure I do not need to stress the disastrous political and economic results which may be expected if countries dependent on food imports, especially the liberated areas, have to go through another winter of want such as the last. turn of their deportees from Germany and the slackening of war tension at the end of European hostilities will aggravate an already critical situation. The success of any plans agreed upon at San Francisco ⁵⁰ can be seriously jeopardized, if not defeated, by internal chaos in the liberated countries.

I believe that the exchange of cables between President Roosevelt and the Prime Minister 51 contemplated that the review of food supplies and requirements should cover the levels of consumption and stocks of both the armed forces and the civilian populations. In the current discussions, the military authorities have taken the firm position that their requirements, as stated, are not subject to discussion whether they pertain to combat troops, inactive troops, prisoners of They have likewise asserted that military reserves war, or civilians. and the management of supplies are not open to question. At a time when military consumption of sugar, for example, has been estimated as high as 175 pounds per year per capita and it has been proposed to cut U.S. civilian consumption below 70 pounds, the military position seems untenable, particularly when the British intend to bring their own military requirements into the discussions. Sugar is only one example; there are a number of other similar cases. The current discussions cannot be comprehensive unless the broad scope outlined in the cables between President Roosevelt and the Prime Minister is adhered to. I earnestly recommend, therefore, that you instruct the military authorities accordingly, so that they will cooperate fully in the current discussions and contribute to the fullest extent possible to the solution of this critical situation by justifying their requirements and reviewing their supply procedures. In this connection, I should recall to you that the partial alleviation of the shipping crisis last winter was only achieved by similar action on President Roosevelt's part.

On the side of U.S. domestic requirements, certain of the civilian agencies seem reluctant to carry out the "tightening of the belt" anticipated by President Roosevelt without further instructions from you. Until the food discussions have progressed further, it is impossible to state with any accuracy the cuts which will be necessary if we are to reach an acceptable solution to the current crisis. In view of the great importance of reaching a solution, however, I also recommend that you instruct the appropriate civilian agencies, particularly the War Food Administration, to explore all possible reductions in U.S. consumption which would not cut into the maintenance of our essential war economy so that recommendations can be made as to what action could be taken by this country to meet the problem.

In conclusion, I should like to call to your attention the desirability of bringing before the American public and the Congress, at an appropriate time, both the facts of the food situation and this country's vital interests abroad. I believe that it is only against a background of enlightened public opinion that the necessary decisions can be made acceptable.

Memorandum of Understanding Reached Between Representatives of the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada at Tripartite Food Discussion in Washington

Representatives of Canada, the U.K. and the U.S. have together examined the supplies and requirements for 1945 of the major food-stuffs in short supply.

With the notable exception of wheat and flour, supplies of most foods are inadequate to meet stated requirements, including those of liberated areas. In view of the urgent need of food in the liberated areas the three countries are prepared to make every reasonable effort to make available essential food requirements consistent with the effective prosecution of the war and the maintenance of productive capacity within each of the countries.

There is set forth in this memorandum proposed programs with respect to important commodities which represent the intentions of the three countries in 1945. These programs will be reviewed by the Combined Food Board machinery prior to June 1 and again prior to September 1 and firm allocations will be made on a quarterly basis by the appropriate supply agencies of the participating countries, after discussions with other countries affected by the recommendations. In the Combined Food Board review the representatives of the three participating countries will be guided by the principles set out in the attached statements.

The plans set forth herein are subject to approval by the Governments of the three countries.⁵²

Any adjustment of supplies to the U.S.S.R. consequent upon the carrying out of the plans set forth herein are subject to consultation with the President's Soviet Protocol Committee in the U.S., the Allied Supplies Executive in the U.K., and the Canadian Mutual Aid Board in Canada.

The Canadian Embassy to the Department of State

MEMORANDUM

With reference to the aide-mémoire dated March 3, 1945 from the Department of State 53 the Canadian Embassy has been instructed to reply that the Canadian Government received a memorandum from the United Kingdom Government under date of Feb. 12, 1945 54 in which were set forth the recommendations of the United Kingdom Government as to the manner in which the ultimate burden of the cost of the provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe should be borne, so far as the burden does not fall on the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

In replying to this memorandum the Canadian Government informed the United Kingdom Government that the Canadian Government is in general agreement with the recommendations made in the memorandum under reference, subject, however, to the following reservations:

1. In the absence of a firm assurance from the Government of the United Kingdom and Government of the United States that they will make whatever payments may be necessary to ensure that the ultimate deficit will be shared in the proportions agreed on if the division of receipts collected from recipient governments does not produce this result, the Canadian Government cannot undertake to bear a share of the financing of the original procurement of the supplies disproportionate to the shares borne by the other two governments.

2. As the original offer of the Canadian Government contemplated a contribution to the cost of military relief rather than to the cost of the provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe insofar as the burden does not fall on UNRRA, the Canadian Government cannot undertake any commitment in respect to any projects for furnishing supplies on a combined basis which go beyond the provision of military relief unless these projects are expressly approved by the Canadian Government.

The United Kingdom Government has acknowledged receipt of this reply, taking note of the reservations of the Canadian Government.

The Canadian Government accepts the suggestion that the proposals contained in the United Kingdom memorandum of February 12, 1945 should be regarded as constituting an agreement among the three governments. Since, as was anticipated in the preliminary discussions, the Canadian acceptance is subject to qualifications, it will be appreciated if the Canadian Embassy might have a reply from the Department of State taking note of the Canadian reservations.⁵⁵

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

Washington, May 1, 1945—5 p.m.

986. Redeptel No. 768 of April 1, 1945. Informal discussions have been held here with British Embassy representatives on Eden's memorandum concerning Eastern European food surpluses.

They have dispatched a cable to British Government after clearance with us substantially along following lines.

Summary. US agrees that problem of maximum utilization of indigenous European resources is a serious one and that UK and US can have only a limited responsibility for food in Eastern Europe and the Balkans except for Greece. US believes that the various countries in this area present separate problems and it is not feasible to discuss them as a whole. It is doubtful that supply discussions can be conducted on a strictly technical basis with the Soviets because broader questions of policy will be inevitably linked with them. It is the US belief that the problem of using food in Western Germany from Eastern Germany would appropriately fall within the reparations discussions and the discussions of EAC and could usefully be taken up in connection with the reparations talks in Moscow if there were present food experts and representatives familiar with EAC. Polish and Czechoslovakian supply problems involve matters of policy pertaining to UNRRA and other supply arrangements viz. lend lease upon which definite conclusions cannot be reached without further analysis. The distribution of any surpluses from satellite countries and production of food in those areas should be discussed in connection with the supply policy toward the Soviet Union. US therefore desires more careful analysis of specific problems and does not believe general discussions at this time in Moscow would be of End summary. value.

Certain aspects of the question of East European food surpluses will unquestionably come up in connection with discussions in EAC on German policy and in the reparations discussions at Moscow. We shall press in EAC and in Moscow for early acceptance of the principle that there must be equitable interzonal distribution of food available in Germany and that food shipments from Germany, whether for reparation account or otherwise, shall not be permitted on a scale that would require us to provide sustained relief to Germany. We shall also insist both in the Moscow reparations discussions and EAC that if any imports of food into Germany or Austria prove necessary, payment for such essential imports should constitute a first charge on all German or Austrian exports. Actual procurement of any essential food imports for Germany or Austria must, however, be left to the control authorities in those countries. Lubin's 57 staff does not at present include food experts since we are assuming that the Embassy's agricultural experts will be able to supply such advice on food matters as will probably be required. If, however, the food aspects of reparation questions should require more detailed consideration than could be handled in this way, food experts might later be added to Lubin's staff.

In accordance with your recommendation the availability of food in Southeastern Europe for the support of Russian armies in those areas and as reparations to Russia will be considered in connection with future protocol shipments.

Regarding Czechoslovakia and Poland, our general view would be that such UNRRA supplies as are necessary to assist the local population to meet their basic needs should be sent to these countries. However until the Soviets agree that they will not consume or export food from those countries we question the advisability of our shipping in equivalent food supplies. In case they do not agree we should make it clear why we deem it necessary to curtail shipments of supplies. This problem in Czechoslovakia can be handled directly with the Czechoslovakian Government. In regard to Poland it will be necessary to act in accordance with future developments.

The British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Secretary of State

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

1. His Majesty's Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the Memoranda transmitted by this Embassy to the State Department on June 8th, 1944 ⁵⁸ and February 12th, 1945, concerning the provision of relief supplies to liberated and conquered territories in Europe. In accordance with the terms of these Memoranda it was agreed that the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canadian Governments should share in the provision of relief supplies to liberated and conquered areas outside the scope of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration to a total value of $1,000,000,000. and that the burden of such amounts as should prove to be irrecoverable out of this total should be borne by the three Governments in certain agreed percentages. It was further agreed that the position should be re-examined when it appeared that the amount which could not be recovered had reached $400,000,000.

⁵⁷ Isador Lubin, Associate United States Representative on the Allied Commission on Reparations.

- 2. In the light of the information presently available, it appears that the limit of $400,000,000. for irrecoverable expenditure referred to above has been reached, taking into account the forward commitments which have been made or which must immediately be made to meet the current requirements of the theatre commanders. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom do not feel able to agree to the extension of the arrangements hitherto in effect in respect of any additional financial loss. They propose, therefore, that in accordance with the agreed procedure the position should now be re-examined, and revised arrangements agreed.
- 3. As it is of the greatest importance that nothing should be done which would prejudice the continued flow of essential supplies to liberated areas and the orderly procurement of those supplies it would appear desirable that discussions as to an appropriate basis for the sharing of any additional financial loss above the present limit should be initiated immediately. His Majesty's Government hope that a speedy conclusion to those negotiations can be reached.

Washington, 15 May, 1945.

The British Embassy to the Department of State

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have asked for immediate re-examination by the United States Government and the Government of Canada of the future financing of military relief supplies in Europe as for their part they are unable to contemplate continued participation in an extended arrangement on the financial basis which has hitherto obtained.

2. Civil Affairs supplies provided by the United States, United Kingdom and Canada are now going forward to areas of Europe under the control of SCAEF and SACMED. Some of the countries in these areas can be regarded as able to pay for these supplies and some are unlikely to be able to do so. In order to consider any new arrangement as to the finance of relief supplies it is suggested that the position of the countries for which a responsibility for provision of supplies has been assumed by the three governments should first be examined.

A. SHAEF Area

- (I) Liberated Countries in Northwest Europe
- (a) France: The provision of civilian supplies to France (with the exception of coal and P.O.L.⁵⁹) is no longer a responsibility of the Theatre Commander. It is expected that all Civil Affairs supplies furnished to France will be paid for by the French Provisional Government and arrangements are going forward to bill them accordingly.
- (b) Belgium: The period of military responsibility for supplies to Belgium is still continuing and is unlikely to terminate before September 1st at the earliest. The Belgians would, however, appear to be able to pay for these supplies and the Belgian Government has been informed that payment will be expected.
- (c) Holland: It is expected that Holland will also be able to pay for Civil Affairs supplies received. It is not at the moment possible to estimate how soon military responsibility for provision of supplies can be terminated in Holland.
- (d) Norway: The position regarding Norway would appear to be the same as in the case of Holland. The military period is in any event likely to be short.
- (e) Denmark: From the point of view of foreign exchange resources Denmark's position with regard to payment for Civil Affairs supplies is perhaps rather more doubtful, but, having regard to her position as an exporter of needed foodstuffs, there would not seem to be much room for doubt that arrangements can be made for Denmark to pay for any supplies which she receives on Civil Affairs account. These supplies in any event are likely to be small in quantity and value, with the exception of coal. In the case of Denmark also the period of military responsibility will probably be short.

(II) Conquered Territory in Northwest Europe

Germany: His Majesty's Government are glad to note that the view of the United States Government as to payment for supplies furnished to Germany is the same as their own, namely that the cost of such supplies should form a first charge on Germany's capacity to make foreign payments. It is the view of His Majesty's Government that Germany should be dealt with essentially as a problem on its own. At the present time no estimate can be made either of the length of time during which it may be necessary to furnish needed imports as a matter of military responsibility, nor of the type or quantity of such supplies. Equally, Germany's capacity to make payment for these supplies is extremely difficult to assess at this time. In these circumstances there must be recognition of the fact that there is no certainty of repayment.

⁵⁹ Petroleum, Oil and Lubricants.

Moreover, until the position has been clarified and German assets are available to pay currently for supplies there is a temporary financing problem for which a solution on a combined basis is necessary. His Majesty's Government agree that procurement of necessary supplies to Germany should continue on the lines of the June 8th Agreement, but at the same time consider that provision must be made against the contingency that Germany may not ultimately be able to pay in full. is strongly recommended that some arrangement should be made for sharing this risk more widely than amongst the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom and under any such arrangement His Majesty's Government would expect that its share would be less than 25 per cent of any residual loss. It is further the view of His Majesty's Government that since the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration is charged with the duty of looking after displaced persons in Germany, it should assume financial responsibility for all supplies provided to such persons as soon as possible.

B. SACMED Area:

- (1) Provision of supplies for Greece, Yugoslavia and Albania will shortly cease to be a responsibility of the United States, United Kingdom and Canada and the financial liability in respect of these supplies has already passed to UNRRA in respect of Greece and Yugoslavia and will shortly pass to UNRRA in respect of Albania. There is therefore no need to examine this problem in this context.
- (2) Italy and Austria: The furnishing of civilian supplies to Italy during the progressive stages of liberation has now been the responsibility of the three participating governments for nearly two years and its cost already amounts to well in excess of $200,000,000. Now that the war in Europe has ended it seems clear that the United States. United Kingdom and Canada can no longer be expected alone to bear the burden of bringing relief supplies to Italy. In the view of His Majesty's Government it would now be entirely appropriate to extend the field of activities of UNRRA both to Italy and Austria. Both countries will need to receive very substantial relief assistance. His Majesty's Government's view the only satisfactory arrangement, bearing in mind the heavy tasks which will fall on the three Governments elsewhere, will be to place upon UNRRA the full responsibility for providing relief in these two countries. His Majesty's Government hope that the United States and Canadian Governments will be prepared to support a proposal to UNRRA on these lines. Such a proposal should, it is suggested, be considered at the UNRRA Council meeting in July.

His Majesty's Government consider, however, that if UNRRA is to be asked to undertake additional commitments in respect of Italy and Austria, the question of the provision of further funds for UNRRA cannot be avoided, since it would be unlikely that the other members of the Council of UNRRA would agree to the assumption by the Administration of large new commitments for ex-enemy countries if this were to involve a contraction of the sums available for expenditure on relief in allied countries. This is the more likely in that many member Governments already regard the available resources of UNRRA as inadequate to ensure their basic relief and emergency rehabilitation. His Majesty's Government are therefore anxious to discuss possible means of supplementing the financial resources available to UNRRA.

In the first place it is suggested that additional sources of finance for UNRRA may be found by obtaining contributions from neutral and other countries. This particular question might well figure on the Agenda of the next meeting of the UNRRA Council, and His Majesty's Government would be interested to know how the United States Government considers that such further contributions could best be obtained. It is also hoped that other member governments whose burden of external indebtedness is not so heavy as that of the United Kingdom may feel able not only to meet the target contributions which were recommended at Atlantic City 60 but to increase those contributions wherever possible. In so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, for supply reasons which are well known, the United Kingdom contribution to UNRRA is still far from being exhausted since only some £14,000,000. out of a total of £80,000,000. have been This position is in contrast to that of other major contributors. His Majesty's Government would thus not feel able to consider the grant of further assistance to UNRRA until their contribution had been more fully drawn upon. When that situation arises His Majesty's Government will, of course, consider the matter further in the light of the then prevailing situation.

If the Council of UNRRA agree that responsibility for supplies to Italy and Austria should be undertaken by UNRRA the manner in which supplies provided to Italy as a military responsibility from the present time until UNRRA takes over has to be settled. The Council does not meet until July and although it is very difficult to estimate with certainty it seems probable that the limit of $400,000,000. will have been reached in terms of deliveries on Civil Affairs account at some point in June. In order to prevent any additional loss falling on the United States, United Kingdom or Canada it would seem necessary to obtain the authority of the Council that UNRRA's financial responsibility in Italy be made retroactive, say to July 1st. The actual responsibility for procurement and shipment of supplies could however continue to be discharged by the military authorities until such time as UNRRA was ready to take over on somewhat the same basis as the transfer of responsibility was carried out in the Balkans.

His Majesty's Government, however, desire to make clear that should the Council of UNRRA be unwilling to extend UNRRA's scope to Italy and Austria or should there be an intervening period between the reaching of the $400,000,000 limit and the assumption of financial responsibility by UNRRA they, for their part, could only accept a liability for loss in respect of supplies furnished to these two countries in excess of the $400,000,000. limit to the value of supplies and services made available from the United Kingdom and colonies. His Majesty's Government are nevertheless anxious that their external financial difficulties, of which the United States Government is aware, should not impede the flow of supplies to these areas and they would therefore, be prepared to continue to procure supplies on the basis of the June 8th, 1944 arrangement provided that revised arrangements are made by which the United Kingdom's ultimate financial liability in respect of these supplies will be limited to those furnished from the United Kingdom and colonies.

The proposals made in this memorandum may be summarized as follows:

(i) His Majesty's Government is prepared to continue to accept procurement responsibility for the provision of civil affairs supplies furnished on a combined basis (outside UNRRA) for Northwest Europe and Germany on the basis of the British Embassy's Aide Mémoire of June 8th, 1944.

(ii) So far as the ultimate financial responsibility for supplies to Germany is concerned

(a) His Majesty's Government agree that their cost should be a first charge on Germany's capacity to pay

(b) provision should be made against the contingency that Germany may not ultimately be able to pay in full by making an arrangement under which the risk is more widely shared

(c) the financial responsibility for supplies for displaced persons be assumed by UNRRA.

(iii) His Majesty's Government is prepared to continue to accept procurement responsibility on a similar basis for supplies to Italy and Austria on the understanding that the Governments of the United States and Canada support a proposal to the Council of UNRRA at its Third Session that UNRRA accept responsibility for these two countries and provided that any loss suffered by reason of the provision of such supplies to Italy and Austria above $400,000,000. and not borne by UNRRA should, so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, be limited to the value of supplies and services made available from the United Kingdom and colonies.

The Canadian Ambassador (Pearson) to the Secretary of State

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The Canadian Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the Aide-Mémoire of March 3, 1945 from the Department of State ⁶¹ and the reply of April 28, 1945 from this Embassy covering the arrangements for the provision of military relief supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas.

These arrangements have up to the present served to maintain a flow of essential supplies to liberated areas and to conquered areas during the period of military operations.

It now appears likely that the total amount of supplies covered by these arrangements will shortly have been provided and that irrecoverable expenditures have probably already reached the stipulated figure of $400,000,000 at which point it was agreed that the position should be re-examined.

In the light of these considerations and the change in conditions resulting from the end of European hostilities, it appears desirable that discussion be initiated immediately to re-examine the position bearing in mind the continuing need for military relief supplies.

Washington, May 17, 1945.

840.48/5-2145

President Truman to the Secretary of War (Stimson)

Washington, May 21, 1945.

Dear Mr. Secretary: On November 10, 1943, President Roosevelt directed the Army ⁶² to undertake the initial burden of shipping and distributing relief supplies for liberated areas of Europe pending the completion by civilian agencies of plans to carry out the necessary long range plan of relief. The fact that our vast military operations in Europe have been carried on without disease and unrest in liberated areas testifies to the Army's successful discharge of the obligation so imposed.

Once liberation of a country has been accomplished, however, I feel that the best interests of the United States and of the liberated country itself require termination of this military responsibility as soon as the military situation permits. No responsibility for civilian supply in any liberated country in Europe should continue to rest upon the Army except as may be dictated by the actual necessities of the military situation.

⁶² Letter not printed.

On the other hand, no liberated country should be prejudiced by termination of this responsibility. The date and conditions of termination in each case should be subject, of course, to the recommendation of the military commander in the field. In order that the transition from military to civilian responsibility may be smooth, final decision by the Army to end its responsibility should be made only after consultation with the government of the liberated country concerned and also with our own State Department and Foreign Economic Administration.

In addition, I think the general policy of the Army, upon such termination, should be to continue to assist the national governments involved and the appropriate civilian agencies of our own Government and UNRRA to the extent the military situation permits. This should include, where possible, and to the extent legally permissible, the transfer of supplies which are in excess of essential military requirements.

To the extent that implementation of this policy requires agreement of British military authorities, will you please cause negotiations to be initiated through appropriate military channels to obtain such agreement?

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN

President Truman to the Secretary of State

Washington, May 21, 1945.

Dear Mr. Secretary: In Judge Rosenman's report on civilian supplies for the liberated countries of Northwest Europe, I have noted reference to the practical difficulties encountered by our Army in the field in attempting to carry out the agreement reached at Yalta with the U.S.S.R. with respect to the feeding and care of Russian civilians uncovered in Germany.⁶³

I would appreciate it if you would instruct the appropriate officer in the Department to discuss this matter with the appropriate officers in the War Department with a view to determining what action, if any, we should take.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, June 11, 1945—4 p. m.

4668. Embs 5776, 7th.⁶⁴ We are concerned about tone and implications of press comments on meeting of Food Ministers scheduled for 14th and would regret if meeting followed same line. Implication is that British have had primary concern about food for liberated areas, that Llewellin and Lyttelton came to Washington to try to better situation, and that British have taken lead in sending food to Western Allies and in reducing home rations.

We have no desire to enter competition to obtain credit for action but have in mind that Hopkins-Law discussions on shipping last winter were played up by British as an attempt on their part to obtain shipping for liberated areas from a reluctant U.S. Any repetition of such tactics would not only result in untrue impression but would have serious repercussions here.

The genesis of food talks was, as you will remember, the following: General Bedell Smith made a trip to Belgium which resulted in an urgent request from SCAEF that some hundred thousand tons of food be shipped to Belgium at once from U.K. PM cabled President 65 saying this shipment could be made only on condition that British stocks be replenished from overseas. President replied that replenishment could only be discussed in connection with consideration of level of British stockpiles in general, and urged that discussions on this subject, which had started in January, should be renewed at once. 66 President urged sending of British representatives to U.S. with power to commit British Government. PM replied that such representatives would be sent for the purpose of discussing whole world food situation. By mutual agreement, Canadians were included. During discussions agreement was reached that severe cuts would be necessary in several important food categories if minimum liberated area needs were to be met, the percentage cuts to be made by U.S. being in some cases greater than British and prospective ration equal to or less than British. Furthermore, substantial cuts in British stockpiles were insisted upon.

Therefore, any implication that initiative for the talks was made by British or that British exhibited greater concern for liberated areas than U.S. would be erroneous. British press reports refer to fact that supplies have gone to liberated areas from Britain. Some of these supplies came from stocks specifically built up through overseas shipments for this purpose and stored in U.K. as a convenience. Others originated from Lend-Lease or Canadian mutual aid shipments.

We have requested Embassy here to arrange that text of Llewellin's statement be made available to you beforehand so that you may agree to it. We feel it highly important that British should make completely clear the combined US-UK-Canadian nature of the supply action. Unless you strongly disagree, we suggest you informally express our concern as described above to appropriate officials. Please show this message to Fitzgerald 67 and advise him that if he believes a false impression is being created, he should make a clear statement of U.S. participation. Suggest Hawkins 68 attend meeting with him.

Failure of British Government to notify us formally of meeting and fact that press reports contain no reference to U.S. participation in meeting do not encourage us to feel that an objective statement of problems and action will be made.

4693 and 4694.70 For Hawkins. The provision of civilian supplies by the combined military authorities in Western Europe and the Mediterranean (so-called Plan A) has been carried on up to the present under the following financial arrangements, agreed to by the U.K., Canadian, and U.S. Governments. Procurement in U.S. is financed by this Government, in British Commonwealth except Canada by U.K., in Canada by the Canadian Government, other countries half each by U.S. and U.K. Demand for payment will be made on all recipient governments, payment to be made to supplying countries jointly. Losses incurred as a result of non-payment will be shared, by appropriate division of proceeds from paying countries as follows: U.S. 67 percent, U.K. 25 percent, Canada 8 percent. Agreement covers one billion dollars in procurement and provides that when loss reaches 400 million, negotiations will take place regarding further arrangements.

Presumptive loss of 400 million on shipments to Italy and Balkans has now been reached. (Germany and Austria are regarded presumptively as paying on principle agreed to by U.S. and U.K. that payment for essential imports should be first charge on export including reparations except plant removals). France, Belgium, Netherlands and Norway have agreed to pay.

On May 16, U.K. requested negotiations be commenced and presented following proposals.

1. Existing arrangements continue for Northwest Europe.

2. Burden of initial financing of supplies for Germany should be spread more broadly, with result that U.K. share of any loan should be reduced. UNRRA should take over financing of supplies for displaced persons soon as possible. Meanwhile, any supplies furnished would continue under present arrangements.

3. Italian relief program should be shifted to UNRRA effective

July 1 by action of forthcoming Council meeting.

4. Relief for Austria should be handled on same basis as Italy.

5. Any losses sustained in excess of 400 million on shipments to Italy and Austria should be borne by U.K. only to extent of supplies and services (including shipping) furnished by U.K. and colonies.

6. Proposals 3 and 4 raise question of new funds for UNRRA which should be considered. Since only pounds 14 million out of U.K. contribution of 80 millions have been used, U.K. unable to consider further contribution until present contribution exhausted. Admission of neutrals to UNRRA should be considered.

Negotiations held by representatives of three governments May 25, 28 and 30. Adjourned until about June 25 to permit informal consultation with UNRRA and consideration by governments.

No formal U.S. reply presented but following position taken orally in conversations:

1. U.S. desires U.S. loadings of Plan A supplies for Netherlands and Belgium, and coal and POL 71 for France after July 1 to be treated as lend-lease from financial viewpoint. Proposal does not envisage change in supply and shipping arrangements. No change in Norway which has not requested lend-lease. Some adjustment perhaps later necessary for Denmark which is not eligible for lend-lease.

2. U.S. prepared continue some arrangements similar to existing ones for Germany until redeployment into zones. Thereafter, until development of overall foreign trade and interzonal program for all Germany under Control Council, U.S. unable to accept responsibility for supplies except for American zone. Establishment of effective organization for handling all German foreign and interzonal trade matter of great urgency. UNRRA should not take over financial responsibility for displaced persons until it has responsibility for their care, but should be urged to assume latter responsibility soon as possible.

3. Italy proposal raises question of future of UNRRA on which our position reserved. If adopted, would require additional funds for UNRRA, either by special funds for benefit of Italy or by raising total assessment. In either case, we would expect burden to be shared generally by contributing members. Financial responsibility should not be assumed by UNRRA until it takes over operating responsibility which unlikely before October 1 or November 1.

4. In view unsettled reparations issue, we are unwilling to agree this time to UNRRA putting supplies into Austria, since might be used to support reparations program which we oppose. Willing to consider resolution by UNRRA Council authorizing Central Committee to approve Austrian program if satisfied as to conditions between Council meetings. Meanwhile Austria should be handled under same procedure as Germany although relief scale should be higher than German minimum disease and unrest formula.

5. U.S. willing to reduce Canadian share of losses to 5 percent and assume 3 percent difference. Unable accept reduction in British financial responsibility which we believe within British financial capability and commensurate with British general responsibility. Propose extension present agreement with adjustment for Canada for any supplies furnished under agreed programs (e.g. subject to German cutoff on redeployment) until some agreed date, persons loadings to October 1 or November 1.

Canadians stated willingness to consider sharing on an equitable basis in any unavoidable losses in future programs. Unable to accept responsibility for losses on shipments to enemy which might result from trading off by U.S. and U.K. of first charge principle and would wish to be assured against such loss.

British took issue principally with our proposal 5 which they stated impossible to accept in view of British financial position (point which we challenged in light of British dollar position). British urged take-over of Italian program by UNRRA should be earlier than envisaged by us. On our proposal 1, they stated only question was whether it would reduce receipts to extent that distribution could not be made under loss-sharing formula. Pending resolution of issues, U.K. unable to procure for Italy and Austria except in U.K. and colonies. Whether this last position firm or just threat not clear.

Informal discussions then took place with UNRRA for the purpose of ascertaining how UNRRA expects to spend its present funds and UNRRA estimate of funds used to complete present UNRRA job. Following information which will be presented at August Council meeting was furnished us on the understanding it would be kept in strict confidence and its distribution limited.

UNRRA will have shipped approximately quarter billion dollars of supplies by June 30 according to its estimates. Expects shipments last half this year, assuming continuation June rate, to amount $750 million. With exception Italian program, Northwest Europe emergency program, displaced persons in Germany last quarter 1945, and a few other small items all shipments to Eastern Europe and Balkans.

Procurement for these purposes for 1946 shipments of $400 million plus $200 million lead items for China will result in commitment of all present UNRRA funds by end of this year. Balance of $250 million represents administrative costs, health and other services and funds not available this year, bringing total to $1850 million.

UNRRA estimates tentatively completion its present responsibility on basis of tapering off in Europe to end of 1946 would require perhaps additional $1,500 million of which $600 million for China in addition to $200 million to be used from present fund. Chinese figures unscreened by UNRRA, but developed with assistance UNRRA staff and believed by UNRRA realistic on requirements basis. Estimate for 1946 includes nothing for Italy except projection present $50 million program through year or for Austria except for displaced persons.

All of foregoing figures are conditional upon supply and shipping availabilities, although UNRRA states if particular supplies not available, it will shift to other items in order to balance programs.

Detailed figures received only on June 9 and not yet checked by us as to realism of supply and shipping assumptions. General feeling of governmental participants was UNRRA had made persuasive case for need for additional funds if UNRRA relief mechanism is to be used to meet payment deficits of beneficiary countries upon exhaustion present UNRRA funds.

Discussion of policy questions raised is being carried on among interested agencies with a view to present matter to President in the near future. U.S. position will have to be determined before August Council meeting and probably much sooner. We will keep you informed of progress. Marris arrives London probably June 11 to participate similar British considerations. Suggest you keep closely in touch with him regarding development of British thinking.

564. Acting Secretary handed notes to Norwegian, Belgian and Netherlands Ambassadors and Luxembourg and Danish Ministers on June 26th 76 substance of which follows:

On June 19 SCAEF was advised of decision by CCS 77 to terminate military responsibility upon completion of August loadings. This does not include POL and coal which will be separately considered. Combined Military Authorities will endeavor to ship approved civil affairs requirements including August loadings but not responsible thereafter for allocation or procurement of such requirements as may not be available by that time due to supply reasons. Shipping authorities have transition problem in hand and will try to provide equivalent tonnage. Combined Boards and military authorities expect to adjust present allocations so as to achieve equitable sharing of total allocations for liberated areas. Acting Secretary expects transition will be effectively achieved and that supply allocations and shipping will be suitably adjusted within over-all limitations. US Government agencies will assist in every way and respective governments urged immediately to instruct own procurement officials regarding responsibility they are to assume. End of Summary.

proposing that negotiations be undertaken immediately by the British, Canadian, and United States Governments with regard to the financial arrangements to be made in connection with the future provision of relief to liberated and conquered areas of Europe on a combined basis in so far as such relief lies outside the scope of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. An aide-mémoire of similar tenor was presented to the Department of State by the Canadian Embassy on May 17, 1945.

During the past several months, representatives of the three governments have discussed in detail the problems involved in the future provision of relief both through combined military channels and through the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

The United States Government now desires to propose the following arrangements with regard to the financing of relief shipments on a combined or other agreed basis to liberated and conquered areas of Europe which fall outside the scope of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration:

- 1. The agreement between the three governments which is contained in the British Embassy's memoranda of June 8, 1944 79 and February 8, [12?] 1945, to the State Department, the State Department's replies of June 8, 1944 80 and March 3, 1945, the Canadian Embassy's memorandum of June 2, 1944 81 and letter of June 17, 1944 81 and the State Department's reply of September 12, 1944, si the State Department's memorandum of March 3, 1945 to the Canadian Embassy 82 and the Embassy's reply of April 28, 1945, and in substantially similar communications between the British and Canadian Government, should, subject to certain modifications set forth below, continue to apply to the following:
 - a) Military relief supplies furnished on a combined basis to France, Belgium (including supplies for Luxembourg), Norway, Denmark, and The Netherlands until the termination of military supply responsibility for these countries, subject to paragraph 2 below.
 - b) Relief supplies delivered to Italy under a combined or an agreed program, whether or not such supplies are furnished through military channels.
- 2. The arrangements set forth in the previous paragraph will not apply to the portion attributable to the United States of the following supplies in so far as the United States Government desires to furnish such supplies on a lend-lease basis:
 - a) Petroleum, oil and lubricants delivered to France, Belgium (including supplies for Luxembourg), or the Netherlands on or after July 1, 1945.
 - b) Coal delivered to France on or after August 1, 1945.
 - c) Any other supplies delivered to Belgium (including supplies for Luxembourg) or the Netherlands on or after August 1, 1945.

⁸¹ Not printed.
82 See footnote 29, p. 1073.

3. Such amounts as prove to be irrecoverable from recipient governments or authorities in excess of a total sum of $400,000,000 shall be borne by the three supplying governments as follows:

by the United States
by the United Kingdom
by Canada

-74 percent of such amount
-21 percent of such amount
-5 percent of such amount

Receipts collected from the recipient governments or authorities shall be divided as may be necessary in order that the ultimate deficit be shared in the proportions set forth above. The three governments shall proceed jointly in the collection of such receipts in accordance with the understandings set forth in the exchange of letters of April 4 and April 24, 1944 [1945] ss between the State Department and the Canadian Embassy, and related communications with the British Embassy.

4. The foregoing relates solely to the financial arrangements which will govern such relief supplies as are furnished by the three governments and does not affect the scope of the supply programs to be undertaken which will be agreed by the three governments through appropriate channels from time to time.

The United States Government will make proposals separately with regard to the financial arrangements in connection with civilian supplies furnished by the three governments to Germany and Austria. Meanwhile, any such supplies furnished these countries by the three governments in accordance with mutual agreement shall be regarded as falling within the terms of the foregoing arrangements, but this understanding shall in no event extend beyond October 1945 loadings.

For purposes of convenience, there is set forth in the attached annex the substance of the agreement between the three governments as it would be amended by the foregoing proposals.

Annex: The following provisions shall apply to the furnishing of relief supplies by the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada on a combined or other agreed basis to liberated and conquered areas of Europe outside their own territories, in so far as the burden for furnishing such supplies does not fall upon the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration:

- 1. The arrangements herein set forth shall apply to supplies furnished as designated below:
 - (a) Supplies furnished to France, Belgium (including supplies for Luxembourg), The Netherlands, Norway, Denmark, Greece, Albania, and Yugoslavia: Until the termination of combined military supply responsibility, except as provided in paragraph 3.

(b) Supplies delivered to Italy under a combined or an agreed program, whether or not such supplies are furnished through military channels.

- 2. The initial financing of supplies procured for such relief shall be undertaken as follows:
 - (a) In the United States, by the United States Government.

⁸³ Not printed.

(b) In the British Commonwealth except Canada, by the Government of the United Kingdom.

(c) In Canada, by the Canadian Government.

- (d) In other areas, 50 percent by the United States Government and 50 percent by the British Government, in the case of supplies which are to be furnished on a combined basis.
- 3. The provisions of paragraph 1 shall not apply to the portion attributable to the United States of the following supplies in so far as the United States Government desires to furnish such supplies on a lend-lease basis:
 - (a) Petroleum, oil and lubricants delivered to France, Belgium (including supplies for Luxembourg), or the Netherlands on or after July 1, 1945.

(b) Coal delivered to France on or after August 1, 1945.

- (c) Any other supplies delivered to Belgium (including supplies for Luxembourg) or the Netherlands on or after August 1, 1945.
- 4. Unless other arrangements are mutually agreed upon, payment in full shall be requested of all governments or authorities of liberated or conquered areas to which such supplies are furnished.
- 5. Such amounts as prove to be irrecoverable from such governments or authorities shall be borne by the supplying governments in the following proportions:

(a) Up to a total of $400,000,000:

by the United States
by the United Kingdom
by Canada

—67 percent
—25 percent
— 8 percent

(b) In excess of $400,000,000:

by the United States —74 percent by the United Kingdom —21 percent by Canada —5 percent

6. Receipts collected from the recipient governments or authorities shall be paid to the three governments jointly under arrangements to be agreed upon from time to time. Such receipts shall be divided as may be necessary in order that the ultimate deficit be shared in the proportions set forth in the previous paragraph.

7. The three governments shall consult together from time to time in order to decide whether a claim shall be maintained against any government or authority which at any time indicates its inability to meet any request for payment.

8. The arrangements set forth above shall also apply to supplies furnished by the three governments to Germany and Austria in accordance with mutual agreement, but shall in no event apply beyond October 1945 loadings.

9. The foregoing provisions shall apply only to supplies furnished through military channels, except that in the case of Italy they shall apply to all supplies which are furnished by the three governments on a combined or agreed basis."

Please furnish copies of the foregoing urgently to Pearson at Canada House and Hasler at Foreign Office. British and Canadians are not telegraphing text.

The Canadian Embassy to the Department of State

MEMORANDUM

Reference is made to the State Department Memorandum of August 10th ⁸⁴ and the exchanges referred to in that memorandum, with particular reference to the State Department's memorandum of May 26th, ⁸⁵ taking note of the reservations of the Canadian authorities with respect to the original agreement.

It is the understanding of the Canadian authorities that their commitment for financing the provision of supplies and sharing in the ultimate cost incurred under these arrangements did not extend beyond completion of August loadings (and the corresponding date for completion of military distribution of petroleum products for civilian use).

It is understood that the Combined Military authorities have determined to terminate their responsibility for supplying the civilian populations of France, Belgium, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, Greece, Yugoslavia, Albania and Italy on or before the completion of August loadings for all civilian supplies (except petroleum products which they will continue to distribute to Belgium, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Denmark, Norway and Italy until October 1st). Accordingly, it is considered by the Canadian authorities that Canada's commitment to finance the procurement of supplies or to share in the ultimate cost for any of these areas under the existing agreement did not extend beyond supplies loaded on or before August 31st (and the corresponding date for distribution of petroleum products) since any supplies required for loading after that date could not be regarded as "Military Relief".

In respect of Germany and Austria it is considered by the Canadian authorities that upon completion of the division of these countries into the several zones, it was impracticable for the Canadian authorities to bear any direct responsibility for sharing in the financing of the provision of such supplies as might be required after completion of August loadings. In the event that any of the occupying powers require supplies available from Canada the Canadian authorities will be prepared to discuss with the occupying powers concerned, possible financial arrangements under which such supplies might be procured in Canada.

For the purpose of distributing the ultimate net cost of the Military Relief supplies which had been provided on a combined basis up to the completion of August loadings (and the corresponding date for distribution of petroleum products) the Canadian authorities have under consideration the proposal set forth in paragraph numbered three in the State Department's Memorandum of August 10th for the distribution of such amounts as prove to be irrecoverable in excess of the total sum of $400,000,000 already covered in the original agreement.86

The British Embassy to the Department of State

MEMORANDUM

His Britannic Majesty's Embassy refer to the Memorandum of the State Department dated August 9th proposing certain arrangements to His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom and to the Canadian Government with regard to financing of relief shipments on a combined or other agreed basis to liberated and conquered areas of Europe which fall outside the scope of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

2. His Majesty's Government understand the proposal by the United States Government contained in paragraph 3 of their Memorandum to mean that the proportion of 21 per cent should apply to all expenses over and above the 400 million dollar limit and are prepared to agree to the proposals contained in the Memorandum subject to the following reservations:

(i) that supplies should be provided to Italy on the basis proposed

- only up to and including October loadings;
 (ii) that procurement to be undertaken by the United Kingdom should be limited to supplies from the United Kingdom, British Colonies and South African coal and to such other items as the United Kingdom has agreed to procure in respect of the programme for September and October approved by the Operating Committee of the Combined Liberated Areas Committee.
- 3. As the State Department is aware the United Kingdom representatives, in the conversations regarding financing relief supplies which took place in Washington during the summer, emphasised the desirability of UNRRA taking over the financial responsibility for supplies to Italy as soon as possible, and the resolution passed at the Third Meeting of the Council 87 in London authorizing UNRRA to operate in Italy is equally specific on this point. In these circumstances His Majesty's Government could not themselves afford to continue to bear a fixed proportion of this financial burden for a period which has no definite closing date, nor could they ask for Parliamentary authority on this basis. Moreover, as explained to the United States Delegation to the UNRRA Conference, His Majesty's Government consider that the suggested proportion of 21 per cent is in fact higher than is justifiable having regard to the present financial position of the United Kingdom. However, in order to reach agreement His Majesty's Government are prepared to accept this proportion up to November 1st and have stipulated that closing date because it appears a reasonable date by which UNRRA should assume financial responsibility for supplies for Italy. If for any reason UNRRA's assumption of responsibility in Italy should be postponed beyond the date proposed, His Majesty's Government would be prepared to spread deliveries of supplies provided that the value of supplies furnished by the United Kingdom under the programme shall not exceed 21 per cent of the agreed programme for September and October.

 $^{^{86}}$ In a memorandum of September 17, 1945, the Canadian Embassy informed the Department that the Canadian Government accepted the proposal that Canada's share of such excess should be 5 percent (800.24/9–1745).

- 4. The State Department will no doubt appreciate that in accepting the proportion of 21 per cent of any additional loss over 400 million dollars His Majesty's Government are accepting a greater liability than had been allowed for. His Majesty's Government feel it proper that the United States Government should be warned of the possibility that this may make it necessary for them to consider a reduction in any new contribution for UNRRA to below the figure of 80 million pounds. His Majesty's Government would be entitled to adjust this figure to bring their first and second contributions together to 2 per cent of their national income as of June, 1943, which would make their new contribution approximately 75 million pounds.
- 5. A copy of this memorandum is being transmitted to the Canadian Embassy.

the major voluntary foreign relief agencies licensed by the Board to sell to individuals and organizations in this country so-called food drafts to be honored by delivery of high value standardized packages of food to designated individuals or institutions in liberated countries and additionally among displaced persons and later in occupied territory for nationals thereof.

A similar form of relief operation was carried out by the American Relief Administration following World War I and there now is an insistent demand for such service from the great population of nationals in this country until the normal flow of money remittances can be resumed.

UNRRA is willing to make available to above corporation 150,000 tons in the form of 7,700,000 packages each containing over 40,000 calories of balanced food of high nutritive value sufficient to give a family of four a supplementary diet of 700 calories each per day for 2 weeks. Low cost will permit sale at $10 or less leaving ample protective margin.

Success of plan depends upon speedy action in order that the supplies will not be delayed in movement from Army warehouses and to meet winter demands. It is requested that preliminary approach be made to appropriate authorities looking to provision of free customs entry as was granted in World War I and for facilities for adequate interior distribution. Missions here are being informed of this proposal and some have already informally expressed to the WRCB their cooperation, particularly the Czechs and French.

For your confidential information it is possible that Donald Nelson so will accept the chairmanship and active management of the corporation which proposes to conclude its operation so far as Army stocks are concerned within the period of 6 months later using other supplies if need continues.

Early report on reaction will be appreciated in order that organization of corporation may proceed with confidence.⁹⁰ of supplies from combined military stocks to French Zones of Germany and Austria will accordingly cease. American and Brit Zone Commanders will make available supplies sufficient in their judgment to meet requirements in French Zones up to November 30 and to provide reasonable working reserve. French Govt is expected to reimburse supplying Govts, namely, U.S., U.K., and Canada for supplies furnished to French Zones. Notification to French Govt respecting these decisions is to be made by both Brit and American Govts. Accordingly, you are requested to deliver following memo to French FonOff. You should check with your Brit colleague to coordinate time of delivery of memos to French Govt. For your info Canadians are apparently not intending to deliver similar memo to French. Memo follows.

"Reference is made to the note of April 4, 1945 from the United States Government to the French Government ⁹¹ respecting payment for the civilian supplies furnished to Metropolitan France by the United States and United Kingdom forces. Similar notes were addressed to the French Government by the British and Canadian Governments.

Civilian supplies have likewise been furnished to the French Zones of Germany and Austria, including Berlin and Vienna, from the combined military stocks of the United States and United Kingdom forces, some of which originated from Canadian sources. The Combined Chiefs of Staff have now decided, however, that combined United States and United Kingdom military responsibility for the provision of civilian supplies to Germany and Austria, including those for displaced persons, should terminate upon the completion of October 1945 loadings except for wheat and flour in which case combined responsibility will terminate upon the completion of shipments necessary to carry out the agreement made by the United States and United Kingdom Zone Commanders for the appointment of available combined supplies and credits of wheat and flour between the United States, United Kingdom and French Zones of Germany and Berlin and the United States and French Zones of Austria and Vienna. Accordingly, combined United States and United Kingdom military responsibility for the provision of civilian supplies, including those for displaced persons, to the French Zones of Germany and Austria, including Berlin and Vienna, will terminate as indicated above. To effect orderly liquidation of combined military responsibility in the French Zones for items other than wheat and flour, the United States and United Kingdom Zone Commanders in Germany and Austria, respectively, will provide supplies sufficient in their judgment to meet issue requirements in the French Zones up to November 30, 1945 and to provide a reasonable working reserve, as was done in the agreement for apportionment of wheat and flour supplies and credits.

The French Government will be expected to reimburse the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian Governments, respectively,

The Canadian Prime Minister (Mackenzie King) to President Truman

Washington, November 23, 1945.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have been advised in strict confidence by the Canadian Representative on the Combined Food Board that the United States member has intimated to his colleagues on the Board the probability of the United States discontinuing meat rationing on or about December 1st.

I have recent and vivid impressions of the urgent need for supplies of meat in the United Kingdom and Continental Europe and of the extent to which they are relying on the co-operation of North America. It is, however, because of the great importance of close co-operation between our two Governments that I am sending this message.

In the course of several conversations we both have agreed on the great value of the intimate wartime collaboration through the various Combined Boards, and we have also agreed on the desirability of continuing a maximum degree of similar collaboration during the difficult months that lie ahead.

The discontinuance of meat rationing in the United States will raise questions of policy in Canada which will require most careful examination. In the light of desperate European needs during the coming winter we feel that we should not discontinue meat rationing at the present juncture, and it is our present intention to continue meat rationing in full effect.

In view of the pressing needs of Europe and of the likelihood that decisions of each country will react on the neighbouring government, I should like to suggest that no final decision be taken in this matter before there is opportunity for further full discussion in the Combined Food Board, or, if desirable, at a higher level.

Yours very sincerely,

W. L. Mackenzie King

- 1. Following paper will be reported to EECE on 13 December by Subcommittee on Enemy Exports and is transmitted to you for your advance information.
- 2. (I) At the 12th meeting of the Emergency Economic Committee for Europe held on 1st November representatives of a number of member countries expressed their anxiety about the difficulties in trading with Germany under the existing financial arrangements. The various problems raised were referred to the Enemy Exports Subcommittee for further discussion. The Subcommittee, after discussion, has prepared the following statement in an attempt to set forth concisely the present German trade situation and the financial regulations issued to meet it.
- (II) The effect on the E.E.C.E. countries. It is difficult to forecast with any certainty the pattern of German trade over the next few years. However, it now appears probable that for the year 1946 there will be not only a deficit on the current trading account (more imports will be required than can be paid for by exports) but also a "dollar" deficit. Even if all exports from Germany were paid for in full in dollars there would still be insufficient dollars to pay for the essential imports required from the dollar area. In order to prevent Germany from becoming a financial liability to the countries responsible for the control of Germany, it was stated in the Potsdam Declaration that "In working out the economic balance of Germany the necessary means must be provided to pay for imports approved by the Control Council in Germany. The proceeds of exports from current production and stocks shall be available in the first place for payment for such imports." 92 In view of the requirement for paying for imports with the proceeds of export and of the fact that a large proportion of the imports can be procured only in the dollar area, the American and British Governments have found it necessary to issue parallel notes requiring payment for all exports from Germany other than exports of capital equipment available as reparations or looted property subject to restitution. For the time being payment is required to be made in dollars but it is specifically stated that in special cases it may later prove possible to arrange for payment in some other currencies acceptable to the Control Council. It is understood that the French Government will shortly make a similar declaration.
- (III) The trade situation summarized above and the financial regulations issued by the American and British Governments to meet it have made it difficult for the Allied countries of Europe to import from Germany the goods they urgently require; most countries have a shortage of dollars. This means that these countries are not able to buy from Germany goods which are available and which they would purchase if they now had sufficient dollars. Or if they pay dollars for essential goods available in Germany these countries have to forego goods from other sources which are needed for their reconstruction and rehabilitation. Furthermore, it may mean that in order to avoid having to use dollars from other sources in order to buy German goods, countries which are short of dollars will [apparent garble] to sell to Germany goods which they would normally sell elsewhere in order to procure the necessary purchasing power there. Some countries are not only short of dollars but also of goods. For them the present regulations virtually preclude the import of any goods from Germany.

(IV) It is clearly in the interest of all countries requiring goods from Germany that the method of payment be made as easy as possible. Given the immediate necessity of meeting the situation outlined in section II above, and even within the principles which underlie the present financial negotiations, there are some steps which might be taken to alleviate the present difficulties. A further paper concerning the steps suggested for dealing with the problems set forth here will be prepared at the earliest possible date.

3. Various suggestions to facilitate payments arising from German trade have been advanced by Norway, Netherlands and other EECE countries not represented among controlling powers. Subcommittee on Enemy Exports has agreed US and French request to defer consideration of suggestions concerning foreign exchange until foregoing statement of problem had been referred to governments of the controlling powers for comment.

The Department of State to the British Embassy 94

MEMORANDUM

Reference is made to the memorandum from the British Embassy dated September 14, 1945, to the letters from Mr. R. W. Jackling of the British Embassy to Mr. George F. Luthringer of the Department of State dated October 9, 1945, and October 25, 1945, and to the memoranda from the Canadian Embassy dated September 11 and September 17, 1945, all on the subject of financial arrangements to govern the provision of civilian supplies on a combined or other agreed program to the liberated and conquered areas of Europe outside the scope of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

⁹³ In the office of the United States Political Adviser for Germany.

⁹⁴ An identical memorandum was addressed to the Canadian Embassy on the same day.

⁹⁶ Memorandum of September 17, not printed, but see footnote 86, p. 1108.

The United States Government takes note of the statement in the British Embassy's memorandum respecting the distribution of responsibility for losses under the program in the light of the present financial position of the United Kingdom Government. This Government also takes note of the statements in the Canadian Embassy's memorandum of September 11, 1945 respecting the inability of the Canadian Government to continue sharing in the loss responsibility for Italy in view of the termination of combined military supply responsibility for the liberated areas or loss responsibility for Germany and Austria after the completion of August, 1945 loadings. In view of the accounting and other difficulties involved, the United States Government suggests that the precise date and manner of the Canadian Government's withdrawal from the loss sharing arrangements and the precise arrangements applicable to Germany and Austria during the period between the Canadian Government's withdrawal and the termination of combined military supply responsibility as fixed by the Combined Chiefs of Staff in CCS 933, be made subject to future determination. Subject to these qualifications and those outlined below, the United States Government is prepared to accept the modifications proposed by the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments to the arrangements set forth in the memorandum of August 9, 1945 from this Government.97

With respect to the Italian program, this Government understands the reservation made by the United Kingdom Government to be that subsequent to August loadings, the United Kingdom Government will bear loss responsibility equivalent to 21 percent of the amount of the supplies furnished for which payment is not received from the Italian Government, provided that the amount of such supplies for which payment is not received does not exceed the agreed Italian program for September and October 1945. In view of the decision of the Canadian Government to withdraw from the Italian program after August loadings, the Government of the United States will regard its own portion of the agreed program for September and October as 79 percent.

The United States Government's memorandum of August 9, 1945 contains a provision exempting from the arrangements set forth therein such supplies delivered to France, Belgium, and The Netherlands on or after August 1, 1945 as this Government desires to furnish on a lend-lease basis. At the time this provision was drafted and the date of August 1, 1945 was selected, it was intended by this Government to leave open the possibility of furnishing to the Governments in question on a lend-lease basis the equivalent of several months supplies forwarded through combined channels from United States sources. Representatives of this Government endeavored to make this intention clear to the appropriate representatives of the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments in previous conversations on this subject. The rapid conclusion of the war in the Pacific and the consequent termination of lend-lease made it necessary to shift the date in question from August 1, 1945 to July 1, 1945 if the original intention of this Government was to be realized. This Government is, therefore, reserving the right to make available to the Governments of France, Belgium, and The Netherlands on a lend-lease basis all or part of the contribution of the United States after July 1, 1945 to the civilian supplies furnished them by the combined military authorities of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada. The United States Government will not, however, transfer such supplies on lend-lease terms to the French, Belgian, and Netherlands Governments to an amount in excess of $75 million in the aggregate without further consultation with the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments. The United States Government wishes at this time to amend in this sense paragraphs 2(b) and (c) of its memorandum of August 9, 1945 and paragraphs 3(b) and (c) of the annex appended thereto.

The Combined Chiefs of Staff paper mentioned above (CCS 933) provides that financial settlement for stocks on hand or in the process of shipment to any zone in Germany or Austria upon the termination of combined military supply responsibility will be the subject of intergovernmental negotiation. This Government is prepared to discuss the financial settlement alluded to therein at any mutually agreeable time.

Washington, January 3, 1945—midnight.

66. The following for Mann² is WRB 33. The War Refugee Board³ was recently advised by McClelland⁴ in Bern that approximately 1355 refugees from Bergen-Belsen arrived in Switzerland on December 7 and are temporarily being housed in Caux under control of the Swiss army. McClelland has been advised by the chief of the Swiss Federal Police that the majority of these refugees are Hungarians, including persons from Transylvania, but that there are also a few Poles, Slovaks and Yugoslavs. The Swiss stated further to McClelland:

"All these refugees intended to go to Palestine some as young workers others as veteran Zionists or prominent members of Jewish organizations, still others to join relatives already there. Most of them had been assured that they would be admitted although none of them actually possess Palestine certificates or equivalent document. On other hand they all hold documents issued by Hungarian Red Cross or an international Jewish organization stating that a Palestine certificate in their name is available at Istanbul. These documents were for most part issued shortly before occupation of Hungary by Germans. For past few years it appears that several thousands of Hungarian Jews have gone to Haifa via Istanbul on basis of such documents. All these Hungarians who recently arrived in Switzerland originally intended to pick up their Palestine certificates in Istanbul and once in possession of them to proceed to Haifa. Almost all of them have relatives in Palestine. They do not know whether the certificates supposedly available for them at Istanbul are still valid or whether the Zionist organizations have taken any steps to assure their emigration."

Athough it is not certain that this is the same group referred to in our WRB-19 of November 3 5 and your 9736 of November 9,6 it is hoped that you will be able nevertheless to obtain the consent of the British to the admission of this group of refugees to Palestine. The Swiss are extremely anxious and consider it imperative that this entire group of refugees be removed from Switzerland as soon as possible. This is an excellent opportunity to demonstrate to the Swiss our good faith in promising to find temporary havens for all refugee Jews arriving in Switzerland from Hungary, particularly since the Swiss have indicated their willingness to permit 8,000 more Hungarian Jews to enter Switzerland on a temporary basis.

AFHQ ⁷ and UNRRA ⁸ have agreed to hold the Philippeville Camp in Algeria open to meet emergency needs such as that created by any possible movement of Hungarian Jews. However, it is the Board's feeling, in view of the above-quoted communication by the Swiss to McClelland, that efforts should be made to have this group admitted to Palestine rather than to Philippeville.

Please take this matter up with the British and reply urgently. If the British consent to admit these refugees to Palestine, the United States Government will of course cooperate in arranging transportation.

⁵ Telegram 9220, November 3, 1944, midnight, to London (not printed) reported that the United States Government had urged the Swiss Government to take speedy action to enable 2000 Palestine certificate holders in Hungary to proceed to Switzerland and that the United States had promised to use its best efforts to secure the unimpeded progress of these certificate holders to Palestine. This telegram stated that the United States Government was determined to spare no effort in interceding with Swiss, French, Spanish, and Portuguese officials in the interest of securing speedy transportation of the certificate holders in accordance with suggested routing and was prepared to recommend that Allied military and shipping authorities make this speedy transit possible. The United States urged the British to take similar steps to make possible the early departure of the certificate holders for Palestine (840.48 Refugees/11-344).

Not printed; the British were reported to be uncommitted regarding the contents of the telegram outlined in the preceding footnote, but the Embassy felt that if the reports of the release of Jews were true, the United States would be able to get British commitments parallel to the action outlined by the Department (840.48 Refugees/11-944).

135. To Winant and Mann from Department and War Refugee You are requested to inform the British Government that the discussions referred to in Department's No. 8780 of October 21, 1944,9 have been continuing. The discussions originating in various ransom proposals have changed in recent weeks to a proposal by the Swiss participants that in principle, in return for the halting of the extermination of Jews in German hands, relief supplies might be made available for distribution under International Red Cross supervision to keep surviving Jews alive. In order to have something tangible with which to prolong the negotiations and thus gain more precious time, the representatives of the Swiss Jewish Community conducting the negotiations have requested the transfer to Switzerland of twenty million Swiss francs from private American Jewish sources. This Government has just authorized the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee to transfer the sum of 20,000,000 Swiss francs to Switzerland upon condition that no part of the fund will be expended or committed for expenditure without the express prior approval of this Government.

You will be kept fully advised of any further significant developments.

thorities to the danger faced by the Jewish survivors in Germancontrolled territory.

Accordingly, it will be appreciated if you will visit newly appointed Swiss Foreign Minister ¹² and President of Intercross, ¹³ and urge that continued efforts be made from now on to keep the surviving victims of Nazi persecution alive during the coming stages of hostilities in Europe. You should specifically mention in this connection the three largest concentrations of Jews in Axis territory known to exist, viz. Lodz with 60,000 to 80,000 inmates, Theresienstadt with 40,000 to 60,000 inmates, and camps near Vienna with 18,000 inmates, and you should also mention any other localities or regions where Jews are believed by you to survive.

In your conferences with Swiss Foreign Minister and Intercross President it should be made clear that this Government considers that frequent and extended visits of Swiss Consuls and Intercross delegates to places and regions where Jews are concentrated constitute one of the most effective means of preventing their further extermination. This method proved its efficacy in Budapest where, thanks to the presence of Swiss and Intercross personnel, many lives appear to have been saved.

Furthermore, you should emphasize to Foreign Minister and Intercross President the mounting evidence of confusion among local German officials and their increasing accessibility to psychological pressure seeking to dissuade them from executing extermination policies ordered by certain German authorities, and urge that full advantage be taken of this state of mind in the interest of saving lives, through unofficial as well as official channels.

More particularly, in view of German consent to permit Intercross inspection and care for Hungarian Jews engaged in forced labor in Germany and German-occupied territory (enclosure 1 to your despatch 10132 of December 6 ¹⁴), please request immediate and continuing Intercross action to safeguard lives of this largest group of Jews surviving under German rule.

Please endeavor to make clear to Swiss and Intercross that the activities suggested above should be actively pursued as long as the danger continues.

Please advise Department and WRB of Swiss and Intercross reaction.

The following from WRB for McClelland:

It would be helpful if you inquired at frequent intervals what specific action Swiss and Intercross are taking to carry out the above suggestions.

In view of the situation as outlined above and in view of your recent reports indicating effectiveness of publicity and other forms of psychological pressure upon German officials, you are requested to make special efforts through all channels available to you to increase such pressure with a view to safeguarding the lives of the surviving victims of Nazi persecution.

Doubts have been expressed by certain private relief agencies in America, hopeful of being able to arrange large-scale escape of refugees from Nazi persecution, whether Swiss Government is willing to keep its doors open to a further flow of such refugees, whatever their numbers. Please investigate, if necessary, and advise us.

Should you believe it useful now or at any future time, you are authorized to emphasize to Swiss officials that the previous assurances given by this Government concerning the maintenance and evacuation of refugees from enemy persecution who would be admitted to Switzerland were not restricted to any particular number of persons and that this Government would deeply appreciate continued Swiss cooperation in this humanitarian endeavor by admitting all such refugees who may be able to reach Switzerland, without regard to numbers.

531. For WRB from McClelland. Department's 240, January 16, WRB's 364. In course of constant contact with various officials and agencies of Swiss Government during past many months on subject of admission to Switzerland of refugees from Nazi persecution, we have observed no lack of willingness on part of Swiss to grant large numbers of such persons temporary asylum. On contrary Swiss have repeatedly interceded with Germans as in case of projected evacuation of upwards of 12,000 Jews from Budapest in effort to expedite and organize such evacuation.

On occasion of coming of second Bergen-Belsen convoy of 1300 individuals in early December Federal police was somewhat disturbed over unannounced arrival of group of unknown persons of this size from Germany on understandable grounds of military and internal security.

We have repeatedly conveyed to Swiss our Government's assurance that any such refugees admitted to Switzerland would be evacuated as promptly as possible. Although Swiss have not as yet chosen to avail themselves of our offers of maintenance they took occasion in course of recent discussions relative to conversion of dollar equivalent of the 20,000,000 into Swiss francs to express informally their distress at United States unwillingness to allow them import into Switzerland even from Spain some 300,000 tons of foodstuffs purchased for general Swiss consumption and warehoused in Spain for past many months. Our lack of understanding (as they interpret it) of growing difficulties their food situation and our simultaneous requests that they admit large numbers of new refugees contrast rather unfavorably in their minds. It is worth nothing [noting?] in this respect that Switzerland has recently received a new contingent of close to 10,000 French refugee children from the Muhlhouse [Mulhouse] region. [McClelland.]

The Ambassador in Turkey (Steinhardt) to the Secretary of State

Ankara, January 25, 1945—4 p. m. [Received January 26—1: 29 a. m.]

130. From Katzki ²¹ to Pehle, War Refugee Board. Ankara's No. 7.²² The following statistics, one year after the creation of the War Refugee Board, relating to rescue and emigration activities from the Balkans via Turkey to Palestine for the calendar year 1944, will be of interest to the Board. The total number of persons who passed in transit through Turkey proceeding to Palestine excluding 282 people from Holland exchanged for German nationals in July is 6527. Of this number 1392 came from Bulgaria, 163 from Hungary, 4433 from Rumania and 539 from Greece.

Herbert Katzki, War Refugee Board Representative in Turkey.
 Dated January 3, 1945, not printed.

It should be noted, however, that persons included under Rumania comprise not only Rumanian nationals but a large proportion of Polish, Slovakian, Ruthenian and Hungarian refugees who succeeded in escaping to Rumania.

The total of 6527 includes 1737 children and youths up to the age of 18 years. Approximately 1,000 were orphans repatriated from Transnistria. An additional 327 accompanied their parents and the balance comprises children emigrating without parents.

All the refugees from Greece escaped by sea. Ten groups arrived by sea from Constanza using vessels of Bulgarian registry 5 times and Turk vessels 5 times. An 11th group from Constanza was lost with the sinking of the Mefkura. Other refugees from Bulgaria and Rumania arrived by railroad.

Thus far in January 628 additional persons from Rumania (the Stara-Zagora detainees) have passed through Turkey proceeding to Palestine.

The success of this rescue work, as you previously have been informed, is attributable to the breaking of the bottle-neck into Turkey as a result of the efforts of Ambassador Steinhardt and the WRB. [Katzki.]

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, January 26, 1945—10 a. m. [Received January 26—9:32 a. m.]

238. In accordance with the wishes expressed in the Department's 134, January 22, 9 p. m., I have reminded the Foreign Office of the existence of these concentration camps and of the possibility that they may still contain victims of Nazi persecution. I have expressed the War Refugee Board's interest in the welfare of these persons and in such measures that can be taken for their protection. The Soviet Government has not yet released any information concerning the civilian populations of the areas covered by their recent advances and it is obvious that this question is regarded for the time being as a military secret. In no case furthermore has the Soviet Foreign Office been willing to my knowledge to divulge information of this sort. I doubt whether the Soviet military authorities make any discrimination between Jews and others in such records as they may make of civilians liberated by their advance. Furthermore when we inquired last September about the Jews in Lodz, the Foreign Office replied that it was unable to give us any information on that question and referred us to the Polish National Committee of Liberation.²³ I have no doubt that a similar attitude will be taken in the present instance.

As the Department will note from the Embassy's 4730, December 9, 11 p. m., and 5059, December 30, 2 p. m.,²⁴ the Embassy has made every effort to obtain information on the fate of the Jews in Russian controlled territories. As soon as the Polish authorities have had an opportunity to establish their administration in the recently liberated territories and to find out what has gone on there, we will not fail to exploit every possibility for obtaining similar information with regard to those territories.

Moscow, January 29, 1945—1 p. m. [Received February 17—5 p. m.]

A-27. Department's telegram 35, January 6, 4 p. m., 25 with reference to schemes for ransoming Jews in German hands.

Ambassador Harriman was not able before his departure from Moscow to give attention to this matter.

After giving careful consideration to the request made by the War Refugee Board, I am obliged to say that I do not feel that it would be in the interests of our Government to transmit this information to the Soviet Government. In view of the extreme suspicion with which the Soviet Government views all financial transactions with Germany conducted through Swiss channels and in view of the marked lack of enthusiasm with which communications on this subject have been received in the past, I feel that to impart this information to the Soviet Foreign Office would have the effect of undermining confidence here in the integrity of our economic warfare effort and would thus be definitely detrimental to our interests.

The Soviet Government is well aware of the sufferings being inflicted on victims of Nazi persecution of every race and nationality. Their own citizens have been done to death by the Germans in numbers which, they believe, run into the millions. Hundreds of thousands of their citizens are apparently still believed to be held in detention in Germany. Soviet circles feel that the Soviet Union through its war effort is doing the best that can be done to bring to an end this reign of terror and thus to relieve the sufferings of all these unfortunate people, Russians and foreigners alike.

The Soviet Government apparently does not believe, as a matter of principle, in dickering with bandits, and has generally taken the position with regard to its own people that the interests of the Soviet State and of the Allied powers in general override the interests of those groups who are unfortunate enough to fall into the hands of the enemy. The idea of ransoming any of these people by the payment of sums which can help the Germans to prolong their war effort will not only fail to appeal to the Russians but will be interpreted by them as a form of betraval of general United Nations interests on our part. In particular, they will fail to understand why these efforts should be directed to the relief of one category of victims of Nazi terror and not others. I am afraid that an explanation to the effect that the transfer of these funds to Switzerland was only a half measure and that we have not yet decided whether or not to release them, will not do anything to improve the impression which this communication would make.

I would therefore strongly recommend that this matter not be communicated to the Soviet Government.

483. I have personally discussed briefly with Foreign Minister Gunther and several times at length with Von Post ²⁶ substance Department's 106, January 19, 8 p. m.²⁷ (WRB 293). Official Swedish reaction entirely favorable but both Gunther and Post skeptical that Germans would be in any way amenable to Swedish suggestions in this matter. Full memorandum of our views was transmitted by Foreign Office to Swedish Minister Richert at Berlin who has replied that in his opinion approach by Sweden alone to German Government under present conditions would have completely negative results. Richert also reported German authorities entertaining no requests by Swedes or others to visit these Jewish concentration camps. Foreign Office then on February 3 sent instructions to Swedish Ministers Berlin and Bern to take up secretly with Swiss Government and Vatican through Papal Nuncio at Berlin suggestion that Sweden, Switzerland and Vatican make joint approach in this matter to Ger-

No reply received yet from Swedish Minister Bern but Richert reports Papal Nuncio considers such approach not only useless but might under present conditions produce effect contrary to its intentions. Same opinion expressed by Swiss Minister Berlin.

Swedish Government keenly aware of dangers and all their implications. I was assured by Post that they are examining every possibility for useful action. Fact that Swedish Government has made these exploratory suggestions to Vatican and Swiss Government should be kept secret and given no publicity.

Swiss Government unwilling to make joint démarche with Vatican and Swedish Government to German Government on behalf of Jews in concentration camps but has instructed Swiss Minister Berlin to confer with Swedish Minister and examine possibilities presumably for independent action. Von Post said Swiss official reply in general was more encouraging than reaction of Papal Nuncio and Swiss Minister in Berlin. He also said a Swiss Citizen Monsieur Musy 29 succeeded in getting liberation of 1200 Jews from Theresienstadt through his private efforts and that these people now on way to Switzerland. Previous lot of 1500 said to have been freed as result of Musy's efforts already arrived in Switzerland. Foreign Office considers news of these releases through private efforts of significance and indicates possibility for release of others.

840.48 Refugees/2-1545

Memorandum by the Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren) to the Acting Secretary of State

[Washington,] February 15, 1945.

Mr. Grew: On February 7, 1945, 1,200 refugees arrived in Switzerland from Germany. Their release was arranged by Musy, a former Federal Councilor of Switzerland, who had made a number of trips to Germany at the instigation of Sternbuch, the representative in Switzerland of the Vaad Hahatzala Emergency Committee of the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada. Musy returned to Switzerland in advance of the refugees anouncing that he had secured their release by direct negotiation with Himmler, 30 whom he had seen on his previous trips to Germany. He stated that additional groups of refugees would arrive weekly in Switzerland dependent upon German transportation facilities. He advised Sternbuch that he would require a deposit of 5,000,000 Swiss francs in his (Musy's) name in the Swiss National Bank immediately after the arrival of the 1,200. This money he suggested might later be paid over by the Germans to the International Committee of the Red Cross as a further gesture of good faith.

The Rabbis are now pressing the War Refugee Board and the Treasury Department for a license to transmit 4,000,000 Swiss francs to Switzerland to be paid to Musy. They have on deposit in Switzerland 1,000,000 Swiss francs under a previous license. The Department has been asked by Brigadier General O'Dwyer, Executive Director of the War Refugee Board, if it will approve the transaction. He has advised the Rabbis that he will issue the license if the Department agrees.

There are two other negotiations of this character in process. One, originating in a ransom proposal last June, has been shifted by Saly Mayer, the Swiss negotiator and a responsible person, to a proposal that in return for a German promise to cease exterminations relief supplies might be furnished to feed surviving Jews in concentration camps. Mayer has conducted these negotiations with the Germans since August 1944. Early in January 1945 he requested the deposit of 20,000,000 Swiss francs in Switzerland in order to maintain his position in the negotiations. The Board and the Department authorized the transmission of these funds to a joint account in the names of Saly Mayer and McClelland, the representative of the War Refugee Board at Bern, with the stipulation that no commitment or payment be made without express authority from this Government. The transfer of these funds was reported to the British and Soviet Governments.³¹ An earlier report on these negotiations brought a reply from the Soviet Government that they were neither feasible nor permissible.

Word of the second negotiations has just come from London. A group of Dutch Jews in Switzerland has requested the Netherlands Government to contribute 350,000 Swiss francs toward a fund to rescue 1,500 Dutch Jews at 1,000 Swiss francs per person. The American Embassy London reports 32 that the Netherlands Government has requested the comment of the British and United States Governments in the light of the British, United States, Netherlands declarations in November 1942.²³

In view of the unusual humanitarian considerations involved, FMA,³⁴ EE ³⁵ and WT ³⁶ are willing to consider approval of the license provided the funds after payment to Musy can be blocked in Switzerland. Mr. Currie, on mission in Switzerland, has the item of "Safehavens" ³⁷ on his agenda for discussion with the Swiss. British comment on the Dutch inquiry was to the effect that the negotiations should be continued as long as possible but that the payment envisaged would be inconsistent with current Safehaven proposals.

Two suggestions have resulted from the discussions in the Department.

1. That Mr. Currie might induce the Swiss to agree to block Musy's account after the proposed payment is made, or

2. That the blocking might be accomplished by general Safehaven arrangements still to be negotiated with the Swiss.

With respect to the latter, the time element is a consideration. The Rabbis fear that delay in payment may jeopardize the rescue of additional refugees.

George W. Baker,³⁸ WT, is leaving on Monday (February 26) to join Mr. Currie in Bern and can be briefed on the proposal before leaving. There is a possibility that the Department may be pressed for a decision before Mr. Currie has an opportunity to discuss blocking proposals with the Swiss.

The Minister in Switzerland (Harrison) to the Secretary of State

Bern, February 22, 1945—9 a. m. [Received 9:45 a. m.]

1159. For Department and WRB from McClelland. Letter from Minister referred to in last paragraph our 1056, February 16 ³⁹ was delivered to Burckhardt (B) on February 17 urging ICRC to take action along following lines:

1. Increase to greatest possible extent visits of its delegates to places of detention of all categories of "Schutzhaeftlinge"; 40

2. Augment number committee's representatives in Germany as substantially and rapidly as possible;

3. Instruct its delegates to take every advantage of mounting confusion within Germany to mitigate lot of all civil detainees and dissuade German officials from last minute excesses.

Following is substance of B's written reply dated February 19:

"Replying to your letter of February 16 I must in first place stress fact that in their memorandum to us dated February 1 German Government stated: 'Visits to camps and places of detention where alien detainees ("Schutzhaeftlinge") are confined are unfortunately not feasible at present moment for imperative reasons of national defense.'

In a recent communication our delegate Dr. Schirmer reported: 'Headquarters of German Security Police have informed us that permission to visit concentration camps of alien detainees must be secured in each particular instance from Himmler himself.'

This present situation. I am awaiting an answer from Himmler concerning place and date I can see him personally. I shall spare no endeavor should interview take place to do my utmost to secure best possible result. You are aware of how difficult that will be.

We are anxious to send as many delegates (to Germany) as possible. They must be men of character. Five new delegates are accordingly leaving for Germany within next few days. We shall send others as soon as we can manage.

Decisive problem is and remains question of transportation. Within 4 days thousands of prisoners and detainees can starve. You are acquainted with cable we sent to Washington (to Secretary of State) following receipt of most recent report from our chief delegate (in Germany Dr. Maeti).

There is not a moment to be lost. Our delegates can only get into camps if they bring something with them and if they have gasoline and can still manage to travel on the roads (with trucks). Should it be found impracticable to except two railway lines in north and south from aerial bombardment then any number of freight cars placed our disposal will be useless. All this is most extremely urgent. Large scale methods of action and sweeping decisions alone can secure any results.

³⁹ Telegram not printed; it stated that in face of the evidence of mounting confusion within Germany and the resulting increased accessibility of individual German officials to psychological pressures as they became more isolated by military events and hence more independent, an opportunity was afforded the ICRC to facilitate the relief of security prisoners. Hence, McClelland dispatched a letter from Minister Harrison to Burckhardt urging the latter to take action in line with a previous communication to Burckhardt based on the Department's telegram 127, January 9, 5 p. m., to Bern, p. 1121.

⁴⁰ Persons detained for security reasons.

We are often expected to do miracles. That is, of course, impossible; but by exerting every nerve and applying all our will we can do something provided certain indispensable means for execution of our task be furnished us."

End of B's reply.

On February 20 I had a personal interview with B who informed me that he had dispatched letter to Himmler on February 17 asking for a meeting.

First paragraph of B's reply of February 19 refers to answer finally received from German Foreign Office to ICRC'S memorandum of October 2 (Legation's 7998, December 7 41). Substance of German reply was issued in an ICRC communiqué of February 14 which is being transmitted in Legation's 1143, February 21.42 [McClelland.]

Particulars have now been received from British Legation at Bern concerning the group of 1675 Jewish refugees from Bergen-Belsen. British authorities are naturally pleased at release of these refugees. There are however considerable difficulties to British agreement for immediate admission "of all or indeed any" of the group into Palestine. Arrangements were made by the British authorities when practically the whole of Europe was occupied by the enemy whereby a large number of European Jews were advised that certificates for entry into Palestine would be issued to them should they reach neu-

⁴¹ Telegram not printed; it stated that the ICRC had approached the German Foreign Office with a request that the German authorities consider extending to persons detained for security reasons the treatment already granted to enemy nationals in Germany and the German-occupied territory by analogy to the Geneva Prisoners of War Convention of 1929 (840.48 Refugees/12-744). tral territory. At the same time British passport control officer at Istanbul was authorized to issue Palestine visas automatically to any Jewish refugee who reached Istanbul. This arrangement was designed simply and solely to save from persecution as many Jews as possible. A certain claim to immunity from the worst forms of persecution was given them by a document to the effect that they would be admitted into Palestine. Consequently not much regard for the "absorptive capacity" of Palestine was held in giving these assurances. It was ensured through the authorization to the British passport control officer at Istanbul to grant visas that no Jew who succeeded in reaching the Turkish frontier would be turned back. This position was fully understood and accepted by the Jewish agency for Palestine. The British had to take steps to provide that Palestine immigration take place in a more orderly manner now that conditions in Europe have changed and the area of enemy action domination has shrunk. Immigration to Palestine at the present time is on a basis of a quota of 10,300 Jewish immigrants. This quota is to be filled as from October 1, 1944 at a rate not exceeding 1500 a month. The Jewish agency for Palestine has the initial choice of immigrants under this scheme. Consequently there must first be considered the admissibility of these refugees into Palestine under the present quota arrangements. However the British agree with the American authorities that the Swiss Government "who seem themselves to have taken the initiative on this point" should not be burdened any longer than is absolutely necessary with the presence of these refugees. best solution therefore would seem to be their removal from Switzerland to some other place where temporary housing and care can be given them. From further correspondence through military channels British understand that the War Refugee Board intends for the present to do this and that steps are already underway on the part of SHAEF, 44 AFHQ and UNRRA looking toward the removal of the whole group from Switzerland either to an UNRRA camp in Italy or to the UNRRA camp at Philippeville. It is very likely that some of these refugees will prove to be UNRRA's responsibility under resolution Nos. 57 and 60 of the Montreal Conference. 45 UNRRA is authorized by these resolutions to carry operations for the care and repatriation or return of persons "who have been obliged to leave their country or place of origin or former residence or who have been deported therefrom by action of the enemy because of their race, religion or activities in favor of the United Nations". So far as the British are concerned this arrangement consequently fully acceptable. The Foreign Office assumes that the Inter-Governmental Committee ⁴⁷ is being kept fully informed of developments by the War Refugee Board since the IGC has special responsibilities with respect to Hungarian Jews who escaped from enemy hands under arrangements made last summer in connection with the so-called Horthy offer. ⁴⁸

Our best information indicates that, while the enemy has abandoned wholesale extermination of detainees, large numbers of the physically unfit are now in imminent danger of death due to starvation, exposure and deliberate neglect. The actual numbers are unknown and are believed to be changing daily.

Food, medicines and clothing must be distributed to such detainees at once if their lives are to be saved. They should be removed, if possible, to safety in Switzerland without unnecessary delay.

The International Red Cross is our only means of direct contact with the camps. Operations can best be conducted from Switzerland.

The War Refugee Board is requested to authorize its representative to obtain the necessary cooperation of the International Red Cross and the Swiss Government.

The War Refugee Board is further requested to approve that the necessary food, medicines and transportation equipment be made available to the International Red Cross by the Swiss Government against our promise of repayment or replenishment after the war. You will note that the program approved envisages (1) furnishing food and other relief through the International Red Cross to physically unfit unassimilated detainees who are within enemy-controlled territory, and (2) their removal by the International Red Cross to safety in Switzerland as soon as possible.

The Executive Director of the Board plans to go to Switzerland in the near future in connection with the foregoing program. In the meantime, you are requested to do the following immediately.

- 1. Explore the availability in Switzerland of food and other relief supplies as well as transportation equipment. Please advise the Board and Department at once whether relief trucks are permitted to move from Switzerland to German-controlled areas and return to Switzerland for reloading of supplies;
- 2. Approach Intercross with a view to obtaining their consent to deliver the relief supplies in enemy territory and to organize and effectuate the removal of detainees to Switzerland;
- 3. If Currie Mission concurs please approach the Swiss Government for the purpose of obtaining its consent (a) to make available to Intercross now the necessary supplies and equipment for the foregoing relief and evacuation program and (b) to admit all detainees who reach Swiss borders and house and maintain them under guard until we are able to arrange for their evacuation to Allied territory. You may assure the Swiss that this Government will arrange for the replenishment from the outside of all supplies made available by the Swiss for this purpose and compensation for use of equipment.

1481. For Department from WRB and McClelland. Department's 819, February 23 and Legation's 1345, March 2.53 Conversation with Burckhardt of ICRC on March 6 revealed that Himmler has now signified his willingness to meet with Burckhardt on March 10, 11 or 12. Burckhardt accompanied by his personal secretary, Bachmann, will therefore definitely leave for Germany on March 8 or 9. Conversations will be exclusively with SS, principally Himmler and Kaltenbrunner.54 Intermediary who extended SS invitation stated that he had been instructed to inform Burckhardt that "the Führer's health permitting" Hitler himself might be present at part of discussions.

Burckhardt plans to take up whole question of relief to prisoners of war and to all categories of "Schutzhaeftlinge" irrespective of nationality, race or religion. The release and removal of physically unfit particularly raised.

In this connection ICRC was officially informed on March 3, by German Government that latter now agreed to exit from Germany of elderly persons, women and children who were unsuited as labor, of "Nordic" extraction or nationalities and of French nationality. Among French it is not clear whether Nazis include Jews. Burckhardt promised me that he will attempt to obtain release of Jews as well within any national group if, for unclarified reasons, Germans wish to limit evacuees to certain nationalities.

According to plan reported our 1345, 25 trucks with fuel and POW parcels left Switzerland March 7 for Germany. Germans OKW 55 has now granted permission for entry as many trucks as ICRC desires for POW relief. It is not clear whether this authorization includes trucks carrying relief to Schutzhaeftlinge. Burckhardt will endeavor secure favorable decision on this point.

Number of trucks now potentially available to ICRC in Switzerland very inadequate to any extraordinary relief program for POWs, not to speak of Schutzhaeftlinge, and would be also insufficient if Nazis agree to permit removal from Germany of any considerable number of Schutzhaeftlinge. In all ICRC has 48 United States trucks of from 7 to 8 tons capacity and 50 Canadian trucks of only 3 tons.

It is my understanding that SHAEF has now agreed to supply fuel but only for transport relief to POWs and not for unassimilated groups. You might wish to take this question up with War Department.

It is not impossible that we may suddenly be confronted with a major technical and transport problem if, following Burckhardt's negotiations, Germans agree to release a large number of Schutzhaeftlinge who might conceivably run to several tens of thousands. It is most unlikely under present conditions Germans will be able or willing transport such evacuees to Swiss border or Swiss to send railway trains to Germany to get them.

I am working on problem transport our 60,000 WRB parcels to unassimilated groups in Germany through private Swiss trucking concerns and ICRC Division of Special Assistance. There is slight possibility of obtaining 5 to 8 wood-burning trucks if tires can be supplied from outside or at very least guarantee of their replacement within a short and precise time limit. One must estimate average 10 heavy duty tires and 2 spares per truck.

Regarding entry of new and larger groups of refugees, von Steiger, President of Confederation, assured ICRC that in principle Switzerland would admit such groups to the limit of its possibilities. [WRB and McClelland.]

- 1. The Board regards as most urgent that all possible steps be taken at once for the delivery of War Refugee Board food parcels to intended beneficiaries in enemy territory. Accordingly, you are hereby authorized to procure the necessary transportation, including trucking facilities, gasoline, tires, oil, etc., from any source to be made available to the International Red Cross for (a) the delivery of War Refugee Board food packages and (b) for the evacuation of physically unfit detainees from enemy territory to Switzerland. The Board urges haste in this program.
- 2. The War Department today has cabled General Eisenhower ⁵⁷ recommending the release of 50 tons of trucking capacity with 1500 to 2000 gallons of gasoline per week and necessary lubricating oil for delivery to the International Red Cross in Switzerland earmarked for War Refugee Board operations. G-4 at Paris has been instructed by the War Department to expect your arrival in Paris and you are hereby directed to proceed to Paris at once to work out necessary details.
- 3. You should, of course, continue to make every effort to obtain transportation equipment from other sources including Swiss Government and private sources in Switzerland, since ultimate transportation needs may require more than 50 tons of trucking capacity.

For your information, the Swiss Minister in Washington ⁵⁸ has advised me that he has recommended to his government that adequate trucking facilities be released by the Swiss for this urgent War Refugee Board work.

Use your best judgment in handling complications which may arise. Please keep Board advised of all developments. [O'Dwyer.]

The Minister in Sweden (Johnson) to the Secretary of State

Sтоскноім, March 28, 1945—8 р. т. [Received March 29—9:12 a. т.]

1186. As reported in our 876 of March 7, noon to Department ⁵⁹ (No. 129 for War Refugee Board) Felix Kersten went to Berlin in early March to render certain medical attention to Himmler. ⁶⁰ Prior to his departure certain individuals here provided him with the memorandum of questions to be raised concerning the status of Jews in Germany. These questions included the following points:

(a) Assurances that food packages to Jews in German concentration camps were actually reaching destination;

(b) Permission to have future distribution of food packages from

Sweden to be supervised by Swedish Red Cross:

(c) Number of Jews recently in Germany, broken down by number and location of each camp and data as to the nationality of such Jews:

(d) Question of eight various categories of Jews, such as those with South American passports (presently under negotiation by Swedish Government) ;

(e) General question of freeing larger groups of Jews against appropriate guarantees of transportation and support.

