PREFACE

This volume was prepared under the direct supervision of E. Ralph Perkins, formerly Chief of the Foreign Relations Division, now headed by S. Everett Gleason. The compilers of the volume were N. O. Sappington, John P. Glennon, George O. Kent, William Slany, the late Gustave A. Nuermberger, and former staff members George H. Dengler and John Rison Jones, Jr.

The Publishing and Reproduction Services Division (Jerome H. Perlmutter, Chief) was responsible for the technical editing of the volume. This function was performed in the Historical Editing Section under the direct supervision of Elizabeth A. Vary, Chief, and Ouida J. Ward, Assistant Chief.

PRINCIPLES FOR THE COMPILATION AND EDITING OF "FOREIGN RELATIONS"

The principles which guide the compilation and editing of Foreign Relations are stated in Department of State Regulation 1350 of June 15, 1961, a revision of the order approved on March 26, 1925, by Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, then Secretary of State. The text of the current regulation is printed below:

1350 DOCUMENTARY RECORD OF AMERICAN DIPLOMACY

1351 Scope of Documentation

The publication Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, constitutes the official record of the foreign policy of the United States. These volumes include, subject to necessary security considerations, all documents needed to give a comprehensive record of the major foreign policy decisions within the range of the Department of State's responsibilities, together with appropriate materials concerning the facts which contributed to the formulation of policies. When further material is needed to supplement the documentation in the Department's files for a proper understanding of the relevant policies of the United States, such papers should be obtained from other Government agencies.

IV PREFACE

1352 Editorial Preparation

The basic documentary diplomatic record to be printed in Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, shall be edited by the Historical Office, Bureau of Public Affairs of the Department of State. The editing of the record shall be guided by the principles of historical objectivity. There shall be no alteration of the text, no deletions without indicating where in the text the deletion is made, and no omission of facts which were of major importance in reaching a decision. Nothing shall be omitted for the purpose of concealing or glossing over what might be regarded by some as a defect of policy. However, certain omissions of documents are permissible for the following reasons:

a. To avoid publication of matters which would tend to impede current diplomatic negotiations or other business.

b. To condense the record and avoid repetition of needless details.

c. To preserve the confidence reposed in the Department by individuals and by foreign governments.

d. To avoid giving needless offense to other nationalities or individuals.

e. To eliminate personal opinions presented in dispatches and not acted upon by the Department. To this consideration there is one qualification—in connection with major decisions it is desirable, where possible, to show the alternatives presented to the Department before the decision was made.

1353 Clearance

To obtain appropriate clearances of material to be published in Foreign Relations of the United States, Diplomatic Papers, the Historical Office shall:

a. Refer to the appropriate policy offices of the Department and of other agencies of the Government such papers as appear to require policy clearance.

b. Refer to the appropriate foreign governments requests for permission to print as part of the diplomatic correspondence of the United States those previously unpublished documents which were originated by the foreign governments.

ACQUISITION OF MATERIALS FOR USE IN THE DE-VELOPMENT OF THE ATOMIC BOMB; EFFORTS TO ESTABLISH A SYSTEM OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY

[For documents relating to earlier discussions among high officials of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada with regard to the development and control of atomic energy, see the subsequent volumes of this series containing documents on the conferences of Heads of Governments held at Washington, Casablanca, and Quebec in the years 1941–1944. A detailed narrative account is given in Richard G. Hewlett and Oscar E. Anderson, Jr., The New World, 1939/1946, which is volume I of A History of the United States Atomic Energy Commission (University Park, Pa., The Pennsylvania State University Press, 1962), hereinafter cited as The New World, 1939/1946.

President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill had agreed at Hyde Park, New York, on September 18, 1944, that full collaboration between the United States and the British Government in developing Tube Alloys, i.e., atomic energy, for military and commercial purposes should continue after the defeat of Japan unless and until terminated by joint agreement. During the remaining months of 1944 various discussions were held among United States officials, and occasionally with British officials as well, on such subjects as postwar arrangements, security, disclosure of information, international control, patents, and relations with other governments. Secretary of State Stettinius and Assistant Secretary James C. Dunn were informed of the atomic project in January 1945 (The New World, 1939/1946, pages 322–335).]

5. The French Situation.

The Chairman made the following statement:

"Sir John Anderson 12 has informed us that there is grave danger that the French, through Mr. Joliot,18 or possibly through De Gaulle 14 instigated by Joliot, may press for immediate participation in the T.A. 15 Project. It is not known whether this request will include only industrial aspects or whether it will also be for military partici-

"Neither the United States nor Great Britain want any question about this project raised at this time with France and Sir John Anderson thinks some assurance to Joliot will have to be given in order to bring about a postponement of the issue and thereby protect against political explosion by the French with or without collaboration with the Russians, with possible danger to security.

"I understand that it has now been suggested through Sir Ronald Campbell to Sir John Anderson that he make a statement along the following lines to Mr. Joliot:

'Since it is inadvisable to attempt detailed discussions as to arrangements with France in the field of nuclear sources of power until the termination of hostilities, the Government of the United Kingdom is prepared, in view of this postponement, to assure the French Government that upon the termination of hostilities it will discuss further with the French Government fair treatment of any claims of the French Government relating to commercial or industrial applications of nuclear sources of power.'

"I have stated to Sir Ronald Campbell that in view of the fact that all contacts with the French have been with the British, I am not prepared to recommend to the President that the United States make any commitment now to the French in regard to these matters.

"I understand the British authorities feel that the treatment of the French relation to this whole project is very much affected by certain inventions and patent rights which the French claim and on which the French have been filing claims in various places throughout the world. I should appreciate it if Sir Ronald Campbell would state more fully this phase of the question."

Sir Ronald Campbell then made the following observations:

"One of the factors which may have to be borne in mind in considering the French problem is the fact that the French Government hold certain patents or patent applications in the T.A. field to which they attach considerable importance.

"In 1942 the opinion of legal counsel was sought in London on the bearing of patent applications known as A and B on T.A. development. It seems probable that A and B would be held valid in England and, if valid, that they would be master patents controlling the working of many later patents.

"This conclusion does not necessarily hold for the United States, owing to the differences in the patent practice of the two countries.

"If the above estimate of the strength of the French applications A and B is correct and if importance is attached to the building up of a strong patent position in the T.A. field, it seems desirable that the British and U.S. Governments should acquire control over these two patents in all countries in which the Governments are interested in the development or control of the T.A. project.

"It might be advisable to begin now to offer to negotiate an agreement on patents, with the object of acquiring for the British, United States and Canadian Governments jointly the world rights, outside France and the French Empire, in patents arising from the French applications. The question of what would constitute an equitable patents agreement, or one which would satisfy the French, is not easy to answer. It might require the assignment to the French Government of exclusive rights for France and the French Empire in some, or even all, Nuclear Pile inventions within the powers of disposal of the three Governments and it might involve the disclosure of information contained in such United Kingdom and United States patents. This is a matter which would require very careful examination.

"Any commercial or industrial rights arising from the world rights ceded to the three Governments under such a patents agreement would be disposed of in accordance with the Quebec Agreement.

"The advantages of an agreement on patents would be firstly, and chiefly, to convince the French Government that it could safely leave the T.A. arrangement to follow its present course of development, so avoiding a demand for immediate discussion and settlement of policy between them and the Governments concerned or seeking satisfaction elsewhere, and, secondly, to lead Joliot to desist from pressing his patent applications all over the world as he is now doing, with some danger to the security of the T.A. project.

"The Governments of Great Britain, the United States and Canada have taken the view, as far as their own countries are concerned, that T.A. is not a suitable project for commercial exploitation for private profit and all patent applications taken out in the T.A. field in these countries are allocated to the respective Governments.

"It might be desirable, in order to prevent private exploitation in other countries of the world and to keep T.A. development under suitable supervision and control, to try to acquire all rights in the French patent applications outside France and the French Empire."

Dr. Bush expressed serious doubts about the importance of these French patents to the future of the project as a whole, partly because ownership of patents would not prevent development under other Governments, and partly because high cost would probably constitute a more effective barrier to the development of T.A. for ordinary commercial purposes. He pointed out that American active desire to obtain control by the U.S. Government of patents, relating to this project, had been based largely on the wish to avoid difficulties which would arise inside the U.S.A. if a profusion of patents remained in private hands. At a later stage, this motive was reinforced by the thought the Government control of patents would facilitate agreements between the U.S. and other Governments which might emerge. Dr. Bush reported that the U.S. Government authorities concerned were paying careful attention to patents held independently within the U.S.A. but did not feel that action on these could usefully be pressed beyond what was "reasonable."

With reference to this French situation, the Chairman, referring to Article III of the Quebec Agreement, stated that high policy on the disclosure of information to other Governments was a matter for the determination of the signatories of that Agreement. An extended discussion took place during which it was accepted that the present action of the Committee should be limited to security aspects. This discussion necessitated a consideration of the Committee's competence on matters in which are interwoven (as in the case of contacts with the French Government) political as well as technical and security issues. While it is not contemplated that the C.P.C.¹⁶ will take formal action outside its terms of reference or the special competence of its members, it is expected that important problems arising from the project and affecting C.P.C. countries will be discussed at Combined Policy Committee meetings, even though not requiring formal action by the Committee, in order that the members of this Committee may present such views as may be pertinent, and that the individual members of the Committee may be in a position to report to their respective Governments views expressed by the members.

The Committee agreed that negotiations with the French regarding patent rights would involve serious danger of disclosure of information diminishing the general security of and increasing the risk of sabotage to the existing co-operative project already committed to its charge.

It was finally decided to record as the sense of the meeting that the Committee noted the dangers reported by Sir John Anderson which might arise from the French pressing for consideration of their interest in the T.A. Project. The Committee was also unanimously of the opinion that the proposed statement which, as the Chairman had reported, might be made by Sir John Anderson to Professor Joliot, amended by the insertion of the words "with the Axis powers" after the two occurrences of the word "hostilities" would not be objectionable from the standpoint of security. The Committee, however, was unanimously of the opinion that any more extensive discussions of negotiations with the French as to their interest in the project would be undesirable from a security standpoint.

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer
District (Groves)

[Washington,] 23 February, 1945.

Major Vance,¹⁷ the officer who accompanied the Secretary of State on his visit to Rio de Janeiro, made the following report:

1. The discussions between Secretary Stettinius and President Vargas took place on 17 February 1945 in the presence of Senhora Elvira ¹⁶ Combined Policy Committee.

¹⁷ Maj. John E. Vance, on the Staff of General Groves.

Amaral Peixoto, the President's daughter, (who acted as interpreter) and Senhor Leao Velloso, the acting Brazilian Foreign Minister. A wide variety of subjects was discussed by the Secretary and President Vargas prior to the mention of thorium. When this particular subject was brought up the Secretary brought Major Vance into the meeting.

- 2. The Secretary based his approach on the following points as we had agreed with the British:
- a. The approach should be limited to paving the way for future negotiations and to securing optional control of the situation.

b. It would be unwise at this time to make any definite agreement as to prices and quantities.

- c. All that was desired was an understanding through conversations that Brazil would agree not to sell to others without our consent and to sell to us on a reasonable basis both as to price and quantity. Terms would be agreed upon later.
- 3. The Secretary emphasized the desirability and the advantages of close cooperation between the United States and Brazil after the war as well as at present. After some discussion of the particular needs of Brazil for materials which could be made available by the United States, the Secretary stated that the United States was interested in maintaining a supply of monazite, the carrier of thorium, for industrial purposes. He pointed out that during the past five years = the United States had purchased the entire Brazilian export of monazite sands and that India might be expected to dominate the market completely in the future, owing to lower labor costs in that country and to the higher grade of the Indian product. In keeping, however, with our general policy of buying within the Hemisphere, we would like to enter into negotiations leading to a possible continuation of our purchases of the Brazilian exports of monazite and implied we wanted all of their exports. Neither price nor definite quantities were mentioned.
 - 4. President Vargas replied that Brazil had already entered into several agreements to provide the United States with strategic materials of various types and that the Brazilian government stood ready to continue that policy. President Vargas suggested that negotiations could be carried out with Senhor Valentim F. Bouças (Senhor Bouças is the Director of the Brazilian Commission to Control the Washington Agreements.) on this subject and that the discussions could be initiated in Mexico City if we desired. President Vargas stipulated that any agreement would have to be approved by his government before taking effect.
 - 5. The Secretary then summed up the conversation by saying that he understood it would be agreeable to the Brazilian government if our representatives discussed with Senhor Bouças the possibility of arriving at an optional agreement to purchase the Brazilian monazite production. President Vargas concurred.

[3.] (e) Action in Brazil.

The Committee had before them a memorandum ²² by the Chairman of the Trust ²³ submitting a report by Major Vance who had been present with Secretary Stettinius during his discussion with President Vargas on February 17th.

As a result of this discussion which, as agreed with the United Kingdom Government, had been of an exploratory character only, President Vargas had said that he would be willing for further negotiations to take place between the United States and the Brazilian Reference is to the Combined Development Trust, of which General Groves was Chairman. This agency was established by the Agreement and Declaration of Trust, signed by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, June 13, 1944; for text, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 11, p. 1026. The Combined Development Trust was to operate under the direction of the Combined Policy Committee; its main function was to secure control and insure development of uranium and thorium supplies located outside the jurisdiction of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Dominions, India, and Burma.

Governments with regard to the granting of an option to the United States Government to purchase Brazilian production of thorium.

The Committee:

Took note of this report and agreed to discuss further the control of thorium supplies in the next item of their agenda. (See conclusion 4 (b) below.)

4. Supplies and Requirements of Raw Materials.

The Committee had before them the following papers:

Two memoranda, dated February 3rd and March 3rd 24 respectively giving the views of Sir John Anderson on supplies and requirements of raw materials for the project.

A memorandum by General Groves to the Secretary of War, dated March 7th, 25 commenting on Sir John Anderson's views.

(a) Uranium.

Briefly summarized, Sir John Anderson's views were:

(1) that the deposits in the Belgian Congo should be exploited as rapidly as possible and the material, both of high grade and low grade, removed to safe territory;

(2) a program of exploration should be instituted to decide what were the ultimate resources in the Belgian Congo;

(3) the Trust had recommended that supplies in North America should be conserved so far as possible. This raised the question whether Canadian production should be maintained at a high level;

(4) the information service initiated by the Trust should be maintained at a high level of efficiency;

(5) commercial action should be taken quietly wherever opportunity offered to obtain control of minor sources of supply but no attempt should be made to cover this by political agreement.

The memorandum by General Groves pointed out that while Sir John Anderson had estimated the annual needs of North America for uranium at 600 tons, the present United States estimate for the next five years, based on experience so far obtained and as calculated for the plants now in operation or being completed, was 2000 to 2400 tons of uranium oxide per annum.

With reference to (4) of Sir John Anderson's views summarized above, it was explained that much fuller information was needed to discover the location of uranium deposits throughout the world, particularly those of low grade ore.

The Committee:—

Took note of Sir John Anderson's views on requirements and supplies of uranium as summarized above which were in accordance with those of the U.S. authorities. Action by the Trust on these lines in the areas for which it was responsible was accordingly approved in principle by the Committee.

²⁴ Neither printed. 25 Not printed.

(b) Thorium.

The Committee considered what further action should be taken to follow up the preliminary approach which had been made to the Brazilian Government as reported in conclusion 3 (e) above.

It was noted that while in Sir John Anderson's view it seemed clear that really useful action to deny supplies of thorium to other countries was not possible, it was equally clear that if such action was to be attempted at all it should be taken quickly. Sir John Anderson had, however, assumed that the need of the cooperating Governments for large quantities of thorium in addition to or instead of the large quantities of uranium already secured had not been established.

On this point the Committee noted that the latest experimental data, while still incomplete, gave every promise that thorium would be of great use and that once the reaction had started it could be continued on a large scale without the use of further uranium.

The Committee were also reminded that while the extent of world supplies of thorium was unknown, the cost of purchasing the whole pre-war output of Brazil would be negligible in comparison with the general scale of expenditure on the project. Any objections to such action, therefore, must be based on considerations of security.

In a letter to the Chairman of the Committee from the Chairman of the Trust, dated March 8th,26 the Combined Policy Committee were asked to give guidance to the Trust as to the importance of acquiring or controlling supplies of thorium. The policy adopted in regard to Brazil would necessarily determine the line on which action should be taken to deal with supplies in India and the Netherlands East Indies, the other two large sources of supply. The letter proposed that an executive agreement on thorium between the Governments of the United States of America and Brazil should be negotiated in the near future which would provide for control of exports of thorium and for information to be furnished in regard to stock piles and exploration of deposits. The United Kingdom would probably not be a formal party to this agreement which might be based on the present relations existing between the United States and Brazil. In this event the equal participation of the United Kingdom and the United States in all rights and obligations under the agreement should be recorded formally presumably by an exchange of letters between the two Governments or in the Minutes of the Combined Policy Committee or the Combined Development Trust. In any case there would be full consultation between the Secretary of War and the Ambassador and their representatives at every stage in the negotiations. Careful consideration should be given to the diplomatic and commercial procedure to be followed.

There was general agreement that action on these lines in regard to Brazil was desirable. This raised the further question of the steps to be taken in respect to Travancore and the Netherlands East Indies.

After a full discussion the Committee:-

- (a) Agreed that the Trust should be directed to draw up the principal provisions of a proposed agreement between the United States and Brazilian Governments under which the United States Government would acquire certain thorium-bearing sands from Brazil, while the Brazilian Government would agree not to sell any thorium-bearing sands to any other country without consulting with the United States Government. The equal interest of the United Kingdom Government in this agreement should be recorded in some appropriate manner.
- (b) Agreed that the Trust should submit recommendations regarding the procedure to be followed in negotiating this agreement which would then be discussed between the Secretary of War and the British Ambassador and their representatives.
- (c) Agreed that when a political agreement had been negotiated with the Brazilian Government as indicated in (a) and (b) above, it would be for the Combined Development Trust to arrange for the negotiation of suitable contracts for the purchase of thorium from the Brazilians.
- (d) Agreed to recommend that the United Kingdom Government should take steps to secure that exports of thorium from Travancore should be controlled and to secure that the supply should be available to the two Governments. These steps should be so timed that control could be put into effect and supplies assured upon a satisfactory basis as soon as the negotiations with the Brazilian Government had been concluded.
- (e) Agreed that the Combined Development Trust should review as rapidly as possible the information available on thorium deposits in the Netherlands East Indies and should report the general result of this inquiry to the members of the Combined Policy Committee. Should these deposits be found to be of substantial importance, arrangements should be made between the United States and the United Kingdom members of the Committee for negotiations to be opened with the Netherlands Government with a view to securing control of these deposits.
- 5. Relations With the French.
 - (a) Position of the French Government.

Lord Halifax informed the Committee that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had had a conversation with M. Joliot on February 23rd in London. The Chancellor had been away from London for a few days after this meeting and Lord Halifax had not yet received a full report of it. From what he had heard, however, it appeared that it had passed off in general satisfactorily.²⁷

Took note of this information.

HARVEY H. BUNDY WILLIAM L. WEBSTER D. H. F. RICKETT

[On March 15, 1945, Secretary of War Stimson spoke to President Roosevelt about the status of atomic research and development and the need to decide between (a) an attempt at Anglo-American control through secrecy and (b) an international effort based on free interchange of scientific information and free access to the laboratories of the world. Roosevelt agreed that the matter must be decided before the first bomb was used, but he died on April 12 without having taken further action (The New World, 1939/1946, page 340).

On April 25 Stimson and Groves presented to President Truman two memoranda, one pointing out the important implications of the bomb for international relations, the other describing the genesis and current status of the atomic project. After further discussions Stimson saw the President again on May 2 and completed arrangements for the appointment of an advisory group, which came to be known as the "Interim Committee", to recommend early steps with regard to postwar policies and relations with other governments. Stimson served as Chairman. Assistant Secretary of State William L. Clayton was one of the members, and James F. Byrnes soon joined the group as a special representative of the President (The New World, 1939/1946, pages 342–346).

During May and June 1945 the principal civil and military officials of the United States, and their scientific advisers, held various meetings to discuss atomic developments, particularly with regard to (a) possible use of the atomic bomb against Japan, (b) the question of informing the Soviet Union, (c) domestic legislation, and (d) pos-²⁷ A record of the meeting between Anderson and Joliot, authorship not indicated, is in the Department of State files. According to this document, Joliot indicated that the Russians had been approached to ascertain whether they were interested in information on atomic energy; they said that they were, but, when they asked what had been done so far, were told that no information could be given. The memorandum concluded by saying that it was Anderson's impression that Joliot would most likely not take drastic action in the near future, but that he had made it clear to the Chancellor that France would turn to the Soviet Union unless admitted to collaboration by the United States and Great Britain on atomic energy. 3. Use of Weapon Against Third Parties.

FIELD MARSHAL WILSON stated that the British Government concurred in the use of the T. A. weapon against Japan. He added that the Prime Minister might wish to discuss this matter with the President at the forthcoming meeting in Berlin.30

The Committee:—Took note that the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States had agreed that T. A. weapons should be used by the United States against Japan, the agreement of the British Government having been communicated by Field Marshal Sir Henry Maitland Wilson.

4. Disclosure of Information by the Two Governments on the Use of the Weapon.

THE CHAIRMAN said there were two conclusions:

1. The scientific principle of the weapon would inevitably be known as soon as it is used, and other countries would understand that one of three or four processes had been employed.

2. The technical and mechanical difficulties encountered in the production of the weapon and the methods by which they have been overcome need not and should not be disclosed.

LORD HALIFAX said that the greater the amount of information which was disclosed to other countries, the less inducement there might be for them to agree to measures of international control, should we ever desire to suggest them.

THE CHARMAN said he was thinking of an earlier period, viz., the forthcoming meeting with Stalin.31 His own opinion had been very much influenced by the probable use within a few weeks after the meeting. If nothing was said at this meeting about the T. A. weapon, its subsequent early use might have a serious effect on the relations of frankness between the three great Allies. He had therefore advised the President to watch the atmosphere at the meeting. If mutual frankness on other questions was found to be real and satisfactory, then the President might say that work was being done on the development of atomic fission for war purposes; that good progress had been made; and that an attempt to use a weapon would be made shortly, though it was not certain that it would succeed. If it did succeed, it would be necessary for a discussion to be held on the best method of handling the development in the interests of world peace and not for destruction. If Stalin pressed for immediate disclosure the President might say that he was not prepared to take the matter further at the present time. The Chairman added that the knowledge of the large deposits in Sweden did not cause him to modify his advice to the President.

LORD HALIFAX said that he would propose to inform Sir John Anderson of what Mr. Stimson had said.

THE CHAIRMAN agreed.

6. Allocation of Material.

Mr. Bundy said that the supplies of material from the Belgian Congo received by the Trust,³² as well as some captured material which had been turned over to the Trust, were on their way to the United States, but it was appropriate that the position in regard to the allocation of material should be on record.

Lord Halifax observed that the effect of the decision, with which the Chancellor of the Exchequer entirely agreed, to allocate to the United States all the material which could be used in the American plants for the production of weapons against Japan, was that at the end of the war the United States would have a stock of weapons and of material in and awaiting process, while the United Kingdom would have no raw material except what it could secure by release at that date from Trust purchases. This was a position which caused the Chancellor some concern in relation to Parliament and public opinion and he desired that his position in the matter should be clearly understood. He hoped that when the time came for allocation of material for purposes other than the production of material for the present war, all relevant factors would be taken into account.

After further discussion the Committee:-

Determined that while the war lasts all uranium supplies received by the Combined Development Trust for the joint account of the United States and the United Kingdom should be allocated to the United States Government for the production of weapons for use against the common enemy. The Committee's attention having been called to the fact that this policy will leave Great Britain without any reserve of supplies of this material for future use, the Committee noted this statement of the British members and agreed that insofar as the material received by the Trust exceeds the quantity required for the production of weapons against the common enemy in the present war it should be held by the Combined Development Trust to be disposed of or otherwise dealt with in accordance with paragraph 3 (1) of the Agreement of 13th June 1944,³³ and that in making future allocations all relevant factors should be reviewed.

Memorandum by Mr. S. Maurice McAshan, Jr., and Colonel John Lansdale, on the Staff of the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves)

Report on Negotiations in Rio de Janeiro, June 27-July 10, 1945

1. McAshan, Lee,³⁴ Vance and Lansdale had lunch with Bouças at his office on 27 June 1945. We did not broach the subject of the proposed discussions because we had not had sufficient time to discuss the matter among ourselves. Bouças, however, asked us out of a clear sky whether we were here to discuss monazite sands. (At the next morning meeting he told us that the President had authorized him to conduct negotiations on this matter before he went to Mexico City.³⁵) We told him that monazite sands were the purpose of our visit but that we were not prepared to discuss details at that time. A meeting was arranged for the following morning. The five of us (McAshan, Lee, Volpe,³⁶ Vance and Lansdale) spent the afternoon and evening preparing for the meeting with Bouças.

³⁸ See footnote 23, p. 7. Paragraph 3(1) of the Agreement read as follows: "The Trust shall carry out its functions under the direction and guidance of the Combined Policy Committee, and as its agent, and all uranium and thorium and all uranium and thorium ores and supplies and other property acquired by the Trust shall be held by it in trust for the Two Governments jointly, and disposed of or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the direction of the Combined Policy Committee."

- 2. Because of Brazilian records of exports of monazite sands during the past few years and because we were using credit for private transactions, we decided not to attempt to start with a figure as low as 750 tons but rather 1500 tons. It was also agreed that it would be inadvisable to attempt a 99-year term for the agreement.
- 3. On 28 June at 9 A. M. we had a general discussion with Bouças. McAshan, Lee, Vance and Lansdale were present. We called attention to Lee's presence as a representative of the British Government, and explained that while the British were jointly interested with us in the negotiations, the agreement would be solely between the United States and Brazil.
- 4. We advised Mr. Bouças that thorium, of which monazite is a carrier, might have appreciably [appreciable] military significance although we had no definite knowledge of its potentialities at this time. We gave him no further details and Bouças was uncurious about the matter. At one point Bouças said that if the matter were a military secret, he did not want to know about it because there were certain persons in Brazil who could not be trusted.
- 5. The discussion covered the points of interest to us and was kept on a commercial basis. Agreement in principle was reached as to the points to be covered. In discussion of the necessary secrecy involved, he asked if we could not include some provisions for military participation by Brazil in end uses since it would then be easier for him to handle the matter with the required secrecy. We told him we were not in a position to discuss this aspect of the matter.
- 6. Mr. Bouças suggested several points to be covered in the agreement:
 - a. That Brazil be bound not to increase taxes or official fees during the period of the agreement.
 - b. That the United States might have to educate Brazilian inspectors if they were needed.

First Lt. Joseph Volpe, on the staff of General Groves.

- c. That the ports of shipment be specified by Brazil in order to facilitate export control.
- 7. Bouças also wanted annual renegotiation of price and quantity with a ten per cent increase per year in quantity. He finally agreed, however, on the three-year term with renegotiation of price every three years and a floor on quantities. He also agreed on successive options and gave the impression that he would agree to an indefinite series of options. Bouças also requested that some provision be made indicating an intention of the United States to continue to buy monazite sands from Brazil on an equitable basis as to quantity after the Indian market was reopened. He expressed the opinion that the agreement should be executed by the Brazilian foreign minister and by Mr. Berle.³⁷
- 8. The balance of the morning and afternoon was spent in making a preliminary draft of the agreement. Mr. Lee contributed materially in the work of drafting.
- 9. In the late afternoon, McAshan and Lansdale called again on Bouças with the preliminary draft.³⁸ Bouças went carefully over each provision. After due consideration, we called Bouças' attention to the indefinite term of the agreement as drafted and asked his advice as to the best way to handle the matter. He clearly had missed this point and stated that the agreement must have a definite limitation. He was of the opinion that five terms of three years each was all he could get Vargas to approve. At our insistence he agreed to try to obtain approval for ten terms. At the same time he insisted on a provision for the purchase of grades under six percent thoria; he gave as his reason the danger of a weak government refusing to enforce the export control if another foreign buyer offered a good price for lower grades. He cited the difficulty with Argentina on pyrethrum.
- 10. Bouças also insisted on including in the agreement clauses for provisional payments. Furthermore, he wanted six months' notice of the exercise of the option rather than the sixty days we had proposed, to enable producers to handle the labor problems involved in case of discontinuance of the agreement.
- 11. He asked also for a rewording of the non-discrimination clause to cover all amounts shipped under the agreement whether the shipments were to the United States or to another country by designation.
- 12. Bouças completely balked on paragraph 6 of the first draft which had to do with the limitation of use in Brazil. He insisted that the point was sufficiently covered in the reservation to Brazil of material for normal use and that it was politically impossible to insert any provision indicating that Brazil must first ask the United States before using within Brazil their own product.

38 Not printed.

- 13. Bouças left about seven in the evening with a copy of the draft to see the President. He later called McAshan and requested us to meet him at the train just before his departure for São Paulo. He told us at that time that the President had approved the agreement in principle but that the President had insisted on a commitment during the initial three-year period for the purchase of 3000 tons per year. We agreed to consider this point and to redraft the memorandum to cover the other points under discussion and to meet with him on Wednesday ³⁹ on his return to Rio. Bouças voluntarily returned to us the copy of the memorandum we had given him, for security reasons.
- 14. Vance, Volpe and Lansdale had called on Berle on Tuesday afternoon, 26 June and had advised him of the nature of our mission. On the morning of the 27th, McAshan, Lee and Lansdale called on him again. Friday morning, 29 June, McAshan and Lansdale reported to Mr. Berle the events to date and discussed the non-discrimination clause at length with him. On Friday morning the 6th of July, McAshan called on Berle and discussed the formalities of execution. Mr. Berle suggested that the execution should be by exchange of notes referred [referring?] to the initialled memorandum rather than by notes incorporating the text of the memorandum. Mr. Berle was thoroughly and constructively cooperative at all times. He gave us good advice on procedure which we followed as closely as changing circumstances permitted.
- 15. The intervening period until our next meeting with Bouças (delayed until Friday, 6th July) was spent in redrafting the arrangement. We determined to meet Bouças' request to include grades under six percent thoria in order to strengthen export control but with a limitation to twenty percent of the quantities purchased and at a substantial discount in price. Lee participated fully in the redrafting and concurred on all points. No material changes were made subsequent to Lee's departure on 4 July although the final draft was written the afternoon of 5 July.
- 16. The afternoon of 6 July McAshan, Vance and Lansdale met Bouças with the final draft. Bouças insisted on 3000 tons. We attempted to secure an increase in the number of options to fifteen, Bouças, however, would not budge. He warned us that failure to meet the President's request for 3000 tons or an insistence on an increase in the periods might result in the President requiring a complete reworking of the agreement and placing it in foreign office channels. He pointed out that the agreement would not be published and that nothing would be done to stimulate Brazilian production unless we wanted it, so that in point of fact, we would probably not find much in excess of 1300–1400 tons per year available for purchase. Bouças suggested that the memorandum be signed at that time in order to strengthen his hand in securing the final approval of the President. This was done.

- 16. Bouças took the original signed memorandum to the President. He telephoned McAshan at 8:30 P. M. on 6 July to say that the President had approved the agreement without further change but that he had not been able to get in touch with Velloso who had just arrived in Rio. At the same time Bouças expressed profuse thanks for the priority that we had secured for his son, George.
- 17. Saturday morning at 10 A. M., McAshan and Lansdale visited Mr. Berle who prepared the draft of a covering note to be exchanged in identical form between Velloso and Berle. Our signed memorandum in English was incorporated in the note by reference. A copy of this draft was handed to Bouças at 11 A. M. Bouças took this draft together with his copy of the memorandum of agreement and a résumé of the agreement and course of negotiation to Leon Velloso. The résumé which was in Portuguese was dictated by Bouças to his confidential secretary, Beatrice Brandão.
- 18. At 9:30 A. M. on 9 July, Berle's office reported he had an engagement with Velloso at 12, noon, at which time it was hoped that the signed notes would be exchanged. Bouças reported that he would be there and wanted Mr. Berle to insist on keeping the agreement out of the Brazilian Foreign Office document registry system which would take time and cause a loss in security.
- 19. Berle met Velloso at 12, noon, and found Velloso's "amour propre" wounded over the fact that President Vargas had not sent Velloso direct authorization to conclude the agreement. Velloso even kept Bouças waiting outside until 1:15 and then did not see him. Velloso also wanted to obtain the concurrence of Ministro Antonio Ferreira Braga (Foreign Office Chief of Economic Affairs) before exchanging notes.
- 20. Bouças went to work on the President's military aide to get Velloso direct instructions from Vargas and requested us not to take the matter up with Braga as suggested by Berle since he might not have been brought into the deal. Bouças reported about 5 P. M. that Velloso had a date with Vargas on Tuesday morning, 10 July, to secure authorization to conclude the exchange of notes. At noon, word was received that Velloso would not be able to see President Vargas before 4 P. M. at the earliest.

- 21. At 5 P. M. Velloso requested Mr. Berle to call at the Foreign Office at 6 P. M. presumably to exchange notes. At 5:25 P. M. Bouças advised that the Foreign Office required a Portuguese translation of the memorandum of agreement to be signed by McAshan and Bouças, the same persons who signed the English duplicate originals and further said that the Portuguese version would not be ready until Wednesday or Thursday since it was being made confidentially by Ministro Braga and an official translator in Itamariti.
- 22. At 6 P. M. Berle and Velloso exchanged notes in identical language, except that Berle's was in English and Velloso's was in Portuguese, both ratifying as an act of their respective governments the agreement of 6 July. Braga was the only other Brazilian present. Immediately thereafter, Berle handed Lansdale the original note from Velloso, the duplicate agreement of 6 July and a covering letter to the Secretary of State, Washington.
- 23. McAshan and Vance will handle the Portuguese translation 11 July or 12 July and Vance will bring a copy of it to Washington with a copy of Berle's note in English.

Throughout our negotiations Bouças was fully cooperative and stated that as far as he was concerned, the agreement must be handled on a basis of mutual trust because of its confidential nature. While he gave the impression of being in sympathy with us and of trying to assist us in writing an agreement which would obtain ready approval from President Vargas, Bouças skillfully used the fact that the agreement was being handled "out of channels" as a means of trading hard and driving a good bargain for his government. We feel, however, in view of the present political situation, a great deal more time would certainly have been required and it is very questionable whether the 33-year period or the same type of export control clauses would ever have been obtained through regular Brazilian channels.

We feel that Bouças is entitled to full recognition by the U. S. Government for his constructive assistance in this matter.

The Ambassador in Brazil (Berle) to the Secretary of State

RIO DE JANEIRO, July 10, 1945.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose herewith an original note dated at Rio de Janeiro on July 10, 1945,40 which is identical in tenor to a note of the same date delivered to the Brazilian Minister of Foreign Affairs and signed by me. The only difference between the notes is that that of the Brazilian Minister of Foreign Affairs is written in Portuguese whereas the Embassy's note is written in English.

To each note there is attached duplicate original of the agreement referred to in the note, being a memorandum of agreement between the United States of Brazil and the United States of America, dated July 6, 1945 and signed for the Government of Brazil by Valentim Bouças and for the Government of the United States by Mr. S. M. McAshan, Jr.

In view of the special request for security, this despatch and its enclosure is being entrusted to John Lansdale, Jr., Colonel, United States Army, General Staff, who will act as special courier for its transmission. Because of the security arrangements, this Embassy is not retaining a copy of the memorandum, though it has retained a copy of the note.

Respectfully yours,

A. A. BERLE, JR.

[Enclosure]

The American Ambassador (Berle) to the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs (Velloso)

RIO DE JANEIRO, July 10, 1945.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to inform Your Excellency that my Government agrees to the provisions of your note of this date to which is attached a duplicate original of a memorandum of agreement between our two Governments, dated July 6, 1945, signed on behalf of the United States by S. M. McAshan, Jr., and on behalf of Brazil by Valentim Bouças. The other duplicate original is attached hereto and made a part hereof.

This note and that of Your Excellency of today's date and in similar language constitute an agreement between our two Governments, and that they, having regard for their mutual security, will hold the existence of this agreement in the strictest confidence.

I avail myself [etc.]

ADOLF A. BERLE, JR.

[Subenclosure—Translation 41]

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF BRAZIL AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

1. This agreement between the Governments of the United States of Brazil and the United States of America shall be effective from 16th

⁴¹ Translation supplied by the editors.

July 1945 and, following upon the initial period provided for in paragraph three, hereof, shall continue in effect for so long as the successive options provided for in paragraph five, hereof, shall be exercised and carried out by the Government of the United States.

- 2. The Government of Brazil agrees to establish and maintain, during the whole time this agreement is in effect, restrictions on the export from Brazil of all grades of monazite sands or other carriers or compounds of thorium or of thorium, limiting the export of such materials to consignees in the United States or to other consignees designated or approved by the Government of the United States. All exports shall be from deep-water ports specified by the Government of Brazil.
- 3. For an initial period of three years beginning 16th July 1945, the Government of the United States agrees to purchase, directly or through an agent, from the Government of Brazil or sellers in Brazil, not less than 3000 metric tons, dry weight, per year, if available, of monazite sands averaging not less than 6% thoria or the equivalent weight of thoria in other compounds; however, not more than 20% by weight of the shipments under this agreement each year shall contain less than 6% thoria, based on separate analysis for each shipment. It is intended that every effort shall be made to deliver the highest possible grade of monazite sands and that in no event will monazite sands of a grade of 6% thoria content or higher be mixed with lower Purchases made by official and private buyers in the United States or by any others designated or approved by the Government of the United States shall be deducted from the total annual contractual obligations undertaken by the Government of the United States under this agreement, the Government of Brazil agreeing to keep a record of such purchases and to make such record available to the Government of the United States as requested.
- 4. The price to be paid by the Government of the United States for monazite sands during the initial three year period shall be U.S. $22 per metric ton for monazite sands containing between 4% and 4.99% thoria; U.S. $31 per metric ton for monazite sands containing between 5% and 5.99% thoria; U.S. $40 per metric ton for monazite sands containing between 6% and 6.99% thoria; for monazite sands containing 7% or more thoria the price shall be U.S. $6.66 per 1% of thoria content per metric ton, all dry weight.
- 5. The prices to be paid under this agreement represent delivery of the material f.o.b. carrier at Brazilian deep-water ports of export specified by the Government of Brazil. All export duties and all other taxes, if any, as well as warehouse charges and all other charges connected with placing the material on board carrier, including packaging in suitable containers, are to be for the account of the exporter and are included in the prices stipulated in this agreement. During the time this agreement is in effect the Government of Brazil will take steps to prevent the creation of new taxes, fees or other charges on the materials or the exportation thereof, or increases in taxes, fees or charges already in existence on the materials or the exportation thereof. It is further agreed that all contracts between the Government of the United States and the Government of Brazil or agencies thereof designated under the terms of this agreement shall follow the customary trade practices for a. provisional payments against ocean bills of lading in advance of final results of analysis and landed weights; and b. provisional payments against approved warehouse receipts for materials remaining unshipped thirty days after being made available for shipment at deep-water ports specified by the Government of Brazil, including the payment of storage charges after such thirty day period. The final payment of all invoices covering material purchased by the Government of the United States or its agents shall be based on landed net dry weights and independent analyses of the thoria content upon arrival at destination ports.

- 6. The Government of Brazil agrees that the Government of the United States shall have ten successive options to extend this agreement for periods of three years each, provided that notice of the exercise of such option be given to the Government of Brazil six months prior to the expiration of each such period of three years. During the time this agreement is in effect the Government of the United States shall have the right to purchase all or any part of the monazite sands or other carriers or compounds of thorium or of thorium produced in Brazil subject to the right of the Government of Brazil to reserve such reasonable quantities of these materials as may be required for normal industrial applications within Brazil. The prices to be paid during each such three year period shall be mutually agreed upon at the beginning of each such period on a fair and equitable basis; provided, however, that the quantities to be purchased in each such three year period shall be not less than the amount provided for in paragraph three hereof; and, provided further, that the prices per 1% of thoria content per metric ton so to be agreed upon shall be not less than those then being paid by the Government of the United States to any other seller in any other producing country.
- 7. In the event that the needs of the Government of the United States for monazite sands or other carriers or compounds of thorium become at any time such as to warrant a substantial increase in the production within Brazil of such materials, the Government of the United States agrees to furnish qualified geologists or other appropriate technical experts to collaborate with the appropriate authorities of the Government of Brazil in the survey, discovery and development of the production of these materials in Brazil. In order to assist the Government of the United States in determining the availability of these materials in Brazil, the Government of Brazil agrees from the date of this agreement to make freely available to duly accredited representatives of the Government of the United States all information concerning the existence and working of deposits of monazite sands or other carriers or compounds of thorium.

- 8. In the event that after the initial period of three years provided for in paragraph three hereof, there is a continuing demand on the part of the Government of the United States for monazite sands or other carriers or compounds of thorium, the Government of the United States undertakes that in the meeting of that demand due regard will be given to the desirability of maintaining imports from Brazil of such materials on a basis which will be fair and non-discriminatory in relation to imports from other producing countries into the United States, taking into account all deliveries made under this agreement.
- 9. The Government of the United States agrees to make available from time to time, if requested by the Government of Brazil, technical experts to facilitate and to advise on all measures of inspection and control which may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this agreement.
- 10. The Governments of the United States and Brazil reiterate their intention to use their best efforts to accomplish the purposes of this agreement and to that end shall adopt whatever measures may be desirable or necessary.

Draft Memorandum of Instruction From the United States and United Kingdom Governments to the Minister in Sweden (Johnson) 43

[London,] 20 July, 1945.

Subject: Recommended Approach to Swedish Government

- 1. At the outset of the discussion with the Swedish representatives, the necessity for complete Top Secret security should be impressed upon them together with the fact that only the minimum number of people essential to the negotiations should be acquainted with the subject.
- 2. It is suggested that the initial approach be conducted along the following lines:
- a. The U.K. and U.S. Governments have been conducting complex experiments and putting forth extensive efforts to determine the uses of uranium for military purposes. The experiments have indicated that it has definite military value but it is clear that full advantage of its potential uses can be realized only by nations with vast industrial capacity.

b. It is considered of the utmost importance to obtain control of the sources of uranium in view of their possible future significance to world peace.

c. The existence of uranium in Sweden in deposits of kölm, a hardened asphalt-like substance used for fuel, and in oil shale, is known to geologists. The uranium usually comprises less than one per cent of the material in which it is contained. It is believed that considerable and significant quantities of uranium can be recovered in fields which can be developed easily.

d. In view of the strategic importance of these deposits the Governments of U.K. and U.S. desire to ask the Government of Sweden to agree:

- (1) To effective control of its uranium bearing materials for a long period of years.
- (2) To prevent export of uranium bearing materials except with
 - consent of the two Governments.
- (3) To give the two Governments the privilege of first refusal on the uranium content of the Swedish supply of uranium bearing materials.
- e. In consideration of such an undertaking by the Government of Sweden the Governments of the U.K. and U.S. would be willing to agree to purchase a reasonable quantity of uranium bearing materials having in mind the rate at which the deposits can be worked economically.
- 3. If the proposals under 2.d and 2.e above should materialize, the appropriate contractual arrangements between an agency of the two of memorandum by Major Traynor, August 3, infra.

Governments and some agency of the Swedish Government might provide not only for sale of material but also for collaboration in exploration and development.

- 4. The best information presently available indicates that there is no production currently, though the small Närke field is being worked by the Swedish Admiralty for oil as a war time measure. It is understood that the larger, Västergötland, field is not being worked except as a small source of fuel for the production of agricultural lime. It is believed that the Swedish Government has control of the mineral rights at both fields but the situation in this respect should be investigated carefully. It may be that the existence of oil in both fields, though in uneconomical amounts, and the present interest of the Swedish Admiralty in the Närke field, might be used to facilitate special control measures.
- 5. It should not be necessary, at any rate at this stage, to disclose the fact that a recent investigation was specially made by a British official geologist with the cooperation of a Swedish mineral exploration company. Ostensibly the British geologist was in Sweden to discuss recent progress in geo-physics in Sweden and to discuss geological matters generally with competent authorities there. In the course of his visit he collected samples and made a few field excursions as a result of the special interest he has had for some time in the world's uranium deposits. As a result of this special enquiry, the amount of uranium oxide in the Swedish deposits has been estimated to be at least 80,000 tons; but it would probably be advisable not to be at all precise even in answer to questions.
- 6. As soon as the matter is opened by Mr. Johnson in this way he will then report what are the prospects of success in the negotiations so that suitable arrangements may be made for them to be carried on jointly in London or in Stockholm as may seem most satisfactory.

Memorandum by Major Harry S. Traynor, on the Staff of the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves)

[Washington,] August 3, 1945.

REPORT ON TRIP TO ENGLAND: 8 JULY TO 1 AUGUST 1945

1. Initial Approach to Ambassador Windnt.44

Major Taney 45 and Major Traynor arrived in London on 10 July 1945 and called on Ambassador Winant. The Ambassador was handed the letter from General Groves 46 which he immediately read.

John G. Winant, Ambassador in the United Kingdom.
 Maj. Clifford A. Taney, on the Staff of General Groves.

A general summary of the mission at hand was given verbally to the Ambassador with emphasis on the importance which Sweden and the Netherlands East Indies had recently assumed. The Ambassador was very interested in the latest development of the project and asked when success might be expected. To this question Major Traynor replied that he was not acquainted with exact dates but thought that important tests were not far distant.

The Ambassador explained that he was engaged for the next twenty-four hours and stated that as soon as several pressing matters at hand were taken care of he would see us again.

2. Memoranda by Dr. George Bain.47

Dr. Bain arrived in London on 11 July and at the request of the undersigned prepared summarized non-technical memorandums on the occurrence and possibilities of the desired minerals in Sweden and the Netherlands East Indies. (See Exhibits A and B.47a)

3. Delivery of Letter for Mr. Johnson 48 to Ambassador Winant.

After receiving cabled instructions from General Groves the envelope containing the letter to Mr. Johnson was delivered to the Ambassador on 11 July and the cable shown to him. At his request, a copy of the cable was prepared and handed to him.

In view of the importance which the occurrence of a test and possible consequent relaxation of security might have on impending negotiations, the Ambassador was informed by Major Traynor that tests might take place during the course of the negotiations, that news of this might conceivably get spread around, and that use might follow closely after tests. This information was conveyed to him in highest secrecy and understood by him as having that classification.

The Ambassador was also informed that brief non-technical one page summaries on both Sweden and the N.E.I. were being prepared for him. He indicated that he felt these were highly desirable. asked if commercial interests would be involved in the Netherlands and Swedish arrangements to which the reply was made that this was possible, and if so they would probably have to be taken care of in a manner similar to the Belgian agreement 49 by introducing The Trust as a two-government agent.

4. First Meeting with U.K. Representatives.

On 12 July, the first meeting (See Exhibit C 50-for Minutes of this meeting) with the British was held in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's office and was attended by Sir John Anderson, Ambassador Winant, Sir Ronald Campbell,⁵¹ Mr. R. S. Sayers,⁵² Major Taney, Major Traynor and Mr. D.H.F. Rickett, Sir John's confidential Secretary. A discussion as to how the approach should be made to the Netherlands Government was held and it was agreed that the best procedure would be for Sir John Anderson to see M. Van Kleffens, Netherlands Minister of Foreign Affairs, alone. It was mentioned by Sir Ronald Campbell that the Netherlands government was at present in a confused frame of mind, was somewhat wary of approaches made to them by the larger powers, would have to be handled carefully and that more would probably be accomplished if the initial contact was made in an informal talk by one person. Sir John Anderson seemed the logical one to do this because of his prior and personal acquaintance with M. Van Kleffens.

The approach put forth by Sir John Anderson was to point out that scientific developments had been such that uranium supplies of the world might become a source of danger if their exploitation was not controlled and recent research suggested that similar risks might be attached to thorium. The desire that the Netherlands Government would control all exports of monazite and thorium compounds extracted from it and not permit such exports without the consent of the contracting parties would then be expressed.

The possibility that commercial aspects might enter into the negotiations gave rise to the thought that the purchase of minimum quantities of monazite might have to be a consideration in order to obtain for the United States and the United Kingdom first refusal or option clause.

Mr. Winant emphasized the high order of security of the matter and that the arrangements should cover thorium deposits outside the mining company concessions. Sir John Anderson made an informal statement that he thought the top Netherlands Government representative could be trusted. It was the consensus of opinion of those present that the form of agreement with the Netherlands should be the sort of legal instrument as was made with the Belgians—that is a memorandum confirmed by an exchange of letters between the three Governments.

5. Sir John Anderson's Approach to M. Van Kleffens.

Immediately after the above described meeting with U.K. Representatives, Sir John Anderson met with M. Van Kleffens, Netherlands Minister of Foreign Affairs. (See Exhibit D ⁵³ for notes of this meeting). Sir John reported that he outlined to M. Van Kleffens in general terms the nature of the problem and the approach the U.K. and U.S. were disposed to make to it and that M. Van Kleffens said he had no doubt but that his Government would be entirely cooperative but that he would have to mention the matter to the Netherlands Prime Minister ⁵⁴ and Netherlands Minister for Overseas Territories. ⁵⁵

M. Van Kleffens was said to have promised to take the matter up immediately with his Government upon his return to The Hague on 17 July and propose that someone be designated by the Netherlands Government to deal with the matter, both diplomatically and scientifically, and inform Sir John of what could be arranged.

Sir John stated that he then asked that the person selected come to London the next week but that M. Van Kleffens was doubtful if this could be accomplished but promised to expedite the matter. Sir John also stated that he indicated it would be welcome to himself and Ambassador Winant if M. Van Kleffens could attend the next meeting with such experts as his government might designate and that M. Van Kleffens received this suggestion favorably.

6. Meeting with Mr. Herschel V. Johnson.

Mr. Herschel V. Johnson, United States Minister to Sweden, came to London on 14 July 1945, at the request of Ambassador Winant. On Sunday, 15 July 1945, Major Taney and Major Traynor met with Mr. Johnson for the purpose of giving him the necessary background and informing him in more detail of the job to be done. Ambassador Winant had had a short talk with Mr. Johnson the evening of the previous day and had delivered to him the letter dated 6 July 1945 from General L. R. Groves.

A brief résumé and genesis of the project was given to Mr. Johnson touching on formation of the idea, the original fostering of the work by the Office of Scientific Research and Development, the approved report of 17 June 1942 by V. Bush and J. B. Conant with the consequent assumption of large phases of the work by a special group of the Corps of Engineers under General L. R. Groves; the existence of production plants and communities; the high manpower and material priorities and requirements of the work; the high order of security surrounding the project; the fact that the end products were produced from uranium, the approval from President Truman for continuation of the work, the experimental status of thorium, the existence and inter-relation of agreements between the U.K. and U.S. covering the project, the existence of the Trust, the existence of a Belgian agreement and impending Brazilian agreement, the fact that an approach was being made to the Netherlands Government; and the fact that some measure of success and the breaking down of complete security might come during the process of negotiations.

The extreme secrecy of the entire subject was emphasized and it is felt that the need and justification for this was completely understood and appreciated by Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Johnson asked if a neutral country had ever been approached previously and was told it had not. He stated that the Swedes were a very intelligent and democratic people; that their form of government might make it difficult for them to concede [accede?] to our wishes, that they realized their perilous political and geographical positions and had no illusions about their being able to withstand for long any major avalanche of force that might be directed against them. Nevertheless, he trusted implicitly their Prime Minister, ⁵⁶ the retiring (August 1, 1945) and incoming Foreign Minister[s] and especially the permanent Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs. ⁵⁸

Mr. Johnson thought the matter would have to be handled with these top men, and further before his return to Sweden he desired to talk with Sir John Anderson and the Ambassador.

7. Meeting with Ambassador Winant and Mr. Johnson, 17 July 1945.

Mr. Johnson, Major Taney and Major Traynor discussed with Ambassador Winant the method of approaching the Swedes, the advisability of having the initial negotiations take place in Stockholm, the necessity of transmitting all important messages between Stockholm and London by courier, the special delicacy of the Swedish position rising out of Sweden's geographical and political positions and from the fact that the Swedish form of government restricts freedom to make security-cloaked governmental agreements especially where private interests were concerned and the fact that the situation might be further complicated by changes in the Swedish Cabinet on 1 August 1945 when a new Foreign Minister would take office.

Mr. Johnson stated he thought both the incoming and outgoing Foreign Ministers and the permanent Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs were favorably disposed towards the United Kingdom and the United States.

58 Stig Sahlin.

⁵⁷ Christian E. Günther and Östen Undén, respectively.

The possibility of using the assistance of the new British Minister to Sweden,⁵⁹ who had not yet assumed his post and whose experience had of late been in Argentina, was discussed but was considered impracticable and unwise. This, it was felt would merely extend information on the project to still another person who would not be in a position to play an essential role in the negotiations.

In conclusion, arrangements were made to meet with Sir John Anderson on Wednesday, 18 July to discuss with him, and decide upon Mr. Johnson's approach to the Swedish government.

8. Meeting with Sir John Anderson

On Wednesday, 18 July 1945, Ambassador Winant and Mr. Johnson met with Sir John Anderson to discuss the procedure to be followed in opening negotiations with the Swedish government. (See Exhibit E ⁶⁰—for notes of this meeting). Others present were Major Taney, Major Traynor, Mr. Sayers and Mr. Rickett.

Mr. Johnson expressed the view that if negotiations were opened in London, time would be lost inasmuch as the Swedish representative approached would have to return to Stockholm for instructions. Both Mr. Johnson and Ambassador Winant suggested the right course was for Mr. Johnson to see the Swedish Foreign Minister and his permanent Under Secretary together for the initial contact and when the possibilities of an agreement had been explored to continue final negotiations in London. Sir John Anderson was agreeable to this procedure.

Sir John Anderson suggested that Mr. Johnson might open by saying that as the Swedish Government would be aware, there was a scientific possibility that uranium might become of importance for military purposes. The U.S. and British Governments were carrying out research on this possibility, the results of which made them anxious as a matter of prudence to ensure that the exploitation of the large deposits of uranium known to exist in Sweden were properly controlled. The two Governments were anxious that the Swedish Government should give an undertaking not to permit the export of uranium except with their agreement and to grant to the two governments the right of first refusal on all Swedish uranium sup-In consideration of this undertaking the two Governments would be willing to enter into an agreement to purchase whatever might be considered a reasonable yearly quantity of uranium, having regard to the rate at which the deposits were capable of being economically worked.

Mr. Winant and Mr. Johnson expressed general agreement with the basis of negotiations suggested by Sir John and agreed that Mr.

⁵⁹ Cecil B. Jerram.

Winant should arrange for a memorandum to be drafted in consultation with Sir John's advisors setting out the approach on which Mr. Johnson would take up the matter in Stockholm.

Mr. Winant and Mr. Johnson said that they thought it would help to create a favorable atmosphere for the negotiations if the U.K. and U.S. Governments could expedite the implementation of the arrangements on post war supplies which had been agreed upon in principle with the Swedish government. Sir John remarked, that as Mr. Winant knew one of the difficulties in the negotiations relative to the commodities which Sweden wished to purchase from the U.K. were that they were in very short supply, but that he would see what could be done to carry out Mr. Winant's suggestion.

9. Preparation of Swedish Memorandum for Mr. Johnson.

In accordance with instructions obtained at the above described meeting on 18 July, Messrs. Sayers and Rickett prepared a preliminary draft of approach for Mr. Johnson. This was revised by Major Taney, Major Traynor and Dr. Bain and shown to Ambassador Winant and Mr. Johnson on 19 July who suggested a minor change to make the semi-technical explanation of the uranium deposits clearer to the layman. This change was made, and the draft of 20 July 1945, (See Exhibit F) ⁶¹ was shown to and approved by Colonel John Lansdale and Major John E. Vance and later by Ambassador Winant and Mr. Johnson. A copy of this approved 20 July Draft was delivered to Mr. Rickett for transmittal to Sir John Anderson.

10. Information from M. Van Kleffens.

Late Friday evening, 20 July 1945, M. Van Kleffens, who had returned to London, reported to Sir John Anderson that he had contacted his Prime Minister and Minister for Overseas Territories on the matter and that he expected to return to The Hague on Monday July 23 and expected to arrange the desired meeting in London with representatives of his government by the middle of the week of 22–28 July.

11. Approval of Swedish Memorandum by Sir John Anderson.

On 23 July, Sir John Anderson informed Colonel Lansdale of his approval of the 20 July Draft Memorandum prepared for Mr. Johnson with the exception that he desired to add a paragraph. This paragraph is No. 6. Its addition was approved by Ambassador Winant and Mr. Johnson.

12. Information on Netherlands Delegation.

Mr. Rickett informed Major Traynor on 25 July 1945 that Sir John Anderson had received word from M. Van Kleffens that the ⁶¹ Ante, p. 24.

Netherlands delegation, consisting of M. Van Kleffens, M. Kramers and M. J. Van den Broeck, former Netherlands Minister of Finance, would be in London on Monday, 30 July for the purpose of opening negotiations. Mr. Rickett stated that the Dutch were somewhat surprised when told that United States representatives would also be present. Apparently they had not understood this to be the case from M. Van Kleffens' discussion with Sir John Anderson.

13. Review of Draft of Netherlands Agreement by Ambassador Winant.

On 27 July 1945, a draft of a proposed "Memorandum of Agreement Between the Netherlands Government and Governments of U.S. and U.K." 62 was handed to Ambassador Winant. The Ambassador thought the memorandum was satisfactory as a preliminary draft. He was told that it followed substantially the same lines as the Brazilian agreement. The Ambassador then asked if any change had been made from the Brazilian form to take into recognition the different form of the Netherlands Government. Colonel Lansdale told him that no such change had been incorporated in the proposed Netherlands agreement because such an agreement was considered an external matter to which the form of government subscribing to it made little difference. The Ambassador agreed that this approach was correct.

14. Colonel Lansdale's Meeting with Secretary of War and Mr. Bundy.

Colonel Lansdale met with the Secretary of War and Mr. Harvey Bundy at Prestwick, Scotland on 27 July 1945. The impending negotiations with the Netherlands and Swedish governments were made known to both gentlemen.

15. Second Meeting with Netherlands Representatives.

On 30 July 1945, a meeting was held in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's office with the Netherlands' representatives. Those present were Sir John Anderson; Ambassador Winant; M. Van Kleffens, Netherlands Foreign Minister; Dr. Kramers, a Dutch Physicist; Sir Thomas Barnes, Solicitor of the Treasury; Sir Ronald Campbell; Colonel John Lansdale; Major John Vance; Mr. Rickett and Mr. Sayers. (M. Van den Broeck, Netherlands former Minister of Finance was delayed by bad weather and could not attend this meeting).

Sir John Anderson reviewed his previous approach to M. Van Kleffens for Ambassador Winant, mentioning the Brazilian agreement, negotiations with the State of Travancore, and his previous suggestion to the Netherlands that they undertake to restrict exports of thorium ores in return for an agreement by the U.S. and U.K. to purchase specified quantities.

M. Van Kleffens stated that the Netherlands Government agreed in principle but commented that to date nothing had been said as to the form an agreement was to take. He mentioned possible difficulties since normally international agreements made by the Netherlands went before their Parliament. However, he believed that the impending agreement could be handled without publicity. He further stated that he was aware of the danger in allowing the material in question to fall into the hands of enemies.

Sir John again emphasized the need for security.

Colonel Lansdale asked if M. Van den Broeck would have figures on commercial aspects and M. Van Kleffens stated that he would since M. Van den Broeck was Chairman of the Board of the Billiton Company.

M. Van Kleffens stated that in considering restrictions on the material the Netherlands would want a certain amount for themselves for experimental purposes. To this statement, Sir John Anderson replied that the Belgian agreement had provided for the retention of material for such purposes and felt that there would be no difficulty in this respect in the impending agreement.

M. Van Kleffens mentioned that there were many deposits of minerals in the Celebes but that these were largely unexplored, and that there might be thorium containing material in other parts of the Netherlands East Indies. Mr. Sayers said thorium might occur anywhere that tin was found to which M. Van Kleffens stated there was no tin in the Celebes. (This agrees with Dr. Bain's information). Dr. Kramers mentioned the Republic of Colombia as a possible source of thorium.

Sir John Anderson suggested a meeting of technical representatives when M. Van den Broeck arrived. All agreed that more detailed facts were needed and that such a meeting should take place as soon as M. Van den Broeck arrived and that following the meeting a memorandum of agreement would be drafted.

M. Van Kleffens stated that he hoped to have the business concluded by the end of the week of 29 July-4 August 1945.

16. Meeting with Sir Thomas Barnes.

Immediately after the meeting with the Netherlands representatives, Colonel Lansdale and Major Vance met with Sir Thomas Barnes . . .

17. Colonel Lansdale's Discussion with Ambassador Winant.

During the afternoon of 30 July 1945, Ambassador Winant discussed with Colonel Lansdale several aspects of the new British government. He informed Colonel Lansdale that Mr. Attlee had not been aware of the D.S.M.⁶³ project, prior to becoming Prime Minister and that he (Mr. Winant) and Mr. Churchill ⁶⁴ had prepared a memorandum for Mr. Attlee on the subject.

18. Third Meeting with Netherlands Representatives.

M. Van den Broeck arrived in London on 30 July 1945. In accordance with arrangements made on 30 July, a meeting was held on 31 July. Those present were: Sir Thomas Barnes, Sir Ronald Campbell, Mr. Rickett, Mr. Sayers, M. Van den Broeck, Dr. H. A. Kramers, Colonel Lansdale, Major Vance and Dr. Bain.

Sir Thomas Barnes reviewed the general agreement reached on 30 July that control of the materials would be provided for and that the agreement itself would have the appearances of a commercial document.

M. Van den Broeck requested disclosure of the Belgian agreement but it was clearly stated by Sir Thomas Barnes and Colonel Lansdale that the Belgian agreement contained a clause prohibiting its disclosure by the governments involved. M. Van den Broeck said he had no doubt it dealt with uranium since the Belgian Congo was rich in that material. He further stated that his government wished to be informed of the development of the project and the extent of its progress, emphasizing the Netherlands nearness to Germany. He added that the Netherlands government would wish to reserve the right to use thorium for defense purposes and not solely for industry.

Colonel Lansdale replied that our experiments on thorium were entirely preliminary and Sir Thomas Barnes added that any disclosure of the project was a matter of high policy. He asked the Netherlands government to trust the U.K. and the U.S. to keep the material out of the wrong hands, and that in any case the group present could make no disclosures of any sort.

M. Van den Broeck agreed to leave these points in abeyance but said that any agreement that might be reached would be subject to a further discussion on the matter of revealing progress on the project to the Netherlands government.

Sir Thomas Barnes said that in accepting this the U.K. and U.S. were not agreeing to a later disclosure but only recognizing that the Netherlands might again bring up the request. M. Van den Broeck countered by saying he could not guarantee that the Netherlands would enter into an agreement without a disclosure.

A semi-technical discussion followed. It became apparent that before the Japanese occupation monazite was not separated as such in the N.E.I. but rather that the tin ore, after being removed from the deposits, contained a small amount of monazite which was removed at the smelters in Holland. Or in other words, most of the monazite which occurs in the tin ore is left in the N.E.I. as waste material mixed with all of the original base rock and is probably not recoverable except at great expense. In the past there has been only a small demand for monazite so no effort has been made to produce the material.

The only purchaser before 1939 was Aver Gesellschaft with offices in Frankfurt and Berlin. M. Van den Broeck believed the use was for gas mantles and not for experimental purposes. He did not know the exact amounts of monazite sold but thought it was only a few hundred tons in comparison with some 20,000 tons of tin in 1939. He mentioned a price of $60 to $80 per ton in Holland for monazite containing 6 per cent to 8 per cent thoria, which was the only grade for which a market existed and stated there were no stocks of low grade monazite available. He did not know the extent of monazite reserves.

It was agreed that all grades of monazite should be controlled and generally agreed to limit export of all materials containing thorium in "recoverable amounts", leaving the definition of the term "recoverable amounts" to discussion from time to time.

In further discussion of prices, M. Van den Broeck said that freight from the N.E.I. to the Netherlands was $14 to $16 per ton. A periodic adjustment of prices was suggested.

M. Van den Broeck stated that if increased production was wanted the price for monazite would be much higher and asked if increased production was desired. He was given a negative answer.

In the event of increased production M. Van den Broeck said it might be done either in the N.E.I. or the Netherlands. (It is quite probable that the only successful production on a large scale would have to be carried out in the N.E.I.—Vance.)

M. Van den Broeck said he would return to the Netherlands on 2 August and would get figures on present production prices, etc. from his technical people.

M. Van den Broeck again referred to the Netherlands requirements of thorium and to their request for project information. It was concluded that a draft of an agreement would be prepared for M. Van den Broeck by 4 P. M. of 31 July and that on 1 August it might be advisable (after a morning meeting to discuss the draft by those then present) to have a meeting of Sir John Anderson, Ambassador Winant and M. Van Kleffens to consider the agreement and at the same time discuss the disclosure request.

An effort was made to limit the amount of monazite reserved for the Netherlands to a specified figure such as 20-30 tons but M. Van den Broeck objected and wanted the amount left open for the Dutch to determine saying that they could not bind themselves to restrict the use of their own resources and stated it should not be necessary since they were already agreeing to keep the material out of the hands of the enemy.

19. Meeting with Ambassador Winant.

Colonel Lansdale reviewed the essence of the negotiations of the morning meeting with Ambassador Winant. At the suggestion that perhaps a follow-up should be made to Mr. Herschel Johnson on the Swedish matter the Ambassador advised against it and stated he thought Mr. Johnson was probably waiting for the new Swedish Minister of Foreign Affairs to take office on 1 August before approaching the Swedish government.

20. Fourth Meeting with Netherlands Representatives.

On 1 August 1945 Sir Thomas Barnes, Mr. Rickett and Mr. Sayers representing the U.K.; Colonel Lansdale, Major Vance and Dr. Bain representing the U.S.; M. Van den Broeck and Dr. Kramers representing the Netherlands met to consider a memorandum of agreement.⁶⁷ . . .

The British Prime Minister (Attlee) to President Truman 68

[London,] August 8, 1945.

When we were at Potsdam the potentiality of the atomic bomb had not become actuality and the pressure of immediate problems was too heavy to give us the opportunity of discussing the implications of success.

The attack of [on] Hiroshima has now demonstrated to the world that a new factor pregnant with immense possibilities for good or evil has come into existence.

Thoughtful people already realise that there must be a revaluation of policies and a readjustment of international relations. There is widespread anxiety as to whether the new power will be used to serve or to destroy civilisation. The economic effects of the discovery will probably not reveal themselves for some years: its influence on international relations is immediate.

I believe that our two nations are profoundly convinced that if civilisation is to endure and progress, war must be banished for ever.

I consider, therefore, that you and I, as Heads of the Governments which have control of this great force, should without delay make a joint declaration of our intentions to utilise the existence of this great power not for our own ends, but as trustees for humanity in the interests of all peoples in order to promote peace and justice in the world.

The problems of control and the effect of the existence of this power on the new world organisation will require careful consideration, but I believe that a declaration of intentions made now will have great value.⁶⁹

Memorandum by the Minister in Sweden (Johnson)

[Stockholm,] August 10, 1945.

On July 27, on my return from London, I called to see Mr. Stig Sahlin, Secretary General of the Swedish Foreign Office. and acquainted him with the substance of the draft instructions which I had received jointly from the United States and United Kingdom Governments as set forth in a document dated July 20, 1945, a copy of which I brought with me. Mr. Sahlin said that he realised the great importance of the suggestions and requests of the two Governments, that he would immediately acquaint the Prime Minister, and that our desire for utmost secrecy would be fully preserved. He said that Mr. Undén, who would assume office as Foreign Minister on August 1. would be informed and that in addition to him and the Prime Minister it would be necessary to advise Mr. Gjores, the Minister of Supply. Mr. Sahlin said that he was leaving Stockholm on August 4 for a holiday of two or three weeks; that during his absence his position would be occupied by Mr. Vilhelm Assarsson, the Deputy Secretary General; and that I would probably agree that it would be advisable to inform Mr. Assarsson as it would be through Mr. Assarsson that the matter would have to be treated until his return. I agreed.

I saw Mr. Assarsson on the evening of July 28 and mentioned the matter to him briefly. We did not discuss it in detail as he had already been informed of the nature of the approach by Mr. Sahlin.

[&]quot;Replying to your Number 1 of 8 August, I am in general agreement with your proposal contained therein.

[&]quot;Please send me for consideration a draft of the joint 'declaration of intentions' which you consider suitable for issue at this time." (Copy obtained from Department of Defense files)

On August 2 I called to see Mr. Sahlin to inform him that I had an appointment with the new Foreign Minister, Mr. Undén, for the following day and to inquire if he could make any suggestions which might be helpful in bringing up our business with the Foreign Minister. Mr. Sahlin informed me that the Foreign Minister had been fully acquainted with which [what] I had told him at our previous meeting and that Mr. Undén had discussed the matter with the Prime Minister. Mr. Sahlin said with respect to the American and British desire for the Swedish Government to agree to effective control of its uranium bearing materials that there would be no difficulty on this point as under Swedish law effective and complete control can be attained through withholding of licenses for export. He expressed some misgivings that the Government would agree to committing itself to American and British control of the uranium supply for a long period of years and suggested also that Swedish scientists might find uses for the material for peaceful purposes.

On August 3 I called to see Mr. Undén and gave him orally in considerable detail the substance of the draft instructions of July 20. Mr. Undén did not make any commitment but said that there would be no difficulty on the point of control as the Swedish Government was prepared to put that into effect immediately. He said he would welcome the visit to Stockholm of the American experts who had been dealing with this question and that our proposals might be discussed by those experts and myself with Mr. Assarsson and Mr. Sahlin. He also suggested that the Swedish Government would probably add one or two other people to the talks. The only name he mentioned was that of Professor Siegbahn, the noted scientist who has specialised in experiments with uranium. On the same day I sent a telegram to Ambassador Winant suggesting that Col. Lansdale and Major Vance come to Stockholm at once.

Col. Lansdale and Major Vance arrived in Stockholm on August 5. On August 7 the new British Minister, Mr. Jerram, accompanied by Mr. Labouchère, the Counsellor of the British Legation, called to advise me that he had been instructed by his Government to associate himself with me in the present undertaking. He also advised me that Mr. Sayers ⁷¹ from the Cabinet Office in London had arrived in Stockholm to assist him (Mr. Sayers had worked on the matter in London with Col. Lansdale and Major Vance).

On August 3 the British Minister and I called on the Foreign Minister, Mr. Undén, at noon and left with him a draft memorandum prepared by Col. Lansdale and Major Vance with the collaboration of Mr. Sayers, setting forth in detail the American and British objectives. We made clear to Mr. Undén that this draft was designed to furnish him and his associates with a definite statement in writing of our proposals, which they could examine and study and that it was not offered as a suggested form of the agreement which we hoped would be concluded with his Government. Mr. Undén then read the draft agreement carefully and commented that it went "a long way". He said that it would be given very careful study and that he would indicate to me as soon as possible when there might be a meeting of our experts with his own. From Mr. Undén's remarks it was clear that the Swedish Government will put the uranium supplies in this country under strict control but he did not suggest that it is ready to assume a definite obligation to the American and British Governments in this connection. I urged upon him the importance which we attach to having Sweden's agreement that none of this material will be exported without the prior consent of the American and British Governments; that the matter was of such vital importance that we could not feel satisfied by the institution of a system of control on the part of the Swedish Government which might at a later date, in the absence of any contrary obligation, be modified to permit of export. We danced warily around the subject of Russia but Mr. Undén and I had a perfect understanding on this matter. He suggested I was afraid that the Swedish Government might not be able later to resist pressure for granting at some time in the future export licenses for this material. I replied that I was not suggesting that. but that I was apprehensive lest the known existence of such material in Sweden might constitute a great temptation to exert extreme presdevelopment for important peacetime uses.

There appears little doubt that the political implications involved in agreeing to our requests are the considerations uppermost in the mind of Mr. Undén. In this respect he doubtless reflects the thinking of the Prime Minister and of others whom he has had to consult. Mr. Undén mentioned in passing that Swedish scientists might find uranium bearing material in this country could offer a large field for development for important peacetime uses.

It is difficult to assess at the present moment the strength of what may be Swedish opposition to committing themselves to the U.S. and Great Britain for a long period of years on this matter, or to assuming a concrete obligation to us with respect to institution of a monopoly on uranium bearing material. This point should become clearer at our next meeting after Mr. Undén and his collaborators have been able to examine our proposals in detail. I hope before this meeting with Mr. Undén takes place that Col. Lansdale and Major Vance and I, together with the British Minister and Mr. Sayers, may have an opportunity for an informal discussion with Mr. Assarsson. I have suggested this and Mr. Assarsson has agreed. Professor Siegbahn would probably be present at the meeting.

London, 11 August, 1945.

Number 2. Personal. Thank you for your telegram number 1 of August 9th.72 Since its receipt I have read the admirable statement which you included in your broadcast of August 9th 73 which in fact amounts to a declaration of intentions of the kind I had in mind. In these circumstances I think that any joint declaration should wait until the means of control and the implications in the field of international relations have been more fully considered between those concerned. In the meantime I propose myself to issue as soon as possible a statement in the following terms. I hope that all this will be in accordance with your views.

"Since I issued a statement on the day of the release of the first atomic bomb, nearly a week ago, the vast and terrible effects of this new invention have made themselves felt. The last of our enemies has offered surrender. The events of these tremendous days reinforce the words in that statement to the effect that we must pray that the discovery which led to the production of the atomic bomb will be made to conduce to peace among the nations, and that instead of wreaking measureless havoc upon the entire globe, it may become a perennial fountain of world prosperity. President Truman in his broadcast of August 9th has spoken of the preparation of plans for the future control of the bomb, and of a request to Congress to cooperate to the end that its production and use may be controlled and that its power may be made an overwhelming influence towards world peace. It is the intention of His Majesty's Government to put all their efforts into the promotion of the objects thus foreshadowed, and they will lend their full cooperation to the end." 74

am not unmindful of the fact that when in Potsdam I talked with you about the question whether we could be safe in sharing the atomic bomb with Russia while she was still a police state and before she put into effect provisions assuring personal rights of liberty to the individual citizen.⁷⁶

I still recognize the difficulty and am still convinced of the importance of the ultimate importance of a change in Russian attitude — toward individual liberty but I have come to the conclusion that it would not be possible to use our possession of the atomic bomb as a direct lever to produce the change. I have become convinced that any demand by us for an internal change in Russia as a condition of sharing in the atomic weapon would be so resented that it would make the objective we have in view less probable.

I believe that the change in attitude toward the individual in Russia will come slowly and gradually and I am satisfied that we should not delay our approach to Russia in the matter of the atomic bomb until that process has been completed. My reasons are set forth in the memorandum I am handing you today. Furthermore, I believe that this long process of change in Russia is more likely to be expedited by the closer relationship in the matter of the atomic bomb which I suggest and the trust and confidence that I believe would be inspired by the method of approach which I have outlined.

Faithfully yours,

[Henry L. Stimson]

Memorandum by the Secretary of War (Stimson) to President $Truman^{77}$

[Washington,] 11 September, 1945.

Subject: Proposed Action for Control of Atomic Bombs

The advent of the atomic bomb has stimulated great military and probably even greater political interest throughout the civilized world. In a world atmosphere already extremely sensitive to power, the introduction of this weapon has profoundly affected political considerations in all sections of the globe.

In many quarters it has been interpreted as a substantial offset to the growth of Russian influence on the continent. We can be certain that the Soviet government has sensed this tendency and the temptation will be strong for the Soviet political and military leaders to acquire this weapon in the shortest possible time. Britain in effect already has the status of a partner with us in the development of this weapon. Accordingly, unless the Soviets are voluntarily invited into the partnership upon a basis of cooperation and trust, we are going to maintain the Anglo-Saxon bloc over against the Soviet in the possession of this weapon. Such a condition will almost certainly stimulate feverish activity on the part of the Soviet toward the development of this bomb in what will in effect be a secret armament race of a rather desperate character. There is evidence to indicate that such activity may have already commenced.

⁷⁶ See Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1155.

If we feel, as I assume we must, that civilization demands that some day we shall arrive at a satisfactory international arrangement respecting the control of this new force, the question then is how long we can afford to enjoy our momentary superiority in the hope of achieving our immediate peace council objectives.

Whether Russia gets control of the necessary secrets of production in a minimum of say four years or a maximum of twenty years is not nearly as important to the world and civilization as to make sure that when they do get it they are willing and cooperative partners among the peace loving nations of the world. It is true that if we approach them now, as I would propose, we may be gambling on their good faith and risk their getting into production of bombs a little sooner than they would otherwise.

To put the matter concisely, I consider the problem of our satisfactory relations with Russia as not merely connected with but as virtually dominated by the problem of the atomic bomb. Except for the problem of the control of that bomb, those relations, while vitally important, might not be immediately pressing. The establishment of relations of mutual confidence between her and us could afford to await the slow progress of time. But with the discovery of the bomb, they become immediately emergent. These relations may be perhaps irretrievably embittered by the way in which we approach the solution of the bomb with Russia. For if we fail to approach them now and merely continue to negotiate with them, having this weapon rather ostentatiously on our hip, their suspicions and their distrust of our purposes and motives will increase. It will inspire them to greater efforts in an all out effort to solve the problem. the solution is achieved in that spirit, it is much less likely that we will ever get the kind of covenant we may desperately need in the This risk is, I believe, greater than the other, inasmuch as our objective must be to get the best kind of international bargain we can—one that has some chance of being kept and saving civilization not for five or for twenty years, but forever.

The chief lesson I have learned in a long life is that the only way you can make a man trustworthy is to trust him; and the surest way to make him untrustworthy is to distrust him and show your distrust.

If the atomic bomb were merely another though more devastating military weapon to be assimilated into our pattern of international relations, it would be one thing. We could then follow the old custom of secrecy and nationalistic military superiority relying on international caution to prescribe [proscribe?] the future use of the weapon as we did with gas. But I think the bomb instead constitutes merely a first step in a new control by man over the forces of nature too revolutionary and dangerous to fit into the old concepts. I think it really caps the climax of the race between man's growing technical power for destructiveness and his psychological power of self-control and group control—his moral power. If so, our method of approach to the Russians is a question of the most vital importance in the evolution of human progress.

Since the crux of the problem is Russia, any contemplated action leading to the control of this weapon should be primarily directed to Russia. It is my judgment that the Soviet would be more apt to respond sincerely to a direct and forthright approach made by the United States on this subject than would be the case if the approach were made as a part of a general international scheme, or if the approach were made after a succession of express or implied threats or near threats in our peace negotiations.

My idea of an approach to the Soviets would be a direct proposal after discussion with the British that we would be prepared in effectto enter an arrangement with the Russians, the general purpose of which would be to control and limit the use of the atomic bomb as an instrument of war and so far as possible to direct and encourage thedevelopment of atomic power for peaceful and humanitarian purposes. Such an approach might more specifically lead to the proposal that we would stop work on the further improvement in, or manufacture of, the bomb as a military weapon, provided the Russians and the British would agree to do likewise. It might also provide that we would be willing to impound what bombs we now have in the United States provided the Russians and the British would agree with us that in no event will they or we use a bomb as an instrument of war unless all three Governments agree to that use. We might also consider including in the arrangement a covenant with the U. K. and the Soviets providing for the exchange of benefits of future developments whereby atomic energy may be applied on a mutually satisfactory basis for commercial or humanitarian purposes.

I would make such an approach just as soon as our immediate political considerations make it appropriate.

I emphasize perhaps beyond all other considerations the importance of taking this action with Russia as a proposal of the United States—backed by Great Britain—but peculiarly the proposal of the United States. Action of any international group of nations, including many small nations who have not demonstrated their potential power or responsibility in this war would not, in my opinion, be taken seriously by the Soviets. The loose debates which would surround such proposal, if put before a conference of nations, would provoke but scant favor from the Soviet. As I say, I think this is the most important point in the program.

After the nations which have won this war have agreed to it, there will be ample time to introduce France and China into the covenants and finally to incorporate the agreement into the scheme of the United Nations. The use of this bomb has been accepted by the world as the result of the initiative and productive capacity of the United States, and I think this factor is a most potent lever toward having our proposals accepted by the Soviets, whereas I am most skeptical of obtaining any tangible results by way of any international debate. I urge this method as the most realistic means of accomplishing this vitally important step in the history of the world.

My Dear Mr. Ambassador: I have to inform you that according to the procedure agreed between our two Governments, the Government of the United States has negotiated and concluded with the Government of Brazil an Agreement 78 in the form transmitted to Mr. J. Balfour by letter from the Secretary of State, dated August 27, 1945.79

I understand that a representative of the Government of the United Kingdom was present and the interest of the United Kingdom was disclosed to the Brazilian Government at these negotiations. I trust that the Government of the United Kingdom concurs in the terms of the Agreement as finally concluded.

I understand that the Government of the United Kingdom is prepared to assume the same obligations and to acquire the same rights as those it would have assumed and acquired if the Agreement had been made with the Government of Brazil by the Governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom jointly, and the Government of the United States is prepared to do all acts necessary to secure to the Government of the United Kingdom the rights which it would have acquired if the Agreement had been so made.

In this connection, I propose that the Combined Development Trust should act on behalf of the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom in all matters relating to the fulfillment of this Agreement.

STOCKHOLM, September 22, 1945.

My Dear General Groves: I received your Top Secret letter of July 6 in London on July 14 from Major Harry S. Traynor. I now enclose the original copy in English of a note to me from Mr. Östen Undén, Swedish Minister for Foreign Affairs, and signed by him. The contents of this note are self-explanatory. A copy was handed by the Foreign Minister to the British Minister and has, I understand, been transmitted by him to London.

Mr. Undén gave, on behalf of his Government, the oral assurance that until the legislation contemplated by the note has become effective, which will put control of uranium-bearing materials completely in the hands of the Government, that the Swedish Government will, through the machinery of existing law, control and prevent the exportation of any uranium-bearing materials. The Government will simply refuse to issue any licenses for export of this material. I understand that the legislation is to be introduced into Parliament early in October and within a month or six weeks thereafter should be in full effect. I requested Mr. Undén also to agree that if any request, formal or informal, by any foreign Power to obtain use of or control of uranium-bearing materials in Sweden should be presented to his Government, that the United States and Great Britain would be immediately informed. Mr. Undén said that he personally was willing to give such an assurance but that he would have to consult with the Prime Minister and certain other colleagues in the Government and get their approval. On September 13 he sent for me and stated that he was authorized to give a formal oral assurance that the United States and Great Britain would be informed immediately of any request by any foreign Power to obtain use of or control of uranium-bearing materials in Sweden, which request might be of a "serious" nature. He explained the expression "serious" by saying that if an ordinary commercial request should be made for supplies of this material, for instance as a coloring agent in the manufacturing of pottery glazes, it would not be considered a "serious" request. In any event, whether the request should be "serious" or not, exportation would be prohibited by the proposed legislation, and in the meantime licenses for export for any purpose would be refused by the Government.

It is my considered opinion that the obligations undertaken by the Swedish Government in the solemn declaration which is embodied in this note fully achieve our essential purposes. The requests we made in the original draft for exploitation and exclusive export rights to this material were in my opinion impracticable from the Swedish point of view and unobtainable under present world conditions.

I would like to express to you the appreciation I feel for the very able and invaluable services of Colonel Lansdale and Major Vance in the negotiation of this agreement. Colonel Lansdale will fill in this report to you orally when he returns to Washington. He and Major Vance kept a daily record of our progress and that, I believe, is already in your hands.

I should add that no papers in connection with this matter are being kept in the files of this Legation. All those papers which Colonel Lansdale and I considered important are being returned to Washington and the others are being burnt. There is only one English copy of the agreement in the secret files of the Swedish Government, together with one copy of a Swedish translation.

I am likewise enclosing a Swedish translation furnished by the Foreign Office of the English note.

Sincerely yours,

HERSCHEL V. JOHNSON

[Enclosure]

The Swedish Minister for Foreign Affairs (Undén) to the American Minister (Johnson)

STOCKHOLM, September 11, 1945.

Monsieur LE Ministre: The proposals that you, together with the British Minister, handed over to me on August 3rd, 1945, 2 have been subject to a close study by those members of the Swedish Government whom they would most directly concern. After these deliberations, my colleagues and my-self have come to the following conclusions.

We consider it excluded, were it but on constitutional grounds, that the Swedish Government, without the knowledge and assent of the Riksdag, or at any rate of the Utrikesnämnd, so would enter into an agreement with the United States and United Kingdom Governments along the lines indicated in the proposals. Much the less can single members of the Swedish Government, nor legally nor de facto, restrain Sweden's liberty of action in such an important question, in the manner proposed.

See memorandum by the Minister in Sweden, August 10, p. 37.
 Foreign Affairs Committee of the Riksdag.

Political considerations make it equally impossible for the Swedish Government to put an option relating to uranium materials, by means of a secret agreement, in the hands exclusively of two of the great Powers of the world.

My colleagues and my-self highly appreciate, however, the noble motives inspiring the proposals of the two Governments. We are likewise fully aware that it is of an extraordinary importance that these minerals should be exploited under such a control as to prevent misuse. The Swedish Government will, therefore, choose a line of conduct which—even though it does not correspond with the proposals of the two Governments—nevertheless serves the same purpose.

Accordingly, the Swedish Government intend to propose to the Riksdag, at an early date, to adopt legal provisions to the effect, on the one hand, that uranium materials may not be mined or exploited without consent of the Government, and, on the other, that the export of these materials will be prohibited. By passing such a law, the Government and the Riksdag would announce to the world their firm intention to see to it that Swedish uranium resources are not exported to any other country, but are in their entirety reserved for use within Sweden and under the control of the Government. It is the hope of the Swedish Government that the United States and United Kingdom Governments will consider this announcement as a guarantee that the policy thus defined will be sustained, and that the two Governments will find that one of their substantial objects in making the request, will thereby be attained.

The Swedish Government also desire to assure the United States and United Kingdom Governments that should the Swedish Government desire, or find it necessary, for any reason, to change the policy set out in this note, the Swedish Government will give to the United States and United Kingdom Governments the first opportunity to discuss the results of such a change of policy and to arrive at mutually satisfactory arrangements.

Please accept [etc.]

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to President Truman

Washington, September 25, 1945.

Subject: U. S. Policy Regarding Secrecy of Scientific Knowledge About Atomic Bomb and Atomic Energy.

The conclusion of this memorandum is that a policy of secrecy is both futile and dangerous and that the real issues involve the methods and conditions which should govern interchange of scientific knowledge and the international controls which should be sought to prevent a race toward mutual destruction.

The premises upon which this conclusion rests are as follows:

(1) Scientific opinion appears to be practically unanimous that the theoretical basic knowledge is widely known at present; that foreign research can come abreast of our present knowledge in a comparatively short time; that foreign industrial engineering and development in, for instance, the Soviet Union, can equal our present development in about five years; that there is little prospect of developing effective defensive measures against the bomb. In other words, what we know is not a secret which we can keep to ourselves: once known to others, there is no certain way that we can protect ourselves from its use against us.

(2) This scientific knowledge does not relate merely to another and more powerful weapon. It relates to a discovery more revolutionary in human society than the invention of the wheel, the use of metals, or the steam or internal combustion engine. Its development cannot be suppressed or confined to one country. Development on the destructive side, as on other sides, is in its infancy and sober scientists contemplate the possibility of explosives which, when combined with the rocket principle, will be capable of the mutual destruction of vast areas which employ it against one another. In other words, if the invention is developed and used destructively there will be no victor and there may be no civilization remaining. The advantage of being ahead in such a race is nothing compared with not having the race.

(3) The moral and political nature of our people is such that the use of the atomic bomb for an unwarned attack on another nation is not a practical possibility. Therefore, the advantage of unannounced attack would be with others.

(4) At the present time the joint development of this discovery with the U.K. and Canada must appear to the Soviet Union to be unanswerable evidence of an Anglo-American combination against them. To their minds, there is much other evidence of this.

(5) It is impossible that a government as powerful and power conscious as the Soviet Government could fail to react vigorously to this situation. It must and will exert every energy to restore the loss of power which this discovery has produced. It will do this, if we attempt to maintain the policy of exclusion, in an atmosphere of suspicion and hostility, thereby exacerbating every present difficulty between us. For us to declare ourselves trustee of the development for the benefit of the world will mean nothing more to the Russian mind than an outright policy of exclusion.

(6) Over-all disagreement with the Soviet Union seems to be increasing. Yet I cannot see why the basic interests of the two nations should conflict. Any long range understanding based on firmness and frankness and mutual recognition of the other's basic interests seems to me impossible under a policy of Anglo-American exclusion of Russia from atomic development. If it is impossible, there will be no organized peace but only an armed truce.

(7) The question whether or not to attempt a program of mutual exchange of information and cooperation in this field with the Soviet Union cannot be avoided by proposals for control by the United Nations Organization. The United Nations cannot function in this field without agreement between the United States, the United Kingdom, and the U.S.S.R. This agreement, if it is to be reached, should be attempted directly and not with the added complication of fifty or more other countries being involved at the start.

(8) Without the same informed and extensive public discussion that preceded the San Francisco Conference so and an opportunity to hear fully the opinions of the scientists on which the scientific premises are based, the public and Congress will be unprepared to accept a policy involving substantial disclosures to the Soviet Union. But postponement of an approach to the USSR is also untenable. The resulting deterioration in Russian relations would not only adversely color our domestic discussions but would also make the Russian attitude less favorable for an ultimate program of collaboration. It is necessary that public opinion be given an opportunity to mature at the same time that action is taken to prevent Russian fear and suspicion from increasing and crystallizing.

Recommendations—

That an approach be made by the United States to the Soviet Union after discussion with the British, as required by our arrangements with the latter, having for its purpose the working out of a program of mutual exchange of scientific information and collaboration in the development of atomic power to proceed gradually and upon condition:

First, that the exchange should be mutual and that we become convinced that United States scientists are being fully informed of Soviet developments;

Second, that an agreement be reached on mutual renunciation of further development of the destructive features with adequate opportunity for inspection to give mutual confidence that this was being done;

Third, that initially and perhaps permanently, depending on developments, collaboration should go forward on the development of atomic power and not on the production of the military weapon; and

Fourth, that a plan be worked out to extend these principles to other countries in due course, probably through the mechanism of the United Nations.

This approach to the Russians would seek to reach an agreement on the terms under which full collaboration would later proceed. It need not involve at this time any disclosures going substantially beyond those which have already been made to the world.

Concurrently with the initiation of these discussions with the Soviet Union, the President might send a message to the Congress stating the reasons which lead him to urge an ultimate program of collaboration and which make necessary the immediate approach to the USSR, recommending that the Congress proceed with its own full consideration of the problem of atomic energy, indicating the type of domestic legislation favored by the President, and stating that the outcome of the negotiations with the Russians will be reported to the Congress as soon as they are completed and that requests for Congressional action will be made on any resulting agreements requiring it.

Memorandum by Major John E. Vance, on the Staff of the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves)

25 September, 1945.

1. Col. Lansdale and the undersigned arrived in Stockholm on 5 August in response to a request by Mr. Herschel V. Johnson, the United States Minister to Sweden. During the first meeting with Mr. Johnson he reported that he had made the initial approach to the Swedish Government based on the draft instructions dated 20 July 1945, which had been transmitted to Mr. Johnson in London. Prior to 5 August, Mr. Johnson had seen Mr. Stig Sahlin (Secretary General of the Swedish Foreign Office). Mr. Assarsson (Deputy Secretary General) and Mr. Undén, who became Foreign Minister on 1 August. Mr. Johnson reported that he had been told by Mr. Sahlin that there was no doubt that the Swedish Government would agree to control the Swedish materials but some doubt was expressed that the Swedish Government would agree to US and UK control of their uranium supply for a long period of years. Mr. Johnson also stated that Mr. Per Albin Hansson, the Prime Minister, had been informed of our requests by Mr. Undén.

- 2. After a discussion with Mr. Johnson and the British representatives (Mr. Jerram, the British Minister to Sweden, and Mr. Sayers) the draft of 7 August ⁸⁶ was prepared. On the morning of 7 August the Stockholm papers carried the story of the atomic bomb. Mr. Johnson was of the opinion that the publicity would not be harmful since it emphasized the great importance of the matter and the need for speedy conclusion of the agreement.
- 3. The draft of 7 August, approved by the two Ministers, was taken by Mr. Johnson to the Foreign Office on 8 August where he saw both Mr. Undén and Mr. Sahlin. At this meeting it was apparent that the Swedish Government was well aware of the necessity of controlling these materials but that they believed any action which would place the control of Swedish uranium-bearing materials in the hands of the US and UK would jeopardize the strict neutrality which has been maintained by the Swedish Government; in other words, they felt they would have to refuse any requests made by the US and UK since they firmly intended to refuse any requests made by Russia.
- 4. On 15 August a meeting was held with the following present: Mr. Assarsson, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Jerram, Mr. Labouchère (Counselor of the British Legation), Prof. Siegbahn (Physics Professor at Stockholm University), Col. Lansdale, Mr. Sayers and Maj. Vance. Mr. Assarsson, for the Swedish Government, said that the purpose of the meeting was to obtain information which could be presented to the Prime Minister so that he might better understand the purpose of the agreement. Col. Lansdale then presented the required background in a very general way. Mr. Assarsson pointed out that other large countries would probably seek Swedish supplies though no approach had yet been made. Mr. Johnson replied that this emphasized the need for control of Swedish resources by the US and UK because of their military value and expressed the opinion that it would be to the best interests of the Swedish Government to enter into an obligation with the US and UK so that future demands by other governments could be referred to them.

- 5. On 16 August, Mr. Jerram advised Mr. Johnson that a message had been received from the British Government which took exception to the draft of 7 August with respect to the provisions concerning a firm commitment to purchase materials and the stimulation of Swedish production. After discussing the two points with Washington and London, a new draft was prepared on 22 August ⁸⁷ in order to avoid a delay in the negotiations. The draft was concurred in by the two Ministers; one copy was forwarded to General Groves and one copy to Mr. Rickett.
- 6. On 28 August, Mr. Johnson met with Mr. Undén for a lengthy discussion of the proposed agreement. Mr. Undén made several objections to the proposals: (a) acceptance of the proposals in full would mean a virtual abandonment of the basic Swedish policy of neutrality; (b) The agreement would make Sweden's position more difficult politically if an approach was subsequently made by other powers; (c) there was a serious question of the legality of an agreement concluded by the Swedish Government without reference to the secret Joint Foreign Affairs Committee of the two Houses of the Swedish Riksdag.

Mr. Unden added that the Swedish Government would have no hesitation in participating in an international arrangement for the control of uranium materials.

In reply to Mr. Undén, Mr. Johnson pointed out: (a) that the position of the Swedish Government would be, in fact, much stronger in relation to other powers if committed to the US and UK on a contractual basis; (b) since the US and UK already possessed control of the majority of the world's resources, a continued Swedish policy of neutrality with respect to these materials might possibly be a dangerous temptation to outsiders; (c) while he recognized there would be some question of the validity of the agreement beyond the life of the present Swedish Government, that was a risk we would have to relation to other powers if committed to the US and UK on a control was a matter for future action and that such a possibility should not influence present negotiations.

As a result of the above discussion, Mr. Johnson believed it would be imprudent to press the Swedish Government for an immediate decision.

7. On 11 September, Mr. Johnson reported he had seen the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister stated that Sweden could not possibly conclude an agreement along the lines suggested for the following reasons: (a) essential security could not be maintained because of the constitutional requirement that such an agreement be submitted to the Joint Foreign Affairs Committee of the Riksdag, consisting of 32 members, which also has the power to put the matter before the entire Riksdag; (b) it was impossible to word the agreement in such a way that it would not be regarded by Russia as a political act of an unfriendly nature on the part of Sweden and would result in a further deterioration of the relations between the two countries; (c) the US and UK could not make themselves responsible for the relations between Sweden and Russia.

In place of meeting our requests, the Prime Minister stated that Sweden was prepared to guarantee that none of the materials would be exported and that suitable legislation would be enacted in the very near future. He further pointed out that temporary control could be effected by existing laws which require all exports to be licensed by the government. The Prime Minister said that the Swedish reply would take the form of a unilateral declaration in a letter to Mr. Johnson and would not be made public in Sweden.

After a discussion with Mr. Johnson, it was decided to request the Swedish Government to include the following points in their reply:
(a) that information be made available to the US and UK both now and in the future, on Swedish resources and the exploitation and production of uranium-containing materials; (b) that the two governments be informed immediately if the Swedish Government found it advisable in the future to collaborate with other powers in the exploitation of their resources that the US and UK be given first opportunity to make mutually satisfactory arrangements; (c) in the event that the Swedish Government rescinds their restrictions on the exports of these materials that the US and UK be given first refusal for the purchase of such materials.

9. On 11 September, Mr. Johnson, the British Minister and Col. Lansdale met with Mr. Undén and Mr. Assarsson to discuss the Swedish reply and to request the inclusion of the three points in the above paragraph. The Swedish representatives stated that they would give an oral assurance to furnish information and that they could not agree to giving us first refusal in the event that restrictions on exports were lifted in the future. With slight change, the provision with respect to future collaboration in the event of a change of policy was incorporated in the note.⁸⁸ At our request, Mr. Undén and Mr. Assarsson agreed to advise us in the event that the Swedish Government was approached by any other power with respect to same or similar matters. For obvious reasons they objected to incorporating such a statement in the note.

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of War (Patterson)⁸⁹ to President Truman

[Washington,] September 26, 1945.

PROPOSED ACTION FOR CONTROL OF ATOMIC BOMBS

This memorandum is in response to your request for the views of those present at cabinet meeting on September 21st, concerning the action to be taken for future control of atomic bombs, particularly in reference to Russia.

I am in thorough agreement with the position taken by Secretary Stimson in his memorandum to you of September 11th. His memorandum recommends that, after discussion with Britain, we should approach Russia with a proposal to make an agreement limiting use of the atomic bomb as an instrument of war and encouraging development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. Such an approach, more specifically, might lead to a proposal to stop work on the manufacture and further development of the atomic bomb as a military weapon, provided Russia and Britain should make the same engagement; and we might also state our readiness to impound the atomic bombs we have on hand, provided the three powers should agree that none would use the atomic bomb as an instrument of war unless all agreed to such use. We should also state our willingness to provide for exchange of benefits of future developments for use of atomic energy for industrial and humanitarian purposes.

As I see the matter, the great need is to do everything in our power to make sure that the atomic bomb is controlled in the way best calculated to insure world peace, not merely for the next ten or twenty years but for the long-range future.

The best qualified experts, meaning the scientists, industrialists and Army officers who have been most closely engaged in the production of the atomic bombs, have advised Secretary Stimson that they have no doubt that Russia could, without any aid or assistance from us, produce atomic bombs within a period of from four to twenty years. In other words, we can take it as fairly certain that our present control of atomic bombs to the exclusion of Russia will not extend beyond twenty years at the outside.

That fact, to my mind, is of the most fundamental importance, and it should serve as the guide to our international policy. It means, as I see it, that we should exert our best efforts to prevent an armament race in production of atomic bombs, even though we now have and probably would continue for some time to have the military advantage of a start in such a contest.

There is another fundamental consideration. Our best-qualified scientists who have worked on production of atomic bombs have also advised Secretary Stimson that the waging of war by use of atomic bombs, as they are likely to be developed further if an armament race is carried on, may well mean the end of civilization. If these men are right, and they may be, their conclusion makes it all the more compelling that an international arrangement for control of atomic bombs be arrived at.

Secretary Stimson's recommendations, it may be noted, do not include the point that the secret ordnance procedures having to do with production of atomic bombs as weapons of war should be revealed to Russia or any other nation.

the President discussion of international consultation in his mes-Mr. Byrnes added that he felt himself in closest agreement with the views of General Groves and that we do not yet know enough about the whole question of atomic energy or the future world situation to discuss the international cooperation aspects. Mr. Harrison said that he agreed with Mr. Byrnes on the matter of timing of the discussion but sided with Secretary Stimson on the question of ultimate authority. Mr. Forrestal emphasized that the Navy wants to be heard at that stage and that he has definite views on the matter. Mr. Patterson said that the State Department wanted both the domestic and the international treatment of the bomb discussed in the President's message which had been drafted by Judge Rosenman.91 Mr. Byrnes added that it was going to create difficulties for him and that he could foresee that at future meetings Molotov 92 would refer to the President's statement and ask to discuss the whole question of the control of the atomic bomb. Mr. Forrestal said that there was also great danger of increased pressure in support of international control from within this country. Mr. Byrnes said he agreed that the pressure would be both internal and from abroad and that he intended to talk further with the President. He felt that before any international discussion of the future of the bomb could take place we must first see whether we can work out a decent peace. Mr. HARRISON pointed out that the British wished to discuss the matter of a common approach to the problem in the light of the President's statement. Mr. Byrnes said he realized this and regretted public discussion of that aspect. Stettinius, he said, wanted to put in a reference to the atomic bomb in a speech he is making in London and he had told him to take out all reference to the bomb. Mr. Forrestal asked whether we were going to turn the bomb over to "a piece of paper". Mr. Byrnes recalled that Churchill had been most determined that no one should be told about the bomb and had not even wished to talk about it with Attlee.

Mr. Byrnes said that he would be glad to meet with the committee on Saturday 93 and that he would plead with the President not to push the question of consultation.

There was further discussion of the British desire to have Presidential approval to Halifax's appointment to the committee and there was general agreement that this was not necessary. Mr. Patterson suggested it would be adequate to record in Saturday's meeting the Committee's "satisfaction" that Lord Halifax would join them.

Mr. Forrestal expressed his fears that the British might wish to utilize the committee to consider the whole question of the future of the bomb de novo and that he would be inclined to the view that it would be better to consider the Committee defunct. Mr. Byrnes suggested that the question was one to be given some thought and suggested that the three secretaries think over between now and Saturday the desirability of continuing the committee. This was generally agreed upon. Mr. Harrison pointed out that a whole chain of committees depended upon this principal one and that this factor should likewise be given thought....

ment will rest with the Minister of Supply.95 The Prime Minister will continue to exercise general supervision over all aspects of policy on the use of atomic energy, and the Advisory Committee under Sir John Anderson, will report to him as at present.

The British Government is also considering what they should do in regard to large-scale plants for the production of fissile material, but have not yet come to any conclusions on this matter.

These steps will enable the British Government to play their part in any common plan for the development of atomic energy.

THE COMMITTEE: Took note of this statement.

Mr. Harrison said that he assumed that the decision to set up a pile would result in a request by the British members for some modification of the present allocation of raw materials which had been approved by the Combined Policy Committee.96 He asked whether it was desired to discuss the point at its present meeting.

SIR JAMES CHADWICK said that it was premature to raise this question before His Majesty's Government had decided their general policy in regard to production of material.

The Committee then adjourned.

[London,] 16 October, 1945.

DEAR Mr. President: Thank you for your letter of the 5th October in reply to mine of the 25th September which I wrote with a sense of the urgency of our facing up to the problems of the atomic bomb. I am now also being subjected to heavy Parliamentary pressure from both Parties to make a statement on the Government's policy. I have to reply to a Question tomorrow.

It is my desire to exchange views with you before making a further statement but it will not be possible for me to postpone discussion for long.

It is our view here that the meeting of Foreign Ministers 98 was overshadowed by the problem, and that the prospective conference

I have been discussing the matter with Mackenzie King, who is here. He takes the same view as I do of the urgency of the problem. I should like to receive your views and I think it important that you and I and Mackenzie King should have a discussion as soon as possible. I need hardly say that I am prepared to come over as soon as convenient.

Yours sincerely.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. Patterson brought up the question of atomic energy. He said that the British have in mind the statement in the President's message that he intends to follow up with consultations with Britain and Canada and later with others. He wanted to know what the channel would be-whether the talks would be through regular diplomatic channels or through some other procedure. Dr. Bush, he said, had informed him that Attlee was coming over and perhaps the President would discuss this with him. Mr. Patterson said that he had no preference. Mr. Byrnes remarked that he had one view on this matter, namely, the overemphasis placed on the views of the scientists. He said that he bowed to them in their ability to develop the bomb but on the question of giving information to others he thought the scientists were no better informed than he was on the construction of the bomb. Mr. Patterson said that the British and Canadians were under present Russian [Quebec?] agreement in effect junior partners in the business and have a good stand in their request to be consulted. Mr. Forrestal pointed out that neither have as yet the means or capacity for producing the bomb. Mr. Patterson said that he believed the British had only one pilot plant on plutonium. Mr. Byrnes said that to him the question depends entirely on our ability to inspect plants in other countries. If we are not able to inspect such plants he thought we are all agreed that we should not give information with regard to our methods of manufacture. He said that in a meeting he had asked General Marshall 4 whether his experience in dealing with the Russians justified him in relying on the United Nations Organization to inspect Russian plants and in telling the American people that he could rely on such inspection. Mr. Byrnes said that he was only going on the basis of past experience and he did not feel that this justified any such confidence. Mr. Patterson said that the President, he thought, had in mind only a gradual approach and that in no event would information on the industrial manufacture of the bomb be given to others. He said that we were, however, committed to talks with the British and Canadians to a certain extent. Mr. Byrnes remarked that Oppenheimer 5 had impressed him considerably and he thought that General Groves knew more about the problem than any of the people from Dupont, Union Carbide or Eastman. He said that we can't get into Rumania and Bulgaria much less Russia and that it is childish to think that the Russians would let us see what they are doing. He added the query whether if Russia made an agreement today we would want to rely on it. He pointed in this connection to the fact that though they had a formal treaty of non-aggression with Japan the Russians, as far back as Yalta, were making definite plans for their attack upon Japan. He added that Stalin and Molotov would probably be insulted today if you implied that they had intended to keep their solemn treaty with Hitler. By implication of the same process of reasoning, it would not be wise for us to rely on their word today. Mr. Patterson inquired whether when Attlee arrives Mr. Byrnes will take up with him the matter of channel through which the talks will be conducted. He said that he was agreeable to having it done here through the State Department or through the Combined Policy Committee on Atomic Energy. Mr. Byrnes remarked that in his opinion the principal reason Russia wants Libya has to do with uranium. He pointed to the map how a Soviet base in Libya would facilitate their access right down to the Belgian Congo.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. Patterson brought up the question of the channel of negotiations with the British and Canadians. Mr. Byrnes said that the President had spoken to him of the forthcoming visit of Prime Minister Attlee but had expressed no views on the nature of the discussions. The President wants Mr. Byrnes and Admiral Leahy 8 to be present and it is contemplated that the visit will take place about November 11 or 12. Mr. Byrnes wanted to delay the announcement until November 6 since there would be lots of speculation to the effect that Mr. Attlee was coming over to talk about Palestine. However, he has agreed to Lord Halifax's proposal to announce the visit on November 1 and to say that it is for the purpose of discussing the atomic bomb.

Mr. Byrnes referred to a visit he had received from Dr. Oppenheimer who thought that Stalin should have been approached with regard to the atomic bomb a month ago and that there should be no delay in discussions. Oppenheimer did, on the contrary, think that legislation on the subject in this country should be delayed. Mr. Byrnes had replied that he thought the pending bill on the whole is a good one, but that possible amendments should be given careful consideration and there should be full study. On the international aspects Mr. Byrnes informed him that while he had great admiration for Dr. Oppenheimer's scientific attainments, he did not believe that he knew the facts or had the responsibility for the handling of international affairs. He pointed out that the American people had elected Mr. Truman President and that the responsibility is his and Mr. Byrnes'.

Mr. Patterson pointed out that the President's message to Congress called for sound consultation. The difficulty is that the scientists are restless under any control or restrictions. He thought that he had brought Dr. Oppenheimer back on the track and that the latter now favored the passage of adequate legislation. The scientists with experience in public affairs like Dr. Bush and Dr. Conant are all right. The same is true of the top scientists who have been working on the problem, but the smaller fry partly through earnest conviction and partly through the desire to sound off are restive. They are men who are less stable and in fact do not know what they want in the handling of atomic energy. On the international aspect, however, all the scientists were of one mind that the secret of construction can be kept only for a five to fifteen year period. The only problem is one of industrial capacity for production and he thought that Mr. Stimson's memorandum of September 11 contained the sound approach. thought it provided for a broad and gradual development and is based upon good will on both sides and the exchange of information and right of visitation.

Mr. Byrnes agreed that the whole problem of cooperation is predicated on free inspection at all times. He cited the fact that we cannot recognize the Rumanian and Bulgarian regimes because we cannot get information on conditions there and our representatives have difficulty in getting around. If this is true in Rumania and Bulgaria, it is considerably more true in Soviet Russia and he had asked Dr. Oppenheimer whether full inspection under conditions such as he described could be had in the Soviet Union today. Dr. Oppenheimer, he said, finally admitted that this situation was pretty bad. Mr. Patterson said that he wants Mr. Byrnes to make sure that all the facts are understood and then it is up to the State Department to decide what to do about it.

Memorandum by Captain R. Gordon Arneson to the Secretary of War (Patterson)

[Washington,] 17 April, 1946.

Subject: Negotiations with the British and Canadians, November 1-November 16, 1945

There follows a chronological recital of the events of last November relating to discussions with the British concerning collaboration in the field of atomic energy. This recital of the facts is derived from the day by day record which I kept during this period. Pertinent documents are appended.

1 November

Secretary Patterson wrote Secretary Byrnes today strongly urging that the State Department undertake a thorough examination of the international phases of atomic energy in preparation for the arrival of Prime Minister Attlee. He stressed particularly the problem of the war-time Quebec Agreement and its relation to the post-war situation. While stating that this was a State Department matter, he offered the assistance of the War Department in pulling the facts together. (Tab A)⁹

Following up the letter, Secretary Patterson had an hour's conference this afternoon with Secretary Byrnes, during which he again urged prompt and thorough preparation for Attlee's visit. Secretary Byrnes was non-committal.

2 November

Late this afternoon when he was discussing with Dr. Bush the forth-coming conference with the British and the Canadians, Secretary Patterson called in Lt. Arneson and asked him to prepare a study of the current situation under the Quebec and Combined Development Trust Agreements and a tentative set of U. S. proposals for discussion. It was agreed that the proposals should follow the lines of Secretary Stimson's memorandum of September 11, and Secretary Patterson's of September 26 and should outline the several stages of negotiations, viz.: revision of agreements with the British and the Canadians, approach to Russia, and finally an approach to the UNO.¹⁰ It was agreed further that Dr. Bush's memorandum to the President of September 25,¹¹ which went into some detail, should be used as a guide in the preparation of the study. Secretary Patterson remarked that while the study might never see the light of day, it should be ready in the event it was called for. Even though it might not be wanted by Secretary Byrnes it would, in any event, serve to jell Secretary Patterson's thinking on the subject.

7 November 1945

The study prepared by Lt. Arneson was transmitted to Secretary Patterson this morning. The section suggesting a set of U. S. proposals that might be used as a basis for discussion with the British was purely tentative and was put forward merely as a point of departure for further consideration by the Secretary and his advisers.

On the basis of the discussion they had had with Secretary Patterson the day before, General Groves, Dr. Bush, and Mr. Harrison met in General Groves' office this morning to revise the U.S. proposals for discussion. Lt. Volpe and Lt. Arneson were present. The revision spelled out in greater detail our proposals for continuation of cooperation with the British and the Canadians and suggested only in general terms the nature of the approach which the three governments might agree the United States should make to Russia. The further step of setting up an organ of the UNO to control the field of atomic energy was stated as an ultimate objective, to be achieved, however, only after a considerable period and only after the effective cooperation of Russia had been proven in practice. As regards our relations with the U. K. and Canada, the recommendations made it clear that in exchange for the abrogation of Clause IV of the Quebec Agreement 13 in any new agreement that might be arrived at the U.K. should undertake to bring under the control of the CDT and subject to allocation by the CPC on an actual use basis all uranium and thorium ores situated anywhere within the British Commonwealth. (Tab B)14

¹³ Text of this section of the Quebec Agreement, August 19, 1943, is as follows: "Fourthly, that in view of the heavy burden of production falling upon the United States as the result of a wise division of war effort, the British Government recognize that any post-war advantages of an industrial or commercial character shall be dealt with as between the United States and Great Britain on terms to be specified by the President of the United States to the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The Prime Minister expressly disclaims any interest in these industrial and commercial aspects beyond what may be considered by the President of the United States to be fair and just and in harmony with the economic welfare of the world." (TIAS No. 2993, or 5 UST 1115)

¹¹ Not printed. These tentative United States proposals also called for prior consultation by the United States with the United Kingdom and Canada prior to use of atomic weapons as a means of warfare.

11 November 1945

Mr. Harrison and Lt. Arneson saw Secretary Patterson briefly this morning to give him a copy of the revised study, which Mr. Harrison pointed out represented the unanimous views of General Groves, Dr. Bush, and himself.

14 November 1945

Mr. Makins and Mr. Rickett met informally with General Groves, Mr. Harrison, and Lt. Arneson at 5:15 p.m. to exchange views concerning what should be done on the question of revising the Quebec Agreement during the Truman-Attlee-King conference.

Mr. Harrison reported that—as indicated in a memorandum of November 14 (Tab C),¹⁵ which Dr. Bush had written to President Truman recapitulating his understanding of the conclusions reached at the White House on the evening of the 13th, and a copy which was received by Secretary Patterson today—the principals desired that Secretary Patterson and Sir John Anderson and their advisers consider together what should be done with matters of collaboration covered by the Quebec Agreement.

There was general agreement that whatever was done with the Quebec Agreement and its specific provisions, it was clearly desirable to continue the Combined Policy Committee, perhaps with different membership, to act as the coordinating body for whatever degree of collaboration might be decided upon and to continue the CDT as the agent of the CPC for the acquisition of ores.

General Groves suggested that each of them should study the Quebec and Combined Development Trust Agreements in detail and to raise points which should be considered in working out revisions. It was agreed that this should be done in preparation for the meeting in the Secretary's office scheduled for 10:00 a.m. the next day.

The following met with the Secretary of War in his office at 10:00 a.m. to discuss revision of existing agreements: Sir John Anderson, Field Marshal Sir Henry Maitland Wilson, Malcolm MacDonald, General Groves, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Dennis Rickett, Mr. Roger Makins, and Lt. Arneson.

Sir John stated that the British were anxious to know what decision the United States was likely to make with regard to Clause IV of the Quebec Agreement, for the U.K. had hoped in the near future to build pilot plants and would want to know how the matter of commercial rights stood. The United Kingdom recognised that the decision on Clause IV rested with the United States and would, of course, accept whatever decision was made. To this Secretary Patterson replied that as far as he was concerned he was prepared to recommend that a solution be found which would not place the U.K. at a disadvantage.

There was general agreement that the CPC should be continued to supervise such arrangements as were mutually agreed upon and that the CDT should also be continued to handle the acquisition of ores, but that it would probably be desirable to terminate the Quebec Agreement, in toto, and replace it by a new agreement which would properly reflect the post-war situation.

Sir John felt that consideration should be given to full interchange of personnel in any new agreement that might be signed. General Groves felt that the quid pro quo for this would have to be an undertaking whereby the U.K. would bring all uranium and thorium ores situated in the British Commonwealth under the control of the CDT for allocation in accordance with demonstrated demand. In agreeing with this point, Sir John pointed out that the U.K. would have to proceed with caution in some cases, as for example, South Africa.

It was agreed that Sir John's advisers and Secretary Patterson's advisers should prepare a Memorandum of Intention which would set forth the basic policies to be followed in writing a new agreement. It was agreed further that the CPC should be given the assignment of writing the new agreement in line with these basic policies. Another meeting was called for 9:00 a. m. the next day to consider the memorandum.

After the meeting in the Secretary's office, General Groves, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Rickett, Mr. Makins, Lt. Volpe, and Lt. Arneson met in Mr. Harrison's office to arrive at some preliminary understanding as to the form and content of the Memorandum of Intention. It was the view of General Groves and Mr. Harrison that there should be prepared for consideration on Friday (1) a short directive to the CPC for signature by the President and the Prime Ministers instructing the CPC to prepare for their consideration a new agreement envisaging the continuation of the CPC and the CDT, and (2) a longer memorandum, also for signature by the President and the Prime Ministers or at least by the Secretary of War and Sir John, setting forth the basic policies to be considered by the CPC in drawing up a new agreement. Mr. Rickett and Mr. Makins did not dissent from this view.

The Quebec Agreement was then examined point by point and amendments proposed. When this had been done, it was suggested that Mr. Makins and Mr. Rickett on the one hand and Lts. Volpe and Arneson on the other should prepare separate drafts of the Memorandum of Intention for comparison and further discussion later in the day, and that the British should also prepare a draft of the short directive to the CPC.

Mr. Makins, Mr. Rickett, General Groves, Lt. Volpe, and Lt. Arneson met again at 6:00 p. m. at which time the short directive to the CPC which had been prepared by the British for signature by the President and the Prime Ministers was agreed to. The directive stated in substance that the signatories desired that cooperation in the field of atomic energy among the three Governments should continue, that the CPC and the CDT should be continued in suitable form, and that the CPC should recommend appropriate arrangements to accomplish this. As to the longer paper, there appeared some divergence in point of view. The British wanted the memorandum to be quite informal, more in the nature of a very general statement of broad principle rather than a specific set of basic points by which the CPC would be guided in its work. General Groves wanted the memorandum to be quite specific on the basic issues of policy and binding on the CPC when adopted by the Anderson-Patterson sub-committee of the conference. No agreement was reached on this question of procedure and it was decided to hold it over for consideration the next day and to concentrate that evening on the content of the memorandum.

Lts. Volpe and Arneson met with Mr. Makins and Mr. Rickett at the British Embassy at 10:00 p. m. and came to agreement on the basic points of policy to be laid down in the memorandum with the exception of the point on interchange of information. The more restrictive U.S. formula for interchange of information was written into the draft (see Tab D, item 5)¹⁷ with the understanding that the British would put forward an alternative formula for consideration the next day.

Throughout the discussions in Mr. Harrison's office, and at the 6:00 and 10:00 o'clock meetings, the U.S. participants held the view that any revision of the Quebec Agreement could be implemented only by treaty, but not, in any event, by any secret Executive arrangements. The British participants held that the question of the form

The text of this portion of the United States draft read as follows: "There shall be full and effective interchange of information, ideas, and personnel in the field of scientific research between the two countries. In the field of development, design, construction, and operation of large-scale plants having to do with atomic energy, interchange of information and ideas shall be regulated by such ad hoc arrangements as may appear to be necessary or desirable. Such ad hoc arrangements shall be subject to the approval of the Combined Policy Committee established below." Paragraph 6 charged the Committee with periodic general review of the work in progress, allocation of materials, and settlement of disputes that might arise.

any agreement on this matter should take was a political question which should not be decided at this time or at this level.

The following met with the Secretary of War in his office at 9:00 a. m.: Sir John Anderson, Field Marshal Wilson, General Groves, General Ian Jacob, 18 Mr. Harrison, Mr. C. D. Howe, Dean MacKenzie, Mr. Nevile Butler,19 Mr. Makins, Mr. Rickett, Lt. Volpe, and Lt. Arneson. Agreement was reached promptly on the joint directive to the CPC for signature by the President and the Prime Ministers. One change was agreed to which might prove most significant. This was the proposal made by Sir John that the words "full and" be inserted before the phrase "effective cooperation" in the first sentence. ('Tab E)²⁰ The American participants at first objected to this change, but finally reluctantly agreed with the understanding that the words "full and" made no material change in the meaning of the phrase.

After some discussion, it was agreed that the Memorandum of Intention should be addressed to the CPC and signed by Sir John Anderson for the U.K. and by General Groves for the U.S. and that it would serve only as a general guide and not as a set of basic policies binding on the Committee in the writing of a new agreement.

While Sir John, Mr. Makins, Mr. Rickett, General Groves, Mr. Harrison, and Lt. Volpe reassembled in Mr. Harrison's office to arrive at a final draft of the memorandum, Secretary Patterson accompanied by Lt. Arneson proceeded to the White House with copies of the joint directive which were signed by President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee at approximately 10:15 a.m.

The Memorandum of Intention was agreed upon by noon and was signed in eight copies by Sir John and General Groves before Sir John departed for Ottawa at 3:00 p.m. As signed, the memorandum contained a series of recommendations to be considered by the CPC in the preparation of a new document to replace the Quebec Agreement and all other understandings with the exception of the Combined Development Trust Agreement which was to be revised in conformity with the new arrangements. No mention was made of post-war commercial rights, but the memorandum recommended that all ores that may be acquired, by purchase or otherwise, by the CDT, including all that may be secured throughout the British Commonwealth, should be held jointly subject to allocation by the Combined Policy Committee to the three Governments "in such quantities as may be needed, in the common interest, for scientific research, military, and humanitarian purposes," provided that the unallocated portion not so needed be held by the CDT for disposal at a later date "in the light of then existing conditions and on a fair and equitable basis." As regards interchange of information the memorandum recommended that there should be full and effective cooperation in the field of basic scientific research, while in the field of development, design, construction, and operation of plants, cooperation—recognized as desirable in principle—should be regulated by ad hoc arrangements through the CPC. Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Scientific Research and Development (Bush) to the Secretary of State

[Washington,] November 5, 1945.

Subject: Coming conference with Mr. Attlee.

Two points will come up: The Quebec Agreement, and the approach to Russia on the future of atomic energy.

For a thoroughly sound approach to this conference it seems to me essential that the President, as soon as he decides on the general policy and objectives, should constitute a small group to prepare for the conversations in very definite manner. This should not be the Interim Committee,²² as the President will probably wish new membership, specifically from the Senate. The Interim Committee should hence be dissolved. The new group should continue after the conference. I feel it is utterly essential, if this administration is to present a consistent and united point of view to the public, that there should be no statements on atomic energy from the administration until after they have been reviewed by this group. In particular I feel the Attlee conference should be promptly followed by a careful statement to the public, and that the group should prepare it for the President's approval. The Secretary of State should of course head the group.

Quebec Agreement

The Quebec Agreement is an agreement between Roosevelt and Churchill having three parts:

The first has to do with interchange on atomic energy. This has automatically ceased to be operative, since it was based on the principle that we would give the British such information as would aid in winning the way, and no more. This was what was done, and they have not been given much of our manufacturing information.

²¹ For text of the Memorandum of Intention, November 16, see p. 75.

²² Concerning the establishment of the Interim Committee, see The New World, 1939/1946, p. 345.

The second part had to do with joint acquisition and allocation of materials. This occurs under the Combined Policy Committee, and the Combined Development Trust. The matter may be on a somewhat insecure foundation. Continued arrangements along these lines are certainly necessary.

The third part contains several political clauses. The one about commercial use may embarrass the British. The ones that require British approval on some of our actions might conceivably be considered to embarrass us.

It appears that this somewhat informal agreement should now be superseded by a permanent one, drawn in consultation with the Senate on this side. This should be written with the intention of making it public, and having it fit in appropriately with any more general agreements that may be made, through UNO or otherwise.

It seems to me, therefore, that the coming conference should result in an understanding that the whole affair will be renegotiated to put it in permanent form, and in an exploration of the form and content desired by each party, basing this on the assumption that the Quebec Agreement was intended for the war period only.

Personally I would supersede the agreement by a simple one with the British providing merely for sharing of materials, leaving political clauses and the dissemination of information to be worked out on a more general international basis.

The Approach to Russia

This is the great question before the conference. Russia should be approached before the whole subject comes up in the United Nations Organization.

The objectives are clear. We wish to proceed down the road of international collaboration and understanding, to avoid a secret arms race, and above all to avoid a future war, in which atomic bombs would devastate our cities as well as those of our enemy.

The difficulty is also very clear. It resides in the fact that Russia is naturally secretive and suspicious, and very intent on its own immediate interests. We must make agreements with Russia which Russia will keep.

The solution, if there is one, is to make the agreements in such manner that it will be in Russia's interest to keep them. This involves proceeding on a basis of "partial payments", and step by step, in such manner that Russia will be faced with the alternatives. Either she will genuinely conform, or her failure to do so will become fully known, and public opinion all over the world will become arrayed against her.

We want no future war. If we cannot avoid one, we at least wish to be in our full strength and to have the rest of the world with us. We also want to have atomic bombs and to be in a clear position to use them promptly, if there is any chance that our enemy has them. Hence our program toward international understanding should involve no premature "outlawing of the bomb", which is a dangerous phrase. It should be realistic at every step.

With these points in mind I advocate an approach along the following lines. The Russians should be apprised at the outset that we propose to go the whole distance, but the steps should be taken in sequence, and the success of one should be essential to the initiation of the next. Needless to say we should ourselves conform genuinely at all times, and be tolerant of minor irritations or departures. We hope genuinely to open up Russia, and it will take time.

(1) Step One should be a simple one.

We should approach Russia with the suggestion that she join Britain and the United States in suggesting the establishment under the UNO as a creation of the Assembly of a scientific body charged with the full dissemination of fundamental information on science in all fields including that of atomic fission.

As a prerequisite it should be fully understood in advance that every country will (1) invite visits of foreign scientists freely to its laboratories where basic research is carried on, as may be arranged between the scientists themselves, and with no artificial impediments applying to foreigners that do not apply to its own nationals, (2) allow its own scientists to travel freely for such purposes, (3) further the exchange of students for the same purpose, (4) encourage its scientists, engaged in fundamental research, to publish freely, and further full publication and the complete dissemination of the results.

The primary objective of this step is to start Russia down the path of collaboration with us. It will require no policing. The scientists themselves will soon know whether Russia is really opening up her laboratories on fundamental work or not.

This step probably costs us nothing. Russia can readily find out most of what we do in fundamental science anyway, and the chances are certainly that we will publish freely in any case, no matter what Russia does. Moreover, while our free publication, in the absence of agreement, might help Russia's progress on atomic energy some, it would be very likely to help our own progress more.

It will give us a chance to find out whether Russia really wants to proceed with us. There is little incentive for her to join us genuinely on this step unless she does.

(2) Step Two.

This step should include under the provisions above the practical aspects of atomic energy, centered about its application to industrial uses.

The quid pro quo should be the establishment of an internationally constituted inspection system, organized under the UNO, with technical men from various countries. No control is involved, but the Commission of Inspection should have the right, without impediment, to visit any laboratory or plant in any country where atomic fission is being carried out, to the extent necessary to determine the magnitude of the operations, the disposition of the product, etc.

In this matter we alone at the present time have extensive operations. We do not wish to open this whole affair up until we are assured that the inspection system is really going to work. Hence we should approach the matter gradually, and should state our intention to do so at the outset. There should hence be a deliberately restricted scope of the Inspection Commission's function at the outset, with the provision that further disclosures shall be in accordance with a definite schedule prepared in advance, stating dates and categories, each extension, however, being subject to certification by the Assembly of the UNO that the inspection system is operating satisfactorily. It would be hoped that the scope might ultimately become extended to the point where secret preparations for war would be sufficiently difficult to avoid a secret arms race, on atomic bombs or anything else.

The first definition might include merely the materials, that is the mining and processing of ores of uranium and thorium, and all international and internal movements of these.

This might soon be extended to include the extent and capacity of plants for concentration and separation of products capable of sustaining chain reactions.

All of this the Russians now know, or can readily determine. The next step should include work being done on commercial applications directly. Note that we would require a strong law on internal controls before taking this step. It assumes that secret commercial development, and private patents, would have little meaning in this field, but this is a small price to pay. I believe we should indicate at the outset that we plan to go at least this far, if Russia really collaborates.

The Commission should publish summaries from time to time showing the exact extent to which activity is being carried on everywhere. If it is blocked in getting data, or in assuring itself adequately that this is complete and reliable, it should place its situation before UNO and hence before the world.

(3) Step Three.

This step can only be taken after the second has been worked, and its scope has been greatly extended.

There should then be proposed that all nations agree that they will hold materials capable of atomic fission, beyond a stated amount necessary for processing operations, only when it is in use in producing power for commercial purposes.

This would be subject to the inspection system, by then presumably mature and operative.

We would thereupon be called upon to distribute our stock of atomic bombs into power plants, and to make no more, except as the material could be thus further distributed. Admittedly we do not now know how to build such plants, but presumably we will by the time we are ready for this third step. There would need to be allowed a period of years to accomplish the full distribution, after the arrangement went into effect.

Fission materials thus distributed could of course be recalled and made into bombs. The point is that this would take time, and would be a fairly obvious procedure if it resulted in shutting down large power plants. If the distribution were known to be effective, therefore, the threat of surprise atomic bomb attack by one nation on another would be largely removed. This threat, hanging over the world, would be appalling. Certainly we do not wish to be in a position to make such an attack, if we are sure no one else is. We would make the move indicated in this third step only if we were convinced that the inspection system was actually effective. Certainly our statement at this time that we plan this third step would remove a great deal of fear from the world, and fear is a breeder of wars. Incidentally there would be a benefit to humanity by having power plants instead of stores of bombs.

Many years would be necessary to carry out all three steps above. The important point now is to make it clear to the world that this is the way in which we would like to proceed.

Certainly, if these steps were taken, not outlawing the bomb, but in the direction of removing its worst threat in a practical manner, it should be possible to proceed from there toward further effective understanding and controls, on other weapons, and finally on war itself. This is the path that can finally lead to a climate of opinion in which a United Nations Organization fully implemented to regulate international relations of all sorts, and prevent war, can be brought to pass.

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Scientific Research and Development (Bush) and the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Secretary of State

Washington, November 9, 1945.

Supplementing Memorandum of November 5.

This memorandum is prepared in answer to the question "what do we do with our bombs in the meantime", assuming that a plan similar to that of the previous memorandum is being carried out.

One possible answer is as follows, although this is advanced tentatively.

It is assumed that we will continue to manufacture for the present at least the explosive material for bombs. This will also be useful, after an interval of some years, for the generation of power for peaceful purposes.

We might announce when the discussions have proceeded to a propitious point, that we do not propose to assemble this into bombs. Rather we propose to store it in bar form, simply as a stock of material and hold it for later installation in industrial power units when matters have advanced to that point. Moreover, we could state that, when there is a workable international inspection system in operation, we propose to invite their inspection of this material to assure themselves that we are thus holding it in this form.

As 'a reason, we could state that we do this as a partial proof of our good will. We have no intention of attacking anyone suddenly. We realize that storage in the fashion proposed would prevent us from using the materials for bombs without warning. We wish voluntarily to take this step, because we wish to have no threats of sudden attack hanging over the world.

The cost of this step to us is merely that it would make the material unavailable for atomic bombs without a period of preparation.

The effect on the world if this step were taken soon might be salutary, even although it is only one step of many.

There is one other point that we should like to mention, as a result of our conference of yesterday. It is our understanding that the first conference will include only Mr. Attlee, Mr. King, Mr. Bevin, 23 the President, and yourself. If the British should wish to bring others into later conferences, where atomic energy is to be discussed, we believe you should then bring in, not just ourselves, but the Secretary of War, and Mr. Harrison, as well.

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), and the Chairman, British Advisory Committee on Atomic Energy (Anderson), to the Chairman of the Combined Policy Committee (Patterson)

[Washington,] November 16, 1945.

We recommend that the following points be considered by the Combined Policy Committee in the preparation of a new document to replace the Quebec Agreement, which should be superseded in toto, together with all other understandings with the exception of the Combined Development Trust Agreement which should be revised in conformity with the new arrangements.

- 1. The three Governments, the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada, will not use atomic weapons against other parties without prior consultation with each other;
- 2. the three Governments agree not to disclose any information or enter into negotiations concerning atomic energy with other governments or authorities or persons in other countries except in accordance with agreed common policy or after due prior consultation with one another;

- 3. the three Governments will take measures so far as practicable to secure control and possession, by purchase or otherwise, of all deposits of uranium and thorium situated in areas comprising the United States, its territories or possessions, the United Kingdom, and Canada. They will also use every endeavor with respect to the remaining territories of the British Commonwealth, and other countries to acquire all available supplies of uranium and thorium. All supplies acquired under the provisions of this paragraph will be placed at the disposition of the Combined Development Trust.
- 4. The materials at the disposition of the trust shall be allocated to the three Governments in such quantities as may be needed, in the common interest, for scientific research, military, and humanitarian purposes. Such supplies as are not allocated for these purposes shall be held by the Combined Development Trust and their disposal shall be determined at a later date in the light of then existing conditions and on a fair and equitable basis.
- 5. There shall be full and effective cooperation in the field of basic scientific research among the three countries. In the field of development, design, construction, and operation of plants such cooperation, recognized as desirable in principle, shall be regulated by such ad hoc arrangements as may be approved from time to time by the Combined Policy Committee as mutually advantageous.
- 6. The Combined Policy Committee, already established and constituted so as to provide equal representation to the United States on the one hand and to the Governments of the United Kingdom and Canada on the other, shall carry out the policies provided for, subject to the control of the respective governments. To this end, the Committee shall:
- 1. Review from time to time the general program of work being carried out in the three countries.
- 2. Allocate materials in accordance with the principles set forth in the fourth paragraph above.
- 3. Settle any questions which may arise concerning the interpretation and application of arrangements regulating cooperation between the three Governments.

The above is to be understood as being without prejudice to the consideration by the Combined Policy Committee of any matters not covered in this memorandum.

SIR JOHN ANDERSON

Leslie R. Groves
Maj. Gen. U.S. Army

811.2423/11-2945

The British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Secretary of State

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

His Majesty's Ambassador is instructed to enquire the views of the Secretary of State on the procedure for bringing before the United Nations Organisation the proposal, made in the tripartite statement of November 15th on Atomic Energy,²⁵ to set up a "Commission under the United Nations Organisation to prepare recommendations for submission to the Organisation."

- 2. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom understand that, in the view of the United States Government, action should originate with the General Assembly and that all the United Nations should have a part in the establishment of the Commission. With this His Majesty's Government are in agreement, but consider that a number of important matters remain to be settled.
- 3. In the first place, there is the question of the procedure for bringing the proposal for the Commission before the General Assembly. This could be done by:—

(i) a resolution of the Preparatory Commission 26 placing the matter upon the provisional agenda for the General Assembly;

(ii) action by one or more of the United Nations proposing an additional item for the General Assembly's agenda at some time between the close of the Preparatory Commission and prescribed period before the General Assembly meets; or

(iii) raising the matter in the General Assembly after it has met and securing its addition to the agenda.

His Majesty's Government prefers alternative (ii) as the simplest and most natural procedure. They consider it desirable to discourage the Preparatory Commission from embarking on a detailed discussion of the proposed Commission in relation to the Atomic problem. But they recognise that it may in practice not prove possible to delay any further move until the Assembly meets.

4. His Majesty's Government feel it would be natural that the initiative in proposing this procedure should be taken jointly by the three Powers which issued the tripartite statement. It has, however, been suggested that the Soviet Government, in particular, ought, if possible, to be associated with the sponsorship of the tripartite proposals before the United Nations Organisation. Clearly it is most important to make every effort to secure the cooperation of the Soviet Government, and any procedure which achieved this would naturally commend itself to His Majesty's Government, and, they do not doubt, to the Government of the United States. But His Majesty's Government are very doubtful, on past experience, whether the Soviet Government would be likely to associate themselves with the sponsorship of a proposal in regard to which they had not been previously consulted.

²⁶ For documentation relating to the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations, see vol. 1, pp. 1433 ff.

- 5. In this connexion Lord Halifax is instructed to enquire:-
- (a) Whether the United States Government have had any reaction from the Soviet Government to the advance communication which they are understood to have made in Moscow in regard to the tripartite statement:
- (b) Whether the Secretary of State would consider enquiring of the Soviet Government, through the United States Ambassador at Moscow, if the Soviet Government would co-operate in bringing the proposals made in the tripartite statement before the United Nations.
- 6. In regard to the constitution and composition of the Commission, His Majesty's Government assume that the Commission would be initially appointed by the General Assembly, but the question will remain as to the precise working of the Commission and the particular organ of the United Nations to which it should report. One possibility would be that the Commission should make its recommendations to the Assembly so long as it was dealing with the first two stages of its work, as defined in paragraph 8 of the tripartite statement, but that, at the stage when it came to deal with the control and supervision of Atomic Energy to prevent its misuse as a weapon of war, it should report to the Security Council in accordance with Article 24 of the Charter.²⁷ As regards the composition of the Commission this would, no doubt, be influenced by the discussion in the Assembly, but His Majesty's Government would like to reach an understanding in advance with the United States Government.
- 7. His Majesty's Government would be grateful for the views of the United States Government as a matter of urgency on the foregoing points, and on any other matters that, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, may be held to affect the general question here discussed.

Washington, November 29, 1945.

811.2423/11-3045

The Canadian Ambassador (Pearson) to the Secretary of State

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The Canadian Ambassador is instructed to transmit to the Secretary of State the views of the Canadian Government, and to enquire ²⁷ For text of the United Nations Charter, see Department of State Treaty Series No. 993; or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1031.

Mr. Byrnes' views, on the procedure for bringing before the United Nations Organization the proposals made in the statement on atomic energy signed in Washington on November 15th to set up a "Commission under the United Nations Organization to prepare recommendations for submission to the Organization".

With regard to the method whereby the proposal for the establishment of a special Commission should be brought before the United Nations Organization, the Canadian Government is in full agreement with the view that the matter should be considered by the General Assembly. The exact means whereby it is placed on the agenda of the General Assembly is relatively unimportant. It would perhaps be appropriate for the parties to the Washington discussions jointly to propose its inclusion in the agenda, preferably after the Preparatory Commission has closed its session and before the date for the opening of the General Assembly. If, however, the matter is raised in the Preparatory Commission joint action could be taken by the delegations of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada to sponsor a resolution adding the question to the provisional agenda for the General Assembly.

It has been suggested that the Government of the U.S.S.R. might be approached with a view to securing their sponsorship for the tripartite proposals. This would seem unlikely to bring any fruitful results. Past experience indicates that the Soviet Government would be unlikely to associate themselves in sponsoring a statement about which they were not consulted and might also complicate the whole procedure by insisting at this stage that the subject was one which should properly be considered by the Security Council. It would, therefore, seem best that the three governments directly concerned should reach agreement between themselves on the course to be followed. They might then inform the Soviet Government, privately in advance, of the action which they propose to take without inviting comment from the Soviet Government. If this is done, it would be well to consider whether similar notification should be addressed to the Governments of France and China.

The desirable composition of the special Commission is difficult to determine. Perhaps the easiest course to pursue would be to suggest that it should be composed of representatives of the governments serving on the first Security Council. It is, however, essential that Canada as one of the sponsors for the establishment of the Commission should be assured of representation on it, whether or not Canada is elected to one of the non-permanent seats on the Security Council. The Commission is likely to continue in existence for a considerable period and it would not be desirable that its membership should change automatically as a result of new elections to the Security Council. There might be included in it, initially at any rate, representatives of the five states with permanent membership, together with representatives of Canada, at least one Latin American country and at least one smaller European country. A wide degree of overlapping with the membership of the Security Council would be some assurance against conflicts over questions of jurisdiction within the United Nations Organization.

The terms of reference set forth in paragraph 7 of the Washington declaration cover matters falling within the scope of both the General Assembly and the Security Council. It might be that some of the proposals made by the Commission would require consideration by the Economic and Social Council and the collaboration of some of the specialized agencies to be brought into relationship with the United Nations, such as the Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The most satisfactory course may prove to be the submission of reports by the Commission to either or both of the General Assembly and the Security Council. Matters falling directly within the competence of the Security Council under Articles 24 and 26 of the Charter could be the subject of recommendations from the Commission to the Security Council alone if necessary. Quite apart from the specific allocation of functions included in the Charter (whereby some of the recommendations of the Commission would properly be for consideration by the Assembly), it is most unlikely that agreement could be secured among the members of the United Nations for concentrating wholly in the Security Council responsibility for dealing with the problems raised by the development of atomic fission.

It will be necessary to decide in advance on a suitable designation for the proposed special Commission. Under the Washington declaration the functions of the Commission would not be limited to questions of the use or misuse of atomic energy. They would include the bringing forward of proposals for the elimination from national armaments "of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction" and also for the exchange between all nations of "basic scientific information for peaceful ends". While the Commission might be generally known by the short title of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, the designation given to it in the resolution to be placed before the General Assembly should clearly indicate its broader functions.

Mr. Pearson will be glad to hold himself in readiness to discuss these matters further with Mr. Byrnes at the Secretary's convenience.

The Chairman of the Combined Development Trust (Groves) to the Chairman of the Combined Policy Committee (Patterson)

Washington, December 2, 1945.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: Under the tripartite agreement ²⁸ the United Kingdom and the United States were given, subject to certain limitations, a first refusal on all uranium mined in the Belgian Congo for a ten-year period following the completion of the contract for 3,440,000 pounds between the Combined Development Trust and African Metals Corporation of September 25, 1944. Deliveries under this contract have been proceeding satisfactorily and it is probable that they will be completed by March 1946.

To insure future supplies of uranium for the ten-year period, we have been negotiating for the past six months with the Belgians for the purchase of large quantities of uranium oxide to be mined at the Shinkolobwe Mine in the Belgian Congo. These negotiations have now been completed and two contracts were signed by the Combined Development Trust and African Metals Corporation on October 27, 1945.²⁹

The first contract involves the purchase by the Trust of all the uranium oxide content in high grade ore which can be produced from the mining operations down to the 150 meter level to a maximum of twenty million pounds of oxide and the Trust has been granted options with respect to the oxide contained in the lower grade ores down to that level. As in the earlier contract, African Metals retained the ownership of the radium and the precious metals contained in the ore and these will be returned to African Metals in the form of sludges after processing for the extraction of uranium. Initial deliveries of the ores will be made at Lobito or Matadi. Present information indicates that deliveries of the twenty million pounds will be completed by 1949.

The second contract is for the purchase of all the oxide which can be economically mined at Shinkolobwe within the ten-year period of the tripartite agreement and after the completion of the contract for twenty million pounds. The terms and conditions of this contract are the same as under the contract for twenty million pounds. Present estimates of the possible quantities involved in the second contract are about forty million pounds.

Because of the length of time involved, the Belgians insisted upon the protection of the purchase price by a gold clause. The British Government agreed to a gold clause with respect to the portion of the cost payable by them and in lieu of a gold clause on the American share, it has been agreed that a premium of fifteen per cent would be paid on the American share. This fifteen per cent increase will be discontinued if the American Government becomes authorized by legislation to agree to a gold clause. The price for uranium oxide under both contracts and subject to the adjustments noted above, will be $1.90 per pound for oxide contained in the high grade ores, and for the oxide contained in the lower grade ores the price varies from $1.85 per pound in the case of ores having a content of less than twenty-five per cent but not less than five per cent to fifty cents per pound in the case of ores having a content of less than one and one-half per cent.

Respectfully submitted,

L. R. Groves Major General, U.S.A.

The British Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Kerr) to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) 30

[Moscow,] December 3, 1945.

- 1. Perhaps it might be useful if I were to try to describe present state of mind in Moscow as we see it here, towards the Atomic Bomb in general which may well govern the Russians' approach to the question and misshape their judgment.
- 2. For this purpose I should probably reach back a longish way in order to draw in a little of the psychological background of the people upon whose minds the bomb exploded last August. For years they have been toiling after something like security for their country, their system and their own bodies. Nearly all of those who now govern Russia and mould opinion have led hunted lives since their early manhood when they were chased from pillar to post by the Tsarist police. Then came the immense and dangerous gamble of the Revolution followed by the perils and the ups and downs of intervention and civil war. Independence and even ostracism may have brought some passing relief to their country but not to the survival of their system or to their bodies whose safety remained as precarious as ever. Witness the prolonged and internecine struggle that came after the death of Lenin and the years of the purges when their system was wobbling and no one of them knew today whether he would be alive tomorrow. Admission to the League of Nations which synchronised with the turning of the economic corner may have given some slight respite. But this was fugitive and it may be said that through all these years they trembled for the safety of their country and their system as they trembled for their own. Meanwhile, they worked feverishly and by means of a kind of terror till they dragooned an idle and slipshod people without regard for its suffering into building up a machine that might promise the kind of security they rightly felt they needed. The German invasion caught them still unready and swept them to what looked like the brink of defeat. Then came the turn of the tide and with it first the hope and then a growing belief that the immense benison of national security was at last within their reach. As the Red Army moved westwards belief became confidence and the final defeat of Germany made confidence conviction.

- 3. There was a great exaltation. Russia could be made safe at last. She could put her house in order and more than this from behind her matchless three hundred divisions she could stretch out her hand and take most of what she needed and perhaps more. It was an exquisite moment, all the more so because this resounding success under their guidance justified at last their faith in the permanence of their system.
- 4. I have reviewed all this in order to recall to you the uncommon, and at times almost unbearable, tension that has strained these people's lives (it explains perhaps some of their abnormalities); and has hung over the whole history of the movement they have led, and in order also to suggest the measure of relief that must have come to them with the end of Nazism it would be hard to over-estimate.
- 5. Then plump came the Atomic Bomb. At a blow the balance which had now seemed set and steady was rudely shaken. Russia was balked by the west when everything seemed to be within her grasp. The three hundred divisions were shorn of much of their value. About all this the Kremlin was silent but such was the common talk of the people. But their disappointment was tempered by the belief inspired by such echoes of foreign press as were allowed to reach them that their Western comrades in arms would surely share the bomb with them. That some such expectation as this was shared by the Kremlin became evident in due course. But as time went on and no move came from the West, disappointment turned into irritation and, when the bomb seemed to them to become an instrument of policy, into spleen. It was clear that the West did not trust them. This seemed to justify and it quickened all their old suspicions. It was a humiliation also and the thought of this stirred up memories of the past. We may assume that all these emotions were fully shared by the Kremlin. (Molotov's speech of the 6th of November and the disturbing absence of any reply to the advance notice of Washington statement ³¹).

- 6. If my interpretation of the state of mind of the Russians is anything like right we may I think expect them to approach the proposal to discuss Atomic Energy in the first instance in the open forum of the General Assembly with all the prickliness of which they are capable.
- 7. We cannot indeed rule out the possibility of a refusal to discuss it at all. It seems to me therefore that if we are to secure the Russians' cooperation we must go about things in a different way. I mean that before the Assembly gathers we and the Americans must have preliminary and private talks with Molotov who though unlikely in any circumstances to be willing to sponsor the Washington statements, might then be persuaded to treat the whole matter with goodwill and reason. It would not be enough to approach him through the diplomatic channel.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: The following conclusions have just been drawn from the investigations by the Combined Development Trust of the world's resources of uranium and thorium:

- 1. From present knowledge, it appears that the Trust group of nations controls 97% of the world's uranium output from presently producing countries.
- 2. Of the large tonnage deposits which while of lower grade are capable of early commercial development, the British Empire controls 60%, i.e., those of the Union of South Africa. The other 40% is in Sweden.
- 3. Looking ahead ten years or more to large tonnage low grade deposits which might be developed if no consideration is given to costs, the Trust group of nations controls 35%, i.e., those of the United States of America and India. The remaining 65% is divided between Russia and the Argentine.

4. According to our present knowledge, it would appear that the only countries, outside of the Trust areas, having resources and industrial power which might challenge the dominant position of the Trust group of nations in the near future are Russia and possibly Russian resources of raw materials are far inferior to those of the Trust group of nations and in all probability these could not be made available unless costs of production are completely disregarded.

Looking ten years or more ahead, the Argentine and Brazil might possibly come into this class although this would mean a scale of industrial and technical development which does not now seem at all probable.

- 5. Geological deductions would suggest that the discovery of deposits of uranium is not improbable in certain unexplored areas of the world such as China, Manchuria and Portuguese West Africa. However, even if such discoveries are made, having regard to industrial and technical capacity, it is not believed that these countries are likely to be able to challenge the position of the Trust group of nations in the foreseeable future.
- 6. With regard to thorium, the Trust group of nations controls about 65% of the world supply in India and Brazil.
- 7. The above opinions are based on the assumption that 100 tons of uranium and thorium are a practicable minimum working stock for an atomic energy project. We consider this a sound assumption under present knowledge.
- 8. There is no possibility of acquiring one hundred per cent commercial and political control of the world's resources of uranium and thorium.
- 9. We would like to emphasize that all above figures are rough approximations intended to show the general order of magnitude. They represent the present picture integrating a number of factors which are constantly changing. This picture will become more definite as information becomes more fixed.
- 10. The above information is of the highest order of secrecy which should be preserved not only from other countries but from citizens of the United States (Trust group of nations) who might be tempted to profit by the information.

A summary of work in progress, pending and recommended is attached.32

Minutes of a Meeting of the Combined Policy Committee

[Extracts]

[Washington,] December 4, 1945.

Present:

Members: The Secretary of State (in the Chair)

The Secretary of War

The Rt. Hon. Earl of Halifax

Field Marshal Sir Henry Maitland Wilson

Dr. Vannevar Bush

By Invitation: The Canadian Ambassador, Mr. L. B. Pearson

Mr. George L. Harrison Mr. George Bateman 34

Joint Secretaries: Major General L. R. Groves

Mr. Roger Makins

V. Cooperation Between the Three Governments.

The Committee had before them two documents:-

- (a) Memorandum by President and Prime Ministers of Great Britain and Canada.³⁵
- (b) Memorandum addressed to the Chairman of the Committee and signed by General Groves and Sir John Anderson.³⁵
- (a) Procedure: Judge Patterson explained that during the visit of Mr. Attlee and Sir John Anderson there had been insufficient time to prepare a formal document to take the place of the Quebec Agreement. The present document was intended to constitute heads of an agreement for discussion and consideration, and had been worked out between General Groves and Sir John Anderson. It was in the nature of a preliminary working paper. Lord Halifax understood the memorandum to constitute general guidance to the Combined Policy Committee as to the way in which paragraph 3 of the memorandum signed by the President and the Prime Ministers should be implemented.

JUDGE PATTERSON said that it was important to note that this document would take the place of the Quebec Agreement, the provisions of which would be completely superseded, including paragraph 4 concerning the use of atomic energy for commercial and industrial purposes.

At this meeting ,the nomination of Mr. Bateman as Canadian Joint Secretary was approved.
 Dated November 16, p. 75.

General Groves said that the memorandum was not exhaustive and there were one or two other questions which might have to be included in the final document.

On the proposal of Lord Halifax a Sub-Committee was then appointed consisting of General Groves, Mr. Makins and Mr. Pearson or Mr. Bateman, (designation to be made later by Mr. Pearson) to draw up a document for submission to the main Committee.

Discussion followed as regards the nature of the agreement to be drawn up, and it was suggested that it should be an executive agreement in the form of a memorandum for signature.

The Committee:— instructed the Sub-Committee to prepare a memorandum accordingly in the form of an executive agreement.

VI. Combined Development Trust.

GENERAL GROVES, Chairman of the Trust then made a report to the Committee on the following matters:—

- (a) He asked the Committee to take note of a trend towards the nationalisation of uranium throughout the world.
- (b) World Survey Report: A letter addressed to the Chairman of the Committee by the Chairman of the Trust was read drawing attention to the conclusions of a recent survey of the world resources of uranium and thorium undertaken by the Combined Development Trust. (Copy of this letter is attached as Tab JJ.)³⁶

Attention was drawn to paragraph 3 of this letter regarding the low grade deposits in the Soviet Union and the Argentine. It was pointed out that it would require a revolution in extraction technique to develop these deposits.

In reply to a question, General Groves said that the policy of the Trust was to extract and bring under the control of the Trust high-grade deposits at the earliest possible moment. For example, it was hoped that the Belgian Congo deposits would be worked out at the end of ten years. In reply to a further question, General Groves said that there was no evidence of any high-grade deposits in the Soviet Union.

The Committee:— took note of the letter from the Chairman of the Trust and of the points made in the discussion.

(c) Contracts with African metals:

The Committee:— took note of a letter addressed to the Chairman of the Committee by the Chairman of the Trust ³⁷ reporting the conclusion of two further contracts for the supply of uranium between the Trust and African Metals Corporation.

General Groves explained that the African Metals had insisted on the protection of the purchase price by a gold clause. Under the existing law of the United States this could not be agreed to by the United States negotiators. It had, therefore, been provided that, as far as the United Kingdom share of the cost of the uranium was concerned, a gold clause would apply, and a premium of 15% would be paid on the American share. It had been stated in an exchange of letters between the senior United Kingdom and United States members of the Trust ³⁸ that, although under this arrangement the amounts ultimately paid by the United States Government and the United Kingdom Government could differ, the Governments were in fact undertaking equal obligations under the contracts with African Metals and that the spirit of Article 3(1) and Article 6 of the Trust Agreement was therefore met.

³⁷ Dated December 2, p. 81.

The Committee:— Took note and formally approved this understanding.

- (d) Travancore: General Groves reported that negotiations by the United Kingdom authorities with the State of Travancore concerning deposits of monazite sands in the States were continuing. Meanwhile, the mining of these sands had been stopped and full control had been secured over the export of monazite and its derivatives.
- (e) Portugal: General Groves reported that the Trust was continuing its operations in Portugal, with the object of securing complete control of the uranium deposits in that country. These deposits were of sufficient size to permit a country which secured control of them to engage in extensive experimental work.
- (f) Brazil: General Groves referred to the agreement which had been made in July 1945 between the United States and Brazilian Governments and the subsequent arrangements between the United States and the United Kingdom Governments for the control of monazite sand and its derivatives in Brazil. The time had now come to make some purchases of material from Brazil under this agreement and the matter was being pursued with the advice and assistance of the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. William Clayton.

The Committee:— Took note of this statement.

(g) Purchase of stock piles in the United States and United Kingdom: General Groves reported that there were certain stocks of thorium, mostly in the United States, which it was desirable should come under control of the Trust. It had been decided that each Government would take steps to secure this control in its own territory, and the Manhattan District was taking the necessary action in the United States of America.

VII. Policy in regard to the control of raw materials.

GENERAL GROVES said that the policy of the Trust was to try and secure exclusive control of all deposits and supplies of raw materials wherever they might be situated. He pointed out that there had been a considerable change in the membership of the Combined Policy Committee and asked that this policy be again stated by the Committee. Judge Patterson said he saw no alternative to re-affirming this policy, at least until some arrangement of a wider character could be reached and adequate assurance from other powers could be obtained. Lord Halifax, Dr. Bush and Mr. Byrnes agreed.

The Committee:— Approved the policy of the Combined Development Trust as stated by its Chairman.

VIII. Combined Intelligence Section.

The Committee:— Took note of a letter to the Chairman from General Groves ³⁹ setting out the functions of the Combined Intelligence Section.

IX. Tripartite Declaration.

Mr. Pearson enquired whether the procedure for the establishment of the Atomic Energy Commission under the United Nations Organisation would be discussed in the Committee.

Mr. Byrnes said that there had already been an exchange of views between the Department of State and the British and Canadian Embassies on this subject, and he contemplated that for the time being the matter should continue to be handled through diplomatic channels.

X. Documents of the Committee.

Mr. Makins said that the minutes and memoranda of the Combined Policy Committee were treated as Top Secret documents. There were two master copies of the proceedings and documents of the Committee; one for the United States Joint Secretary and the other for the United Kingdom Joint Secretary. These were kept in the War Department.

Mr. Byrnes directed that these documents should continue to be kept in the War Department.

The Committee then adjourned.

cerning the procedure for bringing before the United Nations Organization the proposal, made in the Agreed Declaration of November 15 on atomic energy, to set up a "Commission under the United Nations Organization to prepare recommendations for submission to the Organization."

- 2. The Government of the United States is pleased to note that the views of the British Government with respect to the establishment of the proposed Commission accord in general with those of the United States. This Government believes, however, that it would be unwise to attempt to establish in definite form its position on the organization of the Commission prior to discussion of the subject with the Soviet Government.
- 3. This Government is in full accord with the view that it is desirable to discourage the Preparatory Commission from embarking on a detailed discussion of the proposed Commission. The United States Delegate to the Preparatory Commission has been so informed and has been instructed to take this matter up with his British and Canadian colleagues.
- 4. This Government has received only a simple acknowledgement from the Soviet Government in reply to the Secretary of State's message communicating the text of the Agreed Declaration. A copy of this acknowledgement is enclosed.⁴⁰
- 5. The Government of the United States believes that it would be highly desirable to have the Soviet Government associate itself with, or at least concur in, any proposal which may be made to the General Assembly. In reply to Lord Halifax's query as to whether this Government would consider approaching the Soviet Government with a view to obtaining the cooperation of the latter in submitting to the United Nations the proposal for a Commission, the Secretary of State is pleased to state that this Government plans to discuss this question promptly with the Soviet Government. It will be prepared to cover in this discussion both the method of proposing the Commission and the nature of the Commission's authority.
- 6. The Government of the United States believes that consideration should also be given to possible discussions with the Governments of France and China. As the British Government is aware, the Secretary of State transmitted the text of the Agreed Declaration to the Foreign Ministers of France and China. No reply has yet been received from the French Government, but one has been received from the Chinese Government, a copy of which is enclosed.⁴¹

The Secretary of State has the honor to acknowledge receipt of the Canadian Ambassador's Aide-Mémoire ⁴² concerning the procedure for bringing before the United Nations Organization the proposal, made in the Agreed Declaration of November 15 on atomic energy, to set up a "Commission under the United Nations Organization to prepare recommendations for submission to the Organization".

- 2. The views of the Government of the United States with respect to the proposed Commission are in general accord with those expressed by the Canadian Government. In particular, this Government believes that Canada should be given representation on the proposed Commission. This Government believes, however, that it would be unwise to attempt to establish in definite form its position on the organization of the Commission prior to discussion of the subject with the Soviet Government.
- 3. It is the opinion of this Government that it would be desirable to discourage the Preparatory Commission from undertaking a detailed discussion of the proposed Commission. The United States Delegate to the Preparatory Commission has been so informed and has been instructed to take up the matter with his Canadian and British colleagues.
- 4. The Secretary of State finds it impossible to concur in the view expressed by the Canadian Government with respect to approaching the Soviet Government. This Government considers that it is essential, both for the successful establishment of the proposed Commission and for its effective functioning, that its composition and terms of reference be acceptable to the Soviet Government. For this reason, the Government of the United States plans to take up promptly with the Soviet Government the question of the establishment of the proposed Commission with a view to obtaining its cooperation in submitting a proposal to the United Nations Organization or at least its concurrence in such a proposal.

Memorandum by an Informal Interdepartmental Committee 44a

DRAFT PRÓPOSALS ON ATOMIC ENERGY FOR SUBMISSION TO SOVIET GOVERNMENT

It is the earnest desire of the United States to collaborate with other nations for the purpose of developing with the greatest practicable speed international measures to prevent the use for destructive purposes of atomic energy and other means of mass destruction, and to promote the use of atomic energy and other scientific advances for the benefit of mankind.

The President of the United States announced on October 3, 1945, that, in furtherance of this purpose, it was the intention of this Government to hold conversations with the other Governments associated with it in the development and use of atomic energy, and subsequently with other governments. The first step having been taken, it is now desired, as the next step, to hold exploratory conversations with the

⁴⁴ For an account of the interdepartmental working group which drafted these proposals and of the policy committee which considered them and recommended them to the Secretary of State, see The New World, 1939/1946, pp. 471-472. The policy committee met in the office of Benjamin V. Cohen, Counselor of the Department of State, and its other members were Adm. William H. P. Blandy, Drs. Bush and Pasvolsky, and Messrs. Harrison and Bohlen.

Soviet Government in regard to this matter which is of such vital importance to the peace and well-being of the peoples of the world.

As the Soviet Government is aware, the Governments of Great Britain, Canada and the United States believe that a commission should be established under the United Nations Organization to study the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters and to make recommendations for submission to the Organization. It is the hope of this Government that the Soviet Government will join in the sponsorship of a proposal to this effect at the first meeting of the United Nations in January, 1946. A draft embodying the present views of the Government of the United States as to the method of establishing the commission is submitted herewith. It is the desire of this Government to have a full exchange of views on this draft and to learn whether the Soviet Government will join in a proposal along these lines.

It is the belief of this Government that the substantive problem presents very difficult questions; in consequence agreed international action is likely to be exceedingly complex and must be based upon careful and earnest study.

The problem appears to this Government to consist of a number of separate although related segments. These segments include (1) the ever-widening exchange of scientists and scientific information; and scientific techniques and materials, (2) the development and exchange of knowledge concerning natural resources, (3) the exchange of technological and engineering information, (4) safeguards against and controls of methods of mass destruction. It is the belief of this Government that successful international action with respect to any phase of the problem is not necessarily a prerequisite for undertaking affirmative action with respect to other phases. Affirmative action should be taken whenever it is likely to be fruitful.

This Government believes that mutually advantageous international action might well be undertaken promptly with respect to the first segment listed above—the exchange of scientists and scientific data. This Government attaches great importance to the development of effective collaboration in all fields of science.

The other segments present very troublesome questions which require for their solution the devising of effective, reciprocal and enforceable safeguards acceptable to all nations. The United States Government does not purport to have the solution to these questions, but it is eager and willing to work with the Soviet Union and other nations toward the establishment, as rapidly as possible, of mutually acceptable arrangements for full collaboration in these areas. To this end the United States Government will be glad to consider such proposals as the Soviet Government may wish to make in respect to any phase of these problems and to discuss them with the Soviet Government both in the United Nations Commission and separately.

PROPOSED RECOMMENDATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT BY THE UNITED NATIONS OF A COMMISSION TO DEAL WITH THE PROBLEMS RAISED BY THE DISCOVERY OF ATOMIC ENERGY AND OTHER RELATED MATTERS

I. Establishment of the Commission

The Commission should be established by the General Assembly which is the only body, under the terms of the Charter, possessing the authority to examine the entire problem of atomic energy.

II. Reports of the Commission

The reports of the Commission should be made to the General Assembly for transmission to the members of the United Nations, the Security Council, and the Economic and Social Council. The General Assembly should also request action of the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council on those aspects of the reports which require action, and which fall within the respective jurisdiction of those bodies.

III. Composition of the Commission

The Commission should be composed of one representative each of those nations represented on the Security Council, and Canada when that nation is not a member of the Security Council. Each representative on the Commission should have such assistants as he may desire.

IV. Rules of Procedure

The Commission should establish its own rules of procedure. It should choose its own officers, and have whatever staff may be deemed necessary.

V. Terms of Reference of the Commission

The Commission should proceed with the utmost dispatch and inquire into all phases of the problems, including the following matters, and make such recommendations from time to time with respect to them as it finds feasible: (1) wide exchange of scientists and basic scientific information for peaceful ends, (2) further measures to facilitate and promote the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, and the controls necessary to limit its use to such purposes, (3) the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and all other weapons capable of mass destruction, and (4) effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means for those nations complying with the recommendations of the Commission.

The Commission should not infringe upon the responsibility of any organ of the United Nations, but should present recommendations for the consideration of those organs in the performance of their tasks under the terms of the United Nations Charter.

[Subannex]

DRAFT OF U.S. PROPOSALS ON EXCHANGE OF SCIENTISTS AND SCIENTIFIC DATA

A. Exchange of Scientists, Scientific Information

- 1. The exchange of scientific information, scientists and students between all nations for peaceful purposes should be encouraged and extended to the end that each nation may fully benefit by the scientific progress made by others.
- 2. In furtherance of this objective the following steps should be taken:
- a. A Declaration of Principles regarding Scientific Freedom should be adopted, to which all nations should subscribe and which should be based on the following policies:
 - 1. Each nation should agree to invite visits of foreign scientists freely to its laboratories where basic scientific research is carried on, as may be arranged by the participating governments or by the scientists themselves, and with no artificial barriers applicable to foreigners that do not apply to its own nationals; to encourage and assist its own scientists to travel freely for such purposes; and to further the exchange of students for the same purposes.
 - 2. Each nation should agree to encourage its scientists to publish freely and to give the widest dissemination to the results of their work.
- b. In implementation of the Declaration of Principles outlined above, there should be within the framework of the United Nations an International scientific agency charged with the responsibility of fostering full cooperation among nations in the exchange of scientists and scientific information. In carrying out this responsibility the scientific agency should encourage the dissemination of fundamental scientific information in all fields including the field of atomic fission, further the exchange of scientists and students and make arrangements for the calling of International Science Congresses.

B. Exchange of Isotopes

An international exchange of certain radio active isotopes which are useful for scientific and medical research should be initiated. This exchange might well be carried on through the medium of the central agency for the international exchange of scientific information outlined in the preceding proposal. It should be coordinated with the measures outlined in (A) in such a way as to make such exchange of isotopes of maximum usefulness.

The Secretary of the Navy (Forrestal) to the Secretary of State

Washington, 11 December 1945.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I have just seen for the first time the paper 44c which is proposed as a basis for your forthcoming conversations with the U.S.S.R. concerning the proposal for the creation of an Atomic Energy Commission within the United Nations Organization.

I feel most strongly that the proposed basis of discussion goes too far. I believe that there should be no discussion of proposals as to the specific kinds and types of information in this field to be made available by this country to other Nations until a procedure for the exchange of such information has been worked out that will guarantee genuine reciprocity in such exchanges.

Specifically I recommend that the basis of discussion in the forthcoming conversations be confined to that indicated in the enclosed revision of the proposed paper.44d This revision, you will note, deals

The final sentence of the second paragraph (p. 92) was revised to read: "... conversations with the Soviet Government with respect to methods of promoting international cooperation in this field."

⁴⁴c Memorandum of December 10, p. 92.

Enclosure not printed; Secretary Forrestal's alternative draft included the following changes:

The third paragraph was revised to read: "As the Soviet Government is aware, the governments of Great Britain, Canada and the United States believe that a commission should be established under the United Nations to study the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters, and to make recommendations for submission to the Organization. It is expected that a proposal to this effect will be presented at the first meeting of the United Nations in January, 1946. There is attached in this connection as Annex I a draft incorporating the present views of the United States with respect to the establishment of the proposed commission. This Government proposes this draft as a basis for discussion and is desirous of ascertaining whether the Soviet Government will associate itself with a proposal along these lines.'

The remaining paragraphs were to be omitted.

The annex to the proposed paper was to be the same as that proposed by the informal interdepartmental committee (ante, p. 94), except that item (2) of section V was changed to read "the necessary measures to facilitate . . ." and item (4) to read "effective safeguards for those nations complying with the recommendations of the Commission."

Memorandum by the Secretary of War (Patterson) to the Secretary of State

Washington, December 11, 1945.

For your information I am sending you a copy of a memorandum from General Groves on certain questions in which I know your mission to Moscow is interested.

I approve of paragraphs 1a and b. No comment by me is necessary on paragraph 1c or paragraph 2 which merely reflect General Groves' views.

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

[Enclosure]

Washington, 11 December, 1945.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF WAR:

- 1. In accordance with your instructions I give below my views on the steps which should be taken with respect to our domestic situation insofar as it affects the Moscow negotiations. If these meet with your approval, the United States representatives for the scheduled atomic energy discussions in Moscow should be informed.
- a. Scientific information which can safely be made public should be released as soon as practicable. The possible amount of this information is so great that it cannot all be released at once but the process of release will extend over the next year or so. It includes information on medical research and other scientific matters not related to bomb production. A large amount of other information is vital to the national security and must not be released. Still other material is doubtful and will have to be carefully screened. I am momentarily expecting recommendations from my committee of scientists which has been reviewing this question.
- b. Arrangements should be made as soon as practicable for the distribution of certain isotopes of value for peacetime research in medicine and other sciences. Possible isotopes among others might be radio-sodium, radio-phosphorus, long life radio-carbon, radio-iron and radio-calcium. This step would not endanger the national security by appreciably hastening bomb production in any other country. While such isotopes can be made in minute quantities in cyclotrons they can be made in real quantity as by-products of our operations. No isotopes of real value in further research for bomb production should be released. There will be a considerable time lag involved in making the arrangements for proper distribution to qualified scientists in this country which must be done before any distribution can be made to foreign governments or nationals.

- c. The visits of foreign scientists to this country would have to be carefully supervised to prevent them from gaining appreciable information applicable to wartime uses of atomic energy. Furthermore, I know of no way of ensuring that American scientists traveling in Russia will not disclose vital information.
- 2. I hope that the negotiators will not go beyond the first step outlined in the Joint Declaration of November 15, 1945. Specifically I hope they will not at this time discuss the raw material situation as covered in Paragraph 8 of the Declaration.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I have been instructed by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs 2 to give you the following message:

"I am greatly looking forward to seeing you here in London for the opening sessions of the Council of Foreign Ministers. I suggest that the first meeting of Foreign Secretaries should take place on Monday, September 3rd, but it would be convenient if Delegations could arrive in London at least by September 1st in order to establish contact with each other and in order that deputies could meet together to discuss procedure and prepare agenda for the first meeting of Foreign Secretaries.³

I suggest that the first item on the Agenda should be the preparation of the Peace Treaty with Italy, and in order to make early progress I hope to circulate to my colleagues in advance the British draft proposals for the Political Sections of the Treaty. I hope at the opening sessions of the Council in September we could also discuss the other subjects referred at Potsdam to the Council, i.e.

Preparation of Peace Treaties with Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria and Finland.⁵

The Secretary of State to the British Chargé (Balfour)

Washington, August 24, 1945.

MY DEAR MR. CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES: I thank you for your courtesy in forwarding to me, by your letter of August 15, the message of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs concerning the agenda of the first meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers. I shall also be grateful if you would kindly forward the following comments to Mr. Bevin:

"I, too, am looking forward with keen anticipation to the beginning of the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers. I plan to arrive in London one or two days before the first meeting, which will, apparently, be agreed on for September 10.

"I shall be happy to examine in advance the British draft proposals for the political sections of the peace treaty with Italy. I assume that the Council will wish, at its first session, to survey the heads of agreement to be embodied in this treaty, leaving to the Deputies 12 the elaboration of the actual draft. I should think the Council would find it more convenient to take up the question of the future of the Italian colonies in connection with the Italian treaty rather than to treat this question as a distinct item on the agenda. Otherwise, the subjects listed in your message seem to me to record fully the agenda assigned to the Council by the Berlin Conference.

"If you have in mind any matters on the Far East which you think should be brought up at this time, I should be glad to have your suggestions."

I thank you for your kindness in transmitting these comments to Mr. Bevin.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

Mr. Bevin has expressed his earnest desire to discuss with Mr. Byrnes on his arrival at the Foreign Secretaries Conference the general situation throughout the Danubian and Balkan area.

Telegram 1810, August 22, 1945, 7 p. m., to Moscow, directed Ambassador Harriman to inform Foreign Commissar Molotov that Assistant Secretary of State James C. Dunn would accompany the Secretary of State to the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers and would remain as the Secretary's Deputy on the Council. Ambassador Harriman was further directed to impress strongly on Molotov the importance of each Foreign Minister being represented on the Council by a Deputy who, as a high policy-making officer of his Government, would have authority to carry forward the work of the Council expeditiously during the intervals between the attendance of the Foreign Ministers (740.00119-Council/8-2245).

- 2. Mr. Bevin is of the opinion that the time has come to consider the problem created by the political and economic situation in Austria, Czechoslovakia, the ex-satellite countries and Yugoslavia as a whole rather than piecemeal, as has hitherto tended to be the case owing to the course of events. The political situation obtaining in all these countries except Czechoslovakia is in every respect similar, inasmuch as governments with totalitarian leanings subservient to -the Soviet Union have been manoeuvered into power and are being kept there with the help of or intimidation by the Soviet authorities. There are moreover prospects of early elections in the satellite countries and Yugoslavia, from which will no doubt emerge governments equally unrepresentative and equally under Soviet influence if not control, which may well develop into totalitarian regimes, if the present tendencies are allowed to continue. Thus it would seem evident that the time has come to decide whether or not to acquiesce in this block of countries remaining indefinitely in the Soviet sphere of influence. It is therefore important to consider the objectives it is desired to achieve in this arena, the steps to be taken to effect them and the lengths to which action to such end might go. For instance, in the political sphere it must be recognised that some of these countries may not be sufficiently advanced to make a success of democratic government on lines which the United States Government and His Maiestv's Government could approve. In the economic and agricultural field it is desirable to consider what assistance can be offered to these countries by the United States and the United Kingdom to induce them to look to the West rather than to the East. Having thus obtained a clearer picture of the situation, the two Governments would then be in a more advantageous position to invite frank discussions with the Soviet Government.
- 3. It does not seem open to question that unless the United States Government and His Majesty's Government can come to some agreement with the Soviet Government over long-term policy in the whole of the Danubian and Balkan area, they run the grave risk that their general relations with that Government will be at the continual mercy of recurring disagreement and conflict in that part of the world.
- 4. As Mr. Byrnes is aware, the British and American Delegations made various attempts to raise these matters at Potsdam, but without success, since the Russians made counter charges about conditions in other spheres. As a result, the various papers put forward by the United States and United Kingdom Delegations were withdrawn. The general line of policy of both the United States and His Majesty's Governments has remained fluid and, as stated above, both countries have been forced into dealing piecemeal with sudden developments in one or other of these countries as they arise. There is a danger that uncoordinated methods of handling this very delicate and important problem may lead to the two Governments failing to combine their policies to the greatest advantage.

- 5. As an example in point, the United States Government took a separate initiative in Roumania against the Groza Government.¹³ In Bulgaria, although a joint policy was in essentials agreed upon, the United States political representative acted somewhat in advance of His Majesty's Government in regard to the coming elections. It seems clear that in challenging, as the American and British Governments have done, the predominant position which the Soviet Government has built up for itself in these two countries, the two Governments are embarking upon a course which will call for the most careful navigation.
- 6. The situation in the other countries is also far from satisfactory. With regard to Yugoslavia,14 it may be argued that it is still too early to accuse Marshal Tito 15 of having deliberately ignored the terms of the Tito-Subasic Agreement,16 which was negotiated under Anglo-American auspices. There is no doubt, however, that the spirit of the Agreement has been consistently broken by Marshal Tito and that a new form of dictatorship has been set up. Hopes for anything approaching free elections in Yugoslavia are not bright. The same is true of Albania.17
- 7. In Austria, the United States Government and His Majestv's Government are admittedly on firmer ground than in any of the other countries under consideration, since United States, British and French troops between them occupy three quarters of the country. But here too a Government set up unilaterally by Soviet occupation forces still claims to be the Government of Austria as a whole. Moreover it contains more Communists (all in key positions and all imported from Moscow) than the strength of that Party in Austria warrants.

- 8. In Czechoslovakia,¹⁸ a country of vital industrial importance to the economy of Central Europe, the political position looks more promising, but the country is still very much isolated from the West and subject to constant Soviet propaganda.
- 9. In Hungary, no less important from the agricultural point of view, it is to be expected that Soviet tactics will be the same as in Roumania, although so far they have not taken definite shape.
- 10. Mr. Bevin is deeply impressed by the fact that the whole of this region represents a single economic unit, which could be largely self-supporting if the various countries were to pool their resources and eliminate the tariff barriers which at present isolate each of them in its own separate poverty. Although the Soviet Government would no doubt view with suspicion any attempt to induce these countries to cooperate in the economic field, he feels that every effort ought nevertheless to be made to overcome the Soviet objections, if it is in the interest of Europe as a whole to do so. The situation has been rendered all the more dangerous by crushing trade agreements which have been imposed on Roumania and Bulgaria by the Soviets. There are moreover indications that the Hungarians will soon be obliged to sign a similar agreement.
- 11. Mr. Bevin earnestly hopes that Mr. Byrnes will be prepared to discuss these matters as soon as he arrives in London.

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom understand that His Majesty's Government in Australia have approached the United States Government with a request for full participation by Australia in the Council of Foreign Ministers in relation to every aspect of the Pacific settlement.²²

His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires is instructed to inform the Secretary of State that His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom support the Australian request and consider that Canada and New Zealand should similarly participate in the Council of Foreign Ministers, if they wish, in relation to the Pacific settlement. His Majesty's Government recognise that the question of admitting other governments to the Council is a matter to be decided by the Council itself when it meets but they hope that in the meantime the United States Government will give sympathetic consideration to the Australian request.

Summary of Italian Views for an Equitable Solution of the Principal Questions Which May Be Discussed at the London Peace Conference

1. Eastern frontier with Yugoslavia

Italy wishes a complete understanding with Yugoslavia and believes that the "Wilson Line" ²⁶ may be taken as a basis for an adjustment of the common frontier, although this would mean the very painful loss of two flourishing Italian cities, Fiume and Zara, and of nearly 80,000 Italians.

Italy is ready to reach an agreement with bordering countries on the utilization of the harbour of Trieste and to conclude with Yugoslavia—under the auspices of the United Nations—mutual obligations for the granting of cultural guarantees and local autonomies to respective minorities. The enforced transfer of populations is against Italian feelings and traditions, but, if deemed necessary Italy will not oppose it. To ensure peace in the Adriatic, Italy is willing to accept the demilitarization of Pola, if requested, provided that the same measure be put into effect for the naval base of Cattaro and that the full independence of Albania be maintained.

2. Western Frontier with France

On February 29, 1945 Italy signed with France an agreement renouncing all Italian rights (deriving from previous treaties) to the protection of Italians in Tunis. Consequently, the French Government stated that they did not intend to advance any other claims than those relating to Fezzan (in Southern Libya). Now the French ask for adjustments on Italy's Western frontiers. Even on this issue Italy has not maintained an uncompromising attitude, but pursues the road of direct and friendly negotiations with the firm intention of attaining a sound understanding between the two countries.

3. Northern Frontier of the Brenner Pass

In these days Italy is enacting the legislation that will give the most large and guaranteed autonomy to German minorities that live together with the Italians in upper Adige, applying to the full extent also in this region (as in the Valley of Aosta and for Slav minorities) all democratic principles of individual and collective liberties.

4. Aegean Islands

The Italians would willingly see them entrusted to Greece as a compensation and token of friendship between the two Mediterranean countries.

5. Colonies

The ancient African colonies of pre-fascist Italy are bound by indissoluble ties to Italian minds: they are poor territories inhabited by a small native population composed mostly of nomads, where Italy has achieved a great work of civilization and where large Italian communities have established their homes.

a) Libya:

Italy is willing to give military guarantees in order to ensure full security to the bordering countries and to the international sea and air routes. The Italian Government believe that such a security could be obtained through the establishment of "strategic areas", air and naval bases and other guarantees in the Tobruk sector and in Marmarica, while Italian direct sovereignty is maintained in Libya which is inhabited by more than 140,000 Italian settlers.

b) Eritrea

The Italian Government consider that the maintenance of Italian sovereignty in Eritrea, inhabitated by nearly 70,000 Italians is fully reconcilable with Ethiopia's requirements for a free outlet to the sea in the zone of Assab (Southern Eritrea), for which purpose Italy has built the road leading from Dessiè to Assab. This access could be guaranteed either within Italian territory or through frontier rectifications. Furthermore, to meet the requirements of the Northern Abyssinian regions a free zone could be established in the harbour of Massawa.

c) Somaliland

If requested, Italy is ready to discuss the establishment and the technicalities of a trusteeship system.

6. Fleet, Army, Aviation

Italy is glad to cooperate, within the security system of the United Nations, with an adequate contribution in strength, proportioned to her position.

In On September 4, 1945, the Yugoslav Chargé also submitted to the Department a memorandum requesting that the claims of the Yugoslav Government to the so-called "Julian Region" along the Italo-Yugoslav frontier be impartially examined at the Council of Foreign Ministers meeting (740.00119 Council/9-445). In a memorandum to the Yugoslav Chargé, dated September 14, 1945, the Department conveyed the information that the United States delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers at London had been given a copy of the Yugoslav memorandum (740.00119 Council/9-445). The territorial claims of the Yugoslav Government with regard to the Italo-Yugoslav frontier region were set forth in great detail in document C.F.M. the subject of the work of the forthcoming meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

I have now been instructed by Mr. Bevin to thank Mr. Byrnes for his message and to say that he agrees that the question of the future of the Italian Colonies can best be treated in connection with the Italian Peace Treaty.

As regards the Far East Mr. Bevin has at present no specific subjects to suggest for discussion but he considers that the possibility ought not to be ruled out that certain Far Eastern questions may be ripe for discussion during the meeting.

I should be most grateful if you would cause Mr. Byrnes to be informed of the foregoing.

Yours sincerely,

The Chargé asked me how long I would estimate that this meeting of the Foreign Ministers would take. I said that, for my own sake, I hoped that the Secretary would not be away more than three weeks and that I believed it was his hope that he could return for pressing duties here after two weeks or so in London. By that time, the Foreign Ministers would have had an opportunity to go over the main questions and leave directives for further work with the staffs who would remain in London. The Chargé said that he too hoped that the meeting would not be too prolonged but, remembering that many other Foreign Ministers, such as the Foreign Minister of Czechoslovakia, were to be in London and would wish to be received, he thought that the amount of work before the Foreign Ministers was very considerable.

Mr. Secretary of State: On the eve of the meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in London, which is called to apply the recent agreements of Potsdam to prepare treaties pertaining to the States which fought on the side of Germany, my Government has intrusted me with the honor of calling to the attention of the Government of the United States the interests of Belgium in the countries in question, and of informing it of the confidence with which she expects to be consulted, prior to any decision, at the time which shall be judged opportune by the powers participating in the negotiations.

Mr. Bevin welcomed the Delegates on behalf of His Majesty's Government. The armies of the United Nations had carried out their task; and it was now for the Foreign Ministers to complete their work by laying the foundations for a sound and lasting peace.

Mr. Byrnes, M. Molotov, M. Bidault and Dr. Wang thanked Mr. Bevin and associated themselves with his remarks.

⁴¹ Document C.F.M. (45) 12, September 13, entitled "Composition and Functions of Joint Secretariat", p. 155, which was approved by the Council of Foreign Ministers at its Third Meeting, September 14, p. 158, set forth under item 5 the procedure for the preparation of a record of meetings of the Foreign Ministers and of their Deputies. This decision was, however, nullified by the Foreign Ministers at their Fifteenth Meeting, September 21. For the American Minutes of that meeting, see p. 288.

[&]quot;Aside from the Foreign Ministers, the delegations consisted of the following persons: For the United Kingdom—Sir Ronald I. Campbell, Deputy to Foreign Secretary Bevin and Acting Under Secretary of State in the British Foreign Office, Sir Archibald Clark Kerr, British Ambassador in the Soviet Union, Alfred Duff Cooper, British Ambassador in France; for the United States—Benjamin V. Cohen, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State, James C. Dunn, Deputy to Secretary Byrnes and Assistant Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, Consultant to the Secretary of State, and Charles E. Tong, Chinese Vice Minister for Information until August 1945, and Yang Yun-chu, Director of the East Asiatic Department of the Chinese Foreign Ministry.

1. PROCEDURE OF THE COUNCIL

(a) Chairmanship

MR. BYRNES suggested that, following the procedure adopted at the meetings of the Foreign Secretaries at Potsdam, the Chairmanship should rotate. He proposed that Mr. Bevin should preside at the present meeting.

This was agreed. It was further agreed that the order of Chairmanship should be Mr. Bevin, M. Molotov, Dr. Wang Shih Chieh, Mr. Byrnes, M. Bidault.

(b) Meetings

It was agreed that there should be regular meetings of the Deputies in the mornings and of the Foreign Ministers in the afternoons. The Deputies should prepare the Agenda for the Foreign Ministers and deal with any matters referred to them. Expert Committees might be appointed as required.

(c) Secretariat

Mr. Bevin said that, to avoid any initial delay, the British Government had made available staff for a Conference Secretariat, under the direction of Mr. Norman Brook, which would circulate documents and agenda papers, and secure agreed statements of conclusions and maintain constant touch with the Secretaries of all the Delegations. This Secretariat would also be ready to produce an unofficial report of the proceedings of the meetings. This report would not be binding on any Delegation, but the Secretariat would be glad to receive any comments or corrections which Delegations might wish to make.

- M. Molorov suggested that a joint Secretariat might be set up immediately, and that the Secretaries of the various Delegations should meet that evening to discuss the matter and make recommendations. M. Molotov formulated his proposal as follows:—
- (i) The Council of Foreign Ministers considers it necessary to set up a joint Secretariat;

(ii) The Council instructs the Secretaries of the five Delegations to consider how such a Secretariat should be established;

- (iii) The Council instructs its representatives to consider whether such a Secretariat should serve only for the present Conference, or should be the basis for a permanent organisation.
- (iv) The Council instructs its representatives to report to the next meeting of Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Byrnes said that, as far as he was concerned, he would be satisfied with the arrangement which Mr. Bevin had proposed, but he was willing that the alternative should be discussed as proposed.

It was agreed that the following representatives should meet that evening-

M. K. V. Novikov U.S.S.R.U.S.A. Mr. T. C. Achilles 43 Dr. Victor Hoo M. A. Berard 44 China. France Mr. P. M. Crosthwaite 45

with Mr. Norman Brook to consider the functions and constitution of the Secretariat and to submit recommendations for consideration on the following day.

(d) Languages of the Conference

Mr. Bevin suggested that the documents of the Council should be issued in three languages, English, Russian and French.

Dr. Wang said that he thought that for the more important documents there should also be a Chinese version.

It was agreed that all the documents of the Council should be prepared in English, Russian and French, and that the more important documents should also be translated into Chinese.

(e) Competence of Members of the Council

Mr. Bevin asked whether it was a correct interpretation of the terms of reference of the Council that, while all five members might attend all meetings and take part in all discussions, in questions concerning peace settlements the representatives of States which were not signatories to the relevant Armistices should not vote.

After some discussion—46

The American minutes of the discussion regarding the question of the competence of the Council read as follows:

"BEVIN said that the next question was that of the competence of the Council.

"Molorov thought the matter should be considered later.

"Bevin thought it was necessary to raise this question at the beginning.
"Molotov thought he could agree in principle now, but that the details should be discussed later. He also thought that countries not represented now should be asked if they wished to be present during considerations of certain questions.

"Byrnes said that at Potsdam there was agreement that so far as representatives on the Council, all representatives interested in a question should participate, but they would not all necessarily vote. For example, in the case of Finland where the U.S. was not a party to the armistice, the United States would participate in the discussion but would not vote. So far as the U.S. Delegation was concerned, it was willing to review the decision taken at Potsdam, and was entirely willing to have all members participate and vote.

"Molotov said he was not empowered to revise decisions taken at the Berlin Conference.

"Byrnes said he was not making a motion, but was merely stating the position of the U.S. Delegation.

"BIDAULT said that so far as the French Delegation was concerned, the decisions referred to were taken at a meeting at which France was not represented. These decisions could, of course, bind others, but they had no such effect on the French Delegation. On the question of substance, the French Delegation asked the right to participate in all questions which were discussed. The ⁴⁸ Ponsonby Moore Crosthwaite, First Secretary of the British Embassy in the Soviet Union.

It was agreed that all five members of the Council should have the right to attend all meetings and take part in all discussions, but that in matters concerning peace settlements members whose Governments had not been signatories to the relevant Terms of Surrender should not be entitled to vote.

(f) Press Arrangements

Mr. Bevin recalled that the following arrangements had been proposed-

(i) The Council's proceedings should be secret.

(ii) The progress of the Council's work should be published from time to time in agreed communiqués.

(iii) Each Delegation should appoint its own Press Officer.
(iv) The Council should appoint a Standing "Communiqué Committee" which might consist of the five Press Officers.

M. Molotov said that the Soviet Delegation would appoint Mr. Zinchenko 47 as their Press Officer. Agreed Communiqués could be issued from time to time; but he was doubtful whether it was necessary to establish a Standing Committee to deal with them. This had not been found necessary at Conferences of Heads of Governments.

Mr. Byrnes said that present conditions were different from those at earlier Conferences. He thought it might be helpful if at the close of each day's proceedings a communiqué were issued containing only the decisions reached, and not a record of the discussions. He saw no objection to a Standing Committee acting as a link with the Press.

This might help to prevent pressure on Delegations or members of their staffs to make independent statements to the Press.

It was agreed to appoint a Press Communiqué Committee consisting of the Press Officers of the five Delegations, who would issue from time matter of voting raised legal questions, and the French Delegation, of course, did not insist on a vote in all cases.

[&]quot;Byrnes said he did not believe it would be a violation of the Potsdam Agreement for the French to participate in the discussions. His understanding was that a party could be present and participate in the discussions, but not vote unless it were directly concerned.

"Molotov inquired if Bevin suggested that all five representatives have the right to attend discussions if they wished to do so, but that decisions could be made only by the representatives concerned. If that were so, he agreed.

[&]quot;Bevin said he wanted to know what the understanding was. Would all five attend the discussions, but if they had no interest, would not vote? were interested, they would vote.
"Byrnes said that so far as the United States was concerned, this was all right if it meant that they would not only be present but could participate in the discussion.

[&]quot;Molotov said he had no objection.

[&]quot;BIDAULT agreed with what Mr. Byrnes had said.

[&]quot;This was agreed to." (740.00119 Council/9-1145) to time agreed communiqués recording the progress of the Council's work and the decisions reached.48

2. Agenda for the Conference

Mr. Bevin circulated the following list of subjects proposed for discussion at this series of meetings of the Council:—49

1. Italy

(a) Draft Peace Treaty;

(b) Future of the Italian Colonies.

2. Draft Peace treaties with Roumania, Bulgaria and Hungary.

Draft Peace Treaty with Finland.
 Withdrawal of Allied troops from Persia.

5. International inland waterways.

6. Austria (proposed by United Kingdom).
(a) Long term supply arrangements;
(b) Possible recognition of central government.

- 7. Black Sea Straits (United States intention).8. Review of decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding policy in Germany. (French proposal).
- 9. Review of Berlin Conference's decisions on German fleet and merchant ships. (French proposal).
 10. Political situation in Roumania (United States intention).
- 11. Work of the German Reparations Commission (Russian pro-
- 12. Hastening of the repatriation of Soviet citizens. (Russian proposal).

He suggested that the Council should consider whether this could be accepted as a provisional Agenda. It would, of course, be understood that any member might propose further items for discussion as the meetings proceeded.

In discussion of this list, the following points were raised:—

(a) M. Molotov said that it had been contemplated at the Berlin Conference, and in a subsequent telegram from Mr. Bevin, that the draft Peace Treaties for Finland, Hungary, Bulgaria and Roumania ⁴⁸ The communiqué on the opening session of the Council of Foreign Ministers was released to the press on September 11; for text, see Department of State Bulletin, September 16, 1945, p. 392. For texts of subsequent communiqués dealing with meetings of the Council from September 12 to October 2, see ibid., October 14, 1945, pp. 564-567.

The American minutes of the meeting begin this discussion as follows:

[&]quot;Bevin said he had circulated the items which he had received for the agenda. "The other members present pointed out that they were seeing these for the first time.

[&]quot;Bevin repeated he had merely circulated the items submitted to him. The question was whether these items were in order for consideration. He pointed out that it had been decided that any member would be free to propose any item for the agenda." (740.00119 Council/9-1145) should be regarded as a single item for discussion by the Council of Foreign Ministers. He suggested that items 2 and 3 on the above list should be amalgamated.

This was agreed.

(b) Mr. Byrnes recalled that the Berlin Conference had remitted only items 1 to 5 of the proposed agenda for consideration by the Council of Foreign Ministers.

The United States Government had not asked that item 7 (Black Sea Straits) should be included in the agenda. While it would be proper to raise it in connection with Item 5 (International Inland Waterways) he had not asked for it to be considered as a separate item. Nor had his Government asked for Item 10 (Political Situation in Roumania) to be included in the agenda.

It was agreed that items 7 and 10 on the above list should not be included in the Agenda for the Conference.⁵⁰

(c) M. Molotov said that Mr. Bevin's list included the question of Austria. The Soviet Delegation had not with them the economic experts they would require for discussion of supplies for Austria. He suggested that this question should be referred to the Allied Council for Austria.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that at the Berlin Conference the three Governments had agreed that they would examine the Soviet proposals for the extension of the authority of the Austrian Provisional Government to all of Austria after the entry of the British and American forces into the city of Vienna. The British Government's view was that these questions should be considered by the Council of Foreign Ministers, and not delegated to the Allied Council. He would, however, be willing for these matters to be examined in the first instance by the Deputies.

M. Molorov said that, if the question of supplies for Austria was to be discussed, it would be necessary for him to summon experts to London.

⁶⁰ Concerning the discussion with regard to this point, the American Minutes read as follows:

[&]quot;Molotov said he had no objection to Items 7 and 10 being removed from the agenda, but he did not think that Item 10 related to the peace treaties nor that Item 7 related to the inland waterways. With reference to the Black Sea Straits he recalled that the Protocol of the Berlin Conference stated that it was agreed that as a next step this question would be the subject of direct negotiations between each of the three Governments and the Turkish Government.

[&]quot;Byrnes said he heartily agreed. All he said was that these two items were not added to the agenda at the United States' request. He did not, however, attempt to confine the discussion of items that were placed on the agenda.

[&]quot;Bevin observed that it was agreed that these items come off." (740.00119-Council/9-1145).

After further discussion Mr. Bevin suggested that M. Molotov's difficulties might be met if the four Governments represented on the Allied Council for Austria instructed their representatives to consult together immediately on the question of long-term supply arrangements for Austria, and to submit their recommendations in time for them to be considered before the end of the present series of meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

It was agreed that the Secretaries to the United Kingdom, United States of America, Soviet and French Delegations should prepare the draft of a communication to be sent, in identical terms, by each Government to its representative on the Allied Council for Austria conveying an instruction on the lines suggested by Mr. Bevin.

(d) M. Molotov observed that the question of Japan was not included in Mr. Bevin's suggested Agenda, although in his message of 14th August ⁵¹ Mr. Bevin had indicated that it might come up for discussion.

Mr. Bevin said that the words used in his message had been—"in view of developments in the Far East it will no doubt be essential to discuss questions relating to Japan". In fact, however, no specific proposal had been put forward by other Governments for discussion; and he was not aware that there was any particular question ready for discussion in relation to the Far East.⁵²

(e) M. Molotov drew attention to the French proposals, under Item 9 in the list, for review of the Berlin Conference decisions on the German Fleet and Merchant Navy. He said that he had no authority to review decisions reached by Heads of Governments at the Berlin Conference.

M. BIDAULT said that the Berlin decisions were binding only on the three Governments represented at that Conference, and the French Government did not consider itself bound by any decision to which it was not a party.

Mr. Bevin asked whether there was any objection to allowing the French, as they had not been present at Berlin, to put their case before this meeting.

⁵¹ For text of Foreign Secretary Bevin's message to the Secretary of State, transmitted to the Secretary in Chargé Balfour's note of August 15, see p. 99. ⁵² In connection with the discussion with regard to the placing of Far Eastern questions on the agenda, the American Minutes record the following remark by the Secretary of State: "Byrnes said that the United States Delegation did not understand that Far Eastern questions would be considered. At Berlin they had thought that there would be greater progress if they concentrated on the questions already raised and the United States Delegation was not prepared to raise Far Eastern matters." (740.00119 Council/9-1145)

Mr. Byrnes asked whether Item 8 (Review of decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding policy in Germany) was not in the same category from this point of view as Item 9, and whether Item 11 (Work of the German Reparations Commission) was not also in this category. He also made the point that Item 8 was wide enough to cover Item 9, as well as many other decisions of the Berlin Conference.53

M. Molorov suggested that Item 9 should be taken off the Agenda and that Item 8 should remain.

M. BIDAULT said that, on the assumption that Item 8 covered all German questions (and he understood that M. Molotov and Mr. Byrnes agreed to this assumption), he would agree to the deletion of Item 9.

Mr. Byrnes said that he thought it would be useful if the Council could have some idea of the precise points covered by Item 8.

M. BIDAULT said that, in putting forward Item 8, the French Government had it in mind that the Conference should be free to discuss the problems of Germany, which were very important to all concerned and especially to France. It was not right that German problems should be excluded from discussion at this first meeting of the Council.

Mr. Bevin suggested that further discussion of the question whether Item 8 should be included in the Agenda should be postponed until the French Delegation had submitted a memorandum indicating more ⁵⁵ In connection with this point in the Council's discussions, the American Minutes record the following exchange between the Secretary of State and Foreign Commissar Molotov:

[&]quot;Byrnes said he understood Mr. Molotov to say that he had no objection to the item remaining on the agenda but he gave notice that he had no authority to review a decision taken by the head of his Government.

[&]quot;Molotov said he had no authority to discuss this question.
"Byrnes pointed out that Item 8 proposed a review of the decision of the Berlin Conference and also that the Russian proposal of Item 11 on the work of the Reparations Commission also involved a similar matter.

[&]quot;Molotov said the Soviet Delegation did not propose to change any decision that had been taken.

[&]quot;Byrnes observed that Mr. Molotov did not then assert this item had been referred to the Council.

[&]quot;Molotov repeated he had no authority to discuss questions on which decisions had been taken at Berlin.

[&]quot;Bevin asked what this statement applied to. Did it apply to Items 8, 9, [&]quot;Molotov said it was not clear with regard to Item 8 but Item 9 would lead to a possible repudiation of a decision taken at Berlin.

[&]quot;Byrnes said he agreed that Item 8 covered Item 9 and all other decisions of the Berlin Conference.

[&]quot;Molotov suggested that Item 9 be taken off the agenda and that they leave Item 8." (740.00119 Council/9-1145) precisely what points they wished to raise on the Berlin decisions regarding policy in Germany.⁵⁴

Mr. Byrnes suggested that as regards Items 8, 11 and 12 documents should be submitted before it was decided whether the items should remain on the Agenda. The first five items on the list had been specifically referred to the Council by the Berlin Conference and he had not come to London prepared to discuss other questions. When it was proposed that a further item should be added to the Agenda, it was reasonable to ask that some information should first be provided as to the scope of the additional matter proposed.

M. Molotov said that it was not his impression that the Berlin decisions had restricted the discussions of the Foreign Ministers only to such questions as had been specifically referred to them, and he thought they were free to add other subjects at their discretion. The Soviet Delegation thought that the Conference could discuss questions not connected with the Berlin Conference, and they therefore suggested that it should deal with Items 11 and 12 and also with the question of the political situation in Greece.

Mr. Bevin read the relevant paragraph in the Berlin Protocol, namely, "Other matters may from time to time be referred to the Council by agreement between the member Governments" (Berlin Protocol I A (3) (iii)). The wording of Item 8 of the draft Agenda was, however, very wide and he again suggested that further discussion should be adjourned until the Conference had been informed of the decisions it was suggested should be reviewed.

M. BIDAULT pointed out that Item 8 was not a special case, and that further information might be requested on similar grounds as regards other items on the Agenda. While he did not consider that the French Delegation should be asked to give written justification for suggesting this subject for discussion, he was prepared to put in a document on Item 8, and also to propose a revised version of the heading for the Agenda (which had not been drafted by the French Delegation).

⁵⁴ With regard to the British proposal to postpone further discussion about Item 8 of the agenda, the American minutes record the following exchange between Foreign Secretary Bevin and Foreign Commissar Molotov:

[&]quot;BEVIN said it was necessary to know on what points Mr. Molotov did have authority to revise action taken at Potsdam.

[&]quot;Molorov said he would set forth his point of view when the proper time came. "Bevin said he could not agree to this item remaining on the agenda and Mr. Molotov being able to veto other questions. If he knew what the French Government wanted to review he could consider its proposals but to place a general item on the agenda and have other Governments say they could not discuss certain questions placed the British in a very invidious position. He therefore suggested that these items be adjourned until they knew what decisions the Governments wanted reviewed.

[&]quot;Molotov said it seemed agreed that they take off Item 9.

[&]quot;Bevin said he had not agreed to anything." (740.00119 Council/9-1145).

Mr. Bevin said that he was not suggesting that it was necessary for the French Government to submit a justification of their proposal that the decisions of the Potsdam Conference should be reviewed. The position was that the suggestion under item 9 (Review of Berlin Conference decisions regarding the German Fleet and Merchant Navy) was sufficiently precise to enable the Soviet Delegation to say that they could not discuss the matter; on item 8 however, the other Delegations required to know what the French Government had in mind. Until some more precise indication was given he was not in a position to say whether or not he could agree to the matter being placed on the Agenda of the Conference.

Mr. Byrnes referred again to the terms of reference of the Council. The paragraph quoted by Mr. Bevin had been carefully drafted and, as he understood it, contemplated that the Council should consider only those questions which the member Governments were agreed should be submitted to it, and not proposals which were put forward merely by a single Government. He understood, however, that the French Delegation were ready to submit a memorandum on Item 8; and he hoped that the Soviet Delegation would do the same on items 11 and 12.

M. Molotov thought that Mr. Bevin's suggestion that the French proposals should be made more precise was quite proper. He agreed also with Mr. Byrnes that the Agenda of the Council should be made up of questions which member Governments were agreed in submitting to it. For his part, however, he would not think it right that the Council should refuse to hear the views of the French Government on German questions. As regards the items proposed by the Soviet Delegation (Nos. 11 and 12), he was ready to submit memoranda.

M. BIDAULT said he would like to make the position of the French Delegation clear. He was ready to submit a memorandum on German questions which the French government desired to be considered; but he must object to any suggestion that the submission of such a memorandum was a condition which must be fulfilled before a subject could be placed on the Agenda of the Conference. In order to make this point clear, he would propose tomorrow a redraft of item 8.

After some further discussion 55 the following conclusions were reached regarding the Agenda for the present series of meetings:

⁵⁵ The attempt of Foreign Commissar Molotov to add Greece as an agenda item is recorded as follows in the American Minutes:

[&]quot;Molotov said he would like to add the question of the political situation in Greece.

[&]quot;Bevin said he declined to discuss this.

[&]quot;Molotov asked if Mr. Bevin was content with the situation in Greece. "BEVIN pointed out that Mr. Molotov had objected to discussing the situation in Rumania and he found it strange that he proposed to discuss the situation in [&]quot;Molotov proposed submitting these questions in writing.

"Bevin rejoined that Greece was an Allied country and he was not prepared" to discuss it." (740.00119 Council/9-1145)

(1) Items 1-5 on the list circulated by Mr. Bevin were accepted for inclusion in the Agenda; items 2 and 3 being amalgamated into a single item.

(2) On Item 6, a report from the representatives of the four Governments responsible for the Allied Council for Austria would be obtained in time for consideration by the Council before the end of the present series of meetings;

(3) Items 7, 9 and 10 should not be included in the Agenda.

(4) On Items 8, 11 and 12, the French and Soviet Delegations respectively would submit memoranda, in the light of which the Council would give further consideration to the question whether these subjects should be discussed at the present series of meetings.

(5) It would be understood that any announcement made regarding the subjects for consideration at the present series of meetings would make it clear that further subjects might be added to the Agenda as the work of the Council proceeded.

3. ITALY: DRAFT PEACE TREATY

Mr. Bevin said that he would like to raise a point of procedure in connection with the consideration of a draft Peace Treaty for Italy. Should the interested States other than those represented at the Conference be heard before or after the draft Peace Treaty was prepared? In order to avoid the confusion which had occurred at the Peace Conference at the end of the last war, there was much to be said for hearing these States before the draft was finally prepared.

Mr. Byrnes said that the United States Delegation had prepared a Memorandum on the procedure to be followed in preparing the Italian Peace Treaty. (Copies of this document were handed round). He suggested that this document should be considered by the Deputies at their meeting on the following morning. While fully appreciating the interest of many of the United Nations in the question of the Italian Peace Treaty, he felt that in considering who should be invited to put forward their views on the matter the Council should keep in mind the great importance of making quick progress. When the draft Treaty had been prepared, it would be submitted to all the interested United Nations concerned before signature.

Mr. Bevin said that the British Government would wish the Council to consider at the same time the question of consultation with the Governments of British Dominions.

M. Molorov said he had no objection to the Memorandum being referred for preliminary consideration by the Deputies on the following day, though he must make the reservation that he had not had time to examine the contents of this document. He would also like to add that, in his view, the procedure adopted for the Italian Peace Treaty with regard to consultation with other United Nations should also be followed in the case of the draft Peace Treaties for Hungary, ⁵⁶ Memorandum by the United States delegation, designated C.F.M.(45) 2, September 12, entitled "Italian Treaty Procedure", p. 134.

Roumania, Bulgaria and Finland. He had received proposals dealing with the political aspects of the Peace Treaty with Italy, but not with the economic or military aspects. He would like to receive the views of the British Government on these two questions also.

Mr. Byrnes said that he had not yet received the views of the British Government on any aspects of the Italian Peace Treaty.

Mr. Bevin undertook to arrange for copies of the British views on the political aspects of the Italian Peace Treaty to be sent at once to Mr. Byrnes.57

It was agreed that the memorandum submitted by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 2) should be referred for consideration in the first instance by the Meeting of Deputies.

4. INTERNATIONAL INLAND WATERWAYS

Mr. Byrnes submitted for circulation a memorandum by the United States Delegation on International Inland Waterways (C.F.M. (45) 1 58)

5. Times of Meetings

It was agreed that the Council of Foreign Ministers should meet daily at 4.00 p. m., and that on Wednesday, 12th September, the Deputies should meet at 11.30 a.m. On subsequent days the meeting of Deputies might be held at an earlier hour.

The British Embassy to the Department of State

MEMORANDUM

The Foreign Office have had under consideration the trade agreements recently concluded between the U.S.S.R. on the one hand, and Roumania, Bulgaria and Hungary on the other. These agreements, of whose provisions the State Department are doubtless aware, fall into two categories, first, the agreements for economic collaboration signed between the U.S.S.R. and Roumania and the U.S.S.R. and Hungary, and, secondly, the commodity exchange agreements which the U.S.S.R. has signed with all three countries.⁵⁹

⁶⁷ See memorandum by the United Kingdom delegation, designated C.F.M. (45) 3, September 12, entitled "Draft Heads of Treaty with Italy", p. 135.

⁶⁸ Dated September 12, entitled "Draft Agreement Establishing Emergency Regime for European Inland Waterways", p. 132.

ment at Moscow on May 8, 1945, and Hungary and the Soviet Union concluded a similar agreement at Moscow on August 27, 1945. For the text of the Rumanian-Soviet agreement, see British and Foreign State Papers, vol. cxlix, p. 876; the Hungarian-Soviet agreement is described in Department of State Bulletin, September 1, 1946, p. 394. The Soviet Union concluded trade agreements with Bulgaria on March 14, 1945, with Rumania on May 8, 1945, and with Hungary on August 27, 1945. For descriptions of these agreements, see ibid., pp. 392, 396, 297, and 204, respectively. 397, and 394, respectively.

- 2. The conclusion of the Soviet-Roumanian agreement for economic collaboration is, in the view of the Foreign Office, contrary to the obligation of the Allied Powers inter se to abstain from negotiating peace arrangements with a common enemy. A formal state of war with Roumania still exists and it follows from this that no one ally should unilaterally enter into arrangements which might prejudice the position of the other allies in the eventual peace settlement. The Soviet-Roumanian agreement undoubtedly contravenes these principles and it is particularly improper in that it has been concluded with a government which owes its existence to active Russian intervention. There can be no question but that the agreement will militate against existing and future British and other Allied interests in Roumania.
- 3. No authoritative text of the corresponding Hungarian agreement has yet been received. It appears, however, that it is very similar to the Roumanian, and if this proves to be the case the above objections would apply with equal force.
- 4. On the other hand, the commodity exchange agreements signed with all three countries do not appear to be open to the same objections, since the right of the Soviet Government to enter into direct commercial relations with Hungary, Bulgaria and Roumania can scarcely be contested. However, as the State Department will be aware from Mr. Balfour's conversation with Mr. Byrnes on August 25th and from the Aide-Mémoire 60 which Mr. Balfour left with Mr. Byrnes on that occasion, the Foreign Office consider that it is desirable to treat the Danubian states as an economic unit. The diversion to the Soviet Union of substantial quantities of supplies from these three countries, in addition to the far larger quantities removed from two of them as reparations etc., undoubtedly militates against this principle.
- 5. The Foreign Office would therefore propose that these matters might be discussed at the Council of Foreign Ministers. They are of course closely related to the question of supplying food to Vienna, about which, as the State Department will be aware from the second paragraph of the British Embassy's Aide-Mémoire of September 3rd regarding Austria,⁶¹ the Foreign Office are already preparing detailed proposals for submission to the Council. Consideration might be given in addition to the possibility of including in the Roumanian, of The British Embassy's aide-memoire of September 3, 1945, is not printed. The Department's answer is contained in the memorandum of September 14, to the British Embassy, vol. III, p. 594. For additional documentation regarding the problem of the Danubian basin as a long-range food supply source for Vienna and Austria, see ibid., pp. 571–622.

Bulgarian and Hungarian peace treaties a most favoured nation clause drawn on wide terms to cover not only external trade but also participation in the economy of these countries. Such a clause would of course be entirely incompatible with the economic collaboration agreements which the Russians have negotiated with two of these countries.

6. The Foreign Office hope that the Department of State will agree with the views put forward in the preceding paragraphs and that the United States Representative will be able to support the British Representative in the Council of Foreign Ministers in raising these matters along the lines proposed.

⁶⁸ Document designation for the agreed record of the 1st meeting of the Deputies of the Council of Foreign Ministers, held at Lancaster House, London, September 12, 1945, at 11:30 a. m. Deputies present were as follows: For the United States—James C. Dunn; for the United Kingdom—Sir Ronald Campbell; for the Soviet Union—Fedor Tarasovich Gusev; for France—Maurice Couve de Murville; for China—Dr. Wellington Koo.

64 Acting under instructions from the Deputies, the Secretaries of the dele-

The Council first discussed the suggestion of the United States Delegation that the telegram to be sent to the Allied Commanders-in-Chief in Austria should invite their views on "the extension of the authority of the Austrian Provisional Government to all of Austria" instead of "the possible recognition of a central Government".

On this point Mr. Bevin said that the United Kingdom Delegation had deliberately used the original words so as to enable the Allied Council to discuss the question on its merits and without having its hands tied by the more restricted wording used in the Protocol of the Berlin Conference. If no agreement were reached about the extension of the authority of the present Austrian Government to the whole of Austria, the Council would be no further forward. Under the British proposal the Council could make constructive proposals. It was desirable that the Austrian Government should be set up on a proper basis so as to get the economic life of the country going, and members of the Allied Council should be able to express their views freely. He had, however, no objection to mentioning also the decision of the Berlin Conference.

Mr. Byrnes said that it was the view of the United States Delegation that it would be better to frame the instructions to the Allied representatives in Austria in the language which had been agreed to at the Berlin Conference.

gations prepared the following draft telegram to be sent to the Allied Council for Austria:

[&]quot;At the first meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers on 11th September the British Foreign Secretary suggested that two of the items for discussion at the Conference should be (a) long term supply arrangements for Austria, and (b) possible recognition of a central Government.

[&]quot;It was agreed that the four Governments represented on the Allied Council for Austria should instruct their respective representatives on the Council to consult immediately on these questions and submit their recommendations in time for them to be considered before the end of the present series of meetings of Foreign Ministers.

[&]quot;You should consult with your colleagues with a view to an immediate consideration of these matters and submission of reports not later than September with such agreed recommendations as may be possible.

[&]quot;An identical telegram has been addressed to each of your colleagues."

In the course of the discussion among the Deputies regarding this draft tele-

In the course of the discussion among the Deputies regarding this draft telegram, Mr. Dunn suggested that, in substitution for the words following (b) in the first paragraph of the draft, it would be preferable to employ the language used in the Protocol of the Berlin Conference, viz., "the extension of the authority of the Austrian Provisional Government to all of Austria". Ambassador Gusev suggested that the telegram should include a reference to the need for giving early effect to the decision of the Berlin Conference on this point, viz., that the three Governments were prepared to examine, after the entry of the British and American Forces into Vienna, the question of the extension of the authority of the Austrian Provisional Government to all of Austria. The Deputies agreed that the draft telegram and the suggestions raised with regard to it in the Deputies' meeting be referred to the Foreign Ministers for decision. (Council of Foreign Ministers File: Lot M-88: File CFM London Deputies Minutes)

M. Molorov suggested that, to save time, they should retain the language used at Berlin; the result, he said, would be the same in either case.

Mr. Bevin said that in his view it would be a pity to limit the Allied Council by using the language of the Berlin decisions as that would preclude them from giving this Conference any advice on possible alternative government. He would, however, be content to use the Berlin language if it were also indicated that the Control Council was not thereby precluded from suggesting an alternative government.

M. BIDAULT said that the text as it appeared in the draft telegram was quite satisfactory to him, but that he had no objection to the use of the language employed at Berlin. He would, however, have strong objection to a text which referred specifically to decisions to which the French were not a party.

Mr. Bevin said that in the circumstances he would prefer to delete (b) altogether and ask for the views of the Allied Council on (a) only. He agreed with M. Molotov that this would not preclude further discussion at this Conference of the question of a Central Government for Austria.

It was agreed that the views of the Allied Council should be sought only on the question of long-term supply arrangements for Austria; and that all words after (b) should be deleted from the draft telegram.

It was further agreed to insert the words "so far as possible" after "recognition" in the second paragraph of the draft telegram; and that the date to be inserted in the third paragraph of the draft telegram should be 18th September.

The text of the telegram as agreed by the Council is set out in C.F.M.(45) 5.65

2. ITALY: DRAFT PEACE TREATY (Previous Reference C. F. M.(D) (45) 1st Meeting, Minute 3)

SIR RONALD CAMPBELL reported the views expressed at the meeting of Deputies that morning on the procedure to be followed in the preparation of the Italian Peace Treaty; and said that the Deputies desired guidance from the Council on the question which Governments not represented at the Council should be invited to express their views at this stage on those aspects of the Italian settlement which were of particular concern to them.

Mr. Byrnes said that, in the view of the United States Delegation, only those Governments directly interested should be invited to express their views at this stage. He fully realised the difficulties arising from the fact that many of the United Nations were interested in this question to a greater or less extent, but he had hoped that, by limiting the invitations to those Governments whose countries had been attacked, it would be possible to secure their presence in London before the end of the present Conference. If, however, invitations were to be extended to all countries which had contributed to the defeat of Italy, it would be impossible to secure their attendance in time: for in addition to the countries already mentioned, Brazil, Poland and many other countries which considered that they had made a military or economic contribution towards Italy's defeat would have to be invited. He therefore suggested that this point should be passed over for the time being in the hope that, as the discussions proceeded and the principles involved became more clear, it might be possible to find some other yardstick by which it could be decided which Governments should be invited. Before the text of the Treaty was finally settled, it would, of course, have to be submitted to all the United Nations concerned.

Mr. Bevin said that, in spite of the fact that the United States Delegation had withdrawn their proposal for consultation with certain interested States, he must still press the claims of the British Dominions and India who would object strongly to any decisions being taken without their having been heard. In particular, the Government of South Africa was vitally interested in the whole question of their connections with Europe through the Mediterranean. He had, of course, no objection to the other countries concerned also being heard.

M. Molotov said that Mr. Bevin's remarks were of great practical moment. They all shared his views about the merits of the Dominions' claims and about their services and sacrifices in the war. He thought, however, that the United States proposal about the principles on which the selection should be made was in general correct. They could discuss at a later stage what arrangement should be made to ensure that the Dominions were given an opportunity to express their views. If, however, they were to extend the number of countries which should be invited to discuss the Treaty at this stage, the work of the Conference would be dragged out inordinately. He asked whether there were any practical suggestions as to how this very complicated question might be settled.

M. BIDAULT said that the French Delegation would have no objection to the largest possible number of States being invited to take part in the discussions, but in view of the practical difficulties they had suggested at the meeting that morning that, as a compromise, those nations which had contributed largely to the defeat of Italy should be invited to submit their views to the Council in writing. Perhaps this suggestion could be further considered by the Deputies.

Mr. Byrnes suggested that the Deputies should examine the question whether all interested Governments should be asked to submit their views in writing. At the end of the present visit of Foreign Ministers, the Deputies would have to devote some considerable time to this matter. Before the Foreign Secretaries met again to consider the result of the Deputies' work, it could be determined which Governments, if any, should be invited to appear before the Council. It might be that a workable plan for the attendance of interested Governments could be worked out before the end of the present visit of Foreign Ministers; but in his view it was more important to proceed with discussion of the actual provision of the Treaty, than to wait until all the United Nations had expressed their views to the Council.

Mr. Bevin asked whether Mr. Byrnes' proposal could be put as follows. The States interested in the Italian Peace Treaty should first be invited to make their comments in writing; then the Deputies should consider the whole question of who should be heard by the Council itself and by what method. The invitation to States to express their views in writing would be without prejudice to their claim to be heard later.

M. Molorov said that the Soviet Delegation accepted the United States proposals for inviting representations from Yugoslavia, Ethiopia and Greece; and they would add Albania, since Albania also was attacked by Italy. They would find it difficult to discuss the future of Istria and Trieste without having the views of Yugoslavia, who were interested in this aspect of the matter and had asked to appear before the Council. He was also in favour of admitting Greece to the discussions; all must recognise the rights and interests of Greece in this question; but he would find it difficult to do so so long as there was not in Greece a Government which he could regard as representative. When there was such a Government he would favour inviting it to send representatives to the Council. His views on this matter were set out in a memorandum which he was now circulating (C.F.M. (45) 9).66 He suggested, therefore, that the Deputies should continue their discussions on the procedure for obtaining the views of the other interested States, and that as soon as the Delegations had studied the United Kingdom proposals (C.F.M. (45) 3) the Foreign Ministers should begin consideration of the draft Treaty itself.

Mr. Bevin said he must make the position of the United Kingdom Delegation clear. He would raise no objection to the appearance before the Council of representatives of any Government whom any other member of the Council wished to invite. If, however, any Governments were heard, the British Dominions must also be heard; and he could not accept the position that any one Delegation could impose a veto on the appearance before the Council of a particular Government. He supported the proposal that all the United Nations concerned should be asked to submit their views in writing in the first instance, so long as it was clear that this would not prejudice their being heard by the Council at a later stage.

Dr. Wang Shih Chieh 67 said that there seemed to be three categories of States:—

- (a) those attacked by Italy: these might be given an immediate hearing during the present visit of the Foreign Ministers;
- hearing during the present visit of the Foreign Ministers;
 (b) those States which had made a contribution to the defeat of Italy: these might be given a hearing, but how and when might be considered by the Deputies;
- (c) other States interested in the Peace Treaty with Italy: these might submit their views in writing.

If the Deputies were to consider the general question of procedure, he hoped they would consider the possibility of finding a solution on these lines.

Mr. Bevin said that he could not accept such a solution. He must stand by the position he had already outlined.

M. Molorov asked whether it was proposed that all the United Nations, or only those concerned with the Treaty, should be invited to submit their views in writing. Mr. Byrnes said that it was his intention that the invitation should be limited to those States which were at war with Italy.

The Council:-

- (1) Agreed that members of the United Nations which were at war with Italy should be invited to submit in writing their views on the Peace Treaty with Italy, without prejudice to any claim they might have to make oral representations to the Council at a later stage;
- (2) Invited the Deputies to consider at their meeting on the following day how the invitations under (1) above could best be extended; and what would be the most convenient procedure for arranging which Governments should be invited to make oral representations to the Council at a later stage.

 $^{^{\}rm 67}\,{\rm The}$ American minutes of this meeting record the speaker as Dr. Wellington Koo.

3. Peace Treaties With Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary and Roumania

M. Molorov submitted memoranda by the Soviet Delegation setting out the Soviet Government's suggestions for Peace Treaties with Bulgaria (C.F.M.(45)6), Finland (C.F.M.(45)7), Hungary (C.F.M. (45)4), and Roumania (C.F.M.(45)8).68

4. Repatriation of Soviet Citizens

M. Molotov handed in copies of a memorandum on the repatriation of Soviet citizens, which was subsequently circulated as C.F.M. (45) 10.69

5. Agenda for Future Meetings

M. Molorov said that he would not be in a position to discuss on the following day the British draft heads of a Treaty with Italy (C.F.M. (45)3).

Mr. Byrnes therefore asked whether the Council would consider that day the United States paper on an Emergency Regime for European Inland Waterways (C.F.M.(45)1). He emphasized that this paper was concerned only with temporary measures to deal with a pressing emergency, and he was content that consideration of United States proposals for more permanent arrangements for inland waterways should be postponed for the time being. It was reported by UNRRA, 70 and confirmed by United States representatives in the countries concerned, that the transportation of relief to the peoples of Europe was seriously hampered by the conditions of the inland waterways, and measures were therefore urgently necessary to enable relief supplies to work.

After discussion it was agreed that the next meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers should be held on Friday, 14th September at 11 o'clock to consider the Draft Heads of a Treaty with Italy (C.F.M.(45)3).

DRAFT AGREEMENT ESTABLISHING EMERGENCY REGIME FOR EUROPEAN INLAND WATERWAYS

Preamble

Whereas an emergency exists in Europe requiring an immediate increase in the quantities of food, fuel, raw materials and productive machinery made available for the relief and rehabilitation of the peoples of the United Nations and liberated lands,

And whereas rail and other means of communication are unable to handle the burden of transportation needed,

And whereas the principal international inland waterways of Europe afford a natural means of transportation of supplies between many nations,

And whereas joint efforts will facilitate the early clearance of these waterways and their development to maximum usefulness during the transition period following the war,

Therefore, the Governments of France, the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, and the United States of America being governments charged with the responsibility for occupation and control of enemy states in Europe have agreed to the following temporary arrangement.

Article 1. Provisional international commissions shall be established at once for the restoration of navigation on the Rhine River system including the Scheldt River from Antwerp to the sea, the Elbe River including the Vltava from Prague, the Oder River, the Danube River system, and the Kiel Canal, together with their navigable tributaries and connecting canals.

This draft agreement was later revised by the United States delegation and was recirculated as C.F.M. (45) 44, September 22, 1945. The draft agreement as revised included an entirely new article, article 10, which read as follows: "A conference of all interested states shall be convened within three months at Prague to draft conventions for the establishment of permanent regimes for the regulation of the waterways provided for in this agreement." Article 2 of the draft agreement was revised in the following manner: To paragraph (a) was added the following phrase: "and Germany as represented by the Control Council"; to paragraph (b) was added the phrase "and Germany as represented by the Control Council"; to paragraph (c) was added the phrase "including Austria and Germany as represented by the respective Control Councils"; and to paragraph (e) was added the phrase "and Germany as represented by the Control Councils"; to paragraph (following and the phrase "and Germany as represented by the Control Councils"; and to paragraph (following Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Documents)

Article 2. The provisional commissions shall be composed of the following states:

(a) The Rhine-Scheldt Commission:—the Four Signatory Powers, together with the riparian states, to wit, the Netherlands, Belgium and Switzerland.

(b) The Elbe Commission:—the Four Signatory Powers, together with Czechoslovakia.

- (c) The Oder Commission:—the Four Signatory Powers, together with Poland and Czechoslovakia.
- (d) The Danube Commission:—the Four Signatory Powers, together with the riparian states whose governments are recognized by them.
- (e) The Kiel Canal Commission:—the Four Signatory Powers.
- Article 3. The Council of Foreign Ministers may admit other states having a substantial traffic on any of the above mentioned waterways to participation in a provisional commission.
- Article 4. Each state participating in a provisional commission shall designate one representative to sit on the commission. He may be accompanied by experts and technical assistants. Each representative shall have one vote in each commission in which it participates. Decisions shall be taken by a majority vote of the members present and voting, and shall be binding on the commission. Each commission shall provide for its own organization and rules of procedure.

Article 5. The seats of the various provisional commissions shall be located.

- (a) for the Rhine-Scheldt Commission at Cologne
- (b) for the Elbe Commission at Dresden
- (c) for the Oder Commission at Stettin(d) for the Danube Commission at Vienna
- (e) for the Kiel Canal Commission at Kiel
- Article 6. Except in so far as may be modified by the terms of the present agreement, the several provisional commissions shall function in accordance with the provisions of the treaties and conventions which were in force for each waterway before November 1936.
- Article 7. Each provisional commission established by this agreement shall have the following powers and duties:
- (a) Power to supervise and, if necessary, engage in dredging, blasting, and other operations essential to the maintenance of a constantly navigable waterway, and to undertake emergency construction work if the states fail to do so or are unable to do so
- (b) Authority to distribute on an equitable basis available shipping tonnage of all kinds taken from the enemy, and to direct the use of this shipping, if necessary, for the relief of emergency conditions in any particular area
- (c) The right to issue and enforce navigation and pilotage regulations, uniform service, tolls and other charges, sanitary and police regulations

(d) Power to judge alleged infractions of regulations and to impose fines for violations thereof

(e) Right to hold and use property and vessels of all kinds which shall be immune from local taxation and jurisdiction; to hire all necessary personnel

- Article 8. The provisional commissions shall at all times maintain close relations with the Control Commissions in occupied territories. The commissions shall participate in the work of any inland transport organization which may be set up to coordinate the movement of traffic and improve European transport communications.
- Article 9. The present agreement shall come into force immediately upon signature by the Four Powers. The agreement shall be open to signature by the other states mentioned in Article 2. Failure on the part of any of these states to sign the agreement shall not, however, prevent it from coming into force. The provisional commissions shall be convened at the earliest possible moment by direction of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

ITALIAN TREATY PROCEDURE

1. Those United Nations which were attacked by Italy and which are not already represented on the Council, namely Ethiopia, Yugoslavia and Greece, will be invited to discuss orally at the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers the aspects of the Italian settlement which particularly concern them. This discussion will begin September 17. In this discussion the Council will be particularly interested to hear the views of the following states on the following subjects—

Ethiopia re Eritrea Yugoslavia re boundary with Italy Greece re Italian Islands in the Aegean Sea

Austria will be invited to present her views particularly with reference to the Austria-Italian boundary line. Italy will be invited to present her views particularly on all the above mentioned subjects.

A detailed presentation by these states may be made in writing which may cover all subjects of interest to them.

2. Following general directives given by the Council, the deputies and staffs will draft a complete treaty text.

- 3. The draft treaty text will be considered by the Council at its next meeting about November 1, 1945, at which time the Council will receive the views of Italy as to the whole, and of other especially interested countries as to parts which particularly concern them.
- 4. At the conclusion of this discussion a completed draft will be submitted to all the United Nations eligible to become signatories.

DRAFT HEADS OF TREATY WITH ITALY

PREAMBLE

[Here insert States at war with Italy and end "hereinafter referred to as the Associated Powers."] 73 of the one part.

and Italy

of the other part;

Whereas Italy under the Fascist Regime became a party to the Tripartite Pact with Germany and Japan, and in 1940 declared a war of aggression and became involved in war with all the Associated Powers; and

Whereas on the 25th July, 1943, in face of the pressure of military events the Fascist Regime in Italy was abolished and Italy surrendered unconditionally and accepted terms of Armistice signed on the 3rd and 29th September; and

Telegram 9392, Delsec 12, September 13, 1945, 8 p. m., from London, transmitted the text of Part IV (articles 31 through 64) of this draft treaty to the Department of State together with the following message: "For Matthews from Dunn. Following are the Naval, Military and Air clauses and Prisoner of War and War Graves clauses of a memorandum by the UK delegation entitled 'Draft Heads of Treaty with Italy', circulated yesterday. Please obtain for us the War and Navy Departments' comments on these clauses with any of your own observations." (740.00119 Council/9-1345) The comments were forthcoming in telegram 8478, Sected 123, September 26, 1945, 3 p. m., to London, which concluded with the following general observation: "Insofar as we are concerned, it is considered that British draft clauses are unnecessarily harsh, both as to substance and form, and would result in Ital resentment which in turn could be used to alienate Ital opinion. Harshness of clauses would lead to continual agitation for relaxation and might well encourage resorts to subterfuge to build up armaments secretly. Also, Allied Inspectorate, which British apparently contemplate to be long-term supervisory body providing more rigid control than United Nations Organization, would give opportunity for constant interference and intervention in Ital internal affairs on part of certain powers whose interests might not favor efficient Ital armed forces for internal security or legitimate defense." (740.00119 Council/9-2645)

Whereas after the said Armistice Italy furnished armed forces which participated in the war against Germany and declared war on Germany as from the 13th October, and thereby became a co-belligerent against Germany; and

Whereas the Associated Powers and Italy are now both desirous of concluding a Treaty of Peace, which will settle questions still outstanding between them as a result of the events hereinbefore recited, and form the basis of cordial relations of amity between them;

Have accordingly appointed as Plenipotentiaries for this purpose:-

PART I—INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

- 1. Italy's candidature for membership of the World Organisation to be supported by the Associated Powers. Italy to co-operate with the Associated Powers and to recognise and accept the arrangements made by them for the restoration of general peace.
- 2. Italy to agree to the arrangements agreed by the United Nations for the liquidation of the League of Nations and the P.C.I.J.⁷⁴
- 3. (a) The Associated Powers, as soon as they are satisfied of Italy's willingness and ability to carry out the obligations involved, will support Italy's application to become a member of any organisation established or whose establishment is already contemplated by the United Nations or to adhere to any convention concluded under the auspices of any such organisation.
- (b) In the meantime, Italy to carry out such obligations in connection with any such organisation or convention as may at any time be specified by the Associated Powers members of the organisation or parties to the convention concerned.

PART II-POLITICAL (EUROPE)

Section I—General

4. Italy to recognise as null and void all territorial acquisitions made by Italy since the 9th June, 1940, and all titles, rights, properties and interests acquired in such territory since that date by the Italian State or Italian subjects.

(d) A training school of such capacity as the Allied Inspectorate considers necessary, together with sufficient training aircraft to maintain the above squadrons.

Each squadron to be permitted a reserve of aircraft which will not exceed 20% of the types in the squadron.

- 47. Personnel to be limited to approximately 12,000 on voluntary long term engagements. The Allied Inspectorate to be given discretion to vary this figure within small limits. Compulsory air force service to be forbidden.
- 48. The Italian Air Force, in excess of that permitted under paragraphs 46 and 47 above to be disbanded as the Allied Inspectorate shall direct.
- 49. Personnel other than those forming part of the Italian Air Force not to receive any form of military air training.
- 50. Specifications of military aircraft owned by or manufactured in Italy during this period to be submitted to the Allied Inspectorate for approval.
- 51. Such military airfields and air installations as the Allied Inspectorate may direct to be destroyed. No new military airfields or air installations to be constructed without the permission of the Allied Inspectorate.

Section V: Limitations on War Material

- 52. The following limitations to be imposed—
- (a) Italy not to manufacture or own either publicly or privately any war material, including warships and military aircraft in excess of that required for the forces permitted under paragraphs 35, 41 and 46 above.
- (b) The Allied Inspectorate to determine which industrial plant specifically designed for the manufacture of munitions and other capacity created for warlike purposes is in excess of that required for the production of war material permitted under sub-paragraph (a) above.
 - (c) The Allied Inspectorate to exercise control over the manufacture, import, export and transit of war material in Italy.

(d) Italy to co-operate fully with the Associated Powers with a view to ensuring that Germany is unable to take steps outside German territory towards rearmament.

Section VI: Disposal of War Material

- 53. All German or Japanese war material, including blue prints, prototypes, experimental models and plans, unless expressly excluded by the Allied Inspectorate, to be placed at the disposal of the Principal Allied Powers.
- 54. All Italian or Allied war material, including warships and aircraft, in use by the Italian armed forces, in excess of that permitted for the armed forces specified under paragraphs 36, 41 and 47 above, to be disposed of to the Principal Allied Powers, and Italy to renounce all rights to same.

Section VII: Prohibition on employment or training of technicians

55. Italy not to employ or train any technicians (including military or civil aviation personnel) who are or have been nationals of Germany or Japan, or any other personnel specified by the Allied Inspectorate.

Section VIII: Setting up of an Allied Inspectorate in Italy

- 56. An Allied Inspectorate to be set up in Italy, and to remain in being for so long as the Principal Allied Powers shall decide.
- 57. The task of the Allied Inspectorate shall include the supervision of the carrying out of the naval, military, air and civil aviation clauses of the Peace Treaty.
- 58. The Allied Inspectorate to be afforded full freedom of movement and all necessary facilities including the granting of diplomatic immunity. The Italian Government to provide such Italian currency as is required by the Allied Inspectorate.

Section IX: Provision of forces or facilities required by World Organisation

- 59. After she has been admitted into the World Organisation, Italy to provide any forces required by the World Organisation, for the maintenance of international peace and security.
- 60. Italy to make available such bases or other facilities in Italian territory as may be required by the World Organisation, whether Italy is admitted to membership of World Organisation or not.

PART V: PRISONERS OF WAR AND WAR GRAVES

Section I: Prisoners of War

- 61. Italian prisoners of war to be repatriated as soon as transport permits, subject to any arrangements which may be mutually agreed between the individual Associated Powers detaining them and the Italian Government.
 - 62. Cost of repatriation to be borne by Italy.
 - 63. Mutual waiver of claims in respect of prisoners of war.

Section II: War Graves

64. Reaffirmation of existing agreements with any desired additions to cover the present war.

PART VI: WAR CRIMINALS

- 65. Italy to assist by all means in her power the apprehension and surrender of persons whose surrender is requested by the appropriate Allied authorities on a charge of being concerned in any war crime.
- 66. The same to apply in the case of any United Nations national alleged to have committed an offence against his national law by way of treason or collaborating with the enemy.
- 67. Italy to supply any information and documents and to secure the attendance of any witnesses required for the trial of such persons.
- 68. Italy to assist in giving effect to decisions reached by the appropriate Allied authorities in regard to the property of such persons.

PART VII: CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF THE WAR

Section I: Reparation

- 69. Liability of Italy to pay reparation, but her inability to do so beyond a limited extent recognised.
- 70. Italy to deliver to the Associated Powers industrial plant specifically designed for the manufacture of munitions and other capacity created for warlike purposes which is in excess of Italy's peacetime needs.
- 71. Italy to furnish free of charge such Italian supplies and services as the major powers during the military period, or U.N.R.R.A., thereafter have provided or may provide as relief to any of the Associated Powers.

72. Italy to furnish compensation to United Nations civilian nationals resident in Italy who have suffered personal injuries in Italy as war damage on a basis not less favourable than that accorded to Italian nationals.

Section II: Restitution of loot

- 73. Italy to restore identifiable looted property; conditions and definition to be as in the case of Germany.
- 74. Claims to be put forward by the Governments of the Associated Powers and established by a Mixed Tribunal, whose decisions Italy shall implement.

PART VIII: PROPERTY AND DEBTS

Section I: United Nations property in Italy

- 75. Italy to restore property of the Governments and nationals of the United Nations in Italy to its owners, in its condition at the outbreak of war.
- 76. Where such restoration is impossible, compensation to be paid in lire.
- 77. Claims to be established by a Mixed Tribunal, whose decisions Italy shall implement.

Section II: Post-Armistice Transactions

78. Italy accepts as a debt payable by her the value of the supplies delivered for civilian consumption since September 1943 by any of the Associated Powers.

Section III: Italian property in the territory of the United Nations

- 79. Each of the Associated Powers to have the right, should they wish to do so, to retain and liquidate Italian property in their territory and debts due to Italy from residents in their territory and to use them to pay off pre-war Italian indebtedness to them.
- 80. After such set-off, any balance in Italy's favour may be either returned or used to pay off other claims against Italy, as may be agreed between Italy and the Power concerned; any balance of indebtedness by Italy shall be kept alive.
 - 81. Italy to compensate the owners of property so liquidated.

Section IV: Ceded and liberated territories

- 82. The successor Government should—
- (a) receive without payment Italian state and para-statal property in the territory concerned;
 - (b) be responsible for the note issue in the territory;

- (c) make no contribution towards the general service of the Italian public debt, but, except in the case of ceded colonies should take over responsibility for servicing holdings in the territory of the public debt.
- 83. Property rights of Italian nationals in the territories concerned should be respected, provided that they have been properly acquired. If the Italian nationals leave the territory, they should be allowed, on the same condition, to take movable property with them or transfer the proceeds of sale to the extent permitted by local exchange control.
- 84. Companies incorporated under Italian law (other than parastatal companies) should be allowed to remain Italian and transfer their seat of control to Italian territory; their property to be dealt with as under paragraph 83.
- 85. In the case of ships, beneficial ownership and not the port of registration shall be the governing factor in deciding their locus.
- 86. Arrangements to be made for the transfer of liabilities and corresponding reserves of social insurance schemes.
- 87. The successor Government to restore any United Nations property still under sequestration. When this is impossible, compensation to be paid by the Italian Government as under paragraph 76.

Section V: Claims by and on Germany

- 88. Italy to have the same treatment as United Nations as regards—
- (a) restitution of identifiable property;
- (b) restoration of property in Germany;
- (c) retention of German assets which existed in her territory before the outbreak of war.
- 89. Any gold which may be restored to Italy under paragraph 88 (a) above to be used by her towards the payment of her debt to those of the Associated Powers which have furnished relief to her since the liberation.
- 90. Italy to renounce all claims against Germany arising during the war other than those mentioned in paragraph 88, including all debts from Germany incurred during the war.

PART IX: ECONOMIC CLAUSES

Section I: Commercial relations

- 91. Italy to undertake unilaterally for five years—
- (a) to grant to the United Nations national or m.f.n. treatment (whichever is normally stipulated in modern commercial treaties) in relation to commerce, industry, shipping (except that for coastal shipping there should be a basis of reciprocity), the rights of persons and companies, etc.;
- (b) as regards the import and export of goods, to grant m.f.n. treatment in relation to duties only; in other respects to indulge in no arbitrary discrimination against products of the territories of the United Nations;

(c) to grant equitable treatment in cases of expropriation of United Nations property with compensation on a basis not less favourable than that accorded to Italian nationals.

Section II: Industrial property

- 92. Italy to undertake, as regards industrial property and unfair trade competition—
- (a) to observe towards the United Nations such codes and standards of practice as are recognized to be proper in modern international treaties:
- (b) to apply the international conventions on these subjects to which she was a party before the war (with a reciprocal obligation on the part of the other parties);

(c) to adhere to the most recent revisions of these instruments.

Section III: Contracts, prescriptions and judgments

- 93. Subject to exceptions in some cases, and to special treatment of contracts of insurance and reinsurance, contracts which required continuous intercourse with the enemy for their performance to be deemed to be dissolved, as from the outbreak of war.
- 94. Italy to suspend, as between residents in Italy and residents in the territories of the Associated Powers, all periods of prescription or limitation of right of action in Italy for the duration of the war and for a limited period thereafter.
- 95. Italy to make fair compensation for damage suffered by United Nations nationals as a result of improper judgments in Italian courts after the outbreak of war.
- 96. The Associated Powers to be entitled to examine all decisions of Italian prize courts; Italy to accept and give effect to their recommendations after such examination.

Section IV: Transport and shipping

- 97. Italy to observe the provisions of the various international conventions on rights of transit, etc., to which she was a party before the war.
- 98. Italy to provide for one year free of expense to the Associated Powers such ships as are needed for specific military purposes (e.g., troopships and hospital ships for bringing troops back from theatres of operations).

PART X: MERCANTILE MARINE AND SHIPBUILDING CLAUSES

- 99. No restriction to be placed on the Italian Mercantile Marine or Shipbuilding, excepting that:—
- (a) Italian shipbuilding and the operation of the Italian Mercantile Marine shall not [be] subsidized in any form.
- (b) Such ships and material as are constructed shall not embody German or Japanese components.

(c) Until the short-term limitations have been lifted, all specifications for Italian merchant ships shall be subject to approval by the Allied Inspectorate.

PART XI: CIVIL AVIATION

- 100. No restriction to be placed on Italian civil aviation inside Italian territory. Italy not to participate in civil aviation outside Italian territory until she is admitted to membership of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organisation.
- 101. No restriction to be placed on the use or manufacture of civil aircraft by Italy, except—

(a) Italy not to use or manufacture civil aircraft of German or Japanese design or embodying any German or Japanese components.

(b) Until Italy has been admitted into the World Organisation, all specifications for Italian civil aircraft to be subject to approval by the Allied Inspectorate.

PART XII: RENUNCIATION OF CLAIMS

- 102. (a) Italy to recognise the validity of all acts carried out by the Associated Powers on Italian metropolitan and colonial territories up to the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty and to renounce all claims in respect thereof;
- (b) This provision applies to the issue in Italian territory of Allied Military currency, the responsibility for which will be assumed by Italy.
 - 103. Italy to renounce all claims in respect of—
- (a) all acts and omissions by the United Nations in regard to Italian property in preparation for or since the outbreak of war, or in accordance with their exceptional war measures;
- (b) the decrees and orders of United Nations prize courts, whether or not the proceedings have been interrupted;

(c) the exercise or purported exercise of belligerent rights;

(d) compensation or restitution in respect of submarine cables diverted during, or in preparation for, the war;

(e) generally, Italy to renounce all pecuniary claims based on events which occurred before the coming into force of the Treaty.

PART XIII: MISCELLANEOUS

Section I: Revival, Modification and Abrogation of Treaties, Conventions, etc.

104. Bilateral Treaties:

Each Associated Power to notify Italy of the bilateral treaties it desires to keep in force. Any note so notified to be deemed to have been abrogated.

105. Multilateral Treaties:

(a) List of treaties to be abrogated so far as Italy is concerned.

(b) List of treaties in regard to which Italy must accept any modifications or changes subsequently agreed between the Associated Powers.

Section II: General

- 106. Italy not to introduce laws which discriminate on grounds of race, colour, creed or political opinion.
- 107. Italy not to prosecute or molest any person on account of his feelings or sympathies with the United Nations, including the performance of any action calculated to facilitate the execution of the Armistice or present Treaty.
- 108. Italy to receive back any Italian nationals and to accept responsibility for their reception and maintenance. Italy to recognise as possessing Italian nationality any person who before the 9th June, 1940, possessed Italian nationality unless that person is recognised by some other state as having acquired its nationality.

PROPOSALS FOR A PEACE TREATY FOR HUNGARY

- 1. The Soviet Delegation considers it desirable to take as a basis for the future treaty of peace with Hungary the existing Armistice Agreement signed on 20th January, 1945, between the U.S.S.R., the U.K. and the U.S.A., on the one hand, and Hungary on the other. 77 The Soviet Delegation think that Articles 1(d), 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 19 of the above-mentioned Armistice Agreement and the Annex to Article 12 could, with the necessary drafting changes and additions, be incorporated in the peace treaty as its basic articles.
- 2. Article 19 of the Armistice Agreement dealing with the frontiers of Hungary should be amplified to indicate that the whole of Transylvania will be restored to Rumania.
- 3. Article 8 of the Armistice should be deleted and replaced by an article under which Hungary undertakes to hand over to the Soviet Union, in conformity with paragraphs 1 and 9 of the decisions of the Berlin Conference on reparations from Germany, 78 the German assets located in Hungary.

Proposals for a Peace Treaty With Bulgaria

- 1. The Soviet Delegation consider that the Peace Treaty with Bulgaria should be based on the Armistice Agreement concluded with Bulgaria on 28th October, 1944.⁷⁹ Articles 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11 of the Agreement should be included in the Peace Treaty with the relevant drafting amendments.
- 2. Article 13 of the Armistice Agreement should be deleted and replaced by an article under which Bulgaria undertakes to hand over to the Soviet Union in conformity with paragraphs 1 and 9 of the decisions of the Berlin Conference on reparations from Germany, the German assets located in Bulgaria.
- 3. The amount of reparations due from Bulgaria to Yugoslavia and Greece will have to be determined.
- 4. The Allied Powers will support Bulgaria's candidature for membership of the United Nations' Organization. Bulgaria will cooperate with the Allied Powers and execute such measures as they may adopt for the maintenance of world peace.

THE SITUATION IN GREECE

Reports received from Greece show that the internal political situation in that country continues to remain extremely tense and fraught with grave consequences both for the Greek people and for the peace and security of the countries which are Greece's neighbours.

Under the conditions at present prevailing in Greece free democratic elections are impossible. As regards the proposed despatch to Greece of observers of the Allied Powers to supervise the course of the forthcoming elections, obviously, under present conditions in Greece, the observers will not be able to ensure free expression of the popular will at the elections but will merely serve to obscure the abnormal situation created by the present Greek Government's violation of the Varkisa Agreement of 12th February, 1945, concluded between the Greek Government and representatives of democratic trends of opinion in Greece.⁸²

The Soviet Government accordingly consider themselves compelled to declare that they cannot accept any moral responsibility whatsoever for the political situation that has arisen in Greece. In the opinion of the Soviet Government this situation can be met by the immediate adoption of such measures with regard to the composition of the Greek Government as will assure the fulfilment of the Agreement concluded at Varkisa between the representatives of the then Greek Government and representatives of Greek democracy.

Professional Liberation Front, signed at Varkisa, February 12, 1945, see vol. VIII, section under Greece entitled "Decision by the United States to participate, with other Yalta Powers and France, in the supervision of elections in Greece . . ."

PROCEDURE FOR PREPARATION OF A PEACE TREATY WITH ITALY

UNITED STATES DELEGATION'S DRAFT (C.F.M. (45) 2) AS AMENDED BY THE SOVIET DELEGATION

- 1. The Governments of all countries formerly at war with Italy will be asked to give in writing their views on the Peace Treaty with Italy.
- 2. Those United Nations and other countries which were attacked by Italy and which are not represented on the Council, namely Yugoslavia, Greece, Albania and Ethiopia, will be invited to a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers for the purpose of an oral discussion of those aspects of the Italian problem which particularly affects them. Greece will be represented as soon as possible after a democratic Government has been formed in Greece. This discussion will begin on 15th September, 1945.

Austria will be invited to express her views, particularly in connection with the Austro-Italian frontier. Italy will be invited to express her views.

Detailed representations by these States can be made in writing and may cover all questions of interest to them.

- 3. After receiving general directives from the Council, the Deputies and members of Delegations will draw up a full text of the Treaty.
- 4. The draft text of the Treaty will be examined by the Council at its next session.
- 5. After this discussion a full draft will be submitted for consideration to all the members of the United Nations entitled to sign the Treaty.

ACCELERATION OF THE REPATRIATION OF SOVIET NATIONALS

The Soviet Government deem it necessary to point out that the Repatriation Agreements concluded between the Government of the Soviet Union and the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Provisional Government of the French Republic have played a positive role in the matter of repatriation.³⁴ The Soviet Government feel bound also to mention the great help and assistance received from the Allied Military Authorities in repatriating to the Soviet Union a large number of former Soviet prisoners of war and persons forcibly deported by the Germans from the Soviet Union. At the same time the Soviet Government cannot but point out that, according to reports from the Soviet repatriation authorities, cases are occurring of breaches of these Agreements which are giving rise to numerous complaints from Soviet nationals due for repatriation (see Annex). The Soviet Government consider they should once more draw the attention of the Governments of the United Kingdom and United States of America and also of the Provisional Government of France to this situation and to the need for urgent action to accelerate the repatriation of Soviet nationals.

Furthermore, the Soviet Government consider it necessary to draw attention to the following. There are under the control of the British and American authorities a considerable number of Soviet nationals from the Latvian, Lithuanian and Estonian Soviet Socialist Republics and also from the Western provinces of the Ukraine and Byelorussia. The repatriation of these Soviet nationals has been hampered by a number of difficulties, primarily by the obstacles encountered by the Soviet repatriation delegates in visiting these camps.

The Soviet Government would point out that the persons kept in these camps are Soviet nationals to whom the Anglo-Soviet and American-Soviet Repatriation Agreements of 11th February are fully applicable. Quite apart from this, however, the Soviet Government insist on the right of Soviet repatriation delegates to be given unhindered access to these camps in order to clear up with the abovementioned persons the various points connected with their repatriation.

In order to put an end to the breaches which have occurred in the execution of the Repatriation Agreements and to accelerate the repatriation of Soviet nationals, the Soviet Government suggest the adoption of the following resolution:—

"Having considered the question raised by the Soviet Government of accelerating the repatriation of Soviet nationals, the Council of Foreign Ministers agree that:—

1. Delay in supplying Soviet repatriation delegates with information about camps in which Soviet nationals are held should be avoided.

³⁴ On February 11, 1945, at Yalta, representatives of the United States and the Soviet Union concluded an Agreement Relating to Prisoners of War and Civilians Liberated by Forces Operating Under Soviet Command and Forces Operating Under United States Command; for text, see Foreign Relations, The Conferences at Malta and Yalta, 1945, p. 985. Similar agreements were concluded between the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union on February 11, 1945, and between France and the Soviet Union on June 29, 1945. For additional Goumentation regarding the treatment and reciprocal repatriation of American and Soviet prisoners of war and interned civilians liberated by Allied forces, see vol. v, pp. 1067 ff.

2. Soviet repatriation delegates should be afforded unimpeded access to the above camps.

3. Soviet nationals should not be kept together with German prisoners of war or under guard of German officers and soldiers.

4. The anti-Soviet activities conducted in certain camps by White émigrés and other persons who have collaborated with the Nazis during the war should be stopped. In particular no toleration should be given to the activities in some camps or groups of Fascists aimed at forcing Soviet nationals to refuse to return home by intimidation and threats of the punishments alleged to be awaiting them on their return to the Soviet Union."

[Annex]

ANNEX TO THE MEMORANDUM ON ACCELERATION OF THE REPATRIATION OF SOVIET NATIONALS

Zones Controlled by the British Authorities

1. There are some 20,000 Soviet nationals in the territory situated in the area of the British Eighth Corps in Germany in the western restricted zone on the Eiderstadt Peninsula, and some 10,000 Soviet nationals in the eastern restricted zone on the same peninsula north of Neustadt. These Soviet nationals are regarded as prisoners of war and guard duties in these camps are carried out by Germans. Soviet repatriation delegates are not allowed into the camps where these people are kept. Living conditions in the camps are very harsh. There have been cases of armed attacks by Germans on Soviet nationals and anti-Soviet propaganda is carried on.

In a Note of 22nd August, 1945, the People's Commissariat for Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R. made representations to the British Embassy on this subject.

2. In Italy, in the territory under the control of the British Eighth Army, anti-Soviet activities are also being carried on at points where Soviet nationals are concentrated. Numerous examples of such activities were given in the Notes of the Soviet Ambassador in London, dated 3rd and 7th July and 31st August, 1945. Several illegalities committed against nationals of the U.S.S.R. in the territory under the control of the British Eighth Army were mentioned but so far the Soviet Government have received no reply on the merits of the representations thus made.

Zones Under the Control of the U.S.A. Authorities

1. For a long time the American authorities failed to inform the Soviet repatriation delegates of the existence in Germany and Austria, in the zones controlled by the American authorities (in Landau, Munich, Nuremberg, Salzburg and other towns) of 36 camps containing over 48,000 Soviet nationals—Lithuanians, Latvians, Estonians, Ukrainians and Byelorussians, who are being subjected to propaganda conducted by various groups hostile to the Soviet Union and aimed at inducing them to refuse to return home. Up to the middle of August, 1945, Soviet representatives had no access to these camps.

- 2. For a long time the American authorities in the United States of America failed to inform the Soviet repatriation delegates of the existence of a camp for Soviet nationals at Fort Dix. Soviet representatives only learned of the existence of this camp in connection with an incident which occurred there, in the course of which the camp guards used tear-gas and fire-arms against Soviet nationals with the result that several of the latter were wounded. Despite repeated approaches on this matter made by the U.S.S.R. Embassy in Washington to the State Department, Soviet representatives were not allowed to join in investigating the circumstances of this incident.
- 3. It has recently been learnt that in Mond See near Salzburg, in the American-occupied zone of Austria, there is a so-called "Committee of Non-Return", the purpose of which is to prevent Soviet nationals from returning home. This "Committee" furnishes Soviet nationals with "Stateless" documents issued in the office of the Burgomaster. These documents are stamped by the American Commandant.

Zones Under the Control of the French Authorities

- 1. On 20th August, Major-General Vikhorev, Soviet repatriation delegate, in conjunction with the Military Attachés in Switzerland of the United Kingdom, the U.S.A. and France, discovered the existence of a camp of Soviet nationals in the area of the First French Army near Felke on the border of the Principality of Liechtenstein. The French authorities had not informed the Soviet repatriation delegates of the existence of this camp, and, further, Lieut.-Colonel Fichelier, the officer in charge of camps in this zone, refused General Vikhorev's request for admission to the above-mentioned camp on the grounds that he had no instructions from Paris.
- 2. In the First French Army area in Germany, individuals and groups of White émigrés hostile to the Soviet Union are engaging in activities designed to prevent the return home of Soviet nationals. The local French authorities are doing nothing to stop these activities.
- 3. In spite of repeated protests from the Soviet repatriation delegates, the French military authorities continue to retain Soviet nationals in the service of the French Legion. Thus, the Soviet representatives removed 19 Soviet nationals from the 13th Brigade de Legionnaires stationed at Meaux (44 kilometres east of Paris). Their evidence shows that in this Brigade there are over one hundred Soviet nationals registered as Poles, Czechs, Yugoslavs, etc. In Bordeaux in another French Legion unit there are from 15 to 20 Soviet nationals. On 23rd May, 1945 a Soviet national, Ivan Snigir, having no desire to serve in the Legion unit which was quartered in Fort St. Nicholas, Marseilles, attempted to escape but was caught and beaten up by a Legion guard. When a Soviet officer, Major Shakhov arrived at the Legion barracks to examine Ivan Snigir and draw up an affidavit, he was refused these facilities by the officer commanding, Captain de Lacourienne and the Legion medical officer.

Composition and Functions of Joint Secretariat

The Deputies submit the following recommendations regarding the composition and functions of a Joint Secretariat to serve the Council during the period of the present visit of Foreign Ministers:

- (1) A Joint Secretariat shall be established consisting of the Secretaries of the five Delegations. The Joint Secretariat shall include the necessary number of officials drawn from the five Delegations, the numbers required being established by agreement between the Secretaries of Delegations.
- (2) The Secretary General of the Joint Secretariat is appointed by agreement between the Secretaries of Delegations. Mr. Norman Brook has been appointed Secretary General for the period of the present visit of Foreign Ministers.
- (3) The Joint Secretariat will organise the technical handling of all the documents of the Council. It will be responsible for reproducing, in a numbered series all documents submitted by Delegations for consideration by the Council and circulating copies to all Delegations. These documents will be reproduced in English, Russian, French, and, where necessary, Chinese; and the Joint Secretariat will be responsible for arranging for translations to be made.
- (4) The Joint Secretariat will make arrangements for meetings. It will make any changes desired in the times of the regular meetings of Foreign Ministers and of Deputies, and it will also assist in arranging such other meetings as may be required.

The Joint Secretariat will also issue Agenda papers for meetings whenever it is possible to give notice in advance of the questions to be discussed.

(5) As regards the recording of meetings, the Secretary General will prepare a full summary of the proceedings at meetings of both Foreign Ministers and Deputies. He will submit these summaries in draft to a meeting which he will hold each evening with the other members of the Joint Secretariat, who will thus have an opportunity to offer comments and corrections. The summaries will then be circulated to Delegations by 8 a. m. on the morning following the meetings to which they relate, not as agreed records carrying the full approval of all Delegations but as informal summaries issued primarily on the responsibility of the Secretary General, but after consultation with a member of each Delegation. A definitive version of this summary will be issued later after the receipt of any corrections from Delegations.

The summaries will be discussed with all members of the Joint Secretariat on the basis of an English text. Translations into Russian and French will then be put in hand at once, and these should be available during the course of the following morning.

It is recommended that this system be tried on an experimental basis, subject to review in the light of experience.

(6) The Joint Secretariat will also make itself responsible for securing, in consultation with the Delegations, a fully agreed statement of conclusions reached by the Council as the work of the Council proceeds. By this means the Joint Secretariat will build up from day to day a body of agreed conclusions, which will greatly facilitate the preparation of an agreed Protocol and Communiqué at the conclusion of the Foreign Ministers' visit.

The Australian Minister for External Affairs (Evatt) to the Secretary of State 85

[London,] 13 September, 1945.

DEAR MR. BYRNES: As a result of our conversation this morning, so I now submit in writing certain considerations which appear to me to bear on the question of how and to what degree other Governments should be associated with the activities of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

I realise that you are fully aware that this question is of pressing importance. There is consequently no need for me to recapitulate here the general reasons why the association, in some form, of other Governments with the discussions and decisions of the Council is both just and desirable.

As I see it, the point to which attention should now be given is how this can be effected in a way which will not only pay proper regard to the claims and status of other countries which have been principal belligerents in this war, but will at the same time preserve the essential requirement of expeditious handling of the principles and matters to be discussed.

The suggestions hitherto made at the meeting of deputies yesterday morning and later at the meeting of the Council in the particular connection of the Italian Peace Treaty have, generally speaking, attempted to meet the problem by trying to arrange interested Governments not represented on the Council into categories, e.g., those "directly interested" or those "directly attacked" or again those who may have made a particular contribution to the defeat of the enemy. The difficulties which this method of approach leads to were, I understand, very clearly shown in the discussions of the Council yesterday. The Italian Peace Treaty is only the first of matters to come up before the Council in which other Governments will feel themselves concerned. If arrangements have to be threshed out ad hoc in each succeeding case I can see no end to discussions of the same general character.

The fact is, I submit, that to attempt to define the precise degree of concern or interest of other Governments in the matters coming before the Council is a quite unnecessary complication of an essentially simple issue. In the same way as the five members of the Council are in the last resort acknowledged as representing the United Nations in the immediate handling of matters relating to the Peace settlements, I cannot see why there should not be associated with the Council—and not only for the present meeting—a corresponding group of countries which would broadly represent the remaining United Nations in the discussion of matters coming before the Council of more than localised concern.

If the criterion for inclusion in this group was the broad one—and I believe the only right one—of active and sustained belligerence against the three Axis Powers, these associate members of the Council would be comparatively few in number and would in no way be a hindrance to the work of the Council, far less a cause of delay, in fact, than would be occasioned by some of the procedures already suggested for association of other Governments with the activities of the Council. For the sake of illustration and without any intention of rigidity at this stage, I would suggest that the group might consist of the four British Dominions, Yugoslavia, Greece, Poland and perhaps Brazil. No question of voting is involved and the associate membership would keep the Council within easily manageable proportions.

It would be entirely within the province of the Council itself to nominate such a group to constitute its associate members. If the Council were willing to do this, I feel sure that you will agree that it is an arrangement which would obviate once and for all the kind of really unnecessary difficulties which have arisen in connection with the Peace Treaty with Italy. One further advantage which I see from the nomination of such a panel is that it would also provide a sound and equitable basis for the working of subordinate committees of the Council and the conduct of the work of the Council in the intervals between sessions.

I submit the above to you for your earnest consideration.

So far as Australia is concerned, we would feel our exclusion from participation in the Council's work to be incompatible with our sustained war effort against all our enemies in this war—an effort which you and the President have both acknowledged.

I am at your call if you desire to have these suggestions further elaborated.

Yours sincerely

H. V. EVATT

The Council agreed to consider at their meeting that afternoon whether this question should be added to the Agenda for the present Conference.

2. Repatriation of Soviet Citizens

M. Molorov asked whether his Memorandum on this subject (subsequently circulated as C.F.M.(45) 10^{90}) could be added to the Agenda.

The Council agreed that this question should be added to the Agenda for the present Conference.

3. Secretariat

(Previous Reference: C.F.M.(D) (45) 2nd Meeting, Minute 2).

M. Gousev reported that at their Meeting on the previous day the Deputies had agreed upon recommendations regarding the composition and functions of a Joint Secretariat, which were set out in C.F.M. (45) 12.91 These recommendations were now submitted for approval by the Council of Foreign Ministers.

The Council approved the report of the Deputies on the composition and functions of the Joint Secretariat (C.F.M.(45) 12).

4. ITALY: PROCEDURE FOR PREPARING PEACE TREATY

(Previous Reference: C.F.M.(D) (45) 2nd Meeting, Minute 1).

M. Gousev reported that there was a difference of view between the Deputies regarding the agreement reached by the Council of Foreign Ministers on 12th September (C.F.M.(P)(45) 2nd Meeting, Minute 2) with regard to the countries which were to be invited to express their views in writing on the Peace Treaty with Italy. He understood the agreement in the sense that the Governments of all countries at war with Italy would be asked to submit their views in writing. Mr. Dunn, Sir Ronald Campbell, M. Couve de Murville and Dr. Wellington Koo had understood the agreement to mean that invitations would be sent to the United Nations at war with Italy. After discussion the Deputies had not reached agreement and had instructed him to report to the Council accordingly.

M. Molorov said that on further consideration the Soviet Delegation had decided that they could agree that invitations to express written views on the Peace Treaty for Italy should be issued to those of the United Nations who were at war with Italy.

The Council invited the Deputies to determine the procedure for enabling those of the United Nations who were at war with Italy to express their views in writing on the Italian Peace Treaty.

⁹² According to the record of the second meeting of the Deputies, September 13, 1945, 11 a. m., Minute 1 (not printed), it was Ambassador Gusev's contention that it was necessary to find some principle for consultation with interested states which would include such countries as Albania, which, although not a member of the United Nations, had been at war with Italy (Council of Foreign Ministers File: Lot M-88: CFM London 1945 Deputies Minutes).

5. ITALY: DRAFT HEADS OF PEACE TREATY

Dr. Wang Shih Chieh proposed that the Conference should consider the memorandum by the United Kingdom Delegation covering Draft Heads of a Peace Treaty with Italy (C.F.M. (45) 3).^{92a}

Mr. Byrnes, M. Molotov, M. Bidault and Dr. Wang Shih Chieh paid tribute to the valuable work done by the British Delegation in preparing the draft heads of a Treaty.

Mr. Byrnes suggested that the British draft should be used as a basis for detailed discussion by the Deputies. It would, however, be desirable for the Foreign Ministers to select the more important subjects and to give the Deputies guidance on these. He handed in a memorandum by the United States Delegation (subsequently circulated as C.F.M.(45) 16 93) setting out the points of principle which in their view should be discussed by the Foreign Ministers themselves.

M. BIDAULT agreed with the procedure suggested by Mr. Byrnes. The French Delegation would submit a memorandum on the minor modifications which they desired in the frontier between France and Italy.

Dr. Wang Shih Chien said that the Chinese Delegation had circulated memoranda (C.F.M.(45) 13 and 14 94) on certain points of special interest to China. These could be considered by the Deputies.

M. Molorov said that he must make one reservation. As he had pointed out at the Council's meeting on 12th September (C.F.M.(P) (45) 2nd Meeting, Minute 2) the Soviet Delegation would find it difficult to discuss such questions as the frontier between Yugoslavia and Italy without hearing the views of the Yugoslav Government. He suggested that the Council should comply with the request of the Yugoslav Government and invite them to send representatives to put their views before their Conference.

Mr. Byrnes said that, after the Council had exchanged views on points of principle, the Deputies would have to work out detailed proposals. For this purpose the Deputies might decide to visit the territories in question; and they could then hear representations from interested parties and see what conditions were on the spot. They could collect information from any source they deemed appropriate. As a result of their investigations, the Foreign Ministers would have before them all the relevant facts and arguments. At that stage the ²⁴ C.F.M. (45) 13, September 14, 1945, memorandum by the Chinese delegation entitled "Peace Settlements with Italy and China's Special Questions" (not printed), set forth the desire of the Chinese Government that the abrogation or renunciation of agreements and privileges enjoyed formerly by Italy be specifically included in the peace treaty with Italy. The questions set forth in this memorandum were also presented by the Chinese delegation in the form of draft articles for the Italian Peace Treaty in C.F.M. (45) 14, September 14, 1945, not printed.

Council might decide to invite the Yugoslav and Italian Governments to send representatives to put their case orally before the Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Bevin suggested that representatives of interested British Dominions, and perhaps British Colonies, should be given similar facilities to put their views before the Deputies. Some of the British Dominions claimed that they had a vital interest in the port of Trieste.

M. Molorov agreed that the Deputies might visit the territories in question if they found it necessary to do so. But Yugoslavia was one of the United Nations which was not represented at this meeting, although it had a common frontier with Italy, and had asked that its views on the territorial question should be heard. A precedent had been set by inviting the Poles to the Berlin Conference to put forward their views on the western frontier of Poland, and in these circumstances it was difficult to reject the Yugoslav request for similar facilities. He suggested that the Yugoslav Government should be invited to send representatives to put their views before this meeting of the Council. As regards the British Dominions, he was prepared to agree to any proposals that might be put forward for enabling them to state their views either to the Deputies or to the Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Byrnes saw no objection to hearing representatives of any British Dominion which claimed to be heard. He suggested that they should ask the Governments of Yugoslavia and Italy to send representatives to put their views before the Council on Monday, 17th September, and representatives of such of the British Dominions as claimed to be heard could be invited to attend at the same meeting.

The Council asked Dr. Wang Shih Chieh, as Chairman, to arrange for the Governments of Yugoslavia and Italy, and the Governments of such British Dominions as claimed to be heard, to be invited to send representatives to present their views at the meeting of the Council on Monday, 17th September.

The Council then proceeded to discuss the points of principle set out in the United States memorandum (C.F.M.(45) 16).

Section I: Territorial Provisions for Italy in Europe

(1) It was agreed that the frontier with France would be unchanged, subject to hearing the case of the French Government for minor rectifications.

It was further agreed that the Deputies should consider the memorandum which the French Delegation proposed to submit on the minor adjustments desired in the Franco-Italian frontier.

(2) It was agreed that the frontier with Switzerland should remain unchanged.

- (3) It was agreed that the frontier with Austria would be unchanged, subject to hearing any case which Austria might present for minor rectifications in her favour.
- (4) It was agreed that discussion of the proposals in the United States memorandum regarding the frontier between Yugoslavia and Italy should be deferred until the Council had heard the representatives of other Governments who were being invited to attend the meeting on Monday, 17th September.
- (5) It was proposed in the United States memorandum that the Dodecanese Islands should be ceded to Greece and demilitarized.

Mr. Bevin said that, in the view of the British Government, Castelrosso should be ceded to Turkey. This island was a friction point between the Turks and the Greeks. He was ready to agree that this point should be considered by the Deputies in consultation with the interested parties.

Mr. Byrnes said that there was no evidence to suggest that Turkey wanted Castelrosso, and the population was overwhelmingly Greek. For these reasons he could not agree that the island should go to Turkey. If it were to be demilitarised there would be no military danger to Turkey in leaving it under the control of Greece; if Turkey were asked her views, it was likely that she would claim the island.

M. Molorov said that, in his view, the disposal of the Dodecanese Islands should be considered in connection with the disposal of other Italian possessions overseas, and he therefore proposed to reserve his views until the Council discussed the Italian Colonies.

Mr. Bevin and Mr. Byrnes said that they did not regard the Dodecanese Islands as standing on the same footing as the Italian Colonies; but, as the Italian Colonies would come up for discussion very shortly, they agreed that this point should stand over for the time being.

- (6) It was agreed that Italy should be required to renounce all claims in relation to pre-war Albania.
- (7) It was proposed in the United States memorandum that Pantellaria and Isole Pelagie should be demilitarized.
- M. Molotov asked what was the motive for this proposal. Was it wise to hurt the national feelings of Italy in such a trifling matter?

Mr. Bevin said that the British had not found this a trifling matter during the war.

M. Molorov said that the Council had not given any study to the international importance of these islands, and suggested that this point should be referred to the Deputies.

Mr. Byrnes did not think it would be profitable to refer a question of policy to the Deputies without giving them some guidance. He said that the same principle as regards demilitarisation should apply both to the islands and to the mainland of Italy. He suggested, and it was agreed, that paragraph 7 of the memorandum should be considered together with the proposals on armaments in Section IV.

- (8) It was agreed that Zara and the Dalmatian Islands should go to Yugoslavia.
 - (9) It was agreed that Saseno should go to Albania.

Section II: Human Rights

It was agreed that the Peace Treaty should require Italy voluntarily to undertake to maintain a Bill of Rights corresponding to the freedoms of speech, religious worship, political belief and public meeting which were to be sought for Italy by the United Nations pursuant to the Moscow Declaration of November, 1943,95 and also confirming the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the United Nations Organisation.

It was agreed that the Council of Foreign Ministers should continue their discussion of the United States memorandum at their meeting that afternoon.

The Secretary, in explaining the United States proposal concerning collective trusteeship for the Italian colonies, contained in the United States memorandum submitted this morning, so said that the people of the Arab states had supported us during this war because they had faith in the declaration of principles which we had all made during the war, and particularly with respect to the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they were to live. He added that the U. S. proposal would have the additional advantage that it would demonstrate to all the world that no one country was attempting to gain special privilege for itself in regard to these colonies; that no national military bases or military establishments would be set up in these colonies, and would thus constitute a strong assurance for collective security. He said that in ten years the new generation in these colonies both Italian and Arab would undoubtedly be in a position to develop their own police force. The presence of the principal nations of the world on the trusteeship and security councils of the United Nations would assure that each nation would have a voice in the administration of these territories, and thus no one nation would feel that any other was gaining an advantage.

Mr. Molotov replied that he thought it would be desirable for us to reach in advance an agreement here as to what nations should administer what colonies under general trusteeship, or at least decide in advance from what nation the administrator of a given territory should come. The Secretary replied that in his opinion it would be better to choose an administrator from some neutral country having no direct interest in the colonies. He feared that if this was not done, for example, Italy would claim the right to have an Italian administrator in Libya because of her experience and because of the presence of an Italian population. He went on to say that, however, in addition the American proposal contemplated the appointment of an advisory committee which would have representatives on the spot who would be able to watch the character of the administration and report any instances of maladministration or violation of the principles of trusteeship to the Trustee council.

Mr. Molotov said that the Secretary's proposal was one of the most interesting that had been submitted and deserved the most careful study. He said that the Soviet Government stood by the decision reached in San Francisco that colonies taken from the enemy states should be placed under the trusteeship council of the United Nations. He added, however, that the Soviet Union believed that under this trustee administration each one of these colonies should be turned over to one member of the United Nations for administration. He said in regard to at least one of the Italian colonies the Soviet Union would like to try its hand at colonial administration under the general trusteeship principle. The Soviet Government had had considerable experience in bringing about friendly relations between nationals, and he felt that if Tripolitania was entrusted to the Soviet Union for Administration, they would not lag behind any other country in their development of the welfare of the people and in preparing them for independence within ten years. He added that the Soviet Government felt, of course, that the United States should likewise administer at least one of the Italian colonies, and Great Britain another.

added that in his opinion the only rivalry would be as to which country could prove itself to be the best administrator.

The Secretary replied that in so far as the United States was concerned, they did not wish to undertake such a burden, although they would be glad to participate in the trusteeship council. Mr. Molotov asked what about the Philippines. The Secretary replied that we had acquired the Philippines as the result of the Spanish-American War, and that we had therefore accepted this burden and duty which had been thrust upon us, but that we would not voluntarily assume such a burden in respect of other colonial areas. He pointed out that we are now giving the Philippines full independence.

The Secretary said the American proposal was based on the belief that Italy had not lived up to her responsibilities as a colonial power. Mr. Molotov agreed to this, and said that it was because they felt they could do better than Italy that he proposed that one of the Italian colonies be placed under Soviet administration under a general trust-eeship agreement.

The Secretary said that he wished to speak frankly to Mr. Molotov; that if the Soviet Union, the United States, and Great Britain each took a colony for single administration, France and other nations would likewise wish to acquire one on the same basis. He said in those circumstances the whole world would regard the arrangement as a repetition of the division of spoils of war cloaked under a general trusteeship agreement, and he felt that all our reputations would suffer. He said that under our scheme, the U.S.S.R. would be assured of a voice in naming the administrator through its membership on the trusteeship council, and would furthermore be in a position to check on the administration through its representative on the advisory council. He said that in both of these bodies the admitted experience of the Soviet Union in dealing with nationalities would be available and of great help.

Mr. Molotov said that he foresaw difficulties in the choice of an administrator. It would be very difficult for the nations to agree upon any individual since he would have to be a citizen of one country or another, and the whole problem of national control would then arise. For example, if the choice is an Englishman, the colony would then be the equivalent of an English colony, and the same would apply if the choice were a Soviet citizen. If, on the other hand, it were a citizen of a neutral country, there would be great competition among the other nations in an endeavor to influence him in the direction of their respective national policies. He felt therefore that to face the issue squarely and to assign the colony for administration to one country would produce less friction. The Secretary replied that he did not agree with that since he felt that if the citizen of a disinterested country were appointed, say, from Sweden or Switzerland, all nations would then have assurances that there would be no military establishment, no army developed in that colony, since the administrator would have no interest in doing so. Mr. Molotov repeated that he felt that there would be great difficulty in agreeing on the administrator. The Secretary concluded the interview by saying that if they were unable to agree, with the whole world to choose from, on administrators for these colonies, he could not, in God's world, see how it would be possible to agree on what countries they should be turned over to for administration.

3. ITALY: DRAFT HEADS OF PEACE TREATY (Previous Reference C.F.M.(P) (45) 3rd Meeting, Minute 5)

Dr. Wang Shih Chieh read out the text of a draft letter,3 prepared in accordance with the Council's decision at their meeting that morning, to the Italian Representative in London, the Yugoslav Ambassador in London, the Right Hon. H. V. Evatt, the High Commissioner for Australia, the Acting High Commissioner for New Zealand, the Acting High Commissioner for Canada, the High Commissioner for the Union of South Africa and the Secretary of State for India, inviting them to send representatives to the Council's meeting on Monday, 17th September, if they so desired, to present the views of their Governments on the question of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and the future of the city and port of Trieste.

The Council invited Dr. Wang Shih Chieh to despatch letters to the representatives of these Governments in the terms of this draft.

4. ITALY: DISPOSAL OF ITALIAN COLONIES

The Council proceeded to discuss Section III of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 164) dealing with the disposal of the Italian Colonies.

Mr. Byrnes said that the first question was whether the Italian Colonies should be left with Italy or taken from her. Italy had not used her opportunities as a colonial Power to the best advantage. She had failed to develop her colonial peoples in the direction of selfgovernment. He had concluded that Italy's Colonies should not be returned to her, but should be placed under trusteeship.

The peoples of the world would not have responded to the call to join the United Nations in the war if certain hopes had not been held out to them and certain promises made. In the Atlantic Charter. the Moscow Declaration and on other occasions the principal Powers had declared that they sought no territorial advantages and intended to secure for the peoples of the world an opportunity to choose the form of government under which they wished to live.

³ The letter, dated September 14, 1945, read as follows:

[&]quot;At their meeting this morning the Council of Foreign Ministers now in Session at Lancaster House in London agreed to enquire of the Government of whether they wished to represent their views to the Council on the question of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and the future of the city and port of Trieste.

[&]quot;Accordingly, as the Chairman of the Council of Foreign Ministers on that occasion, I was asked to invite the Government of to nominate a representative, if they so desired, to attend the meeting of Foreign Ministers to be held in Lancaster House on Monday, 17th September, at 4.0 p. m. to express the views of the Government on these problems."

The letter was signed by the Chinese Foreign Minister. (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM Miscellaneous)

⁴ Memorandum by the United States delegation, September 14, "Suggested Directive to Deputies from the Council of Foreign Ministers to Govern Them in the Drafting of a Treaty of Peace with Italy", p. 179.

The United States Delegation proposed, as regards Libya, a promise of independence after a ten-year period of trusteeship under an administrator appointed by the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations. All States members of the Council of Foreign Ministers would have a voice in the selection of this administrator. He would be assisted by an Advisory Committee including representatives of all States members of the Council of Foreign Ministers except China, and also representatives of Libya and Italy, who would be able to provide information relating to the territory which would be of value to the Committee. If the administrator failed to discharge his responsibility to the satisfaction of any of the States represented on the Committee, any one of them would be entitled to bring the matter before the Trusteeship Council.

This arrangement would give an assurance to all that the Italian Colonies would not be developed to the military advantage of any one nation. It would be left to the Security Council to determine where, if necessary, any strategic bases might be located.

Such a plan, in his submission, would give heart to the peoples of the world, since it would show that the Great Powers sincerely intended to give them at the earliest possible opportunity freedom to determine the type of government under which they wished to live.

M. BIDAULT said that he had not had time to give detailed consideration to the United States proposals, which differed in some respects from those put forward by the British Delegation in C.F.M.(45) 3, and at the present stage he could only express provisional views. The territories under discussion were of great importance to France, and he must ask that full consideration should be given to the views of the French Government before any final decision was taken about their disposal. In the view of the French Delegation it would be neither equitable nor wise to deprive Italy of all those Colonial territories which she had held before she herself came under the domination of the Fascist system, which now had happily been overthrown by the joint efforts of the United Nations. Italy was a small country, with a high birth rate. In pre-Fascist days Italy had rendered service to these territories. Further, he did not think it fair that Italy, who had in the later stages of the war made some contribution towards the overthrow of Fascism-within her own territory and outside it—should receive the same treatment as a country which had made no such contribution. The question of prestige for the new Italy must also be remembered. M. Molotov had referred that morning to the effect which the demilitarisation of Pantellaria would have on the national feelings of Italy: the loss of her Colonies would be far more serious from this point of view. He did not imply that the French Delegation favoured the retention of the status quo ante bellum. France would ask for certain rectifications in the Italian colonial Empire, as he believed would the British Commonwealth, whose armies had struggled for so long in the sands of North Africa. He suggested that these adjustments should be studied by the Deputies.

As regards the proposals made by the United States delegation, he raised no objection in principle to a system of trusteeship. He would, however, remind the Council that the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations Organisation were that very afternoon beginning their discussions on the possibility of administering the kind of collective trusteeship which the United States Delegation had in mind. If the Council were now to accept the solution proposed by Mr. Byrnes, they would not know in any detail to what they were committing themselves. Trusteeship under a single country was very different from collective trusteeship of the type proposed. How such a collective system would work, particularly in the territories under discussion, was not known.

In his opinion, subject to certain reservations, he saw advantages in setting up for these territories which were to be detached from Italian rule a system of trusteeship under the control of the United Nations. He thought, however, that the Deputies should examine the whole matter, if necessary sending representatives to the territories concerned.

DR. WANG SHIH-CHIEH said that the Chinese Delegation favoured the United States proposals. This plan was in accordance with the principles of the United Nations Charter. At San Francisco the Chinese Delegation had proposed, and insisted, that the independence of peoples should be one of the objectives of international trusteeship. The present plan did not diverge from this objective, nor from the principles adopted at San Francisco; and he hoped that the Council would seek a solution on these lines.

Mr. Bevin said that at this stage he wished to raise three points:-

(a) The United States memorandum referred to Libya. Libya in fact comprised two territories—Cyrenaica and Tripolitania. Could these territories be named separately?

Mr. Byrnes agreed.

(b) If this matter were remitted to the Deputies could it be understood that they were empowered to study, not only the proposals in the United States memorandum, but also such other proposals as might be put forward by other States members of the Council or by other United Nations at war with Italy. He would like the Governments of the British Dominions to be given an opportunity of putting their views to the Deputies. It was not yet known what form collective administration would take—e.g. whether there would be an international administrative Service for this purpose and a system for sharing the costs of collective administration. This was a new experiment, which the British Government would try to make work, but to be committed to this method of trusteeship, without the possibility of altering it if it were found to be unworkable, would put them under a difficulty.

(c) The British Government were also in a difficulty as regards the Senussi. In 1940, when they were fighting in the North African desert, they had given a public pledge, which they had repeated in 1942, that they would not be parties to putting the Senussi back under Italian rule. No nation had objected to this pledge and the British Government felt that they were to some extent committed. The principle of trusteeship did not conflict with this undertaking, but Cyrenaica and Tripolitania should be dealt with separately as conditions were different in the two territories.

M. Molotov supported Mr. Byrnes' statement that Italy had not made good use of her colonial opportunities. They were conquered territories which Italy had used for aggressive purposes, with no regard to the interests of the local populations. From this he drew the conclusion that M. Bidault's suggestion that the Colonies should be left with Italy was not the right one. Any comparison with Pantellaria was out of place, as Pantellaria was not a colonial possession.

M. Molotov went on to associate himself with Dr. Wang in saying that the advantage of Mr. Byrnes' proposal was that it would maintain the principle of the independence of these territories. It would safeguard the control of the United Nations and would also serve to ensure the independence of these countries in the shortest possible time. Nobody could pretend that Italy had cared about the independence of these countries; and, if they were returned to Italy, who had waged war at the side of the Germans against the countries represented at the table, no one would believe that there was any hope of Colonial territories becoming independent.

M. Molotov said that, before he put forward the proposals of the Soviet Government, he would like to mention a point of principle on which he and Mr. Byrnes were united. From what had been said that afternoon it appeared that all the States members of the Council recognised the principle of trusteeship as the appropriate method of dealing with all the Italian Colonies. Apart from the reservation made by M. Bidault, they all agreed that these Colonies should not be left to Italy. They also agreed that they should be placed under the trusteeship of the United Nations in accordance with the San Francisco decisions.

⁵ For the statement by the British Foreign Secretary on January 8, 1942, regarding the determination of the British Government that the Senussi of Cyrenaica would not again be subject to Italian rule, see Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, 5th series, vol. 377, col. 78. For documentation regarding the noncommittal attitude of the United States in regard to this British pledge to the Senussi, see Foreign Relations, 1942, vol. 111, pp. 33 ff.

Further, they were all interested in the method by which the general principle of trusteeship should be applied in individual cases, and that was of particular importance here because this was the first practical application of the principle. He fully appreciated Mr. Bevin's warning that they should be careful in its application in the initial stages. Mr. Byrnes had put forward a very interesting proposal which was worthy of careful study, particularly his suggestion that collective trusteeship should be combined with individual responsibility in the person of a permanent administrator. certain what was involved in the principle of a permanent administrator with wide authority, and the difficulty would be to find such a person who would be acceptable to all the members of the Trusteeship Council.

What then were the proposals of the Soviet Delegation? They took the view that the principle of trusteeship might be applied tosome of the Italian Colonies on the basis of individual trusteeship by a single Power and that, for others, the administration might be entrusted to a number of Powers on the basis of collective responsibility. If there was doubt about the feasibility of collective responsibility, the Soviet Government would have no objection to placing each of the Italian Colonies under the individual trusteeship of a particular Power. The Soviet Government favoured individual trusteeship by one Allied nation chosen by the United Nations.

The Soviet Government itself had certain claims. Those claims were based on the fact that Italy had attacked the Soviet Union, with ten divisions and three brigades of Blackshirts, who had devastated large areas of the Soviet Union penetrating as far as Stalingrad, the Northern Caucasus and the Crimea. The Soviet people could not ignore what they had done. It was possible to be kind hearted, but one should first be kind hearted on one's own account and not on account of other countries. M. Molotov asked M. Bidault to appreciate the feelings and interests of the people of the Soviet Union. The Soviet newspapers had published the previous day particulars of the damage done to Soviet property during the war. This amounted to no less than 269 billion roubles, and a considerable part of it had been caused by Italian troops. It would, therefore, give satisfaction to the feelings of the Soviet Union if Italy were to be deprived of her privileges in territories where she had proved unequal to her responsibilities.

Another important reason for the Soviet claim was that the Soviet Government had wide experience in establishing friendly relations between different nationalities. This experience could be used to advantage in one of the Italian Colonies, and the Soviet Government would undertake to use the authority given them by the United Nations in such a way as not merely to maintain, but to enhance, the prestige of the United Nations.

The Soviet Government accordingly proposed that they should be made responsible for the trusteeship of Tripolitania. He could assure the Conference that the ten-year trusteeship period proposed by Mr. Byrnes would be sufficient to accomplish the task entrusted to the trustee Power by the United Nations, namely, to prepare the territory for an independent existence.

Mr. Byrnes, referring to what Mr. Bevin had said, said it was important that the Council should discuss this question themselves before referring it to the Deputies, since the discussion had revealed that there were questions of policy that must be determined before the Deputies could consider the details. Thus, the Council should themselves decide:—

(i) whether the Colonies were to be taken from Italy;

(ii) whether they agreed that the principle of trusteeship should be applied to these territories—on this the French had expressed some reservations, but the other Powers appeared to agree;

(iii) whether, if there were to be a trusteeship arrangement, it could be limited to a ten-year period for Libya and

Eritrea;

(iv) whether the Colonies were to be administered by particular States or by individuals selected by the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations;

(v) if the Colonies were to be administered by individual States, which States should be responsible for which Colonies.

The United States Delegation thought that it would be extremely difficult for the Council to agree which States should administer particular Colonies. M. Molotov had expressed a fear that, if the United States proposal were adopted, the Trusteeship Council would not be able to agree on the individual to whom the task should be entrusted; but he (Mr. Byrnes) thought it would be much easier to agree on an administrator to act under a collective trusteeship than on particular States to be responsible for individual trusteeship. The selected individual could not be charged with having any desire to develop the colony for military or commercial advantage, since he would have no incentive to do so. The United States Delegation believed that these colonies constituted a trust, and would be a burden to any State which administered them. They should not be regarded as spoils of war or recompense for damage inflicted. There was no question about the sufferings of the Soviet people at the hands of the Italian troops, and he was satisfied that the British Commonwealth could make out a similar case in respect of the injuries inflicted on them by the Italians in the early days of the war. That was true of France also. If, however, any one of those three Governments were to be selected as trustees, then, no matter how they tried to avoid the charge, they would be accused of using their trust to reimburse themselves for the losses which they had suffered during the war. His information was that the colonies which they were discussing had proved a burden to the Government entrusted with their administration, and there was no hope of securing reparations from them.

M. Molotov said that he had no such intention.

Mr. Byrnes said that he had no doubt of that. But he repeated that these territories were and would continue to be a burden on whatever Government undertook their administration. It would be a sacred trust on such a Government to develop self-government among the natives. Furthermore, if these Italian colonies were assigned respectively to those three States and were developed militarily, they would be sowing the seeds of future trouble instead of promoting peace.

M. Molorov said that nobody had suggested using these territories for military purposes.

Mr. Byrnes agreed. But this was one of the things they must think of, for the future. No State should be subjected to this temptation. The United States Government had no desire to participate in trusteeship for any of these colonies, but was prepared to serve as contemplated in the United States proposal, in the hope that this might contribute to a solution of this very difficult problem.

M. Molorov said that he had put forward two arguments for his present proposal—the moral rights of the Soviet Union, and the experience of the Soviet Government in nationality matters.

On the first point, he agreed that rights in this matter were not confined to the Soviet Union: the British Commonwealth had no less a right. He need not dwell at length on the sacrifices and contribution of the Soviet Union in the war against Germany and Italy because the part that she had played was well known. He did, however, want to emphasise that the Soviet Union, thanks to the part she had played in the war, had a right to play a more active part in the fate of the Italian Colonies than any rank and file member of the United Nations, and he stressed the role of the Soviet Government in deciding the destinies of Europe, of which Italy formed an important part.

As regards the experience of the Soviet Union in dealing with relationships between various nationalities, he thought that this could be usefully applied in Tripolitania and could yield fruitful results. He excluded any possibility of using Tripolitania to make good the damage which the Soviet Union had suffered or of using it for military purposes, since it was self-evident that no armaments could be tolerated in a former Italian Colony.

As regards Mr. Byrnes' statement that it was easier to choose individuals to administer the Colonies than to choose States, M. Molotov argued that an individual must be a national of some State and would therefore be, not merely an individual, but the representative of a nation. In either case therefore it was impossible to get away from the question of particular States. As it was not possible to avoid the question what States should be closest to the administration of a particular Italian Colony, was it not simpler to make a State rather than an individual responsible for the administration?

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that an international trusteeship did not exclude the possibility of using the experience of the Soviet Government in administering the Italian Colonies. The Soviet Government would provide a representative on the Advisory Committee to give guidance on the spot to the administrator. The United States Government also had some experience in controlling territories; but they would be content to apply that experience through their representative on the Advisory Committee. He did not share M. Molotov's view that it was impossible to ignore the citizenship of the administrator. The United States Government would vote for an administrator who had the necessary qualifications, were he a citizen of the Soviet Republic, of the British Empire, or of France. They would know that such a man would have no power to harm any of the other States, but would have the power to improve the lot of the inhabitants of the country which he was to administer.

Mr. Bevin said that, if these matters were to be decided by reference to the war effort of the various nations in particular parts of the world, then indeed the British Commonwealth would have strong claims in respect of the Italian Colonies. In 1940 Ethiopia and Eritrea were liberated by the force of British arms, though the task was a hard one, and much of this was done in the years when Britain stood alone in the war against Fascism. This was a memory which was deeply burned into the hearts of the British people. But the British Commonwealth asked for no territorial accessions: they asked only for the assurance of a lasting peace. And the immediate problem was to find the best method of applying the principle of trusteeship to these territories.

He thought that the difficulty with regard to the nationality of an administrator had been over-emphasized. Such a man would have to have an international rather than a national outlook, once he had been appointed to his position.

It would be wrong for the Council to attempt to decide at once, before the matter had been fully considered in all its aspects, that one

State or another would assume trusteeship in respect of these territories. A hasty decision in a matter of this importance would rightly shock the conscience of the world. This was a very difficult problem which should be given full consideration. He would like the Council to adjourn the discussion until the following day, when he hoped to be in a position to give the considered views of the British Government.

M. Bidalit associated himself with Mr. Bevin's concluding remarks. The French Government were deeply interested in the future of the Italian Colonies, not only from the security aspect, but also bearing in mind the battles in which the French forces had joined their British comrades in these territories. His observations on this matter must for the present be regarded as provisional and he too required further time to reflect on the problem. M. Molotov had suggested that he was being kind-hearted to Italy. France had suffered much at Italy's hands—in President Roosevelt's phrase, she had been stabbed in the back by Italy. He was influenced, not by kindness to Italy, but by principles of public policy. He would like, finally, to make it clear that the French Government made no reservations with regard to the principle of trusteeship. They had subscribed to that principle at San Francisco.

The Council agreed to resume their discussion of these questions on Saturday, 15th September, at 3 p.m.

REPARATIONS FROM GERMANY

It will be recalled that the Berlin Conference of the Heads of the Three Governments decided that the nature and amount of the equipment to be removed from the western zones of Germany on account of reparations should be defined at the latest within six months from the termination of the said Conference.

It can now be seen that in the course of the last six weeks no practical steps have yet been taken to execute the decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding German reparations and in particular regarding advance deliveries.

Since no further delay can be contemplated in restoring the industries of Allied countries which have suffered destruction from the German invaders, the Soviet Delegation suggest that the Council of Ministers should adopt a special resolution fixing definite dates for the preparation of proposals regarding the quantity and character of the industrial capital equipment to be moved from the western zones of Germany on account of reparations. In addition, proposals should be drawn up regarding the quantity and character of the industrial equipment to be delivered to the U.S.S.R. in accordance with paragraph 4 (a) and (b) of Section IV of the decisions of the Berlin Conference 6 and also proposals regarding the quantity and character of the industrial equipment to be supplied as advance deliveries.

The Soviet Government accordingly suggest the adoption of the following resolution:

- 1. With a view to expediting the execution of the decisions of the Berlin Three Power Conference regarding reparations from Germany, the Inter-Allied Reparations Commission should be transferred from Moscow to Berlin.
- 2. The Control Council in Berlin, acting in close contact with the Inter-Allied Reparations Commission, is asked to define not later than 1st December 1945 the quantity and character of the industrial capital equipment to be removed from the western zones of Germany on account of reparations, and also to approve a list of enterprises, the equipment from which is to be handed over to the Soviet Union in execution of paragraph 4 of the decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding reparations from Germany.
- 3. The Control Council is asked to approve not later than 15th October, a list of enterprises, the equipment from which is to be surrendered as advance deliveries in accordance with paragraph 7 of the decisions of the Berlin Conference so that the export of this equipment can be begun not later than 1st November.
- 4. The Control Council is invited to despatch immediately to the western zones of Germany mixed commissions of specialists to prepare the material required by the Control Council for executing the measures referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 above.

CONTROL AND ADMINISTRATION OF GERMANY

On 31st July last the Provisional Government of the French Republic received an invitation to participate in the Council of Foreign Ministers of the Five Great Powers.⁹ On the same day they received the text of an Agreement concluded between the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union concerning "The political principles to govern the treatment of Germany in the initial control period".¹⁰

In replying to these two communications the Provisional Government made various reservations regarding the solutions which were mentioned as applicable to Germany. These reservations refer to the contemplated restoration of a central Government in Germany, the reconstitution of political parties throughout Germany and the setting up of central administrative departments headed by State Secretaries whose authority would extend over the whole of German territory.

In replying to the communication transmitting the above Agreement the Provisional Government pointed out that such measures seemed to presume a future evolution of Germany along lines as to which it was at present impossible to say whether they accorded with the interests of European peace and the actual desires of the populations concerned.

So far as they are concerned the Provisional Government fully endorse the principle stated in the opening lines of paragraph 9 of the Agreement concerning the way in which the control of Germany is to be exercised, namely that "The administration in Germany should be directed towards the decentralisation of the political structure and the development of local responsibility". They feel that to prejudge the possibilities of political disintegration in Germany is at the moment premature and will for some time remain problematical; that certain schemes for decentralisation are calculated to produce not merely administrative but also political consequences; that to divide Germany into a number of States would promote the maintenance of security in Europe if it were the result of natural evolution and not an imposed solution. They regret, therefore, that the same paragraph 9 contemplates already the possible re-establishment of a central German Government, the creation of central German administrative departments and the reconstitution of political parties throughout Germany—all of these measures which are likely to revive the trend towards a united Germany and to favour the return to a centralised German State. More especially would they regret to see the Allied authorities replacing their own control, which prejudges nothing, by that of central German administrations set up in Berlin which would look like the first sign of a rebirth of the Reich.

The Provisional Government, further, notes that under the terms of the Potsdam Report the territories situated to the east of a certain line will be handed over to the administration of the Polish State "and for such purposes should not be considered as part of the Soviet zone of occupation in Germany". Thus, these territories are henceforth not subject to the authority of the Soviet Commander-in-Chief in Germany and the Allied Control Commission, Berlin. Still less would they be subject to the authority of future central German administrations or an eventual central German Government.

The Provisional Government do not a priori object to such arrangements, but they must point out that this is the only step so far taken which indicates the intention of the Allied powers to alter the frontiers of Germany as they existed in February, 1938. If at the very moment such a decision is published notice is given of the imminent establishment of central German administrations with powers extending over the whole German territory left after such amputation, these two rulings will very likely be interpreted as confirming the maintenance of German sovereignty over all the areas to which those powers would actually extend.

The Provisional Government, however, have at various times publicly stressed the paramount importance they attach to preventing the Rhineland and Westphalia ever again becoming an arsenal, corridor or base for an attack by Germany on her western neighbours. They feel that the final separation of this region, including the Ruhr, from Germany, is both indispensable in order to cover the French Frontier and an essential condition for the security of Europe and the world. They consider it necessary, therefore, that if central German administrations are to be set up, it should at the same time be specified that their authority should not extend to the Rhineland and Westphalia.

In view of the importance to Europe and the world of the German problem the French Delegation would have expected to see this problem at the head of the agenda of the first meeting of the Council of Five Foreign Ministers. In view of the large number of questions on the agenda they do not propose to insist on this problem in general, or that of the future of the Rhineland and Westphalia in particular, being discussed at the first session. They are, however, obliged to state that the French representative on the Allied Control Commission in Berlin will not be empowered to agree to any action prejudging that area's future until the question here raised has been discussed by the five Ministers and decided by the Council.

SUGGESTED DIRECTIVE TO DEPUTIES FROM THE COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS TO GOVERN THEM IN THE DRAFTING OF A TREATY OF PEACE WITH TTALY

I. TERRITORIAL PROVISIONS FOR ITALY IN EUROPE

- 1. The frontier with France would be unchanged, subject to hearing any case the French may present for minor rectification.
 - 2. The frontier with Switzerland will remain unchanged.
- 3. The frontier with Austria would be unchanged, subject to hearing any case Austria may present for minor rectification in her favour.
- 4. The frontier with Yugoslavia should be substantially adjusted in favour of Yugoslavia to follow roughly the ethnic factor subject to necessary modification to preserve the essential economy of the local region. There is suggested the old Wilson line in part, 12 with certain modifications in favour of Yugoslavia in the north and in favour of Italy in the south. The modification in the north is primarily for ethnic reasons; the modification in the south is for both ethnic and economic reasons and would preserve for Italy coal and bauxite deposits which are important to her economic life.

The foregoing will give Trieste to Italy. It is suggested, however, that a substantial part of the port of Trieste be made a free port, administered by a commission containing representatives of the nations which use the port.

[&]quot;The text of this memorandum was transmitted to the Department in telegram 9459, Delsec 15, September 14, from London, Telegram 9529, Delsec 18, September 16, from London, from the Secretary of State to the Acting Secretary read as follows: "Please prevent circulation in the Department or anywhere else of paper quoted in Embassy's 9459, September 14. My experience is that circulation means publication. The rules of the Council prohibit this and leakage must be avoided." (740.00119 Council/9-1645)

12 For a description of the Italo-Yugoslav frontier proposed by President Woodrow Wilson in 1919, see Foreign Relations, The Paris Peace Conference,

- 5. The Dodecanese Islands will be ceded to Greece and demilitarized.
- 6. Italy will renounce all claims in relation to prewar Albania.
- 7. Pantelleria and Isole Pelagie will be demilitarized.
- 8. Zara and the Dalmatian Islands will go to Yugoslavia.
- 9. Saseno will go to Albania.

II. HUMAN RIGHTS

By the treaty Italy should voluntarily undertake to maintain a bill of rights which will correspond to the freedom of speech, religious worship, political belief and public meeting which were to be sought for Italy by the United Nations pursuant to the Moscow Declaration of November 1943 and also confirming the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the United Nations Organisation.

III. ITALIAN COLONIES

Libya will be granted independence at the end of ten years. In the interval it will be under a UNO trusteeship agreement. This will provide for an administrator with full executive power appointed by and responsible to the Trusteeship Council of UNO. To him will be attached an Advisory Committee of seven composed of representatives of the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, France, Italy and the United States and a European and an Arab resident of Libya selected by the five governments named.

Eritrea will be accorded the same treatment as in the case of Libya, the Advisory Committee in this case, however, to include two residents of Eritrea appointed by the five governments. There will, however, be a territorial cession in favour of Ethiopia which will give Ethiopia access to the sea through the port of Assab.

In the case of Italian Somaliland, there will be a similar trusteeship arrangement, without, however, any fixed date for independence. There will be an administrator appointed by and responsible to the Trusteeship Council of UNO and an Advisory Committee including two residents of Somaliland in addition to the representatives of the five governments named.

In the case of all three colonial areas, the Security Council of UNO may, if it deems necessary, select strategic points for administration by it as strategic areas in the interest of world security.

IV. ARMAMENTS

1. The maintenance of armaments for land, sea and air will be closely restricted to the necessities of (a) maintenance of order in Italy; (b) such military contingents, if any, in addition to the foregoing as may be required by the Security Council.

- 2. The factory and tool equipment designed for manufacture of war implements which is not required by the permitted military establishments and is not readily susceptible of conversion to civilian purposes will be surrendered to the Four Powers for such disposition for reparations account or otherwise as they may determine.
- 3. A liberal attitude should be taken towards the production of aircraft and airplane engines for civilian use.

V. WAR CRIMES

Appropriate provision will be made, preferably by a separate protocol, to deal with the war criminals, return of prisoners of war, etc.

VI. REPARATIONS

The Italian Government will authorise each of the United Nations to take over and apply to their respective reparation claims such of the assets of the Italian Government (excluding diplomatic and consular premises) and of Italian nationals as are within the jurisdiction of the respective United Nations and the Italian Government will undertake to indemnify, in accordance with Italian law, the Italian nationals whose property will thus have been requisitioned. Subject to the provision above with respect to war-making machinery, each of the United Nations will limit its reparation claim against Italy to the amount which will thus be made available to it and each of the United Nations will be free to allocate that amount to the indemnification of the state or its nationals as it may determine as a matter of domestic policy.

In view of the fact that no general reparations claim will be made upon Italy, there may be given a right to recover identifiable property taken from a national of the United Nations; this right to be exercised through a commission composed of representatives of the Four Powers. There should also be a provision entitling a national of any of the United Nations owning property in Italy that has been damaged as a result of the war to secure the same indemnification as is accorded Italian subjects.

VII. ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL MATTERS

There are a number of matters affecting future economic and financial relations which might be dealt with in the treaty of peace, but in view of the complexities raised by the large number of states involved, these might preferably be dealt with by separate commercial and financial treaties.

Budapest Legation Files: 711.9 Peace Treaty

Memorandum by Mr. Cavendish W. Cannon, Political Adviser to the United States Delegation at the Council of Foreign Ministers, to the Secretary of State ¹³

[London,] September 14, 1945.

Subject: Soviet draft proposals for treaties with Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary (and Finland).

Attached hereto are the texts of the Soviet proposals, to which are attached in turn the respective armistice agreements to which they refer.

General Comment. The Soviet proposals briefly amount to a project to compose treaties by lifting certain specified articles out of the armistice terms "subject to necessary drafting changes", to be used "as a basis" for the peace treaties, with the addition of one article which would incorporate paragraphs 1 and 9 of the Berlin decisions on reparations from Germany (German assets located in the respective countries), and the further addition of an article regarding membership in the UNO and cooperation for the maintenance of peace.

It is hard to find in this project anything which meets our ideas of what a peace treaty should be. The necessary "drafting changes" would be so considerable that the most that can be said for it is that it gives an idea of the topics to which the Soviet Government attaches special importance, i.e., the project may be considered as an outline of the Soviet desiderata. In effect it reserves to the Soviet Government, and gives a permanent character to, all the advantages of the ¹⁸ A memorandum of October 11, 1945, from Leslie Squires, Secretary of the American Mission in Hungary, for H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, the Representative in Hungary, throws some light on the origin of this memorandum to the Secretary. Mr. Squires, who arrived in London on September 13 to work with the United States delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers, wrote in part as follows:

[&]quot;My opinion on preliminary analysis of the proposals referred to above [C.F.M. (45) 4, September 12, p. 147] was that they represented a bilateral peace treaty between Russia and Hungary in which other Allied nations would have little or no part. The effect of the proposals would be to continue the conditions of the armistice period without even the nominal American participation provided under the ACC.

[&]quot;It appeared to me that the proposal, and the similar proposals submitted in the case of Rumania and Bulgaria, would eliminate American participation in the reconstruction of the Balkans and would guarantee to the USSR an even more important role than her physical position and power would insure.

[&]quot;This opinion was confirmed by further consideration and was found to be identical with that of Mr. Berry, as regarded Rumania, and Mr. Barnes, as regarded Bulgaria.

[&]quot;In a discussion with Mr. Barnes, Mr. Berry and Mr. Cannon it was agreed that urgent steps would have to be taken to impress the Secretary and his advisers with the reality of the Soviet 'trap' and the necessity of preventing acceptance of the Soviet proposals." (Budapest Legation Files: 711.9 Peace Treaty) surrender instruments, thus substituting, particularly in the case of Hungary, bilateral arrangements (economic topics) for the present method where at least some small measure of joint Allied participation exists.

It may be that in presenting a document which in appearance would simplify the preparation of the treaties the Soviet Government hopes to obtain earlier and more expeditious handling of the Balkan treaties, with priority over the more elaborate procedure contemplated for Italy. From this point of view the presentation of these proposals is a manoeuvre rather than a serious set of principles for permanent good relations with these states.

It should be noted, of course, that the armistice agreements did in fact cover various points somewhat in excess of the military necessities of surrender.

Presumably the Soviet troops would be withdrawn and military control terminated, as inherent in the acceptance of a treaty. There is no definite provision for this, and the continuance of Soviet organs of control, for the fulfilment of reparations obligations or supervision of disarmament, for example, may amount to an undercover control not much less effective than the open presence of troops.

The acceptance of anything along these lines would have the effect of confirming the present situation under which these countries are under effective Soviet domination and would mean the abandonment of the opportunity for establishing democratic governments in these countries. Moreover, from the viewpoint of direct American economic interests, the proposals would make no effective provision for the settlement of substantial claims and debts owed to us by these countries, including those arising from Soviet removals of American property. There is still another economic consideration, namely, whether treaties of this type would constitute an abandonment of the agreement reached in principle at Potsdam for equality of economic opportunity in these countries.

A good idea of the Soviet proposal can be got from assembling the articles, taking Rumania as an example. The Soviet draft would then look something like this:

Article 1. Redraft of Article 1 of the armistice, presumably as a sort of preamble.

Article 2. Article 4 of the armistice, acknowledging the transfer of Bessarabia and Northern Bukovina to the U.S.S.R. We would probably not be in a position to have this question re-examined.

Article 3. This would retain Article 5 of the armistice (prisoners of war, displaced persons) which seems hardly necessary in a peace treaty and which incidentally perpetuates the authority of the Soviet High Command.

Article 4. This would be Article 6 of the armistice (release of persons friendly to the Allies and removal of discriminatory legislation). Hardly necessary in a treaty if these obligations were effectively discharged during the armistice regime.

Article 5. This would be Article 9 of the armistice (Rumanian ships). The present language is really applicable chiefly to the period of hostilities against Germany and Hungary.

Article 6. This is the reparations article (Number 11 of the armistice). The Soviet Union is the sole beneficiary of the amounts now fixed, other Allied states to receive compensation for losses, the amounts "to be fixed at a later date".

Article 7. This is the restitution article (Number 12 of the armistice). The Soviet Union being the sole beneficiary.

Article 8. This is a more general restitution article, (Article 13 of the armistice, for "legal rights and interests of the United Nations"). This could be combined with Article 7.

Article 9. (Article 14 of the armistice). Collaboration for prosecution of war crimes.

Article 10. (Article 15 of the armistice). Dissolution of Fascist organizations. This Article contains a phrase making particular mention of the Soviet Union which we tried unsuccessfully to have modified at the time of the armistice negotiation.

Article 11, would be a new provision, incorporating paragraphs 1 and 9 of the Berlin decision concerning the use of German assets in Rumania for reparations. In the final draft it would probably follow the other reparation article.

Article 12, a new Article (probably to be inserted after the territorial provisions of Article 2) would provide for the transfer to Rumania of the whole of Transylvania. The armistice (Article 19) used the language "Transylvania or the greater part thereof . . ." subject to confirmation at the peace settlement. We should prefer to leave certain border districts within Hungary, for which excellent arguments can be adduced.

Article 13, a new text, would provide for supporting Rumania's candidacy for membership in the UNO, with a Rumanian obligation to cooperate in measures for the maintenance of peace.

As for the Articles of the armistice which are not carried over into the treaty draft, Articles 2, 3, 7, 10 and 17 are obviously identified with the surrender and subsequent military operations against Germany. Article 8 is replaced by the new Article 11. Article 16 was a censorship provision which of course could not be made permanent. Article 18 was the provision for the Allied Control Commission which thus goes out of existence with no provision for subsequent supervision of Rumania except as reserved to the Soviet Union under the agreements for reparations, etc.

The Rumanian treaty would also include an article taken from the protocol which accompanied the armistice. The text found on file in London is the first draft of the protocol, and may not be exact. This is in process of verification.

The treaty would make no mention of armament limitation, except as Article 1 mentions the "not less than 12 infantry divisions with corps troops" to be used against Germany, which provision is now patently obsolete, though for some reason it is retained.

On this matter it is important to note that the Bulgarian treaty likewise does not provide for armament limitation, whereas the treaty with Hungary is obscure on this point, since it takes over an armistice provision for demobilization and "peace footing", though the Soviet authorities are showing special interest in the development of the "new" Hungarian army.

M. Molorov said that the Polish Provisional Government had addressed a note to the Soviet Delegation about the Arciszewski Government, and he understood that a note in similar terms had been addressed to all the other Governments represented on the Council of Foreign Ministers.¹⁹ The Polish Provisional Government had asked that the representations made in this note should be considered by the Council of Foreign Ministers during this Conference of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and the Soviet Delegation wished to support that request.

The representatives of other Delegations said that they had not clearly in mind the points raised in this note from the Polish Provisional Government; and M. Molotov undertook to circulate copies of this note to his colleagues.

The Council agreed to consider at their next meeting whether these representations by the Polish Provisional Government should be considered by the Council during the present Conference.

2. ITALY: PROCEDURE FOR PREPARING PEACE TREATY (Previous Reference C.F.M.(P) (45) 3rd Meeting, Minute 4)

At their meeting on 14th September the Council had agreed that the Governments of all the United Nations who were at war with Italy should be invited to express their views in writing on the peace settlement for Italy.

M. BIDAULT proposed that he should send a letter to the representatives of these Governments in the following terms:—

"The Council of Foreign Ministers, now in Session at Lancaster House, has decided to invite the Governments of the United Nations who have been at war with Italy and who are not represented on the Council, to present to it, in writing, their views on the aspects of the peace settlement with Italy which are of a nature to be of interest to them.

I have therefore been instructed, in my capacity as Chairman of this meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers to invite your Government to express their views on this question, if they desire to do so. The Council requests that these communications should reach it before the 1st October."

He suggested that a letter in these terms should be sent to the Governments of the following countries:—

Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Iraq, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippines, South Africa, Yugoslavia.

M. Molorov suggested that this invitation should also be sent to the Governments of Poland, Byelo-russia and Ukraine.

After discussion, the Council:-

- (1) Agreed that an invitation in these terms should be sent to the countries listed above and also to Poland, Byelo-russia and the Ukraine;
- (2) Invited M. Bidault to verify that the above list included all members of the United Nations who were at war with Italy, and authorised him to send an invitation in these terms to the Government of any of the United Nations at war with Italy which was not included in the above list;
- (3) Agreed that M. Bidault should send these invitations, wherever possible, through the representative in London of the Government concerned.²⁰

²⁰ Replies to M. Bidault's invitation were received from Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Greece, Guatemala, India, Iraq, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Poland, South Africa, and Yugoslavia. These replies were circulated to the Council. A message from the President of the Philippines sent through the Department of State expressed appreciation for the invitation but stated that the Philippine Government had no suggestions to offer. None of these messages are printed.

3. Reparations From Germany (Previous Reference C.F.M.(P) (45) 4th Meeting, Minute 2)

The Council agreed that the memorandum on this subject (C.F.M. (45) 15) 21 which had been submitted by the Soviet Delegation should be added at the end of the items included in the Agenda for the present Conference of Foreign Ministers.

4. ITALY: DISPOSAL OF ITALIAN COLONIES (Previous Reference C.F.M. (P) (45) 4th Meeting, Minute 4)

The Council resumed their discussion of the proposals in Section III of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16) 22 on the disposal of the Italian Colonies.23

Mr. Bevin said that the British Government had given further consideration to this question in the light of the views expressed at the last meeting of the Council. They could not agree to the proposal that the Soviet Government should assume trusteeship of Tripolitania. As he understood it, the Soviet Delegation had based their claim on the number of Italian divisions which had fought in Russia and the damage which they had inflicted there. But long before that time the British Commonwealth had been at war with Italy. South Africa had a vital interest in the future of the Italian Colonies. In the last war the South African people had joined in driving the Germans out ²¹ Ante, p. 175. ²² Ante, p. 179.

²³ The American minutes of the fifth meeting record the following discussion regarding the question of whether the matter of the Dodecanese Islands should be linked with the question of the Italian colonies:

[&]quot;BIDAULT said it was necessary to record that the question of the Dodecanese was linked up with the discussion of the Italian colonies. They could now continue the discussion of one or both of these questions.

[&]quot;Byrnes said the question of the Dodecanese was passed at the request of the Soviet Delegation without specific agreement that it be considered as a part of the question of Italian colonies. However, as the question of the Dodecanese was number 5 on their list, it might properly be considered first.

[&]quot;Molotov said at first that he had no objection, but then revealed that he had misunderstood the proposal.

[&]quot;Byrnes did not think the question to be of vital importance. The Dodecanese had been temporarily passed over at the request of the Soviet Delegation, but it had not been decided that it was to be examined as part of the question of Italian colonies. If the Soviet Delegation wished this question to be deferred until after they had completed the Italian colonies, he would agree. All he said was that he did not consider it a colony, and it should not be discussed as such. "Molotov did not want the question postponed but said that since they had started discussing the Italian colonies, he did not see why they should interrupt that discussion and turn to the Dodecanese. He agreed with Mr. Byrnes that the Dodecanese was not a colony, and he had heard no one try to prove that it was. He suggested that the question of the Dodecanese and the question of the colonies be considered together, not as one question but as two. The reason for this was that it was a matter of taking away territories which belonged to Italy. He suggested that they continue their discussion of the Italian colonies and then turn to the Dodecanese. The United States, Soviet, and Chinese Delegations had expressed their views on the Italian colonies, but the British and French Delegations had not yet expressed their final views." (740.00119-Council/9-1145) of Africa. In this war again they had had to join in driving Italy from Africa. They could not look with favour on any arrangement which might place them in a similar position in the future. ish Government had supported the Soviet Government in its claims for adjustments of her western frontier, and in other settlements which had since been made. In view of the vital interest of the British Government in the North African area, he was very much surprised that the Soviet Delegation had put forward this claim in respect of Tripo-The British claims in that area had been put forward on the same basis as had Russian claims in Eastern Europe, namely security—a perfectly legitimate basis. All that the British Delegation proposed was that Italy should renounce all her possessions in Africa and that she should accept the arrangements made for the disposal of these territories, including questions of nationality, and that finally she should recognise in the Treaty the right of the four Powers to be responsible for the administration of those territories pending their final disposal.

In view, however, of the discussion which had taken place on the Council and the need to determine the final destiny of these Colonies at the same time as they were ceded by Italy, the British Delegation were prepared to accept the proposals outlined in the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16), subject to certain modifications.

One of these modifications related to Italian Somaliland and Eritrea. The British Delegation did not wish to be tied to the exact proposal put forward in the United States paper. While they agreed that Abyssinia needed an outlet to the sea, they would like the whole future of this area to be examined by the Deputies with particular regard to the economic problems of Abyssinia, Eritrea and Somaliland. If the matter were approached with an open mind and the possibility of territorial adjustments accepted, then other arrangements might be devised which would be more likely to promote the economic development of these territories and the betterment of their peoples. Broadly, therefore, he accepted the principles set out by Mr. Byrnes for the trusteeship of Somaliland but suggested an alternative geographical formula.

Should it be agreed to refer the matter to the Deputies to work out on such a basis, he would ask that the Governments of the British Dominions and India, who were vitally affected, should be entitled to express their views.

Finally, he would ask that the Deputies should consider the details of the plan, e.g. the character of the trusteeship administration, the functions of the administrator, the question of co-religionists in adjacent territories, the functions of the Advisory Committee. Such a trusteeship would be a heavy liability and he assumed that the cost would be borne collectively by the States collectively responsible for the trusteeship. The Deputies should also work out the relationship between the administrator and the Advisory Committee and their report should contain the detail of a practical working plan for carrying out the project outlined in the memorandum by the United States Delegation.

The British Delegation joined in supporting the proposal put forward by the United States Delegation with a view to avoiding friction between the Great Powers in these areas. It would afford an opportunity for a great experiment in international co-operation.

Mr. Byrnes said that he would like to express his sincere appreciation of the support given to his proposals by Mr. Bevin. He readily agreed that the Deputies should examine the area in order to see whether any alternative geographical arrangement would be likely to produce more satisfactory results from the economic point of view. He agreed that some arrangement would have to be made for sharing the cost of administration; and the United States Government would gladly bear their share. He also agreed that the Deputies should work out a detailed practical plan as suggested by Mr. Bevin. The administrator should, he thought, be appointed under the same conditions as would be the Secretary General of the United Nations organisation. In that case the Charter provided that neither the Secretary General nor his staff should take orders from any one of the United Nations.

Such a system of trusteeship would, of course, be an experiment; but it would be an effort to continue that unity of purpose which had enabled the United Nations to win the war.

M. Bidault said that M. Molotov had pointed out that the views expressed by the French Government on this question were only provisional. That was true; but there was a French proverb "Only the provisional lasts". Mr. Bevin had alluded to the vital interest of the British Commonwealth in the future of the Italian Colonies. France also had a vital interest—in the full meaning of the word—in Africa, especially in North Africa. The Constitutional Assembly of France, which would shortly meet, would contain a number of Moslems, either Arabs or coloured people; and France could not be charged with pursuing in this respect "colonial" aims. Essential French interests were at stake, which must be defended and would be defended.

France was the first of the United Nations to be attacked by Italy; and the whole French people remembered Italian air attacks on innocent victims on their highways and the fate of their prisoners in the gaols of the O.V.R.A.²⁴ There was, however, a difference between Italy, which had turned in the end and helped in the fight against Fascism, and Germany, which had persisted to the end in her support of the Fascist system. It would not be in the best interests of Europe that Italy should be entirely stripped of all the positions [possessions?] which she had held before the beginning of the Fascist regime. Such an action would give Italy, which was already disposed to develop an inferiority complex, new grounds for complaint. He would now try to point out how that could be avoided.

All the Delegations had now expressed their views. All their proposals centered round trusteeship. The principle of trusteeship had been accepted at San Francisco but the details had not yet been worked There were differences even between the proposals put forward by the British and the United States Delegations. The Soviet Delegation preferred individual trusteeship by a single State. French Delegation thought it better, after some necessary adjustments had been made, to give the trusteeship of these territories to the new democratic Italy. In view of these difficulties the British and United States Delegations favoured the application of collective trusteeship to these territories. Whatever system was finally adopted, it must follow the principles of trusteeship laid down at San Francisco. This implied that no limit should be set to the period of trusteeship; and particularly for these territories he saw no special urgency for terminating the trusteeship. International trusteeship was at present only a theoretical conception: it had not been worked out in detail. The French Government could not accept the application of international trusteeship to these territories until they were fully informed of its implications, especially as these territories were adjacent to a part of the French Empire which was one of vital concern to France. It was admitted that the details of the United States plan would have to be worked out by the Deputies. He would prefer that the whole problem should be referred to the Deputies; and, if this was agreed he could assure the Council that the French Delegation would co-operate whole-heartedly in assisting the Deputies to find a solution. He was not, however, prepared to commit himself in advance to any particular plan.

M. Molotov hoped that the Council would give to this problem the same close attention as it had received from the Soviet Government. He wished to comment both on the specific question most closely affecting the Soviet Union—the administration of Tripolitania—and also on the general principles of the trusteeship. The Soviet Government considered the future of Tripolitania as of primary importance to the Soviet people, and they must press their request to assume the trusteeship of that territory. The Soviet Government claimed a right to active participation in the disposal of the Italian Colonies, because Italy had attacked, and had inflicted enormous damage upon, the Soviet Union. No member of the Council considered that the Italian Colonies should be left to her on the pre-war basis. The territory of the Soviet Union was vast, stretching from the extreme east far into the west. It had a sea outlet in the north: it must also have the use of ports in the south, especially since it now had the right to use Dairen and Port Arthur in the Far East. The Soviet Government had no intention of restricting in any way the facilities available to the British Commonwealth for maintaining communications with all parts of the world. But Britain should not hold a monopoly of communications in the Mediterranean. Russia was anxious to have bases in the Mediterranean for her merchant fleet. World trade would develop and the Soviet Union wished to take her share in it. Further, as he had stated the previous day, the Soviet Government possessed wide experience in establishing friendly relations between various nationalities and was anxious to use that experience in Tripolitania. They would not propose to introduce the Soviet system into Tripolitania. They would take steps to promote a system of democratic government—though not, he added, on the lines which had recently been followed in Greece.

The purpose of trusteeship was, he believed, to ensure the development of a smaller territory by a large State. Such a large State could play a most useful role; but if it lacked a proper sense of responsibility there was a danger that the economic development of the territory would be hindered.

The Soviet Delegation adhered to the decisions taken at San Francisco, both on collective trusteeship and individual trusteeship under the control of the Trusteeship Council. It was necessary, however, to use caution in the first experiments in applying trusteeship. Mr. Byrnes had counselled caution at the previous meetings, but today appeared to be convinced of the practicability of international trusteeship and had urged rapid action. The Soviet Delegation, on the other hand, was very mindful of the need for care in these early stages. If the results of the early experiments were unfavourable, it would affect all future arrangements made under the trusteeship system. The United States proposals contained the elements both of individual trusteeship and of collective responsibility. They provided for a single administrator and an Advisory Committee. There was, however, a Russian saying that "if a child has seven nurses it won't be looked after at all".

The United States Delegation seemed to like the principle of collective trusteeship, but would this principle be applied elsewhere? Was there any example of its having been applied before in some Colony or Mandated territory? If there were a good example, the Russians would try to follow it, but in the absence of such an example they had to be careful.

In conclusion M. Molotov said that he was prepared to agree to the question being referred to the Deputies but he made the same reservation as M. Bidault, namely, that the Deputies should not be bound by any particular scheme.

Dr. Wang said that one of the most essential features of the United States' plan was the fixing of a time limit for the completion of preparations for the independence of the territories to be placed under trusteeship. The Chinese Delegation was very anxious that this principle should be preserved in any plan that resulted from discussion by the Deputies. Otherwise one of the chief merits of the American proposal would be largely spoiled.

M. Molotov agreed.

Mr. Byrnes said that he was quite agreeable to his proposals being submitted to the Deputies for consideration, together with the amendments suggested by the British, and he thought that the Deputies should report back to the next Session of the Council. They could be instructed to receive suggestions from any qualified source as regards details and if, after consideration, they could not reach agreement a minority report could also be made for consideration by the Council. He suggested that the terms of reference for the Deputies should be as follows—"The matter of Trusteeship for the Italian Colonies shall be referred to the Deputies to work out the details along the general lines of the United States' draft. The Deputies may however recommend such concrete territorial, economic or political changes as they may agree upon. In the absence of such agreement as to changes, they shall base their report upon the American proposals, making such individual reports to the Council as they may respectively deem helpful."

As a result of suggestions made by M. Bidault and M. Molotov these terms of reference were modified as shown in the conclusions below.

After further discussion the Council:—

(1) Agreed that the disposal of the Italian Colonies should be referred to the Deputies with the following terms of reference:—

"The matter of trusteeship for the Italian Colonies shall be referred to the Deputies to work out the details, making the widest use possible of the proposals of the United States Delegation and taking into account the views expressed by the other Delegations. The Deputies may however recommend such concrete territorial, economic, or political changes as they may agree upon. In the absence of such agreement as to changes, they shall base their report upon the American proposals, making such individual reports to the Council as they may respectively deem helpful."

(2) Invited the Deputies to present their report on this question to the Governments members of the Council not less than 14 days before the opening of the next Plenary Conference of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

(3) Agreed that the Deputies should have discretion to hear the views on this question of any of the Governments which had been invited to express their views to the Council in writing on the terms of the peace settlement with Italy (see Minute 2 above) though no fresh invitations need be issued asking for an expression of views on this particular aspect of the settlement.

5. Date of Next Meeting

The Council agreed that their next meeting should be held on Monday, 17th September at 11 a.m., when they would resume their discussion of the memorandum by the United States Delegation on the Italian Treaty (C.F.M.(45) 16).

740.00119 Council/9-1645

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

[London,] September 16, 1945.

Participants: The Secretary

Mr. Bohlen Mr. Molotov

Ambassador Gusev

Mr. Pavlov

THE SECRETARY opened the conversation by saying that he had asked to see Mr. Molotov in order to talk with him privately before the question of the Balkan treaties came before the Council of Foreign Ministers. He said it was essential for the future of the world that our nations continue to cooperate, and that if we had any differences of view, we should talk them over together and endeavor to adjust our disagreements in such a way as to preserve our unity of purpose. He said he wished to emphasize that the United States is not interested in any way in seeing anything but governments friendly to the Soviet Union in adjacent countries.

Mr. Molorov replied that he must tell the Secretary that they did have doubts, and it would not be honest to hide it.

THE SECRETARY replied that it was essential that these doubts be removed, and that he was prepared to do it.

Mr. Molorov replied that the doubts of the Soviet Government arose from the attitude of the United States and Great Britain in the case of Rumania. For example, when the Radescu Government,²⁵ which was hostile to the Soviet Union, was in power in Rumania, it received British and American support, but when the Groza Government, which was friendly to the Soviet Union, was established both the United States and Great Britain withdrew their support.²⁶

THE SECRETARY remarked that after the Yalta Conference and the adoption of the agreement on liberated Europe 27 he had returned to the United States in the role of a missionary of peace and had explained these agreements to members of Congress and the Senate. He said they had been warmly received in the United States as an indication of our ability to find a common policy. Subsequently, however, when nothing was done about Poland the American people got the idea that these agreements had been violated by the Soviet Government. He added that our Government knew that it was the result of an honest misunderstanding; but, nevertheless, the people were unable to understand why no progress was being made. Following Mr. Hopkins' visit to Moscow, 28 however, and the reorganization of the Polish Government which permitted us all to recognize it,29 there had been a great improvement in public opinion in the United States in regard to the Soviet Union. The Polish agreement was warmly welcomed, and everyone was satisfied with the compromise reached. He went on to say that he realized our habits were different, and it was up to all of us to be tolerant of the habits of others. He asked Mr. Molotov to look at the question from this point of view and from what he knew of the feeling of the people of the United States. He said he thought that if he looked at the matter in this light he would understand why our people had doubts about the Groza Government. For example, we knew that shortly after the Yalta Conference our good friend Mr. Vyshinsky had given the King of Rumania two hours to install Groza as Prime Minister.30 Since that time the Groza Government had done a number of things, such as excluding the press, and their treatment of American representatives, which had confirmed these doubts as to the character of the present Rumanian Government.

Mr. Molotov said he understood that correspondents were now permitted in Rumania, and he had seen a State Department announcement to that effect.

THE SECRETARY said that formal permission had been received, but that it had been many, many months in coming; that fourteen correspondents had applied for visas, and that many of them had become discouraged and had gone elsewhere. He added that there were now two American correspondents in Bulgaria who had at last received permission to go to Rumania, but only three days ago he had been informed that the Bulgarian Government would not let them leave Bulgaria for Rumania. He said it was very difficult for him to explain these events to the American people.

Mr. Molorov said that the question was one of friendly governments, and that he was sure, for example, that if Mexico had been at war with the United States and had invaded it, and for two years occupied a part of the United States, that the American Government would not tolerate in Mexico a government hostile to it.

THE SECRETARY said he agreed, and referred to his statement of our desire to see friendly governments in these areas adjacent to the Soviet Union. He said what he wished [to] plead for was some arrangement which would permit the Rumanian Government to be both friendly to the Soviet Union and at the same time representative of all democratic elements in the country. He said that he felt that these two considerations were not irreconcilable, and inquired whether it would not be possible to proceed as we had in the case of Poland.

Mr. Molotov replied that he did not think the Polish precedent could be applied in Rumania, as it was too dangerous. He felt it might lead to civil war there, and that in any case the situations were different, since Poland had been an ally, and there had been two governments in existence. He said, for example, if Radescu had stayed on in Rumania, he felt there was a real danger of civil war. He added that the Soviet Government had taken note of the fact that the British had given refuge to Radescu. He repeated that no self-respecting government could tolerate the existence of a hostile government in a country which it had defeated. He said that in the case of the Bulgarian elections the Soviet Government had met the wishes of the United States and Great Britain. He said in Rumania he felt it would be better to wait until the elections were held, and a new government installed. He said categorically that in the view of the Soviet Government no reorganization of the present Rumanian Government was possible until after these elections.