Kersten has not [now?] returned to Stockholm and has presented a rather incredible account of his discussions with Himmler which are presented below without comment.

He stated that at present there are about 350,000 Jews in Germany. He added that 8,000 of them have Palestine visas and probably would be released if Swedish Government took appropriate steps in the matter. He states that Himmler expressed a most sympathetic interest in Jewish problems, mentioning specifically the following:

(a) Himmler was especially interested to know that the 2,700 Jews arrived in Switzerland and whether this group had commented favorably upon the delivery of food packages;

(b) Himmler was receptive to the idea of placing Jews in specially arranged Red Cross camps with the administration completely under the jurisdiction of the Red Cross;

(c) Himmler called a meeting of all Jewish camp administrators for March 24 in order to give strict orders for the improved treatment of Jews hereafter. This will include the instruction that each camp leader hereafter will be held strictly accountable for the death of any Jew in his camp and will be required to file a full report of circumstances underlying any such death. Kersten added that, in his presence, Himmler dictated certain orders concerning the necessity of improved sanitary conditions in Jewish concentration camps;

(d) Himmler expressed a willingness to receive at once a special emissary from Sweden to discuss with him personally the Jewish problem. This was advanced with particular reference to a stateless Jew of Latvian origin (Storch, local representative of World Jewish Congress) who has been Legation's intermediary in several contacts of similar nature; and

(e) Emphasis was placed on the unfortunate results in case these discussions were used by the Allies as propaganda to portray German weakness. It was added that because of the delicate nature of the discussions as well as rather well-known mixed feelings in Germany with respect to Jews, the entire matter most urgently must be handled with the greatest discretion.

Kersten has made available two extraordinary documents. The first, on official SS stationery and purportedly signed by Himmler, reads as follows in translation:

"Dear Mr. Kersten, First of all please accept with these lines my thanks for your visit. This time, as always, I have been glad when you came and with old friendship placed your great medical skill at my disposal.

During the long years of our acquaintanceship we have indeed discussed many problems and your attitude was always that of the physician who, remote from all politics, desires the good of the individual human being and of humanity as a whole.

You will be interested to know that during the course of the past 3 months I have brought about the realization of an idea which we once discussed. Roughly 2,700 Jewish men, women and children were taken to Switzerland in two trains. This is in effect the continuation of the policy which my collaborators and I have consistently pursued for many years until the war and the resulting folly in the world made it impossible to carry it out. You know, of course, that I in the years 1936, '37, '38, '39, and '40, in collaboration with Jewish American associations, created an emigration organization which functioned very fruitfully. The two trains which traveled into Switzerland are the intentional resumption, despite all difficulties, of this fruitful procedure.

From a prisoners camp at Bergen Belsen there recently came the rumor that a typhus epidemic of larger proportions had broken out. I immediately sent the hygienist of the SR[SS], Dr. Mrugrowski, there with his staff. It was a question of cases in the camp of spotted typhus which unfortunately occurs very frequently among people from the East, but the cases are to be regarded as under control, thanks to the best medical and modern methods.

I have the conviction that, by eliminating demagogism and superficialities, despite all differences and in spite of most bloody wounds on all sides, wisdom and logic must prevail and at the same time the human heart and the spirit of helpfulness.

It goes without saying that, just as I have done throughout all the past years in good times and bad, I shall gladly examine requests which you transmit or communicate to me in the humanitarian sphere and, whenever it is at all possible, shall decide them generously.

With my hearty greetings to your respected dear wife, to your children and especially to you, with old attachment, your (signed) H.

Himmler."

The second, also on SS Headquarters stationery and signed by Himmler's adjutant, R. Brandt, reads in part (in translation) as follows:

"Worthy and Dear Mr. Kersten, I can give you the very welcome news that the Reichsführer-SS intends to fulfill the requests which you expressed a few days ago."

I am forwarding photostatic copies of the documents in question under secret despatch.⁶¹ The question of continuing indirect contacts of this nature is one regarding which I, as heretofore, would appreciate urgent instructions from the Department and War Refugee Board since Olsen and I are in agreement that such discussions are not without danger. In the past the principal merit of these discussions has been the time-gaining factor but the tempo of the war as well as the level to which this approach has reached suggest strongly that a basic policy and appropriate instructions are now most urgent. There is also the question of whether Storch should be permitted to go to Berlin. We are of the opinion based on our personal knowledge of Storch's capabilities that it would be most unwise for him to go unless accompanied by a top-flight neutral thoroughly conversant with these problems who could dominate the discussions. This is apart from the over-all question of whether any such discussions should be held at all.

Department and Board approve the continuation of discussions designed solely to save the lives of Jews and other victims of enemy oppression by means of relief supplies or evacuation to safety. However, such discussions should be severed immediately if, in the opinion of Minister Johnson, they become political in nature.

Board and Department leave entirely to discretion of Minister Johnson the question of continuing the indirect contacts already made and the question of Storch's going to Berlin.

formation and proposals: On April 3 or 4 Himmler, Schellenberg ⁶³ and another SS General named Gehring (whom Musy described as "head of German concentration camp system") were called to a meeting by Hitler who had learned of SS negotiations to release certain categories of "Schutzhaeftlinge". Hitler was opposed to any such release particularly that of Jews.

Preparations were accordingly begun to evacuate fifteen major concentration camps on foot toward Nazi "Reduit" in south.

Nevertheless Himmler and Schellenberg declared themselves willing to preserve status quo in these camps and prevent evacuation on condition that they receive assurance from American and British that all SS guards and administrative personnel found in such camps when American or British forces arrive will be treated as soldiers and prisoners of war. This condition was motivated by fear that all such SS guards would be immediately shot.

I told Musy that to best of my knowledge it is not practice of American or British Armies to shoot anyone in uniform of unit regularly incorporated in German armed forces who properly surrendered without resisting.

I requested Musy to provide information as soon as possible as to the exact geographic location of these fifteen camps.

Musy declared that he must have an answer by 7 p. m. April 11 at latest if evacuation these camps is to be avoided.

In the light of earlier proposals made by the Nazis it is difficult to understand the present which is apparently of such small advantage to them.

Please inform me of what action if any you wish me to take. [McClelland.]

CONCERN OF THE UNITED STATES OVER PROBLEMS INVOLVING DISPLACED AND STATELESS PERSONS AND REFUGEES 1

840.48 Refugees/1-245

Memorandum by the Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] January 2, 1945.

The Department's authority to act in matters initiated by the War Refugee Board 2 and the disposition of the Department to continue activities of the Board which have created difficulties with the British blockade authorities, censorship and neutral countries are considerations pertinent to a decision by the Department to assume the functions of the Board.

The Board's activities in extending relief to refugees in occupied areas through credit operations administered by private agencies or through the expenditure of hard currency were conducted under licenses issued by the Treasury. Should the Department desire to continue such operations licenses would have to be secured from the Treasury. British objections to these operations were based on the contention that they were properly a part of blockade controls. Fear was expressed that they might be extended to the point of risk of assistance to the enemy. The British requested that each license be issued after joint approval by the two governments. This the Board refused on the grounds that agreement seemed unlikely and that immediate action in the issuance of licenses was required. The Board noted that the British Government had not issued any licenses on its own account for such relief purposes. The British Government offered no objections to credit operations for relief in occupied areas, in fact approved identical operations by the Intergovernmental Committee.3

¹ For previous documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 981 ff. ² Special governmental agency established by President Roosevelt on January 22, 1944, by Executive Order 9417, which stated: "It is the policy of this Government to take all measures within its power to rescue the victims of enemy oppression who are in imminent danger of death and otherwise to afford such victims all possible relief and assistance consistent with the successful prosecution of the war." For text of this Executive Order, see 9 Federal Register 935; see also Department of State Bulletin, January 22, 1944, p. 95.

The Intergovernmental Committee on Political Refugees (IGC) was established

The Board also secured exemptions from the Treasury for its own representatives and those of private agencies from the restricting provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act.4 These exemptions enabled these representatives to communicate with enemy territory in rescue and relief activities. In connection with these activities the Board transmitted and received messages through the Department that were not subject to censorship. Messages addressed by and to private agencies through the Board were submitted by the Department to censorship before transmission or delivery. Certain private messages were suppressed by censorship. The Board notified Censorship that these messages by license of the Treasury were exempted under the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act. The authority to exempt was never accepted by Censorship and the point was never satisfactorily determined by conference between Censorship and the Board.

The difficulties with neutral countries, particularly Switzerland, grew out of the Board's methods of presentation of rescue projects. Vigorous language was frequently used and the Board felt strongly that rescue measures to succeed required the laying aside of accepted methods of approach to neutral governments. In the Board's opinion the objective sought justified the unusual measures adopted.

Should the Department decide to carry on the functions of the Board it would do so within the limits of its authority and on the basis of its own developed experience.

The Board has made certain commitments to neutral governments to remove refugees accepted on their territories during the war. These commitments are difficult to appraise. It can however be said that such commitments to Turkey, Spain, Portugal and Sweden have been fulfilled and will not require action by the Department in the future. The commitments to Switzerland have to do with the removal of some two hundred children after the war and of 1,700 Hungarian Jewish refugees received recently by Switzerland. Arrangements are now in process to secure their admission to the UNRRA camp at Philippeville, Algiers. Beyond these specific groups Switzerland may justifiably expect assistance from this government in reducing her present refugee population after the war.

In 1944 the War Refugee Board allotted $2,000,000 to the Intergovernmental Committee for operational purposes. The Committee has requested $4,000,000 for 1945. The Board feels that this request is inadequate to meet the needs that will have to be faced.

840.48 Ref/1-3145

The Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren) to the Second Secretary of the British Embassy (Russell)

Washington, February 13, 1945.

My Dear John: As I promised you when you called with Mr. Everson 5 on February 1, further consideration has been given to your letter of January 18 and your memorandum of January 31 6 on "Jewish Refugees from the Balkan States".

You will recall that at our meeting on January 5, 1945 at which we discussed your letter to me of December 27 on the same subject, the conclusion was reached that it would not be feasible for the United States Government to support the request of the British Government to UNRRA that refugees reaching the Near East from the Balkan States in excess of current Palestine quotas be admitted to the camp at Philippeville in Algiers. Your letter of January 18 refers to the arrival of six hundred odd refugees at the Turkish border about December 20, who were later admitted to Palestine, and your memorandum of January 31 cites the number of refugees, particularly in Rumania, who may desire to leave that country.

This additional information does not appear to justify a change in the conclusion reached at our January 5 conference. To review the considerations on which that conclusion was based:

1. Refugees in Rumania are now in liberated territory and no longer in danger of their lives.

2. Your memorandum of January 31 states that over 100,000

Rumanian Jews have registered for immigration to Palestine.

3. UNRRA resolutions provide that UNRRA may care for and repatriate those of any nationality or the stateless who have been persecuted by the enemy.

4. The refugees in question desiring to emigrate to Palestine for permanent settlement do not appear in consequence to qualify for UNRRA care at Philippeville.

5. The anticipated movement of refugees in excess of Palestine quotas on which the proposal is based seems unlikely in view of the controls on movement and shipping now in effect in Rumania, Bulgaria and Turkey.

6. In efforts to relieve the needs of Jewish refugees in Rumania, the United States Government has agreed that the Rumanian Government should be requested by the Allied Control Commission to expand activities of relief and rehabilitation on behalf of Jewish refugees.

I shall be glad to review this matter with you again at any time if later developments suggest the need of further discussion.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE L. WARREN

The Second Secretary of the British Embassy (Everson) to the Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren)

Washington, February 19, 1945.

DEAR MR. WARREN: I write to confirm our talk on the subject of U.N.R.R.A. taking over the responsibility for dealing with Italian displaced persons found in Germany.

An approach on this subject was made to His Majesty's Ambassador in Rome ⁸ by the Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs. ⁹ The present situation, resulting from various council resolutions bearing on the matter, is that U.N.R.R.A. is authorized, within certain limitations, to deal with Italians displaced inside Italy, but not with those found in enemy territory. U.N.R.R.A. will be dealing with vast numbers of displaced persons in Germany and it may be very inconvenient to the Allied military authorities if U.N.R.R.A. are not allowed to take the Italians in their stride. As it is possible that Italian workers may be found in western portions of Germany which are now being invaded by Allied forces, a decision on this question must be taken in the near future.

We foresee that the suggestion may meet with certain objections. Public opinion in England is strongly against the Italians receiving treatment as good as that accorded to Allied nationals or neutrals and we may well suppose that the attitude of the Governments and people of France, Yugoslavia, and Greece may be even more adverse. These Governments and His Majesty's Government might be subjected to particularly violent criticism if it turned out that U.N.R.R.A. was dealing with large numbers of enemy or ex-enemy nationals and it is therefore not proposed to invoke this proposal, if adopted, as a precedent for allowing U.N.R.R.A. to deal with other displaced enemy nationals than those dealt with in Montreal Resolutions Nos. 47, 57 and 60.10

The Foreign Office asks for your views on the subject. If you agree with the proposal they suggest raising it first in the European Technical Sub-committee on Displaced Persons. Of course a final resolution on the subject can only come from the Council or Central Committee but perhaps progress would be somewhat speeded up if the Sub-committee were seized of the problem in advance of a meeting of the superior organs of U.N.R.R.A.

I should be glad to have your views on the whole problem.
Yours sincerely,

F. C. Everson

The Second Secretary of the British Embassy (Everson) to the Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren)

Washington, February 20, 1945.

DEAR MR. WARREN: Russell has passed to me your letter of February 13th about Jewish Refugees from the Balkan States.

I have just received a telegram from the Foreign Office who say that in deference to the State Department's objections, they are prepared to drop their proposal that U.N.R.R.A. should take care of these unfortunate people. The Foreign Office have, however, no alternative solution to offer in the event of further batches of these refugees reaching the Turkish frontier without visas for some destination. As you know the quota of immigrants into Palestine is rigidly fixed; ¹¹ immigration into Palestine can therefore make no contribution to the solution of this particular problem.

It is very much to be hoped that your Government's representations to the Roumanian Government through the Allied Control Commission will have some effect though I personally doubt whether the Roumanian Government has either much desire or the resources to assist these refugees, most of whom are from other countries.

Yours sincerely,

1933. ReEmbs 1820 of February 22.12

1. The French refusal to sign the multilateral agreement has seriously disturbed UNRRA not so much because of the importance of the provisions of the agreement to which UNRRA believes the French have no objection as because of the significance of the signing of this pact by seven nations as a real step toward international cooperation.

¹¹ A British White Paper of 1939 established a quota of 75,000 for Jewish immigration into Palestine during the following 5 years, after which time there was to be no further Jewish immigration without Arab acquiescence; British Cmd. 6019: Palestine, Statement of Policy. For United States interest in this British policy, see Foreign Relations, 1939, vol. IV, pp. 732–810.

¹² Not printed; reference is to the signing of an UNRRA multilateral agree-

[&]quot;Not printed; reference is to the signing of an UNRRA multilateral agreement on repatriation of displaced persons scheduled for February 20. At the last minute the French refused to participate, desiring to negotiate a bilateral agreement with the Soviet Union along lines of those between the Soviet Union and the United States and Great Britain. The French believed that their signature on a multilateral document, which would also include that of the Polish Government in London, would prejudice the conclusion of a bilateral arrangement. (840.50 UNRRA/2-2245)

UNRRA hopes that some means to enable France to sign without offending the Russians can be found.

- 2. A French-Russian agreement would not substantially change UNRRA's role as defined at present in regard to displaced persons; nor would it affect, in UNRRA's opinion, French willingness to sign the multilateral agreement were it not for the Polish issue. Scott, director of displaced persons here, is not therefore particularly disturbed at the prospect of this one agreement.
- 3. It would not be serious from UNRRA's point of view even if the French approached the US and UK to make arrangements for the French to handle French displaced persons in the French Zone.
- 4. However the French may approach the US and UK to obtain agreements in respect of their zones similar to the agreement with the USSR. This would seriously undermine UNRRA's position because (1) other countries would request similar treatment leaving UNRRA to deal only with stateless persons and perhaps Poles and (2) because French personnel are needed in UNRRA to enable it to handle the displaced persons problem in Germany.
- 5. The French case for obtaining similar agreements from the US and UK may be strong but the conclusion of such agreements would destroy the advantages of unified handling of the difficult displaced persons problem which the use of UNRRA for this purpose would provide. A great waste of personnel and considerable difficulties in relation to standards of treatment would result. For example, if all displaced persons in the US zone were covered by bilateral agreements with the US granting them insofar as possible rations equivalent to those of a US private a tremendous supply problem would be created and in addition only moderately active individuals would receive very heavy workers rations.
- 6. If the developments outlined above should take place the result would be a complete reversal of the position taken by the United Nations at Atlantic City that these problems should be handled jointly by the United Nations.

840.50 UNRRA/2-1945

The Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren) to the Second Secretary of the British Embassy (Everson)

Washington, March 10, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Everson: I have received your letter of February 19 with reference to our earlier discussion on the possibility of securing action by the Council of UNRRA authorizing the Administration to care for and assist in the repatriation of Italian nationals found in enemy or ex-enemy areas. This proposal is consistent with the general attitude of this Government with respect to the treatment of Italian prisoners of war and displaced persons and I have no doubt that it will meet with the support of the representative of this Government on the Council of UNRRA at its next meeting.

You suggest that in the event of agreement on the proposal in principle the subject be raised in the first instance in the European Technical Sub-committee on Displaced Persons. After full consideration of this suggestion in the Department I find that there is unanimous opinion here that the proposal is one of important policy which should properly be introduced in the first instance at the next meeting of the Council rather than in the Sub-committee for Europe or in the European Technical Sub-committee on Displaced Persons. As you state, action by the Council of UNRRA will be necessary in any event and as a meeting of the Council is already under discussion nothing will be gained in time in presenting the matter to the Sub-committee for Europe. The Council will of course decide at its meeting which committee of the Council should consider the matter in advance of consideration by the Council itself. It is quite possible that the Council will consider the proposal of such importance that it should be dealt with by the Committee on Policy of the Council in the first instance.

Sincerely yours,

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, March 16, 1945—5 p. m. [Received 8:15 p. m.]

The undertaking given by the American and British Governments at the Bermuda meeting ¹³ to underwrite jointly IGC operational expenditure was a temporary measure designed to get relief under way.

¹⁸ In April, 1943, the British and United States Governments held a conference in Bermuda to examine all possible methods of relieving the distress of those in Europe who were victims of Nazi aggression. For a joint communiqué issued by the participating delegations to the conference, see Department of State Bulletin, May 1, 1943, p. 388; for a report of the meeting, see ibid., May 22, 1943, p. 456; for documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, pp. 134 ff.

It should not become a permanent measure nor should it be considered as such. Although IGC requested voluntary contributions last year none was forthcoming except certain contributions in kind, e.g. French permission for some refugees in France to engage in gainful employment. IGC operational expenditure has increased considerably this year with the liberation of Europe and British authorities envisage the possibility that annual operational expenditure may become many times greater in the future because of undertakings such as resettlement. This may eventually require the reorganization of the IGC on a broader basis with respect to source of funds for operational expenditure. The situation today is inequitable and will become worse. This the British cannot afford in view of their exchange (Mason intimated that it might be difficult to increase the British share of pounds 2 million for this year.) While Foreign Office believes that little may be obtained from pressing for voluntary contributions this year, such action will put other governments on notice that some change may be necessary and that matters cannot slide along on the basis that the American and British Governments will continue to bear the entire operational expenditure.

Mason wished to make it clear that the British Government is not trying to avoid any obligation undertaken by it and that it is keenly interested in maintaining the IGC in its effective operation.

Foreign Office hopes that the Department will agree to approach the IGC with a view to pressing for voluntary contributions. Foreign Office has requested Embassy to learn Department's views. Please instruct.

The Polish Embassy to the Department of State

General Dwight D. Eisenhower, Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Forces, has given the order that all Poles found in the theatre of operations should be concentrated East of the Rhine.

This measure is undoubtedly taken in view of the future repatriation of these Polish nationals directly to Poland. In normal circumstances it would be fully justified and welcome. However, the following considerations should be taken into account:

1) In accordance with the plans of SHAEF ¹⁶ the foreseen repatriation of the Polish civilian population is to take place after the repatriation of the French, Belgian and other populations. This plan is dictated by existing conditions and raises no objections.

2) Post-war conditions of transport in Germany will necessarily prevent repatriation of people from Germany eastwards, at least for several months.

3) Consequently, the Polish population would have to remain inactive in camps in Germany over an indefinite period of time, which cannot fail adversely to affect its morale, especially after all that this population has gone through during its forced stay in Germany. It will likewise place an additional burden on the Allied Military Command as regards supplies.

4) All the Polish people deported by the Germans from Poland should have the right to declare whether or not they want to be repatriated at once. In the existing conditions in Poland it is probable that a considerable percentage of Poles at present in Germany will not wish to be repatriated at once and therefore will not fit into the plan of SHAEF for the repatriation of Polish people.

The above considerations point to the necessity of asking General Eisenhower to modify his decision so as to allow a considerable number of Poles to go West of the Rhine, in order to take up work in various branches of production also in Western Allied countries.

At this stage of the war the enormous problem of German war prisoners and that of civilian populations deported by the Germans from their countries to Germany, makes it all the more necessary to take all possible measures in order to assist the Allied Military Command in handling these problems of unprecedented magnitude. Owing to the considerable number of Poles in Germany and to their specific situation, the problem of this Polish population requires special handling. Placing the Polish population in camps together with Soviet citizens may lead to regrettable incidents and disorder. On the other hand, it is characteristic of the Polish population that it is clamoring to be allowed to work for the common Allied cause. It would undoubtedly serve the Allied cause to take full advantage of this tendency. It may be of considerable importance in contributing to the production of food and other supplies and substantially facilitate the task of the United States, Great Britain and France. The moral aspect of the problem is likewise of considerable importance and cannot be overlooked.

The Polish Government has placed its most competent officers at the disposal of SHAEF in order to facilitate the solution of these problems.

It would be most desirable that all measures contemplated relating to the Poles at present in Germany be discussed with the Polish Government authorities. It would be very helpful for all concerned if Colonel Jan Kaczmarek, appointed head liaison officer to SHAEF and generally recognized as the most competent expert in these matters, should now be called to SHAEF without delay.

The Estonian Acting Consul General in Charge of the Legation (Kaiv) to the Secretary of State

No. 27

New York, April 10, 1945.

Sir: During the occupation of Estonia by German forces many Estonian nationals were forced by devious means into the German army or labor services.

In addition to these a considerable number of civilians were transferred to Germany before the reoccupation of Estonia by the USSR last autumn. The total number of Estonian nationals at present in Germany is estimated at roughly 100,000, and they are believed to be widely dispersed all over Germany, including such parts of German territory which are already or may shortly come under the military control of the Western Democracies.

I consider it my duty to bring these circumstances to the notice of the Government of the United States of America, and to solicit its kind protection for these Estonian nationals whenever required.

In particular, I have the honor to appeal to the United States' Government to prevent, while the Soviet occupation of Estonia lasts, the repatriation against his or her wish of any Estonian citizen found in the territory where American military control has been or will be established. I also respectfully request that no such an Estonian be turned over to the Soviet army or placed under the jurisdiction of any other Soviet authorities. Estonia is at present under the complete political and military control of the USSR and there is no national or international authority capable of averting possible political persecution of Estonian citizens.

The Adviser, War Areas Economic Division (Gilpatric), and the Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson)

[Washington,] April 17, 1945.

- 1. At the Anglo-American Conference on Refugees in Bermuda in April 1943, the British and United States Governments agreed that operational expenses of the IGC would be jointly underwritten until such time as the needs of refugees in Europe could be clarified and a master budget submitted to all the member governments for contributions. The British Government has already agreed to contribute $4,010,000 at this time.
- 2. Stateless and non-repatriable persons were clearly established as the responsibility of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees by the action of the member governments thereof, before the organization of UNRRA. Consequently in adopting its basic resolutions at Atlantic City, UNRRA assumed the functions of caring for and repatriating those who can be repatriated. Anticipating a situation however in post-war Europe in which UNRRA might find non-repatriables in desperate need in the areas served, it was provided that UNRRA might care for non-repatriables for a temporary period until the IGC could assume its recognized responsibility for them.
- 3. Under UNRRA resolutions the Administration can only assist the so-called non-paying governments which request its assistance. It is the adopted policy of this government to support this policy of UNRRA as established by the resolutions in view of the limited funds available to UNRRA in comparison with the vast needs which must be met. The United States Government cannot request the western European Governments to ask UNRRA assistance. To do so would constitute a reversal of the foregoing policy and would have the effect of relieving this Government of an obligation assumed jointly with the British Government prior to the organization of UNRRA.
- 4. Most of the non-repatriables are now in the territories of the western European Governments, the paying governments, and will later be found in Germany. The paying governments have not requested UNRRA to provide assistance within their territories. They have requested UNRRA to assist the military authorities in the repatriation of their nationals and former residents from Germany.
- 5. Since UNRRA will conduct no substantial operations in western Europe and since there is need for assistance to stateless persons in this area, it seems essential that the IGC be given funds promptly to begin to assist such persons as fall within its mandate. This plan is administratively practicable and the IGC would from the beginning concern itself with non-repatriables until their resettlement.

- 6. In the EAC ¹⁷ directive on displaced persons, approved by the State, War and Navy Departments, ¹⁸ it is provided that the EAC shall determine the manner in which both UNRRA and the IGC are to assist the occupying powers in caring for all categories of displaced persons in Germany. SHAEF has already invited the IGC to provide a Liaison Officer at SHAEF headquarters to plan the implementation of its responsibilities during the period of hostilities.
 - 7. Your approval of the foregoing argument is requested.¹⁹

The Italian Embassy to the Department of State

MEMORANDUM

Since the beginning of 1944 the Italian Government, for reasons of humanity and justice, has repeatedly recommended to the Allied Commission the return to Lybia of Italian refugees who are living in Italy under distressing conditions, separated from their families and their possessions. They number about 12.000 persons; among them are children whose parents live in Lybia and who were sent to the summer colonies of Rimini, Riccione and Cattolica. When these places, at present occupied by the Allied forces, were endangered because of air attacks, they were removed elsewhere and are now living on public charity.

The Allied Commission realizing the humanitarian reasons which prompted the Italian request concerning the aforesaid people has given its consent, in principle, but has pointed out that in view of difficulties of transport and supplies "their return for the time being was to be limited to particular cases to be examined individually".

On the other hand, the Allied Commission has informed having already authorized the return to Lybia of a group of Greek and Maltese refugees who had previous residence there, and it has confirmed what was already known to the Italian Government, namely, that the summer colonies at Rimini, Riccione and Cattolica were in fact used by the Allied troops, after the removal of the children.

¹⁷ European Advisory Commission, set up by the Moscow Conference of the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union, United Kingdom, and United States (October 18-November 1, 1943) for the purpose of examining questions arising as the European war developed and to make joint recommendations to the three Governments; for documentation on U.S. participation in the European Advisory Commission, see vol. III, pp. 1 ff.

visory Commission, see vol. III, pp. 1 ff.

¹⁹ In a letter to the Bureau of the Budget, April 21, 1945, Mr. Acheson expressed his approval of the above outlined statements (840.48 Refugees/4-1745).

Recently, on March 15th, the Italian Ministry for Foreign Affairs has appealed to Admiral Stone ²⁰ asking that an end be put to the tragic situation of these refugees and of the children separated from their parents who have not at present any shelter whatsoever, by authorizing a collective repatriation.

This Embassy begs to draw the attention of the Department of State on this matter and will appreciate any action taken with regard thereto, so that Admiral Stone's plan will be carried out.²¹ In this connection the Embassy points out:

First: that the method of individual repatriation is more difficult to organize than the collective one;

Second: that the Italian High Commissioner for Refugees would be willing to examine jointly with the Allied Authorities the possibility of utilizing for the purpose some of the naval transport means at its disposal;

Third: the matter concerns, in the majority of the cases, Italian farmers or their relatives who have in Lybia means for their self-support and who contribute with their work to farm production for the benefit of the Lybian population.

2327. From Murphy. Reurtel 1729 of April 27, 7 p. m.²² Basic current policy governing treatment of displaced persons in Germany is contained in SHAEF administrative memorandum No. 39, revised April 16, 1945, sent to Department in Mission's restricted despatch No. 290 of April 25.²² Pertinent sections relative to Italian nationals are summarized or quoted below.

Paragraph 32 provides that enemy and ex-enemy nationals persecuted because of race, religion, or activities in favor of the United Nations will be accorded the same assistance granted to United Nations nationals after security screening. Non-German nationals in this category will be repatriated in the same manner as United Nations displaced persons and non-repatriables will be assimilated in status to stateless persons.

Paragraph 34 states that non-German nationals who have served or collaborated with the enemy will, prior to defeat or surrender, but [be] treated as displaced persons provided they are not held as prisoners of war or civilian detainees. After defeat or surrender, those discharged or released by the demobilizing authorities will be dealt with as displaced persons while stragglers, deserters, self-demobilized personnel, and those informally discharged from enemy military or para-military organizations will be detained and reported and later transferred to the appropriate Allied demobilization authority.

Paragraph 35 provides that "Nationals of Italy, Finland, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary fall into four categories and will be dealt with as follows: (a) those captured by the Allies while fighting under Axis command or collaborating with the enemy—are a responsibility of G-1; ²³ (b) those captured by the enemy while fighting under Allied command, and uncovered by Allied military forces—are a responsibility of G-1; (c) displaced persons—are a responsibility of DPX ²⁴ and will be treated as ex-enemy displaced persons except as in paragraph 32 above; (d) military internees, i.e. members of ex-enemy armed forces, disarmed and interned by the enemy when their Governments surrendered to the Allies—when found in organized camps, will initially be a responsibility of G-1 until their status as military internees has been determined. They will then be handed over to DPX and dealt with as ex-enemy displaced persons, except as in paragraph 32 above."

Responsibility of military commanders and of German authorities towards enemy and ex-enemy displaced persons and refugees as outlined in paragraph 37. Military commanders will supervise and direct German authorities in these matters and will (1) segregate enemy and ex-enemy displaced persons and refugees from United Nations displaced persons, (2) screen for security control, interning or otherwise curtailing those whose freedom of movement would be dangerous. (3) supervise German authorities in controlling these persons, making minimum provision to prevent unrest and the spread of disease, and in registration, and (4) arrange through DPX channels for repatriation when it is in the interest of military government. German authorities will provide as necessary for people in this category, providing and paying for all goods, facilities, and services required for them, set up assembly and reception centers as directed, disseminate standfast orders as instructed, and take all other necessary measures as directed by military commanders.

²⁴ Displaced Persons Executive.

SHAEF has been advised of assimilation of Italian nationals to status of United Nations nationals in pending EAC directive dealing with displaced persons, but states policy outlined above will perforce prevail until British concurrence in this proposed status is forthcoming. The above administrative memorandum was cleared with the British political officer 25 and myself but prior to receipt of information in Department's telegram under reference. [Murphy.]

Sir: I acknowledge the receipt of your note of April 10, 1945 (No. 27) asking the United States Government to prevent the repatriation against his or her wish of any Estonian citizen found in the territory where American military control has been or will be established and that no such an Estonian be turned over to the Soviet Army or placed under the jurisdiction of any other Soviet authorities.

With respect to the foregoing requests, it may be stated for the information of the Legation that in principle it is contrary to the policy of this Government to arrange for the involuntary repatriation of persons who, as a result of events in Europe have had to leave their countries of residence because of the danger to their lives or liberties on account of their race, religion or political beliefs.26

2492. From Murphy. G-5 27 SHAEF, proposes to instruct army groups and communications zone substantially as follows regarding movement of displaced persons:

²⁵ Alfred Duff Cooper, British Ambassador in France. ²⁶ Paragraph 33 of SHAEF Administrative Memorandum No. 39 (Revised April 16, 1945) provided that Estonians, Latvians, and Lithuanians who could not be or who did not desire to be repatriated were to be treated as assimilated United Nations displaced persons.

In a note dated July 6 in reply to a further Estonian note of June 22 regarding Estonians in German territory about to be evacuated by United States forces, the Department of State indicated that the policy of the United States "on this matter as outlined in the Department's note of May 5, 1945 continues in effect". (740.00119 Control (Germany)/6-2245)

Steps will be taken to transfer to Germany displaced persons other than Belgians, French, Dutch and Luxemburgers who were previously evacuated into Allied countries from Germany because of operational necessities.

Germans so evacuated will be returned to Germany preferably to the districts from which they were evacuated. Eastern European displaced persons will be moved as far eastward as military operations permit but, except for Soviet citizens, not into Russian zone of occupation now occupied by Allied forces.²⁸ Instruction mentions that United States and British Governments up to present time have not formally recognized any territorial changes resulting from the war. Instruction continues that Latvians, Estonians, Lithuanians, and Poles whose homes are east of 1939 line of demarcation ²⁹ or Curzon Line ³⁰ will not be repatriated to Soviet Union, returned to their district of former residence or transferred to Russian zone in Germany unless they claim Soviet citizenship affirmatively.

Instruction will state that special arrangements will be made for Polish laborers, particularly miners, who are to be sought by AEF ³¹ officials as voluntary labor for Belgian industry.

Above instruction is considered to answer request of French to General Eisenhower that central and eastern Europeans not be moved westward from Germany and Switzerland into France. [Murphy.]

The Polish Government in London has learned that, in the course of the final adjustment of zones of occupation of Germany, the Soviet forces are to occupy in the nearest future parts of Thuringia and some other territories along the River Elbe at the present time still held by American forces.

²⁸ On February 11, 1945, at Yalta, representatives of the United States and the Soviet Union concluded an Agreement Relating to Prisoners of War and Civilians Liberated by Forces Operating Under Soviet Command and Forces Operating Under United States Command; for text of agreement, see Forcign Relations, The Conferences at Malta and Yalta, 1945, p. 985. For an official American interpretation of that agreement and the basic statements of American policy on the repatriation of Soviet citizens, see the memoranda of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee of March 9 and December 21, 1945, vol. v, pp. 1075 and 1108, respectively. For additional documentation regarding the arrangements relative to the treatment and reciprocal repatriation of American and Soviet prisoners of war and interned civilians liberated by Allied forces, see ibid., pp. 1067 ff.

²¹ Allied Expeditionary Force.

According to approximate estimates there are in the said zone between 100,000 to 200,000 Polish citizens forcibly deported there from Poland by the Germans.

In view of the present situation in Poland under Soviet occupation, the overwhelming majority of this contingent of Polish citizens does not wish to be repatriated to Poland. If they were taken over by the Soviet forces they would undoubtedly be forcibly repatriated to Poland or even deported to Russia against their will.

Considering the danger to which these people would be exposed, the Ambassador has the honor to call the urgent attention of the competent U. S. Military Authorities to this matter and to request that these Polish citizens, at present in Thuringia and along the River Elbe, be transferred westwards to territories which will remain in the American zone of occupation, before the territories above mentioned are handed over to the Soviet forces.

I might add that, at the same time, I have had a personal telegram from Dick Law saying that he has discussed with Jackson 34 the question of UNRRA's relations with the military authorities about displaced persons in Germany. Jackson thinks it is essential that his hands should be strengthened by some statement by the United States and United Kingdom Governments that they regard it as a major interest of the two Governments that UNRRA should have the responsibility, under the ultimate control of the military authorities in Germany, for handling displaced persons in that part of the country within their mandate and that UNRRA should, therefore, receive the full support of and the facilities from the military which they will undoubtedly need. 2236. The presence of large numbers of Polish citizens, roughly estimated about one hundred thousand, in the area now occupied by the American armies in Germany is causing the Army authorities great concern. The question has arisen whether they should be returned to Poland or allowed to move through our lines in a westerly direction into our definitive zone of occupation and eventually further westward. Probably large numbers of them would prefer the latter course rather than to be left in the Russian area or sent back to Poland. The problem was discussed with Bidault in his conversations here ⁴² and he was asked whether the French could make any use of these Poles. It had been suggested that some of them at least might be of use on a voluntary basis in working the coal mines in the Saar which were now nearly at a standstill on account of lack of labor. Bidault did not express any definite views although he thought that some might be permitted to enter France.

Please endeavor to ascertain urgently whether the French Government would be prepared to accept a certain number of these Poles and how many might be permitted to enter French territory or the eventual French zone in Germany. You may wish to consult SHAEF in this connection.

The matter is of the utmost urgency as instructions are about to be sent to SHAEF regarding the movement of the United States armies.

I am somewhat in doubt as to exactly what Law has in mind since UNRRA at this stage can obviously not do as effective a job on displaced persons as SHAEF is performing, particularly with respect to repatriation of Western European nationals. Please deliver the following message from me to Law, and I would be glad to have any comments or recommendations which you may wish to make in connection with his response: ⁴⁵

"I have your message of May 15 which I received through the courtesy of Marris in the Embassy here. I share your concern at UNRRA's failure to provide on time a sufficient number of teams and equipment as requested by SHAEF for displaced persons work in Germany, and will impress upon UNRRA in Washington the importance of taking every possible step to correct this situation. We continue to recognize UNRRA as having responsibility for handling United Nations displaced persons in Germany, and believe that UNRRA should receive the full support and facilities of SHAEF in that connection. It seems to me, however, that SHAEF's present remarkable progress in repatriating Western European nationals could not be matched by any civilian organization, and that UNRRA's assumption of responsibility will be considerably facilitated if SHAEF succeeds in moving out large numbers of the immediate repatriable in the near future. I am also impressed by the shortage of military food stocks to feed displaced persons and hesitate to burden UNRRA with criticism in this connection for which it is not responsible.

5223. ReEmbs 4993, May 18.49 There was considerable discussion at the Paris meeting of the Displaced Persons Subcommittee of UNRRA about the desirability of UNRRA seeking to renegotiate its agreement with SHAEF in order to obtain a more independent position in the handling of displaced persons in Germany. In particular, the members of the subcommittee are concerned that UNRRA appears to them to have no voice in the formation and execution of policy but merely to furnish the military with field teams.

At a meeting of the committee Tues Rendel ⁵⁰ (UK) presented a resolution criticising UNRRA for not playing a more important part in handling the displaced persons problem and calling for a new agreement with the military authorities enabling UNRRA to fulfill more adequately "the true purposes contemplated in the UNRRA agreement and the subsequent resolutions of the UNRRA Council." This resolution will be discussed at a meeting on Fri May 25.

Whether UNRRA should seek to obtain a new agreement with SHAEF or with the appropriate military authorities succeeding SHAEF is largely dependent in our opinion on (a) how long it will take to complete the repatriation of the bulk of the Allied displaced persons in western Germany with whom UNRRA is concerned; and (b) whether UNRRA is to play a significant role in the maintenance or resettlement of the remaining non-repatriable displaced persons.

In regard to (a) the best evidence we have is that the job will be done within 4 to 5 months at the outside and probably sooner. If this is the case, it may not be desirable for UNRRA to seek a new agreement since new arrangements under such an agreement could not become effective before the need for UNRRA's services in handling the repatriation problem disappeared. It may nonetheless be desirable for UNRRA to seek a closer relationship with SHAEF or its successors in the formation and execution of repatriation policy under paragraph (a) of the existing agreement and to work out a more detailed future program. It is not true, as is stated in the resolution, that UNRRA has played no part other than recruiting of field teams for the military. Our information is that a close collaboration has existed in the formation and execution of policy and we will ask at the meeting of the subcommittee for a report from UNRRA.

If, however, UNRRA is to deal with the non-repatriables, even if only to maintain them for a significant period of time after the mass repatriation period is ended, a new status for UNRRA in relation to the occupying authorities becomes necessary. The UK resolution calls for a clarification of the "ultimate and wider aims to which UNRRA's efforts should be directed". This in effect means how far will UNRRA deal with ex-enemy nationals, with stateless persons and other non-repatriables. It is true that a more precise definition of UNRRA's functions in this respect is required.

The resettlement of displaced persons for whom repatriation is not possible can be handled (1) entirely by giving the necessary authority to the displaced persons section of UNRRA suitably financed and probably continuing in a modified form after UNRRA itself goes out of existence or (2) by the Inter-Governmental Committee appropriately organized and financed or by a new international agency; or (3) by UNRRA in collaboration with the Inter-Governmental Committee or whatever long term resettlement agency is set up. This question should probably come up at the Council meeting in July but it is doubtful whether consideration of the question of revising the agreement with SHAEF or its successors should be delayed until that time if (1) or (3) (which is the arrangement at present) is ultimately adopted.

These alternatives require careful analysis—each has serious disadvantages—but it is desirable that the present uncertainty be resolved as soon as possible. We will propose that the matter should be brought to the attention of the CCE 51 and of the several Govts.

It is difficult to determine what Rendel has in mind regarding the "true purposes contemplated" in the UNRRA agreement and subsequently by the Council but it is clear that the situation today is different from the situation envisaged at Atlantic City in three important respects: (1) the military have taken over the responsibility for repatriation; (2) repatriation is proceeding at an extremely rapid rate; (3) UNRRA is not to work in eastern Germany. UNRRA has not in fact played the role contemplated at Atlantic City and it is useless now to argue whether it would have been possible or wise in the light of the recent events in Germany to have given it that role.

The Govt representatives on the displaced persons committee could be most useful now if they would point out specific problems that have come to their attention which UNRRA should explain to them or take up with the military. The vague generalities about lack of coordination of voluntary societies, of teams, and of SHAEF personnel; the general allegations that personnel are of poor quality and that camps are badly run are not particularly useful, especially since VE-Day ⁵² was only two weeks ago. We will press that representatives for their part take up specific grievances with UNRRA and that UNRRA for its part make as precise and full reports and explanations as possible.

Commander Jackson has just returned from Paris where he discussed with the military authorities the future role of UNRRA in handling displaced persons in Germany. He is convinced that the military do not want to handle the displaced persons any more than is necessary and very much want UNRRA to take a significantly more important and responsible part. In Jackson's opinion, UNRRA's ability to do this is entirely dependent on the extent to which the Brit and Amer Govts are prepared to see that the top leadership of the ERO ⁵³ is strengthened. If these Govts do not make really first rate men available immediately the organization cannot take over the tasks the Allies and the military are pressing it to take over.

He considers that the second line and lower personnel are good but the higher direction (below Gov Lehman) lack stature, efficiency and drive. They have been content, for example, to approach the military at too low a level and to accept in general the role of poor relation.

Jackson said that unless the necessary Govt support is forthcoming, UNRRA will "crack wide open" and if it does "UNRRA will get in first". By this he presumably meant that UNRRA will make clear to the world the reasons for its failure. The US and UK, particularly the US, took the lead in setting up the organization and the US must take a large share of the responsibility for its fate. He considers the criticisms in the May 14 issue of Time to be sound. Jackson is preparing a note on this subject which he will take up with the Amb and we will inform you more fully on the position in the immediate future.

In connection with items 1 and 2 of agenda of twelfth meeting of Executive Committee which deal with proposed operational expenditure by Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees in France, Belgium and Iberian Peninsula, FonOff official stated today that Lord Winterton, Brit Rep on IGC, has been instructed notify Committee tomorrow along following lines:

Brit Govt has given its approval to this proposed operational expenditure. However, Brit Ministers are examining possibility of approaching UNRRA with view to latter's taking over maintenance work and other similar work which IGC at present carrying on. Ministers considering possibility that until nonrepatriability of refugees is definitely established (Embtel 5353, May 28 54), such work may more properly come within purview of UNRRA and that there should not be two organizations, UNRRA and IGC, the work of which overlap.

The Assistant Secretary of War (McCloy) to Mr. William Phillips, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

Washington, 6 June, 1945.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: In response to the cable which we sent to SHAEF ⁵⁵ concerning SHAEF policy on the return of displaced persons to the USSR, and the possibility of using Poles in connection with the zone occupied by U.S. Forces, we have received a reply from the Theater stating:

a. That displaced persons will be returned to the USSR if they claim to be Soviet citizens and their claim is accepted by the Soviet repatriation representative.^{55a}

b. Eastern Europeans, other than Soviet citizens, whose districts of origin may become a part of the USSR as a result of territorial changes will not be returned to their districts of origin unless they so desire.

⁵⁴ Not printed; it reported that the British believed that every effort should be made to repatriate refugees in order that the responsibilities of IGC could be cut, and that strict tests as to the nonrepatriability of refugees should be applied (840.48 Ref/5-2845).

Not printed.

Sea Regarding the United States policy relative to the repatriation of Soviet citizens, see footnote 28, p. 1161.

c. Instructions have been given to the Army groups to evacuate United Nations displaced persons, other than Soviet citizens, as far as possible, from that part of the Soviet Zone now occupied by Allied Expeditionary Forces.

d. Everything possible is being done to implement the gainful employment and activities desired by the military forces of Polish displaced persons and prisoners of war.

e. Preliminary estimates of the need for work in connection with the zone occupied by U.S. Forces indicate a minimum of 50,000 Poles may be usefully employed. An officer from SHAEF Headquarters is at present in the field completing his estimate of the actual number which may be gainfully employed and the uses to which this labor may be put. He has been designated as the AEF Coordinating Officer at the Supreme Headquarters charged with facilitating the employment of Polish personnel.

I trust that this will be of assistance in your discussions with the French and Polish representatives. If there is any additional information which you desire, I will be glad to be of any assistance possible. Sincerely,

840.50 UNRRA/6-1145

The Director General, United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (Lehman) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson)

Washington, June 11, 1945.

Dear Mr. Acheson: You have asked me for a statement of the relative responsibilities of UNRRA and the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees with respect to assistance to displaced persons.

UNRRA has been authorized to carry out operations for the care and repatriation or return of displaced United Nations nationals and stateless persons, wherever found. It has also been authorized to carry out operations, both in liberated and in enemy or ex-enemy territory, for the care and repatriation or return of persons of other than United Nations nationality who have been obliged to leave their country or place of origin or former residence or who have been deported by action of the enemy, because of race, religion or activities in favor of the United Nations.

In accordance with the basic purposes of UNRRA, it is authorized to assist, as displaced persons, only persons who have been displaced by the present war. Refugees, forced into exile at the end of World War I or in the period between the two world wars, do not come within the scope of this authority if they have not been again displaced by the present war. Such persons must remain the responsibility of the IGC.

Of the persons whom UNRRA is authorized to help, there may be many who cannot or, for sound reasons, do not wish to be repatriated or returned to their former homes. It is not a part of UNRRA's functions to find new homes for such persons. That is the responsibility of the IGC. However, since such persons will originally be found among the repatriable displaced persons, UNRRA has undertaken to care for them for a reasonable period until the IGC is able to assume its responsibility for them. Tentatively, the "reasonable period" has been defined as six months. UNRRA's practice is to notify the IGC when it has identified certain displaced persons as non-repatriable. It then expects IGC to prepare to accept these persons at the end of six months after such notice.

Sincerely yours,

HERBERT H. LEHMAN

Memorandum by the Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren)

[Washington,] June 25, 1945.

The original of the underlying memorandum of the Polish Embassy of April 3, 1945 58 was submitted to Admiral Leahy. 59 The underlying copy was given to Ambassador Lane 60 for the information of the Department.

The matters presented in the Polish memorandum were considered by the Combined Civil Affairs Committee after a paraphrase of the memorandum had been sent to SHAEF and a reply from SHAEF received (CCAC 187/1 30 May 1945). The reply from SHAEF was to the effect that all United Nations displaced persons awaiting repatriation would as far as possible be given opportunity to engage in paid employment, if they so desired, that SHAEF had under consideration the possibility of recruiting Poles for such employment, that SHAEF would give full consideration to any proposal by Allied Governments to Poles volunteering to work, that it is the present interim policy of SHAEF that Polish displaced persons be not forcibly repatriated against their will and further that whenever possible Polish citizens are maintained in special camps and that it is not considered advisable at this time to have a chief liaison officer from the London Polish Government working at SHAEF.

Drafts of communications to the State Department and the British Foreign Office transmitting the foregoing SHAEF reply to the Polish memorandum were cleared by the State and War Departments but have to date not been cleared by the British Government. In view of the recent political developments, the Civil Affairs Division of the War Department has expressed the opinion that it is unlikely that British concurrence in the communications will be received. In the meantime Mr. Durbrow 61 has had many informal conversations with Mr. Ciechanowski 62 in which he has discreetly reassured Mr. Ciechanowski on United States policy with respect to the matters presented. Mr. Durbrow agrees that under all the circumstances the memorandum should be filed.

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Hoechst, June 26, 1945—3 p. m. [Received June 27—1 a. m.]

56. Reference Dept's 2791, June 16, 4 p. m. SHAEF states that its policy with respect to the repatriation of United Nations displaced persons is that they will be repatriated, returned to their districts of former residence or moved to a country of their choice subject only to their own wish and their acceptance by the country for which they opt. All SHAEF instructions have followed this policy and have been carefully worded to make it clear that the individual's choice is to be consulted in all cases except Soviet citizens, who are covered by the Yalta Agreement.⁶³

Provision was made in the Halle Agreement of May 22, 1945 ^{c4} for the reception by AEF authorities of "all former prisoners of war and citizens of Allied nations liberated by the Red Army" on the one hand and on the other hand the reception by Red Army authorities of "all former prisoners of war and citizens of the USSR liberated by the Allied forces". Accordingly there is no way except by [garbled group] under which SHAEF can effect the repatriation of Poles unless local Red Army commanders are willing to accept them at the reception points established under the Halle Agreement. In order to regularize this situation SHAEF is now asking the Soviet authorities whether they will agree to accept Poles and other east bound Europeans to their countries.

Department will be informed of developments.

The Director of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees (Emerson) to the American Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren) 65

[Extracts]

[London,] 3 July, 1945.

MEMORANDUM

- 1. Mr. Earl Harrison has asked for some material on the following points:—
- (i) How far is there any danger of overlapping and confusion between the functions of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees and UNRRA.
- (ii) The nature of the functions of the Intergovernmental Committee in regard to the political and legal protection of refugees.
- 2. With regard to the first point, it may be said generally that the work of the Intergovernmental Committee is supplementary to that of UNRRA. Even at the present time there is the necessity of supplementation because the authority of UNRRA, as defined by various Resolutions of the Council, does not cover the whole range of persons coming within the practical mandate of the Intergovernmental Committee. For instance:-

(i) UNRRA is not operating in some countries.
(ii) In countries where UNRRA has not a programme of general relief, but is carrying out special measures of assistance to displaced persons, the definition of a displaced person as laid down by the Council of UNRRA is a person who has been displaced as a result of the war. There are, therefore, many persons displaced before the war who are not eligible for relief by UNRRA, but who do come within the mandate of the Intergovernmental Committee, and are in desperate need of assistance.

So far as physical relief is concerned (maintenance, lodging, clothing, medical assistance, etc.), care has been taken to see that the Intergovernmental Committee does not incur expenditure on persons coming within the authorised scope of UNRRA.

- (a) In fact, no expenditure has so far been incurred by the Intergovernmental Committee for the physical relief of such persons.
- (b) Before making proposals for operational expenditure, it is the duty of the Director to satisfy himself that such expenditure is not a proper liability of UNRRA.
- (c) If the scope of UNRRA authority is extended so as to include persons to whom assistance is now being given by the Intergovernmental Committee, it will be the duty of the Director to inform the Executive Committee accordingly, so that every effort can be made to have the liability transferred to UNRRA.

⁶⁵ Transmitted to the Department with despatch 24117, July 6, 1945, from London; received July 18.

3. The above refers to the period when UNRRA is operating. By its conception UNRRA is a short term organisation. It has no authority, and no present intention, to continue its operations beyond objectives capable of achievement within a comparatively short time. In particular, it does not cover the long term problem of the stateless and non-repatriables. Even in areas in which it is operating, its functions in regard to them are limited to assistance for a reasonable period. The only international authority at present in existence which can take on the long term responsibility of these classes of persons, when and where UNRRA ceases to help them, is the Intergovernmental Committee, whose task is a long term one. The Intergovernmental Committee is, therefore, closely interested, both because of its contingent liabilities and because there are matters apart from physical needs affecting the future interests of such persons. There has, therefore, to be very close co-operation between UNRRA and the Intergovernmental Committee even in fields where UNRRA is, for the present, primarily responsible. But so long as the latter's responsibilities endure, the financial liability of the Intergovernmental Committee in such cases will be small, since it will not extend to operations, and the community of interest between the two organisations will be achieved by co-operation and not by competition. . . .

4. With regard to the protection of refugees, it is clear that it is the duty of the Intergovernmental Committee to safeguard and promote the legitimate interests of persons within its mandate. This function is particularly necessary in regard to the stateless and other persons who do not enjoy, in law or in fact, the protection of any Government. One of the worst disabilities under which such persons labour is that they have no Embassy, Legation or Consulate to which they can turn for help. When an American or British citizen is in difficulties in a foreign country he can always turn to his diplomatic or consular representative. The stateless person has no such resort. . . . In some cases, formal protection has been given by the adherence of Governments to particular Conventions. The Convention of 1933 66 may be mentioned by which various Governments gave very important rights to Nansen refugees residing in their territories relating to such questions as travel and identity documents, civil rights, employment, education, social assistance, etc. A few Governments went further and formally authorised the inter-national refugee authority, in this case the High Commissioner for Refugees, to assume the function of protecting the interests of the refugees vis-à-vis the Government. Recent instances of this procedure have occurred. The French Government ratified a Convention of 1938 ⁶⁷ relating to German and Austrian refugees, and formally invited the Intergovernmental Committee to assume the duty of protecting the rights of the refugees themselves as defined in the Convention.

Further, within the past few weeks it has extended the provisions of the same Convention to Spanish refugees residing in French territory, and has similarly invited the Intergovernmental Committee to assume protection. The Intergovernmental Committee has accepted in both cases. This action on the part of the French Government, and the assumption of responsibility by the Intergovernmental Committee will be of very great benefit to the refugees. Its practical effect is that in matters covered by the Convention, the groups of refugees concerned, or individual refugees, can turn to the representative of the Intergovernmental Committee for assistance in the same way as the citizen of a country could turn to his diplomatic or consular representative.

In the instances given a formal relationship has been established. But I wish to emphasize the point that even when there is no formal relationship, and even if there is no Convention, there is still plenty of scope for intervention and representation by an international authority on behalf of persons coming within its mandate. . . .

5. To sum up—the function of protection is an essential part of the work of an international refugee organization. If efficiently discharged, it is of immense benefit to the persons concerned, and it is usually accepted by Governments as a valuable help to the administration in smoothing away difficulties and affording a responsible means of representation.

209. For Warren. Reference Department's 107 of July 13, 6 p. m., regarding non-repatriation [sic] of Slovenes, Slovaks, Croats and Hungarians from British and US zones against their wishes.

Appropriate US Group CC authorities informed of policy stated in telegram under reference. Concurrence has been received and lower echelons will be appropriately informed immediately. Annex XVII to basic preliminary plan is obsolete and will not be put into effect. Croats and Slovaks will not be listed as enemy displaced persons in future pertinent directives.

Still operative as policy in British and US zones, SHAEF administrative memorandum No. 39 as revised, transmitted in Mission's restricted despatch No. 290 of April 25, 1945,68 lists Italy, Hungary, Bulgaria, Rumania and Finland as ex-enemy states and their displaced nationals as ex-enemy displaced persons subject to repatriation at discretion of military and without regard to individual's wishes. While Italians subsequently have been removed from this category, presumably Austrians would now qualify. If policy outlined in Department's telegram under reference is fully developed, presumably no Hungarian, Austrian, Bulgarian, Rumanian, Czechoslovakian, Yugoslav, or Finn, except war criminals, Quislings, and renegades, will be required to return to his former home when that falls within Soviet sphere. If that is intent, instructions to that end are requested in order that appropriate military authorities may be advised.

As of July 14 there were reported in Germany 840,241 persons of nationalities last listed. Present rate of repatriation eastward and southeastward so slow that it is doubtful if many of these persons can go home before some time and rate of repatriation will be much retarded if choice is given them. One reason for rapid repatriation to date has been desire to reduce before winter number of persons for whom military would be responsible. Under present contemplated arrangements military will release responsibility where appropriate, for displaced persons to UNRRA on October 1st. Requirements program of UNRRA will of necessity have to be revised upwards if policy outlined above is effected.

Memorandum states that since Atlantic City resolution 72 provides against discrimination on grounds of race, religion or political belief and since UNRRA has accepted criterion of national status and place of former settled residence rather than religion or race in dealing with displaced persons, HMG 73 consider UNRRA is "precluded from dealing with Allied Jews as though they formed category separate from other persons whose nationality they share". For same reasons Jews of ex-enemy nationality or stateless Jews should not be treated as separate national category. Memorandum further states that HMG in assessing the status of refugees recognize only those categories that are constituted either by a particular nationality, by the condition of "statelessness", or by the fact that they cannot be repatriated to their country of origin.

2. An UNRRA official told us informally that UNRRA is concerned with question in connection with policy toward Jewish voluntary societies working with displaced persons in Germany. Under Article IV paragraph 2 of UNRRA agreement and by SHAEF directive UNRRA is responsible for supervising and coordinating activities of voluntary societies.74 Administration feels that in accordance with resolution 9 of first session of Council which states "welfare services administered by or in cooperation with administration shall be provided without discrimination because of race, creed or political belief", Jewish voluntary societies should not limit relief work solely to Jewish persons.

Section III paragraph 18 a (3) of Admr Memo 39 reads "when it is in the interest of military government, arrange through DPX channels for repatriation movement into and out of their areas". Paragraph 4 of EAC directive on displaced persons allows for "due consideration to the wishes of the individuals involved" with respect to United Nations nationals. Paragraph 7 second sentence reads "you will assume responsibility for the repatriation or return of such displaced persons (nationals of former enemy states) and refugees only when that is in the interest of the occupation". The British Chargé (Balfour) to the Acting Secretary of State

His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires presents his compliments to the Acting Secretary of State and has the honour to inform him that, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, the transfer of Allied recognition to the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity ⁷⁶ makes it desirable to consider what arrangements should be made for the present maintenance and future repatriation of Polish displaced persons in Germany. The matter is of some urgency in view of the suggestion made by the Polish Provisional Government at Potsdam that they send a mission to discuss the repatriation of these Poles with the Allied Control Commission. The Polish Provisional Government are likely to do their utmost, for manpower reasons, to get these Poles back to Poland quickly.

- 2. His Majesty's Government have so far been at pains to ensure that no Poles, whether displaced persons, members of the Polish Armed Forces or refugees in British territory, should be asked straightaway to make a final decision whether or not to return to Poland since it is hoped that, by waiting, the number of those who choose to return will tend to increase. His Majesty's Government understand, however, that while instructions were issued by SHAEF for Poles to be registered for repatriation, no repatriation of Poles from Germany has in fact taken place except from the United States zone, and that of the ten to fifteen thousand Poles so repatriated a number have already made their way back from Poland.
- 3. His Majesty's Government have no wish to obstruct the speedy repatriation of any Poles who have already decided that they wish to return to Poland and since His Majesty's Government desire as many as possible to return eventually, they are ready to give the ⁷⁶ Recognition of this Government by the United States occurred on July 5, 1945; for documentation on the negotiations between the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union regarding the establishment of a Polish Provisional Government of National Unity, see vol. v, pp. 110 ff.; for a statement by the President and an exchange of messages on the establishment of diplomatic relations with the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity, see Department of State Bulletin, July 8, 1945, p. 47.

Polish Provisional Government all proper opportunities for appealing to Polish displaced persons to return home and for making their case known to them. They are, however, advised that there would be a grave risk of a complete breakdown of discipline if the representatives of the Polish Provisional Government were to replace immediately the present Polish Liaison Officers. His Maiestv's Government consider that they have a certain obligation to ensure, so far as possible, in the interests both of the individual Poles and of the Polish Government, that the former are not forced to make an immediate final decision in the absence of proper means of forming a judgment. It is known that Monsieur Mikolajczyk 77 and his friends attach importance to this point. Polish prisoners-of-war and displaced persons have been cut off in Germany from all knowledge of the outside world for a long time and many of them have a natural bias against the New Government. Besides, the fact that in the matter of repatriation eastwards the Russian displaced persons have at present an absolute priority makes it impossible to organize any large scale repatriation of Poles in the immediate future. Also, Poles will be the more encouraged to volunteer for repatriation if the arrangements made for repatriation are orderly and humane and especially if some assurance can be secured from the Polish Provisional Government as to the conditions in Poland to which they will be returning. The fact that a number of those repatriated have already returned to Germany from Poland will already tend to increase the doubts of those in Germany who have not yet decided to return.

- 4. On all the above grounds it seems to His Majestv's Government very important that orderly and fair arrangements should be agreed with the Warsaw authorities for enabling these Poles to make their decision at their leisure, without undue pressure, and with knowledge of the relevant factors and for ensuring that the repatriation of those who choose to go is carried out in good conditions. The authority exercised by the Allied Military Commanders over what is done in their occupation zones and the probable anxiety of the Polish Provisional Government to secure the early return of the maximum number of their nationals ought together to make it possible for such arrangements to be made. In this connexion it seems important from the political standpoint, both for the future of Poland and for His Majesty's Government and United States Government, that displaced persons and prisoners-of-war who return should carry with them favourable recollections of their treatment by British and United States authorities.
- 5. His Majesty's Government understand that responsibility in respect of displaced persons in the British, American and French zones has now passed from SHAEF to the respective Zone Commanders whose policy is formulated through the Combined Displaced Persons Executive which is intended to last only until some other co-ordinating machinery can be established. It is essential therefore to secure general agreement to a policy in respect of Polish Displaced Persons which would be implemented through CDPX and its successor by the Allied Commanders in each Zone.

T Stanislaw Mikolajczyk, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture and Agrarian Reform in the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity.

- 6. His Majesty's Government therefore propose,
- (a) that no scheme should be instituted to register for repatriation Polish displaced persons in Germany until a statement has been obtained from the Polish Provisional Government regarding the conditions under which the Poles would return to Poland and until the repatriation of Soviet nationals, which has first priority, has been completed and arrangements have been made with representatives of the Polish Provisional Government for the orderly repatriation of Poles. Arrangements should, however, be made at once by the Combined Displaced Persons Executive (CDPX) to repatriate any Poles who volunteer to return to Poland without being asked to do so,
- (b) that the Polish Provisional Government should be approached on similar lines by the United States Government and His Majesty's Government with a request that they should appoint representatives to discuss with British and American representatives the best manner of handling the problem in an orderly way. It is suggested that these discussions might take place in London or in the British or American zone. If the transfer of responsibility for these Polish displaced persons from the existing Polish Liaison Officers to representatives of the Polish Provisional Government is to be achieved in a peaceful and orderly fashion, it seems desirable for contact between the two to be effected under British and American auspices,
- (c) that the two Governments should resist all attempts to discuss this subject in the Allied Control Commission where it would be the subject of Soviet intervention. The Soviet Government would at once demand that all displaced persons refusing to return home should be excluded from the services provided by U.N.R.R.A. It is therefore desirable to negotiate direct with the Polish Provisional Government who would be responsible for making any necessary arrangements with the Soviet authorities for repatriation across the Soviet zone.
- 7. Mr. Balfour would be grateful if the Acting Secretary of State would convey to him the views of the United States Government on this matter as soon as possible.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

> London, August 10, 1945—3 p. m. [Received 5:15 p. m.]

- 8072. 1. Letter of August 3, with attached annex, from FonOff to Winant gives UK views, summarized below, on what should be done about refugees and displaced persons who may ultimately be nonrepatriable. Full text follows by airgram.78
- 2. HMG (His Majesty's Govt) at the present time are "strongly of the opinion that at least all persons displaced as a result of the war must be regarded as eventually or politically repatriable." They feel discussion on how definitely nonrepatriable refugees should be handled should not be undertaken at present, because it would give impression decisions had already been taken regarding nonrepatriability of certain groups and because it might increase numbers of persons who would have to be resettled.
- 3. HMG feel that temporary relief for displaced persons pending repatriation or decision as to nonrepatriability is, in general, task for UNRRA. IGC (Intergovernmental Committee) should undertake this task only in case of "certain specific categories of refugees in conditions where it is clear that such refugees do not come within UNRRA's mandate". These views are based on three considerations:

(1) Desirability of avoiding overlapping of agencies in field of temporary relief,

(2) Belief that if UNRRA, which is recognized as a temporary relief agency, is put in charge of caring for these people, it would tend to strengthen HMG's policy of concentrating "on establishing eventual repatriability rather than on recognizing at this stage grounds for considering repatriation impossible".

- (3) Fact that "burden of expenditures by UNRRA on relief is shared as between governments on a fuller international basis than in case of expenditure on relief by IGC". However, "HMG do not suggest that, because certain categories of refugees do not qualify for relief from UNRRA they should automatically be regarded as responsibility of IGC".
- 4. Inquiry is made as to whether US concurs with above views, and if so, whether joint approach should be made to UNRRA and IGC "at early date with view to establishing procedure on lines indicated in annex".
- 5. HMG also feels that structure of IGC, whereby US and UK bear equal share of operational costs constitutes excessive burden on UK and that they cannot increase present contribution. If responsibility for caring for persons ultimately declared nonrepatriable is given to IGC, "it would be an essential condition of the assent of HMG that steps should be taken to reorganize that body and in particular to readjust its financial arrangements so that each member Government contributed on a proper contractual basis in accordance with its means". Inquiry is made whether US agrees that matter should now be pressed forward in IGC, and if so whether it has any views as to appropriate procedure.

⁷⁸ Not printed.

6. Text of attached annex is as follows:

(a) Present relief operations in which Intergovernmental Committee is engaged with approval of His Majesty's Govt and of US Govt and of Executive Committee should be reviewed in order to ascertain whether any of categories of refugees thus being relieved can be held to come within mandate of UNRRA. If so, arrangements should be made to transfer responsibility for their relief to UNRRA as soon as possible.

(b) Any proposals which may in future be made to Intergovernmental Committee to undertake the relief of specific categories of refugees should not be approved until it is quite clear that they are outside scope of whatever UNRRA's mandate may be at time. Similarly, in event of UNRRA's mandate being enlarged, proposals for relief which Intergovernmental Committee had previously been authorized to accept should be reviewed to ascertain whether they were now properly UNRRA responsibility.

(c) When asked to approve any proposals to undertake relief of specific categories of refugees, govts represented on Executive Committee of Intergovernmental Committee (in first place His Majesty's Govt and US Govt) should be furnished with as full particulars as possible of reasons to support assumption prima facie that refugees in question would prove to be nonrepatriable. It would be clearly understood that unless these reasons were found to be adequate, His Majesty's Government for their part would be unable to approve assumption of relief activities on behalf of refugees in question by Intergovernmental Committee and would press for their inclusion, at any rate for time being, within mandate of UNRRA.

The Secretary of State to the British Chargé (Balfour)

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the British Chargé d'Affaires ad interim and, in referring to the British Embassy's note of August 4, 1945, desires to make for the consideration of the British Government the following observations with respect to the maintenance and future repatriation of Polish displaced persons now in the American Zone in Germany.

1. The United States Government agrees in principle with the views of the British Government regarding the urgency of this matter and the importance of making as soon as possible with the Warsaw authorities orderly and fair arrangements which will enable displaced Poles to make their decision on repatriation without undue pressure, and with full knowledge of all the relevant factors. To this end, the United States Government is prepared to request the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity to appoint representatives to discuss with American and British representatives the best way of handling this problem in an orderly and expeditious manner. Such Tripartite discussions which would, of course, not affect in any way the status of those Poles who do not wish to return to Poland, might take place at Warsaw, or at some selected locality in the American or British zones in Germany.

- 2. The United States Government agrees that this subject is a matter for discussion between the three Governments directly concerned rather than for submission to the Allied Control Commission.
- 3. While the transfer of responsibility for Polish displaced persons from the existing Polish liaison officers to officers to be appointed by the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity has been approved by the United States Government, it is regarded as essential that before these new liaison officers establish, under American and British auspices, contact with Polish displaced persons and before any register for repatriation is instituted a statement should be issued by the Warsaw authorities setting forth clearly the conditions under which Poles would return to Poland. This statement might be circulated to Polish displaced persons by the combined Displaced Persons Executive (CDPX) or its successors the Allied Commanders in each zone. Thus without standing between the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity and its nationals in Germany, steps would be taken to insure that Polish displaced persons who have been cut off for many years from their homeland may not be forced to make an immediate decision in the absence of proper means to form a judgment. In this way many Poles who are undecided may be encouraged to return on the basis of the assurances contained in the statement.

Such procedure would be in full harmony with the statement of policy regarding Polish displaced persons set forth in the report of the Berlin Conference.

4. The Secretary of State will be pleased to instruct the American Ambassador at Warsaw to propose to the Polish Provisional Government that Tripartite discussions as outlined above be undertaken at the earliest possible date at Warsaw, or in some city in western Germany.

Headquarters, United States Forces, European Theater, to the Commanding Generals, Western Military and Eastern Military Districts 79

AUGUST 22, 1945.

- 1. It is the established policy of this headquarters that stateless and non-repatriable persons shall be granted the same assistance as United Nations displaced persons. This includes ex-enemy nationals persecuted because of their race, religion or activities in favor of the United Nations. Persons discharged from concentration camps, if their loyalty to the Allied cause has been determined will receive all of the benefits granted United Nations displaced persons even if they were originally of enemy origin, such as German and Hungarian Jews, labor leaders or others put into concentration camps because of political activities or racial or religious persecution.
- 2. While persons of Jewish faith who desire to be repatriated to the country of which they are nationals will be treated as citizens of that nationality and placed in the same centers as other displaced persons of that nationality, those Jews who are without nationality or those not Soviet citizens who do not desire to return to their country of origin will be treated as stateless and non-repatriable.
- 3. In accordance with the policy of this headquarters, such persons will be segregated as rapidly as possible into special assembly centers. Those who are Jews will be cared for in special Jewish centers.
- 4. In establishing these special centers, particular attention will be paid to a high standard of accommodation. Wherever necessary, suitable accommodation will be requisitioned from the German population. Military commanders' powers of requisitioning will be fully utilized in order to insure that these persons are accorded priority of treatment over the German population.
- 5. In accordance with the policy of this headquarters, special UNRRA teams will be requested for these special centers without delay and these teams will be given maximum operating responsibility and all necessary assistance by military commanders.

The British Chargé (Balfour) to the Secretary of State

No. 406

His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the Department's note of August 14th on the subject of the maintenance and future repatriation of Polish displaced persons in the American and British zones of occupation in Germany.

- 2. Since the date of this Embassy's note of August 4th on the same subject His Majesty's Government have learned:
- (a) That the repatriation of Soviet citizens from Germany is expected to be completed by the end of August and will leave the field free for the military government to begin the repatriation of Poles.
- (b) It is estimated that no less than 378,000 of approximately 500,000 Poles at present held in displaced persons camps in the British zone are willing to go home now. This number is far greater than was expected at this early stage.
- 3. The effect of the above two developments and of the very serious disorders which have occurred among displaced Poles in Germany is to make the repatriation of those Poles who are ready to go, the immediate essential. For this purpose His Majesty's Government think that the procedure proposed in paragraph 6 of this Embassy's note of August 4th is likely to be cumbersome and to involve protracted delay. It is held that fullest advantage will have to be taken of the two months or less during which the military government will be able to repatriate these Poles before the winter starts, and immediate arrangements for repatriation must therefore be put in hand.
- 4. On reconsideration His Majesty's Government consider that direct contact with the Soviet authorities over arrangements for repatriation is unavoidable as they will in any case be brought into the matter by the Polish authorities. His Majesty's Government have therefore decided that the speediest way of arranging for the repatriation of the 378,000 Poles who are prepared to go would be to invite the Soviet Government and the Polish Provisional Government to send representatives to an "ad hoc" Four Power meeting in Berlin to discuss transit through the Soviet zone and reception in Poland respectively.
- 5. In view of the large number volunteering to return, His Majesty's Government no longer see any objection to asking displaced Poles whether they wish to return within, say, one month, provided it is made clear that they are not being asked to make a final decision one way of [or] the other now. The segregation of returning Poles would take place in transit camps as a stage in the process of repatriation and it would almost certainly be necessary for them to come under the control of officers appointed by the Polish Provisional Government before being moved into the Soviet zone. Any such arrangements as may be necessary would arise out of the meeting in Berlin mentioned above.

- 6. The question of access by representatives of the Polish Provisional Government to Poles not yet volunteering for repatriation will have to be considered when the Polish Provisional Government demand that right, as they undoubtedly will do. In view of the recent resolution of the UNRRA Council of [Europe?] regarding UNRRA's responsibilities in respect of displaced persons it would appear in principle impossible to deny the Polish Provisional Government access to Polish displaced persons remaining in Germany for the purpose of persuading them to return to Poland. It remains however to be decided when and under what conditions such access shall be allowed.
- 7. General Robertson, Field Marshal Montgomery's so Chief of Staff, proposes to discuss the matter on the above lines with his United States colleague, General Clay, and to invite the latter's agreement with the proposal that a Four Power meeting should be held in Berlin as soon as possible to discuss means of repatriating willing Poles at once. In the changing circumstances His Majesty's Government do not propose to pursue the matter through the diplomatic channel since direct contact between the military authorities in Germany seems more practicable. His Majesty's Government are in any event anxious to avoid the whole question of displaced persons in Germany becoming the subject of discussions in the Control Council and suggest that the outcome of discussions between General Robertson and General Clay should be awaited in the first instant.

145. On August 21 Brigadier General Eric Fisher Wood, Deputy Director PW (Prisoners of War) and DP (Displaced Persons) Division USGCC (US Group Control Council), arrived from Frankfurt to consult with appropriate Polish military officials regarding repatriation Polish displaced persons and to consummate insofar as possible arrangements previously discussed with Colonel Naszkowski, ⁸⁰ Field Marshal Sir Bernard L. Montgomery, Commander in Chief, British Forces of Occupation in Germany.

Chief of Polish Military Mission Paris. General was assisted by Embassy in meeting General Spychalski Chief of Staff to Marshal Rola Zymierski on August 22.

General has reported to Embassy that at his first meeting he informed Polish officials of problem and indicated his desire to have them confirm Government's readiness to cooperate in program for repatriation of considerable portion of the 335,000 Poles now in US zone and limited to those who desire to return to Poland. When Polish officials indicated they might require week to study this problem he told them of necessity of his departure following day and he would require their answer before that time. As result of lengthy conference with Lt. Col. Alef and Major Sosnicki who were designated by Gen. Spychalski to carry on discussions, Polish military officials then agreed in principle to plan presented by Wood. General requested that detailed agreement should be signed. This was first thought by Poles to be difficult of immediate accomplishment but after General insisted he could not prolong his stay various steps set forth below were agreed to and document signed by Gen. Spychalski was delivered just prior to Gen. Wood's departure:

- 1. Polish Govt in every way anxious to expedite repatriation of Polish DPs (Displaced Persons) and officer POWs before winter.
- 2. It will welcome all Polish liaison officers for repatriation in US zone (and subsequently in British zone) who declare adherence to present Government, and will maintain them in their present functions. Polish field officers from Warsaw Government under instructions of Major Sosnicki will go to US zone to interview all Polish liaison officers and accompanied by officer of Gen. Wood's staff will offer each liaison officer opportunity to declare adherence to present Polish Provisional Government. (Gen. Spychalski declined to agree to sentence proposed by Gen. Wood to effect that such declaration if made would be accepted as being in good faith and would continue to be so accepted during behavior loyal to Provisional Government the US army to be judge of this loyal behavior while liaison officers are in US zone and based on close conference and advice of Major Sosnicki.)
- 3. Gen. Wood had suggested to Maj. Gen. Philipov of Marshal Zhukov's ⁸² staff that Gen. Eisenhower ⁸³ wished to deliver 10,000 Polish DPs per day beginning about September 1, at transfer points Bebra-Eisenach and Hof-Plauen; that these were same transfer points through which up to 10,000 Russian DPs had been delivered; that substantially all Russian DPs had now been evacuated from US zone by that procedure; that same procedure previously organized and operated by Zhukov for transport of Russian DPs should be continued by him for transportation Polish DPs.⁸⁵ Above procedure would be in furtherance of specified terms of Potsdam agreement.⁸⁶

- 4. Polish Government acknowledged timely receipt this information and advises Gen. Eisenhower through Gen. Wood that it has already initiated negotiations with Zhukov for carrying out proposals outlined preceding paragraph and that it expects early affirmative answer from Zhukov and USSR.
- 5. As alternative either supplementing or in place of above procedure Polish Government desires US authorities look into possibilities of foot marches through Czecho. If Czech Government preliminary reaction favorable Polish Government ready to approach Czech Government with further proposals. Polish Government declares that foot marches if made may properly average 25 kilometers per day and question of proceeding through Russian zone Germany will be exclusively in hands of Polish Government unless further notice given by Polish Government to Gen. Eisenhower.
- 6. Polish Government agrees to receive and care properly for its repatriates at western border of "new" Poland any time after September 7 and assume full responsibility for such reception and care.
- 7. Except as modified by above subject matter of letter of August 3 from Gen. Wood to Gen. Mickelsen ⁸⁷ is agreed to by Polish Government. (This letter sets forth details of plan to which Col. Naszkowski had agreed in Paris and by which movement of DPs will take place.)

so On September 7, representatives of the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity and the United States Group Control Council for Germany met in Berlin to consider the details of the repatriation of Polish displaced persons from the United States zone of occupation in Germany. Several general repatriation routes by railroad and the details of train movements were arranged. While the American representatives stated that they were aiming at the objective of repatriating 10,000 Polish displaced persons daily, Polish authorities indicated their inability, under current conditions, to handle more than 5,000. Both sides reiterated that foot-marching by displaced persons would be considered only as a last resort. The American representatives expected the first repatriation trains to be running within a week.

166. Re Murphy's telegram 307 to Department, August 15, 4 p. m.89 I informed President Bierut August 27 regarding Marshal Zhukov's refusal to furnish gasoline for trucks transporting displaced Poles from Germany to Poland. Bierut said that he hoped it could be arranged for displaced persons to be brought back to Poland by train and that he would have it taken up with the Soviet military authorities. He said that he was apprehensive that physical condition of group would not permit their coming via foot-march. He said that he had no knowledge of the details regarding negotiations for the return of displaced persons group and that he had not been informed of General Wood's visit or of his talks with General Spychalski and the latter's staff. I regard this as significant in that the return of 800,000 potential voters should be of the greatest interest to the head of the Polish Government if free elections are to be held here.

It was of course a surprise to me that the President appeared to be uninformed on a matter, the importance of which has been repeatedly emphasized by Polish officials.

- 104. Following are Dept's views regarding procedure in effecting repatriation Polish displaced persons, liberated POW's and soldiers in American Zone:
- (1) Since repatriation Soviet nationals which had priority now largely completed, voluntary repatriation Poles should proceed as rapidly as possible in order maximum number be returned prior to beginning winter season.
- (2) Wherever possible necessary arrangements should be completed on military rather than diplomatic or governmental level in order to save time and expedite repatriation. Experience in handling Soviet repatriation by this method shows it efficient and workable.

⁸⁸ Reproduced from confirmation copy; original not received by wire. ⁸⁹ Not printed; it reported that the repatriation of Polish displaced persons was becoming a matter of increasing urgency as winter approached, and that American military authorities were considering endeavoring to obtain Polish agreement to the principle of foot-marching the more able-bodied Polish displaced persons from the American zone of Germany back to Poland as a means of accelerating the process of repatriation (800.4016 D.P./8-1545).

US military authorities concerned are in a position to work out with Polish Liaison mission details and procedure of repatriation.

(3) Department's directives regarding categories of Poles to be repatriated remains unchanged and any change therein is to be made only after consultation and agreement between State and War Department officials at Washington.90 received by the United States Government from Mr. Earl Harrison regarding the conditions in displaced persons camps in the areas of Germany under United States and British control. The conditions in these camps have been under careful examination by the British authorities in conjunction with the British element of the Control Commission in Germany who in turn have consulted the authorities in the United States zone. I have been asked to inform you of the conclusions reached as a result of this examination.

- 2. Mr. Harrison suggested that official policy seemed to be to force repatriation by unpleasantness of surroundings and conditions, but the British authorities have discovered no foundation for this contention. Displaced persons are given prior consideration over German civilians as regards accommodation and food, and this policy has continually been impressed on the authorities in the British zone. Arrangements for winter accommodation for displaced persons are now well advanced.
- 3. You will, I think, be aware that His Majesty's Government are completely in accord with Mr. Harrison's proposal that UNRRA should assume responsibility for the care and administration of displaced persons and displaced persons camps, and UNRRA has received every encouragement from the military authorities in the British Zone to this end. The rate at which it has been possible to proceed in this matter has been limited in the past by the numbers and quality of the UNRRA personnel available, but this position is now being rapidly improved. Further, the importance of arrangements for tracing and communicating with relatives is fully appreciated, and the British element of the Control Commission have set up a tracing bureau for this purpose. It is hoped that UNRRA will be able to assume responsibility for this function also in the near future.
- 4. With the exception of nationals of the U.S.S.R. whose repatriation is effected under the agreement concluded at Yalta, ⁹⁶ and exenemy nationals, no persons are being or will be sent back to their country of origin unless they so desire. Displaced persons who are temporarily non-repatriable are being segregated on the basis of nationality. His Majesty's Government are not, however, in favour of a policy of segregation of Jews or non-repatriables as such, since they are unwilling to recognise Nazi attempts to deprive Jews of their German or any other nationality, or Jewish attempts to regard Jews as possessing any separate or over-riding nationality of their own as distinct from their political nationality. It is also the present policy of His Majesty's Government to look upon all displaced persons and refugees as ultimately repatriable until it has been proved finally and irrefutably that they are not repatriable. His Majesty's Government cannot, therefore, concur in any measures which would have the effect of branding categories of displaced persons prematurely and permanently as non-repatriable. This, I am informed, was a most important factor in the debates on the question of displaced persons which took place at the Third Session of the UNRRA Council.97 In conformity with the practice of segregating temporary non-repatriables into national groups, it is also the practice of the British military authorities to segregate persons who are in the strict juridical meaning of the term "stateless". They do not, however, consider that the term "stateless" should be extended to cover that larger group who may not, for one reason or another, be repatriable at the present time but who, from the juridical point of view, have not lost their nationality.

⁵⁵ For the report of Earl G. Harrison to President Truman on Harrison's mission to Europe to inquire into the conditions and needs of those among the displaced persons in the liberated countries of Western Europe and in the SHAEF area of Germany—with particular reference to Jewish refugees—who might possibly be stateless or non-repatriable, see Department of State Bulletin, September 30, 1945, p. 456: see also the following: letter of President Truman to General Eisenhower, August 31, transmitting Harrison's report, ibid., p. 455; reply of General Eisenhower, October 8, ibid., October 21, 1945, p. 607; statement of President Truman on the situation of Jews in Europe, ibid., November 18, 1945, p. 790; letter addressed to British Prime Minister Attlee, August 31, transmitting Harrison's report and urging that Jewish immigration to Palestine should not be closed, ibid., p. 790.

5. It is realised that policy in the United States zone 98 as regards persons who are there termed "stateless" and who do not desire to return to their country of origin, differs from that in the British zone, but in the practice of segregation of Jews as such His Majesty's Government do not feel able to modify their position. It is, of course, agreed that persons of Jewish race may in many cases need some special form of assistance, and it is considered that the proper remedy in such cases is to give Jewish relief workers full access to their coreligionists. Should it at any time prove necessary to appoint Jewish relief or liaison officers in camps or at higher administrative levels, these should where possible be provided from displaced persons or from Jewish relief teams already in Germany, and should work under UNRRA and under the same conditions as the UNRRA personnel. This would appear to be in accordance with the policy which was recently agreed upon between the military and UNRRA authorities in both the British and United States zones. This policy has been brought to the notice of the authorities in the British zone, who are in the process of developing it.

Yours sincerely,

ROGER MAKINS

The British Embassy to the Department of State

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have considered with close attention the report of Mr. Earl Harrison to President Truman on the situation of Jewish displaced persons in Germany, and their views on certain aspects of this report were communicated to the Department of State in a letter addressed to Mr. H. Freeman Matthews by Mr. Makins on 6th October.