THE SECRETARY repeated that the United States did not desire to see hostile governments in these countries and said again that he found it impossible to believe that a temporary Rumanian government could not be formed which would be both friendly to the Soviet Union and also representative of the people. He said that such a temporary representative government could then hold the elections, and the world would accept the results as those of a fair election. He said he felt that the Soviet reputation would be greatly enhanced throughout the world if this were done. He added that the United States was not interested in any particular party or individual, and repeated his suggestion that some solution along the lines of that adopted in Poland would be the best.

Molorov inquired whether all parties were represented in the British and American Governments.

THE SECRETARY replied "No", but in Rumania they were speaking of a temporary government, and not one based on elections. He said that he was afraid because of the manner in which the Groza Government had been established, and its subsequent actions that any election held under its auspices would be suspect in the eyes of the American people.

Mr. Molorov inquired whether we were not asking for a change in the present government of Greece before the election, since it was well known that this government had not lived up to its agreement and did not enjoy support from the Greek people, whereas in Rumania the majority of the people were satisfied with the Groza government, and only a small minority did not like it. He inquired what was the reason for this difference in attitude.

THE SECRETARY replied that it was a question of the facts. He said in Greece correspondents had been allowed to go in and move about freely and report without censorship what they saw; that as a result the American public were fully informed about Greece and felt on a basis of these reports that the situation was not that expressed by Mr. Molotov. In Rumania, however, correspondents had not been allowed any such facilities and the actions of the Groza government in this respect had led the American people to believe that the government was not representative of the people.

Mr. Molotov said that apparently in Greece the correspondents were happy, but the people were not; whereas in Rumania the people were happy, but the correspondents were not. He said the Soviet Government attached more importance to the feeling of the people. He proposed that they should endeavor to work out with the Rumanian Government conditions which would permit the American correspondents to do their work properly; then in Rumania everyone would be happy, the people and the correspondents.

THE SECRETARY said that he had just recently received information from one of our leading news agencies, from the Herald-Tribune newspapers, which had correspondents in Rumania, to the effect that they had received word from these correspondents that the censorship was so heavy in Rumania that their outgoing dispatches should not be regarded as descriptive of conditions in Rumania; that when they left Rumania they would be able to write the true story.

Mr. Molorov replied that he thought that we could come to a general agreement with the Rumanian Government on the improvement of these facilities.

THE SECRETARY replied that it did not require any general agreement, but merely decision on the part of the Soviet Government.

Mr. Molotov said they were ready to have it.

The Secretary said he had come to see Mr. Molotov to talk over these matters privately, since we felt it was better to try to thrash them out in that manner than to make statements and hold discussion at the big meeting in the presence of so many people. He said that when the question of the Rumanian and Bulgarian treaties came up at the Council he would be forced to say that the United States could not conclude treaties with the existing governments of those countries since we did not regard them as sufficiently representative. He said if he did sign such a treaty with these governments, when it came before the Senate for ratification he would be asked why he had done so, and whether he was able to assure the Senate that these governments were really representative of their countries. He would be forced to say that he knew very little of the conditions in those countries, and there was a very good chance that the Senate would refuse to ratify.

Mr. Molotov answered that in order not to complicate matters the Soviet Government had agreed to meet the wishes of the British and Americans in hastening the conclusion of the peace treaty with Italy, and that it did not see any reason except an artificially induced one for delaying the peace treaties with Bulgaria, Rumania, Finland, and Hungary. He said it was not a question of signing these treaties now, but merely doing the preliminary work; the signature could wait until after the elections in these countries. He repeated that they could see no reason for delay, particularly as the matter of these treaties was less complicated than the one with Italy. Government had suggested turning the armistice arrangements into peace treaties and proposed no new clauses or conditions in this connection. This should simplify the matter since all three Governments had signed the armistice terms. He said that if the United States refused to consider these treaties, which, according to his proposal, would contain nothing new, a very bad impression would be created in wide circles of Soviet public opinion. It would be felt in the Soviet Union that the United States Government wished to see governments unfriendly to the Soviet Union in these countries. He mentioned that the King of Rumania had told them that he was satisfied with the Groza government, but that he had said only the British and the Americans were not.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that the King had been the one to request the change of government, and he certainly had nothing to fear from the United States in a situation where the Red Army was all around him.

Mr. Molorov replied that the King had taken this step in the face of a British and American demand and as a result of pressure which their representatives had exerted on him.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had seen some statement to that effect from some official or other, but that our representative categorically denied it, and as everyone knew, he did not lie.

Mr. Molorov said that the United States and the United States representative were at least acting in that general spirit.

THE SECRETARY reviewed his previous statements in regard to the governments of these countries, and said that it would be impossible for him to defend the Soviet position before American public opinion if the Groza government remained unchanged and held the elections. He said that frankly the American people would not believe the results of the election held under such auspices.

Mr. Molorov said what kind of a press was it that did not criticize the Greek Government and did that of Rumania? He said he felt that the press should be told to criticize the Greek Government which was not founded upon democratic bases.

THE SECRETARY repeated that there was no censorship in Greece, and that he had not heard one complaint of any interference with the work of our correspondents there, and in view of this freedom, the American people had not received the same impression of the Greek Government as they had of the Rumanian.

Mr. Molorov replied that he had already said that the Soviet Government was ready to help obtain for the correspondents the proper facilities for their work in Rumania.

THE SECRETARY repeated that when these treaties came up for consideration he would have to make a statement at the time that the United States would not sign treaties of peace with these governments. They felt it should be possible to establish a more representative government in Rumania which at the same time would be friendly to the Soviet Government but which could hold elections that the entire world could accept as genuine.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Government would not regard this as a very friendly action on the part of the United States. He repeated that his Government did not consider that the Polish precedent could be applied in the case of Rumania.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that once the agreement with Poland had been reached it had worked out very satisfactorily. He added, however, that we would have no objection to considering these treaties, provided it was clearly understood that the United States was not going to sign the treaties of peace with these governments. He said he thought the question of consideration might be referred to the Deputies who, as in the case of the Italian treaty, might be authorized to go to the spot to examine any territorial questions. This would take some time, and there would be an opportunity for the Soviet Government to think the whole matter over.

Mr. Molorov said that he thought after the election there might be a possibility of reorganizing the Rumanian Government.

THE SECRETARY replied that he did not see how this could be done as it would be an elected government and not a provisional authority. He repeated his statement that if the Groza government conducted the elections, they would probably not be believed, no matter what the result.

Mr. Molorov answered that if greater facilities for the correspondents could be obtained, they could observe and report on the elections. He added that the situation was calm in Rumania, and that he thought we should help the Rumanians to hold these elections so that they could devote their undivided attention to the difficult economic situation.

Mr. Molotov then said he had another question he would like to take up with the Secretary. He recalled that at San Francisco Mr. Stettinius had assured Ambassador Gromyko that the United States was prepared to support the Soviet Government in its request to receive a territory for administration under trusteeship.³¹ He added that in view of this the Soviet Government had been surprised that the United States Government had not supported their request at the Council for the trusteeship of Tripolitania. He inquired whether it was our desire to see the British monopoly in the Mediterranean maintained.

THE SECRETARY said that he was not exactly clear as to the details of Mr. Stettinius' communication, but as he recalled it, it was in general terms and did not refer to any specific territory.

MR. Molorov said that that was true, but that this was the only opportunity for the Soviet Government. He said, if not Tripolitania, it might be some other Italian colony, but that it looked as though the United States did not wish the Soviet Union to have any territory under trusteeship.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that it was not a question here of assigning these territories to individual states, but of placing them under elective international trusteeship. He said Mr. Molotov misunderstood; that we had given no commitment to support their claim to any specific colony, but that if he kept on saying we had, he would soon come to believe it himself. He said that, for example, if a man told another that he was prepared to help him find a house, and that friend then selected the best house in town, which turned out to be unavailable, he would not feel he would have the right to demand that the other provide him with some other house.

Mr. Molotov repeated that he felt there would be no other opportunity for the Soviet Union to acquire territory for administration under trusteeship. He said he would send the Secretary a copy of Mr. Stettinius' letter.

Mr. Molotov then raised the question of their paper on German reparations.32

THE SECRETARY said he had examined this paper, and he felt that the first paragraph concerning the transfer of the Reparations Commission from Moscow to Berlin was a sensible suggestion, and he felt that it might be acted on immediately. He said that in regard to the other point, he noted that the suggestion was that the Commission complete its study by December 1, whereas at Potsdam they had been given six months from the end of the Conference.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that the study in question was only a preliminary one and would have to be completed by that date if the six months' period for the whole study was to be complied with.

After some discussion it was agreed that this item would be removed from the agenda of the Council of the Foreign Ministers, and that instructions should be sent by the United States and Soviet Governments, and also the British, if they agreed, to the representatives to accelerate their work in order to carry out the Potsdam decisions on time.

THE SECRETARY remarked that he had studied the Soviet paper in regard to the repatriation of Soviet citizens,33 and he felt that this question was not a proper one for the Council to discuss, but could be considered privately.

Mr. Molorov agreed, but said he felt measures should be devised to avoid the repetition of Soviet grievances on this subject.

 ³² C.F.M. (45) 15, September 14, p. 175.
 ³³ C.F.M. (45) 10, September 13, p. 151.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that this was a very complicated subject involving questions of disputed nationality and other factors.

Molorov agreed, but said that their principal complaint was the refusal of the American authorities to let Soviet representatives visit the camps.

THE SECRETARY promised that in so far as the camps of the United States were concerned, we would have that remedied immediately.

1. Italian Peace Treaty: Yugoslav-Italian Frontier and Trieste procedure for hearing views of governments of yugoslavia, italy and british dominions

(Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 4th Meeting, Minute 3)

Mr. Bevin said that the Governments of Yugoslavia, Italy, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa had accepted the Council's invitation to send representatives to express their views at the Council's meeting that afternoon on the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and Trieste.³⁴

The Council agreed that the representatives of Yugoslavia and the three British Dominions should be present throughout the meeting that afternoon. The views of Yugoslavia should be heard first. The Italian representatives should then be invited into the Conference Room to express their views, and should then be asked to leave. The views of the three British Dominions could be stated after the Italian representatives had left.

³⁴ The Canadian and Indian Governments declined the invitation to be heard on this occasion but expressed the desire for an opportunity to be heard later on subjects of concern to them.

2. Poland

(Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 5th Meeting, Minute 1)

The Council agreed that the matters raised in the note from the Polish Provisional Government about the Arciszewski Government should first be dealt with through the diplomatic channel in the ordinary way, but if agreement was not reached by this means could be raised at the next Conference of the Council.

3. Control and Administration of Germany (Previous Reference: C.F.M.(45)(P)(45) 4th Meeting, Minute 1)

The Council agreed that the memorandum on this subject circulated by the French Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 17)³⁵ should be added as Item 8 of the Agenda for the present Conference.

4. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: DODECANESE ISLANDS (Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 3rd Meeting, Minute 4)

Mr. Bevin said that the British Delegation withdrew their proposal about Castelrosso and were now in agreement with the proposal of the United States Delegation that the Dodecanese Islands should be ceded to Greece and demilitarised.

M. Molotov said that all the Delegations recognised that Greece had sufficient grounds on which to substantiate a claim to these islands, and it was clear from the discussion that none of the five Powers represented on the Council claimed any of these islands. This area was, however, of great interest to the Soviet Union, in view of its proximity to the entrance to the Black Sea, and he desired that this question, including the proposal for the demilitarisation of the islands, should be given further study before a final decision was taken. He also thought that the views of the Greek Government should be ascertained. He therefore suggested that the whole question should be remitted for study by the Deputies.

M. BIDAULT said that the French Delegation regarded it as natural that the islands should be ceded to Greece and had no objection to their being demilitarised.

Dr. Wang said that the Chinese Delegation had no objection to the islands being ceded to Greece.

Mr. Brynes said that he was not prepared to remit to the Deputies the question of policy involved in this matter.

Further discussion followed; after which the Council agreed that further consideration of this question should be adjourned from day to day and that if no agreement were reached before the end of the present Conference, the question should be brought up for decision at the Council's next Conference.³⁶

³⁶ Regarding the discussion on the question of the disposition of the Dodecanese, see the United States delegation minutes, infra.

5. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: ARMAMENTS

The Council proceeded to consider Section IV of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16)³⁷ on Armaments.

After discussion it was agreed to accept paragraph (1) of this Section in the following amended form:—

"The maintenance of armaments for land, sea and air will be closely restricted to the necessities of (a) maintenance of order in Italian territory and local defense on Italian frontiers; (b) such military contingents, if any, in addition to the foregoing, as may be required by the Security Council".

It was further agreed that the restrictions under (a) above would be imposed on the understanding that they would operate only until such time as they were relaxed by the Security Council of the World Organisation.

The Council took note that the French Delegation, in putting forward to the Deputies their proposals for minor rectifications of the Franco-Italian frontier, would propose that the Italian side of this frontier should be demilitarised; and that the acceptance by the French Delegation of the paragraph set out above was subject to this reservation.

The Council agreed that the Deputies, in considering in detail the relevant clauses of the draft heads of the Peace Treaty with Italy (C.F.M.(45) 3),38 should be guided by the general principles set out above.

United States Delegation Minutes of the Sixth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 17, 1945, 11 a.m.

ITALIAN PEACE TREATY

Bevin said the first question was that of the Dodecanese. Proposal of the United States was that they were to be ceded by Italy and handed over to Greece and that they be demilitarized. There had been a proposal in regard to the island of Castelrosso which he now proposed to withdraw. The British Delegation was in agreement with the United States proposal.

Molorov said that he recognized that Greece had sufficient grounds to claim these islands. They had decided to refer the question of colonies to the Deputies and he thought it would be proper to refer this question to the Deputies to study in greater detail. There were many questions which should be examined. He asked if he understood that the British agreed with the United States that these islands should be demilitarized and he pointed out that this was not in the British draft.

 $^{^{37}}$ Ante, p. 179. 38 Ante, p. 135.

 $^{^{39}}$ For the full record of this meeting, as prepared by the Secretary General, see supra.

BEVIN said that the British would agree to demilitarization.

Molorov said he wanted to know whether the principle of demilitarization was being applied to other islands in this area which did not belong to Greece. If they were not being demilitarized there must be some reason. It was evident that this question must be studied. Their Naval people had pointed out the grave situation that had arisen in these islands during the war for ships that sailed past them at a time when they were dominated by Germany and Italy and when Greece was unable to defend them. It seemed to him that it was not necessary from the fact that the Soviet Government attached particular importance to this area but because it was near the entrance to the Black Sea. He thought it should be referred to the Deputies for study.

BYRNES asked if he understood the position of the Soviet Delegation correctly. Was it that all they wanted was that Greece should have the right to build fortifications on the islands?

Molotov replied that before answering this question he would like to see the opinion of the Greeks.

Byrnes pointed out that there were two questions before them. Did the Soviet Delegation agree that these islands be ceded to Greece? Molotov said he had already emphasized the right that Greece had to these islands.

BYRNES said then he understood that the French had expressed agreement and he thought the Chinese had no objection. Could they then not decide that these islands be ceded to Greece? Then they could refer to the Deputies as to whether they were to be demilitarized and they could consult the Greek Government as to their views. He anticipated that they would have no serious disagreement in regard to this matter. They should at least instruct the Deputies in regard to the first question.

Molorov requested that the whole matter be examined by the Deputies.

Byrnes said he saw no reason to refer to the Deputies the question of whether these islands be ceded to Greece. That was a question of policy and there was nothing to be examined by the Deputies. It must be decided by the Council. The position the Deputies would find themselves in if it were referred to them was that four Delegations had expressed willingness that the islands be ceded to Greece and that the Soviet Delegation had not definitively expressed its agreement. If the Soviet Delegation could agree then the Deputies could draft the language for carrying out their decision and they could leave for further consideration the question of demilitarization.

Molorov observed that if he lived in North America he could decide the question without delay.

BYRNES said he was sorry that he was not an inhabitant of North America. The United States was just as vitally interested. Twice in our generation our people had been obliged to go to war when they did not want to go to war. We would want to be of some help in making the peace now that the war was over.

Molorov said he could assure Mr. Byrnes that he would lose nothing in the settlement of this problem if they gave more study to it.

Bevin said the British Delegation did not put in their draft the demilitarization proposal. When it was raised the other day they thought that there had been agreement and they had responded to what they thought would be a general basis of agreement. If it were now decided to cede the islands to Greece and give further study to demilitarization he would have no objection. He understood that it was not the intention of any of the five powers represented at the Council to make claim to any of these islands.

Molotov replied that this was correct.

Bevin asked if it would not be best for the Council to go on record on this matter and then refer to the Deputies who could consider with the military and naval advisers the question of demilitarization.

Molorov thought it was desirable to give more attention to this question and to learn the opinion of Greece. This would take time and it would be best to have the matter first studied by the Deputies and then by the Council.

BYRNES said they all agreed that the Deputies should consider the question of demilitarization but the Deputies could not make any other disposition of the islands in view of the language used by the representatives on the Council. If after several weeks of consideration the Deputies submitted a report, four of them would propose to cede the islands to Greece and the other Deputy's report which would be either for or against it would not help Mr. Molotov make a decision. The Council would not help its own standing if it referred a question of this kind to the Deputies. If his Soviet friend was not ready to decide now he proposed that they postpone it to a later meeting of this session and decide it themselves.

Molorov thanked Mr. Byrnes for his invariably friendly attitude. He preferred to refer the matter to the Deputies not for decision but only for study which would be helpful to them. The Soviet Delegation thought it desirable to seek the opinion of the Greeks but of course it would be better to seek the opinion of a Government which he hoped would be set up than to ask a Government which did not enjoy the confidence of the Greeks.

BYRNES said the Deputies could not do anything about the question of the Government of Greece. A few moments ago the Soviet representative had said that no one of the powers here should have these islands. The question was to whom should they go. Did Mr. Molotov have any doubt that if any faction of the Greeks were asked about the matter they would not want the islands?

Molorov thought that Mr. Byrnes was right that all Greeks would be in favor of taking them but he thought the whole question should be passed over for detailed study.

Byrnes thought he could give satisfaction to his Soviet colleague by proposing that they say "it is decided that the Dodecanese be ceded to Greece. However, if after the Greek Government refused to accept the islands, the whole question will be considered by the Council".

Molorov suggested that they transmit the question of the Dodecanese to the Deputies for study on the understanding that they would study the question taking into account the exchange of views that had taken place in the Council.

BYRNES said he wished again to ask his friend to defer discussion to a later meeting.

Molorov replied he could agree to postpone the matter but he was afraid this would not give sufficient time.

BYRNES said he believed in being frank. If his friend had made up his mind that he would not decide this matter until the Greek elections the question would have to be postponed until they met again, but it would be a farce to refer it to the Deputies to study because there was nothing they could do about it.

Molorov said he frankly thought this view was too pessimistic.

BEVIN asked what the Deputies would have to study.

Molorov said they could study the British and American drafts.

Bevin asked if he understood that the record would show that the islands should be ceded by Italy. The decision to cede the islands to somebody was recorded.

Molorov preferred to say that the Council of Foreign Ministers referred the proposals made by the British and American Delegations to the Deputies for study and request them to take into account the exchange of views that has taken place in the Council.

BYRNES said he would not agree to any such proposal. If this matter were referred to the Deputies it would have to be reported back when they met again and the Council would have to decide it. The people of the world were looking to this Council for action. They would never understand what kind of study the Deputies would make of the case of ceding the islands to Greece. He wished to propose that they be ceded to Greece subject to review after receiving the Deputies' report on the question of demilitarization. He would object to this being referred to the Deputies under the pretence that they had anything to consider on the question of whether they should be ceded and if so to whom.

Bevin said it was difficult for him to understand why on Monday they could decide to cede islands to Yugoslavia and Albania but could not decide this matter. North America was about the same distance from both of them. They had never attempted to refer these other questions to the Deputies. He thought the Soviet Delegation should also reach a decision. He observed questions of the character of governments was not limited to Greece and that governments come and go at least in some countries.

Molotov said the facts given by Mr. Byrnes were correct.

Byrnes asked if Mr. Molotov then agreed with him.

Molorov replied that he agreed with the facts given but there was also the fact that the Greek islands were closer to the Black Sea than the Dalmatian Islands. This made it imperative to refer the question to the Deputies for study.

Bevin inquired if it were not agreed that the islands would be ceded by Italy and that none of the five powers represented on the Council had any claim to them.

Molorov replied that he had no doubt but that they could agree on the remaining questions but he felt that this one would require further study.

Byrnes asked what directive would be given to the Deputies.

Molorov said he was willing to repeat his suggestion for the third time that the Deputies take into account the exchange of views which had taken place in the Council and which he pointed out was friendly to Greece.

Bevin asked if this meant that no objection would be made by the Deputies that the islands would be ceded by Italy.

Molorov observed that if Mr. Bevin wanted them to decide all questions at this meeting he wanted too much. The Deputies should be instructed to study this question taking into account the exchange of views between all Delegations which he again pointed out had been friendly to Greece.

BYRNES said he objected to the question going to the Deputies on any pretense of their making a report. Four of the Deputies would be ready to report tomorrow. If the Soviet Delegation had not decided on its position and wanted some inquiry made by its Deputy for a report later this week or if not then, to the next session of the Council he could agree but he could not agree to the farce of transmitting the question to the Deputies for study when there was nothing for them to study.

BIDAULT said the opinion of the French Delegation was that it appeared to them to be normal that the Dodecanese be ceded to Greece and the French Delegation was not opposed to demilitarization. With respect to the question of procedure he observed that this was the first time that the French Delegation participated in such a discussion on a basis of equality with the other powers and that it was therefore not experienced in such matters. He felt, however, that the sooner the question was decided the better. The French desire was that there should be agreement on substance.

WANG said the Chinese Delegation had no objection to the islands being ceded to Greece.

Molotov suggested that they accept the proposal of Mr. Byrnes that this question be deferred to the next session of the Council if it was impossible to agree on referring it to the Deputies.

Byrnes pointed out that his proposal was to defer the question from day to day and that only if there was no agreement before adjournment then it should go over to the next session.

Molotov said he agreed with this proposal.

Bevin observed that the decision was that the matter was adjourned and that it remained in the hands of the Council.

Byrnes added that it remained in the hands of the Council with the hope that it could be decided in the course of this week.

1. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: YUGOSLAV-ITALIAN FRONTIER AND TRIESTE (Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 6th Meeting, Minute 1)

M. Molotov said that representatives of Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Italy were available to put their views to the Council on the question of the Yugoslav-Italian Frontier and Trieste. The Yugoslav Ambassador in London was also present. The Yugoslav Delegation had, however, addressed a letter to Mr. Bevin, as Chairman of the Council's meeting that morning, stating that the Delegation had only just arrived in London, and were greatly fatigued by their journey, and asking that they might be allowed to present their views to the Council at 11 a. m. on the following day. M. Molotov added that he had just received a further message from the Counsellor of the Yugoslav Embassy in London to say that Mr. Kardelj was indisposed and could not attend a meeting that afternoon.

The Council agreed that the meeting to hear the views of the Governments of Yugoslavia, Italy, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa should be postponed until 11.0 a.m. on Tuesday, 18th September.⁴⁵

2. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: ARMAMENTS (Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 6th Meeting, Minute 5)

The Council resumed their consideration of Section IV of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16) on Armaments.⁴⁶

M. BIDAULT recalled that at their meeting on 14th September the Council had agreed that the proposal in paragraph 7 of C.F.M.(45) 16 for the demilitarisation of Pantellaria and Isole Pelagie should be considered at the same time as the proposals on Armaments in Section IV of that paper.

M. Molotov said that the Soviet Delegation had had no opportunity of consulting their naval and military experts and must reserve the right to ask the Council to resume consideration of these military proposals at a later stage in the Conference. Subject to this reservation by the Soviet Delegation, the Council reached the following conclusions:-

(1) Pantellaria and Isole Pelagie should be demilitarised;

(2) Italy should be prohibited from constructing any naval, military or air force installations in Sicily and Sardinia, except for such facilities as may be required by the World Organisation or for internal security purposes; 47

(3) Factory and tool equipment in Italy designed for the manufacture of war implements which is not required for the permitted military establishments and is not readily susceptible to conversion for civilian purposes should be surrendered to the Four Powers for such disposal on reparations account or otherwise as they may determine:

(4) A liberal attitude should be taken towards the production of aircraft and airplane engines for civilian use;

(5) Provision should be made for the establishment of Allied machinery to enforce the naval, military and air clauses of the Peace Treaty (as proposed in paragraphs 56-58 of C.F.M.(45) 348) until such time as Italy can be accepted as a reliable member of the World Organisation;

"Byrnes said the American position was that Pantelleria and Pagliac be demilitarized.

"Molotov inquired what about Sardinia and Sicily.

"BIDAULT said that France agreed to limit the demilitarization of all four places.

"Bevin said this was what the British proposed and they took a strong view with respect to the demilitarization of these places.

"Molotov inquired for what reason. Were there any practical reasons? "Bevin said the British proposal was for prohibition against any military installations on Sicily and Sardinia except as were necessary to facilitate the functions of the United Nations organization or for purposes of internal order. There was a difference between the British position with respect to Sicily and Sardinia and that with respect to Pantelleria and Pagliac for which they proposed permanent demilitarization. Pantelleria was not necessary for the defense of Italy and could be armed for the object of aggression. Since these Islands had been used aggressively in two wars he did not think they should be so used again. The British would like the provision as set forth in their draft and the French and United States proposals with the difference that Sardinia and Sicily would be subject to the United Nations organization.

"BYRNES agreed that paragraph 31 of Part IV of the British draft be added to the directive. He thought that Item 7 in the United States draft should be transferred to Part IV as paragraph 2 and should be followed by the language in the British draft as paragraph 3.

"Molotov said the Soviet Delegation had no objection to this proposal but it wished to make a reservation. It might be that other Delegations had had time to consult in detail with their military and naval experts but the Soviet Delegation had not had time. It wanted the possibility of returning to this question in the course of the present session if it had any additional points to make." (740.00119 Council/9-1145) in the record of the earlier discussion on Armaments at the Council's meeting that morning (C.F.M.(P) (45) 6th Meeting, Minute 5).

3. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: WAR CRIMES, ETC.

The Council considered Section V of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16) on War Crimes, Return of Prisoners of War, etc.

It was agreed that the Deputies should be guided by this Section of the memorandum by the United States Delegation in their detailed examination of the relevant Sections of the draft Treaty (paragraphs 61-68 of C.F.M.(45) 3).

4. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: REPARATIONS

The Council considered Section VI of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16) on Reparations from Italy.

M. Molorov handed in a memorandum on this subject by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 1949). He explained that, as stated in the first paragraph of this memorandum, the Soviet Delegation took the view that, as an aggressor, Italy should pay reparations, but that as she had come over to the Allied side before the end of the war reparations should not be exacted from her in full. Reparations should be paid by Italy in kind (equipment of war factories, shipyards, etc.). The Soviet memorandum provided for the total amount to be inserted; and M. Molotov explained that this figure had been left open pending discussion by the Council. At the Berlin Conference the Soviet Delegation had suggested that a fair minimum for reparations from Italy might be $600 million. They had, however, gained the impression that the United States and British Delegations might not press their claim to reparations from Italy; and, if so, the total amount might The Soviet Government thought that Greece, Yugoslavia and Albania would press their claims to reparations from Italy, and they themselves were certainly not prepared to abandon their own claim, although they would accept less than half the total. third paragraph of the memorandum repeated the substance of paragraph 72 of the British draft (C.F.M.(45) 3), which was accepted by the Soviet Delegation.

M. Bidault gave his preliminary comments on the Soviet memorandum. The first paragraph should give rise to no difficulty. The second was too indefinite without a figure for the total amount of reparations. Paragraph 3 was open to the objection that it obliged the Italian Government to compensate Allied nationals only to the extent to which it compensated Italian nationals; and Italy might escape this obligation altogether by deciding to make no compensation to Italian nationals.

M. Bidault handed in copies of a memorandum which the French Delegation had prepared on this subject (C.F.M.(45) 20 50), consisting of an amended version of Section VI of the United States draft. While in this memorandum, as in that of the United States, the main basis of reparations was equipment from Italian war factories, the French draft emphasised the need for the restitution of, or compensation for, property of any of the United Nations or their nationals removed or damaged by the Italians. The French Delegation attached particular importance to this.⁵¹

Mr. Byrnes said that he still thought the Directive proposed by the United States Delegation in Section VI of C.F.M.(45) 16 was fair and reasonable. It would be difficult for the Council or the Deputies to fix in dollars the value of the machinery and equipment which could be made available for reparations from Italy. A tentative agreement had just been reached on the scale of military armament which Italy would be permitted to retain. It followed that a munitions industry on a corresponding scale should also be retained by Italy. The United States Delegation also thought it important that Italy should be allowed to retain all the machinery readily convertible to civilian purposes which she needed to restore her peacetime economy. Everything over and above these requirements should be surrendered to the Four Powers for such disposal on account of reparations as they might determine. Any such equipment or machinery which might be allotted to the reparations account of the United States would be made ⁵⁰ September 17, p. 217.

⁵¹ The United States delegation minutes of this meeting record the following additional exchange in the discussion at this point:

[&]quot;Bevin said he wished to report that the first charge on Italian accounting must be for relief and debts. He doubted whether anything would be left for reparations.

[&]quot;Molotov pointed out that this had not been agreed to.

[&]quot;Bevin said he did not say that it was recorded but he had certainly made the statement and had clearly indicated the British position. He felt that what was left over for reparations should go to Yugoslavia and Greece. It was preferable that the great powers not demand reparations.

[&]quot;BIDAULT said that they should understand that stolen goods must be restored and that if they were not able to identify them for restitution then they should be compensated by reparations. Moreover Italian property not ceded property should go to the reparations account. He referred to the fact that in the case of persons resident in Italy they would be paid in Italian currency. The French claim would be defined and he agreed that war material would be the most important part of reparations." (740.00119 Council/9-1145) available for such of the smaller States which had suffered at the hands of Italy and were entitled to reparations.

The situation in Italy was desperate. In order to relieve it, the United States had been providing relief for Italy and would continue It was therefore essential to adopt a liberal policy in the matter of reparations from Italy. If the Council accepted the Soviet proposal to fix a total for Italian reparations, there would be a danger that in the attempt to reach this total, factories which might have been converted to civilian use would be dismantled, thus leading to further unemployment and an increase in the numbers needing relief from the Governments members of the Council. If the proposal made by the United States Delegation was accepted, an Allied Commission could be appointed to determine what equipment was available for reparations, to hear the claims of the countries entitled to receive it. and to allot it among them. He feared that the total amount of reparations available from Italy would not be large; but he was satisfied that neither the Council nor their Deputies could determine now what the total amount should be.

M. Molotov said, in reply to Mr. Byrnes, that the Governments represented at the Council were, in regard to this matter, in different positions. The territory of the United States had not been occupied by Italy, as had that of the Soviet Union. Further, the Council must take into account, not only the views expressed round the table, but also the feelings of Soviet citizens whose homes had been devastated. When soldiers were demobilised and returned to find their families killed and their homes destroyed, would it satisfy them to be told that the Soviet Delegation had been convinced by the argument of the United States and the other Delegations that reparations should not be exacted from Italy, who had been partly responsible for this devastation? How could such a decision be explained to the Soviet people?

M. Molotov also pointed out that by the Terms of Surrender, to which the United States and British Governments had been parties, Roumania had agreed to pay on account of reparations $300 millions over a period of six years. Finland (a small country with a population of only 4,000,000) was to pay the same total amount in reparations. Both these countries were meeting their obligations in this matter. Was it just that, while these smaller countries were made liable to reparations, Italy should be exempted altogether? The Soviet Government had recently published the total amount of direct material damage done to the Soviet Union by Germany and her Allies; this amounted to 679 billion roubles. Should not even one per cent of this amount be demanded from Italy? 52 The Soviet Delegation was claiming not even that, but only some moral satisfaction for their people. He therefore proposed a more definite version of the second paragraph of his memorandum as follows:-

"Italy shall pay reparations to the Associated Powers in kind (equipment of war factories, shipyards, including docks, cranes, machine tools, etc. and munitions). The United States and British Governments having renounced their claim to reparations, it is agreed that an amount of $300 million be exacted from Italy in favour of the U.S.S.R., Yugoslavia, Greece and Albania, of which the U.S.S.R. shall receive $100 million".

Mr. Bevin said that, while it was true that the British Government had agreed to the insertion of a total figure for reparations in the Terms of Surrender for Roumania and Finland, they had only done so under protest and with the reservation that this should not be regarded as a precedent. The British Delegation supported the United States proposal that reparations from Italy should be limited to once for all deliveries. They objected, however, to any attempt to fix a total dollar value for such deliveries, as they were not prepared to agree to a reparations policy which would result in the British Government's having to subsidise the payment of reparations by continuing relief to Italy. They still remembered their experience after the last war, when reparations defeated their own objects. It was the purpose of the Council to make an enduring peace, not a peace of vengeance.53 M. Molotov had spoken of the effect on public opinion in the Soviet Union. What would the British public say if he agreed to fix a total of $300 millions for reparations from Italy, and then had to admit that the British taxpayer was contributing towards the payment of these reparations?

⁶² The American minutes of this meeting record that the Secretary of State responded to this question by Molotov in the following terms: "BYENES said with regard to the suggestion that the Soviet press might say that the American Delegation had opposed the Soviet Union receiving even $1,000,000 in reparations that in every country newspapers make unqualified statements. He was satisfied, however, that in the Soviet Union proprogram would make such an unqualified. however, that in the Soviet Union no newspaper would make such an unqualified statement for neither he nor any representative of the United States Delegation had made any such statement. What he had said as set forth in this paper was that there should be determined what should be divided as Italian reparations and that the United States would renounce in favor of Greece, Yugoslavia and other Governments the share of the United States. He did not specifically say France but he did say other countries. He did not say that the Soviet Union should not receive even $1,000,000." (740.00119 Council/9-1145).

The American minutes of this meeting record the following additional exchange between Bevin and Molotov at this point:

⁽Bevin speaking) "It was interesting to note that the appetite grew with time. At Potsdam the Soviet Delegation had put forward a claim of $250,000,000 to be divided by all States.

[&]quot;Molotov interjected that they had proposed writing the sum of $600,000,000. "Bevin said that nothing about figures had been mentioned but in the end the claim had been brought down to $250,000,000." (740.00119 Council/9-1145)

For documentation regarding the consideration at the Berlin Conference of the problem of Italian reparations, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1623, index entries under Italy: Reparations.

If claims to reparations were to be decided on a nice calculation of damage done by Italy, he would remind the Council that the British Government had already guaranteed £10 millions for the rehabilitation of Malta, and that the Italians had also caused substantial loss to the United Kingdom in the early years of the war.

The British Government had no wish to condone what Italy had done; but they must take into account the extent to which she had succeeded in "working her passage home". He believed that they would do much better for Europe, for Italy, and for themselves if they allowed her to restore her economy on a peace-time basis, instead of stripping her territory and making it impossible for her to live. Their policy towards Italy should be, first, to enable her to repay what had been supplied to her by way of relief; secondly, to help her to restore her economy on a peace-time basis; and, thirdly, to remove machinery and equipment which was not needed for a peace-time economy, and would help to create a war potential.

M. Molotov said that reference had been made to the experience of reparations after the last war. He preferred to rely on more recent experience. Their experience of reparations had so far been very satisfactory. The largest demand had been made on Finland, which, with a population of 4 millions had to pay $300 millions; and Finland was carrying out her obligations with friendly relations with the Soviet Union. He had no objection to the United Kingdom receiving any reparations she might claim. But if the United Kingdom, the United States and France claimed reparations from Italy, the total amount should be increased to $600 millions.

M. BIDAULT said that the French claim for reparations from Italy would be very small, although they had suffered damage to the extent of $400 millions.

The Council agreed to resume discussion of this question at their next meeting.

8072. Secdel 67. During call today Ital Ambassador asked re press reports of decision at London on disposition of Ital colonies. I replied I had no info on this subject and could only wait word or statement from you. Ambassador went on to say that this was not most important matter. Most important in his judgment was decision to be made on Trieste. He felt that if both decisions were adverse to Italy repercussions would be great, Western democracies would receive brunt of criticism in Italy, and moderate parties there would suffer as consequence.

Tarchiani added that on basis of talks with President and you before your departure he believed you understood and were sympathetic to Ital position on Trieste.⁵⁴ I said that De Gasperi ⁵⁵ would doubtless have discussed matter with you but told Ambassador who seemed much disturbed that I would inform you of substance of our conversation.

London, 17 September, 1945.

REPARATIONS FROM ITALY

- 1. Italy shall recognise her responsibility for the damage that she has caused to the Associated Powers by her participation in the war on Germany's side; but, taking into consideration that Italy was the first to break with Germany and that she came over to the side of the Allies, it is concluded that the compensation for this damage to the Associated Powers will be made by Italy not in full but only in part.
- 2. Italy shall pay reparations to the Associated Powers to the amount of dollars in kind (equipment of war factories, shipyards, including docks, cranes, machine tools etc).
- 3. By way of making good war losses, Italy shall provide compensation to nationals of the United Nations, civilian persons, who are residents in Italy and have suffered personal damage, on terms which are not less favourable than those applied to Italian nationals.

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY THE FRENCH DELEGATION TO THE ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL PROVISIONS OF THE DRAFT DIRECTIVE SUBMITTED BY THE UNITED STATES DELEGATION ON THE PREPARATION OF A TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY 56

VI. REPARATIONS

The Italian Government will authorise each of the United Nations to take over and apply to their respective reparation claims such of the assets of the Italian Government (excluding diplomatic and consular premises) and of Italian nationals as are within the jurisdiction of the respective United Nations; the latter will exercise their rights to the extent justifiable by the circumstances and according to their free decision. The Italian Government will undertake to indemnify, in accordance with Italian law, the Italian nationals whose property will thus have been requisitioned.

Subject to the provision above with respect to war-making machinery and subject to the provisions connected with other elements which may be established for the settlement of reparation without burdening the Italian economics substantially, each of the United Nations will limit its reparation claim against Italy to the amount which will thus be made available to it and each of the United Nations will be free to allocate that amount to the indemnification of the state or its nationals as it may determine as a matter of domestic policy.

Property which was taken from the nationals of the United Nations and which will be identified on the Italian territory will be restored to them. On demand of the United Nation concerned such actual property will be reconditioned by the Italian Government at its expense.

A commission composed of representatives of the Four Powers will be entrusted with the securing of the application of these provisions.

Italy will restore to the Governments and the nationals of the United Nations all property, rights and interests which they had on her territory in the state in which this property and these rights and interests were at the moment of the declaration of the war. She will take all measures to return to the interested parties the property and the rights of which they were deprived as a result of fascist discriminating measures. Should such restitution or reconditioning of the actual property and rights be materially impossible Italy must pay compensations in lire.

VII. FINANCIAL, ECONOMIC AND ESTABLISHMENT PROVISIONS

There are a number of matters affecting future economic and financial relations which might be dealt with in the treaty of peace, but in view of the complexities raised by the large number of states involved some of the financial, economic and establishment matters must be dealt with by separate treaties.

Provisions of a general character, however, will have to be introduced into the treaty. In that respect the British draft can be taken by the Deputies as a basis for their discussions.

In addition to that, provisions referring to one State in particular, but being either of a special importance or of a great urgency to it can be included in the general treaty.

PROPOSALS FOR A PEACE TREATY WITH ROUMANIA

- 1. The United Kingdom Delegation offer the following preliminary observations upon the Soviet Delegation's Memorandum, circulated to the Council as Paper C.F.M. (45) 8.⁵⁷
- 2. The United Kingdom Delegation agree with the Soviet Delegation that the relevant Articles of the Armistice with Roumania signed at Moscow on the 12th September, 1944, provide a basis for the drafting of certain parts of the Treaty of Peace with Roumania. They make the following comments upon particular Articles specified in paragraph 1 of the Soviet Delegation's memorandum.
- 3. The United Kingdom Delegation doubt whether Article 1 of the Armistice has any validity in the Peace Treaty as it would appear to apply exclusively to wartime conditions. The United Kingdom Delegation propose, however, that the Peace Treaty should lay down the character and numbers of the armed forces which Roumania would be allowed to retain; should impose the necessary limitations upon the manufacture of war material in Roumania; and should provide for a small inter-Allied military Inspectorate to supervise the execution of the military clauses of the Treaty in succession to the Allied Control Commission which would be dissolved upon the entry into force of the Treaty.
- 4. The United Kingdom Delegation agree that Article 4 of the Armistice, regarding the restoration of the State Frontiers between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Roumania as established by the Soviet Roumanian Agreement of the 28th June, 1940 58 should be confirmed in the Peace Treaty. It is assumed that in the case of this, as of other frontier clauses, a map will be provided to show the precise boundary line.
- 5. The United Kingdom Delegation assume that in specifying Article 9 of the Armistice, the Soviet Delegation have in mind arrangements for the return of the vessels to their owners and compensation for their damage or destruction.
- 6. With regard to Article 14 of the Armistice, the United Kingdom Delegation assume that the peace treaty will require the Roumanian Government to collaborate with any Allied Government in the apprehension and trial of persons accused of war crimes.

- 7. The United Kingdom Delegation suggest that the action already taken by the Roumanian Government under Article 15 of the Armistice may make it unnecessary to repeat in the peace treaty the whole substance of Article 15.
- 8. The United Kingdom Delegation assume that on the conclusion of the peace treaty all Allied forces will be withdrawn from Roumania (except as may be provided for the maintenance of the lines of communication of the Red Army with the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria) and that all unused currency and goods will be returned to the Roumanian Government.
- 9. With reference to paragraph 3 of the Soviet Delegation's memorandum, the United Kingdom Delegation consider that the question of whether the whole of Transylvania should be returned to Roumania cannot be decided only on the basis of Roumania's war record. They feel that it is very important to obtain a Roumanian-Hungarian frontier which is equitable in itself. Before taking any final commitments they consider that this question should be carefully examined in an expert sub-committee. It will also be necessary to include provisions on certain consequential questions.
- 10. In addition, the United Kingdom Delegation consider that provisions should be included in the Peace Treaty with Roumania to cover the following matters of a political character:-
- (i) Resumption of diplomatic and consular relations with Roumania. Allied Powers to have the right to appoint consuls at such places and in such numbers as each may decide.

(ii) Roumania to accept the arrangements made by the United Nations for the liquidation of the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice.

(iii) Roumania to recognise the authority of all United Nations Organisations already established or in contemplation and to accept such obligations in connexion with such organisations and any conventions concluded under their auspices as may be specified.

(iv) Roumania to accept any arrangements agreed for the international regime of the Danube.

(v) Requirement on Roumania to keep in force, or abrogate, Treaties to which Roumania is a party, with any necessary modifications, as may be directed by the Allied Powers.

(vi) Roumania to undertake to maintain a bill of rights as proposed for Italy by the United States Delegation in their memorandum circulated to the Council as Paper C.F.M. (45) 16,59 and not to prosecute or molest any person on account of his feelings or sympathies with the United Nations or for the performance of any action calculated to facilitate the execution of the Armistice or Peace Treaty.

⁵⁹ September 14, p. 179.

(Note: these provisions would be in expansion of Article 6 of the Armistice, which the Soviet Delegation have already proposed should be taken as part of the basis for the Peace Treaty).

(vii) Roumania to receive Roumanian nationals returning from abroad and to accept full responsibility for them.

- (viii) Roumania to reaffirm existing agreements regarding war graves of Allied nationals in Roumania and to accept any additions desired by the Allied Powers as regards the graves of Allied nationals who met their death in Roumania during the present war.
- 11. As regards economic and financial clauses of the Peace Treaty, the United Kingdom Delegation agree with paragraph 2 of the Soviet Delegation's memorandum. They consider, however, that additional provisions will be essential to cover the requirements of the Allied Powers in financial and economic matters. Such provisions would deal with claims by Allied Governments or their nationals against Roumania; the barring of claims of Roumania arising out of the war; United Nations property rights and interests in Roumania (this is the same ground as is covered by Articles 11, 12 and 13 of the Armistice but might now be expressed rather more fully); Roumanian property rights and interests in United Nations territory; Roumania's commercial relations with the United Nations; contracts, prize; and other matters. The United Kingdom Delegation suggests that in determining these provisions the Council of Foreign Ministers may find useful as a general guide the financial and economic sections of the draft heads of a Treaty of Peace with Italy, which they have already circulated to the Council (paper C.F.M.(45) 3 60).
- 12. The United Kingdom Delegation agree that consideration should be given to provisions on the lines of paragraph 4 of the Soviet Delegation's memorandum.

- 2. The United Kingdom Delegation agree with the Soviet Delegation that the relevant Articles of the Armistice with Bulgaria signed at Moscow on 28th October, 1944, provide a basis for the drafting of certain parts of the Treaty of Peace with Bulgaria. The United Kingdom Delegation suggest that the action already taken by the Bulgarian Government under Article 7 of the Armistice may make it unnecessary to repeat in the Peace Treaty the whole substance of Article 7.
- 3. The United Kingdom Delegation consider that Article 1(d) of the Armistice, regarding the demobilisation of the Bulgarian armed forces, and Article 2 of the Armistice, regarding the steps necessary to liquidate Bulgarian aggression during the war against Greece and Yugoslavia, must also be taken as a basis for the necessary provisions in the Peace Treaty.
- 4. Taking as a basis Article 1(d) of the Armistice, the United Kingdom Delegation propose that the Peace Treaty should lay down the character and numbers of the armed forces which Bulgaria would be allowed to retain; should impose the necessary limitations upon the manufacture of war material in Bulgaria; and should provide for a small inter-Allied military Inspectorate to supervise the execution of the military clauses of the Treaty in succession to the Allied Control Commission which would be dissolved upon the entry into force of the Treaty.

[Washington,] September 17, 1945.

Mr. Tesemma ⁶⁴ called to say that he had just received an urgent instruction from the Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs, (Mr. Aklilou, whom I had met in San Francisco) instructing him to call on me and emphasise that the Ethiopian Government was much disturbed by two recent developments: (1) Yugoslav representatives had been invited to participate in the London Conference regarding the Italian peace treaty but no such invitation had been issued to Ethiopia and (2)

⁶³ A summary report of this conversation was sent to the Secretary of State in telegram 8122, Seedel 78, September 18, to London.
⁶⁴ Getahoun Tesemma, Ethiopian Chargé.

reports in the American press that the United States favored an international trusteeship for the Italian colonies in Africa.

Mr. Tesemma referred to the several assurances which have been given Ethiopia that his Government would have full opportunity to present its case before the Council of Foreign Ministers. As regards the international trusteeship, he pointed out that Ethiopia had presented a claim for both Eritrea and Somaliland to be incorporated into Ethiopia.

On the first point, I said that while I had received no specific information on the subject it seemed clear to me that the invitation to Yugoslavia to send representatives to London had resulted from the fact that the immediate question for discussion in London was the Italian-Yugoslav border. I reminded Mr. Tesemma that no Greek representatives had been called to London, due evidently to the fact that questions of direct concern to Greece had not yet been reached. I expressed the opinion that it might be some time before the question of the Italian colonies in Africa came under active consideration, since this question has been referred to the Deputies of the Foreign Ministers for consideration and might not be discussed until after the present Foreign Ministers' meeting has ended. Whenever it was reached, I felt confident the Ethiopians would be called.

As regards the international trusteeship, I said that I had no idea what the newspaper reporters were basing their stories on. No official statement had been made on this subject as far as I was aware.

During a subsequent informal chat, I asked Mr. Tesemma how his Government justified a request for the incorporation of Italian Somaliland. He said that the claim was based on ethnic, economic and religious grounds, all of which called for the union of Somaliland with the Ogaden. I expressed the personal view that Ethiopia would be ill-advised to attempt to take over Italian Somaliland, even if the Colony were awarded to Ethiopia. The physical and economic difficulties of governing the Italian Somaliland were, in my opinion, too great for Ethiopia to undertake. The job would require more strength than Ethiopia possesses. I thought that Ethiopia would benefit most from a strong government in Somaliland with assured rights to Ethiopia for trade, grazing and access to the sea. If Ethiopia were able to look to the United Nations for a guarantee of its rights in this connection, Ethiopia would be well advised not to press for title to Somaliland, with the many attendant headaches and expenses involved.

Dr. Wang Shih Chieh said that on this day fourteen years ago Japan had started her war against China in Manchuria. He was happy that on this fourteenth anniversary of the beginning of the second world war, the Council was meeting to discuss peace settlements. They were happy; but they were also impressed with a sense of heavy responsibility. Although the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers was preparatory in character, some of the important peace problems would find a preliminary solution here. We must not make mistakes that might be the cause of another war. All agreed that peace and justice were inseparable. Peace was secured only when it was based on justice. But justice was a subtle thing. Opinion as to what was just or not often differed in a concrete issue. What might seem just to his American or British colleagues might seem unjust to his Soviet or French colleagues or to himself. The best thing for the Council to do was to ascertain the views of all those directly interested in the issues under consideration. The Council would consider these views carefully and with an open mind. This would enable them to avoid making mistakes, and would help them to reach complete and early agreement. It was for this reason that representatives of the Governments of Yugoslavia, Italy, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa had been invited to attend this meeting to present their views on the problem of the Yugoslav-Italian Frontier and Trieste.

He asked M. Kardelj to present the views of the Yugoslav Government.

M. Kardelj and M. Leontic made statements, the text of which is reproduced in C.F.M.(45) 26.67

The Council agreed to meet again at 3:30 p.m. that afternoon to hear further statements from the representatives of the Yugoslav Government, and a statement from the representative of the Italian Government.

Memorandum by the United Kingdom Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 24

London, 18 September, 1945.

PROPOSALS FOR A PEACE TREATY WITH HUNGARY

The United Kingdom Delegation offer the following preliminary observations upon the Soviet Delegation's memorandum circulated to the Council as paper C.F.M.(45) 4.⁷²

2. The United Kingdom Delegation agree with the Soviet Delegation that the relevant Articles of the Armistice with Hungary signed at Moscow on 20th January, 1945, provide a basis for the drafting of certain parts of the Treaty of Peace with Hungary. The United Kingdom Delegation suggest that the action already taken by the Hungarian Government under Article 15 of the Armistice may make it unnecessary to repeat in the Peace Treaty the whole substance of Article 15.

⁷⁰ Yugoslav Minister of Information Kosanovic's statement, which was included as the third annex to C.F.M. (45) 26, September 18, p. 229, is not printed. Kosanovic confined himself to the general political aspects of the Adriatic problem and Italo-Yugoslav relations, reviewing the course of these relations during and since World War I, characterizing Italian policy during this period as "aggressive" and "chauvinistic", and proposing that peaceful and harmonious relations would only obtain in the Adriatic area if the ethnic frontier were adhered to.

⁷¹ September 18, p. 232. ⁷² September 12, p. 147.

- 3. Taking as a basis Article 1 (d) of the Armistice, the United Kingdom Delegation propose that the Peace Treaty should lay down the character and numbers of the armed forces which Hungary would be allowed to retain; should impose the necessary limitations upon the manufacture of war material in Hungary, and should provide for a small inter-Allied military Inspectorate to supervise the execution of the military clauses of the Treaty in succession to the Allied Control Commission which would be dissolved upon the entry into force of the Treaty.
- 4. The United Kingdom Delegation assume that on the conclusion of the Peace Treaty all Allied Forces will be withdrawn from Hungary, (except as may be provided for the maintenance of the lines of communication of the Red Army with the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria) and that all unused requisitioned goods and currency will be returned to the Hungarian Government.
- 5. The United Kingdom Delegation consider that the provision in Article 9 of the Armistice, governing the return of Allied vessels to their owners and compensation for their damage and destruction should be included in the Peace Treaty.
- 6. With regard to paragraph 2 of the Soviet Delegation's memorandum concerning Transylvania, the views of the United Kingdom Delegation are given in paragraph 9 of their memorandum on the Peace Treaty with Roumania circulated to the Council as Circular No. 21 (revised).73

Statements by Representatives of the Yugoslav Government to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 26

London, 18 September, 1945.

ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: YUGOSLAV FRONTIER AND TRIESTE STATEMENT OF VIEWS OF YUGOSLAV GOVERNMENT

The text is attached of statements made on behalf of the Yugoslav Government by M. Edvard Kardelj, Vice Prime Minister of Yugoslavia, M. Ljubo Leontic, Yugoslav Ambassador in London and M. Sava Kosanovic, Yugoslav Minister of Information at the Eighth and Ninth Meetings of the Council held on 18th September, 1945.75

To Only the statement of Vice Premier Kardelj is printed (see annex, p. 230). Ambassador Leontic's statement argued the Yugoslav case from the economic point of view. He reviewed the economic history of relationship between Trieste and its hinterland in the Julian March and concluded that the future of Trieste could only be secured by placing it under Yugoslav sovereignty and assuring its ties with adjacent territories in Yugoslavia. Regarding Minister of Information Kosanovic's statement, see footnote 70, p. 227.

[Annex]

Statement by the Yugoslav Vice Prime Minister (Kardelj) to the Council of Foreign Ministers

The problem of the Julian March represents a two-fold issue for Jugoslavia. It is the extremely important economic and political issue of a country cut off by the Treaty of Rapallo 76 from its natural sea outlet and deprived of territories which have always formed part of its national entity, and at the same time it is an issue concerning two small nations—the Slovene and the Croat—who in the course of centuries have been fighting for their freedom and their unity against German and Italian Conquerors and who trusted that their aims would be realized during this war. In order to make this point even clearer I should like to remind you of the fact that the Slovene nation numbers only one and a half million people and that little over a million of them live in Yugoslavia while over half a million, that is one third of the Slovene, live within the borders of Italy and Accordingly the problem of the Julian March, for the Slovene nation is not a question of sentimentality nor is it a selfish tendency to expand its frontiers but it is a question of life, of normal development and of its very existence.

The territory which we request covers, according to the old Italian administrative division, the whole of the provinces of Trieste, Gorizia, Pula, and Fiume as a whole as well as part of the province of Udine. It also comprises the whole of the Zadar province in Dalmatia. The ethnic borderline between the Slovenes and Italians is a perfectly clearly determined one; it has undergone but little change in the course of the last five hundred years. Within this ethnically compact Slovene and Croat territory, an Italian minority inhabits only some of the towns along the sea-coast. Nowhere in this territory can one find Italian peasants. The total population living in this territory amounts to 970,000, including 650,000 Jugoslavs and about 320,000 Italians, Germans and others. One half of the Italians live in the city of Trieste, while the remainder inhabits the small sea-coast towns. In some of these towns the Italians constitute the majority of the population, while in others they are the minority, I repeat: East of the Italo-Jugoslav ethnic border the Italian minority does not inhabit a continuous territory, but lives only in isolated towns.

of most of the population of the area despite Italian efforts at settlement and Italianization.]

Jugoslavia puts forth only one claim; that the desire of the population of the Julian March to unite with their native land and their free brothers, to whom they are linked by ties of history, speech, culture and economic interests, be respected. In this war Jugoslavia has given her utmost to the Allies. One million seven hundred fallen Jugoslavs are sufficient evidence of that. Among them are the 42,000 from the Julian March. They died so that others may live in freedom. Is it possible to question to whom the Julian March should belong? Our entire people believe throughout the war that the liberation and unification of our people was one of the Allied principal war aims. The freedom of nations was the main watchword of the war. It would be a terrible blow to our people and their faith in the democratic aims of the war should this prove untrue. No one would be able to understand on the basis of what aims the Slovene and the Croat peoples would be thrown into slavery. For 13 centuries the Slovenes and Croates of the Julian March toiled as slaves of foreign masters and shed sweat and blood upon their native soil. Has not the time come for humanity to put an end to the tragic history of two small nations?

On the basis of all that has been stated, I have the honour to submit to the Conference of the Council of Foreign Ministers of the Five Great Powers in London, the following request with regard to the frontier between Jugoslavia and Italy:

1) The former Austro-Hungarian territory, inhabited mostly by South Slavs, and which was ceded to Italy after the first World War contrary to the principle of the self-determination of nations, should be joined to Jugoslavia.

2) As a basis for the determination of frontiers the former Austro-Hungarian frontier is taken, which is to be revised in certain places, so that the new frontier may to the greatest possible extent coincide with the ethnical boundary.

This frontier would start from the summit of Mount Rosskofel (Monte Cavallo, 2239m.) located on the former and present Austro-Italian frontier and would descend towards the South along the watershed of the upper course of the Bela (Fella) River and its right tributary the Aupa River, that is across the summits of the Monte Cullar (1764m.) and Mount Zuc del Boor (2197m.), then across the Bela River between the railway stations of Na and Beli and Mozac. The line then continues South across the Mount Plauris (1959), Mount Lavre (Mount Lavera 1907m.) and Mount Kadi, and continues along the watershed between the rivers Tera (Torre) and Tagliamento (Tilment), that is, across the peaks of Mount Lanez (Cuel di Lanis 1631m.). The frontier then turns south-east so as to include the towns of Tarcent (Tarcento) and the whole territory of the municipalities of Nema (Nimis), Alten (Attinis), Fojda (Faedes), Torjan (Torreano) and Cedad (Cividale) and Cesta od Cedada (Cividale) up to Krmin (Cormons) should be part of Jugo-slavia. The line here reaches the Idria (Judrio) River at the point of the Austro-Italian State frontier prior to 1918 and the subsequent frontier between the province of Gorica (Gorizia) and Udine (Videm). The line then follows the frontier between the province of Gorica and Trieste in the east and the province of Udine in the west, so that it follows mainly the course of the rivers Idria (Judrio), Ter (Torre), Soca (Isonzo) and along the northern and western borders of the municipality of Gradez (Grado) and finally reaches the Adriatic.

According to this, the former frontier would be revised in its southern sector in Italy's favour and its northern sector in favour of Jugoslavia. Such a frontier correction of the old Austro-Hungarian frontier would mean the cession to Italy of 198 square kilometres with a population of 28,000, while Jugoslavia would receive 900 square kilometres with a population of 80,000.

3) This line deviates from the ethnical boundary in three sectors: between Mount Rosskofel (Monte Cavallo) and Lavra (Mount Laura), at certain points in the sector between Tarcento and Krmin (Cormons) and in the sector between the Idria (Judri) River and the Adriatic coast west of Trzich—this for economic, particularly communications reasons.

- 4) The city of Trieste is to receive the political legal status of a federal unit within Democratic Federative Jugoslavia.
- 5) Jugoslavia will extend to the Port of Trieste the status of a free port with the corresponding transit railway traffic facilities.

I reserve the right to submit in writing the above requests in detail, as well as all the other which pertain to the conclusion of the Peace Treaty with Italy.

Statement by the Italian Foreign Minister (de Gasperi) to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 27

London, 18 September, 1945.

ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: YUGOSLAV FRONTIER AND TRIESTE
STATEMENT OF VIEWS OF ITALIAN GOVERNMENT

The following is the text of a statement made by Signor de Gasperi on behalf of the Italian Government at the Ninth Meeting of the Council held on 18th September, 1945:—

"I shall endeavour to be as brief as possible. I thank you for having given the representative of democratic Italy this opportunity to speak. I will do so with all frankness, avoiding the time-worn tactics of submitting maximum proposals so as to be enabled to fall back on alternative ones. I will immediately refer to the sacrifices that we can and must make in the name of European solidarity and for the reconstruction of a better world, thereby implicitly excluding other solutions that no Italian democratic Government could afford to agree to.

Our object is, above all, the re-establishment of our old friendship with Yugoslavia, torn asunder by the Fascist aggression that we anti-Fascist democrats deplored and condemned. During the 1914–1918 world war, at the cost of 600,000 dead, Italy not only freed Trento and Trieste but decisively contributed to the liberation of other oppressed peoples. The Italian people consider it an honour to be amongst the makers of the independence of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes. I am before you to-day in the same spirit which prompted us during those days.

The frontier between the two countries was established through a free and mutual agreement between Italians and Yugoslavs embodied in the Treaty of Rapallo, ratified by the two democratic Parliaments of Rome and Belgrade. If Italian democracy had been able to apply the principles by which she was inspired, a series of linguistic guarantees and regional autonomies would have given to the ethnic minorities a secure national life. Unfortunately, however, the wave of nationalistic reaction swept over democracy and—from the episode of Fiume-Fascism was born, attaining power through violence and terror, and establishing itself throughout Italy. Yugoslavia rightfully complained of the oppression of her minorities and Venezia Giulia and sought vengeance for the fire of the Narodni Dom in Trieste. They are right. We can understand the affronts they are denouncing because we too have shared them. My newspaper in Trento was also burnt and sacked and I too was thrown in jail. Like many Italian and Slav anti-Fascists, within and without Italy, thousands of democrats, with no distinction of nationalities, had to live in exile. We certainly do not wish to hide any responsibility in this war, but it is a fact that the Italian people did their utmost to end the situation brought about by the dictator. On their side, the Yugoslavs can have some understanding of what our position was. They too, under Nedich and Pavelich,77 have experienced what a ruthless dictatorship can mean. The overthrow of Fascism on 25th July and the Armistice of 8th September 78 enabled our soldiers in certain regions of the Balkans to furnish arms to the Slav and Balkan partisan bands and to join these in strong units. What closer bond could have been forged in order to cancel with bloodshed in common the ancient offences and to renew the friendship between the two democracies? Why is it that at the moment of victory the "right of the first occupant" was imposed and thousands of Italians were deported from our soil and interned in Yugoslav camps? The Alexander-Tito agreement 19 provided for their repatriation, but in most cases Italian mothers are still living in anxiety, and horrible visions haunt them, thereby dividing men of good will. Let us unite to clear the atmosphere in which we live. Let us dispel these visions, let us regain our peace of mind, let us avoid mutual recriminations, submitting to an international body the control of the accuracy of the facts and the judgment of offences and atrocities past and present.

Democratic Italy strives to contribute to a fair solution. She could refer to the Treaty of Rapallo, freely negotiated between the two countries before the rise of Fascism, which establishes the present boundary and guarantees the autonomy of Fiume as a "corpus separatum": but Italy is prepared to reconsider. An ideal ethnical line does not exist. Unfortunately, it is by now a European custom that in mixed areas both sides should not agree on statistics. regard, I recall a personal experience. In the many debates of the Austrian Reichstag on which I represented Trento Irredenta, the subject of statistics was most frequently raised but it was also the least agreed upon by the contesting parties, and therefore the least conclusive. This took place not only between Germans and Czechs, Poles and Ukrainians, Germans and Hungarians, but also between Italian and Slav members from the Adriatic coast. This does not imply that the Italian majority (according to reliable estimates approximately 550,000 Italians to 400,000 Slavs) residing in Venezia Giulia should have reason to fear statistics, and we are ready to submit all necessary technical data to support our thesis and to contest other claims. At this moment I only wish to state that the democratic Italian Government agrees that an attempt should be made in order that as many as possible Slav groups west of the present boundary be included in Slav territory—within, however, the limits indispensable to the vitality of Trieste and the other Italian cities, and provided this should not cause the economic collapse of the region. We cannot sever cities from the surrounding countryside nor from their acqueducts or the means of communications that connect Pola to Trieste. Within reasonable limits we are ready to recognise Yugoslav rights and interests, but it would not be just if the Arsa mines, that yield to Italy thirty per cent. of her national coal production, should be taken from her, nor that the bauxite beds, the only autarchic raw ⁷⁹ For text of the Anglo-American-Yugoslav agreement respecting the provisional administration of Venezia Giulia (the so-called Alexander-Tito agreement), signed at Belgrade, June 9, 1945, see Executive Agreement Series No. 501, or 59 Stat. material existing in Italy, should no longer supply our aluminum factories, whilst Yugoslavia, notoriously an exporter of coal and bauxite, own 19 mines of anthracite, 202 of coal and lignites, and 82 of bauxite. We believe that a frontier based upon the Wilson Line might constitute a fair line of demarcation between the two countries. This line was conceived here in London and was subsequently developed in the course of friendly discussions amongst Italian democrats and Yugoslav émigrés during the 1914–1918 war. The same line. determined through a long series of studies based on a criterion of absolute impartiality, received the far-sighted support of President Wilson, who actually adopted it. The line of course implies a reciprocal legislation in order to guarantee the status of the minorities on either side of it, and equally implies that Fiume, a harbour at the disposal of the Yugoslav hinterland, should reacquire its ancient autonomy guaranteeing its natural character. It implies, moreover, that a renewed Italo-Yugoslav friendship, assured by international treaties, should protect the Italian character of Zara and other Italian minorities.

In stating our willingness to make these sacrifices, we are aware that we shall disappoint the expectations of many Italians and unwantingly inflict a painful blow on our compatriots living in the areas that would thus become separated from us. We are, however, prepared to take this heavy responsibility in order to contribute to the pacification of the Adriatic which, added to a possible demilitarisation and with an independent Albania, would thereby be assured. There remains the continental, or better still, the international function of the port of Trieste.

We are not against the internationalisation of the port of Trieste in the sense of admitting complete Customs' exemption for the harbour, supplemented by a series of other concessions in favour of the countries of the hinterland, and allowing above all to importers the processing there of raw materials in finished or semi-finished products. The structure and the amplitude of this form of international emporium would have to be exactly elevated by technical experts. It is obvious in this connection that such international cooperation must eliminate all harmful competition between Trieste and Fiume and be implemented by collaboration in the matter of railways, entrusted to the countries of the hinterland and to the Danube-Sava and Adriatic railways.

Before concluding, however, I consider it my duty to request that emergency measures be adopted in order to remedy the economic consequences of the establishment of the Morgan line. This line, by breaking in two an economic and industrial structure, not only makes it impossible for Italy to bring aid to 200,000 Italians (Fiume and Zara included) on the other side of the above line in extremely difficult physical and food conditions, but forbids Italy from reactivating those industries vital to her economic structure. Unemployment and hardship have assumed alarming proportions; decisive and rapid intervention is imperative with regard to this question which, more than merely Italian, is a question of humanity and social justice".

740.00119 Council/9-1845: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of State, at London

Washington, September 18, 1945—6 p. m.

8118. Secdel 76. Part I. The following memorandum from the British Embassy concerning economic agreements recently concluded between the USSR and Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary is transmitted for your information with the suggestion that you may wish to make it the subject of discussion in London. The Department's comments on the memorandum are contained in Part II of this telegram.

The Dept is in general agreement with the broad political and economic aspects of the memorandum, recognizing that any action in regard to them must be governed by developments in London.

In regard to para 4 of the memorandum, the Dept recognizes the exclusive bilateral character of these barter arrangements; nevertheless, Dept feels that short term arrangements of this type may be required as emergency measures, and is not disposed to object as long as these arrangements do not prejudice the eventual participation of these states in a multilateral trading and financial system. Moreover, Rumania has already concluded similar agreements with Hungary and Bulgaria as has each of these three countries with some of its Danubian neighbors and other European states.

The Dept has considered the question of the agreements for economic collaboration which the Soviet Union is reported to have concluded with Rumania and Hungary. These agreements appear to give preferential status in these countries to the economic interests of the USSR and therefore to discriminate against the interests of the United States and of other countries.

The Dept feels that protection for American interests in Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria can best be obtained through the economic and commercial policy articles of the peace treaties with these countries. In order to insure that no misunderstanding arises regarding the meaning of non-discrimination and most-favored-nation treatment, special paragraphs, not included in the suggestions for the peace treaty with Italy have been incorporated in the draft suggestions for the treaties with the three above-mentioned states, specifically as follows:

"General Economic and Commercial Relations.

- "P. 1. Desiring to cooperate in the attainment of the objectives stated in preceding paragraph 39, the Government of Hungary, during a period of three years after the entry into force of this treaty, undertakes:
- (a) To accord to the commerce of each signatory Allied State unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment with regard to:
 - (1) All customs duties, charges and regulations of any kind;

(2) All laws and regulations affecting the taxation, sale, distribution or use of imported articles within Hungary;

(3) All aspects of any quantitative regulations which the Government of Hungary may impose on imports or exports; and

(4) All aspects of any control which the Government of Hungary may establish over the means of international payment.

(b) To accord with respect to matters referred to in paragraph (a) above, unconditional most-favored-nation treatment to the nationals, corporations and associations of each signatory Allied State within the territory of Hungary.

(c) With respect to all matters affecting internal taxation or sale, distribution or use within Hungarian territory, to accord to the products of each signatory Allied State imported into Hungary treatment no less favourable than the treatment accorded like products of Hungarian origin.

(d) With respect to all matters affecting the internal taxation, sale, distribution or use of merchandise, export bounties, custom drawbacks and the warehousing of articles intended for importation or exportation, to accord to the nationals, corporations and associations of each signatory Allied State treatment no less favorable than the treatment accorded to the nationals, corporations and associations of

Hungary.

(e) To accord unconditional most-favored-nation and national treatment to the nationals, corporations and associations of each signatory Allied State with respect to all matters pertaining to investment production, industrial activity, taxation and protection of property within the territory of Hungary; and to accord unconditional most-favored-nation treatment to the nationals, corporations and associations of each signatory Allied State with respect to the development of mineral, petroleum, and other natural resources within the territory of Hungary. The principles set forth in this sub-paragraph shall be understood to include the requirement that with regard to the sale, lease or other disposal of public lands, products or natural resources by the Government of Hungary, the Government of Hungary shall accord to the interests of each of the signatory

Allied States fair and equitable treatment as compared with the treatment accorded to the interests of any other country.

(f) To accord to the commerce of each signatory Allied State fair and equitable treatment in respect of the foreign purchase and sale of any product with respect to which the Government of Hungary maintains a monopoly, or other State enterprise.

"2. The provisions of paragraph 1 (a) and (f) above, shall be understood to preclude the Government of Hungary from establishing or maintaining any system of governmental operation which would involve, or control over foreign trade which would require, whether formally or indirectly:

a) the sale, or offer for sale, of any product for export from Hungary to any foreign country, at a price lower than the comparable price at which the like product can be sold for export from Hungary to any third country which is a signatory Allied State: or

b) the purchase, or offer to purchase for importation into Hungary, of any product of any foreign country at a price higher than the comparable price at which the like product can be purchased for importation into Hungary from any third country.

"3. Hungary shall not be obligated to accord the treatment provided for in the foregoing paragraphs to any signatory Allied State which does not in fact accord in like matters reciprocal treatment to Hungary, it being understood that the reciprocal treatment herein provided for is subject to the exceptions customarily included in the commercial treaties of such Allied State and of Hungary. It is further understood that Hungary shall be free to adopt, notwithstanding clauses (3) and (4) of paragraph 1(a), above, such measures as may be necessary to ensure the importation into Hungary of goods essential to Hungarian civilian life and to the reconstruction of the Hungarian economy. However, Hungary undertakes to give effect to the provisions of these clauses to the maximum extent possible.

"4. The provisions of this Article shall supersede any other treaties, agreements, or arrangements which are inconsistent with the provisions of this Article, and which Hungary may have concluded with any State party to the present treaty. Furthermore, Hungary undertakes to seek the termination of any other treaties, agreements, or arrangements which are inconsistent with the provisions of this Article and which Hungary may have concluded with any other State."

Paragraph 4 above, which provides for the abrogation of any arrangements inconsistent with the principles of most-favored-nation and non-discriminatory treatment, would give this Govt a sound basis for protesting against any discriminatory provision of the agreements concluded between the USSR and Rumania and Hungary. It is suggested that a strong position be taken in support of the inclusion in the peace treaties of the language in paragraph 4 of quoted section above.

Washington, September 18, 1945—7 p. m.

8121. Secdel 73. Although specific Greek claims against Italy have already been submitted to the Council of Foreign Ministers, the Greek Ambassador ⁸⁰ reiterated to me in a call September 17 his Government's view that, in principle, Greece richly deserves some reparations from Italy. The Ambassador said that despite the unstable Italian economic situation, Greek needs are sufficiently pressing to warrant the granting of certain Italian produce and merchant shipping, and his Government felt this should be possible without upsetting the Italian economy. I emphasized the critical state of the situation in Italy and the danger of a complete breakdown if substantial amounts of goods were to be removed for reparations.

The Greek Ambassador informed me regretfully, though unofficially, of his imminent departure from Washington to become Director General in the Greek Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

1. ITALY: PROCEDURE FOR PREPARING PEACE TREATY (Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 5th Meeting, Minute 2)

Before stating the views of the Australian Government on the problem of the Yugoslav Frontier and Trieste, Dr. Evatt referred to the procedure for consultation with Governments not represented on the Council which were directly interested in the peace settlement with Italy.

DR. EVATT recalled that at the Council's meeting that morning (C.F.M.(P)(45) 8th Meeting) the Chairman had said that the best way to secure just and peaceful settlements was to have wider and more open discussions with all interested parties. He welcomed this statement and particularly the fact that this meeting of the Council, facing an important issue of territorial adjustment, was hearing the views, not only of the countries directly interested, but also those whose claim to be heard was founded on the fact that they had been active belligerents in the war.

That applied to Australia because from the date of the outbreak of war in 1939 she had been engaged in total war both in Europe and in the Pacific. Her interest did not spring from any territorial claim, but from the heavy sacrifices she had made as a belligerent, and the fact that for ten of the last thirty years she had been actively engaged in wars which actually broke out in Europe. She therefore claimed the right to participate, to some reasonable degree, in the settlement of European questions and was glad to have an opportunity of putting her views before the Council.

The specific question on which Australia has been asked to give her views was, however, only one aspect of the peace settlement with Italy. As all members of the Council were aware, the claim made by Australia and other States in her position was that it would be wiser, and more expedient, and certainly more just, that some arrangement should be made for such countries to be heard on all aspects of the Italian peace settlement, either by expressing their views orally to the Council, or by being assured that any draft treaty prepared by the Council would be open to full review by a Conference of all States which had from the beginning been active belligerents in the war.

It was almost as important that the procedure for reaching the peace settlement should be just as that the settlement itself should be just. This procedure should be democratic, and participation in it should not be limited to the great Powers. President Wilson had said that peace covenants should be openly arrived at. This was not practicable to the fullest extent, but the principle behind it was practical. The Dominion of Canada was not present at this meeting of the Council because her Government desired recognition of a broader principle of consultation than that implied in an invitation to express views on one particular aspect of the settlement. He made this claim, not on behalf of Australia only, but on behalf of all countries not represented on the Council which had made a substantial contribution to Italy's defeat. They were not many in number—there were many nominally at war with Italy, but only a few had taken an active part in the fighting—and he hoped that the Council would devise a regular procedure for bringing them into consultation.

Mr. Campbell, in the course of his statement on the problem of the Yugoslav-Italian Frontier, said that the Government of New Zealand, as one of the active belligerents seeking a just and enduring peace, were vitally interested in the terms of the peace settlement with Italy; and claimed a right to take part in the preparation of the Peace Treaty.

Mr. Heaton Nicholls, in the course of his statement, said that, on behalf of the South African Government, he joined with the representatives of Australia and New Zealand in asserting the right of his Government to express their views on all aspects of the peace settlement with Italy. Those countries which had made a substantial contribution towards Italy's defeat and would share in the future burden of maintaining world peace were entitled to be consulted in the preparation of the Peace Treaties.

M. BIDAULT said that the Council of Foreign Ministers would bear in mind the claims put forward by the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa to be consulted on other aspects of the peace settlements with Italy.

Views of Governments of British Dominions

The views of the Australian Government on this question were stated to the Council by Dr. H. V. Evatt. A summary of Dr. Evatt's statement is being circulated separately as C.F.M.(45) 28.81

The views of the New Zealand Government were stated to the Council by Mr. R. M. Campbell. The text of Mr. Campbell's statement is reproduced in C.F.M.(45) 29.82

⁸² The summary of Mr. Campbell's statement is not printed. He stated that New Zealand would support a Yugoslav-Italian frontier based on the ethnic line, reducing to a minimum the number of Yugoslavs and Italians in the territory of each other. As to Trieste, the New Zealand Government felt that forming Trieste, and such adjacent territory as might be expedient, into a separate enclave under the protection of the United Nations was the least objectionable of the possible alternatives.

The summary of Dr. Evatt's statement is not printed. He proposed that the ethnographical line be adopted as the frontier between Yugoslavia and Italy and that Trieste should be demilitarized and placed under the control of an international body on which both the Italian and Yugoslav Governments would be represented and with which might be associated an advisory body representing the population of Trieste itself. Dr. Evatt's draft proposals for an international body to control Trieste were set forth in C.F.M. (45) 32, September 20, p. 284.

The views of the South African Government were stated to the Council by Mr. Heaton Nicholls. A summary of Mr. Nicholls' statement is being circulated separately as C.F.M.(45) 30.83

Further Views of the Yugoslav Government

M. Kardelj made a further statement in reply to the views expressed by the representative of the Italian Government at the Council's meeting that afternoon (C.F.M.(P)(45) 9th Meeting).

I have the honour, under instructions received, to request Your Excellency to inform the Council of Foreign Ministers that the Netherlands Government wish to have the fullest opportunity of taking part in any discussion which may take place in the Council referring to the determination of the Western boundaries of Germany or any part thereof.

I may add that the Netherlands Government have in July last notified the American, British, French and Soviet Governments of the desire expressed above.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

[London,] September 19, 1945.

Participants: The Secretary

Mr. Dunn Mr. Bohlen Mr. Molotov

Ambassador Gusev

Mr. Pavlov

Mr. Molorov said he had come to see the Secretary in order to inquire what the prospects were for the discussion concerning the Balkan treaties.

THE SECRETARY replied that, as he had told Mr. Molotov on Sunday, he was prepared then, but would have to state his position which Mr. Molotov knew; namely, that they could not sign treaties with the governments that they did not recognize. He said it was still his hope that some solution would be found which would permit us to clear up this troublesome question.

Mr. Molorov said that he wished to make it clear that the Soviet Union looked upon the treaties with all the Axis satellites including Italy in the same way. The Soviet Government could not discriminate in any way against these various satellites. He said in regard to Rumania, Finland, and Hungary the United States was already a signatory, and that the Soviet Government was proposing nothing new. He said he was forced to tell the Secretary that if the United States refused to sign the treaties with Rumania and Bulgaria, the Soviet Union could not sign the treaty with Italy.

THE SECRETARY said that he had come to see Mr. Molotov on Sunday in order to discuss privately this difficult question. He said he had nothing to add to what he had said then; the President had made his opposition clear at Potsdam, and that we had since then looked into the question more fully, and had become more than ever convinced that we could not recognize these governments. He was sorry that this was so, but he knew that if he was to present a treaty with these governments for ratification to the United States Senate, they would immediately ask whether he could assure them that these governments were representative. That he would be unable to do, and the Senate would not ratify any treaty under those conditions. He added that in regard to Finland and Italy, the situation was quite different and demonstrated how impossible it was to consider all these states in one category. He said in these countries it appeared to us that the governments were representative and imposed no restrictions on political life. He said in Bulgaria and Rumania, however, we were denied the opportunity of obtaining the necessary information on which to convince ourselves concerning these governments. He said in regard to Hungary, we were still conducting our investigation as to the character of that Government. He wished, he said, to repeat what he had said on Sunday: that the United States had no desire to see the formation of governments hostile to the Soviet Union in these countries.

Mr. Molotov replied that he did not believe this was so.

The Secretary said he must believe it, and that he must also understand that our Government had to take cognizance of the Senate in our own country. If we were to recognize these governments, our people would consider that we had acted contrary to the spirit of the Yalta Declaration. If some changes could be made which would render these governments representative, the elections held—this would be greeted with joy in the United States, and it would permit him to defend the Soviet position as he would like to be able to do.

Mr. Molotov answered that since he knew less than Mr. Byrnes about the Senate of the United States, he would not comment; but that he did know well enough the internal situation in the Soviet Union, and he could assure Mr. Byrnes that if they signed a treaty with Italy and not with the neighboring satellite states, the Soviet Union would not accept it. He added he was unable to understand the Secretary's position since it was obvious that the Rumanian government was more democratic than the Italian. He added that he had looked into the matter of United States correspondents in Rumania, and discovered that there were seventeen, aside from British correspondents, whereas there were only two Soviet correspondents. He said that if the Rumanian Government could not satisfy all the whims of the United States correspondents, that could only be a pretext for our displeasure. The most important thing was the feelings of the people, and the people were overwhelmingly for their present government. He said the only reason that he could find for our attitude was that the present government was friendly to the Soviet Union, and that the United States did not want that. If that were true, it was very sad, but the Soviet Union could never tolerate a hostile government. He pointed out that the United States and Great Britain had supported the former government of Radescu which had been hostile to the Soviet Union, but was unwilling to support the friendly government. He said if this was the attitude of the United States, it was better to say so frankly.

THE SECRETARY replied emphatically that there was not a grain of truth in that, and that we had not recognized the Groza Government because of the manner in which it had been established and its subsequent actions, and had no reference whatever to their attitude toward the Soviet Union. He recalled that Mr. Vyshinski had given the King two and a half hours to install Groza. He said there had been no change in the view of the United States Government since that time. He went on to say that he felt one of the troubles was that Soviet representatives on the spot provided Mr. Molotov with different information than the United States representatives sent him. He said if he had any such ideas of hostility to the Soviet Union that he himself would not be having this friendly talk with Mr. Molotov nor entertain the feelings of friendship he had for the Soviet people. Just because it was impossible for our countries to agree on one question, it was entirely unjustified to attempt to read into that hostile intentions. He recalled that for weeks and weeks after Yalta we had discussed Poland and had eventually reached a solution which gave various parties in Poland adequate representation. He said no one would be happier than he if some such solution would be found in this connection. He said he thought of no one connected with the Italian Government nor with the Rumanian Government, and that it was not a question of the people in authority but of representative temporary governments. He continued that when he came into the Department he was new and did not know our representatives, and he had wondered whether some of the reports might not be colored. But since then he had checked with the reports of our military members of the Control Commission, with the press, and with all our State Department representatives, and he found that they all coincided, and therefore he had naturally come to the conclusion that they were He emphasized that the United States desired nothing but friendship with the Soviet Union since we were convinced that the whole future of the world rested on us two. And he wished to plead with Mr. Molotov to endeavor to find some representative Rumanian figures who would at the same time be friendly, and thus permit this matter to be straightened out.

Mr. Molotov replied that possibly the Secretary had Maniu ⁸⁷ and Bratianu ⁸⁸ in view when he spoke of "representative" Rumanians not in the government.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had no particular individuals in mind, nor any particular party.

Mr. Molotov replied that he would like to submit for the Secretary's verification his next statement if he had any doubts; namely, that when the Groza government was formed Maniu and Bratianu had been invited to join, but had refused on the grounds that they had not been offered enough posts. The Social Democrat, Peasant, Communist, and Liberal Parties representatives as well as non-party people were in the government.

Iuliu Maniu, President of the Rumanian National Peasant Party.

THE SECRETARY said all he was trying to say was that in our view this government had been imposed upon Rumania over the King's objection by our good friend Mr. Vyshinski, and that furthermore according to our information, when the Agrarian Party, for example, attempted to hold meetings and put forward its candidates, the militia broke up the meetings and put forward persons not representative of the party. He said he did not believe the Soviet Union would care to be associated with such actions.

Mr. Molotov said that was true. He went on to say in regard to Poland it had been a different question: there were two governments and the discussion finally came down to two figures, Mikolajczyk sa and Arciszewski,90 and he would like to know who in Rumania the Secretary had in mind. He repeated that Maniu and Bratianu had been offered a place but had refused. He said with respect to his colleague Mr. Vyshinski, he had been pleased to hear the Secretary's expression of friendship for him, but felt that he exaggerated his role in Rumanian affairs. He said that in confidence he could say it was true that Mr. Vyshinski had helped in the formation of the Government; that had even been published, but that if the Soviet Government had not helped the Rumanian, there was very serious danger of disorder and civil war. He said he seemed to recall that the United States and Great Britain had acted the same way in Italy without any protest from the Soviet Government. He went on to say that he had not noticed that the United States had in any way interfered with Great Britain when she established an entirely undemocratic government in Greece, but had even agreed to be connected with the elections and thus covered with its broad back the undemocratic actions of the Greek Government.

He added that the United States was helping Britain in every way in all sorts of dubious and unlovely affairs. He repeated that the Polish formula was not suitable. He then said that if the Secretary felt it necessary to express his views on the Government in Rumania, then the Soviet Government would have no alternative but to express its views with regard to the policy of the United States toward Rumania.

THE SECRETARY said he could have no objection to Mr. Molotov's saying what he wished.

Mr. Molorov replied that he did not wish to do so, but that the United States left them no alternative.

THE SECRETARY stated that such a discussion would give him no pleasure, and that was why he had come to see Mr. Molotov privately in order to discuss these matters calmly and avoid public discussion on matters on which we were not in accord. He added that the whole world knew our position in regard to the Rumanian and Bulgarian Governments, and that he was therefore adding nothing new, and that there therefore had been no change in American policy.

Mr. Molorov suggested why not wait until after elections and then there would be a government with which these treaties could be concluded. He said that the present attitude of the U.S. Government was in distinction of that of President Roosevelt, who had been friendly to the Soviet Government.

THE SECRETARY repeated that there had been no change, and that our position in regard to Rumania had been set soon after Yalta.

As to Greece, he said that President Roosevelt, Marshal Stalin, and Prime Minister Churchill had reached an agreement at Yalta in respect to policy in Liberated Europe in which we had agreed to help in the conduct of elections in order to insure a representative government. He said that we had agreed to help supervise the elections in Greece not from any desire to serve Britain's interest nor for any other reason except to redeem the pledge given by our late President, and that we were sending in the best people we could find, of the highest character who would report nothing but the truth. He repeated that it was only in conformity with our agreement at Yalta that we were sending people to Greece.

Mr. Molorov asked why we were demanding the reorganization of the Rumanian Government, but not of Greece which was much less democratic. He repeated that we were backing the British in every way, and that there had been a change in policy from that of Roosevelt's.

THE SECRETARY repeated that there had been no change, and that we had agreed to help supervise the Greek elections in accordance with the pledge made by President Roosevelt himself.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Union had refused to be involved in the dirty business in Greece, and concluded that he would not burden the Secretary further.

1. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: YUGOSLAV-ITALIAN FRONTIER AND TRIESTE (Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 10th Meeting, Minute 2)

The Council discussed the question of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and Trieste in the light of the views expressed at the meeting on the previous day by the Governments of Yugoslavia, Italy, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

Mr. Bevin said that the problem for the Council was to devise a settlement which would secure for the population of the Julian March the means of peaceful development. He hoped that the Council would accept the principle that the peace settlement should be so designed that no nation could use racial differences to promote further conflict. He found it difficult to believe, from his experience of working people over the last 35 years, that the people themselves wished for these conflicts; and he believed that it should be possible to find a solution of this particular problem which would enable the two peoples in this area to live peacefully together.

As regards Trieste, after hearing the views expressed to the Council on the previous day, he still felt that it would be wrong to remove this city from the control of Italy. Trieste should continue to form part of Italy, and handle the Italian transit trade, but it could at the same time, as a free port, serve as a transit port for central Europe. The proposals put forward by the British Delegation (paragraph 5 of C.F.M.(45) 3 91) were designed to maintain the connection of Trieste with both Italy and central Europe, so that the products of industry and commerce in North Italy could continue to flow through Trieste and at the same time the trade of central Europe could have an outlet to the Adriatic under proper control. This proposal should not be rejected on the basis of Trieste's history between the two wars, because this was due to the deliberate policy of Germany. One should now be able to assume that the Great Powers would refrain from arousing bitterness between the two peoples which would hinder the natural development of the port of Trieste.

The views put before the Council by the Governments whose representatives had been heard on the previous day did not lead him to suggest any modification of the proposals originally put forward by the British Delegation.

M. Molorov said that the Soviet Delegation were not bound by any document submitted or decision taken before hearing the views of the countries concerned. Nor were they bound by any obligations assumed without the knowledge of the parties concerned. The Council should consider this problem impartially. From the statements made to the Council on the previous day he had derived the impression that the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa favoured the Yugoslav claims rather than those of Italy. He himself felt that if the Yugoslav representatives had advanced only half the arguments which they had put forward, these would have given sufficient reason for the Council to view their claims with sympathy.

The Soviet Delegation felt that in seeking a settlement of this problem the Council should be guided by two principles:—(a) Their task, in accordance with the Atlantic Charter, was to secure to every nation conditions enabling it to live according to its wishes and with its national interests unimpaired. (b) Their task was to lay the foundations of an enduring peace, not merely to meet the passing needs of the moment.

After the last war this territory was ceded to Italy. It was now clear that this action could not be justified, since the territory was not truly Italian. Any British or American soldier who had spent a month in this area could say that even now the population was not Italian, in spite of Mussolini's efforts to increase the number of Italians living there. Nor could Italy claim the territory because of a shortage of ports; Italy had enough ports without Trieste, which under Italian control had fallen into an economic decline. Arguments based on Italy's need for coal and bauxite were not convincing, since these could be obtained by international trade and trade agreements.

The transfer of the Julian March to Italy would be annexation by a foreign power, in pursuance of that policy of eastward expansion at the expense of the Slav peoples which had been followed by both Germany and Italy. This was the policy, long followed by the rulers of Germany, which had culminated in Hitler's seizure of the Ukraine and had further expression in Mussolini's plans to expand at the expense of the Slav peoples in Europe. This policy was based on the false doctrine of superior and inferior races, which had been utterly discredited in the course of this war. It was no accident that this war had been won by those who rejected this racial theory. It was no accident that this Council of Foreign Ministers consisted of representatives of the five nations who had not smeared their hands with this racial fallacy, which amounted in fact to no more than a policy of territorial aggrandisement through aggression.

After the last war Italy had, for the part she had played, received more territory than she needed. What claim could she found on her part in this war, in which she had fought for the most part against the Allies? He was ready to believe that the spokesman of the Italian Government who had appeared before the Council the previous day represented a democratic Italy which had rejected the racial policy and the policy of aggression adopted by Fascist Italy. Why, then, should Italy now pursue, in respect of the Julian March, the path of territorial ambition which Mussolini had followed?

It was no accident that both in the last war and in this Yugoslavia had been on the side of the Allies. Yugoslavia had no aggressive designs and claimed only what rightly belonged to her people. Yugoslavia had a rightful place among those who defended the independence of nations. The services rendered by Italy after she broke away from Germany could not be compared with those of Yugoslavia. No single country had made more sacrifices than Yugoslavia in the struggle against Germany.

As regards Trieste, he did not think it possible that this town should be detached from the Yugoslav hinterland, whose population was predominantly Slovene and Croat. When Trieste had been detached from this hinterland, it had fallen into an economic decline; and its detachment could not therefore be justified on economic grounds.

Any preliminary decisions reached by the Council on this matter must be fully checked in detailed study, as must the statements and claims made by the Yugoslav and Italian Governments; and in the light of this further study it might be found necessary to modify any preliminary decisions now taken. He felt, however, that in reaching such preliminary decisions the Council should be guided by three considerations:—(a) that, as provided in the Atlantic Charter, human rights and self-government must be restored to those who had been forcibly deprived of them; (b) that the Council must strive to establish good relations between Yugoslavia and Italy, in the interests both of these two countries and of all peace-loving nations; and (c) that any decision reached should be designed to establish a lasting peace, both in this particular area and in Europe as a whole.

M. BIDAULT said that France had no major material interest in this problem and approached it from a disinterested point of view. Both the Yugoslav and Italian peoples were friends of France. In his view the solution of this problem should be based on the requirements of a lasting peace, common-sense, a spirit of conciliation, and the rights of nations as laid down in the Atlantic Charter.

The Council appeared to be already agreed on the following points:-

(i) They recognised the heroic courage of the people of Yugoslavia in resisting invasion and liberating their territory.

(ii) They would take into account the grievous mistakes made in this area by Fascist Italy over a long period.

(iii) The frontier should be based on ethnical data, viz., the nature of the population, the language and the will of the people, economic considerations being secondary.

(iv) Trieste had a large Italian majority, but there was a large Slovene and Croat majority in the hinterland.

(v) The port of Trieste should be a free port, equally accessible under international control to all countries.

There were two outstanding points on which the Council were not vet in agreement:-

- (i) The actual line of demarcation between Yugoslavia and Italy. This could not be settled in detail at the present Conference. Could they not agree, however, in principle that the line should be determined on ethnical data?
- (ii) The question of political sovereignty over the city of Trieste. Here the facts were clear. The population of Trieste had been predominantly Italian for a long time and, subject to provision for the freedom of the port, there should be no question that political control of the city of Trieste should remain with Italy. The minimum number of Yugoslavs should be left in the city and adjustments might therefore have to be made. The Council should seek a solution which would leave as few Italians as possible in Yugoslavia and as few Yugoslavs as possible in Italy. That was both their interest and their duty.

Mr. Byrnes said that the United States Delegation were not committed to any fixed view on this matter. They had not discussed it with representatives of any other country and he only knew the views of other countries as he had heard them at the Conference on the previous day and in various communications which had been addressed to him. Like his colleagues, he sympathised with the views of Yugoslavia and could readily believe that under Mussolini's regime Yugoslavs in Italy had been badly treated. Nor could the Yugoslavs be expected to forget the wrongs which had been done to them before the war or the sufferings which they had endured during the war. But none of the Governments represented on the Council wanted to reach a settlement based on a spirit of revenge. He agreed with M. Molotov that they should be guided by the interests of the two countries concerned and by the needs of an enduring peace. While he agreed that ethnical factors were of primary importance, he thought it essential that some consideration should be given to the economic factors. The difficulty was to find any line that did not leave Yugoslavs on the Italian side and Italians on the Yugoslav side.

As regards Trieste, Mr. Byrnes said that the prosperity of the port had declined in the period between the wars, not because it had been separated from Yugoslavia in 1919, but because it had lost its commercial hinterland on the break-up of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Since 1918 it had acquired an alternative commercial hinterland in north-east Italy, which it would lose if it were now to be transferred to Yugoslavia. Yugoslav trade could not support adequately both Finne and Trieste. Trieste was not dependent on its immediate hinterland, which was mountainous and not industrialised, and it must inevitably depend on long-range traffic from north-east Italy, Austria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. It could therefore live under Italian rule with a narrow hinterland if it were made into an international port and trade and commerce through it became free. Such a solution would be in accordance with what M. Bidault had said about placing the greatest emphasis on ethnic factors, and would also serve to reduce the irritation which was bound to result from any settlement of this problem.

As regards the frontier, Mr. Byrnes said that he would put in a map ^{91a} showing a line drawn to carry out as far as possible the views which he had expressed. From the north the line would follow the western boundary of the province of Venetia Giulia to a point just north of Gorizia, leaving that town to the Italians. The line would then go south-east along the mountains, leaving Trieste to Italy. It would then divide the Istrian Peninsula, leaving the larger part of it to Yugoslavia and reaching the sea-coast at Fianona. This line would leave the areas which were solidly Yugoslav in Yugoslavia and the areas which were solidly Italian in Italy, with a few slight adjustments which on balance would be more favourable to Yugoslavia than to Italy.

M. Molorov said that he would study Mr. Byrnes's proposal carefully. He also wished to put forward for consideration the following preliminary proposals:—

(i) The frontier between Italy and Yugoslavia should be based on ethnical principles in such a manner as to leave the smallest number on a sketch map obtained from the Research Department of the British Foreign Office. The map is reproduced facing this page. A more detailed map of the proposal was subsequently prepared by the American delegation but was not distributed to the Council.

of Italians in Yugoslavia and the smallest number of Yugoslavs in Italy.

- (ii) As Trieste was the centre of a territory with a Slovene and Croat population, and had vital interests in Yugoslav territory, the city should be ceded to Yugoslavia on condition that it became a Federal unit of that country with full protection for the rights of the Italians.
- (iii) The port of Trieste should be a free port administered by an international commission, including representatives of Yugoslavia, Italy, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and other countries concerned.
- (iv) The Yugoslav Government should be invited to submit to the next session of the Council of Foreign Ministers a list of economic, transport and customs measures designed to safeguard international trade through Trieste and adequate transport facilities onwards.

Mr. Bevin said that, like other members of the Council, he wished to make it clear that his Government had not discussed this question with any other country and were not committed in any way. The Yugoslav Ambassador had left with him an aide-mémoire setting out the attitude of the Yugoslav Government, mainly on the lines which the Council had heard on the previous day. He had thought it his duty to study this aide-mémoire as he had decided to put draft proposals before the Council and he had put his proposals as clearly as he could in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the draft heads of a Treaty with Italy (C.F.M.(45) 3). He must also make it clear that the British Government were not bound by any secret treaties concluded during the last war. The British Labor Party had prophesied at the time that Italy was advancing her frontier too far into Yugoslavia and would produce the situation with which they were now confronted. He was anxious that no similar error should be made this time.

Mr. Bevin said that all the members of the Council were agreed that the line should be determined by reference to the ethnical principle and it only remained to establish the facts. The only question remaining for settlement was that of the future of the city of Trieste, since they were all agreed that the port of Trieste should be a free port under international control. The only remaining potential cause of an irredentist movement was the city and area of Trieste. As the population of the town had been mainly Italian for so long, the British Delegation took the view that the city should remain part of Italy, provision being made for securing that the Yugoslav area of the city would be as far as possible an autonomous area so that friction might be avoided and the minority problem reduced to a minimum. On the previous day they had heard little or no evidence of differences between the Yugoslavs and Italians in Trieste. Most of the outrages had occurred in the country districts where the Italians had been trying to extend their influence.

The Council agreed to resume their discussion of this question at their next meeting.

1. Italian Peace Treaty: Yugoslav-Italian Frontier and Trieste (Previous Reference C.F.M.(P) (45) 11th Meeting)

Mr. Byrnes suggested that the Council might now refer this problem for detailed study by the Deputies, who could submit their recommendations to the Council at their next Conference. He handed in draft terms of reference for this purpose.⁹²

M. Molotov suggested that it might be made clear in the terms of reference to the Deputies that the question of the sovereignty of the city of Trieste was not prejudged and could be discussed further by the Council when they received the Deputies' report. Mr. Bevin said that sovereignty over Trieste would be determined by the line as a whole. M. Molotov reiterated his belief that the question of sovereignty should not be decided now. Mr. Byrnes said that nothing was pre-judged by the terms of reference which he had proposed: the whole of the recommendations to be made by the Deputies would be open to discussion by the Council at their next Conference: and in these circumstances he thought it would be preferable not to single out for special mention the question of sovereignty over the city of

The Secretary of State's draft terms of reference read as follows: "(1) to report on the line which as closely as is practical will be the ethnic line, leaving the minimum under alien rule (2) to report on an international regime which will assure that the port and transit facilities of Trieste will be available for use on equal terms to Yugoslavia, Italy, and the states of Central Europe." (United States Delegation Minutes of the 12th Meeting—740.00119 Council/-9-1145)

Trieste. M. Molotov said that, in the light of the explanations given, he would not press his proposal for a specific amendment of the terms of reference on this point.

After further discussion, in which other amendments of the draft proposed by Mr. Byrnes were suggested and approved, the Council agreed that the Deputies should consider and report on the problem of the Yugoslav-Italian Frontier and Trieste with the following terms of reference:—

- "(1) To report on the line, which will in the main be the ethnic line leaving a minimum under alien rule, on the understanding that appropriate investigations will be carried out on the spot before the final delimitation of the frontier.
- (2) To report on an international regime which will assure that the port and transit facilities of Trieste will be available for use on equal terms by all international trade and by Yugoslavia, Italy and the states of central Europe as is customary in other free ports of the world."

2. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL MATTERS

Mr. Byrnes recalled that the draft prepared by the British Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 3) ⁹³ contained a number of clauses dealing with economic and financial relations, the settlement of which would be a matter of great complexity, in view of the large number of Governments involved. The United States Delegation did not dissent from the substance of the majority of these clauses, but thought that agreement to the main Treaty would be secured more rapidly if these questions were dealt with in separate commercial treaties between Italy and the countries concerned.

Mr. Bevin said that he could accept this proposal in general, with the reservation that the Deputies should be empowered to consider suggestions for covering some of these questions in the Peace Treaty.

M. Bidault said that, while the British draft included many matters appropriate for separate bilateral agreements, there were others (e.g. those concerning customs, navigation and civil aviation) which were of general application and should be dealt with in the Peace Treaty. He therefore supported Mr. Bevin's suggestion. The Peace Treaty must include some clauses on economic and financial questions; and it was appropriate that the Deputies should select from the British draft those questions which could not suitably be left to separate bilateral agreements.

After further discussion:

The Council instructed the Deputies to select from the draft clauses in C.F.M.(45) 3 dealing with economic and financial matters those which ought to be retained in the Peace Treaty as being of important ⁸⁸ September 12, p. 135.

general application, and should leave the remainder to be dealt with in separate bilateral agreements between Italy and the countries concerned.

3. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: SOVEREIGNTY OF ITALY

Mr. Byrnes said that the United States Delegation wished to put forward a further principle, in addition to those set out in their memorandum (C.F.M.(45) 16 94), for the guidance of the Deputies in their detailed consideration of the draft Heads of the Treaty (C.F.M. (45) 3). This was as follows:—

"The Treaty should provide for the restoration of Italian sovereignty, and the nations party to the treaty should have no rights or controls within Italy except as may be specifically provided in the treaty."

Mr. Bevin said that, while he did not object to this proposal in principle, he thought that the Deputies should consider whether the inclusion of such a provision in the Treaty might not lead to practical difficulties. For example, it might be found necessary for certain essential lines of communication in Italy to remain under Allied control for some time after the conclusion of the Peace Treaty.

The Council agreed that the Deputies should add to the draft Treaty some provision for the restoration of Italian sovereignty, on the lines suggested by the United States Delegation.

4. Italian Peace Treaty: Questions of Special Concern to China (Previous Reference C.F.M.(P) (45) 3rd Meeting, Minute 5)

Dr. Wang Shih-Chieh recalled that the Chinese Delegation had circulated two memoranda (C.F.M.(45) 13 and 14 95) on certain points of special interest to China and had suggested that these might be considered by the Deputies.

The Council instructed the Deputies to consider the issues raised in C.F.M.(45) 13 and 14.

5. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: DODECANESE ISLANDS (Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 6th Meeting, Minute 4)

Mr. Bevin recalled that the Council had not yet reached a decision on the disposal and demilitarisation of the Dodecanese Islands. If it could be agreed in principle that the islands should be ceded to Greece, the British Delegation would be ready to agree that the question of demilitarisation should be referred to the Security Council of the United Nations Organisation. The settlement of this matter was of importance to his Government, which was still responsible for the administration of the islands. An agreement on this matter would also be of considerable assistance to him in his approach to other questions before the Council.

September 14, p. 179

M. Molorov said that the Soviet Delegation required more time to study the question before they could express a view. He hoped they would be able to express their views in a day or two, so that a decision could be reached before the end of the present Conference.

After further discussion it was agreed that further consideration of this question should again be adjourned.

6. ITALY: DISPOSAL OF ITALIAN COLONIES (Previous Reference C.F.M.(P)(45) 5th Meeting, Minute 4)

At their meeting on 15th September the Council had agreed that, in considering the disposal of the Italian Colonies, the Deputies should have discretion to hear the views of any of the Governments which had been invited to express their views to the Council in writing on the terms of the peace settlement with Italy.

Mr. Bevin said that he was sorry to have to re-open this matter, but he had been reminded that Egypt was closely interested in the disposal of Italy's African possessions and he wished to suggest that the Deputies should be empowered to hear the views of the Government of Egypt. Though she had been attacked by Italy and had made a substantial contribution to the African campaign, Egypt had not actually declared war on Italy and had not therefore been included in the list of countries invited to express their views in writing on the peace settlement.

After discussion, the Council agreed that the Deputies should have discretion to consider any views which the Egyptian Government might submit in writing on the question of the disposal of the Italian Colonies.

7. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: REPARATIONS (Previous Reference C.F.M.(P) (45) 7th Meeting, Minute 4)

M. Molotov said that the Soviet Delegation regretted that it had not been found possible to agree on a total figure of reparations from Italy, and they felt bound to record their extreme dissatisfaction with the lack of progress made on this question. As matters stood, however, they saw no alternative but to refer the question to the Deputies without guidance from the Council.

Mr. Bevin said that it must be understood that the repayment of expenditure of other countries on relief for Italy must be a first charge on exports from Italy. Otherwise, a reparations plan might be devised which would have the effect that the British taxpayer would be subsidising the reparations payments of Italy.

M. Molorov suggested that this matter would arise in connection with the economic and financial clauses of the Peace Treaty, which were also to be referred to the Deputies.

Mr. Byrnes said that he would agree that the question of reparations from Italy should be referred to the Deputies if it were understood, as to this and other matters, referred to the Deputies for recommendations, that the Deputies would base their joint draft on a majority view submitting individual reports in case of his agreement [of disagreement?].

M. Molorov said that this was an interesting but new suggestion and he would like a day or two to consider it.

The Council agreed to consider at a later meeting Mr. Byrnes' proposals on procedure; and took note that, if these proposals were accepted, it could be agreed that the question of reparations from Italy should stand referred to the Deputies.

Statement by the Yugoslav Deputy Prime Minister (Kardelj) to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 31

London, 19 September, 1945.

ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: YUGOSLAV FRONTIER AND TRIESTE

REPLY OF YUGOSLAV REPRESENTATIVE TO VIEWS OF ITALIAN GOVERNMENT

The following is a record of a statement made by M. Kardelj at the Tenth Meeting of the Council on 18th September in reply to the views expressed on behalf of the Italian Government (see C.F.M.(45) 27) at the Ninth Meeting of the Council:—

"It is the wish of the people of Yugoslavia to live in peace with the Italian people. We have proved this in practice by the way in which we disarmed the Italian Army after its capitulation and by our treatment of Italian civilians in Yugoslavia and in the areas of Italy which the Yugoslavs have occupied. But friendship cannot be established by words alone. The history of Yugoslav-Italian relations has been filled with disagreements; and for the last thirty years Italy, in combination with Germany, has been a country from which misfortune has always come for Yugoslavia. It is therefore wrong to say that the friendship between the two countries has only been undermined during this war. It was undermined in the last war by the London Agreement, 96 by which the Italians claimed not only the Julian March but the Dalmatian coast.

⁹⁶ For text of the agreement between France, Russia, Great Britain and Italy, signed at London, April 26, 1915, see British Cmd. 671, Misc. No. 7 (1920).

It is not true to say that Yugoslavia freely accepted the Rapallo Treaty or that that Treaty represented a stable agreement. That Treaty was concluded only after five years of continual struggle by Yugoslavia against the London Agreement, and after two years of difficult and determined negotiations during which Italy adhered to a thesis which would have meant continued slavery for hundreds of thousands of our people.

The same is true of the Wilson Line, which was put forward, not as an ideal frontier, but as an attempt to compromise between the obligations of the Allies to Italy and the views of the people of Yugoslavia. It left to Yugoslavia in the Julian March 200,000 people of whom 30,000 were Italians. To the west of the line were 750,000 inhabitants, of whom 450,000 were Yugoslavs. It therefore represents no sacrifice by Italy in the cause of the peace in the Adriatic.

The Italian representative rightly said that Trieste could not develop naturally without proper communications with the hinterland. He therefore demanded that over half a million Yugoslavs should be annexed to Trieste and that Yugoslavia should give Italy special privileges on the railways. This claim recalls the mentality of egoism and territorial ambition which has led Italy to catastrophe in this war.

As regards the mines on the eastern shore of Istria, in territory completely inhabited by Croatians, the Italian representative based his argument on the thesis that Yugoslavia already has 16 anthracite mines and is rich in coal, whereas Italy has very little. are not correct. Yugoslavia has no anthracite mines. Before the war Yugoslavia imported annually 200,000 tons of coal. imported all the special types of coal required for her heavy industry, and coal is now more than ever necessary to Yugoslavia. It is, however, more important to realise that, in this kind of thinking, one can see the same mentality on the part of the Italians of which I spoke earlier. Italy has no coal and therefore wants Istria. She also has no oil and so tomorrow will demand Albania. This reminds one of the old arguments of Fascist Italy. I see nothing democratic or just in the argument that people should lose their national liberty because of one coal mine.

There are many other errors in the statement made by the Italian representative, and that is particularly true as regards ethnical statistics. The Italian figures have no real basis. It is true that there are no reliable statistics about the nationalities in the Julian March: such statistics as do exist are all aimed at reducing the apparent numbers of the Yugoslav population. If any credence is to be given to any of these statistics, most attention should be paid to the figures of the Austrian census of 1910, though even those were directed against the Slovene population. But even on those figures the Slovene population was in the majority, and Salvemini ^{96a} has admitted this on the basis of the Austrian statistics.

Practical experience during the war shows clearly where the Julian March begins. In the zone under Allied occupation on the side of the ethnographical frontier inhabited by Yugoslavs there is not a single village where a Slovene or Croat Liberation Committee has not been established. Those Committees continue to exist today. None of these villages has accepted an Italian Commissioner or disavowed its own National Liberation Committee.

It is true that there is no such thing as an ideal ethnographical line. But this line is the nearest thing to it. Hardly any mixed boundary belt exists: there is a sharp line almost everywhere between the Slovene and the Italian villages; only the towns are areas of mixed population.

As regards the political arguments adduced, the Italian representative said that Yugoslavia had deported thousands of Italians from the Julian March and referred to their sufferings in Zara. I do not know what he had in mind. It is true that in the first days of the Yugoslav occupation of this area many Fascists fled into Italy. It is also true that Mussolini's Italian troops fought in this area, and that many of them were killed and captured. But the prisoners have been released from the camps in Yugoslavia, and, if some have not yet returned to Italy, there cannot be many such. There are no Italian civilians interned in Yugoslavia. Even in the foreign newspapers which are hostile to Yugoslavia, the largest figure given for Italians who have "disappeared" in Yugoslavia and the Julian March is 3,000. As regards Zara, this has a population of only 14,000 and all its inhabitants are still living there.

I can understand that the Italian representative is interested in the Italian minorities in Yugoslavia, for the Italian Government has done all in its power to ensure that this minority while living in Yugoslav territory should continue to enjoy its full national life. He did not, however, mention Italy's responsibility for what the Italian army has done in Yugoslavia during the war. The Italian army occupied one-third of the territory of Yugoslavia and, up to the time of her capitulation, 437,956 Yugoslavs, civilian and military, had been killed in this area, 131,250 had been disabled, 7,450 had been held as prisoners of war, 109,437 had been interned in concentration camps, (this figure did not include the population of the Julian March), 84,512 had been employed on forced labour, 122,430 had been deported and 87,215 had been forcibly mobilised.

⁹⁶a Gaetano Salvemini, lecturer on the history of Italian civilization at Harvard University since 1933, and author of several books on Italian affairs.

The Italian representative asked that we should forget what Italy has done. This is the argument used by the Japanese. The sacrifices of Yugoslavia during the war have been enormous. I do not demand revenge, nor do I demand that our frontiers should extend into Italian territory. All that Yugoslavia demands is that the Julian March should be given to Yugoslavia and that its people should be re-united with their brothers.

To make Trieste a free city under an international regime is no solution from either the economic or the political point of view. The economic argument on this point was given this morning. As regards the political argument, Fiume is not a good precedent. It was a free city up to the time that the Italians occupied it. The same might happen in the case of Trieste if it were left with Italy. If it were restored to Yugoslavia, all the countries interested in the port would have a guarantee that their economic interests will be protected by Yugoslavia under whose control it will be a free port, as was stated this morning.

I appeal to the Council to give the closest attention to our case, since peace cannot be permanently established until the right of the smaller nations to live their own lives freely and in peace is guaranteed."

Memorandum by the French Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 33

London, 19 September, 1945.

EUROPEAN INLAND WATERWAYS

UNITED STATES PROPOSAL FOR AN EMERGENCY REGIME

The United States Memorandum* regarding an Emergency Regime for European Inland Waterways forms a useful contribution to the re-establishment of inland waterways communications in Europe and of the international regime which has proved a success, and which constitutes an essential guarantee for the countries and the areas which these waterways serve.

The idea of setting up provisional organisations endowed with large powers, pending the establishment of a definite regime would probably enable the difficulties now facing the resumption of navigation and a rational use of shipping to be overcome. The French Delegation, however, consider it necessary to emphasize that whatever emergency solutions might have to be adopted by force of circumstance, it would be wrong not to retain in the case of existing organisations, which have proved a success, everything which can be conveniently retained. It would be dangerous not to make allowance, in an emergency regime, which may have to last for some time, for the needs of the future, both by a reference to the treaties and conventions which were in force before November, 1936 on the various waterways and by providing for their application, subject to any changes introduced by the provisional agreement.³⁷ Clearly, this point was also in the mind of the United States Delegation.

The French Delegation consider, however, that still greater regard should be paid to the situation which existed previously. In the case of the Rhine Commission particularly, it is essential to maintain the special position held by France, one which she is justified in retaining in her two-fold capacity as a Great Power and a River Power. addition to the delegate whom, like the other riparian States, she would appoint, she should also hold the chairmanship of the Commission. On the question of seat, as the archives and premises needed by the Commission are at Strasbourg, it is desirable that the Commission should continue to work in that city, though a branch might be set up for present requirements at Duisbourg, which is the technical demarcation point between upstream and downstream navigation and seems to be a more suitable place than Cologne for an organisation with practical responsibilities. Furthermore, the United States proposal makes no suggestion to change the seats of the Elbe and Danube Commissions as they existed prior to 1936, (Dresden and Vienna) and it is not clear why a different procedure should be adopted for the Rhine Commission. On the Danube, if Vienna is selected, organisations would have to be delegated to other points on the river where special regulations are required.

Further, the widening of the Rhine Commission to include waterways not at present subject to its jurisdiction may necessitate certain reservations and for this purpose contact with the States concerned would seem essential.

Subject to these reservations, the French Delegation consider that the United States draft can form a useful basis for discussion and that its examination could be referred to a special Committee which should report to the Council during its session.

⁹⁷ Reference is to the decision of the German Government in November 1936 to denounce the provisions of the Treaty of Versailles relating to German waterways, terminating the modus vivendi for the Rhine, and withdrawing from the International River Commissions.

Memorandum by the United States Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 35

London, 19 September, 1945.

SUGGESTED DIRECTIVE TO THE DEPUTIES FROM THE COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS TO GOVERN THEM IN THE DRAFTING OF A TREATY OF PEACE WITH BULGARIA 98

Note: This suggested directive is submitted by the United States Delegation with the understanding that the United States will not negotiate a treaty of peace with Bulgaria until there has been established a government broadly representative of all democratic elements in the population and pledged to the earliest possible establishment through free elections of a government responsive to the will of the people, which can be recognised by the United States.

I. TERRITORIAL PROVISIONS FOR BULGARIA

- 1. The boundary between Rumania and Bulgaria as existing on January 1st, 1938 except with respect to Dobruja, where the line established by treaty of Craiova (September 7th, 1940) should be confirmed.
- 2. With respect to Yugoslavia, the boundary as existing January 1st, 1938, except for such minor rectifications in the Tsaribrod region, and, as between Bulgarian and Yugoslav Macedonia, as may be agreed upon.
- 3. Boundaries with Greece and Turkey as they existed January 1st, 1938.

american Mission in Hungary, to H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, Representative in Hungary, gives some background as to the preparation of this suggested directive. Squires, who arrived in London on September 13 to work with the United States Delegation at the Council of Foreign Ministers, wrote in part as follows: "Since it was necessary to substitute a new proposal, if we were to refuse to consider the Russian suggestion [regarding peace treaties for Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania], such a document was prepared for each of the three countries. These documents were basically the same and showed only minor variations under territorial provisions and reparations... This document [suggested directive regarding the drafting of the peace treaty with Hungary] is, as indicated, basically the same as those submitted for Rumania and Bulgaria, and represents the joint work of Mr. Barnes, Mr. Berry and myself. Certain changes and alterations were made upon the recommendation of Mr. Cannon, Mr. Dunn and other members of the Secretary's party. The directive, as attached, was accepted by the Secretary as the basis for his proposal regarding the Hungarian peace treaty." (Budapest Legation Files: 711.9 Peace Treaty) Maynard B. Barnes, Representative in Bulgaria, and Burton Y. Berry, Representative in Rumania, were both in London to work with the United States delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers.

II. POLITICO-ECONOMIC PROVISIONS

- 1. Provision should be made for special free port and transit facilities for Bulgarian trade to flow through Salonika, Kavalla and Dedeagach.
- 2. International agreements for the control of the Danube should be confirmed by the treaty.

III. HUMAN RIGHTS

By the treaty Bulgaria should voluntarily undertake to maintain a bill of rights which will guarantee freedom of speech, religious worship, language, political belief and public meeting and confirm the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the United Nations Organisation.

IV. EDUCATIONAL, PHILANTHROPIC, ETC. RIGHTS

Provision should be made to continue to prevent any discrimination against Allied associations, institutions and persons engaged in educational, scientific, philanthropic and religious activity in Bulgaria.

V. ARMAMENTS

The maintenance of armaments for land, sea and air will be closely restricted to the necessities of (a) maintenance of order in Bulgarian territory; (b) local frontier defense; (c) such military contingents, if any, in addition to the foregoing as may be required by the Security Council.

VI. WAR CRIMES

Appropriate provision will be made, preferably by a separate protocol, to deal with the war criminals, return of prisoners of war, etc.

VII. REPARATIONS

Bulgaria's reparation obligations should be limited to the payment of damages caused by Bulgaria in Greece and Yugoslavia and to compensation for war damage to United Nations property in Bulgaria. Reparation payments to Greece and Yugoslavia should consist primarily of deliveries of goods from Bulgaria, to be determined by an Allied Commission composed of representatives of the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, the United States, France, Greece and Yugoslavia.

The determination of reparations due to Greece and Yugoslavia from Bulgaria and the commencement of the delivery of reparations in kind should not await the conclusion of peace. These are matters that should be dealt with immediately, preferably by the proposed reparations Commission.

The treaty should provide for the restitution of property removed from United Nations territory by Axis forces as stipulated in Article 11 of the Armistice. It should also provide for the return of United Nations property in Bulgaria and for compensation therefor where the property is not returned in good order. The execution of these provisions of the treaty as well as those relating to reparations, should be carried out under the supervision of the Allied Commission referred to above.

The Bulgarian Government shall authorise each of the United Nations to take over and apply to their respective reparation claims such of the assets of the Bulgarian Government (excluding diplomatic and consular premises) and of Bulgarian nationals as are within the jurisdiction of the respective United Nations. Similarly, the Bulgarian Government shall undertake to transfer to the United Nations, for appropriate distribution, Bulgarian Government and private property in the neutral countries. The Bulgarian Government will undertake to indemnify, in accordance with Bulgarian law, the Bulgarian nationals whose property will thus have been requisitioned. Each of the United Nations will be free to allocate the amount received from Bulgaria to the indemnification of the State or its nationals, or the payment of debts, as it may determine as a matter of national policy.

The Bulgarian Government shall be required to recognise the transfer to the U.S.S.R., in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 9 of the Potsdam decision on German reparations, of German assets in Bulgara.99 (This transfer shall be made by the Allied Control Council in Germany).

VIII. ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL MATTERS

Provisions should be included in the treaty implementing the United States proposal which was accepted in principle in Article XXI of the Potsdam Protocol, including guarantees to Allied nationals of access, in equal terms, to Bulgarian trade, raw materials and industry. Similar provision should be made for equality of access to the use of Bulgarian ports, waterways, and aviation facilities. These provisions might be limited in their duration for a period of five years. Whether provisions respecting other economic and financial relations should be included in the treaty should be left for later consideration. In view of the complexities raised and the large number of states involved, these might preferably be left to separate treaties.

II, p. 1505, and Section III of the Protocol of the Proceedings of the Berlin Conference, ibid., p. 1485.

IX. SOVEREIGN POSITION OF BULGARIA

The treaty should provide for the restoration of Bulgarian sovereignty and the nations party to the treaty should have no rights or controls within Bulgaria except as may be specifically provided in the treaty.

SUGGESTED DIRECTIVE TO THE DEPUTIES FROM THE COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS TO GOVERN THEM IN THE DRAFTING OF A TREATY OF PRACE WITH RUMANIA

Note: This suggested directive is submitted by the United States Delegation with the understanding that the United States will not negotiate a treaty of peace with Rumania until there has been established a government broadly representative of all democratic elements in the population and pledged to the earliest possible establishment through free elections of a government responsive to the will of the people, which can be recognized by the United States.

I. TERRITORIAL PROVISIONS FOR RUMANIA

- 1. The frontier with the U.S.S.R. shall be that established by the Soviet-Rumanian Agreement of 28th June, 1940.
- 2. The frontier with Hungary shall be, in general, the frontier existing in 1938, except that as regards Transylvania determination regarding the whole or the greater part to go to Rumania shall be made after examining the respective claims of the two states.
 - 3. The frontier with Yugoslavia will remain unchanged.
 - 4. The frontier with Bulgaria will remain unchanged.

II. POLITICO-ECONOMIC PROVISIONS

International agreements for the control of the Danube should be confirmed by the treaty.

III. IV. V. [These articles are the same, mutatis mutandis, as articles III, V, and VI in Suggested Directive for Bulgaria (C.F.M. (45) 35), supra.]

VI. REPARATIONS

The treaty should provide for the delivery to the U.S.S.R. of reparations in kind as stipulated in Article 11 of the Armistice. It should also provide for the determination of the compensation payable to other countries as stipulated in Article 11 of the Armistice and for completing the restoration of Allied property in Rumania to its owners or payment therefor when the property is not returned in good order as required by Article 13 of the Armistice. The determination of the amounts payable by Rumania on account of claims for property in Rumania, and the supervision of Rumania's execution of the treaty provisions with regard to reparations, restoration of Allied property and compensation for damage should be vested in an Allied Commission composed of representatives of the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, the United States and France.

The satisfaction of claims against Rumania on the part of countries other than the U.S.S.R. should be made primarily from Rumanian abroad. Consequently, the Rumanian Government shall authorize each of the United Nations to take over and apply to their respective reparation claims such of the assets of the Rumanian Government (excluding diplomatic and consular premises) and of Rumanian nationals as are within the jurisdiction of the respective United Nations. Similarly, the Rumanian Government shall undertake to transfer to the United Nations, other than the U.S.S.R., Rumanian government and private property in the neutral countries. The Rumanian Government will undertake to indemnify, in accordance with Rumanian law, the Rumanian nationals whose property will thus have been requisitioned. Each of the United Nations will be free to allocate the amount received from Rumania to the indemnification of the State or its nationals, or the payment of debts, as it may determine as a matter of national policy.

The Rumanian Government shall be required to recognize the transfer to the U.S.S.R., in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 9 of the Potsdam decision on German reparations, of German assets in Rumania. (This transfer shall be made by the Allied Control Council in Germany.)

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

[London,] September 20, 1945.

Participants: The Secretary

Mr. Dunn Mr. Bohlen Mr. Molotov

Ambassador Gusev

Mr. Pavlov

THE SECRETARY said he had come to see Mr. Molotov to discuss with him a matter he had had on his mind for some time. He said he recalled very well a statement in regard to Poland that Marshal Stalin had made at the Yalta Conference. He had been particularly impressed with the Marshal's observations that twice in twenty-five years Poland had been a corridor for German attack on Russia, and also his statement that there was always the danger that, as after the last war, the United States might return home and withdraw from European affairs, at which time the danger of a recrudescence of German aggression might become real. He added that, as Mr. Molotov knew, historically the United States was reluctant to enter into political treaties with foreign governments, but he wished to ask Mr. Molotov whether the Soviet Government would consider a treaty between the Four Principal Powers for the demilitarization of Germany to run for twenty or twenty-five years, would be a good thing. He went on to say that if the Soviet Government thought that this was a good idea, he would be prepared to recommend it to the President, and both of them could recommend it to the Congress. He said the details could, of course, be worked out later, but he would like to know Mr. Molotov's views as to whether such a treaty would be a real contribution toward removing fear of a recrudescence of German aggression. He felt that this fear played a large part in the policies of various European states. He said he had discussed it with the President before he left, and although it was a new idea for the President, he had been interested, and his first reaction had been favorable.

He concluded by saying that if the Soviet Union thought well of the idea, they could then talk to the French and British.

Mr. Molorov replied that he could not give the Secretary the definite views of his Government, but personally he thought it was a very interesting idea, and he would report to his Government, and they could discuss it again in a few days.

Mr. Molorov then went on to say that he wished to talk with the Secretary about our paper on Rumania.² He said he had the impression that the United States was seeking to oppose the Soviet Union in every way, and the note contained in our memorandum on Rumania was in effect a challenge directed against the Soviet Union, and to which he would be forced to reply.

THE SECRETARY said it was not intended as a challenge nor directed in any way against the Soviet Union. It was merely, as he had told Mr. Molotov privately, for the purpose of making clear that our participation in the working out of a treaty with Rumania could not be construed as an indication of our willingness to recognize the present government of Rumania.

 $^{^{2}}$ Presumably reference is to the memorandum by the United States delegation, C.F.M. (45) 36, September 19, supra.

Mr. Molorov asked why it had been necessary to put that statement in writing, and that as written it was in a very different spirit from what the Secretary said he had in mind.

THE SECRETARY replied that at Potsdam it had been agreed that each government would investigate the question of recognition, and that that was what the United States was still engaged in doing. He added that in his view the statement contained nothing new as to our position, which had been fully expressed by the President at Potsdam.

Mr. Molorov then said he would suggest that the United States Delegation withdraw the note, and the Secretary orally say what he had just told him. An oral statement making clear our position without attacking the Rumanian Government would be all right.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had no objection to stating what he had orally, but that he felt that he would have to give the reasons.

Mr. Molorov replied that that was, of course, the Secretary's business. If these attacks on the Rumanian Government were made by the United States Delegation, he would be forced to answer. He repeated his suggestion that the Secretary withdraw the note and confine himself to an oral statement that our participation in the drawing up of the treaty should not be construed as recognition.

THE SECRETARY said he was unable to withdraw the note under the circumstances.

Mr. Molorov replied, in that case he would have to come to the — defense of the Rumanian Government and reply to the attack on the Soviet Government.

THE SECRETARY said that was Mr. Molotov's right, but that he in turn might find it necessary to reply to Mr. Molotov. He expressed regret that Mr. Molotov chose to take our position in such a wrong way.

1. Procedure: Publication of Decisions of Council (Previous Reference C.F.M.(P)(45) 1st Meeting, Minute 1)

M. Molorov said that the decision taken by the Council on the previous day about the Yugoslav-Italian Frontier and Trieste (C.F.M. (P) (45) 12th Meeting, Minute 1) had been published without his consent.⁴ He proposed that, for the future, communiqués regarding the work of the Council should not include information about decisions taken unless the Council had agreed that those decisions might be published.

Mr. Bevin referred to the discussion about Press arrangements at the First Meeting of the Council (C.F.M.(P)(45) 1st Meeting, Minute 1, paragraph (f)) and explained the circumstances in which the communiqué had been issued the previous evening by the Press Communiqué Committee. He considered that no blame attached to the Committee.

DR. WANG SHIH-CHIEH said that according to the procedure decided at the Council's first meeting all communiqués should be agreed. If decisions of the Council were to be contained in such communiqués, their publication should of course be agreed also. The question had been raised by whom they should be agreed—by the Press Communiqué Committee or by the Council. His interpretation was that they should be agreed upon by all the members of the Press Communiqué Committee and, if difficulties arose on that Committee, the matter should be referred by them to the Council.

The Council:-

(1) Agreed that future communiqués should not announce decisions reached by the Council unless the Council had agreed that those decisions might be published.

(2) Endorsed the view that no blame attached to the Communiqué Committee for having published the terms of the Council's decision on the problem of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and Trieste.

⁴ For text of the communiqué released to the press by the Council of Foreign Ministers on the evening of September 19, see Department of State Bulletin, October 14, 1945, p. 565.

2. FINLAND: PEACE TREATY

The Council agreed to examine the proposals for a Peace Treaty with Finland set out in memoranda by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M. (45) 7) and the British Delegation (C.F.M. (45) 25).

Mr. Byrnes recalled that the United States, not being at war with Finland, would not be a signatory to the Peace Treaty; and the United States Delegation did not desire to express any views on these proposals. It should, however, be understood that any decisions taken by the Council on the Peace Treaty with Finland, either on the substance of the Treaty or on the procedure for its preparation, must not be regarded as establishing any precedent for the Treaties with the other satellite States.

M. BIDAULT said that in substance he agreed with Mr. Byrnes. France also was not at war with Finland. While the Council was concerned with the settlement for Europe as a whole, the Peace Treaty with each of the four satellite countries should be examined independently on its merits, on the basis of the historical and political circumstances of each case.

In the discussion which followed, paragraphs 3-8 of the memorandum by the British Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 25) were discussed seriatim; as follows:—

Armaments (Paragraph 3)

M. Molorov asked why the British Delegation proposed that Article 4 of the Armistice Terms with Finland should be taken as a basis for provisions in the Peace Treaty restricting the peace-time military establishments of Finland.

Mr. Bevin explained that, in the view of the British Delegation, all the Peace Treaties with ex-enemy satellite States should contain provisions for restricting their peace-time military establishments. The Council had already accepted in principle similar provisions for the Peace Treaty with Italy.

M. Molotov said that it was necessary to distinguish between Germany and Italy, the great ex-enemy Powers, and small countries like

⁵ C.F.M. (45) 7, September 12, p. 148, and C.F.M. (45) 25, September 18, p. 228. According to the American minutes of this meeting, Molotov began the consideration of a draft treaty with Finland in the following words: "Molotov said that proposals had been put forward by the Soviet Delegation, but that the British Delegation had also distributed proposals. The substance of the Soviet proposal was that the armistice terms be transformed into a peace treaty. These armistice terms should, of course, be redrafted where required and completed by including such clauses as were required. The British proposals were for a peace treaty with Finland. Molotov thought they should take as a basis the armistice terms subject to the modifications necessary. He proposed that as a basis for their discussions of the peace treaty with Finland they take the proposals made by the Soviet Delegation, and that while discussing them they should also consider the proposals made by the British Delegation." (740.00119-Council/9-1145)

Finland. It could not be supposed that Finland could threaten the peace of Europe. The Soviet Union, which was the country most directly concerned with the possibility of Finnish agression, had not asked for any restrictions on her military establishments in the Treaty made in 1940,6 and did not think them necessary now. Finland would never undertake a war of aggression without some powerful Ally such as Germany; the correct policy was, therefore, to prevent Germany from becoming capable of further aggression, rather than to make demands upon Finland which were not justified by necessity and would affront her national pride.

Mr. Bevin said that the United Kingdom Delegation could not accept this view. It was not enough to say that a small country like Finland could not maintain such forces as would constitute a threat to peace: the Council should look to the peace and security of Europe as a whole. The British Delegation must stand by the principle that limitations on the military establishment of ex-enemy States must be included in the Peace Treaties with those States. His acceptance of other provisions in the proposed Treaty for Finland would be conditional upon an agreement satisfactory to the British Delegation regarding this proposal for the limitation of military establishments.

Continuance of Military Facilities (Paragraph 4)

M. Molorov agreed that, on the conclusion of the Peace Treaty, facilities of a military nature would no longer be required of the Finnish Government.

Return of Allied Vessels (Paragraph 5)

M. Molotov said that further consideration must be given to the suggestion of the British Delegation that the Peace Treaty should contain some provision on the lines of Article 18 of the Armistice, concerning the return of Allied vessels, etc. The Soviet Delegation did not think this necessary, since they believed that, before the time came for the Treaty to be concluded, Finland would have carried out her obligations under this Article. If the British Delegation had

⁷ The United States delegation minutes of this meeting of the Council do not

The United States delegation minutes of this meeting of the Council do not record any agreement by Molotov to point 4 of the British proposal (C.F.M. (45) 25). According to these minutes, the following exchange took place at this point in the meeting:

[&]quot;BEVIN proposed that they postpone consideration of the Finnish treaty. "Molotov did not wish to change the procedure of taking up items in order. They could put off discussion of point 4 of the British proposal until a later meeting, but they could proceed with the discussion of other points in the Finnish treaty, as had been done in the case of Italy.

[&]quot;Bevin reserved his position until the end of the discussion on the treaty when they would have received an answer on this point." (740.00119 Council/9-1145) any reason to doubt this, however, he would agree that the point should be further considered.

Mr. Bevin said that, while he hoped M. Molotov's belief would prove to be correct, he would like this point to be further examined.

Resumption of Diplomatic and Consular Relations (Paragraph 6(i))

M. Molorov asked why it was suggested that the Allied Powers should have "the right to appoint Consuls at such places and in such numbers as each might decide". It had not been suggested that any such demand should be made of Italy.

Mr. Bevin explained that the object of the proposal was to ensure that no obstructions were placed in the way of the appointment of Allied Consuls in Finland. He would not press that this should be expressly covered in the Treaty, if the substance of his requirement was met, either by a suitable assurance or perhaps by the insertion in the Treaty of some other provision which would cover it—e.g. a clause dealing with the restoration of Finnish sovereignty on the lines of that accepted by the Council for inclusion in the Italian Treaty.

(Later in the meeting Mr. Bevin offered to withdraw the second sentence of paragraph 6(i) of C.F.M.(45) 25).

Position of International Organisations (Paragraph 6 (ii) and (iii))

M. Molorov said that the proposals that Finland should accept the liquidation of the League of Nations and Permanent Court of International Justice, and should recognise the authority of the United Nations Organisation, were in his view covered by the Soviet proposal that Finland should be required to co-operate with the Allied Powers and execute such measures as they might adopt for the maintenance of world peace (C.F.M.(45) 7, paragraph 3).

Mr. Bevin agreed that the proposals in paragraphs 6 (ii) and (iii) of C.F.M.(45) 25 should be considered in connection with the proposal in paragraph 3 of C.F.M.(45) 7.

Position of Existing Treaties (Paragraph 6(iv))

M. Molotov suggested, and Mr. Bevin agreed, that further consideration should be given to this proposal, in order to specify which Treaties Finland should be required to keep in force and which Treaties she should abrogate.

Bill of Rights (Paragraph 6(v))

M. Molotov said that the Soviet Delegation accepted in principle the proposed provision that Finland should maintain a Bill of Rights on the lines already accepted for inclusion in the Italian Peace Treaty. He suggested, and Mr. Bevin agreed, that the details of such a clause would require examination.

War Graves (Paragraph 6(vi))

In reply to M. Molotov, Mr. Bevin said that the British Delegation regarded it as important that the Peace Treaty should contain provisions regarding the war graves of Allied Nationals in Finland. It was agreed that this proposal required detailed consideration.

Procedure for further study

M. Molorov recalled that at their first meeting the Council, departing somewhat from the terms of reference laid down at the Berlin Conference, had agreed that all five members of the Council should participate in all discussions, whether or not they were all directly concerned. The present discussion concerned only two members of the Council and the other three members had not in fact taken part in it. This suggested that the best procedure for dealing with those matters requiring further study would be to refer them, not to the Deputies as a whole, but to a special committee comprising representatives of the British and Soviet Governments only, whose function would be to examine in the light of the discussion which had just taken place the proposals put forward in the memoranda by the British and Soviet Delegations, and to make recommendations to the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Bevin said that this proposal would establish a precedent for the Treaties with the other ex-enemy Satellite States, and he was not prepared to accept it. He had suggested that the proposals in both memoranda should be referred to the Deputies for further consideration, subject only to his reservation on the question of armaments. He would now go further and, if M. Molotov would agree that the Deputies should consider the proposals in the United Kingdom memorandum, including those on economic and financial questions in paragraph 7, he would be prepared to withdraw the proposal, to which M. Molotov had taken exception, regarding the appointment of Consuls (paragraph 6, sub-paragraph (i), second sentence).

M. Molorov agreed that the economic and financial proposals in the United Kingdom memorandum required further consideration. He still thought, however, that his proposal for future procedure was the most practical one. If Mr. Bevin was not prepared to accept it now, he would revert to it again at a later meeting.

Admission to United Nations Organisation (Paragraph 8)

Mr. Bevin referred to the statement in the Soviet memorandum (paragraph 3) that "the Allied powers will support Finland's candidature for membership of the United Nations Organisation". If this meant that the British Government were expected to commit themselves to such support in advance, he could not accept it. He had the highest regard for the Finnish people and his Government were determined to do all in their power to assist Finnish recovery. A general understanding between the Allied powers that they would at the appropriate time support an application from Finland to join the World Organisation was one thing, but he could not accept a suggestion that his Government should enter into a hard and fast obligation in advance.

M. Molotov said that the Soviet Delegation must then enter a similar reservation with regard to Italy.

The Council agreed that further discussion of the Finnish Peace Treaty should be adjourned.

1. FINLAND: PEACE TREATY

(Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 13th Meeting, Minute 2)

The Council continued their discussion of the procedure for further consideration of the draft Peace Treaty with Finland.

M. BIDAULT said that, as he understood it, all subjects on the Agenda of the Council were open to discussion by all Delegations. He would not like consideration of the Finnish Peace Treaty to reach its final stages without the French Delegation having an opportunity to state their views. If the Council accepted the proposal of the Soviet Delegation that this subject should be referred for detailed study to an Anglo-Soviet Commission, he would not wish that their report should be submitted directly to the Council, but rather that there should be some intermediate stage at which the French Delegation could express their views.

After further discussion the Council agreed to postpone further consideration of the procedure for dealing with the Finnish Peace Treaty.

2. ROUMANIA: PEACE TREATY

The Council had before them memoranda on this subject by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 8), the British Delegation (C.F.M. (45) 21) and the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 36).

Mr. Byrnes drew attention to the note prefixed to the memorandum by the United States Delegation declaring that the United States Government would not negotiate a Peace Treaty with Roumania until a broadly representative government had been established in that country. This note had been prefixed to the memorandum in order that no misunderstanding should arise from the fact that the United States Delegation had participated in discussion of the draft Treaty. With this reservation, however, he was ready to proceed with the discussion of the memoranda before the Council.

M. Molorov said that while he could not ignore this statement he was willing to deal with it when the question of recognising the Roumanian Government came up for discussion.

He suggested that, as a basis for their discussion of the draft Treaty for Roumania, the Council should take the Soviet Delegation's proposals (C.F.M.(45) 8), and the modifications and additions suggested by the British Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 21) and should then consider the proposals of the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 36).

Armaments (Paragraph 3 of C.F.M.(45) 21).

M. Molorov said that, unlike Italy, Roumania was not a great Power. She was a neighbour of the Soviet Union, and had fought only against the Soviet Union. She was not capable of maintaining a large army or a large war potential which might threaten the peace of Europe. Why then was it necessary to impose special restrictions on Roumania's military establishments? To restrict her armaments and, still more, to impose on her an Allied Inspectorate, would restrict her sovereignty and hurt her pride, without bringing any special benefit to the Allied cause.

Mr. Bevin said that an Allied Inspectorate was proposed in order to ensure that the peace conditions were complied with. The Soviet Union was not Roumania's only neighbour, and many of Europe's troubles had begun in the Balkans. These smaller nations should not be allowed to maintain armed forces larger than their economy could support. Incidents in these countries had too often been used by the larger Powers as the occasion for major conflicts. Serbia in 1914, Poland in 1939 were examples of this. The sale of arms to small countries was also a potential source of danger. Limitation of the armaments of the smaller powers would not only assist the national economy in those countries, but would limit the possibilities of another world war.

He did not, however, insist on the wording used in the British draft on this point, and was prepared to accept Section IV of the United States memorandum (C.F.M.(45) 36).9

Mr. Byrnes said that the United States Delegation attached very great importance to this proposal. The whole world was weary of war and was looking to this Conference to lay the foundations of a lasting peace.

Italy had been an ally of Germany, and Roumania too had fought by Germany's side. The Council had already agreed on a directive which would ensure that Italy could not rearm for offensive purposes. He could see no reason why the same policy should not be applied to Roumania. Even if they were satisfied that the present Government of Roumania had no warlike intentions, they could not know how long it would remain in power. He feared rivalry in armaments among the small nations, which would eventually lead to larger conflicts in which millions might be involved. Limitation of armaments would be the greatest boon to the Balkan peoples, whose economic condition was such that they could not maintain large armies and at the same time restore the peace-time production which was essential to their economic health and happiness. If the great Powers fulfilled their promise to prevent aggression through the United Nations Organisation, these countries would have no need of large armies.

M. Molorov said that, in the light of the exchange of views which had taken place, he was ready to agree that Section IV of the United States memorandum (C.F.M.(45) 36) should be taken as a basis for detailed consideration of the restriction of Roumania's military establishments.

Mr. Bevin said he would like to make clear the views of the British Government on the Balkan area as a whole. Some of the States in

[&]quot;Molotov said that so far as he personally was concerned, the thought that if one disarmed a state it could lead a quieter life had never occurred to him. Perhaps it was correct. Bevin's remarks were correct in many ways, but he had said nothing about the defense of Rumania. The Soviet Delegation proposed in regard to Rumania that they should contemplate its eventual entry into the United Nations. If they contemplate that, why plant an inspectorate in Rumania? He wondered if this were not artificial. Did they really have so many people in their countries to be sending them as inspectors, to inspect war graves, as consuls, et cetera. If these states asked for people, they could [&]quot;BEVIN asked if they had asked for all the people they had there now.

[&]quot;Molotov replied that these people were their guests.
"Bevin said he thought that they were hosts.
"Molotov said that anyway they felt like guests.

[&]quot;Bevin said he could not understand why the Soviet Delegation opposed all of these proposals in regard to inspection." (740.00119 Council/9-1145)

this area were ex-enemies, other were Allies. It was the objective of the British Government to remove the threat of aggression throughout the whole area by securing the limitation of armaments in Allied, as well as ex-enemy, countries, so that security in this area could be based, not on competitive armaments, but on a sense of confidence.

M. Molotov said that, in agreeing to accept the United States draft as a basis, he had not intended to imply that the issue was finally decided. He thought that further detailed study was needed, and he would himself prefer that this should be carried out, not by the Deputies, but by a Committee consisting of representatives of the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and the United States. Secondly, he thought it was a matter for further consideration whether an Allied Inspectorate or other enforcement machinery would be required, or whether it would be possible to dispense with any machinery for enforcement.

After further discussion, the Council:-

(1) Agreed that Section IV of C.F.M.(45) 36 should be accepted as a basis for detailed study of this question, and that this study should include the question whether any machinery was required (whether in the form of an Allied Inspectorate or otherwise) for enforcing any restrictions which it might be decided to impose on Roumania's military establishments.

(2) Agreed to adjourn to a later meeting further discussion of the procedure by which detailed study of these and other proposals for inclusion in the Treaties with the ex-enemy satellite States should be carried out.

Soviet-Roumanian Frontier (Paragraph 4 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that Article 4 of the Armistice Terms should be accepted as a basis for discussion.

Return of Allied Vessels (Paragraph 5 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that this question should be referred for detailed study and report to the Council.

War Crimes (Paragraph 6 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that Article 14 of the Armistice Terms should be accepted as the basis for dealing with the question of apprehending and trying persons accused of war crimes.

Fascist organisations (Paragraph 7 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that Article 15 of the Armistice Terms should be accepted as a basis of discussion for dealing with pro-Hitler, pro-Fascist and other organisations in Roumania conducting propaganda hostile to the United Nations, on the understanding that the examining body would consider whether, in view of the action already taken by the Roumanian Government under Article 15 of the Armistice Terms, it was necessary to make any provision for this point in the Treaty. Withdrawal of Allied Forces (Paragraph 8 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that, on the conclusion of the Peace Treaty all Allied forces would be withdrawn from Roumania (except as might be provided for the maintenance of the lines of communication of the Red Army with the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria) and that all unused currency and goods would be returned to the Roumanian Government.

Transylvania (Paragraph 9 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

The British and United States Delegations proposed that the frontier with Hungary should be, in general, the frontier existing in 1938, except that as regards Transylvania determination regarding the whole or the greater part to go to Roumania should be made after examining the respective claims of the two States.

M. Molotov said that the task of the Council was to liquidate the Vienna Award 9a and restore the award of the Treaty of Trianon. 10 He thought that this decision could be taken without further enquiry.

Mr. Bevin recalled that Article 19 of the Armistice Terms provided that "Transylvania (or the greater part thereof) should be returned to Roumania, subject to confirmation at the peace settlement". All that the British Delegation wanted was to get a just and equitable frontier so that future conflict might be avoided.

M. BIDAULT suggested that in this matter the Council should follow the policy which they had adopted with regard to the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and seek, after investigation on the spot, an ethnic line which would leave as few Hungarians as possible in Roumania and as few Roumanians as possible in Hungary. Special provisions were required to protect national minorities.

M. Molorov said that the bulk of the population of Transylvania was Roumanian, though there were many Hungarians and some Ger-These nationalities were closely intermingled, and it was impossible to draw a line which would not leave many Roumanians in Hungary and many Hungarians in Roumania. He quoted the letter which M. Millerand, then Chairman of the Paris Peace Conference, had addressed to the head of the Hungarian Delegation in April, 1920, to the following effect. "The frontiers established for Hungary by the Trianon Peace Treaty are the result of painstaking study of ethnological conditions in Central Europe and of national aspirations". It was common knowledge that the transfer of Transylvania to Roumania in 1919 had the approval of the United States, British and French Governments. The Soviet Government agreed with that decision. Hitler had disagreed with that decision and cancelled it. Their duty was to reverse Hitler's decision and restore their own. The wording of Article 19 of the Roumanian Armistice Terms had been carefully chosen so as not to tie their hands in case any new circumstances should arise. But nobody had suggested that new circumstances had arisen, and he recommended that the Trianon decision should be approved.

M. BIDAULT said that the French Delegation objected to nothing that M. Molotov had said. The Vienna Award should be cancelled and the Trianon decision confirmed.

Mr. Byrnes said that in 1919 the United States had tried for several months to secure a different line from that which was ultimately adopted; and, at the time when M. Millerand's letter was written, the United States had only an observer present at the Conference. He thought that by a slight change in the Transylvania frontier it would be possible to restore half a million Hungarians to Hungary. In the area which he had in mind there was a considerable Hungarian population, whose railway connections were almost entirely with Hungary, and to put them into Roumania would contribute neither to their happiness nor to the happiness or prosperity of Roumania. The total area of Transylvania was 39,600 square miles and the change which he had in mind would not affect more than 3,000 square miles. Where the lives of individuals were concerned, he would feel happier if the decision could be made after a detailed examination on the ground.

After further discussion Mr. Byrnes handed in the following revised draft of paragraph 2 of Section I of the United States memorandum (C.F.M.(45) 36).—"The frontier with Hungary shall be, in general, the frontier existing in 1938; however, as regards Transylvania the ethnic situation shall be examined with a view to determining whether [&]quot;The quoted portion appears to be a paraphrase of a statement in the letter of May 6, 1920, from the President of the Paris Peace Conference, Millerand, to the President of the Hungarian Peace Delegation. For text of the letter, in French, see Papers and Documents relating to the Foreign Relations of Hungary, vol. 1: 1919–1920, edited by Francis Deák and Dezsó Ujváry, published by the Royal Hungarian Ministry for Foreign Affairs (Budapest, 1939), p. 287.

the award of a small part to Hungary would materially reduce the number of persons to be subjected to alien rule".12

The Council agreed to resume consideration of this question at a later meeting.

Resumption of Diplomatic and Consular Relations (Paragraph 10(i) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

Mr. Bevin withdrew the second sentence of this paragraph of the British draft; and it was agreed that a provision should be included in the Treaty covering the resumption of diplomatic and consular relations with Roumania.

Position of International Organisations (Paragraph 10 (ii) and (iii) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

M. Molotov said that the proposals that Roumania should accept the arrangements made by the United Nations for the liquidation of the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice and should recognise the authority of the United Nations organisations, were in his view covered by the Soviet proposal that Roumania should be required to cooperate with the Allied Powers and execute such measures as they might adopt for the maintenance of world peace (paragraph 4 of C.F.M.(45) 8).

Mr. Bevin agreed that the proposals in paragraph 10 (ii) and (iii) of C.F.M.(45) 21 should be considered in connection with the proposal in paragraph 4 of C.F.M.(45) 8.

Mr. Brynes said that he had no strong objection, as the signature of the Treaty assumed prior recognition of a Government with satisfactory qualifications for admission to the United Nations.

¹² The American minutes do not record the presentation of the revised draft of paragraph 2, Section I of the United States Memorandum, but they contain the following exchange at this point in the discussion:

[&]quot;Molotov asked if they could have Mr. Byrnes' proposal in writing.
"Byrnes said he did not know where the line should be. The total area of Transylvania was 39,686 square miles. Our proposed change in the line would not affect more than 3,000 square miles or less than one-tenth the area of Transylvania. People would feel better if our decision was made after the question had been studied on the spot.

[&]quot;Molotov asked what was proposed.

[&]quot;Bevin said he was ready to accept paragraph 2 of the American paper. (at this point a map showing the line under consideration by the American Delegation was shown to Mr. Molotov).

[&]quot;Molotov said that the wording of the American paragraph 2 seemed to give an exaggerated idea of what was proposed on the map shown him by Mr. Byrnes. He thought it better to study the matter and to revert to it in a day or two.

[&]quot;Byrnes said he agreed that they pass it over until they could find language to express the United States idea better." (740.00119 Council/9-1145) The map produced at the meeting at this time not found in Department files.

International Control of Danube (Paragraph 19(iv) of C.F.M. (45) 21)

The British and United States Delegations proposed that Roumania should accept any arrangements agreed for the international regime of the Danube.

M. Molorov said that Roumania should not be asked to accept an obligation of this nature when she did know what was involved. No regime for the Danube had been agreed to, as far as he knew, and it was too much to demand acceptance of an agreement which did not even exist.

Mr. Bevin said that this proposal was not intended to prejudge the question of the administration of the Danube. All that was proposed was that, when an agreement was reached, Roumania should be required to co-operate in giving effect to it. Roumania would be a sovereign power when she signed the Treaty, and unless some such provision was included in the Treaty she would be in a position to sabotage any international agreement which had been made in respect of the Danube.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that there could be no agreement on the administration of the Danube without the agreement of the Soviet Government and they ought to ensure that Roumania would not be in a position to prevent the operation of any agreement entered into by the Soviet and other Governments.

After further discussion the Council agreed to adjourn consideration of this proposal.

Position of Existing Treaties (Paragraph 19(v) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that further consideration should be given to this proposal, in order to specify which Treaties Roumania should be required to keep in force and which Treaties she should abrogate.

Bill of Rights (Paragraph 10(vi) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that Roumania should be required to maintain a Bill of Rights on the lines already accepted for inclusion in the Italian Peace Treaty. The details of such a provision would require examination.

Reception of Roumanian Nationals (Paragraph 10(vii) of C.F.M. (45) 21)

Mr. Bevin agreed to withdraw the proposal that Roumania should be required to receive Roumanian nationals returning from abroad and to accept full responsibility for them.

War Graves (Paragraph 10(viii) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that detailed consideration should be given to the proposal that the Peace Treaty should contain provisions regarding the war graves of Allied nationals in Roumania. Financial and Economic Clauses (Paragraph 11 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

It was agreed that the proposals in paragraph 11 of the memorandum by the British Delegation should be referred for detailed consideration in connection with paragraph 2 of the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 8).

Admission to United Nations Organisation (Paragraph 12 of C.F.M. (45) 21)

It was agreed to postpone further consideration of the proposal in paragraph 4 of the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M. (45) 8) regarding the candidature of Roumania for membership of the United Nations Organisation.

The Council agreed to consider at their meeting on the following day the further proposals in the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 36) on the provisions of a draft Peace Treaty for Roumania.

Note points out Greek Govts previously expressed dissatisfaction with Potsdam decision limiting participants to Five Powers, and states invitations to all states engaged in operations against Italy, except Greece and Ethiopia, have deepened Greek disillusionment and resentment. Explanations given in the press do not justify exclusion of Greece, which was at one time only ally victorious against Italy and which both as belligerent and as Adriatic power has stronger interest in Italian settlement than attaches merely to Dodecanese question. Instead of protesting directly to Council, Greek Govt prefers application to US and UK Govts, hoping they will take "initiative to restore Greece to its rightful place among her Allies". The Ambassador stated orally that the Greeks could not understand why Greece had not been invited at least to submit to Great Powers a memorandum setting forth Greek views on subject of Italian peace.

Any pertinent information you care to transmit, either for Dept's confidential background or for communication to Greek Amb, concerning reasons for non-inclusion at this time of Greece will be appreciated. Also indications of methods by which Greek interests in Italian settlement will be taken care of in future.

Washington, September 20, 1945—7 p. m.

8254. Secdel 90. In instructions dated August 25 the Italian Foreign Minister asked the Italian Ambassadors in Washington and London to inform the State Department and the Foreign Office of Italian efforts to effect direct relations with the Yugoslav Government in order to settle controversial points. After reviewing these efforts the Ambassadors were to request the US and UK Governments to enjoin the Yugoslavs to accept Italian overtures so that discussions could proceed. The Italian Government intended also to ascertain whether Moscow would intervene in similar fashion with the Yugoslav Government. The Italian Ambassadors were to point out to the US and UK that their Government hoped the Western Allies would coordinate their efforts with the USSR before intervening at Belgrade on behalf of Italy in order that Russian susceptibilities might not be irritated.

In following out his instructions on September 15 the Italian Ambassador expressed his personal opinion that the problems facing Italy and Yugoslavia could not be settled by direct negotiation regardless of Italian goodwill and that the procedure followed by the Council of Foreign Ministers in inviting Italian and Yugoslav representatives to submit the views of their Governments is a wise one.

ITALIAN PEACE TREATY

CITY AND PORT OF TRIESTE

The following are the proposals, in the form of draft headings for inclusion in the treaty of peace with Italy, concerning the disposition of the City and Port of Trieste, which were referred to by Dr. H. V. Evatt in his statement to the tenth meeting of the Council,* held on 18th September, 1945:—

¹⁴ As telegram No. 987.

^{*}C.F.M.(P) (45) 10th Meeting, Minute 1. [Footnote in the original.]

(1) Italy to renounce in favour of the United Nations her Sovereignty over the City and Port of Trieste and immediately adjoining territory.

(2) Trieste to be neutralised and demilitarised.
(3) Trieste to be made administratively independent according to a constitution which will accord a substantially equal share in the local administration to Italian and Yugoslav residents, the constitution to be drawn up by or on behalf of the United Nations after consultation with representatives of Italian and Yugoslavian interests.

- (4) A convention to be drawn up between Italy and Yugoslavia, Central European Countries and the autonomous City of Trieste, providing for the institution of a free port at Trieste and the facilitation of rail and other communications to and from Trieste for the purpose of international trading. Such convention to be embodied in the treaties of Peace.
- (5) The constitution of the independent City to be placed under the guarantee of the United Nations which will provide appropriate means of general supervision or specific control over the local administration and of associating the representatives of other countries with such administration.
- (6) The full protection of civil and religious liberties shall be guaranteed in the convention and made enforceable in the Courts of Justice.
- (7) Arrangements regarding retention or change of residence or nationality and the right of disposal or retention of property.

Memorandum by the French Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 38

London, 20 September, 1945.

GERMAN REPARATIONS

The French Delegation draw attention to the fact that the Provisional Government of the Republic, not having been invited to take part in the Potsdam Conference, have not up to the present subscribed to the decisions made by the three Powers, particularly as regards the settlement of German reparations. Their agreement on this point cannot be given so long as certain problems of essential importance to France, to which the French Government have repeatedly drawn the attention of the United States, British and Soviet Governments, remain unsettled.

But the French Government consider that the necessary assurances and explanations could be provided during the present session of the Council of Foreign Ministers. The Delegation therefore propose to formulate, in the present memorandum, the requirements which they hope will be studied and satisfied with the least possible delay.

- 1. The French Government are keenly desirous to see concrete steps taken for the execution of a programme of reparations in favour of all the United Nations who have suffered from German aggression. They therefore welcome the contribution made towards the solution of these practical problems by the Soviet proposals suggesting the transfer of the seat of the Inter-Allied Reparations Commission to Berlin and the acceleration of the work of the Control Council and of the Reparations Commission with a view to deciding the total amount and the nature of the industrial equipment to be taken from the Western zones of Germany.
- 2. The French Delegation feel, however, that the decisions arrived at in Potsdam concerning deliveries under the heading of reparations can only be put into effect if the property, rights and interests which are to be taken over, both in Germany and in the countries occupied by the German armies, are first shown to be exclusively and authentically German.

In application of this principle France asks for a decision to be taken on the following matters as soon as possible:—

(a) the restitution of the property seized by Germany under cover of the occupation in the territory of the United Nations, whenever such property can be identified and is found in the Eastern and Western zones of Germany, or in any other territory. Such restitution should be the subject of definite executive agreements providing for the despatch of recovery missions;

(b) the restitution of the equivalent of gold, precious metals or valuables by advance deliveries of property found in the Eastern or

Western Zones of Germany;

- (c) the enforcement of the Declaration of the United Nations dated 5th January, 1943, i.e. the recognition of the nullity of the spoliation which Germany has perpetrated of the property, rights and interests of the United Nations, whatever their geographical location may be. The application of the Declaration of the 5th January, 1945 [1943?] should in particular, enable Allied governments and nationals to recover the holdings owned by them in various central and eastern European countries, which in certain cases they have been compelled to hand over to the German authorities. Such property, rights and interests must not be regarded as German, and consequently cannot be the subject of transfer to another United Nation under the terms of any reparations scheme.
- 3. Finally, the French Government ask for a share also of the preliminary deliveries which are to be made of industrial equipment regarded as not essential to German peace-time life in the western zones. They would like in this respect to be treated not less favourably than the most favoured nation. But they could not for their part agree to such deliveries being effected in the western zones before they have had satisfactory replies to the three points set out in paragraph 2 above.

3. ROUMANIA: PEACE TREATY

An exchange of views took place between M. Molorov and Mr. Byrnes about the note of reservation prefixed to the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 36) 19.

740.00119 Council/9-1145

United States Delegation Minutes of the Fifteenth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 21, 1945, 11 a. m.²⁰

M. Bidault in the Chair.

Byrnes circulated a paper concerning a request of the Secretary of the Conference for instructions in regard to a possible request of the Italian representative for the text of the Yugoslav statement to the Council.

Molorov said he thought the Conference had no Secretary but did have a Senior Secretary.

Byrnes said he did not know whether the paper was signed Junior, General or what, but it made absolutely no difference to him.

Molorov said he was making no claims.

BIDAULT asked what the decision of the Council was on the request that had been made.

BYRNES pointed out that both sides had published in the newspapers the greater part of their statements. He preferred to let the Italians have it rather than refuse what had already been published in the newspapers.

This was agreed.

BIDAULT said the next question was that of their minutes.

Molorov thought they should keep minutes of the decisions reached and not of their debates, as it would take too much time to clear them.

BYRNES said that on a number of occasions they had referred questions to the Deputies to be considered in the light of the views expressed at the table.

Molorov replied that the Deputies would be guided by the minutes kept by each of them separately. It was necessary to make the work of the Council easier. He thought it was not necessary to include everything in their minutes but only what they decided to include.

Byrnes suggested that the secretaries of the various delegations form a Protocol Committee to prepare the record of their decisions.

¹⁹ September 19, p. 266.

²⁰ For the list of participants at this meeting, see the Agreed Record of Decisions, supra.

This was agreed to.

BIDAULT asked if it were understood that the daily minutes would contain merely a record of decisions or a record of the debates. He understood that Mr. Byrnes wished to postpone a decision.

BYRNES said he was ready to settle the matter today. Mr. Molotov thought each delegation should keep its own record and when the Deputies met each would depend upon his own minutes of the meetings of the Council.

BEVIN thought all this had been settled when they accepted the report of the Deputies on the Joint Secretariat.²¹ It was all set forth in Paragraph 5, to which they had unanimously agreed. Could they not continue that until the end of the Conference?

Molorov thought that a wider interpretation was being placed on this decision and one with which the Soviet delegation did not agree. The Soviet delegation had not committed itself to minutes. The Council had held fourteen meetings, and he inquired if they had agreed minutes on any of them.

BEVIN read Paragraph 5 of the document setting up the Secretariat including the phrase stating that the arrangement was subject to review.

Molorov again inquired if they had any agreed minutes of their fourteen meetings.

Bevin asked if they could refer the question back to the Deputies and have them make a recommendation on the method of preparing the protocol.

BYRNES disliked having so much time taken up on procedure but thought they might as well decide the question now. His information was that for four days there had been agreement on behalf of four delegations but not on behalf of the Soviet delegation. The result was that there were no agreed minutes. If there was no agreement, there was no use of the Deputies' discussing it and they might as well take Mr. Molotov's suggestion and then when the Deputies met each would depend upon his own record of the meetings.

Bevin said two proposals had been submitted. One was to refer the matter to the Deputies. The second was that each delegation would depend on its own minutes.

Molorov said this was not correct. His suggestion was that they draw up the protocol of the decisions taken. His suggestion was not that they need not have a protocol. The suggestion was that they have minutes only of decisions. The documents circulated could be attached, if desired.

BIDAULT said that his remarks had related to the minutes of the meetings. He thought the Council had agreed on a daily record and not simply on a record at the end of the Conference. He understood that Mr. Molotov's proposal in regard to decisions was accepted, that is that the minutes should only record the decisions.

Molorov said he had misunderstood, and he agreed.

BIDAULT said then what about the record of their discussions? Were they going to accept Mr. Bevin's suggestion to send the question to the Deputies or would each delegation keep its own minutes? He hoped they could settle this quickly.

Bevin thought the minutes should be circulated as they now were, without committing anyone. Those delegations that could agree could have the minutes.

Molorov objected to this. Either they drew up agreed minutes or they did not. Every delegation could keep whatever record it wanted, but they should not circulate minutes that were not agreed by all. He had not delegated any such authority to the Secretariat.

Bevin said he was surprised. They had gone to the 14th meeting without having any objection. There was nothing wrong with the minutes as far as he could see.

Molorov replied that they had a Joint Secretariat, and that it should only work jointly. They could not entrust it with work in which the Soviet secretariat did not participate.

BYRNES said that he had been discussing procedure in the Council about fifty percent. of the time here. He held no strong opinions, because they had to work by unanimous agreement. He disliked to turn over to the Deputies some controversy they had had and waste their time.

BEVIN said he did not press it, and withdrew the proposal. He said he would give Mr. Byrnes a solemn pledge that he would not discuss procedure again during this Conference.

DRAFT TREATY WITH RUMANIA

BIDAULT said they were discussing Paragraph 2 of the American draft directive,²³ to which he had an amendment which he proceeded to read. It was as follows:

The frontier with Hungary shall be, in general, the frontier existing in 1938; however, as regards Transylvania the ethnic situation shall be examined with a view to determining whether the award of a small part to Hungary would materially reduce the number of persons to be subjected to alien rule.

This was agreed to.

BIDAULT proposed they take up the draft treaty with Bulgaria.

Molorov asked if the American delegation withdrew its proposals for Rumania.

²⁸ C.F.M. (45) 36, September 19, p. 266.

BYRNES replied in the negative but said that in the Soviet paper ²⁴ and in the British paper ²⁵ most of the items of the American proposals had been covered, and it would not be helpful to go over them again. He did not ask for further consideration.

Molorov remarked that this was so much the better. He went on to say that he was entitled to revert to the statement made at the beginning of the discussion of the Rumanian treaty. He proposed to make a declaration in regard to the note contained in the American Memorandum. The American delegation had thought it proper to make a reservation in regard to the present Rumanian Government. The American delegation had stated that it considered the present Rumanian Government as not being representative of all democratic elements and that it would wait until such time as a more democratic government was established in Rumania before concluding a treaty. The Soviet delegation considered that for some reason the American delegation did not indicate the true reasons for their reservation. If they listened to such a note, and it was circulated in writing, they must understand its meaning. The Soviet delegation must not pass by this note in silence.

He wanted to compare the Rumanian and Italian Governments. It was said that the Rumanian Government was not democratic, but who could say that the Italian Government was more democratic than the Rumanian Government? The American Government found it possible to maintain diplomatic relations with the Italian Government and to conclude a peace treaty with it. With Rumania they did not want to conclude a peace treaty or to have diplomatic relations with the Rumanian Government. There was no doubt but that the Rumanian Government was more democratic than the Italian Government. Let them take the example of Spain. The Government of Spain was Fascist, yet the United States Government was able to maintain diplomatic relations with the Spanish Government and had its diplomatic representative there. It had not been said that the United States Government could not maintain diplomatic relations with Spain because it was Fascist. The reasons given for the American note were not the true reasons.

There was a Fascist government or a semi-Fascist government in Argentina, nevertheless the United States did not refuse to maintain diplomatic relations with Argentina or to conclude agreements with it.

In Greece the Greek Government was suppressing by terroristic methods elements in the country with which it had concluded an agreement. Nevertheless the United States continued relations and agreed that the Greek Government hold elections and then change the Government. For some reason a different procedure was being suggested for Rumania. In Rumania there existed a government hostile to the Soviet Union under General Rădescu 26 which had brought about the threat of civil war. The United States did not raise the question of this government being unsuitable. The characteristic feature of the Rădescu Government was that it was hostile to the Soviet Union and did not carry out the armistice terms. Now in Rumania there was the Groza Government 27 which enjoyed the support of the overwhelming majority of the population, and no one could deny this. There was a government which was honestly carrving out the armistice terms. He asked, was not the reason why the American Government was opposed to this Government because it was friendly to the Soviet Union? No one required the United States Government to like what it did not like. That was its right, and it was free to say so. But this was not the question. The United States accused the Rumanian Government of being undemocratic and refused to have any dealings with it. This did not correspond with the facts. The Rumanian Government was liked by the Rumanian population, but not by the American Government. What should be done? Should they overthrow it because it was not liked by the United States Government and set up a government that would be unfriendly to the Soviet Union. In such an undertaking the Soviet delegation would not be able to assist the American delegation. Molotov said he made no suggestion because Mr. Byrnes had also made none; but he had replied, as this note in the American Memorandum represented a thrust not only against the Rumanian Government but also against the Soviet Union.

Byrnes said the note at the beginning of the United States paper explained the American position. It had been submitted because the United State delegation had wished to proceed with drafting the peace treaty with Rumania but did not want the American position to be misunderstood or to mislead anyone into believing that the United States could conclude a treaty with the present Rumanian Government. At Yalta the heads of government agreed to do their best to allow the peoples of the liberated areas to determine on governments of their own choosing. They had agreed to favor interim governments that would be broadly representative of all elements and committed to the holding of early elections. At Potsdam the President of the United States had stated not once but a dozen times that the United States would not recognize the present governments of Rumania or Bulgaria. There was a difference of opinion between the President of the United States and Marshal Stalin, but Marshal Stalin had never questioned the motives of the United States Government. That was left to Mr. Molotov. He did not believe that the hope expressed at Yalta that the Allies would concert their policies with regard to the provisional governments was helped by such action on the part of Mr. Molotov.

Mr. Molotov insisted on telling the United States Government what governments it would recognize. The United States Government did not tell the Soviet Government that it should recognize the governments which we recognize. It was needless for him to say that it was untrue that the United States declines to recognize the Rumanian Government because it is said that the Rumanian Government is friendly to the Soviet Union. After Yalta 28 when the situation in regard to the Provisional Government in Poland was improved the United States was very happy about this and its relations with the Polish Government were excellent, although we knew of things about which we were surprised and which we hoped would be remedied.29 The Government of Finland was friendly to the Soviet Union and the United States had recognized the Finnish Government.³⁰ The Government of the United States believed in keeping pledges. When at Potsdam the United States had said it would examine each question separately, it kept that pledge and he pointed out that no reservation was made by the United States delegation in regard to the Hungarian Government. As a result of its investigation, the United States had concluded that while the Government of Hungary was not a perfect government, such improvements had been made in the situation that the United States had instructed its representatives in Hungary that if the Hungarian Government would pledge itself to hold free elections in accordance with Yalta the United States would recognize Hungary.31 It was therefore shown conclusively by our actions in regard to Finland, Poland and Hungary that statements made by Mr. Molotov regarding the motives of the United States Government were both unfair and untrue. They must consider each case separately.

Additional documentation regarding the question of the reestablishment of diplomatic relations between the United States

The United States knows that the Groza Government was established when Mr. Vyshinski told the King [he] had two and a half hours to establish that government.32 That action was not quite in accord with the spirit of the Atlantic Charter or any other declaration of their purposes in the days following the war. The United States had to rely on their reports in regard to Rumania, and these reports had shown that men were not free. The government was not representative of the people in the language of the Yalta agreement. Officials of the United States had been forced to delay for weeks before they could enter the country. Entry of the United States press representatives was delayed, and when they did enter their reports were censored. Any election held under a provisional government of that character would always be questioned by the free peoples of the world.

In his criticism of the United States Government Mr. Molotov had referred to its action in regard to other governments. In Italy, as in Finland and as now in Hungary, the governments of those countries were unlike the government of Rumania. He made no statement in regard to the government of Greece, except to say that when Mr. Molotov had mentioned observers, he wished to point out that they were going to Greece on the invitation of the Greek Government. asked if anyone could imagine the Groza Government sending anyone to Rumania to observe the election.

He would not discuss Franco 33 and the Argentine as Molotov knew that at Potsdam the United States Government had expressed itself in regard to the government of Franco and the Argentine, and Mr. Byrnes was the man who had framed the language concerning the Franco Government.34

They had been dealing with a situation regarding which at Yalta, when there was no such attitude on the part of Mr. Molotov, there was agreement on common action toward the peoples of liberated Europe and the establishment of democratic governments.35 Mr. Molotov asked if the Rumanian Government should be overthrown because the United States Government did not like it. The United [States] Gov-of the Spanish Government. ³⁴ Apparent reference by the Secretary of State to the expression of disfavor of the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union to any application for membership in the United Nations on the part of Spain, contained in section X of the Report on the Tripartite Conference of Berlin, Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. ernment made no such request. The United States Government could do nothing about the government of Rumania except to say that with its ideas of freedom it did not think that in Rumania there was freedom, or freedom of religion or democracy. In any action which it took the United States had to keep in mind its responsibility before the peoples of the world. The Government of the United States was satisfied that the Soviet Government did not really believe that the United States Government wanted in Rumania a government unfriendly to the Soviet Union. Nothing would make the United States Government more unhappy than to think such motives could seriously be attributed to it, because the United States Government wanted Governments in the Balkans friendly to the Soviet Union. The Government was concerned also not only that the Balkan governments would be friendly but it was our hope that the peoples as well as the governments would be friendly to the Soviet Union, just as the people of the United States wanted to be friendly with the Soviet Union.

Molorov said that in regard to Mr. Byrnes' remarks he could only state two elementary facts. Mr. Byrnes had tried to make clear that the Government of the United States did not regard the Rumanian Government as democratic. No single fact had been produced to prove the dissatisfaction of the Rumanian people with the Rumanian Government. There had been some statements made that United States correspondents were not friendly with the Rumanian Government. What was more important, that the Rumanian people had not expressed dissatisfaction with their government or that U. S. correspondents were dissatisfied with the Rumanian Government because it had failed to comply with their caprices? If the Rumanian people were satisfied with their government, the correspondents would come to understand this and would not demand a change.

Mr. Byrnes had referred to the fact that the Soviet representative had intervened in modifying the Rumanian Government. This was repeated hearsay of the so-called two hours in which this change was effected. Why repeat hearsay? It would be better to deal with facts. He had already noted that the situation in Rumania had been such that semi-Fascist elements headed by General Radescu had brought the country to the brink of civil war. At that time the American representative had not expressed his dissatisfaction with the Rumanian Government. As soon as order had been established in the country and it had begun faithfully to fulfil the armistice terms, their American friends had taken advantage of the famous two hours—which would probably soon become two minutes—to discredit the Rumanian Government. What was the use of all this? He knew the government of Franco was not liked by the American Government, nor was the government of the Argentine; yet the United States maintained diplomatic relations with them. Mr. Byrnes did not speak of the present Greek Government, and he did not know whether the American Government liked it or not. Perhaps American correspondents liked it. He knew that many democratic elements in Greece did not like the present Greek Government. The fact that American correspondents liked the Greek Government enabled the United States to maintain relations with Greece. The United States maintained relations with governments of these countries not because they were democratic. Mr. Byrnes had referred to the fact that the American Government had decided to recognize the government of Hungary. Who could prove by facts that the Rumanian Government was less democratic than the Government of Hungary? Nevertheless the American Government said what it liked. It was a question of taste. What had democracy to do with this? The Soviet attitude toward all the satellites of Germany was the same. Now that victory was won, they thought it possible to have dealings with any government which did not cause dissatisfaction among the people and which carried out the armistice terms, regardless of whether such government was entirely satisfactory. This was not a reason for overthrowing a government.

He asked if it were possible to substitute for such a government as that to which he had referred a government which would cause dissatisfaction on the part of the people and would not carry out the armistice terms but which would be liked by foreign correspondents.

Mr. Byrnes had spoken of Poland and had said that they had done well in this case. But in this case there were two Polish governments, and it had been necessary to end this situation.³⁶ There were not two governments in Rumania. They should not create another government in Rumania which would be hostile to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Byrnes had said that they were basing themselves on the Yalta Declaration. That was absolutely right. It provided a basis for their joint work. The Yalta Declaration stated that their purpose was to destroy the last vestiges of Naziism and Fascism and to allow the peoples of these countries to select governments of their own choosing. The Soviet Union maintained this position. He wondered if the United States delegation had changed its attitude. In any case the Soviet Union had not changed. The Soviet Government maintained its attitude in this as in other cases, but he would like it to be made clear whether the American Government had changed its attitude.

²⁶ The second Polish Government referred to would presumably be the Polish Government in Exile at London. For documentation regarding the negotiations leading to the establishment of the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity, see vol. v, pp. 110 ff.

At San Francisco the American Government had said in writing that it agreed to support the Soviet proposals, in particular those relating to Tripolitania. It was clear that there was no reference in the correspondence to Tripolitania, but there was reference to trusteeship territories in general. The American Government had informed them through the Secretary of State and Commander Stassen 37 that they would support the Soviet proposal to have a trusteeship. As soon as the question was raised at the Conference, the Soviet Delegation had encountered a different attitude on the part of the American delegation. Perhaps they had forgotten. However, he had given copies of the correspondence to Mr. Byrnes in London. This was another example that the attitude of the United States Government had changed.

Mr. Byrnes had made no specific proposals nor did he, but if it had not been for the United States note on this paper on Rumania he would not have been compelled to reply. He had been compelled to reply in view of the United States note.

Byrnes said he would not reply to anything Mr. Molotov had said in regard to Rumania. They did not and could not agree. always sorry when he could not agree with any of his colleagues. Mr. Molotov had made a statement in regard to a letter written to him by his predecessor, Secretary Stettinius, which Mr. Molotov said was a promise to support the Soviet proposal to receive a trusteeship, and had mentioned Tripolitania. He wanted the Council to know the facts. The letter Mr. Molotov had given him recounted in its first paragraph a statement made to Secretary Stettinius by Commander Stassen to the effect that the Soviet Government wished to know if a favorable attitude would be taken by the United States if in the future the Soviet Government made a proposal to receive a trusteeship. He had added that the Soviet Government did not have in view any concrete territory but had hoped that the two governments might reach agreement in principle.38 Secretary Stettinius' reply was as follows:

(Mr. Byrnes read the letter.39)

That is all the Secretary of State said. Mr. Byrnes had known nothing about it but he found no fault with it. He thought that if he said he considered the United Kingdom eligible as a trusteeship power he would not be accused of breaking his word if he did not support them if they asked for the trusteeship of the moon and the sun.

Bevin said that British ambitions had never reached so high. Molotov said he would like to enjoy more sunshine.

Byrnes observed that Mr. Molotov was responsible for most of the gloom at their meeting.

Molorov rejoined that he would share the blame fifty-fifty. The meeting adjourned.

ROUMANIA: PEACE TREATY

A further exchange of views took place. No decision was reached.

BULGARIA: PEACE TREATY

Further study should be given (by a procedure to be determined by the Council) to the detailed provisions of the Peace Treaty with Bulgaria, on the basis of the proposals of the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 6) 40 in the light of the memoranda by the British (C.F.M.(45) 22)⁴¹ and United States (C.F.M.(45) 35)⁴² Delegations. and of the following decisions of principle:

Fascist Organisations (Paragraph 2 of C.F.M.(45) 22)

Article 7 of the Armistice Terms should be accepted as a basis of discussion, on the understanding that further consideration will be given to the question whether, in view of the action already taken by the Bulgarian Government under Article 7, it is necessary to include such a provision in the treaty.

September 12, p. 148.
 September 17, p. 221.
 September 19, p. 263.

Demobilisation of Bulgarian Armed Forces, etc.⁴³ (Paragraph 3 of C.F.M.(45) 22)

Further consideration should be given to the use of Article 1 (d) and 2 of the Armistice Terms as a basis for a provision in the Treaty to cover the demobilisation of the Bulgarian armed forces and the steps necessary to liquidate Bulgarian aggression during the war against Greece and Yugoslavia.

Armaments (Paragraph 4 of C.F.M.(45) 22)

Section V of the Memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 35) should be accepted as a basis for detailed study of this question. This study should include the question whether any machinery is required (whether in the form of an Allied Inspectorate or otherwise) for enforcing any restrictions which it may be decided to impose on Bulgarian military establishments.

Withdrawal of Allied Forces (Paragraph 5 of C.F.M.(45) 22)

On the conclusion of the Peace Treaty all Allied forces should be withdrawn from Bulgaria and all unused requisitioned currency and goods should be returned to the Bulgarian Government.

Return of Allied Vessels (Paragraph 6 of C.F.M.(45) 22)

This question should be studied in detail and a report made to the Council.

Resumption of Diplomatic and Consular Relations (Paragraph 7 (i) of C.F.M.(45) 22)

A provision should be included in the Treaty covering the resumption of diplomatic and consular relations with Bulgaria.

The Position of International Organisations (Paragraph 7 (ii) and (iii) of C.F.M.(45) 22)

The proposals in these paragraphs should be considered in connection with the proposal in paragraph 4 of C.F.M.(45) 6.

International Control of Danube (Paragraph 7 (iv) of C.F.M. (45) 22)

No decision was reached on this question.

Position of Existing Treaties (Paragraph 7(v) of C.F.M.(45) 22)

Further consideration should be given to this proposal, in order to specify which treaties Bulgaria should be required to keep in force and which treaties she should abrogate.

 $^{^{43}}$ At the 28th Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, it was agreed to revise this paragraph of the Record of Decisions to read as follows: "Articles 1 (d) and 2 of the Armistice Terms should be taken as a basis for a provision in the Treaty."

Bill of Rights (Paragraph 7 (vi) of C.F.M.(45) 22)

Bulgaria should be required to maintain a Bill of Rights on the lines already accepted for inclusion in the Italian Peace Treaty. The details of such a provision would require examination.

Reception of Bulgarian Nationals (Paragraph 7 (vii) of C.F.M. (45) 22)

The proposal that Bulgaria should be required to receive Bulgarian nationals returning from abroad and to accept full responsibility for them was withdrawn.

War Graves (Paragraph 7 (viii) of C.F.M.(45) 22)

Detailed consideration should be given to the proposal that the Peace Treaty should contain provisions regarding the war graves of Allied nationals in Bulgaria.

Bulgarian-Roumanian Frontier (Paragraph 8 of C.F.M.(45) 22)

No decision was reached on the proposal that a clause should be included in the peace treaty confirming the cession of the Southern Dobruja by Roumania to Bulgaria in 1940.

United States Delegation Minutes of the Sixteenth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 21, 1945, 4 p.m.

Mr. Bevin in the chair

Balkan Governments

Bevin wished to say a few words on this problem and first of all in regard to Greece. Whenever there had been differences in the Council of Foreign Ministers, the illustrations of Greece had already been brought in. He pointed out that in Greece there was no censorship. The leader of the Communist party had recently held a great meeting, had advocated civil war in that country, and was allowed to do it. ⁴⁴ The British had tried with their advice and that of France and the United States to get free elections in Greece. Unfortunately Greece had not been allowed to settle down because of agitation directed from outside the country in the hope he supposed that other governments would be led to change their policy. There would be no change of policy. Greek elections would be free and there would be free speech and a free press. He did not pretend that the Greek Government was representative in the sense of having been elected. It was a caretaking Government to see the elections through. As they had had a caretaking Government in Great Britain followed by very satisfactory results, he hoped that they would have the same results in Greece.

Turning to Rumania the British Delegation felt just as Mr. Byrnes did on this question. They felt that this was a government that was created and that it was impossible that it could conduct free elections. Mr. Molotov had said he wanted a government friendly to Russia but Mr. Bevin did not suppose Mr. Molotov would say he wanted a government subservient to Russia alone. Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov had been very frank in their discussion that morning and he used the word subservient not to make accusations but because that was what people felt and he thought it better to be clear in these matters.

It seemed to be the fate of these Balkan states to get into difficulties which caused differences between large states and that was something that they must avoid at all costs now. They all accepted the view that there should be governments in these states friendly to Soviet Russia but he assumed also that they should be friendly to their neighbors and to all the United Nations. Being friendly to one did not mean being unfriendly to the others. Therefore their conduct must be such that it would not create suspicion between large states. The documents he had read and the speeches that morning led him to believe that the situation was that the governments of these countries, even if accepted as friendly by one government were such that other governments found they could not believe in their sincerity and that it was impossible to accept them as signatories to a treaty or, he supposed, consider that they could qualify to enter the United Nations. Knowing the opinion of at least three of the powers was it possible for the Council of Foreign Ministers to demonstrate its statesmanship to the world and find a solution to this problem which would inspire general confidence. The problem was simple. The Soviets wanted a government there which would not threaten its security, and [which would carry out the armistice and be friendly to the Soviet Union without intrigue or menace to the Soviet Union interests. Other governments felt that having regard to the Yalta decisions, that these governments would not fulfill the understanding arrived at at that meeting. He asked if their purpose was to secure some machinery or whether it was to arrive at a solution and to remove this problem for all time.

BIDAULT said that he had derived one advantage from their various differences. He learned a lot here. There had been an exchange of letters at San Francisco about which France had known nothing. The meeting had shown France that there had been an agreement on a subject in which France had not taken part.

In Rumania a special diplomatic situation was reserved for France on which he did not want to insist here but it was not the same as that of the other states represented at the conference. He did not wish to enter into a discussion of the political character of such and such a government. What was important and, as in the case of France, was that there should be elections and that they should take place in such conditions that they could not be questioned. He agreed with Mr. Byrnes that they should proceed on the basis of the tripartite agreement. In February 1945 a conference had met in the Crimea. paragraph 5 of the agreement at that conference a communication had been addressed to the French Government inviting it to associate itself with the Declaration on Liberated Europe. 45 The French Government asked for information as to the means by which the states concerned would implement these decisions. He remembered that when he had signed the French reply it had been in the affirmative, but France had received no reply to its letter.46 Although this decision had been taken without France, they accepted it. He thought a solution might be found in the frank statements made in the debate. That was why he asked them to recall the Yalta Declaration which he proceeded to read.

Point c said that the three governments would assist the peoples of the liberated states to form democratic internal governments. Point d said that they would facilitate the holding of elections. France had been asked to associate itself with this and the answer was in the affirmative and it would not be withdrawn. He hoped that on the basis of the Yalta Declaration they could settle the problem of the governments of those states.

Molorov said the Soviet Delegation recommended the statements made by Mr. Bevin and M. Bidault.

Bevin asked if they could proceed to give effect to the suggestion he had made. Was there any proposal for any steps that should be taken to attain the object they desired.

Molotov said that so far as Greece was concerned he had no suggestion. As for Rumania his suggestion was that the situation should be studied on the spot with the greatest impartiality. He knew that there were 17 American correspondents including Hearst's as well as British and others there. There were also political representatives of Great Britain, the United States and France as well as a Control Commission. The representatives there could study the matter and report in order to enable them later to discuss the question in the spirit of the Yalta decision.

Byrnes pointed out that he had said before lunch he would not care further to discuss the Rumania situation but to keep the records straight the information of the United States Delegation was not the same as that of the Soviet Delegation in regard to United States correspondents. The political representative of the United States in Rumania 47 had been sent for in order that Mr. Byrnes could check up on the statement just made that there were 17 American correspondents in Rumania. He advised him that as of September 13 there was a single American correspondent who had come into Rumania to report the situation there. His statement was that soon after he had arrived in Rumania in November of last year the first application for the clearance of an American correspondent had been filed with the Allied Control Commission. Subsequently other requests had been made and repeatedly followed up with the ACC but no affirmative action had been taken until September 10, 1945. Then 11 of the 14 applications were approved. In the meantime most of the 14 had been obliged to go somewhere else as they had other things to do in life than to wait for action on their applications. The single application still standing was that of Mr. Brewer of the New York Times. He was in Sofia. On the date when the United States political representative left Rumania Mr. Brewer had still been unable to obtain clearance from the ACC in Bulgaria to leave that country. Before 1944 and September 10, 1945 two groups had been allowed to visit Rumania. The first group had been flown in by the Soviet Government at the end of March after representation had been made personally to Mr. Vyshinski.48 They stayed one week and went anywhere they wanted but after their first experience with the censor they gave up trying to send out complete reports. Nevertheless the first full story was sent by one of these correspondents, Mr. White, 49 from Rome. It was sent six weeks after he left Rumania. The second set of correspondents which consisted of two journalists, arrived in Rumania without the consent of the ACC. They traveled about freely and after their first attempt to get agreement with the censor they decided to wait until they arrived at Rome to send their stories. That was the information given by the American political representative and on which the United States Delegation must base its conclusion.

⁴⁸ Regarding the representations made to Deputy Foreign Commissar Vyshinsky at Bucharest on March 1, 1945, relative to the necessity for taking measures promptly to ensure freedom of the press in Rumania, see telegram 151, March 1, from Bucharest, vol. v, p. 489.

Leigh White of the Chicago Daily News.

Molorov said he had no grounds for not trusting the facts he had at his disposal. He would furnish Mr. Byrnes with a list of correspondents in Bucharest. He had not checked up their citizenship nor their racial origin but they were American correspondents. He also wished to say that Mr. Byrnes might be right so far as the past was concerned and he would do his best to check up on the facts given him by Mr. Byrnes. But to speak of the past Mr. Byrnes had said that in the past year as well as at the beginning of this year certain restrictions had been imposed on correspondents in Rumania. This was true but they must remember that there was a war at that time. Not only Japan but Germany had not been defeated. The Soviet Government felt obliged to impose certain restrictions on correspondents during the period of the war. At Berlin President Truman and Mr. Churchill had stated that there were complaints on this subject and there was no pretense that there were not such restrictions at that time. Generalissimo Stalin had said that measures to bring about conditions favorable to correspondents would be taken. These measures had already been taken and he could assure Mr. Byrnes that there were 17 American correspondents in Rumania which was several times the number of Soviet correspondents there.

BYRNES said he would be glad to receive these names and to check them with the United States political representative and to advise Mr. Molotov about them.

Bevin said he had tried his hand at a suggestion without consultation with anyone and he put it to the Council to see if it offered a possibilty for a solution of their problem. It was as follows:

"The Council hereby invoke the Yalta Agreement and agree to consult together regarding the question of the Roumanian Government, the holding of elections, and the steps to be taken to secure the free and unfettered decisions of the people in the choice of their Government. The Council accordingly resolve to appoint a Commission to examine the whole problem on the spot and make recommendations to the Council for decision. Meanwhile, steps shall be taken to remove censorship and give free access to representatives of the Press".

Byrnes said the United States would agree with the proposal.

Molorov said that there were enough commissions in Rumania. They had political representatives of the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and the United States. There was a Control Commission. Let them check and report. What was the use of sending a new commission. These were official representatives from the different countries and they were capable of giving them information. Let them give more full information to enable his colleagues to form a more impartial judgement. His suggestion was that they consult their representatives. If it were proposed to supervise the Rumanian Government that was contrary to the principles of the Yalta Declaration. The Allied Powers represented on the Council had interfered too much in the internal affairs of Rumania. There was a Control Commission to control the affairs of the Rumanian Government. To go further and to establish a new form of control would conflict with the Yalta Declaration. They should decrease and not increase their interference in Rumanian affairs.

Bevin said he had tried to give effect to what he thought Mr. Molotov had proposed, namely, an impartial inquiry that would inspire confidence. Now he proposed to write a letter to our representatives to send in their views. The trouble was that all of them had been sending in their views but they had not been getting together to concert the results of their inquiries. He urged Mr. Molotov to accept the proposal which would not involve more control but only investigation.

BIDAULT said he had prepared a shorter proposal than that of the British Delegation. He could agree however to accept the British text except that France was not a party to the Yalta Declaration and did not want it to be mentioned. That was a matter of form.

The problem was a two-fold one. It was one, whether these representatives would have enough power and two, whether they would be able to reach common conclusions. They could entrust the matter to their own representatives on the spot who could form the commission but they must have power to discuss the matter. If as the French hoped, they agreed, their representatives could send in their agreed recommendations. If not they could send in separate recommendations.

Bevin said the words he had used were Yalta Agreement. Could they take the resolution in two parts?

Molorov asked what is being suggested.

Bevin replied that they were considering the resolution he had read out and that they could later determine the character of the Commission.

Molorov pointed out that he had already given reasons why the Soviet Delegation would not wish to send a commission to Rumania. An unfavorable interpretation would be placed on this by the Rumanians themselves. They should seek the opinion of their own representatives.

Bevin said if it was a question only of their opinions, they already had these, but they had never sat as a commission to check their information together.

BIDAULT said it was a question of whether they send a special commission or ask their representatives on the spot to do the work being provided with sufficient power. He thought it sufficient for their representatives on the spot to be empowered to get together and form an association and to get to work under the Council's instructions. He believed the problem could be quickly solved.

BYRNES said the United States was satisfied with the proposals of both the British and the French. If there was no agreement he suggested that they go on with the agenda as this matter was not on the agenda.

Bevin said he would accept the French proposal that their representatives on the spot form a commission to send in a report that would be unanimous if possible but if not they would send in a majority-minority report.

Molorov said he had just received a telegram which contained information on the question of correspondents in Rumania and Bulgaria. In Rumania it mentioned only the names of two British correspondents there, Gede [Gedye] and Harrison. He read a list of the American correspondents in Bulgaria and said that on August 25 applications had been received from three other correspondents to enter Bulgaria. Permission had been issued on August 30. On September 10 applications had been received for a new group of foreign correspondents and permission had been issued on September 12. He would obtain additional information in regard to the 17 American correspondents in Rumania.

The Soviet Delegation had confidence in their representatives in Rumania and saw no need to send new ones. They had an Allied Control Commission and saw no reason to set up another.

Bevin said agreement was apparently impossible. They tried to meet Mr. Molotov on every point but he always put up a new reason.

Molorov said he thought he was among friends but he was on the defense. An offense was being conducted against him except [especially?] on the subject of Rumania. If the information at their dis-

⁵⁰ In a memorandum designated C.F.M.(45) 50, September 25, 1945, entitled "British Press Correspondents in Roumania" (not printed), the United Kingdom delegation stated that applications for Mr. Gedye of the London Daily Herald and Mr. Harrison of Reuters to enter Rumania had been outstanding since March 1945, and while the applications had frequently been brought to the attention of the Soviet Government and the Allied Control Commission for Rumania, Soviet authorities had been unable to say whether permission for correspondents to enter Rumania could be granted. The memorandum further recorded that one British correspondent was in Rumania, and two others had been there but had withdrawn because of the censorship. In a memorandum designated C.F.M.(45) 81, September 30, 1945, entitled "British Press Correspondents in Roumania" (not printed), the Soviet delegation stated that permission for Gedye and Harrison to enter Rumania had been given, that correspondents for eight English newspapers and news agencies were in Rumania as of September 28, and that foreign correspondents in Rumania had recently been exempted from having to submit their telegrams to the censors for examination. (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Documents) posal did not enable them to reach a conclusion now he thought they should take steps to obtain more detailed information.

BEVIN said he had not tried to put Mr. Molotov in the dock but as chairman had tried to get him [out?] of the dock he was in by making suggestions.

Molorov said he did not complain that he was in the dock. This had been said by Mr. Bevin. If he had left the dock he was wise. Mr. Molotov said he had said he was on the defensive and this was a different matter.

Bevin said he did not mind being in the dock as he was a docker.

Molorov remarked that both he and Mr. Bevin were not of gentry origin.

Bevin said that before they passed on he noted that on this resolution all other Delegations he thought were in agreement but the Soviet Delegation would not accept it.

TREATY WITH BULGARIA

Bevin said memoranda had been received from the Soviet, British and United States Delegations.⁵¹ Which would they desire to take as a basis of discussions?

Molorov said the Soviet Delegation requested that the Soviet draft be taken and that the British and American amendments be examined. He could accept paragraph 2 of the British paper.

This was agreed to.

Molorov said in regard to Article 7 that this would be subject to further study.

Molorov said he thought paragraph 3 of the British paper was a correct proposal.

This was agreed to.

Molorov said in regard to paragraph 4 that this should be dealt with as it was in the case of Rumania.

Molotov asked in what way British paragraph 5 differed from that in the Rumanian draft treaty.

Bevin said that in the Rumanian treaty they had provided for communications with Austria. This was not necessary here.

Molorov thought it should be considered by the so-called Deputies. Byrnes did not see what they would refer to the Deputies.

^m Memorandum by the Soviet delegation, C.F.M. (45) 6, September 12, p. 148; memorandum by the United Kingdom delegation, C.F.M. (45) 22, September 17, p. 221; memorandum by the United States delegation, C.F.M. (45) 35, September 19, p. 263.

Molorov said he had no objection to this paragraph 6 being accepted. This was agreed to.

Bevin suggested that paragraph 6 go to the Deputies.

This was agreed to.

Molorov proposed that the whole of paragraph 7 be dealt with as was the similar paragraph in the Rumanian treaty.

BEVIN said there was one question left over from the Rumanian treaty that appeared in this paragraph. This was the provision relating to the regime of the Danube. He wished to make a statement. It had been stated yesterday that it would be unduly harsh to force a country to accept blindly any obligations of an agreement to be concluded by the Allied powers in this matter. He had investigated and found that the same action had been taken in the last war. did not mind it being known that it was the United Kingdom Delegation that had insisted if anybody's amour propre was to be offended. The character of these regimes would be discussed thoroughly when they got to the American proposal. There had been an international regime for the Danube since 1856. The British Government was a participating power until 1940. At the last peace treaty Bessarabia was taken away from Russia and Russia was excluded from the regime of the Danube. In the British view that was a mistake. also a mistake when the Soviet Government had made arrangements with the German Government in 1940 by which the British were excluded from the arrangement. Both of these settlements in their view were wrong. For good relations he thought they should be put right now. A few weeks ago he did not hesitate to give his views to put right the situation in regard to Tangier. Therefore if and when the five powers agreed to an international waterway agreement he did not think some Governments should be left in a position to hold them up. It followed that this clause be put in both the Rumanian and Bulgarian treaties.

BYRNES said he could only report what he had said the day before. If after the last war Allied nations were able to reach agreement on this question they ought to be able to do so now. He did not think it would be offensive to Rumania and it was very important to have this assurance.

Molorov said the Soviet Delegation was not ready to discuss this question in connection with Bulgaria and that it would not relate only to Bulgaria and Rumania. In any case he could not associate himself with the proposal of Mr. Bevin nor with the motives he had used.

Bevin said he had not used any motives.

Byrnes pointed out that in the Soviet proposal it was provided that Bulgaria would cooperate with the Allied powers and would take any measures they adopted for the maintenance of universal peace. He submitted that this was broader language than the paragraph under discussion which was limited to the regime of the Danube. He asked if Mr. Molotov would interpret the language in his proposal as governing the international regime of the Danube.

Molorov said that the paragraph cited merely repeated a paragraph in the American proposal and as that paragraph related to the Danube then this paragraph would relate to the Danube. This was a standard paragraph in all the draft treaties and he did not know whether or not it covered the Danube.

Bevin said the U.K. Delegation preferred a specific provision and observed that the spirit of the present conference led to long debate. Molorov observed that Mr. Bevin was a good chairman.

Bevin asked if he agreed that the provision go in the treaty.

Molorov replied that he had already said that this question should not be decided in connection with the Bulgarian treaty as it was a wider question.

BEVIN noted that they could not agree.

Bevin pointed out that paragraph 8, which was the next item, had not been included in the Rumanian treaty.

Molorov thought there was no need for the proposed paragraph 8 as a treaty on this matter was already in existence.

Bevin said he would not insist but thought it would be helpful to have the powers who would sign this treaty agree as to what was done.

Molorov pointed out that this had not been asked for.

BYRNES said he thought that if there was no disagreement as to substance he hoped that they could agree on the language in regard to boundaries. They had done this in the Italian treaty for the good of everyone concerned. In the treaty there was a declaration in regard to new frontiers and he drew attention to the American draft which indicated what the frontiers were.

Molorov did not think it necessary to encumber the treaty with such questions.

Bevin said they would come to the point sooner or later when they would have to recognize boundaries arrived at. If there was no agreement now they could let it go. If there were later disputes he thought the United Nations organization would have to deal with it. It was the fact that there were frontiers not officially recognized that prompted him to make this suggestion in order to be of assistance.

Molorov suggested that they not create artificial questions and therefore that all territorial questions raised in the American and British proposals would become the subject of discussion if included. For example, in paragraph one of the American draft Dobruja was mentioned although this was a controversial question. The second paragraph dealt with Tsaribrod which was a town on the border of Yugoslavia. How could they deal with this without summoning representatives of Yugoslavia? He thought they should be more careful in dealing with Allied powers. He understood that when they engaged in settling the frontier between Yugoslavia and Italy they had done so because it was their duty to be of assistance but when there were no controversial issues why should they interfere. Let them keep to the questions they had to settle.

Byrnes pointed out that in the armistice terms it was provided in Article 2 that Bulgarian authorities would withdraw from Greek and Yugoslav territories. That provision was not included in the draft treaty. If nothing was said in the peace treaty he was afraid that it would continue to be a source of controversy in the days ahead of them. He thought it was really only a question of the wisdom of settling a problem at this time. At Potsdam their principles had been in agreement that there would be no settlement of territorial questions until there was a peace treaty and that these questions would be settled then. If there had been an agreement and everyone was satisfied, it would be better to include it in the treaty and let everyone know that it was settled.

Molorov said that if it were a question of Tsaribrod it would be necessary to summon the Yugoslav and Bulgarian representatives and have a discussion with them. Why should they do this when there was no controversy. Would they really have to deal with such small questions between neighbors? If these neighbors found it necessary in 10 years time to transfer a village from one country to another why should the Council question it. Did they not have enough serious problems to deal with?

BEVIN proposed that they adjourn the meeting.

The meeting was adjourned.

Memorandum by the United States Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 40

London, 21 September, 1945.

SUGGESTED DIRECTIVE TO THE DEPUTIES FROM THE COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS TO GOVERN THEM IN THE DRAFTING OF A TREATY OF PEACE WITH HUNGARY

I. TERRITORIAL PROVISIONS

- 1. The frontiers of Hungary shall be, except as modified below, those which existed prior to the Vienna Arbitration Award of November 2, 1938, and the Vienna Award of August 30, 1940.⁵³
- 2. The frontier with Roumania shall be, in general, the frontier existing in 1938, except that, as regards Transylvania determination regarding the whole or the greater part to go to Roumania shall be made after examining the respective claims of the two states.
- II., III., IV. [These articles are the same, mutatis mutandis, as articles III, V, and VI in Suggested Directive for Bulgaria (C.F.M. (45) 35), page 263.]

V. REPARATIONS

The treaty should provide for the delivery to the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia of reparations in kind as stipulated in Article 12 of the Armistice. It should also provide for the determination of the compensation payable to other countries, and for completing the restoration of Allied property in Hungary to its owners or payment therefor, when the property is not returned in good order, as required by Article 13 of the Armistice.

The determination of the amounts payable by Hungary on account of claims for property in Hungary, and the supervisions of Hungary's execution of the treaty provisions with regard to reparations, restoration of Allied property and compensation for damage should be vested in an Allied Commission composed of representatives of the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, the United States, France, Czechoslovakia, and Jugoslavia.

The satisfaction of claims against Hungary on the part of countries other than the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia should be IV, p. 125. made primarily from Hungarian assets abroad. Consequently, the Hungarian Government shall authorise each of the United Nations to take over and apply to their respective reparation claims such of the assets of the Hungarian Government (excluding diplomatic and consular premises) and of Hungarian nationals as are within the jurisdiction of the respective United Nations. Similarly, the Hungarian Government shall undertake to transfer to the United Nations, other than the U.S.S.R., Hungarian government and private property in the neutral countries. The Hungarian Government will undertake to indemnify, in accordance with Hungarian law, the Hungarian nationals whose property will thus have been requisitioned. Each of the United Nations will be free to allocate the amount received from Hungary to the indemnification of the State or its nationals, or the payment of debts, as it may determine, as a matter of national policy.

The Hungarian Government shall be required to recognise the transfer to the U.S.S.R., in accordance with paragraphs one and nine of the Potsdam declaration on German reparations,⁵⁴ of German assets in Hungary. (This transfer shall be made by the Allied Control Council in Germany).

VI. ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL MATTERS

Provisions shall be included in the treaty implementing the United States proposal which was accepted in principle in Article XXI of the Potsdam Protocol,⁵⁵ including guarantees to Allied Nationals of access, on equal terms, to Hungarian trade, raw materials and industry. Similar provision should be made for equality of access to the use of Hungarian waterways and aviation facilities. These provisions might be limited in their duration for a period of five years.

International agreements for the control of the Danube should be confirmed by the treaty.

Whether provisions respecting other economic and financial relations should be included in the treaty should be left for later consideration. In view of the complexities raised and the large number of states involved, these might preferably be left to separate treaties.

VII. THE SOVEREIGN POSITION OF HUNGARY

The treaty should provide for the restoration of Hungarian Sovereignty and the nations party to the treaty should have no rights or controls within Hungary except as may be specifically provided in the treaty.

Memorandum of Conversation 56

[London,] September 22, 1945.

Participants:

The Secretary Mr. Molotov Mr. Bevin
Mr. Dunn Ambassador Gusev Sir Ronald Campbell
Mr. Bohlen Mr. Pavlov Mr. Dixon 57
Mr. Payton-Smith

Mr. Molotov opened the meeting of the three Foreign Ministers by saving that he wished to propose a reorganization of the Council of Foreign Ministers on the grounds that the work was being retarded through an initial mistake which in effect had violated the decisions of the Berlin Conference, namely, in regard to the participation of France and China in the discussion of the peace treaties with Finland, Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary. He read Point 3(b) of the Berlin Decision 58 in support of his position. He proposed, therefore, that the Council reorganize its work so that in regard to these treaties only Finland [the Soviet Union], the United States and Great Britain would participate. He said the United States by common agreement between England and the Soviet Union would be invited to sit in on the Finnish discussions. On the other questions the Council could either sit with four or five members depending on the subject. He said he made this suggestion in order to conform with the Berlin Decisions and to expedite the work of the Council. It would avoid discussions as to what body the Ministers might refer consideration of these treaties.

Mr. Bevin said he did not think that France should be excluded from the consideration of the Balkans.

THE SECRETARY said that it was his recollection that in the discussion at Potsdam it had been generally understood that the countries not signatory to the Armistice terms would be allowed to sit in and participate in the discussion but would have no right to vote.

Mr. Bevin took the view that the opening number of the decision setting up the Council of five was the governing clause and that the interpretation of the British Government was that which Mr. Bevin had said was his recollection of the discussion, namely, that the Council should sit as five but that France and China would have no vote in regard to the treaties with the member [ex-enemy?] satellites.

After prolonged discussion in which Mr. Molorov continued to adhere to the strict construction of the Potsdam Decision the meeting was adjourned for lunch without any conclusion whatsoever being reached.

When the three reconvened after lunch, Mr. Bevin said, with an endeavor to reach a compromise, he had a proposal to make. He said that the Council should continue to sit as five and so should the Deputies, but that on matters affecting these specific treaties special committees composed only of representatives of the members signatory to the armistice terms should be set up to do the drafting. Thus, in the case of Finland a subcommittee would consist of representatives of Great Britain and the Soviet Union. In the case of the Balkan countries and Hungary, of the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union.

Mr. Molorov refused this proposal as not being in accordance with the Berlin Decision. He said that he could not agree to continue to participate in the work of the Council if it continued as present on a basis which his Government considered a violation of the Berlin Decision. He admitted that he had participated in the original decisions of the conference and said that experience had shown that it was unsatisfactory and that that decision in fact was in violation of the Berlin Decisions.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that to reduce the composition of the Council for the consideration of these treaties would have a deplorable effect throughout the world. It was already being said that the Great Powers were arrogating to themselves the right of decision in these matters and leaving the smaller powers out. While it was true that a strict interpretation of the language of the Berlin Decision was in accordance with Mr. Molotov's suggestion, he felt that the Ministers should take cognizance of the sense of this decision as expressed in the discussion which preceded its adoption.

After considerable discussion in which both Mr. Bevin and Mr. Molotov adhered to their previous decision The Secretary proposed that since this agreement had been made by the three heads of government at Potsdam it might be a good idea to put the matter up to them for decision. Mr. Molotov replied that he had no objection to that but that he might tell them in confidence that he had received some subsequent instructions from Marshal Stalin to make the proposal he had just made. He said that Marshal Stalin had called his attention to the fact that the early decision of the Conference had violated the Potsdam Protocol and that this matter should be corrected. He therefore felt that he knew the Marshal's views on this subject and what his reply would do [be?]. He added that he had no objection to putting it before him again.

THE SECRETARY said he thought it would be a good idea and it was agreed to consult the heads of Government.

Mr. Bevin said that he would have to consult his Government before he could agree to any such proposal as that of Mr. Molotov which he felt would destroy the Council of Ministers and make it into a farce.

It was agreed that a meeting of the Council should be called for 5:30 that afternoon and that the question of satellite treaties would be postponed and the United States point on the agenda be taken up.

1. Procedure

Further discussion of the Peace Treaties with Italy and the exenemy Satellite States should be deferred until a later meeting. Meanwhile, the Council should proceed with the other items on the Agenda for the present Conference.

2. WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM IRAN

The Council took note of statements made by Mr. Bevin and M. — Molotov that British and Soviet troops would, in accordance with the terms of the Tripartite Treaty between the U.K., Soviet and Iranian Governments, 59 be withdrawn from Iran within six months after the surrender of Japan on 2nd September, 1945. The Council agreed that in view of these statements the item should be removed from the Agenda of the present Conference.

3. European Inland Waterways

Further consideration of the proposal of the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 1)61 was postponed in order to enable the alternative proposals of the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 43)62 to be studied by the other Delegations.

4. A DISTRIA

The Deputies were instructed to study and submit to the Council an early report upon the recommendations received from the Allied Council for Austria and the memorandum to be circulated by the United Kingdom Delegation on the food supply arrangements to be made for Austria.

Mr. Molotov in the Chair

Molorov said there was a proposal that they take up the next item on the agenda, the removal of the Soviet and British troops from Iran.

BEVIN said this was on the agenda as a result of the Berlin Conference. As a result of conversations between the British and Soviet Governments agreement had been reached on complete withdrawal in accordance with the treaty six months after September 10 [2?], and he thought it unnecessary to trouble the Council with it.

Molorov said the Soviet Delegation could make known that the Soviet Government had carried out the decision of the Berlin Conference, and Soviet troops had already withdrawn from Tehran. to the withdrawal from all of Iran, the Soviet Union stood by and would continue to stand by the treaty between Great Britain, the Soviet Union and Iran. He supported Bevin's proposal.

BIDAULT said he had been informed that this morning's meeting had been postponed, a decision that was taken without consulting him. He wanted it understood by all his colleagues that in a conference of this kind, and in any future conference that in no case would a decision be taken without consulting the French Delegation whose good will was well known to everybody. He was very surprised that a decision like that taken had been decided without previous consultation. He did not know the motive of the delay. He knew the agenda adopted, and that it was agreed that there could be discussion on any item of that agenda. It would be helpful not to be confronted by a fait accompli by anyone. France did not want to be obstructive. A country such as France had its rights. He hoped the conference would continue with its agenda.

Molorov said he wished to give some explanations. The initiative in postponing the meeting lay with the Soviet Delegation. The representatives of Britain and the United States had agreed to postponing that meeting. This was done in the morning, and the opinion of the French and Chinese Delegations was sought, and they agreed.

He now wished to say a few words on the reasons and merits of the question. The Soviet Delegation thought it necessary to restore the Berlin decision for the procedure of their discussions. They thought they had violated the Berlin decisions by not following paragraph 3(b) of the Berlin decisions, 63 and had adopted a new procedure. The Soviet Delegation believed the new procedure was not helpful and caused delays. The drawback of the procedure they had adopted was that they departed from the procedure established by the Berlin Conference which provided for participation of the Foreign Ministers on an equal basis. The procedure they adopted gave some of the Ministers full rights in the discussion of certain questions, and others did not have full rights or restricted rights in the discussion of certain questions. An end should be put to this by strictly following the Berlin decision. The problem for them was to restore the decision of the Berlin Conference, and the purpose was to speed up the work of the Conference.

Bevin said that he was not going to try to get into a discussion at this stage, but there was one point—Molotov had used the word "we". He thought they should go on record that he meant the Soviet Delegation. He thought their procedure was right.

Molotov said he meant only the Soviet Delegation.

BIDAULT asked whether that meant that they go back on the decisions taken by this conference regarding the treaties with Finland, Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria. What did they decide, or did they decide nothing?

⁶³ Apparently reference is to the Berlin Conference decision on the establishment of a Council of Foreign Ministers, Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. II, p. 1500.

Byrnes said that his understanding was that there was no decision at all, that the matter was passed over with the statement that we go through the agenda and consider the matter of the peace treaties as they come.

This was agreed to.

International Waterways

Molorov stated that the question of international waterways had been a subject of discussion at the Berlin Conference under the heading, "International Internal [Inland] Waterways", and the following decision had been adopted at the Conference. The Conference examined the proposal by the American Delegation regarding this question 64 and agreed to defer it to the consideration of the forthcoming conference of the Council of Ministers for Foreign Affairs in London. The question arose, "What is an international waterway?" Where could the definition be found? Up to now they had had no definition on this, and the question was what were they really in effect discussing. The initiative in raising this question lay with the American Delegation. Perhaps the American Delegation could make clear what international waterways were.

BYRNES replied that the paper which the United States had submitted 65 set forth the waterways which for the purpose of this emergency proposal would be considered international waterways. said that at the conference in Potsdam the matter was presented by the President, who stated that he had great interest in having something done about this matter. Before the war these waterways supported a traffic in excess of 150 million tons of shipping a year. Nearly four months had passed since the end of hostilities, yet only on one of these waterways, the Kiel Canal, was through traffic possible today. The United States had cleared its portion of the Rhine so that traffic could move between Karlsruhe and Coblenz, and it was understood that presently a narrow channel on the section between Duisburg and Rotterdam, but on other sections of the river great effort would be needed to afford a safe channel. He understood that navigation is blocked on the Elbe and the Oder so that no goods could pass into or out of Czechoslovakia and Polish territory by this route. Despite the great efforts made by the Soviet Government to clear the Danube of mines, navigation was not yet open on that great waterway. If these European rivers could be opened before freezing this winter, and shipping started on a large scale, much could be done to alleviate present conditions. Fuel and relief supplies from the United States could reach the needy in this area via the Black Sea, North Sea, and Baltic ports.

The United States was ready to cooperate in this undertaking and would direct its engineer forces in Europe to work together with others in restoring navigation facilities as quickly as possible. We would be glad to make arrangements for making shipping located in the zone of control of the United States available for use which may not be required for military needs, if the commissions dealt with by this agreement can be established.

There were quantities of fertilizer which were reported to be in the United States' area. We could then take steps to move that fertilizer to agricultural areas in need of such material if free navigation could be restored on these rivers. Because of the bridges being down and the roads blocked the transportation on land has been in a chaotic condition. This emergency proposal would enable us to use the waterways to great advantage toward giving relief we all wanted to see given to the people. It was only a temporary proposal that we were offering, hoping that we could agree upon a project of that kind. If we worked together and cooperated, we could clear out these rivers. We could put traffic back on the rivers. Then, three months from this time, as was provided in the last article, we could hold a conference to determine what should be done about a permanent regime.

Molorov said the reason why he had put this question was that he had not formed a clear idea of the substance by the material submitted by the American Delegation. He had before him a document presented by the American Delegation on the 23rd of July.66 This document contained a reference to such waterways as cross two or more states in addition to the Danube and the Rhine. He had another document from the American Delegation which was submitted for consideration at the Berlin Conference on the 26th of July.⁶⁷ It was also called a document regarding international inland waterways. This document dealt with the Danube, the Rhine, and in addition to these two rivers, the Kiel Canal and the Black Sea Straits. They could see that this document differed from the previous American document in that it named also the Kiel Canal and the Black Sea Straits. Now they had received a new document from the American Delegation with the title, "Agreement to Establish an Emergency Regime for European Inland Waterways". This document enumerated such rivers as the Rhine, Scheldt, Elbe, Oder, Danube, and the Kiel Canal. As they could see, this third document of the American Delegation differed from the two original documents. Although it did not mention the Black Sea Straits, it mentioned instead the Elbe and the Oder. He was speaking of this because he wanted to ask that they make clear what they were discussing, and what they were called upon to decide. They would clearly see that the view of those who initiated this question had undergone changes on several occasions, and it might well happen that this view would undergo another change tomorrow, and they should therefore agree what is in question. Did they have in mind international inland waterways as the question was raised by the American Delegation at the Berlin Conference? Let them define what they meant by this, and let them enumerate these international inland waterways and what they had in mind as to which straits and canals should be regarded as international inland waterways. This had not been done so far, and what had been done was that the view of the Americans instead had undergone changes on several occasions. If they put this question in order, he thought it would be easier for them to reach an agreement, but so far they were not clear as to what was meant by the Americans and what was meant by international waterways.

Potsdam reference had been made among other waterways to the Straits. His friend remembered well, however, that there was an agreement there that the matter of the Straits would be taken up separately by each of the Governments with the Turkish Government. And, of course, when that was done they did not wish to include mention of the Straits in this document. They had to stand by that decision, striking the matter of the Straits out, and he knew Molotov would not object to that.

It was true also that there was language trying to define what were the waterways—the language that his good friend had just read, but it was apparent that if they tried to establish a definition, it would follow then that the discussion would cause endless delays. So instead of trying to define the waterways, he thought this time he would name the waterways, then they would not have to bother about a definition—then they would not have to worry whether this or that river came under it because he had named the rivers. It was true that the President's proposals at Potsdam contemplated the declaration of principle for a permanent solution of this problem, but because Mr. Molotov did not seem to favor that, and in the hope that by making it temporary they would get the work started, he had proposed a temporary arrangement. He asked his friend to accept this proposal. They could take the paper and see if they could not change it that day or the next to suit all, and let them get to work on the rivers. The United States had no selfish interest in it. It only wanted to put its engineers to work and help restore traffic on these rivers.

Molorov said it would still be interesting to know what international inland waterways were. This new document used this term but with restrictions. Only international waterways in Europe were mentioned. His understanding of the new document was that the Suez, the Mississippi, and the Loire would not fall within the category of international inland waterways. His understanding of the present draft was that certain temporary measures were involved.

Byrnes said that was exactly correct.

Molorov said this meant that they passed over the question of permanent international regimes on waterways, and that the question of permanent regimes could wait. He understood that only those countries where war had been waged recently, and where occupational troops were located were involved.

Byrnes replied that the rivers were named in the document.

Molotov said the fact was that different rivers were named in different documents. In view of this he wished to submit a Soviet draft, which he proceeded to read.⁶⁸

Molorov said the Soviet proposal envisaged a short period, that of the occupation, prior to the conclusion of peace treaties with the satellites and as long as there was a control council in Germany. When the occupation came to an end, a permanent regime should be established and the temporary arrangement abolished. Then there would be no Allied troops in Europe. From the Soviet point of view a permanent regime could not be established without the participation of the riparian states. The temporary regime would be valid only for the period of occupation when final authority was vested in the commanders-in-chief. Any regime other than one under the commanders-in-chief who had control of the waterways, would lead to duality and friction, and it was obvious that any other regime was impracticable for the period of occupation.

Bevin said that as this paper had only just been circulated, and as it was proposed that the regime operate under the commanders-inchief, which in certain cases would exclude Great Britain altogether, he would like time to study the paper.

This was agreed.

 $^{^{\}rm es}$ C.F.M. (45) 43, September 22, "Provisional Navigation Regime for European Inland Waterways", p. 324.

AUSTRIA

Molorov said the Soviet Delegation thought in view of the report ⁶⁹ prepared by their representatives, the question should be referred to the Deputies.

Bevin inquired if it were proposed that they deal with both items on Austria at this time.

Molotov said he had referred only to the reply from their representatives in Austria.

Bevin said he understood the proposal to be that this reply was to be referred to the Deputies and report during the present session of the Council.

Byrnes inquired what the Deputies would be directed to do.

Molorov observed that the initiative in this matter had not come from the Soviet Delegation.

Bevin pointed out that there were some things in this report upon which their representatives were agreed and some upon which they were not in agreement. On such a question as the amount of calories that should be fixed for the country, the members of the Allied Council differed. A similar question was that as to whether barley should be used for cattle or exclusively for human consumption. Then there was the question of the natural area from which Austria should get her food. Strong representations had been made in London this week in regard to starvation in Austria. This week or next there would be a very difficult situation to face. He therefore thought they could agree that the Deputies look at the question to see if they could make a recommendation, and see whether developments could be brought about in the area outside Austria to avoid this starvation. In Austria they had reached a temporary agreement which was to run until December 30. The Foreign Ministers would have to take a decision. He was having a paper [readied?] and he hoped the Council agreed that it could go straight to the Deputies. 70

Molorov wished to draw attention to paragraph 5 of the accord which had been reached in Vienna, and which he proceeded to read. He said this seemed to be another reason to expedite the extension of the Provisional Austrian Government to all of Austria. As the Commanders-in-Chief had said, this would not settle the question, but it would be helpful, and he thought they should do everything possible to facilitate supplies for Austria.

The agreed recommendations of the Allied Council for Austria to the Council of Foreign Ministers regarding the question of long-term supply arrangements for Austria, which were reached at a meeting of the Allied Council on September 17, 1945, are quoted in telegram PV 7519, September 18, from the U.S. Military Commissioner for Austria to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, vol. III, p. 598. These recommendations were presented to the Council of Foreign Ministers by the British delegation in memorandum C.F.M. (45) 42, September 22, p. 323.

The paper presumably under reference is C.F.M. (45) 42, p. 323.

BYRNES had no objection to the action proposed by the United Kingdom Delegation to send the question to the Deputies. He had doubts as to what they could do, but in view of the troubled conditions in Austria, he hoped they could get together the next day and collect any facts on which a recommendation could be based. He agreed, but on the understanding that the Deputies report promptly.

Bevin said that in regard to the Austrian Provisional Government, Mr. Molotov knew that he had written him about this matter and had received a reply which he wished to have time to consider.

BIDAULT pointed out that a number of technical problems were involved such as (1) what was a suitable ration, (2) the obtaining of supplies, and (3) the origin of supplies. He agreed to asking the Deputies for a report. In regard to the Central Austrian Government, all countries had declared that Austria should be free, and therefore they should arrive at a common accord in order that there might be a central Austrian Government. He thought this could easily be done.

Bevin thought that with regard to the question of the central Austrian Government, it would be better if he studied the matter and reported at the next meeting.

The meeting adjourned.

Austrian Food Supplies

[Here follow recommendations of the Allied Control Council for Austria quoted in telegram PV 7519, September 18, 1945, from the U.S. Military Commissioner for Austria to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, volume III, page 598, and a discussion of the food situation in Austria.]

To sum up, His Majesty's Government propose that:

- (1) The present Conference should agree in principle on the desirability of Austrian supplies being drawn from the normal sources viz. the Danubian area.
- (2) The Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Soviet Union and France should forthwith appoint a joint Commission, with terms of reference as suggested in Annex IV, to report to them on the present position as regards food production in Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia and on the best means of increasing production and distribution so as to meet the requirements not only of those countries themselves but also of other parts of Europe. The Governments of Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia should be invited to give their consent and all possible assistance to the proposed Commission, and the Allied Control authorities in the other countries mentioned should be instructed to give it all possible assistance.

- (3) Pending the report of the proposed Commission, 75% of Austria's approved food imports should be drawn from other countries in the Danubian area and 25% from the Western hemisphere.
- (4) A technical sub-committee should immediately be set up in London and instructed to report to the Council of Foreign Ministers before the end of their present session regarding the standard of consumption to be aimed at in Austria.
- (5) Food imports should, so far as possible, be financed in acceptable currencies from the proceeds of Austrian exports, both past and future, exception being made of German assets exported by the Soviet Government from Eastern Austria in accordance with the Potsdam Agreement. Payment should similarly be made, to the extent necessary to cover the cost of imports, for material (other than weapons of war and purely military equipment) seized by the Allied armies in the initial stages of the occupation and removed from Austria.
- (6) Imports which cannot be paid for in these ways and which come from countries in which U.N.R.R.A. can procure should be financed by U.N.R.R.A. from the date of their assumption of financial responsibility for supplies to Austria.
- (7) The Conference should take note of the Allied Council's recommendations and in particular of their recommendation that the early establishment of a central Austrian governmental authority will aid the long-range food situation but not by any means solve it.

PROVISIONAL NAVIGATION REGIME FOR EUROPEAN INLAND WATERWAYS

In view of the necessity for increasing traffic along the European Inland Waterways, the Governments of the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, the U.S.A. and France, being Governments charged with the responsibility for occupation and control of enemy states in Europe, have agreed to the following:—

ON THE RIVERS RHINE, ELBE, ODER AND DANUBE

1. The right to navigate the rivers Rhine, Elbe, Oder and Danube for the duration of the regime of occupation shall be enjoyed by the merchant ships of the above-mentioned states and all the riparian states.

2. The securing of facilities for shipping for the duration of the occupation shall be carried out under the direction and control of the respective Allied Commanders-in-Chief.

ON THE KIEL CANAL

3. The securing of facilities for shipping along the Kiel Canal shall be carried out under the direction of the Control Council for Germany which ought to consider this matter in the near future.

REPARATIONS FROM GERMANY

- 1. The United Kingdom Delegation offer the following observations upon the Soviet Delegation's memorandum circulated to the Council as C.F.M.(45) 15.⁷¹
- 2. The United Kingdom Delegation agree that the Allied Commission on Reparation should be transferred from Moscow to Berlin on the understanding that the function of the Allied Commission will be to advise the Control Council regarding reparation policies as requested by the Control Council, or on the Commission's own initiative. In the light of reparation policies laid down in the Potsdam Protocol or by the Allied Commission, it will be for the Control Council to determine the amount and character of capital industrial equipment to be removed from the various industries.
- 3. The United Kingdom Delegation do not agree that it should be decided that such determination should be completed not later than the 1st December, 1945. This would be impossible owing to the complexity and magnitude of the task. Paragraph 5 of Section IV of the Potsdam Protocol ⁷² says that the amount of equipment to be removed from the Western Zones on account of reparations must be determined "within six months from now at the latest", i.e., by the 7th February, 1946. There should be no alteration in this decision.
- 4. The decision on the equipment which is to be handed over to the Soviet Union in execution of Section IV of the decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding reparations from Germany, can only be made after the amount and character of capital industrial equipment available for reparations has been determined.

- 5. The United Kingdom Delegation do not agree that the Control Council should be asked to approve not later than the 15th October, 1945 a list of enterprises, the equipment from which is to be surrendered as advance deliveries in accordance with paragraph 7 of Section IV of the Potsdam Protocol. The Potsdam Protocol provides that removals of industrial capital equipment shall begin as soon as possible. This decision should stand, but it is not practicable to lay down a precise date. It must be recognised that the removal and transport of capital industrial equipment will entail considerable difficulties for some time to come.
- 6. The United Kingdom Delegation do not agree that the Control Council should be invited to despatch immediately to the Western Zones of Germany mixed commissions and specialists. The United Kingdom Delegation consider that the Soviet Government should submit data on removals of capital industrial equipment from the Eastern Zone, and if this is agreed to, the United Kingdom Government will produce a list of equipment available for reparations and for advance deliveries from the British Zone substantiated with full factual data. When the United Kingdom Government have presented these lists they will be prepared to receive parties of specialists representing the interested countries, to enable a decision to be taken as regards allocation of what is available, on condition that the Soviet Government will, at the same time, allow specialists to enter into Eastern Germany. The United Kingdom Government will also be glad to receive suitable inspectors when the time for packing and despatch arrives.

C.F.M.(45) 46

London, 22 September, 1945.

REPATRIATION OF SOVIET NATIONALS

The Soviet Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers have circulated a Memorandum (C.F.M.(45) 10)⁷³ on the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals. In an annex to the Memorandum they make two specific complaints about the treatment of Soviet nationals in the British zones in Germany and Italy.

His Majesty's Government consider that the Council of Foreign Ministers is not a suitable form [forum?] in which to raise complaints and enquiries on points of detail. They consider that such complaints and enquiries should be dealt with if possible directly between the Soviet Repatriation Mission and the competent British authorities, or, if not disposed of in this way, through the diplomatic channel.

As regards the two specific complaints made in the Memorandum:-

- a) The first will shortly be the subject of a reply from the Foreign Office to the Soviet Embassy
- b) As to the second, the Soviet Embassy have been informed, in communications dated the 3rd August and the 13th September, that more detailed information is required from the Soviet authorities before it is possible to institute the necessary enquiries.

The Soviet Memorandum refers to the failure to repatriate persons from the Baltic States, Western Ukraine and Western Byelorussia "in accordance with the Yalta Agreement". His Majesty's Government do not recognise the Soviet Government's claim that these persons are Soviet citizens, and therefore do not regard them as liable to compulsory repatriation under the Yalta Agreement.

His Majesty's Government will return to their homes persons from these territories who express a wish to return; but persons who declare themselves unwilling to return will, as hitherto, be kept in camps to which the Soviet Repatriation Authorities will not be allowed access.

As regards points 1 and 2 of the resolution proposed in the Soviet Memorandum, the Soviet Repatriation Authorities will, of course, continue to have full information about, and unimpeded access to, camps and points of concentration of Soviet citizens (as recognised by His Majesty's Government) in accordance with the terms of the Yalta Agreement. They will also be allowed to interview, outside the precincts of the camp, persons from other camps about whose citizenship there is, in the view of His Majesty's Government, some doubt.

As regards point 3 of the resolution, liberated persons who have declared their Soviet nationality or who have expressed their willingness to return home via the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have not been kept together with, or under guard of, German troops except:—

a) In the very early stages, so long as it was absolutely necessary for their own security and that of other Allied personnel; as for instance in Norway where, owing to the lack of allied troops in the country at the time of the German surrender, it was essential to retain for a few days the existing organisation of German camps in order to prevent the ex-prisoners of war therein from dispersing beyond the range of relief supplies and protection.

b) Occasionally in hospitals, where in the first months after D. Day 4 accommodation was limited, and British and other Allied sick and wounded had temporarily to share what accommodation there was with German sick and wounded.

As regards point 4 of the resolution, organised political activities directed against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or any other Allied nation are not permitted in the British zones. No organised anti-allied political bodies have been or will be tolerated.

In view of the foregoing, His Majesty's Government do not consider that there is any ground for the adoption of the resolution contained in the Memorandum circulated by the Soviet Delegation.

[Washington, September 22, 1945.]

[346.] I am informed that Mr. Molotov is considering withdrawing from the Council of Foreign Ministers in London because of difficulty in reaching an agreement as to the participation of France and China in discussions of the Balkan situation.

I urgently request that you communicate with Mr. Molotov telling him that because of the bad effect it would have on world peace he should not permit the Council to be broken up.

The manner in which this message was prepared in trans-Atlantic consultation between the Secretary of State and Adm. William D. Leahy, Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief, is described in Byrnes, Speaking Frankly, p. 103, and in Harry S. Truman, Memoirs, vol. 1: Year of Decisions (Garden City, N.Y., Doubleday & Company, Inc., 1955), p. 517. In White House message No. 347, September 22, Admiral Leahy informed the Secretary that the President had sent this message to Stalin.

[Washington,] 22 September, 1945.

348. Referring to my message No. 346.⁷⁷ The Secretary of State has fully informed me of the difficulty encountered at the Council of Foreign Ministers.

I agree that under a strict interpretation of the language of the Potsdam Agreement, France and China have not the right to participate in the consideration of Peace treaties unless they are signatories to the surrender terms or unless they are invited under paragraph 3(2) of the Potsdam agreement which provides that members of the Council other than the signatories may by agreement be invited to participate when matters directly concerning them are under discussion.

It is my recollection that at the conference table at Potsdam it was agreed during the discussion that members not signatory could be present and participate in the discussion but could not vote. It seems the first day the Council met, it was unanimously agreed that members not signatories could participate in the discussion, but could not vote. If we now change this rule and deny France and China because they are not signatories to the surrender the right even to discuss a matter in which they state they are interested, I fear it will create a bad impression. It will be charged that the three big Powers are denying other members of the Council an opportunity even to present their views.

Can't we agree to regard the unanimous action of the Council on the opening day as an invitation to France and China to participate under the Potsdam Agreement? This is too small a matter to disrupt the work of the Council and delay progress towards peace and better understanding.

Memorandum by Mr. Benjamin V. Cohen of a Conversation Between the Secretary of State and the French Minister for Foreign Affairs (Bidault), at London, September 22, 1945, 10 p.m.

Secretary Byrnes explained briefly to M. Bidault that the delays in the day's session of the Council had been due to Mr. Molotov's raising the question that the procedure of the Council violated the provisions of the Potsdam Agreement in allowing the members not party to the armistice to participate in the consideration of the treaties. Mr. Molotov did not agree with Mr. Byrnes that the understanding at Potsdam was that they were to participate in the discussion but not He admitted that he had agreed to this procedure at the first day's meeting of the Council but he could no longer accept this procedure. Protracted arguments by both Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin had proved unavailing. Finally, it was agreed that items on the agenda not relating to the treaties should be taken up and in the meanwhile the heads of state should be consulted as to their understanding of the Potsdam agreement. Mr. Molotov stated that Marshal Stalin had already conveyed his understanding and, in fact, instructed him to cease to violate the Potsdam Agreement.

Mr. Byrnes told M. Bidault that at his suggestion the President had already wired Marshal Stalin asking him to agree to the procedure adopted by the Council.

M. Bidault expressed his indignation that the position of France should be questioned and stated that he would leave the Conference and not return if France was denied the right to discuss issues relating to the peace of Europe.

Mr. Byrnes asked M. Bidault not to take any action without consulting him further. Mr. Byrnes hoped that the President's telegram would have some effect on Marshal Stalin. In any event, none of us should act hastily without full considerations of the consequences. To this M. Bidault agreed and promised not to act without speaking with Mr. Byrnes.

M. Bidault stated that he had dined with Mr. Molotov the previous evening and he had not indicated in his [any?] way his objection to the procedure of the Council. He had upbraided M. Bidault for not supporting him, indicating that the other members were usually lined up against him.

Mr. Byrnes indicated that he thought it quite possible that Mr. Molotov used the matter of procedure as only an excuse for breaking up the Conference because he could not have his own way.

There was some further discussion about the need of avoiding hasty action in the event of crises and the possibility of France working with us on the Italian treaty even if there was not agreement on the procedure for the Balkan countries, as we ourselves might not be able to sign the Balkan treaties as we had not been able to recognize the Balkan governments.

The British Prime Minister (Attlee) to President Truman

[London,] September 23, 1945.

11. Following is repetition of message from the Prime Minister to Marshal Stalin dated September 23rd.⁸⁰

A difference of opinion arose yesterday over the composition of the Council of Foreign Ministers for the purpose of its work on the preparation of Peace Treaties. Discussion centred round the interpretation of the Berlin protocol.

Mr. Bevin maintained that the overriding provision was the decision to establish the Council composed of the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, U.S.S.R., China, France and the United States to do the necessary preparatory work for the peace settlements (paragraphs A and A(1) of Part 1 of the Protocol of the Berlin Conference), and that the Council as a whole is thus responsible for discharging all the tasks remitted to it. He therefore maintained that the following decision reached by the Council on September 11th is correct:—

⁷⁸ The text of this message was transmitted to the Secretary of State in White House message No. 350, September 23, from Admiral Leahy.

⁷⁹ Reference is to the President's message No. 346 of September 22, to Stalin,

No. 10 of September 23, read as follows: "My immediately following telegram contains repetition of message to Marshal Stalin dated September 23rd regarding the difference of opinion over the composition of the Council of Foreign Ministers. I much hope that you find yourself in agreement with the views expressed in that message." (740.00119 Council/9-2345)

"It was agreed that all five members of the Council should have the right to attend all meetings and take part in all discussions, but that in matters concerning peace settlements members whose Governments had not been signatories to the relevant terms of surrender should not be entitled to vote."

I also share this view. I have spoken to Mr. Eden ⁸¹ who tells me that his understanding at the Potsdam Conference was that the Council was free to arrange its own procedure and that it was not bound within the limits of the exact terms of the Potsdam agreement.

M. Molotov considers that the decision of the Council on September 11th was a violation of the Potsdam agreement, that it should be rescinded and that in future the Council, for the work on the Peace Treaties, should be composed only of the Foreign Ministers of the States signatory to the armistices and that whilst the United States would be added in the case of Finland, China would be excluded altogether and France from all the Treaties except the Italian. This does not accord with my understanding of the spirit and intention of the decision arrived at in Potsdam.

The decision of the Council on September 11th was agreed to by the five Ministers present, including M. Molotov, and it accords with the understanding held in good faith by the United States and British Foreign Secretaries. It seems to me beyond question that the Council was entitled to adopt the above resolution (see paragraph A(4) (II) Part 1 of the Berlin protocol). Moreover, it cannot be held to depart in any way from the Potsdam decision as the restriction of vote means in effect that the Council will be composed for taking decisions as proposed. Since this question has been referred to me I should like to touch on a broader aspect of the matter. The decision of September 11th was adopted unanimously after discussion and I should view with grave misgiving the institution of a precedent for calling in question decisions so taken and seeking to reverse them and therefore rejecting the conclusion arrived at by the British Foreign Minister acting in faithful concert with the other Foreign Ministers. That I should fear would change altogether in an adverse sense the nature and indeed the value of the Council of Foreign Ministers and introduce an element of confusion into their proceedings. Indeed I doubt whether it would be possible to gain unanimous consent of the Council to a reversal of its earlier decision and any attempt to do so would clearly cause grave offence to France and China and be completely misunderstood here by the public and Parliament to whom we reported in good faith that the Council would act as a Council of five, a statement which was received with a sense of relief in this country. M. Molotov argues that under his proposals the work of the Council would be greatly accelerated. Even if this were so, which is by no means proved by the course of the discussions, it would certainly not counter-balance the damage to harmonious collaboration caused by the offence given. To my mind the success of the present Conference and indeed the whole future of the Council and confidence in a just peace is at stake. Therefore I earnestly hope that you will agree to authorise your Delegation to adhere to the decision taken on September 11th. After all it is peace we are endeavouring to establish, which is more important than procedure.

Austrian Government

It is suggested that the Council of Foreign Ministers should agree on the following resolution:

The Council of Foreign Ministers agrees that there should be established at the earliest possible date a sovereign Government for Austria.

In accordance with the decision of the Potsdam Conference the extension of the authority of the Austrian Provisional Government to all of Austria has been examined. The Council of Foreign Ministers takes note of the decision reached by the Allied Council in Vienna on September 20th in the following terms:

"The Allied Council having received a memorandum from Dr. Renner approve his proposal to summon a Conference of Provincial representatives. The Conference should be representative of all the Provinces and of all three leading parties. The object of the Conference is to consider with complete freedom what if any broadening or reorganisation of the Provisional Government may be required. The result of the deliberations of the Conference will be considered by the Allied Council. The Allied Council agree that each occupying Power should give facilities to such representatives to proceed to Vienna".

In view of the fact that agreement on these lines has already been reached by the Allied Council the Council of Foreign Ministers consider it unnecessary to discuss the subject any further. They recommend however that the proposed conference of provincial delegates should take place at the earliest possible moment. They further recommend that elections for a Constituent Assembly should be held as soon as electoral registers can be prepared and in any case within six months from now.

I have received your second message regarding the Council of Ministers.⁸³ I have received today a reply from Mr. V. M. 740.00119 Council/9-1145

United States Delegation Minutes of the Eighteenth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 24, 1945, 11 a.m.

Mr. Wang in the chair

Wang said at the last meeting they had discussed two questions concerning Austria, one of which had been referred to the Deputies and he would now ask the Chairman of the Deputies meeting to report.

Molorov said he wished to make a statement which he proceeded to read:

[Here follows the Soviet statement subsequently circulated in the Council as a memorandum by the Soviet Delegation, C.F.M.(45) 49, September 24, "Allied Control Machinery in Japan", printed on page 357.]

BYRNES said he supposed that Mr. Molotov's request was to add this item to the agenda.

Molorov said this was correct. He considered this to be an urgent question. They could discuss it tonight if desired and not necessarily at the moment.

BYRNES said there were many matters he considered urgent referred to them by the Heads of State at Potsdam. They had been instructed to consider the question of inland waterways which had been put on the agenda the first days of their session but they had not yet been able to discuss it. There were many questions the U.S. Delegation deemed of great urgency but they had not thought of asking that they be put on the agenda because they thought the Council should first dispose of questions referred to them. However, he would be very glad to study the Soviet proposal and whenever they had disposed of matters referred to them by the Heads of State they could consider whether it should be placed on the agenda.

Molorov said he wished to explain why they had asked that this matter be placed on the agenda and why he had raised the question at this meeting of the Foreign Ministers. Already they had been meeting for several weeks and events had continued on their course and the Council was somewhat behind on developments. The surrender of Japan was a very important development to all of their countries. At present in Japan an Allied Commander-in-Chief 86_ was acting without consulting anyone and for its part the Soviet Government could not assume responsibility for a situation which was fraught with the possibility of a new aggression by Japan. Soviet Government felt it could not take responsibility for the policy being pursued. He wondered if the following corresponded with Allied policy in regard to Japan. Japanese munition dumps, clothing depots etc. were being guarded by Japanese. Japanese soldiers on being demobilized were being issued two suits of clothing and had arms which they carried off secretly to the mountains. American authorities connived with this and would not oppose it in any way. He had mentioned this because it showed that the policy of the Americans in Japan hardly agreed with the policy of other Governments.

He wanted to draw attention to another matter. Prior to the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers the Soviet Government had received a proposal from the U.K. Government in regard to the establishment of a Control Council in Japan.⁸⁷ They had received also a proposal from the American Government in regard to an Advisory Commission in Washington. Despite Soviet agreement this had not been done. It was not just a question of setting up a commission about Japan but of setting up a commission in Japan. The British proposal to set up a control commission in Japan deserved as much attention as the Soviet proposal to this end and Mr. Molotov asked that these proposals be discussed.

⁸⁶ General of the Army Douglas MacArthur.

⁸⁷ For documentation on American participation in the occupation of Japan, see vol. vi, section under Japan entitled "Surrender of Japan . . .".

Byrnes said that the policy of the Supreme Commander in Japan was in unity with the policies of the Allies.⁸⁹ A copy had been sent to Marshal Stalin. It was directly contrary to the information sent to Mr. Molotov and he was sure that on investigation Mr. Molotov's information would be found to be incorrect. That policy provided that the Japanese Air and Naval forces be disarmed and that the general staff and secret police organization be disbanded and that military and naval installations be surrendered. That policy would be carried out. Next to China the United States had suffered more than anyone else from Japanese aggression and the Commander-in-Chief could be relied upon to carry out that policy. There was much more he could say to make Mr. Molotov feel more assured in regard to the situation but he did not want to delay consideration of the questions that had been referred to them and he pointed out that this question was one that had not been referred to them. He had a copy of the statement 90 made by the President in regard to the instructions that had been issued to General MacArthur and he would be glad to give Mr. Molotov a copy. He suggested that they resume discussion of the agenda.

Bevin said he only wished to say that when the British Government had sent out their letter, this action had been no reflection on the Commander-in-Chief in whom they had complete confidence. The British had only thought the questions might come up which would require consultation. He agreed with Mr. Byrnes that they must continue to deal with their agenda before they took up new questions. He would also like to study instructions from the President of the United States which he had not seen. Obviously having sent out the letter which he did he could not object to the matter being discussed but he thought they should first clear up the items which had been adjourned.

Molorov said he agreed with Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin to postpone the question until later and discuss it at their meeting that morning but his request was that they place on the agenda the Soviet and British documents in regard to the establishment of a control commission in Japan.

Wang said the Chinese would like to have more time to consider before he stated their views.

BIDAULT said that the Council of Foreign Ministers had full control of its agenda. He thought that the Council should follow its agenda but should not exclude anything from it which it desired to discuss. The French Delegation needed time to get instructions. They had no knowledge of the British letter referred to but they would welcome an opportunity to read it.

Bevin said his understanding was that before this matter was discussed again the agenda would be completed.

Molorov said he had no objection to Mr. Bevin's suggestion but he asked that the question be included in the agenda.

BYRNES said he had stated that he objected to its being included in the agenda at this time. The Soviet paper had just been handed to him. He had stated several days ago that he had come here relying on the agenda which contained questions referred to them at Potsdam and that he was not in a position to discuss Far Eastern matters. He had no military advisor here and he would certainly not want to undertake to discuss the question until he had the necessary advice and information. He would be happy to have the views of his colleagues and to give serious consideration to them but in the absence of any members of his Government charged with these matters he could not at this time say whether or not he could agree to the question being placed on the agenda for action.

Molorov said the Soviet Delegation agreed that they should not discuss the question today. The Soviet Delegation proposed that they revert to the matter the next morning in order to decide whether they should place the matter on their agenda. If Mr. Byrnes was ready they could discuss it that afternoon.

BYRNES said that he had stated his position. He had no objection to the question being discussed. He would object to any understanding that it would be placed on the agenda after it was discussed. He simply wanted to make clear that he was not committing himself to this action.

Molotov asked what had they decided.

Wang said the decision was that they proceed and that Mr. Molotov's proposal that the question as to whether the matter he had raised be placed on the agenda be discussed at a later meeting.

This was agreed to.

SUPPLIES FOR AUSTRIA

Wang said he would ask the Chairman of the Deputies meeting to report on this matter.

Wellington Koo said the Deputies had met and discussed the question but that their examination had not been completed.91

AUSTRIAN CENTRAL GOVERMENT

Wang said the second question was that of the Austrian central government.

Bevin said he had circulated a paper on this matter 92 and that if it were adopted the matter could be considered as finished. He wished to add that in the paper the use of the word "sovereignty" was not intended to infringe on the power of the Control Council so long as the participating powers considered the Control Council necessary. He had received a telegram which indicated that the question could auickly be settled.

Byrnes said he agreed and he thought that if they could dispose of any questions they should do so.

Molotov said the Soviet Delegation was grateful to Mr. Bevin for his having communicated the decision adopted on September 20 by the Allied Council. The Soviet Delegation had not received its report on this nor the memorandum of Dr. Renner referred to. It was therefore difficult for him to discuss the matter now. He hoped to receive these reports today or tomorrow.

BIDAULT said the French Delegation was in the same situation but added that the British scheme seemed reasonable.

Byrnes said he wished to ask a question in regard to the British memorandum on food supplies.93 He was advised by the U.S. Deputy that in the consideration of the British paper the first British proposal was deferred and the discussion of the second proposal had not proceeded very far. He wondered whether the British Delegation believed it practical to reach a conclusion in the Deputies' meeting on the 7 proposals or whether the British Delegation could draft a directive to the Allied Control Council in Austria without the Council of Foreign Ministers having to consider the details.

BEVIN said the difficulty was that Austria was a deficient area. Whatever was done in Austria could not solve this question. Yugoslavia had been in the habit of feeding Austria as well as countries of the Danubian Basin. Then there were other difficulties as to what was a standard number of calories. Looking at the report they had ⁹¹ The Deputies held their third meeting at Lancaster House, London, September 24, 1945, at 9:30 a.m., and conducted a discussion of the memorandum by the United Kingdom delegation (C.F.M. (45) 42, September 22, p. 323) regarding Austrian food supplies. received they would see that there were differences in the Allied Council. He had been told that Austria was a pretty bad spot from the point of view of living conditions of the people. The British had taken some military supplies and made them available to deal with the situation for a short time. He did not think the sphere of action of the Allied Council was such that it could solve the question. It had been heard up to now that the Allied Council was not competent in this matter. No one wanted a lot of commissions. If it were agreed to extend the power of the Allied Council to deal with this question he thought the difficulty could be overcome. In this case four of the British proposals would be dropped. If this were agreed to in principle the Deputies could be directed to take up the matter.

Byrnes said he was advised that the Soviet representative in the Deputies had said that the Allied Control Commissions in Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary had information on this matter and that there was no need to set up a new commission. It seemed to Mr. Byrnes that as all were interested in the same object they might consider having the Council call on the Allied Control Commissions in Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary to furnish the information and they might ask the Yugoslav and Czechoslovak Governments to furnish information and then they would have all information centered in one body.

In this way they would avoid the appointment of a commission and get the information centered in the Control Council of Austria.

Molorov thought the creation of a new commission would not increase foodstuffs but would delay necessary decisions. He thought they should ask the Control Commission and the respective governments whether they had any surplus foodstuffs and he was therefore more inclined toward the proposal made by Mr. Byrnes. In regard to calories perhaps it was possible to receive information whether the necessary amounts had been secured by the American and British Governments for Greece. They should not be less interested in Greece which was an Allied country than in Austria.

BYRNES said he did not know anything in regard to calories in Greece. He assumed the British Delegation had more information than he. The difference in the situations was that they were responsible for the Austrian situation and he thought that if the Soviet Delegation agreed with the suggestion he had made the Deputies might consider something along that line.

Bevin said he had no objection to the Deputies trying their hand at a directive along these lines but he was not going to revert again to the question of Greece. He wished to make one important point, namely, Allied supplies were guaranteed to the end of October. UNRRA eventually would come in when it was ready but there would be a gap. The Allied Council itself could not decide how that gap was to be covered and supplies assured. He agreed to refer the matter to the Deputies to see what could be recommended.

Byrnes asked if it was agreed that the Deputies should study the question of a directive and what could be done to fill this gap.

This was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS

Bevin said he had studied Mr. Molotov's paper 94 and wished to make a statement. The British Delegation was concerned in this matter with the question of a temporary regime and that of a permanent regime. He had no objection to discussing the matter on the basis of a temporary regime in view of the disorganization which had been brought about by the war. The American proposal 95 provided for coordination of effort. The Soviet proposal really left things just as they were. If the matter were left under the Allied commander he did not see any reason for them to take any decision at all. To take the position on the Elbe, part of this river was in the British zone and part in the Soviet zone. The situation of the Rhine was even more complex. It seemed therefore that with respect to a temporary regime the American draft offered the best basis for real action. The Soviet proposal would leave Great Britain out of the picture on the Danube entirely whereas the Kiel Canal which was in the British zone would be put under the Allied Council. The quickest way to help their allies in Europe was to get waterways and other means of transportation going as quickly as possible. emphasize that Great Britain had enjoyed certain rights and that whatever was done temporarily must not prejudice those rights.

There was one grave point which he thought he should put before the Council. By adopting the Soviet proposal it would look almost as though in the temporary period they were establishing frontiers. He would like to propose that the American proposal with certain modifications be adopted. He therefore urged that they try to find a settlement on the question of a temporary regime on the basis of the American proposal without prejudice to their rights. With regard to the question of time mentioned in the Soviet proposals he would point out that Allied control might go on for a long time. Some other time should be fixed for ending the temporary regime. The time might be different for different parts, some of which might settle down earlier than others.

Byrnes said the U.S. Delegation had examined the Soviet proposals with interest in the hope that they might give some ray of light on how they might achieve the object which they had in mind. He wished to submit to his good friend of the Soviet Delegation that the difficulty of the Soviet proposals was that it would make possible different sets of regulations on different sections of the rivers and even on different sides of the same river and that it would allow military commanders to stop navigation at any time. A local commander might interfere with navigation in the name of his commander in chief and a navigator, when he started out on a trip, would never know what conditions he might find in the different zones. It was to avoid such conditions that the U.S. Delegation proposed an international commission including all interested powers. He had no objection to fixing a time limit and to provide for the participation of various govern-He would also agree that the temporary character of the arrangement would not prejudice any rights. The objective of the President of the United States in presenting the matter at Potsdam was to see if they could not cooperate in this matter and restore navigation on these important rivers. Because of their sincere belief that it would contribute to relief of those devastated countries the United States had submitted this paper on the first day of the Council meeting with the hope that his colleagues would agree to take it as a basis. They could examine any amendments that they wished seriously to put forward.

Molorov said the Soviet proposals covered only a short period, that of the occupation. In regard to the Balkan countries through which the greater part of the Danube flowed, the time was not far off when they would conclude peace treaties with those countries and pass from temporary to permanent regimes. In regard to Germany and the Rhine, Elbe, and Oder rivers, they could have a special discussion to fix the period. He did not think they should deal with the question of a permanent regime now as it was very complicated. If they undertook to examine the question of a permanent regime they would be confronted with problems such as that of the Danube and would need to invite Yugoslavia to be represented. would be incorrect to examine this question without inviting the riparian states. What was the meaning of the Soviet Delegation? With regard to the Rhine and the Elbe the regime of these rivers would be determined by the respective commanders in chief who were in charge of troops adjacent to them. The area of the Rhine was not in the Soviet zone but came under the Control Council activities. Part of the Elbe was in the Soviet zone. He hoped that in case of necessity they could reach agreement. The Danube would temporarily remain under the control of the Soviet commander in chief but not fully as Allied representatives were stationed on parts of the river and would have a share in its control. They must bear in mind the fact that there were troops in the areas in question whose lines of communication must be secured by their commanders in chief. Otherwise there would be dual authority and much undesirable friction. He asked Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin to consider the undesirability of friction and complications. That was why the Soviets confined themselves to the proposals they had put forward. The Kiel Canal was different as it connected two seas and the British would hardly want to take the whole responsibility for this Canal. The other powers had rights arising from the peculiar position of the Kiel Canal but it was natural that the British commander in chief would have supreme authority on this Canal.

Byrnes wanted to suggest that the American proposal was temporary. They could fix a time and say that the regime would cease to exist at the end of two years or say that it would cease unless after review it was decided not to end it. It provided for a conference of all interested states within three months showing that it was entirely different from a permanent regime. Article 8 provided that the commission maintain close contact with the Control Council. It was possible that the Control Council would name the representatives on these commissions. In article 2 that was specifically provided for in the occupied countries. He referred to conditions existing before the war and said that they did not want to take a backward step by forcing navigation to be subject to the regulations of individuals. This would mean different regulations on different sides and on different parts of the rivers. He suggested that they say the temporary regime would expire at the end of two years unless it were decided after review to extend it for a short or for a long period.

Molorov said that they had had no trouble on these rivers and he did not see why they should establish any new regime.

The meeting was adjourned.

United States Delegation Minutes of the Nineteenth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 24, 1945, 4 p. m.

INLAND WATERWAYS

Mr. Byrnes in the chair.

BIDAULT recalled that the French Delegation had circulated a memorandum on this question.96 It represented the old and traditional French policy on this question. He wished to raise two questions. The first was that the Rhine Commission be set up where it had been located before, namely, at Strasbourg. In this connection he pointed out that the American memorandum 97 provided for the restoration of the system that had previously been in existence as far as possible.

The second question he wished to raise related simply to the drafting. The French Delegation had submitted a memorandum on German problems.98 He did not want that problem to be prejudiced by any language used in connection with this matter and he proposed that in the American paper they say "the Control Council or German interests represented by the Control Council".

Byrnes said he had no objection to the language "German interests as represented by the Control Council". He asked if the Soviet Delegation would indicate whether it was willing to consider the American draft subject to any amendment that might be proposed.

Molotov said the Soviet Delegation proposed that its draft 99 be taken subject to any amendments. What the Soviet Delegation was aiming at was to avoid any dual authority on any of these rivers.

⁹⁶ C.F.M. (45) 33, September 19, p. 261.

⁹⁷ C.F.M. (45) 1, September 12, p. 132.

⁹⁸ C.F.M. (45) 17, September 13, p. 177. 99 C.F.M. (45) 43, September 22, p. 324.

BYRNES said that this was provided for in Article 8 of the American paper and if the language in that paper was not specific enough other language could be considered.

Molorov said that Article 8 did not avoid dual authority but on the contrary sanctioned it.

BYRNES asked if the Soviet Delegation would suggest some language for that Article to make it clear that there should not be any dual authority.

Molorov proposed that they take Article 2 of the Soviet draft in order to accomplish this.

Byrnes asked if there were any other suggestions. He thought they could consider whether suitable language could be found without abandoning the principle of returning to an international control system along the lines that had existed before the war.

Molorov said that if they were to talk of a permanent regime they should invite the Czechs and Yugoslavs to participate. He did not mention for the time being other riparian states. In regard to a permanent regime for the Oder, Czechoslovakia and Poland should be called in.

Byrnes said he agreed and this was provided for in Article 10 which said that in regard to the question of permanent control there should be a conference of all interested states and this article provided that the conference should be called within three months and Czechoslovakia and every other interested state would be invited to attend.

Molorov asked what about other interested states such as Rumania and Austria.

Byrnes said that the United States Delegation thought that all interested states should be invited.

Molorov pointed out that he was talking of the present session of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Byrnes replied that they were not now talking of a permanent regime. He agreed with Molotov that when it was a question of a permanent regime all interested states should be called in. He had said that in order to be sure that this regime was temporary, they should provide that it expire at the end of two years or at some other time.

Molorov said that not a single one of the riparian states had complained of the regime now existing and he therefore saw no need to change during the period of occupation.

BYRNES said that of course their attitudes depended upon the information they got. The United States information was that rivers were blocked and if they were not unblocked before freezing weather set in, they were apt to overflow their banks. It was necessary that work be done immediately and that it cover all parts of these rivers.

Molorov said the Soviets did not have complaints from any allied government or any country situated on any of these rivers.

BEVIN said that the Prime Minister of Czechoslovakia 1 had told him that he was very concerned in regard to what would happen on the Elbe and had asked that measures be taken in common by the various states to deal with this problem.

BYRNES said that UNRRA officials had told us that it would help them to have navigation on these rivers.

BEVIN said they knew that the Elbe was not open from the sea to Czechoslovakia.

Byrnes said that this was also the United States information.

Molorov replied that the Control Council in Germany could discuss this.

Byrnes replied that the Control Council could not act in such a way as to carry out the duties of the international commissions on these rivers.

Molorov pointed out that the Control Council had also not approached them in regard to this question.

Wang said that the most serious of Molotov's arguments was the question of duality. To minimize friction he suggested that Article 2 of the American proposal be modified to read "the commander-in-chief of the different regions will form part of the commission and will be their chairman".

BYRNES pointed out that in such cases as that of the Danube there would be more than one commander-in-chief and that it would be impossible to say that the commander-in-chief would be chairman. He would, however, be willing that the commanders-in-chief sit with the commission to be assured that their interests were protected.

Bevin pointed out that all of their experts were here and that if this could be approved in principle and a conference convened immediately they could refer the matter to them and ask them to advise the Council. One reason why he suggested this was that all riparian countries were, he believed, represented on the conference on European Inland Transport ² that was now taking place in London and that they could give their advice very clearly. If the Council could accept the United States draft as the basis, they would have a basis for their work.

BYRNES asked if his understanding was correct that Bevin proposed to refer this paper to the European Inland Transport Conference and ask them to give the Council a report on it.

Bevin replied in the affirmative.

¹ Zdenek Fierlinger. The British minutes of this meeting record that Bevin recalled that Fierlinger had spoken of the matter during his recent visit to London (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes).

² See pp. 1389 ff.

BYRNES said he would be disappointed if the Council of Foreign Ministers did not consider this question because of the deep interest which the United States had in the matter, but if this were not possible then he thought it wise to adopt the proposal made by Mr. Bevin.

Bevin pointed out that he did not approve that it be referred to the organization on European Inland Transport as such, but to the same people sitting as a commission. The members of that organization were the United States, the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R., and France, together with one representative of each of the non-enemy riparian states.

Byrnes asked if Bevins proposed that they fix some time within which they would ask for a report to be submitted such as by the time of the next session of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Molorov said that he did not see what a commission could do if a Council failed to agree. They had to agree on a basis and in this case the Soviet Delegation suggested that the Soviet proposal be taken as the basis. It still felt that it was important to avoid duality in orders issued by the commission and by the commanders-in-chief.

Bevin agreed with Molotov that if the principle were not decided in the Council there was no use in sending it to the Commission.

BYRNES said that if they could then not come to agreement they would have to pass over the question on the basis that it was hopeless and that they were unable to reach agreement.

Molorov suggested that they pass over the question until such time as all members of the Council of Foreign Ministers recognized that it was necessary to revert to it.

[Byrnes] ³ The United States Delegation keenly regretted that the Council had not been able to take any positive action to restore navigation on the waterways of Europe. The waterways in Europe were not entities in themselves. They were not the concern of individual riparian States alone. They were a part of a whole network of communications and transportation. When other means of transportation were unable to carry goods, the waterways became the most vital of all means of communication. Distressed people of many countries could not wait upon months of leisurely debate among statesmen or technicians. They must have food, medicine, clothing and fuel now or suffer irreparably.

The United States Delegation came to this Conference with the high hope that the Conference would open the doors of river transportation in Europe. It was sorely disappointed that the Council had not been able to do this. It believed firmly that the members of the Commissions and the Allied Commanders could cooperate to relieve distress in those areas.

³ According to the British minutes of this meeting, this and the following paragraph are attributed to the Secretary of State and were preceded by the following statement by the Secretary: "Mr. Byrnes said that he could not agree to this, as it would mean that any one Foreign Minister could prevent it from being discussed." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes)

Molorov said he wished to add that the position of the Soviet Delegation did not differ from the position which would be adopted by any other government which found itself in the same position as that of the Soviet Government and which bore the same responsibility for occupied areas. Any other government that found itself in the position of the Soviet government would act similarly. The attitude of the Soviet Government fully corresponded with the interests of all the allied nations and represented the best way of improving navigation on the rivers in which the riparian states were interested.

REPATRIATION OF SOVIET CITIZENS

Molorov said that this was a very sore question for the Soviet Union and that this was not the first time they had approached the governments of Great Britain, the United States, and France in this matter.4 More than 4,000,000 Soviet citizens had been repatriated although 200,000 had not been repatriated. Many thus seized by the enemy had not been traced. The Soviet government thought that this solution for its nationals was more than justified. The Soviet government again wished to express its gratitude to the Government of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France for the assistance given in the repatriation of Soviet citizens up to the present time. The Soviet government had concluded agreements with the governments of Great Britain, the United States, and France in regard to the liberation of Soviet nationals. These agreements had played a useful role up to now. However, cases had occurred which could not be considered normal and which worried the Soviet people very much. The Soviet Delegation asked that the greatest possible attention be given to its statements on this question. He pointed out that 21,400 United States nationals had been repatriated, and it seemed that one American who had been liberated had not yet been repatriated owing to his illness. Also 23.762 British nationals had already been repatriated and again one had not been returned because of illness. 294,160 French nationals had been liberated and repatriated up to the present. He had no information as to the French men not liberated, but everything was being done to accelerate their repatriation. The total figure of all allies, including prisoners of war, displaced persons including Poles, Czechs, Belgians, and Dutch, amounted to 794,113 persons.

Bevin pointed out that this was a difficult problem. So far as Soviet citizens in the ordinary way were concerned, they had done a good job. However, this matter involved the Baltic States and Polish areas east of the Curzon Line.⁵ It had been held that because they had agreed at Crimea to support the Curzon line,6 they had ratified it. The British held a different view. He had not been there but he had read the papers. The statement issued said what the three heads of governments considered ought to be the new frontier. The same had been stated in the House of Commons. He was anxious to settle this matter. In the Soviet-Polish Treaty 7 provision for option had been made. No option had been given these people, however. The Baltic States were a separate problem. He asked in regard to the Poles, whether the British were to be expected to compel these people to go back whether they wanted to or not. This would be contrary to Britain's oldest traditions and laws. It was a question whether these people become Soviet citizens when the frontier changed by two belligerents had not been induced by a general peace treaty, and what the legal position was in such a case. He was not putting this up to cause difficulty but felt that they must examine the problem in the most friendly manner.

He could not accept the Soviet claim in regard to the Balkan States and he did not know whether it was pressed. The British had encouraged every one to go, but he pointed out that there was the question of the Polish army. Many of these people came from Eastern Poland. Were they to have any option? The matter had been discussed with the Polish Government.

Bevin said he had made a speech in the House of Commons urging these people to go. The British had not had much assistance in the matter. So far as he knew all Soviet citizens, that is those included within the 1939 Soviet border, had either gone back or were awaiting transportation. They must resolve the question of principle and decide on a method in respect to the Poles in order to ascertain who were Soviet citizens. If they could decide that all Poles outside of the old Polish frontier include displaced persons and prisoners of war, which [and were?] deemed to be Poles unless they opted to go back to the Soviet Union, such a decision would administratively save them much trouble.

Byrnes said that as a result of the statement made by the Soviet Delegation at the time of the Potsdam conference.8 he had had investigations made and after reading the reports he was convinced that the United States authorities had done everything in their power to carry out their agreement with the Soviet Government on this subject. He added that investigation had also been carried out at Potsdam, but he referred only to those with which he was personally familiar. The matter was one which was in the hands of the military authorities and he had called on them to see that the agreement was faithfully carried out and he knew that they would do so. The situation as reported to me was much like that outlined by Mr. Bevin. There was no question of the desire of the military authorities to act in any case where the matter of citizenship was not raised. When, however, a person declared he was not a citizen of the Soviet Republic, then the military authorities must look into the matter to see whether he was or not. His Soviet friends knew that this faced us with a problem.

In the Yalta Agreement the three heads of Government had stated they considered that the eastern frontier of Poland should follow the Curzon Line with some digression in favor of Poland. The United States supported the Curzon Line and would certainly continue to do so. The agreement had been deliberately worded the way it was because President Roosevelt knew he could not speak on this for the Government of the United States; therefore the expression "heads of Government" had been used. Notwithstanding this President Truman felt the same way, and all that the President of the United States could do to support it would be done. Mr. Byrnes said he was not on the drafting group but he was told that the agreement had originally read "the three governments", but that this had been changed to read "the three heads of Government" because the President did not want to overstep his authority. It had also been said that the matter would have to be settled at a peace conference by a treaty. The same thing had been said with regard to Silesia and East Prussia. as the President of the United States was concerned the United States would stand by the agreement with regard to Silesia and East Prus-The question was, prior to such a settlement, a man said he was not a national of the Soviet Republic and could not be treated as such at this time. The United States military authorities tried to send them back but they were unable to do so when these persons denied they were Soviet citizens. The United States wanted to do what was right about the matter, but under United States law it was difficult to say that a man was a citizen when there was no cession of territory ratified by the United States Government. His Soviet friends must believe that the United States was not acclimated [actuated] by any desire other than to carry out the agreement, but this did present a serious problem.

BIDAULT said the French Delegation knew of grievances, chiefly individual cases. The solution of these through the diplomatic channel would have been easy. He preferred not to deal with individual cases. He had not been present at the Crimea conference and he was not so well informed as his colleagues, but in regard to the agreement signed between the Soviet Union and France he was ready to accept some of the proposals of the Soviet Delegation provided that the text was replaced by a bilateral text. An important number of French men had not vet been repatriated. He therefore asked that the first paragraph of the Soviet proposal be reciprocal in regard to visits to camps, and in this connection he said his information did not coincide with the information given earlier. Paragraph four of the proposal was unacceptable. The French Government was determined to apply every agreement both in the letter and in the spirit. What he had said about bilateral agreements did not exclude the French Government to participate in a general discussion of any question of principles raised.

Molorov said that of course the Soviet Delegation was only asking for reciprocity. He wondered how the matter stood. In Soviet British relations, from the point of view of reciprocity, only one British national had not been repatriated because of illness. The British authorities had made no complaints but there were tens of thousands of Soviet citizens in the British zone to which the Soviet Government had no access. For their part the Soviet Government had applied reciprocity.

With regard to the Western Ukraine and Western White Russia he did not completely understand the subtleties of the juridical questions to which Mr. Byrnes had referred when he expounded the point of view of the American Government. He wondered, however, whether he could take it that the border between the Soviet Union and Poland had been settled or whether it was still hanging in the air. He pointed out that the decision of the Berlin Conference said that the three heads of government agreed that pending a final determination of the peace settlement, former German territories east of such and such a line could be placed under the administration of Poland. At the Crimea Conference, however, the decision was that the three heads of government considered that the frontier should follow such and such a line. It would be noted that the difference was that there was no reservation in the Crimea decision. He wondered if Mr. Byrnes's Legal Adviser had drawn his attention to this difference. Every one was clear that the sense of the decision in regard to the eastern frontier of Poland was a final decision so far as their three governments were concerned, and no one could doubt this who had read about the matter in the press. He drew attention to the fact that between the Soviet Union and Poland there was no difference of view and both governments agreed, as to the line, as to who should be considered Polish and who should be considered Soviet citizens.

What were the consequences of the statements of the American and British Delegations. Inhabitants of the Western Ukraine and White Russia who found themselves in the hands of British authorities were, in the Soviet view, Soviet citizens. Suppose some of them did not want to return home because they had assisted Hitler. If this fact gave rise to doubt as to whether they were Soviet citizens or not, then it might be that his British and American colleagues did not regard the 13,000,000 citizens in the Western Ukraine as Soviet citizens but as stateless persons. That was the result of the statements they had made. The Baltic republics had been mentioned. He would not dwell upon this question. It was well known where they were situated. Perhaps some people were not clear but the question was still practically in reality.

Let them take the instance of Vlassov, who was a traitor now in Soviet hands and who would be tried as a war criminal. Many of his men, however, were in American and British hands. It was obvious that this man wished to escape punishment. But why were such people held and why was it not wanted to return them to the Soviet Union for trial. Traitors must answer to their own countries for their treason in aiding Hitler. What interest did the American and British Governments have in these people. It was natural that allies should help each other to bring traitors back. He was not speaking of Latvia and Estonia, etc., but citizens of Kaluga and Moscow. The Soviet Union had never demanded the forceful return home of those citizens who were not criminals toward their motherland but who for some reason did not want to return. How was it possible not to give access to camps to Soviet officials in which, in their opinion, there were Soviet citizens. As sad as it might be many Soviet citizens had been brought into the clutches of Germans and many of these had been instilled with anti-Soviet propaganda. Now they were in British and American camps and their minds were muddled. Soviet officials wanted to explain things to them but had no access to the camps. How could they reconcile this with friendly relations between countries. He proposed that the Soviet proposal be taken as a basis and be referred to the Deputies.

Bevin said one would assume from the statements made that the British were anxious to assist criminals. He had seen the papers regarding Vlassov which ran to about five hundred pages, and he had passed them to the military commanders whose reply he was awaiting. As soon as he had all the facts he would inform Mr. Molotov, but he wished to point out that the problem was wider than that. The chief difficulty of the British was in regard to the Poles. In the document Mr. Molotov had read no treaty had been concluded. Mr. Churchill could not have done this without reference to Parliament. Mr. Bevin said he had no information in regard to the arrangement for the option by Poles and he only knew of this from newspaper reports. He had not been told officially. He had not claimed that 13,000,000 citizens were stateless, but some of these people who were abroad denied that they were Soviet citizens. The British had 900,000 Poles in their territory. Field Marshal Montgomery was anxious to send them back. The British had 100,000 prisoners of war, some of whose residences were east of the Curzon Line, but who claimed to be Poles. The generalizations, almost accusations, made by Mr. Molotov were not helpful. The Deputies could not deal with this matter. How could Deputies decide that the British Government recognized a given line and change the citizenship of people who had been told nothing about it. This had to be dealt with by the Government officials. He did not want to cause difficulty but he was anxious to solve this question.

He thought the whole question of the Eastern frontier should be cleared up. With regard to the Curzon Line he had heard a report that the people concerned would have a free choice of their citizenship but nothing had been conveyed to the British officials. The British constitution on these matters differed from the American but the British were anxious to get this matter cleared up. When he was in Potsdam he had asked the Polish Government if these people would get the same treatment as other Poles, but he had not yet gotten that matter cleared up. The British Government had to face public opinion, and any government that took steps that disregarded human rights would not last long. He wished to add that the latest figure of Poles held by the British was 500,000. He wished to emphasize that the British promise to support the eastern frontier of Poland, as provided at Yalta, would be adhered to. This was no political question in regard to a line but a difficulty in regard to the actual persons concerned.

¹⁰ According to the British minutes of this meeting, Bevin said at this point: "M. Molotov had quite rightly said that at the Crimea Conference the Heads of Governments had considered that the Polish-Soviet frontier should follow the Curzon line. But they had said no more than that." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes)

Byrnes said that we would gain nothing by sending this to the Deputies who would not be able to help them. His friend, Mr. Molotov must believe that the United States had no desire other than to cooperate in this matter. If any of General Vlassov's men were in United States custody Mr. Molotov could rest assured that he had no sympathy for them. This, however, was a difficult question. Molotov had said he did not wish to force people to return unless they were criminals. If they were war criminals there would be no difficulty. under the agreement reached, in having them turned over regardless of whose custody they were in. Molotov could rely upon it that the matter would again be taken up with the military authorities and that the United States would return all who wanted to return and those in regard to whose citizenship there was no doubt. He was glad the matter had been brought up because it had caused them to give thought to the important question of citizenship of people in the territory in regard to which they had been talking. He would like to know what the arrangements were regarding option in the agreement between the Soviet Union and Poland. He pictured an army officer confronted with a man who, when he left home, naturally was a citizen of Poland. Now he was told that the line had been changed and he was a citizen of the Soviet Republic. He, or some lawver for him, could say that a treaty gave him the right to opt. raised all sorts of questions which they could not settle in the Council.

Molotov must believe that we were anxious to settle this matter and that we would take it up to find the best way to settle a problem which he could see had given the Russians a lot of meditation.

Bevin said he preferred to deal with it through the diplomatic channel and that he would deal with it vigorously.

Molorov said this was a sore question for the Soviet Union as a large number of Soviet citizens were involved. Immediately after the Crimea Conference the Soviet Government had signed agreements with the American and British governments in regard to repatriation. At that time no question arose as to who were Soviet nationals. If it had they would have given explanations. Neither the British nor the American Government had made any reservations.

In regard to the Polish-Soviet agreement respecting the frontier and the arrangement for option, he would provide both the British and American Governments with these agreements.

He asked if they could agree on the following decision:

"The Council of Foreign Ministers takes note of the statements of the British, United States and French Delegations to the effect that their Governments will take all necessary measures to accelerate the repatriation of Soviet citizens and that all proper facilities will be given in pursuance of this object".

Bevin proposed adding the words ". . . agreed definition of Soviet citizens".

Molorov said he would be happy to accept this but it would not be easy to agree taking into account such countries as Latvia and Estonia, and that many Poles would be involved.

Bevin proposed having the question of "definition of Soviet citizens" pursued through diplomatic channels.

Molotov said this could not be recorded.

Bevin said he did not press the matter as long as it was understood they could do it. He was trying to cut out a lot of authorities and to deal with it through the diplomatic channel.

Molotov suggested that in regard to Poles they might have a special agreement.

Byrnes said there should not be any misunderstanding. If Mr. Molotov was agreeable to trying to solve this matter through the diplomatic channel that was all right, but if agreement was to be arrived at on a resolution and they had a difference in regard to what constituted a national of the Soviet Republic, it would serve no purpose to say they had agreed. He would want it understood that the United States would have to determine in each case who was a Soviet citizen. That was the burden of our military authorities.

Molorov asked if Soviet representatives would be given access to camps in which they have information that there are Soviet citizens.

Bevin said he could not answer that before going into the matter. Molorov said that this was the Soviet proposal.

Bevin said he could not answer that at this session. That is why he wanted it to be handled through diplomatic channels so that it would pass into his hands. Some of these things were dealt with under other departments. He could not, at any rate settle the matter this week.

Molorov said the Soviet paper had been in their hands for weeks. Bevin said he had been studying it on the legal ground.

BYRNES said he had to leave the meeting and would ask Mr. Dunn to take his place.

Bevin asked if Mr. Molotov would take his word and not insist on such and such a method.

Molorov said he at least requested that they accept his proposed resolution.

BEVIN asked what this meant.

Molotov replied that Soviet officers could visit the camps.

Bevin said he could not agree.

Molotov said he would not specify but the matter would become clear after reading the Soviet memorandum.

Bevin said he could not give a pledge to another country at this moment that he would give access to the camps.

Molorov then proposed that they decide that they had reached no agreement.

Bevin said that perhaps if he could see the Soviet proposal in writing they might be able to reach agreement the next day.

Molotov said he agreed.

Dunn noted that no agreement had yet been reached.

BIDAULT said he was ready to accept the Soviet draft on condition of reciprocity in regard to French citizens of Alsace and Lorraine.

Molorov said that if the French representative had any measures to propose he could let them know and they would deal with it.

BIDAULT said he only asked that his suggestions be taken into account.

The meeting adjourned.

Memorandum by the Soviet Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 49

London, 24 September, 1945.

ALLIED CONTROL MACHINERY IN JAPAN

The Soviet Government consider that the situation that has now arisen in Japan urgently calls for the immediate establishment there of an Allied Control Council. So long as the purely military phase existed and the Japanese Army and Navy had not yet been disarmed, the concentration of all control functions in Japan, in the hands of the Allied Commander-in-Chief, was understandable and could be justified. Now, however, that the purely military phase has ended, new tasks confront the Allies in Japan, mainly of a political, economic and financial nature the ultimate purpose of which should be the destruction of Japanese militarism and the creation in Japan of such conditions as will obviate any possibility of new aggression on her part. The responsibility for the achievement of this aim rests with the four Allied Powers and cannot be placed solely on the United States of America. The Soviet Government accordingly consider it necessary to submit for the consideration of the Council of Foreign Ministers the following proposals:

- 1. An Allied Control Council shall be set up in Tokio consisting of representatives of the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China under the chairmanship of the United States representative.
- 2. The task of the Allied Control Council, which will be set up immediately, shall be to define and formulate the policy of the Allies towards Japan in political, military, economic, financial and other matters. All questions on which it may prove impossible to reach a decision on the spot shall be referred to Governments for settlement through such channels as they may choose.
- 3. Measures to carry into effect the policy formulated by the Allied Control Council shall be taken by the Chairman of the Council through the executive agencies of the Control Council.

In the matter of military and economic disarmament, reparations and other problems calling for direct supervision on the part of the Four Powers, representatives of these Powers may be included on the above mentioned executive agencies.

- 4. Garrison duties in Tokio should be carried out jointly by the armed forces of the Four Powers.
 - 5. Other questions connected with the organisation of Allied Control Machinery in Japan and the possible participation in such machinery of other Allied States which have played an active part in the war against Japan, e.g. in the shape of an Advisory Council, can be discussed later and the Soviet Delegation has no objection to these questions being discussed also at the present Session of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

The Belgian Ambassador (Silvercruys) to the Acting Secretary of State 11

Washington, September 24, 1945.

Mr. Secretary of State: At the Potsdam Conference it was decided that a state not represented on the Council of Foreign Ministers would be invited to send representatives to participate in the discussion and study of any question in which it had a direct interest.

¹¹ The text of this note was transmitted to the Secretary of State in London in telegram 8384, Seedel 109, September 24, 1945. In a note dated October 1, the Acting Secretary of State informed the Belgian Ambassador that his note had been referred to the Secretary (740,00119 Council/9-2445).

The placing on the agenda of the conference now taking place in London of problems relating to the regulation of the navigable waterways in Europe and to the status of regions such as the Rhine and Ruhr basins indicates the examination of questions in which Belgium has a vital and permanent interest. The Belgian Government believes that it should be directly associated in the exchange of views which will take place on this occasion. My Government has instructed me to remind the United States Government of Belgium's legitimate concern with these questions. It is confident that the five Governments represented at the Council of Foreign Ministers deem that they should respond to this concern and will invite the Belgian Government to participate from the outset in the discussion and study of these questions.

1. Japan: Allied Control Machinery

The Council resumed their consideration of the question whether the memorandum on this subject by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M. (45) 49 12) should be added to the Agenda for the present Conference.

After discussion, the Council took note that there was no common agreement among the members of the Council to add to the Agenda for the present Conference the question of Allied Control machinery for Japan.

2. Repatriation of Soviet Nationals 13

The Council considered memoranda on this subject by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 10) and the British Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 46 14).

After a full discussion, the Council—

(1) Adopted the following resolution:

"The Council of Foreign Ministers takes note of the statements of the United Kingdom, United States and French Delegations to the effect that their respective Governments will continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate the repatriation of Soviet nationals and to facilitate, by common agreement, the conditions necessary for the accomplishment of this task".

- (2) Agreed that any questions relating to the Repatriation Agreements, including questions of national status, should continue to be pursued through the diplomatic channel.
- (3) Agreed to resume, at their meeting on the following day, discussion of the proposal of the French Delegation regarding the repatriation of French nationals still in the custody of the Soviet Government.¹⁵

United States Delegation Minutes of the Twentieth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 25, 1945, 11 a.m.

M. Bidault in the Chair

BIDAULT—The first point on the agenda is the formula regarding repatriation ¹⁶ which was discussed yesterday.

Molorov—Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we have been anxious to discuss the question raised by the Soviet Delegation yesterday, whether there should be placed on the agenda the question of the establishment of control machinery in Japan.

BIDAULT—As far as I remember the decision taken was that the question would be examined at some later date, and I am not sure that we have fixed a date.

¹⁴ C.F.M.(45) 10, September 13, and C.F.M.(45) 46, September 22, pp. 151 and 325, respectively.

¹⁵ For text of the French proposal regarding French nationals in Soviet hands, see the American minutes of the 20th meeting of the Council, September 25, intra infra.

Molotov's formula regarding the repatriation of Soviet citizens is included in the minutes of the 19th meeting of the Council, p. 349.

Molotov—The decision was that this question of the control machinery should be discussed now at the beginning of this meeting and then we will pass to the question of the draft resolution on the repatriation of nationals. I have that draft here and it is being translated into English.

BIDAULT—It seems to me that we have no objection to that proposal since the only decision taken was that we should discuss this at some later date which means any day following vesterday's discussion.

Molotov—Then I suggest that we now pass to the resolution on the question of the repatriation of Soviet nationals and afterwards turn to the discussion whether we are to place on the agenda the question of the control machinery.

BIDAULT—The French Delegation will circulate a memorandum on the question we discussed vesterday.

Molotov—The Council of Foreign Ministers takes note of the statement made by the British and French and American Delegations to the effect that all necessary measures will be taken to accelerate the repatriation of these nationals and to facilitate the accomplishment of this task.17

BIDAULT—Is it the draft which was read vesterday?

Molotov—That is right.

BIDAULT—At that time the French Delegation read a paragraph which they proposed to introduce and which is exactly parallel to that read: "The Council takes note of the declarations made by the Soviet Delegation that the Soviet Government will take the necessary measures to speed up the repatriation of French citizens in particular Alsatians and Lorrainians." 18

Molotov—I think that this is another matter which cannot be compared with the question raised by the Soviet Delegation. As to the question raised by the French Delegation, it is for us to find who fought with arms in their hands against the Soviet armies. Our proposal deals with another matter, and I therefore propose that we examine

¹⁷ As circulated in the Council as C.F.M.(45) 51, September 25, 1945, the draft resolution by the Soviet delegation entitled "Acceleration of the Repatriation of Soviet Nationals" read as follows: "The Council of Foreign Ministers take note of the declaration of the United Kingdom, French and United States Delegations that their Governments will take all necessary steps to accelerate the repatriation of Soviet nationals and to facilitate conditions for the accomplishment of this task." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London of this task." Documents)

¹⁸ According to the British minutes of this Council meeting (not printed). the proposed French resolution regarding French nationals in Soviet hands read as follows: "The Council takes note of the statement by the Soviet Delegation that the Soviet Government will take all necessary measures to accelerate the repatriation of French nationals, including those from Alsace and Lorraine." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes) the Soviet proposal and then turn to the question raised by the French Delegation.

BIDAULT—With regard to the French, we see no objection that the two subjects be combined, since it is a question involving fighting under pressure, as was the case in other circumstances in other countries, and we must insist that the French proposal should in any case be included in the final communiqué of the Conference, but I do not insist that there should be full parallelism.

Molorov—I should like to ask that the question raised by the Soviet [French?] Delegation be discussed tomorrow because we will need to acquire some information from Moscow as regards the details.

Bidault—With regard to the French Delegation, we feel too that it is very important that there should be reciprocity. In my opinion the agreements should be discussed simultaneously, and we have information to supply right away, but I know for certain there is an important number of French citizens from Alsace-Lorraine. I wish that at least the principle should be included in our agreement, and that there should be some formula in these agreements as regards citizens from Alsace-Lorraine.

Molotov—The question raised by the French Delegation is the question of the inhabitants of Alsace-Lorraine and calls for a special study, because this question is not covered by the terms of the Franco-Soviet Agreement. I raise this question as it was covered by the French-Soviet, Soviet-American and Soviet-British agreement. I have no objection that we look into this question raised by M. Bidault, but it would be well for us to wind up one question and to give us twenty-four hours to obtain the necessary data required by the question raised by the French Delegation.

BIDAULT—I am afraid that I cannot agree with M. Molotov as there was the agreement signed on June 29, 1945 regarding all Soviet and French citizens. I raised no difficulty today as regards the definition of Soviet citizens and I had never heard it mentioned that there was any question of the definition of French citizens. I could not think that acts of Hitler in the case of French citizens would ever be perpetuated by Allied Governments.

Molorov—I am not raising the question of what French nationals are and I think it is not proper here to discuss such questions in the Council of Foreign Ministers, but it is one matter when nationals are concerned who served in the Allied forces and it is another matter when nationals are concerned who served the German armed forces. The Soviet Government is prepared to view the question raised by the French Delegation with sympathy, but it is necessary for us before we try to discuss this question to obtain certain information, and therefore we suggested that the question raised by the French Delegation be discussed tomorrow. As to the question raised by the Soviet Delegation, this question has been fully discussed, and I think we should continue it today.

I should like to ask that we not put off the question of repatriation of Soviet nationals, as the facts prove its urgency. I am now in possession of these new facts: in a town in Algiers, the commander of a battalion selected 36 Soviet nationals and sent them to serve in a replacement center in Shansi for transportation further into China. ¹⁹ I wonder if such facts can be passed by in silence and whether we could afford to postpone putting an end to these intolerable facts.

Bid Dault—I don't want to prolong this dispute or to add anything to it so far as I am concerned. We also have some information as regards a number of events, but since I do not wish to continue this—what I want to say is that the case of French citizens from Alsace-Lorraine should be examined, and that the legitimate feeling of those who wish to go home should be taken into account. This is also valid for any other country. Although this question is important, I agreed that examination of this matter should be postponed until tomorrow, then the Council will be in a position to examine the situation, and it will have in its hands the information received. May I say in conclusion that the position of the French Delegation is final, and I wish to give you the proof of our good will and our desire for understanding in the matter of so much importance to us.

Molotov—I am grateful to Monsieur Bidault.

BEVIN—I would accept the resolution if a few words were added: in the third line after the words "governments will" add the words "continue to take".

Molotov—I agree.

BEVIN—In the last line but one, I could agree with "the repatriation of Soviet nationals and to facilitate by mutual agreement the conditions of carrying out that task".

MOLOTOV-I agree.

Bevin—I would also circulate before the Conference breaks up and get in all the figures I have received concerning the situation in Germany, Britain and other parts; and, in view of the proposal yesterday, I take the opportunity of circulating this. In regard to Vlassov's men—I submitted the question of this only a few days ago when the matter was submitted—I raised it with the military, and I understand that the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington are affected with this question and I am awaiting their reply

¹⁹ According to the British minutes of this Council meeting (not printed), Molotov said, "Thus, in Algeria the Commander of a Battalion had selected 36 Soviet nationals to be sent to a Replacement Centre for onward passage to Indo-China." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes) with respect to the transfer of these men. And I am asking for an expediting of the situation.

Byrnes—I have no objection to the two amendments offered by Mr. Bevin. Yesterday I stated our position in reference to this matter, and I do not want to agree to the proposal of the Soviet Delegation without an understanding of what it means. We have frankly stated our difficulties to the repatriation of Soviet nationals. in this paper there is nothing to indicate our view as stated vesterday. It would serve no good purpose to agree to something that might be the cause of misunderstanding in the future. For instance, the words that disturb me are the words "Soviet nationals" without a statement showing the difference of opinion expressed at this table. not mean that the United States accepts the definition contended for by the Soviet Delegation as to what constitutes a Soviet national. The fact is, there was no meeting of minds on that question. And therefore the paper, which purports or is meant, or can be construed thereafter, as a meeting of minds when there was no meeting of minds would only cause irritation between us. I have stated my willingness and my desire to straighten that out through diplomatic channels, and have asked for a copy of the treaty between the Soviet Government and Poland. When it is received, we will try to find some way of arriving at a settlement of some of the perplexing questions. In order to avoid misunderstanding I have to observe that after the word "repatriation" in line 4 there should be added "all persons considered by their governments to be", so that it is agreed that it means the repatriation of persons considered by their governments to be nationals.

Molorov—I think that the proposal made by Mr. Byrnes has been prompted by some misconception. If the American Government agrees to discuss with the Soviet Government the question of what constitutes an American national, then we shall agree to discuss with the American Government the question of what constitutes Soviet nationals. Such questions are decided only on the basis of reciprocity. I suggest that we should not discuss this question, but that we should strictly be guided by the agreements which were concluded between the Soviet Union and Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States, and between the Soviet Union and France. As to the remaining question, that should be taken up through diplomatic channels.

BEVIN—This is a preliminary thought, and I only make the suggestion: this difficulty of Poland and the Eastern line—I am very much in the same position as Mr. Byrnes, and I am also in the same difficulty with the Polish army and so on. It is not a clear-cut line. This transfer of people is a difficult problem, and it is also difficult for Britain which has always given all people the right of asylum. We did it in the days of the Tsars, when we gave refuge to Russian citizens here who later became leaders of Soviet Russia, and I do want to be careful what we do; and therefore I wondered, Mr. Byrnes, if we get to settle this point of what is a Soviet citizen through diplomatic channels, we are not discussing Soviet citizens proper, on which everybody is agreed, but only those from disputed territory and the claims of other governments upon us in this matter with whom we are in discussion now. Could you say therefore if the thing were pursued, as I understood we agreed, through diplomatic channels we ought to get over this business providing we could say something to the world that would safeguard us on this point. Mr. Molotov has objected to that and regards it as a challenge. Supposing, for instance, we decide to send a person back from Great Britain who did not want to go back and who claimed that he was not a Soviet national; he can take us to the courts and we will be in a difficulty. At least if something can be said that would be a determination as to the people coming within the category for repatriation, as mention of pursuing it through diplomatic channels I think it would help us.

Molorov—I should like to make it clear that Mr. Byrnes has raised a complex question and I should like to say that we should not pursue the question now. I continue by citing an example: take for instance Sweden. This country recognizes as Soviet nationals the inhabitants of Lithuania, Latvia, and Soviet citizens of the Ukraine and White Russia. There may be one point of view regarding this in Great Britain and another point of view in some other country friendly to ours. But I think that we should not go deep into this and other questions connected with the question under discussion. I suggest that all these questions should be taken up through diplomatic channels.

Molotov—That being so, permit us to turn to the question raised by the Soviet Delegation as to the question of the establishment of the controls—

CONTROL MACHINERY FOR JAPAN

BIDAULT—Yesterday we discussed whether the question of the establishment of an Allied control commission will be put on the agenda.

Byrnes—Yesterday I stated that we ought to have an agreement to refer some subjects to the Council of Ministers for consideration and stated further there could be added matters upon which the Council was agreed—that the Governments were agreed—that this matter is one which was not included in the agenda, which I made no preparation to consider, which my Government has not agreed to put on the agenda, and therefore I am not going to discuss its being placed on the agenda; for placing the matter on the agenda presupposes action, and I am not prepared to discuss the matter, and therefore any action taken upon it at this meeting.

Molotov—Mr. Byrnes is right when he says that we should put questions on the agenda by our mutual agreement. This is what I am asking for, I am asking for this mutual agreement to place this question on the agenda. But I feel that the reservation entered by Mr. Byrnes is not fully justified. Mr. Byrnes asserts that if we place a certain question on the agenda that will presuppose an action, a decision, but I do not feel that by placing on this agenda we would have to accept some detailed decision on the question. We could well discuss this question and then continue its discussion later, but in my view this question is much more urgent than all the questions on the agenda we are discussing now. Yesterday Mr. Byrnes inquired whether we read the statement made by President Truman concerning the policy toward Japan. But yesterday I had to say that I had not read that statement. Now I am able to state that I have read the statement. Mr. President has made a statement on the policy of the United States of America toward Japan, but I wonder what happens if tomorrow, for instance, Mr. Attlee, then General de Gaulle, and perhaps in a day or two Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek or Generalissimo Stalin makes a similar statement. It may well happen there will be a difference of opinion in their statements, and I wonder if that will be a good thing. It may be that the American Government have consulted, say the Government of Great Britain, the Government of China, in drawing up this statement; but the Soviet Government have not been consulted by anyone, and consequently we are not bound by any common policy toward Japan. The question arises of the sort of policy being pursued now toward Japan whether this is the policy of the Allies or is it a different policy that is being pursued irrespective of the views and wishes of other Governments. We have agreed views as regards the policy being pursued toward Japan. I have in mind the Order No. 1 issued by General MacArthur after consultation with the Soviet and other Governments.²⁰ We have also the act of surrender of Japan signed also by the Soviet Government and other Governments, and these acts constitute a good basis for an agreed policy toward Japan. If we compare the act of surrender for Germany signed on the 8th of May with the act of surrender of Japan,21 of the Japanese armed forces, we shall see that the act of surrender for the Japanese armed forces refers to the surrender of the Japanese forces to the Allies in more definite terms.

²⁰ Regarding General Order No. 1, see footnote 89, p. 338.

^{}For texts of the acts of military surrender for Germany signed at Rheims, May 7, 1945, and at Berlin, May 8, 1945, see Department of State Bulletin, July 22, 1945, pp. 106–107. For facsimile of the instrument of surrender for Japan, signed in Tokyo Bay, September 2, 1945, see ibid., September 9, 1945. pp. 364-365.

Nevertheless, when the act of surrender for Germany was being carried out, German troops were taken prisoner by the Allies, whereas in Japan when the act of surrender was being put into effect the Japanese armed forces were not taken prisoner by the Allies. Only the Soviet armies took the Japanese armies prisoner in the territories which they had taken. I have said that there are two basic acts concerning the surrender of Japan. The first is the Order No. 1 of General MacArthur, and the second is the act of surrender for Japan. In virtue of these two acts, the Allied Commander-in-Chief is obliged to take the Japanese officers and soldiers prisoner, but it is only the Soviet armies that are doing this whereas the Allied armies for some reason have not done the same, and I think that we ought to carry out what we all have decided. The Japanese soldiers and officers have been returned to their homes, but they constitute a ready and trained military force. The Japanese guard ammunition dumps, but they are not our friends to whom we can entrust this. The Japanese openly say that they are keeping big steel industries, and civil aviation. The Americans do not close them. The Japanese continue to maintain large numbers of gendarmerie and police and no one is interfering with this. The Soviet Government has fears that such a situation is dangerous, that it is likely to lead to the renewal of the Japanese aggression in the near future. The Soviet Government cannot bear the responsibility for this situation before the public opinion of the world.

That is why the Soviet Delegation asks that this question be placed on the agenda at the present series of meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers, that it be not postponed, that it be examined. In this connection we suggest that we should discuss here the establishment of a control council in Japan composed of Allied representatives. We practically suggest the same as was suggested in the Memorandum of the British Government which was sent to the Soviet and the United States Governments about four weeks ago.²² The Soviet Delegation suggests that this question be placed on the agenda, not necessarily today, but after the discussion of all other questions has been completed, and I hope that Mr. Byrnes will be no less informed in regard to these questions than any one of us.

Wang—The Chinese Delegation were much interested yesterday in listening to the Soviet proposal to place questions relating to the control of Japan on the agenda of the present conference of Foreign Ministers and to the comments made by other delegations on it. Our own view is that in principle they see no difficulty in endorsing the proposal since it is their understanding that the Council of Foreign $^{^{22}}$ For text of the British proposals for post-surrender control of Japan, see $aide\text{-}m\acute{e}moire$ from the British Embassy, August 30, vol. vr. section under Japan entitled "Surrender of Japan . . .", Part I.

Ministers is competent to discuss any question which may be agreed upon by its members.

The questions relating to the control of Japan during the period of military occupation are certainly of great importance to peace and security in the Far East. At the same time, the Chinese Delegation realize that these questions are of wide range and complex in character. We are of the opinion that whether the conference of Foreign Ministers at this stage of its work can give them its full attention and whether it would be more advisable to take them up for discussion at another session, require careful consideration. We have no objection, however, to the questions being considered at this session if all the other delegations favor it.

In regard to the situation in Japan, the Chinese Delegation believe that the conditions under which General MacArthur has been working to carry out his mission are exceedingly difficult. He has to disarm an army of considerable size which remained intact at the time, and this task is still under way, though good progress has already been achieved. We share the view of the Soviet Delegation that the principal Allied Powers must take such political, economic, financial and other measures in Japan as will bring about the complete annihilation of Japanese militarism and the creation of conditions which would eliminate every possibility of a new aggression on the part of Japan. We were gratified to hear at Monday's meeting a reaffirmation of this aim in the instructions of President Truman to General MacArthur referred to by Mr. Byrnes, although we on our part had entertained no doubt about it. For it was clearly outlined in the Potsdam Declaration of July 26, 1945, addressed to Japan by China, the United States and the United Kingdom, and subscribed to by the Soviet Union.23

But to achieve this purpose calls for the formulation of policies and devising of measures based upon the principles enunciated in the Declaration. This task can be best accomplished by an Allied body composed primarily of the Powers which played a leading part in the war with Japan. Normally this body should be established in Japan. But in view of the special conditions under which the Allied military occupation of Japan has been effected and the fact that the disarming of the Japanese army in Japan has not yet been completed, the Chinese Government readily accepted the proposal of the United States Government to set up an Allied advisory body in Washington for the purpose. This acceptance was prompted by a desire to try a new experiment of Allied cooperation in the case of Japan in view of the problems confronting the inter-Allied Control Commission in the case of Germany.

This is, however, without prejudice, in the view of the Chinese Government, to the adoption of a new course of action if experience in the future should point to such a need. For this reason, the Chinese Government desires to see the aforesaid inter-Allied advisory body set up as soon as possible in order that inter-Allied consultations on necessary measures of various kinds, such as political, economic, financial, etc., could be put into effect without delay. The results of such a procedure can be reviewed from time to time to determine whether it serves the united aim and purpose upon which the Allied Powers have agreed in regard to Japan, or whether a different type of control machinery should be set up in its place.

BIDAULT—Any further comments? The question is whether this matter will be placed on the agenda.

BEVIN—I am not in a position to give an answer. I am opposed to putting it on the agenda in view of the difficulties that have arisen in regard to procedure. The other countries affected would be excluded.

Molorov—How are we to find a way out, and to safeguard concerted policy of the Allies toward Japan? It seems to me that we have got to do our best to have a concerted policy toward Japan. My understanding of the statement made by the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs was that China is in sympathy with the proposal that this question be included on the agenda in this series of meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and I want to recall that China and the Soviet Union are nearest to Japan and we are interested in this question, and we are anxious to see that this question be agreed upon between the Allies. Is it really impossible to achieve this, and is it really possible that any question of procedure may interfere with it?

Wang—The Chinese Delegation has no objections to taking this up at this session if all the delegates are in favor of this.

BIDAULT—As regards the French Delegation, I have already stated that it will not intervene in questions of procedure, and therefore we adopt the same attitude as the Chinese Delegation. I do not object to placing any question on the agenda, including the one now before us. The Council is sovereign in the matter of its agenda, but naturally this takes mutual agreement, and therefore we have to determine whether such agreement exists. Personally I have some doubts about this Molorov—What shall we state to the press with regard to the discussion on this question.

BEVIN-Nothing.

Molorov—We shall keep it secret? The question is whether everybody agrees to this.

BIDAULT—There is a committee to decide what goes in the communiqué.

BYRNES—I thought that communiqués were to be limited to decisions or announced decisions. I think it ought to rest with the Communiqué Committee to consider the question of whether to include in the communiqué an announcement of a discussion on whether a question should go on the agenda. Mr. Chairman, as I first said, I believe that the press committee is responsible for deciding what should appear in the communiqué.

BIDAULT—It goes without saying that this should be done.

Molorov—I agree with any recommendation that may be made by Mr. Byrnes.

BYRNES—On what subject?

Molorov—On whether anything will be mentioned in the communiqué or not.

BYRNES—I have in mind that the Communiqué Committee will consider this without interrupting our consideration of matters on the agenda. The agenda does not show at this stage any discussion by the Communiqué Committee. It has several items and should be considered in the order in which they appear. I cannot agree for a change of the agenda to hear a Communiqué Committee at this time, but will be glad to when the time arrives.

BIDAULT—That was decided. We are to pass on to Paragraph 7 on Austria, or shall we do this at the afternoon's meeting?

BEVIN-Is there any report on Austria?

BIDAULT—There has been no meeting of the Deputies this morning. I ask that this question be examined at this afternoon's meeting.

The meeting adjourned.

1. Austria: Central Government

In view of the decision of the Allied Council for Austria regarding the Conference of Austrian provincial representatives, the Council decided that no further action on their part was necessary at this stage.

2. Reparations From Germany

The Inter-Allied Reparations Commission should be transferred from Moscow to Berlin.

The Allied Control Council for Germany should be instructed to speed up, with the assistance of the Reparations Commission, the work of drawing up a Reparations Programme—in particular the programme for advanced deliveries—so as to ensure accurate observance of the time-limit set for this by the Berlin Conference.

Discussion of the proposals as regards restitution put forward in the memorandum by the French Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 38 ²⁴) should be resumed at the next meeting of the Council.

United States Delegation Minutes of the Twenty-First Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 25, 1945, 4 p. m.

Mr. Bevin in the Chair

Bevin—The meeting is opened with the matter of the Austrian Government. The United Kingdom circulated a paper on this.²⁵

Molorov—I think that we can quickly dispose of this because I am in possession now of the rest of the documents on the question of the memorandum from Dr. Renner. It appears that my colleagues are already in possession of these documents. I suggest that we approve the decision adopted by the Allied Control Council as the consultations with Dr. Renner already began yesterday, and therefore I think we should await the results before we deal with the matter.

Byrnes—I agree.

BIDAULT—I agree.

GERMAN REPARATIONS

Molorov-I should like for the Soviet memorandum 26 to be taken The initiative of raising this question lies with the Soviet Delegation. The Soviet Delegation's proposals are intended to expedite the work of the Reparations Commission and it is obvious that this rests not only on the Reparations Commission but also on the Control Council as well. In this connection we suggest that the Reparations Commission should be transferred from Moscow to Berlin, and that this Commission should work in the same place as the Control Council. We have understood that this was also the wish of the American and British representatives on the Commission, and if I am not mistaken also of the French Delegation. We are ready to agree. As you will recall, the Berlin Conference decided that the plan for reparations from Western Europe for Germany should be drawn up not later than within six months. Since that time almost two months have elapsed, but no progress has been made. Therefore we feel anxiety that this fulfilment of this task is being enormously delayed, and that the fulfilment of the Berlin Conference by the date laid down by it is not too sure. It is natural that time limits proposed by us cannot be considered as final, but I think in view of expediting the work of the reparations it is obvious that we by our common efforts can ensure the dates and measures set in order to expedite the settlement of the matter.

BIDAULT-I have some observations to make, but I can deal only with the essential part now. The French Government welcomes any proposal likely to lead to an acceleration to the procedure for reparations which hitherto had been too slow—the place where this will take place does not matter to us. We have no objection to Moscow, none to Berlin. What is important is that there should be a prompt and good settlement. The French Government recalls that the Potsdam Protocol provides for deliveries to be made from the western zones in general and the French zone in particular, and without the French Government having been called upon to agree either on the amounts or on the principle. With the problems that are essential for France, the French Government thinks that the solution of these problems concerning assets in the western zones and in particular in the French zone cannot be carried out without consultation with the French Government. The French Government cannot adhere to the Potsdam Protocol unless these conditions are fulfilled:

1. Steps should be taken as soon as possible and in any case not later than the 1st of November, 1945, in order to conserve or identify and obtain restitution of any goods or property stolen by Germany on the territory of the United Nations during the period of occupation and found now in any part of German territory or any other territory. The Commissions named by the Governments of the United Nations should have full facilities and access for such conservation and identification. What happened was this. In French factories machines were stolen, and stolen by force, during the period of occupation and the question which arises is this: are these to be used for reparations for all or, as it seems to us, and this is in conformity with international law, should these machines be restored to their legitimate owners, in this case the French State, the reparations being made by purely German assets. Reparations should only be made by German assets and not French. In other words, reparations must be levied on German property, not on property stolen from the Allied nations by Germany. Reparations must be made on enemy property and not on property the enemy stole.

 $^{^{26}}$ For text of the Soviet memorandum on reparations from Germany, see C.F.M.(45) 15, September 14, p. 175. Memoranda on this subject were submitted by the French delegation (C.F.M.(45) 38, September 20, p. 285) and by the United Kingdom delegation (C.F.M.(45) 45, September 22, p. 325).

2. The second point I wish to make is this: the property to be restored includes all the property rights and interests that have been stolen in the terms of our Declaration of January 5, 1943. This includes securities which Allied Governments and nationals have been obliged by the German authorities to give up. As to the carrying out of this essential part of this program, the appropriate procedure will have to be adopted in order to determine whether any particular item is German or Allied, and of course only German property can be given as reparations to any of the United Nations.

3. The third conditions of our adherence to the Potsdam Protocol is that the gold, precious metals and works of art, and all objects which are unique in themselves, when they are not to be found, be replaced by equivalent objects taken from any part of Germany. Finally, if it is recognized that the decision is going to be taken concerning advance deliveries, the French Government asks that in this respect it be treated not less favorably than the most-favored nation.

BYRNES—I have just said to my colleagues that the Nazis did so many things that are now presented to us as controversies to be decided that it will be surprising if the patience of the representatives of the Allied Nations can really stand up under the settling of these disputes. As I understand, one question raised by the French Committee relates to copper mine securities that were required by the Germans to be sold; the mines were then worked by the Germans, and then captured by the Yugoslavs. Now the question is, who owns the mines, and who has the right to operate them. I just don't see how we are going to be able to work out the problems of that kind at this table. It is going to require some group having a lot of time and experts to sit down and work it out. I agree with the general principle that where there is positively identified property of an individual, that individual ought to receive the property. I understand there are questions of the owner having been paid for his property, paid in German marks but still paid, and the question is what are we going to do about the amount of money that he got and with which he could have bought something else. I was hoping that the Reparations Commission could decide that matter. Turning to Mr. Molotov's suggestion, I am satisfied that much of the delay in the determination of German reparations has been due to the fact that the Reparations Commission was at Moscow and the Control Council in Berlin. Last week Mr. Molotov mentioned to me this matter of the delay and I immediately communicated with the State Department, urging that steps be taken to have the Reparations Commission move to Berlin, and that steps also be taken to ensure that the decisions taken at Potsdam are applied.27 I am in receipt of a reply that there was going to be established this week an inter-Allied Allocations Committee, and that it would go to work in Berlin within two weeks. I am advised that my request that this work be pressed has been communicated to our representatives and that the Department would learn through the War Department every two weeks as to the progress that is achieved in working out the settlement. Our representatives still express the opinion that the agreement can be complied with.

BEVIN—I think the first point for taking a decision is that of the Commission being transferred to Berlin. Everybody seems to agree to that. That is part of the Soviet proposal. The next point is the date. The Soviet proposal is December 1. The Potsdam Declaration has it after six months.

BYRNES—I wish to adhere to the Potsdam decision.

Molotov—When we indicated the December 1 date to be laid down for the work of the Allied Council and the Reparations Commission we did not depart from the decision of the Potsdam Conference. The fact should be borne in mind that in accordance with the terms of the Potsdam decision the final decision rests with the Commander-in-Chief and he should be given some time to make his decision. Therefore, we think that between the 1st of December and the 1st of February there will be ample time to enable the Commander-in-Chief of the affected zone to make final decision. That is why I suggested December 1 to be laid down as the date to finish the work of the Reparations Commission. But at present the Soviet Delegation looks at the fact that our meetings have dragged out enormously and all of us are interested in expediting our work, and therefore I would like to make a short suggestion. I want to present a new proposal of the Soviet Government consisting of only two paragraphs in Russian, which I shall have translated. Here is the proposal of the Soviet Delegation: 1. That the Allied Reparations Commission should be transferred from Moscow to Berlin. 2. The Allied Control Council should be instructed to speed up, with the assistance of the Reparations Commission, the work of drawing up the reparation program and in particular the program for advanced deliveries so as to ensure the accurate observance of the date laid down by the Berlin Conference.²⁸ Bevin—I should ask Mr. Molotov, do these two resolutions take the place of the old one?

The Secretary of State's communication to the Department referred to here presumably is telegram 9582, September 18, 10 a. m., from London, not printed; the Department replied to this communication in telegram 8195, Secdel 84, September 19, 8 p. m., to London, not printed. The Secretary's remarks in the remainder of this paragraph are apparently based upon information supplied in the Department's telegram. In point of fact, the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency (the eventual name of the body referred to by the Secretary as the "inter-Allied Allocations Committee") eventually met in Paris and not in Berlin. For documentation regarding the reparations negotiations and the establishment of the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency, see vol. III, pp. 1169 ff.

Molorov—Yes. I withdraw the question of when the exact dates are and what remains is only the condition that the date laid down by the Berlin Conference should be observed.

Bevin—Now, I would like to ask a question as to whether it would not be wise for us to say a few words about the Allied Commission and the Control Council. I make this suggestion however. The Allied Commission on Reparations will meet to decide questions of policy and the function of the Control Council is to determine the equipment available for reparations in accordance with what is laid down by the Allied Commission. If they were divided in that way, we should not then have another delay to argue as to what they should do.

Byrnes—In the Potsdam Agreement there was language which seeks to define the duties of the Commission and the Council, and I don't think what you suggested is any different. I think we should stand by the Potsdam Declaration. I fear some of the delay has been due to arguments of procedure and about the jurisdiction, and if they have those arguments now settled and we give them new language we will start them off on another delay.

Bevin—Just let me clear this up. I have been informed that this has been one of the causes of delay of the interpretation of the document. I don't want to delay arguing about the difficulty, and I just wanted to know whether it was all right to move them to Berlin. (Addressing M. Bidault) I will come to your point presently.

BIDAULT—Of course, I would like to say for us that I am not bound by the decisions the others feel are binding on them because France is not a party to them. This, of course, does not mean that I ignore the services rendered by the Conferences at which France was not present, but there was a general agreement signed on January 5, 1943, and I think that the parties represented here adhere to it. That would be the common law in this case. This means in particular that as far as reparations in Germany are concerned, these reparations should be levied out of German property and not out of Allied property stolen by Germany. According to the declaration of January 5, 1943, therefore, reparations must be levied on German property and not on property stolen by the Germans. In order to avoid this, the French Delegation thinks that restitution, which has already been delayed, should start as soon as possible and that reparations should be levied on German property and not Allied property. I would therefore propose to add a few words to the Soviet text. I would like to suggest that in line 4, paragraph 2, after the words "in particular" add the words "the problem of restitution".

Molorov-I would like to say that the problem of restitution raised by M. Bidault is an important problem but this problem calls for special study, and it is a complex problem. This problem was not to be considered, and it seems to me that we are unable to consider this problem here in connection with reparations as this problem in my mind calls for a special examination, as it is necessary in the interests of all for restitution to be settled. It is well known that there is a declaration of January 5, 1943 concerning the property and rights of the United Nations. The French Delegation adheres to the terms of this declaration, and so do we all. If the French Delegation submits their proposal concerning this question, then the Soviet Delegation will take part in its examination. If M. Bidault fears that some French property may be accounted as reparations, I think that we should bear in mind such cases and think they should be avoided. I think that France has every opportunity of obviating such cases which may be undesirable to her. We also have such an opportunity, and now I want to point out wherein they lie. It is well known that the policy of reparations in regard to Germany should be laid down by the Reparations Commission on which all of our States are represented. The amount and character and nature of reparations should be determined by the Control Commission, on which all of our States are represented. Hence if the property of France or the Soviet Union, the United States of America or Great Britain is removed in reparations, the representatives of the Governments of those countries may raise this question and place on record their disagreement. And according to the terms of the Berlin decision this question will not be settled without France and, on the contrary, they will be settled with her participation; and my suggestion is that we examine the question of restitution separately from the question of reparations when any one of us brings this question up for discussion. And now we should confine ourselves to adopting a decision on reparations only.

BIDAULT—I want to speak in concrete terms. Reparations can be levied on a certain number of things to be found, whether in German territory or in territory of neighboring countries at present occupied by the Allies. These things are either German or have been stolen by the Germans. The thing I ask is that before or at the same time as reparations are being settled we should have some means to distinguish between them and stolen property. I don't think it is impossible for us to settle these two questions together. I will give you an instance. In a factory in one of the suburbs of Paris a machine was taken away by the Germans by force. With much force as you might have reason to know very well as three of our men died in defending it. Is that machine to be part of the reparations or will it be the subject of restitution? There can be no question about it.

Bevin—Is there any opposition to that principle?

Molorov—It is a question of its being placed on our agenda. We have not got it down on our agenda. Let us discuss the question separately. We are all interested in settling this question, but it is not prepared for settlement.

BEVIN—What I wanted to suggest to our friend was: is the principle of restitution accepted? If it is, the problem should be referred for immediate and special study. That is what has been suggested.

Molorov—The basis is the declaration of January 5, 1943. Is this the basis?

BEVIN—I don't think there is any objection to their resolutions 1 and 2. As the French have no chance to raise this point, they have decided to raise it now.

Molorov—Can't we discuss it separately?

Binault—I think that there are two questions that are connected. I have said several times that we would not delay the work of the Conference on procedure, and therefore though I consider the two problems to be closely connected, once again I accept the suggestion that has been made that the question be discussed separately. I hope that the sacrifices we are making will be recognized. It must be well understood, however, that the reparations to which the various United Nations are entitled are not stolen property and it seems elementary that before taking reparations there should be withdrawn the property that has been stolen. If it is a question of procedure I would agree to make sacrifices, and I may be called upon to accept a few more. It is obvious, however, that it must be on the understanding that the other question raised will be discussed immediately after this one.

Bevin—Can it be agreed that if we agree to this resolution we go straight on to the question of restitution?

Molorov—Perhaps in order to get ready that may be done tomorrow. Perhaps someone will make proposals. I am ready to discuss the French draft,29 but I should like to ask that that be done tomorrow.

BIDAULT—Almost a week ago we circulated a text stating all this before starting to work on reparations. We must know what is German and what is not German.

Bevin—Was that accepted that we discuss that note tomorrow? (There was no objection.)

Bevin—Then there was the point I put as to whether the question of policy and action should be cleared up. If something could be put on record guiding the Reparations Commission as to what they have got to do; I don't ask a formal decision. I suggest that the Reparations Commission be responsible for policy but that the Control Council be responsible for determining the character of the property to be taken.

Byrnes—The Potsdam Agreement provided that the determination of the amount and character of the equipment unnecessary for the peace economy, and therefore available for reparations, shall be made by the Control Council under policies fixed by the Allied Commission on Reparation with the participation of France and subject to the final approval of the Allied Commander in the zone. I thought there had been delays due to the different interpretation of that, but I understand now they are about settled and I am afraid that if we introduce new language that is practically the same it might just reopen the question.

BEVIN—If everybody says it is settled, I don't need to bother. It's very refreshing to find something settled and these settlements take so long to percolate through that they have not reached the United Kingdom Delegation. Well, that is agreed now, is it? We adopt the short draft of the Soviet draft and we take up the problem of restitution tomorrow.

(It was agreed to hold the next meeting at 11:00 the following morning.)

The British Prime Minister (Attlee) to President Truman 30

[London, September 25, 1945.]

No. 12. Reference my No. 11.31 Following is text of reply received from Premier Stalin.

³¹ September 23, p. 331.

²⁹ Apparently reference is to the French memorandum C.F.M.(45) 38, September 20, p. 285.

³⁰ Unsigned copy transmitted to the Acting Secretary of State by British Chargé Balfour on September 27, 1945.

Begins.

I have received your message concerning disagreements in regard to the Council of Ministers.

The position of M. Molotov in this matter is determined by the necessity of accurately carrying out the decision of the Berlin Conference which is clearly set forth in paragraph 3(B) of the decision regarding the Council of Ministers. The decision taken by the Council of Ministers on September 11th is unacceptable as it conflicts with this decision of the Berlin Conference.

It is thus a question not of the procedure of work of the Council of Ministers but of whether the Council of Foreign Ministers has the right to waive particular points in the decisions of the Berlin Conference. In my opinion we should deprive the Berlin decisions of value if we admitted for a moment the right of the Council of Foreign Ministers to waive these decisions.

I consider that to amend the error which has been committed and thus to reinstate the decision of the Berlin Conference as urged by M. Molotov cannot give rise to a negative attitude towards the Conference and the Council of Ministers and can be offensive to nobody.

Ends.

Memorandum by the Chinese Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 52

London, 25 September, 1945.

ALLIED CONTROL MACHINERY IN JAPAN

The Chinese Delegation were much interested yesterday in listening to the Soviet proposal ³² to place questions relating to the control of Japan on the agenda of the present conference of Foreign Ministers and to the comments made by other delegations on it. Their own view is that in principle they see no difficulty in endorsing the proposal since it is their understanding that the Council of Foreign Ministers is competent to discuss any question which may be agreed upon by its members.

The questions relating to the control of Japan during the period of military occupation are certainly of great importance to peace and security in the Far East. At the same time, the Chinese Delegation realize that these questions are of wide range and complex in character. They are of the opinion that whether the conference of Foreign Ministers at this stage of its work can give them its full attention and whether it would be more advisable to take them up for discussion at another session, require careful consideration. They have no objection, however, to the questions being considered at this session if all the other delegations favour it.

In regard to the situation in Japan, the Chinese Delegation believe that the conditions under which General MacArthur has been working to carry out his mission are exceedingly difficult. He has to disarm an army of considerable size which remained intact at the time, and this task is still under way, though good progress has already been achieved. We share the view of the Soviet Delegation that the principal allied powers must take such political, economic, financial and other measures in Japan as will bring about the complete annihilation of Japanese militarism and the creation of conditions which would eliminate every possibility of a new aggression on the part of We were gratified to hear at Monday's meeting a reaffirmation of this aim in the instructions of President Truman to General MacArthur referred to by Mr. Byrnes, although we on our part had entertained no doubt about it. For it was clearly outlined in the Potsdam Declaration of 26th July, 1945, addressed to Japan by China, the United States and the United Kingdom, and subscribed to by the Soviet Union.

But to achieve this purpose calls for the formulation of policies and devising of measures based upon the principles enunciated in the declaration. This task can be best accomplished by an Allied body composed primarily of the Powers which played a leading part in the war with Japan. Normally this body should be established in Japan. But in view of the special conditions under which the Allied military occupation of Japan has been effected and the fact that the disarming of the Japanese army in Japan has not yet been completed, the Chinese Government readily accepted the proposal of the United States Government to set up an Allied advisory body in Washington for the purpose. This acceptance was prompted by a desire to try a new experiment of Allied co-operation in the case of Japan in view of the problems confronting the inter-Allied Control Commission in the case of Germany.

This is, however, without prejudice, in the view of the Chinese Government, to the adoption of a new course of action if experience in the future should point to such a need. For this reason, the Chinese Government desires to see the aforesaid inter-Allied advisory body set up as soon as possible in order that inter-allied consultations on necessary measures of various kinds, such as political, economic, financial, etc., could be put into effect without delay. The results of such a procedure can be reviewed from time to time to determine whether it serves the united aim and purpose upon which the Allied Powers have agreed in regard to Japan, or whether a different type of control machinery should be set up in its place.

740.00119 Council/9-2645

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State

[London,] September 26, 1945—10 a.m.

Participants:

The Secretary Mr. Molotov Mr. Bevin
Mr. Dunn Ambassador Gusev Sir Ronald Campbell
Mr. Bohlen Mr. Pavlov Mr. Dixon
Mr. Payton-Smith

THE SECRETARY said he had asked for this meeting to have another discussion in regard to the question of procedure. He said President Truman had told him that he had had a message from Marshal Stalin ³³ in which the latter fully supported the position taken by Mr. Molotov; however, President Truman was of the opinion that it would be unfortunate if the Council should suddenly reverse its procedure and hoped something could be worked out here. The Secretary added that he felt that since our Three Heads of State had been unable to agree on this, it was up to the Foreign Ministers here to try and find a way out. He would therefore like to know if Mr. Molotov had any suggestions.

Mr. Molorov replied that his suggestion remained the faithful execution of the Berlin agreement. He said he wanted to add that his Government had been greatly surprised at the attitude of the United States and British Governments in regard to the control commission for Japan. He said his Government wondered whether their representatives in Japan were needed any longer, and whether they should not be recalled.

THE SECRETARY replied that last Saturday when Mr. Molotov had talked to him about a treaty he had explained to him as he understood it, the present situation in regard to Japan. He said that he had already repeated a number of times that he had no authority to take any decision in regard to Japan at the Council of Foreign Ministers; that he did not have the necessary experts or materials here, and that he did not contemplate attempting to get President Truman's views during this session. He added, however, that he had made it plain that he would be glad again to discuss in full with Mr. Molotov the entire Japanese question.

Mr. Molorov replied that he had not posed a formal question, but that they were unable to understand why it was impossible to discuss this question during this meeting. He inquired whether or not the one to two billion dollars of gold which the newspapers said the Americans had found in Japan had anything to do with this situation.

³³ Apparently reference is to message of September 24 from Marshal Stalin to President Truman, p. 334.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had never heard of any such gold, and that Mr. Molotov should know from his experience with Americans that if any gold or similar valuables were taken by the United States forces in Japan a strict accounting would be made of it.

Mr. Molotov replied that in Europe they had had an understanding about the disposal of German gold.

THE SECRETARY repeated that he had felt he had explained our point of view to Mr. Molotov, but would be glad to talk with him further.

Mr. Bevin remarked that in regard to Japan the British Government had no objection to discussing the question of the control council, but it had not wished to do so within the narrow limits of the present Council since some of the Dominions, and in particular, Canada and Australia, who were Asiatic powers, had made strong representations concerning their right to participate in any such talks.

THE SECRETARY added that in regard to Mr. Molotov's statement about making Japanese soldiers prisoners, that in Article VIII of the Potsdam Declaration which was signed by the U.S., China, and Great Britain, and subsequently adhered to by the Soviet Government, and which in fact had formed the basis of Japanese surrender, it was expressly stated that the Japanese troops should be demobilized and allowed to go home. He said that he must state that the United States considered itself bound by that provision.

Mr. Molotov said the Soviet Union had agreed to the Potsdam Declaration, but there had been subsequent instruments, namely, Order No. 1, and the Act of Capitulation, which he felt had equal, if not greater, validity. He said the actual terms of surrender were more severe than in the case of Germany, and that in taking the Japanese prisoners in Manchuria, the Soviet Government felt that they were supporting and not violating these agreements.

The meeting then turned to the question of procedure.

THE SECRETARY read his informal proposal (copy attached), and added that, although he had not put it in writing, he envisaged that the three Foreign Ministers of the U.S., U.K., and U.S.S.R. could meet either before or during the Conference in accordance with the provisions of the Berlin Agreement and discuss a common position in regard to these treaties. He pointed out that paragraph 5 of his proposal suggested a conference of all nations at war with the respective satellite countries for consideration of the treaty. He felt that this should be done, since we were obligated to submit these treaties to all such states in any case, and it would be better to do it once and for all in a conference. He said he had not put that in writing as he did not wish to emphasize the special position of the Big Three.

Mr. Bevin said that he had not had time to study this, but that he thought it had merit. He also agreed that it was a mistake to emphasize publicly in any way the position of the Big Three.

Mr. Molotov said he would study the proposal.

Before leaving, Mr. Molotov again reverted to the question of Japan, and asked whether there was any point in the Soviet Union's leaving its representatives in Japan at the present time. He said he had in mind General Derevyanski 34 who had signed the surrender for the Soviet Union and had stayed on in Japan.

Informal Proposal by the Secretary of State

[London, September 26, 1945.]

- 1. The Council will conclude its present agenda in accordance with its present procedure. Further action in relation to treaties of peace would be confined to a directive to the Deputies to consider and report on possible terms of peace with Hungary which would reflect in so far as relevant, principles already authorized in relation to Rumania and Bulgaria.
- 2. The Deputies of France, the U.K., U.S.S.R. and U.S.A. will be instructed to make a provisional draft of text of treaty with Italy, in so far as this is possible in the light of directives heretofore given them.
- 3. The Deputies of the U.K., U.S.S.R. and U.S.A. will be instructed to make a provisional draft of text of treaty with Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary, in so far as this is possible in the light of directives heretofore given them.
- 4. The Deputies of the U.K. and U.S.S.R. will be instructed to make a provisional draft of text of treaty with Finland, in so far as this is possible in the light of directives heretofore given them.
- 5. The next session of the Council will be a conference convoked by the Council under the provisions of II, 4(ii) of the Potsdam Agreement for the purpose of considering treaties of peace with Italy, Finland, Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary. The Conference will, in relation to the particular treaty of peace in question, consist of the five members of the Council together with such of the other United Nations as have been at war with the enemy state in question. The Conference will be held at London and will begin its proceedings not later than November 15, 1945. It will take, as the bases for its deliberations, the reports of the Deputies with any modifications agreed upon by the Governments of the Deputies in question.
- 6. A communiqué summarizing the conclusions of the present session of the Council of Foreign Ministers will be prepared by repre-

1. Press Communiqué on 20th and 21st Meetings 35

M. Molorov drew attention to the communiqué on the work of the Council on 25th September, which read as follows:—

"The Council of Foreign Ministers met twice to-day (Tuesday), M. Bidault presiding in the morning and Mr. Bevin in the afternoon.

The Council continued its consideration of the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation on the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals and the repatriation of French nationals from areas under the control of the Soviet Government.

The Council also examined proposals put forward by the Soviet Delegation for expediting the work of the Reparations Commission. A French memorandum on restitution was also discussed.

The next meeting of the Council will be held at 11 o'clock to-morrow (Wednesday) morning".

M. Molotov said that the Soviet Delegation regarded this as inaccurate and proposed that a revised communiqué should be issued in the following terms:—

³⁵ At their 28th meeting, September 29, 1945, the Council reviewed this record of decisions and agreed that on this subject the Record of Decisions should be revised to read as follows: "M. Molotov proposed the issue of a revised communiqué on the work of the Council on the 25th September. The Council were not agreed on the advisability of publishing a communiqué revised and agreed by the Council." This text of the revised record quoted here is from the British minutes of the 28th meeting (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes).

"In view of the fact that there were inaccuracies in the communiqué of 25th September, it was decided in the Council of Foreign Ministers to publish instead of the said communiqué the following communiqué:-

[']The Council of Foreign Ministers met twice today. M. Bidault presided at the morning meeting and Mr. Bevin at the afternoon meeting. The Council continued its discussion of the proposal of the Soviet Delegation to bring up for its discussions the question of setting up an Allied Control Council in Japan.

The Council examined and approved proposals for the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals. The Council also accepted the proposals of the Soviet Delegation for speeding up the work of the Reparations Commission. It was decided that the memorandum of the French Delegation on restitution should be considered at the next meeting[']."

After discussion, it was agreed that, if any revised communiqué was to be issued, the text should read as follows:

"The Council of Foreign Ministers today considered the communiqué of 25th September and decided to publish the following amended text which represents more accurately the decisions taken at their meetings yesterday.

The Council of Foreign Ministers met twice on 25th September. M. Bidault presided at the morning meeting and Mr. Bevin at the afternoon meeting.

The Council examined proposals for the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals. The Council accepted the proposals of the Soviet Delegation for speeding up the work of the Reparations Commission in Germany. It was decided that the memorandum of the French Delegation on restitution should be considered at the next meeting".

The Council were not agreed on the advisability of publishing a revised communiqué in these terms.

In these circumstances M. Molotov reserved his right to issue a separate statement to the Press giving the Soviet Delegation's account of the proceedings at the Council's meetings on 25th September.36 Mr. Bevin also reserved his right to make a separate statement to the Press.

³⁶ The Moscow newspaper Izvestia, the organ of the Soviet Government, carried the following item on September 27, 1945: "In the opinion of circles near the Soviet Delegation, the communiqué of September 25 on the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London contained certain inaccuracies, which apparently are to be explained by the haste of publication. This led to the fact, as now explained, that the communiqué of September 25 was not published in the Soviet press. If these inaccuracies are to be rectified, it would be necessary to say that the Council of Foreign Ministers held two sessions on September 25; Mr. Bidault presided at the morning session and Mr. Bevin at the afternoon session. The Council examined proposals for the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals. The Council accepted the proposal of the Soviet Delegation regarding the acceleration of the work of the Reparations Commission in Germany. It was decided that the memorandum of the French Delegation on restitution should be considered at the next meeting."

2. Restitution

The Council considered proposals by the French and Soviet Delegations regarding the restitution by Germany of property belonging to the United Nations or their nationals.

The Council agreed to resume consideration of this matter at their meeting on the following morning.

740.00119 Council/9-1145

Inited States Delegation Minutes of the Twenty-Second Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 26, 1945, 11 a.m.

Mr. Molotov in the Chair

Molotov: M. Bidault may be a little late, but we will not wait for him. First of all, the Soviet Delegation wanted to discuss the communiqué of yesterday. There were certain inaccuracies in it. The Soviet Delegation suggest the following communiqué should be issued instead: (I want to translate the text of the communiqué in English and in Russian).²⁷

(Reads communiqué)

The Soviet Delegation asks that the text of this communiqué be accepted.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I imagine that there is just a real misunderstanding on the question because I objected at the time to the adoption of the resolution unless there was accepted an amendment that I had offered as to the Governments' returning persons considered by their Governments to be nationals of the Soviet Republic. I am perfectly sincere now in stating that my recollection was that Molotov said he was willing that we are to deal with it through diplomatic channels.

Molotov: It goes without saying I am not referring to the protocol. I am referring to the communiqué.

Byrnes: But however the communiqué did make the statement that the language of the proposal was examined and approved by the Council and that is a different understanding as to the action.

Molotov: What would you like?

BYRNES: I have no objection to saying just what did occur: that the discussion continued and that it was disposed of by agreement that it should be taken up through diplomatic channels.