- 2. Lord Halifax ⁹⁹ is now instructed to draw the special attention of the Department of State to Mr. Harrison's recommendation that Jewish displaced persons (including persecuted German Jews) should be regarded as non-repatriable and segregated on a racial basis forthwith, pending their removal to Palestine or to some other destination outside Europe.
- 3. It is understood that this recommendation has now been put into effect in the United States zone in Germany.
- 4. His Majesty's Government cannot but view the adoption of this policy with grave concern. It appears to them to suggest that there is no future in Europe for persons of the Jewish race, and to be open to serious objection at a time when conditions throughout Europe are still chaotic and when the effect of anti-Semitic policy, sedulously fostered by the Nazis, has not yet been undone. In the judgment of His Majesty's Government it might be regarded, by implication, as conceding the contention of the Nazi regime that there should be no place for Jews in Europe.
- 5. Furthermore, this policy would undoubtedly be interpreted as an indication that the United States and the United Kingdom were ready to reverse the decision reached with so much difficulty at the recent UNRRA Council, to the effect that displaced persons must be given time in which to decide freely, and after full information as to the conditions which were likely to await them in their former homes, whether to return there or not. It would oblige them to make an irrevocable decision now on this point, at a time when conditions do not exist in which a balanced judgment can be formed.
- 6. The United States Government and His Majesty's Government would then be faced with the problem of an increased number of displaced persons who will ultimately have to be resettled, at a time when there is an urgent need for displaced persons, Jews no less than Gentiles, to return home (unless the objection in any given case is overriding) and assist in the reconstruction of their native lands, where they all have their part to play. His Majesty's Government therefore consider that the efforts of the two governments would more advantageously be directed to the creation of conditions in which Jewish displaced persons will themselves feel it natural and right to go home rather than to admit at this stage that such conditions are impossible to create. Moreover, the Jews are not the only persecuted group. German Christians have, in many cases, suffered almost as badly.

- 7. His Majesty's Government feel strongly that the foregoing considerations are fundamental to the solution of this problem and that Mr. Harrison has not sufficiently taken them into account. They explain the reasons for which His Majesty's Government feel obliged, in any event, to maintain the present policy in the British zone.
- 8. Lord Halifax has therefore been instructed to urge strongly that the decision to segregate the Jews in the United States zone in Germany should be re-examined. It is clear that a divergence of policy between the two zones in this respect would be most unfortunate, and this point has indeed already been taken by the European Regional Office of UNRRA, which feels that it would be gravely embarrassed if it were required to follow conflicting policies in Germany.
- 9. In conclusion, His Majesty's Government consider, against the background to which attention has here been drawn, that the issue of the wholesale removal of European Jews to Palestine, also raised by Mr. Harrison, may not unfairly be regarded as begging a question, that is far more complex than his report would suggest. But the difficulties regarding the proposed immigration to Palestine were set forth in the Prime Minister's personal message to the President No. 9 of the 17th [16th] of September 1 and they are therefore not restated in the present communication.

10951. For Department and Earl Harrison. We were told this morning by Mason who supervises FonOff refugee work that British Government has now reached policy decision on future of Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees. He said British feel that UNO (United Nations Organization) should assume responsibility for work now carried on by IGC (Inter-Governmental Committee) and that the work should be handled as integral part of UNO program rather than by a specialized agency. When we asked him if British had ECOSOC (Economic and Social Council) in mind as appropriate agency to carry on this work he said question of appropriate agency would have to be determined by UNO but that he presumed refugee work would fall in ECOSOC sphere. He added that work could probably be carried on by an agency operating with considerable administrative independence under a high commissioner or some other official directly responsible to appropriate agency but that from budgetary viewpoint it would appear most desirable to have IGC's work brought under UNO.

FonOff wishes to inform director IGC as soon as possible of British decision but does not wish to do so before it has ascertained views US Government on future IGC. It would like to inform Emerson early next week if possible in order that its views may be communicated to Executive Committee at a meeting to be held before November 20 Plenary Session IGC.

9358. Reurtel 10951, Oct. 19. This Govt agrees with the British Govt that the question of incorporation of work now performed by Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees into United Nations Organization should be explored at plenary meeting of Committee on Nov. 20. Problem of refugees has already been noted by Subcommittee of Executive Committee of United Nations Preparatory Commission as urgent for early consideration. In view of this Govt IGC should formulate preliminary proposals for presentation to ECOSOC as soon as latter is prepared to consider them. Question of whether work for refugees should be handled as integral part of UNO or by specialized agency should be left open at this time. Please give Stevenson ² a copy of this message.

US Govt welcomes re-examination at any time of different functions of UNRRA and IGC with the object of preventing overlapping of services. This Govt believes, however, that this problem was clarified substantially by decision of the UNRRA Council in Aug that UNRRA be authorized to care for displaced persons awaiting repatriation in areas in which it is operating for a period of 6 months.

In this connection it is noted that UNRRA does not administer relief in France, Belgium and The Netherlands, and neutral countries to which the operations of IGC are at present confined. It is assumed that refugees receiving temporary IGC relief in these countries will either return to their home countries or be absorbed in countries of residence. No overlapping of UNRRA and IGC services is understood therefore to exist at present.

In Germany and Austria UNRRA clearly has sole responsibility for the relief of displaced persons for the next 6 months. It is agreed that during that period the military and UNRRA should exert every possible effort to secure the repatriation of as large numbers of displaced persons as possible. It is not understood that any steps which have been taken in Germany to date, including that of the housing of certain Jewish refugees in separate camps in the US zone, constitute in any manner a decision that any particular group of displaced persons is ultimately non-repatriable. Jews housed in separate camps are free to decide at any time to return to their home countries.

Notwithstanding the foregoing this Govt believes that the two Govts should explore as soon as possible the possibility of a more positive approach to the problem of those groups or individuals that have already expressed an unwillingness to return to their homes, with a view to devising some machinery for facilitating the repatriation of these groups or for setting in motion efforts to find some other disposition in cases in which repatriation is impossible. In the view of this Govt current efforts on the part of the military and UNRRA in this direction are not sufficient to avoid the development of a substantial relief problem which may continue indefinitely in Brit and US zones of occupation in Germany.

In the judgment of this Govt no question of duplication of services between UNRRA and IGC will arise until the IGC presents to the two Govts for approval projects of relief to persons previously in receipt of relief from UNRRA or qualified for such relief in areas in which UNRRA is operating.

The Department of State to the British Embassy

MEMORANDUM

Reference is made to the British Embassy's aide-mémoire of October 9, 1945 with reference to the segregation of Jewish displaced persons (including persecuted German Jews) on a racial basis in the United States zone of occupation in Germany.

The assumption of the British Government that Jewish displaced persons in the United States zone in Germany are considered non-repatriable and are segregated on a racial basis in separate camps is not, according to information available to the Department, borne out by the facts. The pertinent military directive repeats an earlier SHAEF directive ⁵ and provides that persons of Jewish faith who desire repatriation to the country of which they are nationals are to be treated as citizens of that nationality and placed in the same centers as other displaced persons of that nationality, and that Jews who are without nationality or those who do not desire to return to their country of origin will be treated as stateless and non-repatriable persons.

Stateless Jews and those who do not desire to return to their country of origin are free to decide at any time whether they will return to their former homes, as conditions in their home countries become more stable and their individual rights and liberties are more likely to be assured.

In the view of the Government of the United States, this policy contains no suggestion that there is no future in Europe for persons of the Jewish race, nor does it imply acceptance of the Nazi contention that there should be no place for Jews in Europe. The United States Government believes that Jewish nationals will have the same rights and opportunities as other nationals in European countries. This policy has no other significance than that of an administrative method of providing care for these persons in the United States zone in Germany, and of assuring their freedom of decision with respect to return to their home countries or emigration elsewhere if such return is not feasible eventually. The mere fact that those who are unwilling at present to return to their home countries are housed in separate camps for purposes of more convenient living arrangements does not constitute a decision as to their repatriability.

⁵ See the directive of August 22, p. 1186.

The United States Government does not consider that the policy indicates a reversal of the decision of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration Council at its recent meeting in London that UNRRA should encourage the repatriation of displaced persons and that it be authorized to care for them for a temporary period. The policy under question was adopted by the military in the United States zone in Germany after careful consideration of the problems involved in the light of military experience to date. It is not believed that sound reasons exist for a modification of this policy and no embarrassment for UNRRA is foreseen if this policy is maintained.

It is difficult for this Government to understand the implication drawn by the British Government that the military directive in effect in the United States zone in Germany with respect to the housing of certain displaced Jewish persons has any relation to "the wholesale removal of European Jews to Palestine". This conclusion, taken in conjunction with paragraph four of the aide-mémoire under reference, raises an issue which has never previously been presented to the United States Government and appears to lack relevancy in respect to previous communications between the two Governments.

The American Embassy in London is being instructed in replying to a letter from the Foreign Office dated August 3, 1945,6 to suggest that the two Governments explore the possibility of a more positive approach to the problem of those groups of displaced persons which have expressed unwillingness to return to their homes.

Berlin, October 29, 1945. [Received November 10.]

Sir: I have the honor to transmit for the Department's information, especially that of the Adviser on Displaced Persons and Refugees, a copy of a directive issued by General Eisenhower on September 20, 1945 to all subordinate commanders relative to the treatment of United Nations displaced persons and those assimilated to them in status. This directive is a restatement of policy and practice already enunciated, but which for one reason or another had not been adequately fulfilled at operating levels in the field. It is understood that the reemphasis by General Eisenhower personally was the result in part of the Harrison report.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

[Enclosure]

HEADQUARTERS U.S. FORCES, EUROPEAN THEATER Office of the Commanding General

20 September, 1945.

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL SUBORDINATE COMMANDERS:

(This memorandum may be distributed within the command as desired by any Commander).

Subject: United Nations Displaced Persons and Those Assimilated to Them in Status.

- 1. Policies with respect to the housing, security, health and feeding of displaced persons have been previously announced. In execution of these policies there have been instances of hesitation due to the many administrative difficulties encountered, as well as to the confusing nature of some of the problems presented in the various subdistricts. The following is published for the guidance of all individuals whose duties involve responsibilities in caring for displaced persons—
- a. The details of the organization for caring for displaced persons must be fully understood, so that every individual is clearly aware of his own responsibilities and is certain of the channels to follow in securing assistance.

b. Cooperation among Civil Government officials and military commanders in each sub-district must be complete.

c. The burden of providing the means for caring properly for these people must be to the greatest possible extent thrown upon the German population. There will be no hesitancy in requisitioning houses, grounds, or other facilities useful to displaced persons except as limited by essential considerations of practical administration. While the need for general concentration of displaced groups is recognized, this necessity must be met in such a way that excessive overcrowding in displaced person installations is avoided.

d. In seeking individuals for employment by occupational forces priority over Germans will be given always to displaced persons.

e. Sanitation and wholesomeness and sufficiency of food will occupy the attention of all responsible officials, civil and military. Surplus vegetables should be secured to supplement issue rations. Where possible these should be stored for the winter.

f. Medical services must be adequate, with personnel supplied, so far as practicable, from among the displaced persons themselves.

- g. The psychological as well as the physical requirements of these people are important. Wherever possible facilities will be provided in camps for giving the maximum possible employment in such things as shoe repair, tailoring, carpenter work, and so on. Athletic fields and equipment should be secured from the German population. School rooms for children should be provided.
- h. Necessary guarding should be done by displaced persons themselves, on the volunteer system and without arms. Military supervisors may be employed but will not be used as sentries except in emergency. Everything should be done to encourage displaced persons to understand that they have been freed from tyranny and that the supervision exercised over them is merely that necessary for their own protection and well-being and to facilitate essential maintenance. In anticipation of winter months they should be encouraged to provide for themselves the greatest possible amounts of fuel.

Frequent inspections by commanders of all grades are mandatory. Incompetent personnel, either in the civil or military organizations should be instantly relieved by the Army Commander.

The Department of State to the Swedish Legation

MEMORANDUM

Reference is made to the Aide-mémoire of the Legation of Sweden of October 4, 1945 (No. 687)⁷ concerning the possibility that the Swedish Government may permit some 13,000 Polish citizens including 7,000 of Jewish descent, admitted to Sweden in 1945 from concentration camps in Germany, to remain in Sweden for the present provided this Government indicates a willingness to consider the admission into the United States of a considerable part of those of Jewish descent who express a desire to migrate to this country.

The United States Government commends the humanitarian action of the Swedish Government in admitting into Sweden the former inmates of German concentration camps for rest and recuperation. This action was a substantial contribution to the efforts of the occupying powers in Germany to extend sorely needed relief to the victims of Nazi oppression.

The United States Government will give sympathetic consideration to all applications for visas without reference to the religious beliefs of the applicants, but admission into the United States depends upon the ability of each applicant to qualify under the quota and general provisions of the immigration laws. Personal examinations of the individuals concerned are a necessary prerequisite to the determination of such qualifications.

Washington, November 2, 1945—7 p. m.

9660. Kindly transmit to Fonoff following further reply to Fonoff letter Aug 2 [3] * re functions of UNRRA and IGC.

Reference is made to para (c) of the annex to Fonoff letter of Aug 2 [3], 1945 in which it is stated that Br Govt would be unable to approve projects of relief presented by IGC on behalf of refugees unless it were clearly shown that the refugees in question would prove to be non-repatriable.

In this connection attention is also called to limited categories of refugees receiving benefits from IGC as stated in IGC proposal for operational expenses in France and Belgium May 14, 1945. It is noted that limitation to German and Austrian refugees originally proposed for French and Belgian projects appears to have been adopted by the administration as a principle applied to all projects of relief by IGC in other areas.

Two qualifying or limiting tests appear to have been applied in administrative action.

(1) Elimination from benefits of those refugees who are nationals of a state and are therefore assumed to enjoy its protection even though they receive no assistance therefrom or from their country of residence.

(2) The test of repatriability as proposed in Fonoff letter of Aug 2 [3] and as stated in the Br refusal to approve IGC project of relief in Hungary and Rumania.

This Govt is not aware of any action on its part to date and does not now accept the foregoing limiting interpretations of the broad terms of reference adopted by IGC in Aug 1943 one does it understand that any action has been taken by the Plenary or Executive Committee to limit these terms of reference. In approving the French and Belgian projects this Govt did so in the belief that the categories of beneficiaries listed had no other significance than that of an ad hoc working arrangement between IGC and indigenous voluntary agencies in France and Belgium through which relief was to be administered.

In the view of this Govt the elimination from the benefits of the relief activities of the Committee of the foregoing groups has produced a situation in which numbers of refugees falling within the terms of reference of IGC are now without relief in countries in which IGC is functioning. Furthermore, IGC during 1945, a period of great need, having some 8 millions of dollars available for relief, will only spend approximately 2½ million dollars.

⁸ Not printed; for summary, see telegram 8072, August 10, 3 p. m., from London,

The Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees was reorganized in August 1943, and its mandate was extended so as to increase the number and categories of persons who came within the activities of the Committee. See Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, Report of the Fourth Plenary Session, August 15-17, 1944, London (Washington, 1944), pp. 6-12.

The work of IGC and of UNRRA is at present divided on geographical lines. At the London meeting of UNRRA both the Br and US Govts supported the proposal that refugees unwilling to return to their countries should be given time to make up their minds as to return and that UNRRA should be authorized to assist them during a reasonable period. The principle of extending relief to them pending repatriation was clearly adopted. This decision affected refugees only in areas in which UNRRA is operating. In the view of this Govt refugees in the same categories living in areas in which IGC is operating should receive similar treatment. IGC which has adequate authority under its terms of reference should be permitted to extend relief in areas in which it is operating to refugees who possess nationality but receive no relief from their govts or from their countries of residence and who are unwilling to return to their coun-Extension of such relief by IGC will not imply any decision as to the repatriability of the persons involved any more than UNRRA relief to persons in the same categories in enemy areas involves such a decision. While the danger is recognized that relief to such persons may tend to increase the numbers delaying their return, it is urged that this is a consideration of relief administration inherent in any relief operation and should not operate to withhold relief to these categories in Western European and neutral countries pending their repatriation or disposition through settlement in the country of residence or elsewhere. In summary this Govt does not believe that the two Govts or IGC can defend policies in relief administration by IGC which are so obviously irreconcilable with policies supported by the two Govts in UNRRA, particularly when the only distinguishing difference between the beneficiaries of UNRRA and of IGC is the place or the country in which they are found. This Govt therefore believes that the administrative policy of relief of IGC resulting from the foregoing interpretation of the terms of reference adopted in Aug 1943 should be reviewed at the earliest possible date. In the light of the foregoing this Govt also requests the Br Govt to reconsider its decision in respect to IGC project for relief in Hungary and Rumania as soon as possible. In this connection reference is made to letter of Henderson of Sept 7, 1945 in which it is stated that Biddle expressed general concurrence with Br views upon which their negative action was based. It is suggested that Henderson may have been misinformed on this point as the discussion at meeting referred to was confined solely to the pacing in time of contributions of the two Govts to operational expenses of IGC.

Washington, November 7, 1945—10 a.m.

9765. Kindly transmit following message from Under Secretary Acheson to Minister Noel Baker.¹⁰

¹⁰ Phillip Noel-Baker, British Minister of State.

Dept has recently transmitted a message to Fonoff ¹¹ concerning present administrative policies of IGC which exclude from benefits all refugees except those who are stateless or lack the protection of a govt. In this connection your govt has recently expressed concern regarding the possibility of duplication of work of UNRRA and the IGC and has taken the position that it will not approve projects of relief proposed by IGC unless it is clearly shown that the beneficiaries are not repatriable.

As a result of administrative and other policies which have developed, substantial numbers of refugees who fall within terms of reference of IGC as adopted in 1943 are now without relief in areas in which IGC is operating. Funds made available to the IGC for operational expenditures by the two Govts are not being used to full advantage at a time when the need for such relief is approaching its peak this year and next. This situation jeopardizes the possibility of securing additional funds for IGC in the future and tends to discredit the organization as effective agency in dealing with this problem. In fact proposals are received that a new agency needs to be created.

It is the understanding of this Govt that no action has been taken by the Executive or Plenary Committees of IGC to date limiting the terms of reference of the Committee adopted in 1943. The work of UNRRA and the IGC is divided for the immediate period on geographical lines. UNRRA is functioning in Germany, Austria, and Italy and IGC in Spain, Portugal, France, Belgium, Holland and Switzerland. Refugees now excluded from benefits of IGC relief, particularly those who possess nationality, are not in receipt of relief from their govts or from their countries of residence. They are in effect the same categories of refugees which the Br and US Govts voted at the meeting of the UNRRA Council last August that UNRRA should assist for a period of 6 months.

It is difficult to defend the extension of relief to these refugees in Germany and Austria through UNRRA and the withholding of relief to the same categories of refugees who happen to be found in Western European and neutral countries. To extend relief to them pending their repatriability, settlement where they are, or elsewhere does not in the judgment of the US Govt constitute a decision as to their ultimate repatriability. It is admitted that relief may tend to encourage delay in repatriation and even to increase the numbers who hesitate to return but this is an inevitable problem of all relief administration whether under UNRRA or the IGC. The fact remains that most of these refugees now excluded from IGC benefits cannot at the moment return to their countries of origin for lack of transport or organization of repatriation. The withholding of relief consequently does not seem justified on these grounds.

¹¹ See telegram 9660, November 2, 7 p m., to London, p. 1203.

This Govt feels strongly that these limiting policies should be reviewed immediately in order that existing needs of refugees be met more adequately. It is my understanding that Gilpatric and Warren discussed this matter with you in August in London, and I am quite willing to extend these conversations at any time or in any way that meets your convenience. I hope however that, pending such further review of the problem between the two Govts, you will take into account the views expressed above in considering IGC operations for the coming winter.

9810. Kindly transmit following message from Under Secretary Acheson to Minister Noel Baker.

With further ref to my recent message to you 13 concerning the work of IGC I am now advised that representatives of IGC attached as liaison officers to USFET have informed USFET that in keeping with amendment to Resolution No. 57 14 adopted at the UNRRA Council Session in London they are for the present confining their resettlement activities to those persons who are definitely stateless, presumably German and Austrian refugees denationalized by the Nazi regime. I assume that similar notice has been given to the military authorities in the Br Zone.

The result of this policy is that no action is now being taken by any organization looking toward the eventual removal to other places of settlement of those refugees or displaced persons who may finally prove in fact to be non-repatriable. In the view of this Govt IGC should assume responsibility immediately for exploring the opportunities for settlement elsewhere which may exist. Such exploration should be carried on discreetly and without notice to the groups which may benefit.

This Govt thoroughly supports every effort to repatriate as many displaced persons as possible, and shares concern with the Br Govt that all action be avoided tending to increase the numbers unwilling to return or to encourage those now unwilling to maintain this position. It is suggested, however, that it is unrealistic to assume that our hopes that all displaced persons will eventually return will be realized.

The care of displaced persons unwilling to return will become increasingly burdensome in the immediate future and in spite of all efforts to reduce the flow into Germany of Germans from the East, the numbers returning this winter will undoubtedly present grave problems of shelter to the occupying authorities in Germany.

See telegram 9765, November 7, 10 a. m., supra.
 Woodbridge, UNRRA, vol. 111, p. 135.

In view of the fact that action by IGC for placement elsewhere of those who finally prove non-repatriable will require months in time, it is urged strongly that IGC should assume this responsibility immediately in order that removals from Germany may take place when such removals become politically expedient and when transport facilities are available. It also appears desirable that the military authorities in Germany should be advised that IGC has assumed this responsibility.

No obligation for IGC relief in Germany will be involved in this action as this responsibility remains clearly with the military authorities and UNRRA. To take no action until the period of UNRRA responsibility has ended will prove wasteful in time and extremely costly in relief funds. In this connection you will recall that Mr. Clayton ¹⁵ in August expressed the view that it would be very difficult to secure US Govt support for continuing UNRRA or military relief to displaced persons unless constructive measures had been undertaken in the meantime to find solutions for the non-repatriable. I shall therefore appreciate word from you as to the views of the Br Govt on this proposal.

The Sccretary of War (Patterson) to the Secretary of State

Washington, November 29, 1945.

Dear Mr. Secretary: I am extremely disturbed about the lack of planning or activity for resettlement of stateless and non-repatriable displaced persons who are now a United States Military responsibility in Germany and Austria.

With mass repatriation virtually completed, General McNarney ¹⁷ still has about 500,000 displaced persons in the United States Zone, Germany, and General Clark ¹⁸ about 250,000 in the United States Zone, Austria. It is not yet known how many of these 750,000 persons will be returned to their former countries by next spring. However, it is conservatively estimated that at least 350,000 (250,000 in the United States Zone, Germany and 100,000 in the United States Zone, Austria) must be classified as either stateless or non-repatriable.

Many of these persons were persecuted by the Nazis in a manner without parallel in history. Others were uprooted from their homes by forces beyond their control and are now unwilling to return because of changed conditions. Still others are of dubious loyalty to the United Nations but fear for their lives if forcibly returned to their countries. Whatever their background, the United States military authorities are charged with the responsibility of caring for these persons until they are resettled or moved out of areas of military responsibility. In view of the critical food, fuel, and housing shortage in Germany and Austria, as well as the tremendous problems being created by mass influx of Germans from eastern Europe, the War Department is very anxious that plans be made for temporary or permanent resettlement outside of Germany and Austria of the maximum number of stateless and non-repatriable persons.

The War Department has been assured by the State Department on numerous occasions in the past that it was the firm policy of this

¹⁷ Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, Commanding General, United States Forces in Europe.

Government to support the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees in carrying out its functions of arranging for the resettlement of stateless and non-repatriable persons. However, there now appears to be considerable doubt whether the Committee will be able to do its job. I am advised that the British have made every effort to curtail the activities of the Committee, particularly by narrowing its terms of reference to include only juridically "stateless" persons, and even as to these persons the Committee has not reached the operating stage.

I feel strongly that drastic action must be taken if this Government is to fulfill its humanitarian obligations toward stateless and nonrepatriable persons now within its jurisdiction. I was glad to learn that following General Eisenhower's request for governmental action looking toward a broadening of the Committee's functions, the State Department has made urgent diplomatic representations to the British to obtain reversal of their narrow interpretation of the terms of reference of the Committee. I would be interested to have your frank judgment as to the probability that the British will go along with this Government in actively supporting the Intergovernmental Committee. If British support may be expected, and I hope that it may, I would like to suggest that urgent consideration be given to strengthening United States representation on the Committee by providing a full time and adequate operating staff. On the other hand if, in vour judgment, it is unlikely that reliance can be placed upon the Intergovernmental Committee in the near future to perform these tasks, then I believe that this Government should unilaterally undertake to make appropriate plans for resettlement of stateless and nonrepatriable persons now in the United States zones of Germany and

I should appreciate advice from you with respect to this matter in order that the War Department may keep Generals McNarney and Clark informed of developments.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

Urtel 3556 December 4.20 For your information, all three representatives of the Baltic States asked the Department whether the US Govt could use its influence to reverse the decision taken by the Swedish Govt regarding the deportation of the Baltic refugees. They were informed that since this was a matter which concerns solely the Swedish and Soviet Govts the US Govt could not intervene. It was pointed out that the Swedish Legation in Washington had previously been informed that the US Govt did not require the involuntary return to their homeland of Baltic citizens from American-controlled areas.

REPATRIATION OF JAPANESE AND OTHER PERSONS FROM THE JAPANESE MANDATED ISLANDS

Conclusions 21

- 4. It is concluded that:
- a. All non-native civilians in the Japanese Mandated Islands who wish to be repatriated may be repatriated.
- b. All persons should be repatriated whose presence in the islands constitutes an active threat to security.
- c. All Japanese nationals whose place of origin was the main Japanese islands (not including the Liuchiu Islands) should be repatriated to Japan except those whom CinCPac may at his discretion permit to remain.

- d. All Japanese nationals whose place of origin was the Liuchiu Islands and who have resided in the Japanese Mandated Islands for less than ten years shall be repatriated to the Liuchiu Islands or the main Japanese Islands, as they may prefer, except those whom CinC-Pac may at his discretion permit to remain. No repatriations to the Liuchiu Islands shall be undertaken until adequate reception facilities have been established and appropriate arrangements made with the military government of these islands.
- e. All movement of persons to be repatriated should be coordinated with CinCAFPac, and no actual movement shall be made without mutual agreement between CinCPac and CinCAFPac.
- f. Adequate records should be kept concerning all persons who are repatriated in order to make it possible to deal with any claims for compensation or reimbursement which may arise.
- g. Upon the completion of the repatriations herein authorized, the situation in regard to non-native civilians in the Japanese Mandated Islands shall be re-examined by CinCPac and a further report made containing such recommendations as may be appropriate at that time.

Recommendations

5. It is recommended that, upon approval by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee of the "Conclusions", this report be transmitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and to the State, War and Navy Departments for their guidance and, where appropriate, for implementation.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, December 15, 1945. [Received January 4, 1946.]

Sir: Referring to the Embassy's telegram No. 12928 of December 10, 1945,²² which reported inter alia that the Director of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees had expressed concern to an officer of the Embassy about the reported large scale migration of Polish Jews from Poland, I have the honor to enclose a transcript of a letter on this subject addressed to the Embassy by the Director of the Intergovernmental Committee on December 13.

Respectfully yours,

For the Ambassador: Richard A. Johnson Third Secretary of Embassy

[Enclosure]

The Director of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees (Emerson) to the Third Secretary of Embassy in the United Kingdom (Johnson)

IC/857/118

DECEMBER 13, 1945.

My Dear Johnson: I am writing to draw attention to the situation that has arisen, and is likely to develop, owing to the large scale migration from Poland of Jews of Polish nationality. It relates mainly to Poles who were in Poland during the whole of the occupation, but includes some who have returned to Poland from territory east of the Curzon Line and a few who have returned from Germany. It has been in progress for several months, and estimates of the number of such persons that have already left Poland vary between 10,000 and 20,000. The movement is mainly into Czechoslovakia, and for some time continued through that country into the American Zones of Germany and Austria. Many of the migrants were furnished with false papers representing them to be of German origin, and so long as the movement involved transit only through Czechoslovakia, facilities were afforded by the Government of Czechoslovakia, documents being given which assisted their onward passage. It appears, however, that about the beginning of October, the military authorities in the American Zones began to question the status of these persons as "repatriates", and their transfer across the border became more difficult. The Czechoslovakian Government had, therefore, to reconsider the position, and while still unwilling forcibly to deport persons who had entered Czechoslovakia back to Poland, it is not prepared to give them indefinite asylum in Czechoslovakia. According to information received from the representative of the Intergovernmental Committee in Prague, the Government might be prepared to give them refuge for a limited period if there were a guarantee of their removal elsewhere by an international official body and provision were made for their care and maintenance. Meanwhile, permission is being refused to new parties to cross the Polish-Czechoslovakian frontier. In a letter dated the 30th November, 1945,23 the representative has reported the presence of two parties of 500 and 600 persons respectively on the frontier, who are living in the woods in very severe conditions. Most of them have German documents and claim that they are returning to Germany, but this claim is almost certainly false. There is little sign that the movement is abating.

2. From discussions with persons who have recently been in Poland, the main causes of the migration would appear to be the following. There was strong anti-Semitism in Poland before the war, and this was increased by German propaganda during the occupation; in some of the concentration camps Polish Jews were very badly treated by non-Jewish Poles who were used by the Germans to carry out their brutal policy; the property of Jews in Poland, as elsewhere, was confiscated; much of it is now in the hands of non-Jewish Poles who are afraid that it may be taken from them and restored to the original owners; this fear is a direct encouragement of the natural anti-Semitism and is probably the most powerful single factor in the alleged widespread feeling among the population that the present time affords a good opportunity of getting rid of the Jews. Apart from anxiety regarding their physical safety, the Jews are reported to be strongly averse to remaining in a country where they suffered such terrible experiences during the occupation, and where most of them have lost one or more close relatives. On the other hand, apart from an incident in Cracow some months ago, there has been no information of the pogroms until the last few days, when somewhat vague reports have appeared in the press. Officially the Polish Government has condemned anti-Semitism and has expressed its desire to retain the Jews. There is no evidence that persecution is being encouraged in any way by the Polish Government. On the other hand, there is no information that active measures are being taken by the Polish Government to discourage the migration, or to remove so far as possible the causes which are giving rise to it.

3. Hitherto the Intergovernmental Committee has not been actively concerned with this movement. Representations regarding it have, however, been made by private agencies, and it is not improbable that the Government of Czechoslovakia may raise the question as to whether the migrants come within the practical responsibility of the Committee. Whether the migrants come within the mandate of the Committee as defined in the Rules of Constitution would appear to be largely a question of fact. The mandate includes persons who, "as a result of events in Europe, have had to leave, or may have to leave their countries of residence because of the danger to their lives or liberties on account of their race, religion or political beliefs". Persecution is an essential element, and the mere fact of migration from causes other than persecution would not satisfy the conditions of the mandate. On present information, it is very difficult to form a clear opinion as to whether persecution is an important element. Since it is desirable that accurate information should be obtained on this point, I would request that if there is no objection, I may be given an appreciation from information in the possession of the State Department of the causes leading to the migration, with special reference to the element of persecution.

4. Apart, however, from the question of immediate responsibility, it is obvious that this movement has already aggravated the general long term problem of non-repatriables, and that if it continues and develops into a mass migration, it will add very greatly to the difficulties of permanent settlement of refugees. It is desirable, therefore, that preventive measures be taken now in so far as they may be practicable. In this connection I would make two suggestions. First. that the Polish Government be urged to take more active measures, than hitherto, to combat anti-Semitism now prevalent among the population, to assure the life and liberty of Jews and to create conditions in which they will be encouraged to stay in their own country. Second, I would recommend for consideration some method of restitution to the Jews which would mitigate the effect of depriving third parties (often innocent purchasers) of property of which they have been in possession for some years. I have in mind the creating of a fund out of reparations which could be utilised for this purpose. I have reason to believe that such a measure would not only remove a powerful cause of the hostility towards Jews in Poland, but would encourage many Jews to remain rather than to migrate. I appreciate the theoretical objections to such a course, but believe they are outweighed by the practical advantages, and the necessity of quick and effective action.

I have written in similar terms to Mr. MacKillop 25 of the Foreign Office.

Yours sincerely

H. W. EMERSON

678. Re unnumbered telegram from Berlin from Elbrick, 26 December 11, 5 p. m.²⁷ I am convinced that reports regarding persecution of Jews and pogroms in Poland are greatly exaggerated. There is no doubt of widespread anti-Semitic feeling in Poland caused by traditional hostility between Poles and Jews and due to general unpopularity of present govt in which several Jews hold key positions. I have personally investigated reports regarding alleged pogrom in Krakow last August and am convinced this was isolated demonstration of ill feeling which broke out because of irresponsible acts of some young hoodlums. Treatment of Jews is, in my opinion, no worse than that received by Poles now returning from Soviet Union.

The Secretary of War (Patterson) to the Acting Secretary of State

Washington, December 19, 1945.

DEAR MR. ACHESON: The War Department has just received an urgent cable from General McNarney ²⁸ describing the critical problem faced by the Military Government in the United States Zone in Germany of deciding whether or not asylum and care should be given to persons who are currently fleeing eastern European countries with claims of active persecution, or fear thereof, on account of race, religion or political beliefs.

General McNarney reports that an estimated 300 persons per day, mostly Polish Jews, are crossing the border into Bavaria despite Military Government Law 161 prohibiting such entry, and that 250 Polish Jews are arriving in Berlin daily. These movements are in addition to the return to Germany of German populations of Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia with respect to which agreement was reached in the Berlin Protocol 29 and more recently in the Control Council. potential extent of the movement of persecutees cannot be determined accurately. From a realistic viewpoint, the United States Zone appears to most persecuted persons as the only accessible safehaven remaining in Europe. While it is estimated that there are some 250,-000 Polish Jews remaining in Poland and the Soviet Union, it is not known how many of these, or how many non-Jewish Poles, might be expected to seek asylum in the United States Zone, Germany. The number of persons who might seek entry from other eastern European countries is also unknown. Moreover, some displaced persons previously repatriated are returning with relatives and friends, and other displaced persons have been moving to the United States Zone from the British and Russian Zones.

The problem presented by this gravitation from many directions to the United States Zone in quest of better conditions is a new one with respect to which no United States policy has been established. In occupying Germany, the United States undertook to administer the United States Zone and to care for displaced persons found therein at the time of the German surrender. In the Berlin Protocol the United States, with the United Kingdom and the USSR, agreed to accept into Germany, Germans formerly resident in Poland, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia. No agreement has to date been made or responsibility assumed by this Government to grant asylum in the United States Zone to persons who claim to be the victims of discrimination by countries other than Germany.

It is my strong feeling, and I am sure that you will agree with me, that General McNarney and the War Department must look to the Department of State for a firm policy decision with respect to this problem. In order to insure that in making such a decision the Department has before it as many relevant factors as possible, I would like to mention several other important considerations not referred to above.

I think that it is important to bear in mind the close relationship of this problem to that of planning for resettlement of stateless and nonrepatriable persons now under our control. You will recall that in my letter of 29 November, I expressed my concern about the lack of planning and activity for resettlement of stateless and non-repatriable displaced persons now in the United States Zones of Germany and Austria. If no progress is made in resettlement activities, and none whatsoever appears to have been made to date, every additional person claiming to be persecuted who is admitted to the United States Zone must be cared for indefinitely. We would, in effect, be expanding the "hard core" of non-repatriables rather than reducing it. I cite this factor not as a bar to a policy of asylum but rather as an indication of the importance of considering resettlement as a phase of this problem.

Another important factor is the type of care needed by these persons, as well as by a substantial proportion of stateless and non-repatriable persons already under our jurisdiction. It is not enough merely to afford emergency shelter and rations. What is really needed is specialized treatment for rehabilitating such persons in a manner which will prepare them for a new life in the future. The War Department had planned for a long time to turn over complete responsibility for care and handling of stateless and non-repatriable persons to a civilian agency which would be able to furnish the specialized care required. It was felt that a civilian organization could be in a better position than the Army to provide trained social workers and administrative personnel to handle this problem, and could more effectively mobilize the services of experienced voluntary agencies. It was for these reasons that the Army had made tentative arrangements to transfer full responsibility for care of displaced persons in Germany to the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administraton on October 1, 1945.

As a result of the insistence of this Government, UNRRA was prohibited by its Council last August from providing basic supplies for displaced persons in Germany. Since the Army had to continue furnishing all basic supplies, it was placed in the position of being required to retain overall supervision and control of displaced persons with UNRRA actually in charge of most of the camps. While theoretically this might seem to be a satisfactory solution, in practice it has not been so. The inroads of demobilization upon our troops and Military Government have left our Army in Germany without the experienced and technically expert personnel necessary to carry out even this supervisory function.

I think it is important, therefore, that at the earliest possible date direct and complete responsibility should be given to a civilian agency for the handling of all persons in the United States Zone entitled to treatment as United Nations displaced persons. As long as the UNRRA Council resolution mentioned above remains in effect, there appears to be no possibility that this job can be given over to UNRRA. A further obstacle to assumption of complete responsibility by UNRRA is the opposition of certain of its member Governments to assisting persons who do not desire to return to their countries of origin. The Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees is subject to similar disabilities because of the opinions of some of its member Governments.

In my own thinking, based upon discussions with the Chief of Staff and others within the War Department, I have been led to the tentative conclusion that an independent civilian agency should be established by the President to assume overall responsibility for persons in the United States Zone, Germany, entitled to treatment as United Nations displaced persons. This would be desirable in my opinion whether or not an asylum policy is approved, but particularly so if added responsibilities are created by approval of such a policy. I think that such an agency might be set up on the model of the War Refugee Board which performed so effectively during the war and which was dissolved last September. Such a civilian agency would be responsible for utilizing to the maximum available extent personnel and resources of UNRRA, Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, voluntary agencies and the Army. In addition, it might serve as the agent of this Government for planning and arranging for resettlement of stateless and non-repatriable persons, if the Intergovernmental Committee will not function more promptly and effectively in these matters.

General Eisenhower and I are anxious to discuss all aspects of this subject with you and your staff as soon as possible, but I thought that it might prove useful to you to have some of our views preliminary to such a discussion. General McNarney has stressed the seriousness of the problem, and accordingly I believe it is important that he be informed of this Government's policy at the earliest possible moment. Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons (Warren)

[Washington,] December 21, 1945.

Participants: Messrs. Acheson, Hickerson, 30 Doyle, 31 and Warren.

Mr. Warren advised that the Secretary of War in his letter of December 19, 1945 to the Acting Secretary of State had requested a firm policy decision with respect to the continuing acceptance in the U.S. zone in Germany of a flow of approximately 550 Jews daily from Poland. Pending the determination of policy, the War Department had requested by phone interim approval or disapproval before the Christmas holidays of the action of General McNarney in receiving such refugees to date on humanitarian grounds contrary to Military Government Law 161, and in the absence of any other directive. The group had before it the War Department letter under reference, a copy of the proposed White House release on refugees, and memoranda prepared by Mr. Durbrow and Mr. Warren.

Mr. Warren explained that Generals Eisenhower and Hilldring in describing the movement to the American members of the Anglo-American Palestine Commission had defended the policy of receiving the Polish Jews on humanitarian grounds, and had assumed full responsibility for the action. In answer to a question by Mr. Doyle, Mr. Warren explained further that living conditions in the camps in the U.S. zone which had shown great improvement following the President's letter to General Eisenhower last summer,³² were now deteriorating because of the influx from Poland, and that the War Department feared that it might be again subjected to criticism on this account in view of the fact that the worsening of conditions would prove unavoidable if the influx from Poland were to continue.

Mr. Acheson commented that it would be very important to avoid any action or decision which would appear to be inconsistent with the spirit of the President's directive on refugees. He also questioned Mr. Hickerson on the wisdom of approaching the Polish, Czech, and Soviet Governments in the matter, and the possible effects of this action. Mr. Hickerson stated that anti-Semitism undoubtedly existed in the Polish population which the Polish Government was too weak to control, and that the attitude of the Polish population toward the Jews was a part of their resistance to the Polish Government which includes a number of Jewish pro-Communist members. He also reported that the Polish Government had advised Ambassador Lane that exit permits would be granted to Polish Jews only, and that this was an indication that the Polish Government was at least passive toward the departure of the Jews. In response to a question from Mr. Acheson he agreed that in the event that the U.S. Government shut off the flow, the Polish Government might place the blame for refusing exit to the Jews from Poland upon this Government. In the discussion which followed on this point no clear appraisal of the attitude of the Soviet Government in the matter seemed possible, and it was generally agreed that the Czech Government probably looked upon the movement as a problem to be resolved by the Soviet, Polish, United States, and British Governments.

After further discussion it was decided that Mr. Warren should advise the Civil Affairs Division of the War Department that their humanitarian action in receiving the Polish Jews to date was understood and temporarily approved, pending a final decision on policy to be determined immediately after Christmas, and that Mr. Acheson would explain the situation to the White House. It was also agreed that the interested divisions of the Department would proceed immediately on December 26 to decide upon a permanent policy.

GEORGE L. WARREN

800.4016 DP/11-2945

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of War (Patterson)

Washington, December 28, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I have received your letter of November 29, 1945 with reference to the status of planning or activity for the resettlement of stateless and non-repatriable displaced persons who are now a United States military responsibility in Germany and Austria.

The eventual disposition of these persons is a matter of constant concern to the Department of State, and is receiving every possible attention. As you have been previously advised, the Department has made strong representations to the British Government in efforts to secure the collaboration of that Government in the expansion of the activities of the Intergovernmental Committee. The position of the Intergovernmental Committee is that it cannot assume responsibility in Germany and Austria for others than the juridically stateless during the period in which UNRRA has the responsibility for the care of displaced persons. Even as to the juridically stateless, responsibility is limited to preparation for resettlement. The British Government supports this position strongly on the ground that there should be no overlapping of functions by UNRRA and the Intergovernmental Committee.

The British Government particularly takes the position that the Intergovernmental Committee should not assume responsibility for persons such as Poles who possess a nationality or have the protection of a government, but who are unwilling to return to their country as this would constitute a formal acceptance of their nonrepatriability. Such action in the view of the British Government would tend to increase the numbers of nonrepatriables during a period in which it is agreed by both Governments that every possible effort should be made to repatriate as large numbers as possible.

In the view of this Government much can be said in support of the foregoing. On the other hand, it appears unrealistic to delay further recognition of the fact that there will inevitably remain considerable numbers for whom some other solution than repatriation will have to be found. Considering the necessity of continuing support for those whose repatriation cannot be achieved, it appears essential to this Government to initiate planning now looking toward the ultimate disposition of these persons, difficult as this may prove to be under existing circumstances.

The lack of available transport to remove such persons to other areas, the uncertainties as to the specific persons who should be removed, the political resistance to such removal on the part of their countries of origin, and the lack of opportunities of immigration to other areas in Western Europe and overseas suggest the unlikelihood that large numbers of such persons may soon be removed from Germany and Austria. However, a realistic appraisal of the problem suggests the possibility that as soon as communications are available between Germany, Austria, and other countries permitting the displaced persons involved to communicate with relatives and friends in other countries, many of the non-repatriables will be able within a few months, assuming also the availability of shipping, to find places of residence for themselves in other countries. There is also the possibility that the Intergovernmental Committee after the period of UNRRA responsibility is over will be able to arrange possibilities of immigration for groups of persons to countries of potential immigration both overseas and in Western Europe. This latter effort presents political difficulties in that potential countries of immigration are unwilling at present to consider the admission of persons whose movement would not have the support of their countries of origin.

I can assure you that the Department of State will do everything within its power to secure the expansion of the activities of the Intergovernmental Committee and to find other ways and means of liquidating the problem. Specifically, it is anticipated that further negotiations with the British Government will be held early in the next year, and that the political situation will be clarified further at the next meeting of the Council of UNRRA. Whatever favorable results may attend these efforts, it must be expected that some of the non-repatriables at least will eventually have to be absorbed in the German economy because of the lack of immigration possibilities for them in other countries. I shall, of course, keep you currently informed on developments.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have given careful consideration to the State Department memorandum of the 27th October, 1945, regarding the segregation of Jewish displaced persons in Germany.

- 2. His Majesty's Government were gratified to learn that Jewish displaced persons who desire to be repatriated or to return to their homes are not segregated from other persons who are nationals of the same country. They had in mind, however, the rather different case of German Jews, whom the Nazis attempted to deprive of their German nationality under the Nuernberg laws. As His Majesty's Government understand it, such persons are liable to be segregated, as stateless persons, under the United States policy described in the State Department's memorandum.
- 3. His Majesty's Government believe that segregation may well lead the German Jewish displaced persons concerned to assume that some special arrangements are contemplated for their eventual settlement in another country.
- 4. His Majesty's Government believe that if, as they hope, the Allies succeed in destroying the Nazi system, the great majority of German Jews will be capable of ultimate reabsorption into the German community, and their policy in the British zone of Germany is designed to encourage German Jews to seek to rebuild their lives in their own country.33

- 1. Ward, general counsel for UNRRA, his legal adviser, and Simon, Legal adviser UNRRA HQ, Frankfurt, formally expressed their concern at the position War Dept has taken in negotiations on the agreement between UNRRA and Commanding General USFET 34 concerning UNRRA responsibilities for displaced persons in US zone Germany.35
- 2. An agreement has been signed with British for their zone.³⁶ French agreement has not yet been signed because French want UNRRA to take responsibility for procurement of supplies although French are willing to pay for them. Ward thinks French may feel that if they have responsibility for procurement, some supplies might have to come from their own allocations. Negotiations are continuing with French.37
- 3. In regard to US zone USFET approved draft agreement along lines of British agreement and this draft was sent to War Dept. War Dept made substantial amendments which UNRRA accepted in principle around beginning of November. War Dept draft was then sent to USFET who took it up with Mirgaa [UNRRA?] in Germany. UNRRA then decided draft could not be accepted.

³³ Replying to the above memorandum on January 28, 1946, the Department stated:

[&]quot;As was stated in the Department's memorandum of October 27, 1945 the policy of segregation has no other significance than that of an administrative method of providing more convenient living arrangements for these persons. Under policies in effect in the United States zone in Germany, German Jews are encouraged to re-establish themselves in the German communities. reports indicate that many such persons have succeeded in these efforts. have failed and on proper identification have been re-admitted to the displaced persons centers.

[&]quot;In the view of the Government of the United States these policies have been adopted without prejudice to any solution which may eventually be found for the persons in question." (800.4016 DP/12-2945)

³⁵ For text of Agreement as to the Relationship of the Commanding General, USFET, in the United States Zone of Germany to UNRRA, signed on February 19, 1946, see Woodbridge, UNRRA, vol. III, p. 201.

³⁶ November 27, 1945.

³⁷ A French agreement was signed on February 18, 1946.

- 4. In original draft UNRRA undertakes defined responsibilities for care, control and movement of United Nations displaced persons in US zone. In War Dept draft all responsibility rests with the Commanding General and UNRRA undertakes to perform certain functions. The purpose of the former is stated as follows: "The object of this agreement is to state the relationship and respective responsibilities of UNRRA and Commanding General USFET in the care, control and movement of United Nations displaced persons and those assimilated to them in status in the United States zone of Germany." The corresponding sentence in War Dept draft reads: "The object of this agreement is to state the relationship of UNRRA to the Commanding General USFET in the discharge of this responsibility for the care, control and movement of United Nations displaced persons and those assimilated to them in status in the United States zone of Germany."
- 5. The alterations in the original agreement flowing from the elimination of any "responsibility" belonging to UNRRA are important particularly in paragraph 3. The beginning of the paragraph reads as follows in original draft: "As of the date when this agreement becomes effective UNRRA, subject to the laws, general orders, rules and regulations of the Commanding General, USFET and to the resolutions of the UNRRA Council, will assume responsibility for functions relating to the care, maintenance, rehabilitation and disposition of displaced persons within the United States zone etc." Same sentence in War Dept draft reads: "The Commanding General USFET retains overall responsibility for the care, control and movement of displaced persons in the US zone. UNRRA subject to the laws, general orders, rules and regulations, directives and overall supervision of the Commanding General USFET will to the extent permitted by the resolutions of the UNRRA Council perform designated functions relating to displaced persons within the US zone etc." In addition the following sentence is omitted from War Dept's draft in paragraph 3 (a). "UNRRA's duties in the administration of assembly centers will include the determination whether displaced persons fall within the categories whom UNRRA is authorized to assist the control of admission to assembly centers and the disposition of displaced persons." Other amendments are of similar nature.
- 6. UNRRA does not want to sign an agreement that puts it in a worse position in US zone than it has obtained in British zone. It cannot understand War Dept attitude in view of the fact that UNRRA is administering higher proportion of camps in US zone than in any other zone and that US army personnel are being rigidly withdrawn from Germany.
- 7. If draft as proposed by the War Dept comes before CCE it will face a storm of protest. There has always been insistent pressure from Allies that UNRRA be given clearly defined responsibilities. Rkndel [Rendel?] will attack it strongly and at great length and we shall be hard pressed to explain US position. We hope War Dept may be persuaded to modify its position. If this is not possible please let us know urgently the reasons for its amendments. Next CCE meeting is January 11 and matter may come up then. In meantime Penrose 38 will discuss question with UNRRA and USFET in Germany.

The Secretary of State to the Acting Secretary of War (Royall)

Washington, January 7, 1946.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: The Department of State has given full consideration to your letter of December 19 requesting a policy decision with respect to the granting of asylum in the United States zone in Germany to persons who are currently fleeing from reported persecution in eastern European countries. To supplement the information supplied in your letter, cables were sent to the United States missions in Berlin and Warsaw, and reports have now been received. Other reports on the subject have been received from Caserta.

The situation set forth in these reports may be summarized as follows. The refugees arriving from Poland have been carefully interviewed and quite generally give reports of pogroms and persecution. Efforts have been made to obtain details as to time and place, and these reports, where possible, have been investigated. So far no evidence has been uncovered supporting reports of physical persecution, nor does the appearance of the refugees even in regard to nourishment or clothing indicate that such has been the case. The reports fully bear out the fact that economic and living conditions in Poland are poor or bad and that this situation applies to the entire population. They indicate further that efforts made by UNRRA and other agencies to improve the situation have not created any general amelioration. The questioning of the refugees undoubtedly indicates a fear of hostile attacks and impending persecution on the part of the populations in their home areas.

This Government would wish to offer asylum in any areas under its control to those who seek it. Unfortunately the number of persons who can be received and cared for in the United States zone in Germany is, according to the reports, already exceeded. The choice appears to be not between offering asylum and not offering it, but between maintaining bearable conditions for those who have already sought asylum and permitting those conditions to deteriorate by the influx of still further refugees into the zone, where the conditions of all would be intolerable. It is believed therefore that Military Government Law 161, which prohibits entry, should be enforced as of a date sufficiently far in the future, as for instance January 25, 1946, so that in the meantime notice of such enforcement may be sent by the Department of State to the Governments of Poland, Czechoslovakia and the U.S.S.R. If this is done, those already en route would not be subjected to further hardship and those who may be contemplating their departure for the United States zone may be fully apprized of the situation.

The Department has also given consideration to your suggestion that a civilian agency for the handling of all persons in the United States zone entitled to treatment as United Nations displaced persons be created, in view of the apparent inability of UNRRA or the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees to take effective action looking toward the placement of non-repatriables in other areas. As you are aware, UNRRA has no authority under the terms of its resolutions to do other than assist in the repatriation of displaced persons to their countries of origin or to the countries of former residence, which may accept them. It is true, as I have indicated in my letter of December 28, 1945, that the interest of certain member Governments of the Intergovernmental Committee in their nationals who are unwilling to return to their homes handicaps action by the Committee at the moment. Action by the Committee has also been delayed by the raising by the British Government of the question of the incorporation of the Committee and its activities in the United Nations.

Without minimizing these political difficulties it is also true that substantial progress in liquidating the non-repatriable group in Germany cannot be expected until communication facilities from Germany to other countries are available to United Nations displaced persons, permitting them to plan with available relatives and friends for their settlement in other countries. The availability of shipping is also essential.

In view of the likelihood that the political and organizational problems which the Intergovernmental Committee faces will be resolved by direct negotiation between the British and United States Governments, at the meeting of the United Nations this month and at the approaching meeting of the UNRRA Council, it does not appear feasible or desirable to create a United States civilian organization to assume responsibilities which should properly be shared by all the United Nations. Furthermore, a United States civilian organization would face the same problems now confronting the Intergovernmental Committee. It therefore appears wiser to concentrate all energies on the proper organization, strengthening, and clarification of the functions of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees.

I shall be glad at any time to discuss these problems, which are admittedly serious, with you and the members of your staff, and shall await your suggestion as to an appropriate time.

Sincerely yours,

James F. Byrnes

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, January 11, 1946—5 p. m.

328. Urtel 13589 Dec 27.41 Kindly advise Fonoff that view of this Govt is that efforts of IGC to deal with problem of refugees should not be held in abeyance pending action by United Nations. Disposition of those who will eventually prove to be non-repatriable in US zones of Germany and Austria is matter of extreme urgency which is being pressed upon Dept vigorously by US military which has received no assistance to date in problem from IGC. It is therefore important that US and UK Govts reach early agreement as to work of IGC, and consequently Dept will welcome detailed reply to Under Secretary's message to Minister of State (Deptels 9765 and 9810 Nov 7 and 8) as soon as possible.

Also advise FonOff that Dept urges early reconsideration of negative UK decision in respect to IGC project for Switzerland (encl. no. 2 urdesp 27240 Dec 5 ⁴²) and perceives no objection to IGC intervention on behalf of Spanish refugees in Gibraltar (encl. no. 3 despunder ref). Reply to encl. no. 1 desp under ref follows by pouch.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE TRANSFER OF GERMAN POPULATIONS FROM POLAND, CZECHO-SLOVAKIA, HUNGARY, RUMANIA, AND AUSTRIA

740.00119 EAC/11-3044

The Czechoslovak Minister of State (Ripka) to the Chargé Near the Czechoslovak Government in Exile (Schoenfeld), at London ¹

No. 10.304/d/44.

London, 23 November, 1944.

Excellency: For the information of the Government of the United States of America I have the honour to submit the enclosed Memorandum outlining the programme of the Czechoslovak Government regarding the solution of the question of the German minority in Czechoslovakia. This solution involves the removal of roughly two-thirds of the German population of the Republic by voluntary emigration and organised transfer, and the establishment of conditions which would promote a gradual merging of the remaining part of the minority with the rest of the Czechoslovak population so as to form a political and cultural unity. The plan is based upon the following three assumptions:

a/ that the Governments of the United Nations most directly interested in preserving the peace of Europe share the Czechoslovak Government's desire to make an end, once and for all, of a very troublesome and dangerous problem,—dangerous from the point of view of Czechoslovak as well as general European security;

b/ that no solution of this problem should involve any arrangements detrimental to the territorial integrity of the Czechoslovak

Republic within its pre-Munich frontiers; ² and c/ that the terms imposed upon Germany after her defeat will oblige her to accept as her citizens all Germans transferred or otherwise removed from Czechoslovakia and find accommodation for them on German soil; and that the Allied occupation authorities in Germany will see to it that Germany duly fulfills her obligations in this respect.

¹Transmitted to the Department by the Chargé to the Czechoslovak Government in Exile in his despatch 218, November 30, 1944; received December 6, 1944.

[Enclosure]

Memorandum of the Czechoslovak Government on the Problem of the German Minority in Czechoslovakia ³

I.

1. It is now generally recognised that national minorities,—i.e. minorities who consider themselves and are considered part of a nation other than the one on whose territory they live,—constitute a serious source of friction and conflict between nations, a menace to internal and international peace, and a potential danger to the security of the State containing them; they have, moreover, in the past been used as instruments of political pressure and expansionist schemes, and pretexts for aggression.

This is especially true of German minorities, in particular those in States bordering on Germany, who always considered them as one of the most effective means for upsetting the European order established after the last war.

2. It is obvious that the problem cannot be solved by territorial adjustments: in fact it is owing to the impossibility of finding a frontier-line which would not leave a minority on one or both of its sides that minority problems have arisen; for European minorities live nowhere in compact groups unmixed with other nationalities. The mere fact that a minority population is numerically superior in a particular district does not of itself entitle it to claim national sovereignty there, especially when, as in Bohemia, such districts have always formed with the rest of the country a geographical, historical, political, economic, social and cultural unit within one natural defensive frontier. The nation which has held this frontier ever since the beginnings of its history, and to whom it is indispensable for the maintenance of its independence, cannot surrender it merely because the agitation of an aggressive neighbour has inflamed the population of the frontier districts with a desire for union with a foreign State. A territorial settlement thus enforced and the principle involved in it would only contain the germ of new conflicts and wars.

In the case of Czechoslovakia any such attempt to solve the German minority problem by territorial adjustments would moreover lead to the absurd, morally inacceptable, and politically dangerous result of justifying German aggression by allowing Germany, though militarily defeated, to emerge from the war strengthened in territorial, economic, and psychological respects, while depriving Czechoslovakia, though a victim of German aggression, of its historic, natural, and strategic frontiers, and placing it economically and strategically as completely at the mercy of Germany as it became after Munich.

Among other things it would leave in Germany's hands valuable raw-material resources, such as the Most and Falknov coal and lignite fields which form the basis of a large part of the Third Reich's production of synthetic petrol and rubber.

It cannot be sufficiently stressed that German control of Czechoslovak territory is an essential condition for the "Drang nach Osten" and a necessary preliminary for the "Drang nach Westen".

- 3. After past experiences, especially since the advent of Nazism and the appalling mass-murders and brutalities committed by the Germans upon the Czechoslovaks, it cannot be hoped that the Czechoslovak people could live peacefully together with a major part of the German minority in Czechoslovakia.
- 4. The liberated Republic cannot, moreover, tolerate the existence, on its territory, of elements who have proved by their attitude that they regard themselves, not as citizens of the Czechoslovak State, but as members of a neighbouring and hostile nation and State, which they consider to be their proper cultural and political home (See App. 1.4). Their presence constitutes a permanent danger to the existence of the Republic, more especially as the territory in which most of them are settled is situated in the frontier areas and is therefore of the greatest importance for the defence of the State.
- 4.1 Any attempt to retain the German minority in a country in which it so gravely compromised itself as in Czechoslovakia would involve that country in a vicious circle from which it would find it difficult to escape without causing a new international crisis.

Past experiences of the nations afflicted by a German minority, and particularly during German occupation, have naturally increased their mistrust and hostility towards the members of this minority, especially the younger ones, reared and trained under Nazism; this mistrust would necessarily and naturally lead to various precautionary measures (e.g. the refusal to appoint members of such a minority to responsible functions) which would certainly be resented by the members of the minority as unfair discrimination and would produce bitterness, grievances and obstructive action on their part; this in its turn would provoke repressive measures by the Government, with consequent internal disturbances which might easily become a pretext or even cause for new wars.

- 5. Under these circumstances, and accepting the fact that it is not intended to use German methods in order either forcibly to assimilate or exterminate the 3 million Germans living on Czechoslovak territory, the transfer of a major part of the German population which manifested its actively hostile attitude towards the Czechoslovak State and which insists on regarding Germany as its cultural and political home, is nothing short of a prime necessity: it is a condition which must be fulfilled before it will be possible to speak of the internal or external security of Czechoslovakia, or, for that matter, of European security in general.
- 6. All the usual arguments against a transfer of population prove, on careful examination, to be invalid when compared with the major interests involved and the dangers arising from a continuance of the old conditions. (For their detailed discussion see App. 2.5)
- 7. While conditions of security must take precedence over any other, there are three considerations, which, in so far as they can be reconciled with the former, must influence the extent, method, and rate of the eventual expulsion or transfer in any practical scheme concerning Czechoslovakia:
- a) The transfer should not apply to those members of the German minority who have actively participated in the struggle for the liberation of the Czechoslovak Republic;

b) it should be so planned as to keep to a minimum the economic injury to the Republic, which might result from a sudden and indiscriminate removal of skilled man-power;

- c) it should not aggravate too much the problem of repatriation of displaced persons which will be one of the major problems of the immediate post-war period. The transfer of Germans from Czechoslovakia to Germany and the repatriation of displaced Czechoslovaks from Germany to Czechoslovakia should be properly coordinated and harmonised, which is quite feasible as the two movements are of opposite directions.
- 8. Having regard to all political and economic considerations, in particular those set forth above, the Czechoslovak Government feels that Czechoslovakia can, without endangering the security of the State, retain somewhat less than a third of its present German minority, up to, but not exceeding the number of 800,000. Members of the German minority up to this number will be allowed to remain

- if they have not proved disloyal towards the Czechoslovak Republic, and on condition that they will undertake, without any reservation, to bring up their children in the democratic spirit of Czechoslovak citizenship and will do nothing which would tend to prevent a gradual merging of their descendants with the Czechoslovak people in a political and cultural unity. It should not be forgotten that a large proportion of the German minority consists of Germanised descendants of the autochthonous Czech population.
- 9. As to the precise number of people affected by the proposed transfer, it is as yet impossible to give any but a very rough estimate. Taking the 1930 census figures, according to which the German minority numbered 3.2 million, and assuming that about 250,000 Germans will have been lost as war casualties (including workers who have died or permanently settled in Germany during the war), and that approximately a further 500,000 of the more pronounced Henleinists 6 and other Nazis will flee from Czechoslovakia of their own accord, we are left with a little more than 1,600,000 Germans to dispose of by a process of organised transfer.
- 9.1 This estimate, as already stated, is only approximate; many factors (including the birth- and death-rates of the German population during the six years of occupation) are as yet unknown or unavailable, and this makes it impossible to give exact figures before the whole of Czechoslovakia is liberated from German and Magyar occupation.
- 10. Conditions and methods of procedure with regard to this transfer will be formulated as soon as more accurate numerical and material data, determining the extent and technical details of the task, become known. Generally it may, however, be said that the Czechoslovak Government envisages the process of transfer as a gradual one, and one which will give the affected members of the German minority sufficient opportunity for voluntary emigration to Germany or to other countries which may be willing to accept them as immigrants.
- 11. Concurrently with the process of the transfer of the Germans, the Czechoslovak Government will carry out a systematic resettlement of the evacuated regions with Czechs, Slovaks and Ruthenes from other parts of the Republic or from abroad (Germany, Austria, Volhynia, America) and also, should they wish to migrate into Czechoslovakia, with the Lusatian Sorbs (see 11.1). Incidentally, it may be remarked that the scheme will enable the Republic to solve the problem of surplus agricultural population in the eastern parts of the Republic.

- 11.1 Lusatia, which is today a part of Saxony and Prussia, belonged from the Middle Ages (14th Century) until 1635 to the lands of the Bohemian Crown and is still inhabited by the remnants of autochthonous Slavonic elements, known as Lusatian Sorbs (Wends) and numbering about 150,000, whose language is closely related to Czech. In spite of a continuous and violent Germanisation, they have preserved their national character, language and consciousness. In 1919 the Lusatian representatives, backed by the Czechoslovak Delegation at the Peace Conference, demanded minority protection for their people.⁷
- 12. An appropriate organisation will be set up by the Czechoslovak Government and entrusted with all practical details of the transfer and re-settlement which will make it possible for the process to be carried out in the most efficient and orderly manner; for this purpose it must be in contact with, and enjoy the co-operation of, the relevant Allied bodies in occupied Germany.
- 13. To make the transfer possible without undue delay and new international complications, it is, however, necessary that Germany should accept the following commitments:
- a) to recognise as her citizens and to admit to her territory all Germans, who were formerly Czechoslovak subjects and who may be expelled or transferred to Germany, or who voluntarily emigrate there;
- b) to attend, at her expense, to these persons from the moment of their reaching her frontiers until their final settlement upon her territory, and for this purpose to make all necessary arrangements of a legislative and administrative character, including the provision of the necessary land;
- c) to honour, in an appropriate fashion, the vouchers issued by the Czechoslovak State to transferred persons as receipts for the property left behind in Czechoslovakia (such payments to be debited against Czechoslovak claims on Germany), and to exchange any German money brought by them from Czechoslovakia, should this money be no longer current in Germany;
- d) to release from German citizenship, and to allow to emigrate to Czechoslovakia any Czechs, Slovaks, Ruthenes and Lusatian Sorbs who, with the consent of the Czechoslovak Government, may wish to acquire Czechoslovak citizenship and settle in Czechoslovakia.
- 13.1 The first three of the above proposals have already been submitted to the European Advisory Commission in the Memorandum of the Czechoslovak Government dated 24 August, 1944.8

⁸ Not printed; it set forth the views of the Czechoslovak Government regarding the surrender of Germany (740.00119 EAC/8-2644). For a summary of the views of the Czechoslovak Government, see "Report by the Committee of Experts of the European Advisory Commission," Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 68, 72.

- 13.2 Germany should, of course, also retain or accept such Czechoslovak Germans who at the conclusion of hostilities will be found outside Czechoslovakia and whom Czechoslovakia may refuse to repatriate. Since there is a considerable number of such people in Germany itself, this will diminish the technical problem both of repatriation and transfer.
- 14. The group retained by the Czechoslovak Republic would contain all those who actively fought for the liberation of the Czechoslovak Republic, and those elements among the Germans for whom linguistic and cultural allegiance does not imply a political allegiance to Germany. It will further comprise most of the nationally indifferent elements who considered themselves German because of some fortuitous circumstances.
- 15. Great caution must be exercised to prevent disguised Nazis among the minority from escaping transfer with the idea of repudiating, at some future opportune moment, any engagements of loyalty entered into, and acting as instigators of new irredentist movements. For this reason it must be left to the responsible authorities of the Czechoslovak State to make the final selection of the desirable elements and to decide, after carefully examining and sifting all evidence, who are to remain and who must be transferred.

II.

- 16. To ensure against the creation of a new irredenta, and to facilitate the administrative task of selecting the people who wish to remain under the new conditions and whom it is desirable to retain, it is proposed to proceed as follows:
- 16.1 All Germans possessing Czechoslovak citizenship—with the exception of those who took an active part in the struggle for the liberation of Czechoslovakia—will be deprived of Czechoslovak citizenship by a decree or law of the Republic.
- 16.11 The fact that Germany declared all Germans in the Czech territories to be her subjects, although invalid from the point of view of the Czechoslovak laws, considerably simplifies the situation: with the exception of the comparatively insignificant number of Germans in Slovakia (who remained "Slovak" citizens), the transfer will apply to persons whom Germany regards as her citizens. But even the Germans in Slovakia had a special position in their relationship towards the German Reich, recognising special allegiance to the Reich or the Reich-German Nazi organisations: thus, for example, they were enlisted into the German (and not Slovak) army and special SS detachments.
- 16.12 It may seem that the act of depriving all Germans of their Czechoslovak citizenship, while there is no intention to transfer them all, goes beyond the demands of necessity and that a more logical procedure would be to deprive of Czechoslovak citizenship only those individual Germans who are to be transferred to Germany. On careful reflection it will, however, be recognised that the latter procedure would impose an almost hopeless task from the administrative point of view, and could therefore never achieve its object of reaching all who must be dealt with; in innumerable cases it would, moreover, leave Czechoslovak citizenship to persons who have no desire to retain it. The procedure proposed avoids these pitfalls: instead of a large-scale search for the guilty and undesirable who form the majority, the administrative task is reduced to selecting the smaller number to be retained from those who desire to remain and are recognised as reliable and desirable elements;—but it also makes the Germans who wish to regain Czechoslovak citizenship to "contract in" under clear, new conditions, which they will freely accept "en pleine connaissance de cause"

- 16.2 Germans who desire to remain in Czechoslovakia will have to apply for the restoration of their Czechoslovak citizenship. This application will be examined, and those accepted for readmission will, after a probationary period of about two years which in particular cases can be shortened, have their Czechoslovak citizenship restored with all political rights enjoyed by other citizens of the Republic. Until then the régime specified below under 17. will be applied to them. But as soon as a positive decision is reached as to their readmission, gradual mitigation of restrictions imposed by this régime can be envisaged.
- 16.21 The law depriving Germans of their Czechoslovak citizenship will specify the categories of persons who will not be granted readmission to citizenship of the Republic (persons guilty of a disloyal or hostile attitude towards the Czechoslovak Republic or her citizens) and no applications by persons from these categories will be considered.
- 17. Those Germans who, in principle, are not excluded from readmission to Czechoslovak citizenship will, pending a final decision, or if the decision is a negative one, be allowed to stay until dealt with under the transfer arrangements. They will not be subjected to any other restrictions than those ensuing from the execution of the transfer (e.g. registration, control of residence and movement etc.). Having ceased to be citizens of the Czechoslovak Republic, they cannot, of course, enjoy the political and other rights of Czechoslovak citizens. The same applies to those who will not seek readmission, and who will emigrate before arrangements for their transfer are completed.
- 18. There is no intention of confiscating the private property of persons transferred, unless it should become forfeit on the basis of a legal penalty. They will, as a rule, be allowed to take their movables with them, with the exception of goods the export of which will be generally prohibited (e.g. livestock, machines, some currencies, gold, etc.).

- 19. In return for the property left behind, the price of which will be established in accordance with an established standard, they will receive either receipts authorising them to obtain payment on account of Czechoslovak claims against the German State, the Reichsbank or German nationals, or they will be paid in German money which may be found on Czechoslovak territory.
- 20. The presence of the Magyar minority in Czechoslovakia raises problems less dangerous than those caused by the German minority; but the Czechoslovak Government reserves to itself the right to proceed in a manner analogous to the proposals of this Memorandum in respect of those elements amongst the Magyar minority which have shown themselves to be hostile to the Republic. Incidentally, the presence of a considerable Slovak minority in pre-1938 Hungary makes it possible to solve this problem largely on the basis of an exchange of population.

III.

- 21. It is not proposed to give the Germans readmitted to Czechoslovak citizenship any special status which under the present circumstances would necessarily tend to make them "second class" citizens. The ultimate aim of this plan is the elimination of the German minority in Czechoslovakia qua national minority and the integration of the people of the Republic into one national unity; and this implies that while the individual German citizens of the Republic will possess all political rights enjoyed by all other citizens, they will in principle not be allowed any special rights as a political collective, or any special rights over and above the normal rights enjoyed by every citizen of the State. In particular it is not the ultimate intention of the Czechoslovak Government, subject to approval by the free expression of the will of the Czechoslovak people, to grant the Germans and Magyars in Czechoslovakia those linguistic privileges which they have hitherto possessed and which in Central Europe constitute the most important feature of collective minority rights.
- 22. While this means that ultimately no one will be entitled to demand the use of German (or Magyar) in Czechoslovak courts or for official purposes, and that no one in Czechoslovakia will be able to claim German (or Magyar) schools for his children, it is admitted that any attempt to carry this principle into immediate practice would generally tend to impair the normal civic rights of the citizens who do not speak the language of the State; nor would it be in the interest of the Republic to deny education to children who do not possess full knowledge of the language of the State. The Czechoslovak Government is conscious of this fact and is prepared to grant the readmitted Germans certain temporary privileges or alleviations which in the past they have possessed as a part of their collective minority rights. It may be assumed, for instance, that elderly people who can no longer be expected to learn Czech sufficiently for the full exercise of their rights, will be allowed to use German before the courts and for official purposes, and that German children from a purely German environment will, at least in the first generation, be granted elementary schooling in their mother tongue. The existing linguistic privileges would thus be gradually and progressively extinguished with the least injury to the State and the individual citizen.

- 23. While the reports reaching the Czechoslovak Government from the occupied territory leave absolutely no doubt about the whole-hearted and unanimous approval which any plan to remove the German minority will arouse in the liberated Czechoslovak people, it is impossible to judge to what extent the Government will be able to obtain support for any concessions, however temporary, which it will be prepared to grant to the remaining members of the German minority. For this reason the Czechoslovak Government must reserve its decision until it has been able to ascertain the will of the nation through democratically elected representatives of the Czechoslovak people, whose ultimate attitude will be determined by circumstances which are not fully known here and some of which possibly may yet arise.
- 24. Nevertheless, it may be taken for granted, that Czechoslovakia will be prepared to accept any obligations which may be universally accepted and applied in all European States in respect of linguistic, religious, or racial minorities. In principle, however, the Czechoslovak Government would consider it extremely dangerous to grant again a special minority status to the Germans on Czechoslovak territory.
- 25. As regards religious minorities it can be taken as a matter of course that they will retain all the rights which they enjoyed in Czechoslovakia before September 1938.

TV.

Résumé:

- 1. After the past experiences between the two wars, and particularly after the unexampled acts of barbarity committed by the Germans against the Czechoslovak people during the present war, it is unthinkable that the state of affairs which existed in Czechoslovakia before Munich in respect of the German minority should be allowed to remain.
- 2. It is solely by a radical reduction in the number of Germans in the Czechoslovak Republic to a figure which would not involve any menace to the security of the Czechoslovak State and people, and which could ultimately be merged with the latter, that there can be any positive settlement of the German (and similarly of the Magyar) question in the Czechoslovak Republic.

- 3. In this way, Czechoslovakia will be able to attain the requisite homogeneity which is in the obvious interest of the security, internal peace and prosperity of every State. At the same time, however, one of the most serious causes of international conflicts and disputes will be removed, thus promoting international peace.
- 4. It is proposed to achieve these aims by a transfer of Germans (including, of course, all disloyal elements among them) which will not leave more than 800,000 of them in Czechoslovakia. (As regards Magyars, the problem can largely be settled on the basis of an exchange of population.)
- 5. The transfer must be carried out on organised lines, within the shortest possible period, i.e. about two years. The short period and an effective organisation will reduce the hardships of those transferred to a minimum, and at the same time will render possible rapid restoration and stabilisation of the political, economic and social conditions in liberated Czechoslovakia.
- 6. To achieve all these aims, it is essential, a) that Germany should be obliged by the capitulation terms to admit on her territory Germans transferred from Czechoslovakia, to recognise them as German citizens and to attend to their permanent settlement on her territory, b) that the relevant Allied bodies in occupied Germany should see to it that Germany conscientiously fulfils these obligations; these Allied bodies should likewise promote the realisation of the scheme by the appropriate means at their disposal.

By achieving the proposed schemes it will be possible to resolve the difficult and dangerous problem of the German, and analogously that of the Magyar minorities in Czechoslovakia.

The American Representative in Rumania (Berry) to the Secretary of State

Bucharest, January 4, 1945—9 p.m. [Received January 5—10: 33 p.m.]

12. Obviously greatly disturbed Foreign Minister told me yester-day evening that General Vinogradov,⁹ in the name of the ACC,¹⁰ has demanded of the Prime Minister that the Rumanian Government prepare lists by January 15 of Rumanian nationals of German race, both men and women between the ages of 16 and 40, in order that they may be transported to the Soviet Union.

Soviet authorities at the same time requested 5,000 railway cars for the transport of these persons.

Rumanian Government has protested vigorously against this proposal as being completely outside of the armistice terms but realizes it may be forced to give the demanded lists in view of Soviet contention that the German minority is engaged in extensive espionage and is hindering the Russian war effort. Government's suggestion that those Rumanian nationals of German race believed by Soviets to be dangerous be interned has been ignored. German nationals interned in Rumania and German Jewish refugees are considered temporarily unaffected by this demand. Today the Prime Minister sent me a message confirming these statements and adding that the status of the Hungarian minority is uncertain pending the outcome of the armistice talks between the Provisional Hungarian Government and the Soviets.¹¹

This latest request appears to be the culminating point of a policy of deportation that the Soviets have applied to Rumania. It was first manifested in demands for the return of former residents of Bessarabia and northern Bucovina who were living there in June, 1940. (See my 39 of November 30, 8 a. m., and my No. 75 of December 23, 9 p. m.).¹² These deportations, including thousands of persons unwilling to return have continued despite the Rumanian Government's spirited protests. A recent Radio Moscow broadcast said 36,000 people have returned to Bessarabia from Rumania and thousands more were "waiting" to return.

Next the application touched those persons, regardless of origin, who stated their "desire" to migrate to the Soviet Union and concurrently the White Russians in Rumania. This office was confidentially informed that toward the end of December the Soviet authorities presented to the Chief of Secret Police a list of 28 Rumanian nationals of Russian origin, that they wished to take. These persons have been arrested and have disappeared. Reportedly they did not participate in political activity. Rumanians naturally view this first White Russian list as a forerunner of others.

Finally, the application of the policy touches the physically vigorous element among the Rumanian Saxons and Swabians who have lived here for centuries. These people of German stock are of great economic importance to Rumania. Thus, quite aside from the humanitarian feelings that the threatened deportation arouses, the Rumanian Government foresees a grave dislocation in the country's economic life by the removal of some 300,000 citizens. Additionally it fears that if it complies with this latest Soviet demand it will sound the death knell of Rumanian internal authority.

In Bucharest, even thoughtful people believe that the policy of deportation is a step in a larger Soviet plan to bring about the dissolution of the Rumanian State. (Please see my telegrams No. 42 of November 30, 6 p. m., ¹³ and No. 58 of December 12, 8 p. m., ¹⁴). They are convinced that what is happening in Rumania forecasts future population movements from Germany and other central European countries to the Soviet Union with consequences to those countries similar to what is expected in Rumania.

From many Rumanians I have been sent appeals on behalf of Rumanian nationals forced to return to Bessarabia. Similar pleas on behalf of White Russians are now coming to me. It is inevitable that I will be deluged with petitions from some of the hundreds of thousands of people that will be affected if the declared Soviet intention to transport the youthful section of the German minority materializes.

From the beginning of the Bessarabian deportations the pleaders uniformly have based their hopes upon American political ideals of justice and freedom. They assume that what is being done in Rumania in the name of the ACC is being done upon agreement among the Soviet, British and American authorities. In view of this, I believe that as an armistice signatory the American Government cannot escape its share of censure in Rumanian eyes if large scale deportations are permitted to continue.

The Secretary of State to the American Representative in Rumania (Berry)

Washington, January 10, 1945—2 p. m.

15. Reurtels 12, January 4 and 19 January 7.¹⁵ The Department has seen General Schuyler's ^{15a} telegram no. M-235 January 6 to War Department reporting his conversation with Vinogradov on the deportation of German inhabitants from Rumania to the Soviet Union.

The Department does not see any justification under the armistice terms for the proposed Soviet action, except perhaps in the case of those Germans who, because of their service in the German armed forces, may be prisoners of war. Others, because of their participation in Nazi organizations, may have been deprived of their Rumanian citizenship, but under the armistice they would be subject to internment as German citizens, not to deportation.

The Department recognizes that the Soviet High Command must be the judge of the danger to Allied military operations represented by actual or threatened sabotage and espionage on the part of these racial Germans. The Soviet High Command of course must provide for the security of its lines of supply, and can require the Rumanian Government to take necessary measures to that end. However, since there is no provision in the armistice agreement to justify the deportation to Russia of inhabitants of Rumania, the Department does not see how the proposed orders to the Rumanian Government could properly be issued in the name of the Allied Control Commission.

You are requested to suggest to General Schuyler that he inform Vinogradov that the United States Government had no prior knowledge whatever of this project, to which consequently the agreement of this Government could not have been given; that this Government is unwilling to consider this decision as in any way involving this Government, either in its responsibilities and rights under the armistice with Rumania, or in regard to the general question of transfers of population; and that if the orders are issued in the name of the ACC this Government would be obliged to make its position clear to the Soviet and British Governments, and also to the Rumanian Government.

This matter has been discussed with the War Department, which agrees that General Schuyler should consider the foregoing instructions as authorized under paragraph 4 of his letter of instructions.

The general questions of broader policy which are involved will be discussed in a subsequent telegram.

The American Representative in Rumania (Berry) to the Secretary of State

Bucharest, January 13, 1945. [Received February 6.]

Sir: I have the honor to attach an English translation of the Note dated January 6, 1945 ¹⁷ addressed by General Vinogradov in the name of the Allied Control Commission to General Radescu, President of the Council of Ministers, in which he formally requests that all persons of German descent in Rumania within certain age classifications be mobilized for work wherever the Soviet High Command may direct. The operation of this request and the Rumanian reaction are also described in this despatch. The Rumanian Government protested strongly that the above order was beyond the scope of the armistice terms; that it would seriously disrupt the internal economy of the country; and that for humanitarian reasons this large scale labor deportation to the Soviet Union should not take place. High Rumanian Government officials have made protests to General Vinogradov, Deputy Chairman of the Allied Control Commission, and a formal protesting memorial on the above lines was planned. However, the Soviet authorities at this date appear inflexible in executing the original demand.

As telegram 59.Not printed.

Conforming to the dates contained in the Note, the Soviet authorities, through the Rumanian police, began wholesale roundups on January 10 of all Rumanians of German origin. The exact basis upon which the collection of deportees is made is not clear. A list compiled by the Rumanian authorities shortly after the coup d'état of August 23 with the cooperation of all persons of Saxon or Swabian origin is supposed to be the nominal basis. However, mere denunciation of people as being of German origin and the mere bearing of a German name have been sufficient to place persons in the deportee categories. Actual German citizens are being taken under the order; no distinction is being made between Germans and Austrians; Czech descended persons in some instances are being included; and the Foreign Minister barely prevented the interned German diplomatic personnel from joining the exodus. No exceptions appear to be made at this point, and university professors, government officials, soldiers actually on leave from the front, technicians, and other professions are included within the collections of deportees. The operations are being conducted with celerity. The families of any persons affected that are in hiding are being threatened by the Soviet authorities, and in some cases are being held until the wanted persons are found.

On January 11 some 2,000 people in Bucharest were loaded into non-heated box cars for transportation to Russia without regard for sanitation arrangements or comfort. Each person carried what food he could and these cars were locked and sealed. This office knows of one case of a woman being placed in a car with forty-five men. Departure scenes at the railway station, where the deportees were brought in trucks under armed guard, were tragic between parents and small children and between husbands and wives.

The population of Bucharest, and undoubtedly this is true of other cities in Rumania, is in a turmoil as the result of the forced transportation of the German minority, and rumors are circulating that the Hungarian minority is next for deportation, to be followed by those Rumanians against whom there may be some objection.

The Bucharest press, because of tight Soviet censorship restrictions, has been completely silent upon the matter and, in fact, it appears that the Communist Party within the National Democratic Front approves the deportation action. Peasant Party officials have remained silent. Only Viitorul, the organ of the National Liberal Party, has made what may be termed an indirect "dignified protest". It published a front page editorial upon the great difference between the aims and ideals of the Axis and the United Nations. It compared the Axis philosophy of employing "violent action and the brutal violation of all the laws of humanity" with that of "the Allied defenders of democracy and liberty and of the traditions of European civilization". On January 11 Viitorul contained an editorial indirectly posing the present deportation problem as involving moral and political responsibility both for the United States and Great Britain.

According to the latest available Rumanian census figures of 1930, there were 745,421 Rumanians of German descent which is estimated as having remained virtually constant. In the ceded areas of Bessarabia, Bucovina and part of Dobrudja 157,000 of this German minority were removed from Rumanian jurisdiction. Although the number of civilians leaving with the Germans in the advance of Russian armies is impossible accurately to estimate, the most responsible official sources here claim that they can be said to number about 50,000. The area of Northern Transylvania that is not now under Rumanian administration contains about 55,000 persons of the German minority. With these deductions the official census figures are lowered to 483,421. Likewise, the Rumanian census estimates that 40 percent of the German minority population are within the age groups specified under the Allied Control Commission's Note. This would involve about 190,000 persons as being affected, but when a further deduction is made for approximately 50,000 young men that are claimed as having been enlisted or conscripted into the Waffen SS, it means that approximately 140,000 people of German origin in Rumania are now subject to deportation.

Respectfully yours,

100. Department's infotels of January 6, 11 p. m.; January 12, 8 p. m.; January 13, 7 p. m.¹⁸ Deportation from Rumania of persons of German origin was the subject of a letter presented to Vinogradov by General Schuyler on January 12. Schuyler's letter, based on the Department's 15 January 10 to Bucharest repeated to you as 59, ¹⁸ None printed.

specifically stated the non-concurrence of the United States Government in the decision to deport Germans from Rumania and in the directive issued to the Rumanian Government in the name of the ACC. It also requested the cessation of the deportations until the matter could be fully discussed by the Soviet and United States Governments. Vinogradov replied that the contents of Schuyler's letter would be forwarded to Moscow, but that under his present instructions he could not halt the deportations.

Deportations from Bucharest began on January 10 and now appear to be nearly completed. The Department has no first-hand information on deportations from other parts of Rumania but it is reported that the total number of Germans to be deported is about 80,000. According to Soviet plans, all are to leave before January 20. Vinogradov told Schuyler that the majority of them would work in coal mines in the USSR.

Similar deportations are reported to be in progress in Bulgaria, Hungary and Yugoslavia. All persons of German origin or "race" within the specified age groups, regardless of citizenship, are included in the registration. In Bulgaria the registration orders were issued by Bulgarian officials apparently without a formal directive issued in the name of the ACC. The Department has no information on deportations from Hungary and Yugoslavia, except the report that in Hungary they are about two-thirds completed.