Molorov: That was not the case. That was not the decision that was adopted.

Bevin: Mr. Chairman, at a previous meeting there was a complaint at the Communiqué Committee publishing decisions and I understood that they were not to publish decisions again. On that occasion the communiqué stated that the Council had agreed that they should consider so and so, and Mr. Molotov objected to that and said that the decision should only be recorded at the end. The Communiqué Committee has my sympathy. I think it can scarcely know what to do. But the communiqué drafted by the Soviet Delegation would mislead the public because they would not know what was proposed and what we had approved. I think the difficulty of the Committee is to issue a communiqué which says nothing.

Molorov: The communiqué had already been issued which perverted the situation, and we are not going to leave that communiqué without a denial on the part of the Soviet Delegation. We can now correct the communiqué since it misleads the public.

Bevin: I suggest that your communiqué would mislead the public as much.

Molorov: I am interested in having a communiqué that would say accurately what decision was taken and there should be no inaccuracy as was the case in the communiqué which was published in spite of the objections of the Soviet Delegation.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, this matter of the communiqué which I am reading here for the first time. The communiqué said "the Council continued its consideration of the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation on the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals, and the repatriation of French nationals through the areas under the control of the Soviet Government.["] Now, what is wrong with that? What is the fact?

Molotov: I should like to ask that our draft communiqué should be considered sentence by sentence. I leave out the first part, the introduction, which we shall consider at the end. The first sentence begins as follows: "The Council of Foreign Ministers met twice today. M. Bidault presided at the morning meeting." The Soviet Delegation considers that this is the only accurate sentence in yesterday's communiqué. The communiqué reads as follows: "The Council continued its discussion of the proposal of the Soviet Delegation concerning the question of setting up an inter-Allied council in Japan." Are there any amendments?

Byrnes: There is a motion to strike it out.

Molotov: All the newspapers talk about it. I should think we cannot remain silent. I have not in mind the Soviet press but the Daily Herald and the Times. Their reports are inaccurate.

Byrnes: I object to it for this reason: As I said yesterday and the day before, this matter was not on the agenda and because it was not on the agenda I am not prepared to discuss it. I have talked to my friend privately about it and explained my situation to him, and when yesterday he again presented the subject I did not discuss it because I had stated twice before that it was useless to discuss it and I had no authority to act upon it, and therefore I did not want the question that is not on the agenda and that is offered for discussion by any one member of the Council under the circumstances I have described to be placed in the communiqué unless both sides of the question are to be presented.

When the question was asked about the communiqué I stated that we should proceed with the agenda, that there was not time to consider the communiqué and what should be placed in it and I understood that there was general agreement. And I submit that when the Potsdam Agreement referred to us certain matters at the same time it gave to us the authority to add other matters if we agreed upon—if the Governments agreed upon them. The Governments have not agreed on that. I think it unwise for us to give to the newspapers that we are suggesting matters that Governments have not agreed to add to the agenda. It will bring about a lot of friction in the Council if each day a member can suggest a matter and discuss it and have the newspapers talk about it when the Governments have not agreed to put it on the agenda. I suggest that if we are going to do that, that we ought to agree that when a matter is not on the agenda if it is to be mentioned in the communiqué that each Delegation be invited to prepare a statement setting forth its views and giving it to the newspapers. I have never vet known the right way—the best way—of handling this press question. I sometimes think we might make a rule and admit the press to the meetings. That would be entirely satisfactory to me rather than to have us have disagreements about what should be given to the press. If we can agree, then it is all right. If we can't agree, then the best thing would be to let them come in. This would avoid these leaks that give to the papers a statement and nobody knows where it came from. In this statement which I read for the first time, there appears in the paper handed by the Soviet Delegation: "The Council examined and approved the proposal for the acceleration of repatriation of Soviet nationals".

Molorov: I should like to ask that we first wind up the sentence under discussion now—second sentence—and then pass on to the next one.

BYRNES: But I add only one thing. Up to this time I have been told that the Soviet representative on the Communiqué Committee objected to printing items that were on the agenda and, therefore, I certainly object to printing stories about items that were not on the agenda.

Molorov: You will recall, Mr. Byrnes, that yesterday we discussed the question whether anything should be published to the effect that we discussed the question of Allied control for Japan, and I did not press for this, but today all the newspapers report stories about it, and is it convenient for us to say nothing about it now?

BYRNES: I think we must try to agree with each other on these matters. We have had discussions here for several days about this procedure and about the proposal of the Soviet Delegation with reference to the procedure, but nothing was ever put into the communiqué about it.

Molorov: My understanding of this is that you suggest that nothing should be published in the communiqué. If you insist on this I agree that nothing should be said on this subject in the communiqué.

Byrnes: About this proceeding or about Japan?

Molotov: About Japan.

BYRNES: I don't think it should be. I thought the same about the other question. I thought it was better for us not to put it in the communiqué.

Molorov: In view of the objections by you, I withdraw my sentence. Let us pass on to the next sentence: "The Council examined and approved the proposals for the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals." I suggest that we leave out the words "and approved".

Byrnes: I agree.

(there was no objection)

Molorov: There is no objection that this wording be accepted.

Bevin: It reads like this: "The Council examined the proposal for the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals." Is that how it reads now?

Molotov: Yes.

BIDAULT: I would like to add that the question of the repatriation of French nationals of Alsace-Lorraine was postponed by agreement until the next day.

Molorov: This was not on the agenda, and our agreement was that we would not mention matters not contained in the agenda.

BIDAULT: I don't mind if we come to the agreement today. If it is in yesterday's or today's communiqué I don't mind at all.

Molotov: It is this sentence which has just been approved by Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin. M. Bidault has no objection?

BIDAULT: What I attach most value to is not form but the substance of my amendment.

Molorov: The question raised by Mr. Bidault, I suggest that it be recalled in the protocol at the end of this meeting when it will be drafted.

BIDAULT: I wish to make my position quite clear. If the word "approved" were left in the text, then I would have insisted. If the communiqué did not say that there had been agreement on the Soviet proposals then I would not insist on the French amendment. As I understand that the communiqué without this word was approved, then I shall not insist at this time.

Molotov: "The Council also accepted the proposal of the Soviet Delegation for speeding up the work of the Reparations Committee."

BYRNES: The word "also" would have to come out of that.

Molotov: I agree.

(there was no objection)

Bevin: That makes a decision again. "Accepted" means that you have decided.

Molorov: You seem to have forgotten, Mr. Bevin, what we discussed in connection with the suggestion as to what should be published, as to what decisions of the Council should be published. My suggestion was only that nothing should be published without the consent of the Council, but when the Council agrees to publish anything, certainly it should be published. Probably it appears that we seem to forget our decision that we adopted more than two weeks ago. The decision adopted with regard to reparations in Germany could be published in full, but in this case the Soviet Delegation does not suggest that this decision should be published in full, but it suggests that only a mention should be made.

BEVIN: I think my friend Molotov is right, of course. My mind is so full of disagreements, I am a little confused.

Molorov: Can we leave the wording of the second sentence as it is now leaving out the word "also"?

Bevin: The Council accepted the proposal of the Soviet Delegation for speeding up the work of the Reparations Commission.

Molotov: There certainly should be no objection. Now, the last sentence: "The memorandum of the French Delegation on restitution should be considered at the next meeting." By accepting this sentence we depart from our decision not to publish anything not on the agenda. Nevertheless, I think it is possible to accept it provided that my colleagues agree.

BIDAULT: I think that the discussion of this question should be continued. It makes good sense since reparations include quite a series of problems, and one of these in our eyes is that of restitution, and therefore it is not against the agenda to mention that in our communiqué.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I have agreed that it is perfectly justified because reparations from Germany are tied up in it.

Molotov: Many things are linked up with reparations. Had it not been for the war, there would not be any reparations. We leave that sentence. Are there any suggestions as to revisions to be made in this communiqué? Then I ask that we turn to the first sentence of our draft, namely, "In view of the fact that there were inaccuracies in the communiqué of September 25, it was decided in the Council of Foreign Ministers to publish the following communiqué in place of that communiqué." Any objections?

Bevin: Yes, certainly. I think it is a very wrong thing to do. I don't see how the original communiqué can be said to have inaccuracies. I think the Committee tried to do the job the best way they could. I should not like to see it go out in the press in the wording suggested. I should not object to something like this: "The Council of Foreign Ministers considered the communiqué issued on September 25 and decided to issue an amended communiqué which more fully expressed their decision."

Molorov: I should like you to repeat.

Bevin: The sentence would run: "The Council of Foreign Ministers has examined the communiqué of the twenty-fifth of September and has decided to publish a modified text of that communiqué representing the decisions taken in a more complete manner."

Molotov: Thank you.

Byrnes: I only want to express my own opinion that it is a shame for us to do this. I believe that the only results would be that the newspaper reporters would go to the communiqué of yesterday to compare it to see what in the world happened. Then when they had compared them, they are going to say the only change is the elimination of the reference to the repatriation of French nationals from areas under the control of the Soviet Government.

Molotov: The new text has been agreed upon.

Byrnes: So far as I am concerned, I am agreed but only after I make the observation that I think it unwise. I agree with the text but as to whether it should be done at all—on the question of its amendment, that is what I am speaking about. I think that we ought carefully to consider before we do it whether the reference to that French matter is sufficient matter to call the attention of the newspaper world to it and make it appear that there is some dispute between the Soviet and the French Governments about that matter that caused a correction. I suggested this in a friendly spirit. After I had made the suggestion I am going to make no objection to its publication, but I venture to insist that it will result in more speculation about that question whereas if it were passed over it would be forgotten. suggest this: that if Mr. Molotov thinks it should be corrected, that he accept correcting it in connection with the communiqué that is issued tonight instead of issuing a separate communiqué which would attract a lot of attention to the item.

Molorov: I should like to ask that the decision on the amended communiqué should be kept in order. Now, we turn to the next question.

Bidault: I have accepted a certain number of phrases in the spirit of conciliation but it must be clearly understood that I fully agree with Mr. Byrnes. I could not accept that any statement in yesterday's communiqué was inaccurate since the Delegation would accept important revision in this matter. I would not have asked yesterday that the French nationals should be mentioned. I showed all conciliation in this respect in this yesterday. I think we should think this matter over a little more. The text was actually drafted with the agreement of all the members of the Communiqué Committee. I would have accepted this text yesterday. Today I cannot accept this text which can be compared.

Molotov: I want to state that there is no disagreement as to the text of the amended communiqué.

BIDAULT: But there is disagreement on the publishing of it.

Molotov: But there is no disagreement as to the text.

BIDAULT: I accept this text which I accept to be exact, but the text of the other communiqué was also not inaccurate and I don't want that any comparison can be made against the other communiqué that it was inaccurate by publishing another communiqué.

Molorov: In my opinion the text of the preceding communiqué was not accurate and the text agreed upon now is the text of an accurate communiqué and I want to know if anybody disagrees to the communiqué agreed now. Do we agree to this text or is there any objection to it?

BIDAULT: I maintain my position, as stated.

Molotov: Thus we are to say that we have not reached agreement on acceptance.

BIDAULT: What we are not agreed upon is the opportunity [opportuneness?] of publishing a new text.

Molotov: I cannot convince M. Bidault and I shall not insist on this. But the Soviet Delegation considers yesterday's communiqué to be inaccurate. The Soviet Delegation will make a statement to this effect to the press.

BIDAULT: It is quite normal that the Soviet Delegation should make a statement to the press. The French Delegation had had no objection to it.

Molorov: We should like to have an agreed communiqué, but if my colleagues do not wish it, then we are compelled to give an explanation. We shall have it stated that the communiqué issued is not a joint communiqué and that the Soviet Delegation will not agree. We have no other way out. Let us pass to the next item.

Bevin: I understood that it was agreed by all our representatives. I don't want to prolong this argument. I think it has taken too much time, but it was agreed by all the representatives and to state that it is not an agreed communiqué would mean that the Soviet Delegation is repudiating their own representative, and we should have to say that it was agreed by all the representatives on the Committee.

Molorov: I feel that Mr. Bevin is fully entitled to state what he sees fit to state, but the Soviet Delegation will state what is only required in order to restore the truth to the situation.

Bevin: I simply want to avoid reflection on the men on the Committee.

Molorov: I think they are good workers but they acted too hastily and made certain inaccuracies, and that is why I think we ought to state the true situation, and I do not express a distrust in our representatives on the Communiqué Committee, but they acted a bit too hastily and made certain inaccuracies.

BIDAULT: I have no desire to provoke incidents and I am therefore ready to reexamine the whole question provided one sentence be added to the text: "The Council has studied the French proposal concerning the repatriation of the French nationals." There is a difference from "areas under the control of the Soviet Government". I would also ask that the introductory paragraph should mention: "In order to avoid inaccurate interpretations, the text of the preceding communiqué is altered as follows:"

Molotov: We have left out the sentence referring to the discussion by the Council of Foreign Ministers of the question relating to Japan. This was done at the suggestion of Mr. Byrnes because this question was not on the agenda and for the same reason the Soviet Delegation thinks this should not be included in the communiqué as it is not on the agenda but if you will agree to leave the two questions in the communiqué, then I shall have no objection to accepting M. Bidault's proposal. There is no objection?

BYRNES: On what—have we gone back to Japan? I did not hear. Molotov: The same question of mentioning a matter not on the agenda. You raised that question. I have no objection.

BYRNES: I have said to my good friend that Japan was an entirely separate question and has no reference to anything on this agenda. I have agreed to the language of the communiqué Mr. Molotov wants even though I believe publication unwise.

Molorov: Let us say that we have not agreed. That M. Bidault has made a proposal which is not acceptable.

Wang: Mr. Chairman, I think that we are considering the French memorandum on the question of restitution and reparations. If that is so, could we not consider that memorandum because we must put something in our next communiqué regarding the French memorandum. When that is done we could return to the question of yesterday's communiqué. I ask now how do we proceed?

Molorov: Unfortunately, I cannot accept this proposition as the communiqué issued yesterday has already been published everywhere with the exception of the Soviet press in which it will be impossible to have it published. May we pass on to the next item—the question of restitution? Anyone wish to comment?

RESTITUTION AND REPARATIONS

BIDAULT: I would. In the following draft resolution proposed by the French Delegation on restitution ³⁸ it says as follows:

"The Allied Control Commission should be instructed to speed up with the assistance of the Reparations Commission the carrying out of restitution of property of the United Nations or their nationals taking into account the principles of the declaration of the fifth January, 1943, the determination of property to be restituted shall be settled as soon as possible and the carrying out of restitution should be effected except in cases justifying exception within two years, as provided by Article 6 of Section 4 of the Potsdam Protocol."

My first comment on the resolution which has just been circulated is that like all governments of states occupied by the enemy, the Government of France attaches greatest importance to the restitution of property which the Germans stole either directly or by indirect means mentioned in the declaration of January 5, 1943. As I said, reparations must be levied on Germany and not on the Allies. The French Government hopes there will be no delay. That is why we submitted the resolution which rests on the same principle as the Soviet resolution of yesterday; there is a complete parallel between the two. The principle of restitution is covered by the declaration of fifth January, 1943, and so far as I know all the Allies have agreed. What we ask is that the agreement should be directed and that a date should be fixed for the return of Allied property within the period fixed to their legitimate owners.

Bevin: I agree.

Molorov: The Soviet Delegation promised that it would study this question within a short time and is grateful for having at their disposal from last night to this morning. As to the merits of this question, the Soviet Delegation wish to state that the Soviet Union is interested in restitutions in no less a degree than any other state. At the same time the Soviet Delegation recognizes the correctness of the remark made by Mr. Byrnes as to the complexity of this question in practice. Permit me to submit a counterproposal on this subject consisting of two paragraphs:

³⁸ C.F.M. (45) 38, September 20, p. 285.

"First: the question of restitution of the property of Allied countries stolen by the Germans should be considered in each individual case in the light of the declaration of January 5, 1943.

"Second: the question of the return of the gold stolen by the Germans from the Allied countries should be considered in the light of statements made by the Minister of Finance of the U.S.A., the Minister of Finance of Great Britain, and the People's Commissar of Finance of the U.S.S.R. on February 22, 1944 39 and Article 10 of the decision of the Berlin Conference regarding reparations from Germany."

Unfortunately I have not this down in writing.

BIDAULT: I have not much objection to your text but I must insist on mine. Your text mentions the text of January 5, 1943, to which we have adhered. Our proposal calls for acceleration.

Molorov: I think the idea suggested by M. Bidault is acceptable. In addition to mentioning a basis for the settlement of this question mention should also be made of the means to be adopted by Governments represented here to implement the decisions already taken. I must add that I have not only not studied the French proposal now submitted and am thus not able to be sure in what way it differs from the Soviet draft, but I am also not an expert in these questions.

In addition the Soviet Delegation have a draft of July 17, 1945 ⁴⁰ submitted by the American Government which does not correspond with the proposals of the Soviet and French Delegations. I am unable to say whether this American draft still holds good. This is the draft distributed by the American Delegation at the Berlin Conference and I am not certain whether this draft proposal remains in force or not.

(Molorov reads: The paper beginning with "First, the restitution should be confined to identifiable objects of artistic, religious and cultural" and ending with "the value of such property as returned should be included on reparations accounts of such countries".)

BEVIN: The French proposal seems to me to imply action in their proposition while the Soviet Delegation states how it would be applied. If we could agree to the French Delegation's proposal as to action, then the two proposals could be combined. The details could be examined by the experts and they could report because we declarations were made by the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union.

Reference is to attachment 2, "Proposed Definitions", to the Proposal by the United States delegation, dated July 17, 1945, and entitled "German Reparations", circulated at the First Plenary Meeting, July 17, 1945, of the Berlin Conference; for text, see Conference of Berlin (Potsdam), vol. 11, p. 833.

have not all the figures, of course, referred to by the Soviet Delegation. If the two proposals were put together in one report, I think we could decide quickly. I gather that the Soviet Delegation is not objecting to the action proposed by the French and the French are not objecting subject to examination of the proposal of the Soviet. Then the Council would proceed to come to its decision and this would be another problem solved.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I only want to refer to the statement read by Mr. Molotov as having been circulated at Potsdam. That paper I am not familiar with. I know that the matter was not discussed at the Foreign Ministers' table or at the conference of the Heads of Governments. I am told that in a meeting of the subcommittee considering reparations Mr. Pauley 41 representing the United States along with other gentlemen did submit the memorandum in the hope of bringing about a compromise in that committee, which would greatly restrict the articles which would be subject to restitution. All I am saying is that I do not recall it and do not know what was in the paper. My own views have been that restitution should not be restricted to the extent that was indicated in the paper that has been read, but in any event I imagine that that proposal was not agreed to and that the matter is open for agreement by the Control Council and the Reparations Commission and it seems to me that it should be decided by them because we have not the facts here and they have the information that we are discussing on hand. For that reason I thought that the French resolution was wise because it says nothing more than that the determination of property to be restituted should be settled as soon as possible, and that the decision should be carried out in accordance with the Potsdam Protocol.

Molotov: I have read the document distributed by President Truman in the meeting of the three Heads of Governments on July 17, 1945.

Byrnes: I have no recollection nor do my assistants recall.

Molorov: It is impossible to remember everything.

BYRNES: If my friend has a copy, then certainly my recollection is in fault. Did my friend say there was agreement on that?

Molotov: The question was not discussed; neither was it decided. Byrnes: My own thought was that there wasn't any objection to the proposal of the French Delegation that we say that it should be accelerated, and that the decision should be effected within two years as provided by the Potsdam Protocol. I would rather have it that way than for us to attempt to go into it when we have not the facts and it is a very complicated problem.

⁴¹ Edwin W. Pauley, United States Representative, Allied Commission on Reparations (from Germany), April-September 1945; Personal Representative of the President on reparations matters.

Molorov: The Soviet Delegation asks for their draft to be studied, and in their turn promise they will study the French one.

BYRNES: May I make a suggestion? As I read it, there is no important difference between the Soviet draft and the French draft, and I wonder if the Soviet Delegation would not appoint a deputy, and the French Delegation appoint a deputy, and see if they can agree on language before our next session. Then the rest of us could have some hope of reaching an agreement all around.

BIDAULT: I want to say something very similar. The Soviet Delegation seems to have at first sight no objection to the French draft, nor do we at first sight to the Soviet draft. This can be studied by experts—if we can get them—and I think that will not be difficult nor long. Mr. Molotov says he is not an expert on this question, nor am I. But I think both Delegations have experts in these problems, and I think they might meet. And I would ask that we continue our examination of this question this afternoon.

Molotov: Provided we agree to take one of the drafts as the basis, I shall have no objection to the question being referred to the Deputies.

BEVIN: As they don't conflict with one another—the first the directive, and the other the details, can't they take both since they don't conflict with each other?

Bevin: It seems to me with the directive in one, the other the details, therefore if the two are taken for examination there will be——

Molorov: I have already stated that the Soviet Delegation would like time to study the French document.

BIDAULT: We have not got the Soviet text either, the text that was read. It was merely that when I heard that it did not seem to me that there could be any disagreement. I hope that there will be not too much delay. I ask Mr. Molotov when the two texts can be submitted to our experts.

Molorov: I think we have to take something as a basis for our Deputies; otherwise there would be no use for the experts to get together. If the Soviet draft is accepted as the basis, let us then refer it to the Deputies, and consider an amendment. If this draft is not acceptable and if it calls for study, then let us not accept it.

BIDAULT: Of course, the French Delegation advanced this and would like to have it taken as a basis. Moreover, in view of the fact that there is no apparent contradiction between the two texts, I would accept that both texts be taken by the experts. Of course, I am not here to withdraw the text I submitted myself in favor of another text which I have not read. All that I ask is that we reach a solution of this question.

Bevin: Do I understand that—from what Mr. Molotov proposes that if we took his text as a basis—because of the fact that he has not studied the French text, the experts would not be permitted to use the French text?

Molorov: Provided the Soviet draft is accepted as the basis, I shall have no objection to the French amendment being considered.

Bevin: Mr. Molotov places us in a very difficult situation. We feel that the French proposal is reasonable for it provides for a date for two years, and then the Soviet has the details as to how it would be applied. I do think it is unreasonable to put the Delegations in the position that they are asked to agree that they consider the text only when the two have been submitted and ought to be considered together, and I ask Mr. Molotov to assist the Council by being reasonable as we are to put the two texts together and make one report. We are not antagonistic to either. We just want a mutual or a common settlement and I think it does help the parties concerned if we can agree on a common basis where two things are so vital to two Delegations.

I cannot help thinking the French have a very good case for getting this thing settled within two years, to have it disposed of within two years—the quicker this has gotten started the better it will be for all of us. We don't want to be put in a position against the French or against the Soviet. We want to think of the French Delegation helping the Soviet Delegation and the two Delegations can agree on some common basis on which we can get this settled. I think this would work to the satisfaction of both of them.

Let us try to agree.

Molorov: My only request is that my proposal should be oversimplified, at least I do not ask anyone for this. We have just received the French draft, and my colleagues have not received the Soviet draft, and now it is suggested to me that I agree with the French draft irrespective of whether I have read it or not. If I ask to be permitted to study it, then I am told that I am creating a situation. It is difficult to understand such a situation.

BEVIN: It may be that I expressed myself badly. What I asked was that the two drafts together, knowing that they have not been studied, should both go as the basis for study and then the question agreed when the report comes back. I am not asking that Mr. Molotov withdraw his. They would not go as antagonistic documents but as complementary.

Molorov: Does Mr. Bevin agree to apply the same procedure in other cases, too? In all of them? If there are two drafts, then can it be accepted that if they have not been studied they should be referred to the Deputies without the Deputies having one of them as the basis?

Bevin: I can't answer for every case. Sometimes papers are antagonistic. I can't give a general answer but I undertake to consider each one on its merits. And in considering this on its merits, it seems to me so complementary that it would be the wise thing to do.

For instance, yesterday, from the Chair, I took the Soviet Delegation's, the French Delegation's, the British Delegation's statements on reparations, and in the end the result of the discussion was that we all accepted the Soviet redraft. I am not a doctrinaire on any of these things. I try to do what we say in Britain "try common sense".

Molotov: I think that the proposal of Mr. Bevin is prompted by the best intentions possible. But it is intended for those Delegates who have studied the two drafts. Is the request of the Soviet Delegation so complicated a request that they should not be given a little time to study the draft which they have just received? To translate and to read and to study it?

BIDAULT: I should be very glad for my part to have the opportunity to study the Soviet draft suggestion, and also I think that this matter is important and very urgent. I would not have refused any of my colleagues the necessary time to think it over. I merely ask that he tell us when we may take up the question again.

Molotov: I think one day will suffice.

BIDAULT: I accept that.

It was agreed that they should meet again at 5 o'clock.

The meeting adjourned.

CONTROL OF GERMANY

Wang The French Delegation has presented a memorandum on this subject.⁴³

BIDAULT As my colleagues have read the text of the memorandum which has been distributed by the French Delegation, the Provisional Government of France finds itself confronted with a number of arrangements which, for myself, were not full decisions. It is not the idea of the French Delegation to raise again now, for reasons of form, matters which may have been decided upon in its absence, or which may seem legitimate to it.

We are here in the presence of questions which are of importance to Europe, and are also of the greatest importance to the whole world, and if for the world as a whole, or for Europe particularly, we were to draw up the statistics of German aggression, France would not complain in the share she has had in the matter. That is why I cannot conceal from you the fact that in the circumstances of Berlin, the problems of Germany were examined without consultation with countries such as France who has been at grips with them for centuries, and we feel that very deeply in my country, so naturally we cannot be bound for any acts like this.

 $^{^{43}}$ C.F.M.(45) 17, September 13, "Control and Administration of Germany", p. 177.

We have never contracted any alliance with Germany, and it is only natural we should decide that nothing should be finally concluded to which we have not had an opportunity of giving our consent. Therefore, I would like to say that I do not think, in German affairs, that it is possible or conceivable without France taking its share therewith. Also, I cannot imagine any decisions taking place which should be regarded as committing France. My Government was not consulted in any regard in the matter of texts drawn up and agreed upon, but it has been placed in a position freely to accept. I shouldn't wish it to be understood that the general reservations which I have been making apply in principle to everything which has been decided upon without our participation. I regard some of these as sound but others we cannot accept without reservations. I will indicate later on what reservations I wish to make.

You have had before you almost since the beginning of the Conference, the paper on the French proposals, and I will not dwell on the reservations we are making, but I would like to say that the reservations which we make have reference to the contemplated reconstitution of the Central Government, and also to the creation of a Secretary of State, or by whatever name they may be called, and whose jurisdiction extends to Germany and territories, and I am not, so far, in accord with this.

What is there for the situation confronting us? It was agreed among the three powers present at this Council, that a certain system of administration of Germany could be set in operation.⁴⁴ There are now four of us administering Germany, and I think that is a good thing, and I think we should go on.

So far as the French Delegation is concerned, it agrees with the principles in Paragraph 9 on the Control of Germany; namely that the administration of Germany should be directly toward the decentralization of political structure and the development of local responsibility. This way the French Delegation regards that the paragraph which follows thereon, provides for the constitution at once of a central government of Germany. I would remind you that Germany is now governed by a Control Commission of the Commanders in Chief of the four powers, and this was agreed upon in the absence of the fourth power—France, which I would like to point out without further comment.

Therefore, the French Delegation also regards that the following paragraph not only contemplates but provides for a central German organization before we know what Germany and the German people are being. And it is also provided that there should be created central administrative departments under German directive.

We are all unaware of what Germany is to become in the coming days, and we think it is not necessary, we who have suffered many losses in the field and concentration camps, to proceed in the reconstitution of Germany before it becomes essential to do so. In any case, we do not think the first act of the Control Commission should be to reconstitute in Berlin under German direction a central German administration.

As it appears at present to be determined by the findings of the Conference when we were not present, is that there will be a German administration, but that there will be withdrawn from its authority certain territories which are defined as limited in the declaration of Potsdam.

We have no objection to this directive but if Breslau and Koenigsberg are withdrawn from this central German authority, on which we will agree, then it appears to the French Government and its people, that, if possible, towns like Mainz and Stettin should remain under the authority of responsible German officers, perhaps called Secretaries of State, who would take advantage of the fact that he was alone to administer the railways, for instance, without the Commander in Chief having had in this matter the rights which have been granted for him in other places.⁴⁵

The Provisional Government of the French Republic has said on several occasions, and I think that anyone could have anticipated this, that it attaches essential importance to the areas of the Rhineland and the Ruhr.

What is important to us is that the area which has been the starting point for aggressions, and from which my country has suffered generation after generation, should be withdrawn from the aggressive power. The "European Treasure House," as the Ruhr Basin is known, should no longer be the base for launching and for the continuing of ⁴⁵ The British record of this meeting (not printed) quotes this portion of Bidault's statement in the following manner: "The Berlin Conference had agreed that certain parts of German territory should be removed from the control of this central German authority. The French Government did not object a priori to this arrangement; but, if the cities of Breslau, Stettin and Koenigsberg were to be so removed, why should the cities of Mainz and Saarbrucken remain under German authority? The French Government had on many occasions expressed their views with regard to the future of the Rhineland and Westphalia. This area, which had been the spring-board for German aggression for many generations, should be finally withdrawn from the control of Germany. The Ruhr, with its coal and blast-furnaces, should no longer be a base for launching and sustaining aggression against western Europe: its resources should rather be used in support of a peaceful economy for western Europe. France did not claim the great productive capacity of the Ruhr for herself alone, but she did ask that this war potential should be removed from the control of the people from whose aggressions she had suffered so much in the past." (CFM Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes) wars, and it should be made into something to cement the amity of peoples in the common construction of peace.

As for the Ruhr Basin, of which I said was a "European Treasure House", we must remove it from among the war potentialities which can be wielded by a people from whose aggression we have suffered immeasurably.

As for the agricultural and forest zone south of Cologne, which is mountainous, and which has often been called the "Springboard of Aggression"—my country feels that it should be placed in a position where it is able to watch over the integrity of this section.

I may add that since things have been published that France has no intention of extending its territories, what it does wish to do is to be placed in a position in which it can, once and for all, close the door on aggression. There is a house on the territory of France which has been reconstructed seven times after having been destroyed, and we do not wish that it be constructed again. We wish this so. And, if I am asked where the house is, I will give the address.

Therefore, I think the problem which arises is essentially a problem of Germany. That is the essential problem. But if there had not been a Germany, the consequences which would follow to all of us, and the Soviets with their long ordeal, and Britain holding out so long alone, and America which had to come with us, together with China which had to resist its aggressor, the problem of peace would have been much easier to solve.

That is why France would have wished that the first question to come before the Council of Foreign Ministers be the question which was, in fact, first in importance. This has been in consideration of what has been decided at earlier meetings and out of our desire to promote cooperation with the great Allies, we have been ready to agree that there should be placed in Chapter VIII what should be placed in Chapter I.46

As earnest as I am, and as we all are, to arrive at a real government of Germany between four powers who are at present in charge of its controlled areas, there is no objection to another examination of this matter.

In conclusion, I would like to say that the question before us is so serious for the life and survival of the country I represent at this table, I feel it my duty to read over the sentence which concludes the French memorandum: "They are however obliged to state that the French representative on the Allied Control Commission in Berlin will not be empowered to agree to any action prejudging that area's future until the question here raised has been discussed by the five ministers and decided by the Council."

⁴⁶ Apparently reference is to C.F.M.(45) 23, September 17, "Agenda for the Present Plenary Conference", p. 223.

Finally, I would like to say that there is no problem which is more serious for all of us, and France as well, and I should be glad to hear any observations that may be made on the position I have taken, so that we may be able in this way, by common act, remove this peril which has in turn threatened all the frontiers of Europe and which will in turn threaten the future.

Wang Are there any observations? If there are no observations, I would like to ask my colleagues how to dispose of this memorandum?

BIDAULT Mr. Chairman, there are no limits regarding the importance of the problems raised by this memorandum, and I also feel that our ability to settle this technical problem, and indeed some of the general problems, is small here, and that is why I should have no objection to have it referred to an appropriate party. If it is desired to refer it to a meeting of the Deputies, I have no objection. I also have no objection to referring it to any other body. I am, however, most anxious that work should be done on this problem because it is such an essential one.

Molorov The Soviet Delegation feels that the decisions of the Berlin Conference were formed to the wishes expressed by M. Bidault. The Soviet Delegation views with full sympathy the desires expressed by the representative of France, and feels that they should meet with all sympathy on the part of all of us.

I must add that the Soviet Delegation submitted at the Berlin Conference an additional proposal—one concerning the Ruhr area.⁴⁷ I want to recall the main points of this proposal. Here they are:

"Regarding the Ruhr area (industrial) as a part of Germany, and having in view the necessity for reducing in every way the war potential of Germany, the Conference found it advisable first, to lay down that the Ruhr industrial area, in the way of administration, should be under the joint control of the United States, Great Britain, the USSR and France; second, the administration of the Ruhr industrial area should be carried on by the Allied Council composed of representatives of Great Britain, the United States, the Soviet Union and France."

At the Berlin Conference it was said that the British could not discuss this question without France, and we did not insist on this, but we are ready to devote ourselves to this question if my colleagues agree to do so.

Bevin I looked up the English text of discussion and

"Premier Stalin said that the Soviet Delegation had brought this up because at earlier conferences the suggestion had been put forward that the Ruhr should be separate from Germany and placed under some form of international control. On earlier occasions this suggestion had met with some approval. It flowed from the idea, which had previously been favoured by the heads of the three Governments, that Germany might be dismembered after the war. More recently, however, the views of the three Governments on the dismemberment of Germany had been modified; and at the present time the general feeling seemed to be in favour of treating Germany as a unit for economic purposes. For this reason he was anxious to know whether the British and United States Governments were now of opinion that the Ruhr should be treated as a part of Germany. If Mr. Bevin felt unable to discuss the further proposals for Allied control which were outlined in the remainder of the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation, could not the Conference at least consider whether they accepted the opening words of the memorandum which expressed the view that the industrial district of the Ruhr should be treated as part of Germany. If this were the view of the three Governments he would be glad if a statement to that effect could be included among the decisions of the present Conference.

"Mr. Bevin said that he would not wish to express any firm opinion on this question without further examination of the records of earlier discussions and of the relevant facts bearing on the question. He was content that for the present the Ruhr should remain within the jurisdiction of the Control Council for Germany; but he would prefer to have an opportunity for consultation with his colleagues in the British Government before committing himself to any view about the long-term arrangements for control over the industrial district of the Ruhr. Meanwhile, he was willing to agree that this long-term problem should be referred for consideration by the Council of Foreign Minis-

I also said in the opening statement that this concerned France so much I could not discuss it without France.

I cannot see the need of the Soviet Delegation's proposal now. It is in the British American and French zone, and they are making exactly the same decisions as the Soviet Government. On the other hand, I believe the Soviet Union should agree that over the interim period, Germany is subject to the Allied Control Commission.

Therefore, if the French Government sees its way to serve on the Allied Control Council, as in the Potsdam understanding, it should be done without prejudice during the discussion of the long term settlement of the Ruhr, and it should be brought about later. I could not agree to a different treatment of the zone we are responsible for. Yesterday, in the case of the waterways, I think it was declined.

I would say before I finish, that nobody realizes the importance to France of the question raised in the memorandum more than Great Britain. We have been involved in two wars in twenty-five years, and the cemeteries along that frontier are the greatest memorials of what the price was. We are very anxious to do all we can to associate ourselves with France in some way to prevent another act of aggression. On the other hand, it is very vital, and I think the countries should discuss it very fully.

When the further examination takes place and we are dealing with the settlement of Germany as a whole, then I think some control for it and final adjustments can be made, but I don't think it can be made now.

If the French Delegation would agree that the exercise of the Allied Control, with the decisions made at Potsdam, could be operated, then it could be without prejudice to the final settlement of this territory.

The British Delegation regards the Ruhr and the whole of the Rhine area almost as vital a point of affecting our security as the French.

In the meantime, the argument of the Control Council operating without prejudice would, I think, assist reparations and other things to be dealt with, and would not prejudice the discussions and exchange of views.

BIDAULT I would like to thank Mr. Bevin for what he has said about France. It is in line with the experience of history. All of us know that the Ruhr has fostered the greatest war in history, and has done so before against us both.

In view of the fact that this problem is one which is of vital importance to this country, I cannot make any decisions lightly. I have to consider that Germany has been reduced on the eastern frontier, and have no objection to this being done. We are concerned with the protection of our own territory.

We do have to guard ourselves like the Soviet Union, and that is why it is not possible for us to accept that a central German administration should be able to give orders on the very threshold of our territory.

I realize of course that this is an immense problem. It is in fact the essential problem and perhaps, if I may speak frankly, that is why we put it at the end. I would like to settle the matter now, but I do realize that there are here a number of major problems on which my colleagues have not had time to think, and I will agree that the Conference should take the matter in hand and refer it to the meeting of Deputies, who would then, under the control and with the information supplied to them by their Governments, promote a settlement in this extremely serious matter, so that a report on the basis of the five Governments concerned could be presented to this Council of Foreign Ministers at its next session.

BEVIN I have no objection that this matter be studied by the Deputies.

Byrnes I agree.

Molorov I don't know what the Deputies will discuss. It is not a matter for them.

BIDAULT I agree of course that it should be settled at once.

Molorov But it is not a question for the Deputies. It will be very hard on them and we should have pity on them.

BIDAULT Mr. Chairman, perhaps I took a wrong view of what our Deputies are. I understood that they were men who met together to consider the various positions to be taken up and to receive the necessary instructions from our principals, and would be men behind each of whom there would be the respective minister. Men, therefore, who could not take any final position unless they were authorized by the minister who is responsible. In no circumstance do I regard this as a form of procedure, but only to save time and prepare the way for this very urgent problem.

Molorov I suggest that in view of the complexity of this question, it should be taken up through diplomatic channels at the present stage.

BIDAULT I would like to say this: All that matters to the French Government is that a decision should not be taken at once, although several months have elapsed since the capitulation. But the position is this: We find ourselves, who were not at Potsdam although we regret it—we find ourselves before this problem of Germany, which is one we have had to confront with for a thousand years, and we feel nothing should be done with the German problem without the participation of France, and something should be done with us, and quickly.

Regarding the diplomatic method of proceeding, if this should show the same speed as those who are accustomed to this method know, then I will say that I will probably have to read again the last sentence of the French memorandum.

May I say this: This is not merely for ourselves, but also for all of us. Unlike others around this table, we find ourselves confronted with decisions on which we cannot agree except where our views tally. Thus it is not strange that I suggest that the preliminary work should be done by men whose consideration of the matter would not be limited to their own views on the subject, but who would be representatives of the ministers of foreign affairs, and who would be more fortunate in having a little more time to devote to the settlement of this problem.

No one would be happier than the French Delegation if it were possible to settle this problem today, tomorrow or the day after tomorrow. My attendance at these meetings shows me that international problems are very difficult, and this one is so very serious that we should entrust this to men who have the responsibility of the several Governments here.

What will happen, or what may happen, is that we shall say nothing about it, and each Government will take whatever responsibility it sees fit within its own particular zone. That, gentlemen, should not happen when we are dealing with this great territory, the care of which victory has entrusted us with jointly.

If there are any other proposals to be made on this subject, I should be glad to consider them.

BYRNES I only wish to say that I appreciate of course the seriousness of this problem, particularly to the people of France. We will have to give careful and serious consideration to the question of what final disposition shall be made of the Rhineland and Westphalia. But it is clear that the future of that area cannot be settled here at this meeting.

Therefore, the question is as to what disposition we can make of it at this time. As far as I am concerned, I am entirely willing that the matter should be referred to the Deputies. I know that they cannot determine the final disposition of it, but they could give thought to it and could make a report to a future meeting which would be of service to the Foreign Ministers when that finally comes to the consideration of the problem.

If we agree that consideration should be given to the problem, I do not think it is very important whether it be done through the Deputies or through diplomatic channels. I prefer the Deputies because then it will be made the business of one group of men who are appointed by us, because they are familiar with the views of our respective foreign offices, and are charged with that duty and they may devise some plan for our future consideration which would be helpful. And I think we can all agree that it is to be understood that if representatives of France and the Allied Control Commission take any action with reference to matters pending, that action will be taken without prejudice that France has for the future disposition of this area.

Molorov Mr. Byrnes has suggested that this French memorandum be referred to the Deputies. The question then is whether Mr. Byrnes agrees that this memorandum is a basis.

BYRNES I must say now that there is a great difference, I find, between us in the words "as a basis." In all good humor, I say that I learn there is a difference in Russian language and in English as to the words, "as a basis."

Molotov Let us say the Latin word then.

BYRNES I realize you didn't know the word and turned around and asked someone for it!

As the basis for discussion or consideration, I have no objection to it, but that does not mean I am committed at all to anything that is in the paper except as furnishing a memorandum upon which the Deputies could discuss it.

I am told that when you use the words, "as a basis" you understand it to mean "acceptance in principle."

Molorov That is the same thing.

BYRNES And we don't understand it that way. Therefore, in order to avoid misunderstanding, I have made that statement so that there will be no misunderstanding in the future.

BIDAULT I have prepared a text here which will remove, I think, any difficulty concerning this term, "as a basis for discussion." It reads as follows: "The Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs decides that the questions raised by the memorandum of the French Delegation on matters concerning the control and administration of Germany and shall be the subject of the study and of the report by the Deputies. This report shall be discussed at the next session of the Council."

Molorov My suggestion is as follows: I think we have no right to wave away such questions as these and to refer them to other men. We have given very little consideration to this question, and, therefore, before we pass it on to our Deputies, let us discuss it here more fully.

BYRNES If my friend wants to discuss it more, I would not object. BIDAULT As I have pressed for a long time to have this matter put on the agenda, I am prepared to discuss it night and day or as long as you wish.

Molotov Very good.

Wang Can we discuss this tomorrow morning?

BIDAULT Very good.

BYRNES Yes, I have no objections.

Molotov I suggest that the morning be reserved for reparations.

Byrnes Yes, I agree.

Molotov And if we have no time to discuss this tomorrow, then the day after tomorrow.

BYRNES I like your first statement.

Molotov Provided we have time to get ready.

Byrnes I agree to discuss this at 3:00 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Molorov Provided we have time. If we have not, the day after tomorrow. I suggest that we reach agreement as to when we shall discuss this question. We shall set a special meeting. It is an important one.

BIDAULT I agree.

Molorov The question could not be simply referred to a commission of Deputies. We have to express our views on the French memorandum. That is very important. We are not yet aware of the opinions held by our other colleagues. They have not had time to state them. It is too short a time.

BYRNES Let us then recess until 4:00 o'clock tomorrow. We can think about it then.

Molotov We are grateful to M. Bidault for this, but everyone has not had a chance to express his views.

BYRNES In order that everybody may have time to think about it, I suggest that we recess until 4:00 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Molotov I have no objection if we are ready by that time.

Bevin I want to raise one point. I do think the press communiqué ⁴⁹ tonight ought to say this matter is being discussed.

Byrnes I agree.

Molotov I agree.

BIDAULT I agree.

WANG There will be no meeting in the morning?

BIDAULT We will adjourn then until tomorrow at 4:00.

Molorov If we get ready tomorrow; if not, then the day after tomorrow.

The meeting adjourned at 7:25 p.m.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State

[London,] September 26, 1945—7:45 p. m.

Participants:

The Secretary Mr. Dunn Mr. Bohlen Mr. Molotov Ambassador Gusev Mr. Pavlov Mr. Bevin Sir Ronald Campbell Mr. Dixon Mr. Payton-Smith

Mr. Molorov said that he wished to circulate a proposal to settle the procedural question. His proposal read that the decision of September 11 with regard to procedure 50 should be reversed, and the question of the peace treaties should be considered as provided for in the appropriate section of the Berlin decision.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had hoped that their proposal, which he felt was in accord with the Berlin Conference, would satisfy Mr. Molotov, since it excluded from consideration of these treaties the Deputies of any but the powers which had signed the armistice.

Mr. Molorov said that he felt that Mr. Byrnes' proposal was not in conformity with the Berlin decision. He pointed out that paragraph 1 let the Council of Five handle the matter of the Hungarian treaty.

⁴⁹ For text of the communiqué released to the press by the Council of Foreign Ministers on the evening of September 26, see Department of State Bulletin, October 14, 1945, p. 566.

⁵⁰ See the Record of the First Meeting of the Council, September 11, p. 112.

THE SECRETARY said that he did not see this, since his proposal was that the Council would have no discussion, nor vote, nor take any action on these treaties, but merely refer them to special committees of deputies composed of the countries signatory to the armistice. He added that if the first sentence bothered Mr. Molotov, he was prepared to strike it out.

There was some discussion as to what body would take the decision, remit these treaties to the appropriate deputies, at the end of which Mr. Molotov said he must make it plain that he could not even consider that point in a Council of Five. He said that what he had in mind was that the Council itself should be composed only of the countries signatory to the armistice to consider or refer any matter affecting these treaties.

Mr. Bevin said that we were in a case where the three Heads of State were not agreed, and he did not see why he should be asked to swallow Marshal Stalin's interpretation and go back on that of his Prime Minister. He said he could not be expected to throw over Mr. Attlee any more than Mr. Molotov could be expected to throw over Marshal Stalin.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that Mr. Byrnes agreed with his interpretation, although he referred to some different understanding during the discussions at Potsdam, which had not, however, been reflected in the agreed text.

THE SECRETARY replied that this was correct, and that he felt that we could try to find some compromise in the light of the discussion.

Mr. Bevin said that he was afraid that if we changed the procedure now, it would invalidate all the decisions that had been taken in regard to these satellite treaties.

Mr. Molorov said this would not be the case since even under the September 11 formula China and France had had no power of decision, and therefore the decisions were only those of the three of us. He added that he must repeat that he could not participate in any meeting concerning these peace treaties in which the representatives of countries not signatory to the armistice terms were present.

THE SECRETARY then asked Mr. Molotov's opinion concerning paragraph 5 of his proposal,⁵¹ namely, that a conference of states at war with these satellite countries be called for the next session of the Council.

Mr. Molotov replied that he could not discuss that question in London as he would have to talk to his Government. He pointed out that it was a very serious question and required considerable study.

⁵¹ For the informal proposal by the Secretary of State, September 26, see p. 383.

Mr. Bevin then said that although he could not speak for his Government, he wondered if Mr. Molotov would accept some statement to the effect that notwithstanding the decision of September 11, in future the Council would consider these peace treaties in conformity with the Potsdam decision.

Mr. Molorov replied that he thought that that seemed to be very much in line with his own proposal.

It was then decided to meet again at 11 o'clock the next morning since there was no morning session of the Council, to consider further the question of procedure and also at the Secretary's suggestion to have a full discussion in regard to Japan.

Austrian Food Supplies

The following four drafts have been prepared by the United Kingdom Delegation for the consideration of the Deputies.

[Annex 1]

DRAFT DIRECTIVE FROM BRITISH, UNITED STATES AND SOVIET GOVERN-MENTS TO THEIR REPRESENTATIVES ON THE ALLIED CONTROL COM-MISSIONS IN HUNGARY, ROUMANIA AND BULGARIA

The Council of Foreign Ministers have noted with considerable disquiet the serious deficiencies in food supplies in Austria on which reports have been made to them by the Allied Council in Vienna.⁵² It has been represented to the Council of Foreign Ministers on the one hand that supplies for Austria should be largely drawn from the Danubian area, some of which has been in the past a source of supply for meeting a large part of Austria's needs. The Foreign Ministers have on the other hand been informed that in present circumstances it is practically impossible for any supplies to be drawn from this area and that in fact it has been necessary in certain cases to import supplies into Danubian countries from outside. The agreed recommendations of September 17, of the Allied Council for Austria to the Council of Foreign Ministers regarding the question of long-term supply arrangements for Austria were included in the memorandum by the United Kingdom delegation, C.F.M.(45) 42, September 22, p. 323.

supply for meeting Austrian needs the Council of Foreign Ministers wish to have before it the full facts about the total exportable surpluses of foods of all kinds which are now available in the Danubian area and which it is estimated will become available from the 1946 harvest.

- 2. In order that this information may be available to the Council it is requested that the Allied Control Commission in Hungary/Roumania/Bulgaria should forthwith furnish a report of the total quantities of foods of all sorts actually available for export up to the end of August 1946 in Hungary/Roumania/Bulgaria, and of the total quantities of foods of all sorts which are estimated to become available for export in the period September 1946–August 1947. The Allied Control Commission should also report whether any commitments exist with regard to the distribution of these surpluses.
- 3. You should immediately consult with your colleagues on the Allied Control Commission and take such steps as you may jointly agree to be necessary in order to obtain the required information as quickly as possible. An agreed report on these lines should be sent by each representative on the Allied Control Commission to his Government and copies should at the same time be sent to the Allied Council in Vienna who will collate the information in these reports for presentation to the Council of Foreign Ministers. It is essential that your report should be in the hands of the Allied Council in Vienna not later than one month from the date of this telegram.
- 4. Similar instructions are being sent to the Allied Control Commissions in Roumania, Bulgaria and Hungary and enquiries on similar lines are being addressed to the Governments of Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia.

DRAFT TELEGRAM FROM THE BRITISH, UNITED STATES, FRENCH AND SOVIET GOVERNMENTS TO THEIR DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES IN PRAGUE AND BELGRADE

The Council of Foreign Ministers have noted with considerable disquiet the serious deficiencies in food supplies in Austria on which reports have been made to them by the Allied Council in Vienna. It has been represented to the Council of Foreign Ministers on the one hand that supplies for Austria should be largely drawn from the Danubian area some of which has been in the past a source of supply for meeting a large part of Austria's needs. The Foreign Ministers have on the other hand been informed that in present circumstances it is practically impossible for any supplies to be drawn from this area and that in fact it has been necessary in certain cases to import supplies into Danubian countries from outside. In order to be able to reach a decision of principle about the proper sources of supplies for meeting Austrian needs, the Council of Foreign Ministers wish to have before it the full facts about the total exportable surpluses of foods of all kinds which are now available in the Danubian area and which it is estimated will become available from the 1946 harvest.

- 2. The Allied Control Commissions in Hungary, Roumania and Bulgaria have been instructed by the Governments represented on them to furnish a report forthwith of the total quantities of foods of all sorts actually available for export from those countries up to the end of August 1946, and of the total quantities of foods of all sorts which are estimated to become available for export in the period September 1946 to August 1947. The Allied Control Commissions have also been asked to report whether any commitments exist with regard to the distribution of these surpluses.
- 3. It would be greatly appreciated by the Council of Foreign Ministers if similar information could be provided to cover Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia in order that a complete picture of the area may be obtained.
- 4. In concert with your Soviet, United States and French colleagues who are receiving similar instructions, you should inform the Czechoslovak/Yugoslav Government of the above and ask them whether they will be good enough to co-operate with the Council of Foreign Ministers by providing you with information on the above lines. You should, if necessary, assure the Czechoslovak/Yugoslav Government that this enquiry does not imply any kind of desire on the part of the Council of Foreign Ministers to interfere with the normal production and distribution of food supplies in Czechoslovakia/Yugoslavia. But it seems to the Council essential to have as comprehensive a picture as possible of the present and future surplus resources of the whole Danubian area in order that they may best meet their responsibilities in Austria. The Council of Foreign Ministers also feel sure that the Czechoslovak/Yugoslav Government will agree that a comprehensive survey of the surplus resources of the area cannot fail to be of great value in itself and of considerable service to all the countries concerned.
- 5. The Allied Control Commissions in Hungary, Roumania and Bulgaria have been requested to furnish their reports within one month of the date of this telegram. It is greatly hoped that you will be able to obtain the required information from the Czechoslovak/Yugoslav Government in time to send your report within the same period.
- 6. A similar enquiry is being addressed to the Yugoslav/Czecho-slovak Government.

DRAFT TELEGRAM FROM THE BRITISH, AMERICAN, FRENCH AND SOVIET GOVERNMENTS TO THEIR REPRESENTATIVES ON THE ALLIED COUNCIL IN VIENNA

The Council of Foreign Ministers have carefully considered the valuable reports on Austrian food supplies furnished by the Allied Council as a result of its meeting on September 17th.⁵³ In the discussion on these reports it has been represented to the Council of Foreign Ministers on the one hand that supplies for Austria should be largely drawn from the Danubian area, some of which has been in the past a source of supply for meeting a large part of Austria's needs. The Foreign Ministers have on the other hand been informed that in present circumstances it is practically impossible for any supplies to be drawn from this area and that in fact it has been necessary in certain cases to import supplies into Danubian countries from outside. In order to be able to reach a decision of principle about the proper sources of supply for meeting Austrian needs on a long term basis, the Council of Foreign Ministers wish to have before it the full facts about the exportable surpluses of foods of all kinds which are now available in the Danubian area and which it is estimated should become available from the 1946 harvest.

- 2. The Allied Control Commissions in Hungary, Roumania and Bulgaria have been instructed to furnish a report forthwith of the total quantities of foods of all sorts actually available for export up to the end of August in Hungary, Roumania and Bulgaria and of the total quantities of foods of all sorts which are estimated to become available for export in the period Sept. 1946–August 1947. The Allied Control Commissions have also been asked to report whether any commitments exist with regard to the distribution of these surpluses.
- 3. These reports will be furnished to the Governments of the Controlling Powers and copies will be sent to the Allied Council in Vienna. The Allied Council should itself make such enquiries as it feels necessary to obtain, in addition to the information already supplied to the Council of Foreign Ministers, a complete picture of the present and future production and distribution of foodstuffs in Austria together with any recommendations about possible improvements.
- 4. The Czechoslovak and Yugoslav Governments are also being invited to supply information on the same lines as the Allied Control ⁵³ See footnote 52, p. 412.

Commission. The information received from these two Governments will be communicated to the Allied Council as soon as possible.

- 5. As soon as the reports from Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia and the information concerning Austria itself are available to the Allied Council they should collate all these reports and draw up a comprehensive picture of the present situation and future prospects as regards the utilization of food from the countries in question to meet Austrian needs.
- 6. The Allied Control Commissions in Hungary, Roumania, and Bulgaria have been instructed to forward copies of their reports to the Allied Council in Vienna not later than one month from the date of this telegram. It is hoped that information from the Czechoslovak and Yugoslav Governments will be available within the same period. It is desired that the Allied Council should forward its comprehensive report to the Council of Foreign Ministers not later than six weeks from the date of this telegram.
- 7. Separate telegrams are being sent about ration scales to be applied in Austria and about arrangements for bringing supplies into Austria in the period before the Council of Foreign Ministers can take a further decision on the basis of the Reports to be received about the availability of surplus food in the Danubian area.

[Annex 4]

DRAFT TELEGRAM FROM THE BRITISH, AMERICAN, FRENCH AND SOVIET GOVERNMENTS TO THEIR REPRESENTATIVES ON THE ALLIED COUNCIL IN VIENNA

With reference to the question of ration scales and consumption levels to which the Allied Council in Vienna referred in their reports on Austrian food supplies, the Council of Foreign Ministers have agreed that the ration scales for the deficiency areas in Austria should be based on a per capita minimum ration of 1,550 calories a day for the normal consumer, maintaining the principle of differentiation for the various groups of the population on the basis of the type of labour performed. It is for the Allied Council to estimate both the quantity of food which can be obtained from local production and the quantity which remains to be imported in order to reach the above standard. The above scale is fixed on the basis of present possibilities of production and supply. It is hoped that this scale may be increased as more local or imported supplies become available.

[London,] September 27, 1945—11 a.m.

Participants:

Mr. Bevin The Secretary Mr. Molotov Ambassador Gousev Mr. Dunn Sir Alexander Cadogan Sir Archibald Clark Kerr Mr. Pavlov Mr. Bohlen Mr. Ivanov

THE SECRETARY said he had taken Mr. Molotov's proposal of yesterday 55 in regard to procedure and had made a few drafting changes and added an additional paragraph concerning the summoning of a conference. The Secretary handed Mr. Molotov a copy of his proposal. (Copy attached.⁵⁶)

Mr. Molotov, after reading the proposal in translation, said that he thought the first part was acceptable but suggested that the last sentence of the first part be changed to conform with the Berlin decision.

THE SECRETARY said he must make it plain that it was one proposal and that he could not agree to the first part without acceptance of the second.

Mr. Bevin said he wished to be quite clear on what was being proposed. He said there were two proposals, one from Mr. Molotov and one from Mr. Byrnes. He said his idea had been that the whole matter of broadening the terms of the Potsdam decision concerning the work of the Council should be referred to the three Heads of Government. He said he would find it hard to agree to any narrowing of the conditions of the September 11th agreement unless there was some clear indication that at future meetings the basis would be broadened, which he felt could only be done by the Heads of Govern-

THE SECRETARY pointed out that he felt the second half of the proposal concerning a conference was essential. He said that since we had started this conference on the basis of five members participating in the discussion of the peace treaties, to narrow it to three without some indication that at a future date provision would be made for wider participation of other nations would result in public reaction being very critical. He added that as it was some criticism had been directed against the Council because it was limited to five. pointed out that at the proposed conference it would be entirely feasible for the five Ministers to meet as they are now meeting.

Not attached to file copy.

Presumably prepared by Mr. Bohlen.
 No copy of Molotov's proposal has been found; it appears to be described in the first paragraph of the memorandum of conversation by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, September 26, p. 410.

added that in the Berlin agreement it was stated that these treaties would be submitted to the United Nations. There were two ways of doing this: either through diplomatic channels or through a conference. He personally favored the latter course, since it would dispose of the matter once and for all.

Mr. Molorov said that he had no objection to considering the Secretary's proposal, although the idea of a conference was new to him and he would have to consult his colleagues and his Government, since it was a very important question. He suggested that they dispose of the first part in regard to immediate procedure and consider the second.

THE SECRETARY said he had no objection to considering the first part first, provided it was clearly understood that the suggestion about a conference was equally a part of a single proposal.

Mr. Bevin said that his personal reaction to the proposal was not too favorable. His Government had made it clear that they interpreted the Berlin decision differently from Mr. Molotov; that in their opinion the resolution of September 11 was entirely correct. He said he did not wish to hold up the work, but he would like some time to consider Mr. Byrnes' proposal.

THE SECRETARY again pointed out that we were required under the Berlin decision to submit these treaties to the United Nations.

Mr. Molorov questioned the interest which such States as Haiti and Nicaragua would have in these peace treaties, yet they would be included among the categories of States to be invited to the conference under Mr. Byrnes' proposal.

After further discussion, it was agreed that Mr. Byrnes' proposal would be studied by the three Foreign Ministers, who would meet again after the afternoon session of the Council.

THE SECRETARY said that he wanted to have a further talk with Mr. Molotov regarding Japan. He said he wanted to make it plain that there was no desire whatsoever on the part of the United States to withhold any information regarding conditions in Japan from our Soviet friends. He said he felt that if the Soviet representative in Tokyo was not being kept informed he would take immediate steps upon his return to have this corrected.

Mr. Molorov inquired if this was the case, why the United States was opposed to the setting up of an Allied Control Council.

THE SECRETARY stated that last Saturday when Mr. Molotov had raised with him the question of an American-Soviet treaty directed against the revival of Japanese militarism, he had said he would return to Washington and talk the matter over with the President, and that he personally was favorably inclined to this idea. Because of this conversation he had been somewhat surprised when Mr. Molotov had raised at the Council the matter of establishment of a Control Commission, since Mr. Molotov knew that he was not prepared to discuss that question at this meeting, in the absence of the necessary information and military advisers. He pointed out that in our correspondence with the Japanese leading up to the surrender and in particular in our letter of August 10 58 which the Soviet Government approved, it had been stated that the Emperor would be under the orders of the Supreme Allied Commander. It was therefore a question whether or not the Emperor was bound under these terms to take orders from an Allied Commission. However, because of our interest in consulting with our Allies on these questions, we had proposed as a first measure the establishment of a Far Eastern Advisory Council, which would afford a convenient method of carrying out these consultations.

Mr. Molotov inquired in relation to the letter of August 10 whether the Japanese surrender was therefore unconditional or conditional.

THE SECRETARY said that could be a point of argument. In any event, the language of the letter of August 10 still stood. He said we were most anxious to have this Advisory Council set up and the Soviets and Chinese had agreed, but the British were still holding back. He said he was quite prepared to have it meet later on in Tokyo if that was considered desirable, but Dr. Evatt of Australia had just told him yesterday that he would prefer to have it left in Washington.

Mr. Molorov inquired why it would not be possible to have a Far Eastern Advisory Council under American presidency and an Allied Control Council also under American presidency.

se Reference is to the letter from the United States Government to the Japanese Government, a draft copy of which was transmitted to Moscow for delivery to the Soviet Foreign Commissariat in telegram of August 10, to London, printed in vol. vI, section under Japan entitled "Surrender of Japan . . .", Part I. This letter, Soviet approval of which was reported in telegram M 25260, August 11, from Moscow, ibid., was communicated to the Swiss Chargé in Washington for delivery to the Japanese Government by the Swiss Government; see note of August 11, from the Secretary of State to the Swiss Chargé, ibid.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that he thought the first step was to set up the Advisory Council and then, if they decided some further control machinery was necessary, they could so recommend to the respective Governments.

MR. Molorov said that he had noticed that President Truman had made a statement yesterday in which he had said that he had heard of no proposal for an Allied Control Commission.⁵⁹ He inquired what he should say if the correspondents should ask him if such a question had been raised here. He could keep silent, but they would all know that the question had been raised.

THE SECRETARY replied in such cases he always told the correspondents that he had no comment to make. He added that the President was quite right, since there had been no discussion among the Governments concerning the Soviet proposal. Mr. Molotov had suggested it be included in the agenda, but for reasons he had already explained, he had not found it possible to agree to this. Therefore, the subject had not been officially discussed.

Mr. Molorov observed that their representatives in Tokyo had nothing to do; they were not being kept informed, nor were they being consulted, and he therefore thought they would probably have to come home.

THE SECRETARY said he had already told Mr. Molotov that he thought this was wrong and that their representatives should be kept informed; and that he intended to speak to the President immediately upon his return.

Mr. Molorov said he had first drawn the Secretary's attention to this state of affairs four days ago.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that when Mr. Molotov had raised the question of a treaty he had promised to talk that over with the President, and Mr. Molotov had said that obviously they did not expect a quick decision from the American Government on this point.

Mr. Molorov replied he was not thinking of the treaty now—that would of course take time—but of the question of the Control Commission which he felt was very urgent and essential.

THE SECRETARY said Mr. Molotov must understand we wanted Soviet cooperation in the Far East but that it had been impossible for him to discuss the question at this meeting.

Mr. Molorov said that only the United States appeared opposed to an Allied Control Commission for Japan, and he was unable to understand why and did not know what explanation he could give to his Government.

⁵⁹ Apparently reference is to a statement made by President Truman during his news conference of September 26, 1945; for the record of this conference, see Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Harry S. Truman, 1945, p. 344.

THE SECRETARY repeated that he had merely been unable to discuss the question at this meeting.

1. Germany: Control and Administration

The Council agreed to resume on the following day their discussion of the Memorandum by the French Delegation on the Control and Administration of Germany. (C.F.M.(45) 17 60).

2. Restitution

The Council—

- (1) Agreed that the Allied Control Council should be instructed to examine urgently the question of restitution of property belonging to the United Nations or their citizens, taking into account the principles of the Declaration of 5th January, 1943.
- (2) Instructed the Deputies to consider and report to the Council before the end of the present Conference on the proposal for a time limit for the determination of property to be the subject of restitution, taking as a basis the second paragraph of the Draft Resolution proposed by the French Delegation at the Council's meeting on 26th September (C.F.M.(P) (45) 22nd Meeting, Minute 2).
- (3) Agreed that the daily communiqué on the work of the Council on 27th September should refer to the fact that a decision had been reached on the question of restitution, but should not include the text of that decision.⁶¹

3. Repatriation of French Nationals

The Council took note of the statements of M. Molotov and M. Bidault on this subject.

4. Austria: Food Supplies

The Council instructed the Deputies to consider and report to the Council before the end of the present Conference on the memorandum by the United Kingdom Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 55 62) on this subject.

1. Germany: Control and Administration (Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 23rd Meeting).64

M. Molorov asked that this question should be postponed to the following day by which time he hoped to be better prepared to discuss it.

The Council agreed to resume on the following day their discussion of the memorandum by the French Delegation on the Control and Administration of Germany (C.F.M.(45) 17 65).

2. Restitution

(Previous Reference: C.F.M.(P) (45) 22nd Meeting, Minute 2).66

- M. BIDAULT said that he had prepared a draft resolution designed to amalgamate the proposals made by the Soviet and French Delegations on the previous day. He hoped that the Council would adopt this resolution, which was as follows:—
- "1. The question of the restitution of United Nations property shall be settled on the basis of the Declaration of 5th January, 1943.
- 2. The question of the restitution of gold shall be settled on the basis of the declaration made on 22nd February, 1944 by the Secretary to [of] the Treasury of the United States, the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the United Kingdom and the People's Commissar for Finance of the U.S.S.R., to which declaration the Provisional Government of the French Republic later adhered, and also on the basis of Article 10 of Section IV of the Protocol of the Berlin Conference.

3. The Allied Control Council shall be given instructions to expedite, with the assistance of the Reparations Commission, the enforcement of restitution in the conditions mentioned above.

4. The determination of the property to be restored shall be effected at the earliest possible moment and the restitution completed, apart from reasonable exceptions, within the period of two years laid down in Article 6 of Section IV of the Protocol of the Berlin Conference."

M. Molorov said that he was grateful to M. Bidault for taking account of the Soviet proposals, and his study of the French proposals convinced him that there was much in common between them. Experience had shown, however, that it was easier to secure agreement on shorter drafts, and he was prepared to withdraw the Soviet draft and to take as a basis a shortened version of the French draft of the previous day. He proposed that the second paragraph of that draft should be omitted, and that the first paragraph should be amended to read:—

"The Allied Control Commission is requested to consider the question of the restitution of property of the United Nations or their nationals, taking account of the principles of the Declaration of 5th January, 1943".

M. BIDAULT said that this draft omitted two important elements in the French proposals; first that the work should be speeded up, and secondly, that a time-limit should be fixed.

M. Molorov said that before the Control Council were asked to accelerate their work on this question, they should first be asked to undertake it. Later on, if it were found that they were not going fast enough, they could be told to accelerate. As regards the timelimit, the Council had no data on which to judge: the period necessary for restitution should possibly be even shorter than the two years proposed; but this should be determined by the Control Council. He was, however, prepared to refer this point to the Deputies if M. Bidault was not satisfied.

Mr. Byrnes asked whether M. Bidault would be satisfied if there were added to M. Molotov's draft the words "and the determination of property to be the subject of restitution shall be settled as soon as possible".

M. BIDAULT pointed out that the Berlin Conference had fixed a timelimit of two years for reparations. The Declaration of January 5th, 1943, said that reparations should be levied on enemy property only. If, therefore, reparations deliveries where to be made within two years, it followed that the determination of the property on which reparations could be levied must also be made within that time; and consequently that the property subject to restitution must be determined within that period. He would, though reluctantly, agree to refer to the Deputies the question of the time-limit, but he thought that the Resolution which he had just put forward should be adopted at once as it included nothing apart from matters on which all Delegations had agreed. At a previous meeting the French Delegation had shown their goodwill by agreeing that reparations should be discussed before restitution though that was not the logical order. He hoped therefore that the draft resolution which he had put forward might now be accepted by the Council.

Mr. Byrnes said that he feared that failure to agree on this question might delay the execution of the reparations plan which had been approved by the Berlin Conference. The Allied Control Council had to proceed by common agreement; and, if one of the Allied representatives on that Council dissented, it would be difficult to make progress with the reparations plan on which Allied Governments had agreed. From that point of view, therefore, it would be of advantage if the Council could now agree upon the terms of a resolution on the question of restitution. He suggested that M. Bidault's point might be met if the draft resolution proposed by M. Molotov were amended so as to require the Allied Control Council to examine the question of restitution urgently.

M. Molorov said that he would accept the addition of the word "urgently".

M. Bidault pointed out that the third paragraph of his draft resolution, to which M. Molotov objected, was exactly parallel to the second paragraph of M. Molotov's own resolution on reparations which the Council had approved at their meeting on 25th September (C.F.M. (P) (45) 21st Meeting, Minute 2 ⁶⁷). The Soviet Delegation considered that work on the reparations plan should be accelerated; and, as the property on which reparations should be levied could be determined only after the question of restitution had been settled, it seemed reasonable that the Council should use the same language about accelerating the determination of restitution as they had used about the execution of the reparations plan.

M. BIDAULT said that he would be ready to accept the amended wording proposed by Mr. Byrnes if it were made clear that the time-limit already fixed for the reparations plan should also be kept in respect of restitution.

M. Molotov proposed that the Council should at once adopt his draft resolution, with the amendment proposed by Mr. Byrnes; and should further agree to refer to the Deputies the second paragraph of the draft resolution put forward by the French Delegation on the previous day.

⁶⁷ September 25, p. 370.

M. BIDAULT said that he would agree to this proposal if the Deputies were instructed to report, on the question referred to them, before the end of the present Conference.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State

[London,] September 27, 1945—6:15 p.m.

Participants:

The Secretary Mr. Molotov Mr. Bevin
Mr. Dunn Mr. Golunski Sir Alexander Cadogan
Mr. Bohlen Mr. Pavlov Sir Archibald Clark Kerr
Mr. McAfee

Mr. Molotov said he had some new proposals to make concerning the procedural questions. These proposals were of a preliminary nature, and he could not give a final decision on them until tomorrow. He said they related to the second part of Mr. Byrnes' proposal of yesterday ⁶⁹ in regard to summoning the conferences. By these proposals he was suggesting that the various peace treaties be considered in separate categories, i.e. one procedure for Italy, another for Rumania, Hungary, and Bulgaria, and a third for Finland. He said he must add in regard to Italy that the Soviet Delegation could not guarantee that they would be ready during 1945 for the proposed conference. (Copies of Mr. Molotov's three proposals attached.) Under Mr. Molotov's proposals conferences would be held in Moscow for the Finnish, and for the Bulgarian, Rumanian, and Hungarian treaties, and in London for the Italian treaty.

⁶⁹ Reference here presumably is to the informal proposal by the Secretary of State, September 26, p. 383.

Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin said that they would have to have some time to study these new proposals.

Mr. Bevin asked why Mr. Molotov thought the Soviet Government would not be ready for a conference on the Italian treaty during this year.

Mr. Molorov replied that if the United States could agree to the setting up of an allied control council for Japan, it would be easier for the Soviet Government to be ready for the Italian treaty. He said all the other nations were for the setting up of a control council, but the United States alone was against it.

THE SECRETARY asked what connection there was in any way between the question of Japan and the Italian treaty.

Mr. Molotov replied that there were some questions which the United States wished to postpone, and there were others which the Soviet Delegation wished to postpone.

THE SECRETARY pointed out he had already told Mr. Molotov many times that he was prepared to take up this matter of a control council with the President when he returned to the United States.

Mr. Bevin then inquired whether Mr. Molotov's proposals meant that he would not be inclined to continue the work of the Council on the basis of the September 11th decision.

Mr. Molorov said this was correct, since the September 11th decision provided no basis, and he could not be a party to the violation of the Berlin Agreement.

Mr. Byrnes inquired what Mr. Molotov had in mind with regard to Italy—what would he consider as "chiefly interested states".

Mr. Molorov said preliminarily he would consider that it meant the three great powers, France, Yugoslavia, Greece, Ethiopia, Albania, the British Dominions, Poland, White Russia, and the Ukraine.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that the Berlin decision did not specify exactly what nations were to be regarded as "chiefly interested".

Mr. Molorov agreed that it was up to the three of them to decide that.

Mr. Bevin inquired if Poland was to be regarded as interested in the Italian treaty, what about France in the Balkan treaty?

Mr. Molorov said the Soviet Government could not accept France's interest.

Mr. Bevin pointed out it would be difficult to explain the participation of Poland in the Italian treaty while excluding France from the Balkans.

Mr. Molorov said that the list of countries would be discussed. Mr. Molotov suggested that they take the question up separately and begin with those who should be invited under his proposal to the conference on the Italian treaty.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that under the Berlin decision we were bound to submit these treaties to all the United Nations, and that his proposal had been designed to simplify the process of submission. He said that it was true that there was some South American countries that had only a very limited interest, but Brazil, for example, had had two divisions on the line in Italy for more than a year.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether it would not be possible to add some language in regard to the fact that these conferences were held without prejudice to the rights of other United Nations to examine these peace treaties before final signature.

Mr. Molotov replied that he did not take the Berlin decision to mean that the treaties would be submitted to all the United Nations, for example, the Soviet Government would never have any dealings with the present Argentine Government and would not come within a stone's throw of them. He also said he did not see what Honduras and Haiti had to do with the matter.

THE SECRETARY replied that he agreed with Mr. Molotov in regard to the Argentine, and felt that their admission to San Francisco was more than enough for them. He said one way out was to regard the term "United Nations" as meaning only those who had signed the Declaration of January 1, 1942. This would exclude Argentina.

The meeting broke up with the understanding that the various proposals would be studied further, and they would meet again tomorrow.

Proposal of the Soviet Delegation

The Council in the person of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain and the U.S.S.R. will convoke a conference in accordance with the provisions of section II 4(d) of the Berlin Agreement with a view to the consideration of a peace treaty with Finland. The conference will consist of the above-mentioned members of the Council together with other states chiefly interested in this treaty. The conference will be held in Moscow and will begin its work as soon as the Deputies have finished the preparation of the peace treaty if possible during 1945. As a basis for its work it will take the reports of the Deputies with any modifications agreed on by the governments of the Deputies in question.

2. Germany: Control and Administration

The Council decided that the questions raised by the memorandum of the French Delegation of 14th September, 1945, on the control and administration of Germany ⁷¹ should, without delay, be the subject of preliminary study through the diplomatic channel. The problem would then be submitted for consideration by the Council of Foreign Ministers with a view to decisions being taken.

Mr. Bidault in the Chair

BIDAULT: The meeting is open. I shall ask the chairman of the meeting of the Deputies to give us an account of their meeting this morning.⁷³

DUNN: In accordance with the directive of the Council of Foreign Ministers, the Deputies this morning worked out a draft of a telegram to Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia. The Deputies recommend the following telegram:

(reads telegram attached 74)

 $^{^{70}}$ September 28, 1945, not printed. The agreed text of the telegram read as follows:

[&]quot;The Council of Foreign Ministers has decided to clarify through the Allied Control Commissions in Hungary, Roumania and Bulgaria and also with the Governments of Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia whether there are in the above listed countries surpluses of foodstuffs which could be used for supplying Austria.

[&]quot;Therefore, by instruction of the Council of Foreign Ministers, I request you to inform me whether country can set aside foodstuffs for supplying Austria. In case there are such surpluses, the Council of Foreign Ministers would like to learn in what quantities they can be set aside for Austria now and from the proceeds of the next harvest. The Council requests that the information in respect to the present surplus be made available within one month, and as to the next harvest, within three months." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Documents)

⁷² According to the British Record of this meeting (not printed) the participants were as follows: U.K.—Mr. Bevin, Sir R. I. Campbell, Sir A. Clark Kerr, and Mr. A. Duff Cooper; U.S.A.—Mr. Byrnes, Mr. J. Dunn, Mr. B. V. Cohen, Mr. J. F. Dulles, and Mr. C. E. Bohlen; U.S.S.R.—M. Molotov, M. F. T. Gusev, M. K. V. Novikov, M. S. A. Golunski, and M. V. N. Pavlov; France—M. Bidault (Chairman), M. Couve de Murville, General Catroux, M. Alphand, and M. Fouques Duparc; China—Dr. Wang Shih-Chieh, Dr. Wellington Koo, Dr. Victor Hoo, Dr. Hollington Tong, and Mr. Yang Yun Chu. (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes)

⁷³ The Deputies met at 10 a. m., September 28, 1945, for their 4th meeting; the minutes of the meeting are not printed.

⁷⁴ Draft telegram as prepared by Deputies not attached to these minutes. For the version of the telegram agreed to at this meeting, see footnote 70, above. The sole modification in the Deputies' draft is shown below.

DUNN: (to interpreter translating into French) You put in some extra words.

(interpreter corrected his translation)

That is the recommended telegram. The Deputies recommend that the information received be transmitted to the Allied Commission in Austria as soon as possible by the Secretariat.

I wish to report also that there remains for the Deputies to consider in accordance with the directives of the Council of Foreign Ministers the following items:

1. A telegram of instruction to the Allied Commission in Vienna in regard to the food situation in Austria.

2. Interim arrangement with regard to food for Austria.

3. The subject of restitution and of the report.

Molorov: The Soviet Delegation has an amendment to suggest. The last sentence of the last paragraph of the telegram should be amended as follows:

"The Council requests that the information be made available . . ."

BIDAULT: The text will be amended accordingly. Any further remarks on the report made on this morning's meeting? The rapporteur's conclusions are, therefore, adopted.

I think that the Council now will agree to take up point 8 on the agenda regarding the control and administration of Germany. We have considered this matter and have decided to support the Soviet proposal to go through diplomatic channels.

Bevin: It is a technical and difficult subject. If the Council would agree to that, I am sure that we should make a great deal of progress.

BIDAULT: What is the opinion of the other Delegations? I have given my opinion.

Molotov: I agree with Mr. Bevin.

BYRNES: The United States Delegation was prepared to report that the French proposal would be submitted to the Deputies, but we could equally go along that the matter be submitted through diplomatic channels.

Wang: The Chinese Delegation shares fully the view of the French Delegation in regard to the danger of possible revival of German aggression. The question of setting up the central government is one that requires much information and careful consideration. We have no objection to this being taken up through diplomatic channels. We have no objection that the decision of the Potsdam Conference to which the memorandum refers should be studied by the Deputies and form the subject of a report. We also agree with the French Delegation that the Rhineland and Westphalia should be prevented again from becoming an arsenal for German aggression in Europe. This is a matter which concerns not only France and Europe, but the world as a whole. Unless the population of the Rhineland expresses a desire to be separated from Germany we should leave aside the question of setting up a separate regime in that area. Our task for the moment is to ensure the complete disarmament of Germany industrially and militarily. Let me make a personal observation. Peace and security in Europe not only in Europe but in the whole world depends more upon solidarity and cooperation than upon measures that we could expect to apply to Germany. With solidarity, peace can be guaranteed.

Dulles: I don't want it to appear that because we differ as to the methods that we are differing as to substance. The problem raised by the French memorandum goes to the heart of the question of peace in Europe. The solution of the problem of the Ruhr and Rhineland in terms of the ethnic problem, political problem and economic problem is one which must be dealt with seriously and with a solid study. If the matter were referred to the Deputies, a study presumably would be made and it would be a joint study. That would seem to be the preferable decision. But that is not the exclusive procedure because if a joint study was not made presumably the French, who have taken the initiative of the French memorandum, would want to make a study elaborating somewhat their ideas, then submit that for the study of the other powers represented. But in any event, such a study should be made and should be made promptly, and if it is decided to refer the matter to diplomatic treatment, that, in our opinion, does not mean that we are postponing the serious and prompt study of this problem.

BIDAULT: Any further remarks aside from those which I am going to make myself?

Bevin: I want to say that I have expressed my views about the Ruhr. I have expressed my views about it at the meeting we had the other day. I don't think it is necessary to repeat myself.

BIDAULT: I should like to make first two preliminary remarks, then I shall express the feeling of the French Delegation on the formulas that were suggested for the settlement of the question.

In his statement which we have all appreciated, the Delegate of China expressed the essential reason of our hope in the future of peace in the world; that of the co-operation between great powers represented here and also the other United Nations. I should like to associate myself with these sentiments, and we are all agreed that it is an absolutely essential decision, but this never prevented anybody from also using the same means and in other parts of the world and it did not appear by great powers and the other United Nations was not inconsistent with definite measures. With us that should be the case in an area that has always been the breeding place of strife and where cooperation should be better found by France than by Germany. 75 My second remark is this. The French Delegation agrees with the statement made by the representative of the United States when he said first that the German problem is very important and this problem in connection with the peace in Europe and in the world deserves a careful study. France has made that study and it will contribute to its being communicated to the powers represented here. The second point made by the United States representative was to stress the necessity of acting promptly and what is important for us is not to determine whether to send it to the Deputies or the Ambassadors. What is important is that such a serious problem not only for France but for the whole world should be settled and it is an urgent matter. The war has been over for several months in Europe. A few decisions have been taken but no decision has been taken with France which was in the front of aggression on the part of Germany. It is therefore urgent that we should have common decisions to which France should be associated and I shall explain later that nothing should be done without our agreement. We are now confronted with a problem. How shall we reach properly and usefully if possible a conclusion in the matter raised by the French Delegation, namely, the western zones of Germany and a general regime. I shall speak frankly. If this is only done by the normal diplomatic channels, I am afraid the question will not be entirely satisfactory. At least it can only be considered as a preliminary phase in any case. It has been referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers, and, as I have already said, before the general peace settlement, will have to come before the whole of the United Nations. If it is insisted here the French Delegation agree to a preliminary approach the matter will be carried out through the diplomatic channels, but in my opinion it is essential that the final protocol will mention that the fact was referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers, then to the whole of the United Nations. It should be anomalous not to mention the German problem. It is more complicated, it is more serious and it would not be normal that the Council of Foreign Ministers should only have to deal with questions that are not too difficult. I shall now conclude and sum-

To According to the British record of this meeting (not printed) Bidault commented as follows on Wang's statement: "M. Bidault agreed that the only hope for future peace lay in the co-operation of the Powers represented at the Council and indeed of all the United Nations. This, however, was not inconsistent with the adoption of definite measures of control in particular cases, and the French Delegation were anxious that such measures should be adopted in these territories, which had been for generations the breeding ground of aggression in Europe." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes)

marize my point of view. If finally the Council prefers, the French Delegation agrees that this should be dealt with through diplomatic channels on one condition, namely, that the final protocol will refer to the common will of the powers represented here to settle this problem and that this will be a preliminary work and that settlement be made through diplomatic channels as soon as possible before a new session of the Conference of Foreign Ministers. The French Delegation could not accept that such an important problem as the German problem should not be mentioned in the protocol of our first session. Any other remarks? I understand that the Council prefers the diplomatic channels, in which case I shall express my opinion by proposing a resolution. This is the text of the French resolution:

"The questions raised in the memorandum of the French Delegation dated September 14, 1945 regarding the control and administration of Germany will without any delay be the subject of preliminary study through the diplomatic channels. The problem will be submitted to the examination of the Council of Foreign Ministers with a view to decisions to be taken."

Byrnes: I would like to see it.

BIDAULT: The new resolution, which is in French, will be circulated for the members to examine.

Byrnes: I agree.

Molorov: I suggest we accept the original proposal made by Mr. Bevin.

Bevin: This only amplifies it. It was originally proposed that it go to the Deputies. Now it is proposed to go first through diplomatic channels.

Molorov: My suggestion is that we first should decide how we are going to settle this question, whether through diplomatic channels or not, then the question itself.

BIDAULT: Am I to understand that it has been suggested that the question should be treated by solely diplomatic channels and this is to have been accepted? What the French Delegation wants is that it should be mentioned in the protocol and that furthermore after studying through the diplomatic channels the question should come back to the Council of Foreign Ministers. Frankly, the French Delegation have no particular liking for the diplomatic channels but since my colleagues thought it should also go through diplomatic channels appear to be an excellent solution, we agreed, but it seemed that it should not be only and exclusively done through the diplomatic channels and that our Council will take up the matter again after the preliminary work has been carried out.

Molotov: No objection.

BIDAULT: Do you want me to read that text again? BYRNES: I have agreed on it. You are too honest.

BIDAULT: When one is chairman, one should be overly honest. BEVIN: When one is not chairman, one must be overly careful.

BIDAULT: I think that has been settled in a manner not exactly in accordance with the wishes of the French Delegation. Now, we have to look over any other points, which in the preceding items of the agenda have not been examined or settled yet.

Molorov: I suggested that our Deputies should find out what points remain open in the agenda so as to avoid any omission.

(that was agreed)

BIDAULT: I think this is an excellent suggestion. It is a good thing that our Deputies soon meet and draw up a list of questions still open so that no part will be omitted, and there are several possible solutions. We might decide either that there will be a Deputies' meeting early in the afternoon, then a full meeting of the Council, or if we assume that their work will be fairly long, we might only decide on a meeting of our Deputies. I suggest three o'clock.

Molotov: Four o'clock for the Deputies.

Byrnes: I wonder if the Deputies could meet at three o'clock and then we could meet at five.

Molotov: No objection.

BIDAULT: That would give them two hours to work on it. The chairman of the Deputies' meeting of this morning has pointed out to us that there was a whole series with which the Deputies still have to deal. Will they defer these or will they only examine the question still open on our agenda?

BYRNES: The suggestion made by Mr. Molotov was that the Deputies meet for the Deputies to determine what questions were left to decide and to report back to the Council so that they could work on those matters. That was to facilitate the work of the conference and there should be immediate accord on that. Then the Council can go on.

Bevin: I thought that they might take up Austria and the other points at the same time.

BYRNES: There is no limit on their activities. If they can settle them, we would be very happy.

Bevin: I fear that we have given them quite [a] task. I suggest we meet at seven tonight.

(The final decision was that the Deputies would meet at three this afternoon and again at ten o'clock tomorrow morning and that the Council would meet at five today.)

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State

[London,] September 28, 1945—4 p. m.

Participants:

The Secretary Mr. Molotov Mr. Bevin
Mr. Dunn Mr. Golunski Sir Alexander Cadogan
Ambassador Harriman Mr. Pavlov Sir Archibald Clark Kerr

Mr. Bohlen Mr. McAfee

The Secretary said that he had been going over the various proposals in regard to procedure, and he had a new suggestion which he hoped Mr. Molotov would consider very seriously. He would see that the first paragraph was the acceptance of his position in regard to the preparation of the treaties, and in the second paragraph he had made some amendments to his original proposals so that now there would be one conference for all these peace treaties, to which, in addition to the five members of the Council, all European states members of the United Nations would be invited, and non-European members of the United Nations who had contributed appreciable military contingents in the war against the European Axis. (Copy attached).

He went on to say that he realized that Mr. Molotov would not like to have a large number of states with no particular interest in these treaties participate in this conference, and that was why he was proposing the present formula which would eliminate non-European states which had not been active belligerents. He said he thought the present formula was a sensible one, and would commend itself to the world since it would follow that, while we were narrowing the basis of preparation in deference to Mr. Molotov's position, we were at the same time widening participation for the purpose of the conference, and show the world that we did not intend to exclude any nation, no matter how small, if it had a legitimate interest in these treaties.

Mr. Molotov said he had no authority to depart from the Berlin decision, and that he would request permission to report this proposal to Moscow on his return.

THE SECRETARY asked in what manner his proposal differed from the Berlin decision.

Mr. Molotov said he would have to study the document and consult with his colleagues before he replied.

Mr. Bevin remarked that his Government still considered that the September 11th decision was right, if the Berlin decision as a whole was taken.

Mr. Molorov disagreed. That, he said, would be up to the three of them to decide what questions [nations?] should be regarded as chiefly interested.

Mr. Molotov and Mr. Bevin agreed.

Mr. Molorov inquired how a European country which had not declared war against the satellite countries in question could participate in the drawing up and conclusion of the peace treaty.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that if Poland, who had not declared war against Italy, was regarded as interested, how could they exclude other European countries.

Mr. Molorov said he would have doubts as to whether Poland would have any rights to participate in peace treaties with Hungary, Bulgaria, Rumania, and Finland, but in Italy it was different since Polish divisions had fought there.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that the Berlin decision merely spoke of chiefly interested states and said nothing about declarations of war.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that France, for example, had only declared war on Germany, and nevertheless had fought through the Free French in many theatres of the war.

Mr. Molotov said he did not wish to challenge France's role in the war. In some ways France helped Germany, in other ways they helped the Allies.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that some countries, for example, Poland, which were overrun at the beginning of the war were not in a position to declare war, and that France had been in this category.

Mr. Bevin said his first objection to Mr. Molotov's proposals were that it broke up the Council by suggesting different conferences in London and in Moscow.

Mr. Molotov said amendments could be added, and he would not insist on Moscow, although he did not see why it was unsuitable.

Mr. Bevin replied that he felt that the Soviet language in naming specific members of the Council as those to convoke the conferences broke up the sense of the Council.

Mr. Molorov said he could not agree, since this was in accordance with the correct interpretation of the Berlin decision.

Mr. Bevin then proposed that there be eliminated from Mr. Molotov's draft all mention of the members of the Council, and merely say "the Council shall call a conference in London on such and such a date for consideration of a peace treaty with Italy to consist of the following countries". He added that the actual names of the countries could be included.

Mr. Molotov said that there might be something in Mr. Bevin's suggestion, and then the question would be as to who would be invited—would China, who had not declared war on Italy, be invited? He said he saw no reason.

Mr. Bevin replied that that was a question for them to decide—that under his formula the Council would only be the instrument to call the conference. After that it would be a conference.

THE SECRETARY said he agreed with Mr. Bevin that it would be a mistake to give the appearance that our three countries were taking everything into their own hands and convoking conferences without reference to the other members.

Mr. Molotov said he felt he could accept Mr. Bevin's proposal if Mr. Byrnes was agreeable.

THE SECRETARY said that he would have to think it over. He added he felt that they had met Mr. Molotov's desires in the first paragraph, that he was chiefly anxious to have some formula for the second which would show that we were not trying to keep matters in our own hands, but wanted to bring in any countries with a legitimate interest.

Mr. Molorov then said how would we propose a conference for Rumania if we did not talk with the present government.

THE SECRETARY said he had already told Mr. Molotov of our position, and that he was convinced that by the time the treaties were ready, the Soviet, American, and British Governments would have found some way out of the difficulty. After all, they had been confronted with an equally difficult problem in Poland, although he realized the circumstances were different, yet they had found a solution.

Mr. Molorov said he could not agree on this question, and that without the government of Bulgaria as well, the decisions of the Council would be utterly meaningless. Why could not the American and British Governments do in regard to Rumania and Bulgaria what they had done in regard to Hungary? 76

THE SECRETARY said this was a good instance in which we had done what we said we were going to do. The President at Potsdam had announced that he would consider in each individual case the question of recognition. We had looked into the matter of Hungary, and had found on the basis of our information that it was possible to recognize the Government. He repeated that he thought we could find some way to get out of this difficulty.

Mr. Molotov said, why not agree to recognize these governments after their elections which would be held sometime this fall.

Mr. Bevin inquired on what basis these elections would be held. Mr. Molotov replied, democratic basis, better than that of Greece, and even Italy. He said in Finland satisfactory elections had been held without any outside interference. He said in regard to Rumania and Bulgaria the same would be the case if no one interfered from without.

⁷⁶ Presumably reference is to the steps taken by the United States to establish diplomatic relations with Hungary, news of which had reached the newspapers by September 26. For documentation on this subject, see vol. IV, pp. 798 ff.

THE SECRETARY said the other day that Mr. Molotov had inquired about two Rumanian political figures, but he had told him that the United States was not interested in any particular person or party. He wondered, however, if Mr. Molotov did not have a list of Rumanian political figures not included in the present government. Such a list might give them a basis to start from.

Mr. Molorov said that he had no list, and that he did not consider that that was his business.

THE SECRETARY said he understood this, but nevertheless in the case of Poland we had been successful in considering lists.

Mr. Bevin then proposed that three leading ambassadors who had not been connected with these countries might go there to look into the situation and report to their Governments.

Mr. Molorov said it was not a question for ambassadors, but for governments.

The Secretary said he favored Mr. Bevin's suggestion because, after all, each government could only rely on the reports of its representatives, and that sometimes people who had stayed too long in a spot developed personal sympathies to one side or another, and that Mr. Bevin's suggestion would afford an opportunity of clarifying that information and possibly of uncovering new facts which would permit some decision.

Mr. Molorov said he thought Mr. Byrnes was a disinterested person, and that he could give his government good advice. He repeated that without some solution of this question, the decision of the Council would have no meaning.

It was agreed that they would study the latest proposals on procedure.

Proposal by the Secretary of State

[London, September 28, 1945.]

Notwithstanding the decision of the Council of Foreign Ministers regarding the participation of members of the Council, adopted September 11, in the drawing up by the Council of treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland, only members of the Council who are, or under the Berlin Agreement are deemed to be, signatory of surrender terms, will participate, unless the Council takes a further decision under the Berlin agreement to invite other members to participate on questions directly concerning them.

The Council will convoke a Conference under the provisions of II, 4 (ii) of the Berlin Agreement for the purpose of considering treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland. The Conference will consist of the five members of the Council, which also constituted the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, together with all European members of the United Nations and all non-European members of the United Nations which supplied substantial military contingents against European members of the The Conference will be held in London and will begin its proceedings not later than 1945. It will take as the bases for its discussion reports of the Deputies with any modifications agreed upon by the governments of the Deputies in question.

1. Austria: Food Supplies

The Council approved the despatch of telegrams by the Governments of the United Kingdom, United States, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and France to their representatives on the Allied Council in Vienna instructing them to examine long-term supply arrangements for Austria in the light of the data received from the Control Commissions in Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and the Governments of Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia as requested in the telegram already approved by the Council (C.F.M.(45) 65 78).

For text of the telegram as agreed upon by the Council of Foreign Ministers, see the first message quoted in telegram 10181, Delsec 86, from London, October 1, vol. III, p. 620.

Molorov: May we begin? Any suggestions in regards the agenda? We must hear the Deputies.

Campbell: The Deputies met this morning at 10 o'clock to continue the discussion of food supplies for Austria and the question of restitution. On the question of food supplies they agreed to the text of a telegram from the British, the American, French and Soviet Governments to their representatives on the Allied Commission in Vienna. This telegram informed the Allied representatives on the Allied Commissions in Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria, and to the governments of Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. The telegram inquired whether in the above countries supplies of foodstuff were available which could be used to supply Austria. With the permission of the Council I will read the text of the telegram. "The following communication has been sent to the Allied Control Commission in Bulgaria, Rumania, and Hungary, and to the governments of Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia.["]

Molorov: We all have the draft. We can dispense with reading it. I think everybody is familiar with it. Any objection to this text? (There was no objection). The proposal of the Deputies is accepted.

CAMPBELL: Now, the further question of the scale of calories was discussed and on this matter no agreement was reached, and the matter was deferred by the Deputies for further discussion among them. Reference was also made to the necessity to find means of dealing with the immediate food shortage in Austria. This was also referred for further discussion by the Deputies.

On restitution the discussion was begun on the basis of the second paragraph of the French proposal. No conclusion was reached on this matter which was also referred to the next meeting of the Deputies. The Deputies expressly desire to receive instructions from the Council in regard to their next meeting.

Molorov: Any observations on this? Since it is clear that nothing remains for us to do now could we agree as to the date when we should wind up the work of the Council? And, accordingly the work of the Deputies will also be done as it is linked up with the work of the Council.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I wondered if we could not ascertain what progress is being made by the protocol committee. The Council would take that matter up for consideration with the communiqué committee because not until we have an opportunity to know the situation as to those two committees will it be possible for us to set a time for adjournment.

Molotov: Certainly these questions are not so complicated as to make it impossible for us to envisage the date—the question of the communiqué and the protocol.

Bevin: I take it there is no question of the protocol and communiqué being completed? That is to say we are going to have a protocol and we are going to have a communiqué, are we not?

Molotov: I hope that we shall be able to finish both the protocol and the communiqué today.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I have just a memorandum here from the United States representative on the Committee and, of course, there are a number of matters that are not agreed to. We might well take it up and see if we can agree to it and make some progress.

Molorov: Any objection to our passing on to the discussion of the protocol? No objection? Shall we turn to it?

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, the memorandum that I have sets forth the items that have not been agreed to by the Committee. It is paper No. 66,⁸³ and I think we can save time if we would pick up the matters which the Committee has not been able to agree upon and see if we could give them instructions.

Molotov: I have not got that memorandum. Nevertheless I am prepared to discuss and I hope we will be able to agree.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, just a minute. I want to talk to our representative on the Committee.

Molotov: So do I.

BIDAULT: I am quite willing that matter be taken up.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, the first item—I want to ask if you have before you a copy of the protocol that has been agreed upon up to this date. I am told that the first item is a question raised by the French Delegation and refers to the agenda, and I suggest, therefore, that the French state what their case is.

Molotov: I do not know that there is any divergent view on this question. I think that we could begin with protocol number one ⁸⁴ and see if there are any amendments and then take up the following protocols in their order.

1. Record of Decisions of the Council

The Council completed their consideration of the Daily Records of Decisions of the first 26 Meetings of the Council. These Records were approved, with amendments.

2. Procedure for Preparation of Peace Treaties

The Council considered proposals submitted by M. Molotov and Mr. Byrnes regarding the procedure to be followed in the preparation of the Peace Treaties.

The Council agreed to resume their discussion of these questions at their next Meeting.

3. Protocol and Communiqué

The Council instructed the Protocol Committee and the Press Communiqué Committee to prepare, for consideration at their next meeting, drafts of a final Protocol and Communiqué relating to the work of the First Plenary Conference of the Council.

United States Delegation Minutes of the Twenty-Eighth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 29, 1945, 3 p. m. s5

Mr. Wang in the Chair

Wang: The meeting is open. We will now discuss Article 16.

Molorov: I should like to ask that the following proposal of the Soviet Union should be discussed. I am going to read out the draft proposal: "Notwithstanding the decision of the Council of Ministers regarding the participation of the members of the Council adopted on September 11 in the drawing up by the Council of peace treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland, only members of the Council who are or were under the Berlin Agreement deemed to be signatories to the surrender terms will participate unless and until the Council takes affirmative action under the Berlin Agreement in order to invite the participation of other members or governments directly concerned in them". 86 I shall not dwell at length on the reasons for these proposals as I have already talked with each of the Foreign Ministers on this subject and we, all of us, know well that this proposal of the Soviet Delegation is prompted by the desire to place all the Foreign Ministers on equal footing on the questions which they discuss and decide, and on the other hand by the desire to give effect to the reservation contained in the Berlin decision. The proposal of the Soviet Delegation is prompted only by their desire to abide by the Berlin decision.

Bevin: I suggest that this be adjourned and we finish the proto-col----

Wang: I think we proceed to the unfinished part of the protocol——. Molorov: With respect to the proposal made by the Soviet Delegation, it is prompted by the fact that we are now discussing the records of our meeting and in one of them a decision is recorded which we challenge and which we suggest could be canceled. It is well known that the records of the meeting of September 11 contain a decision which the Soviet Delegation proposes should be changed and in view of the fact that we are now discussing the records we propose that we should settle it.

Bevin: The only discussion in the record is what we have agreed already.

Molotov: I want to distribute now the text of the proposal that I have now read and suggest that we adjourn for ten minutes in order to give ourselves the opportunity of familiarizing ourselves with it.

 $^{^{\}rm ss}$ For the list of participants at this meeting, see Agreed Record of Decisions of the 28th meeting, supra.

⁸⁶ For the full text of the Soviet proposal as circulated to the Council, see C.F.M. (45) 83, September 30, p. 474.

Bevin: I object—I object to this proposal. We were discussing the protocol before lunch and I object to this practice of jumping in with another proposal before we have completed the part we were on. I am quite willing to consider anything any delegation puts before us but when we are in the middle of considering another subject these things just waste time. I think it is a wrong attitude and I ask Mr. Molotov to be as fair to us as we have been to him. Every time we try to go on with our agenda or to leave a thing behind, every other delegation has agreed to it, and no objection. I do think an attempt to force us into this at this time is a wrong thing.

Wang: As the Chairman, I think Mr. Bevin's suggestion is to finish the unfinished part of the proposal on the agenda and proceed to finish the other matter.

Molotov: I agree with the proposal made by the Chairman and Mr. Bevin and I make the following amendment to my proposal: I suggest we complete the examination of the records beginning with the twentieth meeting and proceeding further on and then when we have come to examine the records of the fifteenth [fifth?] and sixteenth meetings, which have not been agreed upon, I suggest we examine the first meeting, then coming to the fifth meeting and meeting sixteen.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I only want to offer a suggestion. Should we not continue to go through this record. If we reach any point that Mr. Molotov wishes to pass over for the time being, we will pass it, then go on through to dispose of the point. If Mr. Molotov wishes to go back and consider No. 1, No. 5 or No. 16, or whatever, it can be done.

Molorov: The Soviet Delegation does not object to continuing examination of the points which we have not yet completed, but the Soviet Delegation asks to bear in mind the fact that the Soviet Delegation will not be able to sign the record unless the question of changing one of the points recorded in the protocol in No. 1 has been considered.

[Here follows a discussion, begun at the previous meeting, of the records of decisions of the first 26 meetings of the Council as set forth in C.F.M.(45) 66, September 29, page 456. The Council amended and approved the Records of Decisions of the 20th Meeting, September 25, the 22nd Meeting, September 26, the 5th Meeting, September 15, and the 16th Meeting, September 21. For the texts of these Records of Decisions, see pages 359, 384, 186 and 298, respectively. Amendments agreed upon by the Council are indicated in annotations to the texts of the Records.]

Wang: Now we have finished the protocol. There are reservations on the protocol. The Soviet Delegation has asked for a discussion of the record of the first meeting.87

Molotov: Now at last the time of the record of the first meeting has come.

Bevin: I take it that Mr. Molotov agreed that the document of the record of the first meeting was correct as to what was done. What we are asked to discuss now is not the first day's record of the protocol but as to whether we will make a new decision for our future procedure.

Molorov: In other words we made a mistake and we want to put it right. That is the only thing that is required. As for myself, I am ready to admit that mistake. We have violated a decision of the Berlin Conference and we have no authority to do this as far as I am concerned.

BEVIN: I want to be quite clear that this protocol actually goes to the governments exactly as it is up to this point.

Molotov: I hope that the English text of the proposal as well as the Russian text of the proposal has already been circulated to my colleagues.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to offer an amendment to the proposal of Mr. Molotov, adding to the second paragraph the following: I asked that it be distributed. The Council will convoke a conference under the provision of II 4 (ii) of the Berlin Agreement for the purpose of considering a treaty of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland consisting of the five members of the Council which also constitute the five (continues reading text 88).

Molotov: May I suggest-Mr. Byrnes has made a new proposal which will take some time to study. I appreciate that his proposal is worthy of the closest attention. His proposal is intended to include our work and its results, but I must say it is a new proposal that we have received and the Soviet Delegation is unable to give a reply without first studying it. And therefore the Soviet Delegation proposes that we first discuss the proposal submitted by the Soviet Delegation and then fix the date when we shall discuss the other proposal.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered has two paragraphs—the first one is the amendment, a copy of which I gave Mr. Molotov yesterday.89 The only new thing is the last 4 lines and those 4 lines say only this: "After full hearing and discussion by ⁸⁷ Record of Decisions of the first meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, September 11, annex 1 to C.F.M. (45) 66, September 29, p. 458.

⁸⁸ For the full text of the United States proposal, see C.F.M. (45) 84, Septem-the invited states the final approval of the terms of the treaties of peace will be made by those of the invited states which were at war with the enemy states in question." I asked that it be considered as an amendment; it would be impossible for me to consider the first proposal unless the second one is considered at the same time. Therefore, I suggest that the first paragraph be set for consideration on the same day that the second paragraph is set for consideration. Because there is a change I could not insist that Mr. Molotov consider it today, but we can fix some day next week when the two can be considered together.

Molorov: The Soviet Delegation must state that Mr. Byrnes has raised new questions in his so-called amendment and the Soviet Delegation is unable to reply without communicating with its Government.

BYRNES: The whole thing is a new question. If Mr. Molotov wants to communicate with his Government and if Mr. Molotov wants time to consider, it is entirely agreeable to me. I have only said that I want the two considered at the same time. They are the same proposal.

Molorov: It will be hardly possible to dispose of the question without my reporting personally to the Government.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be entirely proper if we adjourn until Mr. Molotov can communicate with his Government, then we can take the question up.

BIDAULT: The French Delegation desires to make a declaration: The French Delegation maintains and adheres to the procedure adopted in common at the Council of Foreign Ministers on the 11th of September, a procedure which can only be modified by the unanimity of the members of the Council. The French Delegation cannot express its opinion on any modification of an agreement reached without referring to its Government. It desires only to draw the attention of the members of the Council to the extreme seriousness and gravity of the question raised at the end of the session and to the consequences of a settlement on the continuation of our work. That is all.

Wang: Both of these proposals are new. The Chinese Delegation cannot agree to any change in the procedure adopted without consulting its Government.

Molotov: I am unable to express my observation on Mr. Byrnes' proposal as a whole. I have already stated that I can do so only after my personally reporting to my Government on the subject, but I have a preliminary observation to make now. I consider that the proposal of Mr. Byrnes runs counter to the Berlin decision and it is based on the procedure of discussion of peace treaties with Italy, Bulgaria, Rumania, Hungary, and Finland different from that adopted in the Berlin decision. In as much as this proposal conflicts with the Berlin decision the Soviet Delegation cannot agree to accept it for consideration.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, the proposal I recently submitted does not conflict with any provision of the Berlin agreement. The Berlin agreement provides that the Council may convoke a formal conference of the states chiefly interested in seeking a solution of the particular problem. The only question, therefore, that could be raised at all is whether or not states invited would be states chiefly interested in seeking a solution of the particular problem. The problem presented is the making of a peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland, and I think all will agree that the provision that the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council participate is within the language in the intent of the Berlin agreement. The five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council are charged with maintaining peace in the world and certainly they are chiefly interested in any peace settlement which they must hereafter protect. And another group invited to this conference would be European members of the United Nations and certainly the states of Europe that are members of the United Nations are interested in any settlement growing out of the second war because two world wars have proven to them that they are interested whenever a war starts in Eu-The third group are all non-European members of the United Nations which have supplied substantial military contingents against the European members of the Axis. I have no doubt in my mind that the Heads of Government who arrived at the Berlin agreement would say that the nations outside of Europe that gave up men to fight and die are interested in any settlement in Europe. And what do we offer them? Nothing more than the opportunity to come and be present at the final discussion with reference to a peace treaty. For it provides in the last paragraph that after hearing a discussion by the invited states the final approval of the terms of the treaties of peace will be made by those of the invited countries who were at war with the enemy states in question. No government will advocate that a settlement can be made between an enemy state and a United Nation and not submit the treaty to the states that were at war. What does the Berlin agreement say? It says the important task of this Council is to draw up what? To draw up with a view to their submission to the United Nations treaties of peace with Italy and these other governments. That is what the Heads of Government said the Council should do to draw up treaties that could be submitted to the United Nations. That is all that my amendment seeks to do—to convoke a conference so that in accordance with the Berlin agreement the treaties that were drafted by the direction of this Council shall be submitted to the United Nations who were at war. Today in the minutes we were approving invitations to be extended to some nations to have an opportunity to come and present their views. Why not convene this conference and give to the nations that are chiefly interested an opportunity to come and sit with us and express their views about treaties that are to affect the lives of their peoples? I respect the views of the representative of the Soviet Government with reference to the Berlin agreement. On the 11th of September we agreed to ask the 5 members of the Council to participate though they could not vote as to these peace treaties. On Sept 22 he stated that he could not continue because he believed that it was a mistake on his part and that it was in violation of the Berlin agreement. The Berlin agreement authorized the Council to invite members but my good friend from the Soviet Republic says that he does not consider that the action on the 11th was an invitation and cannot see his way clear to do it now. In the course of that, I made this proposal. I submit that it does not violate the Berlin agreement and it would give us an opportunity to broaden the list of governments participating instead of narrowing it. And the people of many nations who are called upon to fight wars—they believe that those nations ought to have something to do with making the peace. Today the world is expecting us to act—is expecting us to reach an agreement, and we cannot leave this conference without reaching an agreement that will give the people of the world confidence in the settlement which is made.

Molorov: Mr. Chairman, in connection with the observations made by Mr. Byrnes I would like to say as follows: Mr. Byrnes raised the question of the peace treaties. This is worthy of being discussed and is in harmony with the Berlin decision. I have only stated that the Soviet Delegation would find it difficult to express their views until the question has been personally reported to the Government. I have not objected to convoking a conference which follows from paragraph 4 of the Berlin decision. I have only made a preliminary observation concerning the procedure for consideration of this question and I hold that the proposal made by Mr. Byrnes concerning the procedure is in conflict with paragraph 3 of the Berlin decision.

Will you please read the Berlin decision, items A and B? Under this decision the preparation of the peace treaties will be entrusted to definite states whereas Mr. Byrnes suggests differently. Under the Berlin decision a conference can be convoked, and is to be convoked, as well as the question of convoking the conference should be decided by those states who are engaged in the preparation of peace treaties and Mr. Byrnes suggests a different procedure which runs counter to that established by the Berlin decision. The Soviet Delegation holds that the question of convoking a conference should be decided by those states which are signatory to the surrender terms. Does not Mr. Byrnes agree with the fact that the question of convoking a conference should be decided by those states who are signatories of the terms of surrender? If Mr. Byrnes agrees with this then the Soviet Delegation associates itself with him. But if Mr. Byrnes suggests a different procedure, then the Soviet Delegation cannot participate in this question. I think that it has already been stated we have raised the question for discussion at the Council in as much as the question raised by Mr. Byrnes should be settled by the states who are signatories to the terms of surrender. I cannot offer advices to Mr. Byrnes since he knows the state of affairs as well himself, but if I could give advices to him then my only advice to him would be to withdraw this from discussion.

Byrnes: If I were asked to agree that the Berlin agreement would authorize the calling of the conference by the entire Council, I answer "yes". Let me read the words of the agreement. "The Council may adapt its procedure to the particular problems under consideration" not the Council excluding one or two members, but the Council, which Council was established by the Heads of Government as composed of five members, it says "in some cases it may hold its own preliminary discussion prior to the participation of other interested states," and it says, "in other cases the Council"—not part of the Council, or half of the Council, but the Council—"may convoke a formal conference of the states chiefly interested in seeing a solution of the particular problem." Now the Berlin agreement does say in the paragraph to which my friend has called attention that in the preparation of treaties for instance, that the Council will be composed of members representing states that were signatory of the terms of surrender. Now the first paragraph should meet your proposal. Provision would be made for doing your preparation of the treaty—for preparing the treaty in accordance with the view which my friend has heard. The calling of the conference is an entirely different thing and when the Berlin agreement said the Council may convoke a conference of the chief states interested, no one certainly will contend that it is intended here by that language that the Council could invite states outside, vet could not ask its own members. And last of all certainly the Council could invite the five permanent members of the Security Council—the Council that will be charged with preserving the peace and what harm would it do to invite the permanent members of the Security Council and the members of this Council to sit in with a conference with a number of states that are interested in the peace settlements? mit to my good friend that the Council call the conference and we are talking now about our friends—about those who are allied with us in winning this war and when we could fight in a common cause I can't see why we can't ask these United Nations who were at war in a common effort to make peace?

Molotov: I can go on. I want to reach an understanding on this question. There may be disagreement among us or we may hold different views, but there must not be any misunderstanding on what we have accepted together. Why does the Berlin Conference—Why did the Berlin Conference stipulate that the preparation of peace treaties should be entrusted to the states that were signatories to the terms of surrender? That seems to me to be clear. It is only the states that participated in the discussion of the surrender terms. Other states may be wiser but they have not participated in these discussions. The decision of the Berlin Conference was based on the assumption that the working out of peace terms should be entrusted to those states who took part in the preparation of the terms of the surrender. It will be difficult for those states to participate in the preparation of peace treaties which have not participated in the working out of surrender terms. They are not acquainted with many details and not through fault of their own it will be difficult for them to. Mr. Byrnes has agreed with my proposal to entrust the preparation of peace treaties to those states that are signatories to the surrender terms. I am grateful to him for his agreement. My opinion is that if we agree to entrust the preparation of peace treaties to those states that are signatories to the terms of surrender they must decide when the Conference should be convoked; that it will be very difficult for those states who have not participated in this preparatory work to decide the question of when and how the Conference should be convoked. We shall assign a very hard task to them if we make them responsible for the settlement of a question in the preparation of which they have not participated. To sum it up we have to reach an understanding as to who will be charged with the preparation of peace treaties. I base myself upon the understanding reached with Mr. Byrnes that this task should be assigned to the states who are signatories to the terms of surrender. If this is so then I think that the settlement of the question of when and what conference should be convoked for consideration of peace treaties should be settled by the Governments who have been engaged in the preparation of the peace treaties. That is why I suggest that the question raised by Mr. Byrnes be withdrawn from discussion at this meeting.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I want to clear up one matter: that is that the statement that I am agreeing to the proposal offered by Mr. Molotov. I thought I had made it clear I would not do it unless he agrees to the proposal that I have offered. I object to the consideration of the first proposal offered by him at any time unless at the same time my proposal is considered. I do not desire to prolong the discussion. I am entirely willing that the matter be deferred until tomorrow or to some time when Mr. Molotov would be disposed to discuss the second paragraph.

Bevin: Mr. Chairman, I almost made myself a promise during the week I would discuss procedure no more like the French Delegation, but I could not let this discussion go by without making just a couple of observations. As I understand Mr. Molotov stands strictly on paragraph A 3(2). When people put legality in such a tremendous position then compromises become very difficult. Whatever may be the legal view of those two paragraphs taken out of their context from all the others, the moral right of the decision on the eleventh stands out quite clear from all the discussion we have had this afternoon. But whatever our views may be about paragraph 3 I can't help think Mr. Molotov was absolutely wrong with respect to the other paragraph with regard to convoking the conference. If we could agree that when it comes to the conference stage where it is a matter of finally settling peace, whether it comes under one set of treaties or another, when we get to that stage the Council I thought under the paragraph drawn up at Berlin could act; and therefore if there is a doubt about the legal aspect of paragraph 3 we might be able to resolve that; but to be asked to give way not only on 3 too but [if?] then you have taken all the powers away from the Council to convoke a conference, it seems to me to place us in a very difficult position at this time.

There seem to be three phases that must be cleared up for the future.

- 1) Is it the Council that has got the power to convoke the conference?
- 2) Should a conference be called? We agreed a conference should be called.
- 3) Should we finish the peace treaties under the strict legal definition—of the preparatory work—under A 3(2).

If that could be cleared up, I don't know whether it can or not, I am not going to show how it can be done. I am merely going to pose it as I see it. We have followed the procedure for all these days until it is now decided to change it then I think it is reasonable that we should come to a conclusion so that this problem will not arise again. We can consult our Governments. I am better off than anybody. I can consult my Government here. That does not mean I will not get into difficulties when I do consult them.

BYRNES: In as much as we do not seem to be able to agree tonight I suggest that we might consider authorizing the Communiqué Committee to prepare a communiqué so far as the Council has agreed today on this record and then we adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at 3:00 to see if by that time we can agree.

Molorov: I want to answer the questions of Mr. Bevin. The first question is whether the conference should be convoked by the Council. Yes, the conference should be convoked by the Council, if it is convoked as laid down by Article 3, paragraph 2. The second question is whether this Council should be convoked. This will be decided by the Council composed as indicated. The third question is whether the preparation of the peace treaty should be conducted in strict accordance with paragraph 3 of the Berlin decision and the answer is self-evident. Yes, it must be done in accordance with the Berlin decision as this constitutes our mutual agreement. The Soviet Delegation feels that the moral requires of us to carry out the decisions of our own. If it is in accordance with the Berlin decision then the Soviet Delegation will participate in the further discussion of the question. A different view of this matter can serve only to repeating and deepening the mistake which was made.

BIDAULT: I have taken, Mr. Chairman, no share in the day's discussion of the interpretation of the text about which I do not know under what conditions and to what extent they were adopted by the other members of our Council. The only rule to which I can associate is the one which is laid down by our decisions of the 11th of September. I insist on the extreme importance which the French Delegation attaches to the participation of peace in Europe. No alteration could be taken to our decision of the 11th of September—could be acceptable to us without the decision of our Governments—but I don't know when the decision of the French Government can be taken. It is highly probable that by tomorrow morning that will not have taken place. For the time being the French Delegation cannot participate in the discussion—it does not consider itself authorized.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I renew my suggestion that in as much as we have gone through the minutes that we instruct the communiqué committee to go to work on the preparing the communiqué based on whatever has been agreed to this morning. Then if that were done then we could meet at 3:00 tomorrow afternoon. We could consider whatever that committee reports and we can at least finish that work—go as far as we can.

Molorov: I have another suggestion to make. I think the preparation of a communiqué should be proceeded with when the protocol has been made.

BYRNES: I agree then at the meeting tomorrow morning we can take up the protocol.

Molorov: Even in accordance with the decision of the 11th of September we ought to prepare several kinds of protocols—a protocol of three concerning the Balkan treaties, then the protocol of the four concerning the peace treaty with Italy, then a protocol of two concerning Finland, then a protocol of the five concerning all the remainder. It is not my fault that the decision of September 11 provides that not all the colleagues have equal rights in the Council of Ministers because some of them decide where others only discuss. We must carry out our decision of September 11. At least to the extent to which it does not run counter to the Berlin decision.

⁹⁰ The British record of this meeting (not printed) contains the following version of this sentence: "M. Molotov added that as regards the morality of this decision, the Soviet Delegation felt that morality required them to carry out the decisions of the Berlin Conference." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes)

Bevin: I think this Conference ought to move from here to a musical hall and forget about the decision adopted.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I think really we ought to have the Protocol Committee meet. A mere statement of the differences—so that it is important that we should have this Committee meet because certainly we are not going to adjourn without making an effort to get together on the protocol. We have done so little that we ought to tell the world what has happened. The Protocol Committee could meet tonight. I think that, as my friend suggests, that the Protocol Committee can find a way of stating that it is thought desirable as to certain matters only certain members of the Council vote on it but I don't know that I would seriously urge having three of [or] four protocols. We could put in one protocol just what the facts are. My recollection is that at Berlin the Communiqué Committee met along with the Protocol Committee and this saved a lot of time. Let us appoint members if we have to. They could meet tonight so that they could give us something to do tomorrow.

Wang: We shall put it that the Protocol Committee and the Communiqué Committee shall meet together. I suggest that the Deputies meet tomorrow at 10:00 to complete their work.

Molorov: May I speak? I feel that the protocol must be signed by the respective ministers. Am I right in my understanding? Is that acceptable for that purpose? Then we must indicate the names of those who were present at the deliberation and the protocols must be signed as regards Finland by two, as regards the Balkans by three, as regards Italy by four, and as regards the remaining questions by five ministers.

BEVIN: I think the protocol should be drawn up and we should consider the problem of signing tomorrow.

Molorov: The Soviet representative will be guided by the observation I have just set forth.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, may I understand if they could meet then we could think over how it should be signed whether if the protocol noted that only Great Britain and the Soviet Republics participating in the vote in regard to the treaty with Finland then we can decide when the United States signs except as for items numbers so and so on which it did not vote.

Bevin: I suggest the text of the protocol be drawn up and then we discuss the methods of presentation to the Governments tomorrow.

Molotov: I have found it necessary to make known the view of the Soviet Government.

(It was decided that the Communiqué and Protocol Committees should meet that evening at 10:00 and the Deputies the following morning at 10:30 and the Council the following afternoon at 3:00.) The meeting adjourned.

Memorandum by the Joint Secretariat to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 66

London, 29 September, 1945.

DECISIONS OF FIRST PLENARY CONFERENCE

- 1. A summary record is attached of the decisions reached at each of the first twenty-six Meetings of the Council.⁹¹
- 2. On the following points the Secretaries of Delegations are unable to reach agreement and a decision by the Council is required:—
 - (1) AGENDA FOR THE CONFERENCE: 1ST MEETING, ITEM 2

In paragraph (3) the Soviet Delegation consider that the words in square brackets should be omitted.

(2) ITALIAN COLONIES: 5TH MEETING, ITEM 4

There is disagreement about the decision reached by the Council regarding the Governments to be invited to express their views to the Deputies on the problem of the Italian Colonies.

Four of the Delegations consider that it was the intention of the Council to give the Deputies a discretion to consider any views presented to them on this question by any of the Governments invited to express their views in writing on the terms of the peace settlement as a whole; and that this included a discretion to decide whether any of these Governments should be allowed to express their views orally on this question.

The Soviet Delegation, on the other hand, consider that a firm decision was reached by the Council to invite the Governments of the or Only the Records of Decisions of the first 14 meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers are printed below. The Records of Decisions for the 15th through the 26th meetings of the Council may be found on pp. 287–439 passim. According to a note of September 22, 1945, by Norman Brook, the Secretary General of the Council (not printed), preparation of the records of decisions taken by the Council during its first 14 meetings was undertaken by the Joint Secretariat at the request of the Soviet delegation. The 26 Records of Decisions were amended and approved by the Council in the course of its 27th and 28th meetings, September 29, 1945. The United States delegation minutes of these discussions have not been printed, but the amendments agreed upon by the Council are indicated in footnotes at appropriate places in the records themselves.

British Dominions, India, Byelo-Russia and Ukraine to send representatives, if they so desired, to express their views orally to the Deputies on this question.

(3) ITALY: PROCEDURE FOR PREPARING PEACE TREATY: 10TH MEETING, ITEM 1

The Soviet Delegation consider that the record should not contain any reference to the statements on procedure made by the representatives of the Australian, New Zealand and South African Governments.

(4) ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL MATTERS: 12TH MEETING, ITEM 2

The Council agreed that the Deputies should select from the draft clauses on economic and financial matters, put forward in C.F.M.(45) 3, those which should be included in the Peace Treaty and those which could properly be left to be dealt with in separate bilateral agreements. All Delegations are agreed that the Deputies were directed by the Council to select for inclusion in the Treaty clauses "of general application". Some Delegations consider that the Council also directed the Deputies to select, for inclusion in the Treaty, certain clauses which, though not of general application, are "of special importance".

(5) ROUMANIA: PEACE TREATY: 14TH MEETING, ITEM 2

The Soviet Delegation consider that, in the record of the decision on Financial and Economic Clauses, the words in square brackets, referring to the memoranda by the United States and French Delegations, should be omitted.

(6) BULGARIA: PEACE TREATY: 16TH MEETING, ITEM 2

Some Delegations consider that the Council reached a definite decision that Articles 1 (d) and 2 of the Armistice Terms should be taken as a basis for a provision in the Treaty. The Soviet Delegation believe that the Council decided only that further consideration should be given to this question.

(7) REPATRIATION OF SOVIET NATIONALS: 20TH MEETING, ITEM 2

At their 20th Meeting the Council considered a draft resolution on this subject put forward by the Soviet Delegation, and certain amendments proposed by Mr. Bevin were accepted by M. Molotov. The Secretaries of Delegations are, however, unable to reach agreement on the question whether or not the Council finally adopted this draft resolution as so amended.

Alternative versions of paragraph (3) are given in the attached record of the 20th Meeting. The second of these is proposed by the Soviet Delegation: the French Delegation are unable to accept it.

(8) COMMUNIQUÉ OF 20TH AND 21ST MEETINGS: 22ND MEETING, ITEM 1

Alternative versions are given for Item 1. Alternative A is proposed by the Soviet Delegation. It is not acceptable to the other Delegations, who propose Alternative B.

3. The Secretary of the United States Delegation was unable to give more than conditional agreement to the attached record of decisions in the absence of corresponding agreement upon a draft of a final Protocol of the proceedings of the Conference. The Secretary of the French Delegation also reserved his final agreement on the same grounds.

NORMAN BROOK

[Annex 1]

Record of Decisions of the First Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 11, 1945 92

1. PROCEDURE OF THE COUNCIL

(a) Chairmanship

The Chairmanship should rotate, and the order of Chairmanship should be Mr. Bevin, M. Molotov, Dr. Wang Shih-Chieh, Mr. Byrnes, M. Bidault.

(b) Meetings

There should be regular meetings of the Deputies in the mornings and of the Foreign Ministers in the afternoons. The Deputies should prepare the Agenda for the Foreign Ministers and deal with any matters referred to them. Expert Committees might be appointed as required.

(c) Secretariat

The following representatives should meet that evening:-

U.S.S.R.	M. K. V. Novikov
U.S.A.	Mr. T. C. Achilles
China	Dr. Victor Hoo
France	M. A. Berard
U.K.	Mr. P. M. Crosthwaite

with Mr. Norman Brook to consider the functions and constitution of the Secretariat and to submit recommendations for consideration on the following day.

(d) Languages of the Conference

All the documents of the Council should be prepared in English, Russian and French, and the more important documents should also be translated into Chinese.

 $^{^{92}}$ For the record of the Council's first meeting, see C.F.M.(P) (45) 1st Meeting, p. 112.

(e) Competence of Members of the Council

All five members of the Council should have the right to attend all meetings and take part in all discussions, but in matters concerning peace settlements members whose Governments had not been signatories to the relevant Terms of Surrender should not be entitled to vote.

(f) Press Arrangements

A Press Communiqué Committee was appointed consisting of the Press Officers of the five Delegations, who would issue from time to time agreed communiqués recording the progress of the Council's Mrs K Many work.

2. Agenda for the Conference

The following list of subjects proposed for discussion at the present Conference was considered:—

1. Italy

(a) Draft Peace Treaty;

(b) Future of the Italian Colonies.

2. Draft Peace Treaties with Roumania, Bulgaria and Hungary

3. Draft Peace Treaty with Finland

4. Withdrawal of Allied troops from Iran

5. International inland waterways

6. Austria (proposed by United Kingdom)

(a) Long-term supply arrangements;
(b) Possible recognition of central government.

7. Black Sea Straits (United States intention)

8. Review of decisions of the Berlin Conference regarding policy in Germany (French proposal)

9. Review of Berlin Conference's decisions on German fleet and merchant ships (French proposal)

10. Political situation in Roumania (United States intention)

11. Work of the German Reparations Commission (Russian proposal)

12. Hastening of the repatriation of Soviet citizens (Russian proposal).

The following decisions were reached:—

(1) Items 1-5 above were accepted for inclusion in the Agenda, Items 2 and 3 being amalgamated into a single item.

(2) On Item 6 (a), a report from the representatives of the four Governments responsible for the Allied Council for Austria should be requested in time for consideration by the Council before the end of the present Conference. Item 6 (b) should be discussed by the Council of Foreign Ministers.

(3) Items 7, 9 and 10 should not be included [as separate items] 93

in the Agenda.94

(4) On Items 8, 11 and 12, the French and Soviet Delegations respectively would submit memoranda, in the light of which the Council would give further consideration to the question whether these subjects should be discussed at the present Conference.

(5) Further subjects might be added to the Agenda as the work of the Council proceeded.

3. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: PROCEDURE

The memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 2) should be referred for consideration in the first instance by the Deputies.

4. International Inland Waterways

Mr. Byrnes submitted for circulation a memorandum by the United States Delegation on International Inland Waterways (C.F.M.(45) 1).

[Annex 2]

Record of Decisions of the Second Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 12, 1945 95

1. Austria

The views of the Allied Council in Vienna should be sought on the question of long-term supply arrangements for Austria by telegrams in identical terms from the Governments of the United States, Soviet Union, United Kingdom and France to their respective Commanders-in-Chief in Austria.

The text of the telegram as agreed by the Council is set out in C.F.M. (45) 5.

2. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: PROCEDURE

The members of the United Nations which were at war with Italy should be invited to submit in writing their views on the Peace Treaty with Italy, without prejudice to any claim they might have to make oral representations to the Council at a later stage.

⁹⁵ This record was approved by the Council without amendment at its 27th meeting, September 29, 1945. For the record of the Council's second meeting, see C.F.M.(P) (45) 2nd Meeting, p. 125.

⁹³ Brackets appear in the original.

of At its 27th meeting, September 29, 1945, the Council of Foreign Ministers agreed to revise this decision to read as follows: "(3) Items 7 and 10 should not be included in the Agenda. The United States representative said that he had not proposed them. The representative of France said that Item 9 was covered by Item 8, and that on this understanding he accepted the deletion of Item 9." (740.00119 Council/9-1145)

The Deputies should consider at their meeting on the following day how the above invitations could best be extended; and what would be the most convenient procedure for arranging which Governments should be invited to make oral representations to the Council at a later stage.

3. Peace Treaties With Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary and Roumania

M. Molorov submitted memoranda by the Soviet Delegation setting out the Soviet Government's suggestions for Peace Treaties with Bulgaria (C.F.M.(45) 6), Finland (C.F.M.(45) 7), Hungary, (C.F.M. (45) 4), and Roumania, (C.F.M.(45) 8).

4. Repatriation of Soviet Citizens

M. Molorov handed in copies of a memorandum on the repatriation of Soviet citizens which was subsequently circulated as C.F.M.(45) 10.

[Annex 3]

Record of Decisions of the Third Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 14, 1945 96

1. REPARATIONS FROM GERMANY

The Council should consider at their next meeting whether the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation on Reparations from Germany (C.F.M.(45) 15) should be added to the Agenda for the present Conference.

2. Repatriation of Soviet Nationals

The Council agreed that the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation on the acceleration of the repatriation of Soviet nationals (C.F.M.(45) 10) should be added to the Agenda for the present Conference.

3. Secretariat

The report of the Deputies (C.F.M.(45) 12) on the composition and functions of the Joint Secretariat was approved.

4. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: PROCEDURE

The Deputies should determine the procedure for enabling those of the United Nations who were at war with Italy to express their views in writing on the Italian Peace Treaty.

⁹⁰ This Record of Decisions was approved by the Council without amendment at its 27th meeting, September 29, 1945. For the record of the Council's third meeting, see C.F.M.(P) (45) 3rd Meeting, p. 158.

5. ITALY: DRAFT HEADS OF PEACE TREATY

Dr. Wang Shih-Chieh, as Chairman, was invited to arrange for the Governments of Yugoslavia, of such British Dominions as claimed to be heard, and of Italy, to be invited to send representatives to attend at the meeting of the Council on Monday, 17th September to present their views on the problem of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and Trieste.

The following decisions were taken on the points of principle set out in the United States memorandum (C.F.M.(45) 16).

SECTION I: TERRITORIAL PROVISIONS FOR ITALY IN EUROPE

- (1) The frontier with France will not be changed, except for such minor adjustments as may be approved by the Council on the basis of recommendations to be submitted by the French Delegation and considered in the first instance by the Deputies.
 - (2) The frontier with Switzerland will not be changed.
- (3) The frontier with Austria will not be changed, subject to the decisions to be reached by the Council on any case which Austria may present for minor rectifications in her favour.
- (4) Discussion of the proposals in the United States memorandum regarding the frontier between Yugoslavia and Italy should be deferred until the Council had heard the representatives of other Governments who were being invited to attend the meeting on Monday, 17th September.
- (5) The proposal in the United States memorandum that the Dodecanese Islands should be ceded to Greece and demilitarised should stand over for the time being.
- (6) Italy should be required to renounce all claims in relation to pre-war Albania.
- (7) The proposal in the United States memorandum that Pantellaria and Isole Pelagie should be demilitarised should be considered together with the proposals on armaments in Section IV.
 - (8) Zara and the Dalmatian Islands should go to Yugoslavia.
 - (9) The island of Saseno should revert to Albania.

SECTION II: HUMAN RIGHTS

Italy shall undertake to maintain a Bill of Rights which will secure the freedom of speech, religious worship, political belief and public meeting envisaged for Italy in the Moscow Declaration of November, 1943; 96a and which will also confirm the human rights and fundamental freedoms set forth in the Charter of the United Nations Organisation.

1. Control and Administration of Germany

M. Bidault circulated a memorandum by the French Delegation on the control and administration of Germany (C.F.M.(45) 17).

2. Reparations From Germany

Consideration was deferred of the question whether the Soviet memorandum on this subject (C.F.M.(45) 15) should be added to the agenda for the present Conference.

3. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: PROCEDURE

Dr. Wang Shih Chieh was invited to despatch letters to the representatives of the Governments of Yugoslavia, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, South Africa, India and Italy, in the following terms:

"At their meeting this morning the Council of Foreign Ministers now in Session at Lancaster House in London agreed to enquire of the Government of whether they wished to represent their views to the Council on the question of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and the future of the city and port of Trieste.

Accordingly, as the Chairman of the Council of Foreign Ministers on that occasion, I was asked to invite the Government of to nominate a representative, if they so desired to attend the meeting of Foreign Ministers to be held in Lancaster House on Monday, 17th September, at 4.0 p. m. to express the views of the Government on these problems."

4. ITALY: DISPOSAL OF ITALIAN COLONIES

An exchange of views took place. The discussion of these questions should be resumed on Saturday, 15th September, at 3 p. m.

Solution of this Record of Decisions in the course of the 27th and council and and Shafter discussion of this Record of Decisions in the course of the 27th and 28th meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers, September 20, 1945, it was decided to have item 4(3) read as follows: "The Council also decided to instruct the Deputies to invite the Governments of the British Dominions, India, Byelo Russia, and the Ukraine to send, if they so desired, their representatives to (Footnote continued on following page.)

London should be considered by the Council during the present Conference.

2. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: PROCEDURE

A letter in the following terms:—

"The Council of Foreign Ministers, now in Session at Lancaster House, has decided to invite the Governments of the United Nations who have been at war with Italy and who are not represented on the Council, to present to it, in writing, their views on the aspects of the peace settlement with Italy which are of a nature to be of interest to them.

I have therefore been instructed, in my capacity as Chairman of this meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers to invite your Government to express their views on this question, if they desire to do so. The Council requests that these communications should reach it before the 1st October."

should be sent to the Governments of the following countries through the representative in London of the Government concerned wherever possible:—

Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Byelorussia, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Iraq, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippines, Poland, Salvador, South Africa, Ukraine, Yugoslavia.

3. Reparations From Germany

The memorandum on this subject (C.F.M.(45) 15) which had been submitted by the Soviet Delegation should be added at the end of the items included in the Agenda for the present Conference of Foreign Ministers.

4. ITALY: DISPOSAL OF ITALIAN COLONIES

(1) The Council referred to the Deputies for preliminary consideration the matter of trusteeship for the Italian Colonies, suggesting that they should make the widest use possible of the proposals of the United States Delegation and take into account the views expressed by the other Delegations. The Council agreed that the Deputies may recommend such concrete territorial, economic, or political changes as they may agree upon. In the absence of such agreement as to changes, they shall base their report upon the American proposals, making such individual reports to the Council as they may respectively deem helpful.

express their views orally on the particular question of the Italian Colonies. The Deputies were given discretion to hear any views on this question presented to them by any of the Governments which had been invited to express their views to the Council in writing on the terms of the peace settlement with Italy." The text of this amended Record of Decisions is from the British record of the 28th meeting of the Council, not printed (Council of Foreign Ministers: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes). For the record of the Council's fifth meeting, see C.F.M. (P) (45) 5th Meeting, p. 186.

- (2) The Deputies were asked to present their report on this question to the Governments members of the Council not less than 14 days before the opening of the next Plenary Conference of the Council.
- (3) The Deputies were given discretion to consider any views on this question presented to them by any of the Governments which had been invited to express their views to the Council in writing on the terms of the peace settlement with Italy (see Minute 2 above) though no fresh invitations need be issued asking for an expression of views on this particular aspect of the settlement.

ALTERNATIVE

(3) The Council also decided to invite the Governments of the British Dominions, India, Byelo-Russia and Ukraine to send, if they so desired, their representatives to express their views orally to the Deputies on the particular question of the Italian Colonies.

[Annex 6]

Record of Decisions of the Sixth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 17, 1945 99

1. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: YUGOSLAV-ITALIAN FRONTIER AND TRIESTE

The Council agreed upon the following procedure for hearing that afternoon the representatives of the Governments invited to put before the Council orally their views on the problem of the Yugoslav–Italian frontier and Trieste:—

The representatives of Yugoslavia and the three British Dominions should be present throughout the meeting.¹ The views of Yugoslavia should be heard first. The Italian representatives should then be invited into the Conference Room to express their views, and should then be asked to leave. The views of the three British Dominions could be stated after the Italian representatives had left.

2. Poland

The matters raised in the note from the Polish Provisional Government about the Arciszewski Government should first be dealt with through the diplomatic channel in the ordinary way, but if agreement was not reached by this means could be raised at the next Conference of the Council.

⁹⁰ This Record of Decisions was approved by the Council of Foreign Ministers, with the amendment shown in footnote 1, below, at its 27th meeting, September 29, 1945. For the record of the Council's sixth meeting, see C.F.M.(P) (45) 6th Meeting, p. 202.

¹At its 27th meeting, September 29, 1945, the Council of Foreign Ministers agreed to revise this sentence to read as follows: "The representatives of Yugoslavia, Australia, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa should be present throughout the meeting." (740.00119 Council/9–1145)

3. Control and Administration of Germany

The memorandum on this subject circulated by the French Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 17) should be added as Item 8 of the Agenda for the present Conference.

4. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: DODECANESE ISLANDS

An exchange of views took place about the Dodecanese Islands. It was agreed that further consideration of this question should be adjourned from day to day, and that, if no agreement were reached before the end of the present Conference, the question should be brought up for decision at the next Conference of the Council.

5. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: ARMAMENTS

Paragraph (1) of Section IV of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16) was accepted in the following amended form:—

"The maintenance of armaments for land, sea and air will be closely restricted to (a) the necessities of the maintenance of order in Italian territory and local defence on Italian frontiers; (b) such military contingents, if any, in addition to the foregoing, as may be required by the Security Council."

The restrictions under (a) above would operate only until such time as they were relaxed by the Security Council of the United Nations Organisation.

It was noted that the French Delegation, in putting forward to the Deputies their proposals for minor rectifications of the Franco-Italian frontier, would propose that the Italian side of this frontier should be demilitarised; and that the acceptance by the French Delegation of the paragraph set out above was subject to this reservation.

The Deputies in considering in detail the relevant clauses of the draft heads of the Peace Treaty with Italy (C.F.M.(45) 3), should be guided by the general principles set out above.

[Annex 7]

Record of Decisions of the Seventh Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 17, 1945 ²

1. Italian Peace Treaty: Yugoslav-Italian Frontier and Trieste

The meeting to hear the views of the Governments of Yugoslavia, Italy, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa was postponed until 11.0 a. m. on Tuesday, 18th September.

² This Record of Decisions was approved by the Council without amendment at its 27th meeting, September 29, 1945. For the record of the Council's seventh meeting, see C.F.M.(P) (45) 7th Meeting, p. 209.

2. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: ARMAMENTS

Pantellaria and Isole Pelagie should be demilitarised.

Italy should be prohibited from constructing any naval, military or air force installations in Sicily and Sardinia, except for such facilities as may be required by the World Organisation or for internal security purposes.

Factory and tool equipment in Italy designed for the manufacture of war implements which is not required for the permitted military establishments and is not readily susceptible to conversion for civilian purposes should be surrendered to the Four Powers for such disposal on reparations account or otherwise as they may determine.

A liberal attitude should be taken towards the production of aircraft and airplane engines for civilian use.

Provision should be made for the establishment of Allied machinery to enforce the naval, military and air clauses of the Peace Treaty (as proposed in paragraphs 56–58 of C.F.M.(45) 3) until such time as Italy can be accepted as a reliable member of the United Nations Organisation.

The Deputies should proceed to consider the detailed provisions of the military clauses of the Peace Treaty in the light of the above general principles on Armaments and those approved at the Sixth Meeting of the Council (C.F.M.(P)(45) 6th Meeting, Minute 5).

3. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: WAR CRIMES, ETC.

The Deputies should be guided by Section V of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16) in their detailed examination of the relevant Sections of the draft Treaty (paragraphs 61-68 of C.F.M.(45) 3).

4. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: REPARATIONS

An exchange of views took place about Section VI of the memorandum by the United States Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 16) on Reparations from Italy.

general application and should leave the remainder to be dealt with in separate bilateral agreements between Italy and the countries concerned.¹⁰

3. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: SOVEREIGNTY OF ITALY

The Council agreed that there should be included in the Treaty provision for the restoration of Italian sovereignty and the termination of foreign rights or controls within Italy, except as provided in the Treaty.

4. Italian Peace Treaty: Questions of Special Concern to China

The Deputies should consider the issues raised in C.F.M.(45) 13 and 14.

5. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: DODECANESE ISLANDS

An exchange of views took place. Further consideration of this question was again adjourned.

6. ITALY: DISPOSAL OF ITALIAN COLONIES

The Deputies should have discretion to consider any views which the Egyptian Government might submit in writing on the question of the disposal of the Italian Colonies.

7. ITALIAN PEACE TREATY: REPARATIONS

Mr. Byrnes' proposals on procedure should be considered at a later meeting. If these proposals were accepted, it could be agreed that the question of reparations from Italy should stand referred to the Deputies.

¹⁰ At its 27th meeting, the Council revised this item to read as follows: "The Deputies should select from the draft clauses in C.F.M.(45) 3 dealing with economic and financial matters those which ought to be retained in the Peace Treaty as being of general importance, and should leave the remainder to be dealt with in separate bilateral agreements between Italy and the countries concerned." (740.00119 Council/9-1145)

2. FINLAND: PEACE TREATY

An exchange of views took place between M. Molotov and Mr. Bevin regarding

- (a) The British proposal that the Peace Treaty with Finland should contain provisions limiting Finland's military establishments, and
- (b) M. Molotov's suggestions on the procedure for giving further consideration to the draft Treaty.

No agreement was reached on these points, and the provisional decisions set out below are subject to such an agreement being reached.

Continuance of Military Facilities (paragraph 4 of C.F.M. (45) 25)

On the conclusion of the Peace Treaty facilities of a military nature would no longer be required of the Finnish Government.

Return of Allied Vessels etc. (paragraph 5 of C.F.M.(45) 25)

Further consideration should be given to the need for a provision in the Treaty on the lines of Article 18 of the Armistice terms dealing with the return of Allied vessels.

Resumption of Diplomatic and Consular Relations (paragraph 6 (i) of C.F.M.(45) 25)

A provision should be included in the Treaty covering the resumption of diplomatic and consular relations with Finland. The proposal made in the second sentence of paragraph 6 (i) of C.F.M.(45) 25 was withdrawn.

Position of International Organisations (paragraph 6 (ii) and (iii) of C.F.M.(45) 25)

The proposals in these paragraphs should be considered in connection with the proposal in paragraph 3 of C.F.M.(45) 7.

Position of existing Treaties (paragraph 6 (iv) of C.F.M.(45) 25)

Further consideration should be given to this proposal in order to specify which treaties Finland should be required to keep in force and which treaties she should abrogate.

Bill of Rights (paragraph 6 (v) of C.F.M.(45) 25)

Finland should be required to maintain a Bill of Rights on the lines already accepted for inclusion in the Italian Peace Treaty. The details of such a provision would require examination.

War Graves (paragraph 6 (vi) of C.F.M.(45) 25)

Further detailed consideration should be given to this proposal.

Economic and Financial Questions (paragraph 7 of C.F.M.(45) 25)

Further consideration should be given to the inclusion in the Treaty of clauses dealing with economic and financial questions on the lines of paragraph 7 of C.F.M.(45) 25.

Admission to United Nations Organisation

An exchange of views took place about the admission of Finland to the United Nations Organisation. Consideration of this question was adjourned.

1. FINLAND: PEACE TREATY

An exchange of views took place. Further consideration of the procedure for dealing with the Finnish Peace Treaty was postponed.

2. ROUMANIA: PEACE TREATY

Further study should be given (by a procedure to be determined by the Council) to the detailed provisions of the Peace Treaty with Roumania, on the basis of the proposals of the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 8) in the light of the memoranda by the British (C.F.M. (45) 22) and United States (C.F.M.(45) 35 [36?]) Delegations, and of the following decisions of principle:—

Armaments (Paragraph 3 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

Section IV of C.F.M.(45) 36 should be accepted as a basis for detailed study of this question, and this study should include the question whether any machinery was required (whether in the form of an Allied Inspectorate or otherwise) for enforcing any restrictions which it might be decided to impose on Roumania's military establishments.

Soviet-Roumanian Frontier (Paragraph 4 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

Article 4 of the Armistice Terms should be accepted as a basis for discussion.

Return of Allied Vessels (Paragraph 5 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

This question was referred for detailed study and report to the Council.

War Crimes (Paragraph 6 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

Article 14 of the Armistice Terms should be accepted as the basis for dealing with the question of apprehending and trying persons accused of war crimes.

¹² This Record of Decisions was approved by the Council, with the amendment shown in footnote 14, p. 474, at its 27th meeting, September 29, 1945. For the record of the Council's 14th meeting, see C.F.M.(P) (45) 14th Meeting, p. 275.

Fascist organisations (Paragraph 7 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

Article 15 of the Armistice Terms should be accepted as a basis of discussion for dealing with pro-Hitler, pro-Fascist and other organisations in Roumania conducting propaganda hostile to the United Nations, on the understanding that further consideration would be given to this question in view of the action already taken by the Roumanian Government under Article 15 of the Armistice Terms.

Withdrawal of Allied Forces (Paragraph 8 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

On the conclusion of the Peace Treaty all Allied forces would be withdrawn from Roumania (except as might be provided for the maintenance of the lines of communication of the Red Army with the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria) and that all unused currency and goods would be returned to the Roumanian Government.

Transylvania (Paragraph 9 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

An exchange of views took place.

Resumption of Diplomatic and Consular Relations (Paragraph 10 (i) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

A provision should be included in the Treaty covering the resumption of diplomatic and consular relations with Roumania. The proposal made in the second sentence of paragraph 10 (i) of C.F.M.(45) 21 was withdrawn.

Position of International Organisations (Paragraph 10 (ii) and (iii) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

The proposals in these paragraphs should be considered in connection with the proposal in paragraph 4 of C.F.M.(45) 8.

International Control of Danube (Paragraph 19 (iv) of C.F.M. (45) 21)

An exchange of views took place. Consideration of the proposal was adjourned.

Position of Existing Treaties (Paragraph 19 (v) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

Further consideration should be given to this proposal, in order to specify which Treaties Roumania should be required to keep in force and which Treaties she should abrogate.

Bill of Rights (Paragraph 10 (vi) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

Roumania should be required to maintain a Bill of Rights on the lines already accepted for inclusion in the Italian Peace Treaty. The details of such a provision would require examination.

Reception of Roumanian Nationals (Paragraph 10 (vii) of C.F.M. (45) 21)

The proposal that Roumania should be required to receive Roumanian nationals returning from abroad and to accept full responsibility for them was withdrawn.

War Graves (Paragraph 10 (viii) of C.F.M.(45) 21)

Detailed consideration should be given to this proposal.

Financial and Economic Clauses (Paragraph 11 of C.F.M.(45) 21)

The proposals in paragraph 11 of the memorandum by the British Delegation, [in Section VII of the U.S. Memorandum, (C.F.M.(45) 36) and in the French memorandum C.F.M.(45) 37] ¹³ should be referred for detailed consideration in connection with paragraph 2 of the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 8). ¹⁴

Admission to United Nations Organisation (Paragraph 12 of C.F.M. (45) 21)

Further consideration of the proposal in paragraph 4 of the memorandum by the Soviet Delegation (C.F.M.(45) 8) regarding the candidature of Roumania for membership of the United Nations Organisation, was postponed.

PREPARATION OF PEACE TREATIES

The Council will convoke a Conference under the provisions of II, 4(ii) of the Berlin Agreement for the purpose of considering treaties of peace with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland. The Conference will consist of the five members of the Council, which also constituted the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, together with all European members of the United Nations and all non-European members of the United Nations which supplies substantial military contingents against European members of the Axis. The Conference will be held in London and will begin its proceedings not later than 1945. It will take as the bases for its discussion reports of the Deputies with any modifications agreed upon by the governments of the Deputies in question.

After full hearing and discussion by the invited States, the final approval of the terms of the treaties of peace will be made by those of the invited States which were at war with the enemy state in question.

Does the Council wish me to read the text of the telegram?

BYRNES: I would say that each of the Delegations has a copy and it is unnecessary to read it. The question is on the agreement of the sending of the telegram by the Council. Are there any objections? As there seems to be no objection, then the Council will deem that it has been decreed that the telegram will be sent by each Delegation to its representative.

Gousev: The Deputies continued the discussion of the question of restitution but this discussion has not been completed owing to the fact that it became necessary on the part of the Soviet Delegation to receive the opinion of economic experts on this question. The Soviet representative stated that the Soviet Delegation expect to receive the opinion of experts in the near future and as soon as they are in possession of the necessary information they will be able to come back to this question. The French, British, Chinese and American representatives expressed their wish to complete as soon as possible the discussion of the question of restitution, if possible before the end of the present session of the Council and to proceed with the carrying out of restitution as soon as possible. In conclusion I must sav that at the end of the meeting of the Deputies the British representative again raised the question of improving the food situation in Austria. On this question an exchange of views took place, no decision was adopted and further discussion of this question was deferred. These are the main results of the Deputies' meeting this morning.

BIDAULT: I hope that the meeting of the Deputies will soon be able to arrive at an agreement concerning restitution. I would like to remind the Council concerning the reservation of the French Delegation at the 24th meeting of this Council 21 with reference to the connection between reparations and restitution.

Molorov: The French Delegation has raised this question but they have not formulated their views and we have not even received any memorandum and so we don't ever [even?] know what the French Delegation regards as restitution, and I want to suggest that the French Delegation present their views and that will facilitate the position of the Deputies.

BIDAULT: The French Delegation is of the opinion that the memorandum distributed on September 20²² answers the question that has just been raised.

Molotov: I have in my mind the memorandum that the French Delegation submitted on the question of Germany 23 but I remember that there is a special memorandum of the French Delegation on restitution dated September 20. I think that our Deputies could discuss the memorandum with a view to ascertaining whether they will be able to fall in with the views of the French Delegation concerning restitution. I want to point out that the French Delegation have not justified the time limit on the carrying out of restitution in their memorandum, and I therefore suggest that the French Delegation justify the time limit suggested by them.

BIDAULT: I would prefer this matter being referred to the Deputies because as a matter of fact I must remind you that they are generally charged in such matters with the responsibility of determining how and when, and in particular the examination of restitution ought to produce results. With regard to the time limit the memorandum on reparations, which we circulated on September 20—reparations which we have already pointed out have as a preliminary condition restitution—asks that these matters should be disposed of in the shortest possible time and we laid down a time limit of two years because this was in conformity with the draft resolution which was presented and in conformity at the same time it was decided in our absence at Potsdam under Article 6, Section 4 of the Protocol.²⁴

DUNN: I take it there is no question that the matter of restitution has been referred to the Deputies by the Council and that we can consider that the Deputies will continue their study of the question. Any objection?

(No objection.)

DUNN: We will pass on to the next item to be considered.

Molorov: What is our agenda?

DUNN: I understand we are to consider the report of the Protocol committee.

Molotov: I should like to ask when the protocol submitted yesterday by the Soviet Delegation 25 will come up for discussion.

DUNN: I understand that at the end of vesterday's meeting it was decided the Council would meet today to examine the protocol.

Molotov: I have no objection to this but I want to ask when the proposal of the Soviet Delegation, which it regards as an urgent one, will come up for discussion.

DUNN: I should say that the question would be taken up by the Council immediately after considering the report of the Protocol committee and at the same time the United States amendment 26 will be considered with it.

(Agreed.)

Molotov: I suggest that we discuss them separately.

BYRNES: I think that the proper procedure would be to take up the protocol before taking up the communiqué. I have in my hands a draft of a protocol of the present conference and a note by the senior secretary of the Joint Secretariat.²⁷ I assume the other Delegations have this document.

Molorov: The question I want to ask is whether the protocol is going to be signed by the Ministers.

Byrnes: Of course.

Molorov: I suggest that we decide that the protocol will be signed by the Ministers, and only by those Ministers who decided questions and not by those who only discussed. But it will be recorded who was present. Do you agree with this suggestion? What is it we have decided?

Byrnes: We haven't decided anything.

Molorov: I ask that this question be decided, otherwise there will be difficulty in discussing the protocol.

BYRNES: I think there must be a misunderstanding because nothing has been decided except that we will discuss the report of the Protocol committee. Now it will be in order for any member to suggest whatever procedure he deems best and then that suggestion to be discussed. I understand Mr. Molotov has a suggestion.

Molorov: That is what I am asking for. My suggestion is as follows: The Council of Foreign Ministers decide that the protocol containing the decisions should be signed by those Ministers who participated in the adoption of the decisions.

[Here follows a brief discussion at the conclusion of which it was agreed to recess the meeting for five minutes so that Molotov could familiarize himself with C.F.M.(45) 71, September 30, 1945, which he had not yet seen.]

Molotov: The Soviet Delegation has prepared a draft protocol of all their meetings of the Council since September 11th up to now. Analyzing it by general questions in which all the five members participated, I will circulate this text. I should like here to ask you to get acquainted with that draft protocol and as you have it only in Russian, I suggest we adjourn for one or two hours to study it.

BYRNES: May I suggest this? What I have said just now was simply what the situation was and reported by the Protocol committee so far as the United States Delegation is concerned. Though it is not our idea as to the kind of protocol that should be issued, the United States Delegation is not interested in form. I am not interested in procedure and I don't care very much whether the United States signs five papers or four or three if the papers recorded the facts, that is all that is of interest. I have no objection if section (c) is agreed on, and which I am told the committee agreed upon, to signing, the five of us as to the general matters and to four or three or two signing the other headings provided there is a statement anywhere that only two signed because formally only two under the agreement of September 11 could vote on it, and therefore only two would have the right to sign. I don't think there is any reason why I can't agree with my friend as to this proposal. If a matter of form certainly is not of vital importance and if at either the top of the heading on Italy or at the bottom of it there is a statement to show why only four signed I see no objection. So far as the United States Delegation is concerned, we are ready to agree that we should sign those various headings in which we participated as voters. I don't see any reason for so much difference in the committee. I hope that the members can agree. When it comes to Finland, the United States will not sign that and they will not be responsible for anything. I therefore suggest that we adopt the Committee's report (c) with the suggestion of Mr. Molotov that the various parts be signed only by those Governments that could vote on the subject. I read things, that is the daily record which we agreed on yesterday after hours of discussion, and if we agreed on it let it be signed by each of us who voted on the subject.

²⁷ C.F.M.(45) 71, September 30, p. 514; two alternative drafts of the protocol had been prepared: C.F.M.(45) 72, September 30, 1945, arranged by subject matter and C.F.M.(45) 73, September 30, 1945, arranged chronologically; neither of the draft protocols is printed.

Bevin: That is why I asked what we were considering in order to get my mind clear. This proposal was put to us yesterday by Mr. Molotov, that we sign in this manner, and while I would have preferred the five to sign the protocol, I am quite agreeable to taking this course, almost with the excuses that Great Britain had to be present, to get the thing issued and to get it clear I am quite agreeable to what the Chairman has suggested. I have gone out of my way this morning to try and get agreement with the Soviet Delegation along the very lines they proposed last night. This was agreed on and I accepted it. It has been agreed all through that the agreements arrived at should stand. When it came to a question of signature, I tried to fall in and agree with the suggestions made.

[Here follows a discussion leading to the Council's decision to charge the Protocol Committee with responsibility for checking the text of records of decisions included in the draft protocol.]

BIDAULT: Mr. Chairman, before we separate and in order to put an end to this discussion of the protocol which is the matter which is being especially referred to the Committee on Protocol, I would like to make the following statement: The French Delegation accepts that we have several protocols instead of one only which should be drawn up and that they should be respectively signed only by the Ministers who have taken part in the decisions provided that the following formula should be included as part of the signatures. I believe that this is in conformity with what Mr. Molotov said to Mr. Bevin. The formula would be as follows: "The above decisions were discussed by the Ministers of Foreign Affairs. They have been signed by the Ministers of Foreign Affairs indicated hereafter."

BYRNES: Gentlemen of the Council, you have heard the request of the representative of the Government of France that if the documents are to be signed separately there will be included a motion requested by him. Are there objections?

Molorov: I think we shall be able to find without difficulty a formula embodying the mention of those Ministers who were present at the meeting.

Byrnes: The Protocol Committee will be requested to draft language along the lines suggested by the representative of the French.

Molorov: I should like it to be said in accordance with the proposal of Mr. Bidault and Mr. Molotov.

[Here follows a further discussion of the proposal to refer to the Protocol Committee the task of preparing a draft protocol along lines agreed upon by the Council.]

BYRNES: Therefore I suggest that the Committee withdraw and proceed to prepare the draft that they had considered last night along with the Soviet draft presented this afternoon. By the time they have prepared this document presented by the Soviet Delegation, the Soviet Delegation may have the rest of their draft to be turned over to the Committee. Therefore if there is no objection I suggest that the Protocol Committee withdraw and begin their work and at the end of an hour's time they might have the rest of the Soviet draft. Can Mr. Molotov give us any idea as to how long it would take before the other parts are ready?

Molorov: I wonder if we can agree now to arrange the protocol in chronological order. I think it will be better to do so because we are going to have other decisions, for instance the decision on Austria and maybe a decision on the question of restitution, and then we can add them if we accept them. Therefore the question is of our agreeing as to the order in which the protocol should be arranged. The Soviet Delegation believes that the protocol should be arranged chronologically as is usually the case with protocols and in accordance with the suggestion under (b) in the Secretariat's paper.

BIDAULT: Does all the Committee—do all five operate all through? Molorov: No objection to this?

Bevin: There is no need to change the order when we sign it.

Molotov: I agree.

Bevin: When the draft is submitted will all five be in the room although some do not vote?

Molotov: If it is such an important question, I should like to have all five in one room.

BEVIN: It would be very embarrassing to me to have to ask the United States to go out when we deal with the peace treaty with Finland.

Molotov: On the contrary, I should like them to be present.

BYRNES: Thanks. I am invited. I am glad.

Bevin: When we return and consider the report of the Protocol Committee all five will be here.

Molorov: I should like to ask that this proposal be submitted in writing.

BEVIN: There is need for it to be in writing.

Mолотоу: I agree with this too.

BYRNES: I think, gentlemen, it is a matter that does not deserve the attention that we have given to it. For my part I am perfectly satisfied to have one protocol to be signed by all with the statement that the decisions in the attached record not relating to treaties signed by all parties, all signed. As to the Finland protocol, we simply state that the decision in the attached record so far as it relates to the treaty with Finland, Great Britain and the Soviet Union sign. Not being able to agree, the only thing I see we can do is to let it go to the Committee. My objection to that course is simply this. We spent hours yesterday working on the minutes. We agreed on them. Now, I can't read this Russian draft very well but the gentleman who sits on my left tells me as he glances at it that there is one question with reference to the Soviet nationals which we discussed for an hour yesterday and excluded, and that is whether it is in this draft, and when we leave it to the Committee they will spend another hour and we will spend another hour on questions we decided vesterday.

Molotov: It is a mistake. I must say that the text should be reconciled to what we decided yesterday.

BYRNES: If the Committee member of the Soviet Delegation is instructed to reconcile it with what was decided yesterday then it would be all right, otherwise the Committee will—I suggest that the Committee withdraw and go on with the other work. Let us discuss the communiqué.

BEVIN: I do think, Mr. Byrnes, that we are violating all union rules in trying to make them do it in an hour.

(Committee adjourns.)

Bevin: Hope springs eternal.

Byrnes: On the question of the Communiqué Committee we might now discuss questions that will be presented at some time or another and which would require a decision on the part of the Council. In the course of the discussion the Committee would like to have answered the question "Shall there be one communiqué with each section showing which of the Foreign Ministers took part in the decision?" Another question I am told being considered by these gentlemen is the question of whether the draft of the communiqué should contain all the decisions of the Council, including references to the Deputies. I hasten to express my views that the question—the second question—shall be answered by the decision that the communiqué should include mention of the matter, because if that is not done there will be little in the communiqué. As to the first question as to whether there will be one communiqué with sections showing which of the Foreign Ministers took part, I think there ought to be no difficulty about that. We could have but one communiqué. The communiqué can state, when it refers to treaties, that these members participated but did not vote. That's what the facts are. That is all the communiqué is supposed to do.

Molotov: I want to make a suggestion. Like the protocol, there should be one communiqué. I think that the communiqué should state which questions were decided by which Ministers. It is not convenient to mention in the communiqué those who are present but only those who took part in the discussions. As regards the contents of the communiqué, I think it should contain the decisions adopted by the Council and should contain no mention of the tasks assigned to the Deputies.

BYRNES: Most of the work of the Council was devoted to an agreement upon the principles to govern the work of the Deputies. In justice to ourselves, we ought to state in the communiqué the things that occupied us and which we decided in accordance with the facts as to the disposition that was made.

Molorov: I think that we may agree on this. But in this case it will be necessary to find a form to express what questions have been referred to what Deputies. Thus we have no objection to mentioning the questions which have been referred to the Deputies under this one reservation.

Byrnes: I think we should find language that would solve that situation. We must do it in justice to ourselves. The newspapers have already stated a lot of it anyway. We might as well state it accurately.

Molorov: The newspapers publish some things and then say anything about certain things so they have published information of their own. They feed on food which they receive.

BYRNES: Not always—sometimes they feed on food which they haven't.

Bevin: And their imagination is developed with their indigestion. Byrnes: I would like to ask if any member of the Council has any suggestion, because the Communiqué Committee is put up against a very hard problem.

BEVIN: Is it your proposal that in the communiqué when you say a matter is referred to the Deputies you do not stipulate the Deputies to whom they are referred?

Molorov: I think that it should be stated clearly so as not to deceive the reading public.

BIDAULT: With regard to the French Delegation, our attitude is this. There should be no difference between the main Delegates and their substitutes—Deputies.

Molotov: I agree that is quite right.

BIDAULT: I would like to say as regards the Conference of the full Delegates and of the Deputies the view of the French Delegation on this I have already stated. I have already said it may be expected therefore that the very extreme sacrifice will be the last I would be able to concede.

Molotov: I have still got to say that M. Bidault's reference to sacrifice is without sufficient grounds. The decisions adopted at the Berlin Conference were published throughout the world and when the French Delegation made up their minds to go to London to participate in the work of the Council the French Delegation knew all along that the deliberations of the Council would be conducted on the basis of decisions of the Berlin Conference, and the French Government did not express their reluctance to participate in the work of the Council on the grounds they would be conducted on the basis of the Berlin decisions and they made no objection. If the French Delegation is agreed with the Berlin decisions, then the French Delegation was free to participate, but once the French Delegation has come to London to take part in the deliberations of the Council that means the French Delegation agreed to work on the basis of the Berlin decisions. Therefore I cannot on any account agree with the statement that the French Delegation have made a sacrifice in the Conference.

BIDAULT: Naturally I maintain the term "sacrifice" of course, and I hope that in meetings of this Council which will follow we shall be encouraged to make further sacrifice by the general attitude shown by the other Delegations. Therefore, we do not feel ourselves to be bound by the decisions of the Berlin Conference and we stress what our feelings were on the subject in the spirit in which we came here and in the spirit which we have shown in the past, in particular as illustrated in the record in regard to the Council in which we said we felt that the Council was sovereign with regard to fixing of its agenda and we felt that all members are free to decide on the measures of our work. A decision was made in common and can only be reversed in common. There is no need for me to stress my spirit of conciliation.

Molotov: I do not want to repeat anything of what I have said but I want to add that if anyone denounces the decision adopted by us in common, that decision ceases to be a decision. This is obvious. There is a Russian proverb which says "You can't make people like you by force".

BEVIN: This raises a very big point. Someone takes part in a decision, then he denounces it and is free. That is the nearest thing to the Hitler theory I have ever heard.

Molotov: This is what Mr. Bevin has been doing.

BEVIN: My position is a very simple one.

Molorov: I should like to ask the Chairman to put an end to the speeches which are out of place. Have we got a Chairman or not? Unless Mr. Bevin will withdraw his words I shall leave the room.

Bevin: If I said anything offensive I withdraw it.

Molorov: Then we shall make out who assisted Hitler most.