The Department's position on the deportations from Rumania was set forth in its 59, January 10. Further consideration of the matter here has led to the following conclusions in amplification of that position:

A. From information available to the Department it would appear that proposed draft of Germans is at least as much, if not more, a means of collecting reparation in form of labor services than a measure of security. Reasons are: 1, the intended use of deportees for Soviet reconstruction. 2, age limits of conscripts appear to have been chosen primarily with reference to ability to perform hard physical labor. Men and women over the ages of 40 and 30 respectively are fully as capable of sabotage and subversive political activity as younger persons.

B. There is no provision whatever in the Rumanian Armistice for reparation in the form of labor services and consequently no legal justification for demanding such services.

C. The Soviet argument that these people are Germans and must repair damage done by other Germans would make this question primarily a part of the reparation settlement with Germany, concerning which there has yet been no detailed discussion or agreement. This Government will not necessarily oppose reparation by Germany in the form of labor services but it is firmly convinced that such questions should be decided only after full consultation and agreement among the Allied powers and not by unilateral action on the part of the Soviet Union as an incident to armistice terms made with satellite countries.

D. In respect to the Soviet contention that the German minority is engaging in extensive espionage, this Government of course recognizes the right of the Soviet High Command to take all reasonable security measures. As indicated above, however, it doubts that a convincing case can be made on security grounds for a "labor draft" for use outside Rumania, for reasons mentioned in A above.

E. The Department is considerably concerned over what may be American public reaction to the proposed step. In spite of assurances that all cases will be considered on their merits there is likely to be created a strong impression that the Soviets are engaging in an indiscriminate forced labor draft, taking innocent persons as well as those guilty of Nazi activities and breaking up families in the process. In this connection it is noted that no indication has yet been given of the basis on which conscripts are supposed to be screened.

The Department believes that this matter can hardly be pursued further in Bucharest without a direct approach to the Soviet Government in Moscow. You are accordingly instructed to notify the Soviet Government in writing that the United States Government reaffirm the position taken by General Schuyler in his letter to General Vinogradov, namely that it cannot associate itself with the proposed deportation nor with the directives issued in the name of the ACC on that subject, and that it may be necessary for reasons of public opinion to make this position public. You should use the points made in paragraphs B and C of this telegram as main justification of our position but in your discretion you may also use other arguments adduced herein. You should also emphasize that United States position on this question is without prejudice as to future attitude of this Government on question of German labor reparation, and that it implies no change in its attitude with regard to the treatment of war criminals. No. 41

Washington, January 16, 1945.

In response to the note of November 23, 1944 from the Czechoslovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Mr. Ripka) transmitted with your despatch No. 218 of November 30, 1944,²² please deliver, if you agree, a note in reply in substantially the following terms:

"I am instructed by my Government to inform you that it has now received your note of November 23, 1944, regarding the desire of your Government to expel politically undesirable Germans from Czechoslovakia, and that it is giving the memorandum of the Czechoslovak Government, transmitted therewith, the thorough study which it requires. Meanwhile my Government desires to express the following preliminary views:

"The American Government fully appreciates the injuries suffered by Czechoslovakia at the hands of Germany and of the German minority during the past decade or so and is prepared to examine the problem in an effort to seek a satisfactory solution for the future. This solution, of course, will have to take into account the needs of Czechoslovakia referred to in your note, and also the broader aspects of the problem in its relation to general measures for the future peace and security of Europe as a whole, as well as the particular problem which will face the Governments accepting the unconditional surrender of Germany, which thereby become responsible, as occupying powers, for the control and administration of Germany.

"There will also undoubtedly arise related questions with regard to the transfer of Germans from other territories. Since this problem may therefore involve an aggregate of some millions of people, it would be a matter of major concern to the occupying powers in the maintenance of order in Germany during the absorption of such people

"This is important. Mr. Riddleberger approved the rough draft before his departure and thought that in view of its importance you might wish to have it signed by Mr. Dunn, or possibly by Mr. Stettinius in view of his recent statement on the Polish question which involves a similar problem.

²¹ An undated informal memorandum for the Director of the Office of European Affairs, H. Freeman Matthews, apparently prepared by Ware Adams of the Division of Central European Affairs, attached to the file copy of this instruction, reads as follows:

[&]quot;This particular instruction is occasioned by a note, attached, in which the Czechoslovak Government formally notifies us of its intention to expel to Germany perhaps two million Sudetens in the expectation that we will arrange to have them received there without any change of Czechoslovakia's frontier. The note from the Czechoslovak Government is so worded that silence on our part will be taken to imply concurrence. Our reply is designed to forestall precipitate action.

[&]quot;The Czech and Polish plans together contemplate throwing upwards of ten million new inhabitants into Germany during our occupation." (740.00119-EAC/11-3044)

The references in the memorandum are to Assistant Secretary of State James C. Dunn and the Chief of the Division of Central European Affairs, James W. Riddleberger.

from abroad simultaneously with the repatriation or resettlement of millions of displaced persons now within Germany.

"The American Government therefore feels that transfers of the kind contemplated in your Excellency's note should only be carried out pursuant to appropriate international arrangement, as suggested in your Excellency's address of October 8, 1944, and under international auspices. It also agrees with the Czechoslovak Government that any process of transfer should be a gradual one, in order to provide facilities for the orderly settlement of transferred persons. Pending such international arrangements, the American Government feels that no unilateral action should be taken to transfer large groups, and understands from the statements cited above that the Czechoslovak Government does not envisage any unilateral action to do so."

Please inform the Department and Ambassador Winant ²³ of the final text and date of your note to the Czechoslovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs, ²⁴ and of any further developments concerning its subject, including any British or Soviet views which may come to your attention.

MEMORANDUM

The Czechoslovak Government communicated to His Majesty's Ambassador ²⁷ on November 23rd last a memorandum on the problem of the German minority in Czechoslovakia, setting out in detail their proposals for the transfer of Sudeten Germans from Czechoslovakia after the war. It is understood that copies of this memorandum have also been addressed to the representatives in London of the United States Government, the Soviet Government and the French Provisional Government and to the European Advisory Commission. The Czechoslovak Government have invited the comments of His Majesty's Government on these proposals.

The Czechoslovak Government's proposals are related to many other aspects of the whole post-war settlement with Germany upon which final decisions have not yet been reached, and His Majesty's Government find it difficult to deal with them in isolation. His Majesty's Ambassador to Czechoslovakia has accordingly been instructed, in thanking the Czechoslovak Government for their communication, to inform them that His Majesty's Government have been interested to receive these proposals which they are studying with care and sympathy. The Czechoslovak Government's memorandum, however, raises very important issues in connexion with the whole German settlement and His Majesty's Government do not feel able to offer any observations until they have discussed these questions with their principal allies. For the time being, therefore, His Majesty's Government must reserve their attitude in regard to the Czechoslovak Government's proposals.

The British Embassy have been instructed, in informing the Department of State of the foregoing, to add that His Majesty's Government consider that the European Advisory Commission would be the most suitable forum in which to discuss these proposals when the Governments concerned are ready to begin such discussions.

Mr. Hubert Ripka 33 of the Czechoslovak Ministry for Foreign Affairs to the Charaé Near the Czechoslovak Government in Exile (Schoenfeld), at London 34

No. 4285/c/45

London, April 20, 1945.

EXCELLENCY: The American armies have victoriously fought their way in an irresistible advance through Germany as far as the western frontiers of the Czechoslovak Republic, where they are beginning to liberate Czechoslovak territory from the grip of the enemy. I need hardly tell you with what feelings of gratification this news is received by every loval Czechoslovak citizen.

The American armies are reaching the territory of a friendly State. but I regard it as extremely important both from the Czechoslovak and the Allied point of view to emphasize the fact that, as you know, the Czechoslovak frontier area, which the American troops are now entering, is inhabited mainly by a German-speaking population, and these people, though Czechoslovak citizens, are, as regards their political sentiments, with the exception of an insignificant minority, thoroughly permeated by Nazism and Pan-Germanism. It is a matter of common knowledge that this German population, in the period before Munich, was dominated almost in its entirety by Konrad Henlein, the leader of the Nazi Party in the Czechoslovak Republic and later the Gauleiter of the so-called Sudetengau, i.e. a part of Czechoslovak territory which, after Munich, was declared by Germany as having been annexed. In this respect, it is enough to mention that in 1935, 67% of these so-called Sudetic Germans voted for the Nazis, and in 1938 more than 90%. During the war they were among the most active adherents of Nazism, of Germany and of the struggle against the Allied nations and against the liberation of the Czechoslovak Republic, and they were the most relentless persecutors of loyal Czechoslovak citizens, including those whose native language is German.

³⁴ Copy transmitted to the Department by the Chargé as an enclosure to his despatch No. 270, April 21; received April 28.

It would be contrary to all principles of what is right and proper if these Germans of Czechoslovakia were regarded by the Allies as people deserving the treatment which should be accorded only to the loyal citizens of an Allied State.

The Czechoslovak Government regards the bulk of these Germans as an element dangerous to the State, and in its proclamation of April 4, it defined its policy towards them as follows:

"The terrible experience suffered by the Czechs and Slovaks at the hands of the German and Hungarian minorities will compel Czechoslovakia, when restored, to take far-reaching action against the guilty. Loyal German and Hungarian citizens who proved their fidelity to the Republic even in the most difficult times will be unaffected. The Czechoslovak citizenship of Germans and Hungarians will be confirmed only in the case of anti-Nazis and anti-Fascists who fought for Czechoslovakia before Munich and who, after March 15, 1939, were persecuted for their fidelity to Czechoslovakia, or who had to escape abroad, where they participated in the struggle for the restoration of Czechoslovakia.

The Czechoslovak citizenship of other Czechoslovak German and Hungarian citizens will be annulled. They may again opt for Czechoslovakia, but in this connection the Czechoslovak authorities will have the right to make decisions in each individual case. Condemned transgressors, if not sentenced to death, will be exiled from the Republic. The Government regards it as its duty to punish all war criminals, traitors and conscious active helpers of the German and Hungarian oppressors. The Government will carry out its task without hesitation or indulgence towards anybody."

I regard it as necessary to add to the above statement that the Czechoslovak Government also cannot regard as a loyal citizen any of those who, though residing in freedom abroad, did not act in a manner becoming a Czechoslovak citizen. I am thinking mainly of the group of so-called Sudetic Germans headed by W. Jaksch, a former Social Democratic deputy of the Czechoslovak Parliament, and I regard it as my duty to draw particular attention to this group. Although until 1938 and during the Munich crisis W. Jaksch maintained a very loyal attitude towards the Czechoslovak State, he radically changed his political trend during his residence abroad, and closely approximated to the doctrines of Pan-Germanism. Indeed, he went so far as to urge Germans from Czechoslovakia residing abroad not to fulfil their duties in the Czechoslovak Army. This policy of his which was incompatible with his duties as a Czechoslovak citizen caused a considerable part of his followers to break away from him, as they were determined to fulfil to the utmost their duties in the Czechoslovak struggle for liberation.

It is natural that W. Jaksch and those who manifested sentiments like his cannot be regarded by the Czechoslovak Government as satisfactory Czechoslovak citizens. The Czechoslovak people who, after what they have suffered at the hands of the Germans are naturally very sensitive in these matters, will also take a very critical view of those persons who failed to fulfil their duties in the struggle for liberation, who flagrantly neglected such duties or who even did what they could to sabotage the struggle for the liberation of Czechoslovakia.

In drawing attention to this circumstance I wish to say that I should be very grateful if you would be good enough to express, wherever necessary, the wish which I am expressing on behalf of my Government, that none of the so-called Sudetic Germans now living in freedom abroad, should be permitted, without the consent of the responsible Czechoslovak authorities, to enter Czechoslovak territory or to take up any occupation there in a political, administrative or similar function. It is only by means of close co-operation in this matter that, I think, it will be possible to avoid errors or misunderstandings susceptible, now or later, of causing political results of a highly undesirable kind, which, however, could be averted by the solution which I suggest.

Dear Mr. Ambassador: We take the liberty of drawing your attention to the disturbing reports from Czechoslovakia on the wholesale expropriation and expulsion of four million minority citizens of German and Hungarian stock. Recent announcements of the Prague Government have made it unmistakably clear that the racial minorities of Czechoslovakia, one third of the total pre-Munich population, are now being subjected to an administrative and military campaign of indiscriminate retribution.

We, the undersigned parliamentary representatives of the strongest loyalist party within the Sudeten population, the Social Democratic Party, are naturally much concerned with the fate of our former constituents. On the occasion of the cancellation of the Munich Agreement by the Government of the United Kingdom in August 1942 36 we took the liberty of sending the following cable to Mr. Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State:

The undersigned freely elected parliamentary representatives of 300,000 democratic Sudeten Germans are alarmed by Mr. Eden's statement that the Munich Agreement is void without safeguarding the minority rights in a new Czechoslovakia. This decision has been made without consulting the legitimate representatives of the democratic Sudeten Germans. In our view it is dangerously prejudging the future political organisation of Central Europe. We hope that the great American Democracy will not abandon the principles of the Atlantic Charter nor disappoint the confidence of our martyrs of freedom.

Wenzel Jaksch, Eugen de Witte, Franz Katz.

Unfortunately, our apprehensions have meanwhile been substantiated. As the attached extracts show beyond doubt the lack of any provisions for minority protection under the transitory measures agreed by the principal Allies has already resulted in a tragic development in Czechoslovakia. The fate of millions of members of the national minorities is being settled by a fait accompli. They are being treated worse than war criminals, who are not denied the benefit of hearing and fair trial. Retribution is being meted out to guilty and innocent alike. According to official evidence from Prague no exception is made even for former members of loyalist minority parties who have been exposed to Gestapo persecution ever since October 1938.

While we ourselves are deprived of our constitutional rights as members of Parliament by the present Czechoslovak Government we feel impelled to request some measure of inter-allied protection for the minority populations of Czechoslovakia. We do not, of course, include those criminals who have in fact been guilty of offences against both the Czech and Sudeten populations.

We have addressed this appeal to you, Mr. Ambassador, as the American Representative both in this country and on the European Advisory Commission. We much regret the necessity of troubling you amid the stress of your other work, but in view of the imminent danger of terrible loss of life and suffering which a continuation of the present situation in Czechoslovakia must involve we venture to ask for a brief interview with you at as early a date as may be possible.

Yours very truly,

WENZEL JAKSCH EUGEN DE WITTE FRANZ KATZ

Brit Govt has instructed Gascoigne to inform Hungarian Fonoff that any application to make arrangements for receiving these people in Germany must eventually be made to Control Council there, and that latter will no doubt have other tasks of greater urgency, execution of which would be prejudiced by any early attempt to carry out Hungarian Govt's proposal.

Dept has no desire to be solicitous on behalf of a group probably largely made up of Nazis. We believe however that considerations set forth in Deptel 70 June 4 41 apply to proposed mass expulsion of Germans and you may inform Hungarian Govt accordingly. You may add that we would naturally be concerned over possible added burden which such population transfers would impose on relief, transportation and other activities for which Allied Govts share responsibility; also that such action could presumably be taken only with consent of ACC in Hungary and of Allied Control Council in Germany.

Czechoslovakia. In order to save you time in going over the entire report, the following is presented as a summary:

Re-establishment of the former Czechoslovak frontier will create a number of problems affecting several parties—Czechs, Germans, Sudetenlanders, and the occupying powers. These problems will be outwardly largely of a technical nature, having to do with the transfer of property and of elements of the population. They have, however, their political side, which under the force of circumstances may easily assume serious proportions. The underlying causes of the political factors are found in the history of the Sudetenland under the Czechs (1918–1938) and since the German occupation (1938). The purpose of this paper will be (a) to recall briefly the main features of this history, and (b) to indicate the types of problems arising out of the Sudetenland situation with which the powers occupying Germany may be confronted.

The problems of particular concern to the occupying powers constitute but one part of the whole picture, every feature of which is colored by the fact that the Sudetenland is a political pressure area. The nature of the country, the distribution of the population, the mixture of ethnic groups with different political, social, and cultural loyalties, have given a distinctive imprint to the history of the country. To the complications of the past, German occupation has added six years of economic exploitation, the conscription of Sudetenlanders into the German Army, the removal of Sudeten workers to the Reich, and the immigation of Germans from bombed areas in the West. There are a number of proponents or plans for dealing with the situation: a Czech Government-in-Exile, refugee political groups, political elements at home and the principal Allied belligerent powers. It is against the political background created by such conditions that the frontier will be re-established, the local government changed, the former allegiance restored.

These changes will create problems on various levels. Determination of the frontier is primarily a problem of decision for the Allied governments or for the authorities who determine the conditions for cessation of hostilities and peace and who will secure the observance of those conditions. Then there are the problems primarily for the German and Czechoslovakian States relating to any conventions or other agreements they may enter into to implement a treaty, to regulate transfers of property, and the like. In this respect it may be borne in mind that the interests of the German State will for a period be represented by the occupying powers, and those of the Czechoslovakian State, if not represented by others, will be at least strongly influenced by USSR support. Finally, there will be problems on the local level arising out of the new arrangements, relating to the enforcement of the decisions of higher authorities and to easing the disruption of local life occasioned by such great changes.

The occupying powers may be partly involved in all of such problems, insofar as they may be asked to give assistance, in the demarcation of the frontier, for example, or may enter into provisional arrangements as one of the authorities temporarily exercising the functions of the German State. The problems which will be peculiarly their concern, however, are those on a local level, on the solution of which peace and order and the economic existence of the local communities may in some measure depend. In this connection the problems arising on the German side of the frontier will probably be much less troublesome than those on the Czech side. Nevertheless, problems will arise on the German side; repercussions will be felt; and the solution of numerous difficulties will depend upon collaboration between the authorities on both sides. These problems may be grouped under the following headings:

- A. Transfer of sovereignty;
- B. Change of nationality and minority problems; C. Protection of individual rights;
- D. Economic and technical problems

From the consideration of these problems, two things stand out: (1) the advisability of some sort of preliminary agreement between Czechoslovakia and the Allied powers dealing with the Sudetenland question; (2) the advisability of having whatever arrangements with Czechoslovakia undertaken by the tripartite authorities rather than the zonal authorities.

One of the most difficult problems will be that arising out of the Czech Government's expressed intention of expelling large numbers of the Sudeten Germans. In this matter the interests of Czechoslovakia and the occupying powers may collide. The Czechs have an interest in expediting this expulsion as much as possible; it would reflect popular feeling against the Germans and would present the occupying powers with a fait accompli. It might be to the interest of the occupying powers, on the other hand, to avoid or postpone such large-scale transfers of population in order not to be burdened with this additional responsibility. Considerable difficulties might be avoided by a preliminary agreement upon the question between Czechoslovakia and the occupying powers for Germany and Austria whose zones border on Czechoslovakia—the USSR, Great Britain, and the United States.

In a great many situations, complications will be obviated if agreements are reached on the level of the tripartite rather than the zonal authorities. The problem is that of avoiding the development of one situation in the USSR zone, another in the British, a third in the American; such as might occur, for example, if one zone refused to admit expelled Sudetenlanders, with the consequence that the entire flow was channelled into the others.

No. 58

BUDAPEST, June 19, 1945. [Received June 28.]

I beg leave to add that at the time of my conversation with Dr. Gyöngyösi 42 today, when he handed me the note above-mentioned,43 I took the opportunity to speak to him in the sense of the Department's telegram Number 96 of June 14, 1945 regarding the proposed treatment of members of the German minority in Hungary.

The Minister stated that the Hungarian Government had no intention of dealing with this matter otherwise than by agreement with the Allies; there was no intention for the present of transferring to Germany any large group from the German minority here. The Hungarian Government recognized that this was a matter for consideration jointly by the Allies and Hungary. Such consideration would be facilitated, as the Minister hoped, by the early establishment of diplomatic representation on behalf of the Hungarian Government not only at the principal Allied capitals but also in states contiguous to Hungary. Having in mind the statement quoted in the Department's telegram Number 96, I mentioned to the Minister that according to some reports 340,000 persons were involved in the alleged proposal to expel Germans from Hungary. The Minister said that this figure was greatly exaggerated and that probably no more than 200,000 Germans in this country were involved.

Respectfully yours,

PARAPHRASE OF TELEGRAM FROM FOREIGN OFFICE TO WASHINGTON DATED JUNE 22ND, 1945

My immediately following telegram ⁴⁴ contains text of instructions I proposed sending to Mr. Nichols. But before despatching these I am anxious to know the views of the State Department. Please discuss these draft instructions with State Department and let us have any comments they have to make as soon as possible. You should point out that we recognise that the matter in its immediate aspect concerns the Americans more closely than ourselves since they occupy at present a large part of Czechoslovakia and also their zone of occupation in Germany marches for many miles with the Czech frontier.

- 2. It is in our view important that we should make clear to the Czechs that it will be for the Allied Control Commission in Germany, when the main questions of principle have been decided between the Governments, to decide when and by what stages German minorities outside the frontiers of Germany can be admitted into that country. This question will affect the general administration of Germany far more closely than that of the repatriation to Germany of Reich Germans now in Czechoslovakia, which according to His Majesty's Ambassador in Prague is in the Russian view a matter for the Control Commission to decide.
- 3. It seems to us that a full exchange of views with the Americans on the whole question of transfers of ethnic minority groups in Europe is desirable, with special reference to United States proposals 45 as reported in Prague telegram No. 44.46 Such an exchange of views might lead up to tripartite discussion on the subject at the forthcoming meeting of the "Big Three".47 Will you sound the State Department on the latter proposal and let us know their reactions to it?

"Although the text of the message referred to was apparently made available to the Department of State (see memorandum to the British Embassy, July 11, p. 1262), it has not been found in Department files.

⁴⁶ i.e., from the British Embassy in Praha to the Foreign Office. No copy found in Department files.

⁴⁷ Reference is to the conference in Berlin between President Truman, British Prime Minister Churchill, and Generalissimo Stalin.

⁴⁶ Apparently reference is to the American proposal that the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union make a common approach to the Czechoslovak and Yugoslav Governments on the question of the expulsion of Hungarians from Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Rumania into Hungary. See telegram 4462, June 4, 7 p. m., to London, repeated to Moscow as No. 1216, vol. rv, p. 929. For documentation regarding the interest of the United States in the transfer of Hungarian populations from Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, see ibid., pp. 928 ff.

4. We have now been approached by the United States Embassy on the lines anticipated in Prague telegram No. 44. They are being informed of the instructions sent to you in this and my immediately following telegram.

221. From government source it is learned that no measures have vet been taken by Hungarian authorities to deport Swabs.48 Russians have deported Hungarians with German names in Trans-Tisza region and from environs Budapest during the last 4 months. Number probably does not exceed 30,000. National Land Reform Council has considered Swab question in relation to land reform, and in the county of Baranyai Swabs in 11 villages were dispossessed and approximately 20,000 interned in camp near Bonyhad. Office of Public Welfare in Ministry of Interior now charged with handling of these matters has recently ordered the camp's dissolution.

Swabs have been divided into four categories: (1) Leading members of Volksbund 49 and SS 50 whose property will be confiscated and who will be interned and eventually deported. (2) Ordinary members of Volksbund whose property will be confiscated but who will be moved into houses formerly occupied by those in category 1. They will work on public labor but will receive wages. (3) Swabs who supported Fascist ideas and will be transplanted within the frontiers. (4) Swabs who will suffer no restrictions.

Political behavior of Swabs will be judged individually by court of three consisting nominee from Office of Public Welfare having qualifications of judge, a local Hungarian, and Swab, who will be nominated by local Land Claimant Committee. With one exception noted. no internment has been ordered though political police have arrested number of Swabs but for political conduct only. Swabs have been transplanted in following communities: Urom, Pilisborosjeno, Soroksar, Taksony, and Budaors. In Budaors 600 persons were moved to houses of friends and relatives. In general, measures are taken after individual consideration and not collectively. Certain counties have tendency to handle the Swab question more radically and in disregard of measures taken by government authorities.

Official sources state no large deportation of Swabs will take place inasmuch as country is in need of manpower to replace the Jewish deportations. Some 250,000 out of original German population of 540,000 would be subject to deportation as members of Volksbund. According to information now available probably not more than 20% this number will eventually be removed from the country.

44. Regardless of the importance and gravity of Zecho-Russian relations, the outstanding issue in Zecho, on which the country's reconstruction depends, is solution of the minority problem involving transfer to Germany and Hungary of about three million Czech nationals who constitute 20% of the country's population.⁵¹ Replacement of minority people by approximately the same number of Czechos, 90% of whom will have to be uprooted and transferred, constitutes the second and related phase of this problem. Transfer and replacement of minorities will involve 40% of Zecho population.

Zecho Govt realizes that transfers must be undertaken in agreement with the Allied Govts. However it is essential that the earliest possible agreement be reached in this matter. All reconstruction is makeshift until the transfer problem is solved. The people of Zecho demand an early solution or at least an agreement outlining the proposed stages of the transfer and, most important of all, the time envisaged to complete the operation. This problem unsolved presents the greatest danger to President Beneš' prestige. The possibility cannot be excluded that the situation affords opportunity for a dramatic leader with radical support to arouse the people and seek solution by force, on the model of similar action elsewhere in Europe after 1918.

The Czechoslovak Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Clementis) to the American Chargé in Czechoslovakia (Klieforth) 52

7359/II/S/1945

Ркана, July 3, 1945.

Monsieur le Chargé d'Affaires: On behalf of the Czechoslovak Government I have the honour to make the following communication:

Prior to the cessation of hostilities the President of Czechoslovakia and the Czechoslovak Government submitted to the Allied Governments a detailed memorandum accounting for the political necessity to evacuate a predominant part of the German and Hungarian population out of this country.

In this way, they acted as interpreters of elemental and unanimous wishes of the Czech and Slovak nations, who, anxious about the future of the State, entertain the desire to exclude from their midst any elements, that proved by their attitude to have been propagators of national hatred, willing instruments of hostile propaganda and instigators of dissension among States. The ultimate phase of the struggle for liberation strengthened in the Czechoslovak people the conviction that without the removal of a great majority of Germans and Magyars, by the way of transfer, no sound and peaceful development of our State and no lasting peace and stability in Central Europe could be secured.

The proposals contained in the aforesaid memorandum met with agreement, that is to say, no particular objection in principle has been raised. It has merely been pointed out by all our Allies that the transfer must proceed on organised lines, according to plan and in accord with relevant allied bodies. In view of the fact that in this transfer 2 to $2\frac{1}{2}$ a million of Germans and approximately 400.000 Magyars are involved, the Czech Government came to the conviction that it is indispensable to carry out this scheme according to plan and on organised lines. The Czechoslovak Government is preparing a plan and a proper organisation of the transfer.

As to the transfer of Germans out of Czechoslovakia, the Czechoslovak Government would suggest that the Great Powers, performing the control over Germany, determine in accord with the Czechoslovak Government the number of people to be transferred into the respective zone of occupation and within fixed intervals. The technical execution of the transfer could be secured by the mediation of Czechoslovak coordinating missions, to be attached to the headquarters of each zone of occupation.

⁵² Copy transmitted to the Department by the Chargé in his despatch 42, July 5; for text of despatch, see Foreign Relations, The Conference of Berlin (The Potsdam Conference), 1945, vol. 1, p. 225.

In respect of the transfer of the Magyars, the delegate of the Czechoslovak Government could discuss this question with the Control Commission in Budapest, to the effect that a major part of the transfer of the Magyar population out of Slovakia could be carried out on the basis of exchange of population, for there are approximately 345.000 Slovaks living in Hungary, who are desirous to be moved into Slovakia.

As stated above, the Czech and Slovak nations consider unanimously the transfer of Germans and Hungarians an essential necessity for the future of the Czechoslovak State and for the preservation of peace in Central Europe. It is, therefore, obvious that the attention of the entire Czechoslovak public opinion is drawn to this question, which is undoubtedly the most burning of all problems, the solution of which the Czechoslovak Government is endeavouring to attain. Any postponement of its settlement cannot but considerably disquiet all Czech and Slovak population.

As long as this elemental problem is not solved, all administrative, economic and social reconstruction and consolidation of the State is being hampered and delayed.

I should, therefore, Monsieur le Chargé d'Affaires, feel very grateful if you would convey this point of view of the President of the Czechoslovak Republic and of the Czechoslovak Government to the President Truman so as to make this question an object of discussion and decision for the coming conference of the Three.

A similar note is being addressed to representatives of the Governments of Great Britain and USSR.

The Department of State to the British Embassy

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State has considered the telegram of June 22, 1945 (512/15/45) from the Foreign Office to the Embassy and the draft instructions to Ambassador Nichols in Praha (6652, June 22, 1945 53).

The views of the United States with regard to the transfer of minorities from Czechoslovakia were made known to the Czechoslovak Government on January 31, 1945, in answer to its note of November 23, 1944, in the following terms:

[Here follow paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of the quoted portion of instruction No. 41, January 16, to the Chargé near the Czechoslovak Government in Exile at London, printed on page 1246.]

⁵³ Not found in Department files.

Inasmuch as there has been no reason to alter these views since they were communicated to the Czechoslovak Government, the Department of State is in agreement with the draft instructions to Ambassador Nichols that the determination of the method and timing of the repatriation of the Reich Germans now in Czechoslovakia and the transfer of the German minority in Czechoslovakia must be left to the Allied Control Council in Germany.

Since the receipt of the Foreign Office telegram, a note, dated July 3, 1945, has been received from the Czechoslovak Government stating that, since the Allied States had made no objection in principle to the proposed transfer of the German and Hungarian minorities, the Czechoslovak Government was preparing a plan for an organised and orderly transfer.

The Department's reply ⁵⁴ to the Czechoslovak note reiterates the views of the United States, as set forth above, and requests the Czechoslovak Government to bring its plan for the repatriation of Reich Germans and the transfer of the minorities immediately to the attention of the Allied States represented on the Control Council in Germany and the Control Commission in Hungary through the appropriate Czechoslovak Coordinating Missions attached to these bodies.

The Department of State believes that an exchange of views on the whole question of the transfers of ethnic minority groups in Europe is not required at this time in view of the clear statements of policy by the British and American Governments, and could be deferred pending a possible discussion of this question at the forthcoming tripartite conference.

at hands of Germans and German minority during past decade and was prepared to examine question in effort to arrive at satisfactory solution. US pointed out that solution will have to take into account broader aspects of problem in relation to future peace and security in Europe as well as particular problems facing Govts responsible for military occupation in Germany.

In view of importance of questions of minority transfers for European peace as a whole, US Govt believes that transfers as proposed in Zecho notes Nov 23, 1944 and July 3, 1945 should be carried out only on organized lines and in accordance with international agreement. US also appreciates importance attached by Zecho Govt to early solution of problem as basis for national rehabilitation and reconstruction. Therefore US Govt is gratified that Zecho Govt is preparing plan for organized transfer of minority population which will take into account particular problems facing Allied powers. If plan is presented immediately upon completion to Control Council Germany and Allied Control Commission Hungary, US Govt confident it will receive immediate consideration by states represented on these bodies and will be discussed with appropriate Zecho authorities. The Czechoslovak Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Clementis) to the American Ambassador in Czechoslovakia (Steinhardt)⁷⁶

[No. C.20.532/45/II]

Prague, August 16, 1945.

Monsieur L'Ambassadeur: In your note of the 2nd inst.,⁷⁷ on the instructions of your Government, you communicated to the Czechoslovak Minister for Foreign Affairs the text of an agreement reached by the Great Powers represented at the Berlin Conference regarding the transfer of Germans.

The Czechoslovak Government have accepted with gratitude the decision whereby the Great Powers represented at the Berlin Conference have agreed to the transfer of the German population from Czechoslovakia. By this decision the three Allied Great Powers have taken an important step towards the ensuring of peace in Central Europe. As they have stressed in their previous notes dealing with this matter, the Czechoslovak Government are convinced that peace in Central Europe could not be regarded as ensured and lasting if the minorities which participated to such an extent in the unleashing of this last war should be left within the state for the destruction of which they strove.

⁷⁴ In telegram 420, August 13, 6 p. m., the Representative in Hungary reported having been informed by a Hungarian Government official that it was estimated that over 300,000 Germans previously in Hungary had declared themselves of German nationality and that another 100,000 though declaring German to be their mother tongue had described themselves as of Hungarian nationality and in many cases had rendered patriotic service against Nazi forces (840.4016/8-1345).

To United States Political Adviser for Germany, Robert D. Murphy.

⁷⁶ Transmitted to the Department by the Ambassador in his despatch 43, August 17; received September 5.

 $^{^{77}}$ For the instructions to the Ambassador relative to the communication of text of the Potsdam agreement on transfer of Germans, see telegram 93, July 31, 10 p. m., to Praha, p. 1265.

The Czechoslovak Government equally welcome the fact that the Berlin Conference has already appointed an Allied organ to carry out this decision.

If the three Allied Great Powers agreed that the transfer should be carried out in an orderly and humane manner, they only thereby gave expression to the standpoint maintained by the Czechoslovak Government from the outset.

As the Czechoslovak Government took the liberty of informing you in their earlier communications, the whole administrative, economic, financial and social restoration and consolidation of the state are held back and partly even rendered impossible as long as the transfer is not effected. The Czechoslovak Government are, therefore, particularly interested that the Allied Council in Germany should accomplish the tasks with which it has been entrusted by the Berlin agreement on transfer in the shortest possible space of time so that, now that the harvest work is over, the transfer of the German population from Czechoslovakia might be started as soon as possible and carried out within a period of about one year. In order to make it easier for the Allied Control Council to execute its tasks in the matter of the transfer, the Czechoslovak Government are prepared to send to Berlin a delegation of experts with all the necessary material and appropriate proposals. The Czechoslovak Government would be grateful if the Government of the United States would kindly notify thereof their representative on the Control Council.

The Berlin agreement makes no mention of the exchange of the Hungarian population in Czechoslovakia for the Czechoslovak population in Hungary. If, however, the three Allied Great Powers, represented at the Berlin Conference, expressed their agreement with the transfer of Germans from Czechoslovakia, it may be presumed that these Great Powers also agree with the exchange of the Hungarian population, for in favour of this exchange and its quick accomplishment speak the same reasons, dictated by considerations for the ensuring of peace and quiet in Central Europe as well as by the urgent need for quick restoration and consolidation of the state from the administrative, economic, financial, social and other aspects. as in the case of the transfer of Germans from Czechoslovakia. Czechoslovak Government, therefore, request that the Control Council in Budapest should be charged, with regard to the exchange of Hungarian population for Slovakian population, with tasks analogous to those entrusted to the Control Council in Berlin in the matter of the transfer of German population. The Czechoslovak Government are prepared to send to Budapest a delegation of experts analogous to that which they contemplate sending to Berlin.

A similar note is being addressed to the representatives of the Government of the United Kingdom and USSR.

> Berlin, August 17, 1945—9 p. m. [Received August 17—6:30 p. m.]

314. A two-hour session of the Coordinating Committee of the Control Council 78 today was chiefly interesting because of the long discussion of the report on "orderly transfers of German populations" which the Council has to prepare in compliance with section XIII of the report of the Tripartite Conference of Berlin.

General Clay 79 took the position that the section of the report dealing with discussions with the Governments of Poland and Czechoslovakia and the ACC (Allied Control Commission) of Hungary to arrive at agreement with regard to the expulsion of Germans should be handled by the Political Division of the Council, leaving the study of the reception and settlement of the refugees to the Prisoner of War and Displaced Persons Divisions. General Robertson 80 (British) insisted that the Council's study be limited to a report by the Manpower Division on the number of refugees which have already entered Germany and the additional number which could be accommodated. The committee finally deferred to General Sokolovsky's 81 insistence that the report should be prepared by the Political Division. Both Sokolovsky and General Koeltz 82 (French) made the assertion that under the Potsdam Agreement, Germany would be predominantly an agricultural country and that it would be the agricultural sections of Germany which would mainly have to provide new homes for the displaced populations.

General Clay's inquiry as to the number of Germans already expelled, General Sokolovsky said that while he did not have definite figures, he understood that some four and half million Germans from East Prussia, Pomerania and Silesia and another 700,000 from Czechoslovakia had already entered the Russian zone, and that probably one million additional would be expelled by Holland [Poland?] and that Hungary and Czechoslovakia would each want to send out about half a million more Germans from their territories. General Robertson mentioned the necessity of the Political Division's report occupying itself with the question of the "orderly and humane transfer" of these populations.

General Clay announced that at the next Coordinating Committee meeting he would present a draft of a military government law for the decartellization and "decombination" of German industry.

authorities are continuing, at any rate by indirect means, to expel the remaining German inhabitants from the German territories handed over to Polish administration. The difficulties created for the Control Commission, already formidable as a result of previous expulsions, are thus daily becoming greater.

On August 27th His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs 86 directed the attention of the recently appointed Polish Ambassador in London 87 to this matter and asked him to make inquiries. The question is, however, one which concerns all the occupying powers. His Majesty's Government propose therefore that the British, French, Soviet and American representatives in Warsaw should jointly make urgent representations to the Polish Provisional Government to follow not only the letter but the spirit of the request made to them at the Potsdam Conference. It could be pointed out to the Polish Provisional Government that these transfers of population have already been accepted in principle but if they are to be effected in the orderly and humane manner contemplated by the Three Powers at Potsdam and if the situation in Germany is not to get completely out of hand, it is essential that further expulsions should be suspended until the whole question has been reviewed by the Control Council. In the meantime no measures should be taken which make it impossible to Germans to remain in territories administrated by the Poles.

His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires 88 is instructed to propose to the United States Government the issue of instructions in this sense to the United States Ambassador in Warsaw.

A similar communication is being made to the Soviet Government and to the French Provisional Government.

There are two groups of Germans they desire to expel from Czechoslovakia. Of this million it is estimated only 200,000 or 300,000 have been repatriated to Germany. The Czech authorities state that it has not been possible to repatriate the balance due to the failure thus far of American, British and Soviet authorities to cooperate. (b) Approximately 2,500,000 Sudeten Germans who were residents of Czechoslovakia before outbreak of war or since then. Of these 2,500,000 Czech authorities state that not more than 200,000 have left Czechoslovakia voluntarily or been expelled. Adding to this 200,000 approximately 800,000 who will be permitted to remain because of their loyalty to Czechoslovakia state approximately 1,500,000 are to be expelled under Potsdam Agreement.

As large number of Czechs and Slovaks have returned to Czechoslovakia who are without houses or means of earning a livelihood Czech authorities are insistent that Potsdam Agreement be implemented as soon as possible. They take the position that they reluctantly agreed to suspend expulsions pending arrangements for an "orderly and humane" procedure but cannot agree to further delay. They point out that the entire administrative, political, economic, financial and social rehabilitation of Czechoslovakia is being blocked by the failure of Allied Control Commission to approve a schedule of orderly and humane expulsions. They emphasize that they offered over a month ago to send a delegation to Berlin to agree with Allied Control Commission on a schedule of orderly and humane expulsions and apparently regard Allied Control Commission's failure to take correct [corrective?] action as dilatory. They refer to statistics made public by American military authorities of millions of non-Germans who have been repatriated from Germany to their respective countries as evidence that there is room in Germany to take back its own refugees and to absorb the Sudeten Germans, particularly if a weekly schedule of absorption is agreed upon. They also point out that a large Russian army continues to consume Czechoslovakia's limited food supply, that they have had to appeal to UNRRA 5 for assistance and that food shipped into Czechoslovakia requires longer transportation than if the supplies are made available in Germany to Germans expelled from Czechoslovakia. Finally they urge that as the political stability of Czechoslovakia which the US and Great Britain desire to maintain and strengthen is dependent on earliest possible agreement on a schedule of expulsions that the matter be given immediate attention.

information concerning Germans still to be expelled from those countries under the terms of the Potsdam Agreement. At the tenth meeting of the Committee it was made clear that this request should be transmitted by identical notes presented by the four powers through the usual diplomatic channels. At the seventh meeting of the Political Directorate, on Sept 28, the terms of such a note were agreed upon as follows:

"The Allied Control Council for Germany has been charged with the responsibility of studying the question of transfer of Germans out of (blank) in an orderly and humane manner, and of preparing a report making recommendations on this question under section VIII [XIII?] of the Potsdam Agreement. It is accordingly necessary to have information as to the number of Germans who are to be transferred out of (blank), and also as to their age (showing persons over 60 and under 12) sex and occupation. The Allied Control Council accordingly requests, through the Govts of the United States, the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, the United Kingdom and France, this information from the (blank) Govt as soon as it can conveniently be given."

The Dept is accordingly requested to transmit the above message to the Govts of Poland and Czechoslovakia and the Allied Control Commission for Hungary on behalf of the Allied Control Council for Germany.

Berlin, September 30, 1945—noon. [Received September 30—11:38 a. m.]

652. The seventh meeting of the Political Directorate was held on September 28 with Mr. Steel ²⁰ presiding.

On the matter of population transfers, and the proposal of the US member that the Czech offer to send a delegation to Berlin to discuss this question be accepted the French member ²¹ suggested that the Control authority should formulate its own plans before consulting the Czechs, and also that the refugees already in Germany should be provided for before those from outside. Mr. Sobolev ²² agreed generally with the French views and stated that enough facts are already known to begin now on the planning. Mr. Heath ²³ stressed the delay which had already occurred on this matter and suggested that, at least, preliminary talks could be had with the Czechs. Mr. Steel suggested that primary responsibility in this matter now lies with the Directorate of Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons and that the Political Directorate should merely communicate its views to them. He also stated that it would be appropriate for the Control authority to send observers into the Sudetenland. Accordingly, it was decided to send a communication to the Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons Directorate stating that the Political Directorate favored the acceptance of the Czech delegation as soon as the Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons Directorate considers that such a delegation can make a useful contribution to the settlement of this problem.

Mr. Heath presented a paper ²⁴ stating that whereas the Czechs had given formal notification of their willingness to suspend expulsion, the Poles had not done so. He proposed that the Council formally repeat to the Polish Government the request to suspend expulsions contained in the Potsdam Agreement. Mr. Sobolev felt this matter to be too important for settlement in the Directorate and suggested it be presented in the Coordinating Committee. He suggested that the Soviet member ²⁵ of that Committee might be opposed to such a move. Mr. Steel stated that he believed the British would favor it. The matter will be prepared for submission by the US member to the Coordinating Committee at its next meeting.

Mr. Steel then brought up the Coordinating Committee's decision that identical notes be sent to the Governments of Poland and Czechoslovakia and the Allied Commission for Hungary requesting information concerning the Germans still to be expelled from those countries. The Committee had decided that identical notes be presented by the four powers through usual diplomatic channels. The text of a note was agreed, based upon a draft which Mr. Heath had submitted. (See my No. 615, September 29.) This message is being sent by the four powers to Poland and Czechoslovakia, but France is not sending it to the Allied Commission in Hungary since she is not represented on it. In this connection, Mr. Steel mentioned the opinion of the British Government that the procedure of sending identical notes through the

He recognized that the Soviet member was bound by his Government's instructions, but he wished the record to show that the British Government would prefer a simpler mechanism, and might raise the point again. Mr. Heath stated that the Department hopes that the neutral countries may have some minimum representation in Berlin before too long a delay.²⁶

417. As requested ²⁷ my comments on USPolAd Berlin 621 September 25 to the Department are as follows:

Ever since the Potsdam decision approved the transfer of Germans from Czechoslovakia to Germany the Czech Government has been endeavoring to approach the Allied authorities in Berlin with a view to arranging for an orderly and humane transfer. Thus far the Czecho Government has not been permitted to submit its plan to the Allied authorities in Berlin who without having given the Czechs a hearing appear to be determined to delay all transfers until next spring. These dilatory tactics are construed by Czech Government and public as deliberately intended to oblige Czechoslovakia to feed, clothe and house throughout the winter not only Sudeten Germans but Germans who fled to Czechoslovakia to escape the Soviet armies as well.

Considering the inhumane treatment Czechs suffered at hands of many of these same Germans for over 6 years and the extent to which their patience is now being strained by the refusal of Allied authorities to permit them to expel even the worst offenders, it is surprising that there has been so little ill treatment of the Germans in Czechoslovakia and so few irregular expulsions or voluntary departures. In this connection it is important to bear in mind that the expulsion of the Germans from Czechoslovakia is by far the most important political issue in the country. Every prominent Czech and Slovak politician from extreme right to extreme left is as much committed to expulsion as are the American, British and Soviet Governments by the Potsdam decision. With coming of cold weather it is quite possible that serious outbreaks may take place occasioned by refusal to permit any expulsions rather than by a failure to agree to wholesale transfers. I have felt for sometime that Allied consent to a moderate number of transfers which would permit the Czechs to rid themselves of some of the worst offenders would go far to relieve tension which is steadily mounting. Only yesterday the leading Communist newspaper Rude Pravo again referred to opposition by the "Western Powers" to expulsion of Germans from Czechoslovakia and again asserted that Potsdam decision agreeing to expulsion had been result of Soviet initiative in forcing US and Great Britain into line. Having been a party to the Potsdam decision any failure by the Soviet member of the Allied Control Council in Berlin to agree at this time to a schedule of orderly and humane transfers should be regarded in my opinion as having as its motive a desire to place the US in an unfavorable light before the Czech Government and public, as it is generally understood by the Czechs that transfers must be made into the US zone of occupation. Now that the trend of public opinion in Czechoslovakia is beginning to strongly favor the US it would be most unfortunate if this trend were to be abruptly reversed as result of further delay in implementing the Potsdam decision.

Insofar as concerns the reservations in USPolAd's telegram under reference it seems to me that overdue arrangements for orderly and humane transfers might well prevent further alleged mistreatment of German elements in Czechoslovakia rather than as suggested that "entries are the result of treatment of German elements in Czechoslovakia that prevents orderly and humane transfer", a process of reasoning I am unable to comprehend.

As both sides of the Czech-German frontier are controlled by US armed forces and as this border is closed, it is also difficult for me to understand how any considerable number of Germans can be "entering the US zone" unless the US military authorities consent.

In conclusion, I am constrained to express concern lest the appearance by some of our military authorities, as indicated by the telegram under reference, of favoring the German population as against our Czech Allies may in the course of time have serious political consequences in Czechoslovakia particularly in the struggle between the Communists and the Moderates for control of the country.

Full information on which statement relative to treatment of Germans by Czechs was based is not available here but has been requested. Military authorities here do state, however, that US military personnel in Czechoslovakia have been eve witnesses of instances where German population of Czech villages has been instructed to report at a given meeting place and has been forcibly evicted, frequently being stripped there or on road of few personal possessions being carried and also being beaten if resistance was shown to eviction. This treatment has been of sufficient frequency or sufficiently widespread, I am informed, to cause concern among US military commanders over anti-Czech sentiments which have developed as a consequence among their personnel.

Relative to dilatory tactics of "Western Powers" in expulsion of Germans from Czechoslovakia and entrance of Czech Mission to present arguments therefor, following action has been taken in Political Directorate, Allied Control Authority. On September 21, US delegate introduced a paper 34 recommending acceptance of Czech Government offer to send special temporary delegation to discuss population transfers. Paper was discussed at September 28 meeting of Directorate.35 In meantime, however, responsibility of population transfers had been shifted to Prisoner of War and Displaced Persons Directorate, so Political Directorate referred matter to latter with the favorable recommendation that the delegation be received as soon as the POW Directorate ³⁶ feels that the delegation will be of assistance.
- 4. In the POW Directorate, the US delegate 37 on Sept 14, introduced for consideration a memorandum 38 by which the powers occupying Germany agreed to receive back, each in its own zone, those German nationals who fled into Austria and Czechoslovakia as a result of the war. It was further provided that movement of these Germans would commence as soon as coordination by transportation officials could be effected and was to be completed, if possible, prior to Nov 1, 1945. When this memorandum came up for discussion on Sept 19, the close connection of its subject matter to that of the control of movements of population then under discussion by the Coordinating Committee was recognized, so action was postponed until the next meeting of the Directorate. At the latter on September 29, the British and French members 39 argued for postponement of consideration in that to them the matter was part of broader question still being studied and planned for. The Soviet member 40 agreed that repatriation of German refugees from Austria and Czechoslovakia was part of a larger problem but that all movements would be arrested if complete plan were waited for, hence he suggested that a decision on certain phases of the problem be reached. The US member pressed for immediate action on the paper. Failure to reach an agreement led to consideration being deferred to the next meeting of the Directorate (Oct 9) at which time the US member stated he would ask for a vote on the proposal.
- 5. At a higher level, the Coordinating Committee considered on Oct 3 an American proposal which stated that the Czechoslovak Govt

He stated that the Russians had had no assurance that the Czechoslovaks had agreed to stop expulsions and that most of the refugees now entering the Soviet zone of Germany are from Czechoslovakia. He refused, however, to agree to a request for suspension addressed to Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Austria in spite of the Potsdam Agreement.

MURPHY

840.48 Refugees/10-1245

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews)

Berlin, October 12, 1945.

Dear Doc: I have hesitated sending you the enclosed memorandum setting forth a point of view regarding the evacuation of the German population from the territory east of the Oder-Neisse line and from Czechoslovakia, for the reason that at Potsdam the American delegation did what it could to have the record show that while we agreed with the political decision, we insisted on its execution in an orderly and humane manner.

We here are not in a position to supply a complete picture of what has happened during the past months because we are unable to obtain an accurate account of what has happened from the Soviet and Polish authorities and we have not been able to send observers into the area for first-hand inquiry. However, scattered reports do come to us through OSS 44 and other sources, and individual members of the staff in Berlin have opportunity to see a cross section of the refugees who arrive in Berlin, notwithstanding the stringent restrictions against the entry of additional German civilians into the Berlin area.

I pass this on to you for whatever it may be worth, simply because I am uncomfortable in the thought that somehow in the future we may be severely blamed for consenting to be party to an operation which we cannot ourselves control and which has caused and is causing such large scale human suffering. There is, of course, the risk that even mentioning the matter exposes one to the charge of "softness" to the Germans. In this, as in respect to one or two other phases of the situation, I am not so much concerned regarding what is happening to the German population as I am regarding our own standard of conduct, because I feel that if we are willing to compromise on certain principles in respect of the Germans or any other people, progressively it may become too easy for us to sacrifice those same principles in regard to our own people. There are some features of the American way of life which I know we would not want to see jettisoned.

Yours ever, Bob

[Enclosure]

Memorandum by the United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy)

I shall set down for the Department my view of a situation concerning which I know our authorities are generally aware, but which I feel can only be fully understood in terms of the personal impression it has made on many Americans who are daily witnesses to the commonplace spectacle.

The constant flow of thousands of dispossessed German refugees from the Eastern areas continues. Trudging along the highways, carrying their odds and ends of small personal belongings on their backs or on small carts and perambulators, the vast bulk of them women, children, old people, in all states of fatigue, exhaustion, and disease—most of them the poor and small farmer elements—they present a pitiful sight. Most of them have been driven off the land and out of the towns of Germany east of the Oder-Neisse line. In the Lehrter Railroad station in Berlin alone our medical authorities state an average of ten have been dying daily from exhaustion, malnutrition and illness. In viewing the distress and despair of these wretches, in smelling the odor of their filthy condition, the mind reverts instantly to Dachau and Buchenwald. Here is retribution on a large scale, but practiced not on the Parteibonzen,45 but on women and children, the poor, the infirm. The vast majority are women and children. Few able bodied German males in the age category from twenty to fifty This as the Department knows has been continuing for weeks and, while lessening, the end does not seem to be yet.

Alongside these unfortunates are the hundreds of thousands of invalided German prisoners of war recently released by the Soviet Union. (According to the official Soviet statement, 412,000 were released.) Tattered, mutilated, filthy wrecks of men, they straggle along the country highways and the streets of Berlin in an endless procession of misery, dregs of the Herrenvolk, hoping somewhere to find refuge with their families. If they survive the trek—for many die en route—they are often grievously disappointed in the end as the bombings and the battle have eliminated what was home for many of them.

But these are men, or the vestiges of men, and many of us have become callous to the suffering of soldiers in this war. Our psychology adjusts itself somehow to the idea that suffering is part of the soldier's contract—especially when he is an enemy whom we have tried our best to kill in quantity over many months. That psychology loses some of its elasticity, however, in viewing the stupid tragedy now befalling thousands of innocent children, and women and old people. Knowledge that they are the victims of a harsh political decision carried out with the utmost ruthlessness and disregard for the humanities does not cushion the effect. The mind reverts to other recent mass deportations which horrified the world and brought upon the Nazis the odium which they so deserved. Those mass deportations engineered by the Nazis provided part of the moral basis on which we waged the war and which gave strength to our cause.

Now the situation is reversed. We find ourselves in the invidious position of being partners in this German enterprise and as partners inevitably sharing the responsibility. The United States does not control directly the Eastern Zone of Germany through which these helpless and bereft people march after eviction from their homes. The direct responsibility lies with the Provisional Polish Government and to a lesser extent with the Czech Government. Recent Polish and Czech suffering at the hands of the Germans undoubtedly renders them callous to German suffering. While the Soviet Union apparently has concurred in and supported the mass movement, as far as we know, the actual process of driving by physical means or economic pressures the people from their homes and firesides lies with the Poles and the Czechs. With this point of view I know Ambassador Lane does not agree. He has informed me of his opinion that this policy of deportation is Soviet dictated and controlled. That deportations have not gone further in the Sudetenland has been in part due to the presence of our forces whose Commanders, in friendly but firm fashion, have told the local Czechs that certain acts simply cannot be tolerated in the name of humanity, but even so, ruthless evictions have occurred on a sufficiently large scale to antagonize many of our troops against the liberated Czech people.

At Potsdam the three Governments agreed that the transfer of populations should be conducted in an orderly and humane manner, and that Poland and Czechoslovakia should be requested to suspend temporarily evictions of Germans. Despite official assurances, evidence seems to show that little regard has been paid to either point, especially to Poland. Ambassador Lane feels that Soviet Russia would be in a position to put an end to such evictions if it so desired, because he states the Soviets are in physical control of Poland. It should be said in behalf of Soviet troops that many instances of assistance to individual refugees, such as transportation on Army wagons, etc. are daily to be seen.

As helpless as the United States may be to arrest a cruel and inhuman process which is continuing, it would seem that our Government could and should make its attitude as expressed at Potsdam unmistakably clear. It would be most unfortunate were the record to indicate that we are particeps to methods we have often condemned in other instances.

740.00119 Control (Germany)/10-1045: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Czechoslovakia (Steinhardt)

Washington, October 19, 1945—4 p. m.

317. With reference to questions raised in urtel 417 Oct 3 Dept transmits following comments for your guidance in discussing population transfers with Zecho Govt:

⁴⁶ Maurice Dejean, Director General in charge of political affairs in the French Foreign Ministry.

 ⁴⁷ Georges Bidault, French Minister for Foreign Affairs.
 48 Général d'Armée Marie Emile Béthouart, Commanding General of French Forces in Austria and French Military Commissioner for Austria.
 49 Apparently there was no further report from Paris on this subject.

US recognizes importance Zecho Govt attaches to transfer of German population and is cognizant of long background of this problem. In Potsdam Agreement paragraph 13 the three powers recognized in principle that transfers would have to be made, but agreed that transfers should take place under international control in order to prevent chaos and undue suffering which would arise through mass expulsions on a unilateral basis. This decision was consistent with earlier replies by US to Zecho notes on German population question. On agreeing to international action, the three powers did not single out Zecho for unique treatment but linked Zecho with Poland and Hungary as most important area involving principle of international control and direction of population movements. Procedure was established in these three states as a matter of urgency prior to any general agreement on population movements for Europe as a whole.

Information has already been transmitted to you in Berlin's 46 Oct 10 ⁵⁰ that Zecho delegation chosen from proposed military mission to be accredited to Allied Control authorities will be received to present Zecho plan for orderly transfer. Dept wishes to make clear that throughout negotiations in Control Council US representative acted consistently on instructions that Zecho delegation should be received and plan studied before any decision was reached on postponement of population transfer. An examination of proceedings will show that activities of US representative can not be construed as dilatory tactics. You may wish to make it clear to Zecho Govt that US, having recognized principle of population transfer at Potsdam, has always been prepared to receive and discuss Zecho plan in Control Council but that assent of other three powers was necessary. Record of proceedings in Control Council does not show that other three powers, including Soviets, shared US position on this point.

It should be made clear that transfer of Germans from Zecho does not have to be made exclusively into US zone in Germany. US adheres to principle that Reich Germans in Zecho should be expelled to zone in which they previously resided. As for other Germans expelled by Zecho, Potsdam Agreement explicitly states that Control Council should examine question of equitable distribution among several zones of occupation. US can not assume unilateral responsibility for reception and care of Germans transferred from Zecho to US zone. Likewise, Dept is aware of fact that frontier area between Zecho and Germany is also occupied by Soviet troops as well as US troops. Reported action of Soviets (urtel 448 Oct 10 51) in admitting six thousand Germans daily is not consistent with Soviet position in Control Council.

⁵⁰ See last paragraph of telegram 739, October 10, 7 p. m., from Berlin, p. 1288. ⁵¹ Not printed; it reported that a Praha newspaper had published a Reuters news despatch from Berlin to the effect that Marshal Zhukov had agreed to the expulsion of 6,000 Germans daily from Czechoslovakia into the Soviet zone of occupation in Germany (740.00119 Control (Germany)/10-1045).

Dept agrees that immediate expulsion of Reich Germans from Zecho is four power responsibility and that Zecho should not be called on to support them during coming winter. As result of decision on reception of Zecho delegation, US is sending instructions to US-PolAd to urge that Control Council agree to immediate transfer of Reich Germans who fled into Zecho in closing days of war (urtel 368 Sep 20). With regard to Sudeten population as defined by Presidential decree of Aug 2,52 Dept insists that international action as defined in Potsdam Agreement is desirable and that four power decision in Control Council is necessary before action can be taken. You are therefore urged to correct impression that US is blocking the orderly repeat orderly expulsion of Germans.

Dept wishes to point out for your background information that many complaints have been received from US military personnel stationed in Zecho concerning treatment of Germans in that country. Although long and complicated background of German problem may not be known to US military personnel, their attitude is paralleled by indications of a growing public feeling in this country that Zecho state is not fulfilling response to Potsdam note and is employing methods which will ultimately affect excellent position which Zecho now has in western opinion.

We should also point out that Potsdam Agreement only recognized that the transfer of German populations or elements thereof would have to be undertaken. So far as we were concerned we wished to slow down indiscriminate and disorderly expulsions and avoid unnecessary hardships on the transferees and unnecessary burdens on the zones to which transfers were to be made. We recognized that certain transfers were unavoidable, but we did not intend at Potsdam to encourage or commit ourselves to transfers in cases where other means of adjustment were practicable.

you bring urgently to attention Control Council fact that there are present in Zecho between 700,000 and 800,000 Reich Germans who fled there for safety during closing days of war. Dept considers that immediate removal is necessary of all Germans now in Zecho who did not formerly hold Zecho citizenship as defined in Presidential decree issued by Beneš on Aug 2, 1945.53 Dept considers that immediate removal of these Germans is consistent with policy adopted towards other United Nations in Europe and does not believe that Zecho Govt should be called on to support Reich Germans during coming winter when such support is obviously four power responsibility. Dept would be willing to bring matter to attention of FonOffs in London, Paris and Moscow and to request instructions to representatives in Berlin to receive in their respective zones all Reich Germans formerly residing there who are now located in Zecho if you consider action necessary.

821. Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons Division inquires whether reference contained in Article XIII of the Potsdam report referring to "Poland" also includes new Poland as defined in Article IX B 54 of the report. This information desired in order to transfer the correct populations from Poland into occupied Germany.

This office has replied that in view of wording of Article IX B of the report on the Tripartite Conference of Berlin, namely that the area referred to therein "shall be under the administration of the Polish State and for such purposes shall not be considered as a part of the Soviet zone of occupation in Germany", it is believed that such areas should not be regarded as part of Germany, but as coming under the administration of the Polish State. Hence they should be considered as a part of Poland within the meaning of Article XIII of the report.

Please instruct urgently by telegraph whether the above statement is satisfactory.

830. The Department will be interested in USFET's S-28399 of October 18 ⁵⁵ reporting indications of a critical situation developing in Silesia and eastern Germany resulting from the mass exodus westward of German inhabitants. According to this report the death and disease rate in camps extremely high, unprecedented lack of food, medical supplies, and doctors. Estimated 2½ to 3 million victims of malnutrition and disease between the Oder and Elbe by next spring. Breslau death rate reported increased ten-fold and death rate reported to be 75% of all births. Spreading typhoid, typhus, dysentery, and diphtheria.

According to this report which was prepared by G-2,⁵⁶ total number potentially involved in westward movement to Russian zone of occupation in Germany from Poland and Czechoslovakia about 10 million, with an estimated 65 to 75% already departed or on the road westward. No coordinated measures yet taken to direct stream of refugees into specific regions or to provide food and shelter. Report invites attention in this connection to serious danger of epidemic of such proportion as to menace all of Europe, including our troops, and to probability of mass starvation on unprecedented scale.

including those in Austria. The latter now have priority as a direct result of plea of General Eisenhower in Control Council ⁵⁸ which was made under WD ⁵⁹ instructions.

- 2. Some informal and unofficial return into the American zone of Reichsdeutsche from Czechoslovakia is understood to be under way and undoubtedly will increase as repatriation of Polish displaced persons from Germany is accelerated. According to a statement made by General Sokolovsky in the Coordinating Committee large numbers of Sudeten Germans are coming into the Soviet zone of occupation. POW and DP Directorate has laid down principle that, regardless of priorities established, no rail transportation shall be wasted and as Polish displaced persons are repatriated across Czecholovakia, returning trains can pick up Reichsdeutsche for return to Germany.
- 3. For orderly transfer of populations it will be necessary that Kreis of origin of Reichsdeutsche under reference be known. Transportation mentioned in paragraph 2 originates and terminates in United States and French zones which already have surplus German refugee population. United States military effort in repatriating displaced persons has been to reduce to minimum dependent population in United States zone before winter.
- 4. Reference my 46, October 10, 7 p. m. to Praha, repeated to Dept. as 739. Political Directorate, ACA, was instructed on October 22 by Secretariat to notify Czech Govt that it was authorized to send into Germany as part of its military mission three members to discuss population transfers. Actually authorization has already been informally delivered in that French member of POW and DP Directorate delivered a copy of authorization to an unnamed Czech envoy passing through Berlin en route to Praha some time before Oct 19. It is opinion of POW and DP Division that Czech delegates may already be on way to Berlin. Under these circumstances it is believed that many, if not all, of difficult issues involved in expulsion of Germans from Czechoslovakia will soon be in process toward acceptable solution.
- 5. No objection is perceived to Dept bringing matter to attention of Foreign Offices in London, Paris and Moscow. It is believed more practicable, however, that an attempt be made first to settle these problems with Czech delegation in Berlin through POW and DP Directorate with appeal to Foreign Offices being a resort in case local negotiations do not progress satisfactorily.

⁶⁸ In his telegram 666, October 2, 1945, noon, the United States Political Adviser for Germany reported on the seventh meeting of the Allied Control Council for Germany, held on October 1. In the course of this meeting, General Eisenhower, the American member of the Council, raised the question of the return to Germany of the 150,000 or more Reich Germans in the United States zone of Austria and stated that the question was becoming critical in Austria and needed speedy consideration. AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The French Government has been requested by the Prague Government to allow the immigration of 500,000 Sudetenland Germans (men, women, and children), former nationals of the Czechoslovak Republic, into the French zone of occupation in Germany.

The French Government considers it essential, before replying to the Czechoslovak request, for the four great Powers to establish a joint policy in this regard.

Such a policy might, it appears, be guided by the following principles:

- 1. The Sudetenland immigrants who would be authorized to enter each zone should be numerically limited to fixed quotas for each zone, taking into account available housing, food, and employment. It would be the responsibility of the Control Council to determine these quotas, which might be established for fixed periods spaced at intervals. If the conditions attending the absorption of the first quota proved satisfactory, the admission of the ensuing quotas might be authorized at the proper time.
- 2. The Sudetenland immigrants admitted to each zone would constitute a labor pool from which each of the governments concerned would be authorized to draw on the basis of its individual needs, after thorough investigation of the technical qualifications of the immigrants, their health, political conduct, etc. It seems difficult to authorize the employment in France of free German labor concurrently with that of prisoners. The possibility of admitting Sudetenland Germans from the French zone to France therefore does not appear feasible until some later date.
- 3. The arrival of Sudetenland Germans in the French zone of occupation, whose resources are limited, threatens to increase imports, which will have to be made from other parts of Germany or from abroad, principally the United States. In as much as these last are payable in dollars, the French Government, whose available dollar assets are limited, could not undertake to pay for this additional category of imports.

⁶² Translation supplied by the editors.

In these circumstances, the expenditures necessitated by the East-West shift and maintenance of the Sudetenland immigrants in Germany should be assumed by an international organization possessed of sufficient resources. Although assistance from UNRRA should, in principle, be given only to members of the United Nations, it appears that this organization, which has very extensive resources at its disposal, might, jointly with the Intergovernmental Refugee Committee, defray the costs in question.

- 4. By reason of the service that the United States, France, the USSR, and Great Britain would render Czechoslovakia in agreeing to place Sudetenland Germans in their occupation zones and possibly in their national territory, it would be advisable to obtain in return from the Prague government its agreement:
- (a) To keep the persons concerned in its territory for the time being, pending their placement in Germany, and to take no action in the matter without the consent of the four Powers administering the former Reich;
- (b) Not to cause the return of Czechoslovaks living abroad to their country of origin except by agreement with the governments of the countries in which they are presently residing and in accordance with procedures to be formulated, taking into due consideration the freedom of choice of the persons concerned and transportation facilities.
- 5. The shift of the Sudetenland peoples is but one aspect of the general problem of population shifts in Europe, which is of vital importance to the political and demographic future of this continent. The question is therefore eminently within the competence of the four principal Allied Powers.

The Embassy of France would be happy to learn the views of the American authorities in this matter.

to discuss the transfer of Germans from Czechoslovakia into Germany. The Department will recall that the question of population transfers has been referred to the Directorate of Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons. That Directorate has decided to receive the Czechoslovakian Delegation under certain circumstances, and, on behalf of the Allied Control Commission it requests me to send the following message to the Czechoslovakian Government through the normal diplomatic channels:

"The Allied Control Commission for Germany hereby notifies the Government of Czechoslovakia that it accepts the offer of that Government to send a delegation to Berlin to discuss the transfer of German populations with the Directorate of Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons. However, in view of the very great difficulties in obtaining food and accommodation in Berlin, the Allied Control Commission conditions this acceptance upon the inclusion of this delegation within the Military Mission of 10 members which the Czechoslovakian Government is now planning to send to Berlin."

I therefore request the Department to transmit the above message to the appropriate Czechoslovakian authorities.⁶³

744. For administrative purposes involving transfer of populations, your statement cited in urtel 821, Oct 21, is considered accurate. Such interpretation, however, is not intended to prejudice agreement at Potsdam that final delimitation of Poland's western frontier should await peace settlement. Nor does Dept interpret Article XIII to encourage immediate mass transfers of German populations from Poland.

While Potsdam agreement stipulated that any transfers that take place should be effected in an orderly and humane manner, information contained in urtel 830, Oct 23 casts grave doubt on orderly character of present transfers under way. We are opposed to precipitous and disorderly transfers and, if you deem practicable, we would support refusal to proceed with equitable distribution among occupation zones of Germans transferred in irregular and disorderly circumstances.

869. The sixteenth meeting of the Coordinating Committee took place on Oct 26 with the French member 64 presiding.

The Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons Directorate submitted a plan for population transfers. The plan sets forth priorities in movements as follows: (1) displaced persons, (2) persons in all categories whom the Four Powers have agreed to transfer on a head for head basis, (3) others. Category (2), under present arrangements, includes German refugees in Austria but not in Czecho. However, the paper provides for the maximum use of transport facilities, and an understanding has been reached with the American delegation on the Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons Directorate that transport used to take Polish DP's (Displaced Persons) to Poland will be routed back through Czecho so as to pick up Reichs Deutsche refugees there. The paper makes the rough estimate that the total German population to be transferred is about 12 million. The Russian member called attention to the urgency of this problem and the British member referred to the fact that a large scale movement of population is already going on during the discussions on an unofficial basis. This should be taken into account.

The Department of State to the French Embassy

MEMORANDUM

The Department of State refers to the aide-mémoire of the French Embassy dated October 25, 1945 (No. 852 AB/AC) concerning the transfer of the Sudeten population from Czechoslovakia. No official request has been received by the United States Government regarding the admittance of a specific number of Sudeten Germans into the United States zone in Germany.

The policy of the United States Government with respect to the transfer of the Sudeten population is based on the principles enunciated in paragraph 13 of the Potsdam Agreement. The United States in that agreement recognized in principle that the transfer would have to be made but that it should be made in an orderly and humane manner and that the Sudeten German population should be equitably distributed among the several zones of occupation in Germany. The Allied Control Council in Berlin has been requested to determine the method and time of the transfer as well as the distribution among the several zones. The Czechoslovak Government has prepared a plan designed to carry out the principles of the Potsdam Agreement, which will be presented by the Czechoslovak Mission to the Control Council for discussion.

The Department of State considers that in order to provide an equitable distribution of the Sudeten population within Germany the Control Council should determine the rate of transfer in terms of the ability of the several zones to absorb an increased population. Consequently, a mass expulsion of the Sudeten Germans by the Czechoslovak Government or the transfer of 500,000 Sudeten Germans to any one zone in Germany is considered to be neither desirable nor feasible. After the arrival of the Sudeten population in the zones, the Department of State considers that supervision of the Sudeten population in Germany should be exercised by the Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons Directorate of the Allied Control Council in order to provide standards of health and sanitation consistent with the treatment of the German population as a whole. The Department of State does not consider that any international agency or special administrative service is required to administer the Sudeten population in Germany and recommends that the supervision be exercised by the appropriate agency of the Allied Control Council in order to achieve a rapid assimilation of the Sudeten population into the present German population. In this regard the additional supplies required by the Sudeten population would be absorbed into the general requirements for the whole of Germany.

In as much as the movement of the Sudeten population will have an important effect on the political, economic and demographic organization of the Continent of Europe, the Department of State considers that it should be treated in such a way by the four Allied powers as to prevent a dislocation of the Czechoslovak economic system.

Sir: I have the honor to inform the Department that the Hungarian Government has notified this Mission in a note, dated November 9, 1945, that no instructions have as yet been received by the government from the Allied Control Commission regarding the transfer of the German minority in Hungary. The note, quoted below, states further that the Hungarian Government has made all preparations for the eventual transfer of the Nazi and anti-national elements of this minority and adds that only those Germans who were being repatriated through Hungary to Yugoslavia have been returned to Germany after the Yugoslav authorities had refused permission for their entry.

"Hungarian Ministry for Foreign Affairs

32.720/pol.—1945

"The Hungarian Government presents its compliments to the United States Mission in Hungary and has the honour to inform the Mission of the following.

"For the past few weeks the English newspapers referring to Parliamentary debates etc. and the information service of the English radio have been discussing the transfer to Germany of German populations or elements thereof remaining in Hungary, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

"In these communications Hungary is repeatedly mentioned together with Czechoslovakia and Poland.

"For this reason the Hungarian Government takes the opportunity to state the following.

"Those informations that Hungary belongs to the countries from where the Germans are being transferred do not correspond to the facts because Hungary accepted the principle that any transfers that take place should be effected in an orderly and humane manner.

"The decision of the Allied Powers in Potsdam was that the Germans must be resettled, but this can take place in the case of Hungary only in accordance with the instructions to be given by the Allied Control Commission. In view of this the Hungarian Government made all preparations to the eventual transfer of Nazi and antinational German elements and at present is waiting for the instructions of the Allied Control Commission.

"Considering the fact that up to the present no instruction has been received by the Hungarian Government, Hungary has not expelled any German domiciled in Hungary.

"Only those one and half thousand Germans were made to leave Hungary who crossed Hungary on their way back to Yugoslavia from Germany and had their domicile in Yugoslavia, but the Yugoslavian authorities did not allow them to enter Yugoslavian territory. Under these circumstances the Hungarian Government was obliged to send them back where they came from.

"The Hungarian Government would be much obliged if the United States Political Mission would be so kind to inform the Government of the United States of the above facts. "Budapest, November 9, 1945."

1015. POW and DP Directorate in meeting November 13 adopted plan for transfer of German populations from Czecho, Poland, Hungary, and Austria. Plan was advanced by Soviet member but was outgrowth and based largely on a previously submitted US project. Plan provides for scheduled, regular and orderly movements of German populations beginning December 1, 1945 and extending through July, 1946. Under it Germans from Poland (estimated at 3,500,000) would be accepted into Soviet (2 million) and Britain (1,500,000) Those from Czecho, Hungary, and Austria (estimated at 3,150,000) would be transferred to Soviet (750,000 from Czecho alone) US (2,250,000) and French (150,000). So far as transfer into British zone is concerned this will begin only when 1 for 1 refugee exchange now in process between British and Soviet zones is completed, which British member anticipates at present rate will not extend beyond Dec. 1. It was further agreed that because of difficult food situation in France and in French zone, French would not be committed to accept German populations prior to April 15, 1946. It is proposed that Govts of Czecho and Poland and Allied Control Commissions in Hungary and Austria shall be advised of plan when it is approved and is ready for operation.

Plan must be approved by Coordinating Committee prior to implementation. It is hoped latter will act at its meeting November 16.72

French position represents an about face from that maintained in POW and DP Directorate meeting November 10. In plan as originally presented, French zone was allotted quota of 650,000 Germans from Czecho and Austria. At that time French member stated he was authorized to accept 250,000 German refugees now in US zone who formerly were domiciled in French zone, but would be unable to accept any further German populations from any source. Soviet member proposed that French allocation be distributed between the Soviet and US zones, 500,000 from Czecho to former and 150,000 from Austria to latter. This compromise patently was worked out in advance and French member eloquently supported it as "a good business proposition" wherein the US zone would relinquish 250,000 persons and receive only 150,000 persons. US member stated he was unable to accept the Soviet amendment because resettlement of German populations in Germany was a quadripartite responsibility and was completely separate from transfer of German refugees from one zone to another within Germany. He stated his opposition was not based upon numbers involved but upon principle of quadripartite participation in German affairs. French remained adamant in their point of view, however, and November 10 meeting closed with agreement by all concerned to seek new instructions and to reconvene on November 13 further to discuss the basic plan.

In latter meeting original US position was maintained with intent of throwing matter into Coordinating Committee for reconciliation, but French acceptance of 150,000 Germans from Austria made cut possible solution of impasse within POW and DP Directorate. 72a Soviet and US members agreed to accept equally in their respective zones the remaining 500,000 German population from Czecho.

Urtel 1066 Nov 21.73 Dept regrets delay in taking action on your letter and memo to Matthews of October 12 regarding population transfers since it agrees with you that US Govt should make clear its attitude. In meantime Dept has noted with satisfaction Control Council has adopted program for orderly and humane transfers.

Dept contemplates sending at once to Polish Govt following note which would be repeated to our Ambassadors at Moscow, London, Paris, Praha, USPolAd Berlin, AusPolAd Vienna, USRep Budapest with instructions to inform respective Govts or Allied colleagues. Please telegraph at once if you approve this procedure and text of proposed note.74

Text of note to Warsaw: US Govt has been seriously perturbed by reports of continued mass movements of German refugees who appear to have entered Germany from areas east of the Oder-Neisse line. Reports indicate these refugees-mostly women, children and old people—have been arriving in terrible state of exhaustion and disease. Such mass distress among weak and helpless is not in accord with Potsdam Agreement, Paragraph 13 of which stipulates that population transfers shall be conducted in orderly and humane manner.

US Govt is informed that Control Council in Berlin has adopted program for orderly and humane transfers of German population

The United States Political Adviser for Germany (Murphy) to the Secretary of State

Berlin, November 23, 1945. [Received December 10.]

Sir: I have the honor to refer to my secret telegrams no. 1015 of November 15, 11 a.m., no. 1049 of November 17, 8 p.m. and no. 1066 of November 21, 11 a.m., no. 1049 of November 17, 8 p.m. and no. 1066 of November 21, 11 a.m., 15 The first of these outlined the program developed in the Prisoner of War & Displaced Persons Directorate, Allied Control Authority, for the repatriation of German minorities from Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Austria. It was stated in the second telegram that the Coordinating Committee had approved the plan submitted to it by the Directorate and had referred it to the Control Council. The latter accepted the plan in its Twelfth Meeting as stated in the third telegram. There is transmitted with this despatch, for the Department's information, a copy of the plan drawn up by the Directorate of Prisoners of War & Displaced Persons. 16

As outlined in my secret telegram no. 758 of October 12, 8 p.m.⁷⁷ and as envisioned in the plan for the overall transfer of German populations transmitted in my secret despatch no. 1224 of October 31, 1945, the resettlement of German populations falls within two broad categories, the first being the transfer back to areas of former domicile of those German nationals displaced within Germany as a consequence of the war and the second being the resettlement within Germany of Reichsdeutsche and Volksdeutsche from beyond the boundaries of occupied Germany.

Partial resettlement of internally displaced German nationals was provided for in the plan forwarded with my secret despatch no. 1223 of October 30, 1945.⁷⁸ The program of the interzonal exchange of German populations on a one for one basis provided therein is now proceeding between the United States and Soviet Zones and between the British and Soviet Zones. Remaining interzonal exchanges still await implementation. According to present estimates, the United States Zone contains approximately 1,345,000 Germans who belong in one of the other three zones in Germany. The numbers belonging in the Soviet Zone are 820,000, in the British Zone 300,000, and in the French Zone 225,000. It is estimated that there are in the Soviet Zone approximately 500,000 German nationals whose former domiciles were in the United States Zone, about 75,000 in the British Zone, and approximately 60,000 in the French Zone, a total of 635,000 to be received into the United States Zone on the basis of the one for one transfer. As a consequence of these exchanges, the United States Zone will be left with a residue or excess of roughly 750,000 German nationals who formerly resided in other zones. At the present time, with the exception of the French acceptance from the United States Zone of all German nationals formerly resident in the French Zone, as communicated in the first telegram under reference above, no provision has been made for the transfer of the remainders respectively belonging in the Soviet and in the British Zones. In view of the acute housing and food situation in and the fundamentally industrial character of the British Zone, its absorptive capacity is relatively low, hence not much hope is entertained that the British will be able to take the 225,000 German surplus now in the United States Zone who formerly resided in the British Zone, particularly as in the plan outlined for the transfer of German minorities enclosed in this despatch, the British are receiving approximately 1,500,000 German nationals whereas their expectation did not exceed 1,000,000. It is possible that the Soviet Zone will be willing to accept the 320,000 German nationals in the US Zone if the attitude displayed by the Soviets in the discussion on the plan under reference prevails. At that time when the French member of the Prisoner of War & Displaced Persons Directorate stated the French Zone would be unable to accept any German minorities (see telegram first under reference above), the Soviet member suggested that the 650,000 German nationals allotted to the French Zone be divided between the Soviet and the United States Zones on the basis of 500,000 to the former and 150,000 to the latter. The subsequent allocation under which the French accepted 150,000 minorities gave only 250,000 to the Soviet Zone and since the surplus in the United States Zone of German nationals formerly resident in the Russian Zone is only 70,000 more than the numbers which the Soviet Zone would have absorbed under the initial proposition, it is quite possible the latter would be willing to have the 320,000 surplus now in the United States Zone.

⁷⁸ Not printed.

The second phase of the resettlement of German populations—that of repatriating those from beyond the bounds of occupied Germany—is undertaken in the program which is transmitted with this despatch. It will be noted that in this plan arrangements are made for the transfer of approximately 6,650,000 persons, of whom 3,500,000 will come from Poland, 2,500,000 from Czechoslovakia, 500,000 from Hungary, and 150,000 from Austria. The Polish areas included in these calculations contains those eastern regions of Germany which are now under Polish administration. It is estimated that the population of this latter area in 1939 was slightly more than 8,500,000. While exact data are not available, it is believed that approximately 5,000,000 of the 1939 figure have already abandoned this area. It is known, for example, that in August and September 1945 approximately 500,000 German refugees per month came into Berlin alone, purely on a transient basis before being sent further westward and practically all of these persons came from the east. The rate recently has been somewhat reduced but nonetheless great. According to statistics secured from the Department for Expelled and Returning Persons (Abteilung Ausgewiesene und Heimkehrer, Hauptamt für Sozialwesen) Magistrat of the City of Berlin, there arrived in Berlin in the period September 20-26, 1945, inclusive, 42,842 German refugees of whom 20 per cent came from East Prussia, 19 per cent from West Prussia, 18 per cent from Neumark, 17 per cent from Silesia, 14 per cent from Pomerania, 5 per cent from Warthegau, 1 per cent from Czechoslovakia and the remaining 6 per cent from various places in Germany. The same source indicates that between September 27-October 5 inclusive, 49,611 German refugees arrived in Berlin and from October 7-13 inclusive, 29,283 refugees entered, with approximately the same distribution in each case among sources as was indicated for the previous lot. believed among refugee authorities that a downward trend, indicated by this latter figure, has set in and will continue.

Members of my staff who have seen the refugee trains from the East arrive state that the condition of these people is in most instances pitiable. The stories told by individuals talked to at random indicate that they were evacuated from their former homes with little advance notice and in many cases were harried from the time they left their homes almost until the time they reached Berlin. They tell tales of progressive robbing and the taking of the few possessions they were allowed to remove from their homes and most of the individuals arriving in Berlin have had only a small amount of hand luggage. While final conclusions cannot be deduced from these limited observations, other evidence which has come to the attention of the Mission from widely assorted sources indicates that the pattern of ill treatment and robbery is widespread.

The last paragraph of the enclosed plan provides that immediately after its approval, the Governments of Czechoslovakia and Poland and the Control Commissions of Austria and of Hungary will be informed of its terms. By this device it is hoped that expulsions, such as those which have been taking place, will be completely eliminated and that the orderly transfer of German populations will remove the political pressure upon the Governments of Poland and Czechoslovakia. Copies of the enclosed plan are being transmitted to the Missions concerned.

There has been established in the United States Zone an Evacuation and Resettlement Committee, made up of twenty German citizens representing the three Länder in the United States Zone, which prepares recommendations on pertinent matters for the Minister Presi-In a meeting at Stuttgart on November 11, 1945, the problem of resettling German evacuees was discussed. The Committee was advised of the extent of the problem of resettling German evacuees, both refugees and minorities, and were advised of their responsibility relative thereto. Full and free discussion on the problem was urged by United States authorities who attended the meeting and a series of recommendations emerged from the convention. It was quite obvious, however, that in spite of the careful briefing done by United States military authorities, the representatives failed to grasp the magnitude and the complexities of the problem. Subject to the approval of the Länderrat, the following distribution of evacuees among the three Länder was recommended: Bavaria 50 per cent, Gross Hessen 27 per cent, and Württemberg-Baden 23 per cent. The principal grievances of the Committee, for which it requested amelioration, were as follows: (1) there should be one United States officer and one only in each Länd from whom the German authorities received orders and instructions on refugees instead of the present many sources which give confusing and often conflicting orders, (2) failure to notify Burgomeisters in advance of arrivals of refugees, (3) destruction of factories, warehouses, and similar installations, which although not completely suitable will nonetheless provide adequate protection for refugees from the weather, (4) according to present estimates German food stocks will not be ample to provide for refugees and expellees, (5) extensive requisitioning of available housing for displaced persons, especially in Württemberg, and apparent failure to distribute equitably these requisitions with resultant dissatisfaction among the German population and German authorities, and (6) the usual complaint that Nazis are being left undisturbed and that anti-Nazis are being penalized. It is felt among OMGUS officials that some of the complaints have a legitimate basis and should be remedied. but that some of them are completely at variance with occupation policy and hence must be ignored.

A meeting of representatives of various interested Divisions of OMGUS was called on November 22 to consider the report just discussed and the plan for the resettlement of German minorities. It was the consensus of those present that it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to undertake beginning December 1, 1945 the repatriation of German populations from beyond the boundaries of occupied Germany. It was pointed out that the welfare agencies in the United States Zone were already overwhelmed with the burden thrust upon them by the interzonal transfers which are taking place and that they would be utterly incapable of assisting materially the individuals coming from other countries. The transport representatives indicated that it would be next to impossible to obtain adequate transport facilities to move these people. First, truck transportation would not be available because it is not intended this winter to keep open the highways and heavy snows prevail in the mountains of southwestern Germany blocking road routes over which the majority of these people might come. Second, the rolling stock necessary to move these people is not available; that military commitments for the moving of freight during the month of December were almost 50 percent higher in tonnage than the facilities available afforded. Health authorities indicated that while no serious threats of disease were now present in the United States Zone, it was believed that typhus was more prevalent in the areas from which these people would come and in the Soviet Zone than it was in the United States Zone. As a consequence of the interzonal transfer between the Soviet and United States Zones, the incidence of typhus in the United States Zone was slowly climbing and while every effort was being made to dust these transferees, it was felt that the problem would become much more difficult if to the interzonal transfers were added the Czech and Hungarian transfers. Reportedly a preponderant proportion of the refugees now flowing into the US Zone is old women and children, both groups being particularly susceptible to disease. It was the belief of all present that it would be much more humane and satisfactory to postpone the international transfers until April 1, 1946 if that could be done and it was proposed that a statement to that effect, supported by comments of the various operating Divisions represented in the meeting, should be presented to General Clay for consideration.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT MURPHY

approved by Coordinating Committee and Control Council. Copy will be forwarded by pouch.