BEVIN: If I said anything offensive I apologize. My position has been a very simple one. It has been a question of interpretation of the Berlin decision. I merely drew an analogy, and I apologize. I don't go back on any decision that I make and I never will, but I thought that the decision was correct and still think so, but all this afternoon I have been trying to meet Mr. Molotov. It seems to me now that the logical conclusion of all that we have been doing this afternoon is that we have agreed to sign separately and to sign but under separate heads. Now we present a paragraph in which reference to the Deputies is confined to signatories. I don't see what else we can do. It has gone so far.

Molotov: I should like to say a few words. This is the second time that I have taken part in a Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs. I remember the first Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs took place in October 1943.30 The Conference was attended by Mr. Hull,51 Mr. Eden,³² and the findings of this Conference were widely made known and the accounts of this Conference were given by Mr. Eden in the British Parliament and by Mr. Hull in the American Parliament. Not only the Governments who took part in this Conference were satisfied with the findings but also all the other friendly nations in the United Nations. It may well be that the atmosphere in Moscow was very favorable. It may be that on the other hand there were other reasons for this, but the Moscow Conference played a very important part in the accomplishment of our common task in the defeat of our common enemy. I don't vet realize what the results of our work will be at this Conference when it comes to an end, but I am most anxious that the result should be most favorable; but to achieve this our common efforts are required and a good atmosphere is necessary to do the work. But I must say that as regards the atmosphere of our work in $^{^{30}\,\}mathrm{For}$ documentation regarding the Tripartite Conference of Foreign Ministers held in Moscow, October 18 to November 1, 1943, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. 1, pp. 513 ff.

³¹ Cordell Hull, then Secretary of State.
32 Anthony Eden, then British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

London there are a number of things which I have felt—and which are not always favorable or helpful to our work. I am not going to give reply to any offenses on the part of anybody and I think it would be below my self respect. As usual such methods are resorted to when other methods are lacking, but this is a matter of taste. Hitler also took advantage of this but achieved no results. But I still think that we are interested in engaging in serious business and I therefore suggest that we pass to business.

Byrnes: I want to say that I recall the Conference to which Mr. Molotov referred. It did result in great good in the conduct of the war. I must say however that the task that confronts us now after hostilities are over is a more serious one. After weeks of work our nerves are on edge; however, we must not lose our patience. No matter how we may differ we must continue to have respect for each other and to have the affection we have had for each other ever since we came together.

BEVIN: As I tried to keep the right atmosphere in this Conference, if that is to be preserved there must be a recognition of each other's difficulties. I have my difficulties. One of the problems which has made my job very difficult has been that the things I was interested in have been reserved and passed over every time a difficulty is created. Therefore, if the atmosphere is to be kept favorable, then I think there should be consideration of each other's difficulties in carrying out the agenda; and except for the remark I made just now, which I think was misunderstood and which I withdrew, I think I have done my part. I have sat here hour after hour as patiently as I could, and apart from asking a few questions and trying to promote decisions I don't think I have done anything else. It's very nice to play off one's predecessors against one. I don't mind that at all. I dare say when Mr. Molotov understands me better and understands Great Britain better we shall be able to get on extremely well. All we want is to get a good peace settlement. If I have been wrong in my interpretation, if my Government has been wrong, I have made all sorts of suggestions on the side and everywhere but I do want to say when suggestions are made I think a serious endeavor should be made to understand each other's point of view; then I think the Conference can do good work. Already it has accomplished much. There are several items on the agenda affecting my country very seriously, which I have been trying to get answered. Probably we can in future find an understanding alike in regard to procedure. I have no personal feeling about anybody or anything and, in any case, I agree with Mr. Molotov to get on with the work.

BYRNES: I have come to the conclusion that we cannot make any progress with the communiqué until the protocol matter is settled. I do not see that it will be useful to continue the discussion here until we hear from the Protocol Committee. I suggest we recess until 9:30.

Molorov: I suggest that we continue our meeting and discuss the questions. We have not yet tried to discuss, and I ask therefore the discussion of the Soviet proposal of yesterday.

Byrnes: May I suggest to my good friend that I think we would really make progress by recessing until 9:00 or 9:30.

Molotov: When are we going to wind up our Conference? I must hasten to Moscow. I promised I would leave tomorrow.

BYRNES: I think if we meet at 9:30, let us stay and decide one way or the other. By that time the Protocol Committee will have reported and then we can take up the question Mr. Molotov suggests and decide it.

Meeting adjourned.

740.00119 Council/9-3045

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Assistant to the Secretary of State

[London,] September 30, 1945—7 p. m.

Participants: The Secretary Mr. Bohlen

Mr. Molotov Ambassador Gusev Mr. Paylov

The Secretary said he had wanted to see Mr. Molotov since it was apparent that all their difficulties at the Council stemmed from the same central question about future procedure. He felt that they ought to be able to find some formula which would accept Mr. Molotov's position as to the preparation of the peace treaties and at the same time give some indication to the world that broader participation would be provided for before final decision was taken on these treaties. It was for this reason that he had proposed the suggestion regarding a conference.

Mr. Molorov said that what Mr. Byrnes was suggesting was the appearance of an agreement when none existed. He saw no use in that. He felt that when we could not decide a given question it was best to postpone it in the hope of finding a future solution. He said Mr. Byrnes referred to a conference, but how could they hold a conference to consider peace treaties with Rumania and Bulgaria when the United States Government would have nothing to do with the Governments of those countries.

Mr. Byrnes said he was thinking of the work of the Council, and he felt that we ought to be able to adopt some resolution which would be in conformity with the Berlin decision, but at the same time indicate that we wished to consult other interested nations. As to the question about the Balkan countries, he felt that we could continue to consider that through diplomatic channels. He added that if some changes could be made in those governments which would afford us a basis to change our position, we would certainly consider it.

Mr. Molorov replied that the agreement with regard to procedure was of secondary importance. The United States had their point of view, the Soviet Government had theirs, but it was not a question of principle but one of secondary importance. He added that if the United States was anxious to reach an agreement in regard to a conference, then the best thing to do would be to try to get a common attitude toward the Governments of Rumania and Hungary [Bulgaria?]. Then we could agree on a conference without much trouble. In any event he suggested that they not attempt to hurry these questions, but publish the decisions we have already made, and wait until the next session of the Council, and not attempt to settle questions which were not yet ripe.

Mr. Byrnes said that he was glad to learn Mr. Molotov's views on this, but he could not see what we were going to do about the Deputies unless we could agree on procedure.

Mr. Molorov replied that if the Berlin decision was followed, the matters relating to the peace treaties would be referred only to those of the countries signatory to the armistice.

THE SECRETARY replied that he did not intend to discuss the interpretation of the Berlin decision—that was clear enough to all. He felt, however, that he had made a concession to Mr. Molotov in being willing to agree to accept his position for the future preparatory work of the Council, and that all he was asking in return was that there be some provision made for the summoning of the conference. He did not care in what form the conference was set up, but he did wish an indication of our willingness to consult other nations.

Mr. Molotov repeated that he felt that this question was of secondary nature, and that we could agree on it without trouble. He added that he had no instructions from Moscow, but he was sure his Government would not understand how it would be possible to call a conference in regard to peace treaties with Rumania and Bulgaria when the United States and Great Britain did not recognize those governments. He said he understood the position of the United States Government; President Truman had made it clear at Potsdam; but two months had passed and there was no change in the American position, which was their right. He said, however, he had some hope for the future, since soon there would be elections as a result of which there would be new governments in these countries, which should make it easier for the United States. If this was so, and it was possible for the United States to recognize these governments, then the question of a conference could be decided without trouble. He said he felt these two questions were linked up together.

THE SECRETARY said that he felt that it was too bad to link them up. In regard to recognition, he said as we agreed at Potsdam we had looked into the situation in Hungary, and on the basis of our reports had found it possible to justify our recognition of the Government. Our reports from Rumania and Bulgaria did not justify such action in regard to those Governments. He added we did not like the present situation, and wished to find some means of justifying such a step as recognition. He continued that if some change could be made in the governments of these countries, it might be a way out, but we did not feel we could accept the responsibility of approving these governments in their present state.

Mr. Molorov said that he felt that the United States position was based on a whim, and that to change the government would be a violation of the sovereignty of these states.

THE SECRETARY said he was not asking for any overthrow of the government, but some changes that would convince the world that these governments were really representative.

Mr. Molorov repeated they could not do this since it would be misunderstood and resented in any democratic country.

740.00119 Council/9-3045

Memorandum of Conversation 33

[London,] September 30, 1945—9:30 p. m.34

Mr. Bevin said he had asked Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov to come see him in order to try and work out the question of what to do about the September 11 decision and the question of the protocol. He said that the fact is we had passed a resolution and somewhere in the protocol it must be included.

Mr. Molorov said he had a suggestion to make. He said he thought since the three of them were those authorized to prepare peace treaties by the Berlin decision that they had in effect invited China and France on the 3rd to attend without right of vote on certain questions. It would, therefore, be correct if the decision of September 11 was ³³ Authorship of memorandum not indicated, but presumably prepared by Mr. Bohlen.

³⁴ Meeting in Mr. Bevin's Office, Lancaster House.

³⁵ Andrey Andreyevich Gromyko, Soviet Ambassador to the United States.

noted in the proper manner. For example, in regard to the protocol on the Italian peace treaty it should be stated in the beginning that the four countries, the United States of America, the U.S.S.R., Great Britain, and France, had invited China to attend without a vote. regard to the Balkan treaties it should state in the beginning that the three Governments signatory to the armistice, namely, the United States, the United Kingdom, and the U.S.S.R., had invited France to participate and not vote. In regard to Finland it should state that Great Britain and the U.S.S.R. had invited France, the United States of America, and China to participate and not vote. In each of these protocols he continued there would be a notation that on September 30 this decision of September 11 had been rescinded. In this way there would be the proper mention in the proper place of the decision of September 11 and the statement that the embodying powers had on September 30 rescinded that decision. He said it was obvious that France and China could not invite themselves and could not insist on the continuance of an invitation which they had no part in issuing. He said that under his proposal the general protocol signed by five ministers would contain no reference to the decision of September 11.

Mr. Byrnes said he wanted to be clear on this point and make sure that he understood Mr. Molotov. Mr. Molotov was proposing that the September 11 decision as worded should not be included.

Mr. Molorov said that this was correct although the same effect would be achieved by putting it into separate protocols. However, he was quite prepared not to make any mention of the September 11 decision in any of the protocols. But if it was mentioned as he proposed there should also be reference to its cancelation. He could not agree to its inclusion in the general protocol since he felt that the decision had not been taken by the five ministers.

Mr. Byrnes then said that looking to the future we must decide what our deputies would have to do. Would this mean that the deputies of France and China would not sit in at the discussions as their Foreign Ministers had, of course, always with no right to vote where they were not signatories.

Mr. Molorov replied that they could not. There would be four deputies for the Italian treaty, three for the Balkan, and two for Finland.

Mr. Bevin remarked that that was where the difficulty lies.

Mr. Byrnes added that he did not see why the deputies could not be given the same status as their respective Foreign Ministers had.

Mr. Molorov replied that he had already made it plain that he considered the decision of September 11 a mistake and that to continue it in violation of the Berlin decision would not be acceptable to the Soviet delegation.

Mr. Byrnes inquired whether or not the deputies of France and China could not be regarded as having been invited.

Mr. Molorov replied that there could be no agreement on that basis. He repeated that he had already said that he felt the decision of September 11 to be a mistake and in violation of the Berlin agreement. He said he put his proposal before them but he must make it plain that he could not sign any protocol embodying what he felt to be a violation of the Berlin Conference. He said, for example, if a misprint had occurred in the document it would be absurd to continue to make the same misprint.

Mr. Byrnes replied that he was merely asking in order to obtain information and not to continue the argument as to the interpretation of the Berlin agreement. He said he thought that we had just as much right to invite the deputies as we had to invite the Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Molorov repeated that the decision of September 11 was a mistake and that the Foreign Ministers had taken on a right which they did not have.

THE SECRETARY replied that he fully understood.

Mr. Molorov replied that he had at the moment only the question of drawing up the protocols in mind and that his suggestion had related only to that.

Mr. Bevin said he hoped Mr. Molotov would understand him but that in his view on Saturday night they had gone through all the proceedings and had agreed on protocols recording them.

Mr. Molotov stated that he could only agree to four separate protocols and not to one.

Mr. Bevin explained that he had in mind separate protocols.

Mr. Molorov went on to say that both Mr. Bevin and Mr. Byrnes knew what the Heads of Government had decided at Potsdam and that he felt they should not waste any more time over the rectification of one mistake which all had made. He said he was prepared to assume his share of the responsibility for this mistake but that he felt no more time should be wasted in correcting it. He said he felt they were all being stubborn in refusing to recognize a mistake. If they did not wish to correct it then they should say so openly. He added that he felt that in this Conference they had also neglected to have sufficient prior consultation between the three of them in the opening days of the Conference and that if this had been done many subsequent difficulties would have been avoided.

Mr. Byrnes said that he thought that the idea of four protocols was correct and that Mr. Molotov's suggestion of separate headings reflecting the September 11 decision was an interesting one and he suggested that Mr. Molotov put it to the Council.

Mr. Molotov said he would do this.

Mr. Byrnes observed that he thought this might be a way out of their difficulty.

Mr. Molorov then remarked, however, that he would not sign these various protocols in the presence of the representatives of any country who was not a signatory to the respective armistice terms.

Mr. Bevin said this raised the whole issue again and inquired whether Mr. Molotov meant that there could be no discussion of Mr. Molotov's proposal in the full Council.

Mr. Molorov replied that if the three of them here accepted the amendment that that would be sufficient. He then added in conclusion that he was not subordinate to Mr. Bevin and Mr. Byrnes and they were not subordinate to him and said he would submit his suggestion in writing to them. He added that he must warn his colleagues that the Soviet delegation would only consider the general protocol in the presence of the full Council.

The meeting then adjourned to join the full Council.

PROCEDURE

M. Molotov reverted to the question which he had raised at the 17th and 28th Meetings of the Council ³⁶ regarding the procedure to be followed in future discussion of Peace Treaties with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland. He again invited the Council to modify the decision on procedure which they had taken at their 1st Meeting on 11th September ³⁷ and which, in his view, was in conflict with the terms of reference laid down for the Council in the Protocol of the Berlin Conference.

A full discussion took place, but no decision was reached.

United States Delegation Minutes of the Thirtieth Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, September 30, 1945, 9:30 p. m. 38

M. Bidault in the Chair.

BIDAULT: Shall we continue the discussion of the protocol? The Protocol Committee has met and has reported an important quantity of matter. It is in one language—I shall translate.³⁹

Molorov: But I must draw your attention to the fact that we have proposed to begin the discussion of the Soviet proposal.

Byrnes: But, Mr. Chairman, I understood that we proposed that we begin with the Committee proposal; therefore I propose that we begin the Committee proposal. I understand that the protocol has been proposed—I understood that the Committee proposal was to be considered before that of any individual member of the Council.

Molotov: In view of the fact that the proposal of the Soviet Delegation has been deferred more than once, the Soviet Delegation are unable to participate in the discussion of the other question until its proposal has been given consideration.

BIDAULT: What is the wish of the Council?

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I think there must be a misunderstanding. We have a Protocol Committee; every Delegation has a member on it. My information is that the Committee has a report. If the Committee has a report, certainly the report of the Committee should be considered in preference to a request by any one Delegation.

Molotov: Unfortunately, for my part I am not able to make any other suggestion.

BIDAULT: Does any member of the conference wish to make any other suggestion?

BYRNES: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if there is not some misunderstanding. This Committee, on which the Soviet Delegation has a representative, just like all the other Delegations, has been considering the protocol and has agreed upon some proposal, and, if possible, would not my friend be agreeable to hearing the Committee; then, if any of us objects to anything in it, we must all of us agree that that Delegation could have a hearing.—Mr. Chairman, I only have learned now, have understood now what the motion is. And I am told that ³⁸ For a list of participants at this meeting, see the Record of Decisions, supra.

³⁹ Apparently reference is to the report of the Protocol Committee, C.F.M. (45)
87, September 30, p. 508.

what Mr. Molotov's motion is, is that instead of considering the protocol, we should consider the proposal that he had made with reference to peace treaties, and I know that this afternoon I agreed that tonight it should be discussed. But I certainly did not mean that it had right of way or preference over the report of the Committee. I suggest that we hear the protocol, and if there are any changes, we can give it back to the Committee. Then they can go to work, and then we can discuss the other matter.

Molorov: Before discussing the results of the work done by the Protocol Committee, the Soviet Delegation finds it necessary to again acquaint itself with the result of the meeting of the Protocol Committee. At the present—at this moment—the Soviet Delegation are not ready to discuss the results of the meeting of the Protocol Committee as they must acquaint themselves with the report.

BIDAULT: Does this mean that we should extend the meeting in order to enable each member to get further information on the matter raised by the protocol, or does it mean that we adjourn? What is the opinion of the [Soviet?] Delegation? I would like to have a clear idea of what they wish.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I am informed by our representative on the Protocol Committee that there is no difference in the text submitted by the Soviet Delegation and that already reported by the Committee, except a few unimportant things, and that there is agreement among all the members of the text of the general protocol affecting all five.

Molotov: In this case, I suggest that we first consider the general protocol, provided it is ready, then pass to the proposal made by the Soviet Delegation.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I agree.

BIDAULT: The French Delegation accepts that we should now proceed to discuss the protocol on general questions since we accepted that it be issued with the rest, but it is impossible not to agree at the same time on a formula to be inserted somewhere for the signature, on which there is a French proposal, which I read this afternoon, a Soviet proposal, and, I understand, also a proposal by the General Secretariat. I understand that Mr. Molotov agreed to go ahead with the general protocol that all five members sign. It would not cover the peace treaties.

Molotov: No objection. It is the only protocol the consideration of which was referred to the Committee. No other protocols were referred to the Committee.

Bevin: Mr. Chairman, I don't know what was referred to the Committee; we did not know what was in the Soviet draft. We adjourned in order to consider the Soviet draft. We agreed that the whole protocol should be examined with the Soviet Delegation draft, and now it is said that only one part of it is referred to the Protocol Committee. Now that I have seen the Soviet Delegation's draft which it referred, I am afraid I was somewhat dismayed. I agreed, Mr. Chairman, to the reference of the protocol, because I was told it was ready, but I understood from Mr. Molotov that the other drafts covering the remainder would be ready in time, and that the whole thing was to be considered by the Committee.

Molorov: The Soviet Delegation can only agree to the protocol affecting all five being discussed by the Protocol Committee consisting of the five of them. The protocol affecting four should be discussed by a protocol committee of four, and so on. The Soviet Delegation will not agree to any other procedure.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman,----

Molorov: At our general meeting the Soviet Delegation will no longer participate in the discussion—in the plenary session—of questions other than general questions. And if my colleagues disagree with this, then I suggest that the meeting be closed. There is no use our wasting time in empty talk.

BIDAULT: I do not think of indulging in empty talk, although we do talk much, and my recollection of what happened during the preceding meetings are not exactly so exciting as what has been said. The French Delegation is quite willing to listen to anything any Delegation has to say with the hope of avoiding having wasted all the time we have been talking in common together.

Molotov: The Soviet Delegation holds the view that during general meeting of five Foreign Ministers, we can only discuss general questions and the proposal made by the Soviet Delegation, all the other questions we cannot discuss at the meeting composed of five.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, then according to that statement [as] I understand it, the Soviet Delegation is ready to discuss the statement of the protocol as to the general proposal. This afternoon Molotov submitted the document with the protocol as he wished it considered. It has been checked, and the Soviet representative has agreed with the representatives of the other Delegations as to that general statement. I wonder if we cannot adopt that.

Molotov: I would not object to the general protocol's being discussed.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, if that be so, as the Soviet representative on the Committee of five informed the Soviet Delegation that they have gone over the changes in checking the Soviet proposal with the Committee proposal, and have agreed on these changes, I wonder if we could not agree that that general protocol as amended could be adopted? So far as the United States Delegation is concerned, when its representative has agreed to it, I am willing to agree to the protocol as it was agreed to by our representative on the Committee. I am told that it was agreed after the Soviet proposal was compared with the Committee proposal—only very little changes. All the members agreed; therefore I think we might agree that it was adopted and that the Committee go ahead with perfecting the draft of that part.

BIDAULT: What is the opinion of the other Delegations on the draft of the general protocol? Is there objection?

BEVIN: I have no objection.

Wang: The Chinese Delegation has no objection.

Molorov: Though I have not read the text of the protocol, I think the Soviet Delegation will raise no objection.

Bevin: Mr. Chairman, will there be an introduction?

BIDAULT: I would like to state the position of the French Delegation in a second. After the decision which we have just taken, we have to agree on the introduction—the preamble and text constitute a whole. I will remind you that I handed in a text which is now being modified by a Soviet proposal. The French text was:

"The above provisions have been discussed by the Council of Foreign Ministers; they are signed by the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the countries enumerated below."

Molorov: I have another suggestion to make, Mr. Chairman. It goes without saying that the Soviet Delegation will not agree to sign the general protocol unless the proposal made by the Soviet Delegation is accepted.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I will ask my good friend what difference would there be if he agreed to sign yesterday and to sign today?

Molotov: We have already stated not for the first time that we withdraw our vote from the decision of September the 11th, and that means that this decision has ceased to exist as a decision, it is cancelled. It is obvious that if anyone withdraws his voice from a decision, this decision ceases to exist as a decision. That is plain. It could not be otherwise. We know very well that the Soviet Delegation considers the decision of September the 11th to be a mistake, and how is it possible for us after this to sign a protocol which embodies that statement? And we cannot do that, and you cannot compel us to do that, just as no one can compel anyone to say what one does not agree This could not be otherwise and no collective work would be possible otherwise, and any other interpretation will only mean that we do not realize what the Council of Foreign Ministers constitutes and it is high time we realized that. All the decisions contained in the protocol are only those decisions which have been agreed to by all. It could not be otherwise, and no one can make another agree to a decision to which he does not agree. We hold that the decision of September the 11th is incorrect, and we have withdrawn our vote from the decision, and we cannot sign the protocol which would contain that decision. No one of you could do that, unless he agrees. I have finished.

BIDAULT: Does this mean that Mr. Molotov does not wish to sign the general protocol or that he asks that the text of our protocol should be altered?

Molorov: I want to say that unless an additional decision is accepted to the effect that the decision of September 11 concerning procedure is cancelled, we shall not sign any protocol. If you disagree to this then no protocols are needed. That is all.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I don't think my friend would want to insist on that suggestion. I have in my hands the Russian text that he distributed this afternoon. That text shows the text of the decision of Sepember 11.

Molorov: That will remain.

BYRNES: There ought to be no difficulty in showing just what the facts were—that on a certain day, I don't know the day, but it was about the sixteenth meeting,⁴⁰ after we had had about sixteen meetings, that the Soviet representative said he thought he made a mistake in agreeing to the decision on September the 11th, and he would no longer adhere to it.

Molotov: That's right.

Byrnes: Of course in our procedure the thing that I thought the Soviet representative would do would be to move to rescind or repeal the resolution of September 11, but he did not make that motion. If such a motion were made even now, it would be for the Council to act on the motion, and the records show what occurred. All that I am saying is that the protocol ought to show just what occurred, and if it did, there could be no reason for objection by anybody, because everybody knows the position taken by the Soviet representative now. I thought he would move to cancel or repeal it or in some way have the records show it, other than by a mere statement.

Molorov: That is what I want to say—that an error has been made and should be corrected, and the decision revoked. Otherwise, we shall not sign any protocol. Or else the incorrect item should be excluded, and no special decision would be required. Or else the decision adopted on September 11 should be deleted, and in this case no special decision revoking it would be required. I will not suggest that we exclude anything from the protocol, but unless the mistake has been put right, the Soviet Delegation will sign no protocol. No one can compel the Soviet Delegation to sign what the Soviet Delegation does not agree to, and says so openly. That ought to be clear.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, when a council adopts a resolution, acts upon it for sixteen meetings, it cannot be excluded from the record, ⁴⁰ For the American minutes of the Council's 16th meeting, September 21, see p. 371.

but that does not preclude the records showing exactly what occurred and the record should show, at some place, that on September 22 the Soviet representative informed the Council that he had made a mistake in agreeing to the resolution of September 11, and that the assent of the Soviet Delegation to that decision was withdrawn. If he wants a statement of that kind, that is the fact.

Molorov: This is exactly what the Soviet Delegation stated on September 22, and the Soviet Delegation has never renounced that statement and continues to hold—to maintain that view. That is why, this is the reason for which we shall not sign any protocol unless the decision has been revoked.

Bevin: Mr. Chairman, would it not be better to say that in the protocol, and make it quite clear, because this situation is highly embarrassing to us. The situation as I recall was that on September 22 the Soviet willingness to continue under that decision was withdrawn, and the discussion on the peace treaties was postponed. And if that was done, then we would have to consider how we could resume the discussion on the peace treaties. Could we agree to put in the protocol a statement to the effect that on September 22—

Molotov: Unless this decision is revoked, we shall sign not a single protocol.

BYRNES: Is the statement of the Soviet representative not only that he make a statement, but unless the Council revokes the decision, he will sign no protocol?

Molorov: That is right.

BYRNES: Then you will sign no protocol? MOLOTOV: I am prepared to stop with that.

BYRNES: How about the communiqué?

Molotov: Then there will be no communiqué. There is no use working on it. Unless there is a protocol, there can be no communiqué, because the communiqué must reflect the protocol.

Byrnes: I thought the communiqué might record the record of the meetings, what had been done, even though we did not have a protocol. I would like to know the views of the other members of the Council.

_ Molotov: Unless there is a protocol, we shall not participate, and not be a party to anything.

BYRNES: Then, Mr. Chairman, we find out we have no protocol, and no communiqué. Then, Mr. Chairman, may I ask my good friend from the Soviet Delegation what he would let us do about the Deputies?

Molotov: They have nothing to do.

BIDAULT: What now?

Molorov: He who is busy should go home tomorrow.

BIDAULT: What are the views of the other members of the Council, who are also busy?

BEVIN: I should like for the sake of our own Government to record the action of September 22, Mr. Molotov's having said he made an error, and the fact that the peace treaties could not be discussed after that go on the record of this meeting. I should also like that it go on the record of this meeting that I suggested this, and asked in what manner we should deal with the peace treaties in the light of that decision. And that having suggested this, we were met with an ultimatum that we had to agree to this or we could not go on. Had that suggestion been considered for a few minutes, we might have gotten over this difficulty.

Molorov: I have a statement to make on this subject:

"At the general meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers composed of five Ministers the Soviet Delegation cannot participate in discussions of questions relating to the peace treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland, because this procedure does not conform with the decision of Berlin".

BIDAULT: In the name of the French Delegation I beg to ask the Soviet Delegation what is exactly the character of this statement? Is it meant for the whole Council, or for any other use?

Molotov: I have made this statement at the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and I ask that this statement be recorded in the protocol.

Byrnes: What protocol?

Molotov: In the minutes of this particular meeting.

BIDAULT: In that case I am obliged to say that the French Delegation adheres to the decision of the 11th of September. France, being situated in Europe, considers that nothing connected with European affairs can be settled without France. I also ask that this be recorded in the minutes.

I wonder what we should do now? I wonder whether after the discussion it might not be useful to think it over a little longer and adjourn, and have a meeting tomorrow before the departures that have been announced by several members actually take place. Anyway, the French Delegation does not feel sleepy, but it is indicated that we shorten a discussion which is not useful and may be harmful.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I only want to say that this proposal to establish the Council of Foreign Ministers was proposed by the United States at the Berlin meeting of the Heads of Governments. Remembering the unfortunate experiences following the last war it was our firmest hope that we might avoid them, and that this Council might be the machinery to enable us to avoid the pitfalls of 1919. In our opinion it was the vehicle that would promote the establishment of a lasting peace on this earth. We believed that it could do the spadework, and that, meeting as friends, we could adjust difficulties, and then call in nations that had fought, suffered, and died in this war, and have them join in our work in order that they agree to the results of our efforts.

Because of that in the last few days I have urged that there would be an agreement to call a conference in order to give the nations of the world a chance to come and see what we had agreed upon before they were asked to sign on the dotted line. We have signed the armistice terms, Great Britain, the Soviet Republics, and the United States—when we signed them, we signed some of them in behalf of the other nations of the world, and the others were signed by the three Governments in the interests of other nations. That had to be done because while hostilities were on, all nations could not be expected to sign the terms of surrender. When it comes to framing the peace that would be a just peace, and no peace is a lasting peace unless it is a just peace, when it comes to that kind of peace, the nations in whose behalf we signed the armistice terms are entitled to be heard and to be present when the treaties are signed.

I hope that we could agree to call such a conference and give hope to all the peoples of the world who love liberty and love freedom. My proposal, although offered with the understanding that if it could be agreed to, I would agree to the proposal of Mr. Molotov-but I could not secure his approval. I must say that I am disappointed because we sought only to bring to a conference table our friends and our allies, not our enemies. At Berlin the Heads of Governments never dreamed of having a paper so narrowly interpreted that it would work against the interests of our own friends. If tonight we could send word to the world that those of us who represent the larger powers were going to do the spadework on the treaty and then all people were going to be invited in to say what kind of a world we were going to have in the future, there would be happiness in millions of homes. To help in this work we have come three thousand miles across the ocean with the hope we might contribute in some part to the accomplishment of our objectives. We were disappointed, but we shall not lose our interest in the affairs of the world. We shall continue to exercise all of our efforts, use all the power that we have, to help bring about a just and enduring peace on this earth.

Molotov: The Soviet Delegation holds the view that if there is an agreement with another government, this agreement should be carried out. And the Soviet Government feels that to depart from such a practice would mean undermining the prestige of such decisions and would do harm to the governments with whom the agreements have been signed. The Berlin agreement was accepted by the three Governments, and voluntarily accepted. This agreement is intended to insure peace, and why does it happen that only the Soviet Government is defending its Government's decision, whereas other governments ignore the fact that such a decision has been adopted?

Why do these other governments not regard themselves as bound to defend the decision of their governments? In order that other United Nations may believe our decisions and agreements, they should be carried out. If we do not respect these decisions ourselves, then nobody will respect them.

In the course of this war our three Governments—I am referring to Great Britain, the United States of America, and the Soviet Union, have held conferences and have adopted a number of major decisions. It was not immediately that we sometimes arrived at decision; there were sometimes disagreements on certain questions. Then we used to defer them until our differences had been settled, but once these difficulties were settled, and decisions were taken between the three Governments, we, each of our Governments, felt it their duty, and a matter of honor, to defend these decisions both in deed and in word, and to carry them out.

The Soviet Delegation prefers no new claims before our colleagues. The only thing that the Soviet Delegation prefers is that the decisions adopted by us in common and voluntarily should be carried out. Does that mean to ask for too much? Could we do otherwise? The Soviet Delegation is now compelled to come out in defense of the Berlin decision alone. The representatives of other Governments who participated in the conference at Berlin treat lightly these decisions and do not feel themselves bound by these decisions, but the Soviet Delegation feels that it defends a just cause and that it can defend this attitude with assurance, as this attitude is not only the attitude of our own, but also is an attitude which is recorded in the decision by the three Powers.

There may be cases when a decision recently adopted loses its meaning when circumstances have changed. Perhaps the British and American Governments think that the decision adopted on August 1 is no longer valid now because conditions have changed. If that is so, let them state that then. If it is necessary to change the Berlin decision, then this should be done by the Heads of Government. We Ministers are not authorized to do that—at least, as far as I am concerned as the representative of the Soviet Government, I have no authority to change or revoke the decision which was adopted by the Heads of Government.

If we carried out the decisions and agreements which we signed, then our word will be trusted, both within our states and outside of them, but if we do not carry them out, then no one will trust us. It is impossible to imagine a sadder situation for the course of the maintenance of a lasting peace than this. As long as the agreement exists the Soviet Government will carry it out honestly and constantly, and the Soviet Government will regard it as their duty and obligation to carry out these agreements—as their duty and their obligation to their own people as well as to other allied nations. Only along this course shall we work for the sake of lasting peace in the world. I have finished.

Byrnes: I cannot refrain from saying a word with reference to the Berlin Agreement. That Agreement, in providing for the discharge of the duties of the Council members, said that it would be composed of the members representing those states which were signatories to the terms of surrender imposed upon the enemy states concerned. It said further that as regards the peace settlement with Italy, France should be regarded as a signatory of the terms of surrender for Italy. And then the Berlin Agreement provided that other members would be invited to participate when matters directly concerning them are under discussion. Pursuant to that language this Council met, and on September 11 the Governments of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and the United States adopted a resolution which reads, according to the Russian text handed me this afternoon, as follows: I first read the English text of the agreement.

"All five members of the Council should have the right to attend all meetings and take part in all discussions, but in matters concerning peace settlements members whose Governments have not been signatories to the relative terms of surrender should not be entitled to vote."

That was not only an invitation which was authorized by the Berlin Agreement—it was a solemn agreement on the part of the Governments at this table. It was entered into by the Foreign Ministers of five Governments; it was lived up to for sixteen meetings. I agree with what Mr. Molotov says—I quote his words of a few moments ago, "If we carry out the agreements we make, our word will be trusted, but if we do not carry them out, no one will trust us." I speak with regret, but I cannot refrain from speaking when my Government is charged with not living up to the Berlin Agreement.

Mr. Chairman, does any one know of any reason why this Council should continue longer?

BEVIN: I don't like to make the statement, but since we are charged with breaking the Berlin Agreement—we are parties to the Berlin Agreement, and we honor that Agreement. We are, as Mr. Byrnes just said, parties to a later agreement and decision of September 11. We honor that. Both of us honor that. I regret, I might have said it the wrong way at the meeting today, I regret, but I cannot accept the view that one government can withdraw from a decision, and therefore the decision is null and void. As Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain, if I entered into that agreement on September 11 with other Foreign Ministers, and then I sought to go back on it in any way, there is only one course open to me in this country, and that is for me to resign. That is the obligation that would be imposed upon me. If I submitted to an ultimatum I should lose all respect in this country. Let me turn it around the other way. Supposing any other member government had proposed a resolution of that kind, and I accepted it—then I should have felt myself, during the whole meeting and in the future whatever consequences fell upon me, obliged to stand by it at all costs, and I can't help believing that we are being placed in a very awkward position. As I said this afternoon that a good atmosphere would be helped if we recognised each other's position. And in Great Britain this business of Parliamentary responsibility and of Cabinet responsibility and the Secretary of State acting for them is a very serious matter indeed. And I cannot see my way clear to agree to a thing one day, and then be told that I had broken the agreement because I had declined to go away from it. In my view the Berlin Decision gave the Council of Foreign Ministers a good deal of latitude to use common sense in our work, and it was not as rigid as the position now placed upon us.

In any case under the proposal, there were two proposals set before us, one from Mr. Molotov and one from Mr. Byrnes. There was a reasonable chance of compromise which would have met the Soviet position at the same time still within the framework of the Berlin Agreement give tremendous satisfaction to the claims that Mr. Byrnes has made for the people interested. And I thought that when the first point was raised there was a chance of an amicable settlement of this without destroying the resolution of September 11 or issuing ultimatums, but by applying our minds in such a way which would have found some agreement between the whole of the Governments represented here. Therefore, we feel the United Kingdom Delegation cannot leave the matter where it is. If it is impossible to get a settlement of this difficulty here about the procedure, the only course open to us is to reopen the whole question as Mr. Molotov has suggested. When the Potsdam Agreement was arrived at the war was still raging with Japan, there have been many developments since, and I personally thought on September 11, and indeed was gratified when no objection was raised to that resolution, because I thought there was a consciousness in the Council of the necessity in the light of world events to act as a Council. Therefore I had desired to make this declaration:

"The Head of the United Kingdom Government proposes to take up the matter of the preparation of the peace treaties with the other four Governments with a view to enabling the Council of Foreign Ministers to act as a Council and to arrange for a broader participation by interested governments."

There are two Governments represented here who were not at Potsdam, and I feel that in the light of developments, and my Government feel that there ought to be a reconsideration of this difficulty. Especially as one Government has refused to carry out its agreement of September 11, and to have the whole process, the procedure and action necessary by this Council to be reviewed by the Heads of the Five Governments. With respect to the broader participation, the discussions we have had on Mr. Byrnes' proposal for a conference indicates in my view a grave uncertainty as to where we stand even in the words "United Nations". If there is a United Nations organization, what is it? There are several conditions-I am not saying what it is—conditions of dispute and difference arising in each case. If we have to submit the peace treaties, to whom do we submit them? is no indication in the Berlin Agreement, except in the words "states chiefly interested". There is no definition of that—whether it is purely belligerents which are "chiefly interested" or what it is. And in order to do the good work that the Council must do in the future, it is in the interests of the Council that this matter should be cleared. As the Heads of Government made the Agreement they should settle this matter in the proper manner, and to consider a broader participation by the representatives of the countries. This is the only contribution that I can make, and it is a unilateral one, that the British Government, whatever happens here, proposes to take that action. Of course, in the light of all our differences, if instead of the British Government's taking this action, the Council of Foreign Ministers should agree to take it, I should be very happy, but I don't ask this. Therefore, we felt that without asking anyone to join us we would declare that we intended to take this step.

Molorov: When I mentioned the fact that our decisions may be revised in spite of the fact that they were adopted at one of our meetings I referred to the decisions which had not been approved and which had not been signed, but I did not refer to the decisions signed by our Governments. And moreover I stated openly that such and such a decision adopted by the Council of Foreign Ministers was in conflict with the decision adopted by the Heads of Government, and that therefore it could not be any longer valid. Under normal conditions the statements made by one of us to the effect that one of our decisions is in conflict with a decision between the Heads of Government leads to the necessity of its being revoked, and indeed we made more than once at following meetings amendments to the decisions adopted at our earlier meetings. I shall give an example of a case that occurred the day before yesterday when we changed one of our decisions.41 The four Delegations had agreed that there was an understanding reached concerning a definite decision on the repatriation of Soviet nationals. One of the Delegations subsequently stated that his understanding was different, and then one of the Delegates stated that his understanding was also different, and this was Mr. Bevin, who in reply to a statement made by Mr. Byrnes, said he had changed his mind.

⁴¹ Molotov's reference is presumably to the amendment of the Record of Decisions of the 12th meeting of the Council; the amendment was proposed by the British delegation and agreed upon in the course of the Council's 27th meeting, September 29, 11:30 a.m.; see the American minutes of the 27th meeting, p. 441.

Bevin: No----

Molotov: We did not insist on keeping the decision to which originally the four Delegations raised no objection, and only one Delegation raised it. Many examples may be cited of the cases when in the course of a conference as this, one has to change the decisions which have not been published and signed. This is a simple question.

But I must thank Mr. Bevin for his sincerity. He has made it clear He has explained the meaning of the proposal he made on September 11, and the proposal we originally accepted. The meaning of this proposal is that he considered this proposal to be the first step to alter the decision, the Berlin decision, but he did not say so when he suggested his proposal on September 11. But the fact itself is interesting and then that the British Government in the person of Mr. Bevin has made this statement—that the British Government stands for an abrogation of the Berlin decision. This question has not been raised before the Soviet Government in the past. It is only now that this question of the revision is being raised before the Soviet Government and is made public here in the presence of representatives of other governments. This constitutes a blow at our common agreement arrived at in Berlin, and can only serve to weaken the unity of the three powers which was observed in Berlin and in continuation of the course in which we had been engaged for four years. It is there that the meaning lies of what Mr. Bevin called this afternoon "the New Britain". This should be made clear, because it is the first time that Mr. Bevin stated that the British Government was dissatisfied with the decision adopted two months ago and signed by the Heads of Government, and published throughout the world.

Bevin: This is the last time I will speak tonight—or this morning—but I can't let misrepresentation go by. I did not go back on the decision about the Soviet nationals. I only questioned the draft protocol. In order to get agreement I did make a suggestion in regard to the drafting, which I did not press, but I did not go back on the decision. And to suggest that I went back on my decision is a wrong statement. There were three words Mr. Molotov wanted to take out, and I wanted to put them in. In regard to the Berlin decisions, I have stated on more than one occasion that I will observe them as long as they stand. In the course of this conference difficulties have arisen regarding which the Head of my Government proposes to consult other members, and what is wrong in stating it here quite frankly.

Furthermore, I have been willing in the discussion which has taken place to go through and finish the peace treaties on any basis in order to get peace, provided there was accord on the proposal that Mr. Byrnes put forward that I thought was reasonable. Everything is refused, and everything is rejected.

I put forward this proposal, and I am immediately charged with wrong motives and a desire to go back on decisions. What decisions, treaties and other things in this world, that as time goes on are not changed by mutual agreement. I mentioned that mistakes had been made that had to be changed. I don't mind being approached on that basis. The Council could not go on unless we had an agreement. My concluding word is this: to ask you to do something is one thing—to tell you you must do something is another thing. And I want to ask for cooperation in this Council, and so does the party I represent. I am not wasting time in this Council, or raising points of order or anything at all, and I would like that to go on record. My reputation is based on the fact that once I have given my word, I never break it. And I stand on that now, and will always stand on that. And if this Council thinks I am wrong, no one will submit to that decision more readily than I.

BIDAULT: As Chairman of this meeting—the French Delegation has something to say, but I think the fact that I am the chairman makes it incumbent upon me to hear other delegations first. If no one wants to speak, I want to speak—I feel entitled to.

The position of the French Delegation is well known. I have often stated it, not only about the Potsdam decision but also concerning the agreement that was reached on the eleventh of September. The French Government had willingly accepted to participate in this conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs in the hope that in cooperation with the other governments it could work usefully for the preparation of peace. The first experience of this Council, although the Council reached some agreements, has not altogether been crowned with success, which the French Government deplores, perhaps more than any other. The French Delegation hopes that this experience which has not been altogether happy will not stop the great powers in their efforts for peace. And it is in this spirit that the French Delegation is ready to examine favorably any ideas for calling together with the great powers the other United Nations which have participated in the war and which always have approved any effort for international solutions, and solutions of justice, of solidarity.

WANG: I think whatever differences may exist between us tonight, we are conscious of the greatest responsibility which falls on the Council, and on the shoulders of everyone. The Chinese Delegation has no suggestion or contribution to make, but would favor that further efforts should be made to see if we can't find a way out of this deadlock. Mr. Molotov suggested twice that a time should be set for the closing of the session, but his suggested proposals were not acted upon. May I suggest that the date of the closing of this session be set on Tuesday next,⁴² and we try to see whether in the next two days we can find a solution? If we agree on this suggestion, I shall leave the time of the calling of the meeting to the next chairman. I hope that Mr. Molotov and all my other colleagues will consent. The two days may not be fruitful, but in that case we will have only lost two days after the weeks we have been here.

BIDAULT: What is the opinion of the other members as to this suggestion made by the Delegate of China? Do we agree to have another meeting next Tuesday, or don't we?

Wang: I suggested that if we agreed to have another two days, that the time of the calling of the Council be left to the next chairman.

BIDAULT: I am sorry I misunderstood. The proposal of the Delegate of China is therefore that we should fix a date for the closing of this Council and that it should be next Tuesday.

Bevin: I said I would not speak again, but I am as anxious as anybody in this room to see this Council a success, and as far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to spend tomorrow and through consultations see whether any solution might be found. Then the Council could wind up.

BIDAULT: Any objections?

Molorov: The Soviet Delegation has no objection to this proposal on the condition that all parties regard this as desirable, but the Soviet Delegation wishes to state once again that they ask not to be placed in such a position that would compel the Soviet Delegation to agree to the decision of September 11, which the Soviet Delegation regards as incorrect and conflicting with the Berlin decision.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, from what has been said, I do not think it would serve any useful purpose, but if the other members of the Council think they would like to spend the day here, I would like to spend the day here. Mr. Chairman, if a day could be spent, I think it might be well to meet tomorrow night or the next morning.

BIDAULT: The Council could meet tomorrow afternoon at a reasonable hour, say 5 o'clock.

BEVIN: Would it be wise to leave the time open and try to get a settlement of this and to give us time for consideration later on to fix a definite time. Could it be left open?

⁴² October 2.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I think if we are going to stay, I think it would be well if we could announce a meeting at some time. I think it would be better to fix a time, even if we said nine o'clock unless called earlier by the Chairman.

Bevin: I suggest six.
(There was no objection)
The meeting adjourned.

Report by the Protocol Committee of the Council of Foreign Ministers 43

C.F.M.(45) 87

[London,] 30 September, 1945.

1. The Committee have met, as instructed by the Council, and have agreed upon the items to be included in each of four Protocols—

First Protocol: General Questions

To be signed by the United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United States of America, France and China.

Second Protocol: Italian Peace Treaty

To be signed by the United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United States of America and France.

Third Protocol: Bulgarian and Roumanian Peace Treaties

To be signed by the United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and United States of America.

Fourth Protocol: Finnish Peace Treaty

To be signed by the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

- 2. Each of these Protocols will be made up of extracts from the agreed Daily Record of Decisions. The distribution of these extracts between the four Protocols is shown in the attached sheets. There will be no deviation from the language used in the Daily Record of Decisions, as already approved by the Council.
- 3. The Committee have considered how the preamble to the various Protocols should be worded; and they put forward alternative drafts, for consideration by the Council. (The draft for the Fourth Protocol is a formula which can be readily adapted for the Second and Third Protocols). Alternative A was proposed by the Soviet Delegation.

⁴³ The report was discussed by the Council of Foreign Ministers at its 30th meeting, September 30, 9:30 p. m.; see the American minutes of that meeting, p. 493.

Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Documents

Note by the Senior Secretary of the Joint Secretariat (Brook) to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 71

London, September 30, 1945.

Drafts for a Protocol of the Present Conference

1. The Protocol Committee met last night, as instructed by the Council, to prepare a draft of the final Protocol.

There was a difference of view between the Delegations regarding the form in which the Protocol should be prepared. Three different arrangements were suggested:—

(a) by subject matter, as in the Protocol of the Berlin Conference and other Conferences of Heads of Governments held during the war;

(b) purely chronological, setting out in chronological order extracts from the approved Daily Record of Decisions arranged in four groups—first, general questions affecting all five members of the Council; secondly, the Italian Treaty affecting only four members of the Council; thirdly, Treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Roumania affecting only three members of the Council; and lastly, the Treaty with Finland affecting only two members of the Council;

(c) chronologically by subject matter, setting out in chronological order, but under subject headings, the extracts from the approved

Daily Record of Decisions.

2. The representatives of the Soviet Delegation said that they were under instructions to prepare a draft Protocol by dividing the Daily Record of Decisions into four groups, viz: decisions affecting all members of the Council, four members, three members and two members. They had no authority to assist in the preparation of a draft Protocol in any other form. They therefore preferred the form described in (b) above; but were prepared to collaborate in the preparation of a draft Protocol in form (c) above, if it were divided into these four groups.

The representatives of the French and Chinese Delegations, on the other hand, had no authority to collaborate in the preparation of a draft Protocol which would pre-judge the question, to be discussed by the Council to-day, whether there should be one Protocol or four. They were, therefore, unable to assist in the preparation of a draft Protocol in either of the forms in which the representatives of the Soviet Delegation were authorised to prepare it.

3. In these circumstances it was impossible for the Protocol Committee, as such, to submit any document for consideration by the Council at their meeting to-day. In order that the Council may have some document as a basis for their discussion at to-day's meeting, I put forward—on my own responsibility—alternative drafts of a Protocol—

C.F.M.(45) 72 ⁴⁴—arranged by subject matter, on the model of recent Protocols, but using to the fullest possible extent the language of the agreed Daily Record of Decisions;

C.F.M.(45) 73 44—an arrangement of the agreed Daily Record of Decisions, chronologically under subject headings, in accordance with the suggestion at 1 (c) above.

4. The Protocol Committee agreed that I should put forward these drafts on my own responsibility as a basis for the Council's discussion at their meeting to-day. Neither of the drafts has been agreed with the other Delegations; but the second (C.F.M.(45) 73) is no more than an arrangement of the agreed texts of the Daily Record of Decisions, and the first (C.F.M.(45) 72) follows to the fullest possible extent the language of the Daily Record of Decisions. Both drafts are so arranged that they could be signed, as they stand, by all the members of the Council or, if the Council so decided, could be divided into groups affecting, respectively, five, four, three and two members of the Council.

NORMAN BROOK

740.00119 Council/9-3045

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) to the Secretary of State 45

[London, September 30, 1945.]

In view of the difficulties that have arisen in concluding the Peace — Treaties, I feel that any further discussion on the Resolution of September 11th or on the proposed convoking of a Conference will be futile. The question therefore arises whether we should break on a question of procedure, on which I think we are all agreed that Molotov is strictly legally right, although morally unsound. I have thought very carefully over the situation which would arise in Great Britain and I take the view that public opinion here, if it was found that we broke on such a narrow point, would have very bad repercussions, especially at a moment when so much bilateral activity is going on.

I have had the greatest possible difficulty over the Control Council for Japan, but in order to keep common ground I have given way. I don't know how I am going to defend this when I get into the House.

That brings me down to the question of Roumania and Bulgaria which involves the question of recognition and the conclusion of a Peace Treaty and procedure. Now on the question of recognition I don't want to give way in this Conference. This was a bilateral action which I felt should be taken in order to keep in step with the U.S.A. and which I felt I could support with no prior consultation. Therefore the point now is so narrow that in my view what we ought to do is not to discuss the decision of September 11th at all, but merely to agree that for the conclusion of the preparatory work of the Peace Treaties it should merely be determined that the Secretariat for finishing the agenda on Italy the Council will consist of the 4 Governments: for the conclusion of the preparatory work on the Balkans it should consist of the 3 Governments; for the conclusion of the preparatory work on Finland it should be the 2 Governments. The Secretariat would be instructed to call the meetings accordingly during this present session. This will involve the Protocol and I cannot help feeling that Molotov had a point last night regarding the decision of September 11th; but this was only a question of presentation and I don't think it makes much difference, the deputies will follow this procedure accordingly.

What action should follow? My view is that Molotov or Stalin is not in a position to agree to anything else and therefore the only course open to us to satisfy the great public of the world is a unilateral declaration by each Government if they choose, certainly not by the four Governments collectively. For my part I am inclined to take the view that I should have to make a declaration in view of my experience at this Conference as follows:

In view of the difficulties regarding procedure which have held up the work on the Peace Treaties of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and of the representations which have been made for the participation by other interested Governments in the consideration of the Peace Treaties, the Head of the United Kingdom Government proposes to take up the whole question of procedure for the future with the other four Governments members of the Council. This will not interfere with the work proceeding in accordance with the Berlin decisions.

I should not make this Declaration until the Protocol was signed & right at the end.⁴⁶

E[RNEST] B[EVIN]

7440.00119 Council/10-145

Memorandum of Conversation 47

[London,] October 1, 1945, 10:30 p. m.

Present: The Secretary

Mr. Bohlen Mr. Molotov

Ambassador Gusev

Mr. Pavlov Mr. Bevin

Sir Ronald Campbell Mr. Paton-Smith

Mr. Molorov said he had asked the others to come in order to find some way to finish this matter in peace. He said the only way to do that was for no one to attempt to impose their decisions on another. What had been agreed on should be recorded in protocols but disagreements should merely be taken note of. Otherwise, an awkward situation would develop. He added that no international conference could impose a decision on any country except on a defeated country and everyone at this Conference was on equal footing.

The Secretary replied that there must be some misunderstanding, that there was no question of imposing any decisions on anybody. He said of course all were equal but it looked a little to them as though the Russians were asking that the others accept their wishes. He added that last night Mr. Molotov had said that the participation of China and France was based on invitations issued by the signatory powers and a reference to that effect should go into the protocols in regard to the peace treaties.

Mr. Molorov interposed to remark that only on the understanding that there should be a further notation to the effect that this decision had been repealed. In this way a mistake would be corrected.

The Secretary replied that that was precisely the question—whether all could agree to repeal the invitations. He went on to say that they had also agreed to invite White Russia and the Ukraine to come and state their views and that if the invitations under the September 11 decision were null and void did this mean that the other ⁴⁶ The final sentence is written in Bevin's own handwriting.

⁴⁷ Authorship of this memorandum not indicated, but presumably written by Mr. Bohlen.

invitations were also. For example, what would happen if Mr. Bevin decided to object to these other invitations.

Mr. Molotov said he would have that right and that there would then be no decision.

After further discussion as to the status of other information Mr. Molotov remarked that the Soviet delegation considered the invitation withdrawn due to their objection and that no one could force him to sign any agreement which he felt had been wrongfully taken.

THE SECRETARY remarked that it was likewise impossible to force him to withdraw invitations which had been issued in full conformity with the Berlin decision. He said he was regretfully prepared to withdraw this invitation if his proposal for the convoking of a conference was accepted which would constitute assurance to France and China as well as other nations that they would be brought in at a later stage on an equal footing.

Mr. Bevin said he agreed with Mr. Byrnes and in a spirit of compromise could they not agree to record what had happened. That is, leave the decision of September 11 as it was adopted in the protocol but include the Soviet reservation as set forth in their statement of September 22.48 They could then continue the consideration of the other protocols. He added that on Saturday he had agreed that the signatures on the various protocols would be limited to the representatives of the countries who had participated in the decision.

Mr. Molotov remarked that nothing could come out of such a proposal and that he felt Mr. Bevin was trying to bring on a quarrel.

Mr. Bevin replied that he would ask Mr. Molotov not to charge him with motives that he did not have when he had made the suggestion in good faith.

Mr. Molorov then said that for example at Dumbarton Oaks 49 there had been two separate sets of meetings; one, the U.K., the U.S., and the U.S.S.R.; the second, the U.K., the U.S., and China and that the general protocol had then been issued and that no one had felt offended, neither China because she was not in the first series nor the Soviet Union because she was not in the second.

THE SECRETARY remarked that Mr. Molotov apparently wished to completely reverse the Dumbarton procedure. There, there had been separate meetings and one protocol, and here there had been one meeting and Mr. Molotov wanted separate protocols. He said furthermore that everyone had known the reason why the Soviet Union and China did not want to sit together at Dumbarton Oaks because the Soviet Union was not in the Pacific war.

Mr. Molorov then suggested that they join the Council as they did not appear to be getting very far.

740.00119 Council/9-1145

United States Delegation Minutes of the Thirty-First Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, October 1, 1945, 11 p. m.⁵⁰

Mr. Bevin in the Chair

Bevin: The meeting is in order, and the business before the meeting, as I understand it, is the form and method of signing the protocols.

Molotov: My proposal is to charge the deputies with drawing up of the general protocol tomorrow. My second proposal is to accept the first proposal and close our meeting. Also, that the general protocol is ready and it should be discussed tomorrow.

BYRNES: May I ask if the protocol has been completed, and if so whether it could be given to the various delegations and they can take it to their offices here and read it, and if they approve it, they can sign it.

Molorov: The Soviet delegation has got such a draft of the protocol and they have no objection to our adjourning for a half hour in order to enable them to agree upon the draft. That will be all right.

BEVIN: Agree to adjourn for half an hour?

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I suggest we go on. I have had a good rest today. I would be glad to work awhile here. I have the document number 72,51 and if the—— Bevin: (interposing) I beg your pardon. 72 has not been checked. Molotov: I have not seen it.

BYRNES: I don't know. Suppose we ask the chairman of the protocol committee to give us what has been checked, and let us see what has been agreed to by the committee.

BIDAULT: Mr. Chairman. I must apologize. I am a beginner at this meeting. I have no special qualifications for procedure. I must

There appears to have been no Record of Decisions of this meeting. According to the British record of this meeting, not printed, the following persons were participants: United Kingdom—Bevin, Campbell, Clark Kerr, and Duff Cooper; United States—Byrnes, Dunn, Dulles, and Bohlen; Soviet Union—Molotov, Gusev, Novikov, Golunski, and Pavlov; France—Bidault, Couve de Murville, Alphand, and Fouques Duparc; China—Wang Shih-Chieh, Wellington Koo, Victor Hoo, Hollington Tong, and Yang Yun Chu. The British record indicates the time of the meeting as 10 p. m. frankly confess that I understand nothing. Therefore, I have no objection whatever to an adjournment.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest then that we take a recess for half an hour and in that half hour ask whoever is chairman of the protocol committee if he can get the draft that Mr. Molotov says he has, check it with what the protocol committee has, and see if they can give us anything that they have agreed on—in thirty minutes.

BEVIN: The position before the meeting is this—which we went through the other night, and we can finally complete it—in the form of presentation. The suggestion is now that, as I understand it, that the protocol committee should meet and project it in a form which we can understand. We will meet, then, in a half hour.

Byrnes: Right.

Molorov: The suggestion that I have made is different. My suggestion was that the deputies should be charged with agreeing upon the general protocol. I do not suggest that other protocols should be interrupted to them but my suggestion relates only to the general picture and it should be for them, and they should——

Byrnes: (Interposing) I again ask——

Molorov: The general picture, I mean. The protocol embodying the general—affecting all, and the general protocol does not deal with treaties.

BYRNES: I renew my request to take a recess for thirty minutes. (adjournment for thirty minutes here)

BEVIN: I will ask Mr. (Norman) Brook to report.

Brook: The protocol committee have not appointed a chairman so they have asked me as secretary to make their report. The committee members tonight have agreed on the draft of the general protocol on the basis of the Russian text submitted by the Soviet delegation. The English version to that draft has now been handed to members of the Council. The committee have now met again and compared this with the revised Russian text handed in by the Soviet delegation this evening. There are a few differences of substance between the Russian text and the English text which has been handed to us and these differences are marked in the copies of the English text which has been handed to the Ministers. I have been asked to draw the attention of the Council to the following differences.

First, the Russian text has a heading and preamble in the following terms. (reading here) 53

⁶⁵ The text of the preamble in the Russian draft protocol was quoted in the British record of this meeting of the Council. The text is the same as that included as "Alternative A", Annex 1 to the Report by the Protocol Committee, C.F.M. (45) 87, September 30, p. 509.

⁵² The draft of a general protocol agreed upon by the Protocol Committee was not circulated in the Council of Foreign Ministers as a formal document and a copy has not been found in the Department's files. An outline of the general protocol was circulated in the Report by the Protocol Committee, C.F.M. (45) 87, September 30, p. 508.

The first change of substance in the text which I have to draw attention to is on page one of the English text—paragraph E is omitted.⁵⁴

The second difference of substance is on the top of page two of the English text, where the first three items are deleted—(reading here).⁵⁵ Those three are deleted and there are consequential changes in the numbers.

The reason given is that they are all concerned with matters which are appropriate to the other protocols.

I should have explained that the same reason is given for the omission of paragraph E on page one, namely, that that paragraph is concerned with procedure for the discussion of peace settlements and is therefore more appropriate for the other protocols.

The only other change to which I was asked to draw attention to is at the last paragraph of all, page 11, which is changed to read as follows—(reading here).⁵⁶

Finally, I should add, within the short time available tonight, it has not been possible to check every word in these texts, but if it is adopted by the Council it will be necessary to check textually the French, English and Russian versions.

BIDAULT: It appears to the French delegation that we are in a great confusion, and the French delegation, which has not participated—as I have had occasion to point out, to the meetings which seemed to have filled up the day, doesn't know at all where we are. We are now beginning the determination of the general protocol. Wouldn't it be advisable to know the procedure that has been adopted for the whole of the protocols, because this would condition our position as regards the general protocol. It would be difficult for the French delegation to express an opinion on the preliminary protocols without knowing what would happen to the other protocols. That's all.

Bevin: The position, as I understand it, subject to correction, is that in regard to the question of members of the Council, instead of placing it in the general protocol it is intended to place it at the heads of the treaties according to the nations that it affected. I should explain to Mr. Bidault that there has been no meeting except that I ⁵⁴ Reference here is to paragraph 1(e) of the Record of Decisions of the Council's first meeting, September 11, 1945; for the text of this Record of Decisions, see Annex 1 to memorandum by the Joint Secretariat, C.F.M.(45) 66, September 29, p. 458.

⁵⁵ Apparently reference is to sub-paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of paragraph 2 of the Record of Decisions of the Council's first meeting, p. 112.

So According to the British record of this meeting of the Council, the reference here was to paragraph 3 of the Agreed Record of Decisions of the 28th meeting of the Council, September 29, 3 p. m., p. 444, which the proposal of the Soviet delegation would revise to read as follows: "The Council instructed the Protocol Committee and the Press Communiqué Committee to prepare, for consideration at their next meeting, a draft Protocol of the decisions of the first session of the Council of Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, France and China and a draft communiqué regarding the work of the Council's first session." (Council of Foreign Ministers Files: Lot M-88: CFM London Minutes) had consultation with Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov separately and I met them for a few minutes before this meeting opened,⁵⁷ which delayed the meeting, in order to see exactly what the position was. That was in accordance, as I understood, with what was decided last night in order to try and get a solution of these problems. Therefore, the only knowledge I have is what I have given, that any reference to peace settlements should be in connection with the protocols relating to peace settlements, and nothing in the general protocol.

BIDAULT: I have already indicated the position of the French delegation as regards the common decision of September 11. I am not in a position to discuss the general protocol, nor any other particular protocol without having at least cognizance of the whole of the text, and time to read it.

Molorov: Maybe somebody will clear up my misunderstanding. The question I want to ask is whether the French delegation have voted on paragraph E of the decision of September 11 or not?

BIDAULT: Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to reply for everybody, but I can reply for myself. I have voted, of course, as everybody does.

Molorov: But from the text of this decision it follows that the French delegation have no vote as regards treaties of peace. How could the French delegation have voted then?

BIDAULT: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we voted on the peace treaties; we voted on the procedure. We have together decided that we accepted not to be parties to such a decision. And I said that it was not particularly pleasant for a country which has had the history of France should have now to go out on history—it will continue to play a part in history. We have accepted—but in other words, France has voted that it had no right to vote.

Molorov: I feel that the explanation given by Monsieur Bidault runs counter to the sense of the decision as I cannot agree with it.

Wang: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words. I think we all see what a difficult position China is placed. China has been invited to be a member of this Council. China does not count as a signatory of any of the treaties we have been discussing. If the omission of this paragraph concerning the competence of the Council, means it is to be excluded from the protocol, China could not accept unless we should have an agreed plan as to what we are going to do. I understand that there is no agreed plan as to what we are going to do after adjournment of this session of the Council. Therefore, I think all my colleagues around the table can see the difficulty China is placed in agreeing to the conditions. As to what we are going to do, I will not suggest any new plan of my own. After careful study of Mr. Byrnes' proposal to call a peace conference in order to obtain wider consultation, the Chinese delegation finds that the plan is just and reasonable. I would therefore recommend that plan to my government—recommend that the proposal be given consideration, and I hope that my colleagues here will also see their way to do likewise.

Molorov: The Soviet delegation will be able to take part in the discussion of the question raised by Mr. Byrnes at a meeting of representatives of the states which signed the terms of armistice. And the Soviet delegation will refrain from the participation in the discussion of this question at a meeting composed differently.

Bevin: Now, as I understand the position now, the Soviet delegation objects to the decision taken on September 11 to be included in the official protocol.

Molorov: The Soviet delegation will have no objection to the inclusion of this in the protocol. If the additional proposal made by the Soviet delegation on September 29 to the effect that this paragraph should be amended is accepted—circulated on September 30th, so dated—number 4583,⁵⁸ the Soviet delegation thinks that the only logical course would be to put this paragraph in the three other protocols which are to be signed by the countries which signed the terms of armistice, plus France on the question of Italy, which country invited the other delegations who are mentioned in this paragraph. And in the shape as this paragraph stands now, it is illogical because it refers to the presence of five members of whom three members have the right to vote and two have no right to vote on this question.

BEVIN: My difficulty is at the moment that I have got to deal with this general protocol. I understand Mr. Molotov suggests this matter be dealt with when we deal with the other protocols. Therefore he objects that the recorded decision of September 11 is to go into the official protocol. I don't think we can do it. The decision is on our record. All we are asked to do now is to record one of our official decisions in the protocol.

Molorov: There are no official records in the protocol.

Bevin: We don't put all the unofficial record in the official record. Molorov: I cannot agree with the interpretation placed upon my words, but neither shall I go into argument, in order to save time.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I understand the representatives of the Soviet Republic to say that they had no objection, that the only thing to do would be to put this paragraph in the three other protocols but he objected to its going in this particular one. Is that your understanding?

⁵⁸ Reference here is to C.F.M.(45) 83, September 30, Resolution Proposed by the Soviet Delegation, p. 474.

Molotov: That's right. But in these other protocols I shall suggest—I shall make my amendments.

BYRNES: Well, that, Mr. Chairman, of course is—I was mistaken. My understanding was that Mr. Molotov had said that the only logical thing to do would be to put this paragraph in the three other protocols. If that is so, there would be no reason for wasting time discussing the putting it in this particular one, if it is in some other one. It would be all the same. But if it is to be amended, that is a different thing.

Molorov: I have in mind that these other protocols will contain the same decision concerning the repeal of this decision as was suggested for this protocol, but I have also in mind that the three other protocols will be drawn up by those who are going to sign them.

BEVIN: Did I understand Mr. Molotov to say that if this decision doesn't go in this general protocol there would be a reference to this decision in the other protocols?

Molorov: It is—that's right. It is half in that one—the matter; and the second half of this proposal is that the Soviet delegation will insist on these other protocols being mentioned—that this decision is revoked. Or else paragraph E can be kept in this general protocol with the understanding that it will also contain the provision that the amendment suggested by the Soviet delegation is accepted.

BEVIN: What is the amendment? I can't remember.

Molotov: Number 4583.

BIDAULT: Mr. Chairman, we are, I think, still more or less at the same point and I shall present my impressions. When shall we see the whole of the text? I am not prepared to take a decision lightly on a matter which is of the utmost concern both to myself and to the French government. I think that—I suggest that I might ask the protocol committee to conclude their work. We have already wasted much time in matters of procedure, but I think that before they concluded we might ask the people to conclude their work and make a report to us.

Bevin: Even in accordance with the suggestion of Mr. Molotov, wouldn't it be a good thing to have the whole of the protocol circulated to those members who he thinks ought to sign, in order to see the case of France and Italy. I appreciate the French position. They don't know where they will be in that discussion on the other position. Speaking for myself, as a full member of the Council on all these subjects, I confess that it would help me to make up my mind, and probably not have any differences with Mr. Molotov, if I could see the whole picture.

Molorov: It is not a question of any one of us holding a certain view. You must remember the question is that there is a decision adopted by the three Governments, and I remain on the basis of this decision; and, therefore, I suggest that we should not discuss the question of which we have not been referred to us. I feel that we should not discuss here the reading of B, if they have not been referred to us, but they have been referred to certain other States.

BEVIN: Mr. Molotov suggests that there is to be a reference in the two treaties. It makes me want to see the whole thing. If this document contains it, then there would be no reason to refer to this particular thing in any other document, except an amendment to take its place as affecting the peace treaty.

Any other observations? The suggestion before the meeting is twofold: one, an amendment to take the place of E as proposed by Mr. Molotov on the 11th of September. What is the Council's opinion?

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I understand the suggestion was made that it be eliminated, and two members of the Council have objected to its elimination. One of the members of the Council stated that he wished to see the protocol of the treaty with Italy, and I am advised by the U.S. representative on the protocol committee that in a very short time they could report that protocol to the Council and that would give the representative of France the information he desires. If the committee had thirty minutes and they had the protocol, they could then send it to our rooms in the building and nobody would be affected. Of course, I do think that five nations that are to be permanent members of the Security Council to preserve peace in the world might be able to consider it without doing any great harm.

If that can be done, that is the only way that I see that we can go forward. Have the committee meet and say that to each member of the protocol, and let them determine whether they want to discuss it or not. I am told it is quite short.

Bevin: Can we adjourn while we let the members see what the substance is? I take it that is the members affected. (General agreement here)

Byrnes: That's right.

Bevin: Could we agree to that course?

Molorov: I can only repeat one thing, and namely, that the Soviet delegation cannot agree to violate the Berlin agreement, and the Soviet delegation does not advise anyone who will sign this agreement to do likewise.

Bevin: What my suggestion was is that those who are strictly affected by the Berlin agreement—take the Italian treaty—should, before they were asked to take a decision on this, see what is going into the Italian treaty.

Molorov: I think that under the Berlin agreement, everything that relates to the treaty of peace should be decided only by those States who are signatories to the armistice terms, and I therefore think that we should not discuss any questions relating to the treaties here.

Of course, peace treaties as well as protocols relating to them may be discussed, but the Soviet delegation will be unable, in this case, to participate in the discussion of this question. I would suggest that the parties concerned should get together separately to discuss the questions relating to, for instance, the peace treaty with Italy, and then the same should apply to peace treaties with other countries; and I have in mind only those who are signatories to the armistice terms. If we wish to expedite the matter, then we should act in accordance with the Berlin agreement, and the Soviet delegation cannot be a party to the breach of this agreement.

BEVIN: Is it understood that we adjourn for half an hour and let the countries affected see what is in the treaty?

Molotov: No objection.

BIDAULT: I do not understand what is going on, I must confess. A few moments ago it was said that the five States would be asked to take part in the discussion of the peace treaties, and understood well the formula proposed by Mr. Molotov for inclusion into the protocol. We cannot accept that a member should be excluded, when there will be discussion of a given question. On the other hand, I have already stated, and I maintain, that I wish to see the whole of the text, and not only the general protocol, or the protocol on Italy. Will those texts be ready tomorrow? If such is the case, the French delegation will be prepared to examine them.

Byrnes: Well then, I understand there is no objection to a recess for a half hour?

BIDAULT: It is the only thing to which I have no objection so far. (Laughter)

(Recess for half an hour) 59

(Re-convened at 2:30 a.m.)

Bevin (Chairman): We have handed to us certain documents in regard to the Italian peace treaty. The original—(inaudible)—of September 11 is not, in my opinion, correctly stated.

Molorov: We are not going to discuss the general protocol-

BEVIN (interposing): Please let me finish, if you don't mind. I happen to be Chairman. On September 11, we extended an invitation to Dr. Wang to be present and take part in our meeting. And in paragraph two it says the protocol is hereby revoked. Therefore, the position of our guests at this table is affected by this question of revoking paragraph E of September 11. Therefore, what the Council must decide before the rest of the Ministers affected by these treaties continue with it, is whether they revoke in the main issue this paragraph E and withdraw the invitation extended to our colleagues.

Molorov: My suggestion is this. It is half-past two, and I suggest that in view of the late hour we close our meeting.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, can't we get this through? We have waited for the paper to be presented. Now it is presented. Can't my friend stay a little while and see if we can't dispose of it one way or the other?

Molorov: It is my request that we close this meeting, in view of the late hour, and we may set an hour in the morning or in the afternoon. I suggest that we request our present Chairman to make arrangements with the other three as to the hour to be set for our next meeting tomorrow, or the Russian delegation will be prepared to accept any hour beginning from six o'clock in the morning. (Laughter)

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I only want to say this: that all of this day we were unable to meet. I am willing to stay as long as there is any hope of our accomplishing anything, but I really do not think—it has been days and days upon protocol. I think we ought to meet early so that we can dispose of this matter one way or the other tomorrow.

Mr. Bevin: What are the wishes of the Council? Have we any proposal to adjourn?

Molotov: My request—suggestion is that we request the Chairman to set an hour tomorrow for our meeting, to deal with both the general protocol and others.

BIDAULT: I shall only repeat, Mr. Chairman, what I have already said, that I should like to be in a position to see all the protocols together, so that I can take a position on that.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I don't think that we should have tomorrow this situation that we had, for the last two reasons [sessions?]. When I left the discussion, the protocol committee goes out for thirty or forty-five minutes and brings back part of the papers; the protocol committee ought to be given any suggestions which any delegation has, and let the protocol committee bring the protocol so that it can all be considered at one time. For the meeting to adjourn for thirty minutes, waiting for the committee to get the documents, is not going to help us to get through with our business.

Bevin: I suggest the protocol committee meet at 9:30. We meet at 11:00. The first item to decide will be, then, whether we would revoke the invitation to our colleagues. That will then settle—(inaudible). Shall we adjourn?

Molorov: I can't associate myself with the proposal made by the Chairman because this proposal will result in a breach of the decision.

BEVIN: But I only submit that that decision is still on the books. And can we revoke it? Which means we say to our friends: the invitation we extended to you, that you can't vote, is still standing and until it is revoked we can't—that must be decided first.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be just as well for us to discuss it now and settle it, because it would determine other questions. It is necessary that the protocol committee should have information as to the views of the Council, if it is to do its work. There isn't any question that the Council has a right to extend an invitation under the Berlin decision. The language is: "The members will be invited to participate in matters directly concerning them, or under discussion". We all agreed that four would invite the representatives of the Chinese Government to participate. The Italian treaty, I mean. The question now is whether we shall withdraw that invitation if one—that can be decided very quickly, and we should decide. Speaking for the U.S. delegation, I do not want to withdraw the invitation.

Molorov: The Soviet delegation cannot participate in the discussion of this question. It is now about three o'clock. We shall recess, then, until the hour of our meeting tomorrow?

Bevin: Well, if one delegate says he is not in position to discuss it, I cannot force it.

Molotov: The Soviet delegation asks that this question be postponed.

Mr. Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to postponing it, but I have it understood that we are going to take it up tomorrow morning as the first order of business and dispose of it one way or the other. I would suggest that we meet at eleven o'clock, and that the pending business shall then be continued. All right. Agreed.

Bevin: Well, then, the protocol committee will meet in the morning. The deputies' committee still have some things outstanding, but the first order of business tomorrow is the settlement of this problem.

Molotov: I cannot accept this interpretation. I suggest that we discuss this question later also tomorow.

Bevin: What question?

Molotov: We shall discuss the question tomorrow of the protocol—of the protocol committee—and in what business we have to engage.

Bevin: But let me be clear. As I understand it, we adjourn the question of whether the invitation to our friends will be withdrawn, that we made September 11. Therefore, we take up the question on the same issue as we leave it tonight. 11:30—11:00 o'clock in the morning.

Byrnes: Is that agreed?

(Agreed, and recessed at 2:55 a.m. until tomorrow.)

740.00119 Council/9-1145

United States Delegation Minutes of the Thirty-Second Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, October 2, 1945, 11:10 a. m. 60

Mr. Molotov in the Chair

Molorov: May we begin? No definite procedure was decided yesterday for our discussions today, and I want to make a suggestion. I suggest that four protocols should be drawn up, over the respective signatures of five, four, three, and two, and the protocols should embody only the agreed decisions.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, you mean all the agreed decisions?

Molorov: Only those that have been agreed upon among us. And I want to make a reservation, in order to make myself clear. The Soviet delegation will agree only to those agreed decisions which are in accord with the Berlin decision. It means that there should be no decisions, seeing that some participate with decisive vote and others participated, and others had no right to vote; and as there is no such stipulation in the Berlin decision, we cannot agree to any decisions of that sort. I have finished. Any observations?

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I agree to the first part of Mr. Molotov's statement that there be four protocols, and that the protocols should embody the agreed decisions. We may as well be frank about it, and come down for the discussion of the question. According to the minutes we agreed to last Saturday, and according to the knowledge of everyone at the table, on September 11 there was an agreed decision. I want to know whether Mr. Molotov means that that shall not be included in the protocol?

Molotov: We can't agree to its being included. We disagree with —— it, and no one can force us to agree. We can't violate the Berlin decision.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, certainly no one can force anyone at this table to agree to a decision, and the sooner we all realize that, the ⁶⁰ There is no Record of Decisions for this meeting. According to the British record of this meeting, not printed, the participants in the meeting were as follows: United Kingdom—Bevin, Campbell, Clark Kerr and Duff Cooper; United States—Byrnes, Dunn, Cohen, Dulles, and Bohlen: Soviet Union—Molotov, Gusev, Novikov, Golunski, and Pavlov; France—Bidault, Couve de Murville, Alphand, and Fouques Duparc; China—Wang Shih-Chieh, Wellington Koo, Victor Hoo, Hollington Tong, and Yang Yun Chu.

better. No one can force you to agree. And no one can force the United States to agree.

In good humor, let us look at what occurred. On September 11, four of the members of the Council, pursuant to the Berlin agreement, invited China to participate in the meetings when the Italian treaty was under discussion. China did participate, and the agreed minutes a will show that Dr. Wang was Chairman of the meeting and extended the invitation to Yugoslavia and other countries—Italy and other countries, to send its representative there, to be heard on the Italian treaty. Therefore, the representatives of many countries know that in the deliberations of this Council the representative of China was participating and was acting as Chairman during the consideration of the Italian treaty. That was the solemn agreement. That did not have to be signed.

When we at this table on the negotiations with each other agreed, certainly those agreements stand with all of our Governments behind them, and it is not necessary to have a signature. That invitation was extended under the language of the Berlin agreement, reading that "other members should be invited to participate when matters directly concerning them are under discussion". The Berlin agreement further said: "The Council may adapt its procedure to the particular problems under consideration". Now the proposal is made, two weeks after the invitation was extended, accepted and signed—the proposal is made to withdraw the invitation.

I ask my friend to consider for a moment the embarrassing position we would be in. We issued a communiqué, by agreement of the Soviet representatives as well as all the other representatives back on the—what date?—on September 14.62 That communiqué told the world this—now I read from the communiqué: "The Council began its discussion of terms for a peace settlement with Italy. It was agreed that all the United Nations at war with Italy would be invited to submit, if they wished, their views in writing on this subject. It was also decided that the President of the session, Dr. Wang, should extend on behalf of the Council, invitations to Yugoslavia, Italy, Australia, Canada, India, New Zealand and South Africa, each to nominate a representative, if they so desired, to attend the meeting of Foreign Ministers to be held on Monday, September—etc., etc.,—frontier."

Now what we are asked to do is to tell the world that that was not true, when in fact it was true. Of course, we can't do that.

Then the other proposal is, when it is referred to by this—Mr. Molotov properly—as an invitation, and yesterday he suggested that at the head of each chapter referring to peace treaties there should be a notation that, in his language, we four invited the Chinese representative to take part and the Chinese representative did not participate in the decision, he was only invited to be present. Mr. Molotov further suggested that the protocols for the Balkan states should go as follows: Great Britain, America and the Soviet Union invite to be present in the discussion of the agenda with French and Chinese representatives. It would follow from this that they will only be present at the discussion of the Balkan questions, whereas the questions are to be settled by the host who had invited them.

⁶¹ Apparently reference is to the record of the third meeting of the Council, September 14, 11 a. m., p. 158.

⁶² For text of the communiqué released to the press by the Council of Foreign Ministers on September 14, see Department of State Bulletin, October 14, 1945, p. 564.

Now that language shows that Mr. Molotov agreed that they were invited and they had the right to invite them, under the language of the Berlin agreement, because he wouldn't have suggested putting into the record that they had been invited if under the Berlin agreement no such invitation could be extended. Now Mr. Molotov has stated to me that when he suggested that, he intended that it should be done, provided there should be a note—this September 11 agreement should be excluded from the record, or some proper notation be shown, that it was revoked. That does not affect in the slightest his belief, and my belief, that under the Berlin agreement we have the right to extend the invitation which we did extend. For these reasons, the United States have joined with the other Governments, the Soviet Union and Great Britain and France in extending the invitation. The invitation having been acted on, the world having been advised of it, now when Mr. Molotov proposes to withdraw it, I cannot agree to withdraw that invitation.

Molorov: I must add that the interpretation placed by Mr. Byrnes upon the point of view of the Soviet delegation does not correspond to its point of view. Mr. Byrnes has made a statement that it is impossible to revoke the decision, but I have before me the proposal made by Mr. Byrnes revoking these very decisions, on condition that the proposal for the convocation of the Conference is accepted. You seem to have forgotten about the fact that you proposed to revoke the decisions. I see that Mr. Byrnes does not value very highly this proposal, but he seems to wish to obtain something for its being—as a result of its being revoked. Of course, it is a business-like approach. (Laughter)

For the good payment, Mr. Byrnes agrees to revoke—renounce this decision, and forget about China. I stand at the question [sic] of the conference in these important questions, and the suggestion is correct in principle in my opinion; but I am unable to act upon it until I have reported it to my Government in person. This is the suggestion that I want to make.

 $^{^{\}rm e3}$ Apparently reference is to the proposal by the United States delegation, C.F.M. (45) 84, September 30, p. 475.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, then I have an addition to make, and the addition is this, that when my good friend, the Soviet representative, took this position which has occupied most of our time for the last ten days, in the hope of arriving at a compromise proposal I told him I was willing to agree to that proposal that he has in his hand, and from which he read, provided that it would be only a part of the proposal and the second paragraph would provide for a conference. But my friend knew the difference is that the proposal I was making was one for discussion and adoption by all members of this Council, and before it was proposed it was shown to the representative from China and the representative from France. It is an entirely different thing, asking the Council to agree on something and one man coming in and saying to the Council, "I want this resolution revoked. I want the invitation withdrawn, and therefore it must be withdrawn without agreement on the part of anybody but me."

Now, one thing more. My friend refers to the fact that the conference proposal, which I offered, he agrees to in principle. There has not been a time in ten days that we could not have reached an agreement, if he had agreed to accept the proposal which he says he is in accord with in principle. France and China were prepared to make sacrifices of their views. Great Britain was willing to go along. And if my friend now, having had a week to think about it, can agree to that conference proposal, then we, in the spirit of concession, agree to the proposal that he made, and this Conference can end in some harmony and some hope for the future. I wonder if there is any chance of my friend being able to reach that—make that concession if the rest of us make a concession to his proposal on the first paragraph?

Molotov: I see that you now, Mr. Byrnes, are ready to revoke this decision; but he wishes to obtain something in return. Now if I were willing to accept that—to agree—if I was—I would be willing to agree—if I was entitled to decide upon this question without my personally reporting first to my Government. (sic) 64

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, but that is true. I am willing to state—to agree to the language proposed by the Soviet representative as to the September 11, provided at the same time we say to the world that France and China and Yugoslavia and Bulgaria and every other nation that was at war could be invited. My friend understands the proposal, and in good humor I am now talking to him to see if he can reach a concession. If we can't agree on that, then we may as well realize that we are not going to agree to withdraw the invitation or to narrow the participation of France and China without assuring them, at the same time, that they will come in before there is a peace treaty signed, in full participation or equality with all the rest of us. I think, then, we may as well agree that until there is an agreement that a conference will be called to which these Governments will be invited, there can be no agreement to change the September 11 invitation to France and China.

Molotov: I am in position to state in advance that the Soviet Government will not agree to the convocation of this conference, if the Berlin decision is violated. We are drafting now our protocols and we fail to finishing the drafting (sic), but until there are protocols signed, there are no decisions. It is impossible to prepare a draft protocol with [without] a decision. As long as the decisions have not been signed, they do not exist as decisions. The Berlin decisions, they are signed and they therefore constitute real decisions. What we are discussing now are only—is only a draft of decisions. To everybody here it should be perfectly clear that the only decisions which we can adopt are the decisions agreed to by five—by all of us. And unless a decision is agreed to by all of us, we cannot record it in the protocol and it can remain only as a draft decision, and as such let it remain there.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I want earnestly to ask my friend not to insist on that position, for this reason. If we say that there is no decision until it is signed, we put ourselves in a very embarrassing position before the world. During this Conference we decided to authorize the Chairman to send out invitations to all the United Nations inviting them to file statements of their views. It happened that on that day the representative of France was the Chairman. Now, in response to that invitation which was sent as the result of the decision here, the governments of the world have already answered. I have here copies of five or six answers from governments, replying to an invitation sent out as a result of our decision. Now, I only submit that we can't well tell the governments that that letter should not have been sent out because there was no decision, inasmuch as there was no signature, and ask them to withdraw their answers.

Molotov: I have not raised and I am not raising this question.

Bevin: May I interrupt to ask a question? (Laughter) Do I understand that any decision not included in the protocol means a draft decision?

Molotov: What we have signed we will constitute a decision, and the rest will remain drafts.

BEVIN: We simply leave it as a draft?

⁶⁵ The Council of Foreign Ministers at its fifth meeting, September 15, 1945, decided to invite various of the United Nations Governments to present their views in writing regarding the Italian Peace Treaty; see the record of the fifth meeting, p. 186.

⁶⁶ For a list of countries which submitted their views regarding the preparation of the Italian Peace Treaty, see footnote 20, p. 187.

Molotov: I think everyone will guess right as to the interpretation being laid upon such a situation. Any more observations?

BIDAULT: The position of the French delegation is very simple. I have stated it already several times, and it hasn't changed. We adhere to the agreement reached on the 11th of September, which has applied for a certain number of days, and if any new proposals have been made, the French delegation has never expressed any approval of them. The French delegation has stated here that it would view favorably the idea of inviting the United Nations to participate in the discussions of the peace treaties. It is in this spirit that I associate myself with what Mr. Byrnes said, concerning the maintenance of the invitation extended to China to participate in the discussion.

Molotov: Anyone wishes to comment?

BYRNES: I have no comment to make. Mr. Chairman, has the protocol committee reported?

Molorov: Last night we began the discussion of the protocols, embodying general decisions. Perhaps we may entertain that now?

BYRNES: I thought that is what we were going to do?

Molorov: I suggest that we finish this job and sign at least the general protocol, to begin with.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, what would be done with the other protocols then?

Molorov: And then let us pass on to the other protocols? In accordance with the proper procedure, as laid down——

BYRNES: (interposing) Mr. Chairman, I really don't think there is anything in the Berlin decision to cover the protocol business. The only thing the Berlin decision says is this: It says "Its immediate, important task shall be"—"The Council shall be authorized to draw up, with the view to the submission to the United Nations, a treaty of peace." We must stick to the Berlin treaty. And it says that the immediate task is to take up the treaty of peace. The Berlin agreement did not say plural task, it said "its immediate, important task"—one task—to take up the treaty first.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the protocol committee has completed the consideration of the other parts of the protocol and if they have, it would be good to ask if they would submit it so the delegates could see it.

Molorov: I have no objection to hearing the report of the protocol commission, but the Berlin decision stipulates that the question of the treaties of the peace should be settled by certain countries, and I suggest therefore that the report of the protocol committee should be heard by the representatives of these certain countries, and that the time of our other colleagues should not be taken up by the job we have got to do. We countries who are signatories to the terms of the armistice should not violate the Berlin decision.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I am going to make a new proposal, 67 to see if we can make any progress. Why can't we agree to have this protocol state the actual facts as they occurred? Let the September 11 paragraph remain. On September 22 set out your statements in full, that you believe it was in violation of the Berlin agreement, therefore you object to the participation of the governments which in your opinion were not entitled to participate. Then, at the head of each one of the four protocols, have the notation that my friend suggested yesterday afternoon, as to who participated in response to the invitation, and it is not necessary for us to discuss these treaties. Let us sign those papers, when they come back here, without any discussion, and leave open, then, for decision hereafter, the question contained in the proposal submitted by Mr. Molotov with my amendment as to what shall be the future participation. Then in the protocols, four of them, there will be no one country to show participation in violation of what Mr. Molotov believes to be the right procedure.

And then, as to the future procedure, my friend says that as to the conference he wishes to personally consult his Government, and whenever he has had time to do that he can agree, or agree with the amendments. Then his proposal, with my proposal calling for the conference, would become the governing procedure for the future. In the meantime, the deputies could attend to such matters referred to them as are of a general character and do not involve consideration of peace treaties, and await advices as to our ability to agree on the two proposals to which I have referred. If we were unable to agree, then some other procedure will have to be found for making the peace. If we did agree, the deputies could go to work in accordance with the new procedure that is arrived at. That would involve no violation of the Berlin agreement but it would demand sacrifices by all.

I do not know what view would be taken of it by the representative of China and the representative of France. I would hope that they could find it possible to go along with us, once there was an assurance of a conference at which France along with other governments would participate on terms of equality—France and China.

Molorov: I suggest that we follow the tested method of drawing our protocols in Berlin, Crimea and Moscow, and at our Conference. That is the way protocols should be drawn up, embodying all the agreed decisions. I made that suggestion at the very beginning of the meeting this morning, and I regard this as the tested method of adopting decisions by our heads of Government made by the Ministers of Affairs. The only difference would be that not one but four agreed protocols would be drawn up.

⁶⁷ The Secretary's proposal was subsequently circulated to the Council as a memorandum by the United States delegation, C.F.M. (45) 92, October 2, p. 556.

I shall cite an example from the experience at the Berlin Conference, and many similar examples can be given. It was at the meeting of the Berlin Conference that the Soviet draft regarding the Ruhr area ⁶⁸ was under discussion, and the decision was adopted to refer that draft to the Council of Foreign Ministers. At the last meeting of the Council, Mr. Byrnes proposed that the draft should not be referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers, and the Soviet delegation agreed to this and the draft was excluded from the protocol. ⁶⁹ I suggest that we follow these wide practices, and that we record in the protocols only what has been agreed upon among us; and that we have four protocols embodying what has been agreed upon among the five, then among four, three and two. This procedure was, up to now, followed by the preceding conferences, and I think that these practices should be kept in this Conference as well.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I think we can agree on what happens under those circumstances. At Berlin, when we were working on the protocol, not once but three or four times a proposal was made that we agree not to publish a thing in the protocol. I remember Marshal Stalin proposing, near the end of consideration of the protocol, that we leave out this sentence, and we agreed. Therefore, it was proper to leave it out by general agreement. But this is a different proposal that you have here. You want to leave something out without any agreement.

Now at Yalta, my recollection is that an entirely different situation existed, and in the discussion of reparations the other participants insisted upon certain language and the British delegation objected to the language, and Mr. Churchill said that he would have entered in the protocol his reservations. When the Soviet delegation made the proposal and wanted the statement in the protocols, the U.S. delegation was willing to go along with them. Therefore, it was set up as number—paragraph four. After setting it up, then we had his statement. The British delegation was of the opinion that pending consideration of the reparation question by the Moscow Reparations Commission, no figures of reparation should be mentioned, and the Soviet delegation and the U.S. delegation insisted on the paragraph going in. The British reserved their position.⁷⁰ And that's all that rations, see Foreign Relations, The Conferences at Malta and Yalta, 1945, pp. 978–979 and 982–983. For Prime Minister Churchill's statement of reservation regarding the inclusion of specific figures for reparations, see the records of the Seventh Plenary Meeting of the Crimea Conference, February 10, 1945, ibid., pp. 901–903, 909, and 914–916.

should be done here, following the wise rule that you suggested of the past.

I submit to my good friend that it would be good to follow this procedure, because it would give to him the same reservation that the British reserved for themselves at Yalta. My friend will remember that at Potsdam the Prime Minister then representing Great Britain referred to this and argued his position, so that in the future you could refer to the protocol similarly signed, and argue openly.

Molotov: I feel that the example cited by Mr. Byrnes does not suit. Everyone of us has the right to make a reservation, and that cannot be challenged. But the question is whether we are entitled to make any reservations or decisions which will run counter to the decisions adopted by the three Heads of Government. I feel that we are not entitled to make any reservations or decisions which will conflict with decisions adopted by the Heads of Government.

The reservation made by Mr. Churchill at the Crimea Conference did not meet with any objection, as it did not conflict with any agreements that were being discussed. But a different thing is being suggested here. The proposal is to record in the protocol what will conflict with the decision of the Berlin Conference. We cannot do it. We have no right to do it. Therefore, I suggest that we record only such agreements as have been agreed upon by us, and as do not conflict, therefore, with the Berlin decision. Otherwise we cannot, and decisions which have been agreed upon here by us will only be the decisions that are in accord with the Berlin decision.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, everybody agrees with that, and everybody says it is not in violation of the treaty. There is only one that says it is in violation of the agreement.

Molorov: Up to now there have been no decisions recorded at any of the conferences, which met without objection on the part of any one of us.

BYRNES: There were two of the Governments that adopted the Berlin agreement saying that it is not a violation of the Berlin agreement, and the record shows here that in the former case, when the Heads of Government were involved, when one Government did not agree with the decision, they stated their reservations, and would amply protect the view that my friend has about this matter.

Molotov: I find it necessary to remind Mr. Byrnes of what he said a few days ago. In the presence of Mr. Bevin, Mr. Byrnes said that the interpretation placed by the Soviet delegation upon the Berlin decision was a correct one, but that in addition there were certain views—in the course of the conference there were expressed certain views on which a wider interpretation could be placed; but he stated quite definitely that the interpretation of the Soviet delegation was correct, and Mr. Bevin disagreed with him.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, my friend is mistaken. I think that when we call his attention to it, he will agree. I stated that under the interpretation of that language that my friend was right to this extent, that France and China did not have the automatic right to participate when they were not signatories, without any invitation, but I called attention then, and have day after day until I am really tired of saying it, that the very next sentence in that paragraph said that other governments could be invited, and that on September 11 we had invited them, and yesterday afternoon my friend was agreed that they had been invited and was willing to have that statement made at the top of the treaty. May I add one thing more, in the hope that my friend could make the reservation, if he wished to do so, in accordance with the precedent established by Mr. Churchill.

Molotov: No one has such a right as to be able to agree to a reservation conflicting with the decisions of the Heads of Government, and no one of us is authorized to do that.

BYRNES: I doubt that it will be quite persuasive, but I did want to suggest that my friend could ask to have inserted in the protocol a statement of what occurred—which I would call substantially this: on September 22 the Soviet delegation stated that it withdrew its assent to the decision of September 11, and further stated that in its opinion the decision of September 11 violates the Berlin agreement and does not bind the Soviet delegation or the Council. Thereafter, there was no further discussion by the Council on the terms of a peace treaty during the period covered by this protocol.

Molorov: I want to make another suggestion. The suggestion is that at this meeting only one decision should be adopted. The representatives of the U.S.A., Great Britain, U.S.S.R., France and China on the protocol committee should be instructed to draw up a protocol embodying the agreed decisions of the five Ministers.⁷¹ Any observation?

Bevin: Is that the whole proposal?

Molorov: That is the whole proposal—for this meeting.

Bevin: As a preliminary suggestion, in order to try and help the settlement of this thing, there have been so many suggestions made, I wonder whether we could take the four protocols which have been drawn up strictly on the basis of the Berlin protocol, and divide it into four parts, and draft the protocol on that basis and add a general paragraph setting forth what is the dispute on procedure, and indicating whether there are any questions left unsettled on the basis to be discussed between the Heads of Governments. This is a way, I think, for the Heads of Governments to settle it. The difference ⁿ Molotov's proposal was later circulated to the Council as C.F.M.(45) 88, October 2, p. 555.

in the two texts is that it is set up under the heads of the subjects, and the other one, which the difficulty is about, is drawn up on the question of the Soviet delegation, I think in chronological order. If we were agreed that this text difficulty could be referred to the Heads of Governments, I think that might be a great help to Mr. Byrnes' suggestion, and all the other proposals could be considered. If we adopted Mr. Molotov's proposals, we are in practically the same position that the protocol committee recommended. I make this suggestion purely tentative and preliminary.

Molorov: Anyone wishes to comment? No other observations? So we have three proposals before us. The Soviet delegation is willing to agree on one condition: namely, that we do not violate the Berlin agreement.

BYRNES: The U.S. delegation will agree on one condition, that we do not violate the Berlin agreement.

Molotov: Very happy to hear. (laughter)

Bevin: The British delegation would like to know what is the correct interpretation of the Berlin agreement? (more laughter)

BIDAULT: The French delegation actually have no views to express concerning the meaning and interpretation of the Berlin declaration; but, of course, it abstained from any comment on the statement which has been made here.

Wang: The Chinese delegation—(inaudible)—therefore he thinks that—(inaudible)—in this matter of procedure—(inaudible)—we shall have no objection—(inaudible).

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question——

Molotov (interposing): Who among us here has the decisive vote on the question of the Berlin conference?

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, we are all equal.

Molotov: It is news to me. Mr. Bidault has insistently been pointing out that he does not regard the decision of the Berlin conference as a decision. He was right.

BYRNES: I think I have heard him say something to that effect. (laughter) I meant those who signed the Berlin decision were equal.

I have no other suggestions to make. I would like to ask my friend if he would give us any idea how long it will take him to discuss with his Government the questions of accepting the proposals that I made as to the conference.

Molotov: I think this question should be the subject of discussion at a special meeting of the Big Three.

Byrnes: Wouldn't my friend agree that even under his interpretation of the Berlin agreement, in convoking a conference some others should be permitted to participate? Molorov: I can say only one thing now, that we have participated in such meetings as will be in conformity with the Berlin decision and will not violate the Berlin decision. Any other observations?

BYRNES: No.

Molorov: I suggest that we have the meeting adjourn to the next time. (laughter)

Byrnes: What time?

Molotov: I leave that to the decision of the Chairman.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, we can have some lunch here. If they are going to continue this day after day, we might provide for getting lunch.

Two o'clock?

Molotov: No objections to continue our meeting until two o'clock.

BIDAULT: I have, naturally, no objections to meeting my colleagues. Yet, plain, may I ask what is going to be the agenda?

Molorov: My suggestion is that we should continue discussion of the protocol affecting the five Ministers.

BIDAULT: In this case, might I suggest that it would be useful that the various suggestions on the table should be circulated in writing?

Molorov: I have listened to them, and I remember them very well.

BYRNES: I think I do.

BIDAULT: My memory is less good than yours, and I remember well the custom is that written texts should be produced, and I think in the memories of each delegation.

Molorov: Of course, it is a rightful suggestion and we are obliged to comply with it, and I shall submit my proposal in writing and ask from Mr. Bevin and Mr. Byrnes whether they will be disposed to do likewise?

BIDAULT: Thank you.

Molorov: It is simply my duty. There is nothing to thank for me about it.

Bevin: I didn't make a proposal. I made preliminary remarks which I thought might provoke comment of what is needed.

BYRNES: I made two or three, but I will try and decide which one of the three is the best.⁷² (laughter)

BIDAULT: I only ask for the right one which you are maintaining.

Molotov: On the part of the Soviet delegation, we will transmit our proposal, which seems to be a good one.⁷³

United States Delegation Minutes of the Thirty-Third Meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, London, October 2, 1945, 3:10 p. m. 74

Mr. Wang in the Chair

Wang: The meeting opens. We have the Soviet proposals and those of the American delegation, and my colleagues probably have these BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to add to what I said this morning.

BIDAULT: I only find, Mr. Chairman, that I understand there are three proposals, and I have nothing to add to what I stated this morning.

Molorov: I have not yet received the Russian translation of the United States' suggestion.⁷⁵ Neither have I received any text of the British proposal.

Bevin: I said before lunch that I made my suggestion as a preliminary suggestion, and as it doesn't appear to have been accepted, I wouldn't circulate it; so I didn't circulate it.

WANG: The American proposal is not new. On Sunday night-(inaudible)—on my motion that it come to agree to postpone another day so as to see whether we can find a way out of this deadlock. Suggestions have been made now by all sides. There is still no agreement. If my judgment is not wrong—in spite of the fact that arguments have been made on all sides there is little possibility of agreement between us. It is certainly to my regret, and I am sure to the regret of us all. Now, I don't know whether it will be useful to continue meeting and to talk. I am doubtful whether it is useful to further continue these meetings, but my observations might be all wrong. Therefore, I am permitting myself to ask all my friends here—Mr. Molotov, Mr. Bevin, Mr. Bidault and Mr. Byrnes—whether you consider it useful to continue these meetings, or had we better close this meeting?

Molotov: The Soviet delegation considers it would be useful to continue the meeting and requests in particular that you should get acquainted with the proposal of the Soviet delegation and discuss it.

⁷⁵ Memorandum by the United States delegation, C.F.M. (45) 92, October 2, p. 556.

⁷⁴ There is no Agreed Record of Decisions for this meeting. According to the British record of the meeting, not printed, the participants were as follows: United Kingdom—Bevin, Campbell, Clark Kerr, and Duff Cooper; United States—Byrnes, Dunn, Cohen, Dulles, and Bohlen: Soviet Union—Molotov, Gusev, Novikov, Golunski, and Pavlov; France—Bidault, Couve de Murville, Fouques Duparc, and Alphand; China—Wang Shih-Chieh, Wellington Koo, Victor Hoo, Hollington Tong, and Yang Yun Chu.

The American proposal is being translated into Russian and as soon as the translation is ready the Soviet delegation will be able to express their views on the American proposal as well.

WANG: Any other suggestions?

BEVIN: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I can continue these meetings as long as the other delegates wish to continue.

BIDAULT: Mr. Chairman, though the French delegation is rightfully desirous to deal with the problems which arise in our country, the French delegation is determined to remain in contact with the other delegations, as long as the latter are willing to remain. The problem now is the problem of the chances of getting any results. So far as I am concerned, for a long time we have been discussing the problem of protocol which we never discussed at home in our respective capitals, and only discussed them here together. Now I think that the situation has been clearer, and I do hope that we shall be able to conclude today.

I have just received the French text of the American proposal. I have no objection to taking some time to examine it and take a definite position. The French delegation hopes that there will be an agreement, and it will be sorry if such an agreement were not possible; but the French delegation must also state that their former declarations are final.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I have the copy of the proposal circulated by the Soviet delegation,⁷⁶ which is the same proposal that has been discussed for the last several days. I have on numerous occasions trespassed on the time of the Council to express my views on that proposal, and stated why I could not agree to it. There is no reason for me to add any additional statements at this time. This morning I did offer a new proposal, which I discussed at some length. It has been circulated, and I hope you have read it, and would be happy to discuss that proposal. Having discussed it for more than an hour ago [sic], I really should not add anything to my statement, so I will be delighted to answer any questions that may be asked.

Molorov: Mr. Chairman, I want to correct a mistake that has slipped into the English text of the Soviet proposal circulated today. The whole document coincides with the Russian text, with the exception of a few words which are not contained in the Russian text. The heading of the English version of the Soviet proposals contains the words "preparation of peace treaties". These words are not contained in the original Russian version, and probably the mistake has slipped in during the printing; and I therefore ask that these words be deleted.

 $^{^{76}\,\}mathrm{Resolution}$ proposed by the Soviet delegation, C.F.M.(45) 88, October 2, infra.

I must add that I have now received the text of the American proposal, in Russian. Before we pass on to the American proposal, I must say a few words regarding the Russian. The words that had been added by mistake to the heading of the Soviet proposal conflict with the very sense of the Soviet proposal, which is that the five Ministers should not consider these treaties, which is the view of the Soviet delegation which bases itself on the Berlin decision.

As to the American proposal, I must state that the Soviet delegation finds that this proposal is in contradiction with the Berlin decision. Under the Berlin decision the peace treaties would be prepared by the Governments who were signatories to the terms, and inasmuch as the American proposal does not reckon with the Berlin decision the Soviet delegation considers it to be unacceptable.

Wang: I was glad of the statement that my observation was all wrong, and that it will be considered by my colleagues as useful to continue the discussion.

Molotov: I have a suggestion. I suggest that we hear the protocol commission on the question which we are deciding by all five Ministers. The protocol has been prepared. We may well hear them, and decide.

Bevin: Mr. Chairman, I thought we went through that last night; and the protocol committee called our attention to the paragraph that was to be deleted, and the decision [discussion?] was as to whether the paragraph should be delivered [deleted?]. That is the same protocol as everybody agreed to last Saturday.⁷⁷

Molorov: My proposal is that we leave in these protocols and state only the agreed decisions, just as it was done at the Berlin and Crimea conferences. I don't remember a single decision adopted at any of the conferences which was not agreed to by all the members of the conference. It may be some one will call one of these—such decisions—to my mind.

BIDAULT: Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated, I have accepted and I do accept that there should be different protocols for different cases. I have already also stated that I could not discuss any one plan of protocol unless I had my hands on all the plans. Therefore, I repeat my proposal that it should be considered by the protocol committee, yourself, and all the five delegation members. I must apologize for always saying the same thing, but I say the same thing because it is always the same thing.

Molotov: I must say that the French delegation did not participate in the settlements of other questions. The French delegation were only present, but they did not participate in the settlements.

⁷⁷ At the 27th and 28th meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers on September 29, the Council discussed the memorandum by the Joint Secretariat, C.F.M. (45) 66, September 29, "Decisions of First Plenary Conference", p. 456.

BIDAULT: For my part I am not going back to what I have already stated on the 11th of September, namely that we accepted to discuss and we accepted not to sign. If this is what Mr. Molotov means, I entirely agree with him.

Molorov: But under the decision of September 11th decisions on the treaties of peace are to be accepted by certain representatives and not by all.

BIDAULT: I do not think that in what Mr. Molotov has just said, except perhaps a few amendments in wording, there is anything in contradiction with what I have already accepted.

WANG: What are we going to do?

(pause here)

Molorov: It seems Mr. Byrnes will be in the chair at the next meeting.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, what has that got to do with it?

Wang: I am ready to turn over this awkward job to anyone. (laughter)

Molorov: The Soviet delegation are ready to assist in the settlement of the question both of the President, the Chairman, Mr. Wang, as well as at the next meeting.

Wang: What is the general feeling? Shall we have a short recess and see whether we might find some other way to alleviate things, and if we cannot do it, then I shall suggest to my colleagues that we adjourn.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I think we should all agree that we are not making any progress here.

Mr. Chairman, I ask if the various members thought there was any use of continuing the meetings, and the Chairman asks if there is any work that is here that we should do it, and if there isn't any work to do, we should find out right now. I have no objection to the motion the Chairman makes to take a thirty minute recess. It is just as comfortable in our rooms as it is here. That will be 4:30?

BIDAULT: We will come back, anyway. (laughter)

(Recessed at 4:00 p.m.)

(At 5:05 p. m.—Mr. Wang still Chairman)

Molorov: The Soviet delegation apologizes for having delayed the meeting. The Soviet delegation have been seeking some form of a conciliatory and friendly way out for the Council of Ministers, and as a result of this the Soviet delegation have formulated the following: The Soviet delegation as well as the other delegations are anxious to see the results achieved and the course of our work crowned respecting relative decisions.

Now I shall read out the draft of the resolution of the Council of Ministers proposed by the Soviet delegation: Our proposal consists of two paragraphs containing certain sub-paragraphs [in?] paragraph one. Now I shall read the proposal.⁷⁸

The Soviet delegation propose that on October 2 the protocols of all the decisions adopted at the Council of Foreign Ministers should be signed, and namely

Sub-paragraph A: The Ministers of the U.S.A., Great Britain, the U.S.S.R., France and China will sign the protocol embodying the decisions of the Council of Ministers adopted by the five Ministers.

B: The Ministers of the U.S.A., Great Britain, the U.S.S.R. and France will sign the protocol embodying the decisions of the Council regarding the peace treaty with Italy.

C: The Ministers of the U.S.A., Great Britain and the U.S.S.R. will sign the protocol embodying the decision of the Council of Ministers regarding the peace treaty with Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary.

D: The Ministers of Great Britain and the U.S.S.R. will sign the protocol embodying the decisions of the Ministers regarding the peace treaty with Finland.

Second: The questions outstanding on October 2 in the Council of Ministers will be referred to the Council of Ministers, to be considered on October 3.

The Soviet delegation asks for this new conciliatory proposal all there is to be studied, and for their part they will study attentively any proposals that they may receive from other delegations.

I have finished.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question? The first proposal—the first item in the proposal suggested by Mr. Molotov that we, the Ministers of the U.S., Great Britain and the U.S.S.R., France and China will sign the protocol embodying the decisions of the Council of Ministers adopted by the five Ministers—as I understand it, that is the same proposal we have had for three days. The protocol is here before the Council. The four members will agree to sign it without provision as to the action on September 11 extending the invitation. Are the Soviet representatives ready to sign that proposal? If so, I think we can all agree to sign it right now. If not, then we have stated for some days that we will be unable to agree to sign the protocol, if we eliminate that proposal on the protocol.

Molotov: I want to reply to Mr. Byrnes. Such a proposal as the one the Soviet delegation is submitting now has not been so far made by anyone. The proposal consists of two paragraphs. The first paragraph refers to the questions which have been agreed upon by the Ministers, and the second paragraph refers to the questions which have not been agreed upon. And as regards the first paragraph, the protocols should be signed on the questions agreed upon by the respective Ministers. As regards the questions referred to in paragraph two which remain in disagreement, we suggest that we continue to work on these questions, with the view to finding a compromise and a friendly agreement. That is the proposition.

I want to say further that we have before us a number of outstanding questions. The questions outstanding are first the question to which Mr. Byrnes has just referred; then the question of the convocation of the conference which also has been mentioned by Mr. Byrnes. And I think that we may continue to study these outstanding questions more closely, more fully, with a view to finding a compromise. We have been sitting for three weeks and have discussed many questions. We may spend another day. We may agree that we shall not sit after October 3. The job which has not yet been agreed upon among us should be accomplished by us tomorrow, and to the accomplishment of this job we should devote all our attention.

At the same time, it seems to me that not only the Soviet position but also other delegations are interested in relaxing the tension which has arisen, and in order to relax this tension, we might make ready those people who are looking to the Council of Foreign Ministers for an accomplished decision, by signing a number of agreed decisions today.

To sum up, the Soviet delegation proposes that we sign today the decisions which have been agreed upon among us, and that we tomorrow continue to work on the questions which still remain in disagreement. The Soviet delegation are ready to make all the efforts, in order to arrive at a friendly solution of the questions which still remain in disagreement, and the Soviet delegation does indeed hope that we will be able to achieve still better results, if we spend another day tomorrow in working on these outstanding questions. Finished.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, if I understand my friend, he is not prepared to discuss today the questions that are in dispute? There are two questions that he lists as being in dispute. We have discussed them for three, four, or five days now. I just wonder if there is any reason for hoping that there will be any change in view tomorrow? In discussing the conference proposals, my friend has said each day that he thought it was good in principle but he was not in position to agree to it until he had personally consulted his Government, and he said so this morning. Now, if he will tell us that he has discussed it with his Government and he is in position now to discuss it, I would like to have that information. I have discussed it with him privately, and at this table on numerous occasions, and would be glad to discuss it again, if he will tell me that the situation has changed and he is in position to agree to it; but, if after I explain it and discuss it with him again for some hours and at the conclusion he tells me that in principle it is good but that he is not in position to act, it would serve no useful purpose.

The other question which my friend said he would discuss tomorrow is the question with reference to the September 11 agreement extending the invitation. As I understand the proposition, he asks just what has been asked for many days, that members sign the protocol in the form he suggests and then leave for discussion tomorrow the question as to whether or not there will be included in the protocol the agreement of September 11. After the protocols have been signed, then if there is no agreement tomorrow on the September 11, the Council could adjourn as he suggests and there would be nothing in the protocol about the September 11 agreement.

The same proposal was made some days ago and some members of the Council, or at least one member of the Council, stated he could not sign the first protocol leaving out the agreement which was entered into on September 11, unless he could, at the same time, see all the other protocols and make sure that it was going to be included in one of the other protocols. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I don't think that there is anything new in the proposal and I see little hope for a compromise.

Molotov: The Soviet delegation cannot impose upon other delegations its proposals. It is a matter for them to agree or to disagree with it—with this new proposal of the Soviet delegation. But for their part, the Soviet delegation have made another attempt in the direction of which seems to them most desirable for all our five States.

It is natural that I am not able to tell Mr. Byrnes in advance that I shall agree with him in every respect. Mr. Byrnes is anxious to know in advance whether I shall agree with him on all the questions regarding discussing them, and I find it difficult for me to reply as regards the question which we have under discussion; but the Soviet delegation expresses their good will to continue to work with a view to finding a compromise. The purpose of our proposal is to move forward and to create a friendly atmosphere for our work. If we today would create a more friendly atmosphere for our work, this will be a definite gain for our common cause, and this will make happy every one of us as well as many people far outside—in distant places outside this room, and this will give satisfaction to them, the fact that we have created a friendly atmosphere for our work.

If we sign today the four protocols, then it will make a favorable impression not only upon us but also upon all those who in our countries are looking to the Council of Ministers for decisions. If today we accomplish the first part of our work and create a more friendly and favorable atmosphere for our further work, we can have hope that our work will be more successful on other questions which remain in dispute.

In any case, the Soviet delegation hopes that if we sign the protocol today, this will create more favorable conditions for all of us when we come to decide other questions tomorrow, and it seems to me that not only the Soviet delegation but all my colleagues are interested in this. I have finished.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, my good friend says that he finds it difficult to tell me what—whether or not he could agree about the question which has not yet been discussed. The question that he said that we have discussed tomorrow about which—convoking a conference—was submitted to my friend last week, and was discussed with him many times—and many times since. It was a document which was circulated in writing, and which we have discussed time and again here at the table, and it was agreed to by every member of the Council except the representatives of the Soviet Union. That is why I don't think my friend is serious in his proposal, because only this morning he said at this table, in the hearing of everyone, that he thought he could agree with it in principle but he could not say anything about it because he first had to personally consult his Government about it. That was only two or three hours ago.

Now, if my friend is serious, I must believe that he has consulted his Government, and if he has consulted his Government and his Government has authorized him to act in the matter, then I suggest we discuss it right now; because if it could be decided, we could decide many other questions that have given us trouble.

Won't my friend tell me whether his Government has authorized him to act on it?

Molotov: I can assure Mr. Byrnes that I receive daily messages from Moscow.

BYRNES: Well, Mr. Chairman, then may I ask my friend, who told me last week that he couldn't act on it solely because he hadn't taken it up with his Government, has he given the message to his Government and can he now tell us that he has authority to act on it? My friend has said that he agrees in principle, and if he now has authority to act, we can take it up and see if we can't agree on the details; and if we agree on the details, all the other questions can be agreed to, and it will do more to promote harmony here and give hope to the world than anything else he can do today.

Molorov: I have given the answer to the question of Mr. Byrnes, and I must say that I feel embarrassed if I take up more of the attention of my colleagues by replying and explaining.

⁷⁹ The proposal to which the Secretary referred was circulated in the Council as C.F.M.(45) 84, September 30, p. 475. It was an amendment to a Soviet proposal which was circulated in the Council as C.F.M.(45) 83, September 30, p. 474.

Bevin: If we discussed outstanding questions tomorrow, some of them arise on peace treaties. Shall we discuss it on the basis of the September 11 resolution, or in what way?

Molorov: I think that the questions which relate to today should be settled today, and the questions which relate to tomorrow should be settled tomorrow. "Sufficient unto the day is evil thereof." (laughter)

BEVIN: I only wanted to know whether, about the September 11 resolution, it involved the withdrawal of the invitation to China? I think one is entitled to know what we are doing. I am not expressing an opinion, but I would like to know what it involves.

Molotov: Perhaps there are any amendments to discuss?

Bevin: Well, speaking for myself, I should be reluctant to sign anything until I saw the agenda being gone through and completed. It is very difficult. I have been looking through the different items and the number in the general so-called part of this controversy. If there are only recorded decisions, why we haven't done very much; because in nearly each case, like the Danube, waterways, and other things, they have been discussed but there was no decision. Well, there are a number of questions that we passed on and never came back to. I am most anxious for harmony and most anxious for these things to be cleared up. It is a very serious position we have arrived at, but we have responsibilities and either—(inaudible)—the protocol now and sign it together without withdrawal of the invitation at the last minute exactly what we are doing.

BIDAULT: Mr. Chairman, I agree with Mr. Molotov's views as regards the desirability and necessity of coming to an agreement. No appeal to the friendship of peoples and the cooperation of great powers will meet with any disappointment on the part of my country. Like any other delegation around this table, the French delegation realizes the necessity of not disappointing the world, which has placed so great hopes in our meeting. But since we are talking both of cooperation between the peoples and of the protocol, I must repeat that although I have accepted that there should be differences in the number of signatures, all protocols should be simultaneously submitted to examination of all the members of the Council. The French delegation is not in a position to agree beforehand what is being asked without having a formal assurance that there will be given access to what it says the French delegation should obtain, in accordance with what was agreed in common not so long ago. That's all.

Wang: Well, anyhow, I am a little more hopeful than an hour ago. I set today as the closing day of this session. An hour ago I was about to say to all my friends here that there was little prospect of agreement. Just now Molotov assured all of us of the good will to bring about harmony. Anyhow, I have no—I cannot ask you to prolong the session since for my part I have not been able to make any constructive contribution. Therefore, I myself will not make any request for extension of the session, but Mr. Molotov just made it. He requested that the session should be prolonged for another day. He makes tomorrow the closing day of the session. I should like an opinion from you all on this request. If all my friends agree, we shall set tomorrow as the closing day and we prolong it, I shall offer my friend Mr. Molotov no resistance, now should I ask Mr. Molotov to give with a view on the proposal of Mr. Bevin. (inaudible comments continue) I repeat, I have no more a right to keep you longer than another day, and I do not on my part ask you to extend the session. It is the hope that after Mr. Molotov's talk I should—(inaudible).

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I know that my good friend had the best intentions in the world, and on Sunday night 80 he asked that the Council remain in session up till Tuesday, in the hope that we could arrive at an agreement. The members of the Council have remained in session for long hours. The matters in dispute have been discussed fully and we have not made the slightest progress towards a decision. So far as the question which Mr. Molotov asked be discussed tomorrow, the paper that I submitted as to the calling of the conference, in view of his statement that he cannot tell me that he has authority to act. I think all members will realize that after discussing it for a week and being told by him that he did not have the authority to act, it would be useless for me to further discuss it with him when I know that he will have to tell me at the conclusion of the discussion that he cannot act. We must always have respect for the position of our friends, and when one of us states that he cannot act in a matter until he talks with his Government, then it is useless to insist upon his acting and certainly is a waste of time to further discuss the matter.

We hold a position of great responsibility and we cannot justify ourselves in the eyes of the people nor can we have respect for ourselves if we just go back to discussing the matter when other gentlemen are not in a position to make a decision. The same situation has been—holds with reference to the other question that Mr. Molotov suggested could be discussed tomorrow. That situation was disclosed in a response to the question of Mr. Bevin. Mr. Molotov stated that he could not say what would be done with reference to the discussion of the peace treaties insofar as the representatives of France and China remaining in the Council. Therefore, what purpose would be served by saying that we will discuss matters tomorrow when we know in advance—every man at this table knows—there will be no agreement? If any good purpose can be served, why should we not continue right now? It is only 6:30. At the suggestion of the Chairman of the delegation from China, we agreed to continue the session until today. We have made every possible effort, and we may as well realize the situation and face it like men.

I do not think any good will come from a continuation of the discussion of the character that we have had for the last few days. However, if any other member believes it will, then I think we should continue in session. I am willing to stay and let us go ahead and discuss today the questions that we would be supposed to discuss tomorrow. It is far better to discuss questions and to continue to discuss this evening. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that you ask the Council to take up the question that is to be discussed and let us see if we can agree now.

Mr. Chairman, in order to bring the matter to a head, I suggest that we now proceed to a discussion of the paper that I submitted, asking the Council to convoke a conference of the nations before the peace treaties are finally signed.

Molorov: The question to which Mr. Byrnes is referring is not on our agenda. We have not that question on the agenda for our meeting this afternoon.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, can you tell me what is on the agenda for this afternoon? (laughter)

WANG: I am not in position to tell what is not on the agenda, or what is on.

Molorov: So far as the Soviet delegation are concerned, they are not ready to discuss this question today.

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, there was nothing on the agenda that I know of. My good friend, Mr. Molotov, presented a proposal of the Soviet delegation that was not on any agenda. And, Mr. Chairman, may I say that this paper has been before the Council for some time. It has been so long that I have forgotten the date when it was on. It just means that before the Council there was no agenda, there is no question except the questions that have been discussed day after day and have been discussed this afternoon. That is the question as to what you are going to put in the protocol, and if it is desired to discuss that further, I think we should proceed to discuss it unless anybody has anything to say that has not already been said.

BEVIN: Will it meet the Conference's approval if we go on and put this on the agenda for the first thing tomorrow?

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, if the Council is to be closed tomorrow, as Mr. Molotov has suggested, we have got to midnight, so we have got till one o'clock tomorrow. If there is anything sacred about continuing until tomorrow, let us meet at nine o'clock and adjourn at one o'clock, and then it will be tomorrow. (laughter)

Molorov: I have already stated that we have submitted a protocol concerning the agreed decisions. Is the exchange of views to be understood to mean that my colleagues refuse to sign the agreed decisions?

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, it is agreed that my colleagues will sign the decision agreed to by four, but not the decision agreed to only by one. The Council, as I get the statements, agree to sign the protocol on the agreed decisions as agreed to by four, but not as agreed to by one member. If the decision of September 11 is placed in the protocol as I understand it, four members of the Council will sign it. One would not. I make that statement only from the expression of views at the table. I have no authority to talk for anybody but myself. I do not contemplate force. I just said that shows the disagreement. The protocol committee reported the protocols with the September 11 decision in it. As reported, I am willing to sign it. As I have said time and again, everybody knows it; and then agree to put in the protocol committee statement that my friend Mr. Molotov wants as to his views with regard to the decision of September 11, so that the record will show just what occurred. I put it in writing and distributed the statement in regard to number two of the Soviet proposal circulated this afternoon, that the general protocol should state the fact regarding the September 11 decision, also the position with reference thereto of the Soviet Union's position taken September 22. That latter statement can be in any form which the Soviet Union desires.

Molorov: Mr. Chairman, will it be correct for me to draw the conclusion that the proposal submitted by the Soviet delegation today is not accepted?

BYRNES: Mr. Chairman, I don't think there is any doubt about it. I understood Mr. Molotov to say that the proposal I presented was not acceptable to him, and I said his proposal was not acceptable to me. That's right. There is no misunderstanding.

Molorov: That means that my understanding is right, that the proposal which the Soviet delegation made to the meeting this afternoon is not accepted by my colleagues? Or else, will it be subject to discussion, or how should it be dealt with?

The purpose of the proposal made by the Soviet delegation is to create more favorable conditions and a more friendly atmosphere for the solution of the questions which have not yet been agreed upon. And to achieve this, the Soviet delegation propose that first of all the agreed decisions should be signed, the decisions—that is to say, the decisions about which everybody is satisfied. Everyone will understand that this will make our further work easier, and this will make many people in the world glad. The Soviet delegation expressed also the hope that they would facilitate the solution of the outstanding questions which it would be well to settle, but if this proposal meets with objection, the Soviet delegation are compelled to take note of this fact. The Soviet delegation is not going to impose upon anyone its opinion on proposals.

I still think my suggestion is a good one, that in spite of disagreement, that Mr. Byrnes' proposal be on the agenda first thing in the morning and that we unanimously agree to wind up the session tomorrow.

Byrnes: Mr. Chairman, I only say this. I do not believe that it is going to do the Governments any good to continue as we are now going. If there is to be further discussion of that proposal, I ask that we set a meeting for any time this evening—it is now only seven o'clock— and place my proposal on the agenda as point one, and even though I know the results, I will be happy to discuss it again. I much prefer that we set the time for this evening at nine o'clock and come back and spend the evening, and I will be glad to discuss it.

I do not mean to be captious, but we are grown men and we know what we are going to do about that proposal after days and days of discussing it; and I will be glad to meet at any time at this session tonight; but I do not want just to spend the evening and the night and wait for the morning, knowing well what is going to happen in the morning.

BEVIN: Let us meet tonight at nine o'clock.

BYRNES: Nine o'clock. Then we will be able to close on the third. I agree that it be the first matter on the agenda. That is 84,⁸¹ which was offered as an amendment to 83,⁸¹ which was proposed by the Soviet delegation.

Molorov: The Soviet delegation feel that this proposal of Mr. Byrnes' affects only those States which are signatories to the armistice terms, and it is for them to discuss.

BYRNES: Do I understand, then, that the position of my friend is that in the discussion of that proposal the Governments not signatories to the armistice terms of any country could not participate? Is that it?

Molorov: The Soviet delegation are not in position to violate the Berlin decision.

BYRNES: Well, then, your position is that we discuss that matter that—how many of us could be present?

Molotov: Let us read the Berlin decision. It will be seen from it.

Byrnes: The Berlin agreement says that the Council may convoke it, and I wanted to know how you construe the Berlin agreement as to the Council.

⁸¹ See footnote 79, p. 548.

Molorov: Mr. Byrnes has read only paragraph four, and he has omitted paragraph three. I would like him to read both paragraphs together, and then the reply to his question will be obvious.

BYRNES: The language of the Berlin agreement says in all the cases the Council—the Council—may convoke a formal conference of States deeply interested in seeking a solution of the particular problem. Now look to one. The only way we are here is because a Council was established, and when the Council was established, if you read the language of the Berlin agreement it says there shall be established a Council composed of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, U.S.S.R., China, and France. That is the Berlin agreement. Can't violate it.

Mr. Chairman, what my friend has said though is interesting to me, because he says that while I wanted to discuss my proposal tomorrow, under his interpretation only those could be present tomorrow who are signatories to terms of surrender, in some cases; and therefore that tomorrow he wishes me to discuss this matter about which he has no instructions from the Government in a meeting at which members of the Council could not be present.

Mr. Chairman, I think that would be very unfortunate. I think that if the purpose is to have a meeting tomorrow and then one delegation makes the point that some members of this Council can't sit in the Council, then on the last day and the last meeting some members shall be excluded from this Council, and it shall close not as a Council but only part of a Council, it will not contribute to the peaceful procedures of this Council in the future.

In good humor I submit to my friend that it would be far better if we wound up this Conference if not tonight—now—immediately—rather than to say to the world on the last day that two members were to be excluded from the consideration of a question. We had better part in good humor, on good terms, with mutual respect for each other, hoping that in days to come we may have a clearer understanding of the possibilities of making this Council work.

Molotov: I am also in favor of parting in good humor. I have only one reservation to make, that is that I cannot agree with the interpretation placed by Mr. Byrnes on the Berlin decision. I am sure I am prepared to part in good humor, and I should like to see all of us part in good humor.

Wang: There is no agreement for a further meeting tonight? Byrnes: No.

Wang: And then there is no agreement for holding a meeting tomorrow, that is right? I am constrained to say that the session of this Council is adjourned.

I am very delighted to say further that I happen to be the man who has prolonged the session until today, but as I had no request for another meeting, so I must so declare. No objection? My earnest hope is that the future meeting of the Council will be arranged by the Governments concerned.

Byrnes: If the meeting is now adjourned, I think we should all join in thanking Mr. Bevin. As our host he has been exceedingly kind to us, and I know that if he will invite us to his room on the other side of the steps I promise to be there, and I hope that my other colleagues will be there. Before we part, we can partake of his hospitality once more.

Molotov: I associate myself with Mr. Byrnes.

BIDAULT: I also associate myself with my friend Mr. Bevin.

Proposal by the Soviet Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 91

London, October 2, 1945.

PROCEDURE

The Soviet Delegation propose that on 2nd October the protocols of all the decisions agreed in the Council of Foreign Ministers should be signed, as follows:

(a) The Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, Soviet Union, France and China will sign the protocol of the decisions of the Council of Ministers adopted by the five Ministers;

(b) The Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, Soviet Union and France will sign the protocol of the decisions of the Council of Ministers concerning the Peace Treaty with Italy;

(c) The Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom and the Soviet Union will sign the protocol of the decisions of the Council of Ministers concerning the Peace Treaties with Roumania, Bulgaria and Hungary;

(d) The Ministers of the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union will sign the protocol of the decisions of the Council of Ministers concerning the Peace Treaty with Finland.

2. Questions on which no agreement has been reached in the Council of Ministers up to 2nd October will be referred for consideration by the Council of Ministers on 3rd October.

Memorandum by the United States Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers

C.F.M.(45) 92

London, October 2, 1945.

PROCEDURE: UNITED STATES PROPOSAL

- 1. There will be four protocols, a general protocol signed by five, a protocol regarding the Italian treaty signed by four, a protocol regarding the Roumanian, Bulgarian and Hungarian treaties signed by three, and a protocol for Finland signed by two.
- 2. The general protocol will state the fact regarding the 11th September decision, and also the position with reference thereto of the Soviet Union taken on 22nd September. That latter statement can be in any form which the Soviet Union desires.
- 3. The special protocols to be signed by four, three, and two respectively, will contain a head-note stating the fact that the non-signatory members were present pursuant to invitation, but did not vote, up to 22nd September, following which date there were no further treaty discussions.
- 4. The proposal of Mr. Molotov C.F.M.(45) 83,⁸² and the proposal of Mr. Byrnes C.F.M.(45) 84 ⁸³ will be left for further consideration by the governments.
- 5. Meanwhile, the deputies will consider general matters only, and not the drawing up of treaty terms.
- 6. If the Soviet proposal (C.F.M.(45) 83) and the United States proposal (C.F.M.(45) 84) are accepted, then the deputies will be instructed, in accordance with Soviet proposal (C.F.M.(45) 83), to proceed with drawing up the treaty terms in accordance with the directives which will be contained in the respective protocols.
- 7. If the Soviet proposal (C.F.M.(45) 83) and the United States proposal (C.F.M.(45) 84) are not accepted, then other procedure for peace-making will be sought.

10315. For the Secretary ⁸⁴ from Dunn. Mr. Bevin decided not to have a press conference today as he was well satisfied with the press reports of the ending of the conference as far as the British press was concerned and he was particularly pleased with your press conference. From first accounts of some of the representatives of the American press present at Molotov's conference ⁸⁵ Mr. Molotov gave the impression of being on the defensive. He gave out textually as you expected his last "conciliatory" proposal. I immediately gave Mr. Bevin your message about how to deal with it. He agreed with your suggestions and said he would give them out through the Foreign Office as guidance to the press probably without having a press conference himself. Dunn.

without agreement of all or are they preliminary understandings to be modified after discussion with other interested countries, each drafter being free to modify its opinion based on additional information obtained from subsequent discussions? It will be recalled that the Russians took the view that Dumbarton Oaks was a fixed agreement and considered that we were committed to force the Dumbarton Oaks decisions on the conferees at San Francisco. This led to considerable difficulty.

I believe we should make it clear to the Russians that our interpretation of "drafting" is that the agreements reached in this process are preliminary understandings, not binding decisions, and that each of the drafting countries is free to modify its position based on opinions expressed at the conference with the other interested nations. It, of course, must be understood that unanimous agreement of the drafting countries must eventually be obtained before final decisions are reached regarding the peace. [Harriman.]

- 1. In spite of the stand taken he personally believed that the Russians still want to cooperate and collaborate with the western countries but they want to do this if at all possible on their own terms and they are engaged now in trying to get themselves in as strong a position as possible and get as many as possible of their own terms established and accepted.
- 2. He thought that the Russians in taking the position they did on the preparation of peace treaties with Rumania and Bulgaria constantly had France in mind. The Russians must have reasoned that if they should succeed in eliminating France they would succeed in stamping France as a second or third rate power, cause discord between France on the one hand and Great Britain and the US on the other and gain for themselves a freer hand in Europe.
- 3. The present tactics of the Russians could, he thought, also be explained by the wholly understandable desire of the Russians to drive hard bargains while their military strength in Europe was still strong. The Russians of course realize how difficult it will be to provision large numbers of troops in Europe this winter and they may even fear that among some of their troops in occupation during the coming winter the food problem might become so acute that a measure of "disintegration" among these troops might develop.

He took occasion to praise very highly the part played by Secretary Byrnes for whom he expressed much admiration.

He said that Couve de Murville would endeavor to impress upon Assistant Secretary Dunn the French point of view in regard to internationalization of the Ruhr and Rhineland.⁸⁹ He would also talk at a later date on the same subject to the British "Deputy".

3512. I met Molotov ¹ at the Chinese National Day reception vesterday. After discussing my visit to Berlin and Vienna during which Molotov stated that Soviet military authorities had a high regard for Generals Eisenhower² and Clark³ and their respective staffs, I turned the conversation to London Conference. Molotov said he thought the principal mistake had been that there had not been more preparation between us, that there should have been an informal meeting before the general meeting, presumably between the Big Three. He agreed that if there had been only one session a day it would have permitted more informal talks before matters became an issue at the conference table. He seemed in much better health than at London and went out of his way to be friendly in his remarks. We did not, of course, touch at all on the issues involved. In reply to my inquiry he said Stalin ⁵ planned to be away "about a month and a half".

I am keen to know your present thinking on how the situation left by the London Conference should be handled. It would be helpful to know what you would like accomplished in connection with any informal talks I may have with Molotov or Vyshinski,6 even if formal approach at this time may seem inadvisable until Stalin's return.

High Soviet officials must have reasoned that if Molotov stood out long enough at Conference of Foreign Ministers for the Russian plan on procedure, the other powers would eventually have been worn down to the point of acceptance. Failure of these tactics has clearly caused confusion in high circles in Moscow. First manifestation of this was press treatment of the Conference with Izvestia striking one note and Pravda another.8

2152. The President wishes you to deliver the following message ¹⁰ to Stalin in his name:

"Mr. Byrnes has reported to me upon his return from London. I was pleased to learn that on a number of subjects the Council of Foreign Ministers was in general agreement. I feel that at this first meeting the ministers have made substantial progress.

"I was surprised to learn, however, that not only in private conversations between Mr. Molotov and Mr. Byrnes, but also at the Council table, Mr. Molotov suggested that the United States policy in regard to the recognition of the governments of Rumania and Bulgaria appeared to be motivated by an unfriendly attitude towards the Soviet Union.

"I cannot believe that your government seriously believes that American policy is so motivated. Our policy in regard to the recognition of the Provisional governments of Finland, Poland, Hungary and Austria indicates that we are anxious, and are willing to go far, to concert our policy with that of the Soviet Union. As I endeavored to make clear at the Berlin conference, our government is only trying to carry out the policy sponsored by President Roosevelt and accepted by the three governments at the Yalta Conference.

"Mr. Byrnes has also reported to me of the procedural difficulties which brought the London conference to an impasse. It appears that on September 11, the Council invited members not parties to the surrender terms to participate in the discussions of the treaties without vote. This procedure, which at the time of its adoption was not questioned by any member of the Council, was to my mind clearly a proper and permissible procedure under the Berlin agreement.

"Mr. Byrnes felt unable to agree to the change in this procedure suggested by Mr. Molotov on September 22. He rightly felt that our government could not humiliate France and China by withdrawing in the midst of the conference the invitation extended to them to participate in the treaty discussions after they had already participated in sixteen sessions.

"In an effort to find a solution acceptable to all members of the Council, Mr. Byrnes stated that he would accept a narrowing of the drafting procedure provided it was agreed that the Council would call a peace conference of the principally interested states as authorized by Article 2 (4) (ii) of the Berlin Agreement.

"I hope that you will find it possible to accept Mr. Byrnes' proposal. I feel that since all of us extended to China and France an invitation to participate in the discussion of these treaties we should work out a procedure which will insure the convocation by the full Council of a peace conference for the consideration of the treaties.

¹⁰ A draft of a proposed message to Stalin, substantially the same as the one printed here, was transmitted to the Secretary by Assistant Secretary Dunn and Ambassador Harriman in telegram 10328, October 4, 1945, from London (740.00119 Council/10-445).

"I hope we can reach early agreement on this matter in order that the deputies may proceed under clear instructions as to their procedure with the important work that has been referred to them.

"Early settlement of disagreement on peace machinery is essential to prevent misunderstanding among the people of both our countries—which might make future cooperation more difficult. I am sure that you will agree with me that the common interests of both our countries in the peace are for more important than any possible differences among us.

"I am asking Ambassador Harriman, who has been at London and is fully acquainted with my views, to bring this personally to you so that you will have an opportunity to discuss any points about it that are in your mind."

If you are unable to reach Stalin, we will have to decide on a different method of transmission as to which I should appreciate your advice.

As I have reported, Molotov told me Stalin would be away about 6 weeks which would mean that he would not return until third week in November. It is rumored, and I believe likely, that he has gone to his country house in Sochi in the Caucasus area of Black Sea. Today being Sunday Molotov is out of town but I hope to see him tomorrow. I propose to tell him that I have seen a message which the President has asked me to deliver to Generalissimus Stalin personally and to discuss it with him. I will propose that arrangements be made for me to go to Stalin's residence for this purpose, emphasizing importance of the matter. I have no idea whether this will be permitted but I will make every attempt to see Stalin personally within the next few days. If I find this impossible I will telegraph recommendation as to alternative procedure. My recommendation would to some extent be affected by Molotov's general attitude.¹¹

RECORD OF CONVERSATION

Mr. Bevin ¹² has asked me to tell you how much he appreciates your action in giving him an opportunity of considering the proposed message to Stalin.

While Mr. Bevin still believes that any fresh approach to the Soviet Government would be a mistake, he sees no objection to the President sending the message proposed. He would, however, wish to make the following comments.

- (a) As the whole purpose of the message is to put the facts to Generalissimo Stalin himself, Mr. Bevin certainly agrees that the message should be handed to the Generalissimo personally. As the Generalissimo is now reported to be away on holiday, the United States Government may prefer to delay despatch until he has returned to Moscow.
- (b) Mr. Bevin assumes that His Majesty's Government will in no sense be committed by the President's message and that the idea of the United States Government is that if Generalissimo Stalin reacts favourably, the United States Government would then approach the United Kingdom, French and Chinese Governments. In order to avoid misunderstanding with the Russians, Mr. Bevin thinks it important that this should be clearly indicated in the message.
- (c) If the moment comes to define future procedure more closely, there are a number of detailed points arising from the United States proposal which will require clarification.

In agreement with Field Marshal Smuts, Mr. Bevin wishes you to have it for your personal and very confidential information.

[Enclosure]

The Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa (Smuts) to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) 16

Much as I regret the breakdown of the Council of Foreign Min-... isters, I thoroughly approve course followed by you. While great power unity is admittedly essential to the success of the future peace, it must neither be secured by a process of appearement for the sake of unity nor must it ignore lesser interested powers in reasonable consultation and discussion. This principle of discussion on the widest basis was expressly conceded by Russia at San Francisco after a prolonged struggle and is embodied in a vital clause of the Charter. To refuse to concede it to China and France, under present circumstances in the discussions of the Council of Foreign Ministers, is a clear breach of the spirit of that principle in the Charter. Russia is a hard bargainer and is evidently prepared to haggle over questions of procedure and all other minor matters of interest to herself so long as she can achieve her aims. For this purpose she refrains from laying all her cards on the table, and, after having secured points favourable to herself, proceeds to raise and fight hard over other points in which the Allies are particularly interested. The proper course to pursue with her is to be quite frank and to make no single concessions until all the relevant matters have been tabled, discussed and disposed of as a whole.

Her claims for the Dalmatian Islands to go to her protégé Yugo-slavia were readily conceded, but when subsequently the Dodecanese were claimed for Greece she avoided a decision. At an earlier stage at Teheran and Potsdam huge slices of German and other territory were conceded to her and her protégé Poland but when subsequently our claims were advanced in the Mediterranean area she put up an obstinate fight. No concession to her should be finalised unless and until concessions demanded in the interests of other Allies have also been disposed of. This is the only way to deal with a realistic bargainer like Russia and I think great power unity is more likely to be achieved in such a way than by making piecemeal concessions without our securing a quid pro quo at the same time.

We are now in the awkward position that, while Russia has largely succeeded in her territorial objects, she now fights for a position in Africa where we are bound to resist in our own vital interests, and we are placed in the false position of appearing to pursue a dog in the manger policy and exclude her from Africa. I hope that we shall firmly resist her claim to African trusteeships, and that the United States of America will understand the danger of this infiltration into other Continents besides what she is already virtual mistress of. Russia has her reward for her enormous efforts in Europe. Why should the British Commonwealth not have theirs for their immense efforts in Africa and the Mediterranean Basin and elsewhere? We are prepared also to concede to the United States of America much of a free hand by way of strategic bases in Pacific. She should loyally support us in our vital African interests.

The future of the world will depend in large measure on present territorial arrangements and on safeguarding the vital communications of a scattered maritime group like the British Commonwealth. It should be appreciated by America that ours is not a mere selfish interest but a vital necessity of future world balance and world peace.

It is in this sense that I support your stand in the Council whole-heartedly. South Africa's claim for a real voice in the peace for which she also made great sacrifices is not only based on justice but was also made to give an opportunity for reconsideration of these territorial questions as a whole and not piecemeal.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the First Secretary of Embassy in the Soviet Union (Page) 17

Gagri, 18 October 24, 1945.

Present: Generalissimus I. V. Stalin

Mr. Pavlov, Soviet Interpreter

W. A. Harriman, American Ambassador Edward Page, First Secretary of Embassy

Subject: 1. The Japanese Situation.

2. The Procedural Question.

After a preliminary exchange of remarks on the Caucasian coast and Generalissimus Stalin's health, the Ambassador presented to him the President's message 19 with Russian translation, stating that the President was anxious to obtain his reaction thereto. The President wished to know what was on the Generalissimus's mind and he had therefore instructed the Ambassador personally to discuss the message with him.

The Generalissimus read the message carefully, looked up, and stated "the Japanese question is not touched upon here". The Ambassador stated that he was not surprised that he should bring up this question. He explained that the Japanese question was being discussed at the present time between the State and War Departments and General MacArthur and the President hoped to have some concrete proposals ready by October 30 when the meeting of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission would convene. The Ambassador continued that he would be entirely frank providing the Generalissimus would allow him to discuss the matter informally and would accept his remarks as unofficial. If so, he could explain the thinking of the President and his advisors on this question as far as it had gone. Stalin said that he would be grateful for any information, which he. of course, would keep secret.

[Here follows a discussion of the Japanese situation, omitted here.] The Generalissimus then turned to President Truman's message and inquired "what does Mr. Byrnes' compromise amount to? Can you explain the substance of the proposal not accepted by Mr. Molotov?"

The Ambassador stated that Mr. Molotov had never rejected Mr. Byrnes' proposal. He had said that he had to consult his Government in person. At the September 11th meeting of the Foreign ¹⁷ This conversation was reported to the Department in telegram 3664, October 26, 1945, from Moscow, not printed.

Resort town on the Black Sea coast of the Caucasus, near Sochi.

¹⁹ The President's message was transmitted in Department's telegram 2152, October 12, to Moscow, p. 562.

Ministers' Council, Mr. Molotov had agreed that it would be proper to invite France and China-and also the United States, when Finland was discussed—to remain in the room during the discussions of all the peace treaties. Only those agreed upon at the Potsdam Conference could vote on matters regarding these treaties. The other representatives could only participate in the meetings and make comments. However, after sixteen meetings Mr. Molotov said that this procedure was a mistake and that the Foreign Ministers should return to the restricted procedure under the 4-3-2 formula. Mr. Byrnes had replied that it would be impossible to humiliate the French and China by throwing them out after they had been invited to participate in sixteen meetings, unless some agreement were reached as to when they should be invited back. Mr. Bevin had agreed to this. Mr. Byrnes had freely admitted that if Mr. Molotov had taken this position on the first day the meetings could have been thus limited. However, the Potsdam Agreement contained authorization to invite the other nations to participate in the peace discussions. Mr. Byrnes was now trying to find a dignified way to solve the present impasse. He had suggested that after the peace treaties had been drafted by the smaller groups in accordance with the Potsdam Decision, a peace conference be held which would be made up of the most interested parties. Chinese and French had tentatively agreed to this proposal if it were agreed to by all. Mr. Molotov, however, had requested Mr. Byrnes to return to the restricted procedure and to leave the peace conference for the future. Mr. Byrnes did not believe this fair to the French and Chinese and had thus suggested agreement on calling of the peace conference as a compromise. After this conference, only those present at the conference who had been at war with each satellite would conclude the peace. The Ambassador concluded that he was a devil's advocate since he thought Mr. Byrnes' proposal was a very wise one.

Generalissimus Stalin again read the paragraph of the President's message to the effect that in an effort to find a solution acceptable to all Mr. Byrnes had stated that he would accept a narrowing of the draft procedure provided it was agreed to that the Council would call a peace conference of the principally interested states. The Generalissimus remarked that there was no reference in this paragraph to those countries that had declared war and whether such countries should be invited to the conference. He remarked that many countries had declared war in order to obtain a seat in the security organization.

The Ambassador stated that Mr. Byrnes had proposed three classes of countries to participate in the peace conferences, namely: (1) the five permanent members of the Security Council since these nations were primarily interested in the preservation of peace; (2) the European members of the United Nations; and (3) those non-European nations which had supplied substantial armed forces against the Axis. These included Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, India and Brazil—the only South American country. Brazil had sent two divisions to Italy.

Generalissimus Stalin reading from his records of the London meetings, stated that he had understood the proposal as follows: the Council would prepare drafts of the peace treaties under the 4–3–2 formula to draft the peace treaties. The Council would then call a peace conference made up of the five permanent members of the security organization, all the European United Nations and all the non-European nations which had supplied substantial military contingents. This conference would meet in London and as a basis for its deliberations it would accept the reports of the deputies. After full hearing and discussion final approval of the peace treaties would be made by the states which had waged war with the enemy states. The Ambassador stated that the Generalissimus's understanding of the proposals was correct. However, it should be added that the deputies would draft the treaties under the 4–3–2 formula.

The Generalissimus remarked that if one general conference were to be called he wondered whether Italy, for example, could contribute anything in the discussions on the Finnish treaty. He questioned the advisability of one general conference and developed the theory of a a series of conferences, on Bulgaria, Finland, and Rumania for example. He could not see what Brazil could contribute to a conference on Finland and stated that it appeared to him that it would be more feasible to convoke a group of conferences.

The Ambassador stated that the President and Mr. Byrnes agreed that only those states who actually waged war against an individual enemy should have the final say as to the peace and should sign the treaties. They believed however that there was in fact only one European war and all those directly involved in it should be asked to review the work of the Foreign Ministers and present their ideas. However, the final voice should remain with those who had been engaged in war with actual fighting forces with each enemy. He wished to point out that Italy was not one of the United Nations, was an enemy state, and therefore would not be involved in the conference. He continued that it was Mr. Byrnes' idea that all the European countries at war with the Axis should have the right to be heard in such a conference. Although Belgium and Holland, for example, had not been technically at war with Italy they were vitally interested in the peace. There had to be some period when all the European countries had the right to voice their views in connection with the peace treaties. This included China, a permanent member of the Security Council.

The Generalissimus stated that he could accept at the conference those countries who had actually fought but there were other countries who had declared war and who had not sent one soldier to the front. What did they have to do with the peace? President Truman had said that the conference should be made up of those principally interested states. Mr. Byrnes' proposal appeared to broaden this formula. What had Puerto Rico to do with Rumania? It had not sent one soldier abroad. Greece and Yugoslavia had fought against the Italians. The Chinese had not. The fact that the Chinese were a member of the Security Council did not enter the picture. The Security Council had entirely different functions. The peace treaties should be settled now. The Security Council has a future role. It was not called upon to deal with these matters. Justifying Chinese participation in the peace conference on the ground that it was a member of the Security Council was not appropriate. Furthermore, India was not a state. It was a colony. If the British granted India certain rights, dominion status for example, he would favor its participation in the peace conference. However, it was not likely that such rights would be granted.

The Generalissimus continued that he must give the matter more thought. He believed however that a basis for compromise could be found along the following lines:

- (1) Call a meeting of the Foreign Ministers to work out the peace treaties on the 4–3–2 formula.
- (2) After the peace treaties had been drawn up, call a peace conference of not only those who had signed the armistice but those who had sent contingents to Europe and had waged war—not those who had technically declared war.

(The Ambassador inquired whether this included those who had fought against any one of the Axis. The Generalissimus replied in the affirmative).

(3) Following the conference, not only the big three but also such countries that had actually waged war should conclude the peace.

The Ambassador stated that it was the President's idea to convoke one conference to which the five draft peace treaties should be submitted rather than separate conferences with all the complications involved. The Generalissimus stated that he clearly understood this. However, he thought that it might be preferable for example as far as Bulgaria was concerned, to invite the Greeks and the Yugoslavs to attend during the discussions of the Bulgarian treaty. When the Hungarian treaty was under discussion it might be better to invite not only the Big Three but the Czechs and the Yugoslavs. With respect to Italy—who should be invited? The Brazilians? Yes. They had sent two divisions. All countries which had fought against the Italians, not platonically by declaring war but with actual troops, should be invited. The Ambassador had mentioned Belgium. He could understand the participation of the Belgians in the German peace but not their participation in the Italian and Rumanian peace. They had not sent one soldier to Italy or Rumania.

The Ambassador stated that with respect to Italy a number of countries, including all the dominions and India had been involved. They had all sent troops. The Generalissimus stated that he had no objection to the participation in the Italian peace conference of all those who had actually fought the Italians.

The Ambassador stated that the President's view was that this had been one war. Various countries had participated at different times on different fronts. All the satellite countries had assisted Germany in the war. Furthermore, the armistices with the satellites had been signed on behalf of the United Nations. In addition, the Generalissimus would recall that at Potsdam it had been agreed that the draft peace treaties would be submitted to the United Nations. Therefore all the nations who had participated in the war with substantial forces on any front should be given the opportunity to express their views even though they may not have had troops in one particular theatre. The President felt that unless these countries were consulted ill will would be created unnecessarily throughout the world. These countries were entitled to a voice in the peace. This was a procedure contemplated at Potsdam and one wise to follow out. If attempts were made to restrict the conference the Big Three would only be doing themselves harm in the eyes of the world. Take Norway, for example. The Norwegians had placed their ships in a common pool. They were used wherever needed. Supplies had gone to Italy in them and quite possibly to the air forces which had carried on operations in the Balkans. The Generalissimus abruptly stated that such countries could express their views to the press. The Ambassador stated that the question was quite different. These countries should be asked in a dignified way to come to the peace conference as sovereign states.

The Generalissimus inquired whether Puerto Rico should be asked to such a conference. The Ambassador replied that he would have to correct the Generalissimus. Puerto Rico was United States territory. The Generalissimus corrected himself and said he meant Costa Rica. The Ambassador replied that Mr. Byrnes had suggested that only those who had actually waged war should be invited. Insofar as the South American countries were concerned only Brazil was included on the Secretary's list. The Generalissimus stated he had no objections to Brazil but remarked that Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Haiti had declared war on Rumania. The Ambassador again stated that under Mr. Byrnes' formula these countries would not be invited to participate in the peace conference.

The Ambassador continued that according to his understanding the main difference between the Generalissimus's and the President's proposals was that the President wished to submit all the drafts of the peace treaties to one conference and to hear the views of the conferees. The President did not wish to try to decide who had been involved in the war against whom. It had been one war and there should be one conference to which all the peace treaties should be submitted. It would be inadvisable to try to divide up the conference into different groups. The President did not feel that it was possible to segregate one satellite from another. More good will would be created in the world by convoking a general conference. This was in line with the spirit of the United Nations. If that spirit could be agreed to, the Ambassador did not believe that it would be difficult to agree upon a list of nations to be invited. The President was quite prepared to exclude those South American countries which had not been actually involved in the war.

The Generalissimus stated that whenever the Big Three were engaged in making decisions the entire world wondered whether such decisions would be fair. There was always an important moral factor involved. He considered that it would be unfair to place on a par those countries which had waged war and which had been occupied by the Germans, with other countries which had not fought and which had not been occupied. Furthermore, there were countries which had helped the Germans and others which had merely technically declared war. Take Chile, for example: it had helped the Germans and the Japanese. What had Chile to do with Italy or Germany and why should they be invited to attend such a conference. The Ambassador again stated the President agreed that South American countries should not be invited save Brazil. The Generalissimus remarked that Chile was one of the United Nations. The Ambassador stated that notwithstanding this fact it was not on Mr. Byrnes' list. The Generalissimus inquired whether this meant that not all the United Nations would be invited to the conference. The Ambassador stated that only those would be invited which had provided troops and actually waged war.

The Generalissimus stated that he would like to see a concrete list. Such a list could not be drawn up by the deputies of the Foreign Ministers. A conference should be called of the Foreign Ministers and such a list should be drawn up. Furthermore the question of control machinery for Japan should be considered. The deputies alone were not capable of handling such questions. Agreement should be reached first on the list of countries invited to the peace conference. Then agreement should be reached on Japan.

The Ambassador stated that he felt sure the President would agree that the Foreign Ministers should meet again after the question of the peace conference was settled. However, he also felt sure that the Generalissimus would agree that the deputies should continue in the meantime the work assigned to them after general agreement had been reached on the list. The Ambassador then handed the Generalissimus the list of countries, as he recalled it, which Mr. Byrnes had in mind in London. He said that he could not guarantee this list; however, it was substantially correct. The Generalissimus inquired as to the advisability of including China. The Ambassador stated that the President felt strongly that China, as a permanent member of the security organization, should be included. Italy had had interests in the Far East. The Generalissimus remarked that China had sent no forces to Europe. The Ambassador replied that it would be very unfortunate to exclude China since that country was a member of the Security Council and a member of the Council of Foreign Ministers. The Generalissimus interjected that China was a member of the Foreign Ministers' Council only on matters affecting it. Ambassador again stated that it would be very unfortunate to leave China out if a general European conference were convoked. He inquired whether China was the only country not on the Generalissimus's list. The Generalissimus stated that he also wished to exclude India, Belgium and Holland. The Ambassador remarked that India had sent troops to the Middle East and to Europe and that he again wished to refer to the principle of one indivisible war. Norway and Holland had supplied ships whenever they were needed. The Generalissimus remarked that if it was one indivisible war Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, for example, should be invited to the Far East peace dis-The Ambassador stated that the President divided the European from the Far East war. The Generalissimus apparently accepted this interpretation.

The Generalissimus then turned to that section of Mr. Byrnes' proposal concerning the work of the proposed conference and the conclusion of peace treaties with the satellites and inquired into the exact interpretation of it. The Ambassador stated that what Mr. Byrnes wished to do was to invite the nations on the list to hear the views of these nations but not to conclude the peace. It was not necessary to be bound by the views expressed in this conference. For example, the United States was not at war with Finland. It might wish to have the right to express certain views on Finnish peace. However, it would not sign this peace. Referring to the final stage of concluding the peace treaties the Generalissimus stated that Mr. Byrnes' draft was apparently drawn up in haste. The term "those at war" should be more closely defined. Did this mean those who had actually fought. those who had signed the armistice, or those who had merely declared war. The Ambassador stated that he knew what Mr. Byrnes had in mind. Take Bulgaria for example. He thought it right that the USSR, the U.S.A., Great Britain, The Dominions, White Russia, the Ukraine, Yugoslavia and Greece should conclude the peace with Bulgaria. The Generalissimus brought up the case of Italy. Although India had sent contingents these were rightly British forces. India was not an independent state. The Ambassador remarked that this question had been thrashed out at San Francisco Conference in connection with the Ukraine and White Russia. The Generalissimus stated that he was not pressing for the inclusion of the Ukraine and White Russia in the present conference. The Ambassador stated that India was a British problem. He was not prepared to discuss it. He knew that the British were trying to give India dominion status and he would like to point out that the Indians had actually fought. The Generalissimus stated that he would welcome seeing dominion status accorded India. However, this would not come soon. The Ambassador stated that his Government wished to give India as much prestige as possible. For this reason we would welcome India in the peace conference. The Generalissimus remarked, that if India were invited Indo-China should also be included. However, we believed that if India were invited to the conference the world at large would not think it a wise move. With respect to India's participation in the world organization this was a future problem. The world organization would last a long time. The peace treaties should be drawn up immediately. It was a bad analogy to compare the peace conference under discussion with the United Nations Organization. No one had suggested that Turkey or the Argentine be invited to the present conference. The peace conference and the United Nations were two entirely different things. The Ambassador again referred to India and stated that not only had that country sent substantial troops to the Middle East but had fought well. The Generalissimus again repeated that these were British troops. India was not allowed to have its own troops. It did not have its own government or foreign minister. He said that if India were not invited this would expedite the accordance of dominion status. If India were not invited it could be said that the British and Americans wished to invite India but that Stalin had frustrated these plans. In this case, he would make it clear why he had opposed the inclusion of India. This would give him a pretext to say something publicly about India. The Ambassador stated that he knew that the President wished to invite India in order to give that country more prestige. It was a matter of opinion whether the extension of such an invitation would encourage the development of dominion status.

The Ambassador stated that he would like to discuss a little further the Japanese question. However, since he had already taken up three hours of the Generalissimus's time he would like to know whether the Generalissimus wished to continue the conversation or postpone the consideration of this subject until the following day. The Generalissimus replied that he would prefer to discuss the Japanese problem tomorrow and suggested a meeting at 7:00 P. M.

GAGRI, October 25, 1945.

Present: Generalissimus I. V. Stalin

Mr. Pavlov, Soviet Interpreter

W. A. Harriman, American Ambassador Edward Page, First Secretary of Embassy

Subject: The Japanese Situation

After preliminary remarks on railroad construction in the Caucasus, the Ambassador stated that as the Generalissimus had originally raised the Japanese question he now wished to clarify certain aspects of this matter.

[Here follows a discussion of the Japanese situation, omitted here.] The Ambassador inquired whether there would be any useful purpose in discussing the London procedural question any further. He remarked that the Generalissimus had stated that the Japanese question should be settled first. The Generalissimus replied that the two questions should be settled simultaneously since they were linked together. The Ambassador inquired as to what he should report with respect to the Generalissimus' views on the procedural question. The Generalissimus replied that he had explained his point of view in yesterday's meeting. The Ambassador stated that as he understood it agreement should first be reached upon what nations should be invited to the proposed peace conference. The Generalissimus replied that it would be advisable to agree on this matter. The Ambassador inquired whether he was right in assuming that the Generalissimus was ready to have submitted to this conference the four peace treaties drawn up in accordance with the Potsdam 4-3-2 formula. The Generalissimus replied in the affirmative. He stated that he did not object to a general conference. However, first of all the rights of the members of this conference should be defined as against the rights of the signatories of the armistice terms. The Ambassador inquired as to what rights the Generalissimus had in mind. Who, for example should conclude the peace treaties? The Generalissimus replied that those who signed the surrender terms should be the nations to sign the peace treaties. The Ambassador inquired whether countries like Yugoslavia and Greece, insofar as Bulgaria was concerned, should have any rights in the final stage, that is in the actual conclusion of the peace, or only rights of expressing their views at the general conference. The Generalissimus replied that there was no objection on his part to such countries signing the peace. However, the nature of the peace treaties should be defined by the armistice makers.

The Ambassador inquired as to the Generalissimus' reaction to the list he had left with him last night. (The Generalissimus went out of the room to get the list). He then stated that he objected to the inclusion of China, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg, Norway and India. The rest had taken part in the war against Italy and he would accept them. The Ambassador stated that he knew the President felt that Belgium and Holland had been vitally affected by the war and should be brought into these discussions. The Ambassador and the Generalissimus thereupon went over the list. The Generalissimus stated that in addition to the Big Three, France, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Greece, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Canada, Brazil and Ethiopia should participate in the peace conference. He objected to the participation of Norway, Holland, Belgium, Poland, India, China and Luxembourg. He did not "require" the participation of the Ukraine or White Russia.

The Ambassador reiterated the President's concept that this was one war against the Axis. Such countries like Norway, Holland and Belgium had been overrun by the Nazis. They were vitally interested in the peace. Norway and Holland had continued to fight with their navies and merchant shipping. The Generalissimus remarked that if these countries should be included all of the sixteen [Soviet] republics should also participate. They had fought and suffered. They had more independence than India. The Ambassador inquired whether the sixteen republics could be placed in the same category as the sovereign independent countries of Belgium, Holland and Norway. The Generalissimus maintained that they were the same as India.

The Ambassador stated that he would immediately report in full to his Government as soon as he had returned to Moscow. He was very grateful for the amount of time the Generalissimus had given him and he wished to thank him most sincerely for the Generalissimus' hospitality and enjoyable time he had had during his visit to Gagri.

The Generalissimus concluded that he had not only received Mr. Harriman as the Ambassador of America but also as a friend. It would always be so.²¹

²¹ On October 26 Stalin sent a brief message to President Truman stating that he, Stalin, had had two talks with Harriman and had replied to the questions raised by the Ambassador; for text of the message, see Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R., Correspondence between the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. and the Presidents of the U.S.A. and the Prime Ministers of Great Britain During the Great Patriotic War of 1941-1945 (Moscow, Foreign Languages Publishing House, 1957), vol. 11, p. 276.

740.00119 Council/11-1245

The British Embassy to the Department of State

- 1. On the 29th October Mr. Byrnes was good enough to give Lord Halifax a general outline of the reception which Stalin had accorded to the President's proposal that a procedure should be worked out to ensure the convocation by the Council of Foreign Ministers of a Peace Conference for the consideration of the treaties with Germany's former satellites. The Generalissimo had in particular expressed the view that certain of the lesser Allied countries should take part in the preliminary peace discussions and that others should be excluded.
- 2. In the view moreover of the Generalissimo the lesser Allied countries taking part in the peace discussions could be invited to state their views and the peace treaties themselves would be finally decided by the powers contemplated at Potsdam, i.e. Great Britain and the Soviet Union in the case of Finland; the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union in the case of the Balkan peace treaties; and the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and France in the case of the Italian peace treaty.
- 3. Mr. Bevin wishes Mr. Byrnes to know that he feels the following misgivings about these counter-proposals of Generalissimo Stalin:—
- (a) In general it seems to Mr. Bevin a mistake to limit the number of countries who would be invited to attend the proposed conference. The countries who do not receive an invitation will resent their exclusion and once the stage of a conference has been reached numbers should not in his view present serious inconvenience.
- (b) It is not clear on what principle Stalin has based his list but one can surmise that his idea is to restrict the conference to countries which had actively fought against or been invaded by the enemy powers in question. If this is correct, the differentiation is not applied logically, as India, whose forces played an important part in the defeat of Italy, certainly deserves an invitation. The omission of South Africa from the list is, Mr. Bevin assumes, pure accident.
- (c) Mr. Bevin greatly dislikes Stalin's suggestion that the lesser Allied Governments attending the conference "could be invited to state their views and that the Peace Treaty would be finally decided by the Powers contemplated at Potsdam." This implies that the lesser Allied Governments would only be allowed to state their views and would take no effective part in the discussion or formulation of the final peace terms. This in the opinion of Mr. Bevin is entirely wrong. If these Allied Governments are to be called into consultation there must be full and frank discussion with them and the final terms should be agreed in detail with them.
- 4. The suggestion that the final decision will rest with the Potsdam powers is objectionable on two counts; first, the implication of the Great Powers' dictation; second, it goes far beyond the Potsdam agreement which spoke only of drawing up peace terms, and contains no justification for the view that the Great Powers, and still less only those Great Powers which were signatory to the armistices, should also settle the final terms. On the contrary, it was clearly stated in the Potsdam agreement that once the Council of Foreign Ministers had drawn up the draft treaties these would be submitted to the United Nations with whom the final approval implicitly would rest. This would seem to Mr. Bevin the correct and sensible arrangement, because all the United Nations who are at war with each enemy power must be signatory to the treaty if the state of war is to be brought to an end, and they will clearly not agree to sign the treaty unless they have a chance of seeing the terms in advance and formally concurring in them.

2382. Please deliver following message immediately to Molotov.

"As you will recall it was decided at the Crimea Conference that the Foreign Secretaries of the Three Powers represented there would hold regular consultations, probably meeting every three or four months.²² That was in February.

In May the Foreign Secretaries were able to consult together when the three of them were at San Francisco for the United Nations Conference. In July similar consultations took place at Berlin, when the heads of the three governments met there, and in September at London during the Conference of the Foreign Ministers London during the Conference of the Foreign Ministers.

At Berlin it was agreed that the establishment of the Council of Foreign Ministers should be without prejudice to the Agreement of the Crimea Conference that there should be periodical consultation between Foreign Secretaries of the Three Powers.²³

It will soon be three months since we met in London on September 11. Therefore I suggest that the next meeting be held on Tuesday, December 11.

Under the Crimea Agreement in fixing the place of meetings for the Three Foreign Secretaries, we are to rotate between the three countries. As the Foreign Secretaries have met at San Francisco and at London, I suggest that the December meeting be held in Moscow. If this is agreeable to you and the date is satisfactory I will communicate with Mr. Bevin and ascertain his views."

3945. Late last night I delivered to Molotov personally your message to him received via Army channels. He was obviously much pleased at your suggestion and said that the idea appealed to him personally, though he would of course have to consult his Govt. He commented "it is a good thing that Mr. Byrnes recalled that the three of us could meet independently", and added that he was most anxious to know what subjects you had in mind discussing. I told him I had no specific information but I assumed all open questions between us, mentioning the arranging for another meeting of the Foreign Ministers Council, Far Eastern questions, civil strife in China, disturbing developments in Iran, Bulgaria, etc. I said I assumed that each of the three Secretaries might wish to make prior suggestions for the agenda in order that all might be prepared to discuss them but that in addition the meeting would be as usual informal and any one could bring up additional matters that the others were willing to discuss.24

He showed the usual Russian sense of hospitality by emphasizing that he would always welcome you in Moscow. I said I had no doubt you had in mind the fact that people of the world were disturbed over the apparent rift between the three great Allies and that this tension would be relieved by your getting together. I said I knew you had been anxious for some time to come to Moscow and that you had told me in London before the disagreement developed that you hoped an early meeting in Moscow could be arranged. I added that your suggestion was obviously a friendly and timely one and I was glad that he had reacted favorably to it.

May I say that I personally am much pleased by your proposal and feel that it will assist in allaying the unfounded suspicions of the Soviets.

Do you wish me to attempt to find out if Stalin will be in Moscow at that time? Pavlov appeared last night as interpreter having just returned from Sochi. This might indicate that Stalin has or is about to return.

Record of Trans-Atlantic Teletype Conference Between the Secretary of State and the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) 31

Washington-London, November 27, 1945—10:30 a.m. [THE SECRETARY OF STATE:] Ernie, I hope that nothwithstanding all the problems confronting us that you are all right. I want to talk with you about my message as to meeting in Moscow. Last Friday 32 I recalled that the Berlin agreement provided that the Council of Foreign Ministers should not prevent a continuance of the meetings of Foreign Secretaries of the three governments represented there. While in London, I told Molotov that I hoped our next meeting could be held in Moscow. For many reasons I thought it advisable to meet there, therefore I immediately wired him to ascertain whether he would be willing to act as host to us. It was my thought that I could not well invite you to Moscow without knowing whether it would be agreeable to Molotov to have us come there. On Saturday afternoon I had not heard from him that it would be agreeable to have us there but I determined that I should let you know of my suggestion to him. I wanted to telephone you so that I could not only give you this explanation but also discuss the subject. Early Sunday morning I asked Halifax how to reach you but I was not successful and therefore wired you. On Monday I continued to try to reach you by telephone but could not do so. I simply want you to know my failure to send you a message at the same time I wired Molotov was because at that time I thought it proper that I should first ascertain whether he would be willing to act as our host. As I advised you in one of my messages since Saturday, it is my thought, if we can find it possible to reach an agreement as to a meeting and agree upon a date that the joint release should be agreed upon and issued simultaneously. How do you feel

I agree with the views you have expressed as to the necessity for us exchanging views as to the policies to be discussed. As to Molotov being in London in January, it seems to be exceedingly important that before the United Nations Assembly meets you and Molotov and I should have a frank talk on several subjects. First of all I think that you and Mackenzie King 33 and I should agree as to the proposal we are going to make to the Assembly with reference to the atomic bomb. 334 When we agree I believe it wise that we should advise Molotov of our proposals. If we do not we are going to risk the success of the first meeting of the Assembly. I hope within a week to submit you what our views are and at the same time will submit them to Canada. You can then submit such views as you have on the subject. It is possible you are already prepared to do so. I hope this is true.

As for France and China, I think that it is entirely proper for us to meet in accordance with the agreement at Potsdam. As a matter of fact, it was Eden and Churchill who insisted that the Foreign Ministers Council should not prevent meeting of the Foreign Secretaries of Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union.

As to the Control Council for Japan, the attitude of the United States Government has not changed but we have as a result of communications with Molotov narrowed the issue and we proposed sending to him a statement which will be our last proposal on the subject. I will send you a copy.

Our attitude as to the Balkan countries has not changed and nothing has occurred that you have not been advised of.

As to the agenda, just as soon as we agree on the date I will forward to you and to Molotov the subjects we wish to have discussed and ask that you likewise suggest the subjects you desire placed on the agenda. At that time I will forward you a statement of our view on the subjects we suggest for the agenda. I repeat that I think it important that the conference should not be as formal as the London Council of Foreign Ministers Conference. My hope is that the three of us can meet to discuss the subject[s] that are now disturbing our relations and that we may have the opportunity of discussing them with Stalin as well as Molotov. It is important that we confer before the United Nations Assembly meets in January.

Of course I cannot furnish you a complete agenda. I will however wire you the subjects I suggest and our views on such subjects so far as it is possible.

The difficulty in conversing over this teletype shows necessity of our talking across the table. Goodbye.

[Foreign Secretary Bevin:] I regret that I was not consulted before Mr. Byrnes approached Molotov. Had I been, I could have avoided difficulties arising. It is almost impossible for me to attend a conference at the time suggested.

³³ W. L. Mackenzie King, Canadian Prime Minister.

^{33a} For documentation on efforts to develop a system of international control of atomic energy, see pp. 1 ff.

- 2. I have consulted Prime Minister Attlee and we both agree that to have another Foreign Secretaries Conference without adequate preparation would only lead to another failure.
 - 3. Past experience proves this.
- 4. I have no idea what is to go on the agenda and what solutions you propose for the items you put on the agenda. Therefore I could not be instructed by my Government before I went and I am not prepared to attend a conference again without knowing what my colleague's view is. I suggest we ought to make one resolute and definite effort to secure peace. I realise the urgency but [preparatory?] work will contribute. If you will forward your proposed agenda I will examine it immediately and it may well be that far better work would be accomplished if the deputies examined the agenda and drew up the points of difference and narrow our difficulties.
- 5. For instance, we are going to start discussing when we meet procedure just where we left it in London, and will we not be there for the eight days proposed in your telegram and just do nothing? There is no indication that Stalin has changed his mind, whereas exchange of views on the agenda first might remove the difficulties.
- 6. Has the American attitude changed in any way to the Balkan countries? My Government would like to know before they enter the conference.
- 7. Has your Government's attitude changed with regard to the Control Council for Japan which appears to be the burning point with Russia? You will remember on this point I gave way on my original proposal in order to accommodate and to stand in with you. But where do we stand now? I have no desire to gang up against Russia but in view of the commitments I made to you when in London I think it is only right and proper that I should have now from the United States Government a clear statement as to their policy, and see how far it fits with ours and know exactly what I am expected to decide.
- 8. Are France and China to be excluded? China is interested in Japan, and France in Germany.
- [9.] Molotov will in any case, we hope, be here in London at the beginning of January for the opening of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

If we got to Moscow on 15th or 17th and Russians know that we want to get away before Christmas, it is likely that they will stall till the last moment and then try and force us to come to some agreement before we go so as to avoid another failure. Christmas in Russia isn't until January 6th so they'll be in no hurry themselves.

I would urge you to arrange to let me have a complete agenda and your views referred to in your message before determining the date of the meeting. I will then consult the Prime Minister and the Cabinet and let you have a firm reply. Meanwhile I am keeping the matter secret.

I would be grateful if you would let Halifax have a copy of the record of this conversation.

With reference to Japan, in view of the fact that I gave way to meet you in London, I should like to see your last proposal before you forward it to Molotov.

You may be sure I will proceed with the study of the problem continuously, but I am not in a position to give you a reply today.

I trust you are well and that all will go well.

I did eliminate anger from interchange.34 Bevin wants to establish three areas under which we accept Monroe Doctrine tradition with good neighbor policy, within which smaller states exercise self-government. He is desperately anxious to talk with you before Moscow Conference. Your sentence in teletype conversation which begins, "the difficulty in conversing over this teletype shows necessity of our talking across the table" gave him confidence that there was possibility of minds meeting. If you would agree to going on to Moscow via London I believe we could get him to agree to a schedule for conference in Moscow. He realizes that success at such a conference is dependent in part upon agreement on agenda. Please advise me because I am sure I could help you in carrying out your program.

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) to the Secretary of State 35

[London,] November 28, 1945.

I have been thinking over our exchange of views of yesterday.

Anxious as I am to resolve the kind of deadlock that has persisted since the failure of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London I ³⁴ Presumably reference is to the Trans-Atlantic Teletype Conference between the Secretary of State and Foreign Secretary Bevin; see supra.

³⁵ This message bears no indication as to the date and manner of delivery to the Secretary, but it appears to be the message which Lord Halifax read to the Secretary during their conversation on November 29; see p. 590.

continue to have misgivings about the way in which you propose to handle it.

I feel very strongly that a Conference is most unlikely to be successful without adequate preparation and especially with a time limit imposed upon us.

As regards procedure we ought, as I suggested to you yesterday, to be very careful.

Further, is it wise after all that has happened to revert to meetings of three only? If Far East questions are on your agenda I do not see how we can exclude China, and France as we know makes all the more trouble about questions in which she feels that she has a direct concern if she has no part in the initial decisions. I know that there was agreement at Yalta about meetings of the Three, but would not such a meeting on the eve of the United Nations Assembly give rise to all the old suspicions and discontent? Had we not better get on to the United Nations basis as soon as possible?

I agree with you that before the meeting of the United Nations, you and we and the Canadian Government should try to reach agreement amongst ourselves in the first place on the method of dealing in the United Nations Organisation with the Washington proposals on atomic energy and should then advise the other permanent members of the Security Council of our proposals. Before our exchange of views yesterday I had already telegraphed Lord Halifax instructing him to put certain suggestions to you on this point. I should hope through ordinary diplomatic channel we might with no great difficulty reach agreement on this. And as the proposals emanate from us it would be well to have agreement and our minds clear before discussing between others.

I had hoped the Assembly of the United Nations would have brought about in the normal course a meeting of Foreign Ministers here and would have afforded us an opportunity of getting together on all questions that cause us difficulty.

During the meeting of the United Nations, if you and Molotov and others were here there should be ample opportunity, as there usually is, for informal discussion without arousing suspicion.

I have talked this over with the Prime Minister (though not with the Cabinet.) We are both anxious to help but anxious not to fail.

I beg you to consider this alternative.

Washington, November 29, 1945—11 a. m.

10352. Personal for Winant. Please deliver following message to Bevin:

"I should suggest the following items for inclusion in the agenda of next meeting of Foreign Secretaries:

"1. The proposal for the establishment of a commission under the United Nations Organization to consider the control of atomic energy in the interest of peace.³⁷

"2. The reconvening of the Council of Foreign Ministers, including provision for the prompt resumption of work by their deputies in the preparation of peace settlements for a peace conference.

"3. The terms of reference of the Allied Council for Japan and of the Far Eastern Commission.

"4. The establishment of an independent government for Korea. 4—"5. The disarming of Japanese in, and their evacuation from, Northern China.

"6. The transfer of the control of Manchuria to the National Government of China.

"7. The removal of Allied Troops from Iran.

"8. The establishment of conditions which will permit the recognition of the governments of Bulgaria and Rumania.

"9. Such other items as may be added by the common consent of the three governments.

"While I am not unmindful of the common criticism that there was inadequate preparation for the London Conference, I cannot agree that the shortcomings of the Conference were due to insufficient preparatory work. It was always intended that the technical work on the treaties should be prepared by the Deputies and they never got started on their work because of conflicts which in no way were caused by lack of preparation. Events are moving too rapidly to permit the quarterly meeting of Foreign Secretaries which was intended to deal with current problems, to be delayed pending prolonged diplomatic exchanges.

For documentation regarding this subject, see pp. 1 ff.

 $^{^{36}}$ In telegram 2435, December 1, 6 p.m., to Moscow, the substance of this message was transmitted to Ambassador Harriman for his information but not for communication to the Soviet Government (740.00119 Council/12–145).

"While our Government is eager to work in closest cooperation with yours, I think you will agree it is not necessary or desirable that we should reach agreement on every detail before discussions with the Soviet Union.

"On the first suggested item for the agenda, there has been an exchange of views between President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee and we hope to talk further with Lord Halifax and Ambassador Pearson ⁴³ regarding our common proposal. After such talks we will submit you a memorandum.

"As to the second item, the peace machinery, the compromise proposal I made at London was not rejected by Molotov who merely stated he could not accept it without personal consultation with his Government. In his talks with Harriman, Stalin accepted the peace conference idea, but reserved judgment as to whether there should be one or more peace conferences and differed as to the states to be invited. I am hopeful that my compromise in substance will be accepted. But I do not think that acceptance can be secured until we meet.

"As to the third item, we have kept your Embassy informed of our negotiations with the Soviet Union on the terms of reference for the Allied Council and the Far Eastern Commission and the issues have been narrowed as far as they can be through diplomatic channels.

"As to the fourth item, we are prepared to press for the establishment of an independent Korean government. If that is not acceptable, we would favor a trusteeship under the United Nations for a limited period of time similar to that which we suggested for the Italian colonies.

"Item 5 is inserted so that we can make clear to the Soviets the limited purpose of our military mission in Northern China and to draw from them a statement of their own policy towards developments there.

"Similarly item 6 is intended to secure a reaffirmation from the Soviets of Soviet policy under the recent Sino-Soviet Agreement.44

"As to item 7 you are fully informed with regard to our views as to the desirability of having all Allied troops promptly withdrawn from Iran.

"The inclusion of item 8 will naturally depend on the consent of the Soviets. If they consent, I should think that that would be some evi-12505. Personal to Secretary Byrnes. Bevin's message to you forwarded today via British Embassy Washington was despatched before your teletype message (10352, Nov 29) reached London this evening.

There has been some confusion here because of a Reuters despatch which was flashed through at about 5 o'clock this evening London time to the effect that President Truman in a press conference 46 said he did not favor a further meeting of the representatives of the three powers but hoped that world problems could be settled through United Nations Organization which he believed could be established within 90 days.

Would you please cable me his exact statement as there is some question in the Foreign Office as to whether the reference included meetings of the Foreign Ministers.

Bevin told me Tuesday ⁴⁷ night that he had not put your proposals before the full Cabinet. He has tried to limit his conversations to ensure secrecy. Your teletype message of Tuesday he took up with Attlee alone.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State

[Washington,] November 29, 1945.

Lord Halifax handed the Secretary an Aide-Mémoire 48 on Atomic Energy and the procedure for bringing the proposal for the Commission before the General Assembly of the UNO.

The Secretary said this is one of the matters he would like to talk with Bevin about. The Secretary said he is convinced it would be wise to advise Molotov of what they are considering, otherwise when the matter is presented to the UNO the Russians may not agree to it. The Secretary showed to Lord Halifax a copy of a telegram he had sent to London this morning for Bevin suggesting that the matter be considered at next meeting of the Foreign Secretaries.

The Ambassador pointed out that in the Aide-Mémoire Bevin set out three plans for putting the matter before the Assembly. He said his Government wishes to make every effort to secure the cooperation of the Soviet Government and inquired whether the Secretary had received any reaction from Moscow to the message transmitting the statement of Nov. 15.

The Secretary replied that he had not.

The Ambassador wondered whether the Secretary would consider inquiring of Harriman whether the Soviet Government would cooperate in putting the proposal before the UNO, to which the Secretary replied that if the three were to meet, Molotov could be informed so that he would be prepared to discuss it.

The Secretary said that if Mr. Bevin did not wish to go to such a meeting, we would have to change our thinking.

The Ambassador then read to the Secretary a message on this matter from Bevin 49 suggesting that the five Foreign Ministers meet in London while the UNO Assembly is in session.

The Secretary said he had thought of that, but by going to Moscow

(1) he had hoped to have an opportunity to obtain Stalin's views, and

(2) it is important to have an opportunity to discuss certain matters before the meeting of the General Assembly in January. retary said he felt the atomic energy matter should be discussed with the Russians before it is presented to UNO, or it will have little chance of getting their approval.

48 Dated November 29, p. 77.

⁴⁹ Presumably the reference here is to the message of November 28, p. 585.

The Secretary mentioned that it might be possible to have the Foreign Secretaries meet in London just prior to the General Assembly meeting for informal discussions. The Secretary pointed out, regarding a Moscow meeting, that this would be to carry out an agreement; that the Foreign Secretaries had met in San Francisco in April, at Potsdam in July, London in September, and that they would merely be meeting informally to consider whatever matters were open for negotiation and adjustment, in accordance with the agreement that they would meet every three or four months.

Lord Halifax pointed out that it would be risky to meet without France and China without assurance of coming out with agreement, and that if the meeting were held in London prior to UNO and [any?] sting which might result from failure to reach agreement would be lost in the interest in UNO.

The Secretary stated there was likely to be an advantage in the attitude of Molotov toward a meeting in Moscow—that he would be more pliable as a host and might consider it important that the other two Secretaries would take the trouble to come to Moscow. Lord Halifax thought it would be well to obtain the views of Clark Kerr and Harriman on this, but was inclined to agree with the Secretary.

The Secretary inquired what would be the effect of not going to Moscow after Molotov has agreed, to which Lord Halifax replied "You've got us in a bit of a hole." The Secretary stated he could not have been so presumptuous as to invite himself and his friends too to go to Moscow, and that it would not have looked good to the Soviets for the U.S. and British to jointly propose such a meeting. He said he had informed Bevin of his proposal to Molotov just the day after he telegraphed Moscow, before he had received Molotov's reply.

The Secretary said he would consider Bevin's message.

12525. Personal to the Secretary. This noon Bevin asked me to meet him at the Foreign Office. Cadogan ⁵⁰ was present. In going over your message 10352 of November 29, which I forwarded to him last night, he stated he realized that this message had crossed his message ⁵¹ forwarded through Halifax the day before but he had by then at Apparently reference is to Bevin's message of November 28 to the Secretary of State, p. 585.

received Halifax's report of your conversation with him of last night.⁵² He also told me that the suggested conference at Moscow had been twice discussed with the Cabinet as well as with the Prime Minister personally. Bevin and Cadogan were both doubtful of the wisdom of a meeting of the three Secretaries of State in Moscow. Our interchange ended in their giving me an aide-mémoire which I am quoting verbatim. I have had no reply to my message to you which I forwarded last night (Emby's 12509 [12505?] Nov 29).

The aide-mémoire reads as follows:

"The statement made yesterday by President Truman,⁵³ if correctly reported, is rather bewildering. He is reported to have said that probably no further big three meeting would be required. He wished to see the United Nations organ, now being formed, take over and do its job. He was not in favor of special conferences and never had been.

"I cannot understand how Mr. Byrnes' proposal for a big three meeting in Moscow can be reconciled with this.

"In regard to Mr. Byrnes' agenda, I would observe that point 1 relates to the proposal for the establishment of a commission under the United Nations organ to consider the control of atomic energy. Seeing that this relates to the United Nations organ I am doubtful whether discussion of this subject could be confined to the three. I cannot understand how points 3, 4, 5 and 6 could be discussed without China, and if China is included I am sure it would be impossible to exclude France.

"In general, I am still not clear as to the nature of the meeting proposed by Mr. Byrnes. Is it to be an exploratory exchange of views or is it to endeavor to arrive at firm conclusions?

"I must emphasize that after President Truman's statement in the form in which it has been made public here, the announcement of a meeting of three or five in the near future in Moscow would produce complete bewilderment both in Parliament and in the public here.

"30th Nov 1945."

10451. Reference your 12525, November 30. President's remarks at Press Conference as to "meetings of Big Three" had reference only to meetings of Prime Minister, Stalin and the President. It is generally understood here that "Big Three" refers not to countries but to the heads of the three governments.

<sup>See the memorandum, supra.
See footnote 46, p. 589.</sup>

I still think it important that we should confer with Molotov about the atomic bomb before our proposal is presented to the United Nations Assembly. After the three Foreign Ministers have conferred, we can also present the proposal to France and China.

As to the suggestion that we cannot discuss Far Eastern affairs in the absence of China, we have been negotiating with Russia as to the Far Eastern Commission. China is aware of it and does not object. I am satisfied China would welcome any progress in our relations with Russia which affect China.

We would make plain before the meeting that it was exploratory, that the purpose of such meetings as originally proposed was to enable us to exchange views as to current problems.

I do hope that Bevin can promptly secure agreement to our meeting at Moscow on December 15.54

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State

[Washington,] December 4, 1945.

Mr. Wright ⁵⁵ called to see the Secretary at 7:30 p.m. Lord Halifax had requested an appointment earlier in the afternoon, but was unable to come at this hour as he was seeing the President at 9 p.m. Mr. Wright expressed apologies for Lord Halifax's inability to come.

Mr. Wright said they had received an urgent message from Mr. Bevin regarding the proposed meeting in Moscow. He said Mr. Bevin feels very reluctant and that they could hardly afford to have a meeting in Moscow which would be a failure, for this would leave them in a worse position than at present. He said Bevin was doubtful about preparation for the meeting and feels it might do more harm than good. Also, as regards the atomic bomb, Bevin does not see how this matter can be discussed with Molotov when agreement has not been reached between the US, British and Canadians as to what they will present to UNO. Further, it is not clear to Bevin what is in the minds of the US people to discuss; he doesn't see how we can leave out China and if we bring in China we cannot leave out France, ⁵⁴ In telegram 12677, December 4, 2 p. m., from London, Ambassador Winant reported that he had outlined the Secretary's position to Bevin who would communicate with the Secretary through Ambassador Halifax. Telegram 10494, December 4, to London, replied that Halifax had not heard from Bevin, that the Secretary was embarrassed over the delay and asked that Bevin be urged to communicate with the Secretary as soon as possible. In response, telegram 12700, December 4, from London, reported that Bevin's reply had already been sent by Bevin to Halifax. (740.00119 Council/12-445)

as the French are already suspicious; and finally, Bevin was not certain what the President meant by "no more three-power meetings."

The Secretary said he had informed Bevin of the reasons why he felt a meeting would be helpful at this time.

As regards the President's remarks, the Secretary told Mr. Wright that in answer to a question at an informal press conference as to whether there was any plan to hold a Big Three meeting, the President [replied] that there was no such intention—the only normal and correct answer. The Secretary remarked that in this country "Big Three" has always meant the heads of the three governments—not the countries, and that at Yalta and again at Potsdam the Foreign Secretaries were referred to as "The Little Three".

As to the inclusion of China, the Secretary stated that we are at present communicating with the Soviet regarding matters affecting China and that we have not felt that China should be advised at every stage of the negotiations; they have not asked it and do not expect it. China's greatest hope lies in the possibility of agreement between the US, Great Britain and the Soviet Union, and therefore China would not offer complaint. That being true, there would be no reason for including France.

The Secretary stated that it was the wishes of Churchill and Eden that the three secretaries should meet every three months and they proposed it at Yalta. Then at Potsdam, after the Council of Foreign Ministers had been set up, it was argued that the Council should not cause the discontinuance of the meetings of the three, and a statement to this effect was put into the Potsdam Protocol. The purpose of such meetings, as agreed to at Yalta, is to keep up contact between the three governments and discuss informally in an exploratory way matters open for settlement. It is to be a current meeting, not a conference of the heads of governments—and it is more important now than ever before.

As to harm being done by failure to agree, the Secretary stated that if they were not discussed prior to UNO they would endanger the success of that organization. The Secretary said he would not expect that agreement could be reached on all the items open for discussion, but that agreement on one or two would be progress and would make such a meeting worthwhile.

The Secretary told Mr. Wright that there is no doubt in his mind but that agreement on the atomic energy proposal between the US, Canada and the British will be reached in a few days, that there are no differences between us and it is merely a matter of implementing the statement already agreed to by the heads of the three Governments. A meeting was just held this afternoon, the Secretary stated, and there didn't seem to be any differences between us. He said he hoped to tell Russia what we propose to present to UNO and thereby try to save UNO from the failure that would probably result from the group action being presented without the Russians having been informed.

Mr. Wright stated that there is another point which Mr. Bevin mentioned in his message—he has learned from Clark-Kerr that Stalin is not expected to return to Moscow before the end of December and Bevin feels that if Stalin were to be in Moscow there would be stronger reason for meeting there. Bevin hopes the Secretary will agree that talks be held between the three Secretaries in London prior to UNO in January.

The Secretary said that both he and the President felt that the Russians should be advised, and that it is our intention to advise them of the atomic bomb proposal prior to UNO. The Secretary said he sincerely regretted that Bevin has not agreed to his proposal to go to Moscow and that he is embarrassed now over the delay in answering Molotov and feels that he must not delay longer.

Mr. Wright said it is not clear in Mr. Bevin's mind what the Secretary would expect to discuss in Moscow and what it would expect to achieve.

The Secretary told Mr. Wright he had sent Bevin an itemized statement of the nine subjects he would like to discuss, but that it was his thought that the discussion should not be limited to those items, that any question any one of the three wished to bring up should be discussed. No statement can be made that, for the meeting to be a success, agreement must be reached on all items; that if agreement were reached on two of the nine problems it would be a forward step the world would be delighted to know about. If a meeting is never held, we will never know what might have been agreed to. The Secretary said he would hope to tell to the press the facts about the meeting, that it was an exploratory, informal meeting; that the three Governments should maintain close friendly relations in peace as in war.

The Secretary stated he will be disappointed if Mr. Bevin does not agree to go, but that he intends to go to Moscow, because he approached Molotov about such a meeting, believing in the Yalta Agreement, and he must go. He said he has asked Winant to advise Bevin of his embarrassment and ask for his early answer.

Mr. Wright inquired as to the probable length of the meeting and the Secretary stated that no limit has been stated, but that he would hope, as he advised Molotov, to be back by the 25th, but that if for any reason it was necessary to stay longer he would not hesitate to do so. He would expect to be there by the 15th.

"We plan to release the following statement to the press Friday, December 7, 10 a.m., Washington time:

'A meeting of the Foreign Secretaries of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States has been arranged to take place in Moscow December 15. This meeting has been called in accordance with the decision taken at the Yalta Conference providing for quarterly conferences of the Three Foreign Secretaries. The meeting will provide an opportunity for the British and American Governments to exchange views with the Soviet Government on the subject of the control of atomic energy. It will also provide opportunity for informal and exploratory discussion of other matters of current interest and concern to the three countries.'

"We hope that a simultaneous release substantially along these lines may be made at London and Moscow. We suggest the foregoing form of release to avoid any undue expectations in advance as to the results of the conference, although it is not our intention to confine the discussions to atomic energy but to include the other points we have tentatively proposed for inclusion in the agenda. While we hope differences in the form of release in the three capitals will not be so great as to provoke public discussion, the exact form of the release may be so shaped by each government as to meet its particular problems.

"In order to meet your desire to omit matters of concern to the French Government from the agenda we are ready to agree that questions affecting Germany should not be discussed. We think it important, however, that there should be exploratory conversations on the resumption of the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers, but no definite decision should be made without communication with France and China. We are communicating our proposed agenda as a purely American proposal to Molotov with the statement that it is of course understood that the other two Governments propose their own suggested lists of items with the final agenda to be drawn up by mutual agreement when the three Foreign Secretaries meet in Moscow."

The British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Secretary of State

Washington, December 6, 1945.

My Dear Secretary of State: Mr. Bevin has asked me to tell you that in deference to your strong views, he is prepared to agree to go with you to Moscow on the understanding that it is to be an exploratory conference the object of which will be to ascertain and examine the difficulties between the Three Great Powers before the United Nations Assembly meets.

At the same time Mr. Bevin hopes you will consider the following points:—

(a) Should we not tell the Soviet Government and also announce to the world that one of the main objects of the meeting is to enable the United States Government and His Majesty's Government to exchange views with the Soviet Government on the subject of the control of atomic energy? Mr. Bevin notes that this subject appears as Item 1 on your proposed agenda.

(b) Mr. Bevin could not agree to discuss in Moscow matters of concern to the French Government in the absence of French representatives. He considers that the two main questions of concern to the French are:

⁵⁷ Not printed; it repeated the substance of telegram 10352, November 29, to London, p. 587, including the eight items suggested for inclusion in the agenda of the meeting of Foreign Ministers.

(1) Questions affecting Germany. Mr. Bevin notes that these do not figure in your proposed agenda and he assumes that you agree that they should not be discussed in Moscow.

- (2) The question of reconvening the Council of Foreign Ministers. Mr. Bevin feels that if this subject were discussed in Moscow we should soon get ourselves involved in questions which we have agreed cannot be discussed in the absence of the French, and we should thus be manoeuvred into giving away the position adopted at the Meeting of Foreign Ministers in London. Mr. Bevin therefore hopes that you will agree to take this subject off the agenda. He adds that it may be that if the Moscow discussions are fruitful we shall be able at the end of them to approach the question of arrangements for the resumption of the Foreign Ministers' Council without incurring the danger he has mentioned, but he does not think that there should be any discussion of this particular topic with the Soviet Government at the outset.
- (c) Mr. Bevin hopes that the United States Government will join with His Majesty's Government in giving an assurance to the French Government before any announcement of the forthcoming meeting is made that the United States Government, like His Majesty's Government, do not propose to discuss in Moscow any matters of concern to the French Government. If the United States Government does not feel able to join His Majesty's Government in giving such an assurance to the French Government, Mr. Bevin feels that in any case he must tell the French Government that for his part he will not discuss such matters in Moscow in their absence.
- (d) Mr. Bevin is very glad that you are prepared, if necessary, to stay for some time in Moscow, but points out that there will in fact be an automatic time limit on the meeting since the General Assembly of the United Nations is due to meet in London in the first week of January. He feels it would be most unfortunate if the Assembly were to open while the Foreign Secretaries of the Three Great Powers were still sitting in Moscow. It seems to him, therefore, that the Moscow discussions could not continue much beyond the end of December. This being so, it is all the more important to keep them on an exploratory basis. Moreover, Mr. Bevin hopes that in view of our willingness to go to Moscow, Mr. Molotov himself will be willing to come to London for the General Assembly. He wonders whether you would put this point to Mr. Molotov when you communicate with him. Mr. Bevin naturally hopes that you yourself will attend the General Assembly in London.

Mr. Bevin also asks me to consult you about the terms of the announcement of the conference, to which he would like to give careful consideration from the point of view of British public opinion. He suggests for your consideration something on the lines of the attached draft statement. As regards the timing, he asks me to say that he attaches particular importance to making a communication to the French Government before any public statement is made.

Believe me [etc.]

Draft Statement Proposed by the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin)

The Governments of the United States, U.S.S.R. and the United Kingdom have come to the conclusion that it would be useful if the three Foreign Secretaries, who have been in constant touch, were to meet for an exchange of views and exploratory discussions before the meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations which is due to begin early in January.

It was agreed between the three Governments at the Crimea Conference and reaffirmed at the Berlin Conference that there should be such periodic consultations between the Foreign Secretaries of the three Governments, and since the last occasion on which they met was in London and prior to that in San Francisco, it has been agreed that their forthcoming meeting shall take place in Moscow.

The meeting will also afford an opportunity to the United States Government to have an exchange of views with the Soviet Government on the subject of control of atomic energy.

Moscow Embassy Files: 500 Foreign Ministers Meeting-Moscow

The American Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) to the People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union (Molotov)

Moscow, December 7, 1945.

Dear Mr. Molotov: Mr. Byrnes proposes the following items for the agenda of the forthcoming meeting of the three Foreign Ministers:

1. Consideration of the proposal for a United Nations Commission to consider the control of atomic energy.

2. The question of reconvening the Council of Foreign Ministers including resumption of work by their deputies in the preparation of settlements for a peace conference.

3. Terms of reference of the Allied Council and of the Far Eastern Commission.

4. The establishment of an independent Korean Government.

5. The disarming of the Japanese armed forces in northern China and their evacuation to Japan.
6. The transfer of control of Manchuria to the National Government of China.

7. The withdrawal of Allied troops from Iran.

8. The conditions which would permit recognizing the Governments of Rumania and Bulgaria.

You will note that except for the addition of atomic energy the topics are substantially the same as those I mentioned to you as possible matters for discussion on November 24th.⁵⁹

Mr. Byrnes hopes that both the British and Soviet Governments will each propose items for the agenda and suggests that the final agenda be drawn up by mutual agreement between the three Foreign Ministers when they meet in Moscow. He has asked me to explain to you that it would be most helpful if he could obtain from you as soon as possible the items which the Soviet Government desires to propose for inclusion on the agenda.

Mr. Byrnes has tentatively set December 12 as the date of his departure from Washington. I expect to be able to inform you shortly regarding Mr. Byrnes' precise plans and the names of the other members of his party.

Is there any further information which you wish me to obtain for you at this time?

Sincerely yours,

[W. A. HARRIMAN]

The People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union (Molotov) to the American Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

[Translation]

Moscow, December 7, 1945.

DEAR MR. Ambassador: With respect to Mr. Byrnes' proposal regarding the agenda for the forthcoming meeting of the three Foreign Secretaries I can inform you that the Soviet Government agrees with this proposal, but, on its part, introduces the following proposals.

It is suggested after point 5 in your letter 60 (the disarming of the Japanese armed forces in northern China and their evacuation to Japan) to include on the agenda the two following questions: Firstly, concerning the withdrawal of United States forces from China and, secondly, concerning the withdrawal of British forces from Greece. In addition, the Soviet Government suggests that the first point of the agenda set forth by you be transferred to the end of the agenda. The Soviet Government also agrees with Mr. Byrnes' proposal that the final agenda should be drawn up by mutual agreement among the Three Ministers when they meet in Moscow.

Ambasador Harriman's meeting with Molotov on the evening of November 24 was reported in telegram 3945, November 24, from Moscow, p. 579.
 Reference is to the letter of December 7, supra.

I also hope that when we meet personally I will be able to receive from you certain clarifications on various points of the agenda communicated by you.

Sincerely yours,

V. M. Molotov

Memorandum by the Secretary of State of a Conversation With the French Ambassador (Bonnet)⁶¹

[Washington,] December 7, 1945.

The Secretary telephoned the Ambassador at 6:30 p. m. and requested him to come to the Department. The Secretary apologized for having troubled the Ambassador to come down at 9 o'clock in the morning, at which time he was unable to discuss the matter he had intended to discuss with him. The Secretary remarked that the Ambassador had no doubt by this time received news of the subject, as there had been a misunderstanding about the time of release and the ticker carried the news from London.

The Secretary told the Ambassador he would recall that at Yalta it had been agreed that the three Foreign Ministers would meet every three or four months to discuss current matters in an informal way. They had met in Washington prior to the San Francisco Conference and while at San Francisco, they met at Potsdam in July, again in September at London, and three months had passed since September, so he (the Secretary) had proposed that they meet in Moscow. They would meet on the 15th of December and particularly they would discuss the Atomic Bomb, also the Far Eastern Commission and other matters in the Pacific which are now pending.

The Secretary told the Ambassador he had not received Bevin's agreement until yesterday as to the date, and that he had hoped to have released the news this morning, but there was a slight change in the announcement ⁶² which caused the delay.

The Secretary told the Ambassador he had learned from the ticker news that the Foreign Office in London had advised the French representative there of the plans to meet.

(740.00119 Council/12-745)

62 For the statement regarding the forthcoming meeting of Foreign Secretaries in Moscow, released to the press on December 7, see Department of State Bulletin, December 9, 1945, p. 935.

⁶¹ The substance of this conversation was reported in telegram 5770, December 11, to Paris (740.00119 Council/12–1145). A similar conversation was held by the Secretary with the Chinese Ambassador, Wei-Tao-ming. The memorandum of this conversation states that the Ambassador commented that it was very important to have such a meeting as announced and bring harmony on certain questions. He wished the Secretary all success on the forthcoming meeting. (740.00119 Council/12–745)

The Secretary said the British are not in favor of discussing at the meeting any matters affecting France, and he believes that will be agreed to.⁶³ The Secretary said there is a question as to whether the peace conference will be discussed. The Secretary recalled his proposal at the Council of Foreign Ministers and said he still hoped the Soviets might change their views. Of course, if this were discussed in Moscow, it would have to be discussed further later. Particularly it was felt that the atomic bomb should be discussed prior to the opening of the UNO, and this is the subject stated in the announcement.

The Ambassador thanked the Secretary for informing him of the meeting and inquired if the announcement would be made this evening, to which the Secretary replied in the affirmative. The Ambassador said he noticed in the news, which came from London, that the German question was mentioned as one of the subjects for discussion at the meeting.

The Secretary replied that this is one of the subjects there is no agreement to discuss, that it is proposed that no matters affecting France and China be discussed without first communicating with them, and this has been agreed to by him and Mr. Bevin. The only reservation he wished to make, the Secretary said, was that he hoped to make some progress on the matter of the peace conference, and one might say that this would affect France, but it would also affect a lot of other nations not represented at the meeting. It is his hope, the Secretary said, that by discussing this matter and reaching some agreement the Council of Foreign Ministers can again meet.

The Ambassador said that his Government had hoped that when future meetings of the Foreign Secretaries were held they would include France and China—the permanent members of the Security Council of UNO. He has had no reaction as yet from his Government on the Moscow meeting, but feels sure they will not be pleased.

The Secretary pointed out that agreement between the US and the Soviet on certain matters would mean progress for other nations also.

The Ambassador inquired if the Secretary saw any possibility of inviting Bidault, that this would be the best solution so far as France is concerned.

The Secretary replied that this is the solution he would like, but that, unfortunately, he saw no such possibility.

⁶³ Telegram 13050, December 12, 1945, 9 p. m., from London, reported information from the British Foreign Office that the French reaction to the Moscow Conference had been comparatively mild; Foreign Secretary Bevin's assurance that the British Government would not commit itself on matters of concern to France had been communicated to Foreign Minister Bidault and had a mollifying effect; from the British point of view, it would have been preferable if some formula could have been devised to include France (740.00119 Council/12–1245).

The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman)

Washington, December 8, 1945—noon.

2477. Personal for Harriman. Please inform Molotov that I am pleased with his agreement with our proposals regarding the agenda for the meeting of the Foreign Secretaries.

On our part we would have no objection to the transfer of our first point on the agenda—that relating to atomic energy—to the end.

It would be difficult for us to arrive at any definite understanding regarding our troops in China in the absence of representatives of the Government of China. If satisfactory to you and Mr. Bevin, we should be glad, however, to have an informal exchange of views on the withdrawal of allied troops from all independent states other than Japan and Germany.

It is understood, of course, that the final agenda will be drawn up by mutual agreement when we meet.

"In approving Mr. Byrnes' suggestion to Mr. Molotov that a meeting of the three Foreign Secretaries be convened before the close of the year, I was not unmindful of the view that no meeting should be held until there was greater assurance of progress toward agreement on outstanding questions. But I felt that at this critical time continued drift and delay would be exceedingly unwise.

"I sincerely hope that you will cooperate with me to make the meeting a success and to give renewed assurance of the ability of the great powers to work together.

"I wish very much to have Mr. Byrnes convey to you a personal message from me. I earnestly hope that you will be able to see and talk frankly with him at an early date while he is in Moscow. Please let me know whether this will be possible."

Will arrive in Moscow either evening of 14th or certainly morning of 15th. 55 I presume we will proceed via Berlin where the Soviet navigator and radio operator will be picked up. The Army is handling all arrangements and will communicate exact time and other details. I shall be accompanied by Mr. Cohen, 66 Mr. Freeman Matthews, 67 Mr. John Carter Vincent, 68 Mr. Bohlen 69 and Colonel Hugh Kelly. 70 There may be one or two additions to the party whose names will be immediately communicated to you.⁷¹ Please ask the Soviet Foreign Office to give Embassy here blanket authorization to issue necessary visas to members of our party.

As I wish to keep the party as small as possible, please let me know urgently if Embassy can handle question of stenographers or if it is necessary for me to bring stenographic personnel and, if so, how many.

> Moscow, December 8, 1945—10 p. m. [Received December 8—4:44 p. m.]

4104. In my talk with Molotov this afternoon he expressed himself as entirely satisfied with release and timing of it and hoped that you were equally satisfied.⁷² He asked whether he should invite Mr. Bevin or whether you in your discussions with Bevin had already covered this point. This led to discussion of what Molotov described as the lapse of over a week in your correspondence with him. I explained to him Bevin's hesitance in agreeing to the meeting because of his concern over difficulties with French. This necessitated the exchange Telegram 2487, December 11, 1945, to Moscow, reported that Dr. James B. Conant, President of Harvard University, and Walter K. Scott, Communications Officer of the Department of State, would also accompany the Secretary to Moscow (740.00119 Council/12-1145).

⁷² Regarding the release of the statement on the convening of the meeting of the three Foreign Ministers in Moscow, see footnote 56, p. 596.

of number of messages between you and Bevin. I added that when you finally obtained Bevin's agreement you were fearful of leaks and therefore wished the release made at once so as to avoid harmful speculation and discussion. He seemed to be satisfied with my explanation and then asked whether you thought he should send a message to Bevin. I told him that I was sure you would think it appropriate for him to invite Bevin or at least express his gratification that he agreed to come. Molotov showed his good humor by saying "In any event my invitation to Bevin will not come as a surprise".

Molotov asked whether I had a reply from you to his letter of yesterday re the agenda. I replied that I expected to hear from you within the next day or two. When he pressed me for my opinion on what I thought your attitude would be in regard to his suggestions I answered:

1. That I felt sure you would be prepared to discuss control of atomic energy at any time during Conference that he might wish.

2. That I believed you would be quite prepared to discuss mission of American troops in China.

3. That question of British troops in Greece was after all primarily British matter.

I, of course, made it plain that I was making these comments only because he asked for my personal opinion. I have always tried to encourage this type of discussion as the Soviets are so reluctant to do so.

Molotov then asked me for clarification of point 5 of your proposals, namely the disarming and evacuation of Jap troops in North China. He asked whether you had in mind Manchuria and explained that all Jap troops had been disarmed in that area. He inquired with some surprise whether there were really any Jap troops still in North China who had not been disarmed. I replied that I had no detailed information but that as he knew there had been conflict between Communist and National Govt forces in North China and that the disarming and evacuation of Jap forces in this area was the reason for presence of our troops. I said I believed that you would be glad to explain situation to him in detail and to obtain from him his views on developments there. He seemed to be puzzled by point 5. Perhaps it would be clearer if it had been worded to include general situation in North China.⁷³

Telegram 2482, December 10, 1945, noon, to Moscow, commented on point 5 of the American proposed agenda as follows: "Point 5 of our proposals—namely the disarming and evacuation of Japanese troops in North China—was not directed to the Manchuria situation which is covered by point 6. In North China, excluding Manchuria, according to our information there are more than 300,000 Japanese troops which have not been evacuated and only a little more than half of them have been disarmed. Their disarmament and evacuation have been delayed and complicated by civil strife. We simply want to advise Molotov of the status of affairs and of the reasons why we have not been able to remove our troops." (740.00119 PW/12–1045)

I asked Molotov whether he had any further suggestions for agenda. In reply he said he had none at the moment as he wished to hear from Bevin first and pointed out that you had suggested that final agenda should be mutually agreed upon after your arrival in Moscow. As is his custom he gave me impression that he wanted to see all suggestions before he committed himself.

On leaving I inquired whether Generalissimus Stalin would be back in Moscow before meeting closed as I felt sure you would be anxious to pay your respects to him before leaving. He said that he would communicate this to Generalissimus Stalin and let me know.

He may inquire what countries you intended to cover by the phrase "all independent states". I assume that this could be interpreted to include the ex-satellite and liberated countries in Europe as well as Iran, The Lebanon, Syria, Iceland and Siam but to exclude Indo-China, the Dutch East Indies, etc. But it would be helpful in the event Molotov raises this question with me to have information to tell him informally what you have in mind.78 agenda of the meeting set forth in my letter to you of December 7, I would appreciate it if you would inform Mr. Byrnes as follows:

- 1. The Soviet Government suggested that there be included on the agenda of the meeting of the three Ministers the question concerning the withdrawal of American forces from China because, first of all, this question is very important and timely and secondly because Mr. Byrnes considered it possible in these circumstances to include on the agenda of the forthcoming meeting of the three Ministers other questions no less important immediately concerning China as, for example, the disarming of the Japanese armed forces in North China and their evacuation to Japan and the transfer of control over Manchuria to the National Government of China.
- 2. With respect to Mr. Byrnes' proposal that there be exchanged views in an informal manner concerning the withdrawal of Allied forces from all independent states, with the exception of Germany and Japan, the discussion of this question in such a general form, according to the Soviet Government, is inexpedient especially as, for example, the presence of Soviet troops on the territory of other countries is covered either by armistice agreements in force between the Allies and these countries or by other special agreements.

The visit was a courtesy call by the Secretary on Mr. Molotov following his arrival and consisted almost entirely of an exchange of amenities.

THE SECRETARY did say that he expected the next meeting of Foreign Ministers to take place in Washington next March or April to which Molotov offered no objection. In regard to the present meeting THE SECRETARY said he intended to insist that Mr. Molotov be Chairman of the meeting.

Mr. Molorov suggested that the first regular meeting take place December 16 at 5:00 p. m. at Spiridonovka. 80

No points on the agenda were discussed, but Mr. Molotov said that Mr. Bevin had raised objection to the inclusion of the Soviet suggestion concerning Greece and had proposed that economic questions affecting Europe be discussed. Mr. Molotov said he felt that the economic questions were too complicated for this meeting and could be dealt with by the Social and Economic Council of the world organization. He said the Soviet Government had no new questions to add to the agenda but that up to the present it was not known what the British attitude would be towards the points suggested by the United States and the Soviet Union beyond the indications from Mr. Bevin in regard to Greece and the economic questions.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of State, at Moscow 81

Washington, December 15, 1945—noon.

2531. Secdel 10.⁸² On December 14 the Senate Atomic Energy Committee called on the President, who asked me to be present. The Committee was disturbed by their conference with you and in fact stated their position as being, first, that, from what you had said and from the presence of Dr. Conant, they believed that you intended to disclose scientific information at your meetings in Moscow; second, that, if this was not the case, they believed that you were going to discuss and possibly make an agreement to disclose all information in advance of any arrangements for inspection and safeguards; third, that they were in favor of no exchange of information until arrangements for inspection and safeguards had been worked out and put into effect.

It was further stated by Senator Vandenberg that instructions which you took with you, by providing that the various stages referred to therein might be discussed independently, contemplated that an agreement might be reached regarding exchange of information prior to any agreement in regard to inspection and safeguards.

It was explained by the President, and with his permission by me also, that the Committee's impression referred to under first above was a misconception and that you had no intention whatever of disclosing any scientific information in the course of your present mission. It si Responding to this telegram in his telegram 4196, Delsec 10, December 17, from Moscow, the Secretary of State informed the Acting Secretary "you can tell the President that I do not intend presenting any proposal outside the framework of the three power declaration" and transmitted the text of the paper entitled "United States Proposals on Atomic Energy". was explained further that you intended primarily to discuss in Moscow the matter of securing Soviet support for the establishment of the United Nations Commission; that, insofar as the exchange of information was concerned, you intended merely to discuss the terms and conditions under which the ordinary freedom of scientific discussion could take place between scientists of this country and other countries in the field of atomic energy. This would apply only to pure research and scientific theory and not to applied science, technical know-how, or ordnance techniques. It was also pointed out that scientific information of this character would soon be freely available in the scientific journals and in scientific meetings in this country and hence available to the scientists of other countries and that before this happened it was your purpose to see whether methods could be worked out for access by American scientists to similar material from the Soviet Union, thus establishing a basis for good will and mutual confidence rather than suspicion.

The President made it clear that any proposals advanced would be referred here before agreement was reached and that he had no intention of agreeing to disclose any information regarding the bomb at this time or unless and until arrangements for inspection and safeguards could be worked out.

The Senators repeated all of the statements which they had made at your meeting and all agreed in the views expressed in the first paragraph of this message.

The President has seen this message.83

Subject: Agenda

1. THE AGENDA, ETC.

Mr. Molorov opened the meeting on his own behalf and that of the Soviet Government, welcoming the Delegations and his Colleagues: Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin. He expressed the hope that the conference would be a success.

Mr. Byrnes expressed confidence that great good would come of the conference and made the suggestion that Mr. Molotov should preside at its sessions.

Mr. Bevin expressed the hope that the conference would prove a great success not only for the countries immediately concerned, but also for the whole world and stated his support of Mr. Byrne's proposal that Mr. Molotov should preside.

Mr. Molorov thanked the other two delegates for their proposal that he preside and raised the preliminary question of the procedure of convening sessions.

It was agreed that there should be daily meetings at 4:00 p. m. with provision for exceptions to this rule if desirable.

Mr. Molorov stated that Mr. Malik would be the secretary of the Soviet Delegation.

Mr. Bevin stated that Mr. Dickson [Dixon?] would be the secretary of the British Delegation.

Mr. Byrnes stated that Mr. Bohlen would be the secretary of the American Delegation.

Mr. Molorov then raised the question of the Conference agenda, pointing out that Mr. Byrnes, as the sponsor of the conference, had proposed an agenda of eight items.⁸⁷ Mr. Molotov stated that in the opinion of the Soviet Delegation the first item on the agenda proposed by Mr. Byrnes should be placed at the end of the agenda and that two additional items should be inserted after item five.⁸⁸

⁸⁷ The original agenda proposed by the Secretary of State was set forth in Harriman's letter of December 7 to Molotov, p. 599.

Mr. Molorov stated that the British Government had contributed its observations with regard to the proposed agenda and that Mr. Bevin had objected to discussing the question of withdrawing British troops from Greece. He added that Mr. Bevin had also made observations concerning economic collaboration in Europe without however proposing the inclusion of this topic in the agenda. Mr. Molotov stated further that Mr. Byrnes had objected to the proposal of the Soviet Government to discuss the withdrawal of American troops from China.

Mr. Byrnes stated that there must be a misunderstanding in this matter as he had no objection to discussing the question of American troops in China, but on the contrary, would be very glad to discuss it.

Mr. Molorov maintained that Mr. Harriman's letter ⁸⁹ in this connection had replaced the question of withdrawing American troops from China by the question of withdrawing Allied troops from all independent states except Germany and Japan.

Mr. Byrnes at this point read aloud relevant excerpts of Mr. Harriman's letter (see enclosure no. 1 °°). Mr. Byrnes stated further that although he did not wish to arrive at a final understanding with regard to United States forces in China in the absence of a representative of the Chinese Government, he would be glad to discuss this question informally and also to discuss the withdrawal of Allied troops from all independent countries. With regard to Mr. Molotov's suggestion that the first item on the agenda submitted by Mr. Byrnes should be placed at the end of the agenda, Mr. Byrnes stated that he had no objection to this.

Mr. Molorov stated that there appeared to be certain differences of opinion with regard to the agenda. He inquired whether there was any objection to the Soviet proposal that the first item proposed by Mr. Byrnes should be discussed last.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether this item should necessarily be discussed last and suggested that it might be discussed further on in the course of the conference.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that Mr. Byrnes had agreed to the Soviet proposal; however, if it were found necessary in the course of the discussions to change this decision, it would be agreeable to him.

90 See previous footnote.

⁸⁸ Molotov's proposed modifications of the Secretary's suggested agenda were set forth in his letter of December 7 to Harriman, p. 600.

⁸⁹ Reference is to Harriman's letter of December 9 to Molotov, p. 606, setting forth the Secretary's reactions to Molotov's letter of December 7.

Mr. Bevin stated that he had not known that Mr. Byrnes was in agreement with the Soviet proposal and that in view of Mr. Byrnes' agreement, he would present no objections.

Mr. Byrnes remarked that in his opinion there should be no hard and fast agenda, but that the delegates should feel free to bring up any questions which they desired to discuss and that the agenda should be kept open at all times.

Mr. Molorov indicated his agreement, but suggested that the first item be considered as being placed at the end of the agenda.

There was no objection to this proposal.

Mr. Molorov then stated that the Soviet Government proposed to add to the agenda the following two questions:

- 1. The withdrawal of American troops from China, and
- 2. The withdrawal of British troops from Greece.

He stated further that the Soviet Delegation believed it necessary to receive information concerning developments in Indonesia and informally to exchange views on this topic. He stated that the Soviet Delegation, therefore, proposed to add the Indonesian situation to the agenda.⁹¹

With regard to item six of Mr. Byrnes' proposed agenda, concerning the transfer of control over Manchuria to the Chinese National Government, Mr. Molotov stated that this question might be removed from the agenda since the Soviet Government had a special agreement with the Chinese Government concerning Manchuria 92 and since there were no differences of opinion between the Soviet and Chinese Governments on this score. He, therefore, saw no reason why the Manchurian question should require special consideration.

Mr. Bevin stated that he could not agree to the inclusion of the British withdrawal from Greece on the agenda. He stated that he would be prepared to talk this matter over at a later date when it was determined how the conference was progressing in its discussions on the peace treaties. He took the point of view that Greek discussions should be handled in a preliminary way, rather than as a formal item on the agenda.

⁸² Apparently reference is to the agreement of August 14, 1945, between the Soviet Union and China regarding relations between the Soviet Commander in Chief and the Chinese administration following the entry of Soviet forces into the territory of the "Three Eastern Provinces" of China in connection with military operations against Japan; for text, see United Nations Treaty Series, vol. 10, p. 331; Department of State Bulletin, February 10, 1946, p. 206; or Department of State, Far Eastern Series No. 30: United States Relations with China (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1949), p. 592.

Mr. Byrnes stated that although the presence of United States troops in North China was covered by the surrender agreement, he had no objections to discussing this subject and would be glad to provide his colleagues with full information concerning it. He stated that his colleagues were entitled to be thoroughly informed concerning American actions in China and that he desired them to have this information. This, he said, applied to his desire to discuss the withdrawal of Allied troops from all states.

Mr. Bevin stated that with regard to Indonesia he did not quite know what his position was inasmuch as the British in Indonesia were acting under the orders of those who signed the surrender terms; the British troops were stationed in Indonesia in order to carry out the duties allocated to them there. He inquired as to whom he was to report to—the Combined Chiefs of Staff or the present body. He continued that he did not wish to be judged by those who were not in a position to judge him. He stated that the Soviet Government desired to ascertain what the British were doing in Indonesia and explained that they were merely the agents of the Supreme Commander. He explained that he did not want to be "put on the carpet" in the present situation.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he hoped Mr. Bevin would bear in mind the distinction between formal and informal discussions and pointed out that this question might be discussed informally without being placed on the agenda. He added that he was in favor of discussing any and all matters informally and that it would lead to better understanding among all three governments for any question in the minds of any one of the three to be discussed. He, for his part, would be glad to advise his colleagues on any subject they wished to raise.

Mr. Bevin stated that if the Indonesian question were discussed without agreement being obtained, then this would cause misunderstanding. He stated that he would be glad to talk with Mr. Molotov and Mr. Byrnes on the subject of Indonesia but repeated that the British were not free agents and were obligated to fulfil the instructions of the East Asia Command. He added that there were certain questions in his mind also which he would like to discuss informally for purposes of clarification without placing them on the agenda.

Mr. Byrnes stated that if Mr. Molotov's suggestion with regard to Indonesia was based upon the inclusion by Mr. Byrnes of Manchuria on the agenda, he wished to point out that he had included Manchuria not in order to provoke a discussion of the conduct of the Soviet Command but purely to obtain information concerning the situation in Manchuria. He added that if Mr. Molotov so desired, he would be willing to withdraw the question of Manchuria from the agenda. He stated that this was particularly the case in view of

Mr. Molotov's statement that the USSR was working harmoniously with the Chinese Government in regard to Manchuria. He stated that he desired to advise his colleagues of the situation in North China and had also desired to inquire about the situation in Manchuria, in which all sides were interested, but that the question of Manchuria could be withdrawn if Mr. Molotov so wished.

Mr. Molotov stated that with regard to Indonesia he was not referring to the execution of the armistice terms with Japan, which had been signed by the representatives of all three powers, but that the Indonesian question merited examination in essence. He stated that at the end of November the New York radio had reported that the Indonesians had lost 30,000 to 40,000 men and that actual warfare was taking place there. This had attracted the attention of the whole world. The Soviet Government would like to obtain informally information about these events and an explanation of them. He stated that the three Ministers could discuss informally ways and means of ending the bloodshed and stopping the intervention of foreign troops, particularly British, and could discuss the settlement of this question in a peaceful and democratic way. He inquired why this question could not be discussed informally in view of the proposals to discuss the questions of China and Iran. He then repeated that such discussion might facilitate a peaceful and democratic settlement of the Indonesian question.

With regard to the question of the transfer of the control of Manchuria to the Chinese National Government, Mr. Molotov repeated that the Soviet Government had an agreement with the Chinese National Government concerning Manchuria. He stated further that the Soviet Command had worked out a plan of evacuation under the terms of this agreement in accordance with which the Soviet evacuation of Manchuria would have been completed by December 3. The Soviet Command had proceeded with the evacuation and had already evacuated southern Manchuria when the Chinese Government in the middle of November had requested that the evacuation be suspended for a period of one month, to which the Soviet Government had agreed. The Chinese Government had recently approached the Soviet Government again with the request that the evacuation be suspended until February 1st and this further proposal was now under consideration.93 Mr. Molotov concluded that the Soviet Government had neither misunderstandings nor differences of opinion with the Chinese Government on this question and accordingly he saw no reason for its inclusion in the agenda. With regard to the withdrawal of United States troops from North China, Mr. Molotov inquired whether he was correct in assuming that Mr. Byrnes did not object to the inclusion of this topic on the agenda and to an informal exchange of views upon it.

⁹⁵ In his telegram 4190, Delsec. 9, December 17, from Moscow, reporting on the First Formal Session of the Conference, the Secretary added the following remark regarding Soviet-Chinese exchanges on the matter of evacuation of Manchuria: "Chinese Ambassador here says there was no new commitment by China to secure delay of withdrawal of Soviet troops." (740.00119-Council/12–1745)

Mr. Byrnes stated that he was in agreement with this.

Mr. Molorov stated that with regard to Greece, he believed that the Ministers were fully entitled to have an exchange of views. He stated that if the withdrawal of our troops from Iran were to be discussed, he saw no reason why the withdrawal from Greece and China should not also be discussed.

With regard to Iran, Mr. Molotov stated that the presence of Soviet troops is covered by the Anglo-Soviet Treaty 95 and that this question had been discussed at Berlin and had come up for examination again at London. An exchange of views had taken place in London. There had also been an exchange of letters between Mr. Molotov and Mr. Bevin on this question. Mr. Molotov stated further that if Mr. Bevin opposed the discussion of the evacuation of troops from Indonesia, then he would object to including the question of evacuating troops from Iran on the agenda. He would propose therefore that these two questions be considered apart from the agenda.

Mr. Bevin stated that the question of evacuating troops from Iran had not been proposed by him since he had exchanged letters with Mr. Molotov on this question and they had agreed that all troops would be evacuated from Iran by a certain time. He added that before reaching a final conclusion on this issue, he would like to have an unofficial exchange of views with his colleagues. He did not wish to bargain the withdrawal of troops from one area against the withdrawal from another, but to discuss each question on its own merits.

Mr. Molotov expressed his agreement with this.

Mr. Byrnes suggested that the questions of evacuating troops from Greece, Iran and Indonesia be eliminated from the agenda but be discussed informally.

Mr. Molorov remarked that the agenda would be somewhat shorter in view of this and inquired whether agreement had been reached that the question of Manchuria should also be deleted from the agenda.

⁹⁶ Presumably reference here is to the Treaty of Alliance between the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom on the one hand and Iran on the other, signed at Tehran, January 29, 1942; for text, see British and Foreign State Papers, vol. CXLIV, p. 1017, or Department of State Bulletin, March 21, 1942, p. 249. For documentation on the treaty, see Foreign Relations, 1942, vol. IV, pp. 263 ff.

Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin agreed that Manchuria should also be deleted.

Mr. Byrnes referred to topic No. 4 on his proposed agenda, concerning an independent government for Korea. He wished to point out that he now proposed a new title for this subject reading; "The creation of a unified administration for Korea looking toward the eventual establishment of an independent Korean Government".

Mr. Molotov and Mr. Bevin stated that they had no objections to this revised wording.

Mr. Molotov summed up the items which had been agreed upon as constituting the agenda:

(1) The reconvening of the Council of Foreign Ministers and the resumption of the work of their deputies.

 (2) The terms of reference of the Allied Council and FEC.⁹⁶
 (3) The creation of a unified administration for Korea looking toward the establishment of an independent Korean Government.

(4) The disarming of Japanese armed forces in North China and their evacuation to Japan.

- (5) Conditions permitting the recognition of the present governments of Roumania and Bulgaria.
- (6) Proposals concerning a United Nations Commission for consideration of the control of atomic energy.

Mr. Molorov stated that he would proceed to the first item.

2. Preliminary Discussions

Mr. Byrnes stated that he was circulating a memorandum entitled "Preparations for Peace Treaties" (enclosure No. 2). Mr. Byrnes called attention to the fact that this document was similar to the document which the United States Government had presented at London except for one point.97 The first paragraph was that which had been presented by Mr. Molotov.98 The second paragraph was that which had been presented by Mr. Byrnes. The only change was in the second sentence of the last paragraph.

Mr. Molotov stated that the Soviet Delegation wished to have time to review this question and proposed that Mr. Byrnes' recommendations be considered at the following meeting. He therefore suggested that the conference proceed to point No. 2 on the agenda.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he had no objection to this and called attention again to the fact that only one change had been made in the original document on this subject. He added that, as he remembered, Mr. Molotov had stated that he had no objection in principle to this proposal. He expressed the hope that Mr. Molotov would have no objection at this time.

Mr. Byrnes stated that with regard to item No. 2 on the agenda he was circulating papers (enclosure No. 3 99). He stated that the other delegates would wish to have the opportunity to study these papers, and Mr. Molotov and Mr. Bevin assented.

Mr. Byrnes then proceeded to item No. 3, the question of Korea, referring to Mr. Harriman's letter of November 8 to Mr. Molotov (enclosure No. 4).

Mr. Molorov stated that Mr. Harriman's letter of November 8 did not embrace the question which had been placed upon the agenda, viz. the Korean situation as a whole.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether there had been an answer to Mr. Harriman's letter of November 8.

Mr. Molorov replied that there had not been an answer but that the questions raised in Mr. Harriman's letter were being studied. He later corrected himself and stated that a reply had been made.

Mr. Byrnes stated that Mr. Harriman's letter had represented the first step toward accomplishment of the objectives formulated in item No. 3 of the agenda.

Mr. Molorov replied that the letter contained no reference to or mention of a Korean government.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he had referred to Mr. Harriman's letter in connection with the discussion of Korea in as much as this letter contained the ideas of the United States Government as to what would be the first step toward establishing an independent Korean government. It had been his understanding that all three parties had agreed that there should be a trusteeship for Korea. This could not be accomplished immediately, but the proposals made in Mr. Harriman's letter would be a most desirable step toward that end and Mr. Byrnes therefore suggested that these proposals be considered in order to relieve the situation in Korea, following which a formula of trusteeship could be discussed. Mr. Byrnes wished that there should be a full exchange of views on this subject but this should be prefaced by discussion of immediate steps to be taken. Then the formula of trusteeship could be discussed. Mr. Byrnes inquired as to the views of Mr. Bevin and Mr. Molotov concerning the specific proposals set forth in this letter with regard to the resumption of commodity exchange, et cetera.

⁹⁹ Enclosure No. 3 consists of three memoranda by the United States delegation, labeled enclosures 3a, 3b, and 3c.

¹ Telegram 3940, November 23, from Moscow, printed in vol. vI, reported receipt of a letter on November 21 from Deputy Foreign Commissar Vyshinsky stating that the American proposals had been transmitted to the competent Soviet authorities.

MOSCOW CONFERENCE OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

Mr. Molorov repeated his previous statement that Mr. Harriman's letter had not touched upon the question of a Korean government or the establishment of a trusteeship. He stated that the question placed by Mr. Byrnes on the agenda, however, was the general one of a Korean government and an over-all administration for Korea. Mr. Harriman's letter raised questions of the exchange of commodities, the resumption of railway operations, shipping, financial policy, displaced persons, et cetera. Mr. Molotov had only just been apprised of the fact that Mr. Byrnes linked these questions with the general question of a Korean government but he did not understand how these questions were related and would like to have this explained.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the United States Government proposed that a unified administration for Korea be established. Mr. Harriman's letter had set forth certain proposals which should be adopted in order to achieve this end. If a unified administration were to be established, it would be necessary to have the Soviet and American Commanders in Korea confer and reach agreement concerning the points raised in Mr. Harriman's letter and other measures looking to the replacement of the present two administrations by a unified administration. The establishment of a unified administration would facilitate the next stage which would be the establishment of a trusteeship as agreed. The agreement had provided for a four-power trusteeship, but there was no reason not to achieve a unified administration at the present time.

Mr. Molorov stated that Mr. Harriman's letter raised a number of specific questions and that the Soviet Delegation had not been apprised in advance that the Korean question would be raised from this point of view. The specific questions touched upon in Mr. Harriman's letter were being studied. The Soviet Delegation must obtain material from the appropriate authorities and also from the military authorities in Korea, but Mr. Molotov could state at the present time that due attention had been devoted to these questions in recent weeks.

Mr. Molorov went on to say that since Mr. Harriman's letter had not referred to a unified administration in Korea or mentioned a Korean government, Mr. Byrnes might wish to explain what the United States Government had in mind on this question.

Mr. Byrnes replied that the United States Government had seen no way to unify the administration of Korea other than by authorizing the American and Soviet Commanders in Korea to confer on steps to be taken toward this end. Mr. Byrnes suggested that there might be a misunderstanding over the phrase "unified administration" which in the American view merely summed up the various specific proposals regarding the nationalization [rationalization] of communications, et cetera. If necessary, the words "unified administration" might be deleted and replaced by the concrete words employed in Mr. Harriman's letter. Mr. Byrnes moved, therefore, to strike out of the agenda the term "unification."

Mr. Molorov stated that Mr. Byrnes was raising an entirely different question from that of the government, trusteeship, or unified administration of Korea. The concrete proposals presented by Mr. Byrnes would require the presence of specialists and advisers on railways, finance, commercial matters, et cetera, but time would not permit this.

Mr. Byrnes agreed that there would not be time for this, but stated that he had desired to discuss whether the Commanders in Korea could be authorized to take up these matters with the appropriate specialists. He agreed that specialists could not be invited to the conference.

Mr. Molotov stated that he believed an examination of the question of a unified administration, trusteeship and an independent government of Korea, as discussed at Yalta by President Roosevelt and Generalissimo Stalin,2 would facilitate the settlement of these practical questions raised in Mr. Harriman's letter. He said that it might be necessary to obtain the opinion of the civilian and military authorities on the questions raised by Mr. Harriman which were of course important. At the moment Mr. Molotov did not have any information regarding the latter questions, although it was quite possible that they were under consideration at the present time. But it would not be desirable to confine discussion of the Korean question to a consideration of these practical questions. Mr. Byrnes at the outset had raised the question of establishing an independent government in Korea. Today he had added to this the question of creating a unified administration and trusteeship. There was a connection between these general and specific questions and a discussion of the former would facilitate examination of the latter.

Mr. Bevin stated that he would like to obtain a copy of the original agreement on a trusteeship for Korea.

MR. Molotov stated that he wished to make it clear that no agreement existed. There had been an exchange of views between the United States and Soviet representatives at the time of the Yalta conference on the necessity of establishing a trusteeship for Korea.

Mr. Byrnes stated that this was in accordance with his understanding. In citing Mr. Harriman's letter he had not desired to confine discussion to the consideration of the questions raised in this letter. He wished to discuss the general subject. He hoped that a time would come when agreement could be reached upon the establishment of an independent government. The understanding reached at Yalta looked toward the establishment of a trusteeship, which in turn provided for the formation of an independent government. Mr. Byrnes added that the American Delegation would prepare a paper on this general subject for distribution at the following meeting.

Mr. Bevin agreed that this would be the most desirable procedure. He stated that he well understood the desire of Mr. Byrnes to coordinate economic functions in Korea as that was very necessary to bring about unification of that country.

Mr. Molorov stated that the conference would defer discussion of Korea pending presentation of Mr. Byrnes' document.

Mr. Byrnes said that he had a statement which had been made by the President during the last day or so regarding the presence of American troops in North China (enclosure No. 5 3). He proposed that the other delegates take this statement for consideration and that it be discussed at tomorrow's session.

Mr. Molotov expressed gratification to Mr. Byrnes for the document and terminated the session at 7:10 p.m.

It was agreed among the delegates that no statement would be made to the press following the present meeting, but that at each succeeding meeting a decision would be made as to whether statements should be issued to the press.

PREPARATION OF PEACE TREATIES

It will be recalled that on September 30, 1945 the Soviet Delegation presented a resolution to the Council of Foreign Ministers to which the United States Delegation proposed an addition on the same date.⁴

Truman, 1945, p. 543. The memorandum circulated to the Conference by the Secretary of State, included as enclosure 5, p. 628, was based upon the President's statement.

The resolution set forth procedure to be adopted for the preparation of peace treaties. It was the feeling of the American Delegation that all members of the Council of Foreign Ministers and all European members of the United Nations, and all non-European members of the United Nations which contributed substantial military contingents in the war against the European members of the Axis, should be permitted to attend a conference and participate in the discussions and in the drafting of peace treaties.

The Soviet Delegate indicated that he was prepared to consult his Government with regard to the addition to the Soviet proposal suggested by the American Delegation.

The United States Delegation attaches for the convenience of the Soviet and British Delegates a copy of the resolution in question and submits it for approval by the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers.

Moscow, December 16, 1945.

PREPARATION OF PEACE TREATIES

Notwithstanding the decision of the Council of Foreign Ministers regarding the participation of the members of the Council, adopted on 11th September, in the drawing up by the Council of treaties of peace with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland, only members of the Council who are, or under the Berlin Agreement are deemed to be, signatory of the surrender terms, will participate, unless and until the Council takes further action under the Berlin Agreement to invite other members on questions directly concerning them.

After full hearing and discussion by the invited States, and upon consideration of their recommendations, the final approval of the terms of the treaties of peace will be made by those of the invited States which were at war with the enemy state in question.

FAR EASTERN COMMISSION AND ALLIED COUNCIL

The United States Government has from the outset clearly demonstrated its desire to cooperate with its Allies in bringing about effective implementation of the Potsdam Declaration and the Terms of Surrender for Japan.

In August we proposed the establishment of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission. In order to meet the views of our Allies, we have subsequently been giving careful consideration to related proposals put forward by them for the modification and extension of our original proposals.

Over the past two months, discussions have been proceeding with the Soviet Government on this subject. The British and Chinese Governments have been kept informed of the course of these discussions. As a result, the original proposal for the Far Eastern Advisory Commission has undergone considerable modification. The name has been altered to eliminate the word "Advisory", and the Commission, originally conceived as a recommendatory body, has been clothed with real authority in the formulation of policies, principles and standards for the implementation of the Terms of Surrender. Additionally, we have proposed the establishment of an Allied Council in Tokyo to consult with and advise the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers.

We have now reached a point where I can lay before my Soviet and British colleagues for their consideration revised proposals for a Far Eastern Commission in Washington and an Allied Council in Tokyo. I am therefore giving you our revisions of the Terms of Reference for the Far Eastern Commission and for the Allied Council. I want to discuss these revised Terms of Reference with you and to reach agreement on them. I believe that a Commission and a Council operating under these Terms of Reference as now proposed by us would bring into being the cooperation among the interested Allied powers for the control and administration of Japan which we have sought from the outset.

FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

Proposed Revision of the Terms of Reference

I. Establishment.

The Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China, United Kingdom, United States, France, the Netherlands, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, and the Philippine Commonwealth hereby establish a Far Eastern Commission composed of representatives of the participating powers.

II. Functions.

- A. The functions of the Far Eastern Commission shall be:
- 1. To formulate the policies, principles, and standards in conformity with which the fulfillment by Japan of its obligations under the instrument of surrender may be accomplished.
- instrument of surrender may be accomplished.

 2. To review, on the request of any member, any directive issued to the Supreme Commander or any action taken by the Supreme Commander involving policy decisions within the jurisdictions of the Commission.
- 3. To consider such other matters as may be assigned to it by agreement between the participating Governments.
- B. The Commission shall not make recommendations with regard to the conduct of military operations nor with regard to territorial adjustments.
- C. The Commission shall respect existing control machinery in Japan including the chain of command from the United States Government to the Supreme Commander and the Supreme Commander's command of occupation forces; and the Supreme Commander shall continue to act under directives which the United States has already sent to him, unless and until the issuing authority shall have modified such directives in accordance with the Commission's recommendations.

III. Functions of the United States Government.

1. The United States Government shall prepare directives in accordance with policy decisions of the Commission and shall transmit them to the Supreme Commander through the appropriate United States Government agency. The Supreme Commander shall be charged with the implementation of the directives which express the policy decisions of the Commission.

- 2. If the Commission decides that any directive or action reviewed in accordance with Article II, A, 2, should be modified, its decision shall be regarded as a policy decision.
- 3. Any directives dealing with fundamental changes in Japanese constitutional structure, or in the regime of occupation, will only be issued following prior consultation and agreement in the Far Eastern Commission.
- 4. The United States Government may issue interim directives to the Supreme Commander pending action by the Commission whenever urgent matters arise not covered by policies already formulated by the Commission.
 - 5. All directives issued shall be filed with the Commission.

IV. Other Methods of Consultation.

The establishment of the Commission shall not preclude the use of other methods of consultation on Far Eastern issues by the participating Governments.

V. Composition.

- 1. The Far Eastern Commission shall consist of one representative of each of the states party to this agreement. The membership of the Commission may be increased by agreement between the participating powers as conditions warrant by the addition of representatives of other United Nations in the Far East or having territories therein. The Commission shall provide for full and adequate consultations, as occasion may require, with representatives of the United Nations not members of the Commission in regard to matters before the Commission which are of particular concern to such nations.
- 2. The Commission may take action by less than unanimous vote provided that action shall have the concurrence of at least a majority of all the representatives including the representatives of the four following powers: United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China.

VI. Location and Organization.

The Far Eastern Commission shall have its headquarters in Washington. It may meet at other places as occasion requires, including Tokyo, if and when it deems it desirable to do so.

It may make such arrangements through the Chairman as may be practicable for consultation with the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers.

Each representative on the Commission may be accompanied by an appropriate staff comprising both civilian and military representation.

The Commission shall organize its secretariat, appoint such committees as may be deemed advisable, and otherwise perfect its organization and procedure.

VII. Termination.

The Far Eastern Commission shall cease to function when a decision to that effect is taken by the concurrence of at least a majority of all the representatives including the representatives of the four following powers: United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China. Prior to the termination of its functions the Commission shall transfer to any interim or permanent security organization to which the participating governments are members those functions which may appropriately be transferred.

ALLIED COUNCIL

Proposed Revision of the Terms of Reference

- 1. There shall be established an Allied Council with its seat in Tokyo under the Chairmanship of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers (or his Deputy) for the purpose of consulting with and advising the Supreme Commander in regard to the implementation of the terms of surrender, occupation and control of Japan and of directive supplementary thereto.
- 2. The membership of the Allied Council shall consist of the Supreme Commander (or his Deputy), who shall be Chairman and United States member; Union of Soviet Socialist Republics member; Chinese member; and a British Commonwealth of Nations member. Each member shall be entitled to have an appropriate staff, the size of which shall be fixed in agreement with the Chairman of the Council.
- 3. The Allied Council shall meet not less often than once every two weeks.
- 4. The Supreme Commander shall issue all orders for the implementation of the terms of surrender, occupation and control of Japan and directives supplementary thereto. He will consult and advise with the Council upon orders involving questions of principle in advance of their issuance, the exigencies of the situation permitting. His decision upon all matters shall be controlling. In all cases action will be carried out under and through the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers who is the sole executive authority for the Allied Powers within the area of his command.

5. Action to modify the agreed regime of allied control for Japan or to approve revisions or modifications of the Japanese Constitution will be taken only in accordance with decisions of the Far Eastern Commission.

The American Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) to the People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union (Molotov)⁶

Moscow, November 8, 1945.

Dear Mr. Molotov: In connection with the division of Korea into Soviet and American occupied zones, I have been instructed by my Government to explore the possibility of an interim working agreement being negotiated with the Soviet Government regarding the rationalization of communications, commerce, finance and other outstanding issues in Korea.

General Hodge, the Commanding General of the United States Forces in Korea, has been vested with the necessary authority to negotiate on a local military basis with the Soviet Commander in Korea regarding the foregoing problems. It appears, however, that the Soviet Commander is not authorized to enter into negotiations with General Hodge on these matters. Urgent economic and social problems affecting the whole of Korea therefore continue to remain unsolved.

Some of these problems, specifically, are: (1) the resumption of exchange of commodities between the two zones including the movement of coal and the release of electric power from the northern zone for use in the southern zone; (2) the resumption of railroad and other traffic between the two zones; (3) the resumption of coastal shipping; (4) the establishment throughout Korea of uniform fiscal policies; and (5) the solution by orderly means of the displaced persons problem, including the return to Japan of Japanese subjects.

My Government wishes to ascertain whether the Soviet Government is prepared to authorize the Soviet Commander in Korea to enter into negotiations with General Hodge in these matters or whether it wishes that these problems be discussed between the two Governments.

Sincerely yours,

W. A. HARRIMAN

[Enclosure 5]

Memorandum by the United States Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 16, 1945.

AMERICAN MARINES IN CHINA

President Truman has announced ⁸ and I have stated to the press on a number of occasions that American Marines are in North China for the purpose of assisting the Chinese Government in the demobilization and deportation of Japanese troops in North China in accordance with the Terms of Surrender. We have assumed a responsibility in this respect which we feel obliged to discharge in the interest of international peace as well as of internal stability in China. One of the causes that brought us into war against Japan was our refusal to accept the position of Japan in China—our refusal to compromise the principle of the territorial and administrative integrity of China.

Our Marines will be withdrawn when they are no longer required for the purpose stated. We hope that will be soon. There are something over 50,000 of them in North China now. This represents a small reduction from the original number. There are in North China some 325,000 Japanese troops. Over half of these have been disarmed but their deportation from China has been slow due to a shortage of shipping. We are making plans for a considerable increase in shipping facilities which will make possible a much more rapid deportation of Japanese—civilians as well as troops—from China.

The President has recently sent General Marshall to China as his special representative. We recognize that internal conditions in North China, arising out of differences between the Chinese Government and dissident political factions in China, constitute a serious impediment to carrying out the Terms of Surrender and in particular to the demobilization and deportation of Japanese. In view of this situation we are very anxious that the differences which exist between the National Government and the dissident political factions be settled by methods of peaceful negotiation having as its objective the broadening of the base of the present National Government of China to provide fair and effective representation to the principal political elements in China. The primary objective of President Truman in sending General Marshall to China is that he exert his influence to bring about discussion and agreement among the various political elements and, concurrently, to arrange for a truce between the opposing Chinese military forces in North China. The arrangement of such a truce would facilitate and speed the demobilization and deportation of Japanese troops from China and hasten the day—which we sincerely hope will be soon—when the American Marines will be returned to the United States from China.

Record of Conversation, Prepared by the United Kingdom Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers ⁹

Moscow, December 17, 1945.

Present: Mr. Byrnes

Mr. Bevin Sir A. Cadogan Mr. Dixon

SOVIET POLICY

Mr. Bevin said that Soviet policy was disturbing. It looked as if the Russians were attempting to undermine the British position in the Middle East. This could be seen in their attitude towards Greece, Turkey and Persia, all three points where the U.S.S.R. rubbed with the British Empire. The Soviet Government were maintaining large numbers of troops in Bulgaria and in Hungary, and there were also national armies in Bulgaria and Yugoslavia.

The World seemed to be drifting into the position of "three Monroes". The United States already had their "Monroe" on the American continent and were extending it to the Pacific. (Mr. Byrnes interjected that in the Pacific the United States only wished to establish bases for security purposes in islands many of which were uninhabited.) Russia seemed to be aiming at the formation of a "Monroe" area from the Baltic to the Adriatic on the west to Port Arthur or beyond on the east.

GREECE

As regards Greece, if we withdrew our troops the result would be increased pressure from the Soviet Government on Greece or some manufactured incident between Bulgaria and Greece. Even if agreement were reached to withdraw Soviet troops from Bulgaria, the threat of the Bulgar army to Greece would remain. Greece had been overrun by two enemies, her economy had completely run down and everything had to be reconstructed. We were doing our best.

⁹Meeting held at the residence of the American Ambassador, Moscow, on December 17, 1945, 2:45 to 3:45 p.m. No American record of this meeting has been found Telegram 4195, Delsec 7, December 17, 4 p. m., from Moscow, vol. v, p. 1299, reported that the question of the procedure to be followed in establishing diplomatic relations with the newly proclaimed "Federated People's Republic of Yugoslavia" had been taken up with Bevin. Such a discussion with Bevin had been requested in telegram 2521, Secdel 8, December 14, 8 p. m., to Moscow, ibid., p. 1297. No records of British-American discussions at Moscow on the Yugoslav question have been found, but the matter may have been taken up at this meeting.

DODECANESE

Mr. Bevin recalled that it had been impossible to reach agreement on the cession of the Dodecanese to Greece at the London Conference. We were anxious to withdraw our troops and had thought of handing the administration of the islands over to the Greeks de facto. We had, however, hesitated to do this because of the Russian threat.

TURKEY

His Majesty's Government could not be indifferent to a Russian threat to Turkey and would stand by her. We could not agree to the Soviet request for a base in the Straits and for the return of Kars and Ardahan. Mr. Bevin asked if Mr. Byrnes intended to raise the question of the Straits at the present meeting.

Mr. Byrnes replied that he did not.

Persia

MR. BEVIN suggested that possibly a desire for oil was at the bottom of the Soviet attitude towards Persia. MR. BYRNES doubted this since the Soviet Union had enough oil. MR. BEVIN agreed and thought that Soviet intentions were probably to turn the province of Azerbaijan into a subservient area.

Mr. Byrnes said that according to information received from the U.S. Representative at Tehran it was not necessary for the Soviet Government, in order to achieve their aims in Azerbaijan, to retain troops beyond the treaty date, since they would hope to control the province by underground methods after the troops had been withdrawn.¹¹ He was also informed that the inhabitants of the province had a real grievance and that they had not been given the measure of provincial autonomy for which they had asked.¹²

Mr. Bevin agreed that there was something in this and said that we had been urging the Persian Government to consider taking steps to meet the provincial demands.

¹¹ No message of this nature from the Ambassador in Iran has been found in Department files.

¹² Regarding the intention of the Iranian Government to institute some measure of provincial autonomy for Azerbaijan, see telegram 1118, December 13, from Tehran, printed in vol. viii. In this connection, see also telegram 183, December 20, from the Secretary of State (in Moscow) to the Ambassador in Iran, repeated to the Department as telegram 4229, ibid., directing the Ambassador to inform the Iranian Prime Minister of the advisability for the Iranian Government to make early concessions to the demands formulated by the Azerbaijanians.

Mr. Byrnes thought that it would help if the British and American Governments could recommend to the Persian Government that they should grant the necessary provincial freedom; this would cut the ground from under the Soviet Government, who were posing as the defender of democracy in Persia, which offended American sensibilities.

Mr. Bevin agreed that consideration might be given to the three Powers sending representatives to Azerbaijan to report on the position.

Summing up, Mr. Bevin said that he proposed to have a frank talk with M. Molotov and tell him how uneasy Soviet intentions made us. He would ask M. Molotov what the Soviet intentions were. Just as a British admiral, when he saw an island, instinctively wanted to grab it, so the Soviet Government if they saw a piece of land wanted to acquire it. If these were the Soviet intentions we should like to be told in order to know where we stood.

Mr. Byrnes approved the idea of a frank talk by Mr. Bevin with M. Molotov, and said that he also intended to see M. Molotov and to raise with him in particular the report of Mr. Ethridge which revealed that the Bulgarian elections had been a farce and that there was a deplorable economic state of affairs in Bulgaria and Roumania. He suggested that Mr. Bevin might see M. Molotov tomorrow morning, that he himself might see M. Molotov later in the day and that the three of them should meet for an informal discussion the following day. This was agreed.

MIDDLE EAST QUESTIONS

THE LEVANT

Mr. Bevin said that he had read some criticisms from the State Department about our recent settlement with the French Government regarding the Levant States.

Mr. Byrnes had not heard of this and enquired what was the position.

Mr. Bevin explained that the State Department had criticized the retention of British and French troops in the Levant pending consideration of the status of the States by the United Nations.¹³ We were anxious to withdraw our own troops but could not do so until the French troops left. This they had hitherto been unwilling to do. The settlement which had now been reached, including the references to Anglo-French interests in the Levant, had been introduced mainly in order to save the face of the French. The difficulties had arisen largely owing to the predominant position which had been conceded to the French by the previous British administration.

¹³ For the Department's views regarding a draft agreement between the British and French Governments on the withdrawal of troops from Syria and Lebanon, see note of December 13 to the British Embassy, printed in vol. VIII.

EGYPT

Mr. Bevin explained that we should like to withdraw our troops from Egypt but the Egyptians could not defend Egypt by themselves and we had no other base in the Middle East. He admitted that we had hoped that the trusteeship for Cyrenaica might have been allotted to us (and mentioned in passing that when he had said as much to M. Molotov in London, adding that the arrangement that would suit us best was the allocation of Tripolitania to Italy, M. Molotov had replied "Let us agree").

ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. Bevin said that we had seen the latest American proposals and would be grateful if Mr. Byrnes would defer circulating a paper on the subject to the Conference until Wednesday morning, by which time we hoped to have received the comments of the Prime Minister and other Ministers. Meanwhile, he wished to make two observations on the American proposals. He suggested, in the first place, that paragraph 8 of the Washington communiqué, providing that the Commission should carry on its task by stages, ought to be included.^{13a} Secondly, it was his provisional view that the Commission ought to report, not to the Assembly but to the Security Council.

With regard to the latter point, Mr. Byrnes pointed out that this procedure would enable the Russians to use the veto which would be obviated if the Commission reported to the Assembly. He agreed, however, to consider Mr. Bevin's suggestion.

Mr. Molorov opened the session. He then proposed that henceforth the conference should follow the rotating chairmanship procedure employed at London as he felt unable to preside exclusively and was anxious that the work of presiding be shared equally among the three Ministers.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he did not believe that things would proceed any better on that basis, that Mr. Molotov had presided with great skill and grace in the preceding session, and that he therefore proposed that Mr. Molotov continue to preside at all the sessions.

Mr. Molorov repeated his statement that he felt unable to assume the chairmanship alone and that this work would be accomplished more satisfactorily on the basis of rotation. Mr. Molotov asked Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin to consent to this proposal.

Mr. Byrnes stated that in as much as the chairmanship did not involve a great amount of work, he hoped that Mr. Molotov would agree to preside.

Mr. Molotov replied that he was only proposing to rotate the chairmanship, not to be permanently relieved of this duty.

Mr. Bevin stated that it would be desirable for Mr. Molotov to continue presiding.

Mr. Molotov reiterated that he was unable to accept this procedure. Mr. Byrnes stated that he would prefer Mr. Molotov to continue presiding but that if Mr. Molotov did not wish to do so, there was no alternative but to accept his proposal.

Mr. Molorov thereupon proposed that Mr. Bevin take the chair. Mr. Molotov stated that he had a further question in mind. The present conference had been contemplated as one which would consider questions informally and in an exploratory way. In this connection he wished to inquire whether the conference intended to adopt any decisions. He proposed that the Ministers arrive at an agreement on this question.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he hoped that the conference would reach —decisions whenever possible to do so. He realized that it might not always be possible to reach decision in all matters. In any event matters could be explored, issues drawn, and whenever possible decisions reached.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether it would not be desirable to replace the word "decision" by the word "understanding". He pointed out that other governments were involved in some of the matters to be discussed. On the other hand, there were certain matters, of concern to the three governments exclusively, upon which decision could be reached. It was not possible to foresee the outcome of the discussion at the outset.

Mr. Molorov observed that as he understood it, Mr. Byrnes thought it might be possible to arrive at decisions whereas Mr. Bevin doubted whether this would be possible. He reiterated his desire to learn whether the conference intended to adopt any decisions, pointing out that he was not insisting upon the adoption of any specific proposal. He merely wished to define the character of the conference.

Mr. Bevin stated that there might be decisions reached on certain matters and that with regard to other matters there might be obtained an understanding as to what would be the next step. He stated that he did not wish to be too legalistic in approaching this question.

Mr. Byrnes agreed with Mr. Bevin that there would be some cases in which it would be desirable to reach a decision but that in others, owing to the involvement of other powers, or for other reasons, no decision would be reached but an understanding could be reached among the three governments. Each case should be decided on its own merits.

Mr. Molorov stated that he wished to have defined the way in which the present conference differed from previous conferences. In the past there had been no such reservation as expressed in the terms "exploratory and informal".

Mr. Byrnes stated that in London the conference agenda had been assigned to the Foreign Ministers by the heads of the three governments. The present conference, however, bore an informal character in that the Ministers could discuss any question they desired. He recalled that the idea of periodical meetings of the Foreign Ministers had arisen at Yalta. Mr. Byrnes quoted the section of the Yalta decisions bearing on this point. He added that through the periodic meetings of the Foreign Ministers the three peoples and Governments of the three countries would know that their Foreign Ministers were in close contact with each other. Furthermore, their exchanges of views would make it much easier to reach agreement than through exchanges of correspondence.

Mr. Molorov agreed with Mr. Byrnes that the Foreign Ministers conferences were useful, reiterating, however, that there had been no reservations in previous conferences as to the informal and exploratory character of the conference. The decisions of the Yalta and Berlin Conferences had made no mention of such a reservation and Mr. Molotov was anxious to clarify whether any special meaning was attached to it.

Mr. Byrnes recalled that the Yalta Conference had been a conference between the three heads of governments. The Foreign Ministers had held meetings in the mornings. Because of the successful results of these morning meetings it had been suggested by the three heads of governments that it would be desirable to continue these meetings. At the Potsdam Conference the Foreign Ministers had been brought together again. At the London Conference there had been an agenda fixed by the heads of government. By the term "informal" Mr. Byrnes merely wished to indicate that, as distinct from the procedure at London, the Foreign Ministers were free at the present Conference to discuss any question whatsoever and were not confined to a predetermined agenda. His thought was only that at the present Conference the Foreign Ministers were not bound to any agenda previously agreed upon but were free to discuss any question.

Mr. Molorov stated that as he understood it, then, decisions might be taken on some questions whereas there would be merely an exchange of views on others. He added that this meant that the Conference would proceed on the basis of the decisions of the Yalta Conference and not the Potsdam Conference with regard to the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Bevin stated that he had not been aware that there were two procedures, one for the Foreign Ministers Council and one for the present Conference.

Mr. Byrnes quoted the section of the Yalta decisions bearing on the proposed future conferences of the three Foreign Ministers.

¹⁶ See section VIII of the Report of the Crimea Conference, February 11, 1945, Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 974.

Mr. Bevin, who had assumed the chairmanship of the session in accordance with Mr. Molotov's proposal, opened a discussion on the first item on the agenda.

1. Foreign Ministers Council 17

Mr. Bevin stated that the United States Government had submitted a paper on this subject.18

Mr. Byrnes stated that there was nothing he wished to add to the memorandum which he had circulated vesterday evening on this question. He again called attention to the fact that one change had been made in the final paragraph. He reiterated that paragraph one had been submitted by Mr. Molotov, paragraph two by himself, and that Mr. Molotov had stated that he did not object in principle to this proposal, but had to consult his Government concerning it.

Mr. Molorov stated that the Soviet Delegation had a written proposal on this subject, which he circulated (enclosure no. 1).

Mr. Bevin requested a recess of a half hour in order for the American and British delegates to study Mr. Molotov's memorandum.

At the end of this recess, Mr. Byrnes stated that he wished to ask one or two questions. With regard to the peace conference, he desired to ascertain whether any country which had not been signatory to an armistice could express its opinion with regard to a peace treaty.¹⁹

Mr. Molotov replied that this interpretation was correct.

Mr. Byrnes stated that in this case, the peace treaty with Finland could be discussed at the peace conference only by the two powers which had prepared the treaty.

Mr. Molotov replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Byrnes inquired whether the United States would have to withdraw from the peace conference when this peace treaty was discussed.

Mr. Molorov stated that as far as he knew, the United States had never claimed to be a signatory to the armistice with Finland.

Mr. Byrnes replied that he had not referred to that point. He wished to know whether the United States would be entitled to express its views or whether it would have to withdraw from the peace conference when the treaty with Finland was discussed.

¹⁷ In the British delegation minutes of this meeting, this agenda item is called as enclosure 2 and sub-enclosure to the United States delegation minutes of the First Formal Session, December 16, pp. 621 and 622, respectively.

¹⁹ In this connection, the British delegation minutes of this meeting at this point read as follows: "When the meeting resumed Mr. Byrnes said that as he understood the Soviet proposal, only the Big Three could for instance speak when peace terms for Roumania were being discussed. M. Molotov said that was correct, as the other Powers were not at war with Roumania." (740.00119-Council/12-2645).

Mr. Molorov stated that he believed that the United States would be able to express its views.

Mr. Byrnes replied that this was all that he had been concerned about, namely, that each country would be entitled to express its views, although the treaties would be signed by the countries signatory to the armistice.

Mr. Molorov replied that the Soviet draft proposal set forth the views of the Soviet Government on this point.

Mr. Byrnes stated that there was nothing further for him to say. He stated that the delegates were farther apart on this issue than he had expected them to be and that he would like to pass on to the next item on the agenda and return to the present item later.

Mr. Bevin stated that the Soviet proposal recreated the issue which had arisen in London. He said that the delegates were farther apart than they had been in London, and this had placed him in a very uncomfortable situation. He wished to secure settlement on this point. He pointed out that in accordance with the Soviet proposal France would not be permitted to express its opinion on any peace treaty except the treaty with Italy, despite the fact that France is a European power. He pointed out that he was not talking about the deputies drawing up the peace treaties but about the expression of views on these treaties. He said that the Soviet proposal would exclude the Dominions from a voice in the peace treaties with Bulgaria and Rumania, although the Dominions had participated in the war since 1939. India would be totally excluded although Indian troops had participated in every theater of war and India had signed the Charter of the United Nations Organization. Mr. Bevin expressed the hope that the peace conference would be placed on a much broader basis. He pointed out that the Dominions, although nonsignatories to the Bulgarian armistice, had received certified copies thereof as soon as they had been signed. He again reiterated his wish that the conference be placed on a broader basis. He stated that he also would like to know who would convoke the peace conference, whether it would be the Foreign Ministers Council or some other body.

Mr. Molorov replied that in his view this question was perfectly clear. Those who signed the armistice terms would call the peace --- conference.

Mr. Bevin stated that he was in agreement with Mr. Byrnes that this question should be discussed no further at this time.

Mr. Molorov stated that he would like to add a few words in explanation of the Soviet proposal. He stated that the French role in preparing the peace treaties had been determined at the Berlin Conference. The Soviet proposal was in accord with this Berlin Conference decision. With regard to the Dominions, their position was sufficiently definite. They had fought against Italy but not against

Bulgaria and Rumania. Nothing was being said here regarding a peace treaty with Germany. It was obvious that in preparing a peace treaty for Germany the number of participants would be much larger. The questions at issue was whether only those countries which took part in the fighting should participate in the preparation of peace treaties. The Soviet Government took the affirmative in this issue, as a matter of principle, and was so guided in its proposal. Nevertheless, the Soviet Government was disposed to place a restricted interpretation upon its proposal with reference to the component republics of the USSR, such as the Ukraine, Belorussia, and certain others. Although these Soviet Republics would have a claim to participate in the preparation of peace treaties, such a claim was not being advanced. The Soviet Government believed that only those states which provided substantial military contingents should participate in the preparation of peace treaties. Those which had not provided such substantial military contingents or which had not actually fought the countries concerned had no basis for participation in the preparation of peace

Mr. Bevin stated that the Conference would proceed to the next item on the agenda.

2. Terms of Reference for the Allied Council and Far Eastern Commission

Mr. Byrnes stated that he had distributed three papers on this topic ²⁰ at the previous session and would like to receive the views of his colleagues concerning them.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether it was proposed to take a final decision on this question, in as much as it also concerned China.

Mr. Byrnes replied that China was, of course, interested and that he would wish to communicate with China with regard to it. However, he hoped that the three Ministers could reach an understanding and in that event it would be very hopeful that China would associate herself with the agreement reached.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether this applied also to the other powers on the Advisory Commission.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the Far Eastern Advisory Commission had originally been proposed by four powers and that the other powers had been invited to join it on the terms agreed upon by the four.

Mr. Bevin explained that he had merely wished to be clear on this point.

Mr. Molorov stated that the Soviet Delegation was studying Mr. Byrnes' proposal.

 $^{^{20}}$ Included as enclosures 3a, 3b, and 3c to the United States delegation minutes of the First Formal Session, December 16, pp. 623, 624, and 626, respectively.

Mr. Byrnes asked whether, in view of that, Mr. Molotov would prefer not to discuss the question on the present occasion.

Mr. Molorov replied that it would be better to postpone consideration of this question until the following session.

Mr. Bevin proceeded to the third item on the agenda.

3. THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A UNITED ADMINISTRATION FOR KOREA

Mr. Byrnes stated that he had prepared a proposal on this subject which he wished to circulate. (enclosure No. 2).

Mr. Bevin stated that there seemed to be two principles involved in Mr. Byrnes' proposal: the acceptance of the principle of a trusteeship, and the immediate establishment of a unified administration. Although it was obviously necessary to study the details, there would be no violent conflict with regard to these principles. Mr. Bevin stated further that this was the sort of question which the Three Powers might assign to specialists for concrete implementation.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he had no desire to request immediate action upon his proposal. The United States Government had merely attempted to put its views in writing. As he had stated at yesterday's session, at Yalta Generalissimo Stalin and President Roosevelt had had only an understanding on this question. The understanding was that a trusteeship would be the wise procedure in the case of Korea. As Mr. Bevin had remarked, there appeared to be agreement upon this in principle and the details could be worked out.

Mr. Bevin had no objection to appointing a committee to draft these details.

Mr. Molotov stated that it would be premature to refer the problem to a committee of specialists. It would require some time to study Mr. Byrnes' proposal.

Mr. Bevin proceeded to the fourth item on the agenda.

4. The Disarming of Japanese in, and Their Evacuation From, Northern China

Mr. Byrnes stated that he had circulated at the previous session a statement concerning the United States Marine Forces in North China.²¹ Furthermore, a statement had been issued by the President last Sunday morning further clarifying this problem. Mr. Byrnes circulated the latter statement (enclosure No. 3 ²²).

Mr. Molotov said that it would be necessary to study Mr. Byrnes' document.

²¹ Included as enclosure 5 to the United States delegation minutes of the First Formal Session, December 16, p. 628.

²² For text of enclosure 3, containing President Truman's statement regarding the United States policy toward China, see Department of State Bulletin, December 16, 1945, p. 945, or Public Papers of the Presidents: Harry S. Truman, 1945, p. 543.

Mr. Byrnes replied that he had no objection whatsoever. The paper which he had just circulated contained no proposal but was merely a statement of the situation. It set forth what the United States forces were doing in North China and what the President had announced was United States policy there. When Mr. Byrnes had stated that he wished to discuss this subject, it had been his intention to furnish a statement along these lines. Mr. Byrnes was following what he regarded as the purpose of the Conference—that of exchanging views on questions of common interest. He wished to advise his colleagues as to the situation and as to the United States policy in China.

Mr. Molotov stated that the documents which Mr. Byrnes had submitted dealt with a question which he believed it would be useful to discuss at the present Conference. He wished to have an opportunity to study these documents.

Mr. Bevin opened the discussion on item five of the agenda.23

Mr. Byrnes stated that he would prefer not to discuss the fifth item at the present session.

Mr. Bevin adjourned the Conference for the day.

Proposal of the Soviet Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 17, 1945.

On the Preparation of Peace Treaties With Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland

The Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the United States, the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom have agreed:

- 1. For the preparation of the terms of peace treaties with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland the Council of Foreign Ministers is to be convoked, provided that:
 - A) the terms of a peace treaty with Italy will be drafted by the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States, the Soviet Union and France;
 - B) the terms of a peace treaty with Roumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary by the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union, the United States and the United Kingdom;
 - C) the terms of peace treaty with Finland by the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom.
- 2. To discuss the terms of peace treaties prepared by the Council of Foreign Ministers under paragraph 1 a Conference will be convoked as soon as practicable to which, besides the representatives of the states signatory to the terms of armistice with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland, (France being regarded as such for the purposes of peace treaty with Italy), shall be invited as well as representatives of the states, which contributed substantial military contingents and actually waged war against the aforementioned countries although not signatory to the terms of armistice, namely: representatives of Yugoslavia at this Conference will take part in the discussion of the terms of peace treaties with Italy, Hungary, and Bulgaria; representatives of Greece—the terms of the peace treaties with Italy and Bulgaria; representatives of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and of the Union of South Africa, Brazil, and Ethiopia—the terms of peace treaty with Italy; representatives of Czechoslovakia—the terms of peace treaty with Hungary.

- 3. After the conclusion of the Conference provided for in paragraph 2, the states, signatory to the terms of armistice with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland or regarded as such (France—for the purposes of peace treaty with Italy) will accordingly draw up final texts of peace treaties.
- 4. Final texts of peace treaties will be signed by representatives of the Allied States in conformity with paragraph 2.

Memorandum by the United States Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 17, 1945.

Unified Administration for Korea

We are committed by the Cairo Declaration and by the Potsdam, Protocol to the creation of an independent Korea.²⁴ I believe we are all agreed that Korea should achieve its independence at the earliest feasible time and that every effort should be made to assist the Koreans in achieving independence.

In conversations between representatives of our governments the idea of a trusteeship for Korea has been sympathetically considered. It has been generally understood that the trusteeship authority would be composed of representatives of the U.S.S.R., China, the U.K., and the U.S.; and that the period of trusteeship would endure for no longer period than necessary to allow the Koreans to form an independent, representative, and effective government.

At present Korea is divided into two zones of military administration. North of latitude 38 is the Soviet area; south of latitude 38 is the American area. This division, made before the termination of hostilities to facilitate military operations and the effectuation of the terms of surrender, is manifestly an impediment to the achievement of a unified administration for Korea. No effective liaison or coordination exists between the two military administrations.

The American Government has informed the Soviet Government of some of the more urgent problems that arise out of the division of Korea and has proposed (1) the resumption of exchange of commodities between the two zones including the movement of coal and the release of electric power from the northern zone for use in the southern zone; (2) the resumption of railroad and other traffic between the two zones; (3) the resumption of coastal shipping; (4) the establishment throughout Korea of uniform fiscal policies; and (5) the solution by orderly means of the displaced persons problem, including the return to Japan of Japanese subjects. The U.S. Government has inquired of the Soviet Government whether it is prepared to authorize the Soviet commander in Korea to enter into negotiations with the American commander looking toward a solution of these problems or whether it wishes that these problems be discussed between the two Governments.

The United States Government believes that the immediate objective in Korea should be the creation of a unified adminstration under the two military commanders acting jointly in all matters of Korean national interest; that is, in matters pertaining to currency, trade and transportation, telecommunications, distribution of electric power, coastal shipping, displaced persons, et cetera. It is envisaged that Koreans would be utilized in so far as practicable in a unified administration both as administrators and as consultants and advisers to the military commanders.

We propose the unified administration described above as a transitory but essential step toward a broadly based non-military administration of Korea looking toward the establishment of an independent Korean Government. We believe that a four-power trusteeship would provide the most feasible machinery for bringing into being an independent Korea. We propose, therefore, that discussions be undertaken as soon as practicable among the four interested powers to set up a unified administration for Korea under a trusteeship agreement.

Our ideas on the provisions of a trusteeship agreement have not taken definite form but tentatively we propose that the agreement should provide, among other things, for an administering authority (the U.S.S.R., China, the U.K., and the U.S.) acting in behalf of the United Nations and the people of Korea; that the administering authority should exercise such executive, legislative, and judicial authority as may be necessary for the efficient administration of Korea until a free and independent Korean Government is established; that the administering authority should act in accordance with the basic objectives set forth in Article 76 of the Charter of the United Nations; that the administering authority should exercise its powers and functions through a High Commissioner and an Executive Council composed of one representative for each of the States comprising the administering authority; and that the High Commissioner and Executive Council should promote as rapidly as possible the progressive political, economic, and social advancement of the Korean people, and should establish a popularly elected Korean legislature and an adequate Korean judicial system, all for the purpose of bringing into being an independent Korean Government within a period of five years, which might be extended if necessary by agreement among the four states represented on the administering authority for a further period not to exceed five years.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the United States Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers 25

Moscow, December 18, 1945.

Present: The Secretary

Ambassador Harriman

Mr. Bohlen Mr. Molotov Mr. Vishinsky Mr. Pavlov

Subject: Ethridge Report on Rumania and Bulgaria

Finnish Peace Treaty

Peace Treaties

THE SECRETARY said he had asked to see Mr. Molotov in order to give him a copy of the report which Mr. Mark Ethridge had made to him concerning Rumania and Bulgaria.²⁶ He said Mr. Molotov would remember from our discussions in London that he had felt that one of the difficulties in the question of these two countries was that the divergent views of their Governments resulted from different information. He had always been aware that human beings being the way they were it was possible that the representatives on the spot had been affected by personalities or personal feelings. For this reason when he returned home from London he had sought to find an individual who would be absolutely independent and new to the whole situation and one who had had no connection with either of these countries or the State Department. He had finally selected Mr. Ethridge, a well-known American editor of liberal political views and sympathetic attitude towards the Soviet Union. He had told him before he left that he should obtain information from the officials of the Department of State but not any expressions of opinion and that he should also wipe from his mind completely the fact that the United States had not found it possible to recognize these Governments. In other words he should go to these countries with a completely open and independent mind.

Mr. Ethridge had made his report on December 8 and although he had told the President that his findings would be published he had withheld publication because of the present meeting which would give him an opportunity to show it to Mr. Molotov rather than make it public then. The Secretary added that he had had an unofficial translation prepared for Mr. Molotov's convenience. He said Mr. Ethridge had not found it possible to recommend that recognition be extended to these Governments but had certain suggestions to make to bring about a situation which would permit recognition. hoped that Mr. Molotov would read this report and have some suggestions of his own made bearing in mind responsibilities of the United States Government under the Yalta Declaration concerning interim He said he hoped very much some solution could be governments.27 found which would permit us to recognize these Governments and then to give the peoples of these countries some economic help which they sorely needed.

Mr. Molorov thanked the Secretary but remarked that obviously Mr. Ethridge when he left the United States was aware that the Secretary of State was against the recognition of these countries and that this would have a certain influence on his opinion.

THE SECRETARY said that he had expressly asked Mr. Ethridge to wipe that from his mind and that the whole purpose of sending him there was to get an impartial and fair investigation of the facts. He had told Mr. Ethridge that the President at Potsdam although unable to agree to recognition then had agreed with Marshal Stalin and Prime Minister Attlee that each country would examine separately the situation. He added that he felt that he had done everything he could in the search of a solution including sending Mr. Ethridge and he hoped Mr. Molotov would have some suggestion for his part.

Mr. Molorov thanked the Secretary and said he was grateful for his efforts and those of Mr. Ethridge and that he would study the report.

THE SECRETARY said he thought that when Mr. Molotov had studied the report it would be better for the three Ministers alone with perhaps one adviser each to discuss this question.

Mr. Molorov agreed and said he would take advantage of the Secretary's presence to answer an observation he had made yesterday concerning the peace treaties. He did not want to discuss the whole question of peace treaties but only the Secretary's remark concerning the exclusion of the United States from the Finnish treaty. He said that the Secretary of course knew the opinion of the Soviet Government that an exception to the proposed procedure would be made in the case of the United States and that this was entirely natural in view of the relationship of the United States to the war. He said he had had this exception in mind which he regarded as only natural when he had made the proposal yesterday.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had merely asked in order to find out how as written the proposal would operate.

Mr. Molorov repeated that they had always intended that an exception should be made of the United States. The same, however, could not be said of France who had no right to claim participation in the Finnish treaty. In regard to Germany and Italy the case was different.

THE SECRETARY said that he had not expected to discuss the peace treaties at this visit but since the matter had been raised he must state that he was disappointed to find that our positions were still so far apart.

Mr. Molorov said that he felt that they had moved in the American direction but that the United States had not taken any steps from their London position.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had gathered from Ambassador Harriman's conversation with Marshal Stalin ²⁸ that the Soviet position was nearer the American one on the subject of the peace conference than appeared from Mr. Molotov's proposal of yesterday.

Mr. Molorov stated that his proposal corresponded exactly and in detail with Stalin's statement to Mr. Harriman.

Ambassador Harriman then outlined his understanding of Marshal Stalin's position, namely, that on the first day he had been in favor of separate conferences but the second day he had agreed to have one conference at which all the states on the list he had presented would be present and express their views.

Mr. Molotov and Mr. Vishinsky said that yesterday's proposal provided for one conference but for different composition depending upon the particular treaty to be discussed and that this was an accurate expression of Marshal Stalin's words.

THE SECRETARY said that he wished to recall the fact that we had abandoned our first position that all five members of the Council of Foreign Ministers should participate in the preparation of the treaties in deference to the Soviet view and that he now felt that the most important question was what states would have the final approval of the treaty and that the conference was less important except that it would give an opportunity to other states to be heard.

Mr. Molorov inquired whether the Secretary meant that all 51 of the United Nations should have a right to be heard. He said that it was the view of the Soviet Government that only states which had actively participated in the war against the enemy country in question should be heard. It was necessary to establish some principle in regard to participation in the conference and that the United States in asking only for Brazil had apparently been following that same principle.

THE SECRETARY replied that we had never envisaged invitations to all 51 but merely those falling into the categories mentioned in the American proposal. He said that in our view the war had been one war and that the accidental participation of the forces of some of the United Nations in one theater as against another was not the proper basis to determine their right to participate. He said that all the countries that would be included on our list had actively participated in the war against Germany and had suffered greatly as a result of the war. In the American view Germany and her satellites were all one for this purpose.

Mr. Molotov pointed out that for example Norway had not declared war on Finland nor had Poland declared war on Rumania.

Mr. Byrnes emphasized that the purpose of the conference was not to afford these other states the right of decision but merely to give them an opportunity to express their views on the draft treaties which had been prepared in accordance with the Soviet formula.

Mr. Molorov inquired whether Turkey would be invited since she was a member of the United Nations although in fact she had helped Germany more than the Allies.

THE SECRETARY repeated that the important question was who would decide the final terms and that he felt that as liberal an attitude towards the conference as possible would be most desirable. He said, however, that Turkey had not been envisaged as a country eligible to be invited.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that after the first world war different countries had participated in the peace treaties with the various enemy countries and that the list had not been identical for the various countries.

THE SECRETARY said that as a lawyer he felt that the judge was more important than witnesses and that the main question was to decide who would have the final approval on the peace treaties and thus act as judges, whereas the countries invited to the conference would merely be in the capacity of witnesses. He said the judges can either accept or reject what the witnesses say. He added that Mr. Vishinsky as a lawyer would appreciate this point.

Mr. VISHINSKY said he did and that it reminded him of a lawyer's proverb that Turkish judges listened to what witnesses had to say and then always did the exact opposite.

1. Council of Foreign Ministers

Mr. Byrnes opened the session and presented for discussion Item 1 on the agenda.

Mr. Bevin stated that he found it very difficult to accept the Soviet proposal ³¹ on preparation of peace treaties although he was very anxious to see the question settled. There was a wall separating the Delegations with regard to the peace treaties. The war, after all, had been one war.

Mr. Molorov admitted that the war had been one war but he could not ignore the fact that some countries had fought in it and others not, that some countries had fought on one side and some on the other. Not all the 51 United Nations were in an equal position in this respect. The United States draft ³² drew a distinction between European and non-European nations, which would not be intelligible merely on the principle that the war had been indivisible. Why had only Brazil been singled out among the non-European nations for participation? Turkey was one of the European United Nations but it had not been proposed that Turkey participate in the peace treaties. Thus it was not possible to apply the principle proposed by the United States Delegation that all European members of the United Nations should participate.

Among the five permanent members of the Security Council, China had not claimed to participate. Should China be compelled to do so? Thus the formula of the indivisibility of the war did not dispose of the question at hand.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the American formula covered the States which should have the privilege of expressing their views. As a permanent member of the Security Council, China would wish to participate in order to discharge the duties of the Security Council, which were to preserve the peace. The United States Government had urged at first that China and France should participate in the drafting of the peace treaties. The Soviet Government had disagreed and it had been impossible to reach agreement. The United States Delegation had surrendered its position and agreed that China should be excluded from the drafting of the peace treaties. But it insisted that China and France, as permanent members of the Security Council, should have the privilege at least of being present and expressing their views concerning the peace treaties.

With regard to the categories "European members of the United Nations", as referred to in the United States draft, Mr. Byrnes wished to state that the United States had not classified Turkey as a European state. There was also another reason why the United States did not insist upon this; namely, that Turkey had not declared war until after the Yalta Conference.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he wished to bring about an agreement in this matter and that in the hope of so doing he was willing to amend the United States proposal by striking out the word "European" in the sentence "together with all the European members of the United Nations" and by striking out the next following line, so that the text would read: "together with all members of the United Nations which actively waged war with substantial military forces against the European members of the Axis".

Mr. Byrnes submitted a list enumerating the nations which would be included in this category (enclosure No. 1³³). This list did not refer to the nations which would finally approve the peace treaties but rather to those which would be privileged to attend the Conference and to present their views. Each one had actively waged war against European members of the Axis. It seemed to him that those countries which had been actively at war should have the privilege of expressing their views regardless of whether those views were accepted.

Mr. Molorov stated that the drafting of peace treaties had no relation to the work of the Security Council. He had read statements to this effect by Mr. Byrnes. The drafting of peace treaties had no relation to any United Nations body. In drafting the peace treaties it was necessary to decide upon a principle for determining which countries were eligible to participate in this work irrespective of their status in the Security Council or United Nations Organization.

The Soviet Delegation proposed the principle that those countries were eligible which had actually waged war and furnished substantial military contingents in the war against one or another of the ³³ Not printed; the States enumerated in the United States delegation list were as follows: United States, Soviet Union, United Kingdom, France, China, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Greece, India, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Union of South Africa, Yugoslavia, White Russia, and Ukraine.

Axis powers. Accordingly, Mr. Byrnes' formula was correct in principle in that it recognized as the criterion active warfare against an Axis power.

Mr. Byrnes repeated aloud the words in the United States draft "together with all members of the United Nations which actually waged war with substantial military forces against European members of the Axis."

Mr. Molotov stated that it would be more exact if the formula read "with one or another of the European members of the Axis."

Mr. Byrnes replied that his idea was that states which had been at war with any one of the European members of the Axis would have the right to express their views. Thus, the United States would have the privilege of expressing its opinion regarding the peace treaty with Finland although the United States would not sign the treaty. He emphasized the one-war theory. For example, the cooperation of China in fighting the Japanese had made it possible for the United States to contribute all its power to bring about victory in Europe. Thus in inviting China as a permanent member of the Security Council we would be inviting her as a partner who made it possible for the United States to bring all its power to bear in Europe. Mr. Byrnes repeated that China would not be among the states giving final approval to the peace treaties but merely would have the privilege of being present and expressing its views. The only possible objection would be that this would require too much time. However, that could be governed. In this fashion those who desired to express their views would be heard, which was the important thing.

Mr. Bevin declared that the war was an Allied war waged in accordance with strategical and geographical considerations. It was an accident whether a given country had fought in one theater or another. Germany had employed her forces and those of her satellites in accordance with military considerations. Mr. Bevin was concerned not so much with the drafting of the treaties as with what would happen afterward, especially in so far as UNO was concerned. The United Nations Organization was responsible for the observance of the peace treaties. Looking to the future, would it be wise to adopt an exclusive policy according to which certain countries would merely be told that they were expected in the United Nations Organization to see to it that the peace treaties are observed? If there should be consultation in as wide an area as possible, following the more liberal lines of discrimination of the United States proposal, would that not imply acquiescence and agreement to enforce the peace treaties? This course, which was not too rigid but on the other hand recognized differences among the United Nations, would be a reasonable compromise and would do injustice to no country. If Mr. Bevin correctly understood the United States proposal, this proposal was in accordance with the conclusion drawn from previous discussions that the preparation of the peace treaties would be in the hands of those countries named in the Soviet proposal. The next thing would be to provide for wide consultation. The final stage would re-create the original arrangement as formulated in the Soviet proposal. Mr. Bevin then inquired whether he had correctly understood the United States proposal.

Mr. Byrnes replied that Mr. Bevin had correctly understood the first and second stages. He pointed out, however, that there was a difference between the United States and Soviet proposals as regards the final stage of peace treaty procedure. According to the United States proposal the treaty terms would be given final approval by the states which had been at war with the countries in question. However, according to the Soviet proposal those giving final approval would be limited to states which had signed the armistice terms. Byrnes submitted that this was an important question, which he was willing to discuss in an effort to reach agreement. He had never taken an inflexible position in the matter. He was willing to discuss the question of the final approval of the peace treaties and wished to hear the views of his colleagues upon it. Mr. Byrnes called attention to the fact that at the Berlin Conference the heads of government, when drafting the provision for the Council of Foreign Ministers, had said that the immediate task of the Council was to draft peace treaties with a view toward their submission to the United Nations. It would be possible to justify failure to submit the treaties to all the United Nations in so far as their drafting was concerned in view of other decisions of the Berlin Conference. But the smaller nations of the United Nations had ground for arguing that the peace treaties should be submitted to them. Mr. Byrnes was satisfied that it would be in the interest of the Big Three to give no ground for the opinion that they were denying to the members of the United Nations the power or opportunity to express their opinions. He could not believe that Generalissimo Stalin, President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee had intended that the peace treaties should be submitted to the members of the United Nations without giving them a hearing. This would be merely saying: "Sign on the dotted line." If the treaties were to be submitted to them, then there should be no question of not abiding by this decision, regardless of how the matter was interpreted. The justification for not inviting all the states was that it would be more practical to limit the number to those states which had actively waged war, as in the United States proposal.

Mr. Molorov stated that with regard to the participation of the United States in the peace treaty with Finland, there was no doubt but that the United States would have an opportunity to participate.

The Soviet Delegation had always recognized the right of the United States to do so and every one would appreciate that fact. But there were exceptions to the rule. China had not participated in the European war. Mr. Byrnes had referred to China as a member of the Security Council. However, it was not the task of the Security Council to draft the peace treaties. Applying Mr. Byrnes' criterion of active participation in the war against European members of the Axis, it was clear that China was not covered in this formula.

With further regard to the remark of Mr. Byrnes, the Soviet proposal referred to the necessity of convoking a conference but at the same time gave consideration to the principle upon which this conference would be convoked. This principle was that all the United Nations which had actively engaged one or another of the European members of the Axis would participate in discussions of a given peace treaty. Comparing the final paragraphs of the United States and Soviet proposals, paragraph 4 of the Soviet proposal provided that the final text of the treaties would be signed not only by the signatories to the armistice agreements but also by those United Nations which under paragraph 2 had been supplying substantial military contingents. On the other hand, paragraph 3 of the United States proposal provided that the terms of the peace treaties would be finally approved by those among the states invited which had waged war against the enemy states in question. Both proposals referred to states which had actually waged war. Therefore, the distinction was not clear between paragraph 3 of the United States proposal and paragraph 4 of the Soviet proposal. It appeared that Mr. Bevin saw no difference between these two paragraphs.

Mr. Bevin [said he?] did not understand either paragraph. Did paragraph 4 of the Soviet proposal mean that all the states mentioned in paragraph 2 would sign all the treaties, or that only the countries which drafted a treaty would sign it? For example, would the Italian peace treaty be signed by just the four countries drafting it?

Mr. Molorov said that paragraph 2 of the Soviet proposal stated explicitly which countries would participate in the discussions on each peace treaty. Those countries would be the ones to sign them. Thus Yugoslavia would sign the treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Italy. Greece would participate in discussing the peace treaties with Italy and Bulgaria and would sign these treaties. The Hungarian treaty would be signed not only by the Big Three but by Czechoslovakia. The Finnish treaty would be discussed by the Soviet Union, Great Britain and the United States but signed by the Soviet Union and Great Britain.

Mr. Bevin stated that he was in a difficulty. He took it for granted that the treaties would be signed by the countries which drafted them.

However, other nations which had declared war against an enemy state would, according to international law, remain at war with that state unless they too signed the peace treaty.

Mr. Molotov replied that Czechoslovakia had declared war on Finland but inquired why Czechoslovakia should sign a peace treaty with Finland. Czechoslovakia's signature would not be needed. Neither Great Britain nor the Soviet Union was in need of Czechoslovakia's signature.

Mr. Bevin said that in the case of any country which had declared war some action would have to be taken to set matters right.

Mr. Molorov replied that this was a technicality which could easily be taken care of. Costa Rica had declared war on Rumania but would determine its relations with Rumania after the peace treaty had been signed.

Mr. Byrnes stated that when the heads of government had agreed at Berlin that the peace treaties should be submitted to the United Nations, they meant that the treaties, when finally drafted, would be submitted to the countries which had been at war. It had always been the United States view that any given treaty would be submitted to any country which had declared war. The countries would in this fashion have been given an opportunity to agree or not to agree to the peace treaty which had been arrived at.

Mr. Molotov inquired whether Costa Rica would be expected to sign the peace treaty with Rumania.

Mr. Byrnes replied that Costa Rica might be given an opportunity to sign the peace treaty. However, Costa Rica would not be invited to participate in drafting the treaty since it had not actually waged war against Rumania.

Mr. Byrnes explained to Mr. Bevin that paragraph 3 of the Soviet proposal corresponded with paragraph 3 of the United States proposal. The United States proposal contains no paragraph relative to the formal signing of the treaties since the United States Government had regarded this as a matter of course. The difference between the two proposals was that paragraph 3 of the Soviet proposal provided that the texts would be finally approved by the signatories of the armistice agreements, whereas paragraph 3 of the United States proposal provided for final approval by those of the states invited which had been at war with the given enemy state. By final approval the United States proposal meant the drafting of the final text.

Mr. Molorov stated that he now understood the distinction.

Mr. Bevin declared that this was not exactly a technicality. He pointed out that the Dominions had been at war with Finland, Rumania and Hungary. Australia, New Zealand and South Africa had been at war with Bulgaria although Canada had not. Therefore this was not merely a technicality. It was necessary for the treaties to be signed since the establishment of various commercial and other peacetime relations could only be made possible on this basis. From the standpoint of countries which indulged in overseas trade, it was important that this matter be clarified.

Mr. Bevin desired that those countries which had been at war should be permitted to sign the peace treaties.

Mr. Molotov reminded Mr. Bevin that the British Ambassador had signed the armistice agreement with Finland on behalf of the whole British Commonwealth including the Dominions. The same principle should be applied in the case of peace treaties. With the British signature of the Finnish armistice, Canada's signature had been dispensed with. Czechoslovakia was the only country among those which had declared war on Finland which had not been represented in the armistice signatures.

Mr. Bevin replied that the Dominions might be "infuriated" if he were to agree without consulting them to sign the peace treaties on their behalf. He pointed out that the Soviet Union had at times signed documents on Great Britain's behalf.

Mr. Molorov replied that the Soviet Union had been authorized to do so.

Mr. Bevin stated that authorization was something which it was necessary to obtain. He pointed out that at Versailles each Dominion had insisted upon signing on its own behalf. He could not assume that he would be given authority to sign on their behalf. The Dominions might decide that this was necessary for them to do themselves. However, if willing, they could authorize him to sign on their behalf. India had always insisted upon signing herself.

Mr. Byrnes interrupted to say that in his view the important issue was that of paragraph 3, namely, which states would finally approve the treaties. No one could object to any nation's signing the treaties. The Foreign Ministers would have done their part when they had submitted peace treaty drafts which they considered wise and just. Other states could decide whether to sign the treaties or to continue in a formal state of war. Mr. Byrnes had always regarded this as a matter of course. The important matter was the determination of the final terms of peace treaties.

With regard to the question of giving countries an opportunity to express their views, Mr. Byrnes wished to urge upon Mr. Molotov once more that this was, after all, one war. In point of fact, the United States had been able to conduct only limited operations in the Balkans. That was because strategy had determined that the United States should invade through Normandy and not through the Balkans. Had it been decided by the military to invade the Balkans first, the United States would have played a much more active role in the war there. As partners in a common venture each of the Allies had served where it could serve best. China had performed a great service by holding the Japanese and giving the United States an opportunity to furnish more aid to those engaged in Europe. Norwegian shipping had helped to supply the United States Air Force in its bombing operations. These other states would merely be given an opportunity to come to the conference and present their views. This would do no harm but on the contrary would give the world confidence in the fairness of the Big Three.

Mr. Bevin remarked that Norway had lost one-third of its seamen in the war.

Mr. Molorov stated that China had not lost a single soldier in Europe.

Mr. Byrnes stated that if governments were given an opportunity to be present at the peace conference, there would be no difficulty in finding a formula. With regard to China and France, they were members of the Foreign Ministers Council. There was no question of their being charged with the duty of drafting the treaties. The United States had agreed with the Soviet position in that respect, but there was a provision that they could be present, if not as members of the Security Council, then, in accordance with the Berlin decisions, as members of the Foreign Ministers Council. The heads of government had made them members of the Foreign Ministers Council and they might be invited as associates of the Big Three on that body. They would be given the same privilege as that furnished Brazil, namely, the privilege of expressing their views for those drafting the treaties to consider.

Mr. Molorov said that it was necessary to agree upon a principle determining the invitation to the peace conference.

Mr. Byrnes stated that with further regard to China, the heads of government had evidently presupposed that China would participate in the peace conference as otherwise they would not have made China a member of the Foreign Ministers Council. If France and China were invited in their capacity as members of the Foreign Ministers Council this would not involve voting privileges. Under this procedure the peace conference would be convoked by the Foreign Ministers Council to consider peace treaties drafted by the Deputies under the formula suggested by the Soviet Government. There would be at the conference the five members of the Foreign Ministers Council and the states which had actively waged war with substantial military forces against the European members of the Axis. When these states had listened and expressed their views, then the peace treaties would be drafted by the countries which in the decision of the present conference would be entitled to draft the final texts. It was necessary for the present meeting to decide which countries would draft the final texts. If agreement could be reached on this matter, there would be no difficulty over the question of inviting others to express their views.

Mr. Bevin inferred from Mr. Byrnes' remarks that the conference itself would consist of the list of countries presented by Mr. Byrnes. He was clear as to which countries would draft the treaties and finally approve them, but not as to the countries which would constitute the peace conference itself.

Mr. Molotov proposed the principle that those countries which contributed substantial military contingents and actually waged war against specific countries would participate in the discussions of the respective peace treaties. If the principle could be determined governing participation in the peace conference, then it would be easy to draw up a list of the participants.

Mr. Bevin stated that he would like to see the actual list.

Mr. Molotov agreed that the Soviet Delegation would submit such a list.

Mr. Bevin stated that it was a question of what was meant by "substantial military aid". England had been at war with Bulgaria—he could not recall exactly how long before others had declared war on Bulgaria. The Dominions had furnished bombers and supplied explosives, et cetera, in these operations. He was quite sure they would never agree to the theory that these were separate wars. England had never inquired as to where Germany procured its oil-from Rumania or elsewhere—but nonetheless London had been bombed. He considered it better to have a conference along the lines of the United States formula, to hear the views of all on all treaties, and in the last analysis to leave the decision as to who finally approved the treaties to the limited group. The present United States proposal had approved the head and tail of the Soviet proposal. The middle, that representing the United States position, would give satisfaction to a wide circle of states. He hoped that the Soviet Government would agree with the British and United States Governments on this.

Mr. Byrnes stated that there was a difference between paragraph 3 of the United States proposal and paragraph 3 of the Soviet proposal. However, he was willing to make one more concession in an effort to come to an agreement. He would surrender paragraph 3 of the United States proposal in favor of paragraph 3 of the Soviet proposal provided that Mr. Molotov agreed to allow the conference to proceed in accordance with the United States proposal.

Mr. Molorov replied that it was necessary to study the United States list, which appeared too extensive. The Soviet Delegation would submit a list of states which in its opinion should be eligible to express their views.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the United States had made a concession in regard to the procedure of drafting peace treaties. Again in the all-important matter of the final step, he had agreed to do as the Soviet Government desired. The three Governments could not be brought into agreement if all concessions were on one side. All that the United States asked in return for conceding what Mr. Molotov asked for was that the small governments enumerated on its list should be given an opportunity to be heard before action was taken.

Mr. Molorov replied that the question was not one of concessions on the part of the Soviet Delegation. The Soviet Delegation did not request any concessions. He remarked that the meeting had now returned to what the Big Three had decided at Berlin last August. The Soviet Delegation did not ask for concessions; it only desired to carry out their formal decisions. Therefore it was necessary to agree as to the principle of the peace conference in such a way as to give satisfaction to all those present, as well as to be fair to other states. The principle was that those states which actually waged war against given enemy states should participate in the conference. Mr. Molotov anticipated that the list of participants would be considerably larger in the case of the German peace treaty. He promised to submit a list of states which in the Soviet view should participate in the drafting of the several peace treaties.

Mr. Byrnes replied that it had been President Truman's understanding at Berlin that all the members of the Foreign Ministers Council would be allowed to be present at and participate in the discussion of the peace treaties. Mr. Attlee had also had this understanding. Thus this opinion was supported by two out of the three heads of government. Nevertheless the United States had now conceded that the Soviet view should prevail and that the matter was settled.

The Berlin decisions said nothing concerning the peace conference and that question accordingly was up to the Foreign Ministers to settle. The United States had desired the conference to be as broad as possible, but in the hope of reaching agreement with the Soviet Government had made the restriction specified in the United States proposal as it now read. The United States had desired others to participate in approving the final texts, but in order to reach agreement had accepted the Soviet point of view. Mr. Byrnes did not mind making concessions because, when several parties were interested, each would have to make some concession in order for all to reach agreement.

Mr. Bevin apologized for having previously confused paragraphs 3 and 4, signatures and final approval.

Mr. Byrnes stated that if Mr. Molotov would agree to a broad conference he would agree to the restricted language which Mr. Molotov proposed in paragraph 3 of the Soviet proposal.

Mr. Bevin stated that he was troubled about the Dominions. He would like to see the proposal in final form.

Mr. Byrnes reiterated that, in the hope of reaching agreement, he had consented to accept Mr. Molotov's final paragraph. He agreed to Mr. Molotov's idea concerning who should be the judges provided that Mr. Molotov agreed to his idea concerning who should be the witnesses. By the "judges" he meant the countries drafting the treaties; by the "witnesses" the countries expressing their views.

Mr. Molorov stated that he would present a list expressing the view of the Soviet Delegation as to which countries were eligible to participate in the conference discussion. Furthermore he would study Mr. Byrnes' list.

After a brief recess Mr. Byrnes proceeded to the second point on the agenda.

2. Terms of Reference of the Allied Council for Japan and the Far Eastern Commission

Mr. Byrnes stated that the United States Delegation had presented its views on this subject and that there was nothing he wished to add. He inquired concerning the views of his colleagues.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Government had expressed its opinion on this question more than once during the recent Moscow negotiations between the United States and Soviet Governments.

Mr. Bevin stated that he knew about the negotiations but was uninformed concerning precise views which had been formulated therein

Mr. Molorov observed that according to the United States paper ³⁴ the British and Chinese Governments had been informed of the negotiations.

Mr. Byrnes understood that it had been communicated to Great Britain, and that the United States was in communication with the Soviet Government in an attempt to reach an agreement on this matter.

United States delegation memoranda regarding the revision of the terms of reference of the Far Eastern Commission and the Allied Council (for Japan) are included as enclosures 3a, 3b, and 3c to the United States delegation minutes of the First Formal Session of the Conference, December 16, pp. 623, 624, and 626, respectively.

Mr. Bevin stated that he had been informed of the talks but had not heretofore been informed of their conclusions. He inquired whether the paper in hand was an agreed text between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Mr. Byrnes said that there had been no agreement reached.

Mr. Molorov stated that he had not referred to an agreed text.

Mr. Byrnes stated that although no agreement had been reached, the United States Government had attempted as a result of the conversations to go as far as possible toward meeting the views of the Soviet Government. About two weeks ago the representative of Great Britain in Washington had been given a memorandum containing the United States proposals.

Mr. Molotov expressed the hope that the British Government took a favorable view of these negotiations.

Mr. Bevin said that he merely wished to know what it was that he was being asked to agree to.

Mr. Byrnes said that the text was contained in the two papers which he had circulated at the opening session.

Mr. Bevin understood that the discussions had been inconclusive. Amendments had been proposed. However, Mr. Bevin did not know whether these amendments had been adopted. He wished to see a draft of what had been agreed to.

Mr. Molorov stated that in his view Mr. Byrnes had stated his proposals in sufficiently definite fashion. In the view of the Soviet Government the negotiations of the past two months had been both useful and fruitful. Mr. Molotov believed that the proposals presented by Mr. Byrnes could be the basis of further discussion. The Soviet Delegation, however, desired to make certain amendments. It had now become easier to propose these amendments since the United States and Soviet views had come closer than in the beginning. This was the Soviet view concerning the progress of the negotiations to date.

Mr. Byrnes inquired what amendments Mr. Molotov had in mind. Mr. Molorov stated that he was interested in the attitude of the British Delegation with regard to the proposals.

Mr. Bevin stated that they were generally acceptable but that the British Delegation would have some suggestions to make which were not vital.

Mr. Molotov circulated copies in Russian of the proposed Soviet amendments to the United States proposals concerning the terms of reference of the Allied Council for Japan and the Far Eastern Commission.³⁵ $^{^{\}rm 35}$ The Soviet proposals are included as enclosures 2a and 2b, pp. 661 and 662, respectively.

Mr. Byrnes stated that it would be necessary to have this document translated.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Delegation was also interested in amendments which the British Delegation might propose.

Mr. Byrnes proceeded to the open discussion on the question of an independent government for Korea, but Mr. Molotov requested that this be postponed until the following session as the Soviet Delegation had not concluded its study of the United States draft proposal.

Mr. Byrnes proceeded to item 4, the disarmament of Japanese forces in North China and their evacuation to Japan. He then proposed that a special meeting be arranged in which the Ministers could discuss the several matters referring to troop withdrawals. It had been understood that an informal meeting would take place on these matters and Mr. Byrnes proposed that such a meeting be held tomorrow.

Mr. Molorov stated that the Soviet Delegation had not yet completed its study of the documents on item 4. This would require some time and he would inform his colleagues as soon as the study had been completed.

Mr. Byrnes said that there were several questions on which it had been agreed to have informal discussions including the withdrawal of troops from Iran and Greece and the transfer of control over Manchuria. He suggested that the meeting to discuss these matters be held tomorrow around noon time.

Mr. Molorov agreed to this with the qualification that the Soviet Delegation had not concluded its study of the documents on North China.

It was agreed that the meeting proposed by Mr. Byrnes would be held in Mr. Molotov's office at 12 noon tomorrow.

Mr. Byrnes then circulated a United States paper on the atomic bomb. 38

Mr. Molotov inquired whether this document had previously been published.

Mr. Byrnes replied that it had not.

Mr. Byrnes adjourned the meeting at 7:15.

THE ALLIED COUNCIL FOR JAPAN

The Soviet Delegation proposes the following amendments to the draft of the American Delegation of December 16:39

Point 1. Point 1 to be worded as follows:

"There shall be established an Allied Control Council (Allied Control Commission) with its seat in Tokyo under chairmanship of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers (or his Deputy) for the purpose of control over the execution of the terms of surrender of Japan and for the purpose of consulting with and advising the Supreme Commander in regard to the implementation of the terms of surrender and occupation of Japan and also for fulfilling directives supplementary thereto."

Point 2. In the last sentence of this point the words:

"the size of which shall be fixed in agreement with the Chairman of the Council" to read:

"consisting of military and civilian representation."

Point 4. In place of the words:

"He will consult and advise with the Council upon orders involving questions of principle, in advance of their issuance, the exigencies of the situation permitting. His decisions upon all matters shall be controlling."

to say as follows:

"On questions concerning the implementation of decrees of the Far Eastern Commission the decisions of the Supreme Commander shall be final with the exception of questions of principle, such as questions concerning a change in the regime of control over Japan, changes in the constitutional structure, of a change in the Japanese Government as a whole. In the event that a member of the Council disagrees with the Supreme Commander (or his Deputy) regarding the implementation of the aforementioned decrees involving questions of principle, the decisions of the Supreme Commander on these questions will not

In cases of necessity the Supreme Commander may take decisions concerning the change of individual ministers of the Japanese Government after appropriate preliminary consultation with representatives of the other Allied Powers on the Allied Control Council (Allied Control Commission)".

Point 5. To delete Point 5 in view of the fact that this point is covered by Point 4.

THE FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

The Soviet Delegation proposes the following amendments to the draft of the American Delegation of December 16:40

Article I to be worded as follows: "The Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China, the United Kingdom, the United States, France, the Netherlands, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the Philippines hereby establish a Far Eastern Commission composed of representatives of the participating powers."

Article II C to be worded as follows: "The Commission in its activities will proceed from the fact that there has been formed an Allied Control Council (Allied Control Commission for Japan) and will respect existing control machinery in Japan, including the chain of command from the United States Government to the Supreme Commander and the Supreme Commander's command of occupation forces."

Article III(3) to be worded as follows: "Any directives dealing with fundamental changes in Japanese constitutional structure or in the regime of occupation or dealing with a change in the Japanese Government as a whole will only be issued following consultation and following the attainment of agreement in the Far Eastern Commission."

Article III(4) to be deleted.

United States Proposals on Atomic Energy

It is the earnest desire of the United States to collaborate with other nations for the purpose of developing with the greatest practicable speed international measures to prevent the use for destructive purposes of atomic energy and other means of mass destruction, and to promote the use of atomic energy and other scientific advances for the benefit of mankind.

The President of the United States announced on October 3, 1945, that, in furtherance of this purpose, it was the intention of this Government to hold conversations with the other Governments associated with it in the development and use of atomic energy, and subsequently with other governments.⁴¹ The first step having been taken, it is now desired, as the next step, to hold exploratory conversations with the Soviet Government in regard to this matter which is of such vital importance to the peace and well-being of the peoples of the world.

As the Soviet Government is aware, the Governments of Great Britain, Canada and the United States believe that a commission should be established under the United Nations Organization to study the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters and to make recommendations for submission to the Organization. It is suggested that the five permanent members of the Security Council, together with Canada, should join in the sponsorship of a proposal to this effect at the first meeting of the United Nations in January 1946. It is the hope of this Government that the Governments of the U.S.S.R. and of the United Kingdom will fall in with this suggestion and will join in recommending it to the Governments of China, France and Canada. A draft embodying the present views of the Government of the United States as to the method of establishing the Commission is submitted herewith. is the desire of this Government to have a full exchange of views on this draft.

In connection with these proposals we call attention to the following statements taken from the Declaration on Atomic Energy issued by

"(5) We believe that the fruits of scientific research should be made available to all nations, and that freedom of investigation and free interchange of ideas are essential to the progress of knowledge. In pursuance of this policy, the basic scientific information essential to the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes has already been made available to the world. It is our intention that all further information of this character that may become available from time to time shall be similarly treated. We trust that other nations will adopt the same policy, thereby creating an atmosphere of reciprocal confidence in which political agreement and cooperation will flourish.

of the problem of the atomic bomb.

"On the contrary we think it might have the opposite effect. We are, however, prepared to share, on a reciprocal basis with others of the United Nations, detailed information concerning the practical industrial application of atomic energy just as soon as effective enforceable safeguards against its use for destructive purposes can be devised."

[Annex]

Proposed Recommendations for the Establishment by the United NATIONS OF A COMMISSION TO DEAL WITH THE PROBLEMS RAISED BY THE DISCOVERY OF ATOMIC ENERGY AND OTHER RELATED MATTERS

I. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMMISSION

The Commission should be established by the General Assembly which is the only body, under the terms of the Charter, possessing the authority to examine the entire problem of atomic energy.

II. REPORTS OF THE COMMISSION

The reports of the Commission should be made to the General Assembly for transmission to the members of the United Nations, the Security Council, and the Economic and Social Council. The General Assembly should also request action of the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council on those aspects of the reports which require action, and which fall within the respective jurisdiction of those bodies.

III. COMPOSITION OF THE COMMISSION

The Commission should be composed of one representative each of those nations represented on the Security Council, and Canada when that nation is not a member of the Security Council. Each representative on the Commission should have such assistants as he may desire.

IV. RULES OF PROCEDURE

The Commission should establish its own rules of procedure, and have whatever staff may be deemed necessary.

V. TERMS OF REFERENCE OF THE COMMISSION

The Commission should proceed with the utmost dispatch and inquire into all phases of the problem, and make such recommendations from time to time with respect to them as it finds possible. ticular, the Commission should make specific proposals:

(a) For extending between all nations the exchange of basic scientific information for peaceful ends,

(b) For control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to insure its use only for peaceful purposes,

(c) For the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction, (d) For effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions.

The Commission should not infringe upon the responsibility of any organ of the United Nations, but should present recommendations for the consideration of those organs in the performance of their tasks under the terms of the United Nations Charter.

[A meeting between M. Molotov, accompanied by M. Vyshinsky and M. Pavlov, and Mr. Bevin, accompanied by Ambassador Kerr and Mr. McAfee, took place on the afternoon of December 18. M. Molotov and Mr. Bevin outlined the positions of their Governments on various issues, particularly Greece, the Balkans, Iran, Indonesia, and India. A record of this meeting (not printed) was given by Ambassador Clark Kerr to Ambassador Harriman on the same day.]

United States Delegation Minutes of an Informal Meeting, Conference of Foreign Ministers, Moscow, Spiridonovka, December 19 1945, noon

Mr. Bohlen
Subject: Situa

Situation in Manchuria and North China

Removal of troops from Austria Countries to discuss peace treaties

Mr. McAfee

The Secretary said that this was the first of the informal restricted meetings which had been agreed to be held on questions not formally on the agenda. He said that in regard to North China he had proposed this item in order to give an opportunity for the three of them to discuss both the situation in North China and that in Manchuria primarily to make sure that each understood what the other was doing since our objectives were identical. At Potsdam the three Governments had agreed as to the Cairo Declaration and subsequently as to the Potsdam Declaration, which was to the effect that the Chinese Government would receive the surrender of Japanese troops and that stolen Chinese territory would be restored to China. The Secretary said that two weeks ago in Washington the Chinese Ambassador had told him of the troubles they were having in regard to revolutionists in China. He said he called them revolutionists since he remembered Generalissimo Stalin telling the President at Potsdam that they were not communists. He added that the information which Mr. Molotov had given him two days ago concerning the Chinese request that the Soviet Government leave its troops in Manchuria until February 1 had made clear the present situation in Manchuria.⁴⁵

Mr. Molorov answered that the Chinese Government had first proposed in October that Soviet troops be left until January 1 but for technical reasons connected with their movements it had been agreed to leave them until February 1. He said that had it not been for this Chinese request, Soviet troops would now have been completely out of Manchuria. As it was, they had evacuated southern Manchuria.

THE SECRETARY said that in North China the situation was complicated. There were 300,000 Japanese troops which had not vet been disarmed and that the Chinese National Government did not have sufficient troops on the spot to do this. He said that under the various agreements to support the Central Government they had all agreed that the forces of Chiang Kai-shek would take the surrender. He said our desire was to have these troops disarmed and evacuated to Japan as soon as possible and at the same time to avoid interference in China's domestic affairs. One difficulty was the shortage of shipping, but we hoped to obtain additional ships and speed up the evacuation of the Japanese. He said the other difficulty was that the revolutionist or communist forces in North China were in between the nationalist forces and the 300,000 Japanese he had spoken of. In addition, while not organized into regular armies, the revolutionists numbered some 400,000. Chiang Kai-shek had only 100,000 in the area. This was caused by the fact that Chiang Kaishek had sent troops to Manchuria and needed some time in order to assemble and move to North China additional forces. It was for this reason that the United States was leaving its marines in North China. The Secretary said that General Marshall's instructions were first to attempt to get a truce agreed upon in North China between the nationalist forces and the revolutionists. If this could be done. then our marines could go inland to the railroad, disarm and evacuate the Japanese without risk of becoming involved in fighting between the Chinese factions. To attempt to do it without a truce would merely mean that the revolutionary forces, being nearer the railroad and the Japanese forces than the nationalist forces, would move in and occupy these areas before the nationalist troops could get there, thus cutting Chiang Kai-shek's communications with Manchuria and setting the stage for a large-scale civil war. He said that if the truce were possible, General Marshall would then attempt to use his influence and the influence of the United States on Chiang Kai-shek to bring about a basic agreement concerning communist representation in the Government, which would permit of a unified government for China. If no truce could be arranged, the other alternative would be to fly in nationalist troops over the heads of the revolutionists and let them disarm the Japanese and occupy the railroad.

Mr. Molorov said he found it very abnormal that four months after the surrender there were still fully armed Japanese troops.

The Secretary pointed out that under the various agreements Chiang Kai-shek was to take the surrender but that his forces in the area were physically too weak to do so and also were, according to the Central Government, being prevented by the revolutionary forces. He said that according to our information the Japanese were quite prepared to surrender but would surrender only to Chiang Kai-shek's forces or to United States forces.

Mr. Molorov said that he did not see how it could be tolerated that Japanese forces were still in being and asked Mr. Bevin's opinion on that.

Mr. Bevin replied that he had not studied all the details of the North China situation but that in general he felt that while local disturbances interfered with the prompt execution of the Japanese surrender, our three powers should use their influence to overcome these disturbances in order to permit the carrying out of the main objectives connected with the Japanese surrender.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that when we had all agreed to support the Government of Chiang Kai-shek, it was difficult to do something that would impair his position in China and make certain a large-scale civil war. He mentioned in this connection that Generalissimo Stalin had stated that Chiang Kai-shek was the only Chinese leader in sight and that there were no other elements that could hope to bring about the unity of China.

Mr. Molorov replied that it was without question that we had all agreed to support Chiang Kai-shek and that the Soviet Union had embodied this in writing in its agreements with China. He said, however, that he felt Chiang Kai-shek's Government exaggerated the strength of the communist forces in Manchuria and in North China and that they really did not wish to do any fighting themselves but preferred to have others do it for them. He said that that was a well-known Chinese practice. He concluded by saying that they should discuss the situation in North China again as he wished to study it in more detail. The Secretary's statement, however, had made the main point clear.

THE SECRETARY inquired whether Mr. Molotov had anything to add to his information concerning Manchuria.

Mr. Molotov replied he thoroughly agreed with Mr. Byrnes that we should exchange information and verify that our positions were in harmony. He repeated that except for the Chinese request the Soviet forces would have already left Manchuria in accordance with the published treaty with China. He repeated that it was the Soviet policy to support Chiang Kai-shek and that they were adhering to that policy. They were leaving their troops in Manchuria at China's request so that Chiang Kai-shek's forces would have time to get into Mukden and Changchun. He repeated his statement that he felt that the number of non-government or communist forces had been exaggerated in order to have others do the work for them. He said he felt this was also true in regard to North China.

THE SECRETARY replied that according to our information the communist forces in North China were considerably larger, as he had stated, than the government forces.

Mr. Molorov said that they could discuss this question again but he felt some way must be found to disarm and remove the Japanese as soon as possible. He felt that eight years of war should have been long enough for Chiang Kai-shek to learn how to handle Japanese, particularly after the latter had capitulated.

THE SECRETARY again stated that General Marshall would attempt to persuade Chiang Kai-shek to make a proper agreement with the communists as the best method of avoiding large-scale civil war and bringing about a unified China.

Mr. Molorov stated that the United States was in the best position to know the intentions and plans of Chiang Kai-shek's Government. The only question was whether Chiang Kai-shek really desired to settle his internal problems.

THE SECRETARY replied that he thought he did, but on his own terms. In reply to a question from Mr. Molotov the Secretary stated that General Marshall was even more of a statesman than he had been a military man and that we could have found no better person for this difficult task; that he was there as a special representative of the President and not an Ambassador.

The Secretary then said they might discuss the question of the removal of troops from Austria. He had been informed that our three representatives on the spot had finally accepted a proposed Austrian Government and had recommended that it be recognized.

Mr. Molotov said that that was true, but the first list proposed by Figl had not been satisfactory since it contained three ministers who were formerly close associates of Hitler.⁴⁶

⁴⁰ The new Austrian Government headed by Chancellor Leopold Figl received official confirmation from the Allied Commission for Austria on December 18, 1945; see telegram 380, December 20, to Vienna, and telegram 609, December 21, from Vienna, vol. III, pp. 688 and 689, respectively; for additional documentation regarding the recognition of Austria and the participation by the United States in the Allied Commission for Austria, see ibid., pp. 559 ff.

Mr. Vyshinski confirmed this, saying that on December 14 the list presented had contained the names of three men who were fascists, but that on the 18th a new list had been presented which had been accepted by the Allied Control Council.

THE SECRETARY said this coincided with his information and stated he felt that we should accept these recommendations, recognize the Government, and give consideration to the withdrawal or at least reduction of our forces.

Mr. Molotov replied that he did not believe that complete with-drawal was feasible or desirable at this time because of the danger that the Austrian Government would attempt again to insinuate fascists into the government.

Mr. Bevin said that their Chiefs of Staff had proposed to scale down the forces but not to complete the withdrawal of them at this time.

THE SECRETARY replied that military authorities always liked to keep troops where they were and that in so far as the United States went we would be prepared to withdraw our troops completely in order to get our men home and to reduce the burden on the occupied country. He said it was a known fact that occupation forces were always unpopular with the local inhabitants, and besides that the problem of discipline was complicated in times of peace in regard to troops stationed abroad.

Mr. Molotov said there was a good deal of truth in that; that it was more difficult to keep a high standard of discipline among troops in times of peace. He said it would be necessary to study this question but he could say now that the Soviet Government was not in favor of a full withdrawal from Austria. He would have to consult his military authorities in regard to the question of reduction.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether Mr. Molotov would have information from the Soviet military authorities before the meeting broke up.

MR. Molotov said it was possible but he could not guarantee it.

THE SECRETARY said that he hoped it would be possible to make some announcement concerning at least the reduction of our forces in Austria before they left Moscow as he felt that such a statement would have a very good effect throughout the world.

Mr. Molorov observed that apparently the Soviet Government considered the danger of fascist insinuation in the Austrian Government more important than Mr. Byrnes.

THE SECRETARY replied that it would be many years before all the remnants of fascism would be cleared out of these countries and that there might be other ways of doing it than through armies of occupation. He said that personally he would like to see the reduction of all occupation forces in all countries. He realized, however, that the situation differed in each occupied country and would thus have to be treated separately.

Mr. Bevin said that one of the difficulties was the necessity of building up an adequate police force in Austria, which would take some time. He thought that the withdrawal might take place simultaneously with the gradual growth of adequate police forces.

Mr. Molorov said he had studied the list of countries proposed for the peace conference and he must state that since India was not an independent state and did not have any Foreign Office, the Soviet Delegation was against its inclusion. He said it was necessary to reduce the list but especially to omit India.

Mr. Bevin said that Indian troops had fought in many places in this war and besides was a member of the United Nations.

Mr. Molorov said that India was a member of the United Nations because it was expected that at some time in the future that country would obtain a more independent status. He said that the Soviet Government could not agree to include India unless the three Baltic Republics were added to the list. He pointed out that these states had been members of the League and that the representatives of the old regimes were still recognized in England and America.

Mr. Bevin said that he could not answer about India now but he would like to see a full list of those proposed by the Soviet Delegation.

Mr. Molotov said it was very simple to omit India and in any case add the three Baltic Republics.

THE SECRETARY asked if Mr. Molotov accepted the others.

Mr. Molorov replied that some others were doubtful but the main point was India and he felt the three Baltic Republics should have the right to express their views.

THE SECRETARY inquired whether Mr. Molotov would agree to the rest of the list without the Baltic Republics if India were dropped.

Mr. Molotov said he could propose it to the Soviet Government.

THE SECRETARY then said that if Mr. Molotov would accept our list without India he would urge upon Mr. Bevin that India be dropped.

During the luncheon which followed the meeting, Mr. Bevin told Mr. Molotov and the Secretary that he was prepared to accept the inclusion of the three Baltic Republics if India was retained. Mr. Molotov agreed and said it was up to the Secretary. The Secretary said he would have to give the question further study before answering.

Mr. Molorov opened the meeting at 5:10 p.m. It was decided to begin with consideration of Item 2 (Terms of Reference of Allied Council and Far Eastern Commission).

The British Delegation circulated its comments on the American draft. (Enclosure No. 1.)⁴⁸

After a recess requested by Mr. Molotov in order to translate the British paper, Mr. Molotov opened the consideration of the Terms of Reference for the Far Eastern Commission paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. Molotov observed that paragraph 1 of the Soviet draft differed from paragraph 1 of the United States draft only in that India was not included in the former.⁴⁹ In the opinion of the Soviet Delegation, India should not participate in the Far Eastern Commission since it was not a sovereign state. It should not participate on the same footing with sovereign states. India did not have its own Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Soviet Union did not maintain relations with India.

Mr. Bevin replied that India is now a member of the Far Eastern Commission. He could not agree to exclude India from it. If excluded, India would not even have the position accorded to the Philippines.

Mr. Molotov said that the Philippines were to receive their independence. Continuing, Mr. Molotov stated that the United States letter of August 22 50 had contained the statement that the Far Eastern Commission would cease to function as soon as one of the four powers, the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China, gave notice of its intention to terminate the agreement. However, in point of fact the Far Eastern Commission had not ceased to function but had begun and had been organized without the agreement of all the four states. Accordingly, the existence of the Far Eastern Commission at the present time was inconsistent with the United States letter of August 22.

Mr. Byrnes replied that he could not agree to this. At the time the letter was written the Far Eastern Commission had not existed. The letter was an invitation to organize the Commission. The simple facts were that when the Soviet Government had not seen fit to come into the Commission, others had organized it. Since its organization no member had given notice of termination.

However, in any event the United States and, Mr. Byrnes assumed, Great Britain as well, desired to have the Allies join the Commission and continue along in it. Mr. Byrnes hoped that the delegates could agree to the Terms of Reference. He suggested that they proceed to paragraph 2 since they could not agree regarding paragraph 1.

Mr. Molorov stated that he wished to observe that India had not been proposed as a member of the Far Eastern Commission in the original British proposal of August 30.51 The Philippines had been included.

Mr. Bevin stated that as far as he could remember the British Government had proposed a five-power Control Council with an Advisory Commission in which India would be a member.

Mr. Molorov stated that the proposal had not included India in either body.

Mr. Bevin replied that that had not been accepted. The Far Eastern Commission had been organized. India had been included. India was now a member and Mr. Bevin could not be a party to its exclusion. However, he was prepared to limit India's participation in the Far Eastern Commission.

Mr. Molorov suggested that as no agreement had been reached on this issue it might be wise to turn to the question with regard to Paragraph II, Section A, Subparagraph 1, as raised by the British paper.

Mr. Bevin desired clarification concerning questions which might arise among the participating powers themselves: for example, reparations questions.

Mr. Byrnes referred to Paragraph II, Section A, Subparagraph 3 of the American proposal. He wished to propose an addition following the words "participating governments" there. The addition would read "in accordance with the voting procedure as in Paragraph V, Subparagraph 2". In this fashion it would be clear that other matters could be assigned to the Far Eastern Commission by the participating powers in accordance with the regular voting procedure.

Mr. Bevin stated that Subparagraph 1 was specific. Subparagraph 3 covered all the other general matters which he had had in view. He had no objections to this addition.

Mr. Molorov stated that he had no objection to the addition but wished to study it further.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that in accordance with Paragraph IV of the United States proposal, the establishment of the Commission would not preclude the use of other methods of consultation on Far Eastern issues by the participating governments.

Mr. Molorov referred to the proposed Soviet amendment to Paragraph II, Section A, Subparagraph 3 of the American proposal.

MR. BYRNES stated that the Soviet amendment was agreeable to him and that he accepted it. He accepted the entire section proposed by the Soviet Government in place of his own, except that the name of the body should remain "Allied Council" and not "Allied Control Council" as in the Soviet amendment. This matter of nomenclature could be discussed when the question of the Terms of Reference for the Council was reached.

Mr. Bevin agreed.

Mr. Molorov referred to the Soviet amendment to Subparagraph 3 of the United States proposal.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the Soviet amendment was accepted in substance. The American Delegation, however, had changed the language combining it with one of the paragraphs in the paper originally adopted.

Mr. Byrnes distributed the revised United States version (enclosure No. 2).

Mr. Molorov inquired whether this revised paragraph combined Subparagraphs 3 and 4 of the previous United States draft.

Mr. Byrnes replied that it did but added that it embodied the language suggested by Mr. Molotov.

Mr. Molorov inquired whether the second part of the United States revised version also applied to interim directives. Did it mean that no interim directives would be issued dealing with constitutional changes in the Japanese Government?

Mr. Byrnes replied that it did.

Mr. Molorov said that it would be necessary to study the paper more closely.

Mr. Bevin had no remarks.

Mr. Molorov proceeded to Paragraph IV. He stated that the Soviet amendment on this question need not be discussed.

Mr. Byrnes distributed a United States paper concerning the Allied Council (enclosure No. 3). He said that some changes had been embodied in it after study of the Soviet suggestions.

Mr. Molorov requested an opportunity to study the United States paper and the meeting was adjourned at 6:35 p.m.

FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

COMMENTS BY THE UNITED KINGDOM DELEGATION ON THE UNITED STATES DRAFT OF DECEMBER 16TH 59

Article II A 1 speaks of the formulation of policies, principles, etc. for the fulfilment by Japan of her obligations. How is it intended to deal with any questions which may arise as between the participating Powers themselves in the execution of the surrender terms (e.g. reparations)?

In Article II A 3, does "agreement" mean "unanimous agreement", or is it the intention that agreement shall be reached in this case between the participating Governments by the same voting procedure as is suggested for the Commission in Article V 2?

The United Kingdom Delegation reserve the right to propose amendments to cover these points in the light of the answers to the above questions. They also reserve the right to propose an alternative voting procedure to that suggested in Article V 2 should this seem desirable in the light of the discussion of the Soviet amendments of December 18th, 53 which are still being studied by the United Kingdom Delegation.

Otherwise the United Kingdom Delegation do not desire to propose any amendments to the United States draft.

ALLIED COUNCIL IN TOKYO

The proposal in Article 2 for "a British Commonwealth of Nations member" raises a very serious constitutional difficulty and the United Kingdom Delegation must reserve the right to propose an alternative which will give effective representation to Australia, New Zealand and India, whose forces have played a great part in the war against Japan and will participate in the occupation.

Apart from this, the United Kingdom Delegation do not desire to propose any amendments to the United States draft, but they consider that the wording of Article 5 should be reviewed since the present wording suggests that there might be matters other than those specified in the Article on which the Supreme Commander would be free to take action not in accordance with decisions taken by the Far Eastern Commission.

FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

I. Establishment.

The Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China, United Kingdom, United States, France, the Netherlands, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, and the Philippine Commonwealth hereby establish a Far Eastern Commission composed of representatives of the participating powers.

II. Functions.

A. The functions of the Far Eastern Commission shall be:

1. To formulate the policies, principles, and standards in conformity with which the fulfillment by Japan of its obligations under the instrument of surrender may be accomplished.

2. To review, on the request of any member, any directive issued to the Supreme Commander or any action taken by the Supreme Commander involving policy decisions within the jurisdiction of the Commission.

- 3. To consider such other matters as may be assigned to it by agreement among the participating Governments, in accordance with the voting procedure in V-2 hereunder.
- B. The Commission shall not make recommendations with regard to the conduct of military operations nor with regard to territorial adjustments.
- C. The Commission in its activities will proceed from the fact that there has been formed an Allied Council and will respect existing control machinery in Japan, including the chain of command from the United States Government to the Supreme Commander and the Supreme Commander's command of occupation forces.

III. Functions of the United States Government.

- 1. The United States Government shall prepare directives in accordance with policy decisions of the Commission and shall transmit them to the Supreme Commander through the appropriate United States Government agency. The Supreme Commander shall be charged with the implementation of the directives which express the policy decisions of the Commission.
- 2. If the Commission decides that any directive or action reviewed in accordance with Article II, A, 2, should be modified, its decision shall be regarded as a policy decision.

⁵⁵ Revised text of the memorandum of December 16, p. 624.

- 3. The United States Government may issue interim directives to the Supreme Commander pending action by the Commission whenever urgent matters arise not covered by policies already formulated by the Commission; provided that any directives dealing with fundamental changes in the Japanese constitutional structure or in the regime of control, or dealing with a change in the Japanese Government as a whole will be issued only following consultation and following the attainment of agreement in the Far Eastern Commission.
 - 4. All directives issued shall be filed with the Commission.

IV. Other Methods of Consultation.

The establishment of the Commission shall not preclude the use of other methods of consultation on Far Eastern issues by the participating Governments.

V. Composition.

- 1. The Far Eastern Commission shall consist of one representative of each of the states party to this agreement. The membership of the Commission may be increased by agreement between the participating powers as conditions warrant by the addition of representatives of other United Nations in the Far East or having territories therein. The Commission shall provide for full and adequate consultations, as occasion may require, with representatives of the United Nations not members of the Commission in regard to matters before the Commission which are of particular concern to such nations.
- 2. The Commission may take action by less than unanimous vote provided that action shall have the concurrence of at least a majority of all the representatives including the representatives of the four following powers: United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China.

VI. Location and Organization.

The Far Eastern Commission shall have its headquarters in Washington. It may meet at other places as occasion requires, including Tokyo, if and when it deems it desirable to do so.

It may make such arrangements through the Chairman as may be practicable for consultation with the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers.

Each representative on the Commission may be accompanied by an appropriate staff comprising both civilian and military representation.

The Commission shall organize its secretariat, appoint such committees as may be deemed advisable, and otherwise perfect its organization and procedure.

VII. Termination.

The Far Eastern Commission shall cease to function when a decision to that effect is taken by the concurrence of at least a majority of all the representatives including the representatives of the four following powers: United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China. Prior to the termination of its functions the Commission shall transfer to any interim or permanent security organization to which the participating governments are members those functions which may appropriately be transferred.

ALLIED COUNCIL FOR JAPAN

- 1. There shall be established an Allied Council with its seat in Tokyo under the Chairmanship of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers (or his Deputy) for the purpose of consulting with and advising the Supreme Commander in regard to the implementation of the terms of surrender, occupation, and control of Japan and of directives supplementary thereto, and for the purpose of exercising the control authority herein granted.
- 2. The membership of the Allied Council shall consist of the Supreme Commander (or his Deputy) who shall be Chairman and the United States member; Union of Soviet Socialist Republics member; Chinese member; and a British Commonwealth of Nations member. Each member shall be entitled to have an appropriate staff consisting of military and civilian advisors.
- 3. The Allied Council shall meet not less often than once every two weeks.
- 4. The Supreme Commander shall issue all orders for the implementation of the Terms of Surrender, occupation, and control of Japan, and directives supplementary thereto. In all cases action will be carried out under and through the Supreme Commander who is the sole executive authority for the Allied Powers within the area of his command. He will consult and advise with the Council in advance of the issuance of orders on matters of substance, the exigencies of the situation permitting. His decisions upon these matters shall be controlling.