Because of strained transport, welfare, housing, and food situation in United States zone, Germany, complicated by inter-zonal transfers of German populations now in progress, OMGUS (Office of Military Government United States) authorities question ability to initiate these movements on December 1 to extent provided in plan. It is hoped, however, that token movements may be initiated, particularly from Czechoslovakia in conjunction with repatriation of Poles from United States zone.

Allied Council in Vienna in resolution Nov. 10 79 requested govts of four occupying powers to make strong and immediate representations to Govts of Zecho, Hungary and Yugo that in view of imminent danger of a further influx of Germans into Austria the govts of these three states adopt adequate measures to prevent the mass expulsion of Germanic people into Austria.

You are requested in cooperation with British, French, and Soviet colleagues to call attention of Zecho Govt to this resolution, pointing out that numerous Germans from Zecho are now present in Austria and in order to prevent further influx of Germanic people, Allied Council agreed that occupying powers strengthen existing frontier control in their various zones, including arrest and punishment of any persons attempting illegal entry into Austria. On behalf of the Control Council, I have sent the following message, mutatis mutandis, to the American Embassy, Warsaw, as 103; American Embassy, Praha, as 72; US representative on the Allied Control Commission for Hungary as 15; and US representative on the Allied Control Commission for Austria as 41.

Please present the following formal communication from the Allied Control Council for Germany. Same communication is being transmitted to Czechoslovak Government and the Allied Control Commissions for Austria and Hungary and is being repeated to the Department for its information as this mission's No. 1147.

"At their 12th meeting held in Berlin on 20th November 1945, the Allied Control Council for Germany approved a plan for the transfer of the German population to be moved from Austria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland into the four occupied zones of Germany.

"Details of this plan outlining the tentative (preliminary) allocation between zones of occupation and a schedule of movement of the German population is enclosed herewith.

"Plan for the transfer of the German population to be moved from Austria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland into the four occupied zones of Germany.

1. The entire German population to be moved from Poland (3½ million persons) will be admitted to the Soviet and the British zones of occupation in Germany.

- 2. The entire German population to be moved from Czechoslovakia, Austria, and Hungary (3,150,000 persons) will be admitted to the American, French, and the Soviet zones of occupation in Germany.
- 3. A. Tentative (preliminary) allocation of this population between zones will be as follows:
 - (a) Into the Soviet zone from Poland 2 million persons, into the Soviet zone from Czechoslovakia ¾ million persons.

(b) Into the British zone from Poland 1½ million persons.

- (c) Into the American zone from Czechoslovakia 1¾ million persons, into the American zone from Hungary ½ million persons.
 - (d) Into the French zone from Austria 150,000 persons.
- B. The French zone will start acceptance not earlier than 15 April 1946. Meanwhile, after the exchange of German refugees is completed according to the principle one for one, the French zone will continue to accept approximately 250,000 refugees from the US zone who were domiciled formerly in the French zone.
- 4. It is considered possible immediately after the confirmation of this plan to proceed with the admittance of population from the above-mentioned countries in accordance with the following schedule: During December 1945 at the rate of 10% of the total number; during January and February 1946 at the rate of 5% of the total number; during March 1946 at the rate of 15% of the total number; during April 1946 at the rate of 15% of the total number; during May 1946 at the rate of 20% of the total number; during June 1946 at the rate of 20% of the total number; during July 1946 at the rate of 10% of the total number. Changes may be made on account of weather or transport and after more information is received about the quantity of population transferred. The British zone will start acceptance of the above refugees into the British zone when the volume of the present exchange on the head-for-head basis permits it. This date will be fixed by agreement between the chiefs of the PW and DP divisions of the Soviet and British elements.

5. The execution of this plan must not interfere with the carrying out of the previously reached agreement as regards the exchange of the German refugees between the zones on a one for one basis."

Washington, November 30, 1945—6 p.m.

310. Please convey to Provisional Polish Govt following views of US Govt with regard to population transfers.

US Govt has been seriously perturbed by reports of continued mass movements of German refugees who appear to have entered Germany from areas east of Oder-Neisse line. These persons presumably have been expelled summarily from their homes and dispossesed of all property except that which they can carry. Reports indicate that these refugees—mostly women, children, and old people—have been arriving in shocking state of exhaustion, many of them ill with communicable diseases and in many instances robbed of their last few personal possessions. Such mass distress and maltreatment of weak and helpless are not in accord with Potsdam Agreement (Paragraph 13 of which stipulates that population transfers shall be conducted in orderly and humane manner) nor in consonance with international standards of treatment of refugees.

US Govt is informed that Control Council in Berlin has adopted program for orderly and humane transfers of German population from Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary. Uncontrolled movements will hamper satisfactory fulfillment of this plan and threats of epidemics may force suspension of its operation indefinitely. US Govt hopes Provisional Polish Govt will wholeheartedly cooperate in carrying out this program in the spirit of paragraph 13, Potsdam Agreement.

- 629. I am taking the liberty of deferring action on Deptel No. 310, Nov. 30, 6 p. m., regarding alleged forcible repatriation of Germans for the following reasons:
- (1). From investigations made by members of my staff who have traveled through western part of Poland I am not convinced that Germans have been subjected to any widespread harsh treatment although they have, of course, suffered in some cases from evictions from their homes. In many cases where they have had opportunity to obtain food and work their condition has left no ground for complaint.
- (2). Many of reports regarding ill treatment came from Germans themselves who, in keeping with their characteristic of whining after losing war, make the picture as black as possible.
- (3). While not wishing to condone any cruel treatment on the part of the Poles, it is very understandable, after one has seen the results of the systematic destruction of Warsaw, the inhuman treatment by the Nazis during the occupation and the concentration camps at Majdanek, Oswiecim and elsewhere, if the Poles have not handled the Germans with kid gloves.

- (4). The British have been seriously criticized here on the ground that they have been more mindful of the well-being of the Germans than of the Poles. The Polish press, encouraged by the Soviet Govt, has emphasized British softness towards the Germans. There is a tendency on part of press to pick on US as well and I hear that if we make official representations along lines of Dept's instruction we will incur popular displeasure.
- (5). I realize that Poland has obligations under Potsdam decision with which it must comply. I hope, however, that Dept will permit me to confine my representation re the alleged mistreatment of Germans to an oral statement as otherwise I foresee possibility of our being charged with lack of appreciation of what Poland has suffered at the hands of the Germans. The international consequences seem to me to be so important in this situation as to warrant a reconsideration of the instructions given me.

(When General Eisenhower was here September 21, he expressed disagreement with view held by others that Germans from Poland were being ill treated and said after seeing destruction of Warsaw that he wished every member of his army could see what he had seen that day.)

Ministry also points out that considerable proportion of compromised German male population left Hungary with German Army. Ministry states figure of between 200,000 and 250,000 is more realistic and this was intimated in note of Hungarian Govt to Soviet Union May 26. Ministry's estimate should be compared with figure of 500,000 given in Allied Control Commission Germany's Program section 3 C (USPolAd's 1147, Dec 1, [November 30] repeated to Budapest as No. 15).

Hungarian Govt in latest note reaffirms its conviction that Hungarian citizens should not be expelled solely on ethnic grounds and its opposition to any collective punishment. He said if Germans are to be treated as a nationality the figure of 500,000 used by Allied Council Berlin as basis for directive to ACC here and transmitted to Hungarian Government regarding deportations would be more nearly correct than if criterion adopted by Hungarian Government were used that only Germans coming within objectionable categories would be deported. In latter case Hungarian Government's figure of not more than 300,000 would cover numbers to be expelled.

ForMin asked whether nationality principle was to be applied or whether Hungarian Government principle would be used. I told ForMin that this seemed to be matter which had not yet been categorically presented for decision and it might be desirable for him to formulate the issue in written communication which he proposed to do. I intimated personal opinion, however, that in as much as no exception has been taken in Hungarian Government's repeated official communications outlining principles to be applied in expulsion of Germans from Hungary and since these principles seem to be in harmony with US Government's view of individual and not collective liability as repeatedly expressed in official communications to Hungarian Government among others I had assumed the 500,000 figure for Germans to be expelled from Hungary was merely due to confusion at Berlin. If US Government has changed its view and has accepted principle that Germans are to be expelled from Hungary without regard to their individual merits it would be desirable to have clear ruling on this point.

There is impression in official circles here that Soviet pressure is exerted for larger figure because vacuum so created would facilitate expulsion of all Hungarians from Slovakia.

879. Berlin's 18 Dec 20 rptd Dept as 1307.97 As figure of 500,000 Germans to be deported from Hungary was taken as maximum and apparently was not based on Hungarian Govt's own calculation, Dept sees no reason why ACC Germany's decision of Nov 20 should be regarded as requiring Hungarian Govt to deport all Germans in Hungary or precisely 500,000 Germans. On the contrary, reduction of that figure on Hungarian initiative would be well received here, since the economic dislocation and human suffering which inevitably accompany large-scale population movements would be correspondingly reduced, and also by US military authorities in Germany which have task of receiving and resettling the Germans deported from Hungary.

US Govt has not changed its view that an entire ethnic group such as Germans in Hungary should not be held collectively liable for conduct of those who participated in Nazi activities, or subjected as a group to deportation on those grounds. INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE CONVEN-ING OF AN INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT

800.504/1-3045

The Australian Minister (Eggleston) to the Acting Secretary of State (Grew) ¹

No. 44/45

Washington, 30 January, 1945.

Sir: I have the honour to inform you, on instructions from my Government, that his Majesty's Government of the Commonwealth of Australia is of opinion that an international conference on Employment Policy should be convened at an early date with the object of securing an international agreement on this subject. I am instructed to enquire whether the United States Government would be willing to associate itself with the calling of such a conference after the necessary preliminary arrangements have been discussed and completed. In support of this proposal the following considerations are submitted.

A main purpose of international collaboration is to achieve freedom from want, and there is a wide recognition of the fact that in most countries of the world that object can be achieved only by maintaining a high level of employment. Many declarations of policy have been made with that end in view. Reference may be made to such a declaration in the final act of the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture ² and to the "Philadelphia Charter" of 1944 ³ of the International Labour Organisation, as well as to those made on behalf of individual nations, of which a notable example was President Roosevelt's recent declaration.⁴

It is also recognised that without high employment in all countries, the world's production and consumption must remain continuously short of levels that are technically practicable, and that many wage-earners and others are deprived of the purchasing power to demand the goods and services which they need. The achievement of a high and stable level of employment in all countries is therefore one of the main objectives of international collaboration.

But despite the general acceptance of this objective discussions on practical arrangements have been concentrated primarily on the mechanism of international trade and finance, and on matters of general welfare such as food and agriculture. The Australian Government, for some time, has been convinced that proposals for international welfare will not get very far unless they are accompanied by a more direct attack on the problem. For this reason, Australia has suggested that, in addition to other agreements, there should be an international agreement by which subscribing countries would bind themselves to pursue domestic policies aimed at maintaining high levels of employment.

The Australian Government regards such an agreement as of the most vital international concern. The growth of unemployment in any major industrial country or group of countries depresses the export incomes and general economic activity of other countries and makes it extremely difficult for them to maintain high employment in their own territories.

Moreover, failure to maintain high employment would threaten the effective operation of such financial and trade arrangements as are being discussed. Any individual country that persisted in a high employment policy in the face of declining employment elsewhere would soon find that its balance of payments was adversely affected. It would then be faced with the choice of either abandoning its own domestic policy or of turning away from international collaboration towards import restrictions, export subsidies, or exchange depreciation. In short, if other countries fail to maintain high employment, any country may find international economic collaboration incompatible with the maintenance of its own employment.

The Australian Government holds the view that if international economic collaboration is to be made effective and lasting, the United Nations must undertake to provide fundamental conditions that make such collaboration both practicable and consistently advantageous. It believes that these conditions can be provided only if the larger industrial countries, at least, are prepared to take whatever domestic measures are necessary to maintain a high and stable level of employment within their own territories.

It is suggested that all international economic agreements that may be adopted by the United Nations should include among their purposes the maintenance of high levels of employment throughout the world, and that as many nations as possible should complement those agreements with one specifically designated as an Employment Agreement and especially directed to the end of achieving and maintaining a high level of employment.

The Australian Government believes that the holding of a conference on Employment Policy and the adoption of an Agreement would do much to promote the general aims of the United Nations.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Secretary of State

Washington, February 16, 1945.

Participants: British Ambassador, the Earl of Halifax;

Australian Minister, Sir Frederic Eggleston; New Zealand Minister, Mr. C. A. Berendsen;

Acting Secretary, Mr. Grew

The British Ambassador, the Australian Minister, and the Minister of New Zealand, with two secretaries, called on me this afternoon at their request and Sir Frederic Eggleston presented the views of his Government in favor of calling a conference on employment. As his oral presentation was read from a document, I asked him if he would not send me a copy of the paper so that I might have an accurate transcription of his statement. He said that he would have a clean copy made and send me one for our files. Lord Halifax supported Sir Frederic Eggleston's presentation, as did also Mr. Berendsen, the Minister of New Zealand.

In reply, I said that we would, of course, give the Australian proposal most serious consideration and would communicate our views as soon as the necessary consultation had taken place within this Government. In advance of such consultation, I said, it would appear probable that our views would take the following form:

- (1) The problem of full employment is inextricably linked with problems of exchange and trade, with the consequence that a separate conference on full employment or on employment policy could hardly produce any useful result.
- (2) The holding of an employment conference in advance of a conference on trade, commodity, and cartel policy would be particularly unfruitful since the area of appropriate international cooperation for the attainment of full employment could not be determined in the absence of reasonably firm commitments with respect to trade, commodity, and cartel policy.

- (3) Efforts to achieve full employment are likely to take the form of encouragement of uneconomic production or the imposition of positive barriers to international commerce, unless agreement is obtained with respect to these matters.
- (4) There is no objection, however, to discussion of employment policy and to the exploration of essential areas of international cooperation in this field concurrently with the discussion of trade, commodity, and cartel policy. We would consider it appropriate and desirable to devote some time at a general conference to the discussion of employment problems and policies. The conference that we should like to have might well be called a conference on trade and employment.

Joseph C. Grew

[Enclosure]

Oral Statement Made by the Australian Minister (Eggleston) to the Acting Secretary of State

February 16, 1945.

The Government of Australia is grateful for the opportunity that you have given for the elaboration of the request that is made that an International Conference on the Full Employment Policy should be held.

We are grateful for the interview which has already taken place but we would like to emphasise the fact that the Australian Government attaches the very highest importance to the subject and hopes that it will not be rejected without the fullest consideration at the highest level.

I do not intend to argue the whole case as presented in our letter, but I want to stress two things; first, the international importance of full employment policies, and second, their relative importance when various international agreements are being considered.

The importance of the Full Employment Policies is fully realised, but the fact that they are of international concern is not so fully recognised. We are, however, bent on increasing our international trade and as we become committed to it, our investments, our labour force, and our capital organisations are directed to supplying foreign markets. Some are committed to this more than others. Australia is a large exporter of primary products. The prosperity of the countries to which we export is of vital concern to us and our position is compromised whenever there is large scale unemployment and demand falls. All countries are therefore dependent on the degree of employment in other countries and if employment can be assured, it will add greatly to the stability of the world economy. If, on the other hand, these high levels cannot be assured, then the economy of the exporting country becomes unbalanced; it may have to take internal steps to protect its balance of payments and its employment, and when all nations take these steps, the difficulties are greatly increased.

There are several agreements at present under discussion which deal with parts of the problem of international trade. In these agreements the various parties tie their hands and restrict their freedom.

These rights may well be given up as part of a general plan but we urge that the main features of a general plan should be the maintenance in each country of such levels of employment that the risks we fear may become small. In short, the tendency in times of difficulty and crisis is to adopt internal policies of restriction which intensify the crisis, unless there is a firm understanding that all great nations will carry out a positive policy which will keep up demand by maintaining employment.

The fact that various phases of economic policy are matters of international concern has been widely recognised. Mr. Morgenthau,⁵ in addressing a Chamber of Commerce the other day, said, "the underlying cause of failure to stabilise currencies during the last war was the view of each country that it was a problem of exclusive concern to each. The resultant instability must certainly be counted as a contributing cause of the great depression and the first phase of the present war."

I contend that the same argument applies to the maintenance of employment. What the Australian Government want to emphasize is that these policies of full employment are basic, none of the other agreements work with efficiency unless full employment is secured.

I would further point out that United States occupies a key position because it has such a large mass of potential purchasing power, and that without their co-operation little can be done.

I do not intend, of course, to argue the whole question, all I want to do today is to stress the international importance of such an agreement and emphasize that it cannot be regarded as incidental to these other agreements. If there are other matters which have to be discussed, their position and significance will be a matter of consideration at the conference.

⁵ Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury.

800.504/1-3045

The Secretary of State to the Australian Minister (Eggleston)

Washington, March 13, 1945.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated January 30, 1945, suggesting the holding of an international conference on employment at an early date. Notes of concurrence were submitted on the same date by the British Ambassador and the Minister of New Zealand.⁶ Careful consideration has been given to the proposal, and my Government would like to express the following views thereon:

The Government of the United States of America fully recognizes the urgency of the development by all nations of effective domestic programs for the attainment of high and stable levels of productive employment if the objective of freedom from want is to be realized. My Government further recognizes the desirability of international collaboration for the attainment of full employment and is in agreement with the view of the Australian Government that employment policy should be considered at an international conference.

My Government feels, however, that the employment problem is inextricably linked with problems of exchange and trade which have been under consideration by the several Governments for some time. While the maintenance of a sound and stable commercial and financial system may not be possible if serious unemployment exists in any major country, there can be no sound basis for the stability of productive employment at a high level in the various nations if there is not general international agreement to remove the excessive barriers and prevent the discriminatory practices which have restricted world trade in the past. Because of this close interrelationship between employment and trade, my Government is convinced that it is necessary to achieve a consistent definition of over-all objectives and unity of action in these fields.

It would be most unfortunate if full employment were sought in some countries by measures which would have the effect of reducing employment in other countries, as, for instance, by the encouragement of uneconomic production or by the erection of positive barriers to the free flow of international commerce. Only through the coordination of employment policy and trade policy will it be possible for each country to achieve the fullest and most economic use of its resources and the high levels of production and consumption which are essential if the general goal of freedom from want is to become a reality.

Therefore, my Government feels strongly that the desirability of proceeding as quickly as possible to promote international cooperation with respect to both trade and employment policies calls for joint, rather than separate, treatment. Discussion of these matters among the several Governments is to be desired in conformance with their reciprocal undertakings under Article VII of the several Mutual Aid Agreements that have been negotiated.

Accordingly, my Government would be pleased to participate at the earliest practicable date in an international conference on trade and employment. The conference would consider the entire problem of postwar international trade relations, including not only proposals for an international agreement for the reduction of trade barriers and the establishment of an international trade organization, but also the related problems of commodity agreement policy and cartel policy. The conference would also give full consideration to international aspects of the problem of maintaining high and stable levels of productive employment in all countries, and would explore the essential areas of international cooperation with a view to achieving agreement on methods, objectives, and procedures of coordinated action in this field.

It is the earnest hope of my Government that the Governments of Australia, the United Kingdom, and New Zealand will agree with this approach. If they do, my Government feels that steps should be taken promptly to hold the necessary preliminary discussions.

I am sending copies of this note to the British Ambassador and to the New Zealand Minister.

MEMORANDUM

PROPOSAL FOR A UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT 9

With the ending of hostilities with Japan and the restoration of world peace, the adoption by the United Nations of concrete measures and policies to assure the maintenance of employment and to reconstruct and enlarge world trade on an enduring basis has become a matter of urgency.

Constructive long-term policies in the fields of trade and employment are essential to the success of the international economic and political system envisaged by the United Nations Organization and by the specialized international agencies already established or drawn up in the fields of food and agriculture, monetary and exchange stabilization and international investment. Unless long-term trade and employment policies are agreed upon soon, there is grave danger that the pressing economic problems of the transition period, already upon us, may be solved by resort to measures of expediency which will tend to become permanent and thus seriously hamper later efforts at constructive international cooperation in these fields.

It is considered imperative, therefore, that a United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment be held at the earliest practicable date, preferably not later than June 1946.

It should be the objective of the Conference to develop methods of international cooperation with regard to the maintenance of employment and to achieve concrete and definitive agreement among

A similar memorandum was handed by the Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy (Brown) to Mr. Ch. J. H. Daubanton, Minister in the Netherlands Embassy, on October 23.

^{*}Handed to the Belgian Foreign Minister (Spaak) by the Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox) at a meeting on September 25, 1945. Mr. Spaak was in Washington as head of a Belgian delegation which opened a series of financial and trade discussions with United States representatives on September 19. For a statement of the result of these conversations, see note to the Belgian Foreign Minister, October 19, vol. IV, p. 111.

In a note of October 3, acknowledging this memorandum, the Belgian Ambassador (Silvercruys) stated that as soon as official invitations were extended the Belgian Government would be happy to notify its willingness to participate in the conference and in a preparatory meeting to which Mr. Wilcox had stated the United States Government intended to invite Belgium.

the United Nations with regard to: a) the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers and the elimination of all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce, b) the principles which should govern the institution and operation of intergovernmental commodity agreements, c) the elimination of restrictive trade practices by private business enterprises, and d) the establishment of international machinery for continuing consultation on these matters.

In order to assure the success of the proposed conference, there should be adequate preparation for it, particularly on the part of the principal trading nations of the world. Indeed, the success of the conference may be largely dependent upon the extent to which these nations can develop, in advance, concrete proposals which they would be prepared to support and make effective.

Consideration should therefore be given in the coming weeks as to the best means of facilitating the necessary consultations and negotiations among the principal trading nations.

It may be useful in this connection to indicate briefly the tentative proposals, now being prepared by technical experts within the United States Government, which it is believed might be proposed for the consideration of the conference and as a subject for preliminary consultations and negotiations among the principal trading nations:

- A. Employment. Since the prosperity of the various nations is interdependent, and the maintenance of employment is essential to enlarged world trade, there should be an undertaking by each nation that it will take appropriate action designed to maintain employment within its own jurisdiction (avoiding, however, employment measures which aggravate the trade and employment problems of other nations) and that it will cooperate with the other nations in the collection and exchange of information regarding employment problems.
- B. Trade. In the field of trade, there should be established an International Trade Organization, the members of which would undertake to conduct their international commercial policies and relations in accordance with agreed principles to be set forth in the articles of the Organization. These principles should provide for:
- 1. The relaxation of trade barriers of all kinds, including:a. the substantial reduction of tariffs and the elimination of tariff preferences.
- b. the general abandonment of quantitative restrictions on imports - and exports (except when used for agreed purposes),
 c. the general elimination or limitation of export subsidies, and the establishment of certain requirements with regard to the use of other subsidies affecting international trade,
- d. the general elimination of exchange restrictions on commercial transactions.
- e. the relaxation of restrictionist practices by state-trading enterprises,

f. the relaxation of miscellaneous barriers to trade such as those involved in the application of internal taxes, customs formalities, antidumping and countervailing duties, marks of origin, et cetera, and

g. the general prohibition of discriminatory trade treatment.

2. The establishment of principles governing the institution and operation of intergovernmental commodity arrangements. These principles should:

a. set forth the circumstances under which restrictive intergovernmental commodity agreements should be permitted (e.g. to control burdensome world surpluses of an agricultural commodity or to combat widespread unemployment in a mineral industry);

b. assure that any commodity agreements entered into shall, in accordance with the objectives of a liberal commercial policy, afford increasing opportunities for satisfying world requirements from sources from which they can be supplied most effectively; and

c. provide for equitable representation by producing and consuming countries in the formulation and operation of commodity agreements.

3. The elimination of restrictive business practices. Member nations should undertake to prevent commercial enterprises within their jurisdiction from participating in agreements, combinations, etc., which restrict international trade or access to international markets or foster monopolistic control of international trade. Certain practices, such as price-fixing, allocating markets, limiting production, etc., should ipso facto be regarded as restrictive. The member nations should cooperate with each other and with the Organization in carrying out these provisions.

The functions of the proposed International Trade Organization would, in general, include the collection, analysis and publication of information relevant to its purposes; the rendering of technical assistance to members; the interpretation of the principles laid down and referred to above; and consultation and settlement of disputes arising out of the application of these principles. The Organization would have sections dealing with each of the three broad fields described above.

ferences in March and June prior to transmitting them to other United Nations. It is improbable that Soviets will wish to comment on conference proposals before date contemplated for invitations to be sent out.

As concerns Soviet participation in "proposed United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment" the records of Embassy do not show that Soviet Government ever replied to our repeated invitations to join in Article VII discussions.¹¹

Under Soviet system foreign trade is a monopoly of the State. All foreign trade transactions are controlled according to plan for furtherance of national economic interests and often political objectives. Soviet national monopoly of foreign trade is integral part of Soviet system and cannot be altered.

Attitude of Soviet Union toward lowering of tariff barriers and freer trade will be different in different areas depending upon their interests.

- (1). In those areas bordering on USSR Soviets are proceeding on unilateral basis to conclude agreements for exchange of commodities on quota basis and for economic collaboration which involves participation of Soviet capital in the major industries and trade of country concerned. In these bordering countries they will wish to have predominant influence both political and economic and will resist any attempt of other nations outside Soviet influence to participate to more than a nominal extent in trade of these countries.
- (2). As regards Soviet attitude toward freer trade between countries outside its sphere of influence Soviet Government will be happy to see growth in foreign trade based on lowering of tariff barriers and free competition between individual private producers in which media Soviet foreign trade monopoly can most effectively buy and sell on most favorable market.

As regards proposed March talks on specific reductions of tariffs and other trade barriers there is absolutely no point to negotiations with USSR for mutual reduction of tariffs. In such negotiations if actual reductions were obtained US would be making concessions and receiving nothing in return.

Soviet tariffs do not hamper or restrict Soviet foreign trade and even if all Soviet tariffs were completely abolished no objective of US policy would have been accomplished and the volume and direction of Soviet foreign trade would not be affected.

¹¹ In September 1943 an invitation to hold such discussions had been extended by the United States to the Government of the Soviet Union. Additional information was given to the Soviet Government at the time of the Foreign Ministers' Conference in Moscow in October 1943, and again in December 1943. However, the Embassy had never succeeded in having any discussions whatsover with Soviet representatives on this subject. For documentation regarding the September and December approaches, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, pp. 1099 ff.; for the paper handed to the Soviets at the time of the Moscow Conference, see memorandum entitled "Bases of Our Program for International Economic Cooperation", ibid., p. 763.

Soviet tariffs are not designed to protect Soviet industry and agriculture against foreign competition. In a totalitarian economy such as that of USSR where whole economy and foreign trade included are operated up State according to plan, concept of "protection" has no meaning in connection with tariffs.

Soviet tariffs do bring revenue to State. This is not, however, reason for existence of tariffs since revenue from foreign trade would be collected by Soviet Government in many different ways.

At present Soviet tariffs serve largely bookkeeping purpose. Soviet accounting procedure requires that imported goods be made available to Soviet enterprises at approximately same cost as comparable Soviet manufactured goods since if underpriced imported goods would give advantage to enterprises using them enabling them to show higher profits than enterprises using Soviet manufactured goods. Since profits in Soviet system are intended to measure efficiency of operation of economic units, imported goods must cost enterprises using them same as comparable domestic goods. Soviet tariffs apparently aim to make prices of imported goods comparable to those of Soviet goods.

Soviet Government, for instance, charged tariffs on lend-lease imports. This is evidenced by fact that in 1940 3 billion rubles were collected from tariffs in USSR and in 1944 it was planned to collect 24 billion a year when practically all imports into USSR came from US, UK and Canada under lend-lease and mutual aid programs. This was clearly done for reason mentioned in above paragraph.

Same end could be obtained without tariffs. Foreign Trade Commissariat would be permitted for instance to release imported goods to Soviet institutions at prices comparable to those of Soviet made goods without charging any tariffs. In this case profit would accrue to Foreign Trade Commissariat and could be taxed 100 percent by Government.

Thus tariff reductions by USSR would be fictitious concession and would not have any effect on Soviet foreign trade.

The question of our own tariff policy should be judged therefore on considerations other than obtaining reduction of Soviet tariffs.

No. 199

Washington, November 1, 1945.

Sir: Within the immediate future the Department proposes to publish "Proposals for the Expansion of World Trade and Employment—Developed by Staff Members of Various Departments of the United States Government in Preparation for an International Conference on Trade and Employment, and Presented for Consideration by the Governments and Peoples of the World." These Proposals will suggest measures for the reduction of governmental barriers to international trade; prevention of action by private business interests which restrict international trade; policies which should be adopted with respect to commodities when supply exceeds effective demand; international measures for the maintenance of high levels of employment; and the creation of an International Trade Organization under the United Nations Economic and Social Council, to serve as a forum for discussion of problems in the entire field of commercial policy.

The proposals for the reduction of trade barriers will cover such questions as the lowering of tariffs and the general elimination of quotas and licenses. They will touch also upon the matter of preferential trade relations between various countries of the world and it is clear that if there is to be a solution to the problem created by the existence of such preferential trading arrangements as those which exist between the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, consideration must equally be given to the preferential trading arrangement which has existed between the United States and Cuba.

Because it is recognized that the publication of these Proposals, including reference to the matter of trade preferences (even though the United States-Cuban situation is not specifically mentioned), will have important repercussions in Cuba, it has been deemed desirable to give the Cuban Government some advance notice and explanation regarding the Proposals in general and the matter of preferences in particular in so far as they will relate to the Cuban situation. . . .

With regard to substance, in so far as the matter of preferences is concerned, there is enclosed a copy of the section of the Proposals dealing with that subject. These Proposals are in somewhat different form than at the time they were explained to Mr. Nufer ¹² when he was in the Department. The purpose of these Proposals is to set forth the general objective that tariff preferences will be eliminated as a part of a world-wide movement for the relaxation of trade barriers of all kinds and, as a step to this end, to provide a basis on which initial negotiations can be conducted. While it is the Department's hope that the negotiations in the Spring of 1946 will result in the substantial elimination of preferences, it is recognized that the extent to which this can be achieved will largely depend upon the willingness of the major trading nations to take equally comprehensive and thoroughgoing action with regard to other barriers to trade. In other words, it is an essential part of the Proposals that those countries which are asked to relinquish the protection to their exports afforded by preferences will be compensated by the additional outlets for their exports expected to result from a general lowering of trade barriers.

Since it is believed that the Cuban Government is likely to raise questions on these points, the following explanation is offered with regard to subparagraphs a and b of paragraph 1 of the statement on preferences:

1. With regard to point α , providing that existing international commitments (such as those embodied in the trade agreement between the United States and Cuba ¹³) will not be permitted to stand in the way of action agreed upon with respect to tariff preferences, it is not meant by this that such commitments are to be abrogated forthwith, but merely that they shall be adapted, through the normal processes of consultation between the parties concerned, so as not to impede the effectiveness of the arrangements agreed upon. The inclusion of Cuba among the nations which would be invited to participate in the negotiations next Spring would assure the Cuban Government a voice in determining these arrangements.

2. Point b sets forth a principle which is important primarily in dealing with British preferences and is designed to prevent the adoption of the bargaining position that the reduction or elimination of each margin of preference must be negotiated entirely apart from the the reduction of the non-preferential tariff accompanying the preference. It should be emphasized, however, that this provision does not mean that preferential rates of duty, such as those applying to articles imported into the United States from Cuba, cannot be reduced.

The Embassy will be kept currently informed as to further developments, and whether the advance information for the Cuban Government is to be transmitted through the Cuban Embassy in Washington or through the Embassy in Habana. In the meantime, if after studying the enclosures, the Embassy has questions with regard to any point, the Department will be pleased to supply the necessary information.

Very truly yours,

For the Secretary of State: WILLIAM L. CLAYTON

enter into definite arrangements for the substantial reduction of tariffs and for the elimination of tariff preferences. As an initial step in the process of eliminating tariff preferences it should be agreed that:

- a. Existing international commitments will not be permitted to stand in the way of action agreed upon with respect to tariff preferences.
- b. All negotiated reductions in most-favored-nation tariffs will operate automatically to reduce or eliminate margins of preference.
- c. Margins of preference on any product will in no case be increased and no new preferences will be introduced.
- 2. Action for the elimination of tariff preferences would be taken in conjunction with adequate measures for the substantial reduction of barriers to world trade, as part of the mutually advantageous international arrangements contemplated in this document.

The Ambassador in Cuba (Norweb) to the Secretary of State

Habana, November 6, 1945. [Received November 9—2:32 p. m.]

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the Department's secret air mail instruction no. 199 of November 1, 1945, informing the Embassy of the proposed early publication of "Proposals for the Expansion of World Trade and Employment" which will suggest measures for the reduction of governmental barriers to international trade, et cetera, and which will touch also upon the matter of preferential trade relations between various countries of the world. The Department points out that if there is to be a solution to the problem created by such preferential trading arrangements as those which exist between the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, consideration must equally be given to the existing preferential trading arrangement between the United States and Cuba.

It is noted that the Department, realizing that the Proposals and especially the reference therein to trade preferences, will have wide repercussions in Cuba, considers it advisable to give the Cuban Government some advance notice and therefore proposes, shortly before the publication thereof, to deliver an explanatory memorandum, together with supplementary oral information, to the officer in charge of the Cuban Embassy, who will be requested to transmit the memorandum (of which a draft was attached to the Department's instruction no. 199) to his Government.

I have studied carefully the Department's instruction and draft memorandum and find myself in full agreement with the suggested procedure. We obviously cannot consistently endeavor to maintain the Cuban tariff preferences in the face of our overall commercial policies and our request of the British that they eliminate or reduce imperial preferences.

As the Department points out, the effects in Cuba of the announcement that the preferential tariff treatment which the United States and Cuba have accorded each other since 1902 must be abandoned will be far-reaching. Those effects, however, will be more political and psychological than economic, as the duty preference on Cuban sugar (which is still the all-important item in Cuba's economy) has already been substantially reduced as a result of our trade agreement with Peru, while Cuba's need for the preference has been largely removed by the operation of the 1937 Sugar Act, which assures Cuba of a substantial participation in our sugar market. Moreover, such other important items in Cuba's trade with the United States as Havana tobacco (because of its exceptional quality) and fresh fruits and vegetables (because of their perishable nature and Cuba's geographic proximity to the United States) may be expected to suffer little, if at all, from the loss of their duty preferences.

It is not intended to convey the impression that the elimination of the tariff preferences will not prove prejudicial to certain phases of Cuba's economy, but I believe it is safe to say that it will affect more seriously our exports to Cuba than Cuba's exports to the United States. Our rice growers, for instance, when again faced with Oriental competition, will, if deprived of the Cuban duty preference on American rice, expectedly lose the Cuban market, which during recent years has taken about 25 percent of our entire rice production. Although rice is perhaps the outstanding example, there are many other instances where American producers, manufacturers and exporters will find it difficult if not impossible to maintain their position in the Cuban market once they no longer have the competitive advantage afforded them by the duty preferentials. It is assumed, of course, that the Department and the other interested agencies of our Government are fully aware of and have given careful consideration to this particular aspect of the matter.

With further reference to the repercussions in Cuba of the elimination of the tariff preferences, it should be mentioned that Cuba has for the past several years been enjoying unusual prosperity and that this condition may be expected to endure so long as the sugar market continues favorable. If the proposed step must be taken, the present moment would therefore seem to afford as propitious an opportunity as can be hoped for as its effects would be less severely felt now than during a period of economy depression. These effects will doubtless be further minimized by Cuba's inclusion in the group of leading trade nations with which our Government hopes next spring to negotiate a multilateral trade agreement, as the Cubans will gather therefrom that they may expect to receive additional tariff concessions on some of their leading export products even though these concessions are on an unconditional-most-favored-nation or multilateral basis. The Embassy is therefore especially gratified that the Department has decided to include Cuba in this select group.

In conclusion, I wish to express my appreciative recognition of the competent and tactful manner in which the Department proposes to broach this delicate problem, a procedure which it is believed will help materially to cushion the impact of the measure on Cuban public opinion and to minimize its psychological and political effects.

Respectfully yours,

R. HENRY NORWEB

The Secretary of State to All Diplomatic Officers Except Those in Argentina, Cuba, and Spain

Washington, November 14, 1945.

The Secretary of State encloses copies of a document entitled "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment" ¹⁶ which was referred to in the Department's circular telegram of November 2, 1945. ¹⁷

Copies of this document will be transmitted to diplomatic missions in Washington upon a later date regarding which the Officer in Charge will be informed in accordance with the Department's circular telegram of November 5,¹⁷ and it is desired that copies be handed to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs as soon as possible after the missions have received clearance from the Department to do so.¹⁸ Advantage should be taken of the opportunity for an oral statement along the following lines:

The Proposals now presented are the result of many months of careful work and, although the details are presented for consideration by people everywhere as the work of technical experts within the United States Government, the principles underlying them carry the official endorsement of this Government.

¹⁶ For text, see Department of State Bulletin, December 9, 1945, p. 918; for related material, see ibid., pp. 912-918.

¹⁷ Not printed.
¹⁸ A circular telegram of December 5, 1945, 8 a. m., gave the release date as December 6, and instructed the diplomatic officers to deliver the document on that date to the respective Foreign Ministers or Foreign Offices. On the same date the document was to be given to foreign diplomatic missions in Washington. (560.AL/12-545)

As noted in the foreword by the Secretary of State the Proposals are presented for consideration in preparation for an International Conference on Trade and Employment which the United States Government, through its representatives on the appropriate organ of the United Nations, will propose be held not later than the summer of 1946. Representatives of the United Nations have met and laid the groundwork for future cooperation in the fields of currency and investment, food and agriculture, and civil aviation.¹⁹ There remains in the economic sphere, however, the necessity for early and effective cooperative action in the field of trade and employment.

The Government of the United States believes that the success of an international conference on trade and employment requires adequate preparation and as full agreement on basic principles as it may be possible to achieve in advance of such a conference. The specific proposals which are now being presented are intended to contribute in a practical way to such advance preparation and agreement. The Government of the United States hopes, therefore, that careful study will be given to these Proposals and that in due course the nations of the world will make known their views regarding them.

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, December 5, 1945.

Sir: Reference is made to the Department's circular telegrams of November 2, 5 p. m. and November 5, 9 a. m., 20 and to the Department's circular instruction of November 14, regarding the proposed publication of "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment."

1. When the document entitled "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment" has been published, and copies have been transmitted to the Government of the United Kingdom in accordance with the circular communications referred to above, you are requested to deliver to the appropriate British officials the following invitation from the Government of the United States:

"The Government of the United States refers to the document 'Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment' which has been transmitted to the Government of the United Kingdom, and to the proposal of the Government of the United States that the United Nations Organization convene in the summer of 1946 a conference on trade and employment to consider and take action to realize the objectives referred to in that document.

"It is the view of the Government of the United States that the success of the proposed conference can best be realized if there is thoroughgoing preparation for it; and that such preparation should include concrete plans, which the principal trading nations of the world would be prepared to adopt, for the actual reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers, and the elimination of discriminatory trade treatment, in accordance with the objectives agreed upon in Article VII of the Mutual-Aid Agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom.

"The Government of the United States therefore has the honor to ask the Government of the United Kingdom whether it would be prepared to appoint representatives to attend a preliminary meeting in March or April of 1946, to be held at a place to be determined. It would be the purpose of the meeting, which would be attended by the other governments accepting invitations, to:

a) negotiate, for the consideration of the proposed conference, concrete arrangements for the relaxation of tariffs and trade barriers of all kinds which would command the support of governments attending the conference; and

b) to consult, and to reach such preliminary understandings as may be practicable, with regard to other topics on the proposed agenda for the conference referred to above.

"In order that the representatives of the United States may make a practical contribution to the work of the preliminary meeting, it will be necessary for the Government of the United States, under the procedure required by the Trade Agreements Act, to issue public notice of intention to negotiate for the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers with the governments intending to participate in that meeting. In view of the public hearings and other procedures required by law this notice should be issued at least three months prior to the beginning of definitive international discussions by the representatives of the United States. Accordingly, the Government of the United States hopes to be able to issue, by the end of this year or early in 1946, a public notice of intention to negotiate with the United Kingdom. In order to make this possible, it is urged that the Government of the United Kingdom indicate, prior to December 31, 1945, whether it will participate in the preliminary meeting.

"In accordance with customary practice, the proposed public notice will be accompanied by a list of the products which will be considered for the granting of trade concessions to the United Kingdom and on which public hearings will be held. The list will include those products of which the United Kingdom has been, or is likely to become, a principal supplier to the United States.

"This invitation is also being sent to the following governments:

France, Canada, South Africa, New Zealand, Australia, India, Belgium, Luxembourg, Brazil, Netherlands, Czechoslovakia, Cuba, U.S.S.R. and China."

2. The Department intends to send you shortly an instruction providing detailed information regarding its views as to the nature of the agreement to be sought at the preliminary meeting in the spring of 1946, the procedures which the Department will propose for the reaching of such agreement, and the relation between this meeting and the general international conference on trade and employment which it is hoped would be held sometime in the summer of 1946. Pending receipt of this instruction you are authorized to provide the appropriate British officials with a statement containing the following explanatory outline:

- A. At the preliminary meeting in the spring of 1946, to be attended by the United States and by such of the other fourteen countries receiving invitations which have accepted the invitation, each country would present a schedule of the tariff concessions which it would be prepared to grant in an agreement with the other countries attending the meeting, such an agreement also to contain mutually acceptable provisions dealing with tariff preferences and non-tariff trade barriers. Each country should also be prepared to make requests of the tariff concessions which it desires to receive from each of the other countries attending the meeting.
- B. The tariff concessions in the schedule proposed by each country would be offered to all the other countries as a group. Each country would thus obtain in its own right all of the concessions made by each of the other countries.
- C. With regard to non-tariff trade barriers, there would be included in the draft agreement provisions, uniformly applicable to the trade of all participants, giving effect to the objectives as to non-tariff trade barriers which are set forth in Chapter III of the "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment" (e.g., elimination of exchange controls, regulation of subsidies, abolition of quotas, et cetera).
- D. These discussions would also afford opportunity for consultation among the countries participating in the meeting regarding all other elements in the Proposals (i.e. questions of employment, policy regarding "surplus" commodities, cartel policy, and an international trade organization).
- E. The tentative agreement among the countries participating in the preliminary meeting (excluding the tariff schedules) would be subject to change at the general international conference, in the light of the considerations advanced by other countries.
- F. The general conference would also consider the questions of adherence to the draft agreement reached at the preliminary meeting and the treatment to be accorded by countries which accept the agreement to the trade of those which do not accept it and of any countries not invited to participate in the general conference. The drafting countries, i.e. those participating in the preliminary meeting, should propose at the conference that non-drafting countries be considered as provisionally adhering to the agreement upon acceptance of a) the nontariff provisions and b) a commitment to undertake bilateral tariff negotiations with the other countries adhering to the agreement. Countries considered as adhering provisionally before they have completed such tariff negotiations should be required to give adequate tariff concessions in return for benefits which they receive as a result of other tariff negotiations already concluded. The drafting countries should also propose that, subject to exceptions for particular countries recommended by the proposed International Trade Organization, the benefits of the agreement should, after a reasonable period of time, be withheld from the trade of those countries which failed to adhere to it, and that the tariff concessions should similarly be withheld from the trade of countries which, having adhered, failed to negotiate tariff reductions judged by the International Trade Organization to be in conformity with the spirit of the agreement. Drafting countries and provisionally adhering countries should retain full liberty of action to determine whether to extend most-favored-nation treatment to the trade of countries not invited to participate in the conference and not immediately eligible to adhere to the convention. Decision in such cases would presumably be influenced by the adequacy of arrangements made by the non-adhering countries in liberalizing their trade more or less pari passu with the action taken by adhering countries. Findings and reports of the proposed International Trade Organization regarding the trade and commercial policies of nonadhering countries might assist adhering countries in reaching such decisions.

G. Upon the close of the conference the agreement would be brought into force among the drafting countries and such other countries as would join, in accordance with their constitutional procedures.

Very truly yours,

For the Secretary of State:

However, you will note from enclosure to Depts circular instruction, Nov 14, that US trade proposals do deal with question of rules for state trading which directly affect U.S.S.R. U.S.S.R., having complete monopoly of foreign trade, would be asked to agree to purchase foreign goods

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for European, Far Eastern, Near Eastern, and African Affairs (Dunn)

[Washington,] December 14, 1945.

The Norwegian Ambassador referred to the invitation sent out a few days ago to fourteen nations to discuss trade arrangements preliminary to the meeting of the International World Trade Conference. Mr. Morgenstierne said that he felt that in view of the importance of Norway's position in commerce and shipping generally, she was entitled to be included among the nations invited to this preliminary arrangement.

Mr. Acheson 21 explained to the Ambassador that these invitations were not concerned with arrangements or preliminary discussions relating to the International World Trade Conference; they were for the purpose of negotiating tentative arrangements which could later be put in the form of trade agreements with certain countries, the trade in certain commodities with regard to which the tariffs were at present on a high level. The intention of the discussions provided for in these invitations was to put the United States in a position to lower its duties in the event agreements were entered into between other countries to lower their duties and generalize such agreed reductions. Mr. Acheson explained that it was necessary for the United States in conformity with the existing statutes regulating tariffs to proceed along these lines and negotiate these tentative arrangements as it was not possible for us to agree to make general horizontal reduction in our tariffs. By working out these interim arrangements we would be in a position to go along with substantial reductions in tariffs which would correspond to a general reduction which might be entered into by the other countries in the International Trade Conference.

Mr. Acheson asked Mr. Dunn to undertake to give Mr. Morgenstierne further information with regard to these proposed negotia-

The Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

> Moscow, December 15, 1945—5 p. m. [Received December 17—8:50 a.m.] ²²

4184. Re Department's circular December 7, 5 p. m.23 and Deptel 2505, December 12, 3 p. m. With respect to invitation which I am directed to present to Soviet Government to participate in March preliminary meeting on trade and employment, I wish to make following observation:

1. Meeting is to be largely for purpose of negotiating reductions of tariffs. I explained in my 3597, October 19, why lowering of Soviet tariffs cannot be considered as a concession on Soviet part. partment now indicates Russia is to be asked to bind itself to purchase goods up to a certain minimum value from other parties to the agreement, to refrain from discrimination, and to make purchases and sales solely on basis of commercial considerations.

In view of this Embassy, these points are all unrealistic. In absence of any international agreement, Soviet purchases from foreign countries are going to be determined by a definite plan, which takes into account a number of factors such as amount of credits and foreign exchange available, need for specific commodities, et cetera. This plan, incidentally, is never revealed to outsiders. A Soviet commitment to purchase a minimum amount abroad could be considered a concession from our standpoint only if this amount were greater than what Soviets had planned anyway to purchase. But Soviets need imports badly, and their import plans will doubtless envisage maximum they can manage financially. To bind them to a limit no higher than that maximum would be to ask them for no concession at all. To bind them to a limit higher than that maximum would be of questionable wisdom. Soviet imports are going to outweigh actual commodity exports heavily for a long time to come. The problem is not to bring pressure to increase their orders abroad. The problem is to get them to contribute to world economy something even half way commensurate to what they expect to get out of it. To ask them to buy beyond their own estimated maximum will not solve this problem; it will only aggravate it.

²² Marginal note on file copy of this telegram: "Delay due to undecipherability of original".
28 Not printed.

As to other points, there is no reason to suppose that Soviet Government would promise in good faith not to discriminate or to buy and sell solely on commercial considerations. Soviet leaders have never ceased to pride themselves on their foreign trade monopoly as a unique and superior political weapon in dealings with capitalist world, and I can assure Department that they have no serious intention of forfeiting any of advantages it gives them. Nor could they ever be held to such a pledge. Who could prove that allocation of certain orders in one country rather than another constituted "discrimination"? Soviet Government would hardly undertake any blanket obligation to give explanations to foreign governments as to motives of its allocation of orders, and even if it did it could easily find numerous arguments (some of which would be beyond our power to check or rebut) to prove that commercial considerations had been dominant.

The things we want from Russia on economic lines are not these. Of much greater importance to us and to cause of international economic collaboration would be a Russian willingness—not yet evidenced—to join with us in trying to solve Europe's desperate food and supply problems on a non-political basis; to do something toward economic rehabilitation of Balkan countries which have now been driven literally to brink of ruin by Soviet policies; and to cease pursuing special economic monopolies and other advantages in eastern and central Europe through secret agreements negotiated under the shadow of political intimidation and deliberately concealed from Russia's major Allies.

Department may rest assured that no favorable answer will be forthcoming to this invitation until after present political talks ²⁴ and possibly not for weeks thereafter. In addition, "proposals" on which this invitation is based have not yet reached this mission. We will, therefore, await further instructions before extending invitation.

2. I strongly recommend that the invitation be phrased in such a way as to indicate to Russians what will be expected of them. As it stands, particularly with the oral comment Department has suggested, they would enter March talks with firm impression that all they would be asked to do would be to make tariff concessions in return for similar concessions on part of other countries. It would be unfortunate for them to go into talks with this understanding and then to discover that they alone, of all those present, were to be expected to undertake special obligations for minimum purchases from other countries. Russians are peculiarly sensitive about matters of agenda. Their representatives have little latitude in negotiation in best of circumstances, and when faced with unexpected changes in agenda they are usually obliged to insist on long delays while they get new instructions.

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Your Excellency's note No. 5191 of the 19th December ³⁰ referring to the document 'Proposals for Consideration by an International Conference on Trade and Employment', suggesting various measures which should be taken in preparation for the proposed conference and inviting His Majesty's Govt. in the UK to appoint representatives to attend a preliminary meeting to be held in March or April of 1946 at a place to be determined.

2. I have to inform you in reply that His Majesty's Govt share the view of the US Govt that there should be thorough preparation for the proposed international conference and would accordingly be glad to appoint representatives to attend the preliminary meeting for the purposes described in the third paragraph of your note.

3. On the subject of the date at which the proposed meeting should be held His Majesty's Govt share, of course, the desire of your Govt that the contemplated discussions should lead to an early and satisfactory result. They are, however, in some doubt whether the thoroughgoing preparations necessary to ensure success can be completed in time for the meeting to be held in March or April. The trained staff available for these preparations has been under great strain and is limited in number. His Majesty's Govt also feel that other govts invited to attend may be suffering from the same disadvantages. The representatives of certain govts will, moreover, have a considerable distance to travel. His Majesty's Govt would therefore prefer to reserve for the time being their final expression of opinion on the actual date at which the meeting should take place and they suggest that the matter should be further considered in the light of the replies received from other govts.

4. His Majesty's Govt take note of the steps, described in the fourth paragraph of your note, which it will be necessary for the US Govt to take in accordance with the provisions of the Trade Agreements Act and their customary practice thereunder. They trust, however, that their immediate acceptance of the invitation to appoint representatives to attend the preliminary meeting will so far as they are concerned remove any obstacle to the immediate initiation of this procedure.

5. With regard to the proposed list of products which will be considered for the granting of trade concessions, His Majesty's Govt desire to point out that in their view the discussions relating to tariffs and preferences could not be satisfactorily completed if they did not embrace Newfoundland, Southern Rhodesia, Burma and the non self-governing colonies and protectorates and the mandated territories the mandate for which is held by His Majesty's Govt in the UK. They trust, therefore, that it will be possible to include in the list of products on which concessions to the UK will be considered, products which are of interest to the territories mentioned above, and that in view of the short time remaining before the publication of the list, the US Govt will be able to arrange for the publication of supplementary lists containing any items which may prove to have been omitted from the original list."

³⁰ Not printed.

Reservation regarding time of meeting has been discussed with Liesching ³¹ and other Board of Trade officials and with Hall Patch ³² of FonOff, all of whom are anxious that this reservation should not be regarded as indicating any disposition to neglect carrying out fully, letter and spirit of Washington undertakings. There is no disposition to question fact that March-April target date was part of those undertakings but after resurveying situation on return to London Liesching began to have some misgivings as to ability to complete preparatory work by that time. They unquestionably have difficult manpower problem and Embassy is satisfied pressure will be applied to complete work at earliest possible date.

With reference to last paragraph of note, Board of Trade has furnished following list of British colonies which are not fully self-governing, of British protectorates and protected states, and of mandated territories administered under the authority of His Majesty's Govt in the UK of Great Britain and Northern Ireland:

Aden (colony and protectorate); Bahamas, Barbados, Basutoland. Bechuanaland protectorate, Bermuda, British Guiana, British Honduras, British Solomon Islands protectorate, Ceylon, Cyprus, Falkland Islands and dependencies, Fiji, Gambia (colony and protectorate), Gibraltar, Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony; Gold Coast— (a) Colony, (b) Ashanti (c) Northern Territories (d) Togoland under British Mandate; Hong Kong, Jamaica (including Turks and Caicos Islands and the Cayman Islands), Kenya (colony and protectorate), Leeward Islands-Antigua, Montserrat, St. Christopher and Nevis, Virgin Islands; Malay States—(a) Federated Malay States-Negri Sembilan, Pahang, Perak, Selangor, (b) Unfederated Malay States-Johore, Kedah, Kelantan, Perlis, Trengganu and Burnei; Malta; Mauritius; New Hebrides; Nigeria—(a) Colony (b) protectorate (c) Cameroons under British Mandate; North Borneo, state of; Northern Rhodesia; Nyasaland protectorate; Palestine (excluding Trans-Jordan); St. Helena and dependencies; Sarawak; Sevchelles; Sierra Leone (colony and protectorate); Somaliland protectorate; Straits Settlements; Swaziland; Tanganyika territory; Tonga; Trans-Jordan; Trinidad and Tobago; Uganda protectorate; Windward Islands-Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, St. Vincent; Zanzibar protectorate.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

Washington, December 28, 1945—8 p. m.

- 2648. Dept appreciates considerations advanced urtel 4184 of Dec. 15. However, participation by USSR is deemed of great importance. Political importance of USSR as member of Big Three alone would provide compelling reason for invitation. Moreover, spring negotiations and later general conference will provide medium for discussion of methods of establishing an international trade framework designed to encompass both private enterprise and state-trading systems. Because the USSR is the major representative of the statetrading system, it seems clear that participation of USSR is essential in formulating this framework. Additional reason is desire to maintain in ITO,34 as agency of UNO,35 full representation of parent agency. This Govt hopes USSR will accept invitation and will participate fully.

posals" are open to modification. Preferred suggestions now center around global purchase commitment and principle of commercial considerations. Reasons supporting incorporation of these suggestions on agenda as promised in my telegram 2572 of December 18³⁶ follow.

3. Global purchase commitment. Dept agrees with your observations that purchase commitment for the USSR should not exceed its capacity to purchase abroad. In any event, such commitment would be subject to appropriate escape clauses.

While Dept agrees with you that there is probability that Soviet Union would purchase the maximum even in the absence of a commitment to do so, such a commitment would nevertheless appear to be the most satisfactory one which can be asked of countries having a complete state monopoly of foreign trade. The knowledge that the USSR was prepared to purchase a given amount of goods during a given period would contribute to the stability of world trading conditions by providing advance information to other countries regarding magnitude of foreign trade operations of USSR. The evidence which such a commitment would give of Soviet participation in the proposed trade arrangements would stimulate confidence here and elsewhere in the general success of the program. Finally, it is believed that a commitment of this kind would be valuable from the viewpoint of general public opinion in the United States and elsewhere outside the USSR.

The idea of a purchase commitment on the part of the USSR is not new. It was first suggested by USSR at the London Economic Conference of 1933.³⁷ The principle is also included in a bilateral form in the commercial agreements which the US has concluded with USSR.

The subject of the size of the global purchase commitment which might be asked of the USSR is now being studied. A memorandum outlining various proposals which have been made with respect to the global purchase principle will be sent to the Embassy as soon as possible.

4. Principle of commercial considerations. This principle relates to all state trading operations, whether in USSR or elsewhere. It is recognized that the principle would be difficult to administer in particular cases; yet it is a pledge which, if carried out in good faith, would prevent the use of a state monopoly for purposes of exerting political pressure upon other countries. The pledge of fair and equitable treatment of which the principle of commercial considerations is a standard is analogous to the pledge of most-favored-nation treatment on the part of private-enterprise countries.

These assurances of non-discriminatory treatment in respect of govt. monopolies and state trading operations have been included in earlier trade agreements concluded by the US, although designed in such cases only to deal generally with individual products which might be monopolized. These provisions appear to be the best that could be devised for a country having a complete state monopoly of foreign trade as well as those cases of single-product monopolies.

The provisions regarding non-discrimination would be applicable to the countries of Eastern Europe and thus would serve to limit the economic instruments available to the USSR in dealing with these countries. For example, the USSR would implicitly be required to refrain from discriminatory clearing agreements and barter arrangements. It would also be unable to accord special treatment or privileges to the commerce of the countries of Eastern Europe without specific exception in the commercial policy principles of the International Trade Organization. ITO would provide valuable forum for discussing deviations from rules. Likewise, the countries of Eastern Europe, if they become members of the International Trade Organization, would be required to abide by certain principles in the conduct of their foreign trade. It is believed that the program will serve to mitigate the effect on other countries of the exclusive position which the USSR now has in that area.

It is recalled that the USSR has on two occasions proposed a pact for economic non-aggression which provided that the Contracting Parties would "abstain in their mutual relations from all forms of discrimination." (For text see annex 11, page 68 of the minutes of the 4th Session of the Commission of Enquiry for European Union Sept. 3–5, 1931 League of Nations number c.681.M.281.1931.VII and Monetary and Economic Conference, London June 20, 1933, League of Nations number C.M.E/C.E./15.)

The general subject of Soviet cooperation in the formulation of programs for feeding Europe, economic rehabilitation of Eastern Europe etc. could not be properly included on agenda for spring negotiations or general conference which would be concerned with establishing the ITO and formulating broad policies relating to world trade and employment. It is hoped that Soviet cooperation in this program will, however, be a step toward the objective of Soviet contribution to world economy commensurate with what they receive from it.

4. [sic] It should be noted in general that while certain of the provisions of Proposals (e.g., reduction of tariff levels) would not be applicable to the Soviet Union, certain other provisions (e.g. export subsidies, transit duties, cartels and commodity policy) would appropriately apply even though no specific mention is made of their application to controlled economies. The Soviet Union will in all probability be particularly interested in questions of cartels and commodity policy which would be under ITO. Soviets have frequently stated opposition to cartels and could be concerned in carrying out program of imports with proposed controls over cartels. With respect to commodity agreements the USSR would undoubtedly wish to have a voice in any arrangements restricting trade in products of which it is a consumer, as well as products of which it is an exporter.

5. You may communicate to the Soviet officials as an explanatory statement such of the foregoing as you in your discretion consider necessary for an adequate understanding by them of the portions of the Proposals relating to countries having a complete state monopoly of foreign trade. Advise Dept of what Soviets are told. You should also communicate a statement along the lines of that contained in Deptcirtel of Dec. 7,38 which makes it clear that the Soviet Union, if it should decide to participate in the negotiations, would request tariff and other trade-barrier concessions on its export products from each of the other participating governments. Your statement should include mention of the paragraph in the instruction under reference which deals with the possibility of withholding tariff reductions and other benefits from the trade of nonparticipating countries.

We realize that the Proposals are open to some of the objections which you have raised. Dept would appreciate receiving any suggestions which you may have for their improvement.

tiate with these countries until about the end of February. This will probably postpone date of preliminary conference to some time in June. The moving forward of date of preliminary conference would appear to provide an adequate interval for prior bilateral economic and financial discussions with the French. In these bilateral discussions, Dept agrees with you that our objective should be to obtain at least tentative commitments by the French in support of our long-run commercial policy objectives.

- 3. Prior to and during these bilateral discussions, however, it will be necessary for France, as well as all other governments intending to participate in preliminary conference, to proceed rapidly with detailed preparations therefor. While such preparations need not involve advance commitments as to substance, they will, for example, require that France begin at an early date to formulate the tariff concessions which it would be prepared to offer in respect of the products of the other participating countries. Also, the French Govt should indicate to these countries, at an early date, the products of which France is a principal supplier to their markets and on which it would desire to receive tariff concessions from them.
- 4. As indicated in Dept's instruction no. 1657 [6227?] of Dec. 5, Dept intends to send you as soon as possible a detailed statement of its views regarding these and other procedures which it appears necessary to settle well in advance of preliminary trade conference. We would not wish to have these advance preparations delayed in any way by proposed bilateral discussions and you should resist any effort by French Govt to so delay these preparations.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Norway (Osborne)

Washington, January 12, 1946—10 a.m.

21. After careful consideration, it is felt that it would not be practicable to extend to the Norwegian Govt an invitation to participate in the preliminary meeting on trade and employment. This not only would add to size of group already large in view of complicated negotiations envisaged but would doubtless lead other Govts to press for invitations. Dept has already been approached informally by other Govts regarding such invitations.

Morgenstierne has taken up with Dept the desire of his Govt to be invited to preliminary meeting (reurtel 808 Dec. 20). In explaining to him reasons for omission of Norway and why it would not be possible to increase number of countries participating, following points were made: (1) in selecting countries invited, primary emphasis was placed on assuring that group would be broadly representative as to types of trade barriers and economies and would include principal trading nations; (2) USSR included as member Big Five and as principal state-trading nation; (3) necessary to include all British Dominions because of their contractual obligations regarding tariff preferences and importance of action on imperial preferences; (4) Cuba included because of US-Cuba tariff preferences; (5) Luxembourg included as member of Belgo-Luxembourg Economic Union (re item 4 urtel 808); (6) no country was selected as representative of particular geographic area (re item 1 urtel 808); (7) shipping will not be discussed at conference (re item 2 urtel 808); (8) agreement reached at preliminary meeting will be opened to scrutiny of later world-wide conference; meanwhile views of Norwegian Govt on "Proposals for the Expansion of World Trade and Employment" will be welcomed and this Govt hopes Norway will look favorably on these proposals and will support them at world trade conference (re item 3 urtel 808); (9) finally, because of magnitude of task of negotiating detailed tariff concessions, this Govt has been compelled to limit number of countries partcipating in initial discussions.

It is suggested that you adopt similar approach in any discussion of matter with FonOff. Exclusion of Norway from preliminary meeting does not imply any lack of desire on part of this Govt for close trade relations with Norway.

CONCERN OF THE UNITED STATES OVER IMPLEMEN-TATION OF THE 1944 AGREEMENT ON PRINCIPLES HAVING REFERENCE TO THE CONTINUANCE OF COORDINATED CONTROL OF MERCHANT SHIPPING ¹

[In 1945 American interest in an effective implementation of the Agreement on Principles Having Reference to the Continuance of Coordinated Control of Merchant Shipping, concluded at London on August 5, 1944, among the Governments of the United States, Belgium, Canada, Greece, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, and the United Kingdom, was expressed through discussions with certain governments looking to their adherence to the agreement. PARTICIPATION BY THE UNITED STATES IN A PLAN FOR THE INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF POSTWAR MINE CLEARANCE IN EUROPEAN WATERS

800.83/5-345

The Secretary of the Navy (Forrestal) to the Secretary of State

Washington, May 3, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: This refers to my previous letter dated 4 September 1944, copy enclosed, regarding the international control of mine clearance in European waters after the defeat of Germany. In the fourth paragraph of this letter it was stated that "the United States might well be represented in the consideration of the problems of such mine clearance in an advisory capacity only".

Since the date of the above letter, several meetings have been held in London under Admiralty auspices at which a draft agreement on post-war mine clearance has been prepared. U.S. Navy representatives have requested that a paragraph be inserted in the draft agreement stating that United States membership would be in an advisory capacity only and that such membership would not obligate the U.S. Navy to furnish minesweeping forces for mine clearance in European waters. Russian representatives, however, have been unable to agree to the inclusion of such a paragraph on the grounds that all members should be on an equal footing and that no mention should be made in the draft agreement of the extent or limitations of any governments' participation in actual minesweeping. In order to meet Russian objections, United States representatives have been authorized to agree to omission of the paragraph in question, thereby putting United States representation on a full membership basis.

Therefore, since no mention will be made in the draft agreement that the United States will not be obligated to participate in the actual minesweeping, it is requested that the British, Russian and French Governments be advised substantially as follows:

In regard to the International control of post-war mine clearance of European waters, now being discussed in London, representation of the United States on an equal footing with other nations has been authorized. Since large numbers of United States minecraft have already been made available to Allied European nations under the terms of lend-lease, since the United States now has heavy minesweeping commitments in the Pacific which are becoming increasingly difficult to meet from the remaining minesweepers available, and since these commitments cannot be reduced without weakening the war effort in this area, United States representation in the international control of Post-War Mine Clearance in European waters will not obligate the U.S. Navy to furnish additional minesweeping equipment for such mine clearance or to participate therein with its own equipment.

Sincerely yours,

James Forrestal

DISCUSSIONS RELATING TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INTERNATIONAL REGIME FOR THE ADMINISTRA-TION OF EUROPEAN INLAND WATERWAYS

840.70/5-545

Memorandum by the Acting Chairman of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (Matthews) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, 5 May, 1945.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have considered the letter from the Department of State to the Secretaries of War and the Navy, dated 30 April 1945 1 and its enclosed "Agreement Concerning a Provisional Organization for European Inland Transport" and "Draft Agreement Concerning the Establishment of an European Central Inland Transport Organization" together with the "Annex Relating to Traffic on Inland Waterways." 2

It is the opinion of the Joint Chiefs of Staff that there is no military objection to the organization as proposed, and in fact, it would be of value by making it possible for the military authorities to divest themselves of the responsibility for transportation at an earlier date than would otherwise be possible.

They consider, however, that in order to make it clear that the term "Allied Commanders in Chief" is meant to include not only commanders designated by a combination of the powers named, but also commanders designated by any one of the powers, paragraph 9 of Article XIV of the draft agreement should be rewritten as follows:

"9. The term 'Allied Commanders in Chief' shall mean any Commander in Chief designated for commands on the Continent of Europe by the appropriate authorities of any of the following: the French Republic, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America."

It must be pointed out, however, that in the carrying out of the operation of the organization the U.S. representative on the European central inland transport organization should be instructed to safeguard the interests of the U.S. military authorities with particular reference to the matters outlined in the letter from the Combined Chiefs of Staff to the Department of State and the Foreign Office, dated 2 September 1944.¹

274. Your 255 Aug 4.3 Question of organization of international waterway regimes was considered at the Potsdam Conference 4 and it was agreed that these matters would be referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers in London.⁵ Consequently, plans for Interim Navigation Agency and the re-establishment of permanent agency will be considered by that group rather than Control Council.

Dept believes interim waterway agency should be established and that it is premature to consider re-establishment of former river commission and to define its responsibilities and voting control.

While Dept would welcome views and suggestions of the US group CC relating to interim or permanent river commissions no agreements or decisions on these questions should be made by the control authorities which would prejudice the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers. The immediate problems of coordinating traffic on the Rhine could be handled through the Combined Transport Board (your despatch 581 July 73) and ECITO.

at London, and makes certain inquiries as to how we expect to deal with this question. He also asked whether the matter of the Black Sea straits would be dealt with within the framework of our proposals on inland waterways or whether it would be dealt with as a separate subject. Mr. Balfour said that his Government had noted that the United States delegation at Potsdam had mentioned specifically the Rhine and the Danube,⁸ but the British felt that the same kind of international commission or regime should be applied not only to those rivers but to the Oder and Elbe as well, and also to the Kiel Canal.

I told Mr. Balfour that the reason for the mention of the Rhine and the Danube at Potsdam was that the United States proposal contemplated an interim commission for those two rivers in which the United States would participate because of our responsibilities during the occupation period. However, it was our idea that in addition to a discussion of an interim commission for those two rivers that we would ask for general agreement as to principles we established with respect to unrestricted navigation generally on the international waterways in Europe with a view to having permanent commissions set up or existing reorganized for the future with respect to the Rhine, the Danube, the Elbe, the Oder, and applying also, if possible, to the Kiel Canal. I further said that the President had always included mention of the Black Sea straits in his discussion at Potsdam of the unrestricted use of inland waterways, but my own personal opinion was that the United States should be prepared to have discussion of the Dardanelles separated from the other waterways if there seemed to be general disposition to do so.

Memorandum by Mr. Norman J. Padelford, Special Adviser to the Secretary of State, to the Secretary of State 16

[London,] September 27, 1945.

At an informal meeting held on September 26 in London representatives of the Governments of the United Kingdom, France, Belgium and the Netherlands expressed the desire that the United States participate in an Interim Rhine Commission which it is hoped may be assembled at an early date.

This commission will be a provisional form of the Central Rhine Commission which has existed since 1868. Its functions will be to regulate navigation, and to draw up engineering plans for the improvement of the river.

The commission will be composed of representatives of the United Kingdom, France, the Netherlands, Belgium, Switzerland, and it is hoped, the United States.

It has not yet been decided in what manner Germany, or rather the Allied Commanders-in-Chief in Germany will be represented. The French have urged that the British, French and United States zonal commanders on the Rhine appoint liaison officers to sit with the commission but not vote.

I believe, as do the American and British representatives on the Transport Directorate of the Control Council in Berlin, that this is not an appropriate solution. The Control Council has ultimate authority over all transportation in Germany. Therefore it should not only know what is going on in the Rhine Commission but should have a distinct representation and vote in the commission. The representative of the Control Council might be a British, French or American officer, as the Council would determine. He would speak for the Council and for German interests.

It is recommended that the United States be represented on the Interim Rhine Commission in its own capacity. Large quantities of military supplies will have to be transported on the Rhine to our armed forces during the period of occupation. The Rhine will also be used extensively for the transportation of relief supplies sent from the United States. Therefore, the United States will have a direct interest in navigation regulations. Moreover, the United States at the Council of Foreign Ministers has expressed its interest in the establishment of international organizations for all of the main European waterways, as a constructive step toward political stability and the improvement of economic conditions in Europe.¹⁷ It should support such agencies by its own voice, at least during the transition period.

¹⁶ Both the Secretary and Mr. Padelford were in London attending the Foreign Ministers Conference.

¹⁷ See memorandum by the U.S. delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers, CFM (45)1, September 12, p. 132.

The United States would have one representative on the Commission. He might be accompanied by such technical experts as the Government may see fit to attach to him. Decisions of the Commission will be taken by a majority vote, with each country having an equal voice in the decisions.

No figure has been fixed for the expenses of the Interim Rhine Commission. Based upon the pre-war expenses of the Commission, the total budget should not exceed $25,000 a year. Each participating government will bear an equal share of the expenses. Contributions from the United States would therefore probably not exceed $3,500 a year. In addition, the United States would bear the expenses of its own representatives.

It is anticipated that the Interim Rhine Commission will enter into arrangements with the European Central Inland Transport Organization which has just been established for the coordination of the movement of traffic and the allocation of any shipping captured from the enemy which may be made available for this purpose by the military authorities. The Commission will also be expected to be brought into relationship with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations in accordance with the terms of the Charter.

The Interim Rhine Commission will remain in existence until the interested governments conclude a convention establishing a permanent regime.

It is recommended that the United States participate on a basis of full equality in this Commission. This will be a definite step in the direction urged by the United States at the Council of Foreign Ministers. The position of the United States with respect to participation in any permanent commission may be reserved for later decision.

Control Organization until Rainey ²⁰ and Neff ²¹ have discussed current German situation with US representatives Austrian Control Council in Vienna this week.

In view of Soviet attitude on International Waterways Commissions expressed at Council of Foreign Ministers and counter proposal submitted by Soviet Delegation at that time, I agree with General Appleton ²² that US objectives will not be advanced by further US proposals to the Quadripartite Transport Directorate in regard to control of the Rhine. I understand these objectives to be (a) coordination of action to initiate traffic movement on the Rhine and (b) insofar as possible to develop some form of international cooperation in the control of European waterways.

An informal Rhine Committee for Traffic Control has been established at Duisburg with British, US, French, Dutch, Belgian, and Swiss participation. British and US controlled engineering organizations are located at Bonn and Wiesbaden. These existing organizations can be integrated and coordinated by arrangement among the US British and French Zone Commanders to fulfill the functions of the Interim Control Organization for the Rhine as recommended in your cable of September 26 (London's 140 23). This action would be in accordance with your alternate recommendation to establish such an organization by arrangement among the Zone Commanders having jurisdiction on the German portion of the Rhine rather than by the Quadripartite Transport Directorate of the Control Council. Soviet participation in control of the Rhine would not facilitate movement of traffic on that waterway and, therefore, would not contribute to the immediate objective of initiating traffic.

In meetings of the Quadripartite Transport Directorate, Germany, all proposals have been submitted by the US, French and British representatives, none by the Soviet. In all transport matters the western Allies, therefore, have been in position of supplicants while the USSR has continued in a position to accept or reject these proposals. Under these circumstances we believe that the US position will be weakened by additional US proposals to the Quadripartite Transport Directorate and that nothing substantial will be gained toward achieving international cooperation on other waterways. The movement of captured Danube vessels into the US zone, Germany and additional actions of this kind, which may be determined after discussions be-

I suggest that the most effective approach to the problem of international waterway control at this time is to maintain the status quo on the Rhine and to attempt to develop a situation in which the Soviet Government will find it advantageous to initiate proposals in regard to the Danube.

The opinion of the Department in regard to this matter is urgently requested.

840.811/10-1445

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] October 17, 1945.

The attached outgoing telegram ²⁴ agreeing to US participation in the Central Commission of the Rhine takes the position (paragraph 3) that Germany be represented by the Allied Control Council. The alternative that only the Allied military authorities controlling German riparian territory should be represented on the Commission by liaison officers is rejected. The former position is consistent with the proposal submitted by the US delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers.

In his telegram 782 October 14 from Berlin, Murphy takes the position that the proposal for establishing an Interim German Rhine Control Organization should be by arrangement among the zone commanders having jurisdiction over the German portion of the Rhine rather than by a quadripartite Transport Directorate or the Control Council. Such an arrangement was the second alternative set forth in the attached cable 9977 of September 26 sent to Murphy from London and repeated to the Department.

The basic issue which needs immediate decision is whether this government should press for Control Council representation on the Rhine or some form of representation or liaison only by the authorities in riparian zones. The arguments in favor of Control Council representation are:

1. The Potsdam Declaration provided for centralized control of transportation in Germany.²⁵

2. The US proposals at the Council of Foreign Ministers for the establishment of emergency regimes for the European waterways put forth the principle that the four signatory powers (US, UK, USSR and France) should be represented in international commissions for the Rhine, Elbe, Oder and Danube Rivers and the Kiel Canal together with the riparian states and Germany or Austria as represented by the respective Control Councils.26

²⁴ Not attached to file copy of memorandum.

²⁵ Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1503.

⁷²⁸⁻⁰⁰²⁻⁶⁷⁻⁸⁷

3. The abandonment at this time of the position of Control Council representation on the Rhine Commission would prejudice the question of Control Council representation with respect to the Elbe and Oder as far as Germany was concerned and the Danube in so far as Austria is concerned since the Oder is solely in the Soviet Zone, the Elbe in the Soviet and British Zones and the Danube in the US Zone in Germany and the US and Soviet Zones in Austria.

4. The adoption of riparian zone representation would eliminate indirect US participation in the other German waterways and French and British indirect participation in the Austrian section of the Danube and might be interpreted as an abandonment of the principles set forth in the memorandum submitted by the US delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers.

5. In view of the failure to reach agreement on the broad principles of four-power representation on all rivers, the question is raised whether we should at this time give up the principle of four-power Control Council representation for the enemy states as well, since such a procedure would provide for at least a foothold by the major non-riparian powers in waterways other than the Rhine.

The arguments against Control Council representation are:

1. Soviet action in the Control Council could delay or impede action on the Commission through the exercise of a veto. It has been pointed out, however, that, on matters affecting only the Western Zone, the Soviets have not so used this power to impede action.

2. The French have objected to Control Council representation on the Rhine primarily because of their desire to avoid centralized control of German transportation and the "interference" of the USSR in Rhine affairs. (In discussing this question recently with Berard of the French Embassy, he emphasized this position. However, he had not followed this position through in so far as it would affect the French position on the Danube and promised to secure further views of his government on that question.)

3. Close working relationships between the three Western Zone authorities and the other riparian states might be more readily established without delay since it would be necessary to get French approval of action through the Control Council.

In view of the above considerations, it would appear necessary for the Department to reach a definite decision on the question of Control Council representation not only with respect to the Rhine but also with respect to other occupied territories with a clear understanding of the possible implications of such a decision to the President's proposal at Potsdam and London.

740.00119 Council/10-2245

Memorandum by Mr. Norman J. Padelford, Special Adviser to the Secretary of State, to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] October 22, 1945.

REPORT OF US DELEGATION, COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS, CONCERNING EUROPEAN INLAND WATERWAYS

1. Original Plan—A Declaration of Principles.

When the United States delegation left for London, the original plan was to propose first of all the adoption of a Declaration of General Principles applicable to European waterways of international concern. (Annex I).27 This was based upon the proposal made by President Truman at the Potsdam Conference.²⁸

The purpose of this Declaration was to commit all interested parties to a common policy regarding the basic treatment of European waterways. Principles embodied in the draft Declaration were based upon treaties and conventions which had been in force among many states prior to 1939. If agreement could be reached upon the Declaration. it was then planned to propose the establishment of a series of interim commissions for each of the major waterways.

2. Decision to propose emergency arrangement.

Discussion in the delegation brought out the fact that at the present moment all of the European rivers are blocked to through navigation and that relief supplies have not been reaching needy peoples in Central and Eastern Europe in sufficient quantities to avert famine and suffering. In order to meet this situation, it was agreed that something more effective than a Declaration of Principles was needed. Accordingly, it was decided to press first for agreement upon an emergency regime which would involve the establishment of provisional commissions, leaving until later the presentation of the draft Declaration of General Principles. The plan for an emergency arrangement was laid before the Council of Foreign Ministers at its first meeting by the Secretary of State. (Annex II).29

3. Information received from United States Representatives on Berlin Control Council.

The United States delegation was assisted at London by three members of the US Group on the Control Council in Berlin who came to London at the request of the Secretary of State. These officers included General John A. Appleton, Chief, US Group, Transport Directorate; Lt. Col. Daniel Neff, Chief, US Group, Waterways Section, See Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, pp. 304 and 656.

 For text of Draft Agreement Establishing Emergency Regime, see p. 132.

Transport Directorate; and Lt. Col. Froelich G. Rainey, Assistant to Ambassador Murphy. These officers provided the delegation with a large amount of factual information concerning present conditions on the European waterways. Abstracts of this information are attached. (Annexes III and IV).30

These officers urged amendment of the emergency agreement presented to the Council by the United States in order to make provision for the representation of Germany on the several commissions through the instrumentality of the Control Council. They pointed out that, under the terms of the Potsdam Agreement, the Control Council was not only given complete authority over all German transportation but was also charged with conserving German economic interests.

4. Amendment of United States Proposal.

In view of the observations made by the US representatives on the Control Council and the fear which it was reported some states held concerning the duration of the emergency regime, the delegation decided to submit two amendments to the document originally laid before the Council. These were circulated on September 22. (Annex V).31 The amendment to Article Two was designed to give "Germany" representation on the commissions through the Control Council. The second amendment involved the addition of a new article (Article Ten) providing for a conference to draft permanent conventions.

5. Discussion of Waterways in connection with Bulgarian Treatu.

The first discussion of waterways arose in the Council in connection with the UK memorandum concerning the Bulgarian Peace Treaty. This proposed the insertion of an article requiring Bulgaria to accept any regime for the Danube agreed upon by the powers.

Mr. Bevin 32 (UK) pointed out that a similar provision had been inserted in the treaties of peace at the end of the last war 33 and would be desirable in order to prevent the defeated states from blocking attempts to create an international regime for the Danube. that he thought a mistake had been made in 1919 when Russia was excluded from the Danube and that a mistake had been made in 1940 when Britain was excluded from the Danube Commission by the Soviet Union and Germany and he asked for a righting of both errors. Mr. Byrnes (US) supported the proposal.

CXII, Peace Treaty with Bulgaria, Article 232. p. 873.

Mr. Molotov³⁴ (USSR) stated he was not ready to discuss the Danube regime in connection with the treaty as this involved more than one state.

The Council was unable to reach agreement on this point and proceeded to other matters.

- 6. Discussion of United States proposal, September 22, 1945.
- a. Mr. Byrnes' Presentation. The Secretary pointed out the serious problem in getting food, fuel and relief supplies to the nations of continental Europe due to the breakdown of rail transportation and the blockage of the principal waterways. He noted that little improvement could be expected in the rail situation for some time to come. The Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Danube and Kiel Canal have always played an important part in European transportation—before the war carrying as much as 150,000,000 tons of shipping a year. If they could be cleared so that shipping could move freely, material improvement would be made in the transportation situation. The Secretary said that he believed the situation required emergency measures before winter set in. This necessitated international cooperation. It was in this spirit that the United States proposed a provisional commission.

The Secretary added that if such an agreement could be reached, the United States was prepared to consider arrangements for making shipping located in its zone of control available for use and also to move quantities of fertilizers to the agricultural regions in need of this if free navigation could be established.

b. Soviet Reply. Mr. Molotov professed confusion whether the Council was to consider one of the proposals that President Truman presented at Potsdam or the present one noting some differences in the waterways mentioned in these documents. He also said that there might be some discussion of what constituted an international waterway. He noted that only European waterways were to be discussed and that temporary rather than permanent arrangements were being considered.

A counter proposal was presented which he asked the Council to take as the basis of discussion in place of the American draft. (Annex VI).³⁵ This proposal he said was designed to cover only the occupation period and was submitted with a view to facilitating action.

An examination of the Soviet proposal revealed that it would bring about no change in the present situation on the rivers as it would leave each of them subject to the control of the local military command. The sole change which the Soviet proposal would make in the present situation would be to place the Kiel Canal under the Berlin Control Council instead of the British military rule. The right to navigate would be limited to the four powers and the riparian states. Other non-riparian states would have no right of navigation. Thus, Belgian vessels might be excluded from the Rhine and Greek vessels which have been active on the Danube from participation in the traffic of that waterway.

Discussion of the Soviet proposal was adjourned pending study.

c. French Memorandum. A memorandum commenting on the U.S. proposal was laid before the Council by the French delegation on September 19. (Annex VII).³⁶ This urged that existing river organizations be utilized wherever possible. Special reference was made to the Rhine Commission in which the French wished to have the presidency.

The French memorandum did not figure in the discussions during the Council meetings.

- 7. Final discussion of Waterways question, September 24, 1945.
- a. Soviet Position—Need for Military Control. Mr. Molotov stressed that, during the occupation period, the needs of the occupying forces must be kept clearly in mind. Lines of communications must be secured and there must be no competing authorities. In as much as the military commanders would know best what was required in their zones, sole control of the rivers should be left in their hands. International commissions could only lead to conflicts of jurisdiction. This was the fault of the United States proposal which made it unacceptable.

The Soviet Foreign Minister insisted that the Soviet stand was no different from that which would be assumed by any nation in the same position as it is and faced with the same responsibilities. The Soviet attitude he believed corresponded with that of all Allied nations concerned with the improvement of navigation and he insisted that his draft be taken as the basis for discussion.

b. United States Statement Regarding Soviet Proposals. Mr. Byrnes emphasized that under the Soviet proposal different sets of regulations would prevail on different parts of the same river; that one body of rules would apply at one place and another at another. Navigation might be interrupted, delayed or submitted to various regulations by any military officer acting in the name of the Commander-in-Chief on the excuse that military considerations called for it. Under such circumstances, navigators would never know what requirements they would be required to meet. This would discourage and hamper shipping as had already been the case in some places.

³⁶ Ante, p. 261.

The Secretary stated that the United States believed that the fairest manner of dealing with these waterways of international concern was by means of international commissions in which all interested parties might be represented. The United States was sincere in its belief that this would provide the most effective means of improving conditions and it had no selfish interest in connection with these waterways.

The United States had no objection to fixing a time limit for the provisional commissions and it believed that, under the terms of Articles Two and Eight of the draft agreement, adequate provision would be made for military representation on the commissions and close relations with the occupying authorities so that no contest of jurisdiction would occur.

- c. Soviet Rejoinder. Mr. Molotov said that the United States proposal did not provide an acceptable basis of discussion. He asserted that no complaints had been received from any of the riparian states about the present situation and that there was no need of changing the present arrangement during the occupation period. He insisted that the American plan would lead to dual authority and that this could not be tolerated.
- d. British Conference Suggestion. Mr. Bevin said the British wished to maintain the principle of international collaboration on these waterways. To this end, he inquired whether the Council could agree upon calling a Conference of all interested states to draw up agreements for a series of provisional commissions with the United States draft as a basis for discussion.
- Mr. Byrnes was ready to accept this if a report might be made at the next Council meeting and if nothing better could be agreed upon.
- Mr. Molotov failed to see how a conference could agree if the Council of Foreign Ministers could not do so. Any conference proceeding upon the American proposal would only come out with a scheme which would have the same flaw—dual authorities on the rivers. The Soviets could not accept that. It was suggested that the whole matter be postponed until all the Ministers agreed there should be a Conference.
- e. Final United States Statement. Mr. Byrnes stated that the United States delegation keenly regretted that no action could be taken by the Council when starvation and famine conditions were approaching in many parts of Europe. He emphasized that the waterways of Europe are not entities in themselves nor the concern of the riparian states alone. They are part of a whole vital network and essential to the livelihood of the Continent. Distressed people could not wait for months of leisurely debate among statesmen. They must have food, fuel, clothing, medicine at once.

The Secretary affirmed that some arrangement could be found whereby the military commanders and the commissions could cooperate so that military security would not be undermined while at the same time relief could be brought to the distressed areas.

This completed the discussion of waterways at the Council. It was not referred to the deputies for further consideration.

8. Further treatment of subject.

a. Possibility of agreement on emergency regime. It is clear that the Soviet Government is not prepared to agree upon international commissions involving non-riparian states for the Danube, Elbe and Oder Rivers during the occupation period. Until the Soviet Government feels secure in Central and Eastern Europe and has related the economy of this region more closely to its own, there appears little likelihood that it will release its present controls in the direction of anything resembling the prewar commissions.

Nothing will be gained by reviewing the American proposal until the overall political situation has been clarified. The problem of cooperation on the rivers must be resolved in harmony with larger issues. Nothing will be gained by recriminations against the Soviet State.

The United States must be careful not to appear desirous of endangering Soviet security in the Eastern Zone or of attempting to force institutions upon them undermining their authority or calling into question their good faith. With some patience and careful manipulation of this question in company with others, a reasonable solution may ultimately be possible.

- b. Establishment of Provisional Agencies for Waterways in the Western Zone. Although it would be preferable to set up agencies for all of the waterways at the same time in order that the same principles may be applied to each of them, it would seem better to go ahead with arrangements for waterways in the Western Zone rather than leaving them subject to localized military control until agreement can be reached with the Soviet Government for the eastern waterways.
- 1. Rhine River. Conversations have taken place in London and in Berlin looking toward the early creation of a provisional Rhine agency including the riparian states together with Britain and the United States.

The re-creation of the prewar Rhine Commission would appear to be an acceptable solution for the regulation of the Rhine River. In this way, use can be made of existing treaties and accumulated experience. This also affords a way of bringing Switzerland into the arrangement without raising political questions relating to the war.

No particular fears need be entertained regarding the compatibility of the Commission and the military authorities. The Commission can only recommend rules of navigation and engineering works. Local authorities are responsible for enforcing regulations and for engaging in blasting, dredging and bridge work.

If the Central Rhine Commission is re-established on a provisional basis, it is important the agreement be obtained for equality of representation and voting. Prior to 1939, France had five votes, Germany four, while Belgium, the Netherlands, Britain and Italy had two votes each. The French position with respect to shipping and traffic on the River never warranted this disparity in voting power. It is understood in London that the French are prepared to accept equality of representation and voting if they are allowed to retain presidency of the Commission. This might be accepted, although it would be more democratic if the presidency were to rotate among all parties.

It is imperative that adequate provision be made for representation of the Control Council on the Rhine Commission. Only in this way can correlation be achieved between the military authorities and the civilian commission and assurance be given that commission recommendations will be carried out throughout German territory. Likewise, only in this way can German interests be adequately represented.

The French Government is seeking to prevent the Control Council from being represented on the Commission. It favors a Commission composed of Britain, France, United States, Belgium, the Netherlands and Switzerland plus liaison officers from the local zonal commanders along the river. It desires to see Germany divided into local units, economically and politically, and is fearful of any possibility of bringing Russia into Rhineland affairs. The French plan runs directly counter to the Potsdam Agreement. Section (B) (14)37 stipulates that action shall be taken by the powers in such a way as to preserve Germany as an economic unit. Moreover, the Agreement gives the Control Council supreme authority over transportation in Germany and an overruling voice over the actions of local com-The United States policy with respect to the Rhine Commission should be in accord with the Potsdam Agreement. The United States is in a position to insist upon this in as much as it has control of a great deal of tonnage and petroleum which the French would like to obtain.

In view of the facts that the bulk of Rhine traffic always moves in the German stretch of the River, that the German fleet has been the second largest and that the German portion of the River is the longest in point of mileage, it is only fair that German interests should be represented as such in the Rhine Commission and that throughout the occupation period this be through the Control Commission which is the conservator of German interests and the coordinator of local actions.

³⁷ Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1452.

The French Government is also requesting that the seat of the Commission remain at Strasbourg. There is no economic justification for such a location. Concession might be made, in this case, however, if this will assure cooperation on the part of the French.

The center of traffic on the Rhine is located in the Ruhr-Cologne area. Theoretically, the seat of the Commission should be located in this neighborhood.

It would be desirable from the theoretical point of view to extend the jurisdiction of the Rhine Commission over the Scheldt River up to the port of Antwerp. For many years Belgium has been trying to develop this port as a Rhine port. It has had considerable success in this as is evidenced by the fact that Antwerp ranked after Rotter-dam and the Ruhr ports in total Rhine traffic. It must be recognized, however, that Belgium would accede to international regulation of the Scheldt only under duress. It is questionable whether at the present moment the end will justify the means that have to be employed.

2. Kiel Canal. The Kiel Canal at the present time is being operated by German personnel under British occupation forces. Merchant vessels of all nations are apparently free to use the Canal and so far as can be learned the regular navigation rules are applied.

If other waterways are placed under provisional commissions, it would appear right and proper that the Kiel Canal should be treated in a similar manner. From conversations held in London, it appears that the British are willing to consider this. If the Danube, Elbe and Oder are not placed under commissions, there would appear to be no need of pressing the British for such a concession on the Kiel Canal at the present time. The question can be reserved until permanent arrangements are being discussed unless some other factors make reconsideration desirable.

9. Permanent regimes.

Attitude of Western Powers. Informal conversations held in London with representatives of Britain and France indicated that these states will be ready to discuss permanent arrangements for the European waterways at any time. Both governments are particularly anxious to have a part in the Danube regime. They are less concerned with the Elbe and the Oder and would perhaps be ready to waive participation in commissions for those rivers.

These governments are thinking in terms of international agencies for the rivers modeled after the prewar commissions with riparian and non-riparian members. Both fear that if the commissions are restricted to riparian states discriminatory practices may arise against the vessels and nationals of non-riparian states.

Attitude of Soviet Union. At the Council of Foreign Ministers, Mr. Molotov drew a clear distinction between temporary arrangements for the occupation period and permanent regimes to apply thereafter. In this way he implied that the Soviet Government might have something different in mind than it proposed for the occupation period. He said, "We can talk about the permanent regimes at a later time."

This statement might be taken to mean that the Soviet Government is not wholly averse to an international regime, or to discussion of the arrangements in company with the United States, Britain and France. It is, however, so indefinite no commitment other than that of discussion can be predicated upon it.

Private conversations with a member of the Soviet Delegation at the London Council (Mr. S. A. Golunsky) ³⁸ after the close of the meetings elicited one notable comment. With respect to the prewar regime of the Danube he remarked: "Of course you recognize that those arrangements were made when Russia was a defeated Power. In 1856 we were a defeated state. In 1919 we were not asked to be present when the Danube was being discussed. Now we are a victorious Power. It may be that matters should be arranged somewhat differently now. To us the Danube is very important."

The implication of this remark is that new treaties should be concluded and that the Soviet Union must occupy a different position than it has in the past. It could be understood as inferring that the whole conception of international regulation be altered. In this connection, it may be noted that in the Council meeting Mr. Molotov made no reply to a plea by Mr. Bevin that the mistakes of 1919 (exclusion of Russia from the Danube) and of 1940 (exclusion of Britain and France) should be righted. It is conceivable that the Soviet position is to ignore the Western Powers in establishing a new regime.

10. Recommendations.

Declaration of principles. There is a danger that the Soviet Government may conclude conventions with the states bordering on the Elbe, Oder and Danube without consulting the United States, Britain and France, and omitting provision for free navigation by the vessels of all nations and for participation by non-riparian states in new commissions.

It is recommended therefore that some occasion be found at an early date on which the United States may appropriately announce the basic principles which it believes should be applied to the European waterways. These principles are at hand in the Draft Declaration of Principles Applicable to European Waterways of International Concern which were prepared with a view to use at the Council of Foreign Ministers.

The time to set forth these principles is before the Russians take any irrevocable step rather than afterward. In this way, we may stand some chance of gaining acceptance of our views. We would stand virtually none afterward. And a protest after the fact would only add a further measure of irritation between the two governments.

It is worthwhile making an effort to secure adoption of these principles for their acceptance would be helpful in promoting general economic improvement in Europe and equality of opportunity for all. There is a chance the Soviet Government may be willing to accept them as the general political atmosphere improves. If not, nothing has been lost, and one more effort will have been made to avoid the organization of Eastern Europe into an exclusive bloc. If we must retire to acceptance of such an organization in the end we may do so, but it should not be done until every effort has been made in a friendly fashion to avert it.

US Participation in Negotiations. The United States should participate in any negotiations which are held for the establishment of permanent regimes for any or all of the European waterways. Only in this way can our influence and the principles for which we stand be brought to bear to the fullest advantage.

Serious consideration should be given to any invitation to become a member of any of the permanent regimes. Although the United States will not have vessels moving on these waterways, with the exception of the Kiel Canal, its presence would be a token of interest in the economic development of Europe. It might be able to exercise a helpful role as mediator and counselor. Participation would also have the advantage of affording an additional means of gaining information on significant economic and political trends there in the years to come.

A careful watch should be kept on the temper of political relations with a view to raising the question of permanent regimes when the climate may seem propitious. This might be done through the Council of Foreign Ministers, ECITO, or some other channel.

Conference or Special Mission. It is possible that the British Government may raise again the proposal it made at the Council of Foreign Ministers that a special Waterways Conference be called. Such a conference might serve a useful purpose in bringing together all interested parties. It would not stand much chance of success at the present moment until the overall political relations of the Four Powers have been improved on larger issues in Europe. When that has occurred the United States might lend its support to such a proposal.

If no tangible progress has been made on waterways matters within a few months, it is recommended that a special mission be sent to Europe to discuss the problem in detail with experts there with a view to promoting further action.

785. Reur 782 Oct 14 repeated to Vienna. Original conception of an interim Rhine Control Organization recommended in London's 140 of Sept 26 39 was to establish a single agency to act for Germany in control of traffic and enforcement of navigation regulations in German sections of Rhine. Informal Rhine Committee for traffic control at Duisburg appears from your cable to have power to regulate traffic throughout entire Rhine. Dept needs full information regarding terms of reference and activities of this Committee. Functions of this Committee appear closely related to those agreed upon for ECITO. It is desirable that Duisburg Committee and ECITO collaborate in control and coordination of international traffic.

Negotiations are proceeding for early establishment of Central Rhine Commission on provisional basis with US participation and riparian zones in Germany represented by liaison officers. This will be continuation of prewar Commission to maintain principles of free navigation and international cooperation in regulation and development of river. 40 The functions and work of this Commission are fully described in part (6) Dept's Rhine River memorandum handed Rainev by Padelford.41 These include:

1. Examining complaints regarding application treaty provisions;

2. Reviewing treaties and navigation regulations with a view to recommending necessary changes;

3. Hearing appeals from national navigation tribunals regarding infractions navigation regulations;

4. Surveying river conditions making recommendations to riparian authorities for correction or improvement;

5. Gathering and publishing information concerning river traffic and problems.

Activities Central Rhine Commission will cover matters other than those relating to traffic control which are within scope of Duisburg Committee and ECITO. These two types of functions are separate, therefore there should be no conflict or overlapping jurisdiction between Central Commission on one hand and ECITO and Duisburg Committee on the other.

2527. Secdel 44 7. For the Secretary. Following suggestions for your consideration.

I. Problems Regarding Danube. At Potsdam President Truman urged immediate steps to establish provisional international commissions for principal European waterways. US offered similar proposal at Council of Foreign Ministers meeting in London.

Principal purpose of such provisional commissions would be to facilitate cooperation and clearance of rivers to permit vessels to circulate freely to provide for essential traffic movements and stimulate reconstruction. At present obstacles such as destroyed bridges and sunken barges prevent normal movement of vessels. Different regulations with respect to movement of vessels and crews discourage freedom of circulation of vessels. Questions of restitution and reparations as well as ownership and control of watercraft discourage free movement between areas of different political and military jurisdiction.

To meet urgent transportation needs in Danubian area, it is essential that all watercraft available for use be put into operation to extent permitted by river conditions and that arrangements be made which will insure most efficient use of vessels and crews by permitting boats to circulate freely without danger of seizure or diversion. A provisional Danube Commission should be established to insure such freedom of movement of vessels without prejudice to questions of reparations, restitution, and title which can be worked out at a subsequent time by other authorities. Provisional commission should be composed of representatives of competent Allied authorities in riparian states under Allied occupation or armistice control and Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia.

Provisional Danube commission could be established along lines similar to present provisional Rhine Commission which has jurisdiction only over regulations and technical works and does not go into matters of allocation of vessels and control of cargoes. Vessels would remain under control of military authorities or under control of states in which they were registered. Objective of Commission would be to assure that when vessels under control of one authority moved into other areas of river they would be subject to uniform rules and regulations and not be in danger of seizure or diversion. They would remain subject to direction of military authorities or nationals under whose control they originally rested. Such an arrangement should meet objections raised by Soviets to United States proposals in London.⁴⁷

As long range objectives Dept believes following principles should govern use of all European waterways:

- 1. These waterways should be regulated by treaty in interest of all concerned.
- 2. Navigation should be free and open on terms of entire equality to nationals, vessels of commerce and goods of all members of United Nations.
- 3. Regulation of matters affecting waterway must be equitable and designed to promote, not burden, navigation.
 - 4. No tolls should be levied on any naturally navigable waterway.
- 5. No obstacle to navigation should be placed in channel of an international waterway.
- 6. Any international disputes relating to regulation or use of waterway of international concern should, if not settled directly between parties concerned, be submitted for settlement in accordance with provisions of United Nations Charter.
- 7. Înternational administrative agencies should be set up for each of these waterways composed of all states having an interest in their use and development; and
- 8. In dealing with these waterways, all parties should endeavor to promote world economic and social progress in conformity with Charter of United Nations.

ation within the framework of ECITO the Executive Board puts forward the following proposals:

- 2. The Rhine Interim Working Committees at present working under the direction of the headquarters of the British Army of the Rhine with delegates of the other armies of occupation and of the Belgian, French and The Netherlands Mission taking part in its meetings, shall be recognized and given an official international status with the title of the International Rhine Navigation Administration and its bases broadened so as:
- (a) To insure full and equal representation to the Govts and authorities referred to in paragraph 4.
- (b) To extend the geographical sphere of authority of the committee so as to make it substantially co-extensive with that traffic of common concern which centers around the Rhine.
- (c) To expand its functions so as to enable it to deal more adequately with all essential technical problems concerning that traffic.
- 3. This International Rhine Navigation Administration, hereinafter outlined and called the Administration, shall deal, as long as present emergency circumstances make it necessary with the coordination of traffic and the allocation of craft as well as with all the other matters affecting navigation of common concern to the Rhine and adjoining waterways, referring for guidance, advice and assistance to ECITO and/or the Central Rhine Commission as may be appropriate.
- 4. The administration shall consist of a board and a permanent secretariat. The board shall be composed of one representative of each of the Governments of Belgium, France, The Netherlands, and Switzerland; and of the British, US and French authorities in Germany; and shall appoint a chairman with the necessary technical qualifications.
- 5. ECITO and the Central Rhine Commission shall have one representative each with the board to act as advisers without the right of vote.
- 6. Decisions shall be taken by majority vote but except upon matters of internal administration shall not be binding on any government or authority represented on the board whose representative gives notice to that effect at the time that the decision is taken. All such cases shall then be referred to ECITO and/or the Central Rhine Commission, as may be appropriate. Each member of the board, including each zone representative, shall have one vote, and the chairman a casting vote only.
- 7. The chairman and permanent secretariat shall be international in character. The latter shall consist of a secretary appointed by the board and of a staff appointed by the chairman. As far as circumstances permit the services of members of the permanent secretariat of the Rhine Interim Working Committee as at present constituted shall be retained, additional technical and administrative personnel being appointed as required from time to time. The records of the Rhine Interim Working Committee shall pass to the administration.

- 8. The chairman shall convene the board whenever necessary. The board will appoint two permanent subagencies to be known as the International Rhine Traffic Committee and the International Rhine Conservancy Committee to deal with traffic and conservancy problems respectively. The chairmanship of these two bodies will be decided upon by the board.
- 9. The salary of the chairman and the expenses of the secretariat shall be agreed by the board and covered by equal contributions from the governments and authorities represented in the administration. These funds will be administered by the board.
- 10. The traffic and conservancy functions of the administration shall include:
- (1) Coordination of river conservancy (including bank training, dredging, salvage, marking and buoying of channels), flood prediction service and ice protection;

(2) Coordination of engineering resources, such as plant, equipment, repair facilities, materials and labor;

(3) Development of telecommunications;

(4) Navigation and pilotage regulations;(5) Registration and survey of craft;

(6) River police;

(7) Coordination of plans for development of river traffic;
(8) Assessment of traffic capacity of waterways within its jurisdiction:

(9) Allocation of traffic and if necessary of craft among operating groups;

(10) Responsibility for ensuring the execution of traffic programs;

(11) Issue of coordinated operating rules;
(12) Establishment of rates, charges and dues, and determination of conditions of carriage, with due regard to other forms of transport;

(13) Determination of requirements and of priorities in repairs to craft and coordination of repair facilities;

- (14) Arrangements for procurement of requirements of fuel, lubricants, stores and provisions;
 - (15) Assistance on currency and other clearing arrangements:
- (16) Organization of social and medical services for shipping and shore personnel, establishment of safe conducts, et cetera.
- 11. The functions remaining the direct responsibility of ECITO shall include:
- Restitution of Allied craft;
 Temporary allocation of enemy craft without prejudice to ultimate ownership;
 - (3) Census of craft;

The administration shall be required to give advice and assistance on the execution of these functions.

- 12. The scope of the administration shall be;
- (1) For conservancy the Rhine from the upper limit of the port of Basle (km 1.9) to Goriuchem and to Krimpen, respectively, the navigable parts of the Neckar and of the Main, and the Rhine-Herne and Wesel-Datteln Canals.
- (2) For traffic: all traffic on the above waterways and international traffic between any points thereon, on the one hand, and the seaports handling the above traffic, on the other.

EUROPEAN INLAND TRANSPORT CONFERENCE, OCTO-BER 10, 1944-SEPTEMBER 27, 1945; FORMATION OF THE EUROPEAN INLAND TRANSPORT ORGANIZATION 1

840.70/1-2045

Memorandum by Messrs. John N. Plakias and Walter A. Radius of the Office of Transportation and Communications to the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton)

[Washington,] December 28, 1944.

In response to the joint invitations of the U.S. and U.K. Governments,2 representatives of twelve countries convened in London on October 10, 1944 to discuss the establishment of a European Inland Transport Organization (EITO). The participating countries are Belgium, Czechoslovakia, France, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, the United Kingdom, the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Yugoslavia. The Danish Minister in London, SHAEF, SACMED and UNRRA are represented by observers.

Background

The document which is serving as a basis for discussion at the conference is an Anglo-American draft agreement, drafted in London in the summer of 1944 at bipartite discussions between representatives of the U.S. and U.K. Governments.⁷ The Soviet Government was represented by an observer. The draft agreement is based on, and incorporates to a large extent, the proposals emanating from the work done during the preceding two years by the Technical Advisory Committee on Inland Transport (TACIT) of the Allied Requirements Bureau. The Governments participating in the present conference, with the exception of the USSR, are represented on TACIT.

¹ Continued from Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 11, pp. 743-931. The Conference was not in continuous session during this period. After several meetings in October and November, 1944, no meetings of the Conference were held until August 24, 1945, although certain delegations, including the United States delegation, continued meetings during the interim.

Invitations sent by the United Kingdom on September 11 and 12, 1944.

The Military Interest

The military are keenly interested in the establishment of a European Inland Transport Organization to assume the following functions:

(1) To give technical advice relating to European transportation problems and equipment requirements;

(2) To coordinate transportation in areas which the military would wish to turn over to civil authorities;

(3) To assume responsibility for the allocation and distribution for use of surplus equipment made available by the military;

(4) To aid in the restitution of allied equipment; and

(5) To assist in the rehabilitation of allied transport systems.

The War Department was represented at the bipartite discussions of last summer by Major General Frank Ross, Chief of Transportation of the United States Army in the European Theater of Operations. General Ross and Ambassador Winant are the two chief American delegates to the present conference.

Interim Commission

At the bipartite discussions of last summer the representatives of the U.S. and U.K. recommended to their Governments that, since the establishment of the permanent EITO might be subject to delays (which is precisely what has happened), there be established a tripartite Interim Commission composed of representatives of the U.S., U.K. and U.S.S.R. to assist the military and do certain important preparatory work for the permanent organization. The Interim Commission was to cease functioning when EITO came into being.

While the U.S. and U.K. Governments were prepared to establish and participate in the interim organization early in the fall, no response was received from the Soviet Government. As a result, the establishment of the Interim Commission was deferred. With the convocation of the conference the British believed that the permanent organization might be established shortly and no longer favored the Interim Commission. It subsequently developed that the Continental Powers opposed an interim organization which excluded them.

The British position on an interim organization has changed periodically. First they urged it. Then they strongly opposed it. Now they are again advocating the establishment of some interim body.

The position of the U.S. Government has been consistent. The U.S. favored the establishment of the Interim Commission at an early date and prior to the convocation of the conference. However, since it was not established prior to the conference and the opposition of the Continentals became known, we have not considered an interim organization essential unless the military desire it or unless the establishment of the Organization appeared long delayed.

Preliminary Tripartite Discussions

Before the conference, as well as during the early stages of the conference, the U.S., U.K. and U.S.S.R. delegations held a series of informal tripartite discussions in order to receive the Soviet views, attempt to reconcile differences and develop acceptable compromise provisions. It soon developed that the Soviets opposed an organization with centralized authority and strongly advocated that its functions be limited to recommendations and coordination.

The Conference

One of the main difficulties in drawing up an acceptable agreement was to find middle ground between the Soviet position for an organization without authority and the views of the U.S. and U.K. Governments, supported by the Continentals, who desired an organization with considerable administrative authority. The Department has taken the position that while it would prefer an organization with authority, the Continentals are the main parties at interest and that so long as the U.S. interests, particularly the military, are adequately provided for, the U.S. Government would be prepared to go along with an organization acceptable to the Continentals and Soviets.

The principal reasons for this position included the following: first, the U.S. has only a secondary and temporary interest in a regional organization of this character; and second, the success of an international agreement is dependent upon the spirit with which it is accepted by its members. Accordingly an organization with authority might be less effective if the participants accepted it reluctantly, whereas an agreement with milder provisions might be more effective if the participants supported it wholeheartedly.

Poland

Although there was some apprehension in the Department over the attitude of the Soviets toward participation in a conference with the Polish Government in exile, this problem was not raised until after the conference had been meeting for over two weeks. On October 28 the U.S. and U.K. Governments received similar notes from the Soviet Government requesting the unseating of the representatives of the Polish Émigré Government and the substitution of the representatives of the Lublin Committee.* The Soviets threatened to withdraw from the conference unless this action was taken.

The U.S. and U.K. Governments rejected the Soviet request and pointed out that they thought it inappropriate to inject far reaching political factors into a technical discussion.⁹ The hope was expressed that the Soviets would continue to participate in the technical discussions. The Soviets have not answered the U.K. and U.S. replies, but neither has the Soviet delegation left London. No formal meetings of the conference have been called since this move by the Soviets. All subsequent discussions have been conducted through informal meetings, but without Soviet participation.

⁸ For U.S. note dated November 22, 1944, see ibid., 1944, vol. II, p. 879.

The Ronald Formula

Various methods have been considered in order to avoid the Polish political issue and still reach an acceptable agreement. One of the devices considered was a proposal made by Mr. Ronald of the British Foreign Office which has come to be known as the "Ronald Formula". This formula provided that the agreement would only be signed by governments after their territory had been liberated. This would have permitted the Soviets but not the Poles to sign at this time. The Ronald Formula was not discussed with the Soviets. When it was presented informally to the other Continentals they strongly opposed it.

The British have suggested other proposals as gestures to induce the Soviets to participate in this technical organization and circumvent the Polish issue. The Department has taken the position that while Soviet participation is most desirable, an agreement should not be held in abeyance pending Soviet participation if the agreement meets the technical points raised by the Soviets and which might be acceptable to them at a later date. The Department has felt that formulas or gestures would not induce Soviet participation in a technical organization if for political reasons they wish to abstain.

Present Status of Conference

After October 28, in order to proceed with the important work of the conference, it was decided to continue discussions through informal meetings and to redraft the agreement, incorporating insofar as possible the views of the Soviets. The conference has not met in formal session since October 27; however, informal meetings have been held with the Continental delegations and the Soviets have been kept advised. It is proposed that on completion of an agreement acceptable to the Continentals which incorporated the Soviet views, it would be presented to the Soviets. If at that time the Soviets would be prepared to accept the agreement they could come in, otherwise the door would be left open for them to participate at such time as they saw fit.

At the informal meetings in which all the Continentals except the Soviets are participating, considerable progress has been made in reaching an acceptable draft agreement. Certain points on the procedure for establishing EITO and the method of signature remain unsettled and there may be some difficulty over the provisions affecting the inland waterways. The Department has suggested that the conclusion of the main agreement should not be delayed because of divergent points of view on the details of inland waterway transport question. This problem could be dealt with by the countries concerned, after the main agreement was signed.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

> London, February 1, 1945—8 p. m. [Received 8:12 p. m.]

1130. Department will know from British Embassy of United Kingdom proposal dated January 27 10 advocating the establishment of an interim transport organization including United States, United Kingdom, France, Belgium and Holland to function until solution of the Polish question makes it possible to establish EITO. Ronald states that the Ministerial Committee which adopted the proposal was strongly opposed to signing anything with the London Poles.

With reference to British proposal we submit for the Department's consideration the following summary of the situation and our conclusions:

- I. We believe EITO draft agreement in its present revised form except for further minor amendments is technically satisfactory to all EITO conference participants including Soviet Government although latter has not formally replied to this effect.
- II. However the three following questions must be resolved before signature of all participants is possible:
- 1. It is now clear that the establishment of EITO is out of the question until the Polish question is resolved as United Kingdom will sign nothing with London Poles and French have indicated they will not sign the EITO agreement without the USSR; meanwhile the Czechoslovak Government have recognized the "Polish Provisional Government." 11
- 2. Decision by the EAC 12 of the question of a French occupation zone would have to precede French signature of EITO agreement since latter depends on mention of French Republic in Article XIV Paragraph 9 as one of the countries designating or recognizing Commanders in Chief (reEmbs 1039, January 30 18).

See telegram 427, February 3, 1 p. m., to Paris, p. 1395.
 January 31, 1945.

18 Not printed.

¹² European Advisory Commission; for documentation on the participation of the United States in the work of EAC, see vol. III, pp. 1 ff.

3. The opposing Dutch and French views on the inland waterway annex constitute a third obstacle since the French dislike the annex whereas the Dutch have stated their signature of main EITO agreement depends on signature of annex by principal European inland waterway countries. Although British and Belgians would sign it they as well as the French have indicated view that failure to solve inland waterway question should not hold up main EITO agreement but we do not know measure of French success in persuading Dutch in their conversations (reEmbs 1039, January 30).

III. Both British and French Governments favor setting up some provisional machinery prior to solution of Polish question. ReEmbs 646 of January 17,¹⁴ we do not yet know to what extent French dislike of Western European arrangement and preference for a protocol setting up EITO provisionally including London Poles and the other Eastern European participants in the EITO conference represents final view of French Provisional Government particularly in view of inclusion in British proposal of invitation to USSR to associate itself with the provisional organization and suggestion of some additional arrangement for associating Czech and other governments in some consultative capacity.

IV. On the basis of the above summary we suggest the following conclusion:

Since (a) EITO agreement as such will not be signed unless or until Polish question is resolved, and (b) French suggestion for protocol setting up EITO provisionally including the London Poles would apparently be unacceptable to United Kingdom and presumably to the Czechoslovak Government only two alternatives remain: (1) to wait until the solution of the Polish question makes possible the establishment of EITO; (2) to set up a provisional organization along the lines suggested by the British.

We recommend the second alternative believing that the known urgency of the transport situation in France, Holland and Belgium and the need for a responsible organization with authority to deal with the supply and military agencies outweighs other more indefinite considerations, for example: (1) the estimated length of time until the Polish question is likely to be settled (2) the estimated effect of either course of action on future Soviet participation in EITO (3) the estimated effect of either course of action on the future of EITO in its relation to the other eastern countries.

Could you give us an immediate answer on this problem or let us know if delay is unavoidable.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in France (Caffery)15

Washington, February 3, 1945—1 p. m.

427. I. British Embassy on January 31 handed Department an aide-mémoire referring to European Inland Transport Conference stating HMG is of opinion that Soviet Government is unlikely to give any formal statement of its position with respect to revised draft of the agreement nor to offer to sign it until settlement of the Polish issue. In view of urgent need for creating appropriate machinery to deal better with problems of European inland transport, HMG favors strongly prompt setting up of some organization, however provisional, limited to area of joint Anglo-American military responsibility, but with an invitation to the Soviet Government to associate itself in whatever way it deems appropriate until it is ready to become a formal member of full organizaton. It therefore proposes that:

A. Draft agreement be put in final form by further informal meetings with Continental Allies and the results communicated to Soviet delegation in London.

B. Thereupon the U.S., U.K., French, Belgian and Netherlands Governments enter into an informal understanding to apply as between themselves such parts of draft agreement as are physically applicable in the areas under their jurisdiction, inviting Soviet Government to participate in such manner as it deems appropriate.

C. A temporary bureau be formed in London, composed of representatives of the five governments mentioned above and a Soviet observer or liaison officer if possible, to supervise application of agreement and also to assume duty of maintaining informal contact with the European Allies which are not participating in provisional arrangement to make sure that nothing is done which might affect their interests adversely.

The aide-mémoire concludes by stating that, in view of HMG, only some such procedure as that proposed above can get around the problem presented by the issue which has been raised as to Polish Government in London; and that, in view of HMG, any procedure which involved the participation of the London Poles would jeopardize the hope of ultimate Soviet participation in the full organization.

II. British Embassy has orally informed Department 16 that a similar aide-mémoire was concurrently being handed to the Provi-

¹⁶ Meeting on January 31, 1945, in the Office of Transport and Communications:

Policy.

¹⁵ Repeated to London as telegram 831 for the EITO delegation; to Moscow as telegram 218 with the following additional sentence: "Any comments from Embassy would be appreciated."

sional French Government in Paris, and that HMG wished to secure the views of the two Governments on following points:

A. Whether proposed procedure would prejudice the position with respect to recognition of the legitimate government of Poland, and

B. Whether it would prejudice the plans for setting up a European Inland Transport Organization of scope originally contemplated, with Soviet participation.

III. For information of Embassy, a meeting was held in London on January 17 of U.K. and U.S. EITO delegations, with Commandant Mathé, an attaché of the French Embassy specializing in transportation matters, who had just returned from consultations in Paris. Mathé stated that the French under no circumstances would sign EITO agreement without Soviets but that they were prepared to enter into an interim arrangement setting up EITO on a provisional basis without Soviets but with participation of all other governments represented at EITO conference, including London Poles. Mathé indicated that French would not, however, be prepared to enter into an interim arrangement confined to area of joint Anglo-American military responsibility.

IV. Department is not prepared at this time to express a definitive opinion on either of the questions referred to in II above.

Department has misgivings as to usefulness at this time of procedure suggested by British, and is inclined to the view that it would be preferable to await the termination of the meetings between the President, Mr. Churchill and Marshal Stalin ¹⁷ before making any new move in EITO matter, except to renew informal discussions in order to get revised agreement in final form as promptly as possible.

V. For your confidential information: Nevertheless, if the Provisional Government of France should have changed its position indicated in III above and should now concur in the views of HMG, the U.S. Government would not wish to stand in way of consummation of arrangement proposed. You are, therefore, requested to ascertain as soon as possible French views on British proposal. Repeat your reply to Amembassies London and Moscow.

The Ambassador in France (Caffery) to the Secretary of State

Paris, March 27, 1945—4 p. m. [Received March 28—11:53 a. m.]

1456. The subject of EITO and Department's 1119, March 22 28 were discussed informally today with Charguereaud of Foreign Office. Lebel 29 is ill and was unable to be present. The result of the interview may be summarized as follows:

Charguereaud has not seen the text of the reply to the joint US-UK-French démarche in Moscow (reference Embassy's 1147, March 10 and Embassy's 1382, March 23 30) but he had been informed of its substance (reference Department's 1165, March 24 31). He had lately returned from London where he had received the impression—largely from press reports—that the tactics of the Russians were directed at hastening the formation of the new provisional Polish representation at the San Francisco Conference.32 Under the circumstances. Charguereaud was inclined to defer temporarily consideration of the interim arrangement proposed by the British (reference Department's 892, March 6³¹) in the hope that these tactics might succeed and that a solution of the problem was not far off. He observed however that since the French did not participate in the Yalta Conference, they were in no position to form an opinion as to the prospects.

²⁶ In telegram 3152, March 27, 1945, 6 p. m., from London, the Embassy reported that it was discussing with the Foreign Office the practicability of various alternative proposals for proceeding with EITO (840.70/3-2745).

Telegram 1119, March 22, 1 p. m.; Moscow informed of this action in telegram 668, March 22, 1 p. m.

The French Government has already indicated its willingness to participate in the interim arrangement should this be considered necessary with the qualifications noted in Embassy's 642, February 11,³³ namely, (a) that the arrangement be informal, (b) that they could withdraw on 30 days notice. Charguereaud added that he would expect Soviet participation in this arrangement at least in the capacity of observer. The French could not however agree to participate in a revival of the EITO Conference without Soviet participation for the reasons given in numbered paragraph 2 of Embassy's 642, February 11.

Sent to the Department, repeated to London as No. 187 and to Moscow as 37 of March 27.

2454. For EITO Delegation. British Embassy has proposed revival of interim arrangement for European inland transport advanced last January,³⁴ with following modifications:

1. Draft Agreement should be put in final form by U.S., U.K., French, Netherlands, Belgian and Luxembourg Delegations and an understanding should be reached to apply it, without prejudice to subsequent amendments if and when other governments participate, on informal and experimental basis in areas where they have responsibility.

2. Temporary Executive Board would be set up composed of representatives of U.S., U.K., France and Belgium, and Hondelink would be appointed Chief Officer, but not a member of the Board.

- 3. U.S., U.K. and French Ambassadors in Moscow would then inform Soviet Government they could not agree to representation by the Lublin Poles at the EITO Conference and that, if Soviet Government was unwilling to eliminate all Polish representation pending settlement of the Polish Government question, the three governments would be obliged to put into effect the interim arrangement as above indicated. Soviet Government would be invited to participate in whatever way they considered appropriate, but the setting up of the interim organization would not be in any way delayed by their failure to do so
- 4. Interim arrangement would be considered as extending to the SACMED area but, in view of possible complications with Soviets arising from Yugoslav participation, none of the national governments in that area would be invited to participate. Insofar as possible the Agreement would be made operative in the area by means of EITO representation at Allied Force Headquarters and closest possible working arrangements with UNRRA.

Department has expressed its approval ³⁵ of this proposal and you are therefore authorized to take all steps appropriate to bring it into

At the meeting of United States, United Kingdom and French EITO delegations held on April 11, it was agreed that Secretariat of Conference in the names of the three delegations should address an invitation to the Belgian, Netherlands, Norwegian and Luxembourg delegations to attend a meeting on Tuesday, April 17 to discuss proposed provisional agreement. Department's comments on the text ³⁸ would, therefore, be appreciated as soon as possible as it is hoped to circulate in advance of the meeting a text agreed by the United States, United Kingdom and French delegations.

Department will notice the inclusion of the Norwegian Delegation in the invitation. This seemed desirable as Norway is part of the SHAEF area.

It was agreed to draft a joint communication to the Soviet Government for presentation by the representatives of the United States, United Kingdom and France in Moscow when agreement on the provisional organization has been reached by the governments concerned in the matter, informing Soviet Government of the steps taken. Text will be forwarded to Department for approval.³⁹

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

> London, May 5, 1945-noon. [Received 1:18 p. m.]

- 4542. I. We have discussed with British and French the question of informing (1) the Soviet Government (2) the delegations participating in the ECITO 41 Conference and (3) the press concerning signing of provisional agreement and have agreed to recommend following procedure:
- 1. Communication to Soviets. Immediately upon signature, United States, British and French Embassies in Moscow would be instructed to make a concerted approach to the Soviet Government in accordance with the draft telegram below. In London immediately after signature the chairman of the Conference would call a meeting of the United States, United Kingdom, French and Soviet delegations at which the Soviet delegation would be informed of the step taken.
- 2. Communication to delegations participating in Conference. May 10, the provisional agreement with annexed draft ECITO agreement would be circulated as a Conference document with a covering note the proposed text of which is in immediately following telegram.40
- 3. Press release. See Embassy's 4544 of May 5⁴⁰ for text which it is proposed to release on May 11,42 thus allowing time for Soviet Government and other delegations to have received the information in advance of publication.
- 4. Publication of text of agreement. In making public the information that a provisional agreement had been signed it seemed to the three delegations that it would be necessary in order to avert suspicions of the nature of the agreement to publish as soon as possible the text of the provisional agreement with the annexed draft agreement and inland waterway protocol. British Government is prepared to publish text as a white paper.

Does Department approve the procedure outlined above and the texts of the proposed communications?

- II. Following is text of telegram which it is proposed be sent to the United States, United Kingdom, and French Embassies in Moscow immediately upon signature of provisional agreement:
- 1. My immediately following telegram contains text of an agreement concerning a provisional organization for European inland transport which was signed here today (May 8) by the representatives of the Governments of the United Kingdom, United States, Belgium, Luxembourg, Netherlands and Norway and of the French Provisional Government. You will observe that the signatory governments have agreed to bring the draft agreement concerning the establishment of an European central inland transport organization provisionally into force between them in respect of the territories in continental Europe under their authority.
- 2. I shall therefore be glad if in concert with your British and French colleagues you will inform the Soviet Governments that the United States, United Kingdom, and French Provisional Governments are unable to agree that a delegation appointed by the Lublin Government could properly represent Poland at the ECITO Conference and that since Soviet Government were unwilling to dispense with all Polish representation until the matter could be settled the three governments and the other signatory governments have been reluctantly obliged to proceed having regard to military developments in Europe (or having regard to the cessation of hostilities in Europe as the case may be) with the limited plan of establishing a provisional organization. You should invite the Soviet Government to associate themselves with the provisional organization in whatever way they consider most appropriate. In so doing you should make the following points:

(a) We do not regard European inland transport conference as having been dissolved;

(b) We very much hope that Soviet Government will cooperate, as soon as circumstances allow, in the completion of the draft agreement.

3. In any case we believe that all the signatory governments would welcome arrangements for keeping the Soviet Government informed of the work of the provisional organization, e.g. by having a Soviet representative present as observer at meetings of the provisional council and for maintaining liaison with provisional executive.

4. Statement regarding signature of the provisional organization agreement will be issued to the press for publication on morning of May 11. Soviet delegation to ECITO Conference are being informed today.

⁵² July 14, 1945.

The Embassy reported that the Foreign Office suggested that the matter could be more advantageously taken up at the Berlin Conference and that the Foreign Office had instructed its delegation at Berlin to consult with the United States delegation, and if agreeable, to discuss with the Soviet Government the question of reconvening the EIT Conference as part of a larger discussion of Russian cooperation in European economic organizations; see telegram 7236, July 18, 1945, 1 p. m., from London, Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1158. Subsequently, the Department sent telegram 5808 and the foregoing information to Assistant Secretary of State Clayton at the Potsdam Conference as telegram 61, July 19, 1945, with its approval of the British proposal to discuss with the Soviet authorities the question of reconvening the EIT Conference. See ibid., p. 1159.

of an early resumption of the work of the Lancaster House Conference on Inland Transport which met last October but had to suspend its meetings at the end of November owing to difficulties over the representation of Poland. The three Delegations at Berlin agreed that the new Polish Government should at once be invited to send a Delegation to participate in the Conference which should resume its work as soon as that Delegation could reach London and endeavour as quickly as possible to complete the work on the Draft Convention which had not been finished last November.

- 2. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom approached the Polish Provisional Government accordingly on August 3rd, urging them to arrange for their Delegation to reach London by August 22nd.⁵⁴
- 3. The Polish Provisional Government has now accepted this invitation and we are given reason to hope that their delegation will reach London by August 22nd.
- 4. It will be recalled that in accordance with an agreement reached before the Conference met last October the Soviet Government arranged then for the attendance of an observer on behalf of Roumania and the United States Government and His Majesty's Government arranged for the attendance of one on behalf of Italy.⁵⁵ It seems to His Maiesty's Government undesirable to make a similar arrangement when the conference resumes. In the case of Italy there is no longer an Allied Control Commission to represent Italy, the Allied Control Commission having been replaced by the Allied Commission. Roumania is no longer the only satellite state concerned and the Tripartite or Quadripartite character of Control Commissions in general, which has now become more of a reality, presents in any case the following difficulty. There must be serious doubt whether a Control Commission can be regarded as being a sufficiently corporate entity to permit of its representation as such. It can be held that if a Control Commission is to be represented it must be through representatives of each of the Governments which established it. Three or four representatives or observers for Germany and for each satellite state would be absurd.
- 4. [sic] In the circumstances it appears that the only practical method of ensuring that considerations relating to transportation in enemy countries are taken into account is for representatives of the controlling powers at the Conference to make it their duty to act in this matter on behalf of their national elements in each Control Commission. It would thus be for each controlling power to decide for itself whether to include in its delegation an expert to advise it on transportation matters in any given enemy country in the control of which it is participating.

- 5. It will, of course, be appreciated that a point of principle is involved in the above which does not apply only in the case of the Inland Transport Conference.
- 6. His Majesty's Embassy is instructed to inquire whether the United States Government concur with the foregoing.

The Department of State to the British Embassy 56

The proposal contained in the British Embassy's Aide-Mémoire of August 13, 1945 has been carefully considered. In view of the fact that Rumania and Italy were represented by observers at the Lancaster House Conference last October, it is felt that it would be undesirable to deny them a similar privilege when the conference reconvenes.

It does not seem to this Government necessary that the Allied Control Commissions for Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary, and the Allied Commission for Italy should be represented through representatives of each of the Governments which have established them. It would seem to this Government that it would be preferable if each of the Commissions were represented by one official designated by the Commission who should be a transport expert and who might be accompanied by a national observer.

INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE ESTABLISH-MENT OF THE EMERGENCY ECONOMIC COMMITTEE FOR EUROPE AND THE EUROPEAN COAL ORGANIZA-TION ¹

840.50/1-245

The Department of State to the British Embassy

MEMORANDUM

Reference is made to the memorandum of the British Embassy dated December 2, 1944,² in connection with the proposal to form a European Economic Committee, and the suggestion of setting up a European Coal Organization. Reference is also made to the suggestion of the Foreign Office to the United States Embassy in London, and more recently to this Government in Washington, that the French Government be invited to participate in advance of the other European Allies.

This Government has previously in its Aide-Mémoire of September 27, 1944,3 expressed its agreement to a European Economic Committee as a forum for discussion among the European states, of questions which must be settled to insure in the early post-military period, the maximum effective interchange among them of food, raw materials and capital goods. A review of this Aide-Mémoire indicates that the principles there stated are fully applicable to the problems involved in the production, distribution and supply of coal in Europe. This Government is therefore prepared to join in discussions looking to a European Coal Organization formed under such principles, either as a subcommittee of a European Economic Committee or as a separate organization for the transitional period.

This Government is further of the opinion that the French Government should be represented in the discussions with the United States, the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, from the inception.

It is believed, however, that the beginning of both a European Economic Committee and a European Coal Organization would be greatly expedited by a meeting at an early date, in London, between representatives of the four governments, under very general terms of reference.

This Government, therefore, would be prepared to attend an informal meeting called in London between representatives of the United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and France, and suggests the date of January 29, 1945. The following terms of reference are proposed:

1. To consider what questions affecting the economic relations of the European Allies have arisen or are likely to arise in the transition period, and in particular the problems having to do with the production, supply and distribution of coal and coal-mining machinery, which cannot be dealt with effectively under existing methods of procedure.

2. To consider whether the solution of these questions requires the setting up of the proposed European Economic Committee and a European Coal Organization.

This Government is making this proposal also to the governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and France,⁴ with the suggestion that if by the date proposed either government is not prepared to participate fully, it send an observer, and participate fully whenever it decides that it desires to do so.

It is suggested that the representatives of each government discuss detailed agenda informally prior to the meeting, which can then be agreed at the meeting itself.

UMA,⁹ representatives of employees and employers in industry and consuming interests, including the interests of neutrals. An interim ECO ¹⁰ was proposed, subject of course to military necessities. November 25, Ronald,¹¹ in London, asked Hawkins ¹² what we thought about the time when the French should be asked to join the talks.¹³ December 7, Department replied tentatively that it was not at that time appropriate to include the French and exclude other European Allies.¹⁴ December 20, British Embassy told Department British expected to deliver copy of coal memorandum of December second to French in Paris and would be glad to know our reaction. On further consideration we agree that French should be approached now.

Embassy London has proposed, however, that whole procedure should be changed for both EEC ¹⁵ and ECO and that the U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R. and French should be asked to a meeting in late January to consider what questions in economic affairs of Europe, and coal in particular, in transition period are not adequately cared for by present machinery, and what new machinery is desirable. Agenda suggestions could be discussed informally in advance and agreed on at meeting. Each country would be requested to send an observer if not prepared to participate fully. This would avoid obvious difficulties shown so clearly in EITO history, until the representatives of four nations had at least met.

We have therefore presented a memorandum along these lines to the British and Soviet Embassies here, and will present a similar one to the French ¹⁶ as soon as you notify us of the delivery of the British coal memorandum to the French in Paris. You are authorized to say to the French at that time that we agree heartily with their joining the EEC and the ECO, although we wish to discuss further some of the details of the British proposals, and that they will hear from us in the near future.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, January 23, 1945—6 p. m. [Received January 23—3:22 p. m.]

803. We find that Sobolev ¹⁹ has not yet heard from Moscow on the proposed EEC and ECO discussions.

Ronald is preparing a draft message to British Embassy, Moscow, instructing it to make another approach to the Soviet. The Foreign Office would appreciate an approach to the Soviet also by Harriman in which it might be mentioned that the United States will be represented from London since the only hope of early action by the Soviet is that they will also appoint a representative or an observer from their London Embassy.²⁰

Ronald thinks that the presentation of rigid agendas by the United States or United Kingdom Governments would be unwise. We note (paragraph 2 of Department's 410, January 18, 9 p. m.21) that the Department is working on a suggested agenda. We shall be glad to have this as soon as possible for guidance regarding the subjects which the Department wishes us to cover. We assume that this will leave it open for us to present the agenda in the form which appears most suited to the circumstances. We propose to aim at postponing until the last item the question what countries shall participate and in what form they will participate. This procedure can be supported on the ground that these questions can best be considered after agreement has been reached on the nature of the problems to be dealt with and on the structure and terms of reference of the organizations to deal with them. In this way we hope to avoid an early clash on the Soviet-Polish issue.²² If we cannot avoid differences on the last item, we shall at least have completed the work on the organization and shall have it ready to function immediately after the political difficulties have been resolved.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) ²³

Washington, January 24, 1945—midnight.

564. For Hawkins. Discussions among Department, Potter,²⁴ Batt ²⁵ and FEA ²⁶ resulted in the following suggestions in connection with the proposed European Coal Organization.

Functions

- 1. It is believed that there will be a large net deficiency of coal on Continent for at least two years after the end of hostilities. Such deficiency will result from reduced production due to destruction and obsolescence of equipment, lack of labor, lack of maintenance supplies and will be aggravated by continental transport difficulties. Estimated deficiencies cannot be met by imports due to tight world coal position and lack of ships and port facilities.
- 2. It is believed that an organization is needed (a) to contribute to the most efficient distribution of indigenous continental production, both from the point of view of end use and effective utilization of internal transport, thereby reducing residual import demands; (b) to contribute to most efficient distribution of mining equipment and maintenance supplies and materials to assure highest productive result; (c) to assist in securing cooperation of member nations in producing greatest amount of coal in the necessary grades.
- 3. The above paragraph (2) should be considered as also applying to coal production and distribution from occupied enemy territories. In this connection relations to Reparations Commission ²⁷ will have to be worked out.
- 4. The Organization should preferably be a subcommittee of the European Economic Committee. If the full members desire to give the Organization powers of decision as to allocation of their own coal and priorities for equipment, we would not be opposed if limited to the emergency period but we should not make this suggestion nor can we be bound by their decisions as to priorities.

Membership

1. We believe membership should be at the technical operating level and consist of men familiar with the transportation, utilization and production of coal.

²³ Repeated to Paris as telegram 284; to Moscow as telegram 148.

²⁴ Charles J. Potter, Deputy Solid Fuels Administrator for War.
²⁵ William L. Batt, Vice Chairman, International Supply, War Production Board.

²⁶ Foreign Economic Administration.

²⁷ For documentation on the economic control of Germany, see vol. III, pp. 1169 ff.

- 2. Producing nations among Western European Allies should be full members; with the U.S., U.K., and U.S.S.R. as observers, taking part in discussions but not in recommendations or decisions made by the organization. In addition SHAEF²⁸ and possibly AFHQ²⁹ should be represented by observers.
- 3. We would be opposed to full British membership since joining in actions of the Organization and making commitment would, we believe, seriously prejudice the effective operation of the Combined Coal Committee both in London and here. Should the British insist on full membership we would not follow suit and would insist that any action taken by British as members would not bind the Combined Coal Committee.

Relationships with SHAEF—The Organization should, at least in the early stages, keep in close touch with the Solid Fuels Section of SHAEF in order to be fully acquainted with SHAEF's handling of existing problems and to educate itself for its activities in the postmilitary period.

Relationship to Neutrals—Coal requirements of Neutrals, particularly in relationship to Neutrals' ability to produce and supply needed equipment and supplies, will have to be considered by the Organization. Then should be discussed the means of ascertaining the needs and capacities of the Neutrals in this respect.

859. ReEmbs 1006, January 29.31 For Hawkins. In view of French request for delay in EEC and ECO conversations, failure of Soviets to reply and desire of British not to proceed in preliminary conversations without some Soviet participation postponement of discussions until about March 1 seems necessary, particularly since Hawkins plans return to Washington. Further developments suggest desirability of expanding scope of discussions.

Combined Chiefs have sent Department and British Embassy a memorandum ³² which states that SCAEF ³³ is concerned as to methods now available for ensuring most effective distribution of indigenous resources as between liberated countries of northwestern Europe. Responsibility of SCAEF has been determined by Combined Chiefs to be limited to facilitating transfer of relief supplies between liberated countries and not to include any general jurisdiction to compel exports from one liberated area to another, except in emergencies. Combined Chiefs characterize the problem as being of "extreme and immediate importance" and ask what steps are being taken. Desirability of something along lines of EEC as previously discussed would, therefore, presumably be acceptable to Combined Chiefs.

AmEmbassy, Paris, has reported confidentially 34 that Belgian Foreign Minister 35 is visiting Paris about February 7 and is expected to discuss possible arrangement among France, Belgium and Holland to provide more efficient use of their common resources. This would include not only shipments between countries but also agreements with regard to the most effective rehabilitation of industries which might include arrangements not to reconstruct certain industries in one country because those industries might be more effectively rehabilitated in one or both of the other countries. French apparently contemplate that any Franco-Belgian-Dutch arrangements would be fitted into EEC when and if formed.

Paris has also reported 36 that Foreign Minister of Luxembourg 37 is having conversations with French officials.

In view of discussions between British and Western European Allies in September (reDepts 568, January 24 and reEmbs 913, January 26 38) and other facts stated above, it is clear that the idea of EEC is in no way novel to any of the countries or groups which would be included in EEC under our proposals, and that the idea has been generally accepted, except for the fact that Soviets have given no indication of their position. They have had the proposal before them. however, since last September.

Department has under consideration proposing that March 1 meeting be expanded to include Belgians, Dutch, and Luxembourgers, and that it be attempted at that meeting to create EEC and ECO so that they could immediately get to work. It would be suggested that between now and March 1 the problems could be discussed informally in the Four Party Committees and in the various capitols. Department would propose to discuss the matter fully with Hawkins when he returns to Washington.

You are requested to send your comments on this proposal to Department as soon as possible.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, February 7, 1945—7 p. m. [Received February 7—4:44 p. m.]

1333. The questions raised in Department's 859, February 3, 11 a.m. [p. m.] regarding participation in EEC and ECO have been discussed here in detail by Penrose, 38a Berger, 39 Thayer, 40 and Mosely. 41 Hawkins had left before your message arrived.

Our comments are as follows:

- 1. We believe it to be essential to make further efforts to obtain the cooperation of USSR in both EEC and ECO. In the very near future it will be impracticable to deal with the economic questions involved unless wide participation of united and associated nations in Europe is obtained, and this depends on success in persuading the Soviets to join. This applies particularly to the general subject matter of paragraphs 2 and 3 of Department's 859, February 3.
- 2. We believe that the procedure which gives the best chance of obtaining Soviet participation and agreement is still that suggested in Embassy's 11323, December 20, 9 p. m. and 11343, December 21, 7 p. m.⁴² Informal meetings as small as possible give the best chance of clearing difficulties with the Soviet. Once these difficulties are removed the rest will be fairly plain sailing.
- 3. Once four power agreement is reached on the main issues, including the form and scope of participation, it will be easy to arrange for other countries to join the discussions after a brief interval. This will be facilitated by Ronald's earlier personal conversations with some Allied officials, the chief purpose of which was to ask them to begin thinking on the subject so that delay would be minimized later.
- 4. Though Sobolev informed Penrose in a conversation yesterday that he has not yet received any instructions on EEC, we think that hope of Soviet participation should not yet be abandoned. If by March 1 the Soviets have not replied we think the meeting should start on a three power basis, for reasons given in paragraph 5 below.

⁴² Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 11, pp. 635 and 637, respectively.

- 5. We have already persuaded the Foreign Office to adopt, and the French have accepted, the procedure of preliminary four power talks in preference to the original Foreign Office proposal. It would be embarrassing to change our position at this stage. We do not think the Foreign Office would favor the proposal in the penultimate paragraph of Department's 859, February 3, particularly because of possible effects on the French and Soviet attitudes. The United Kingdom have expressed no change in their view that at least a Soviet observer should be present, and their attitude on French participation seems to imply that the French place much stock on being treated in somewhat special category. If this is so it seems probable that a proposal for a change which would remove them from such a category would produce an unfavorable reaction and necessitate further negotiation. If discussions are to begin on March 1 the time is short and further delay might be caused by proposals for a new procedure unless we were assured that they would meet an immediately favorable response. It is our belief that the proposal for wider initial participation would not meet with such a response.
- 6. Our conclusions are (1) that the present procedure should be adhered to for the initial talks; (2) that as soon as sufficient preliminary agreement on general principles is obtained at the initial meeting, there should be an adjournment for 10 days to allow invitations to be sent out to other proposed participants to join in discussions on a wider basis; (3) that every effort should be made by new approaches to obtain Soviet participation; (4) that in any case the initial talks should start about March 1, on a four power basis if possible, otherwise on a three power basis.

Please bring this message to the attention of Hawkins. Repeated to Moscow as No. 37, to Paris as No. 62.

1624. 1. In regard to the suggestions in Department's 564, January 24, regarding the proposed European Coal Organization. We are fully in accord with the first three paragraphs concerning functions and with the last two paragraphs of the message, but we wish to raise question regarding paragraphs 2 and 3 on membership and the last sentence of paragraph 4 on functions.

- 2. We note the Department's view that ECO should be a subcommittee of EEC. In these circumstances it is not clear to us why United States, United Kingdom and USSR should participate fully in EEC but only as observers in ECO. In our understanding it is intended that both EEC and ECO should be advisory organizations, and we doubt the advisability of setting up different forms of participation on the part of different groups of countries in an advisory organization.
- 3. In regard to the suggestion that we should oppose full participation of United Kingdom and the Soviet in ECO we fear that to take such a position might arouse some antagonism.

1252. Department has discussed with Hawkins Department's 859 of February 3 (repeated as 229 to Moscow and 438 to Paris) with regard to European Economic Committee and London's 1333 of February 7 (which was repeated by London to Moscow as no. 37 and Paris as no. 62). In view of the absence of comments from Paris and Moscow and the shortness of time before March 1, Department proposes to proceed as suggested in London's 1333, February 7.

Accordingly, memoranda will be delivered to British, Soviet and French Embassies here suggesting that preliminary talks originally scheduled for January 29 to be held in London about March 1 and stating that if preliminary discussions indicate agreement as to desirability of establishing EEC and a European Coal Organization, further discussions be held as soon as possible, preferably within two weeks after March 1, to include Belgians, Dutch, Luxembourgers and representatives of SHAEF. The purpose of these later discussions would be to set up the organizations and to start them functioning as soon as possible.

Moscow is requested to approach the Soviet Government referring to previous communications and to urge strongly that the Soviets participate in March 1 conversations or at least have an observer present. If no action is taken by the Soviets, March 1 conversations would proceed without them. Paris is requested to approach French Government and urge prompt reply.⁴³ 1463. Re Embassy's 1790, February 21.47 For Hawkins. Department has no information as to whether French would agree to proceed with EEC and ECO conversations without Soviet attendance.

Department did not intend to discuss with British in Washington the U.K. memorandum 48 on ECO in view of Department's feeling that any detailed discussions in Washington would embarrass the conduct of discussions in London by Hawkins.

With regard to membership, Department's suggestion that members be restricted at the present time to Western European Allies was based partly on difficulties which would result from attempt to include Polish representative or neutrals (see Department's 10129, December 249), partly on fact that transportation between Western Europe and other parts of the continent is extremely restricted and partly on Department's view that there would be more chance of successfully setting up an effective mechanism if a modest goal were sought. If and when conditions warranted, representatives of areas other than Western Europe might be included if the more limited objectives suggested by the Department had been achieved.

Embassy will note that last paragraph of Department's 578 of January 26 50 suggested as a possible topic of discussion the establishing of a committee for Southeastern Europe. Also refer to Department's 393 to Moscow, repeated to London as 1383.⁵¹

The Department desires to re-emphasize its dislike of economic regionalism. If the need for an organization like EEC continues into the period when it is practicable to extend its scope to include all continental Europe, the Department would prefer such extension rather than the maintenance of two or more regional groups.

U.S. members of Combined Coal Committee ⁵² would be very reluctant to seeing British participate fully in decisions on coal which might prejudice existing combined committees here and in London. It was on this basis that Department expressed opposition to full British membership in ECO. This was not an instruction to oppose formally but expressed views of Department and other interested agencies.

sibility for external economic policy rests with the government of each country and that there is no intention to set up overall machinery to control European external relations. The objective is to consider common economic problems collectively with a view to making the best use of what we have. He recommended examination of the questions by categories. There were questions arising from shortage of supplies, shortage of the means of moving the supplies, relations between ally and ally, between ally and neutral and between ally and enemy or ex-enemy. In addition there might [be?] a category of pre-surrender problems.

- 3. The meeting agreed to a proposal by Hawkins that two drafting committees should be set up, one on EEC and one on coal to prepare statements outlining the nature of problems involved in each case during the transition period and the scope of existing machinery. These drafting groups would place reports before the next meeting to be held Friday afternoon to form a basis for discussions which would lead to agreed recommendations to the four governments. The drafting committees would take account of the points raised in today's discussions.
- 4. The remainder of the discussion covered many of the suggested questions which have been covered in memoranda and suggested agendas of the Department and the Foreign Office. Alphand said that suggestions should be made concerning the kinds of raw materials, foods and technical problems which might conveniently be dealt with by special technical committees of EEC. He thought that production in Germany should be taken into account and added that it should be indicated in the report that besides dealing with short term problems an EEC might be useful in solving problems of production and distribution in the longer period.

Alphand has not yet made clear what he considers the extent of the "longer period" to be.

I

- 1. Rapid progress was made on EEC and a draft text of a report and recommendation has been agreed tentatively except on one point, which concerns the relations between EEC and ECO.
- 2. The analysis of the economic questions of the transition period and the description of the proposed functions of the EEC and the fields in which its services may prove to be useful are, we believe, in harmony with the Department's views. The tentative draft text of the part setting forth the recommendations and the proposed terms of reference is sent in the immediately following telegram.⁶⁰
- 3. As regards the question of membership and of what countries should be invited to join, the position has been changed by the Yalta Conference. None of the countries has advanced any suggestion of regionalism and the French and British took it for granted from the outset that invitations should be sent to, and that membership should consist of, all the European Allies, except that the invitation of Poland should be postponed until the new government is established.
- 4. We have reexamined our files on EEC and note that (I) the Department in its aide-mémoire of September 27, 1944 62 agreed with the United Kingdom position that all the European Allies should enter into EEC; (II) that subsequent modification of this position following discussions with Ambassador Harriman were the outcome of the Soviet-Polish dispute which is now on the way to settlement; (III) that the Department remains strongly opposed to economic regionalism.
- 5. In these circumstances we have concluded that it would be most unwise and would place us in an anomalous position if we became the sole advocates of a regional approach. We have therefore agreed tentatively to the position indicated in the last sentence of paragraph 3 above, and unless we hear anything to the contrary from the Department, we do not propose to raise any issue on this point.
- 6. It appears to us that no obstacle remains to agreement on recommendations with respect to EEC, except insofar as relations with ECO may be involved.

TT

7. There has been general agreement on the urgency of the European coal question and on the need for an ECO. Divergent views have, however, been expressed concerning the powers of ECO and its relations to EEC.

⁶⁰ Infra.

Erorign Relations, 1944, vol. II, p. 622.

- 8. Until shortly before the discussions began, the Foreign Office considered that ECO should be an advisory subcommittee of an advisory EEC. Ronald expressed this view unambiguously in informal conversations with Hawkins and Sobolev. We learn confidentially that subsequently the Ministry of Fuel and Power opposed this position and at a ministerial committee meeting succeeded in getting its own position adopted against Foreign Office views. Thus the United Kingdom position now is that ECO should in general operate on the basis of recommendations but should have power of executive decision in emergency matters within Europe. The words "within Europe" were inserted in the draft note on ECO, section C (I) in order to make clear that ECO operations would in no way prejudice Combined Coal Committee action. The spokesmen for the MFP 64 at the meeting also took a strong position against having ECO set up as a subcommittee of EEC.
- 9. In regard to the two partially interrelated issues, (I) whether ECO should have executive or only advisory powers; (II) whether ECO should be a subcommittee of EEC or have a more or less independent status like EITO, the French expressed views in line with the views of the Ministry of Fuel and Power. The Soviet, however, expressed the view emphatically that ECO should be a subcommittee of EEC along with any other commodity committees. This is the only point on which Borishenko, who lacks detailed instructions, took a strong position. He did not specifically refer in the general meeting to the question whether advisory or executive powers should be given to ECO, but in the drafting committee meeting he repeatedly indicated that the ECO should be advisory.
- 10. The core of the question seems to be that the British officials concerned with coal fear that there would be undue delay if decisions on a mass of detailed business, partly having to do with the disposition within Europe of a large number of relatively small quantities of coal, had in each case to be referred back to each government, and particularly if the reference back had to be made through EEC rather than directly.
- 11. In accordance with the Department's views, we have expressed a preference for setting up ECO as an advisory subcommittee of EEC but have so far refrained from pressing the point to a serious issue. We have tentatively endeavored to meet what there is of substance in the MFP and the French case by recognizing that it would be undesirable to set up a clumsy committee structure under which all matters of detail on ECO would have to be referred to EEC before being referred to governments. We have suggested that ECO should report directly to governments but that EEC should have the power to review recommendations of ECO, and should exercise that right, not as a matter of course, but when it considered that review was necessary in the interests of coordination.

- 12. Section II of the immediately following telegram contains the draft note on ECO, paragraph C (I) of which the United Kingdom and French members of the coal drafting group proposes, and following it that which Berger suggested as a substitute.
- 13. We consider it premature to raise questions concerning the form of United States, United Kingdom and USSR participation in ECO until the implications of paragraph C (I) have been fully clarified through private conversations with the other participants.

- 2233. I. The following is the draft text of the proposed recommendations on the establishment of a European Economic Committee:
- ["]3. In view of the foregoing it is recommended that a consultative and advisory body, to be known as the European Economic Committee, be established as soon as possible to deal with the type of problems described above. The general terms of reference might be:
- "To provide a forum for discussion and interchange of information and for the formulation of recommendations with respect to (a) economic questions arising in Europe during the last part of the European war and the transition period immediately following, and (b) such questions of reconstruction policy and longer term development as must necessarily be considered in connection with (a)"
- "4. In the initial stages the committee should be composed of representatives of the Allied Governments in Europe and the United States Government. En Neutrals could be brought in as and when the foundation members agreed that it was expedient. The attendance of representatives to speak for the enemy countries will have to be arranged in different ways according to the extent to which the controlling or occupying powers have assumed responsibility for the various functions of government. The exact manner of their representation will, however, be a matter for decision by the controlling or occupying powers, in consultation with the members of the EEC.

"6. The European Economic Committee should be established as soon as possible with the terms of reference set forth in paragraph X above, and should proceed at once to take appropriate steps, including the establishment of suitable reactions with the bodies mentioned in the preceding paragraph and the creation of any technical or other committees or agencies that may be required to deal with particular goods or problems."

"A. Nature of the problem.

"(I) Need for coordination of coal supplies for Europe.

"The recent acceleration in the progress of the European war has underlined the urgency of the problem of coordinating coal supplies for Europe in the period immediately preceding and following the end of the German war. It is already clear that, owing to manpower and transport difficulties, supplies of coal from non-German sources will, for some time, fall far short of requirements, even if enemy resistance were to be overcome without extensive damage to Allied and enemy coal fields; and that in this transition period, Europe will have to depend to an appreciable extent on German coal. Later, when and if export surpluses become available in the Allied coal producing countries, it is considered that, so long as the total requirements in Europe exceed total supplies, the only means of ensuring a fair and equitable distribution of total export supplies would be to coordinate the allocation of such supplies, together with Germany's surplus. The measure of this surplus will depend on the requirements of Germany's national economy as determined by the Allies, and on any reparations, political, and economic agreements.

"(II) Equipment for mines.

"Supplies of mining machinery and equipment will be required for the mines to reach their maximum production. Many of these requirements are in very short supply and will need expert coordination so as to ensure an equitable and efficient distribution of both indigenous and non-indigenous supplies. It may well be, for instance, that German mines should not have the first choice of machinery and equipment produced by German industry. An important factor in the distribution would be the extent to which output of coal could be increased by the provision of mining machinery and equipment made available for allocation on the lines proposed in the preceding paragraph due regard being paid to local needs and to the transport available at the time.

"(III) Mining labor.

"The return of displaced miners, and the recruitment of new, presents a serious problem requiring coordination so that the needs of Europe as a whole may be determined and presented to the appropriate authority.

"(IV) Transport.

"As the possibility of moving supplies both by land and sea will be entirely dependent upon the availability of transport, it will be necessary to coordinate the demands for the transport of coal and mining machinery, so that these demands can be effectively presented to the authorities responsible for coordinating transport to meet requirements, e.g. the United Maritime Authority and the European Central Inland Transport Organization.

"(V) Handling of German coal and mining machinery.

"The allocation of German supplies which may be made available outside Germany will need careful and expert handling if a truly equitable distribution is to be ensured and if the legitimate trading interests of the Allies are to be adequately safeguarded.

"B. Existing machinery.

"(I) The combined boards at present only allocate available exportable supplies of coal and planned items of mining machinery emanating from the British Empire and the U.S.A.

"(II) During the period of military operations, SHAEF and AFHQ control the import of coal and mining machinery into northwest Europe and the Mediterranean area.

"(III) Neither of these arrangements would suffice to deal with the problems outlined above. In any case, the period during which the Allied Commanders in Chief will continue their present limited functions is short.

"C. Proposed machinery to meet the problem.

"(I) With the object of ensuring a fair and equitable allocation of available supplies, it is proposed that a European coal organization should be set up for the effective coordination of European requirements and supplies in relation to the world shortage of coal supplies, mining labor and equipment and transport. In general, the European coal organization should make recommendations to the appropriate governments, international organizations and other bodies concerned. Also, the member governments should empower their representatives to arrange for action to be taken with the appropriate authorities to resolve emergency problems within Europe as they arise.

"(II) The organization should be composed, in the first instance, of representative of the United Kingdom, the U.S.A., the USSR, France and the other European Allies. There should, of course, be provision for the establishment of such relationships as may in each case be appropriate with the Allied Control Commissions, combined boards, UNRRA, the proposed European Economic Committee, EITO, UMA, and other bodies which may be established. Provision should also be made for appropriate relationships with representatives of employers and employees, and with consuming interests, including the interests of neutrals."

The United States member of the drafting committee proposed to substitute the following for C (I) in the above text:

"It is proposed that a European coal organization should be set up for the effective coordination of European requirements and supplies in relation to the world shortage of coal supplies, mining labor and equipment, and transport, with the object of insuring a fair and equitable distribution of available supplies and in order to resolve emergency problems as they arise."

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, March 8, 1945—9 p. m.

1776. For Hawkins. Following comments on the draft recommendations contained in your 2233, March 4 are made after discussion between interested agencies in Washington.

General terms of reference in section 3 of EEC draft could be interpreted as authorizing consideration of long term problems which became apparent during emergency period but whose solution was not required to meet immediate problems. Accordingly we would suggest that first three words of (a) be revised to read "economic questions requiring solution".

Third sentence of section 4 in referring to "enemy countries" may carry implication that enemy nationals would be represented. Also question of Austria would not be clear. It is suggested that word "countries" be changed to "areas".

Reference in paragraph 6 to "suitable reactions" means, we assume, "suitable relations".

With regard to ECO document, it is not clear what is meant by section A (III). We would regret any tendency to have ECO closely involved in displaced persons problem ⁶⁶ or the problem of recruiting labor. If this section merely means to recite that priorities of rehabilitation may be affected by labor supply, it seems unobjectionable.

Section B (II) seems too broad. The importation of coal and mining machinery into northwest Europe can presumably be effected through national import program without SHAEF control and it seems unwise to overstate SHAEF authority.

We much prefer your draft of section C (I). No objection seen to including second sentence of other draft of C (I) omitting words "in general". As stated above, we would greatly regret an attempt to give ECO executive powers. In practice any decisions reached must be carried out through national agencies and other authorities and the attempt to have such bodies bound by ECO decisions seems to raise unnecessary difficulties. If they accepted decision of ECO, they would act whether decision was advisory or recommendatory.

⁶⁶ For documentation on this subject, see pp. 1146 ff.

If they dissented from ECO decisions, it seems highly unlikely that they could be coerced into following them. Our experience with combined boards, whose action is through recommendations, indicates this method of operation is highly successful. Agreed recommendations have the force of decisions and vet there is avoided the problem of giving a foreign country power of decision. U.S. coal authorities would object to ECO purporting to make decisions involving quantity of supplies to be imported into Europe although they would not object to decisions as to destination of amounts previously determined by Combined Coal Committee to be available, subject to shipping considerations. If proposed phrase "within Europe" includes U.K. coal and equipment, decisions in ECO as to their distribution would be highly embarrassing in the operation of the Combined Coal Com-You should strongly urge that ECO should operate through recommendations only. If power of decision is given to ECO, it is doubtful if U.S. would participate except by an observer.

Section C (II) raises two important problems. The first is the relationship between ECO and EEC. We feel strongly that ECO should be subordinate to EEC. If representation on ECO is kept at the technical level, as suggested by us, there should be a group to whom broader policy matters could be referred and EEC could fill There may be other specialized organizations needed, for instance, fertilizer (see your 11403, December 22 67) and power. We would consider it most unfortunate to have several specialized organizations operating independently without an established method of coordination. This would be particularly true in the relations between such specialized organizations and other bodies such as EITO. any reparations organization, UMA, et cetera. While we recognize the desirability of avoiding a complicated hierarchy, we agree that the relationship described in paragraph eleven of your 2232 of March 4 would provide a sensible method of operation. Relations between national and other coal authorities and ECO could proceed from day to day without reference to EEC except in those cases in which coordination with other agencies or groups was necessary or in which broader policy considerations arose.

The second point raised by C (II) relates to the last sentence. We are not clear what is proposed but feel that representation on ECO should be at the governmental level, each government undertaking to represent the various interests within its area. Again the analogy of the combined boards indicates that governmental representation is the most efficient. Representation of employers or employees separate from their governments would seem to lead inevitably to the injection into ECO of matters far beyond its basic purpose. The interests of neutrals should be taken into account, but this seems a different problem, to be approached independently.

- 2599. 1. In private conversation last night Borishenko told us that he will continue to support the prompt establishment of ECO but that he expects to make a statement at the meeting on Thursday ⁶⁸ opposing the establishment of EEC at this time, on the ground that such a committee, if set up at all, should be set up at the San Francisco Conference ⁶⁹ as a possible regional subgroup of the world organization (chapter IX of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals ⁷⁰). After prolonged discussion Borishenko continued to adhere tenaciously to this view.
- 2. We explained that in our view an EEC should be set up promptly without prejudice to what is done at San Francisco and should be strictly limited to immediate problems of the transition period. However the Soviet delegation speak and apparently think on economic matters in simple, general terms and do not appreciate distinctions between the "transition period" and the "long term". It is not certain but we think it is likely that Borishenko will actively oppose the establishment of EEC on Thursday morning. We propose to adhere firmly to our position but a difficult period of negotiation must be anticipated on EEC.
- 3. Borishenko said he was convinced of the need for ECO and that he thought he would be in a position also to support the establishment of other groups dealing with special questions, such as fertilizers and textiles, if the need for them could be demonstrated.
- 4. Borishenko's change of position was unexpected in view of the strong opinions which he expressed in the early meetings that ECO should be a subcommittee under EEC.
- 5. Ronald on several occasions has said that in the United Kingdom view it is even more urgent to establish ECO and other groups dealing with limited economic subjects than to establish EEC. However we strongly concur with the view expressed in the penultimate paragraph of Department's 1776, March 8, that it would be unfortunate to have several specialized organizations operating independently without an established method of coordination.

- 6. For our confidential information it would be helpful to us to be informed of the Department's views regarding the more detailed elaboration of chapter IX of the Dumbarton Oaks plan, particularly in its application to Europe.
- 7. We think the United Kingdom view is likely to be that the working out of the details of the economic and social council could not conveniently be done in such a large gathering as will take place in San Francisco, and that it will probably be more convenient to set up an interim commission as was done in the case of the food and agricultural organization.
- 8. The coal drafting committee met this morning and the immediately following telegram contains a further revised text, which was tentatively agreed for submission to the general meeting Thursday morning.
- 9. In line with the changed position of the Soviet regarding EEC the Soviet representative on the coal drafting committee refused to agree to any reference to EEC in the draft text on coal. The United Kingdom member said that ECS [ECO?] may come into existence before EEC and in any case it would be for EEC to decide what its relationship to ECO should be. Berger tried to insert a sentence in line with the views expressed in the penultimate paragraph of Department's 1776, March 8, 9 p. m., but was unable to obtain any support for it. We will make another attempt at the meeting on Thursday morning. However in view of the Soviet attitude regarding EEC we think that if this attempt is unsuccessful we should not delay the formation of ECO on this issue but should reserve our right to raise it again in the EEC negotiations.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, March 15, 1945—11 p. m. [Received 11:59 p. m.]

2714. The Soviet representative at the meeting this morning reaffirmed the Soviet Government's desire to proceed with ECO but on EEC he took, on behalf of his Government, the native [negative?] position which we predicted in Embassy's 2599, March 13, 8 p. m.

- 1. Borishenko showed anxiety to reach agreement on ECO as soon as possible but raised some questions concerning the last sentence of A (I) and concerning A (V). In the discussion some advance was made in clarifying the issues but in view of Borishenko's difficulties in following a detailed discussion in English he asked for another meeting of the coal drafting committee before committing himself. There is still the possibility that difficulties may arise over the points mentioned in the second paragraph of Department's 1943, March 13, 9 p. m.⁷¹ The drafting committee will meet tomorrow and the full committee next Wednesday. We hope to be able to clarify the position tomorrow.
 - 2. On EEC Borishenko read the statement paraphrased as follows:

"Careful consideration has been given by the Soviet delegation to the documents which it has received regarding the setting up of a European Economic Committee and the proposed functions of the committee. The Soviet delegation is of opinion that the setting up of European Economic Committee is impracticable for a number of reasons particularly:

reasons particularly:

(a) The European Economic Committee would be deprived of several functions and would be made into an inanimate organ by the proposed formation of an economic and social council at the forthcoming San Francisco Conference.

(b) The delegation considers it most practicable to set up such specialized organizations as for example ECITO, UMA, ECO, for the coordination of the efforts of various separate economic problems.

(c) The European Economic Committee, having regard to the existence of such international economic organizations as the international monetary fund, UNRRA et cetera, would isolate the European governments from a direct contact with these organizations and would handicap the work of these organizations.

The Soviet delegation suggests that the question of the setting up of an European Economic Committee be eliminated from further discussions in view of the foregoing."

The exact meaning of (b) in the above text is not clear to us. We will ask Borishenko to retranslate.

3. For the United Kingdom Ronald expressed regret that there should be delay in setting up EEC but thought that the Soviet statement raised issues which would make it necessary for the delegations to consult their governments. He said that the United Kingdom were not clear how much discussion of the details of the scope and organization of economic and social council could take place in the very large meeting at San Francisco. They thought that plans would have to be worked out to cover much of the ground formerly covered by the League [of Nations] technical organizations and then it would have to be decided what additional specialized bodies would be needed. There would be a vast field to cover and the United Kingdom thought it would probably be necessary to set up an interim body. In Ronald's opinion it was improbable that the San Francisco meeting would reach the point of actually setting up regional committees of the Economic and Social Council.

- 4. We said that we appreciated the desire of the Soviet that nothing should be done to prejudice the proposed Economic and Social Council, and shared their faith that that council would become an effective body. We added that the sort of EEC that we desired would in no sense be competitive with, nor would it encroach on the jurisdiction of, the Economic and Social Council and its constituent groups. It was designed to deal with immediate emergency questions some of which already existed while others would arise before the structure proposed under Chapter IX of the Dumbarton Oaks plan could get into full working order. We considered that the proper concern of the Soviet for the place of the Economic and Social Council, with its constituent bodies, could be met by introducing amendments or additions to the statement on EEC, making it clear that EEC's concern was only with immediate emergency economic matters and providing that its terms of reference and its whole position should be reconsidered when the Economic and Social Council came into existence. We then put forward the proposed change of title and additional paragraph which Mr. Clayton 72 repeated to Penrose in last night's telephone conversation and asked that when the national representatives present consulted their governments on the issues raised they should communicate these proposals to them. They all agreed to do this.
- 5. The French representative said that his Government was convinced of the need for prompt establishment of an EEC to deal with pressing questions that were already affecting France and other liberated Allies. He expressed complete agreement with the views expressed by the United States representative.
- 6. It was then agreed that discussions on EEC should be adjourned while the representatives consulted their governments.
- 7. In personal conversation after the meeting with Borishenko we got the impression that the Soviet would come to San Francisco with

⁷² William L. Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs. Mr. Clayton suggested to Dr. Penrose that it might be useful to re-name the organization "The Emergency Economic Committee for Europe". Mr. Clayton suggested that the problem raised by the Soviet position described in London's 2599, March 13, printed supra, could be met by inserting at the end of paragraph 3 of the EEC document the following two sentences:

[&]quot;The European Economic Committee shall deal with currently pressing economic problems of an emergency character and coordinate the work of special committees established to deal with such problems. When and as the Economic and Social Council contemplated in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals shall have been established, there should be reexamination of the work of the EEC and of its possible relationship to the Economic and Social Council." (840.50/3–1345) detailed ideas as to the implementation of Chapter IX of the Dumbarton Oaks plan.

8. In view of Borishenko's rigid instructions it seems unlikely that the Soviet position can be changed except by direct representations to the Soviet Government. Ronald suggests that such representations should be withheld for a few days in order to draw up an agreed list of points which he and the United States and French representatives consider would be most effective in supporting the idea of an EEC in representations to the Soviet Government. He is now engaged in drafting these points and will discuss them with us shortly.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, March 17, 1945—8 p. m. [Received 8:28 p. m.]

2802. Following the meeting on Thursday reported in Embassy's 2714, March 15, 11 p. m., and a meeting of the coal drafting committee last evening, the position of the negotiations on the proposed European Coal Organization may be summarized as follows:

- 1. We have reached agreement with United Kingdom, USSR and France that ECO should remain advisory and not an executive body.
- 2. The difficulties with the Soviet concerning references to reparation, which we forecasted in Embassy's 2503, March 10, 7 p. m., ⁷⁴ and in the third sentence of paragraph 1, Embassy's 2714, March 15, 11 p. m., came to a head in the coal drafting committee yesterday. It is clear that Borishenko has been strictly instructed from Moscow to press uncompromisingly for the inclusion in its coal document of passages which we cannot accept.
- 3. The last sentence A (I) in the draft coal document sent to you in Embassy's 2600, March 13, 8 p. m.⁷⁴ reads, "The disposition of German coal will be conditioned by various factors, especially reparation policy as and when it may be laid down". For this sentence Borishenko proposed to substitute the following: "The distribution of German coal will be conditioned in the first place by the reparation policy and thereafter by other requirements which will be determined by the controlling powers".
- 4. Prolonged discussions at the delegation meetings, the drafting committee meetings and privately, have shown that the Soviet intend ⁷⁴ Not printed.

- (I) to be a statement of priorities and (II) to imply that decisions on reparations must be completed before ECO can begin to consider any questions relating to German coal supplies; (III) to convey implications as to which countries will determine reparation policy. This was underlined by Borishenko's reaction to another suggested amendment which was as follows. "The measure of the German surplus which may be made available by the controlling powers for use outside Germany will be conditioned by reparation and other agreed policies.["] Borishenko said he was ready to consider this if for the words "conditioned by reparation and other agreed policies" the following were substituted: "conditioned in the first place by reparation policy and thereafter by other agreed policies of the controlling powers". Berger replied that the words "and thereafter" were not acceptable because they implied a decision on priorities, which the ECO meeting was not competent to decide. He also raised questions on the implications of the last four words of the sentence.
- 5. At the full delegation meeting on Thursday we made clear, and have repeatedly explained to Borishenko, that in our view the meeting on ECO, as well as ECO itself when it is set up, are not authorized to deal with questions involving reparation policy nor with priorities concerning the disposition of coal mined in Germany, though of course it is possible that ECO might serve a useful purpose in compiling information on the needs of the Allies for coal and in making recommendations on the distribution of any German coal available for export, the destination of which had not already been determined by other policies. We have also emphasized to the Soviet that the activities of ECO should be subject to whatever policies are laid down on reparation and on the foreign trade of ex-enemy countries and should not be allowed to prejudice such policies in any way. We have pointed out that we are not proposing to enter into any discussion for or against the policy issues on German coal which the Soviet are raising, since these are a matter for future discussion through other channels.
- 6. In regard to this last point, however, Borishenko's instructions are that the statement which the Soviet propose contains "a most important principle which must be included" in the coal document. The Soviet appear to be using tactics, familiar to us in our UNRRA work here, of attempting to use bodies on meetings intended for specialized discussions as channels for the propagation of their ideas on general policy issues.
- 7. Both private and public discussions with the Soviet are taking place in a most friendly and frank atmosphere and the Soviet delegates show an obvious desire to cooperate to the fullest extent that their instructions permit. It seems probable that the outstanding issues on ECO, like those on EEC, will soon have to be taken up directly with the Soviet Government in the hope of getting the instructions to the Soviet delegates altered.