If, regarding the implementation of policy decisions of the Far Eastern Commission on questions concerning a change in the regime of control, changes in the constitutional structure, and changes in the Japanese Government as a whole, a member of the Council disagrees with the Supreme Commander (or his Deputy) the Supreme Commander will withhold the issuance of orders on these questions pending agreement thereon in the Far Eastern Commission.

In cases of necessity the Supreme Commander may take decisions concerning the change of individual ministers of the Japanese Government, or concerning the filling of vacancies created by the resignation of cabinet members, after appropriate preliminary consultation with representatives of the other Allied Powers on the Allied Council.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the United States Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers 57

[Moscow,] December 19, 1945.

Present: Generalissimo Stalin

The Secretary Mr. Molotov Ambassador Harriman

Mr. Paylov Mr. Bohlen

Preparation of Peace Treaties Subject: Withdrawal of Troops from Iran

After an exchange of amenities principally concerning Stalin's health, The Secretary handed him a letter from the President.58

Mr. Paylov began to translate the letter, but Stalin interrupted to ask the Secretary whether it was necessary to read the letter now while Mr. Byrnes was here.

THE SECRETARY replied that it was not necessary since he was aware of the contents of the letter and could say that the President had expressed his desire that the Generalissimo see the Secretary and talk over with him the various outstanding questions between the two countries. He added that he did not wish to go into the details now of these problems but merely to say that it was the earnest hope of the President which he shared that some method could be found to settle these questions. He said that most of our difficulties related to procedure and not to substance but that a failure to agree on procedure gave an opportunity to certain people to say that it was more difficult for the United States and the Soviet Union to cooperate in peace than it had been in war. He was expressing President Truman's views when he said that there was no conflict between our two countries and that our only desire was to live in peace and increase the comfort of the American people and help through economic means our friends abroad to restore the damages of war.

STALIN replied that he fully shared that desire.

Meeting held at the Kremlin, December 19, 1945, 8:30 p. m.
 For text of the President's letter, see enclosure to this memorandum, p. 687.

THE SECRETARY recalled that the first time he had met the Generalissimo at Yalta the latter had said that he spoke not as a diplomat but from the heart and he wished to assure him that he too was prepared to speak frankly on any subject that the Generalissimo had in mind and to tell him anything he wished to know concerning the United States' attitude.

STALIN replied that he had no doubts as to the sincerity on both sides, but that he felt sometimes we had different understandings of the same questions.

The Secretary agreed and said that this was due to different positions, customs, and points of view. He was confident that all these matters could be ironed out.

Stalin replied he shared this conviction and that up to now our two countries had succeeded quite well.

THE SECRETARY said one of the difficulties of the United States was that our press was completely uncontrolled and often printed stories which were reprinted in the Soviet press and thus led to mutual suspicion. He said he felt it was our duty to defend the actions of our ally, the Soviet Union, against any misrepresentation or untruth, and he felt that the Soviet Government would do the same.

STALIN agreed.

1. PREPARATION OF PEACE TREATIES

THE SECRETARY then said he noticed that the Generalissimo had before him a list of countries to be invited to the peace conference which they had been discussing at the meeting of the Foreign Ministers. He said that morning Mr. Molotov had agreed to accept the list if India was omitted, but when Mr. Bevin had objected to this Mr. Molotov then proposed the addition of the three Baltic Republics.

Mr. Molotov said that he and Mr. Bevin had agreed to the inclusion of the three Baltic Republics but Mr. Byrnes had objected.

THE SECRETARY said that regardless of who was right or wrong at the London Conference the fact was that there had been an honest misunderstanding between the three heads of Government as to the interpretation of the Berlin agreement. The President and he understood Prime Minister Attlee felt that under this agreement France and China would be permitted to sit with the Council to discuss but not vote on the peace treaties in question, whereas the Generalissimo insisted that only those countries signatory to the armistice should do so. He said, however, in their desire to reach an agreement the United States and Great Britain had agreed to accept the Generalissimo's interpretation.

STALIN replied he felt that that was the decision reached at Berlin.

THE SECRETARY repeated that he felt it had nevertheless been an honest misunderstanding but that we had accepted the Soviet interpretation. Not only that, but for the sake of agreement we had also accepted the Soviet position regarding final approval of these peace treaties. He said we had not liked it since we felt that all countries who had participated in the war should have a voice in the making of the treaties, but nevertheless we had accepted the Soviet proposal for final consideration. What we were asking, however, was that at the conference as wide a list of states as possible who had actively participated in the war should be given an opportunity to express their views. They would not have a vote or any final say in the treaties but merely be present and make their views known. pointed out that as the matter now stood, if the proposal to include India and add the three Baltic Republics were accepted at the conference, there would be Great Britain with five Dominions including India and the Soviet Union with five of its republics whereas the United States would be alone. He said it would be difficult to explain this decision in the United States. He said he thought that one way out would be to omit India and White Russia and the Ukraine. Thus only states enjoying full sovereignty would be invited. He understood that on that basis Mr. Bevin would suggest to his Government the omission of India.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that that would still leave England with four Dominions.

THE SECRETARY replied that he felt that both the United States and the Soviet Union were strong enough to stand alone and that Mr. Molotov could adequately protect the interests of these Soviet Republics at the conference. He said he felt we had made concessions in this matter of the peace treaties and that it was not very much to ask that our list for the conference be approved.

Stalin replied that the list was identical with the one which Ambassador Harriman had shown him at Sochi and that he saw no concessions on the part of the United States.⁵⁹

Ambassador Harriman said that Luxembourg had been dropped. The Secretary said that our concessions related to the preparation and final approval of the peace treaties.

STALIN remarked that the armistice in each case had been signed by those who had shed the blood in this war against the country in question and that they should be the one to sign the peace. He went on to say that Belgium and Holland, for example, have not fought against Italy and Rumania; but if it were the question of peace treaties against Germany and Japan it would of course be different. He said he felt that the United States should make a concession in regard to this list. Who in fact had waged war against Italy? In the first stages it had been the United States, England, and Russia, the latter having destroyed 16 Italian divisions on the Eastern front. France had come in with one or two divisions when Fascist Italy lay prostrate. He said that after the landing in Italy there was no question but that the United States and England had done most of the fighting and, therefore, had a greater right than Russia in regard to the Italian peace treaty. In the case of Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria, although the latter had not actively waged war, United States and British participation had been confined to air action which had been highly appreciated. The ground forces against these countries had been only Russian. Russia had fought and destroyed 24 Rumanian divisions, 26 Hungarian, 22 Finnish, and had forced Bulgaria out of The Baltic States had contributed forces in these operations. Since 1942 there had been an Esthonian corps of two divisions, a Latvian corps of two divisions, and from the very beginning an important Lithuanian contingent. If the part played by these Baltic Republics is compared with the role say of Norway, it will be seen that there would be no grounds for inviting Norway, Holland, and Belgium. Nevertheless, as a concession the Soviet Government would be prepared to agree to invitations to these three countries if Mr. Byrnes would agree to the three Baltic Republics which were sovereign and had their own Ministers of Foreign Affairs. In order not to offend England it would be well to accept India as well as Belgium, Holland, and Norway.

Stalin, therefore, proposed that the original American list be accepted plus the three Baltic Republics. He stated that soon the United States would have to recognize these countries and they might find it convenient to have consulates in Tallin, Riga, and Kaunas. He said he recognized that it was embarrassing for England to have six votes and the USSR to have six votes while the United States had only one and that this situation must be met. One way would be to give the United States six votes. He recalled that he had agreed with President Roosevelt to the United States having two additional votes in the United Nations Organization if it was so decided.

THE SECRETARY replied that when Mr. Molotov had first agreed there had been no question of the three Baltic Republics but only to the exclusion of India. Mr. Bevin, however, had objected to that.

Mr. Molorov said he had first proposed to shorten the list and take off certain countries especially India.

THE SECRETARY replied that when we spoke of votes it was somewhat misleading since at this conference no one would vote but merely express their views. He said he hoped the Generalissimo understood our opposition and our difficulties. The people of the United States regarded the war as one war and felt that where an army fought and against what country of the Axis was due to a decision of the military leaders. For example, had we not decided to invade Europe through Normandy, American troops might have been fighting on these other theaters against the satellites.

STALIN said that is true but a distinction must be made between the Pacific and European wars.

THE SECRETARY agreed and said that even on this point that China by agreeing to accept a limited amount of help in the Far East had made it possible for the United States to throw its full weight into the European war first.

STALIN agreed that China had played an important role in the whole war although she had in fact fought badly.

THE SECRETARY said he wanted to make it clear that the United States had no special interest in regard to Belgium, Norway, or any of these countries. It merely felt that since it had been one war the small countries who really participated could be given an opportunity to express their views on these peace treaties. He said, for example, that Norwegian ships had carried the gasoline which made possible our bombing of Rumania and had done their share in bringing supplies to the Soviet Union. He said in the last analysis we would be the judges and that it was possible, therefore, without any harm to our interests to let the little nations speak.

STALIN said that he saw two alternatives, one, to exclude India and leave the list as written which would include White Russia and the Ukraine; and the other, if England objects, to include India and the three Baltic Republics. He said the Soviet Government would withdraw its objection in either case to the inclusion of Belgium, Holland, and Norway, and also China.

THE SECRETARY said that that would present certain difficulties. When he agreed to omit India Mr. Bevin objected. He said he hoped that the Generalissimo would think the matter over and see if some other way could not be found out of the difficulty.

STALIN agreed to think the whole question over.

2. WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM IRAN 60

THE SECRETARY said he had not yet had an opportunity to discuss the question of Iran with Mr. Molotov and was, therefore, bringing it up for the first time. He said that the United States was involved in the difficulties in Iran only because of President Roosevelt's signature on the Declaration of Iran, and that because of this the Government of Iran had communicated to the United States certain complaints which we had felt bound to forward to the Soviet Government. said criticism of Soviet acts had been caused in the United States by the refusal of the Soviet authorities to permit 1,500 Iranian troops to go to Northern Iran to deal with the insurgents there. He said he wished to speak frankly which was the best way to discuss these matters and that we feared that at the forthcoming United Nations meeting the Iranian Government would raise this question and charge that the three Governments signatory to the Declaration signed at Tehran were not living up to their obligations to protect the integrity and sovereignty of Iran. The forces of our three countries were in Iran not as occupation forces but were there by agreement with a small friendly country. If the question were raised it would be difficult to explain why 30,000 Soviet troops in Iran would be endangered by 1.500 additional fully armed Iranian troops which he understood was the reason for the Soviet objection. He said he felt that the three great countries should always avoid any grounds for charges that they had failed to live up fully to an obligation to protect a small power.

STALIN said that the following were the pertinent facts in this matter: Baku oil fields in the south of Russia lav close to the border and this location created a special problem. These oil fields had to be safeguarded against any possible hostile action on the part of Iran against the Soviet Union. He was sure that if England or America owned these oil fields they would take every precaution to protect them against any possible action on the part of a hostile Iranian Government. He said the Iranian Government was hostile to the USSR and there was nothing friendly about it. He said he did not know what their attitude towards England and America was. That, those two countries knew, but he knew it was hostile to the Soviet Union. confidence, therefore, could be reposed in this Government and anything might be done by it. Saboteurs might be sent into the Baku fields to set them on fire which is not difficult to do. It was for this reason that the Soviet Government was unable and did not wish to withdraw their troops until the date set in the treaty. There was another point now, that the Soviet Union had another bilateral treaty with Iran which gives the former the right if conditions are disturbed or there is the possibility of danger to put troops in Northern Iran. 61 This treaty had been signed in 1921 and had grown out of a previous arrangement whereby Iran was divided into spheres of influence, the northern sphere to Russia and the southern sphere to England. The Soviet Union had subsequently renounced its claims to the northern sphere and had withdrawn its troops turning over without pay to ⁶¹ Reference is to the treaty of friendship between Persia and the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, signed at Moscow, February 26, 1921; for text, see League of Nations Treaty Series, vol. 1x, p. 383.

Iran the Tabriz railroad which the Russians had built and a bank. In exchange Russia received the right to send troops into Northern Iran if a dangerous situation existed. It was, therefore, necessary for the Soviet Union to keep its troops in Northern Iran because of the hostility of the Iranian Government. It might be difficult for others to understand this but if they thought it over they would understand.

In regard to the internal difficulties, Soviet troops were not interfering in these local disturbances. The reason they would not allow the Iranian troops to come into the area was that they feared clashes between the Azerbaijan population and the Iranian troops and also incidents against Soviet troops. Even now Soviet troops were suffering and several had been killed by Iranian detachments. Even small numbers of troops were capable of provoking incidents and attacking the Soviet forces. The Iranian troops in Northern Iran are not attempting to put down the disturbances and do not wish to fight against the local population.

It is right to respect small nations and to safeguard their independence but the small nations are not always averse to attempting to promote friction between large powers. Some small nations come to the Soviet Government and charge that England and America are strangling and oppressing them. Others go to England and America with similar charges against the Soviet Union. It is necessary to take a skeptical view of such complaints from small nations who are very apt to stir up trouble. It was, therefore, impossible for the Soviet Union to withdraw those troops before the expiration date of the 1942 treaty and at that time it will be necessary to examine the situation and to see whether or not it is possible to withdraw the troops then. The decision will depend in large part on the conduct of the Iranian Government. The Soviet Union must safeguard the Baku oil fields. It was difficult to understand why all these complaints were made against Russia when England has troops in many places and even in Tehran as has the United States. It was not clear how these troops got there or what they were doing but the Soviet Government makes no complaint.

THE SECRETARY replied that the one wish of every American soldier and the one wish of the American population was to see every soldier abroad get home. He said he was surprised to hear that the Iranian Government was regarded as hostile by the Soviet Government since he recalled that General Connolly 62 who had been in command of our forces there had told him that the Iranian Government had been cooperative with both Russia and the United States in moving supplies through Iran to Russia. He repeated that he felt it was important that the great powers should always be in a position to show that they were behaving correctly and in accordance with agreement in regard to small nations.

In saying goodbye, STALIN said that the Secretary could rest assured that the Soviet Union had no designs territorial or otherwise against Iran and that once they felt secure about the Baku oil fields they would withdraw their forces and would have no interest whatsoever in any internal problems in Iran, but they felt it necessary to take adequate precautions against hostile action.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had publicly stated that the United States was not interested in the formation of any bloc or group of states which might be directed against the Soviet Union and that no government which had hostile intent against the Soviet Union could come to the United States for any kind of support. He said he had stated this publicly in order that there should be no misunderstanding.

It was agreed that the Generalissimo would receive the Secretary again before the latter's departure.

[Enclosure]

President Truman to the Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Soviet Union (Stalin)

[Washington, undated.]

Dear Generalissimo: It is natural that approaching our common problems from different starting points we should at the outset encounter some difficulties. But it is becoming increasingly evident that these difficulties are assuming exaggerated proportions in the minds of our respective peoples and are delaying in many ways the progress, which we both desire to expedite, towards peace and reconstruction.

I repeat my assurance to you that it is my earnest wish, and I am sure it is the wish of the people of the United States, that the people of the Soviet Union and the people of the United States should work together to restore and maintain peace. I am sure that the common interest of our two countries in keeping the peace far out-weighs any possible differences between us.

Secretary Byrnes and I have sought to go as far as we have felt able to meet your views with reference to the Allied Council for Japan and to the Far Eastern Commission, and I sincerely hope that your Government will accept the proposals which we have made. If these proposals are accepted I assure you that in carrying them out it is my intention to insist on the fullest possible collaboration with the Soviet Union in the implementation of the Potsdam Declaration and the Surrender Terms for Japan.

Secretary Byrnes and I have also gone far in an effort to meet your views on the future procedure for handling the peace treaties, and the difference between us now on this matter is not great. In view of our willingness to accept your suggestions as to the handling of the preparatory work by the Deputies, I hope very much that your government can accept our proposals regarding the formal peace conference which will, I am sure, help greatly in securing the general acceptance of the work of our Deputies by other countries.

Prompt agreement between us on the procedure for making the European peace settlements and on the machinery to govern allied relations with Japan will stop the undermining of confidence in the ability of the great powers to work together and will give renewed hope to a world longing for peace.

This hope will also be greatly strengthened if your Government will join in the proposals to have a commission created under the United Nations Organization to inquire into and make recommendations for the control of atomic energy in the interests of world peace.

If we can agree on these general points of procedure without further delay, we should be able to start discussions on other matters as to which it is important in our common interest for us to concert our policies.

I hope very much you will see and talk frankly with Secretary Byrnes. He is thoroughly familiar with my purposes and I feel certain that if you had a full and frank talk with him it would be most helpful.

Sincerely yours,

H. S. TRUMAN

Generalissimo Stalin said that he had just been seeing Mr. Byrnes who, on the subject of the peace treaty conference had suggested that if India were to be excluded the Ukraine and Belorussia ought also to be excluded, but that Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia should not be included. Generalissimo Stalin said that he could not settle the matter on those terms.

^{}Meeting held at the Kremlin, December 19, 10 p. m. Another copy of this record, included in the files of the Moscow Embassy, is accompanied by the following note from Pierson Dixon of the United Kingdom delegation to Charles E. Bohlen: "Mr. Bevin thinks that Mr. Byrnes might like to see the record of his conversation with Generalissimo Stalin last night and asks me to send the attached copy." (Moscow Embassy Files: 500 Foreign Ministers Conference—Moscow)

Generalissimo Stalin said that Mr. Byrnes had then put to him questions about Iran. He had spoken about the withdrawal of troops and had asked for the views of the Soviet Government. Generalissimo Stalin had told him that the Soviet Government did not propose an early withdrawal: they desired to safeguard Baku and the oil wells there. There was no guarantee of security in that region on account of the hostile attitude of the Iranian Government.

Mr. Bevin asked whether the Soviet Government were afraid of an attack from Iran.

Generalissimo Stalin replied that he was afraid of acts of sabotage. Mr. Bevin said that it was important to bring out into the light of day the misgivings which either side might have. He himself was quite ready to tell the Generalissimo what was feared in England. It was thought there that the Soviet Government were following a policy aiming at the incorporation of Azerbaijan, or making it into a satellite state. He did not say that the Government were taking that view, but it was held in the House of Commons and in the country at large. Generalissimo Stalin must realise what a sensitive point Iran was to both Governments. He had observed to M. Molotov the day before that if there was any point of friction between their Governments, it was important at once to try to remove it at an early stage. His Majesty's Government had interests in Iraq and in Mosul and the oil of those regions. If only His Majesty's Government could know what it was exactly that the Soviet Government wanted it might be possible to cooperate.

Generalissimo Stalin said that, frankly and honestly, he had no claims against Iran, that was to say, he had no idea of incorporating any part of Iran into the Soviet Union and no intention of impairing the sovereignty of Iran. But he wished to safeguard the oil of Baku against diversionary activities. There were many extreme nationalists in the Iranian Government who wished to damage the Baku oil industry and who had plans of long standing for the incorporation of Baku in Iran. As to this, he had little fear but there was a real danger of diversionary activities. He had no territorial claim against Iran or any intention of infringing Iranian sovereignty.

Mr. Bevin said that we could assume then that Azerbaijan would remain in Iran, to which Generalissimo Stalin replied that Azerbaijan in fact consisted of two different regions, only one of which was genuinely Persian.

Mr. Bevin said that, at any rate, the Persian part would remain in Iran and Generalissimo Stalin indicated his assent.

Mr. Bevin said that he had taken an interest in the proposal for the establishment of provincial councils throughout Iran. His Majesty's Government had suggested to the Iranian Government that that ought to be done. Could we not set up a tripartite commission to advise and assist them? The Iranians did not seem capable of carrying out reform by themselves. This reform seemed to be necessary and might effect a settlement of Persia. If this suggestion appealed to the Generalissimo, his personal opinion was that, if the latter favoured it, he (Mr. Bevin) might advocate it with the United States Government.

Generalissimo Stalin said that he might support this idea but he must know exactly what was intended.

Mr. Bevin explained that the measure had been provided for in the Iranian constitution but had never been carried out. He thought it was essential to carry it out but he feared that the Iranian Government would be unable to do it without assistance.

GENERALISSIMO STALIN thought that that was probably the case and said that he would study the matter and then discuss it further. He thought it possible that agreement might be reached on this point.

Mr. Bevin said that he wished to put a further question. What was the difficulty in regard to Turkey? He did not want the term to be misunderstood but it seemed that a war of nerves was being conducted. He had the impression that there was a difficulty about the Soviet-Turkish frontier and as His Majesty's Government were allied with Turkey, he was very anxious to understand this question.

GENERALISSIMO STALIN replied that there were two questions.

First, the Straits. Under the Montreux Convention it was left to Turkey to decide whether there was a threat of war and whether to close the Straits and to control them. That was a difficult situation for Russia because Turkey thus had a right to hem her in and the Soviet Government wished to safeguard their liberty.

Secondly, there were certain provinces in Turkey inhabited by Georgians and Armenians which had been seized by Turkey and it was necessary to restore, at least to some extent, the old frontier which existed in the time of the Czars because the Georgians and Armenians were putting forward claims against the Turkish Government. All talk of war against Turkey was rubbish.

In reply to Mr. Bevin's question as to how the matter could be settled, Generalissimo Stalin said it should be settled by negotiation either with Turkey or with the Allies.

In reply to Mr. Bevin's question as to what exactly the Soviet Government wanted, Generalissimo Stalin said that the Soviet Government wished to regain the Georgian and Armenian portions of the provinces in question: they claimed, in fact, the old frontier which existed before the Treaty of 1921.

Mr. Bevin said that he understood that Russia had not then been in possession of these provinces for a very long period.

Generalissimo Stalin said that it was true that this position dated only from 1870 but the population was Georgian and Armenian and had always been so.

Mr. Bevin then asked the Generalissimo to state what exactly he wanted in the Straits. There had originally been talk of a Soviet base there.

GENERALISSIMO STALIN said that this claim still stood.

Mr. Bevin asked whether that did not put Turkey in a difficulty as the Soviet Government would be able to close the Straits.

GENERALISSIMO STALIN said that the Soviet Government would not have that right. Turkey was unable to defend herself and had shown during the war that she was afraid of everyone.

Mr. Bevin asked whether the Soviet intention was that all ships might pass through the Straits both in peace and in war.

Generalissimo Stalin replied that that was so as regards merchant ships. The important thing today was to limit Turkey's right to close the Straits on her own authority.

Mr. Bevin asked what would be the situation if Turkey were at war, to which Generalissimo Stalin replied that Turkey's interest should be placed first.

Mr. Bevin asked whether she could close the Straits and Generalissimo Stalin replied that she could and that those interested in the defence of the Straits should come to her aid.

Mr. Bevin said that he would be very interested to see definite proposals formulated by the Soviet Government so that he could consider whether there would be an advantage in calling a conference. He was anxious not to destroy Turkey's free and independent position.

M. Molorov raised the point whether the question could be settled at the present Conference and after some discussion it was agreed that that would probably not be possible but Mr. Bevin expressed the hope that the Soviet Government would not necessitate the continuance of Turkish mobilisation.

GENERALISSIMO STALIN said that this mobilisation had been undertaken by Turkey on her own initiative and when Mr. Bevin said that that was because Turkey was frightened of the Soviet Union, Generalissimo Stalin said that she need not be frightened.

[Here follows a discussion regarding the British position in the Dodecanese, the participation by India in the preparation of the peace treaties, and Anglo-Soviet relations in general.]

1. ALLIED COUNCIL FOR JAPAN

Mr. Bevin suggested that the discussions commence on the revised American draft on the Allied Council for Japan.⁶⁵

Mr. Molorov stated that he wished to reserve the opinion of the Soviet Delegation with respect to the final wording of Article 1. He pointed out that the Soviet Government had suggested that the body be called an Allied Control Commission and not an Allied Council. Inasmuch as the American draft provided for the controlling of Japan

⁶⁴ The British delegation minutes of this meeting also list Edward Page as present with the United States delegation and Pierson J. Dixon as present with the United Kingdom delegation.

⁶⁵ The American revised draft on the Allied Council for Japan is included as enclosure 3 to the United States delegation minutes of the Fourth Session, December 19, p. 672.

it was not clear to him why the body should not be called a Control Commission. This would be more precise.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that the original American proposal provided for an Allied Military Council. The Soviet Government had not agreed to that name and had suggested "Allied Control Commission". The United States could not agree to this and in the hope of reaching agreement, it had suggested that it be called an Allied Council, leaving out the word "military", since it had been opposed by Mr. Molotov and "council" ["control"?] since it had been opposed by the United States. He considered that the document spoke for itself, since it specified control over Japan. He continued that it had been necessary to consult various Departments of the United States Government in respect to the title of this body and that a compromise had been reached in calling it an Allied Council. He expressed the hope that Mr. Molotov would agree to this terminology. He said that he was not in a position to make any changes and added that since the American Delegation had agreed to two or three other suggestions made by Mr. Molotov, he hoped that Mr. Molotov would agree to the American position.

Mr. Molorov remarked that the American and Soviet positions were now considerably closer together with respect to the Control Council. He suggested that the question of the name of the body be deferred.

Mr. Byrnes agreed. However, he wished to point out that control over Japan was divided between the council and the commission. Therefore, there was less reason to put the word "control" in the title.

Mr. Bevin suggested that the Delegates turn to Article 2. He said that he had received instructions to press for United Kingdom and Australian representatives on the council. As Australia had played a very special part in the Pacific war, it felt that it was in a special position and had consequently asked for this representation. He, therefore, requested that his colleagues support this proposal.

Mr. Byrnes explained that Australia had been taken into the FEC and that he believed that it would be wiser to restrict the Council to the four governments which had extended the original invitations to join the Far Eastern Commission. He stated that he could not agree to Mr. Bevin's proposal. He felt that if an invitation were extended to Australia, it would be difficult to explain to other governments why they could not be included.

Mr. Molorov stated that he would like to remind his colleagues that the question of control of Japan had been the subject of months of discussion in Moscow. The British had been informed of these discussions. Thus far no proposal had been made for the inclusion of Australia. The question had only now been raised. He must report to his government and obtain instructions.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that the original British proposal called for a five power Control Council, including Australia. This had been dropped in favor of the Far Eastern Commission in Washington. Now the British Government was renewing its proposal. It had awaited the present opportunity in order to renew it. Since the United States Delegation could not agree to this proposal and since the Soviet attitude was not known, Mr. Bevin proposed to reserve further discussion on this until the Soviet reaction was received. Perhaps he might have the Soviet views at the next session.

He then suggested that Article 3 be taken up. No comments were made and the discussion turned to Article 4.

Mr. Molorov stated with regard to Article 4 of the United States draft that the Soviet Delegation believed that the phrase "the exigencies of the situation permitting" should be eliminated.

Mr. Byrnes replied that it was impossible for him to agree to that and proposed to proceed to the consideration of the next paragraph.

Mr. Molorov stated that he presumed that a drafting committee would be established to draw up the final text. He requested that this committee devote special attention to Article 4. He suggested that it would contribute to clarification if the word "individual" were to be inserted before the words "cabinet members" toward the end of this paragraph. Just as it had been specified that the Commander-in-Chief was entitled to change individual ministers, so it should be stated that he was entitled to fill vacancies created by the resignations of individual members of the cabinet.

Mr. Byrnes suggested that Mr. Molotov's proposal be transmitted to the drafting committee.

Mr. Bevin stated that paragraphs 3 and 4 could now be submitted to a drafting committee, but that final agreement had not been reached regarding paragraphs 1 and 2.

Mr. Byrnes remarked that the drafting committee would not be able to proceed very far until settlement had been reached on paragraphs 1 and 2.

A drafting committee composed of Messrs. Cohen, Bennett and Vyshinski was appointed.

2. FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

Mr. Bevin suggested that the meeting discuss the FEC. He said that the only unsettled questions appeared to be that of India and voting procedure. He asked his colleagues to agree to the inclusion of India.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he had agreed to this on behalf of the United States Government. That had been two or three months ago, since which time India had been represented in the meetings of the Far Eastern Commission. Mr. Byrnes had no objections at this time to India's serving on the commission.

Mr. Molorov said that he had already expressed the Soviet view on this proposal and asked that further discussion be deferred until tomorrow.

Mr. Bevin took up the question of voting procedure, under paragraph V 2. The original British proposal was that only two of the representatives of the four powers (United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China) should concur with the majority. The latest draft provided for concurrence of all four.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the United States had originally proposed the concurrence of three and that the Soviet Government had suggested four.

Mr. Molorov stated that he believed it only just and right, in order to insure the friendly collaboration of all four powers in Far Eastern issues, to provide for four power concurrence. This would be in the interest of world peace.

Mr. Bevin faced a difficulty in agreeing to this.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he would accept any one of the three arrangements: two power concurrence as Mr. Bevin had proposed, three power concurrence as he himself had proposed, or four power concurrence as Mr. Molotov had proposed.

Mr. Molorov at this point reiterated his preference for an arrangement which would facilitate the friendly cooperation of the four powers in the Far East.

Mr. Bevin stated that the Australians felt that the work of the Commission might be held up in the event that all four could not agree. Mr. Bevin would like to decide this question tomorrow at the same time Mr. Molotov gave his reply on India.

Mr. Molorov stated that this particular question did not involve India.

Mr. Bevin said that he would give his answer tomorrow on both points. Meanwhile, he suggested that the remainder of the text be transmitted to the drafting committee.

Mr. Molorov emphasized that the Soviet Government attached great importance to the question of four power concurrence.

Mr. Bevin admitted that this question was very important and stated that he would look into it tonight.

Mr. Byrnes suggested that the drafting committee proceed with its work on the last paragraphs of the council proposal.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether, in view of the fact that other governments were involved, the three powers meant to arrive at a decision or merely a recommendation.

Mr. Byrnes replied that the United States had presented its proposals to the three powers only. The other representatives on the commission had been advised of the Moscow discussions, although they had not been informed of the final changes in the terms of reference. The Chinese Government had been informed of these.

Mr. Bevin stated that he wished it to be clearly stated whether the result would be recorded as a decision or an understanding of which other governments would be advised officially.

Mr. Byrnes stated that if agreement were reached the three powers could advise the Chinese Government thereof and ask for its concurrence. The Chinese would also be asked to join the three powers in presenting the plan to the several governments represented on the Far Eastern Commission.

Mr. Bevin stated that he had to be quite clear with reference to Australia. If the recommendations were put in final form without consulting Australia, this might create a difficult situation for him.

Mr. Byrnes suggested that a difficulty might arise if consultation were undertaken. If a government on the Far Eastern Commission might object to the terms of reference and ask for further consideration by the three powers, this would not be feasible. Mr. Byrnes urged therefore that the three powers agree to invite the other governments to join and concur in their plan.

Mr. Molotov stated that in his view Mr. Byrnes was correct. However, he would have to report to his Government and he hoped to obtain its agreement to Mr. Byrnes' proposal. He hoped that China would associate itself with the plan adopted and that no insurmountable difficulties would arise after the other governments were informed.

Mr. Bevin preferred to defer this question until tomorrow.

Mr. Byrnes hoped that this question would be disposed of tomorrow in one way or the other. He did not wish the conference to continue indefinitely and it would be necessary to communicate with the Chinese before the end of the Conference.

Mr. Molorov agreed with him.

Mr. Bevin stated that there were three points outstanding: India, voting procedure, and the question of whether the result would be presented as a decision or merely as a recommendation. He hoped that final decision would be reached tomorrow on these questions.

3. Korea

Mr. Bevin proceeded to the next item on the agenda, namely the establishment of a unified administration for Korea.

Mr. Molotov stated that there were several points in the American draft 66 which he desired to elucidate. The Soviet Delegation would formulate its views on this question today. He pointed out that the original proposal of the United States Government had raised the question of an independent Korean Government. He wished to ask as to how this question stood at the present time.

Mr. Byrnes stated that this question was dealt with in the American paper which had been circulated, without regard to the wording as contained on the original agenda or to what was said in Mr. Harriman's letter. The United States Government hoped to see an independent government in Korea ultimately and he hoped that this question could be considered as set forth in the American paper.

Mr. Molorov said that it was easy to understand that the United States Delegate distinguished between urgent questions and those of long term significance. This was quite correct. There were urgent questions calling for immediate decision. Others required preparatory work before settlement. This was how he understood the United States proposal. Since there were Soviet military forces in the north of Korea and United States military forces in the south, the settlement of the urgent questions should be assigned to them. With respect to the long term questions he could state that the Soviet Government agreed to the establishment of a trusteeship for Korea and that this trusteeship should be undertaken by the United States, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China.

M_R. Bevin inquired whether he was correct in assuming that the Soviet Delegation's proposal was based upon the United States proposal. He inquired whether a decision, therefore, should be adopted on the basis of the United States proposal.

Mr. Molorov expressed the hope that both the United States draft and the Soviet proposals would be given consideration. He hoped to submit the Soviet proposals tonight.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he was anxious to make headway with the effort to solve the immediate situation in Korea. He had been advised since his arrival that 1,060,000 Korean refugees had come into the American zone. These included a half million from the Russian zone of Korea and Manchuria. There were many more to come. The half million from the Russian zone and Manchuria claimed that they had originally been residents in the portion of Korea embraced in the United States zone. This was a very important question to solve.

⁶⁷ Text of Harriman's letter of November 8 to Molotov, included as enclosure 4 to the United States delegation minutes of the First Formal Session, December 16, p. 627.

It was also necessary to provide for a free exchange of merchandise and people and to restore the Korean economy. He inquired whether Mr. Molotov was in accord with the United States proposal for a trusteeship, having in mind an independent government in five years, at which time the trusteeship might be extended for another five years by agreement. He believed that this was what Stalin had in mind four months ago in Berlin. He said he had not discussed this matter with Mr. Bevin.

Mr. Bevin supposed that the trusteeship council would have something to say on this score.

Mr. Byrnes agreed. His only hope was that the present proposals would be agreed to by the three powers.

Mr. Bevin stated that the Soviet paper would be awaited and that the question would be returned to upon the receipt of it.

Mr. Molorov circulated a paper on Korea later in the meeting (see enclosure no. 1).

Mr. Bevin proceeded to item 4 on the agenda. (Disarmament and evacuation of Japanese in Manchuria).

At Mr. Molorov's suggestion, it was agreed to defer consideration of this question until tomorrow.

Mr. Bevin then proceeded to item 5—Bulgaria and Rumania.

Mr. Byrnes circulated two American papers (enclosures no. 2 and 3) and suggested that they be considered at the next meeting.

4. ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. Bevin then turned to item no. 6 (control of atomic energy).

Mr. Byrnes stated that he was very anxious to bring up this question for discussion in order to obtain the views of his colleagues on the United States proposal to establish a United Nations Commission to deal with the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy. He hoped that the Soviet Delegation would join in sponsoring this proposal when the United Nations Organization meets. He asked that consideration be given to the United States proposal 68 and explained that he wished to make an addition following the last paragraph on page three. This consisted of an extract from the Declaration of November 15 and should have originally been included but had been omitted by mistake. (enclosure no. 4).

Mr. Molorov stated that the Soviet Government was now studying the American proposal and requested that the subject not be considered today.

Mr. Byrnes agreed.

⁸⁸ United States Proposals on Atomic Energy, included as enclosure 3 to the United States delegation minutes of the Third Formal Session, December 18, p. 663.

5. GERMANY

Mr. Molorov stated that he wished to distribute a memorandum on Germany with a view to exchanging opinions on that question (enclosure no. 5).

Mr. Bevin stated that he did not wish to discuss Germany without the participation of France. He wished to be perfectly clear on this point. He would, however, listen to what his colleagues had to say. He would look at Mr. Molotov's paper; however, he was in a difficult position with regard to considering any questions concerning Germany.

Mr. Molorov suggested that these questions could be discussed in an informal way, not necessarily at the regular meetings.

Mr. Bevin stated he would be very happy to hear Mr. Molotov's views regarding Germany, but this would have to be on a preliminary basis.

Mr. Molorov asked that the Soviet paper be studied and that agreement then be reached regarding the procedure of considering this question.

Mr. Bevin reiterated that he was placed in a difficult position. If the Soviet Government wished to say something in an informal way he would study the document as a document between the two governments, but he did not wish to formalize the discussion at the present time.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he would be glad to read the document and join in informal conversations on it and he proposed that this be done tomorrow.

It was agreed to meet at 12:00 noon tomorrow for this purpose.

The meeting was adjourned by Mr. Bevin at 4:35 p.m.

Memorandum by the Soviet Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 20, 1945.

REGARDING KOREA

1. In the aim of restoring Korea as an independent state, the creating of conditions for the country's development on democratic foundations and the speediest possible liquidating of the consequences of prolonged Japanese domination in Korea, there shall be created a provisional, democratic Korean government which will undertake all necessary measures for the development of industry, transportation, and agriculture of Korea, and the national culture of the Korean people.

- 2. To create a Joint Commission of representatives of the command of American troops in southern Korea and the command of Soviet troops in northern Korea for the rendering of assistance in the formation of a provisional Korean government and for preliminary elaboration of appropriate measures. In the working out of its proposals, the Commission shall consult with Korean democratic parties and social organizations. The recommendations worked out by the Commission shall be presented for the consideration of the respective governments.
- 3. The Joint Commission, with the participation of the provisional Korean democratic government and Korean democratic organizations, is commissioned also to work out measures of help and assistance (trusteeship) in the political, economic and social progress of the Korean people, the development of democratic self-administration, and the establishment of the state independence of Korea.

The proposals of the Joint Commission shall be submitted for the joint consideration of the U.S.A., U.S.S.R., Great Britain and China for the working out, following consultation with the provisional Korean democratic government, of an agreement concerning a four-power trusteeship of Korea for a period of up to five years.

4. To convene in a two-week period a joint meeting of representatives of the American and Soviet commands in Korea to consider urgent questions which have relation both to southern and northern Korea and to work out measures for the establishment of permanent coordination between the American command in southern Korea and the Soviet command in northern Korea in the administrative-economic sphere.

SUGGESTED PROCEDURE WITH REGARD TO BULGARIA

- 1. A reorganization of the Bulgarian Government should be suggested by the three Allied Governments to permit the formation of a Government which may be recognized by all three, thus placing Bulgaria in a position to conclude a treaty of peace and to be admitted to the United Nations Organization. Such reorganization should be worked out in consultation with the present Bulgarian Government, the leaders of democratic elements at present in opposition, and the representatives, political and military, of the three Allied Governments in Bulgaria.
 - 2. The following general lines of advice should be agreed by the three Allied Governments leaving the discussion of individuals and other specific details to our representatives in Sofia:

(a) Reorganization of the Bulgarian Government to include representatives of all parties participating in the Fatherland Front on September 9, 1944, that is, in addition to the present Front parties (Communist, Zveno, Obbov Agrarian, Neikov Social Democratic, and Radical) the present Opposition Agrarian and Social Democratic parties and Independents; and representatives of other democratic groups that have emerged since September 9, 1944, such as the Democratic Party.

(b) A pledge on the part of this reorganized Bulgarian Government to hold free elections for a new National Assembly by secret ballot within six months. To assure that the elections are really free the key ministries having direct responsibility for the conduct of the campaign and of the elections should not be controlled by any one political party.

- 3. The present National Assembly should restrict its legislative activities to the following:
- (a) Enacting a general amnesty for all political acts since September 1, 1944.
- (b) Amending the electoral law in accordance with recommendations to be made by a special committee appointed by the Assembly representative of all recognized political parties. The purpose of such amendments should be to assure complete freedom to all democratic groups to register candidates, to conduct an electoral campaign and to guarantee the secret ballot.

(c) Amending or repealing as recommended by a similarly representative committee the "Law for the Defense of People's Rights" which through its provisions for extra legal courts serves as a cloak for judicial and administrative excesses.

(d) The passage of a budget law.

- (e) Legalization of decree laws adopted from September 9, 1944.
- 4. The United States would agree to recognize a Bulgarian Government reorganized as set forth above and pledged to the holding of free elections under the conditions outlined herein.

SUGGESTED PROCEDURE WITH REGARD TO RUMANIA

1. The three Allied Governments should agree on a reply to King Michael's letter of August 21, 1945.69

⁶⁹ The text of the letter from King Michael of Rumania to Brig. Gen. Cortland T. van R. Schuyler, is contained in telegram M-1454, August 21, from General Schuyler to the War Department, vol. v, p. 574.

- 2. The reply should state that the three Governments are prepared to advise the King through their representatives in Rumania on steps which might be taken to assure the formation of a Government which might be recognized by all three thereby placing Rumania in a position to conclude a treaty of peace and to be admitted into the United Nations Organization.
- 3. The following general lines of advice should be agreed by the three Allied Governments leaving the discussion of individuals and other specific details with the King to our representatives in Bucharest:
- (a) Reorganization of the Rumanian Government to provide for inclusion of representatives of the National Peasant Party and of the National Liberal Party. (This does not necessarily imply the inclusion in the Government of Maniu, Lupu, or Bratianu but only that there shall be in the Government members truly representative of their parties.)

(b) A pledge on the part of this reorganized Rumanian Government to hold free elections by secret ballot within a specified time. To assure that the elections are really free, the key ministries having direct responsibility for the conduct of the campaign and of the elections should not be controlled by any one political party.

tions should not be controlled by any one political party.

(c) Proclamation by Rumania of a general amnesty with respect to all political acts and offenses committed since August 23, 1944, including the release of persons held for political reasons without specific charges against them.

(d) The United States would agree to recognize a Rumanian Government reorganized as set forth above and pledged to the holding of free elections.

Memorandum by the Soviet Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 19, 1945.

The Soviet Delegation considers it necessary that the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of Great Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union exchange opinions on the following problems of the policy of the Allies in relation to Germany:

- 1. Regarding German military units in the British zone of occupation.
- 2. Regarding the repatriation of Soviet citizens from the western zones of occupation of Germany.

3. Regarding reparations from the western zones of occupation of Germany.

4. Regarding the division of the German fleet.

5. Regarding the cancellation of the internal state debt of Germany.

In the attached memorandum the Soviet Delegation presents its views and proposals regarding the problems referred to herein.

CONCERNING GERMAN MILITARY UNITS IN THE BRITISH ZONE OF OCCUPATION OF GERMANY

The declaration on the defeat of Germany ⁷⁰ and the decisions of the Berlin Conference provided that all of the armed forces of Germany shall be completely and finally disarmed and abolished, in order to prevent forever the revival or reorganization of German imperialism and Nazism.

The Soviet command in Germany has information to the effect that in the British zone of occupation in Germany there exist powerful German military units and their staffs, and also armed forces of other states which waged war against the United Nations on the side of Germany. Detailed information regarding these military units was set forth in the memorandum which the Soviet command presented for the examination of the Control Council. In as much as the existence in the British zone of occupation of powerful German military units and their staffs contradicts the declaration on the defeat of Germany and the decisions of the Berlin Conference, the Soviet Government considers it necessary that appropriate instructions be given to the British Commander-in-Chief for the prompt disarmament and abolition of all German armed forces.

To Declaration Regarding the Defeat of Germany and the Assumption of Supreme Authority with Respect to Germany by the Government of the United Kingdom, the United States, the Soviet Union and France, June 5, 1945; for text, see Department of State Bulletin, June 10, 1945, p. 1051.

CONCERNING THE REPATRIATION OF SOVIET CITIZENS FROM THE WESTERN ZONES OF GERMANY AND FROM OTHER STATES

Soviet citizens subject to repatriation to the U.S.S.R. are up to the present time being detained in the British and American zones of occupation of Germany. According to the information of the Soviet organs of repatriation, in the above zones of occupation there are about 200,000 Soviet citizens subject to repatriation, including Soviet citizens from among the inhabitants of the Latvian S.S.R., the Lithuanian S.S.R., the Estonian S.S.R., the Western Ukraine, and Western Belorussia.

The Soviet Government has repeatedly drawn the attention of the Governments of the United States and Great Britain to the inadmissibility of delaying the repatriation of these citizens, all the more so because such delay arouses great concern in broad public circles of the U.S.S.R.

In view of the foregoing, the Soviet Government once again insists that instructions be given by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain without delay to the commanders of their occupation forces in Germany and Austria, and also to the British and American authorities in other countries where there are camps for Soviet citizens, for the turning over of the above Soviet citizens to the Soviet organs of repatriation within the shortest possible period. Soviet officers for repatriation must without delay be granted access to the camps for Soviet citizens with the purpose of fulfilling the tasks connected with sending these citizens back to the homeland.

CONCERNING REPARATIONS FROM THE WESTERN ZONES OF GERMANY

The Berlin Conference of three powers on August 2 of this year decided that "the amount of equipment to be removed from the western zones on account of reparations must be determined within six months from now at the latest"."

The period provided for by the Berlin Conference for the fulfillment of this task expires on February 2, 1946. In the meantime, the state of affairs in the preparation of this problem up to the present time arouses serious apprehension that this work will not be carried out on time.

Advance deliveries to the Soviet Union on reparations account from the western zone have still not begun and the first confirmed list of equipment subject to transfer to the Soviet Union is very limited. Thus far the problem of evaluation of equipment subject to removal from the western zone has not been regulated.

In view of this unsatisfactory fulfillment of the decision of the Berlin Conference regarding the problem of reparations from Germany, the Soviet Government considers it necessary that all the preliminary work in determining the amount of equipment subject to removal from the western zone of Germany be accelerated and be completed by February 2, 1946.

TV

CONCERNING THE DIVISION OF THE GERMAN FLEET

On the basis of the decision of the Berlin Conference,⁷² the three governments agreed in principle regarding measures for the utilization and disposition of the surrendered German naval and commercial vessels.

The Soviet Government considers it absolutely incorrect that the vessels of the German fishing, port, technical, and river fleets have not been turned over for division among the three Allied powers, thus constituting a violation of the Berlin Conference. Taking into consideration the foregoing, the Soviet Government considers it necessary to instruct the Tripartite Naval Commission on the division of the German fleet to draft a detailed plan of division for the above categories of vessels also, with the exception of such vessels of these categories as shall be determined by the Allied Control Council in Germany to be necessary for the maintenance of the bases of the peace-time economy of Germany.

V

CONCERNING THE CANCELLATION OF THE INTERNAL STATE DEBT OF GERMANY

The enormous internal state debt of Germany is the result of the financing of the preparation and waging of aggressive war by Germany. Taking into consideration the military character of the debt, and also taking into account the possible deterioration of the economic situation of the broad popular masses of Germany in the event that payments are made on the internal state debt, the Soviet Government considers it expedient to cancel the internal state debt of Germany.

450. In accordance with my promise to Ambassador Bonnet,74 please seek an immediate interview with Bidault and inform him that I am hopeful of reaching agreement with the British and Soviet Foreign Ministers on a formula for the resumption of the work on the preparation of peace treaties with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland. That formula, which closely follows the one I submitted in the final days of the Council of Foreign Ministers meeting at London, provides for the convocation of a peace conference as outlined therein and for full hearing and discussion by all the invited states on all five treaties and for consideration of their recommendations by States signatory to the terms of the respective armistices. The formula and list of states to be invited follow in my next succeeding telegram.75

Please emphasize to Bidault that the formula is being given him in strict confidence until officially made public.

You may add that I have constantly borne in mind the important interest of France in all five treaties. Please acknowledge receipt.76 for him on one point. Molotov's proposal, together with your counter proposal, appeared to provide that the terms of the treaties would be prepared by the Foreign Ministers Council under Molotov's 4-3-2 London formula; that a peace conference composed as you outlined it would be convened to discuss the treaties; that after the conclusion of the conference the states signatory to the armistice terms plus France in the case of Italy would draft the final treaties; and that the final texts would be signed by the countries represented at the peace conference. The point which interested the President was whether the states signatory to the armistice terms plus France in the case of Italy would in drafting the final texts be bound by the conclusions of the peace conference or whether the conclusions of the peace conference would be purely advisory and could be disregarded by the drafters of the final treaties. The President was inclined toward the former view as the correct one. However, his inquiry was directed toward obtaining your understanding of the matter and not toward expressing any final opinion.

Memorandum by the United Kingdom Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers 19

Moscow, December 20, 1945.

PERSTA

If the Soviet Government agree to the appointment of a Commission of the Three Powers to advise the Persian Government on the introduction of provincial government according to the Persian Constitution, the following points might serve as the essential nucleus of the terms of reference.

- 1. The Commission to keep in mind the undertaking given by Great Britain and Soviet Russia in the Treaty of January, 1942, to respect the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Persia.
- 2. The recommendations of the Commission (which must receive the approval of the three Governments before being submitted to the Persian Government) to cover the whole of Persia, including Azerbaijan.
- 3. Existing laws amplifying the relevant provision of the Constitution to be taken as the point of departure, but the Commission to recommend any amendments which seem to be required, especially in regard to the elections to the local Councils, the powers and duties of the Councils, and the manner in which they are to be furnished with funds.

- 4. The Commission shall also make recommendations as to the use of the minority languages, such as Arabic, Turkish and Kurdish for educational and other purposes.
- 5. The Three Powers will request the Persian Government to pass into law and to put into execution the recommendations put forward by the Commission.
- 6. The first provincial elections shall be carried out under the supervision of the Commission.

(Note: These provisions are designed to bring the Azerbaijan question into proportion with the general problem of provincial reform. Unless this is done Azerbaijan will be on the one hand sufficiently independent to work hand in glove with Russia and on the other sufficiently "within the framework of the Persian State" to exercise a highly disturbing influence throughout the country. The Commission may of course find it necessary to recommend special concession for Azerbaijan and for Khuzistan, which is mainly an Arab province.)

1. GERMAN MILITARY UNITS IN THE BRITISH ZONE OF OCCUPATION IN GERMANY

The first of these dealt with German military units in the British zone of occupation in Germany.

Mr. Bevin said that he had before him the report of Field Marshal Montgomery on this subject which had been read at a recent meeting of the Control Council in Germany.84 He said one of the factors in the situation was that in England there were a large number of Italian prisoners who were to be returned to Italy and they would be replaced by German prisoners from Germany. It was not desired to consider them as prisoners of war when they were sent to England since in that case the Geneva Convention would require certain norms as to rations which would cause trouble in England. He said the units in Germany which had not been dispersed were being held in order to send them to England to replace the Italians as soon as the latter could be moved. There were something over 100,000 Italians to be moved as soon as shipping could be made available. Mr. Bevin continued that there were certain Germans in England who were regarded as harmless Germans as distinct from ardent Nazis and it was likewise proposed to send the harmless ones back to Germany and replace them with others. Mr. Bevin said that he felt Field Marshal Montgomery's report made it clear that there were no armed German units in the British zone and that he really hoped that the Soviet suspicions on this point had been removed. He said he felt we should always keep each other informed in order to avoid such suspicions in the future.

Mr. Molorov said that on the basis of information received, Marshal Zhukov had raised this question a month and a half ago in the Control Council but that no clear answer had been received. He said it was a question causing great concern to the Soviet Union. He had heard from Mr. Bevin the first time the problem relating to replacement of Italian prisoners by Germans. He pointed out that the Soviet request was not a new demand but merely called for the carrying out of the Berlin and surrender agreements concerning disarming of Germans.

⁸⁴ Field Marshal Sir Bernard Montgomery, Military Governor of the British Zone of Occupation in Germany, presented a report on the presence of German armed units in the British zone in the course of the 13th meeting of the Allied Control Council for Germany, November 30, 1945; for the report of the transactions of that meeting, see telegram 1154, December 1, from Berlin, vol. 111, p. 854.

ss At the 12th meeting of the Allied Control Council for Germany, Marshal of the Soviet Union Georgy Konstantinovich Zhukov, Chief of the Soviet Military Administration in Germany, circulated a note to the other Council members in which he protested against the alleged continued existence of German military units in the British zone of occupation; for a report on the events of the 12th Council meeting, see telegram 1066, November 21, from Berlin, ibid., p. 852.

He said it was a matter of great concern to the Soviet Union that eight months after the surrender there were still units of the German armed forces in being, together with their staffs. In addition according to their information there were units of other enemy states who had fought against the United Nations—Hungarian, Latvian, and Lithuanian. He said the Soviet Government could not and would not ignore this situation.

Mr. Bevin stated that he felt that the Soviet suspicion was unjustified and that in effect Mr. Molotov was impugning the honor of Field Marshal Montgomery who in his report denied the accuracy of the Soviet information. He said Field Marshal Montgomery had proposed sending a commission to all four zones in order to check up on the disarming of German military units.

Mr. Molorov said no one desired to impugn the honor of Field Marshal Montgomery, but the fact remained that Marshal Zhukov a month and a half ago had proposed that a commission investigate the truth of the information received by the Soviet representatives.

Mr. Bevin replied that Field Marshal Montgomery had accepted this proposal but suggested that the commission go to all four zones. He read from Montgomery's report figures which indicated that the Soviet figures as to undispersed Germans were greatly exaggerated, that, for example, instead of 1,000,000 in Schleswig-Holstein there were only 140,000 disarmed Germans. Furthermore, there were no headquarters groups anywhere in the British zone nor any armed tank detachments. The personnel of one panzer division were being held in concentration camps. He said it was ridiculous to assume that Great Britain which had fought two bloody wars against Germany for its national existence would have any ulterior desire to retain intact any German military units. He could not understand why it would not be reasonable to send a commission to all four zones as Field Marshal Montgomery had proposed on November 30. He said Great Britain was beginning to get the feeling that they were constantly being put in the dock by other nations and that the people of England were beginning to resent it.

Mr. Molorov replied that there were no grounds for any such impression and repeated that a month and a half ago Marshal Zhukov had raised the question frankly before the Control Council and had received no serious answer.

He said it was only a question of fact which the Soviet Union could not ignore. He repeated that there was no intention to question the honor of Field Marshal Montgomery. It was only a question of the carrying out of the surrender agreement and the Berlin decisions.

After further exchange on this subject it was finally agreed that a commission would be sent to all zones to check on the specific question of the manner in which the provisions relating to disarming and dispersal of German units were being carried out and that the Control Council should consider the desirability of further commissions to check on any complaints in regard to matters in the various zones. It was likewise agreed that France as a member of the Control Council should be informed of this decision and invited to join.

2. Repatriation of Soviet Citizens From the Western Zones of GERMANY

The meeting then considered the next question on the Soviet list, namely, the repatriation of Soviet citizens from the western zones of Germany.

THE SECRETARY said in this connection that before he left Washington after much discussion a new directive on this subject to Generals McNarnev 86 and Clark had been agreed upon and he assumed although he had not checked it that it had been sent.87 He gave a copy of this new directive to Mr. Molotov and Mr. Bevin. He said he hoped that this new directive would satisfy the Soviet complaints set forth in their memorandum.

Mr. Molotov said that according to their information there were 200,000 Soviet citizens still held in the western zones of occupation and that Soviet officers were not allowed access to them.

THE SECRETARY replied that according to our information there were only 20,000 Soviet citizens in our zone.

Mr. Bevin read from a list giving the status of repatriation of Soviet citizens from various theaters. 32,042 had been repatriated from England; 917,000 from Germany; 63,000, from Austria, with only 1,500 remaining; 49,000, from Italy, with 674 remaining; 84,000 from Norway, etc.88 He said his chief difficulty was with the Polish military, particularly those who came from east of the Curzon Line who took the position that when they left they were Polish citizens and still considered themselves to be Poles.

Mr. Molotov said there was no difficulty between Poland and the Soviet Union on this question and he did not see why there should be with Great Britain and America and that he felt this was a matter for 87 For text of the directive regarding the repatriation of Soviet citizens, see memorandum by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee to the Secretary of State, December 21, vol. v, p. 1108.

ss In a memorandum communicated subsequently to Molotov and Byrnes, Bevin reviewed the repatriation of Soviet citizens from areas under British control in the following terms: United Kingdom, 32,044 repatriated, repatriation completed; Germany and Denmark, 917,000 repatriated, repatriation completed; Austria, 63,000 repatriated, 1,500 remaining to be repatriated (as of September); Italy, 40,994 repatriated, 674 remaining to be repatriated; Greece and Crete, 652 repatriated, repatriation completed; Norway, 84,000 repatriated, repatriation completed (740.00119 Council/1-2346).

Poland and the Soviet Union to decide and not for anyone else. He said the Soviet position was difficult since it was hard to explain why Soviet citizens were still not being returned to their homes and Soviet officials denied access to the camps where they were confined. If the positions were reversed and such conditions existed in the Soviet Union no one would understand it. This was particularly true when the only question was the return home of Soviet citizens.

The Secretary said that the United States only desired to clear this matter up and to get rid of these persons as soon as possible. He said as Mr. Molotov would see on the new directive, there were three categories of persons who would be returned by force if necessary, namely: (1) Soviet citizens in German uniform, (2) members of the armed forces, and (3) persons concerning whom there was evidence of treacherous activity against the Soviet Union. As to the other category of persons concerning whose citizenship there was doubt, Soviet officials were to be afforded full access to the camps where they were collected. He repeated that he hoped that the new directive would meet the Soviet desires in this matter.

3. Removables for Reparations

The next question on the list was that of the carrying out by the agreed date, namely, February 2, 1946, of the Berlin agreement concerning removables for reparations.

Mr. Molorov said that approximately five of the six months period had passed and the slowness of progress was causing great concern in the Soviet Union.

THE SECRETARY replied that according to his information agreement had been reached with the Soviet representatives in Berlin concerning the first installment of the advanced delivery.

Mr. Molotov said that this first installment represented a very small amount and that the principal thing was to complete the arrangements on time.

THE SECRETARY replied that according to his information even these advanced deliveries were more than could be transported on existing facilities.

Mr. Bevin said he felt the chief difficulty was that of determining how much production should be left for essential German peacetime needs.

Mr. Molotov agreed with Mr. Byrnes but said that the needs of Soviet industry were urgent since in many branches of industry such as fuel and metallurgy Soviet production was below pre-war level because of what had been destroyed during the war or by the Soviets themselves to keep it out of German hands; there was an insistent demand in the Soviet Union to speed up reconstruction and this was impossible unless German reparations were received in the near future. He inquired what answer he could give to the Soviet people on this point.

THE SECRETARY said that they might be told that already they were getting more German equipment than could be transported.

Mr. Molotov inquired whether it could be said that the Berlin Agreement could be carried out in time.

THE SECRETARY said he knew no reason why this should not be done and that he had several times impressed upon our representatives the need for speed and would continue to do so.

Mr. Bevin agreed and said he was doing likewise.

4. Division of the German Merchant Fleet

The next question was that of the division of the German merchant fleet.

Mr. Molorov said that they thought instructions should be issued to the Tri-partite Commission concerning the division of the German merchant fleet and that fishing boats and river shipping should be included among the categories to be divided.

THE SECRETARY read point 4 of the Berlin Agreement on this point which stated that river and coastal shipping should be divided only after a determined amount had been left for German needs. He said he had not studied this question as it was the first time he had heard of it.

After some discussion it was agreed that a report as to the status of the matter should be requested from our representatives on the Tri-partite Commission.

5. CANCELLATION OF THE GERMAN INTERNAL DERT

The next question on the Soviet list was the suggested cancellation of the German internal debt.

THE SECRETARY said he was not informed about this question and it was difficult to discuss it until we know more as to what was involved. He said attached to the Control Council we had financial experts and they should be asked to give their opinion on this suggestion. He said for example it would be necessary to know who would be affected by the proposed cancellation.

Mr. Molotov said he had in mind cancellation of the claims of those who had helped finance the German war effort.

Mr. Bevin said that many firms including foreign firms had all their assets seized by the German Government under compulsion and that it might not be fair to cancel off this indebtedness.

Mr. Molorov inquired whether the suggestion could not be accepted in principle.

Both The Secretary and Mr. Bevin, however, said this could not be accepted pending a full study of the factors involved in any such cancellation.

It was agreed to request the opinion of the Allied experts on this point.

6. German Assets in Austria

The Secretary then said that he had a whole series of questions that he could have raised at this meeting concerning the Control Councils in Austria and Germany, but he did not intend to raise many of them. There was one question, however, that he wished to take up. In Austria some difficulties had been encountered over the question as to the determination of what were German assets in the country and what were Austrian. He said according to our information the Soviet representative had said he had no instructions to discuss this question. Since only the people on the spot could discuss it, he said he hoped that the Soviet Government would authorize their representatives on the Allied Control Council in Austria to discuss with our representatives this matter of German assets.⁵⁹

Mr. Molotov said he would look into the matter.

7. RATIFICATION OF THE BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENT

THE SECRETARY said there was one other question that he wished to bring up, namely, the ratification of the Bretton Woods Agreement.⁹⁰ He said that under our law ratifying this agreement it was provided that if 65 percent of the signing nations had not ratified by December 31 a new law would be required by Congress.⁹¹ He said, therefore, he hoped that if the Soviet Government, which had signed the agreement, still favored it, it would be possible to have the Soviet ratification before the end of the year and inquired whether this was constitutionally possible in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Molotov said that it would be, but he would have to look into the matter and would let the Secretary know.

8. Korea

THE SECRETARY said that after examination of the Soviet proposals concerning Korea, he had found them acceptable to the United States Government with a few slight changes and he handed Mr. Molotov and Mr. Bevin a document embodying these changes (copy attached 92). He pointed out that the changes were of a minor character and one was of a purely drafting nature.

Mr. Molorov expressed his gratification and said that he would examine the changes.

9. FAR EASTERN COMMISSION AND ALLIED COUNCIL FOR JAPAN

The meeting then took up the question of the Far Eastern Commission and the Allied Council for Japan.

Mr. Molotov said that the Soviet Government was prepared to accept the inclusion of India in the Far Eastern Commission in _ deference to Mr. Bevin's wishes. He proposed that the document which was now agreed in substance be sent to the drafting committee.93

This was agreed.

In regard to the Allied Council Mr. Molotov said that they were prepared to drop the word "control" from their suggestion.94

Mr. Bevin said that since Australia was not acceptable as an additional member, he proposed a change in the paragraph related to the composition of the Council. Instead of "a member of the British Commonwealth" it should be stated that a member representing Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, and India should be substituted.

This was accepted by The Secretary and Mr. Molotov.

Mr. Molorov then said he thought it would be better to drop the words "exigencies of the situation permitting" from paragraph 4.

THE SECRETARY explained that this was only in case of extreme necessity when the Supreme Commander would not physically be able to consult first with his colleagues on the Council, but that obviously he intended to do so whenever it was physically possible.

Mr. Molorov said that it went without saying that if the Supreme Commander could act in cases of urgency then, therefore, it was unnecessary to say so.

Mr. Byrnes replied, however, that he thought it would be easier for the Supreme Commander if the provision was left in and relieve him of any possibility of a charge of violating the agreement.

Mr. Molorov said in that case he would withdraw his suggestion____ and the phrase could remain.

²⁴ The proposal of the Soviet delegation for revisions of the original United States proposals regarding the Allied Council for Japan is included as enclosure 2a to the minutes of the Third Formal Session of the Conference, December 18, p. 661. For the revised version of the United States proposal on the Allied Council, see enclosure 3 to the minutes of the Fourth Formal Session, December 19, p. 679.

THE SECRETARY and MR. BEVIN accepted Mr. Molotov's amendment to the addition of the word "individual" before the words "members of the cabinet" in the paragraph relating to questions which should be dealt with by unanimous agreement.

10. REGIME OF THE ZUMB STRAITS AND THE GREATER AND LITTLE BELT STRAITS 95

Mr. Molorov said to turn to another subject Generalissimo Stalin had asked their present meeting to consider the situation in relation to the regime of the Zumb Straits and the Greater and Little Belt Straits (Kattegug [Kattegat]). He said Generalissimo Stalin and President Roosevelt had informal discussion on this matter and the Generalissimo felt that the Ministers should exchange views on this subject. He said they would like to have information concerning the regime of these straits.

THE SECRETARY and Mr. Bevin both replied that they had no knowledge of any such regime in regard to these straits but would be prepared to discuss the situation after they had looked into it.

11. Allied Troops in Austria

THE SECRETARY then inquired whether Mr. Molotov had had time to consult his military advisers in regard to the reduction of Allied troops in Austria.

MR. Molorov said they were still considering that, but he had an additional paper on Austria which he would distribute (copy attached ⁹⁷).

12. Preparation of the Peace Treaties

The meeting then turned to the consideration of the final text of the agreement concerning preparation of peace treaties.

After considerable discussion it was agreed to merge the language of the Soviet and U.S. drafts concerning paragraph 1 of the agreement.

THE SECRETARY proposed that the conference be held in Paris and that the date be set not later than May 1, 1946. After some discussion this was accepted in principle.

There was prolonged discussion as to what states would have the right to sign the treaties when they had been finally drawn up by the states signatory to the armistice terms following the conference.

⁹⁵ The straits under consideration here are presumably the Great and Little Belts and the Sound (Oresund) linking the Baltic Sea and the Kattegat.

⁸⁰ President Roosevelt and Marshal Stalin discussed the question of free navigation in the approaches to the Baltic Sea in the course of a tripartite dinner meeting, November 28, 1943, at the Tehran Conference. See Conferences at Cairo and Tehran, pp. 510–511.

[&]quot;For text of the Soviet delegation's memorandum on German and other military units in Austria, see enclosure 3 to these minutes, p. 721.

It was finally agreed that: (1) In addition to the signatories to the armistice that all countries invited to the conference who were legally at war with any given enemy state should sign that treaty at the same time; (2) that other states legally at war with a given enemy state but not invited to the conference should be invited to adhere to the treaty at a later date; and (3) that the treaties enter into force upon their ratification by the countries signatory to the armistice terms. (Under the Berlin Agreement, France is regarded as a signatory to the Italian armistice.⁹⁸)

The agreement regarding the preparation of peace treaties was referred to the drafting committee to be put into final form.

In regard to informing France and China of this decision Mr. Molorov inquired whether they should not be just simply informed.

Mr. Bevin stated he thought more than that was required and that they should be asked to agree.

MR. BYRNES concurred in Mr. Bevin's view that something more than mere information was required to these two countries but added that it should be presented in such manner as not to allow the whole agreement between the three Governments to be held up in the event of objection on the part of France or China.

It was agreed that France and China were to be informed and invited to agree to this decision by the Chairman, Mr. Byrnes.

Memorandum by the Soviet Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 21, 1945.

CONCERNING AMERICAN ARMED FORCES IN CHINA

Up to the present time on the territory of China, according to information at the disposal of the Soviet Government, there are up to 500,000 non-disarmed Japanese troops with officer corps and staffs. This appears to be a violation of the terms of surrender approved by the Allied Powers.

In President Truman's Declaration of December 15, 1945 on American policy with respect to China and in the memorandum of the Secretary of State, Mr. Byrnes, of December 16, 1945, it is stated that American troops and marines are in China.⁹⁹ Along with this it is stated that American armed forces, brought to China for the pur-marines in China is included as enclosure 5 to the minutes of the First Formal Session of the Conference, December 16, p. 628.

⁸⁶ According to the account in Byrnes, Speaking Frankly, p. 114, Molotov informed Byrnes of the Soviet agreement to the proposed list of states to be invited to the peace conference following a telephone conversation with Stalin.
⁸⁰ The memorandum by the United States delegation regarding American pose of disarming the Japanese troops, will remain there in order fully to eliminate Japanese influence and to bring about the stabilization of the internal situation in China. But the dates of disarmament of the Japanese troops and the evacuation from China of the armed forces of the USA are not indicated. At the same time, it is known that Japanese troops are being drawn into north China to participate in military operations on the side of the troops of the Chinese Government against non-government Chinese troops, and thus Japanese forces are being drawn into the struggle between different portions of the Chinese people.

The Soviet Government adheres to a policy of non-interference in the internal affairs of China. It believes that the interference of foreign troops in the internal affairs of China is leading to an aggravation of the internal-political struggle and complicates the situation in China. Since this is a question of Japanese troops in a zone where the disarming of these troops, according to General MacArthur's order no. 1, approved by the four powers, should be carried out by the troops of the Chinese Government, it is necessary that the Chinese Government urgently take appropriate measures. The task of disarming the Japanese troops in this zone should not be assigned to any other foreign troops.

Supporting the policy of non-interference in the internal affairs of China, the Soviet Government rigidly limits the tasks and time of the presence of Soviet forces in Manchuria to the framework of the agreement which it has with China in regard to Manchuria. In accordance with this agreement Soviet troops in due time disarmed all the Japanese troops in Manchuria and evacuated them as war prisoners to Soviet territory, and in the month of November the evacuation of Soviet troops from Manchuria in accordance with the plan communicated to the Chinese Government was begun. Soviet troops had already been evacuated from southern Manchuria when the Chinese Government requested the Soviet Government to postpone for one month the evacuation of Soviet troops from Manchuria. The Soviet Government agreed to this, and halted the evacuation of the Soviet troops which had begun.

Since the United States of America also has its troops in China, the Soviet Government believes that it would be right for the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to arrive at an understanding between themselves on the simultaneous evacuation of their troops from China, this to be completed in any event no later than the middle of January 1946. As regards the internal problems of China, the Soviet Government believes that these tasks should be decided by the Chinese people itself and its Government without interference from other states.

Korea—Suggested Rephrasing of Russian Proposal of December 20, 1945 ¹

With reference to the final sentence of paragraph 2, it is suggested that the sentence be rephrased to specify that the recommendations worked out by the Commission shall be presented for the consideration of the four interested Governments. Final decision would, of course, rest with the Governments represented on the Joint Commission but it is believed desirable that the other two Governments, the United Kingdom and China, who also have a very large interest in the development of an independent Korea be given an opportunity to consider proposals for a government. The sentence might then read:

"The recommendations worked out by the Committee shall be presented for the consideration of the Governments of the U.S.S.R., China, the U.K. and the U.S.A. prior to final decision by the two Governments represented on the Joint Commission."

In the second paragraph of numbered paragraph 3 it is suggested that the first sentence in that paragraph be altered to read:

"The proposals of the Joint Commission shall be submitted, following consultation with the provisional Korean government for the joint consideration of the U.S.A., U.S.S.R., Great Britain and China for the working out of an agreement concerning a four-power trusteeship of Korea for a period of up to five years."

ON GERMAN AND OTHER MILITARY UNITS IN AUSTRIA

The agreement on the Control mechanism in Austria² provides that one of the major tasks of the Allied Commission shall be to assure ber 20, p. 699.

the fulfilment in Austria of the provisions of the declaration on the defeat of Germany.³ As is known, that Declaration states that all armed forces belonging to or under the control of Germany must be fully and completely disarmed and abolished. The abovementioned provisions are extended also to the Austrian army, since from 1938 on it was a part of the German armed forces and actively participated in the war on the side of Germany.

Facts have become known to the Soviet Government that German military units made up of Austrians exist in Austria and that attempts are being made to restore the Austrian army on the basis of them. The state military chancellery, under which a military administration similar in structure to the general staff has been created, has been restored without the knowledge of the Allies. Territorial military administrations are being formed in the provinces. In accordance with directives of the state military chancellery, the military administration in Styria has elaborated a plan of organizing an army, including armored units and air forces, numbering 40,000 men. Measures are being taken to supply this army with military property and ammunition.

There is also information on the formation of Austrian military units in the British zone of occupation. Thus, for example, the British command has formed an "Austrian" brigade under the command of Lieutenant General Aldrian out of the 68th and 69th army corps and the "Noldechen" corps group of the former German army. At the present time this brigade contains 12 infantry regiments each headed by an officer of the former German army with ranks from major to colonel. According to instructions of the British command. all call-up points for Austrians previously organized by the German command have been restored in the British zone of occupation in Austria. These call-up points make a strict inventory of all military servicemen. The chiefs of the call-up points are appointed by the British command and are maintained at its expense. All military units formed in the British zone of occupation of Austria from the former German army are fully subordinated to the British military command and are supplied with all types of rations. There are arms in the units mentioned.

Apart from Austrian military units, non-disarmed military units formed by the Germans from citizens of other states who took active part with the German army in the war against the United Nations are being maintained in the British zone of occupation in Austria. For example, a Russian white guard infantry corps of Colonel Rogozhin, numbering up to 15,000 men, is deployed in the area of Klagenfurt.

 $^{^3}$ For text of declaration, signed at Berlin June 5, 1945, see Department of State $\it Bulletin$, June 10, 1945, p. 1051.

This corps was formed by the Germans in 1941 and took active part in battles against Allied troops. The whole structure of the corps with all staffs and services has been preserved by the British command and arms have been retained. Another Russian white guard unit under the command of Colonel Geltlyar, numbering 7,500 men, is located in the region of Andersdorf.

The Soviet Government considers the above-mentioned facts a violation of the Declaration on the defeat of Germany and the decisions of the Berlin Conference on the disarmament and abolition of the armed forces of Germany and other military units under its control. The existence in Austria of remnants of the German army under the appearance of national Austrian units cannot be permitted in view of the danger of preserving the cadres of the German army.

The Soviet Government therefore considers it necessary that appropriate instructions on the part of the British and other Allied governments be urgently issued to the British and other commanders-inchief in Austria concerning the steadfast fulfilment of the agreement on the control mechanism in Austria, which provides for the disarming of the German army and of other military units under the control of the German command.

Memorandum Prepared by the Drafting Committee of the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers ⁴

[Moscow, December 21, 1945.]

PREPARATION OF PEACE TREATIES WITH ITALY, ROUMANIA, BULGARIA, HUNGARY AND FINLAND

1. In the drawing up by the Council of Foreign Ministers of treaties of peace with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland, only members of the Council who are, or under the terms of the Agreement establishing the Council of Foreign Ministers adopted at the Berlin Conference are deemed to be, signatory of the surrender terms, will participate, unless and until the Council takes further action under the Agreement to invite other members of the Council to participate on questions directly concerning them. That is to say:

⁴This draft was prepared by the Drafting Committee in pursuance of the decision of the Foreign Ministers at their informal meeting of December 21, 2:30 p. m.; see item 12 of the United States delegation minutes of that meeting, p. 710. This draft served as the basis of discussion for the Foreign Ministers at their informal meeting of December 22, noon; see the United States delegation minutes of that meeting, p. 727.

(A) The terms of the peace treaty with Italy will be drafted by the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States, the Soviet Union and France.

(B) The terms of the peace treaties with Roumania, Bulgaria and Hungary by the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union, the United States and the United Kingdom.

(C) The terms of the peace treaty with Finland by the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom.

The Deputies of the Foreign Ministers will immediately resume their work in London [on the basis of the decisions agreed at the first plenary conference of the Council of Foreign Ministers].

(Words in square brackets not agreed by Soviet member of drafting committee, referred to the three Foreign Ministers for decision.)

2. When the preparation of all these drafts has been completed, the Council of Foreign Ministers will convoke a conference for the purpose of considering treaties of peace with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland. The conference will consist of the five members of the Council of Foreign Ministers together with all members of the United Nations which actively waged war with substantial military force against European enemy States, namely:

Union of Soviet Socialist Czechoslovakia. Republics. Ethiopia. United Kingdom. Greece. United States of America. India. Netherlands. China. New Zealand. France. Australia. Norway. Belgium. Poland. Belorussian Soviet Socialist Union of South Africa. Republic. Yugoslavia. Brazil. Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Canada. Republic.

The conference will be held in Paris not later than the 1st May, 1946.

- 3. After the conclusion of the deliberations of the conference and upon consideration of its recommendations the States signatory to the terms of armistice with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland or regarded as such (France, for the purpose of peace treaty with Italy) will draw up final texts of peace treaties.
- 4. The final texts of the respective peace treaties as so drawn up will be signed on behalf of the States represented at the conference, which are at war with the enemy States in question. The texts of the respective peace treaties will then be sent to the other United Nations which are at war with the enemy States in question.
- 5. The peace treaties will come into force immediately after they have been ratified by the Allied States signatory to the respective armistices, France being regarded as such in the case of Italy. These treaties are subject to ratification by the enemy's States in question.

4253. Delsec 19. Reurtel 2602, December 20, 9 p. m. (Secdel 27). Under proposal after consideration of recommendations of conference final approval of text would be by signatories to armistice terms in each case but all members of conference at war with a state would be invited to sign. While signatories to the armistices would not be bound by the recommendations of the conference we could if we thought it proper, refuse to give final approval to any treaty which unwarrantably disregarded recommendations.

If agreed to the proposal must be sent to France and China and therefore must be confidential.

The Secretary of State to the Chargé in China (Robertson) ⁵

Moscow, December 22, 1945—2 a. m.

248. See Foreign Minister Wang at once and inform him as follows: Agreement has been reached with Molotov and Bevin in regard to terms of reference for the Far Eastern Commission and the Allied Council for Japan. Modifications from drafts handed the Chinese Embassy in Washington at end of last month 6 have been agreed upon and are as follows:

FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

Article II-A paragraph 3 add after governments "in accordance with the voting procedure provided for in Article V-2 hereunder."

Article II-C substitute the following: "C. The Commission in its activities will proceed from the fact that there has been formed an Allied Council and will respect existing control machinery in Japan, including the chain of command from the United States Government

⁵ The text of this telegram was also transmitted to the Chinese Ambassador in Moscow, under cover of a letter from Ambassador Harriman dated December 22. 1945.

^{22, 1945.}The text of the tentative terms of reference of the Far Eastern Commission as of the end of November were set forth in telegram 2434, December 1, to Moscow, printed in vol. vi, section entitled "Surrender of Japan . . .", Part II.

to the Supreme Commander and the Supreme Commander's command of occupation forces."

Article III: substitute for paragraphs 3 and 4 the following inclusive paragraph 3:

"The United States Government may issue interim directives to the Supreme Commander pending action by the Commission whenever urgent matters arise not covered by policies already formulated by the Commission; provided that any directives dealing with fundamental changes in the Japanese constitutional structure or in the regime of control, or dealing with a change in the Japanese Government as a whole will be issued only following consultation and following the attainment of agreement in the Far Eastern Commission."

ALLIED COUNCIL

Paragraph 2 altered to read after "Chinese member;"—"and a member representing jointly the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and India." Paragraph 4 altered to read as follows:

"4. The Supreme Commander shall issue all orders for the implementation of the Terms of Surrender, occupation, and control of Japan, and directives supplementary thereto. In all cases action will be carried out under and through the Supreme Commander who is the sole executive authority for the Allied Powers within the area of his command. He will consult and advise with the Council in advance of the issuance of orders on matters of substance, the exigencies of the situation permitting. His decisions upon these matters shall be controlling.

If, regarding the implementation of policy decisions of the Far Eastern Commission on questions concerning a change in the regime of control, changes in the constitutional structure, and changes in the Japanese Government as a whole, a member of the Council disagrees with the Supreme Commander (or his Deputy) the Supreme Commander will withhold the issuance of orders on these questions pending agreement thereon in the Far Eastern Commission.

In cases of necessity the Supreme Commander may take decisions concerning the change of individual ministers of the Japanese Government, or concerning the filling of vacancies created by the resignation of individual members of the cabinet, after appropriate preliminary consultation with representatives of the other Allied Powers on the Allied Council,"

Paragraph 5 deleted.

These modifications do not affect China's participation and are agreeable to Molotov and Bevin. The Soviet Government is now prepared to join the Far Eastern Commission and the establishment of an Allied Council is made possible. Please endeavor urgently to ob-

United States Delegation Minutes of an Informal Meeting, Conference of Foreign Ministers, the Kremlin, Moscow, December 22, 1945, noon

Present: 8

The Secretary
Mr. Cohen
Ambassador Harriman
Mr. Bohlen

Mr. Molotov Mr. Vishinsky Ambassador Gusev Mr. Pavlov

Mr. Bevin Sir Alexander Cadogan Sir A. Clark Kerr Mr. Dixon Mr. Rumboldt

Subject: 1. Preparation of Peace Treaties

2. The Balkans

The Secretary said that the final agreement on the preparation of peace treaties had been agreed to except for one sentence which was in brackets in the paper relating to the preparation of the renewal of the Deputies' work. He said he thought it would be wise to leave that phrase in so that there would be no doubt that the Deputies start on the basis of agreements reached at the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Molorov replied that that went without saying and it was not necessary, and in any case they would instruct their Deputies to that effect.

THE SECRETARY urged, however, that in order to avoid any misunderstanding in the minds of our Deputies the sentence be left in.

Mr. Molorov said he would consider it.

Mr. VISHINSKY then proposed that in paragraph 4 it was necessary to indicate the purpose for which the treaties would be sent to other United Nations. He suggested the addition of the words "for their adherence". This was accepted by Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin.

⁷ Telegram 14, December 22, 8 p. m., from Chungking to Moscow, reported that Foreign Minister Wang was in Nanking with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek (Moscow Embassy Files: 500 Conference of Foreign Ministers). Telegram 15, December 23, 2 a. m., from Chungking to Moscow, reported that the Secretary's message had been delivered to Chinese Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs Liu Chieh, who expressed the concurrence of the Chinese Government in the proposed revisions (Moscow Embassy Files: 500 Conference of Foreign Ministers/710-China).

⁸ According to the United Kingdom delegation minutes of this meeting, Ambassador Malik was also present with the Soviet delegation and Mr. McAfee was also present with the United Kingdom delegation.

⁹ For text of the draft agreement on the preparation of the peace treaties, as prepared by the Drafting Committee on December 21, see p. 723.

Mr. Molorov then said that the Soviet Delegation accepts the American amendments to the Soviet proposals on Korea.¹⁰ The document was referred to the drafting committee for a final text.

The Secretary then proposed the discussion of the American proposals in regard to Roumania and Bulgaria.¹¹

Mr. Molotov said that he must state that the United States proposals were not acceptable to the Soviet Government. There had recently been general elections in Bulgaria and the population had participated to an unusual degree.¹² The parliament had been elected by secret ballot and, although the opposition was not satisfied, this was true of oppositions in all countries.

After comment by Mr. Bevin that this was not so in England and following an exchange of pleasantries, Mr. Molotov continued that future interference would be greatly resented by the Bulgarian people after the elections, and it was for this reason that the Soviet Delegation could not accept the American proposal.

The Secretary replied that we were connected with these problems through our participation in the Yalta Declaration signed by President Roosevelt and Marshal Stalin and Prime Minister Churchill in which the three countries pledged themselves to act together to assure representative temporary governments and free unfettered elections. He said that the existing governments could not be recognized by the United States although we had made a sincere effort in sending a special representative to these countries to find some way out of our difficulty. He said, since our proposals were not acceptable, that he appealed to Mr. Molotov to make some of his own. We had just accepted the Soviet proposals on Korea and he hoped very much that Mr. Molotov would give some help in finding a solution to our difficulties in regard to Bulgaria and Rumania.

Mr. Molorov replied that the Yalta Declaration did not oblige the three governments to interfere in every case in the internal affairs of other countries but only when the interests of peace were involved and the furtherance of democratic processes. In Bulgaria these democratic conditions had been met and if the opposition was dissatisfied, that was true everywhere. He added that if the United States and British representatives in Bulgaria had not encouraged the opposition, the situation would have settled down. He said these representatives had protected members of the opposition and had thus encouraged them and worsened the situation. In Rumania the King had caused difficulties for himself and his country but this would not have happened had it not been for encouragement by foreign representatives. The difficulty between the government and King had resulted, according to the King himself, from a request by the United States and British representatives connected with the attitude of those countries. The result had been to delay the elections. Events would have taken their natural course in Rumania had it not been for interference from without. These events could, in the long run, only cause additional difficulty for the King. General elections would show what political figures enjoyed the support of the people. He said the Soviet army was not only in Rumania and Bulgaria but also in other countries such as Hungary and Austria, and their presence had not prevented free elections. In a number of countries, these and Finland, elections had been held, giving this result. The Soviet army had not and would not interfere in the internal affairs of any country. He said we should adopt the same principle in regard to Bulgaria and Rumania since it was fully in accord with the Yalta Declaration.

THE SECRETARY replied that they had several times discussed the point that there was no agreement between us as to the facts of the case. For example, after rechecking he was able to say that at no time had our representative ever advised the King to take his action and the King himself had confirmed this.

Mr. Bevin remarked that the same went for the British representative.

THE SECRETARY continued that as we both knew the other's position, there was no purpose in reviewing conditions in these countries or in discussing Mr. Ethridge's report which he had given to Mr. Molotov.¹⁴

Mr. Molorov inquired why Mr. Ethridge had not gone to Greece where the situation was worse but only to Bulgaria and Rumania.

THE SECRETARY said that he had explained this to Mr. Molotov in London, that he had sent Mr. Ethridge to Bulgaria and Rumania because he would be an independent and unprejudiced person who had no connection with events in those countries. He said that in regard to Greece he had already told Mr. Molotov that in response to an appeal from the Greek Government on behalf of the Yalta Declaration the United States had designated Mr. Grady, a former member of the Department of State, to go to Greece and observe the elections. He would have with him a group of Americans including several college presidents. He added that he understood that the Soviet Government had been requested also to send observers but had not accepted this invitation. He said he had not sent Mr. Ethridge to Bulgaria and Rumania to criticize the governments there but to examine means of getting out of our difficulties so that we could carry out our obligations under the Yalta Declaration and proceed thereafter to help out in what we understood was a bad economic situation.

Mr. Molorov said that Soviet troops for the most part carried their own supplies with them.

THE SECRETARY inquired how many troops the Soviets had in these countries.

Mr. Molotov said he could not answer from memory but he believed Marshal Stalin had given that information at Potsdam.

THE SECRETARY repeated his request that Mr. Molotov make some suggestion for a solution of these problems.

Mr. Molorov stated that we should not create difficulties where circumstances did not justify them. In Bulgaria following the elections a new government would be appointed which the United States and Great Britain could recognize even if they would not be satisfied with the whole government. He said this new government would be approved by a parliament elected on the basis of general elections and secret ballot, and so far as the Soviet Government was concerned he felt that the selection of the government was a matter for the Bulgarian parliament to decide. In Rumania our common task is to facilitate the holding of elections so that a new parliament might be elected, and advice might be given to the King and Rumanian Government to set about preparations for these elections. In regard to Greece he must again mention that although the situation was worse there from the point of view of democracy, the attitude of America, to say nothing of England, was quite different toward Greece. Not only the Soviet Union but other democratic elements in other countries were also dissatisfied with the situation in Greece. In Greece there were constant governmental crises and disturbances: vet the United States had recognized the Greek Government. went on to say that Mr. Ethridge's reports merely repeated the position of the Department of State which indicated that he was aware of this position. In fact Mr. Ethridge could have written his report without taking his trip.

¹⁵ On October 20, 1945, Henry F. Grady was appointed personal representative of President Truman to head the United States mission to observe the forthcoming Greek elections; Grady arrived in Greece on November 27.

Mr. Byrnes replied that on the contrary in his opinion Mr. Ethridge's report merely confirmed the fact that our representatives there had been reporting correctly and without any prejudice. In regard to Greece he said that the question of recognition had not arisen since we had always recognized the Government of Greece throughout the war which was an Allied government. Nevertheless Mr. Grady was being sent to observe the elections, and if the Government of Rumania would request similar observers from the United States, we would be only too glad to do so.

Mr. Bevin said that Great Britain was for a settlement of the problems connected with Bulgaria and Rumania and only wished to see elections in Greece held as soon as possible. He repeated that there was no evidence to justify the charge that the British representatives had interfered in or even advised Bulgaria and Rumania. They had only the control commissions to work through but this had sometimes been difficult. He inquired whether the three governments could not combine on some machinery in regard to elections in Rumania.

Mr. Molorov replied that there had been a misunderstanding. He had not meant any outside supervision of elections but merely that we should not help the King delay the elections.

Mr. Bevin replied that he felt that if we were to advise the King not to hold up the elections, under the Yalta Agreement we would have some responsibility as to the conditions and character of that election. No one, he said, wishes to delay the elections but merely to see that they were fair. The Balkan States had always been a headache and he recalled that in his youth he remembered Mr. Gladstone's speeches on the Balkans. He said we have this advantage: there were no elections yet in Rumania.

Mr. Molotov replied that in his view this was a disadvantage. then cited the Yalta Agreement concerning the right of sovereign states to settle their own internal affairs as set forth in the Atlantic He felt that all three governments should support this prin-He repeated that the United States adopted a different attitude toward Greece than it did toward Bulgaria and Rumania although the situation was infinitely worse in the former country. He read a press report taken from the New York Times concerning the orderly fashion in which the elections in Bulgaria had taken place. He said no one could deny the fact that there was wider participation in these elections than in any other in the history of Bulgaria. said order reigns in that country, which was likewise carrying out faithfully its obligations to the Allies. The Soviet Government could not in any circumstances agree to a cancelation of these elections when the holding of new elections was not necessary. Such action would be contrary to the Yalta Declaration. He repeated that the Bulgarian parliament would confirm a new government shortly and this should make it possible for the United States and Great Britain to establish relations with that government. It would be a government approved by their own parliament and not imposed by foreign pressure. The Soviet Government would consider no proposal which would not accept the result of the elections in Bulgaria. He said in Rumania no general elections had been held and that since our three governments were interested in having such elections a time might be fixed, perhaps next summer, and appropriate advice given to the King and the government to proceed with the preparation of an electoral law.

MR. Byrnes repeated that the problem of recognition had not arisen since we had always had relations with the Greek Government and the King had merely transferred his power to a regent. He said in regard to Rumania, would it not be possible to suggest a reformation in the Rumanian Government whereby the Ministry of Internal Affairs would not be in the hands of one party? This would give greater assurance that the elections would be free and unfettered. He said that, according to our information, the National-Peasant Party and the Liberal Party were not represented in the government although these parties had vigorously opposed pro-fascist policies of former King Carol. He said he felt these parties should be given representation and some arrangement made for the Ministries of Interior and Justice to be in the hands of several parties and not just one since these ministries would control the election.

Mr. Molotov observed that elections had been held in Hungary and Austria with no changes in the Ministry of the Interior and no control by foreign states.¹⁶ He said in these countries the Soviet Government had equally great influence as in the Balkan countries. These elections had permitted the people to express their views freely, as the results of the elections testified. He felt it was a mistake for the three governments to interfere in the internal affairs of another country or to attempt to exercise control over elections, which would be contrary to the Yalta Declaration. It was for these reasons that the Soviet Government had refused to participate in the control over the Greek elections although conditions there were unsatisfactory to the Soviet Union as they were to other democratic-minded countries. The only thing to do in Greece was for the agreement which was accepted by the British and Greek Governments to be carried out without interference from outside. The Soviet Government felt that the Greeks themselves should decide their own internal affairs.

¹⁶ Regarding the Hungarian national election of November 4, 1945, see telegram 886, November 9, from Budapest, vol. IV, p. 904. Regarding the Austrian election of November 25, see telegram 498, November 27, from Vienna, vol. III, p. 664.

Mr. Molotov continued that in regard to Bulgaria, elements of the opposition had not wished to take part in the elections although they could have, and therefore if the three powers were now to insist upon the inclusion of these opposition elements in the government, it would be a violation of the Yalta decision. The Soviet Government felt strongly that the Bulgarian parliament alone should decide the composition of the Bulgarian Government and not have a government imposed upon them from without. In any event the Soviet Government would never be a party to such action.

In the case of Rumania there had been no elections. Our three governments desired to see these elections take place and could reach an agreement on the time, perhaps next summer, and advise the King and government to undertake immediately the drawing up of an electoral law. He also thought that if Rumania would not object—and it would be necessary to ask her opinion—the three governments could advise the Rumanian Government to broaden itself by the inclusion of one or two Ministers without Portfolio to be named from non-party statesmen, on the condition that the three governments would agree not to delay the conclusion of a treaty of peace with Rumania. This suggestion could be considered provided Rumania had no objection.

THE SECRETARY remarked that it would be wise also to ask for the inclusion of representatives of the National-Peasant and Liberal parties.

Mr. Molotov replied that they were already included.

Mr. Vyshinski explained that there were a number of posts in the government held by representatives of these parties.

Mr. Molotov said that Tatarescu was the leader of the Liberal Party since he had received a majority over Bratianu in the last party congress.¹⁷

Mr. Vyshinski added that Antontinescu [Constantinescu-Iasi] was Minister of Propaganda and Ralli [Ralea] was Minister of the Fine Arts, and others were in the government. He remarked that there were six or ten leaders of the National-Peasant Party none of whom recognized the other.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether it was not true that Tatarescu had been accused of collaborating with the Germans.

Mr. Molotov and Mr. Vyshinski said this was not true because he ¹⁷ Gheorghe Tatarescu, Vice Premier of the Rumanian Government, was a leader of a group of dissident members of the Rumanian National Liberal Party. Dinu Bratianu was the long-time president of the National Liberal Party.

Dinu Bratianu was the long-time president of the National Liberal Party.

Saccording to despatch 158, March 15, 1945, from Bucharest, reporting on the formation of the Petru Groza government in Rumania, Professor Constantinescu-Iasi was a member of the Communist Party and Mikhail Ralea was a member of the Communist-oriented Plowmen's Front (871.00/3-1545).

had not been in the government. On the contrary he had been closely associated with Titulescu.¹⁹

THE SECRETARY remarked that according to our information they were not the real representatives of these parties but he would have to check on that with Mr. Matthews. He inquired whether it would not be possible to do something about the Ministries of Interior and Justice so that other parties would have a voice in the control of the elections and not leave this control to representatives of one party.

Mr. Molorov said the Soviet Government could not agree to that as it would be an unjustified interference in the internal affairs of Rumania.

THE SECRETARY replied that he felt that a suggestion for a commission of three to run these ministries would not, in his opinion, be resented by the King.

Mr. Molorov replied that it was not only a question of the King but of the people. The King's policies were undermining his authority and popularity with the people. He repeated that elections had taken place in a number of defeated countries without outside interference and without any violation of the Yalta Declaration. There were no grounds for believing that the elections in Rumania would be any different and would not correspond to the wishes of the people. He again repeated his suggestion that if Rumania agreed, it might be possible to suggest the inclusion of one or two Ministers without Portfolio but not to suggest specific Ministries as that would be unjustified interference.

The meeting then adjourned to reassemble in formal session at 5 o'clock the same afternoon.

1. China

Mr. Bevin opened the meeting at 5:10 p.m. He invited discussion on point 6 of the agenda (atomic energy).

Mr. Molorov inquired as to when the north China question would be discussed.

Mr. Byrnes said that he had not had an opportunity to study the Soviet paper presented this [yesterday?] morning 21 and requested that the subject be taken up at the next meeting. He would be glad to discuss China again.

Mr. Byrnes stated that the United States views on atomic energy had been set forth in proposals submitted a few days ago.²² He desired to hear the views of his associates on these proposals.

2. Zonal Investigation Committees

Mr. Molorov interrupted to state that following yesterday evening's discussion concerning the disbandment of the German armed forces he had received a telegram from Marshal Zhukov in the light of which the Soviet Delegation wished to withdraw the proposal to form a Joint Commission for investigation of this matter. The question of the German armed forces had been discussed in the Allied Control Council of December 20 at which time Field Marshal Montgomery had presented a plan for disbanding the German forces during January.²³ This matter had been satisfactorily settled in the Control Council. In view of this the Soviet Delegation did not wish to press for further discussion and proposed to give up the idea of sending a special commission to investigate the situation. He requested that note be made of his statement.

Mr. Bevin replied that yesterday evening's discussion had dealt not only with this concrete question but also with the general procedure of dealing with complaints which might arise regarding the situation in one zone or another. He had suggested that the Allied commanders should make arrangements to set up such commissions when complaints arose in order to avoid misunderstandings, especially in the press. Mr. Bevin thought it a good idea to appoint a Joint Commission to investigate any matters of this type. He wished to put this on the basis of a recommendation to the Allied Control Council, which would work out the details. In general, it would be a good thing for inter-relations if such matters were cleared up immediately in order to avoid differences.

Mr. Molorov stated that the Soviet Delegation would consider Mr. Bevin's proposal upon receiving it in writing.

Mr. Bevin stated that he would formulate what he understood had been agreed in the discussion yesterday evening. However, the question of forming a Joint Commission immediately to investigate the question of German armed forces would be dropped.

3. Atomic Energy

Mr. Molorov circulated a Soviet draft on the question of atomic energy (enclosure no. 1). He stated that the Soviet Delegation associated itself with the United States proposal regarding the establishment of the United Nations Commission on atomic energy. The Soviet Government also agreed that the five permanent members of the Security Council, together with Canada, should sponsor this proposal at the first session of the United Nations in January 1946. However, the Soviet Government suggested that a modification should be made in the proposals. The Soviet Government proposed that the Commission to be established should be subordinate to the Security Council. This would be in accordance with the United Nations Charter which assigned principal responsibility for the maintenance of world security upon the Security Council.

After a half hour recess, Mr. Byrnes expressed his pleasure at Mr. Molotov's apparent cooperation in this matter and said that he believed the Delegations would be able to get together upon it. He wished to study the Soviet paper tonight and proposed that a meeting be held tomorrow to discuss it. This was agreed to by the other Delegates.

4. Preparation of Peace Treaties

Proceeding to points outstanding with regard to the peace treaties question, Mr. Bevin inquired whether he was correct in assuming that the language of the last sentence in section 1 ("On the basis of decisions agreed at the first plenary conference of the Council of Foreign Ministers") was acceptable to all.²⁴

Mr. Byrnes said that it was acceptable to him.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Delegation assumed that the decisions of September 11 had no validity. This was agreed to.

Mr. Molotov raised the question of the addition to paragraph 4 made at the initiative of Mr. Vyshinski at the Kremlin meeting this morning. Mr. Molotov suggested that the language agreed upon yesterday in the drafting committee be restored and that this morning's addition be deleted.

Mr. Byrnes stated that in his view the sentence added this morning was a very wise one. Without that addition, there was no specification concerning the purpose for which the treaties were being sent to the governments involved.

Mr. Molorov stated that this should be left up to the governments themselves to decide. It went without saying that no pressure should be brought upon them. Their acceptance should be left to their own discretion.

Mr. Byrnes proposed that the words "for adherence at their option" should be employed.

Mr. Bevin proposed that the words "to provide them an opportunity to adhere" after the words "enemy states in question" would be satisfactory.

Mr. Molotov said that the more "flexible" language accepted by the drafting committee last night would be better.

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that the addition had been made by Mr. Vyshinski.

Mr. Bevin said that in his opinion Mr. Vyshinski had noticed a very important point this morning. Without the words "to provide an opportunity for them to adhere" the text looked very bad.

Mr. Molorov proposed to employ the words "for the purpose of informing them".

Mr. Bevin replied that if the peace treaties were sent merely for the information of the states which are at war with the enemy states in question, would they be expected on this basis to sign the treaties? If Mr. Bevin were to be questioned on this matter in the House of ²⁴ See the memorandum prepared by the Drafting Committee of the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers, December 21, p. 723.

Commons, was he to say: "For their information."? Mr. Vyshinski's addition represented the most decent procedure.

Mr. Byrnes agreed with Mr. Bevin. If he were asked why these peace treaties were being sent, he would say that this was in order to give the countries an opportunity to sign. Then the question would arise as to why this was not stated in so many words. This would not constitute pressure. It would simply be better to tell the countries why the peace treaties were being sent to them. This was merely a courtesy.

Mr. Vyshinsky said that in suggesting this addition he had failed to take one circumstance into account. Having taken this circumstance into account, he wished to withdraw the addition. If the language which he had added were to be employed, this would in fact amount to an invitation to adhere. But was it necessary for the four powers to invite these other states to adhere? No, it was not necessary. If these states were to be invited to adhere, that should be stated clearly. That, however, went too far. But, as regards the right to adhere, that went without saying. As soon as the states in question had received the treaties they could take whatever action they saw fit. The morning addition appeared simple but in reality it only confused the issue. Therefore he wished to withdraw it. Nothing would be altered in substance since the right to each state to adhere or not to adhere would be preserved.

Mr. Bevin suggested that the matter might be settled by adopting an agreed covering letter to send along with the peace treaties.

Mr. Molorov stated that Mr. Vyshinski's remarks were correct. If the peace treaty text were sent to the other states for their adherence, this would create the impression that such adherence was a prior condition of the validity of the peace treaties. In reality, each government was free to make a statement in one form or another, expressing its approval or disapproval of the treaty.

Mr. Bevin stated that if he were asked in open Parliament concerning the form in which the peace treaties were being sent to the other United Nations, he would reply that they were being sent in order to provide the other United Nations an opportunity to sign.

Mr. Molorov said that it was obvious what answer Mr. Bevin should give. The answer would be that the government to which the peace treaty was being sent was free to adhere or make a statement as it sees fit. Different governments would react in different ways. Some might adhere, others might make a statement, and others react in still different ways. This was up to them. In Mr. Bevin's place, Mr. Molotov would reply to the question raised in Parliament by saying that this was a matter for the governments themselves to decide.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether they would be permitted to sign if they so decided.

Mr. Molorov said that they would, of course, be permitted to sign as far as he was concerned.

Mr. Byrnes said that as he understood it, Mr. Vyshinski's position was that any United Nation at war with an enemy state had the right to adhere to the peace treaties. He, therefore, suggested that following the word "question" at the end of the first sentence in section 4, the phrase "reserving to other United Nations at war with the enemy states in question the right to adhere" be added. The second sentence should be deleted.

Mr. Molotov reiterated that the language agreed upon by the Drafting Committee yesterday should be accepted.

Mr. Byrnes said that it had been previously agreed that the treaties would be sent for signature. Then Mr. Vyshinski had suggested that they be sent for adherence and the other Delegates had agreed to that.

Mr. Bevin stated that there was no reason to hide the intentions of the governments sending the treaties by not stating what they wished the states receiving them to do.

Mr. Molorov requested again that the language of the Drafting Committee be accepted without modification.

Mr. Cohen pointed out that the language suggested by Mr. Byrnes embodied the very words proposed by Mr. Vyshinski.

Mr. Vyshinski replied that this language went too far. Every state which had been at war had the right to adhere irrespective of whether this right was explicitly granted. It would be impossible, in fact, to grant a right which they already possess.

Mr. Cohen proposed, then, to say "recognizing" the right rather than "reserving" the right.

Mr. Vyshinski inquired how the right could fail to be recognized. Mr. Cohen stated that the language should express that to which everyone was agreed. There could be no objection to putting this into words.

Mr. Bevin stated that he was no lawyer but it seemed to him that not every state had the right to sign. For example, the United States did not have the right to sign a treaty between the Soviet and British Governments.

Mr. Molotov said that there was a difference between such a treaty and treaties of peace.

Mr. Bevin said that he would announce in the House of Commons that the peace treaties were being sent to the other governments so that they could exercise their right to adhere if they chose. That would be his public statement.

Mr. Vyshinski reiterated his statement that all interested states had the right to adhere or not to adhere.

Mr. Byrnes said that he would make a similar statement. He understood that each of the governments could announce the reason why the treaties were being sent.

Mr. Molotov said that each of the ministers could make any statement regarded as correct.

Mr. Byrnes replied that he merely wished to have this understood so that no question would arise later. He suggested that the word "sent" should be eliminated in favor of the word "submitted". This would be in accordance with the Berlin Agreement. No objection was raised to this proposal.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether the Delegates were in agreement with the entire document on peace treaties.

Mr. Molotov and Mr. Byrnes said that they were in agreement.

It was decided to discuss the question of the evacuation of Japanese troops from north China at tomorrow's session and that the question of atomic energy would be discussed in a meeting at the Kremlin at noon tomorrow.

The meeting was adjourned at 7:00 o'clock.

Memorandum by the Soviet Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 22, 1945.

Establishment of a Commission on Atomic Energy by the United Nations

The Soviet Government has examined the United States proposals on atomic energy set forth in the memorandum of December 18, 1945.²⁵ The Soviet Government is agreed that there should be established under the United Nations Organization a Commission for the study of problems arising in connection with the discovery of atomic energy and other questions connected therewith, and for the preparation of recommendations to be submitted to the United Nations Organization, and is also agreed that the five permanent members of the Security Council, together with Canada, should assume the initiative of sponsoring a proposal to this effect at the first session of the United Nations in January 1946.

At the same time, the Soviet Government believes it necessary to introduce a change in the draft submitted by the Government of the $^{^{25}\,\}mathrm{See}$ enclosure 3 to the minutes of the Third Formal Session, December 18, p. 663.

United States, with a view towards subordinating the Commission on atomic energy to be established by the United Nations Organization to the Security Council, upon which according to the United Nations Charter rests "the principal responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security." In accordance with this the Soviet Delegation proposes to introduce the following amendments into the draft recommendations submitted by the American Delegation:

1. Section 1 "The Establishment of the Commission" to read as follows:

"The Commission should be established by the General Assembly to prepare recommendations regarding the use of atomic energy. The Commission shall be attached to the Security Council and work under its direction."

2. Section 2 "Reports of the Commission" shall read as follows:

"The Commission shall submit its recommendations and reports to the Security Council. In the appropriate cases provided for by the United Nations Charter, the Security Council shall transmit these reports to the General Assembly and the Members of the United Nations, as well as to the Economic and Social Council."

3. Section 4 "Rules of Procedure" shall be amplified by the following sentence:

"The rules of procedure established by the Commission shall be approved by the Security Council."

Begin note

In our search for an acceptable formula whereunder work may be continued on the preparation of peace treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland, the Foreign Secretaries of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Great Britain, and the United States of America have reached the following understanding:

"Preparation of Peace Treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland.

"1. In the drawing up by the Council of Foreign Ministers of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland only members of the Council who are, or under the terms of the Agreement establishing the Council of Foreign Ministers adopted at the Berlin Conference are deemed to be, signatory of the Surrender Terms, will participate, unless and until the Council takes further action under the agreement to invite other members of the Council to participate on questions directly concerning them. That is to say:

(a) the terms of the peace treaty with Italy will be drafted by the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States, the Soviet Union and France;

(b) the terms of the peace treaties with Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary by the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union,

the United States and the United Kingdom;

(c) the terms of the peace treaty with Finland by the Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom.

The Deputies of the Foreign Ministers will immediately resume their work in London (on the basis of the decisions agreed at the first plenary conference of the Council of Foreign Ministers 27).

"2. When the preparation of all these drafts has been completed, the Council of Foreign Ministers will convoke a conference for the purpose of considering treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland. The conference will consist of the five members of the Council of Foreign Ministers together with all members of the United Nations which actively waged war with substantial military force against European enemy states, namely: Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom, United States of America, China, France, Australia, Belgium, Belorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Greece, India, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Union of South Africa, Yugoslavia, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. The conference will be held in blank not later than May 1, 1946.

"3. After the conclusion of the deliberations of the conference and upon consideration of its recommendations the states signatory to the terms of armistice with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland or regarded as such (France—for the purposes of peace treaty with Italy) will draw up final texts of peace treaties.

"4. The final texts of the respective peace treaties as so drawn up will be signed on behalf of the states represented at the conference which are at war with the enemy states in question. The texts of the respective peace treaties will then be sent 28 to the other United Nations which are at war with the enemy states in question.

Italy. These treaties are subject to ratification by the enemy states in question."

In my capacity as chairman of the meeting at which agreement was reached on the above, I have been directed by my Soviet and British colleagues to express our earnest hope that France and China will wish to associate themselves with this formula and that the preparation of the draft treaties in question may immediately proceed. I should add that the words in the first parentheses above—"on the basis of the decisions agreed at the first plenary conference of the Council of Foreign Ministers"—have not yet been finally agreed upon.

It is the thought of my colleagues and myself that should the French Government desire to act as host it would be appropriate that the conference which is to be convoked not later than May 1, 1946, as set forth above be held in Paris.

When the (Paris use French, Chungking use Chinese) Government has had the opportunity to study the proposal contained herein, I should be most grateful for an early indication of its views and whether it will associate itself therewith.

End note

I wish you to make every endeavor to persuade the (Paris use French, Chungking use Chinese) Government of the desirability of promptly joining us in the foregoing as the best possible arrangement acceptable to all three Governments. For your own information, it is not the intention, however, of the three Governments to make adoption of this formula contingent upon French and Chinese acceptance.

²⁹ According to the United Kingdom delegation minutes of this meeting, Ambassador Malik was also present with the Soviet delegation and Major General Jacob, Mr. Ward and Mr. McAfee were present with the United Kingdom delegation.

1. Atomic Energy

THE SECRETARY said that he had examined the Soviet amendments to the United States proposal regarding the Commission to consider atomic energy and had a number of suggestions to make.30 He said they were prepared to accept the Soviet suggestion that the Commission report to the Security Council but suggested that the last sentence of the Soviet redraft of Article I be dropped. He said he felt that the Terms of Reference as set forth in Article V laid down the basis for the Commission's work and that it would be a mistake to place it under the direction of the Security Council. He further suggested that in paragraph 3 there be included reference to the fact that the rules of procedure of the Commission should be approved by the Security Council as a procedural matter. He also suggested in Article V the addition of a statement to the effect that the recommendations and reports of the Commission should be made public by the Security Council. He added further that the additional statement concerning the work of the Commission by staffs which he had submitted subsequent to the original proposal be included in the draft agreements. He explained that this statement was taken from the public declaration of the President, Prime Minister Attlee and Prime Minister King.

Mr. Molorov said that was a new suggestion and he would have to consider it. He continued that in his opinion the Soviet suggestion concerning direction by the Security Council should be left since the Council was charged with primary responsibility in matters affecting security which was the most important aspect of atomic energy.

THE SECRETARY repeated that we had recognized this in accepting the Soviet proposal that the Commission report to the Council rather than to the Assembly. He said he was afraid that if a Commission of 11 representatives were set up and made responsible to the Council composed of 11 representatives of the same states it would only impede the work of the Commission. Under the Soviet proposal misunderstandings might arise and it might be argued that the Commission could not proceed with its work except on the basis of positive directives from the Security Council.

Mr. Molorov said that any possibility of misunderstanding which might occur should be removed and it could be made clear that no special instructions would be required from the Council but merely that the Commission would work under its guidance. He read Article 24 of the Charter which placed the responsibility on the Council for matters relating to security and the maintenance of peace to illustrate his point that it would not be understood why the Security Council had been by-passed in a matter so directly related to security.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that in addition to the security angle atomic energy affected industrial and economic questions and that this phase could not be ignored. To make the Commission solely responsible to the Security Council would create the impression that its work would deal only with the security aspects of atomic energy.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that in any event the Terms of Reference of the Commission limit its activities to the making of recommendations and reports which in deference to the Soviet wish would be submitted to the Council, which would then decide what use should be made of them.

Mr. Molorov rereated that the security aspect was the one that aroused the most interest and therefore should be dealt with on a clear-cut basis and it would be impossible to answer before the forthcoming Assembly meeting questions as to why the Security Council had been by-passed. He said the Soviet draft provides for the submission of reports of the Commission in appropriate cases to the General Assembly and to the Social and Economic Council and that Mr. Byrnes had suggested a provision for publication. Thus, the economic and industrial aspects of the question were fully taken care of. He said that we all shared a common desire to see that atomic energy was used only for peaceful and humanitarian aims. He said the intention of the United Nations Organization was focussed on this central problem; namely, that atomic energy should be used only for these purposes and not against security and peace. He added that the Soviet Delegation had accepted the United States proposal that the Commission should be set up by the General Assembly and he felt that this fully met any rights or privileges of the General Assembly. He said the fact that there were the same number of representatives on the Commission as on the Council would not in his opinion adversely affect its work, since this might be true of many subsidiary organs of the United Nations. On these subsidiary organs the representatives would be from the same countries as the principal organs of the organization. In all cases members should be selected on the basis of suitability.

THE SECRETARY explained that the difficulty arose from the words "work under the direction of the Security Council". He thought this was unnecessary in the case of the Commission which could not take any action but merely make recommendations and reports.

Mr. Bevin again emphasized the industrial and economic aspects of the problem of atomic energy and repeated that he feared that the public would consider that in turning the Commission over to the Security Council these aspects would be ignored. In England many people felt that the Commission should be responsible only to the Assembly and as it was he might have difficulty in explaining his agreement to have it report to the Security Council. He said, however, that in a desire to reach an agreement would it not be possible to add in Section II or wherever appropriate the following phrase: "The Security Council is authorized in appropriate cases to send special instructions to the Commission on matters affecting security." He inquired whether this would satisfy the Soviet Delegation.

THE SECRETARY said he was prepared to accept Mr. Bevin's proposal.

MR. Molorov said he would consider this proposal but that the Soviet Delegation felt that it should be clear to all that the Security Council was not being by-passed. He thought the best method was to place the Commission under the direction of the Council. He added that there was no question of any monopoly by the Security Council since provision was made in both drafts for the Council to submit the reports of the Commission to both the Assembly and to the Social and Economic Council. He said he referred to the provision of Section II. He said the main task of the Charter as stated in the first Article was the preservation of peace and that this responsibility was placed on the Security Council. He again repeated his opinion that in view of the language of the Charter it would be misunderstood if the Security Council were by-passed in regard to the work of the Commission. He said not only did the Charter place this responsibility explicitly on the Council but it was the primary duty and responsibility of the Council. He inquired whether all were in agreement that the Council was primarily responsible for security questions.

Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin agreed with this and pointed out that this responsibility was expressly recognized in Mr. Bevin's proposed amendment and that furthermore the Commission would report to the Council.

Mr. Molorov stated that it was not a matter of reports but who would direct the work of the Commission. He feared that unless this responsibility was conferred on the Security Council it would be difficult to answer questions at the forthcoming meeting. He said if all were agreed that the primary responsibility rested on the Council it would be easy to find a formula. If not, it was a different matter.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that his suggestion was made for the purpose of recognizing this responsibility.

THE SECRETARY pointed out that it might be difficult to get the General Assembly to accept the proposal for the establishment of a Commission which would be responsible only to the Security Council. Members of the Assembly might feel that their rights were being ignored. He said that he would feel that the Soviet point had been fully met by Mr. Bevin's suggestion plus the agreement to have the Commission report to the Council.

There was a prolonged discussion during which Mr. Molorov repeated his main thesis that the Security Council was primarily responsible for security, that security was the chief factor in the atomic question and that therefore the Commission on Atomic Energy should work under the direction of the Council. It was finally agreed to postpone further consideration of the question until a subsequent meeting.

2. Kattegat Straits

Mr. Molorov asked if they could discuss the question of the straits covering the approaches to the Baltic Sea.

The Secretary replied that he had no information on this subject nor did he have any record with him of President Roosevelt's discussion with Marshal Stalin on this point.^{30a}

Mr. Molorov said the important point was who controlled the passage of ships through these straits and he asked Mr. Bevin if he had any information to convey to him on this subject.

Mr. Bevin replied that the only information they had was to the effect that Great Britain was now engaged in mine-sweeping operations in these straits in conformity with an agreed plan to which the Soviet Government was a party. He said that except for these trawlers there were no British naval vessels in these waters and that there was no direct British naval control nor indirect control through the Danish authorities in regard to these straits. The position remains as it was before the war; namely, that the riparian states control it but that in a practical sense there was no control over the movement of ships through these straits.

Mr. Molotov replied that the war had shown that the question was more complicated than mere control by the riparian states.

Mr. Bevin said he could not discuss this question at this meeting as he had not expected it to be brought up.

3. North China

Mr. Molotov asked the Secretary if he had anything further to say on north China in the light of the Soviet memorandum of December 21.³¹

THE SECRETARY said that he had discussed this question three times with Mr. Molotov and he had submitted a paper on the subject and also sent Mr. Molotov a copy of the President's statement. He felt he had nothing to add. He did note, however, that the Soviet memorandum to which Mr. Molotov referred revealed that his statements both in writing and orally had not cleared up Soviet misunderstandings. For example, it was stated in the Soviet memorandum that American troops would remain in China in order to restore stability in that country. This was not true since the American troops would be removed as soon as the problem of the disarming of the Japanese had been settled. He had explained in great detail why this was a complicated question and might take some time, but the United States felt that it was its duty to carry out this task and to help Chiang effect a surrender of these Japanese forces. He pointed out that the Japanese surrender had placed the responsibility upon the Soviet Union for the surrender of Japanese troops in Manchuria and on the Chinese Government for those in north China. Chiang Kai-shek had asked for patience and more time in order to carry out his responsibility and the United States Government was prepared to be patient with a friendly and Allied government. He said that in the last analysis if the Chinese Government was unable to do this it would then devolve upon the United States to do it with their own forces. He had also explained to Mr. Molotov the difficulty in regard to shipping and the efforts we were making to expedite the evacuation of the Japanese. He said the United States was doing all it could and he had explained everything in detail to Mr. Molotov.

Mr. Molotov said that they were interested in a fixed date for simultaneous evacuation of both Soviet and United States forces from China.

THE SECRETARY stated that he could not agree on a fixed date since it was not at all certain how much time would be required to complete the task of disarming the Japanese. He pointed out that the Soviet Union had admittedly on China's request already postponed twice the date of the evacuation of Soviet forces from Manchuria. He did not wish on behalf of the United States to fix a date and then subsequently have to change it. He said that if the date were fixed in the middle of January as the Soviet Delegation proposed it would mean that our troops would leave China while there were still over 200,000 armed Japanese in the area. This should be clear to Mr. Molotov since he had explained that we could only move 3,000 Japanese a day. He said that when Mr. Molotov had explained to him the reasons why Soviet forces were still remaining in Manchuria he had accepted these explanations in full faith and he must request Mr. Molotov to accept in like manner the explanations of the United States.

Mr. Molorov said that he was asking merely for a time limit on the disarming of the Japanese and not for their evacuation to Japan.

That admittedly would take a longer time. He said that forces of both countries were there by Chinese request but that what he was interested in was an agreement for simultaneous withdrawal within a fixed period. He said they wished to get their troops back as soon as possible and not leave them unnecessarily in Manchuria.

The Secretary replied that if the Soviet Union were remaining in Manchuria to disarm the Japanese there would be no question of the necessity of their remaining there until this was completed, but it was a different matter when they were remaining there solely by request of the Chinese. He repeated that we did not desire to interfere in Chinese affairs and for that reason our Marines had not gone into the interior, which would have involved them in the fighting between the two Chinese factions. He repeated that the United States could not reject the request of its friend to be granted more time in order to arrange for the disarming of these Japanese troops by the forces of the Central Government.

Mr. Molotov asserted that the Japanese were not resisting disarming and that the Soviet Government felt that the disarming of these Japanese forces could not be delayed. The question of evacuation was a definite question which would obviously take longer. He said their information was that there were 500,000 Japanese troops in north China.

Mr. Molotov pointed out that the presence of American forces in north China was a new development and one which had not been contemplated when the Soviet Government signed its agreement with China.

THE SECRETARY replied that he did not see what the presence of the United States troops in China had to do with the Soviet-Chinese agreement.

Mr. Molotov again suggested that they agree on a date for simultaneous withdrawal, if not the middle of January, then some later date. He said that he felt that the task of disarming the Japanese was [not?] as complicated as the Chinese claimed.

THE SECRETARY said that he believed that Mr. Molotov was asking these questions merely because he liked the sound of his (Mr. Byrnes') voice.

Mr. Molotov replied that he found Mr. Byrnes' voice very pleasant but even more pleasant would be an agreement for the simultaneous withdrawal of troops.

THE SECRETARY said that he had explained in great detail and at length the position of the United States Government. He said that we were supporting the Central Government and so was the Soviet Union and it would, therefore, not be in accordance with our common policy to do anything which would place the Central Government in a more difficult position. He said that it was our desire to see a unified China and he hoped that the Soviet Government would cooperate in the furtherance of that aim.

Mr. Molotov replied that the aim of the Soviet Union was identical with that of the United States Government on this question.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the United States Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers 32

Moscow, December 23, 1945.

Subjects: 1. Iran

2. The Balkans

3. Hungary

4. Atomic Energy

5. North China

After an exchange of amenities The Secretary accepted with pleasure the Generalissimo's invitation to dinner December 24.33

THE SECRETARY said he had wished to talk again with the Generalissimo before his departure. He observed that it would be a very good Christmas present for the world if it were possible to announce agreement on the various points under discussion by the meeting of Foreign Ministers.

1. Iran

THE SECRETARY said he wished to talk primarily about Iran. He was seriously disturbed that this question would be raised at the General Assembly of the World Organization in January. He had no information that it would be raised, but he thought that unless some measures could be taken they would be confronted with it at the General Assembly.

STALIN remarked that they were not afraid of its being raised at the General Assembly.

THE SECRETARY continued that our connection with this matter arose from the Declaration of Iran signed by the three heads of Government at the Tehran Conference in the first paragraph of which appreciation was expressed for the cooperation of Iran in the war and particularly in the matter of supplies to the Soviet Union. The second paragraph bound the three Governments to respect the territorial integrity and independence of this small state. He said in view of this Declaration it would be difficult to take the position that Iran was hostile to the Soviet Union. He said the United States was sincerely desirous of avoiding this embarrassing position since it did not wish to take sides because of its close alliance with the Soviet Union during the war and now during the peace. He said that he understood Mr. Bevin had made some informal suggestions concerning joint action by the three powers in this matter, and he would like to know the Generalissimo's opinion in regard to these.

³² Meeting held at the Kremlin, December 23, 1945, 5 p. m.

²⁸ No official record of the substance of the discussion at Stalin's Christmas Eve dinner for the Secretary of State and Mr. Bevin has been found. The dinner is briefly described in Byrnes, Speaking Frankly, pp. 117-118, and Byrnes, All in One Lifetime, pp. 336-337.

STALIN replied that Mr. Bevin had presumably had in mind the conflict in Persian Azerbaijan and had pointed out that the Persian Constitution provided for the establishment of provincial councils in the various provinces. Mr. Bevin said it was his personal opinion and he had not consulted his Government. Mr. Bevin said the Persian Government had not carried out these provisions of the Constitution and inquired what would be the Generalissimo's attitude if he put forward certain proposals.

THE GENERALISSIMO had said he was prepared to discuss it. He wished to assure Mr. Byrnes that in any agreement or discussion the United States would be brought in and that there would be no separate agreement with Great Britain without United States participation. The Generalissimo said in regard to the Declaration of Iran, the three Governments had agreed to respect the territorial integrity etc. of Iran and that was their obligation and not the obligation of Iran. This pledge still held good and would always hold good. There was no intention on the part of the Soviet Union to violate this pledge since that was not their practice and they would not tolerate any such views in the Soviet Government. In so far as the expressions of appreciation for Iran's efforts, that had applied to the existing Government. Since then much water had flowed under the bridge. present Iranian Government and the one before it had become hostile to the Soviet Union. He said the disadvantage in the Declaration had been that it contained no reference to the obligations of Persia to the three Allied Governments. The present Persian Government had taken advantage of this and had adopted a hostile attitude towards the Soviet Union. The Persian Government was now looking for people who could act against the Soviet Union. As to the pledge to assist Iran, this had been carried out and in 1943 the Soviet Government, not without difficulty to itself, had sent 25,000 tons of grain to Iran when famine threatened there. He said the Soviet Government continued to assist whenever possible. He concluded by stating that no one had any need to blush if this question was raised in the Assembly. All that was needed was that the Iranian Government should carry out its obligations and cease to be hostile to the Soviet Union.

THE SECRETARY replied that he had felt it wise to raise this question again because in the press of the United States much had been written about the presence of foreign troops in Iran, and in order that there would be no grounds for suspicion of the United States, we had decided to remove the last remaining United States forces from Iran. These troops were not combat but service troops and even so would all be gone within one week.

STALIN replied that the Soviet Government had never asked the United States to remove its troops. They had no objection to their remaining or being withdrawn whichever the United States preferred.

THE SECRETARY said he realized the difference in the positions between the United States and the Soviet Union. He said he had not seen Mr. Bevin's proposals but believed that they related to some form of investigation by the three Governments in regard to the complaint of Iran. He concluded by saying that the desire of the United States was to avoid any embarrassing situation at the forthcoming General Assembly meeting.

STALIN said that they had not received any specific proposals in writing yet from Mr. Bevin.

2. THE BALKANS

[3. Hungary]

The Secretary said he would then like to discuss the Balkan situation. He said he had had a difficult time with Mr. Molotov on this subject.

STALIN said with a smile that this was unexpected news.

The Secretary continued that this question had been pending for some time and that in his opinion it was terribly important to settle this matter and to proceed with the peace treaties with these countries and be in a position to render them essential economic assistance. He said he would not bother the Generalissimo with details but he merely wished to state that in the hope of finding a solution he had sent an outstanding American liberal known to be friendly to the Soviet Union to investigate the situation on the spot. He said he had told Mr. Ethridge to disregard all previous opinions on the subject and to make an impartial report. He asked the Generalissimo to believe him when he said that if Mr. Ethridge had indicated any grounds for recognizing the Governments of Rumania and Bulgaria, he would have immediately done so. He said he had held up the report because he wished to show it first to Mr. Molotov but had promised the American public and the press to publish the report at some time. This he would have to do unless some solution could be found here.

STALIN replied that if he felt it necessary to publish the Ethridge report that he would ask Mr. Ehrenburg,³⁴ who was also an impartial man and had visited these countries, to publish his views.

THE SECRETARY said that this would be unfortunate since the two reports would tend to separate rather than unite our countries on this question. He said in the case of Finland, Hungary, Austria, and added Yugoslavia, we had found it possible to agree on recognition and that only Rumania and Bulgaria remained. He said our whole position stems from the Yalta Declaration which provided for joint efforts to establish temporary governments broadly representative of the people. He said all our information indicated that the genuine representatives of the leading parties were not included in the Government and he asked in view of the greater Soviet interest in this matter that the Generalissimo suggest some plan in order to give representation to these parties. If this could be done and arrangements for holding free elections could be made, we would be able to proceed to the recognition of these Governments. He said we had no intention of suggesting any members of these parties who were hostile to the Soviet Union, but that surely it would be possible to find persons who were both representative of these parties and at the same time friendly to the Soviet Union. He appealed to the Generalissimo for his help in this matter.

STALIN said that given a mutual desire to settle this matter some____ means could be found to do so. He said he wished to speak of certain accusations which he admitted Mr. Byrnes had not made but which had appeared in British and American newspapers, namely, that Soviet troops in the Balkans were exercising pressure on elections in those countries. He said this was not so, and, for example, in Hungary there were Soviet troops and in actual fact the Soviet Union could do pretty much what it wanted there, but that nevertheless the elections had resulted in a victory for a party other than the Communist party. This demonstrates that the Soviet Government was exercising no pressure through its troops in these countries. Such action would be regarded as unworthy of the Soviet Union and as interference in internal affairs. He said all the Soviet Union asks of these border states or states in proximity to the Soviet Union was that they should not be hostile. What parties should run these countries was a matter for the people themselves to decide. In the view of the Soviet Government other parties besides the Communist party could be friendly. He said this was a natural desire on the part of the Soviet Union since they had suffered much during the war from Finland, Hungary, and Rumania. Hungarian troops had reached the Don River and Rumanian troops the Volga. That is why the Soviet Government was interested in seeing friendly, loyal governments in these countries. Bulgaria although not actually a border state, during two wars had been a hotbed of German influence against Russia and the democratic countries. He said that at the end of the last war in the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk 35 the German delegation had contained Bulgarian and Turkish representatives. In this war Bulgaria had not actually fought but had only been restrained by fear of her own people. Bulgaria, however, had afforded no less assistance than Rumania by affording bases for German submarines, naval vessels, and airplanes. All the Soviet Union asked was that the Government of Bulgaria should be loyal in its relation to the USSR.

Stalin said such were the basic facts and now what in a practical sense could be done about the situation. In Bulgaria elections had been held and overwhelming mass of the people had supported these elections. It was, therefore, difficult to exercise any pressure looking towards a reorganization of the Bulgarian Government. He continued that the Yalta Declaration did not provide that all parties should be represented in any given government but merely that they should have full freedom to participate in the election. He said in Bulgaria the opposition parties had chosen of their own will to boycott the election and, therefore, could not be regarded as a loval opposition. In the United States when Dewey 36 had lost the election he had pledged the loyalty of his party to President Roosevelt during the war. The opposition in Bulgaria had abused its privilege. Members of a loyal opposition might be included in the Government, but how could disloyal elements be included? He said he hesitated to take any steps to interfere with the decisions of the Bulgarian parliament. The Soviet Union was already being accused of interference. Stalin said that perhaps the Bulgarian parliament could be advised to include some members of the loyal opposition in the new Government, that there could be no question of the reorganization of the Government, since the people in the elections had shown their confidence in the parliament; nor could there be any question of pressure but merely of advice. He said he thought that some move in this direction might satisfy Mr. Byrnes.

In the case of Rumania Stalin said that since no elections had been held, it might be possible to make some changes in the Government one hand and Russia on the other, signed March 3, 1918. For translation of text, see Foreign Relations, 1918, Russia, vol. 1, p. 442.

there which would satisfy Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin. He said Mr. Molotov had suggested that one or two non-party ministers be added. He said that in a pinch it might be possible to suggest to the Rumanian Government that two statesmen representing the National Peasant party and the Liberal party be included in the Government. He added, however, that they should not be Maniu 37 or Bratianu or Lupu 38 in any case but they should be loyal persons. Stalin pointed out that his suggestion in fact repeated what Mr. Byrnes had suggested. In so far as the Ministry of Interior was concerned he did not believe it would be possible to put in a non-party Minister or a commission. He said ministers were selected by agreement among the parties. For example, in Hungary the Minister of Interior had been Communist, but after the elections he had been replaced by a member of the Small Landholders party.³⁹ The same had happened in Austria.40 Stalin concluded that on this point he felt that it was impossible to stick a boot in the face of the Rumanians. In any event, there were Vice-Ministers of Interior in Rumania who were not Communists.41

THE SECRETARY said that he hoped the Generalissimo would understand that the United States did not wish to encourage the selection of persons hostile to the Soviet Union, but that he felt that the Generalissimo's suggestion offered a means of giving representation to the parties not now adequately represented in the Government. He inquired how the Generalissimo thought his suggestion might be put into effect.

STALIN said that they could call Rumanian representatives here or send someone there or consult by telegram.

THE SECRETARY said it would also be a good idea to have the enlarged Government make a statement concerning civil liberties and free elections.

STALIN replied that this had already been done.

After some discussion Stalin agreed that a commission composed of Mr. Vishinsky, Ambassador Harriman, and a British representa-⁸⁷ Iuliu Maniu, President, Rumanian National Peasant Party.

 ⁸⁸ Niculae Lupu, leader in the Rumanian National Peasant Party.

⁸⁹ From December 1944 to November 1945 the Hungarian Minister of Interior was Ferenc Erdei, a leader of the Communist-oriented Peasant Party. In the new Hungarian government formed by Premier Zoltan Tildy following the November 4, 1945, national election, Imre Nagy, member of the Hungarian Communist Party, became the Minister of Interior. See telegram 916, November 15, from Budapest, vol. IV, p. 906.

⁴⁰ In December 1945, following the Austrian national election, a new Austrian government under Chancellor Leopold Figl was formed, with Austrian Socialist Party leader Oskar Helmer succeeding Communist Franz Honner as Minister of Interior.

⁴¹ Gen. Virgil Stanescu, an independent, I. Burca, a Rumanian Social Democrat, and G. Vantu, a Liberal, served as Under Secretaries of State in the Rumanian Ministry of Interior under Premier Petru Groza.

tive, possibly Sir Archibald Clark Kerr, be sent to Rumania to work out the details of the inclusion of the two additional Ministers.

THE SECRETARY suggested in regard to Bulgaria that the Soviet Government might helpfully give the advice which the Generalissimo had suggested.

STALIN promised to do this.

Stalin requested the Secretary to discuss these proposals regarding Bulgaria and Rumania with Mr. Bevin.

THE SECRETARY agreed and jokingly said that although they were supposed to have a bloc with England, he had even neglected to inform Mr. Bevin soon enough about the proposed meeting in Moscow.

STALIN replied that this was obviously only a cloak to hide the reality of the bloc.

4. Atomic Energy

The Secretary said that he felt that they were near agreement on the atomic energy question, but that he had had long discussions with Mr. Molotov concerning procedure.

STALIN said that the Soviet Government had accepted nine-tenths of the American proposal and had only proposed one-tenth for their side. He inquired what was wrong in putting the proposed commission under the Security Council.

THE SECRETARY said that we had accepted the Soviet proposal that the commission report to the Security Council instead of to the Assembly. The difficulty was that there were other questions besides security involved in which the Assembly would have primary interest. He went on to say that as a matter of fact the commission really needed no direction since the Terms of Reference set forth clearly what it could do and what it could not do.

After some discussion it was agreed that there was little difference in substance between our positions and that The Secretary and Mr. Molotov could work out the drafting difficulties.

5. North China

The Secretary said he had talked at considerable length with Mr. Molotov concerning our troops in North China, but he felt that it was still not clear to the Soviet Government.

STALIN inquired why the United States did not wish to remove their troops from North China.

THE SECRETARY replied that on the contrary, we would like to have them leave tomorrow if possible but that for the reasons he had explained to Mr. Molotov we had certain obligations and there were also certain circumstances which made that difficult. STALIN replied that the Soviet Government would have no objection if the United States wished to leave its troops, but they would merely like to be told about it.

THE SECRETARY said he recalled at Potsdam the Generalissimo had expressed his opinion to the press and to himself that Chiang Kai Shek's was the only possible Government in China, that the Communists were not real Communist, and that the United States had been supporting Chiang Kai Shek in accordance with what he understood was the agreed policy of both countries.

STALIN said that they had a treaty to that effect with Chiang Kai Shek's Government.

THE SECRETARY explained the situation in North China and the difficulties caused by the weakness of the National Government forces and the presence of large numbers of armed Communists surrounding the area where the still armed Japanese forces remained. He explained that General Marshall was going to attempt to arrange a truce between these forces in order to permit the prompt disarming of the Japanese forces in that area. He assured the Generalissimo that the United States had no desire whatsoever to interfere in the Chinese internal struggle but that we did not wish to do anything which would worsen the situation of the Central Government which we had all agreed to support.

STALIN said that if the Chinese people became convinced that Chiang Kai Shek was depending on foreign troops, he would lose his influence. Chiang Kai Shek apparently does not understand this, but the three Governments should understand it for him. It would be much better for Chiang Kai Shek to rely on his own forces, but if we desired to help Chiang Kai Shek we should not give him help in such a manner as to destroy his authority with the Chinese people.

THE SECRETARY explained that although General Marshall was prepared to make ships and even planes available in the event of necessity to have United States forces disarm the Japanese, he was not going to tell Chiang Kai Shek of these preparations since it would make him less desirous of reaching an understanding with the Communists.

STALIN said he thought that the size of the Communist forces had been greatly exaggerated by the Chinese Government. He said all Chinese were boastful and tended to exaggerate both the size of their own forces and those of their opponents. He inquired where the army of a million and a half was which Chiang Kai Shek was supposed to have.

THE SECRETARY said we would like to know also, but according to our reports there were only 50,000 Nationalist troops in the North China area. He outlined the position of these troops in relation to the Japanese forces and the Communist forces along the railroads in North China.⁴²

Stalin said that in his view 50,000 troops were sufficient to disarm the Japanese. For example, 25 Soviet aviators had taken the surrender of two Japanese army corps in Mukden. He inquired as to the size of the Communist forces in the Tientsin area.

THE SECRETARY replied that Mao 43 claimed to have 600,000.

STALIN laughed heartily and repeated his assertion that all Chinese were boasters.

In conclusion The Generalissimo expressed the greatest confidence that if any man could settle the situation it would be General Marshall whom he regarded as one of the few military men who was both statesman as well as soldier.

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) to the Secretary of State

Moscow, December 23, 1945.

DEAR JAMES: After listening to the discussions of the last few days on the subject of the Balkan States, which is of so great importance to all of us, I have come to the conclusion that there is possibility of agreement between our three Delegations.

I enclose the draft of a memorandum embodying my ideas, on which I hope we may agree. I trust that you will find this acceptable, and that on this basis we can reach agreement in one Conference.

I am sending a similar letter to M. Molotov.

Yours sincerely

ERNEST BEVIN

[Enclosure]

Draft Memorandum by the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin)

[Moscow, December 23, 1945.]

RUMANIA AND BULGARIA

The three Governments should agree on a reply to King Michael's letter of August 21st 1945.44 Our reply should state that the three ⁴² According to the account in Byrnes, All in One Lifetime, p. 335, the Secretary of State indicated the relative locations of Japanese and American troops in North China with matches.

⁴⁸ Mao Tse-tung, Chairman of the Central Executive Committee of the Chinese Communist Party.

Governments are prepared to give the King the advice for which he has asked, with a view to the formation of a Roumanian Government which might be recognised by all three Powers. The advice should be to the effect that the present Government should be reorganised with a view to the inclusion of representatives of parties not now in the Government and of two or three non-party personalities. Government thus reorganised should be pledged to the holding of free and unfettered elections as soon as possible on the basis of universal suffrage and secret ballot. In these elections all democratic and anti-Nazi parties should have the right to take part and to put forward candidates. Appropriate steps should be taken to secure that the control of the electoral machinery is not in the hands of any one party. The reorganised Government should give assurances concerned [concerning the grant of freedom of press, speech, religion and association and concerning the activities of the political police and militia.

As regards Bulgaria, the three Governments should recommend that the reorganisation of the Government which is due to take place as a result of the elections should lead to the admission into the Government of representatives of the opposition Agrarian Party (Petkoff 45 and his group). The reorganised Government should be asked to give assurances similar to those requested from the Roumanian Government.

Detailed arrangements in regard to the reorganisation of the Governments should be worked out locally, preferably through the respective Control Commissions, working with the political representatives of the three Powers.

As soon as the reorganisation is complete and the required assurances have been received, the Governments of Roumania and Bulgaria should be recognised by His Majesty's Government and the United States Government.

Moscow, December 24, 1945—3 p. m. [Received December 24—8:59 a. m.]

4265. Delsec 25. From the Secretary for the President. We have reached complete agreement as to the peace conference and resumption of the work on peace treaties with Italy and enemy Balkan States. China has concurred. We have not definitely heard attitude of France but I hope to talk with Bidault this afternoon and secure the agreement of France.

In my first conversation with Stalin on the peace conference he supported Molotov's position but later Stalin telephoned making concessions which made possible our agreement. As a result of a long conference with Stalin yesterday afternoon, I now hope that we can make forward step towards settling the Rumanian-Bulgarian problems. We also discussed the Chinese situation, Iran and atomic energy. As a result of our conversation, I hope that we will this afternoon be able to reach some agreement on these issues. Yesterday Molotov held out for complete subordination of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council, making it a subordinate agency of the Council and objected to any reference to a plan being developed by stages. We are in general accord as to Far Eastern issues. The situation is encouraging and I hope that today we can reach final agreement on the questions outstanding and wind up our work tomorrow. 7332. For the Secretary. Referring to my Sigtot message to you last evening December 23,50 I saw Bidault this morning who says that a tempestuous Cabinet meeting lasted until late last night about franc devaluation. He gave the note (Moscow's 457 to Paris) after the meeting to de Gaulle who said that he would take it with him and study it. At the same time de Gaulle recited again the well-known grievances about France not participating in the Balkans' treatymaking, et cetera. He said that he would let Bidault have his reply at an early date but I assume the note must be presented to the Cabinet.

Bidault believes that de Gaulle will give vent to some recriminations but that in the end he will "go along" with us.51

⁴⁹ This telegram, which was received at the War Department in the course of a teletype conference between the Embassy in Paris and the Embassy in Moscow relayed through the War Department in Washington, was transmitted to the Secretary of State in Moscow at 11:45 a.m., December 24.

⁵⁰ Apparently reference is to unnumbered telegram from Paris to Moscow,

December 23, afternoon, which reported that the Secretary's message contained in telegram 457, from Moscow to Paris, p. 741, had been delivered to Foreign Minister Bidault, who promised to recommend its acceptance to Premier de Gaulle but could not answer for de Gaulle's response (Moscow Embassy Files: 500 Conference of Foreign Ministers).

of the teletype conference between the Embassy in Paris and the Embassy in Moscow, Ambassador Caffery reported to Moscow on Foreign Minister Bidault's subsequent meeting with Premier de Gaulle. De Gaulle's reaction to the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers' proposal was not unfavorable, but final French approval had to be made by the French Cabinet which could not be convened until after Christmas (Moscow Embassy Files: 500 Conference of Foreign Ministers).

52 According to the United Kingdom delegation minutes of this meeting, the following additional persons participated: For the United States—James B. Conant; for the United Kingdom—P. J. Dixon and W. McAfee.

1. ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. Byrnes opened the meeting and proposed to resume discussion on points outstanding with regard to the atomic energy proposals. Mr. Bevin had agreed to circulate a draft embodying the two amendments which were still pending.

Mr. Molorov stated that he had not yet seen this draft. However, he had certain proposals with regard to Section II. In the draft which Mr. Byrnes had submitted yesterday,⁵³ Section II consisted of two paragraphs. Mr. Molotov proposed that the words "with the consent of the Security Council" be inserted in paragraph (a) after the words "made public" at the end of the first sentence. With regard to paragraph (b), Mr. Molotov proposed to add that the Atomic Energy Commission should be accountable to the Security Council for its work.

Mr. Molorov also stated that he was not sure that the next to last paragraph in the draft, beginning "The work of the Commission should proceed by separate stages," was necessary. The Commission would, of course, establish its own rules of procedure since this was left to its discretion under Section IV.

Mr. Bevin suggested that in adopting their procedure the Commission and Security Council should make a reference to point 8 of the Washington Declaration. He stated that Canada was particularly interested in this.

Mr. Molorov said that this would not be "convenient". The Washington Declaration had been made with participation of the United States, Britain and Canada. The Soviet Government had not been a party to this Declaration. Accordingly, it would be better not to refer to a matter in which not all the Governments concerned had participated. However, the Washington Declaration remained binding upon those who were parties to it.

Mr. Bevin replied that it seemed expedient to refer to this point in the draft although not necessarily mentioning the Washington ⁵³ According to the United Kingdom delegation minutes of this meeting, Molotov referred to the American draft originally submitted by the Secretary of State at the Third Formal Session of the Conference on December 18 and included as enclosure 3 to the United States delegation minutes of that meeting, p. 663.

Declaration. Mr. Bevin desired to include the principle involved, which would serve as a directive for the work of the Commission.

Mr. Molorov said that this proposal could be referred to the Commission itself.

Mr. Byrnes asked Mr. Molotov to agree to the inclusion of this point since it had been agreed to by the President and two Prime Ministers. For his part he would agree to Mr. Molotov's amendment to Section II(b) reading, "in such matters the Commission will be accountable to the Security Council," and also to Mr. Molotov's suggestion in regard to the next to last paragraph under Section V.

With regard to Mr. Molotov's proposal concerning the addition of the words "with consent of the Security Council," in Section II(a) at the end of sentence one, Mr. Byrnes inquired whether it would be acceptable to employ the following language: "shall be made public unless the Security Council in the interest of peace and security otherwise directs." In this event, the Commission would be entitled to take the initiative in issuing minor reports in which the Security Council would not be interested. However, the Commission could not issue a report if the Security Council did not desire. This gave the Security Council full control as regards peace and security.

Mr. Bevin said that he was disturbed by the veto aspect of this matter, with reference to publication.

Mr. Cohen explained that in accordance with the language proposed by Mr. Byrnes, reports and recommendations of the Commission could be made public unless the Security Council by affirmative vote decided otherwise.

Mr. Bevin stated that he now understood and was in agreement. Mr. Byrnes inquired whether Mr. Molotov would accept this proposal, pointing out that he was willing to accept the language proposed by Mr. Molotov in (b).

Mr. Molotov said he would have to think it over. It seemed possible to reach agreement on this matter.

2. Rumania and Bulgaria

Mr. Byrnes proceeded to the proposals regarding Rumania and Bulgaria. After his conversation with Mr. Molotov yesterday afternoon, he had told Mr. Bevin this morning of the agreement regarding this subject reached in that conversation. He had written out what in his opinion was the agreement arrived at yesterday. Mr. Bevin had said that this was satisfactory to him. Mr. Byrnes circulated two papers embodying the agreement as he had formulated it (Enclosures 1 and 2).

Mr. Molorov requested time for translation of Mr. Byrnes' papers which he had received just before the present session began. He observed that the proposals apparently stood in need of some amend-

3. TRAN

Mr. Byrnes proceeded to the question of Iran.

Mr. Bevin stated that he had promised Generalissimo Stalin to study this question. He wished his colleagues to consider a settlement which he had formulated. Mr. Bevin circulated a paper on this subject (Enclosure 3).

4. Austria

Mr. Molorov inquired whether the other delegates had examined his paper on Austria.54

Mr. Bevin said that he had received a preliminary reply from London but not a final reply and that he hoped to be prepared to discuss this question tomorrow. If by tomorrow he did not receive a full answer from London he would provide such information as he had received.

5. Japanese Fleet

Mr. Molorov stated that he wished to discuss a further point with regard to Japan. He had exchanged letters with Mr. Byrnes with regard to the Japanese fleet.⁵⁵ The proposal had been made that the Japanese fleet be scuttled. He had agreed with this proposal but with certain qualifications. He had thought it desirable that the smaller vessels be divided up. In any event the Soviet Union would receive 1/4 of these vessels. Mr. Byrnes had expressed agreement to this. Mr. Molotov added that the same applied to the Japanese merchant shipping. He inquired as to how it would be best to get this matter underway.

Mr. Byrnes replied that he had accepted Mr. Molotov's proposal and had issued instructions to the Navy to fulfill the agreement which they had reached. He did not remember the exact language of the correspondence. However, he had already instructed the U.S. Navy to proceed in accordance with the agreement.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether the British Government was a party to this agreement.

Mr. Byrnes replied that it was.

Mr. Molotov inquired about the Japanese merchant marine.

Mr. Byrnes replied that this depended upon what had been placed into the agreement.

⁵⁴ Presumably reference here is to the Soviet memorandum on German and other military units in Austria, included as enclosure 3 to the United States delegation minutes of the Informal Meeting of December 21, 2:30 p.m., p. 721.

For the exchange of letters between the Secretary of State and Foreign Commissar Molotov on the disposition of the Japanese fleet, see telegrams 2175, October 17, 2197, October 20, and 2199, October 22, all to Moscow, printed in vol. VI. section under Japan entitled "Surrender of Japan . . .", Part IV.

Mr. Molotov read a section from Mr. Byrnes' letter regarding the Japanese merchant marine.

MR. Byrnes said that the Navy had informed him that it was necessary to use all possible Japanese vessels for the transport of supplies, et cetera. As soon as these operations were completed, he would instruct them to get in touch with the Soviet and British authorities and settle the matter.

Mr. Bevin stated that, as he recalled, the British proposal had been that the Japanese naval fleet should be sunk. With regard to the merchant marine, had not a reservation been made as to fishing vessels? Even though the Japanese had been defeated, it was necessary for them to go on living somehow.

Mr. Molorov said that some portion of the fishing fleet should be left to the Japanese, but not necessarily all.

Mr. Byrnes said that the question of fishing vessels had not been discussed in his letter and he had no facts on this question. He did stand by the agreement reached in the correspondence and would take up later the question of fishing vessels.

Mr. Molorov reiterated that this matter should be placed into definite channels. It had started as far back as last October.

Mr. Byrnes said he regarded it as a settled matter. He would find out from the Navy the status of the program set forth in his letter.

Mr. Molorov said that the Japanese fishing fleet should be included in the merchant marine.

Mr. Byrnes said that this raised another question, one concerning which he had no information.

Mr. Bevin said that it would be necessary for him to study the question.

6. Japanese Islands

Mr. Molorov inquired whether the other delegates could give him any information regarding the projected disposition of the Japanese islands and Japanese mandated islands in the Pacific.

Mr. Byrnes replied that so far as the United States was concerned no solution had been arrived at and there could be no solution until the peace treaty problem was approached. He knew of no agreement except that with regard to the Kuriles.⁵⁶ He had not known about that agreement until he had been advised that an understanding had been reached at Yalta.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether the British Government had participated in that understanding.

⁵⁶ Presumably reference here is to the Agreement Regarding Entry of the Soviet Union into the War Against Japan, February 11, 1945, Conferences at Malta and Yalta, p. 984.

Mr. Molorov replied in the affirmative. With regard to the other Japanese islands, he inquired whether this question would be discussed in the future.

Mr. Byrnes said that he would be delighted at any time to discuss the question.

Mr. Bevin said with regard to the secret agreement signed by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, he personally had never seen anything concerning the Kuriles. The British Government knew nothing about it. It had been an agreement between Prime Minister Churchill, President Roosevelt and Generalissimo Stalin. However, the Cabinet members had no knowledge concerning it.

Mr. Molotov pointed out that Ambassador Clark Kerr and Mr. Cadogan knew about this agreement.

Mr. Bevin said that the British Government had not gone back on the agreement after it had learned about it and did not intend to go back on it. However, it created a "frightful" difficulty for him when matters were "thrown at" him in this fashion without his being informed in advance.

Mr. Molorov said that he was not pressing for an immediate discussion of this question. He only meant to inquire whether information could be expected upon it. If the question were not going to be decided, it would be desirable at least to set a time for deciding.

Mr. Bevin stated that any time Mr. Molotov informed him of a matter which Mr. Molotov felt was not being handled expeditiously, he would immediately take it up with his colleagues.

Mr. Molorov replied that both Mr. Bevin and his colleagues were present at the moment and that therefore there could be no better opportunity.

7. GERMAN ASSETS IN AUSTRIA

Mr. Byrnes recalled that he had inquired earlier in the conference regarding the determination of what constitutes German assets in Austria. He desired to urge agreement upon his proposal that this question be referred to the Allied Control Council in Vienna and that the Soviet Government authorize its representative there to come to a decision on the question. There were some United States properties in Austria. The Nazis had taken charge of Austrian properties belonging to Americans. The claim had been made that these were Nazi assets. It was essential that prompt decision be reached in such questions as otherwise irritation was created. The United States Government had authorized its representative to settle these matters on the spot but its representative had replied that the Soviet representative had no such authorization.

Mr. Molorov replied that this general question had been discussed at the Berlin Conference and inquired whether there were any specific matters concerning it. Mr. Byrnes said that the claim had been raised that purely Austrian properties and American properties were really German properties.

Mr. Molotov said that specific cases should be considered individually.

Mr. Byrnes agreed. However, when the United States representative had asked that such specific questions be considered, the Soviet representative had replied that he was not authorized to decide them.

Mr. Molorov said that he would attempt to clear up this question before Mr. Byrnes' departure.

8. Peace Treaties

Mr. Byrnes pointed out that general agreement had been reached on the peace treaty proposal. China had been informed, and had concurred on this document.⁵⁷ Mr. Bidault had also been informed and had said that he personally was disposed to accept it but that he had no authority to do so and would have to speak to General de Gaulle.⁵⁸ Mr. Byrnes had put in a telephone call to Mr. Bidault for this afternoon. In the event that the French were in agreement, would Mr. Molotov and Mr. Bevin be willing to issue this document to the press? Since the conference had begun the press had been given no news concerning it. It would be desirable to issue this one statement and to say that the work of the conference was proceeding in a friendly spirit and that there would be a communiqué within a few days.

Mr. Molotov said that this was acceptable to him.

Mr. Bevin said that before publishing this document he wished to study further the wording of paragraph 4. His Government had called his attention to a constitutional question involved therein. The second line of this paragraph included the words "signed on behalf of". His Government preferred the words "signed by the governments". This was proposed since otherwise it might be assumed that Mr. Bevin had agreed to sign on behalf of Canada, et cetera.

Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov said they had no objection to this change.

Mr. Molotov suggested that it read "signed by representatives of" the states in question.

Mr. Bevin agreed to this.

9. Rumania and Bulgaria

After a recess, Mr. Molotov distributed Soviet drafts on Rumania and Bulgaria.⁵⁹

⁵⁷ For Chinese concurrence in the formula for preparing the peace treaties, see telegram 16, December 23, from Chungking to Moscow, p. 759.

⁵⁸ Regarding Bidault's disposition to accept the formula for preparing the peace treaties, see footnote 50, p. 761.

⁵⁹ Enclosures 6 and 5 to these minutes, pp. 773 and 772, respectively.

After a preliminary study of these papers Mr. Byrnes inquired whether the Soviet draft implied that the reorganized government of Rumania would contain only one representative from both the Peasant and Liberal Parties.

Mr. Molotov replied that there would be one representative from each party. Two suitable representatives could be found.

Mr. Byrnes stated that he remembered saying in yesterday's conversation that the persons taken into the reorganized Government should be truly representative of their parties. Mr. Byrnes said that this certainly should be in the draft.

Mr. Molorov suggested that this was covered by the provision that the representatives taken in would be from groups not now participating in the Government.

Mr. Byrnes replied that there might be certain cases in which men would belong to groups not now participating in the Government, but nevertheless would not be truly representative of their parties.

Mr. Molotov said that he had no objection to a person from the Maniu group but that Maniu himself would not be acceptable.

Mr. Bevin inquired whether it was necessary to mention the three individual men in a document of this character.

Mr. Molorov said that it had been stated at the outset that these three men were unacceptable. His colleagues had agreed to this.

Mr. Byrnes said that it would not be proper for the three Governments to take specific notice of individuals. Instructions could be sent to the representatives of the three Governments that these three individuals should not be selected. However, the individuals themselves would not be made the subject of special mention.

Mr. Molorov pointed out that Mr. Ethridge had mentioned these individuals in his paper.

Mr. Byrnes replied that there was a difference between the report of an individual and an agreement among three great Governments.

Mr. Molorov said that the Soviet Government considered the reference to these individuals to be necessary.

Mr. Bevin pointed out that there had been an assumption that the United States and British delegates were pressing for the inclusion of these three individuals. However, this did not follow from the proposal which Mr. Byrnes had presented. There would be misunderstanding in Great Britain if Mr. Bevin mentioned in the agreement three individuals whom he had never seen. Mr. Bevin concurred in Mr. Byrnes' suggestion that the representatives of the three powers be instructed not to select these individuals. However, it would be awkward publicly to ostracize men in their own country. It was another thing to have an understanding that the Commission to be formed would not consider selecting them.

10. ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. Byrnes inquired whether the atomic energy document had been finally disposed of.

Mr. Molorov stated that the Soviet Delegation was in agreement with the document (Enclosure no. 4). The Soviet Delegation also agreed to issue a statement to the press as Mr. Byrnes had proposed.

Mr. Bevin suggested with regard to the Atomic Energy Commission that all three governments approach France and China with the document and that he would approach Canada as a Dominion. These countries would be requested to sponsor the proposal before the United Nations. This would be done in order to have the proposal placed on the agenda at the forthcoming meeting of the General Assembly.

Mr. Byrnes stated that this was satisfactory to him and that in fact he had assumed this would be done. However, he suggested that the proposal be submitted to the Drafting Committee. 60

Mr. Byrnes suggested that in view of the fact that he had not yet received a reply from Mr. Bidault, the public statement to be issued this evening should say that the peace treaty agreement had been communicated to France and China and that France and China had been invited to adhere to it. He proposed that the statement be released not later than 10 p. m.⁶¹

Mr. Bevin and Mr. Molorov agreed to this.

It was agreed that the reference to Paris as the site of the peace conference would be struck out pending the French reply.

It was agreed to refer the Atomic Energy Commission agreement to the Drafting Committee.

A Protocol Committee was appointed consisting of Mr. Cohen, Mr. Malik, and Sir Ronald Campbell.

⁶¹ Regarding the Secretary's efforts to obtain a reply from the French Government, see telegram 732, December 24, from Paris to Moscow, supra, and footnote 50. The statement from the Conference regarding the preparation of peace treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland, which was released on December 24, was subsequently included as section I of the Communiqué on the Conference, released on December 27; for text of the Communiqué, see telegram 4284, December 27, 3 a.m., from Moscow, p. 815.

⁶⁰ According to the United Kingdom delegation minutes of this meeting, Foreign Secretary Bevin suggested, at this point, the following draft resolution for submission to the United Nations by the six sponsoring powers: "Resolved by the General Assembly of the United Nations to establish a Commission, with the composition and functions set out hereunder, to deal with the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters." It was agreed by the Conference that this draft resolution should be referred to the Drafting Committee. (Moscow Embassy Files: 500 Conference of Foreign Ministers)

Memorandum by the United States Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers

Moscow, December 24, 1945.

RUMANIA

The three Governments are prepared to give King Michael the advice for which he has asked in his letter of August 21, 1945, with a view to the formation of a Rumanian Government reorganized on a broader democratic basis which may be recognized by all three Governments. The King should be advised that the reorganized Rumanian Government should include members truly representative of the National Peasant Party and the Liberal Party. The Rumanian Government thus reorganized should be pledged to the holding of free and unfettered elections as soon as possible on the basis of universal suffrage and secret ballot. In these elections all democratic and anti-Nazi parties should have the right to take part and to put forward candidates. The reorganized government should give assurances concerning the grant of freedom of the press, speech, religion and association, and concerning the activities of the political police and militia.

Mr. Vyshinski, Mr. Harriman, and Sir A. Clark Kerr are authorized as a commission to proceed to Bucharest immediately to consult with King Michael, members of the present provisional government, and with other Rumanian democratic leaders with a view to the reorganization of the present government along the above lines and pledged to the holding of elections as stated above.

As soon as the reorganization is complete and the required assurances have been received the government of Rumania should be recognized by the Government of the U.S.S.R., which now maintains diplomatic relations with the present provisional government of Rumania, and by the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States.

BITTGARIA

It is understood by the three Governments that the Soviet Government will undertake to extend friendly advice to the present Bulgarian Government as to the desirability of including in addition to the present Fatherland Front parties representatives of other democratic elements such as the present opposition Agrarian, Social Democratic parties, and independents.

If this friendly advice is adopted by the Bulgarian Government and the additional representatives included, the British and United States Governments will then reexamine in accordance with the decisions of the Berlin Conference the question of the establishment of diplomatic relations with the Bulgarian Government.

Memorandum by the United Kingdom Delegation at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers 62

Moscow, December 24, 1945.

SUGGESTED DRAFT TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR TRIPARTITE COMMISSION ON IRAN

- 1. The Commission to take as its point of departure the fact that during the presence in Persia of Allied troops the Persian economy and governmental organization have been disturbed and difficulties have arisen between the central government and the inhabitants of certain provinces. The three Powers recognize that they may have some responsibility for this and should, therefore, endeavor to assist the Persian state in reestablishing normal conditions to the satisfaction of all elements of the population and maintaining friendly relations with other countries.
- 2. With a view to allaying the apprehensions of the Persian Government, and to remove causes of international friction, the Commission to look into the question of facilitating the early withdrawal of Allied troops from Persia and to make appropriate recommendations to the governments of the three Powers.
- 3. The Commission to keep in mind (a) the undertaking given by Great Britain and Soviet Russia in the Treaty of January, 1942, to respect the political independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Persia; and (b) the declaration about Persia issued during the Tehran Conference by President Roosevelt, Generalissimo Stalin and Mr. Churchill.

⁶² According to despatch 2337, January 3, 1946, from Moscow, which transmitted to the Department certain records and documents relating to the discussions at the Conference of the Iranian question, this particular British memorandum incorporated changes made at the suggestion of the Secretary of State of the original British memorandum of December 20 on Iran (see p. 708); in particular, paragraphs 1, 2, 4, 8, and 10 of the present document were suggested by the United States delegation and accepted by Foreign Secretary Bevin (740.00119 Council/1-346).

- 4. With a view to reconciling the existing differences between the central Persian Government and certain regions of the country, the Commission to advise and assist the Persian Government in the establishment of provincial councils, in accordance with the provisions of the Persian constitution.
- 5. The recommendations of the Commission (which must receive the approval of the three Governments before being submitted to the Persian Government) to cover the whole of Persia including Azerbaijan.
- 6. Existing laws amplifying the relevant provisions of the constitution (with respect to provincial councils) to be taken as the point of departure but the Commission to recommend any amendments which seem to be required especially in regard to the elections to the local councils, the powers and duties of the councils and the manner in which they are to be furnished with funds.
- 7. The Commission also to make recommendations as to the use of the minority languages such as Arabic, Turkish and Kurdish for educational and other purposes.
- 8. The Commission to consult closely with the Persian Government and with representatives of all important elements of the population in the process of formulating its recommendations.
- 9. The three Powers to use their best endeavors to persuade the Persian Government to pass into law and to put into execution the recommendations made by the Commission.
- 10. The Commission to make no recommendation which would weaken the fundamental unity of the Persian state.
- 11. The first provincial elections to be carried out under the supervision of the Commission.

BULGARIA

It is understood by the three Governments that the Soviet Government will undertake to extend friendly advice to the Bulgarian Government now being formed as to the desirability of including within the Bulgarian Government of the Fatherland Front now being formed an additional one or two representatives of other democratic groups from among representatives of the opposition loyal to the Bulgarian Government.

If this friendly advice is adopted by the Bulgarian Government and the additional representatives included, the British and United States Governments will establish diplomatic relations with the Bulgarian Government, with which the Soviet Government already has diplomatic relations.

[Enclosure 6]

RIIMANIA

The three Governments are prepared to give King Mihail the advice for which he has asked in his letter of August 21, 1945, on the broadening of the basis of the Rumanian Government. The King should be advised that in the composition of the Rumanian Government there should be included in addition 1–2 loyal representatives, in relation to the present Government, of groups of the National-Peasant and the Liberal parties (not including Maniu, Bratianu, Lupu) which are not participating at the present time in the Government.

The three Governments take note that the Rumanian Government thus reorganized will declare that free and unfettered elections will be held as soon as possible on the basis of universal and secret ballot. In these elections all democratic and anti-fascist parties should have the right to take part and to put forward candidates. The reorganized Government should give assurances concerning the grant of freedom of the press, speech, religion and association.

A. Y. Vyshinski, Mr. Harriman, and Sir A. Clark Kerr are authorized as a Commission to proceed to Bucharest immediately to consult with King Mihail and members of the present Government with a view toward the execution of the above-mentioned tasks.

As soon as these tasks are decided and the required assurances have been received, the Government of Rumania, with which the Soviet Government maintains diplomatic relations, will be recognized by the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom.

Mr. McAfee

IRAN

Mr. Bevin said that he had communicated with H. M. Government, who could not help feeling that, although of course they recognised that the Soviet Government were entitled to take all measures to protect the Baku oilfields, the situation was not such as to justify the maintenance of so large a force in Northern Iran. British troops had been reduced in number to 4,000 and these were stationed at a considerable distance from the capital. Even if the last British troops were withdrawn, the situation which had developed would mean that there was no complete settlement. Therefore, he had submitted to M. Molotov a proposal for a three-Power commission with a draft of their terms of reference. He felt, and H. M. Government felt, that the three Governments having had this area placed at their disposal for the purposes of the war, it would be unfortunate if they had to come before the United Nations in order to clear up the situation. Nor did they wish it to give rise to any misunderstanding between our two Governments. He thought that the proposal now submitted offered a chance of clearing up the situation, safeguarding the integrity of Iran and removing difficulties between Russia and the United Kingdom.

Generalissimo Stalin said that this proposal might serve as a basis for some sort of agreement. He would have some amendments of no very great substantial importance to propose and he would communicate these that night or the following morning.

Mr. Bevin said that these amendments when received would be carefully considered and he would then consult with Mr. Byrnes and M. Molotov and try to get an agreement.

GENERALISSIMO STALIN said that he hoped that our two Governments might find a common ground. What was Mr. Byrnes' position?

⁶³ One copy of this record of conversation was given by Pierson Dixon of the United Kingdom delegation to Mr. Bohlen for delivery to the Secretary of State at the request of Foreign Secretary Bevin. Another copy was given to Ambassador Harriman.

MR. BEVIN said that Mr. Byrnes had not definitely committed himself but he would see him on the following day.

Access to the Baltic

Generalissimo Stalin said that he would like to clear up the question of the Skaggerak. The Soviet Government did not know whether Russian shipping was entitled to free passage.

Mr. Bevin said that his information was that there was absolutely free passage through the Skaggerak. Now that Germany was defeated we hoped it would be possible to establish the principle of free passage for ships of all nations. H.M. Government, on the other hand, would not approve the idea of any bases in this particular area.

GENERALISSIMO STALIN said he did not refer to bases at all.