- 8. The French are supporting us fully on ECO as well as EEC. On ECO we think they may be influenced by a desire not to assent to reparation decisions on coal that might be reached only by United States, United Kingdom and USSR. The Department will have noted that Borishenko has used phrases which imply that France would be among the powers desiring reparation.
- 9. The coal drafting committee will meet again on Tuesday and the delegations on Wednesday of next week. If no agreement is reached on Wednesday it will be necessary to adjourn for consultation with government[s].
- 10. On Monday we hope to send Department text of an instruction which the Foreign Office may send later next week to Clark Kerr 75 with reference to an approach to the Soviet Government regarding EEC.

Moscow, March 21, 1945—10 a. m. [Received 2:30 p. m.]

832. From London's telegrams on ECO and EEC I note that deadlocks have been reached in each of these sets of discussions due to instructions received by the Soviet representative which are not acceptable to us and from which he is not at liberty to depart. As I understand it the Russians do not wish the EEC to be set up at all, and will not agree to establishment of the ECO unless the principle is embodied in its statutes that the body must not take up question of German coal supplies before an agreement has been reached on reparations, and that thereafter distribution of German coal shall be determined in the first place by reparation policy. These views, as I understand, are unacceptable to the other delegations. I note that in the case of each of these deadlocks, the suggestion has been advanced that an effort should be made to settle the matter by direct representations to the Soviet Government, presumably through this Mission and the British Embassy in Moscow, with a view to getting instructions of Soviet representative altered (Winant's 2714, March 15, 11 p.m. and 2802, March 17, 8 p.m. to Department).

⁷⁵ Sir Archibald J. K. Clark Kerr, British Ambassador in the Soviet Union.

I question advisability of any direct representations to the Soviet Government in these matters. My reasons follow:

- 1. Past experience has shown that if we now take initiative in trying to break this deadlock by direct representations in Moscow, the first conclusion which will be drawn here is that we are much more anxious to get on with these matters than is the Soviet Government, and that the latter is, therefore, in a good bargaining position to hold out for higher political objectives which it wishes to achieve and which, as was pointed out in paragraph 6 of London's 2802, March 17, 8 p. m., to the Department, have little legitimate connection with these specialized discussions. In other words the Soviets will regard our direct appeal to them as a sign of weakness on our part, if anything it will stiffen their position.
- 2. One of our greatest difficulties in dealing with Soviet Government is its reluctance to give any scope of action to its representatives in international discussions. When we go over heads of its representatives and appeal directly to the Government in Moscow we are playing precisely the Soviet game and are encouraging Soviet leaders to continue this very practice which causes us so much difficulty. This has already been done so much that they are now coming to regard their representatives in discussions abroad as mere vehicles for sounding out the position of others, and have no hesitation in giving them unreasonable and categoric instructions, being confident that any resulting deadlock will always be appealed directly to Moscow for solution. I can assure the Department that if the Soviet Government can ever be induced to show more elasticity in international dealings and to give more leeway to those who represent it, it will only be if it is demonstrated by experience that to tie the hands of such representatives by too narrow instructions can have results detrimental to Soviet interests.
- 3. It should be borne in mind that all we can do here in Moscow is to place in writing before the Soviet Government the views of our Governments on the points at issue. Even the officials with whom we deal are not ones who have authority to settle these matters and it is wasted time to attempt to persuade them by oral representations of the merits of our views. Since they will receive this written presentation in no different form than if it is given to their representation on the spot, nothing tangible is achieved thereby other than to confirm the Soviet Government in its impression that it has superior bargaining position and can afford to insist on its own wishes.

In the case at hand, Borishenko has been duly appointed by the Soviet Government to represent it in discussions concerning EEC and ECO. I recommend that whatever views our Government has on these subjects be stated frankly and clearly to Borishenko. If he is then unable to obtain from his Government instructions which enable him to reach agreement with us, I recommend that we regard the deadlock as final and proceed with whatever further measures we find it in our interest to take. These measures should, in my opinion, include whatever joint action, independent of the Russians, may be found necessary on the part of the other powers represented in the discussions. If the Soviet representative expresses concern over a breakdown of the negotiations, it might be suggested to him this time as a matter of tactics that possibly his Government would wish to take the matter up with the British and American Governments.

I am mindful of the urgent importance of obtaining prompt and effective Soviet collaboration on questions involved. But, I am satisfied that the overall interests of such collaboration will not be served if we continue to place ourselves regularly in the position of supplicants to the Soviet Government for action which, although in possession of all relevant data, it has not otherwise been prepared to take. I am sure that a firmer tone and a greater show of independence on our part on the spot will produce better results than any number of empty handed approaches here in Moscow.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, April 17, 1945—7 p. m. [Received 9:40 p. m.]

3903. Following is a summary of the present position of EECE ⁷⁸ and ECO and of our views regarding future procedure.

- 1. The only obstacle to prompt establishment of both EECE and ECO is the attitude of the Soviet. It has been agreed to wait until April 20 to give the Soviet an opportunity to reply to the representations made at the meeting on April 10.
- 2. As a result of the repeated representations made in London by the United States, United Kingdom and French delegations to the head of the Soviet delegation and passed on by him to Moscow, there are signs that the Soviet is becoming uneasy at finding itself in a minority position. The Soviet has drawn back from its extreme negative position on EECE and would "if necessary" join in a reconsideration of EECE after the San Francisco Conference. The question therefore arises whether we should agree to a postponement of further EECE discussions until that time or should proceed to establish EECE without the Soviet.
- 3. Our view still is that an essential prerequisite to the initiation of any plan for proceeding without the Soviet is that at least France, Belgium and Holland should first be found willing to join in the plan. We have privately sounded out the French ⁷⁹ and Ronald the Belgians, Dutch and Norwegians. We understand that the Belgians and Norwegians and probably the Dutch will be ready to go ahead if necessary without the Soviet. The French here are willing to do the same but have not yet obtained an instruction from Paris on the matter. The acting head of the French delegation ⁸⁰ has gone to Paris for some days and we await his return for definite information on the French position.
- 4. If the French and the United Kingdom will agree to join in some form of EECE whether the Soviet do so or not, we strongly favor taking prompt steps as soon as practicable after April 20 to invite other European Allies to a meeting to set up EECE. Our view is that if we accepted the Soviet proposal for delaying EECE discussions ⁷⁸ The name of the projected organization had been changed from European Economic Committee to Emergency Economic Committee for Europe.

 Jr., adviser on economic affairs at Paris, with the honorary rank of Minister.

we should lose valuable time without any assurance of compensating future gain. Even if the Soviet change their general attitude after the San Francisco Conference they may attach unacceptable conditions to their adhesion to EECE in line with the tactics which they have used in the EITO and ECO negotiations.

5. We therefore favor the following procedure: (1) Given assurance that at least the United Kingdom, French, Dutch, Belgians and Norwegians will join an EECE, to send invitations in the name of United States, United Kingdom and France to the other European Allies (the invitation to Poland to be postponed until an agreed government is established) to meet at a date about 10 days ahead to set up EECE; (2) to express to the Soviet an appreciation of their willingness to return to a discussion of EEC after the San Francisco Conference, to inform them that in view of the urgency of the matter, the long delay since the first proposals were made, and the strong views on the need of EEC expressed on the UNRRA Committee of the Council for Europe by a number of Allied countries, we feel it necessary without further delay to invite other Allies to discuss the immediate establishment of an emergency committee the functions of which will be reconsidered when the Economic and Social Council is set up, and we hope that if such an emergency body is established the Soviet will participate at least by an observer.

6. It is our view that the invitation should go to all the European Allies and not to a western group only, first because all the Allies have been informed on the CCE of UNRRA that we favor an EEC and difficulties would arise if some of them were subsequently ignored, and second because, even if a few of the Allies, for example Czechoslovakia, felt that they could not accept for political reasons it is still desirable to do all we can to counteract the tendency for separate spheres of economic influence to arise in Europe. If Czechoslovakia or any other country does not wish to participate fully it can be invited to send an observer.

As regards ECO, we have given careful consideration to the question whether a limited ad hoc coal committee without the Soviet would be useful. We have discussed the matter with Ott ⁸¹ and unofficially with SHAEF coal officials. We are now all agreed that such a body would serve useful purposes. It would provide means for inter-Allied consultation with respect to the needs for coal and coal mining machinery, thus facilitating the work of the Combined Coal Committees. Its work would also be useful to the United States, United Kingdom and French members of the Control Commission.

If there is no change in the Soviet position we therefore strongly favor proceeding to the establishment of an informal ad hoc inter-

Allied coal committee, following similar procedures to those recommended above in reference to EEC.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, April 20, 1945— 5 p. m. [Received April 20—4:15 p. m.]

- 4044. 1. Wormser, acting head of the French delegation on EEC and ECO has informed us and the Foreign Office, that his Government agrees to join a move to establish EEC even if the Soviet will not participate.⁸²
- 2. Following the arrangements described in Embassy's 3903, April 17, 7 p. m., Ronald will communicate with Borishenko tomorrow and if, as is expected, a negative reply or no reply has come from Moscow, the next step will be that Ronald and Penrose will separately and in terms similar in substance but not identical in form, express satisfaction to Borishenko that the Soviet do not rule out the possibility of joining an EEC, but will indicate that in view of the increasing urgency of emergency European economic problems requiring joint consultations, the United Kingdom and United States delegations are unable to accept an indefinite delay in the EEC discussions and are considering the next steps to take.
- 3. Next, it has been agreed between us and the United Kingdom and French delegations that an informal exploratory talk should be held on Wednesday April 25 with the Dutch, Belgians and Norwegians to discuss our general conception of EEC and agree on a procedure for establishing the committee. On Tuesday we shall meet Ronald and Wormser to agree on the way in which the subject will be approached with the other Allies at Wednesday's meeting.
- 4. The French viewpoint is that, within the week after next Wednesday's meeting, invitations should go out to all the European Allies and to the Soviet to attend a meeting to be held on May 25 to set up EEC. We think that at least 2 weeks should be allowed between the time when the invitations are issued and the date of the meeting but would prefer May 18 to May 25. We are discussing this point further with Wormser.

 $^{^{82}}$ In telegram 4119, April 21, 1945, 9 p. m., from London, it was reported that the French had also agreed "to join in setting up ECO without the Soviet if necessary". (840.50/4–2145)

- 5. The question arises whether the invitations to the meeting on May 25 or earlier should be sent out by United States, United Kingdom and France together or by the United Kingdom only as the government of the country in which the meeting is to take place. The French favor the latter course and the United Kingdom are willing to agree with it. We have no strong preference either way and unless the Department feels that the former course is preferable, we propose to accept the French desire.
 - 6. A separate message will follow shortly on ECO.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

Washington, April 24, 1945-7 p. m.

- 3219. 1. Department agrees with your views regarding EEC and ECO as set out in your 3903, April 12 [17]; 4044, April 20 and 4119, April 21.83
- 2. More specifically with regard to EEC, if informal talks with Dutch, Belgians and Norwegians indicate that they will go ahead, we agree that meeting for establishing the Committee should be called. In view of urgency of economic problems, we would favor a date prior to May 25. We are anxious to maintain full French participation at all stages and therefore would prefer having any invitations made jointly by U.S., U.K. and France. In discussion here Alphand said France would join in invitation. We agree that invitation should go to all European Allies except Poland at the present time and including the Soviets. Invitations might include suggestion of sending observer if full participation not acceptable.
- 3. Alphand indicated in conversation with Clayton here ⁸⁴ that France might propose at San Francisco that Social and Economic Council would be authorized to sponsor regional economic organizations and that EEC might develop into such an organization. We stressed to Alphand our conception of EEC as an emergency body. It would be desirable to stress this point in any conversations which you have. Even if Social and Economic Council were to play such a role there is doubt as to the place of the U.S. in a European regional economic group except during emergency period.

⁸⁴ Mr. Alphand had stopped over in Washington en route to the San Francisco Conference. His conversation of April 20 with Mr. Clayton is recorded in a memorandum of April 20, not printed (840.50/4-2445).

- 4. With regard to ECO, we agree that circulation of proposed Soviet amendments would be unfortunate and hope that French will not press this point. In view of the extreme seriousness of coal problem throughout the world, we would favor proceeding at earliest possible time with ECO even if EEC is delayed. As you know, Dr. Potter, Deputy Solid Fuels Administrator, is proceeding to London and presumably Paris shortly. He is fully familiar with U.S. and world coal situation and his presence at time of discussing ECO formally might be helpful.
 - 5. Substance of above message has been discussed with Hawkins.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, April 27, 1945—midnight. [Received April 28—5:15 a.m.]

- 4321. In a series of personal conversations which we had with Hall-Patch ⁸⁶ and Coulson, ⁸⁷ Wormser and Lamping ⁸⁸ in the last week the way was prepared for an informal meeting yesterday morning in the Foreign Office, attended by representatives from Belgium, Holland and Norway and by the French and United Kingdom delegations and Penrose and Berger.
- 1. The following procedure was provisionally agreed subject to confirmation from the Belgians, Dutch and Norwegians within 5 days.
- (a) One week from the day of the meeting the United Kingdom Government to issue an invitation to all the European Allies except Poland, together with the United States and USSR to attend meetings in London, the first on May 18 to establish ECO and the second on May 25 to establish EEC.

⁸⁵ The full text of the document for the establishment of ECO with proposed Soviet amendments was transmitted to the Department by telegram 3708, April 11, 1945, 9 p. m., from London (not printed). The major point in the Soviet amendments was the specific allocation of first priority to reparation coal over other coal demands. Telegram 4119, April 21, 1945, 9 p. m., from London reported that the French Government wished to have the Soviet amendments circulated to the other Allied Governments in advance of the ECO meeting; the London Embassy feeling this move would be a serious error because it would be equivalent to placing the amendments on the agenda and possibly deadlock the talks (840.50/4-2145).

⁸⁶ Edmund Leo Hall-Patch, British Assistant Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

⁸⁷ John Eltringham Coulson, Acting First Secretary in the British Foreign Office.

⁸⁸ M. Lamping, Netherlands representative to ECO meetings.

- (b) The documents on ECO and EEC agreed between the United States, United Kingdom and French delegations to be circulated as the basis on which the ECO will be set up. Proposed Soviet amendments on ECO will not be circulated.
- (c) Arrangements to be made for ECO and EEC to hold working meetings a day or two after the meetings at which they are established.
- 2. Regarding paragraph 2 of Department's 3219 April 24, it does not seem clear whether Alphand's views are precisely identical with Wormser's instructions. In addition difficulties arose over an instruction from the French Government that the proposed Soviet amendments should be circulated along with the coal document (Embassy's 4119, April 21 89). Wormser, who was in Paris when his instructions were drafted, said, in reply to Penrose's representations on the undesirability of such a procedure, that his instruction on the matter was the outcome of a difference of view within the French Government. One group was at first opposed to going ahead on EEC and ECO without the Soviet, but subsequently agreed to a compromise which made provision for the circulation of the Soviet amendments on coal and for fixing the meeting to set up EEC one month after the opening of the San Francisco Conference.
- 3. To get these instructions altered Wormser said the whole subject would have to be reopened within the French Government. Wormser felt that there would be some risk that the outcome of this might not be satisfactory. But he was ready to agree that if the United Kingdom offered at the meeting yesterday to send out the formal invitations as the government of the country in which the meetings were to be held he would not raise the point concerning the proposed Soviet amendments, since the French Government would in that case not be taking direct responsibility for the form in which the invitation was issued.
- 4. This remained the position just before yesterday's meeting began and Penrose agreed to the procedure outlined in paragraph 1 above for the following reasons:
- (a) It was essential to avoid reviving the sterile controversy on the proposed Soviet amendments at yesterday's meeting and also at the meeting planned for May 18.

(b) Wormser had agreed to make a statement at the meeting yesterday indicating the French Government's support of ECO and willingness to join it.

- (c) The joint action of United States, United Kingdom and France might be attained by a slightly different procedure in the next few
- 5. As regards (c) Penrose discussed the question of joint action again today with Wormser and Hall-Patch, and finding Wormser still unwilling to risk stirring up in Paris the question of the Soviet amendments, asked him whether he would suggest to his Government the following alternative procedure: the United Kingdom to issue the invitations through the heads of their missions to the governments concerned and the French and United States Governments to instruct their heads of missions in the same capitals at or about the same time to approach the governments to which they are accredited, to indicate that France and United States support the proposed meetings and will participate in the establishment and working of the organizations, and to express the hope that the governments in question share these views and intentions.

⁸⁹ See footnote 85, p. 1445.

- 6. Wormser agreed to recommend this procedure to his Government in a telegram tonight and Hall-Patch said he was sure it would be welcomed by the United Kingdom Government. We would appreciate hearing from the Department as soon as possible whether this procedure is acceptable.
- 7. Regarding paragraph 3, Department's 3219, April 24, Penrose spoke strongly in the same sense at the meeting yesterday and Hall-Patch expressed agreement. Wormser has already expressed the French agreement with our proposed addition to the terms of reference bearing on this point and it will be incorporated in the document which is to be circulated to the countries.
- 8. Regarding paragraph 4, Department's 3219, Berger spoke strongly in the same sense at yesterday's meeting. We are looking forward to Potter's arrival.
- 9. We have pressed for an earlier date than May 25 for the EEC meeting but the difficulties described above stand in the way. However, we have obtained agreement that the committees shall start work immediately after their formal establishment.

3654. For Hawkins. An aide-mémoire with the following text is being delivered to the Washington missions of all countries invited to EECE and ECO meetings in London: 92

"The Department of State has been advised that the British Government delivered to a representative of the (name of invited country) Government in London an invitation to attend a meeting in London on May 18, 1945 for the purpose of establishing a European Coal Organization and another meeting on May 25, 1945 for the purpose of establishing an Emergency Economic Committee for Europe. It is understood that these invitations were accompanied by memoranda which outlined the types of emergency economic problems which might be considered by these organizations and made suggestions as to their form and functions. Similar invitations were delivered to United States representatives in London.

"Representatives of the United States Government have discussed with representatives of the Governments of the United Kingdom, France and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, over the course of the past weeks, the desirability of creating organizations of the type mentioned in the British invitations. It is the view of the United States Government that a useful purpose could be served by such bodies if created promptly to consider the difficult and urgent economic problems which have arisen and will continue during the period immediately following the cessation of hostilities in Europe.

"Accordingly, the United States Government intends to accept the invitations and, if it is agreed to establish the bodies as suggested in the invitations, will participate in the formation and subsequent proceedings of the organizations. It is hoped that the (name of invited country) Government will give favorable consideration to the proposals made in the British invitations."

The Chargé of the Soviet Union (Novikov) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] May 17, 1945.

[Translation]

Sir: In connection with the aide-mémoire of the Department of State of May 8 36 I have the honor to communicate, on instructions of the Soviet Government, the following:

With the agreement of the governments of the U.S.S.R., Great Britain, the U.S.A. and France there was called in London a conference

Airgram to Athens, Ankara, and Belgrade, May 11, 1945, not printed.
 See telegram 3654, May 9, 6 p. m., to London, p. 1448.

of an exploratory character which was supposed to consider questions relating to the suitability of creating a European Economic Committee and a European Coal Organization.

Agreeing to the calling of this conference, the Soviet Government had in view that the reports prepared by the participants in the conference would be presented to the governments concerned for study, after which a conference would be called for the ratification of the statutes of these economic organs and of the basic regulations fixing the sphere of their competence and their practical operation.

With the purpose of creating favorable conditions for the work of the conference on the establishment of the organs named, the Soviet delegation at the London Conference took an active part in the preparation of a memorandum on the character of the future activity of the European Coal Organization. However, the series of important proposals of the Soviet delegation did not encounter support on the part of the other delegations. In particular, the proposal of the Soviet delegation in regard to the fixing of the limits of the functions of the European Coal Organization and the Allied Control Commission in Germany 97 in relation to the distribution of German coal was not accepted by the other delegations.

The Soviet Government considers that the distribution of German coal should be exclusively within the competence of the Allied Control Commission and, consequently, the European Coal Organization can devote itself to questions of the distribution of surpluses of German coal, in which connection the size of these surpluses should be determined by the Allied Control Commission,

In connection with the fact that differences on a series of questions arose at the London Conference, the Soviet Government proposed that these differences should be adjusted either at that same conference or through diplomatic channels. However, instead of such a singularly suitable procedure for resolving the differences, the government of Great Britain considered it practicable to call a conference for May 18 which should be a conference for founding (the organization).

The Soviet Government considers the calling of such a conference inopportune. The Soviet Government considers it essential for the governments, the representatives of which are participating in the London Conference, to consider in advance the memorandum prepared at the Conference in London, and also the amendments of the Soviet delegation, after which to come to agreement on the date of calling a governmental conference which would be empowered to adopt the statutes of the European Coal Organization, of For documentation on the participation of the United States in the Alffed Control Council for Germany, see vol. 111, pp. 820.ff.

The Soviet Government could not take part in the conference mentioned without consideration, in advance, of the questions referred to, in the manner proposed.

The Soviet Government considers it essential also to point out that in the event of the setting up at this conference of a European Coal Organization, its functions should be limited solely to recommendations concerning the production and distribution of coal located in the countries participating in this organization, inasmuch as German coal, being an element of reparations, should be distributed with the approval of the Allied Control Commission.

As regards the calling of a conference on May 25, 1945 for the establishment of a European Economic Committee the Soviet Government considers that it would be inappropriate to take a definite decision toward setting up a European Economic Commission in advance of a decision on the question of setting up an International Economic and Social Council and regional organizations at the conference at San Francisco.

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

London, May 19, 1945.
[Received May 20—2: 56 a. m.]

- 5058. 1. The European Coal Organization was established yesterday at a meeting attended by representatives of UK, US, France, Belgium, Netherlands, Norway, Luxembourg, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Greece, Denmark and Turkey. The representatives of all these countries expressed the willingness of their countries to join except those of Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia who said that they had no authority to participate and would have to report the results of the meeting to their Governments and await instructions. The representatives of Greece, Norway and Denmark said they were sure their Governments would participate but they had not yet received formal instructions. The Soviet had previously sent a note to the UK indicating that they did not propose to attend the meeting.
- 2. Ronald, who presided, said that the UK Government was convinced that transport and fuel problems were among the most urgent matters affecting Europe today. He recalled the steps already taken regarding UMA and the provisional ECITO and pointed out the close connection between coal problems and transport problems.
- 3. German coal and coal mining machinery, he said, naturally play a considerable role in European coal problems. This raised immediate difficulties, since the Allied Armies were not yet in position and the Allied Control machinery was not yet in its stride. Also an agreed reparations policy had not yet been reached. One of the chief problems facing them was how to coordinate or reconcile the provision of the wherewithal to live today with compensation for the wrongs of yesterday. This was a difficult problem but it was not for ECO to solve it. Its solution depended on decisions on fundamental policy matters. Pending these decisions, the precise functions of ECO could not be determined.

- 4. However, Ronald continued, ECO was concerned with the fact that in the meantime coal must move and the immediate job was to decide how much could be done in the common interest now without prejudice to future decisions on policy. Possibly, in addition, ECO might be able to facilitate the application of some of those decisions. Where so much was hypothetical, no detailed constitution or definition of functions could be written and ECO would have to evolve rules as it went along.
- 5. Hawkins expressed US agreement with the establishment of ECO and willingness to cooperate with and participate in it. Marjolin 98 referred to the complexity of the coal problem and said the French Government agreed that an international organization was needed and accepted representation on it. He touched briefly on the relations of the French to the combined Boards, but reserved the development of this point for a future working meeting of the organization. Varvaressos 99 said he was quite certain the Greek Government would collaborate fully. Inland transport conditions made it impossible for Greece to obtain central European supplies. The Norwegian representative, promising fullest cooperation, emphasized the "desperate" need of coal in Norway. Brief statements were then made by other representatives on lines indicated in paragraph 1 above.
- 6. The meeting to establish ECO was then concluded and immediately followed by a meeting, presided over by Eaton-Griffith, of the representatives on ECO of the countries which had agreed to join. An account of the meeting is being sent in a separate message.

- 5386. 1. EECE was established at a meeting this afternoon, the following countries notifying the adherence of their Governments: Greece, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, France, Belgium, Turkey, UK, USA. The Danish representative said that he had not yet received instructions but was confident that his Government would join.2 The Zecho representative had no instructions but will sit as observer until he receives them.
- 2. Richard Law, who presided, said that EECE would be of the greatest service to Europe. The problems with which it would deal were of extreme gravity and urgency. Physical destruction in Europe was far greater than in the last war. The whole future of Europe and the world depended on the restoration of the European economy. EECE was not intended as an executive or legislative body but as a body for pooling ideas and clarifying minds. It was designed not to supplant or replace but to supplement and coordinate where necessary other organizations. It might undertake two classes of work. First it would deal with broad policy questions that might be referred to it by governments and perhaps by ECO, EITO and other international bodies, and second with problems that no existing organization serves it should be flexible and should not lay down rigid rules beforehand.
- 3. Hawkins indicated the adherence of the US Government on the basis of the terms of reference in the memorandum May 3 4 and urged that the organization of the work should proceed rapidly because of the pressing nature of the problems involved. On his recommendation it was decided that a UK chairman and secretary should be appointed temporarily to expedite the initial work in London. Law accepted for UK but stressed the temporary nature of this arrangement.

of establishing an Emergency Economic Committee for Europe. A reply of May 15 from W. J. Gallman, Counsellor of the London Embassy, to Anthony Eden. British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, accepted the invitation on behalf of the United States Government.

- 4. Alphand expounded the points in the memorandum of May 3, and stressed the usefulness of EECE in facilitating the work of the combined boards. He and the British representative particularly emphasized the advisory nature of EECE. The Belgian representative referred to the need for consultative machinery to deal with such questions as the equitable distribution of exportable foods from Denmark.

[Questions relating to the adherence of other States, Allied, neutral or ex-enemy, to the newly formed bodies, constantly engaged the attention of the representatives during their deliberations in 1945 and into 1946, and were the occasion for frequent exchanges between the Embassy in London and the Department. For information regarding the accession or presence of other States, see Emergency Economic Committee for Europe, Report by the Secretary General, 1945/46, and European Coal Organisation, European Coal Organisation, 1945 to 1947, Brief Description and History.

Toward the end of 1945 a question arose regarding the informal status of ECO, brought on by the withdrawal of military personnel from the organization, the resultant need for organizing a paid civilian staff, and the financial problems that arose relating thereto. In November the ECO Council, including the American representation, unanimously adopted a proposal for recommendation to their respective Governments that participation in ECO be established under a formal agreement. The Department of State, after several exchanges with the Embassy in London, finally agreed to this arrangement, after securing in the financial article (Article VII) a provision that reserved the position of each member government in respect of the requirements of its constitutional procedure. INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION MATTERS ¹

[The Department of State announced in a press release of February 9, 1945, that the signature of the United States Delegates on the Interim Agreement on International Civil Aviation, the International Air Services Transit Agreement, and the International Air Transport Agreement signed at the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago on December 7, 1944, constituted "acceptances by the Government of the United States of America and obligations binding upon it." On February 8 the Department sent a circular telegram instructing its missions to notify the other Governments of this action; for text of the press release of February 9, incorporating text of the circular telegram, see Department of State Bulletin, February 11, 1945, page 198.

Letters were exchanged between the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson) and the Attorney General of the United States (Biddle) on January 13, and February 8, 1945, respectively, as to the question of whether the "Two Freedoms Agreement" and the "Five Freedoms Agreement" might "be made operative as executive agreements under existing legislative authority". These are found in the Department's central indexed files under 800.796/1–1345 and 800.796/2–845, respectively.

The Convention on International Civil Aviation was sent to President Roosevelt for transmission to the Senate in a covering letter from

It may be noted that the Chicago Conference formulated a Convention on International Civil Aviation, establishing an International Civil Aviation Organization and containing provisions relating to air navigation and international air transport, which was opened for signature on December 7, 1944 (Department of State, Treaties and Other International Acts Series No. 1591, or 61 Stat. The Conference also concluded an Interim Agreement on International Civil Aviation, establishing a Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization (Department of State Executive Agreement Series No. 469, or 59 Stat. Washington, April 16, 1945-3 p. m.

The Departments of this Government handling aviation matters are all much concerned over the fact that only six Governments, namely, the United States, Canada, Norway, Netherlands, Ethiopia and the Polish Government in exile, have accepted the Interim Agreement on International Civil Aviation (reference Department's circular telegram February 17, 1945³).

At the time that the establishment of a Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization was decided upon at Chicago it was confidently believed that the 26 states necessary to activate it would accept promptly and that the Interim Council of the Organization would meet in Montreal within a comparatively short time. The approaching end of the war in Europe makes it highly probable that the airlines of many nations will soon be in a position to resume or inaugurate commercial operations in that territory and other areas. It is of the utmost importance that the provisions of the Interim Agreement regulating air navigation, use of airports, and flight over territory of member states become effective throughout the world at the earliest possible date. It is also highly desirable that the Interim Council initiate its studies of the many problems which will arise in connection with these operations and formulate its recommendations as soon as possible. Furthermore, the action which the nations take or fail to take will have broad implications with respect to postwar international cooperation. It would be most helpful if the Provisional International Civil Organization could be accepted by a majority of the nations during the early days of the San Francisco Conference. We have received no indication that any governments represented at Chicago propose to abstain from the proposed Organization, and can only assume that their delay in acting is caused by failure to appreciate the importance of this matter.

Incidentally, the Canadian Government has informed us that there is an acute shortage of office space and private housing facilities in Montreal and that they are seriously handicapped in their planning

The Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton) to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

No. 531

Washington, April 16, 1945.

Sir: The Soviet Government, as you are aware, was invited to participate in the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago last Fall but did not send delegates. The Soviet Government was, therefore, not one of those which would ordinarily receive from this Government a certified copy of the Final Act. However, in planning for the establishment of an Interim Council of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, the Conference clearly indicated its hope that the Soviet Government would see fit to accept a seat on that Council. The provisional organization provides for a council of 21 members, and 20 members only were elected to seats, thus leaving the way open for the Soviet Government to be elected as the 21st state if that Government indicates its willingness to accept.

In order that the Soviet Government may be informed of the results of the International Aviation Conference, the Department is transmitting herewith a certified copy of the Final Act,⁴ which you may deliver to the appropriate official of the Soviet Government in such manner as you consider most appropriate, at the same time informing him of the seat reserved on the Interim Council.

For your information, this Government is very desirous of seeing the Soviet Government adhere to the Chicago documents in the manner which is prescribed in the documents and is particularly desirous of seeing the Soviet Government join the provisional international organization. The Department, however, leaves it to your discretion whether any expression of such hopes should be conveyed to the Soviet authorities at this time.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM L. CLAYTON

[In a statement released to the press on June 7 (Department of State Bulletin, June 10, 1945, page 1056) the Department announced the coming into force on June 6, 1945 of the Interim Agreement on International Civil Aviation, with the required acceptance by twenty-six states having been achieved and surpassed. The Department's statement said that the interim agreement provided, among other things

"for the establishment of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization (PICAO), which will consist of an assembly of all nations accepting the agreement, as well as a 21-member council elected by the assembly every 2 years. The PICAO will have advisory and technical functions but will not be empowered to regulate the economic phases of air transport. The Interim Council will formulate and recommend the adoption of technical standards and procedures and will study, report, and recommend on problems relating to air navigation and international air transport. The provisional organization will function for an interim period not to exceed 3 years from June 6, 1945. It is expected to be superseded within that time by the permanent International Civil Aviation Organization, which will be established after 26 countries have ratified or adhered to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, which was also concluded at the 1944 Chicago air conference."

The Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, June 12, 1945. [Received July 12.]

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the Department's confidential instruction of April 16 transmitting to the Embassy for delivery to the Soviet Government a certified copy of the final act of the International Civil Aviation Conference. In the Department's instruction the Embassy was advised that the United States Government was very desirous of seeing the Soviet Government adhere to the Chicago documents in the manner which was prescribed in the documents and was particularly desirous of seeing the Soviet Government join the Provisional International organization. The Department, however, left to the Embassy discretion whether any expression of such hopes should be conveyed to the Soviet authorities at this time.

The Embassy did not feel that it would be advisable to make any statement to the Soviet Government which would imply that our Government was greatly concerned that it should adhere to the Provisional International Organization. Statements of this sort have a tendency to cause the Russians to feel that they have got something somebody else wants and that they probably have not put a high enough price on it. This sometimes leads to steps on their part which are quite different from those we wish them to take. In transmitting the final act, the Embassy therefore limited itself to the statement that "the United States Government for its part would welcome participation of the Soviet Government in the Provisional International Organization". A copy of the Embassy's note of May 23 5 to the Foreign Office is enclosed for the records of the Department, as well as the brief acknowledgement thereto from the Foreign Office dated May 30 and its translation.⁵

In this connection reference is made to Mr. Stokeley Morgan's office memorandum ⁵ of May 16 to TRC ⁶—Mr. Taft, in which in addition to seeking the above information Mr. Morgan states that the Department "would also be interested in knowing the Ambassador's views as to whether or not the Soviet Government plans to participate in the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization and also what the possibilities are of receiving, under a bilateral agreement or otherwise, rights for an American air carrier to enter Russia on the proposed route from Helsinki to Leningrad and on to Moscow, with commercial rights at Leningrad and Moscow."

The Embassy has had no indication from the Soviet Government as to its plans to participate in the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization. However, the Soviet Government refused to participate in the Chicago Conference because certain states "hostile to it" (i.e. Spain, Portugal, Switzerland) had been invited to take part therein. The Embassy notes that these states are apparently participating members of the Provisional Organization. The participation of the Soviet Government in this organization would thus signify a lack of consistency on its part and would appear to be sufficient reason in the eyes of the Soviet Government for its refusal to join. In addition there would seem to be certain undertakings set forth in Article 13 of the Interim Agreement which, in the view of the Embassy, the Soviet Government might quite possibly object to assuming.

It may be pointed out that no substantive reply has been made to the Embassy's communication of May 23 by June 7, the date (six months after December 7, 1944) on which the Soviet Government, according to Article 16 of the Interim Agreement (Appendix I), must accept the interim agreement in order to become a member of the council of the Provisional Organization. The Department's instruction of April 16 does not make it clear whether this time limit also applies to the Soviet Union.

With respect to Mr. Morgan's inquiry regarding the possibility of receiving under a bilateral agreement, or otherwise, rights for an American air carrier to enter Russia on the proposed route from Helsinki to Leningrad and on to Moscow, the Embassy doubts that established American air carriers will be permitted to enter the Soviet Union on this or any other proposed route. The Soviet Government has made it sufficiently clear on a number of occasions that air transit over Soviet territory except in exceptional cases would be carried out only by Soviet aircraft. Furthermore, so long as Finland is under an armistice regime ⁹ it is not likely that the Soviet authorities will permit United States aircraft to proceed to Helsinki. More likely they will endeavor to connect up American or other lines in Stockholm or some point outside the Soviet Union or Soviet controlled areas.

Respectfully yours,

W. A. HARRIMAN

811.79600/7-545: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain American Diplomatic Officers 10

Washington, July 5, 1945.

Civil Aeronautics Board, with President's approval, today announced issuance of certificates to three US airlines to operate commercial services as described below.

Pan American Airways: one route from US via Newfoundland, Foynes, London, Brussels, Prague, Vienna, Budapest, Bucharest, Istanbul (with another route sector Vienna-Belgrade-Istanbul), Ankara, Beirut, Baghdad, Karachi (with another route sector Ankara-Tehran-Karachi) to Calcutta. Another route from US via Bermuda and Azores to Lisbon, with one sector proceeding to London and another to Barcelona and Marseille.

American Export Airlines: one route from US via Labrador, Greenland, Iceland, Norway, Stockholm, Helsinki and Leningrad to Moscow. Another route from US via Newfoundland, Foynes, London, Amsterdam, Berlin and Warsaw to Moscow. Also one connecting link from Iceland to London via Glasgow, and another from Amsterdam to Stockholm via Copenhagen.

of this telegram was sent to 26 diplomatic missions in Washington.

For documentation regarding U.S. interest in the Armistice with Finland of September 19, 1944, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. III, pp. 608 ff.
 Sent to 20 American missions; a press release of July 5, 1945, on the subject Transcontinental & Western Air: one route from US via Newfoundland, Foynes, Paris, Switzerland, Rome, Athens, Cairo, Palestine, Basra, Dhahran to Bombay. Another route from US via Newfoundland, Lisbon, Madrid, Algiers, Tunis, Tripoli, Benghasi to Cairo. Also a connecting link from Madrid to Rome.

Above route patterns are tentative and flexible in the sense that certificates cover countries and general areas, and airlines above authorized may serve other points in their areas after further approval from Board.

In announcing these route decisions the CAB recognizes that establishment these services is dependent on granting of appropriate permission by countries concerned. Inauguration of services also must await availability of four-motored aircraft for commercial operation.

Instructions follow.

The Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (Pogue) to the Secretary of State

Washington, July 16, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: As you are aware, we have been convinced for some time that the ability of United States air carriers to conduct an economically sound air service in the foreign field is conditional upon their ability to carry traffic not only between the United States and foreign points but also the so-called "Fifth Freedom" traffic between foreign points located on our long international routes. We have felt that it is of the utmost importance that every effort be made to obtain this right from as many foreign nations as will grant it. Without these rights we doubt that our foreign operations will attain a development commensurate with our position as a leading world power; and without these rights, whatever size our foreign operations may attain, we fear that it will be necessary to support them with subsidies of such size as to constitute a heavy drain on the Federal treasury.

In the period which followed the Chicago Conference we were hopeful that other nations would find it in their interest to adopt our position at that Conference and to accept the International Air Transport Agreement under which the signatories exchanged operating rights without withholding the right to carry "Fifth Freedom" traffic. As you are aware, however, only six of the fifty-four nations present at the Chicago Conference have unconditionally accepted this Agreement and of these only China and the United States can be classed as nations of first importance. It has become evident, therefore, that we will probably not obtain the right to engage in "Fifth Freedom" traffic on other than a very limited basis under the authority of this Agreement.

The possibility that the International Air Transport Agreement would not gain general acceptance was recognized by the Department and the Board at the time of the Chicago Conference and as a result bilateral agreements providing "Fifth Freedom" rights over specified routes on a reciprocal basis have been offered to many countries, with the hope that each such country would exchange with the United States rights which it felt inadvisable to exchange with the world at large. As the negotiations for these agreements proceed, however, it is becoming increasingly evident that we are by no means sure of being able to make the agreements necessary to the inauguration of this country's international route pattern. We had been hopeful that the economic benefits which an American air service would bring and the right to conduct a reciprocal air service to the United States would be sufficient consideration for the grant of air rights to the United States. Although these benefits are undoubtedly attractive, their attractiveness is apparently not persuasive enough to overcome the reasons which many of these countries have against the carriage by United States airlines of traffic to and from their territories. It should be noted also that a strong factor in the expressed reluctance of those countries which are under British influence—particularly the Near Eastern countries—has been the active effort of the British not only to keep these countries from granting "Fifth Freedom" rights to the United States, but also to delay the granting of any operating rights until British airlines are in a stronger competitive position.

It therefore appears appropriate and necessary to see if there are any other legitimate means at our disposal which we can use to secure the necessary operating rights. In the case of France, which for some months has been reluctant to sign our proposed bilateral agreement, but which at the same time has repeatedly indicated a desire for transport aircraft, the Department has suggested to the Board, and the Board has agreed, to take such joint action as is necessary to make available to the French certain C-54 aircraft on the condition that the French accept the terms of our proposed agreement. We have welcomed this proposal in that it has seemed to us that there should be a close relationship between the satisfaction of French desires and needs, on the one hand, and on the other, the grant by the French of operating rights, including "Fifth Freedom" rights, in favor of our airlines. If the allocation of C-54's to the French can be effectuated, we are very hopeful that it will result in the consummation of the agreement. The Department has also proposed to the Board, and the Board has been happy for the same reason to agree, that certain other C-54's be made available to the Dutch upon the condition that the Dutch withdraw their reservation to the "Fifth Freedom" provision in the International Air Transport Agreement.

If the Department and the Board are correct in believing that this type of approach will prove persuasive with the French and the Dutch, it is obvious that it can also be used to great advantage with certain other countries which have also expressed a reluctance to grant "Fifth Freedom" privileges in a bilateral agreement. We refer to such countries as Portugal, Belgium, Egypt, Iraq, Iran, Lebanon and Turkey, with which negotiations over bilateral agreements have been in progress for some time. Although these countries may not desire aircraft to the same degree as do the French and the Dutch, we assume that they may be seeking something else from the United States which at this time only the United States can furnish and for which their need is as great as is the need of the French and the Dutch for aircraft. If the French agreement can be concluded by making available to the French a few C-54's, it seems to us that it is equally probable that our agreements with the other countries referred to can be concluded if the satisfaction of some of their needs is also made conditional upon the signing of an agreement.

In like manner, we suggest that if Great Britain should continue over our protest to assert her influence to block our attempts to conclude bilateral agreements, the Department could, to equal advantage, make the satisfaction of certain British needs conditional upon her agreement to cease interfering with our attempts to secure these agreements.

In this connection we wish to make it clear that we are, of course, not suggesting that supplies or services which are furnished those countries for purely relief purposes or for the purpose of prosecuting the war against Japan be withheld for the purpose of concluding the air transport agreements. We do recommend, however, that the filling of the other requirements of the countries referred to be closely related to the conclusion of the bilateral air transport agreements.

We are hopeful that the Department will be able to employ this type of approach on a wide scale so that if it becomes necessary to accept less than "Fifth Freedom" rights in any country, the Agreement will have been concluded only after whatever proper bargaining power we may have with respect to that country has been fully employed.

Sincerely yours,

L. Welch Pogue

800.796/7-1645

The Acting Secretary of State to the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (Pogue)

Washington, August 1, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Poque: This refers to your letter of July 16, 1945 on the subject of negotiations with certain countries for bilateral air transport agreements, and your suggestion that the Department endeavor to conclude such arrangements with unlimited provisions for so-called Fifth-Freedom rights, by utilizing the other requirements of these countries as bargaining power.

The Department fully appreciates your concern with this subject and wishes to assure you that a number of bargaining elements not directly connected with civil aviation were used in the negotiation of bilateral agreements already concluded, and are being used with respect to those now under negotiation. At the same time, the complex nature of this Government's foreign relations makes it difficult and often impossible to relate a quid pro quo to each request which the Department makes of a foreign government. Admittedly the cases of Great Britain and France are special problems, and the Board already is aware of some of the steps which are being taken in an effort to work out satisfactory arrangements. However, in the case of most of the other countries with which air transport negotiations are now pending, our so-called bargaining power is not of a nature which would permit this Government to exert economic pressure in order to achieve all of its desires. As a matter of fact, the aggregate weight of this Government's requests with respect to many nations often exceeds the economic assistance which this Government is prepared to make available.

In addition to civil air transport arrangements, the Department must consider a wide range of other matters. The reduction of barriers to international trade; the protection of American interests abroad; more liberal treatment for American exporters by foreign exchange control authorities; the wider dissemination of information; the acquisition of rights for the Air Transport Command and other military agencies; and other objectives of importance are among the many subjects which the Department and its representatives abroad are constantly discussing with foreign governments. By specifically relating each of these requests to other matters this Government would obtain some of its objectives, but it is not unlikely that its bargaining power would be depleted so that other objectives would be unobtain-Such an approach also would embark this Government on a policy of narrow trading which might well lead to preferential treatment for certain countries and discrimination against others, which would be the very opposite of the policy which the United States has endeavored to foster in the broad field of international commerce.

In a separate reply the Department has commented on the suggestion made in the Board's letter of July 18, 1945, to the effect that the proposed financial assistance from the Export-Import Bank in connection with the sale of airport equipment to Turkey be made contingent on acquisition of the unlimited air transport rights which this Government hopes to obtain from that country. The Department will be glad to consider the advisability of relating financial assistance to air transport objectives when it is feasible to do so. However, the views expressed in the Department's letter on the Turkish airport matter are likewise applicable to the Board's recommendation in its July 16 letter that "the filling of the other requirements of the countries referred to be closely related to the conclusion of the bilateral air transport agreements". It is true that many countries have substantial requirements in the United States, but it is equally true that American exporters are able and anxious to supply these requirements. The Board would probably agree that even a threat of withholding such exports would prejudice this country's future foreign markets, and would be indefensible from the standpoint of overall national policy and public opinion.

The Board's letter also mentions the proposal for allocating C-54 aircraft to the French on condition that France accept the terms of our proposed agreement. The Department does not deny that allocation of transport aircraft is an excellent bargaining point in helping to conclude such negotiations, and certainly it would not favor making any of these larger planes available to countries denying reasonable operating rights for United States trans-Atlantic services. The proposed assignment of C-54's to France would, of course, be indirectly related to the air transport negotiations, but while the final objective is perhaps the same, the Department prefers to see any such allocation made as a fulfillment of commitments stated by this Government at the Chicago Aviation Conference, rather as an added inducement or quid pro quo for concluding the agreement itself. The latter approach might easily be taken advantage of by other countries to the extent of demanding special favors in any negotiations proposed by this Government, the results of which would soon prove the undesirability of "relating" such matters too closely.

The Board mentions the British efforts "to delay granting any operating rights" to United States air services. The Department is not seriously perturbed over the possibility that the British can or will block this Government's acquisition of landing rights entirely. It is more a problem of obtaining these rights on an unlimited basis. The Board has indicated that it desires full Fifth-Freedom rights in each of the countries with which the Department is now negotiating on this subject. The Department is equally concerned over the reluctance of many countries to grant liberal operating privileges to United States airlines, but it believes the Board will agree that some of these countries are motivated by a sincere desire to protect their own regional traffic. As the Board is undoubtedly aware, the pre-war aviation picture in Europe was characterized by pooling arrangements, balanced schedules, and other limitations on traffic and frequencies which, in the aggregate, represented somewhat less than the Fifth-Freedom concept which this Government is endeavoring to realize. It also must be remembered that the Five-Freedoms Agreement concluded at the Chicago Aviation Conference allows any participating country to "reserve out" of the Fifth-Freedom entirely.

Despite these and other considerations, and the fact that it is often impracticable or inadvisable for the Department to utilize its bargaining power for the primary purpose of obtaining unrestricted concessions in the air transport field, it is believed that substantial progress is being made. Since December 1944, bilateral agreements with full Fifth-Freedom rights have been concluded with Spain, Sweden, Denmark, Iceland and Ireland; 12 and interim rights have been obtained from Italy. Pending negotiations indicate that several more countries may conclude bilateral arrangements with this Government on the same unlimited basis, and there have been further indications that additional countries might adopt an increasingly liberal view toward the Fifth Freedom. While some of the remaining countries may not see their way clear to granting completely unrestricted Fifth-Freedom rights by the time United States airlines are ready to operate abroad, there is reason to believe that the pressure of public opinion and other factors, coupled with the continuing efforts of this Government, will force a steady trend in this direction.

I wish to reassure the Board that the Department and its representatives abroad are fully aware of the importance of concluding the air transport arrangements on as liberal a basis as possible, and that the Department is utilizing as much bargaining power as is feasible under the circumstances. Needless to say, the Department will be glad to continue its close collaboration with the Board in an effort to achieve our common objectives.

Sincerely yours,

Joseph C. Grew

The Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (Pogue) to the Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy (Taft)

Washington, August 6, 1945.

MY DEAR MR. TAFT: As we suggested at our recent luncheon meeting, we feel that it is now advisable to reexamine this Government's position with respect to the International Air Transport Agreement adopted for signature at Chicago.

 $^{^{12}}$ For texts of agreements, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series Nos. 432, 431, 430, 463, and 460, respectively.

To date, as we are informed, only nine nations have accepted the Air Transport Agreement and of these only the United States, China, the Netherlands and Turkey can be classed as nations of first importance in international air transportation. There can, of course, be no assurance that additional nations will accept the agreement. In the meantime you have, of course, been endeavoring to secure bilateral agreements with those other countries where we desire air transport rights. At this moment it seems evident that we should rely for the immediate future upon bilateral agreements and not upon the Transport Agreement. We believe that this is your view as it is ours.

It appears that the Transport Agreement is ambiguous in certain important respects. This is particularly true with reference to the question of whether more than one route is available to the airlines of one signatory for operation to the territory of another. Furthermore, the Transport Agreement contains an "ownership" provision (Article 1, Section 5) which may be too liberal for the taste of some nations. There are other provisions of the Transport Agreement which are not wholly satisfactory. All of these defects taken together, coupled with the very limited acceptance of the agreement to date, have caused us to come to the conclusion that in general this Government should adopt the position that our foreign operating rights should be secured under bilateral agreements. Under such agreements various matters which are ambiguous in the Transport Agreement can be made perfectly clear.

If the Department agrees with this position, it will logically follow that, in addition to bilateral agreements being negotiated with countries which have not signed the Transport Agreement, we should attempt to secure bilateral agreements with those countries which have not accepted, even though they signed the Transport Agreement in all cases where we want air transport rights therein. We hope that the Department will agree with us that this course of action should be followed.

With respect to the countries which have accepted the International Air Transport Agreement we are somewhat concerned over the possibility of misunderstanding which might occur in connection with the question of whether it authorizes the operation of more than one route out from and back to the homeland of each signatory. For example, if the Netherlands should construe this provision of the agreement liberally and should apply under Section 402 of the Civil Aeronautics Act for a permit to operate two direct routes from the Netherlands to this country, much ill will might result if this Government, without having given prior notice, took the position that the agreement authorizes only one such route. One way to minimize the possibility of such a misunderstanding would be to announce to the world at large at this time what this Government's construction of the agreement may be. Another alternative is the resolution of all problems in the International Air Transport Agreement through the present negotiation of a standard form bilateral agreement with the Dutch which would supersede the multilateral agreement as between the Dutch and ourselves and specifically define the terms of our air transport relationship. We believe this course to be the desirable one in the case of each country which has accepted the Transport Agreement. We suggest that it will be advisable to negotiate such a bilateral agreement with the Netherlands and also with El Salvador at the present time and at a later date with China and the other signatories of the International Air Transport Agreement if it should seem likely that these other nations will wish to designate airlines to operate into the United States.

We will appreciate it if the Department will furnish us with its views on the above matters. If the Department should agree with our conclusions we will immediately prepare the necessary annexes to be attached to the standard form bilateral agreement for negotiation with the governments of the countries referred to.

Sincerely yours,

L. Welch Pogue

800.796/8-645

The Secretary of State to the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (Pogue)

Washington, August 18, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Pogue: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of August 6, addressed to Mr. Taft, concerning the International Air Transport Agreement adopted at Chicago.

I am inclined to believe that the intent of the Air Transport Agreement is clear, namely that the freedoms granted under Article 1, Paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of Section I apply to only one route between any two contracting nations. The language in this respect seems to the Department to be conclusive in that it "relates only to through services on a route constituting a reasonably direct line out from and back to the homeland of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses". In the Department's concept, therefore, under the Air Transport Agreement the Netherlands would be authorized to operate one route connecting the Netherlands with the United States on a reasonably direct course. It would not obligate this Government to permit, for example, of a line from Amsterdam south to Africa, west to Brazil and north to Miami.

Furthermore, our concept of the term "homeland" would not include the Netherlands East Indies or Curação. Even if the Netherland authorities should claim at a later date that these territories are under autonomous governments and therefore entitled to enjoy rights under international agreements equally with the mother country, we would, it is believed, be justified in maintaining that they are not autonomous to the extent of being able to enjoy the privileges granted in the Air Transport Agreement unless they themselves became members of the International Civil Aviation Organization and accepted the Air Transport Agreement in the same way that the British Dominions and India are entitled to do so.

There is, of course, no objection to signing a bilateral agreement with a country which has also accepted the Air Transport Agreement. However, the Department does not believe that it is necessary to do so unless there is some advantage to be derived. In the case of the Netherlands it appears to me that if this Government suggests entering into negotiations for a bilateral agreement we shall immediately raise the question of the desire of the Netherland Government to operate services to the United States from the Netherlands East Indies and from Curaçao. If the Board is willing to see those rights accorded in a bilateral agreement, it would probably be desirable to proceed with these negotiations in the near future; but if the Board is not prepared to accord these rights, or either of them, to the Netherlands, then in the Department's opinion it would be preferable not to open the question until compelled to do so.

With respect to the possibility of negotiating bilateral agreements with El Salvador, China and other countries which have accepted the Air Transport Agreement the same reasoning applies. If the Board is prepared to grant the rights which it has reason to believe will be requested by these countries, negotiations might very well be entered into; otherwise, it is believed to be preferable not to raise these questions.

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:

European countries, as well as the Department's program for further negotiations in this field. The following is a summary of arrangements now effective as well as the status or prospects of other negotiations.

Significance of the Chicago Agreements.

Before discussing the civil aviation rights which this Government has obtained or desires to obtain from the various European countries, it may be helpful to give as background a brief description of the various agreements drawn up at the International Civil Aviation Conference which took place in Chicago during the latter part of 1944. are transmitted herewith one copy each of Department of State publication 2348 entitled Blueprint For World Civil Aviation, and Department of State Bulletin of December 31, 1944, both of which contain articles describing the work of the conference and the specific agree-The so-called Two Freedoms Agreement was intended to grant among the participating countries the rights of transit and non-traffic stop, while the so-called Five Freedoms Agreement grants these first two freedoms as well as the right to carry traffic from and to a country whose nationality the aircraft possesses (the Third and Fourth Freedoms), and the right to carry traffic between intermediate countries on the route (the Fifth Freedom). Also forwarded herewith is a mimeographed chart showing which countries have accepted these multilateral Transit (Two Freedoms) and Transport (Five Freedoms) Agreements, as well as the Interim Agreement and Convention.

While a number of countries have signed the Transit and Transport Agreements, it will be noted that not so many have accepted them. Netherlands is the only European country which has so far accepted the Transport Agreement; it made a reservation on the Fifth Freedom, but it is understood that this reservation will be removed shortly. As for the Transit Agreement, Czechoslovakia, Netherlands, Norway, Poland (former government) and the United Kingdom are those European countries which have so far agreed to give the Two Freedom rights to the other countries also accepting this agreement. It will be seen that these agreements are helpful, so far as they go, in getting American civil air routes in operation, but owing to the fact that more countries have not yet accepted them, such rights must be supplemented by other arrangements in the form of bilateral air transport agreements with the countries concerned.

Civil Aeronautics Board's Route Pattern.

On July 5, 1945, with the approval of President Truman, the Civil Aeronautics Board announced its so-called North Atlantic Route Case

Decision ¹⁶ which awarded operating certificates to three United States airlines for routes across the North Atlantic into Europe and the Near and Middle East. Attached hereto is a copy of the Board's press release of that date, ¹⁷ together with a map ¹⁸ showing the routes awarded to each of the three American companies. Naturally, the inauguration of these services is dependent on the acquisition of appropriate landing rights in the countries concerned, as well as the availability of suitable aircraft. It will be noted from this map that each carrier is assigned a certain area; that is, the carrier is at liberty to revise its routes in its respective area subject to the approval of the Board and the foreign governments or other authorities concerned. For example, one route shows Pan American Airways operating from Brussels to Praha, but if the company desired to include Munich, for example, it could do so subject to the aforementioned conditions and without the necessity of a public hearing before the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Bilateral Agreements Already Negotiated.

Bilateral air transport agreements were concluded between the United States and the following countries on the dates indicated: Spain, December 2, 1944; Sweden, December 16, 1944; Denmark, December 16, 1944; Iceland, January 27, 1945; Ireland, February 3, 1945; Switzerland, August 3, 1945. With the exception of the agreement with Spain, all of these agreements follow the so-called standard form drawn up at the Chicago Conference. The agreement with Spain was concluded a few days before the close of the Chicago Conference, and although the language is somewhat different from those later negotiated with the other countries mentioned, its provisions have substantially the same effect. All of these bilateral agreements (a copy of each is forwarded herewith) provide for the Five Freedoms, which means that there is no restriction in the agreements prohibiting or curtailing the carriage of traffic to other countries on the route.

The above-mentioned route announcement made by the Civil Aeronautics Board will necessitate a few changes in the route annexes of the agreements with Spain and Sweden, but it is believed that these modifications can be made without difficulty, under the terms of the agreements. The agreement with Denmark was negotiated by the Danish Minister in Washington and therefore it became effective on a provisional basis and is subject to confirmation "by a free Danish Government when such Government shall have been established following the liberation of Denmark". The Department has instructed its Mission at Copenhagen to request the present Danish Government to confirm the agreement on a definitive basis.

Countries With Which Further Arrangements Should Be Made.

As will be noted below, draft bilateral air transport agreements are in the progress of negotiation with a number of other European coun-The draft agreements in each case are virtually identical with those already concluded with the countries mentioned above. An exception, of course, is the route annexes which naturally vary with each country. The agreements and the accompanying route annexes are intended to provide full Fifth Freedom privileges for United States airlines, and any counter proposals to include limitations on Fifth Freedom traffic so far have been resisted by the Department. However, a number of countries are reluctant to grant the full Five Freedoms, and a question now under consideration by the Department and the Civil Aeronautics Board is whether this Government should agree to certain restrictions on Fifth Freedom or intermediate traffic as a means of getting United States airlines into operation, or should hold out in an effort to conclude them on the same basis as the aforementioned agreements already negotiated. In following this latter approach, the Department has endeavored to convince the foreign governments that it would be preferable not to incorporate arbitrary restrictions in the agreements at the beginning, and that should regional air services be unduly prejudiced by competition from the United States international trunk line service, such problems could be equitably adjusted as they arise.

The remaining countries in Europe, where satisfactory rights have not yet been obtained in order to realize the Civil Aeronautics Board's announcement of July 5, 1945, are discussed below in alphabetical order.

Austria. The Department plans at an early date to instruct its representative in Vienna ²¹ to explore the possibility of obtaining the appropriate rights for operation of the proposed United States commercial air service through Austria.

Belgium. A draft bilateral agreement was presented in March 1945 to the Belgian Government.²² In the preliminary discussions the Belgians indicated a desire to make reservations on Fifth Freedom traffic, but it subsequently appeared that our representatives were successful in persuading them to leave the matter in abeyance and to negotiate future difficulties as they arose. The Belgians were also concerned over what they regarded as a lack of reciprocity in exchange for this Government's request for traffic rights at Leopoldville. The Embassy was then instructed to ignore traffic rights at Leopoldville in the present negotiations, with the thought that these could be negotiated later. In July it appeared that a substantial agreement had been reached on the technical level, but subsequent telegrams from Brussels indicate that the Belgians are now fearful of offending the British, who have made known their objection to unlimited Fifth Freedom privileges. This has created political implications with the result that the matter is being referred to the Belgian Council of Ministers, which already has a rather full agenda of pending matters.

Bulgaria. No commercial stop in Bulgaria by an American airline is contemplated by the Civil Aeronautics Board's route announcement, although Pan American's route into Istanbul transits Bulgaria on the route sectors from both Belgrade and Bucharest. The following is an excerpt from despatch no. 35, June 9, 1945 from the United States Mission at Sophia: 23

"The movements of all aircraft in Bulgaria are now under the strict control of the Allied (Soviet) High Command, and civil and private aviation will have little opportunity of development until the conclusion of a peace treaty and the normalization of Bulgaria's internal and external affairs."

Czechoslovakia. Following the Civil Aeronautics Board's route announcement, a draft agreement was sent to the Embassy at Praha for consideration of the Czech Government.24 No reaction has vet been received.²⁵ The Czechs at one time seemed inclined to accept the Five Freedoms Agreement, and have already accepted the Two Freedoms Agreement.

Finland. It is contemplated that negotiations for the acquisition of landing rights in Finland will be started after the resumption of diplomatic relations between our two governments.26 However, despatch no. 1805 of June 12, 1945 from Moscow makes the following comment: "Furthermore, so long as Finland is under an armistice regime it is not likely that the Soviet authorities will permit United Negotiations on the agreement continued throughout the remainder of 1945, and the agreement was signed at Praha on January 3, 1946. States aircraft to proceed to Helsinki. More likely they will endeavor to connect up American or other lines in Stockholm or some point outside the Soviet Union or Soviet controlled areas."

France. A bilateral air transport agreement (Executive Agreement series 153) between the United States and France became effective on August 15, 1939. Pan American Airways operated a few schedules into Marseille before the war. This agreement provides for an equal number of frequencies, not less than two round trips a week, to be operated by air services of each country. Since the 1939 arrangement is believed to be inadequate for post-war conditions, a draft bilateral agreement following the Chicago standard form was presented to the French Government in March 1945. Since then the French have displayed no eagerness whatever to accept the new bilateral agreement, and very little progress has been made in the actual negotiations. The French officials seem reluctant to enter into any such commitment until they can be assured of operating reciprocal services. In this connection they not only expressed a desire to obtain the latest types of modern four-engine aircraft, but have also suggested pooling arrangements between carriers, which this Government does not favor. The U.S. War Department is assigning 20 DC-4 aircraft to the three American airlines certificated for North Atlantic services, and the Department and the Civil Aeronautics Board made strong efforts to have some of these aircraft assigned to France and a few other European countries on the grounds that this would facilitate the acquisition of landing rights in those countries. However, the War Department has insisted that the 20 DC-4's are to be used almost exclusively for redeployment and cannot be assigned to foreign carriers, so the Department is now exploring the possibility that American manufacturers can offer new four-motored aircraft to foreign airlines during the first part of 1946. If the Department is successful in arranging for French air services to buy suitable transoceanic aircraft in the near future this might help to expedite the conclusion of the bilateral air transport agreement, although the present political atmosphere in France still makes the early conclusion of this agreement uncertain.28

Great Britain. Pre-war arrangements with Great Britain provide for two trans-Atlantic round trips a week to be operated each by Pan American Airways and Imperial Airways (now BOAC). Negotiations with Great Britain for an up-to-date bilateral agreement have not been started. At the Chicago Conference the British Delegation was obviously opposed to the multilateral grant of unlimited Fifth Freedom privileges, and so far the different aviation viewpoints of this country and Great Britain have not been wholly reconciled.

When it became obvious that the British were blocking the efforts of this Government to obtain landing rights in the Near East and other countries, the Department addressed a note to the British Government 29 referring to previous undertakings between our two countries on civil aviation matters, and stating that the United States would welcome assurances that the British Government would not oppose present efforts to acquire landing rights for United States commercial air services in the Near and Middle East. Under date of April 26, 1945, the British Foreign Office made a preliminary reply 30 to the effect that its Government had no desire whatever to preclude the United States from obtaining landing rights in the Near and Middle East or anywhere else. However, as had occurred in a number of instances, when other governments asked for British views on United States proposals, the British naturally replied by stating the principles upheld by them at the Chicago Conference, which include the grant of Fifth Freedom privileges on a conditional rather than an unconditional basis. In its aforementioned note, the Foreign Office said that a further reply was intended. This was received under date of June 21, 1945,31 and said: "His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have no intention of opposing the United States Government or any other government in the acquisition of landing rights for civil aircraft in any country. In negotiating with governments for civil aviation landing rights, His Majesty's Government are bound by the agreements reached at Chicago and would of course follow the practice there contemplated and they assume that the United States Government would propose to follow the same procedure". At the time the latter note was delivered to the Department. it was made clear informally that this Government was not satisfied with the British reply, and that the Department had received a number of reports substantiating the obstructionist tactics of the British, including Lord Swinton (former Minister of Civil Aviation). British now contend that their reference to "landing rights" did not comprehend unlimited Fifth Freedom privileges.

Reports attributed to the British Air Ministry representative in the Middle East indicate that the British have been working on some sort of formula for the allotment of Fifth Freedom traffic in Europe, and that their proposals may be made public at the forthcoming meeting of the Interim Council of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization scheduled to convene in Montreal on August 15, 1945. An informal letter from Sir William Hildred, Director of Civil Aviation in Great Britain, to Mr. Edward Warner, Vice Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, made some suggestions as to reconciling the British and American differences as evidenced at the Chicago Conference, but his letter indicates that the British have made little, if any, change in their past position.

It is perhaps too early to predict the results of the British elections 32 on future British civil aviation policy, particularly regarding the prospects for concluding a satisfactory Anglo-American bilateral air transport agreement at an early date. The Labor Party has not only favored nationalization of transport, but has previously expressed a strong desire for international control of aviation. It is possible that during Assistant Secretary Clayton's visit to London,³³ he may have an opportunity to discuss this matter with British officials and that definite negotiations may be commenced within the near future.

Germany. Series 31 of the State, War and Navy Coordinating Committee, with which you are presumably familiar, has dealt with the problem of European air transport in the transitional period, with particular reference to Germany. The primary emphasis of these draft directives has been placed on military air transport, although SWNCC 31/2/D 34 provides that civil airlines should resume and expand their services as soon as conditions permit. It is hoped that arrangements can be made within the very near future to permit those American airlines certificated by the Civil Aeronautics Board to inaugurate the regular commercial services into and through Germany on the routes indicated. It is also hoped that such permission will be granted on a liberal basis, that is, that no restrictions will be imposed on so-called Fifth Freedom traffic. Furthermore, although Berlin is the only port-of-call in Germany on the CAB route pattern, it should be possible for the American air service in this area to include other ports-of-call if deemed appropriate.

Greece. In April 1945 the Embassy at Athens presented a draft air transport agreement to the Greek Government.³⁵ Shortly afterward the Greek authorities advised that they were prepared to grant the Third and Fourth Freedoms, but before giving a final decision on the Fifth Freedom, they desired to obtain the views of other European Governments whose territory would be crossed on the U.S. route serving Greece. The British Government had requested the Greeks to delay their reply to the Department's proposal, and reports indicate that the British are influencing the Greeks against granting Fifth Freedom privileges. Upon the announcement of the Civil Aeronautics Board's route decision, the Embassy at Athens was instructed ³⁶ to inform the Greek Government of the route pattern. The Embassy was also informed of the aforementioned British note of June 21, 1945 37 regarding this Government's efforts to obtain landing rights, and it was suggested that this might be helpful in expediting negotiations. No further information from Athens has been forthcoming.

Hungary. No specific approach has as yet been made by the Department to obtain landing rights in Hungary for U.S. commercial air services although Budapest is a port-of-call on the proposed American route through Central Europe.38

Italy. Aviation landing rights in Italy are somewhat complicated by the overall policy toward that country.³⁹ Some months ago, the Embassy at Rome was asked to sound out the Italian authorities regarding landing rights,40 at which time the Italians raised the question of the reestablishment of Italian civil aviation and reciprocal landing rights.41 Upon the announcement of the Civil Aeronautics Board's route decision, the Embassy at Rome was instructed 42 to request temporary rights and to inform the Italian Government that the matter of more definite rights and the collateral question of reciprocity should be postponed until the negotiation of the peace treaty. The Italian Government's reply was dated July 24, 1945 43 and stated that the Italian Government would be glad to accede to the request for these temporary rights (transit and non-traffic stop in Italian territory and commercial entry at Rome), until such time as it is possible to negotiate a "formal convention". In the same note, the Italian Government expressed the hope that its own internal air services could connect with the proposed American services.

Netherlands. While Netherlands made a reservation on the Fifth Freedom in accepting the Five Freedoms Agreement, it is understood that this reservation will soon be withdrawn, thereby affording American air services unlimited privileges to pickup and discharge traffic at Amsterdam. Although it is not essential, it is possible that this Government also will propose a bilateral air transport agreement with the Netherlands.

Norway. A preliminary draft bilateral agreement was discussed with the Norwegian Delegation at the Chicago Conference but it is doubtful if much progress was made while the Norwegian Government was located in London. After the Civil Aeronautics Board's route decision was announced on July 5, a new draft bilateral agreement was forwarded to the Embassy at Oslo for discussions with the Norwegian Government.⁴⁴

Poland. As soon as circumstances permit, the Embassy at Warsaw will be asked to present a bilateral air transport agreement to the Polish Government for consideration.

The Portuguese have raised several objections to the Portugal. draft bilateral agreement presented by the Embassy about March, 1945. One of the points in question is whether U.S. airlines can use Santa Maria Airport in the Azores which was constructed by United States funds, and another question concerns the Portuguese desire to prohibit over-flying Lisbon by American civil aircraft when there is no traffic to be discharged or embarked at that point. The Embassy is endeavoring to persuade the Portuguese to leave these two matters for further negotiation rather than hold up the conclusion of the agreement. The Portuguese also requested a provision in the agreement whereby a "reasonable division" of trans-Atlantic traffic would be made between American and Portuguese airlines in the event the latter operated to the United States. This has been rejected by this Government on the grounds that it would establish a very undesirable precedent. Apart from the foregoing, the major point of contention in the bilateral negotiations revolves around the question of Fifth Freedom traffic, and it is still undetermined whether the Portuguese will be disposed to conclude the agreement without insisting on arbitrary traffic restrictions. The Embassy is endeavoring to persuade the Portuguese Government to omit any such limitations on the grounds that any future traffic problems can be satisfactorily adjusted as they develop.45

Rumania. As in the case of Hungary, no attempts have yet been made to obtain commercial landing rights in this country.

U.S.S.R. As you may recall, the Soviet Government declined to send a delegation to the Chicago Conference although it had previously accepted the invitation to participate. During the summer of 1944 exploratory conversations on civil aviation were held in Washington with Soviet representatives, at which time the latter gave no encouragement to this Government's proposal that United States civil airlines would operate into the U.S.S.R. Despatch no. 1805 dated June 12, 1945 from the Embassy at Moscow expresses doubt that American air carriers will be permitted to enter the Soviet Union via Helsinki or any other proposed route. The Embassy adds that "the Soviet Government has made it sufficiently clear on a number of occasions that air transit of Soviet territory except in exceptional cases would be carried out only by Soviet aircraft". It is probable that American Export Airlines will make efforts to persuade the Soviet Government to allow its services to enter over the routes proposed by the Civil Aeronautics Board, but such prospects do not appear to be promising in the foreseeable future.

Yugoslavia. In April 1945 a draft bilateral agreement was presented to the Yugoslav Foreign Minister, who indicated a lack of experts in his government who were qualified to deal with the subject. When the Civil Aeronautics Board's route decision was announced on July 5, the Embassy at Belgrade was asked to follow up the matter and report the progress of negotiations. No further information has been forthcoming from Belgrade.

Summary.

While a number of difficulties (such as Fifth Freedom traffic privileges and the availability of transport aircraft) still must be worked out, the Department is hopeful that relatively satisfactory landing rights for United States commercial airlines can be obtained in the not too distant future from such countries as Great Britain, France, Belgium, Greece, Norway and Portugal. It is desirable that similar rights be obtained in countries such as Czechoslovakia, Poland, Finland and Yugoslavia, although it is recognized that these countries may be influenced considerably by the Russian attitude. The Department also hopes that satisfactory commercial privileges can soon be made available with regard to Germany, and your comments on this possibility are requested. Presumably Austria would follow the same pattern although, as in the case of Germany, the Department is uncertain as to the availability of rights of transit and non-traffic stop in the zones under the control of other countries. Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria may be said to be in the "twilight zone" as concerns the acquisition of necessary landing rights in the near future, and any comments you may wish to make on this situation, as well as the entire subject reviewed above, would also be helpful.

Very truly yours,

For the Secretary of State: James C. Dunn

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) 46

Washington, December 13, 1945-7 p.m.

2515. The following is suggested for your consideration. In view of the prime importance of the early establishment of American international air services, and in view of the uncooperative attitude recently shown by the Soviet in this connection, it is hoped that an opportunity may develop to discuss the problem with high Soviet officials.

Pan American Airways has been authorized to operate from the US into Germany, thence to Praha, Vienna, Budapest, Belgrade, Bucharest and on to Turkey and the Middle East. Military permission has been obtained for one survey flight now being made by Panam into Germany and Vienna, but Soviet military officials in Budapest and Bucharest have evaded our requests for authorization of this flight, as well as for future operating rights. Matter has been referred to Moscow, but no satisfactory reply has yet been received.

Commercial air rights for US airlines in Central Europe are still indefinite, and Russians do not seem disposed to allow such services to operate through certain countries in this area. Since this permission is vital if Panam is to operate on its designated route from the US to India, it is hoped that some assurance can be obtained from the Soviets that they will not offer further objection to the inauguration of these commercial services.

American Overseas Airlines is also authorized to operate from the US into Berlin, with contemplated extension to Warsaw and Moscow. This company is authorized over another route from Stockholm to Helsinki and Leningrad into Moscow. Polish and Finnish Govts have been approached by our missions with respect to acquisition of suitable commercial landing rights at Warsaw and Helsinki, respectively, but conclusion of these arrangements probably will require Soviet approval. No formal approach has been made by this Govt to USSR for commercial landing rights in Soviet territory, and up to now Soviets have indicated no willingness to allow US air services to enter their territory proper. Perhaps an opportunity will also be presented to discuss granting of reciprocal commercial air rights between US and Soviet, but this does not have the immediate urgency of obtaining appropriate permission for regularly scheduled US services through Central Europe as mentioned above.

FORMULATION OF UNITED STATES POLICY ON THE RESOURCES OF THE CONTINENTAL SHELF AND ON COASTAL FISHERIES

811.0145/11-2844

The Secretary of the Interior (Ickes) to President Roosevelt

Washington, June 5, 1943.

My Dear Mr. President: The war has impressed us with the necessity for an augmented supply of natural resources. In this connection I draw your attention to the importance of the Continental Shelf not only to the defense of our country, but more particularly as a storehouse of natural resources. The extent of these resources can only be guessed at and needs careful investigating.

The Continental Shelf extending some 100 or 150 miles from our shores forms a fine breeding place for fish of all kinds; it is an excellent hiding place for submarines; and since it is a continuation of our continent, it probably contains oil and other resources similar to those found in our States.

I suggest the advisability of laying the ground work now for availing ourselves fully of the riches in this submerged land and in the waters over them. The legal and policy problems involved, both international and domestic, are many and complex. In the international field, it may be necessary to evolve new concepts of maritime territorial limits beyond three miles, and of rights to occupy and exploit the surface and subsoil of the open sea. It may, therefore, be important to consider the matter in the negotiation of any treaties of peace which follow the war. In the domestic field, one of the perplexing questions would be that of the respective sovereign and proprietary roles of the Federal Government and of the several coastal States.

I recommend, therefore, that this Department, in collaboration with the National Resources Planning Board, and the Departments of State and Justice now study the many aspects of such an undertaking and submit their findings and conclusions to you as expeditiously as possible. If you should agree, I would undertake to have these Departments and agencies designate representatives to undertake this joint study.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES

811.0145/11-2844

Memorandum by President Roosevelt to the Secretary of State

Washington, June 9, 1943.

I think Harold Ickes has the right slant on this. For many years, I have felt that the old three-mile limit or twenty-mile limit should be superseded by a rule of common sense. For instance, the Gulf of Mexico is bounded on the south by Mexico and on the north by the United States. In parts of the Gulf, shallow water extends very many miles off shore. It seems to me that the Mexican Government should be entitled to drill for oil in the southern half of the Gulf and we in the northern half of the Gulf. That would be far more sensible than allowing some European nation, for example, to come in there and drill.

Another case which we have all talked about relates to the shelf in the bend of Alaska. Japanese fishing vessels netted habitually for salmon and crabs twenty-five, thirty or forty miles off shore, catching them on their way to the shores and rivers of Alaska for the purpose of spawning.

Would you agree to setting up a Board as he suggests, with representatives of the State Department, Interior Department, National Resources Planning Board, and the Department of Justice?

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to President Roosevelt

[Washington,] June 10, 1943.

I find that there has already been formed within this Department a committee 1 to study various angles of this very problem.

The setting up of a Board such as the Secretary of the Interior suggests would be entirely agreeable to me. I raise the question whether it might not be appropriate and advantageous to have represented on such a board not only the agencies mentioned in Mr. Ickes' letter and your memorandum but also the Department of the Navy.

The Secretary of the Interior (Ickes) to the Secretary of State²

Washington, May 23, 1944.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: On June 5, 1943, I wrote a letter to the President, a copy of which I enclose,3 in which I suggested the advisability of laying the ground work for availing ourselves of the natural resources in the Continental Shelf extending from our shores. I recommended that this Department, in collaboration with the Departments of State and Justice, and the National Resources Planning Board, now study the many aspects of such an undertaking and submit their findings and conclusions to the President.

The President has sent me a memorandum dated May 11, which reads as follows: "This is approved except that we must remember that the National Resources Planning Board has met an untimely death.4 Go ahead with State and Justice."

At your earliest convenience, I would like to discuss the matter with you or whomever you may wish to designate, with a view toward initiating a study of the international problems involved.

Sincerely yours,

⁶ Letter of June 9 not printed.

These drafts were the same as Annexes 1 and 2 to the memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior, pp. 1491 and 1492, respectively.

One concerns the natural resources of the subsoil and seabed of the continental shelf.

The other concerns fisheries in certain areas of the high seas contiguous to the coast of the United States.

You will recall that the President requested you to designate someone to discuss these two questions with the representative of Secretary Ickes. You designated me and Secretary Ickes designated Assistant Secretary Straus.

We met in the Department of State. Mr. Straus brought with him his specialists ⁹ and sitting with me were Mr. Bishop (Le), Mr. Charles Rayner, ¹⁰ Mr. Ribble, ¹¹ Mr. Boggs, ¹² and Mr. Sturgeon. ¹³

We came to a general understanding. A subcommittee was appointed to define that understanding and the subcommittee agreed and the persons attending the conference all agreed on the text.

Before issuing it to the Department of Interior with our approval I considered it advisable to present it to the Policy Committee.

On August 3 it was presented to the Policy Committee and was therein discussed and was approved by the Policy Committee with the suggestion made at the instigation of Mr. Hawkins ¹⁴ that the matter be referred to ECA ¹⁵ for further study.

With the exception of ECA, there has been no difference of opinion in the Department.

We have had a number of long conferences with ECA and much time has elapsed since the date of your letter to Secretary Ickes, June 28, 1944, 16 and the date of the Interdepartmental meeting with the representatives of the Department of Interior, July 15, 1944.

ECA is in practical agreement with the texts of the two proposed decisions which are attached hereto and lie immediately under this memorandum.

While in agreement on the texts, ECA has certain ideas which seem not to be germane to the present purpose, which is an agreement with the Department of Interior on a question of policy.

ECA desires to attach to a statement on policy an expression of how that policy shall be pursued. In other words, ECA raises an administrative problem, which in my opinion is not related to the decision of policy. The question of how the policy shall be executed will be up from time to time all through the future as the policy is considered for use.

Mr. Hackworth ¹⁷ has been over these drafts and has approved them and has expressed himself as in agreement with me to the effect that the additional information furnished by ECA is irrelevant to the present purpose. As above stated, the various other interested divisions of the Department have been consulted and they were all represented on the Policy Committee when the matter was rather fully discussed before that Committee.

Mr. Acheson ¹⁸ is absent but I believe has no reservation materially at variance with the decision of the Policy Committee or with my own decision or that of the officers of the Department of Interior.

Under the circumstances and considering the length of time elapsed and the pressure from the Department of Interior to come to some decision I lay the matter before you and ask your approval.

Memorandum by the Office of Economic Affairs

[Washington,] September 23, 1944.19

There is attached a proposed statement of policy ²⁰ for the United States with respect to the extension of fisheries conservation to certain areas of the high seas.²¹ This statement consists of three parts: a brief preamble, which sets forth the considerations leading to the policy decision and which for some purposes might perhaps be considerably expanded; a proposal with respect to jurisdiction over fisheries, and a proposed statement of a policy of equality in the exercise of this jurisdiction.

Strictly speaking, the procedures by which such a policy, if adopted, might be put into effect, are not properly a part of the statement of policy. Nevertheless, so significant a departure from past practices under the law of nations cannot be wholly separated from the method by which it might be put into effect. There is therefore attached to ¹⁷ Green H. Hackworth, Legal Adviser, Department of State.

¹⁸ Dean G. Acheson, Assistant Secretary of State.

¹⁹ This date is established by a marginal note indicating that the documents were received from ECA on September 23.

the statement of policy a brief statement with respect to possible procedures.^{21a}

[Annex 1]

Subject: Possible Procedures for Gaining International Understanding with respect to this Jurisdiction

The adoption of the foregoing policy with respect to fisheries by the United States could, if proper precautions were not taken, lead to misunderstanding, suspicion, and opposition on the part of many other countries. There are a number of procedures by which this might be overcome and the active concurrence of the countries mainly affected could be enlisted. The main consideration is a negative one: that the United States should not announce this policy without some form of international consultation with at least the countries that would feel themselves interested in and affected thereby. One such procedure might be for the United States Government to circulate the proposed statement of policy to a number of governments which have in the past had fishing interests in areas covered by the statement. In the case of countries having major interests in these areas, such as Canada, Newfoundland, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, Mexico, Ecuador, et cetera, the United States would regard the concurrence of these other countries as essential before proceeding to any announcement or action. Other countries whose interests are more minor or which for special reasons may not be in a position to express a firm position, should be informed of the proposed action and their comments invited, although it would not necessarily follow that complete concurrence would be regarded as an indispensable precedent to taking any action.

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to the Assistant Secretary of State (Long)

[Washington,] November 28, 1944.

Mr. Long: I have given the most careful consideration to the file which you sent to me on October 30th on the subject of Natural Resources of the Continental Shelf and on Fisheries.²²

I feel that the drafts which you and Mr. Hackworth have prepared should be considered as the Department's policy and transmitted as such to the Department of Interior.

While I feel that the considerations presented in the ECA memorandum are not without merit, I am inclined to believe that the additional suggestions dealt with in the ECA draft could more properly be handled by a series of administrative decisions and announcements.

I will appreciate it if you would be good enough to transmit the approved drafts to the Secretary of the Interior.

811.0145/11-2844

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Interior (Ickes)

Washington, December 5, 1944.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Reference is made to your letter of May 23, 1944, regarding the resources of the continental shelf off the coasts of the United States, and to Secretary Hull's reply dated June 28, 1944, in which Assistant Secretary Long was designated to represent this Department in discussions between the Department of State and the Department of the Interior regarding the policy to be followed by the United States in this matter. In the discussions the Department of the Interior was represented by Assistant Secretary Straus, aided by the Solicitor, Mr. Harper, and the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Wolfsohn.

As the result of such discussions the representatives of the two Departments have agreed upon two proposed decisions, one with respect to the natural resources of the subsoil and sea bed of the continental shelf, and the other with respect to fisheries in certain areas of the high seas contiguous to the coast. Copies of the texts of these decisions, which meet with the approval of the Department of State, are enclosed.²³ If you likewise approve them it is proposed that they be submitted to the President for his approval. In case they receive the approval of the President, it is proposed to make them known informally to representatives of the foreign governments primarily concerned, and to learn the reactions of those governments, before steps are taken to make the decisions public.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD R. STETTINIUS, JR.

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Interior (Ickes)

Washington, December 19, 1944.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Reference is made to your letter of December 7, 1944,²⁴ regarding the resources of the continental shelf adjacent to the coasts of the United States, with which you transmit a memorandum for our joint submission to the President.

I am happy to learn that we are in complete agreement on the drafts of the proposed policy with respect to the natural resources of the sea and 1492, respectively.

bed and subsoil of the continental shelf and with respect to fisheries off our coasts.

I note that you suggest that we join in submitting to the President a memorandum, together with drafts of proclamations to be prepared in this Department. However, I am doubtful as to the desirability of submitting proclamations at the present time. I have noted from the last sentence of your letter, that we are in agreement that in case the proposed policy meets with the President's approval, it should be made known informally to the other governments primarily concerned, and the reactions of those governments learned, before steps are taken to make the policy public. It seems to me that it would be preferable to obtain the President's approval, and to take the matter up with the other governments, namely Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, U.S.S.R., Great Britain, and Cuba, before submitting proclamations. This procedure, it seems to me, would more likely keep the other governments in a favorable frame of mind.

As you are aware, the subject of such jurisdiction over fisheries has for more than eighteen months been under informal discussion with Canada,²⁵ and has more recently been taken up informally with Newfoundland and Mexico.²⁶ Representatives of Canada and Newfoundland have contributed materially in the formulation of the statement on fisheries; and it is believed that both these countries will be in substantial agreement with the policy and may welcome an opportunity to take joint action with us, or to take unilateral action concurrently with ours, in making known their adherence to the proposed principles. From the standpoint of our foreign relations with Canada, especially, it would be desirable to avoid public unilateral action by our Government until the Canadian Government has been informed of the action proposed.

to preserve coastal fisheries.

²⁵ On June 14, 1943, the Canadian Assistant Under Secretary of State for External Affairs, Hugh Llewelyn Keenleyside, proposed to the Department of State that new principles for the protection of coastal fisheries be worked out between the two countries. After informal discussions within the Department, and with representatives of Canada and Newfoundland, a meeting was held in Ottawa January 24-25, 1944, to consider a common policy toward coastal fisheries jurisdiction. Technical discussions followed on February 17-18 culminating in an all-day meeting at the Department of State on February 19 under the chairmanship of Joseph C. Grew. Further discussions were postponed due to the decision to formulate a unilateral policy under the auspices of the Departments of State and of the Interior.

²⁶ An Informal Joint Mexican-American Commission on International Fisheries was established in December, 1943. Under the chairmanship of Ira N. Gabrielson, the committee included E. Dana Durand, U.S. Tariff Commissioner; Cmdr. Rigoberto Otál Briceño, Jefe, Dirección de Pesca e Industrias Conexas, Secretaría de Marina; and José Lorenzo Cossio of the Secretaría de Relaciones Exteriores. Two meetings were held in 1944: the first in Mexico City in early April, and the second in Washington in mid-September. During the latter meeting, a recommendation was made that both countries undertake joint action

Consequently, I suggest that we submit to the President a joint memorandum along the lines of the one attached.²⁷

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD R. STETTINIUS, JR.

811.0145/3-3145

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior (Ickes) to President Roosevelt 28

Washington, January 22, 1945.

Subject: Resources of the Continental Shelf and Coastal Fisheries Pursuant to your direction in June 1943, the Departments of State and of the Interior have been giving study to methods whereby the United States may, within the general framework of the principles of international law, assert jurisdiction over the important fisheries and other natural resources of the waters, sea bed and subsoil of the continental shelf contiguous to our coasts. As a result of these studies, the two Departments have agreed upon the attached formulae, one with respect to the resources of the sea bed and subsoil of the continental shelf and the other with respect to fisheries in certain areas of the high seas contiguous to the coasts. The effect of the adoption of these formulae will be to assert jurisdiction and control over the mineral and other resources under the sea bed of the continental shelf, and to assert a policy of establishing conservation zones for the protection of coastal fishery resources. These zones are to be controlled and regulated exclusively by the United States in areas where only our nationals have developed and maintained fishing activities on a substantial scale. In areas where legitimate fishery activities have been developed and maintained by nationals of other countries, their rights are safeguarded and such countries are permitted to join in the regulation and control. The right of other countries to establish similar conservation zones off their shores in accordance with the same principles is conceded.

In view of the important bearing of this policy upon our foreign relations it is proposed, in case you approve the attached statements of policy, to make them known informally to representatives in Washington of the other governments whose interests may be concerned and whose concurrence is desirable, namely, Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, U.S.S.R., Great Britain, and Cuba, and to learn the reactions of those governments, before any steps are taken to give publicity to the policy. This appears particularly appropriate in view of the fact that the Department of State, with the collaboration of the Department of the Interior, previously had given joint consideration with Canada and Newfoundland to a policy for the regulation and control of coastal fisheries. The representatives of those countries have contributed materially to the thought embodied in the statements of policy, and their concurrence in the policy is highly desirable because of our common fishery interests. The subject has also been brought informally to the attention of Mexican representatives and their favorable view was indicated. It is believed that in the case of Canada and Newfoundland, at least, there is substantial agreement and it is possible that those countries would appreciate an opportunity to take joint action with us, or to take action of their own concurrently with ours, to adopt the proposed policy. With respect to the resources of the subsoil and sea bed, however, there have as yet been no corresponding discussions with other governments.

Within a period of two months from the date of your approval and after consultation with the foreign governments concerned, the necessary documents will be submitted for signature and promulgation by you. In view of the past interest of Congress in this question, as manifested in a number of legislative proposals, you may wish to consider the advisability of formal or informal communication with the Congress or with some of its leaders prior to the issuance of any proclamations.²⁹

Subject: Proposed Decision with Respect to Fisheries in Certain Areas of the High Seas

In view of the pressing need for conservation and protection of fishery resources, the Government of the United States regards it

No In the proposed draft memorandum of December 19, 1944, for President Roosevelt (not printed), the final paragraph began: "When the reactions of the foreign governments concerned have been learned, a decision can be made regarding the steps which might be taken to make the policy public, such as the issuance of proclamations." Mr. Ickes, in a letter to the Secretary of State on January 4, 1945 (not printed), suggested a different course. "In the interest of expediting this project," he wrote, "might it not be desirable to obtain a decision from the President on all questions of substance prior to the proposed consultation with other governments? This is particularly important in connection with the timing of the public declarations of policy which, I think, should come at the earliest practicable moment. The point could be met by minor revisions in the last paragraph together with a line for the approval of the President and the date of such approval." (811.0145/1-445) The Acting Secretary of State gave his approval in a letter dated January 23, 1945.

as proper to establish conservation zones in those areas of the high seas contiguous to the coasts of the United States wherein fishing activities have been or in the future may be developed and maintained on a substantial scale: Where such activities have been developed and maintained by its nationals alone, the United States regards it as proper to establish explicitly bounded conservation zones in which all fishing activities shall be subject to the regulation and control of the United States and may when conditions warrant be limited to the United States. Where such activities have been legitimately developed and maintained by nationals of other states, explicitly bounded conservation zones may be established under agreements between the United States and such other states; and all fishing activities in such zones shall be subject to the regulation and control of, and may when conditions warrant be limited to, the United States and such other states. The right of any state to establish conservation zones off its shores in accordance with the above principles is conceded, provided that corresponding recognition is given to any fishing interests of nationals of the United States which may exist in such areas. The character as high seas of the areas in which such conservation zones are established and the right to their free and unimpeded navigation are in no way thus affected.

[Annex 2]

Subject: Proposed Decision with Respect to Natural Resources of the Subsoil and Sea Bed of the Continental Shelf

Having concern for the urgency of conserving and prudently utilizing its natural resources, the Government of the United States regards the natural resources of the subsoil and sea bed of the continental shelf beneath the high seas but contiguous to the coasts of the United States as appertaining to the United States, subject to its jurisdiction and control. In cases where the continental shelf extends to the shores of another state, or is shared with an adjacent state, the boundary shall be determined by the United States and the state concerned in accordance with equitable principles. The character as high seas of the waters above the continental shelf and the right to their free and unimpeded navigation are in no way thus affected.

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to Mr. William Phillips, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] April 24, 1945.

Mr. Phillips: If you concur in Mr. Hackworth's recommendations in the appended memorandum of April 11 30 with reference to the recent policy regarding coastal fisheries and the natural resources of the continental shelf, already approved by Mr. Dunn and Mr. Butler, 31 it will be helpful if you will have a talk with Mr. Dooman and ask him to undertake the responsibility for the consultations with the interested governments under the general direction and supervision of yourself in the absence of Mr. Dunn. In the case of Mexico and Cuba, it would, of course, be expected that there would be close cooperation with Mr. Butler in the absence of Mr. Rockefeller. 32

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] April 26, 1945.

Mr. Mahoney 33 called today at my request.

I first expressed regret that there had been unexpectedly long delay in resuming the friendly discussions between officers of the American and Canadian Governments concerning our common interests in the general field of international fisheries. Since the interruption of these discussions last summer,³⁴ the interested agencies of this Government had occupied themselves with the formulation of a basic fishery policy, the general character of which was known to the Canadian Government; a basic policy had now been agreed upon and would in due course

It was further suggested that the political officer charged with responsibility for relations with the respective countries would assist Mr. Dooman. (811.0145/8-345) be promulgated. Before announcing the policy, it was the desire of this Government that other interested Governments be made acquainted with it and thus be given an opportunity to study the policy and adopt it or otherwise appropriately associate themselves with this Government in the matter. It was, therefore, our intention early next week to supply the text of the fishery policy, along with a brief explanatory statement, to the British, French, Soviet, and other interested European and Latin American Governments. Having regard, however, to the close collaboration thus far maintained between the American and Canadian Governments with respect to international fisheries, we thought it proper to communicate the text to the Canadian Government before communicating it to any other Government. It was our hope that the Canadian Government could see its way clear to adopt the policy and to make efforts parallel to our own toward adoption of the policy by other interested countries.

I added that we also have had preliminary informal conversations with the Mexican Government and that we expected to hand tomorrow the text of the policy statement to the Mexican Embassy.³⁵

In handing the text ³⁶ to Mr. Mahoney, I also gave him a copy of the longer explanatory statement prepared by Mr. Bishop.³⁷ I said that we did not propose to supply this statement, in the first instance at any rate, to any of the European countries.

Mr. Mahoney said that he would today inform his Government of the substance of my remarks and forward to Ottawa the papers I had given him. He wished, however, to say that the political position in Canada at the present moment was not favorable to any early action on this matter by the Canadian Government: the Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet are now in San Francisco 38 and, further, a general election is to take place early in June. He could Texts of the proposed decisions regarding coastal fisheries and the subsoil and sea bed of the Continental Shelf along with explanatory statements were presented at that time. Additional texts were sent by the Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Mexico (Messersmith) on May 1 as enclosures to instruction 7362, not printed. According to this instruction, the Mexican representative was informed that memoranda on fisheries and the Continental Shelf had been given to the Canadian Government but that conversations on the Continental Shelf "were to be held in this respect with the Government of Mexico only and that this Government trusted that the Government of Mexico would find it practicable and possible to adopt a similar policy." not, therefore, hold out any great hope of any decision being taken by the Canadian Government before the general elections.

I then told Mr. Mahoney that there was another matter which we would be glad to have him bring to the knowledge of his Government.

This Government has also determined upon a policy which would assert jurisdiction over the mineral resources of the continental shelf. We assumed that this would not be of direct interest to Canada. It was however, a matter of considerable importance to the United States. Oil wells have been in operation for some time off the coast of California and in the Gulf of Mexico, and recent technological advances permit of drilling in waters of great depth. Although we were not aware of any areas off the coasts of Canada which could be exploited, it seemed to us that the adoption by Canada of a fishery policy similar to our own would make it desirable for the Canadian Government to know of our position in respect to another matter relating to jurisdiction beyond territorial limits. It would, of course, be most gratifying to us if the Canadian Government could see its way clear to going along with us also on this latter policy.

I then handed Mr. Mahoney the text of the policy statement ³⁹ and the pertinent explanatory statement.⁴⁰ He said that he would forward these papers also to Ottawa with appropriate comment.⁴¹

Mr. Parsons informed Mr. Mahoney that Mr. Atherton ⁴² had been requested to call this afternoon at the Department of External Affairs and to make a statement with regard to fisheries along the lines just made to Mr. Mahoney.

I suggested that about the middle of next week Mr. Dooman give me a progress report on his talks with representatives of other governments and request me to have Mr. Atherton pass it along to External Affairs with a further request for favorable action. Mr. Dooman agreed to this and added that it might be well to put into Mr. Atherton's mind the thought that if the Canadian Government felt it would be victorious in the June 11 elections and if it thought it would move out on the fishery policy afterwards, we might be able to arrange postponement of publicity on the new policies until after that date.

[Annex 1]

Explanatory Statement on the Protection and Conservation of Coastal Fisheries

The Government of the United States, recognizing that it has a vital interest in fishery resources contiguous to its coasts and having in mind that the inadequacy of present arrangements for the protection and perpetuation of coastal fisheries constitutes a potentially disturbing element in the relations of states, has carefully examined the possibilities of improving the jurisdictional basis of conservation measures and international cooperation in this field. In so doing it has concluded that:

(1) The fisheries are essential both to the coastal communities which are dependent upon them for a livelihood and to allied and related industries which furnish employment to substantially large populations.

(2) Progressive development of new methods in fishing, utilizing the factory ship, newer types of vessels and technical devices, modern refrigeration facilities, and the like, contribute to intensified exploitation over wide areas. In important instances coastal fisheries are seriously exposed to unregulated exploitation and depletion, thus creating general anxiety for their future among the people whose economic welfare and security depend upon them. In consequence a clear need has arisen for an improved basis for the regulation and protection of fisheries in the high seas contiguous to the coasts.

(3) Equity and justice require that natural resources which have been built up by systematic conservation and self-denying restricted utilization, together with the industries based upon them, be protected and reserved from destructive exploitation by interests which have not contributed to their growth and development.

(4) The fisheries differ in species, abundance, and other characteristics, from sea to sea and area to area; regulatory measures having as their object the conservation of fishery resources must be diversified and adapted to conditions peculiar to each region, with due regard to the special rights and equities of the coastal state and of any other state which has participated in the fishery of the region. Regulation and control of coastal fishery resources should therefore be treated on a regional basis.

(5) Regulatory arrangements for a particular fishing area or region should be made among the states whose continued use of or relative proximity to the affected resources gives them the interest and intimate knowledge necessary for wise and effective control, and cannot achieve full success unless made applicable to all persons and ves sels of whatsoever nationality engaged in fishing therein.

The Government of the United States has concluded that fishery regulation confined to the narrow extent of territorial waters has become inadequate for the protection of the coastal fisheries as a whole; and that important fishery resources may become depleted unless a basis for the extension of protective jurisdiction for a reasonable distance beyond territorial waters is found and adopted. Accordingly, the Government of the United States considers that its policy concerning the jurisdictional status of coastal fisheries should be as follows and that such a policy would be in keeping with the realities of the situation:

In view of the pressing need for conservation and protection of fishery resources, the Government of the United States regards it as proper to establish conservation zones in those areas of the high seas configuous to the coasts of the United States wherein fishing activities have been or in the future may be developed and maintained on a substantial scale: Where such activities have been developed and maintained by its nationals alone, the United States regards it as proper to establish explicitly bounded conservation zones in which all fishing activities shall be subject to the regulation and control of the United States and may when conditions warrant be limited to the United States. Where such activities have been legitimately developed and maintained by nationals of other states, explicitly bounded conservation zones may be established under agreements between the United States and such other states; and all fishing activities in such zones shall be subject to the regulation and control of, and may when conditions warrant be limited to, the United States and such other states. The right of any state to establish conservation zones off its shores in accordance with the above principles is conceded, provided that corresponding recognition is given to any fishing interests of nationals of the United States which may exist in such areas. The character as high seas of the areas in which such conservation zones are established and the right to their free and unimpeded navigation are in no way thus affected.

The Government of the United States believes that, in the circumstances set forth in this statement, there exists the right and obligation to protect both the resources affected and the established interests therein. The general principle here involved was given expression by Secretary Hull in 1938 in a statement relative to the Alaska fisheries, as follows:

"It must be taken as a sound principle of justice that an industry such as described which has been built up by the nationals of one country cannot in fairness be left to be destroyed by the nationals of other countries. The American Government believes that the right or obligation to protect the Alaska salmon fisheries is not only overwhelmingly sustained by conditions of their development and perpetuation, but that it is a matter which must be regarded as important in the comity of the nations concerned." ⁴³

The foregoing policy is based upon the premise that reasonable and just bases for the exercise of jurisdiction over the fisheries of an area of the high seas in the vicinity of the coasts of a state may be found in the following factors: (a) proximity to the coasts of the state; (b) the development and maintenance of well-established fishing activities on a substantial scale by a state's nationals; (c) the absence in that area of any well-established fishing activities on the part of nationals of states other than those seeking to exercise such authority; and (d) the existence of established conservation practices, or the need for such practices, in relation to the fisheries of the area in question.

In referring to the development and maintenance of fishing activities by a state's nationals the emphasis is upon the nationality of those conducting the fishing enterprise, rather than upon occasional individuals employed on vessels of some nationality other than their own. It should be noted that the statement of policy is applicable only to areas in which fishing activities have been or in the future may be developed and maintained on a substantial scale; other areas remain unaffected.

The statement of policy declares that fishing activities within the conservation zones established when all the conditions are met, "may when conditions warrant be limited to", the United States, or to the United States and the other states joining in the establishment of the zones, as the case may be. Although the jurisdiction asserted extends so far as to permit the limitation of fishing activities to the states having the right to establish the conservation zones, when those states deem such action necessary, the Government of the United States does not contemplate that the establishment of conservation zones under this policy will effect any general exclusion from all such zones of all fishing enterprises of nationalities other than of the United States and the other states establishing the zone.

Upon consideration of the more important high seas fisheries in which the United States has a present or potential interest, it is evident that in each fishery only a limited number of countries, often only one or two, have any real or considerable interest. In case the states having a real interest in each fishery agree upon and establish a regime of conservation and regulatory control for that fishery, it is believed that such conservation efforts should have a good chance for success and that other states would have no valid reason for objection to the measures taken by the states primarily concerned.

Under the policy the rights of all states which have taken any substantial part in the fishery are preserved. It is not intended to disturb in any way well-established or historic fishing activities which have been habitually carried on by nationals of other states. In areas where such activities have been carried on, the cooperation of such states with the United States in the control and regulation of the fisheries is contemplated. In like fashion, the Government of the United States expects that other governments which may adopt similar policies will respect the established interests of American fishing activities off their coasts.

No extension of territorial waters is embodied in the policy, but rather the establishment of clearly defined conservation zones in areas of the high seas contiguous to the coasts. Such areas would retain their legal character as high seas. The freedom of their use for navigation and purposes other than fishing would remain unaffected. The adoption of these measures looking solely to the conservation and economic utilization of marine resources is not to be regarded as in conflict with the general principles of international law, and especially those rules relating to navigation and other aspects of the freedom of the seas.

The Government of the United States is prepared to cooperate with any interested government in making practical application of the principles set forth above. It would welcome the opportunity to join with other governments in the working out of necessary arrangements for the determination and establishment of conservation zones in waters of common concern. Such a procedure would afford a practical basis for the conservation and utilization of high seas coastal fisheries, with fairness and justice to the coastal state and to other established fishing interests, and the Government of the United States would welcome the adoption by other governments of a similar policy as a substantial step toward this general objective and toward the improvement of the bases of international cooperation in the fisheries field.

[Annex 2]

Explanatory Statement on the Proper Utilization and Development of Natural Resources of the Subsoil and Sea Bed of the Continental Shelf

The Government of the United States, aware of the long-range world-wide need for new sources of petroleum and other minerals, holds the view that efforts to discover and make available new supplies of these resources should be encouraged. Its competent experts are of the opinion that such resources underlie many parts of the continental shelf off the coasts of the United States, and that with modern technological progress their utilization is already practicable or will become so at an early date. Oil wells are now in operation beneath the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and off the California coast, while mines extend under the sea from the coasts of England, Chile, and elsewhere.

The utilization and development of the natural resources of the subsoil and sea bed beneath the high seas cannot proceed with assurance, however, in the absence of recognized jurisdiction over such resources. As a result these resources will not in fact be put to practical use until a definite government policy with respect to the jurisdiction under which operations will be carried on has been made known. There is a natural reluctance to make the necessary investments, and to install the expensive structures and machinery required for wells or mines, until there is reasonable assurance of title to the resultant products and of necessary governmental protection. In certain places off the coasts of the United States the beginning of operations awaits only this step. Recognized jurisdiction over these resources is also reguired in the interest of their conservation and prudent utilization when and as development is undertaken. In view of present needs, and of the availability of technological means for utilizing the resources beneath the shallow seas outside territorial waters, it is believed that the jurisdiction over such resources should be defined without delay.

Accordingly, the Government of the United States considers that its policy with respect to the jurisdictional status of the natural resources of the subsoil and sea bed of the continental shelf off its coasts should be as follows:

Having concern for the urgency of conserving and prudently utilizing its natural resources, the Government of the United States regards the natural resources of the subsoil and sea bed of the continental shelf beneath the high seas but contiguous to the coasts of the United States as appertaining to the United States, subject to its jurisdiction and control. In cases where the continental shelf extends to the shores of another state, or is shared with an adjacent state, the boundary shall be determined by the United States and the state concerned in accordance with equitable principles. The character as high seas of the waters above the continental shelf and the right to their free and unimpeded navigation are in no way thus affected.

The foregoing policy is based upon the premise that the exercise of jurisdiction over the natural resources of the subsoil and sea bed of the continental shelf by the contiguous state is reasonable and just in view of the following factors: (a) the continental shelf may be regarded on geographic and physiographic grounds as an extension of the land mass of the coastal state and thus naturally appurtenant to it; (b) these resources often form part of a pool or deposit extending seaward from within the state and their utilization may affect resources therein; (c) the effectiveness of measures which may be adopted to utilize or conserve these resources would be contingent upon cooperation and protection from the coastal state; (d) self-protection compels the coastal state to keep close watch over activities off its shores which are of the nature and relative permanence necessary for utilization of resources of the subsoil and sea bed of the continental shelf; (e) prudent conservation and practical utilization of these resources are dependent upon a clear governmental policy defining their jurisdictional status; and (f) the government of the country to whose shores the resources are contiguous is clearly the logical government to exercise jurisdiction and control over these resources.

It is believed that no foreign state would have reason to object to utilization and conservation by the United States of undersea mineral resources within a reasonable distance of its coasts. No oil wells, mines, or similar installations are operated off the coasts of the United States by foreign enterprises. Therefore, a clear distinction may be drawn between steps taken for the protection of coastal fisheries, in which recognition must be given to established fishing activities and interests of nationals of one country off the coasts of another country, and measures which may be adopted with a view to protecting undersea mineral resources contiguous to the coast.

In the exercise of its right of self-protection and as a matter of national defense, the United States could not view without serious concern any attempts by a foreign Power or the nationals thereof to exploit the resources of the sea bed or subsoil of the continental shelf off the coasts of the United States at points sufficiently near the coast to impair or endanger the security of the United States, unless such activities were undertaken with the approval of the Government of the United States. The relative permanence of the structures required for the extraction and utilization of petroleum or other mineral resources of the continental shelf would make such operations a matter of concern to the coastal state. This becomes evident in the light of the possible utilization of such installations as potential bases, refueling depots, and the like.

For many years, in some cases for centuries, certain states have claimed the right to the control and exclusive exploitation of sedentary fisheries on the sea bed of the high seas in proximity of their coasts; and these claims appear to have become established by acquiescence and to be recognized by other states. Such claims extend to oyster beds, pearl banks, chank fisheries, sponge fisheries, coral, and the like. Such rights are understood to be asserted off Ceylon and India, off Bahrein, off Ireland, off Tunis, and in other parts of the Mediterranean, off the coasts of Australia, and elsewhere. States have likewise long been recognized to have the right to erect lighthouses, or to keep lightships permanently anchored, in locations well outside their territorial waters.

The foregoing examples indicate that as a matter of international law a state may acquire by occupation and contiguity rights of the land beneath the high seas, provided that the freedom of navigation is not thereby impaired. The rationale of the open sea being free and forever excluded from occupation on the part of any state is that it forms an international highway connecting distant lands and securing freedom of communications and commerce between states separated by the sea. There is no reason for extending this concept of the freedom of the high seas to the sea bed and subsoil beneath its bed. In the case of the sea bed and subsoil there is no reason to apply either the theoretical argument that occupation is impossible because it can take place only with respect to a determined thing, or the practical argument that the freedom of the waters of the open sea is essential to the freedom of intercourse between states.

The recognition of special jurisdictional and property rights in particular areas of the bed or subsoil of the high seas for the longaccepted purposes of sedentary fisheries or for the utilization of mineral resources does not conflict with the common enjoyment of the freedom of navigation. This statement of policy regarding the conservation and economic utilization of the natural resources of the sea bed and subsoil of the continental shelf off the shores of the United States contemplates no general extension of territorial waters and no assertion of jurisdiction over or interference with foreign vessels navigating the high seas. It is recognized that such utilization of the sea bed and subsoil resources should not be allowed to result in pollution of the sea by oil or other noxious substances, that unreasonable interference with navigation as a result of structures erected on the bottom or anchored in place must be avoided, and that all due precautions should be taken, by the use of lights and other appropriate devices, to prevent dangers to navigation. So long as these precautions are taken it would seem clear that the general benefit resulting from the orderly utilization of valuable undersea mineral resources must be regarded as outweighing other considerations.

This statement of policy is expressed in terms of the continental shelf off the coasts of the United States. As is well known, the continental shelf extends seaward for varying distances off the shores, and in most places terminates in a fairly definite "drop off". The continental shelf is usually defined as that part of the undersea land mass adjacent to the coast, over which the sea is not more than 100 fathoms (600 feet) in depth. Although the term "continental shelf" may be something of a misnomer in connection with islands, the policy is intended to apply in the shallow waters around this nation's islands as well as off the continental United States. At the present time, methods of utilizing the natural resources of the sea bed and subsoil are such that operations would be confined to much shallower areas than the maximum of 100 fathoms.

There are obviously situations where the continental shelf off the coasts of the United States is shared by an adjacent state, and in such cases it will be necessary to work out the boundary between the resources appertaining to the United States and to its neighbors, when the utilization of such resources becomes imminent. In certain locations the continental shelf extends from United States territory to the territory of a foreign country on the other side of a portion of the high seas. In such cases, likewise, the determination as to which resources will fall to each country will become necessary. The appropriate division would appear to be a proper matter for settlement between the countries immediately interested, upon a fair and equitable basis, as the utilization of undersea resources progresses. as much as it would appear that for some time to come installations will be comparatively near shore and that there will be little practical necessity for delimitation, it would seem that this may be left until some future time when a wise and fair solution may be found in the light of the actual needs.

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior (Ickes) to President Truman

Washington, April 30, 1945.

Subject: Resources of the Continental Shelf and Coastal Fisheries Shortly before his death President Roosevelt approved the attached memorandum 44 which submitted to him formulae prepared by the Departments of State and of the Interior.

The effect of the adoption of these formulae will be to assert jurisdiction and control over the mineral and other resources under the sea bed of the continental shelf, and to assert the policy of establishing conservation zones for the protection of coastal fishery resources. These zones are to be controlled and regulated exclusively by the United States in areas where only our nationals have developed and maintained fishing activities on a substantial scale. In areas where legitimate fishery activities have been developed and maintained by nationals of other countries, their rights are safeguarded and such countries are permitted to join in the regulation and control. The right of other countries to establish similar conservation zones off their shores in accordance with the same principles is conceded.

President Roosevelt also approved the following program of procedure: First, discussions with Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, U.S.S.R., Great Britain, and Cuba to learn the views of these Governments before any steps should be taken to give publicity to the policy, and an effort to obtain their concurrence in the policy. Second, the report of the results to the President and the preparation of necessary documents for his signature. Third, a discussion between the President or, if he should prefer, the Secretaries of State and Interior, or both, with appropriate members of the House and Senate before releasing the documents.

May we have your instruction as to whether you approve the course outlined and wish the two Departments to proceed? 45

JOSEPH C. GREW

I recommend reaffirmation by you of the policy approved by President Roosevelt in the attached memorandum and I urge that the Secretary of State be instructed to proceed promptly to consult the remaining foreign governments concerned in order that the original two months' schedule be met and appropriate documents submitted to you on May 31, 1945.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] 9 May, 1945.

Sir George Sansom 46 called this afternoon at my request.

I handed Sir George the text of the policy decisions with regard to coastal fisheries and the continental shelf, along with brief explanatory statements.⁴⁷ Sir George read through the papers very rapidly and rethe Canadian Government (811.0145/5-1045).

⁴⁵ At the end of this document appear the following queries and opinions; the handwriting is apparently that of President Truman. "What effect on resources up to the 3 mile limit? Does this recognize State control to low tide? Federal control should exist beyond low tide I think." Almost the same phraseology was repeated in a memorandum of May 4, 1945, from President Truman to the Acting Secretary of State, not printed.

46 Adviser to the British Ambassador, with rank of Minister.

⁴⁷ Copies of the texts, with explanatory statements, were forwarded by the Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom on May 11. In telegram 3666, May 10, to London, the Department requested that Raymond Gushue, Newfoundland Commissioner, be informed that copies of the texts were being sent to the Newfoundland Commissioner for Natural Resources and to marked that they appeared to concern themselves primarily with the conservation aspect of both the fisheries and the mineral resources of the continental shelf. I said that that was quite correct. I gave Sir George an account of the recent improvements in the technique of drilling for oil, and I said that we would have to anticipate today the possibility of foreign nations engaging in operations in the Coast $[Gulf^{\varrho}]$ of Mexico and off the coast of California. It was not our desire to reserve the resources of the continental shelf to nationals of this country any more than it was the policy of the United States to exclude foreigners from participating in the exploitation of the mineral resources of the United States itself. Our primary concern was to assert the necessary control over such operations off the coasts of the United States to guard against the depletion of our mineral resources and to regulate, from point of view of security, the activities of foreigners in proximity to our coast.

I went on to say that I was not quite certain whether the principles set forth in our continental shelf paper would be applicable in waters off the coast of the United Kingdom, but I believe that it would be of interest for the British to study in connection with conditions off the coast of certain territories in which there was a strong British interest, especially in the Arabian peninsula.

I explained to Sir George that we believed it highly desirable, before publicly adopting the continental shelf policy as well as the coastal fisheries policy, to provide the British Government with an opportunity to study the two documents. We sincerely hoped that the British Government would find it to its advantage to take action concurrently with this Government along the lines which we proposed to take. I did not know precisely when or how the two policies would be established, but I thought it likely that something would be done during the course of the next month or two.

Returning to the coastal fisheries matter, I reviewed at some length the inadequacies of existing concepts in respect to fisheries for the purpose of conserving our fishery resources. I referred to the increasing use of such fishing techniques as factory ships, and I described at some length the importance attached by some countries to fisheries, not as a means for providing their populations with an important food, but as an operation calculated to improve their international trade position. I also described at some length the efforts of the British Government to set up an international fishery convention for the entire North Atlantic. I said that we did not participate in the conference at London in 1943,48 as it was our view that any scheme for conservation covering a large number of fisheries, with their differing needs, would be ineffective. Further, we were not convinced that any safeguards set up to conserve the fishery resources of the North Sea would stand up against the desire of the impoverished peoples of Europe for a nourishing protein food obtainable without foreign exchange. If then the North Sea fisheries became depleted, there would be considerable likelihood of the European countries turning to the fisheries off the coast of North America. I emphasized that it was not our intention to interfere in any way with the established interests of European countries in the fisheries on this side of the Atlantic: in fact it was our desire to respect those interests. On the other hand failure to set up today proper safeguards against excessive exploitation of the fisheries might well result in the eventual loss to the entire human race of a valuable food resource.

I explained finally to Sir George that it would not be possible for us to lay before him a full explanation of the reasons which entered into the making of our decision. I had no doubt that study on the part of the British Government of the materials which we were providing him today would raise a number of questions, and we would be prepared to respond to those questions to the best of our ability. Sir George said that he was not competent to express any opinion on the matter, but that he hoped to send the papers forward to London by air within the next day or two. He would at the same time urge his Government to give the matter immediate and careful study with a view to giving us some indication of its position in the matter.

811.0145/5-1245

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] May 12, 1945.

Mr. Gromov 49 called this afternoon at my request.

I handed Mr. Gromov a copy of the proposed decision with regard to coastal fisheries and suggested that he read it before I made an explanatory statement. Mr. Gromov read the paper and asked whether Congress would enact a law placing the proposed policy into operation. I replied that it had not as yet been decided how the proposed policy would be established, but so far as I knew no thought had been given to the possibility of doing so by legislation. I added that perhaps the explanation which I proposed to give him would put the matter into a clear perspective.

I said that this Government had for some time been giving thought to various conditions which might adversely affect the fishery resources in international waters off the coast of the American Continent. We had in mind recent improvements in the technique of fishing, such as factory ships, and we were somewhat concerned over the probability of a rapid depletion of the fishery resources of Europe. We have been expecting increased pressure on the fishery resources on this side of the Atlantic, and also on this side of the Pacific, and after thorough study of the problem the interested agencies of this Government had agreed upon a concept which was designed to promote the conservation of these resources.

Mr. Gromov asked whether we intended to assert sovereignty over waters beyond the three mile limit and if so how we proposed to do it. I replied that it was important for me to emphasize that it is not our intention to assert sovereignty beyond the three mile limit, but merely to assert control over fishing operations in certain areas inclusive of the known fishing grounds and such grounds as might be developed hereafter. I referred to the fact that the Soviet Government itself asserts control over waters between the three mile limit and the fourteen mile limit, but it was not my understanding that the Soviet Government had asserted sovereignty over those waters. Further, it was not our intention to exclude from the prescribed conservation areas the nationals of those countries that had either a historic or legal interest in the fisheries. On the contrary, the proposed policy decision was designed to safeguard such interests. However, we did expect nationals of other governments to conform to the same fishing regulations as those which American fishermen would be required to observe.

I explained to Mr. Gromov that the paper which I handed him was not to be regarded at the present moment as an official decision of the American Government, but rather as an indication of a decision which I hoped would be taken within the next few weeks. We believed that it would be in line with the general concepts of comity to acquaint friendly governments with our line of thinking prior to the taking of any definitive action. I requested, therefore, that Mr. Gromov would make this point clear to his Government and at the same time communicate our request that if the Soviet Government should think well of the proposed decision it would see its way clear to taking action concurrently with this Government.

I next handed Mr. Gromov a copy of the proposed decision with regard to mineral resources in the continental shelf, which I requested him to read. After Mr. Gromov had read the paper, I referred briefly to recent advances in drilling techniques and other improvements in the technology of mining for oil. I adverted to the oil wells that have been in operation off the coast of California and in the Gulf of Mexico, and I said that there was no reason now why it would not be possible for drilling to be carried out through great depths of water and at substantial distances from the coast. I said the American people had never adhered to the view that the natural resources within the jurisdiction of the United States were available exclusively to the American people. The fact is that foreigners are permitted to operate mines within the United States on same conditions as citizens of this country. Similarly, it was not our intention to reserve the resources of the continental shelf exclusively to citizens of the United States. On the other hand, it was important that we should take necessary precautions against the draining of pools of oil within the United States by operations carried on at some distance from the coasts of this country. Furthermore, it was important that we should have some measure of control, from point of view of international security, over the operations of foreigners in close proximity to our shores.

I explained that here again the proposed policy should not be regarded at this time as a definitive statement of American policy, but that it was proposed by some appropriate means to establish the principles set forth in the paper within the next few weeks. It was also our opinion that the adoption by the Soviet Government of a similar policy would be in the interest of the Soviet Union and we therefore hoped that the Soviet Government would see its way clear to taking action concurrently with the proposed action of this Government.

Mr. Gromov asked whether we had approached other foreign governments along the lines of the approach which I had been making. I replied that we had. I said that in respect of the fisheries, we had been in close consultation with the Canadian Government for a substantial period of time and that we had also had informal discussions with the Mexican Government. We had already advised several other governments of our proposed decisions and were in the process of approaching others, and I named the various governments referred to.

Mr. Gromov then asked if we proposed to invite foreign governments to enter into a convention which would embrace our proposed policy decision. I replied that so far as I knew, it was not our intention, at least in the first instance, to propose the conclusion of any such convention. Perhaps at some future date it might be desirable to consider some such procedure. I added that there had been some thought given in both official and private quarters in the United States of the desirability of proposing to the Soviet Government, after the conclusion of the war in the Pacific, a joint study of fishing conditions in the Bering Sea with a view to an agreement delineating our respective fishing areas. Mr. Gromov said that he did not believe that there were any extensive fishing operations by Soviet nationals in the Bering Sea. I remarked that we had received a number of indications of fairly extensive operations in the waters referred to by Soviet citizens, and that it semed to us desirable to have a survey made as soon as practicable and before conditions had become somewhat crystallized.

Mr. Gromov said that he would appropriately inform his Government of the observations that we had made and would forward at his earliest convenience the various papers which we had handed him. In conclusion he asked when we intended to promulgate our new policies. I replied that I could not give him any definite indication for the reason that the time set would depend in considerable measure on the character of the responses and comments to be made by the various foreign governments approached. For that reason I suggested that it would be extremely helpful if he could procure at an early date some expression of his Government's views.

Memorandum by Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn), to the Assistant Secretary of State (Acheson)⁵⁰

[Washington,] May 15, 1945.

Mr. Acheson: I am obliged to trouble you again with regard to the "Resources of the Continental Shelf and Coastal Fisheries" papers.

The memorandum ⁵¹ which you prepared (attached) was signed by Mr. Grew and endorsed by Mr. Ickes, and, along with the papers approved by Mr. Roosevelt was submitted by Mr. Grew to the President on April 30. Mr. Grew, when returning the papers to me a week or so ago, authorized me to proceed with discussions with the missions in Washington of other interested governments. He said that the President had handed the papers to him at a cabinet meeting and, in so doing, had expressed verbally his approval of the policy papers.

The President did not, however, give any directive with regard to discussions with appropriate members of the House and Senate.

Will you be so good as to indicate what should be done, in the light of the circumstances above set forth, in the matter of discussions with members of the House and Senate?

811.0145/6-1545

Memorandum by Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn), to Mr. William Phillips, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] June 15, 1945.

Mr. Phillips: The memorandum submitted to President Roosevelt and approved by him on March 31, 1944 [1945] contemplated that the statements of policy should be made known informally to those governments "whose concurrence is desirable, namely, Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, USSR, Great Britain, and Cuba." Conformably to the directive issued by the Acting Secretary on April 24, 1945, copies of the policy statements on coastal fisheries and continental shelf were handed to representatives of the Missions in Washington of the following countries on the dates indicated.

Canada	April 26
Mexico	April 27
United Kingdom	May 9
*Netherlands	May 10
*Norway	May 11
*France	May 11
Soviet Union	May 12
*Iceland	May 15
*Denmark	May 16
*Cuba	May 16
*Portugal	May 17

There has been no definitive reply from any one of the countries. The Department has been in close touch with the Canadian Government during the formulation of the coastal fishery policy and it may therefore be assumed that failure to hear from the Canadian Government may be explained by the elections recently held in Canada.

Our records indicate that in handing copies of the papers to the representatives of the Missions above listed, it was made clear in each instance that it was our expectation to make public the proposed policy statements "in the near future, possibly in the middle of June."

With reference to the statement in the memorandum submitted to the President that there should be promulgation of the documents "within a period of two months from the date of your approval after consultation with the foreign government concerned", it is believed that the following quotation from the Secretary's letter of December 19, 1944 to the Secretary of the Interior will indicate the character of the "consultation" that there was then contemplated.

"From the standpoint of our foreign relations with Canada, especially, it would be desirable to avoid public unilateral action by our ^{*}Coastal Fisheries Policy only. [Footnote in the original.]

Government until the Canadian Government has been informed of the action proposed."

The importance of informing the Canadian Government was later enlarged to include the countries mentioned in the previous quotation from the memorandum submitted to the President. Along with the countries mentioned, a number of other countries have been informed on the coastal fishery policy.

There appears to be some serious misconception of the character of the two policies. The coastal fishery policy is not designed to safeguard exclusive U.S. utilization of the fisheries off our coast: on the contrary, it calls for the making of agreements with countries whose nationals have hitherto operated in the respective conservation zones. In connection with the continental shelf policy, I believe that the following quotation from the memorandum of my conversation with the British Minister ⁵² will tend to keep the matter in accurate perspective:

"It was not our desire to reserve the resources of the continental shelf to nationals of this country any more than it was the policy of the United States to exclude foreigners from participating in the exploitation of the mineral resources of the United States itself. Our primary concern was to assert the necessary control over such operations off the coasts of the United States to guard against the depletion of our mineral resources and to regulate, from point of view of security, the activities of foreigners in proximity to our coast."

With reference to the suggestion that was made elsewhere that President Roosevelt was not directly interested in the two policies mentioned, it may be of interest to you to note the memorandum from President Roosevelt to the Secretary of State dated June 9, 1943, a copy of which is attached.⁵³

Memorandum by Mr. John H. Morgan, Acting Chief, Division of Northern European Affairs, to Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] June 15, 1945.

Mr. Dooman: With reference to the proposed declaration of policy concerning coastal fisheries discussed with the Icelandic Minister, Mr. Thor Thors, on May 15,54 Mr. Thors today informed me that he had just received a cable from his Government stating that while it was in agreement with the general principles of the new policy there were certain details with regard to its application which the Icelandic Government was not sure without further study were favorable to Icelandic interests. The Government, therefore, desired to discuss this matter further with Mr. Thors on his return to Iceland. Mr. Thors is flying to Reykjavik on June 21 and hopes that it may be possible to give us a definitive answer by the end of the month. He states the cable received by him did not specify the details concerning which the Icelandic Government has doubts.

Mr. Thors stated that in the circumstances he did not intend to address a note to the Department on the subject at this time but that if Mr. Dooman had any suggestions or wished to discuss the matter further he was, of course, at Mr. Dooman's disposal.

JOHN H. MORGAN

811.0145/6-1845

The Counselor of the British Embassy (Wright) to Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

Ref: 1852/4/45 Washington, June 18, 1945.

Dear Mr. Dooman: On the 9th of May you handed to Sir George Sansom (who has since left for the United Kingdom) two documents entitled (1) Proposed Decision with respect to Fisheries in Certain Areas of High Seas and (2) Proposed Decision with respect to Natural Resources of the Sub-Soil and sea bed of the Continental Shelf. You explained to Sansom that these documents represented policies agreed upon by the United States Government and that they were to be published in about one month's time, but that it was desired to give His Majesty's Government the opportunity of commenting on them first.

I have now received instructions from the Foreign Office who, while making no comment on document (2), are much concerned about the proposed publication of document (1) which, it is anticipated, would have serious repercussions on fisheries in north-western European waters. While the principle of control of off-coast fisheries by the coastal State, or States, might meet the needs of fisheries in the Western Hemisphere, the promulgation of this principle at the present time is considered likely to spread confusion in European fisheries, where the claims of individual States to off-coast fisheries would gravely impair the position of the United Kingdom industry, which obtains the bulk of its catches from waters situated nearer to the coast of other countries than to those of the United Kingdom. His Majesty's Government would be glad of more time to consider the complications likely to arise and would therefore prefer that publication by the United States Government should not take place or, at the least, should be postponed as long as possible.

If the United States Government considers it essential to make an announcement on the subject, it is hoped that they may agree to refrain from any public espousal of the principle of control by the coastal State, relying instead upon the de facto control which the geographical position of the United States enables that Government to exercise. In short, while agreeing with the idea of regional as opposed to global, regulations of fisheries, His Majesty's Government would much prefer the emphasis to be laid on adherence to the principle of the three-mile limit and to the principle of international, as opposed to national, control of fisheries outside that limit. This would avoid emphasising the preponderant control which any one State might be able to obtain under the principle embodied in the proposed announcement.

An additional reason advanced by the Foreign Office for postponing a public announcement is that His Majesty's Government hope shortly to convene a conference of the European fishing countries to consider a plan for the conservation of fish stocks in the North Sea by restricting the total tonnage of fishing vessels. This plan might well be stultified, if certain European countries receive any encouragement towards claiming a controlling interest in the fisheries near their coasts. It is possible that this conference might be timed to coincide with the resumption of the London Fisheries Conference of 1943.

I hope to be able to let you have very shortly a more detailed statement of the position taken by His Majesty's Government in this matter.

Yours sincerely,

MICHAEL WRIGHT

[Enclosure]

OPINION OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CUBA WITH REFERENCE TO THE PROPOSED DECISIONS OUTLINED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES RELATING TO FISHING

"First: the Government of Cuba accepts in all respects the proposed decisions which should be adopted with reference to fisheries in certain areas of the high seas, cooperating in all of them with the Government of the United States in order to preserve and protect the fishing resources and internal security of those along her coasts.

"Second: understands that in establishing the conservation zones explicitly set aside through agreements between States, the Fishery Department should be counted upon, acting jointly with a Nautical Officer of the National Navy, to propose the parallels or boundaries which should be set for same when placed under regulation.

"Third: also believes that the Government of the United States, when establishing its zones of protection and conservation in those areas of the high seas contiguous to her coasts, should take into consideration the historical fact firmly established by fishers in boats under the Cuban flag, who from time immemorial, and now under the protection of Article 6 of the General Fishing Law, and 17 of the Regulations for its execution, obtain products of their fisheries outside of our waters, working with soundings, and who extend their fishing trips to the coast of the Gulf from Cape Romano to Cape San Blas within territory of the United States, including the Dry Tortugas, at a distance varying between 10 and 20 miles from the Southern Coast of the State of Florida; as well as between Cabo Catoche and Islas Mujeres in Mexican Territory."

Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn), to the Counselor of the British Embassy (Wright)

Washington, June 20, 1945.

DEAR MR. WRIGHT: I am greatly obliged to you for your letter of June 18, 1945, by which you were so good as to send me an account of the views of the Foreign Office with regard to our paper "Proposed Decision with respect to Fisheries in Certain Areas of High Seas".

I look forward to receiving from you the more detailed statement to which you refer in the last paragraph of your letter.

There are one or two observations in your letter which move me to wonder whether the Foreign Office may not be under some misapprehension with regard to the purposes and operations of our proposed policy.

Reference is made in your letter to the effects which "the principle of control of off-coast fisheries by the coastal state, if applied in the North Sea", might have on the United Kingdom fishing industry which, as you say, obtains the bulk of its catches from waters situated nearer to the coast of other countries than to those of the United Kingdom. It appears to be the belief of the Foreign Office that, if our doctrine were applied, the fisheries would be controlled by the state to which the waters were contiguous.

We contemplate assertion of control only "where such [fishing] ⁵⁶ activities have been developed and maintained by its [United States] ⁵⁶ nationals alone." Even in such cases, we would not contemplate the exclusion in principle of nationals of other countries.

In all other cases, that is to say, where there have been well-established fishing activities by nationals of other countries, we contemplate the conclusion of agreements between the United States and the other participating countries. We believe that, in all instances in which there exist established interests of other countries, our proposed policy would support in the most emphatic and effective possible manner the principle of international, as opposed to national, control of fisheries beyond territorial waters. We believe that the interests of each state fishing in areas contiguous to the coasts of another state would be most effectively safeguarded by its sharing, on completely equal terms, with the coastal state in the regulating and control of fishing in such areas. We believe, further, that our position consorts with reason, with concepts of orderly procedure, and indeed with the serving of the respective interests of the countries concerned. We cannot, therefore, but feel that the Foreign Office, in expressing preference that we emphasize adherence to the principle of international control, has misapprehended our proposed policy in an essential respect.

I hope you will appreciate that, just as your comment was of a preliminary character, the observations appearing above address themselves only to one specific point rising out of your comment. I shall be glad to elaborate further on our position after the receipt of your anticipated detailed statement.

Yours sincerely,

E. DOOMAN

The Secretary of the Interior (Ickes) to the Secretary of State

Washington, June 28, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Over two years ago, on June 5, 1943, in a letter to the President,⁵⁷ I suggested that the Government consider asserting its jurisdiction and control over the resources of the continental shelf and to coastal fisheries under and in the high seas. Since then a great deal of time and effort have been spent by both our Departments in attempting to achieve that objective. You and I long ago agreed that Executive action should be taken to that end. We joined in a memorandum to President Roosevelt recommending such action, which he approved on March 31. Early in May, President Truman orally approved the policy and procedure set forth in that memorandum. The two months during which, according to the memorandum, your Department was to consult interested foreign governments and, upon the expiration of which, the necessary documents were to be submitted to the President, expired May 31.

On June 13, I signed a joint memorandum to the President ⁵⁸ prepared for the signatures of the Secretaries of State and Interior and approved proposed proclamations and Executive orders. These papers were delivered to Assistant Secretary Acheson that day. It was our understanding in this Department that the signing and approval of these documents by Acting Secretary Grew was at this point a formality which, along with the submission of the papers to the President for his signature, would be speedily accomplished.

Despite all this, the papers have not as yet been signed by Acting Secretary Grew or submitted to the President. I should have supposed that the time for obstruction was over when two Presidents, to say nothing of the Secretary of State, have made a decision. I am sure that you will not think it unreasonable of me to ask that the proposed proclamations and Executive orders be submitted to the President for signature as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES

Ref. 1852/8/45

Washington, July 4, 1945.

DEAR Mr. DOOMAN: I sent a telegram to the Foreign Office giving the substance of your letter of 20th June about your statement "Proposed Decision with respect to Fisheries in Certain Areas of the High Seas".

The Foreign Office have now replied that, although they are still of the view that it would be better for the statement to remain unpublished, they would not express objection if it could be so amended as to make clear that the principles enunciated are only intended to apply to fisheries off the North American Continent. This would apply also to the explanatory remarks accompanying the text of the Proposed Decision, if it was your intention that these should also be made public.

As you have been good enough to let us see your proposed statement in advance, the Foreign Office have ventured to put forward a few suggestions as to ways in which changes of phrase might be made so that the releases will be less embarrassing to ourselves. In putting forward these suggestions, however, the Foreign Office indicate that they are advanced quite informally and that the United Kingdom Government do not wish to assume any responsibility for "editing" the United States Government's statement.

Heading—add the words: "in the Western Hemisphere" after "high seas".

Line 2—add the words: "in North American waters" after "resources".

Lines 12 and 13—delete the words: "and may when conditions warrant be limited to the United States".

Lines 19 and 20—delete the words "and may when conditions warrant be limited to".

Line 21-add the word "American" after "any".

His Majesty's Government regards as reasonable the view that a state, which has alone been responsible for the development of a high sea fishery, has a right to expect that other countries will conform to the measures of control required to keep the fishery in a state of health, but whereas this view appears capable of application in practice in North American waters, it has no practical application in North European waters, where its official recognition by the United States Government as a principle of worldwide application would be hailed as an encouragement to the propagation of unjustifiable claims to coastal state control, which His Majesty's Government must always resist. We hope, therefore, that you will agree to limit any statement which you may publish to North American waters, where for political and geographical reasons the problems involved appear to be less complex, and capable of solution on the lines laid down in your proposed statement.

Would you be kind enough to let me know in due course to what extent you are able to meet the wishes of His Majesty's Government, as set out above.

Yours sincerely,

MICHAEL WRIGHT

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn)

[Washington,] July 5, 1945.

Mr. Cecil ⁶⁰ called on me this morning and handed me the attached letter ⁶¹ from Mr. Michael Wright, Counselor of the British Embassy. The letter requested that certain amendments be made to the proposed fishery policy with a view to meeting certain needs of the British position.

After reading the letter I told Mr. Cecil that matters had gone too far for us to consider making the changes proposed in the letter by Mr. Wright. It was my opinion however that we could effectively meet the points stressed in the letter by making appropriate observations in the press release which we anticipated making simultaneously with the publication of the policy statement.

I told Mr. Cecil that I was somewhat disappointed that the British Foreign Office had not quite gotten the point of the policy statement, and I gave him a fairly extended account of such problems as the Alaska salmon, the halibut fishery, and so on. I said that in these cases we found ourselves obliged to anticipate in some satisfactory manner probable threats to those important resources. I pointed out however that we knew of no condition in the North Sea which was in any way parallel to such cases as those I had just enumerated. So far as I knew, there was no fishing ground in the public waters of the North Sea which had been exclusively fished by the nationals of any one country; so that it might be said that all fishing grounds in the North Sea were of common interest to the countries operating in those waters. I therefore saw no reason for objection to the principle which we propose to follow in analogous cases over on our side: that is, through agreements between the United States and the foreign countries concerned.

Mr. Cecil said that while what I had said might be literally correct, there was some possibility of our principle being obliquely invoked by an ultra-nationalistic European country and used to support a claim to control over fisheries on the high seas by the coastal state. He therefore thought that it might be possible for us to make it clear in the statement of policy that we did not expect it to have application anywhere other than the waters in the Western Hemisphere. I told Mr. Cecil again that I thought we could put the matter in proper perspective in our proposed press release. I said that it was perfectly true that we had no direct interest in European fishing problems, but that I wished to make it clear that we were indirectly interested in such problems. It was quite possible that the North Sea fisheries might be depleted in a few years, in which case we would probably find Europeans fishing over on this side in numbers which might seriously affect our own resources.

⁶⁰ Robert Cecil, Second Secretary of the British Embassy.

I said that it was not our intention in any way to embarrass any European country but that nevertheless there were actual and potential threats to our resources which we could not overlook.

I reminded Mr. Cecil that I had told Sir George Sansom 62 that some action might be expected on our part sometime in June. I said that our schedule had been somewhat disarranged by changes in the Presidency and in the Secretaryship of State, and that therefore I did not expect any action to be taken in the immediate future toward proclaiming the fishery policy.

I asked Mr. Cecil if any mention had been made by the Foreign Office of the continental shelf policy. He replied in the negative. He threw out the guess that the British Government had very little interest in the matter.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Your letter of June 28, 1945, to the Honorable Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., relating to the proposed proclamations and executive orders on the subject of the resources of the continental shelf and coastal fisheries has been brought to my attention.

As I am sure you will understand, this matter is new to me. I am impressed by the record of consideration and prior approval which the matter has had. I have been told of the meetings which the representatives of our two Departments have had with Senator O'Mahoney 63 and of the hearings which his Committee has held on the matter.64

It would seem wise to me that before action is taken you and I should meet with Senator O'Mahoney, Senator Connally 65 and per-

Memorandum by the Legal Adviser (Hackworth) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] July 5, 1945.

Subject: Coastal Fisheries and Resources of the Continental Shelf

At the discussion yesterday regarding the proposed issue of proclamations—one concerning the natural resources of the subsoil and seabed of the Continental Shelf, and another announcing a policy of the United States concerning coastal fisheries in certain areas of the high seas—you asked that I examine the provisions of the United Nations Charter 65 for the purpose of determining whether the proposed policy might in some way run counter to such provisions or to the underlying aims and purposes.

The proposed proclamation:

The proposed proclamation concerning the natural resources of the subsoil and the seabed of the Continental Shelf declares it to be the policy of the United States to regard these natural resources beneath the seas but contiguous to the coasts of the United States as appertaining to the United States, subject to its jurisdiction and control. It also states that in cases where the Continental Shelf extends to the shores of another State or is shared with an adjacent State, the boundary shall be determined by the United States and the State concerned.

Likewise, the proclamation declares that the character as high seas of the waters above the Continental Shelf and the right to their free and unimpeded navigation are in no way to be affected.

The second proposed proclamation states that in view of the pressing need for the conservation and protection of fishery resources, the Government of the United States regards it as proper to establish conservation zones in those areas of the high seas contiguous to the coasts of the United States wherein fishing activities have been or may be developed and maintained on a substantial scale; that where such activities have been developed and maintained by its nationals alone, the United States regards it as proper to establish explicitly the bounded conservation zones in which all fishing activities shall be subject to the regulation and control of the United States and may, when conditions warrant, be limited to the United States; and that where such activities have been legitimately developed and maintained by nationals of other States, explicitly bounded conservation zones may be established under agreements between the United States and such other States.

The right of any other State to establish conservation zones off its shores in accordance with these principles is conceded, provided that corresponding recognition be given to any fishing interests of nationals of the United States in such areas.

Here, as in the other proclamation, the character as high seas of the areas in which such conservation zones would be established and the right of free and unimpeded navigation are recognized.

It will thus be seen that the proclamations relate to economic matters, i.e., the development of natural resources in the subsoil areas of the Continental Shelf, and the conservation and development of fisheries in certain areas contiguous to our coasts.

The Charter of the United Nations:

Chapter I of the Charter of the United Nations states that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve "international cooperation in the solving of international problems of an economic . . . character".

Chapter IX states that with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations, the United Nations shall promote:

- a. Conditions of economic and social progress and development;
- b. Solutions of international economic and related problems.

Chapter X states that the Economic and Social Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic matters, etc.

It will thus be seen that the Charter speaks of international cooperation in solving problems of an economic character, of promoting conditions of economic progress and development, of solutions of economic and related problems, and provides that the Economic and Social Council may make studies and reports on such matters. The language of the Charter is very general in character and in no wise inhibits or was intended to inhibit governments from taking independent steps to improve their economic condition. The proclamations here in question are designed to improve the economic conditions of the United States and its nationals. I see in them nothing that would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Charter.

Should other States consider that action taken by the United States under the proclamations infringes upon their rights and should a dispute result, the matter might conceivably be brought before the General Assembly or the Security Council, or both, or if the dispute were legal in character it might be referred to the International Court of Justice.

I am therefore of the opinion that from the standpoint of the Charter action with respect to the proclamations need not be delayed.

Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State (Dunn), to the Counselor of the British Embassy (Wright)

WASHINGTON, July 6, 1945.

DEAR MR. WRIGHT: We have read with much interest your letter of July 4, 1945 (Ref. 1852/8/45), which Mr. Cecil was good enough to bring in, and we have not failed to give it careful study. I made some comments to Mr. Cecil, the salient features of which I present below by way both of reply to your letter and of confirmation of what I said to Mr. Cecil.

The suggestions in your letter toward amending the proposed policy statement address themselves to two points: limitation of the policy of North American waters, and the refraining from limiting to American nationals fishing operations in areas contiguous to our coasts that have been developed by nationals of this country.

Let me say that we do not believe that it would be practicable to consider at this time a revision of the policy statement itself on the basis of such facts and arguments now available. However, we are prepared to make it clear in some other way that the policy is one which this Government proposes to pursue only in waters contiguous to the United States and in the waters in the Western Hemisphere in which the United States has a vested fishery interest. Probably the most appropriate means for that purpose would be the press release to be issued when the policy statement is published.⁶⁷

The second suggestion is one which I do not see our way clear to meeting. Let me explain. The salmon fisheries in Alaska, for example, have been developed exclusively by nationals of the United States. There have been attempts by foreigners to participate in these fisheries which, had they been allowed to continue, would inevitably have exhausted this important food resource. It would be wholly unrealistic if this Government, in seeking to establish new principles for the conservation of our fishery resources, were to give foreigners the impression that it would not assert preemptive control over such fisheries. As I said to Mr. Cecil, I cannot recall any situation in the North Sea or Eastern Atlantic which in any way parallels these fisheries or others which I could mention; and it would seem from the last paragraph but one of your letter that the British Government recognizes that this particular feature of our proposed policy could have no practical application in North European waters. If, therefore, it were invoked, in the North Sea let us say, the reasoning would have to be too oblique to be convincing.

We do not presume to tell other nations how they shall safeguard the resources of fishing areas in which we do not have a vested interest, but we cannot but be aware that the depletion of such resources will inevitably operate to put increased pressure on fishing areas that we have developed or in which we have operated over a substantial period of time. It is for that reason that we earnestly hope that effective regulations for the conserving of the resources of North European waters will be developed by agreement among the interested countries.

Sincerely yours,

E[UGENE] H. D[OOMAN]

The British Embassy to the Department of State

His Majesty's Embassy present their compliments to the State Department and have the honour to invite their co-operation in the following matter.

- 2. Considerable interest has been displayed in recent years by oil companies in the possibility of finding oil in the shallow waters surrounding certain parts of the United States and certain islands in the British West Indies. The interest of these companies relates not merely to the sea bed within territorial waters but to those adjacent parts of the shallow sea bed beyond which are capable of being used for the exploration and exploitation of oil resources. Difficult questions may therefore arise in connection with the safe and orderly development of these oil resources and in measures to ensure that other legitimate enterprises, such as sponge fishing and local navigation, should not suffer as a result of oil drilling operations beneath the surface of the sea.
- 3. This problem has been under consideration by His Majesty's Government in relation to the shallow waters around the Bahamas and the Turks and Caicos Islands and it appears that the circumstances are broadly similar to those which exist off certain coasts of the United States as, for example, in the Gulf of Mexico and around Florida. In all such cases it would appear desirable to endeavour to secure the safe and orderly development of any oil resources which may exist beyond but adjacent to territorial waters. If foreign persons or companies were to drill for oil on the shallow sea bed adjacent to United States territorial waters, United States authorities would no doubt find it objectionable if such companies were to claim that the United States Government had no right under international law to exercise jurisdiction over their operations. His Majesty's Government would likewise object if similar claims were made by companies engaged in operations in submarine areas adjacent to territorial waters of British West Indian possessions.

- 4. His Majesty's Embassy therefore suggest that such difficulties could be avoided if international arrangements were entered into whereby all jurisdiction over oil exploration and exploitation in drillable areas beyond and adjacent to the territorial waters of the United States should be exercised by the United States Government and, reciprocally, that similar operations in drillable areas beyond and adjacent to the territorial waters of the Bahamas, and of the Turks and Caicos islands which are dependencies of Jamaica, should be exercised by the Governments of these Colonies. While such a bilateral agreement may not provide a complete safeguard against attempts on the part of nationals of other countries to explore for or develop these resources independently, the existence of the agreement would, it is felt, minimise the risk of such attempts being made. It would appear to offer the only practical basis on which the problem could be tackled with a reasonable chance of success. If necessary a similar agreement might be concluded with Cuba, the only other country with territory in the area similarly placed. It is not of course desired to exclude nationals of other countries from participation in oil development in these submarine areas so long as they are prepared to conform to the regulations which the United States Government, or the British Colonial Government concerned or Cuba would prescribe for the areas which they respectively would control.
- 5. His Majesty's Embassy would be glad to discuss the point at issue in further detail with the competent authorities of the United States Government.

Washington, August 3, 1945.

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State (Thorp) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] August 17, 1945.

The attached file ⁶⁸ relates to certain proposed proclamations and executive orders on the subject of asserting jurisdiction and control over the subsoil and sea bed of the continental shelf beneath the ocean and contiguous to our coast. This objective appears to have general agreement within the government, including Presidential approval.

Under instructions from President Roosevelt, foreign governments were to be consulted about this before final action was taken, and the matter was brought to the attention of twelve governments. Except for Cuba, there has been no indication of their attitude, except for an informal adverse comment from the Canadian [Deputy] Minister of Fisheries.⁶⁹ The problem is whether we should proceed unilaterally on this matter or not. In the light of the present effort to use international cooperation whenever possible, it would seem more appropriate either to follow up the matter directly with the various governments, or to use the appropriate interested agency, the FAO,⁷⁰ as a means to develop an international policy. There is substantial pressure from the fisheries industry and the Department of Interior for prompt unilateral action.

There is one point at which the policy is not clear,—the extent to which it is a form of protectionism, keeping American fishing areas exclusively for Americans. Our fundamental principle in this area is that of equal access to resources. The program as outlined does not assure equal treatment to foreign nationals, although it is avowedly established as a conservation of resources program and not one of protection of American business interests. Many of the supporters of the program undoubtedly hope that it will serve the latter purpose. This seems inconsistent with the international economic program of reducing protective devices and eliminating trade restrictions. The principle of equal access can be incorporated in the program without disturbing the concept of jurisdiction over the continental shelf. It would greatly disturb some of the supporters of this program.

⁶⁸ Not printed; it included a comprehensive memorandum dated August 3 by the Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox) to Mr. Thorp, setting forth in detail the objections of the International Trade Policy Division to the announcement of the new policy on coastal fisheries and the Continental Shelf. Mr. Thorp has condensed these objections in this memorandum to the Secretary of State.

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Interior (Ickes)

Washington, August 27, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I refer to my letter of July 5, 1945, in which reply was made to your letter of June 28, 1945 to the Honorable Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., relating to the proposed Proclamations and Executive Orders on the subject of the resources of the Continental Shelf and Coastal Fisheries. You will recall my suggestion that before action is taken you and I should meet with Senator O'Mahoney, Senator Connally, and perhaps other Senators from the Foreign Relations and Public Lands Committees. Since talking with you Saturday my attention has been called to the fact that the Department has now received a note from the British Embassy, a copy of which is enclosed, putting forward the desirability of an international arrangement

"whereby all jurisdiction over oil exploration and exploitation in drillable areas beyond and adjacent to the territorial waters of the United States should be exercised by the United States Government and, reciprocally, that similar operations in drillable areas beyond and adjacent to the territorial waters of the Bahamas, and of the Turks and Caicos islands which are dependencies of Jamaica, should be exercised by the Governments of these Colonies."

It is further stated in the note that the British Embassy would be glad to discuss the matter in further detail with the competent authorities of this Government.

Conformably to the memorandum approved by President Roosevelt on March 31, and subsequently approved by President Truman, the draft statement of policy with regard to the mineral resources of the Continental Shelf was informally communicated by the Department to the Missions in Washington of the Governments assumed to be interested in the matter. A copy of the draft statement was handed to the British Embassy on May 9, 1945, and at that time an extended oral explanation of the views of this Government was made. The note under reference of the British Embassy does not advert directly to the draft statement above mentioned, but a careful study of the note would seem to warrant the conclusion that the British Government is now prepared to take a position wholly in line with the principles set forth in our draft statement of policy with regard to the resources of the Continental Shelf.

In addressing itself to the question of the character of the reply to be made to the British Embassy, the Department has considered whether it would be desirable to abandon the procedure previously envisaged, that is, that of proclaiming the United States position along the lines of the draft statement of policy, and entering into bilateral arrangements with interested countries such as that now proposed by the British Embassy. Another procedure, which the Department is inclined to favor, would be for the United States to proclaim its position and subsequently support such position by bilateral arrangements. In either case it would seem desirable first to obtain the views of the Senators previously mentioned.⁷²

I would appreciate receiving an expression of your views on this matter.

Sincerely yours,

James F. Byrnes

DEAR MR. As regards the second of these Decisions, namely, the "Proposed Decision with respect to Natural Resources of the Sub-soil and Seabed of the Continental Shelf", the Foreign Office has not hitherto offered any comment and we have now been asked to confirm that none will be forthcoming. At the same time His Majesty's Government do not wish to be associated with this Decision and would prefer that, when it is announced, no reference should be made to prior consultation with His Majesty's Government, either in the Decision itself or in any explanatory statement which may be issued.

PROCLAMATIONS CONCERNING UNITED STATES JURISDICTION OVER NATURAL RESOURCES IN COASTAL AREAS AND THE HIGH SEAS

The President issued two proclamations on September 28 asserting the jurisdiction of the United States over the natural resources of the continental shelf under the high seas contiguous to the coasts of the United States and its territories,77 and providing for the establishment of conservation zones for the protection of fisheries in certain areas of the high seas contiguous to the United States.78 The action of the President in regard to both the resources of the continental shelf and the conservation of high-seas fisheries in which the United States has an interest was taken on the recommendation of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior.

Two companion Executive orders 79 were also issued by the President. One reserved and set aside the resources of the continental shelf under the high seas and placed them for administrative purposes, pending legislative action, under the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of the Interior. The other provided for the establishment by Executive orders, on recommendation of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior, of fishery conservation zones in areas of the high seas contiguous to the coasts of the United States.

Until the present the only high-seas fisheries in the regulation of which the United States has participated, under treaties or conventions, are those for whales, Pacific halibut, and fur seals.

In areas where fisheries have been or shall hereafter be developed and maintained by nationals of the United States alone, explicitly bounded zones will be set up in which the United States may regulate and control all fishing activities.

In other areas where the nationals of other countries as well as our own have developed or shall hereafter legitimately develop fisheries, zones may be established by agreements between the United States and such other states, and joint regulations and control will be put into effect.

The United States will recognize the rights of other countries to establish conservation zones off their own coasts where the interests of nationals of the United States are recognized in the same manner that we recognize the interests of the nationals of the other countries.

The assertion of this policy has long been advocated by conservationists, including a substantial section of the fishing industry of the United States, since regulation of a fishery resource within territorial waters cannot control the misuse or prevent the depletion of that resource through uncontrolled fishery activities conducted outside of the commonly accepted limits of territorial jurisdiction.

As a result of the establishment of this new policy, the United States will be able to protect effectively, for instance, its most valuable fishery, that for the Alaska salmon. Through painstaking conservation efforts and scientific management the United States has made excellent progress in maintaining the salmon at high levels. However, since the salmon spends a considerable portion of its life in the open sea, uncontrolled fishery activities on the high seas, by nationals of either the United States or other countries, have constituted an ever-present menace to the salmon fishery.

The policy proclaimed by the President in regard to the jurisdiction over the continental shelf does not touch upon the question of Federal versus State control. It is concerned solely with establishing the jurisdiction of the United States from an international standpoint. It will, however, make possible the orderly development of an underwater area 750,000 square miles in extent. Generally, submerged land which is contiguous to the continent and which is covered by no more than 100 fathoms (600 feet) of water is considered as the continental shelf.

Petroleum geologists believe that portions of the continental shelf beyond the three-mile limit contain valuable oil deposits. The study of subsurface structures associated with oil deposits which have been discovered along the Gulf coast of Texas, for instance, indicates that corresponding deposits may underlie the offshore or submerged land. The trend of oil-productive salt domes extends directly into the Gulf of Mexico off the Texas coast. Oil is also being taken at present from wells within the three-mile limit off the coast of California. It is quite possible, geologists say, that the oil deposits extend beyond this traditional limit of national jurisdiction.

Valuable deposits of minerals other than oil may also be expected to be found in these submerged areas. Ore mines now extend under the sea from the coasts of England, Chile, and other countries.

While asserting jurisdiction and control of the United States over the mineral resources of the continental shelf, the proclamation in no wise abridges the right of free and unimpeded navigation of waters of the character of high seas above the shelf, nor does it extend the present limits of the territorial waters of the United States.

The advance of technology prior to the present war had already made possible the exploitation of a limited amount of minerals from submerged lands within the three-mile limit. The rapid development of technical knowledge and equipment occasioned by the war now makes possible the determination of the resources of the submerged lands outside of the three-mile limit. With the need for the discovery of additional resources of petroleum and other minerals, it became advisable for the United States to make possible orderly development of these resources. The proclamation of the President is designed to serve this purpose.

INTERNATIONAL WHALING CONFERENCE, LONDON, NO-VEMBER 1945, AND PROTOCOL SIGNED NOVEMBER 26

[The Protocol signed at London on November 26, 1945, amended in certain particulars the international agreement for the regulation of whaling signed at London on June 8, 1937 (Department of State Treaty Series No. 933; 52 Stat. 1460), as amended by the Protocol signed at London on June 24, 1938 (Department of State Treaty Series No. 944; 53 Stat. 1794). On July 18, 1946, Secretary of State Byrnes submitted to President Truman a certified copy of the new Protocol, together with a report and other papers. On the following day the President transmitted the documents to the Senate, which on July 30 gave its advice and consent to ratification of the Protocol. The President ratified it on August 12, 1946, and on August 30 the United States deposited the instrument of ratification with the British Foreign Office. On February 10, 1947, the President proclaimed certain articles of the Protocol. INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES TO SECURE CO-OPERATION AMONG INTERESTED GOVERNMENTS ON MEASURES TO LIMIT AND CONTROL PRODUCTION AND TO SUPPRESS ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN OPIUM ¹

511.4A5/1-1345

Memorandum by the Chief of the Division of International Labor, Social, and Health Affairs (Mulliken) to the Under Secretary of State (Grew)

[Washington,] February 3, 1945.

This memorandum has been prepared for background purposes in connection with the request of Congressman Walter H. Judd of Minnesota to have a conversation with you ² in regard to the failure to date of certain countries to reply to the memoranda sent to them pursuant to the Judd Resolution. As you know, this resolution requests the President to urge upon the Governments of those countries where the cultivation of the poppy plant exists the necessity of immediately limiting the production of opium to the amount required for strictly medicinal and scientific purposes.

At the suggestion of, and after persistent urging by, Mrs. Hamilton Wright,³ Mr. Judd introduced H. J. Res. 241 in the House of Representatives on February 27, 1944. After passing both Houses of Congress unanimously, the resolution was approved by the President on July 1, 1944.⁴

Action by the Department

In compliance therewith, the Department forwarded, on August 21, 1944 to its missions near the Governments of the opium-producing countries with which the United States has friendly relations, the texts of the resolution and of draft memoranda with the request that they be transmitted, in such manner as the missions may consider appropriate, to those Governments, namely, the Afghan, British,

Chinese, Iranian, Mexican, Soviet, Turkish and Yugoslav Governments.⁵

In the memoranda, this Government stated that it was prepared to cooperate with all nations in efforts to solve the opium problem and that it hoped that all opium-producing countries would be willing to participate in a conference, expected to be held after the war, for the purpose of drafting a suitable poppy limitation convention. Pending the entering into effect of an international poppy limitation convention, this Government suggested to all the above-mentioned Governments, except China and Mexico, which have already prohibited the cultivation of the opium poppy, that they give consideration to the advisability of announcing at the earliest possible moment that they will hereafter prohibit the production and export of opium for other than strictly medicinal and scientific requirements. It also suggested that they take effective measures to prevent illicit production of opium in their territories and illicit traffic in opium from their territories.

This Government also asked the Governments of the opium-producing countries for their observations in regard to certain provisions which this Government has suggested be incorporated in the proposed poppy limitation convention.

In the memorandum intended for the Government of Iran, this Government urged the Iranian Government to give immediate consideration to the problem of surplus opium in Iran with a view to its control or elimination as soon as possible, as a means of protecting the health of the American soldiers and merchant seamen who are now in that country. Copies of that memorandum were forwarded to the American Embassies at London and Moscow for use as enclosures to the memoranda which those Embassies were to transmit to the British and Soviet Foreign Offices, respectively. In the memoranda to the British and Soviet Foreign Offices, it was suggested that the British and Soviet Governments make appropriate representations to the Iranian Government along the lines of this Government's proposed representations to that Government.

In a letter dated September 2, 1944 ⁶ Mr. Judd suggested that the Department of State request the British and Soviet Governments "to collaborate with this Government in strong joint protests to the Governments of certain opium-producing nations such as Iran where large numbers of troops from these allied countries are now stationed and constantly exposed to opium addiction because of the large quantities of the drug which are freely obtainable there." The Department replied ⁷ that inasmuch as this Government had already suggested separate representations, it was not in a position to suggest that joint representations be made.

On October 19, 1944 the Department requested the American Embassy at Tehran to make a comprehensive survey of all phases of the opium situation in Iran and to present a report including recommendations.⁸ The Department also requested the Ambassador to seek an interview with the Iranian Foreign Minister ⁹ and forcibly impress upon him the determination of the United States Government and people to urge all opium-producing countries to limit the production of opium to medicinal and scientific requirements. It was suggested that the Ambassador point out that in the postwar period Iran could probably obtain a share of the world's legal trade in opium, amounting to about 125,000 kilograms a year, and that this share could probably be guaranteed by the inclusion of Iran in a sales agreement similar to that which existed between Turkey and Yugoslavia before the war.

Response to the Department's action.

The present situation in regard to this Government's representations pursuant to the Judd Resolution is as follows:

The Afghan Foreign Office, in a note dated November 11, 1944,¹⁰ informed the American Embassy at Kabul that the Afghan Council of Ministers had passed a resolution prohibiting the cultivation of opium in Afghanistan as from March 21, 1945.

The American Embassy at Tehran reported on November 17, 1944 ¹¹ that the Department's memorandum and its enclosures were forwarded to the Iranian Ministry for Foreign Affairs on September 20, 1944 but that no reply had been received. The Embassy also reported that a copy of the memorandum had been sent to Dr. A. C. Millspaugh ¹² with a request that he present his comments thereon, but that no reply had been received.

The American Embassy at London reported ¹³ that it forwarded the Department's memorandum and its enclosures to the British Foreign Office on September 8, 1944, that it sent a follow-up to the Foreign Office on December 29, 1944, requesting a reply to its communication of September 8, 1944, and that the Foreign Office responded: "The matter with which it deals is under active consideration in London and it has been necessary to consult the Governments of India and Burma. I hope it will be possible for us to let you have a reply to transmit to the State Department within a very short time."

The American Embassy at Moscow reported on November 3, 1944 ¹⁴ that a note received from the Soviet Foreign Office stated that the question of a postwar conference and of the terms which might be included in a convention for restricting the cultivation of poppies is being studied by the competent Soviet authorities at the present time.

No mention was made by either the British or Soviet Governments of willingness to make representations to the Iranian Government.

The Chinese, Mexican, Turkish and Yugoslav Governments have as yet made no response to the Department's memoranda.

Opium situation in the principal opium-producing countries.

A brief summary of the opium situation in the principal opium-producing countries is set forth below.

Opium is being produced in the occupied and unoccupied parts of China. It may be a long time before the production of opium in China can be completely eliminated even though strong efforts are made to enforce present laws prohibiting the cultivation of the opium poppy.

The Mexican Government is constantly combating illicit production of opium.

The Turkish Government has for some time limited production of opium to legitimate requirements. It will undoubtedly further limit production strictly for medicinal and scientific purposes if the use of smoking opium in the Far East is entirely prohibited.

The Yugoslav and Soviet Governments have for some time limited opium production to medicinal and scientific requirements.

The Iranian Government produces about 600,000 kilograms of opium annually, nearly all of which at the present time is being consumed in Iran to satisfy drug addiction.

India is producing about 300,000 kilograms of opium annually, nearly all of which is consumed in India by drug addicts. Burma's entire production of about 18,000 kilograms of opium annually is used for smoking or eating.

Danger to American military personnel in India and Iran.

On August 26, 1944 the Department instructed the American Mission at New Delhi ¹⁵ to investigate the sale of narcotics to members of the American armed forces in India and, if the situation warranted, to make representations to the Government of India with a view to prohibiting the sale of opium and hemp drugs to American military personnel. The Mission stated in a despatch dated November 16, 1944 ¹⁷ that reports on the subject had been received from the consular offices at Calcutta, Bombay, Karachi and Colombo, in addition to a detailed report prepared by the American Army authorities. In the opinion of the Mission the information contained in these reports did not warrant representations to the Government of India. The Mission further stated that the reports indicated that despite the easy availability of dangerous drugs in India, addiction among American military personnel was rare and did not appear to be spreading.

Although opium is readily available in Iran, a report dated February 29, 1944 from Headquarters, U.S. Army Persian Gulf Command, Tehran, stated that an investigation conducted by Provost Marshals, medical officers, censors and other persons, as well as the British FSS and CICI disclosed that little evidence was obtained to support the statement that there is considerable use of opium by American soldiers in Iran.

Further action

In view of the fact that American troops are being stationed only temporarily in Iran and India and that it does not appear that many of them have become infected with drug addiction, it would not appear that this Government is in a position to make more forceful representations than have already been made.

The Embassies at London and Tehran can be counted upon to follow the matter closely and to obtain replies from the British and Iranian Governments as quickly as possible.

We are informed that Mrs. Hamilton Wright is responsible for Mr. Judd's request for a conference to discuss this matter with you. There is attached hereto a copy of the Judd Resolution.

trol, desirability of convening a poppy limitation conference in the near future, possibility of Iran joining with Turkey and Yugoslavia in a new opium agreement, et cetera. Minister Finance who is the Cabinet Minister officially concerned with opium production and sales was present at my personal request and his presence and helpful attitude greatly facilitated progress of discussions.

While unable due to governmental situation to promise anything at this time requiring Majlis 20 action Mr. Bader agreed to take following steps:

1. To seize first suitable occasion possibly an early meeting of the Anti-Opium Society to make formal address placing Government squarely on record as favoring (a) early ratification of 1925 Geneva Convention ²¹ (b) action curtailing opium production in Iran and (c) participation by Iran in proposed post-war poppy limitation conference. Mr. Bader stated that he would make his address so strong that succeeding governments would find it extremely difficult if not impossible to recede from position taken. (The Embassy is to furnish him with memorandum covering the points which it believes might well be brought out in his address.)

2. As Minister of Finance having jurisdiction over the opium monopoly to take such steps as may be possible without Majlis action to put into effect as regards foreign sales system of import-export certificates set forth in Chapter V of the 1925 Convention.

3. To see that steps are taken immediately to tighten up Government controls at warehouses and ports with a view to curtailing as far as possible illicit trade in opium.

4. To reconsider as soon as the Government's present commitments have been met action of his predecessor in doubling price paid by Government to opium growers.

- 5. To endeavor to have legislation passed restricting cultivation of poppies to those areas in which Government would be best able to control cultivation.
- 6. To propose that the Government again approach Turkey regarding possibility of Iran joining with Turkey and Yugoslavia in a three cornered revival of opium agreement previously in force as between latter two countries.22 (He promised to let us know when and if discussions were about to be initiated so that we could then take such supporting action as we considered desirable and possible.)
- 7. To endeavor to expedite action by Iran Government on proposals contained in memorandum received with the Department's instruction No. 472 of August 19, 1944 and transmitted to ForOff with Embassy's note of September 20.23 (I took occasion to point out to him favorable response which we recently received from Turkish Government in this connection and left a copy of text of exchange of notes ²⁴ with him for his consideration.)

8. To take immediate steps to insure that Director of the opium monopoly will in the future furnish Embassy and Consulate information which they require periodically for preparation of reports on opium situation. (This official has never been very cooperative and this cooperation has recently been practically nil.)

On the whole I regard results of our talk as encouraging. We have received promises before, however, and it remains to be seen to what extent Mr. Bader will be able to make good on this. Embassy will press him from time to time for information regarding progress achieved and will keep Department informed of results.

891.114 Narcotics/9-1945

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Iran (Murray)

No. 288

Washington, November 13, 1945.

SIR: Reference is made to your despatch no. 95 of September 19, 1945,²⁵ transmitting an English translation of portions of a recent address by Mr. Mahmoud Bader, Minister of Finance, on the policy of the Iranian Government regarding opium.²⁶

The statements made by Mr. Bader putting the Iranian Government on record on certain phases of this subject are appreciated and are helpful in moving toward a solution of the problem. The Department is pleased that the Minister of Finance has made an address on opium, that he has presented a bill to the Majlis providing for the ratification of the Geneva Drug Convention of 1925, and that he has issued instructions on the control of exports. It is regretted that he did not also present a bill providing for the ratification of The Hague Opium Convention of 1912 without reservation as to article 3a.

The Department does not feel, however, that it should at this time give publicity to and congratulate the Iranian Government on the position now taken, as there is no visible manifestation of any positive action. The formal reply of the Iranian Government to the Embassy's note pursuant to the Judd Resolution is still being awaited. Upon receipt of that reply and with the consent of the Iranian Government, the Department proposes to publish in the "Department of State Bulletin" the text of the exchange of notes. It is hoped that the Iranian Government in its reply will set forth clearly its position on the question of the limitation of the production of opium.

The Treasury Department and this Department are still interested in having information on the subjects listed in the first paragraph of the Department's telegram no. 406 of August 7, 1945.²⁷ Mr. Bader failed to disclose whether the Iranian Government has complete statistics or will establish a system whereby accurate information can be obtained in regard to opium production, stocks, exports and consumption. If the Embassy itself has been able to obtain information concerning the first nine topics listed in the above-mentioned telegram, the Department would be glad to receive it.

With regard to Mr. Bader's instructions concerning the export of opium from Iran, the Embassy may wish to inquire of him whether in future he proposes to issue export permits only on the basis of import permits signed by authorized authorities. In the opinion of American narcotics authorities this is far more important than the matter of merely taking care to see that each export is covered by an export permit. From information in their possession, the American authorities believe that Iran on many occasions between 1933 and 1940 made shipments to the Far East on the basis of import permits issued by persons who were not charged in their countries with the responsibility of issuing import permits. Although request has been made of the Iranian Government for permission to see the import permits on which the Iranian Government made export shipments, that Government has never consented to produce the import permits from its records for examination.

[Here follow additional comments on Mr. Bader's speech before the Anti-Opium Society.]

The Department is pleased with the forceful manner in which you have drawn the attention of the Iranian Government to the opium problem. It trusts that you will continue to keep the subject before the Iranian authorities. The Department, in particular, desires that you again urge the Iranian authorities to make a reply without further delay to the Embassy's note of September 20, 1944 29 pursuant to the Judd Resolution, and that you continue to endeaver to obtain from the Iranian Government a statement regarding its willingness to become a party to the Turkish-Yugoslav Opium Sales Agreement. You may point out that if Iran were to be included in that agreement, Iran would be accorded a definite share of the international opium market and would be assured of a fair price for its opium.

Very truly yours,

For the Secretary of State: WILLIAM L. CLAYTON

[Participation by the United States in cooperative efforts for international control of the traffic in and suppression of the abuses of opium and other dangerous drugs had continued at the United Nations Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, April 25-June 26, 1945.30 There, with regard to the establishment of a United Nations Economic and Social Council, the United States delegation went on record as hoping that the Organization would be entrusted with supervision over the execution of existing or future international agreements with regard to the control of the legitimate traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs, and the suppression of illicit traffic in and abuse of such drugs; that there should be established an advisory body to advise directly the Economic and Social Council on these matters; and that the existing agencies be regarded as autonomous agencies to be related directly to the Economic and Social Council.31

Subsequently, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs was created on February 18, 1946, by the United Nations Economic and Social Council.32]

The note of September 20, 1944, to the Iranian Ministry for Foreign Affairs was not answered. However, on April 10, 1946, the Iranian Government issued a decree forbidding cultivation of the opium poppy after the harvesting of that year's crop. The Iranian Government, on June 26, 1946, made it unlawful to use opium and as of November 22, 1946, prohibited its sale to the public. In a conversation with an officer of the Embassy on November 22, 1948, the Iranian Prime Minister stated that hereoforth Iran would expert only for medicinal Prime Minister stated that henceforth Iran would export opium for medicinal purposes only and prohibit all exports of opium to the Far East. On March 19, 1949, a decree of the Iranian Council of Ministers revoked the prohibition of April 10, 1946, but limited opium production to local and international scientific and medical requirements. This was followed, later, by the enactment of legislation by the Majlis on October 7, 1955, under which the cultivation of the opium poppy was banned.

The optim poppy was banned.
